§ 227. Modes of evidencing Mental Capacity circumstantially. Mental Capacity, like other human qualities or conditions (ante, § 190), may con-

§ 224. [1] The conflict of rulings illustrates the desirability of making no hard-and-fast rule: Massachusetts: 1871, Woodward v. Leavitt, 107 Mass. 453, 458 (borrowing money to compromise with creditors, admitted); New Hampshire: 1855, Wiggin v. Plumer, 31 N. H. 251, 270 (same, admitted in rebuttal of alleged non-borrowing); Michigan: 1864, Angell v. Rosenbury, 12 Mich. 241, 252 ("among the particular facts admissible for the purpose, and thought to be of much weight, and most generally resorted to, is the return of an execution against the party unsatisfied"); Minnesota: 1875, Burr v. Wilson, 22 Minn. 206, 211 (same); New York: 1880, Pontius v. People, 82 N. Y. 339, 349 (the defendant claimed that he had lent $4000 and taken a note; to disprove the likelihood of this, evidence was offered of his straitened pecuniary condition; Danforth, J.: "His conduct in regard to necessary expenses, his pecuniary necessities, the borrowing of money by himself at or about the time when he claimed to have advanced the complainant money, would all bear upon the question. So would the fact that small debts were contracted by him and not paid when due or after frequent request, indicate something in regard to pecuniary ability. . . . A man may indeed be willing to lend to his neighbor in time of need, and yet be unwilling to pay his debts in due season, although fully able to do both; but whether in any given case either one or both of these facts existed, would have to be determined from a variety of circumstances, and their force could properly be estimated by the jury"); 1902, Bank of State of N. Y. v. Southern N. Bank, 170 N. Y. 1, 62 N. E. 677 (insolvent condition of a firm on Feb. 26, held admissible to show its condition on Jan. 21 prior); Pennsylvania: 1870, Woods v. Gummert, 67 Pa. 136 (action for money advanced as agent in 1860-62; an unsatisfied execution against the plaintiff in 1858 was excluded; though the use of such evidence for some situations was conceded; Sharswood, J.: "If the defendant is allowed to show that the plaintiff owes debts which he does not pay, the plaintiff may certainly rebut the evidence by showing that he has a good defence to them; thus innumerable collateral issues might be introduced. . . . Now had the plaintiff been suing upon a paper alleged to be forged or procured by fraud, such evidence might have been admissible as having some weight in a case of doubt, especially if it was contemporaneous with the transaction in controversy").

Compare the citations post, §§ 379, 392 (habit, motive).

§ 225. [1] 1899, Sturdevant's Appeal, 71 Conn. 392, 42 Atl. 70 (condition of a person's leg a year before, admitted); 1892, Com. v. Campbell, 155 Mass. 537, 30 N. E. 72 (former facial appearance, admitted); 1893, Com. v. Morgan, 159 Mass. 378, 34 N. E. 458 (same); 1894, Gilbert v. R. Co., 160 Mass. 403, 36 N. E. 60 (former physical health; doubtful, or subject to the trial Court's discretion); 1903, State v. Scott, 172 Mo. 536, 72 S. W. 897 (condition of prosecutrix in rape, some months later, admitted); 1881, Cowley v. People, 83 N. Y. 477 (condition of a starved child after the time charged, the child having changed only for the better, admitted); 1906, Nophsker v. Supreme Council, 215 Pa. 631, 64 Atl. 788 (fraudulent insurance of life; the insured's illness after the issuance of insurance, admitted, its nature indicating a prior existence); 1895, Taylor, B. & H. R. Co. v. Warner, 88 Tex. 642, 32 S. W. 868 (personal appearance two years before, by photograph, admitted); 1904, Kavanaugh v. Wausau, 120 Wis. 611, 98 N. W. 550 (condition of a horse).

For other instances where the condition in question was shown by photograph and the ruling also involved the use of prior or subsequent condition, see post, § 792.

ceivably be evidenced circumstantially by three classes of facts, (1) the person's outward conduct, manifesting the inward and causing condition; (2) pre-existing external circumstances, tending to produce a special mental condition; and (3) the prior or subsequent existence of the condition, from which its existence at the time in question may be inferred. Each of these modes has its own special difficulties and problems.

§ 228. (1) Insanity, in general, as evidenced by Conduct. (1) Sanity and insanity are terms applicable to the mode of operation of the mind as judged by some accepted standard of normality. The mode of operation of the mind is ascertainable from the conduct of the person in question, i.e. from the effect produced by his surroundings on his mind when responding by action to those surroundings. Virtually, then, the mind is one, while the surroundings are multifold; and the mode of operation cannot be ascertained to be normal or abnormal except by watching the effects through a multifold series of causes. On the one hand, no single act can be of itself decisive; while, on the other hand, any act whatever may be significant to some extent.

The first and fundamental rule, then, will be that any and all conduct of the person is admissible in evidence. There is no restriction as to the kind of conduct. There can be none; for if a specific act does not indicate insanity it may indicate sanity. It will certainly throw light one way or the other upon the issue. "Upon this I believe that no difference of opinion will be found to exist," said Mr. Justice Patteson, in a celebrated case, "as to the principle on which such evidence is admissible: Every act of the party's life is relevant to the issue."[1] There can be no escape from this consequence. There is no distinction in kind (whatever there may be in degree) between one or another piece of conduct as evidence to be considered; some inference is always possible.[2]

1836, DENMAN, L. C. J., in Doe d. Tatham v. Wright, 6 Nev. & M. 132, 146: "Such an issue [insanity] opens a wide door for the admission of evidence, as every transaction of the testator's life, every expression he ever used, and his manner of conducting himself on the most ordinary concerns, may have a bearing on the question."

1870, HOWE, J., in State v. Hays, 22 La. An. 39, 40: "Insanity is a disease. It has its pathology and its symptoms, and it would seem that its existence can be determined only by a careful scrutiny of those symptoms. The tree is to be known by its fruits. The condition of the hidden mechanism is to be ascertained by those communicated movements which are external and apparent. To this end the usual expressions of a mental state are original and competent evidence. If they are the natural language of mental alienation, they furnish satisfactory and sometimes the only proof of its existence. It is true that such expressions may be feigned, and often are; but whether they were real or feigned is for the jury to determine. Hence the rule prevails that, as indicia of the mental condition, not only the acts, but the conversations, exclamations, and declarations of the person may be shown."

§ 228. [1] 1838, Wright v. Tatham, 5 Cl. & F. 670, 715; so also Alderson, B., at p. 722.

[2] Compare the following opinions: 1851, Marianski v. Cairns, 1 Macq. Sc. App. 212, 218 (good opinion by Lord Truro); 1915, Bulger v. People, 60 Colo. 165, 151 Pac. 937 (murder; defence, insanity; conduct showing mere quarrelsomeness, admitted; citing the above text with approval); 1900, Blume v. State, 154 Ind. 343, 56 N. E. 771 (handwriting and composition of letters, admitted); 1909, McReynolds v. Smith, 172 Ind. 336, 86 N. E. 1009; 1921, Baker v. State, — Ind. —, 129 N. E. 468 (murder during robbery; plea, insanity; former robberies admitted to negative insanity); 1900, State v. Wright, 112 Ia. 436, 84 N. W. 541 ("in all cases involving the question of mental capacity, it is competent to go into the minutest details of the personal history" of the individual); 1906, Kempf v. Koopa, 74 Kan. 153, 85 Pac. 806; 1868, Shailer v. Bumstead, 99 Mass. 112 (see quotation post, § 233); 1904, Cashin v. N. Y. N. H. & H. R. Co., 185 Mass. 543, 70 N. E. 930; 1906, State v. Speyer, 194 Mo. 459, 91 S. W. 1075 (certain letters excluded); 1911, State v. Leakey, 44 Mont. 354, 120 Pac. 234 (accused's conversation, admitted on his behalf); 1854, Waterman v. Whitney, 11 N. Y. 157 (see quotation post, § 233).

No doubt a Court is occasionally found excluding this or that piece of conduct [3]; but such rulings, which cannot be defended on principle, are explainable usually as refusals to allow the incorrect impression to be given to the jury that the specific conduct raises a presumption of insanity [4] or has special weight in that direction. Moreover, a court on appeal may properly enough refuse a new trial merely for the rejection below of conduct which was not especially significant; but such decisions are in strictness not rulings upon the admissibility of evidence.

(2) Whether a certain piece of conduct ought to raise a presumption of insanity or of sanity, so as to shift the duty of producing evidence or otherwise to have special controlling force with the jury, is a different question, and is not a matter of the mere admissibility of the evidence. Such a question is often raised, for example, with regard to the fact of suicide. Rightly considered, "it stands as a fact, with all the other acts of the deceased's life",[5] so far as its admissibility is involved. Nevertheless, it is sometimes ruled upon in terms of admissibility, though the language is even then applied where the question of presumption is the one really raised; such rulings are therefore considered elsewhere (post, §§ 2500, 2501), in dealing with presumptions.

(3) Sometimes the condition of insanity is exhibited in a belief which is a delusion, and it may thus become necessary, not only to prove the belief, but also to prove the contrary facts which make it a false and unnatural belief. [6]

[3] 1895, Taylor v. U. S. 7 D.C. App. 27, 34 (accused's conversations in general, and apart from any specific one suggestive of insanity, excluded); 1868, People v. Garbutt, 17 Mich. 9, 16 ("unnatural and undue excitement" in a time of battle, excluded); 1918, Reed v. State, 14 Okl. Cr. 651, 174 Pac. 800 (murder; certain letters of the accused, held not improperly excluded, in the trial Court's discretion).

[4] See the next paragraph as to this.

[5] 1838, Duffield v. Morris, 3 Harringt. Del. 375, 382.

[6] 1889, Burkhart v. Gladish, 123 Ind. 337, 42 N. E. 118 (facts to prove a delusion as to the adultery of the testator's wife, admitted); 1898, Manatt v. Scott, 106 Ia. 203, 76 N. W. 717 (declarations by deceased that T. had attempted to poison J. and had said that he would poison the deceased, admitted as indicating a delusion); 1912, Lang v. Lang, 157 Ia. 300, 135 N. W. 604 (testator's delusion as to his children's misconduct; the actual facts admitted); 1908, O'Dell v. Goff, 153 Mich. 643, 117 N. W. 59 (will made under an alleged insane delusion that the contestant-son was illegitimate though born during marriage; the chaste repute of the wife, admitted, as evidence of the fact of legitimacy); 1915, Thayer v. Thayer, 188 Mich. 261, 154 N. W. 32 (will made under an insane delusion that testator's wife had been found by him in adultery; the wife's repute for chastity admitted); 1871, State v. Jones, 50 N. H. 369, 382 (wife-murder; belief in the wife's adultery, admitted as showing an insane delusion); 1868, Rouch v. Zehring, 59 Pa. 78 (denying the doing of a thing which had in reality been done, admitted); 1896, Titus v. Gage, 70 Vt. 13, 39 Atl. 246 (alleged insane belief that certain neighbors stole; the good reputation of these neighbors receivable, after proof of their innocence, to show the unreasonableness of the belief).

Distinguish the use of external facts inducing or predisposing to insanity, post, § 231;

When a man says, "I am the Messiah", or "I am the Emperor of the United States", the falsity of the external fact is ascertainable without expressly evidencing it. But when his belief is that a brother is plotting to poison him, or that he is a millionaire, these facts must be expressly evidenced in disproof. Accordingly, as a part of the whole fact constituting the delusion, the external elements may be evidenced. The objection to this is usually that confusion of issues ensues (ante, § 42) or that undue prejudice or sympathy will be excited for one or another party concerned (ante, § 42); but these possibilities (subject, no doubt, to the trial Court's discretion) cannot be allowed to stand in the way of demonstrating a significant manifestation of mental condition.

In such a case, of course, the opponent may show that the party's belief was not a delusion, i.e. that the facts believed by him did exist.[7]

(4) On the same principle, when conduct is looked to as an index of the rationality of mental operations, all the facts upon which the conduct was based being essential to forming a standard of judgment, the acts and communications of third persons, may become relevant, — not as in themselves having value, but as the raw material (as it were) for the mental manufacture of the person in question. When Pharaoh forbad to give the Hebrews "straw to make brick as heretofore," and required that they "go and gather straw for themselves", yet should not "minish aught from your bricks of your daily task", it was in fact not humanly possible to fulfil the new exactions; yet no man could judge whether the people of Israel were idle or were overworked, merely from the fact that their tale of brick was not delivered to their masters. All human action, mental or physical, when judged as to the normality of its accomplishment, depends upon the material and means furnished for action. When Horace Hawes, the insane millionaire of San Francisco, said that Jesus Christ was the greatest man that ever lived, and that he himself was the second in rank, it was easy to judge the irrationality of the latter statement; yet we do not regard Napoleon Bonaparte as irrational because he believed himself the greatest general in the world's history. Just as the greatness of a man's executive achievement must be measured by comparing what he had to do and his means of doing with what he has actually done, so the rationality of his acts is to be ascertained only by comparing here it is not the truth or falsity of the facts that is involved, but merely the receipt of information to that effect.

Compare also the proof of the falsity of the alleged fact, as evidence discrediting the witness who testifies to the repute or rumor of it as the source of an insane person's belief (post, § 263).

[7] 1921, People v. Lowhone, 296 Ill. 391, 129 N. E. 781 (murder of N.; plea of insanity, that defendant was under a delusion that N. was trying to do bodily harm to defendant, that the townspeople in general were seeking to harm him, and incidentally that he had killed a negro and had served a penal term therefore; the facts of such killing and penal term, allowed to be proved by the State, to negative the existence of the delusions); 1854, Com. v. Wilson, 1 Gray Mass. 337, 339 (murder of A; defence, insane delusion that A was conspiring against defendant; A's expressions of hostility admitted to show his real feelings, as evidence that defendant was not deluded); 1871, State v. Jones, 50 N. H. 369, 382 (the issue being whether the defendant's belief in his wife's adultery was a mere insane delusion, or was founded on rational grounds, particularly rumor, the existence of such a general rumor was received).

the results of his reasoning with the data that lay before him to be reasoned upon.

Accordingly, when any act of his is found, preceded by third person's acts or communications, the latter are essential to a judgment upon the former. The only requirements to be insisted upon, as necessary assumptions, are that the other person's acts or communications have come to the knowledge of the person in question, and that some act or treatment of them by him has ensued. This application of the principle has been expounded, once for all, in the opinions delivered in the much-argued case of Wright v. Tatham; where, in spite of irreconcilable difference of detail between the various judges, there was a general recognition of the principle at large: [3]

1837, Wright v. Tatham, 7 A. & E. 313, 376; 5 Cl. & F. 670, 736, 740. BOSANQUET, J.: "The letters tendered in proof of the testator's capacity are stated to have been found after the testator's death, open and with the seals broken, in a cupboard under a bookcase in the testator's private apartment, among other letters, some of which had been answered, and others indorsed by him. . . . If the testator is shown to have dealt with the letters as a sensible man would deal with them, his doing so will afford evidence of his capacity. But, until it appears that he has acted personally in the matter, there is nothing from which any inference as to his state of mind can be drawn. Capacity or incapacity to make a will is the matter to be ascertained. In other words, the question is whether he has been in a condition to manage his own concerns, or whether his condition has been such that they must necessarily have been managed for him by others. Such being the real question to be tried, no presumption is to be made that any act bearing upon it was either done by the testator or by any other person for him, since the whole value of the act as evidence of the testator's mind depends upon the part which the testator himself has taken in it. The letters may have been opened, arranged, and deposited in the cupboard by the testator himself, or by his steward, attorney, or other agent. The facts are perfectly consistent with either view of the case." PARKE, B.: "There is no direct proof whatever of these acts being done by the testator; and, as to indirect proof, to infer that the testator did the acts, is to assume the very fact to be proved. . . . For the purpose of showing his capacity to make a will, the evidence is offered; and, to prove that, a letter found in the repository, in an open state, with the indorsement of Mr. Barrow upon it, is produced to show that the testator was competent to open the letter and to read it over, and to refer it to his attorney. If it be asked to use all this as indirect evidence, that is, as an inference that he did the acts, how can I so use it, except upon the ground, that, if he was capable of such acts of business, it is to be presumed that he, and not some one else, did this? But that is to assume the degree of competence which the facts are adduced in order to prove. The argument, then, proceeds in a circle,—because he had sufficient ability to do these acts of ordinary business, therefore it is to be inferred that he did them; and because he did them, it is to be also inferred that he was of sufficient ability to do these acts of ordinary business. No such inference can be made without an assumption of the very fact in question." VAUGHAN, J.: "In the first place, it may be asked, is there any evidence of acts done by the testator upon the letters in question, or any one of them? (for any acts of the testator are of course evidence). I am of opinion that there is fair ground for such inference. Certain letters are found in a man's private room, in the cupboard of his bookcase, with the seals broken in company with other letters, some of which have indorsements in his handwriting, and others of which have been answered in his handwriting. Do not all these facts conspire to prove, at least almost irresistibly to invite the conclusion, that the letters in question had their seals so broken and were perused by him? It has been argued at the bar, that, to raise this presumption, we assume the man's competency, which is the point to be proved. A little reflection will, I think, show this reasoning to be vicious. In the first place, the argument does not assume any competency at all; and, in the second place, the competency which is inferred is not the competency which is disputed, namely, the competency to make a will. . . And I infer that the testator was competent to open the seals and peruse the letters, because the answers and indorsements to the other letters in his handwriting prove him competent so to do, and we conclude that he actually did open and peruse these letters, because the fact of finding them opened in his private drawer, and in the company of letters which he must be taken to have opened and perused, furnishes cogent evidence that he opened and perused these. But we do not thereby even infer him competent to make a will. We conclude him competent to open and read a letter. The opening and perusing a letter are certainly acts, and therefore they stand upon the same footing with all the other acts of a man, and may be properly and primarily admitted. How far they are valuable elements in a body of proof, is another question, quite distinct from the present. . . . Thus we are carried on to the question, whether the contents of the rejected letters, or any of them, can throw any light upon and explain the acts so established; if they can, then of course they may be admitted; if not, they must be rejected. . . . I think I am warranted in saying that the contents of a letter cannot tend to clear up, or explain, or give any stamp of character to any act which does not from its nature import that the party apprehended or misapprehended its contents. . . . So, if it can be shown that a man has done any act in consequence of having read a letter, that letter will be a very valuable instrument to lead the mind to a proper estimate of the purpose or wisdom of such act. In all these cases, there is some act flowing from an apprehension or a misapprehension of the contents of the letter; and the contents are necessary to enable us to form a judgment of the soundness or absurdity of such apprehension. Or, if a person is proved by gestures or words to have shown certain signs of passion or apathy upon reading a letter or hearing some intelligence, then those gestures or words, or that apparent disregard, will prove how he apprehended such contents; and such contents may therefore be received to lead us to an opinion of his temper or his sanity. But, in such cases, it is not the perusal of the letter, but the acts and conduct at the perusal, which are illustrated by the subject-matter of the letter; and there must be evidence of some such acts or states of mind, in order to justify the admission of such declarations. In some cases, indeed, the mere omission to do anything upon the receipt of intelligence, might be proof of a state of mind. In the present case, then, there is no fact presented to us but that of mere perusal and casting the eye over the contents. There is nothing, as applied to two of the letters, on which we can fairly found the presumption, that Mr. Marsden acted as upon an apprehension of what they contained."

[3] See this case in another aspect post, § 1786.

(5) In the foregoing sort of evidence, the Hearsay rule forms no objection to admitting the communications of third persons, because they are received without reference to the truth of their statements and without any credit being given to them testimonially; they are therefore not obnoxious to the Hearsay rule (as noted more fully post, § 1789).[9] The same objection may also be made to receiving the utterances of the person himself (accused, testator, or the like) whose sanity is in question; and the answer is the same. Such utterances are not received as testimonial assertions by him to prove the facts asserted therein, but as indicating circumstantially the operations of his mind; accordingly, it is no violation of the Hearsay rule to receive them (post, § 1790)

[9] The following cases show the distinction: 1909, Snell v. Wilson, 239 Ill. 279, 87 N. E. 1022 (cited more fully post, § 260, n. 1); 1910, Clifford v. Taylor, 204 Mass. 358, 90 N. E. 862 (testimony that a third person, an attorney, refused to make a will for testatrix until a medical man approved, excluded); 1909, Fraley v. Fraley, 150 N. C. 501, 64 S. E. 381 (announcement of neighbors' views as to a property settlement of testator, made formally to the testator, admitted as evidence of his mental capacity).

(6) On the general principle of Relevancy (ante, § 34), any piece of conduct offered as indicating insanity may be explained away as equally or more consistent with some other hypothesis. That which appears to be an irrational act or utterance may, in the light of certain facts, be rational, or may be the result of some other abnormal mental condition than insanity (such as fever or intoxication). These explanatory facts are thus always admissible, providing only that they have in some degree an explanatory significance.[10] This much is indisputable, and is merely a simple application of a general principle.

But there is a larger application of it in the present relation; for since insanity or sanity is the relation of the mind as a whole to life as a whole, and since the grades and distinctions between eccentricity and insanity are sometimes difficult to interpret, the operation of the mind in a single instance may be explainable, not merely by other facts and conduct at that very time, but also by facts and conduct at a different time. The mental operation at the moment may seem irregular, and an inference of general irregularity might thence be drawn; but, when noticed at other times, it may be perceived to be regular enough on the whole. A larger scope of observation must often be taken in order to negative the erroneous inference from single acts that the whole, if known, would be similar to the single acts. This larger group of data, then, may properly be considered in order to explain away the apparent inference from isolated acts:

1858, CLIFFORD, J., in U. S. v. Holmes, 1 Cliff. 98, 109: "One of the suggestions . . . was that the government, in attempting to rebut the testimony offered by the prisoner on this point [of insanity] should have been limited to the explanation or denial of the particular transactions, acts, conduct, and declarations introduced by the prisoner to make out his defence. . . . [It] cannot be sustained. Most men in the course of their lives, in times of excitement produced by disease or otherwise, do many strange and peculiar acts, and oftentimes give utterance to eccentric or unusual language; and it is obvious that if a person accused of crime may select and offer in evidence all the dark spots of his life, or every peculiar and unusual act and declaration, and be allowed to exclude all the rest, that many guilty offenders must escape and justice be often defeated, because the means of ascertaining the truth are excluded from the jury. . . . [Whenever the accused has offered his acts, conduct, and declarations, before and after the homicide,] the government may offer evidence of other acts, conduct, and declarations of the accused within the same period to show that he was sane and to rebut the evidence introduced by the defence."

[10] 1922, People v. Valcalda, — Cal. —, 205 Pac. 452 (homicide; former quarrelsome conduct admitted, to rebut insanity-evidence); 1863, Hopps v. People, 31 Ill. 385, 388 (wife-murder; the defendant's coolness and unconcern at the deed being offered as evidence of insanity, the prosecution was allowed to show that he "had spent years of his early life in a perilous calling", namely, smuggling, "demanding at all times great coolness and hardihood, and therein . . . learned the deportment exhibited by him on this occasion"); 1876, Ross v. McQuiston, 45 Ia. 147 (a testator had made two wills at different times, and the contestants, after showing insanity at the time of the first, offered it as indicating by its rational character that the rationality of the second will was not conclusive of sanity at the time); 1894, People v. Miles, 143 N. Y. 383, 38 N. E. 456 (to explain away strange conduct, the fact of intoxication at the time was received); 1867, Wood v. Sawyer, Phillips N. C. 275 (peculiar conduct being offered to show insanity at the time, it was evidenced that these peculiarities were normal traits present even at times of conceded sanity).

This principle finds constant application in evidencing a testator's susceptibility to undue influence (post, § 1738).

§ 229. Same: Testamentary Capacity. That any and all conduct may be indicative of Sanity or Insanity is equally true for testamentary capacity as for criminal capacity. There is, to be sure, a different legal standard of capacity for the two situations, and accordingly more emphasis and legal significance will attach to certain kinds of cases in the one instance than in the other. Moreover, certain forms of mental abnormality might conceivably be excluded altogether from consideration by the definition of the substantive law; but the evidence to prove them would then be excluded because the facts to be proved by it would be immaterial and not because of the law of evidence (ante, § 2). The chief questions that arise specially in the proof of insanity as affecting testamentary capacity are thus rather a consequence of its special definition in the substantive law rather than of any difference on the rules of Evidence. Only two of these seem worth noticing here, namely, the facts of former testamentary plans and of disinheritance of relatives in the will in issue. These two need special notice because such facts have other evidential uses which ought to be distinguished from the present one.

(1) The testator's capacity may be indicated, among other things, by his method of dealing with his property and other affairs. Whether they are treated by him intelligently or otherwise will be significant of capacity.[1] In particular, his plans, conversations, and acts (independently of the actual execution of the will) in reference to the disposition of his property after death will indicate whether his treatment of the subject is intelligent. Such facts are therefore admissible, like all other conduct, as bearing on his capacity at the time:[2]

1890, VANDERBURGH, J., in Hammond v. Dike, 42 Minn. 273, 44 N. W. 61 (admitting the fact that the testator, a week before his death, "had arranged to have his will changed in the way it was changed by the codicil [made on his death-bed] and his declarations on that subject"): "The question was substantially . . . whether he was able to and did comprehend the nature and effect of the transaction in its different bearings, including the subject-matter and the effect of the testamentary act upon his heirs and legatees named

§ 229. [1] Examples: 1893, Barker's Appeal, 63 Conn. 393, 412, 27 Atl. 973 (testator's diaries received); 1895, Bower v. Bower, 142 Ind. 194, 41 N. E. 523 (that the testator did not attend in person to his business, admitted); 1906, Swygart v. Willard, 166 Ind. 25, 76 N. E. 755 (statements as to property given to a child, admitted); 1907, Smith v. Ryan, 136 Ia. 335, 112 N. W. 8 (testatrix' declarations admitted to show senile dementia); 1886, Woodcock v. Johnson, 36 Minn. 217, 218, 30 N. W. 894 (testator's acts and declaration "tending to show his comprehension or non-comprehension of daily occurrences in his business", admitted); 1917, Wheeler v. McKeon, 137 Minn. 92, 162 N. W. 1070 ("business acts" and declarations showing comprehension of business transactions, admissible);

The following ruling is correct: 1917, Raymond v. Flint, 225 Mass. 521, 114 N. E. 811 (that handwriting is evidence of arteriosclerosis or senility, admissible, from one who is expert in insanity though not in handwriting).

[2] 1899, Nieman v. Schnitker, 181 Ill. 400, 55 N. E. 151 (previous wills at a sane period, admitted); 1922, Wright v. Upson, 303 Ill. 120, 135 N. E. 209 (testator's capacity; prior wills, admissible to evidence capacity, if "in substantial conformity with the provisions of the contested will" and if made at a time of mental soundness.

in the prior will. A testator may be of sound disposing mind and memory sufficient to sustain a will executed by him, though the state of his health and consequent mental condition may be unequal to business transactions of a more exacting nature; and his strength might hold out for the completion of a transaction involving but few details, and requiring his attention but a short time, while it would be insufficient for the disposition of a large estate under an elaborate will. Certainly, then, in determining the question of the capacity of the testator to understand the situation in which he stood in relation to the disposition of his estate, whether the subject was new or familiar to his thoughts, and what his previous intentions may have been, as shown by his acts or declarations, were important and material matters for the consideration of the jury. . . . If, then, the testator, in this instance, contemplated a change in the terms of his will, in view of an accession to his property, and had manifested his purpose so to do a short time before his sickness, these things would be material to be considered in determining whether he was able to understand, and did understand, the nature of the business in which he was engaged at the time he executed the codicil, and the scope and effect of the transaction. . . . Such declarations, especially if recent, inform the jury of the state of mind of the testator when confessedly sound, and so aid in determining whether the instrument is the product of the same will."

This use of prior testamentary plans and the like is to be distinguished from their use to show that he did or did not execute a certain disputed will or make a certain disputed alteration (ante, § 112, post, § 1735), or to show whether he intentionally destroyed a will be way of revocation (post, §§ 1737, 1782), or to show whether a will charged to have been made under undue influence conforms to his normal wishes and plans (post, § 1738). These are all legitimate evidential uses, but they rest in each instance on different principles and perform different services.

(2) That the testator has omitted, or disfavored, or expressly disinherited certain near relatives who might have been expected to be his chief beneficiaries is a circumstance having some bearing upon his mental condition. The provisions of the will in this respect, however, are not in themselves the evidential facts. Taken alone, they are colorless; it is only in comparison with the state of his relationships, that they become significant. If a will read, "I bequeath all my property to Joan of Arc, Maid of Orleans", our general knowledge supplies a fact which marks this bequest as a mental aberration. But if he bequeaths all "to my friend John Smith", and the facts are that John Smith is a well-to-do man, while an amiable wife and a large family of children are left totally unprovided for by the testator, it is only after comparison of these facts with the bequest that we infer a mental lack of balance. In short, the facts of the testator's family relationships are material to establish a standard of normal testamentary terms, — such terms as a rational man would presumably have sanctioned, and it is only after obtaining such a standard that it is possible to make inferences as to the rationality of the terms of the will. It is to this end that the facts of family relationship are considered: [3]

[3] 1859, Stubbs v. Houston, 33 Ala. 564 (unnatural distribution of property, admissible); 1861, Fountain v. Brown, 38 Ala. 74 (same); 1810, Swift, Evidence, Conn., 140 ("If the disposition of the estate be very unreasonable and improper, as giving it to strangers, or all to one

1820, GIBSON, J., in Patterson v. Patterson, 6 S. & R. 55: "Where a will is impeached for imbecility of mind in the testator, together with fraudulent practices by the devisees, the intrinsic evidence of the will itself, arising from the unreasonableness or injustice of its provisions, taking into view the state of the testator's property, family, and the claims of particular individuals, is competent and proper for the consideration of the jury. The issue 'devisavit vel non' involves the validity of the execution, and not the contents; yet, the contents, so far as they have a bearing on the question of execution, are pertinent, and with this view, the whole will is usually read. But the particular provisions of the will could have no practical influence on the question, without evidence of the circumstances and condition of the testator's family and property; for it is only by a comparison of these with each other, that an inference arises, as to the sanity of his mind, and its freedom of action. To justify a jury in invalidating a will, from its intrinsic evidence only, would require an extreme case, perhaps such as never can occur; but the disposition of the property may be so utterly absurd or unjust, as to induce a reasonable belief, that no man in his senses, and uncontrolled by an improper influence, would make it; and there may be cases, where this internal evidence, added to other proof, which would, of itself, leave the question doubtful, ought to turn the scale. In fact, the evidence of practice on the intellect of a weak man, is usually compounded of ingredients so various in their nature, and remote in their consequences and connexion, that the question of relevancy is often of very difficult solution. In such a case, the Court should lean in favor of admitting the evidence, to enable the jury to judge from a consideration of all the circumstances."

1833, BUCHANAN, C. J., in Davis v. Calvert, 5 G. & J. 269: "It is not of itself sufficient to avoid a will or testament, that its dispositions are imprudent, and not to be accounted for. But a will or testament may, by its provisions, furnish intrinsic evidence involving it in suspicion, and tending to show the incapacity of the testator to make a disposition of his estate with judgment and understanding, in reference to the amount and situation of his property, and the relative claims of the different persons who should have been the objects of his bounty — such as a disposition of his whole estate, to the exclusion of near and dear relations, having the strongest natural claims upon his affection, a wife and children, for instance, or other near relations —, without any apparent or known cause, which alone would be a suspicious circumstance, although not furnishing per se sufficient ground child, this will be a strong circumstance from whence to infer undue influence and want of understanding"); 1893, Crandall's Appeal, 63 Conn. 365, 28 Atl. 531 (approving the above passage); 1867, Roe v. Taylor, 45 Ill. 485 (prior will rejected as being of no value under the circumstances); 1868, Crum v. Thornley, 47 Ill. 192, 198 (principle conceded); 1902, Webster v. Yorty, 194 Ill. 408, 62 N. E. 907; 1906, Waters v. Waters, 222 Ill. 26, 78 N. E. 1; 1906, Dillman v. McDanel, 222 Ill. 276, 78 N. E. 591; 1854, Addington v. Wilson, 5 Ind. 137 (see quotation supra); 1889, Conway v. Vizzard, 122 Ind. 266, 270, 23 N. E. 771 (a testator's giving more to nieces and nephews than to sisters, no evidence of insanity, apart from other facts); 1894, Sim v. Russell, 90 Ia. 656, 57 N. W. 602 (unnatural distribution of property, admissible); 1894, Denning v. Butcher, 91 Ia. 429, 59 N. W. 70 (same); 1895, Bever v. Spangler, 93 Ia. 576, 61 N. W. 1080, semble (same); 1898, Manatt v. Scott, 106 Ia. 203, 76 N. W. 717 (same); Townsend's Estate, 122 Ia. 246, 97 N. W. 1108 (but here the instruction is misconstrued); 1833, Davis v. Calvert, 5 G. & J. (Md.) 269 (see quotation supra); 1906, Meier v. Buchter, 197 Mo. 68, 94 S. W. 883; 1916, Williams' Estate, 52 Mont. 192, 156 Pac. 1087 (an "unnatural disposition of the property" is evidence); 1828, Clark v. Fisher, 1 Paige Ch. N. Y. 171 ("the will itself is unreasonable on its face, when taken in connection with the amount of his property and the situation of his relatives, and this is always proper evidence to be taken into consideration in judging of the state of the testator's mind"); 1897, Burns' Will, 121 N. C. 336, 28 S. E. 519 (that a testator had disinherited his seven children, admissible).

Occasionally a Court is found rejecting such facts merely because in the circumstances they do not enlighten, or declaring them in effect not to raise a presumption of incapacity: 1889, Spratt v. Spratt, 76 Mich. 384, 391, 43 N. W. 627 (facts of kinship may be shown "as bearing upon the question of mental capacity"; but the omission of certain relations "is not an indication of mental incapacity"); 1892, Couch v. Gentry, 113 Mo. 248, 256, 20 S. W. 890 (that omitted children had worked in the fields, excluded); 1892, Maddox v. Maddox, 114 Mo. 35, 41, 21 S. W. 499 (similar).

for setting aside the instrument. This is but a single example, and not given as the only one, calculated to excite suspicion of the competency and freedom to act of a testator. The contents, therefore, of the will or testament itself, and the manner in which it was written and executed, together with the nature and extent of the estate of the testator; his family and connections; their condition and relative situation to him; the terms upon which he stood with them, and the claims of particular individuals; the condition and relative situation of the legatees or devisees named; the situation of the testator himself, and the circumstances under which the will or testament was made, are all proper to be shown to the jury, and often afford important evidence in the decision of the question of incapacity. And sometimes, if taken altogether, may, according to the degree of the injustice, absurdity, or unreasonableness of the dispositions attempted to be made of the property, tending to induce a reasonable doubt of the necessary sanity of the maker, and of his free agency uncontrolled by some undue influence, and the nature of the attending circumstances, and condition, and conduct, and character of those around him, justify a jury in deciding against the validity of the instrument, when its provisions, standing alone, unattended by such circumstances, or not coupled with them, would not be sufficient."

1841, VERPLANCK, Sen., in Stewart v. Lispenard, 26 Wend. 255, 313: "If the testamentary disposition be in itself consistent with the situation of the testator and in congruity with his affections and previous declarations; if it be such as might naturally have been expected from one so situated, this is itself rational and legal evidence of no small weight to testamentary capacity; whilst the reverse will alone furnish occasion of doubt, demanding other evidence to refute it. The rationality of the act goes to show the reason of the person."

1854, PERKINS, J., in Addington v. Wilson, 5 Ind. 137: "By our law, a person competent to make a will may entirely disinherit his children if he pleases to do so; nor can his motives for such an act, where it is done, be called in question. The right is absolute to dispose of all one's property, over and above the portion required to pay debts and expenses. The hardship of the case, therefore, when the children are disinherited, is of no weight further than a circumstance for the consideration of the jury in connection with the other evidence submitted tending to show insanity or other mental defect."

This use of such facts to evidence incapacity is generally conceded as proper. It is desirable, however, to distinguish it from sundry other use of analogous facts to evidence Undue Influence; these are noted in the ensuing section.

§ 230. Same: Undue Influence. The making of a will under influence signifies that the testator's mind was capable of being and was in fact so subjected to the control of another person that the former did not follow his own normal wishes and plans but yielded to the latter's volition. For the purpose of evidencing this condition, various sorts of facts are relevant, but the chief questions about them arise in connection with the Hearsay rule, and they need be noted here only in order to distinguish them from the foregoing classes of evidence on the issue of mental incapacity.

(a) The facts of family relationship, in comparison with the will's actual provisions, may be considered not only (as above) on the issue of sanity, but also on the issue of undue influence.[1] The latter issue presupposes a due or normal standard of disposition which the testator might be expected to observe; and when a deviation is found, a possible inference is that the deviation was due to undue pressure.

§ 230. [1] 1891, Eastis v. Montgomery, 95 Ala. 486, 492, 11 So. 204 (possession of property by omitted grandchildren, admissible as tending to show that "this exclusion was not unnatural"); 1903, Yorty v. Webster, 205 Ill. 630, 68 N. E. 1068 (unequal distribution is some evidence); 1892, Maddox v. Maddox, 114 Mo. 35, 46, 21 S. W. 499 ("unjust discrimination" held not to "raise an inference" of undue influence); and cases cited in the foregoing section.

(b) The testator's conduct and utterances, exhibiting dislike, fear, anger, or their opposites, towards particular persons, may serve to indicate his general condition of susceptibility to influence in certain quarters, and may thus be put in evidence for that purpose, in spite of the Hearsay rule (post, § 1738).

(c) The testator's prior and subsequent testamentary plans and wishes, as gathered from his conduct and utterances, may serve to indicate his normal testamentary attitude, which presumably would have been given effect in the will in issue, had no undue pressure been exerted. These may therefore be considered, in spite of the Hearsay rule, in order to reach a standard for judging of the undueness or abnormality of the will (post, § 1738).

(d) The testator's prior or subsequent assertions as to the fact of undue influence or of urgency or threats are usually excluded, because their natural but improper use would be to serve as mere testimonial assertions, inadmissible under the Hearsay rule (post, § 1738).

§ 231. (2) Insanity, as evidenced by Predisposing Circumstances. As human conditions of every sort are created or influenced by external environment, so too the diseased mental condition which we term insanity may be precipitated, intensified, or otherwise affected by external events coming to the apprehension of the person. Accordingly, circumstances calculated to induce this mental condition may always be admitted to evidence the probability of such affection; the only limitation is that the circumstance be in itself capable in some degree of producing such an effect, that it came to the person's knowledge, and that some further foundation for probability be laid by other evidence that there was a diseased mental condition: [1]

1891, PECKHAM, J., in People v. Wood, 126 N. Y. 249, 259, 27 N. E. 362 (admitting evidence that a defendant, charged with killing his father-in-law, and now defending on the ground of insanity, had been told by his wife, a week before the killing, of an incestuous rape upon her by the father, the purpose being to show "an adequate cause for the state of mind existing subsequent to the communication, and . . . that in truth such communication acting upon a diseased and weakened brain produced insanity at the time of the commission of the crime"): "It is not disputed that a fall on the head, a physical injury to the brain, or other physical and sufficient cause for insanity, can be proved. . . . Any material fact which might account for or naturally lead to insanity at that moment may be proved. Why should not the defendant have the right to prove a moral cause which might act upon a brain already diseased and might result in insanity as naturally as blows upon the head? This, in connection with evidence tending to show insanity at the time of the act done, is proper. . . . In fine, the evidence is admitted on the ground that it is corroborative, more or less strongly, of the mental condition which the other and separate evidence in the case tends to prove."

§ 231. [1] CANADA: 1915, R. v. Hawkes, 25 D. L. R. 631, Alta. (wife's killing of husband's alleged paramour; plea of insanity; husband's confession of infidelity, made to the accused his wife, held inadmissible, for lack of "other evidence that there was a diseased mental condition"; citing the above text with approval); UNITED STATES: 1871, Sawyer v. State, 35 Ind. 80, 83 (wife-murder; the wife's adultery not admitted to show insanity without concurrent evidence of insane conduct; see quotation supra); 1911, People v. Bowen, 165 Mich. 231, 130 N. W. 706 (wife-murder; rumors of her infidelity, brought to the accused, and conduct of hers, personally known to him, admitted, to evidence his mental disturbance; but not her actual misconduct not known to him); 1891, People v. Wood, 126 N. Y. 147, 27 N. E. 362 (see quotation supra); 1912, People v. Garfalo, 207 N. Y. 141, 100 N. E. 698 (reports of the murdered wife's infidelity, here excluded because the homicide was deliberate and "not in the heat of an overmastering passion"); 1910, State v. Greene, 152 N. C. 835, 68 S. E. 16 (insanity as a plea in homicide; the defendant's wife's communication to him of a rape by the deceased, admitted, but not the fact of the rape); 1920, Bereal v. State, 88 Tex. Cr. 138, 225 S. W. 252 (murder of wife's paramour; the fact of the paramour's insulting words and conduct as well as the communication of them, held admissible, to show passion as reducing the offense to manslaughter).

1871, WORDEN, J., in Sawyer v. State, 35 Ind. 80, 84: "[It is claimed] that inasmuch as the infidelity of the deceased [wife, killed by the defendant], was a great wrong inflicted upon the defendant, and inasmuch as his mind would protractedly dwell upon the subject, the evidence was competent as tending to show the existence of an exciting cause of insanity. This argument assumes that a jury may infer the existence of insanity from proof merely of a cause that may tend to produce it, without any proof whatever that the effect followed the cause. If it were a case where a given effect must follow a cause, there would be force in the argument, because proof of the cause would be proof of the effect. But we know that the various causes that may tend to produce insanity very frequently fail to produce any such effect; and it seems to us that it is not competent to prove the existence of such exciting cause unaccompanied with some [other] proof that the effect followed the cause."

It follows that the significance of such a fact can be explained away (on the principle of § 228, par. 6, ante) by conduct of the person showing that his mind was not susceptible to an influence from such circumstances.[2]

Distinguish the present sort of evidence from that noted in § 228, par. 3, ante; there the delusion being the material thing, the falsity of the facts believed by him is essential; here, however, it is the belief alone that is material, whether or not the facts were as believed or not; accordingly, a rumor or reputation may suffice to create the belief, whether or not there be a foundation of fact.

Distinguish also the principle of § 263, post, that the non-existence of the fact said to have been reputed or rumored, and thus to have caused a certain belief or deranged condition is evidence to discredit the witness who testifies to the repute or rumor.

§ 232. Same: Hereditary Insanity. That insanity of some varieties may be and even tends to be transmitted to descendants is an accepted pathological fact. Moreover, since it is equally true that it may pass over a genera-

[2] 1894, People v. Lane, 101 Cal. 513, 517, 36 Pac. 16 (murder; to disprove that the defendant's mind had been preyed upon, to the degree of derangement, by the belief that the deceased was trying to ruin his daughter, evidence, as admitted of the incest of defendant and his daughter); 1922, State v. Herring, — S. C. —, 110 S. E. 668 (murder of alleged paramour of wife; defense insanity on hearing wife's confession; prior hearing of other unchastity of his wife, admitted in rebuttal).

Contra, but clearly unsound: 1901, State v. Kirby, 62 Kan. 436, 63 Pac. 752 (murder of alleged seducer of defendant's daughter; to rebut the defendant's alleged mental excitement over the seduction, the prosecution was not allowed to prove the daughter's prior reputation for unchastity); 1896, People v. Strait, 148 N. Y. 566, 42 N. E. 1045 (wife-murder; after evidence of separation, offered to show a cause of insanity, evidence of adultery while separated from a prior wife, offered to show that the subsequent separation from the second wife could not have caused his mind to become unbalanced, was rejected).

tion or an individual before reappearing, it follows that insanity in collateral relatives may indicate an anterior ancestral tendency capable of appearing in other collateral branches. It seems to be generally conceded that ancestral and perhaps collateral insanity may therefore be put in evidence. Yet the irregularity of its operation, its frequent dependency on external provoking circumstances as a condition of bringing it into activity, and the possibilities of too much weight being given to its probative value, have led the Courts, almost unanimously, to impose some limitations on its admissibility.[1]

§ 232. [1] The various limitations suggested are illustrated in the following rulings, many of which are virtually based only on the facts of the case in hand and should not serve as precedents: ENGLAND: 1760, Earl Ferrers' Trial, 19 How. St. Tr. 932, 937 (ancestral insanity admitted); 1813, M'Adam v. Walker, 1 Dow 148, 161, 167, 177 (left undecided; termed by Lord Eldon, L. C., a "very delicate question"; but most questions were to his mind delicate ones); 1838, Doe v. Whitefoot, 7 C. & P. 270, Gurney, B. (sister's insanity, excluded); 1840, R. v. Oxford, 9 C. & P. 525, 538, 547, 4 State Tr. N. S. 497, 528 (before three judges; insanity of accused's grandfather, father, and brother, admitted); 1844, R. v. Tucket, 1 Cox Cr. C. 103 (see quotation supra).

UNITED STATES: Federal: 1858, U. S. v. Holmes, 1 Cliff. 98, 109, 110 (unspecified "hereditary insanity", admitted); 1915, James v. State, 193 Ala. 55, 69 So. 569 (murder; insanity of defendant's mother and her sister, excluded on the facts);
Arkansas: 1898, Green v. State, 64 Ark. 523, 43 S. W. 973 (admissible only after evidence of insane conduct);
California: 1866, People v. Smith, 31 Cal. 466 (insanity of mother and aunt, held admissible, other evidence of "personal insanity" being in the case);
Columbia (Dist.): 1881, Guiteau's Trial, I, 520, II, 1386, et passim (the insanity of Guiteau's father and near relatives was allowed to be evidenced); 1900, Snell v. U. S., 16 D. C. App. 501, 511 (insanity in a second cousin, held inadmissible);
Connecticut: 1880, State v. Hoyt, 47 Conn. 518, 540 (sister's insanity admitted, and cross-examination to show it not from hereditary causes);
Idaho: 1905, State v. Wetter, 11 Ida. 433, 83 Pac. 341 (principle approved);
Illinois: 1862, Snow v. Benton, 28 Ill. 306, semble (insanity of a mother, admitted); 1874, Meeker v. Meeker, 75 Ill. 260, 270 (paralysis of ancestors and near relations, excluded, because the testator's affection by paralysis was not disputed; "had it been a question of doubt, . . . we could see its pertinency"); 1883, Upstone v. People, 109 Ill. 169 (insanity of mother, sister, three brothers, and mother's sisters, admitted); 1906, Dillman v. McDaniel, 222 Ill. 36, 78 N. E. 591 (insanity of a paternal aunt of the testator, lasting only eighteen months, admitted, there being other evidence of the testator's insanity: the Court's opinion cites cases from other jurisdictions, but ignores the foregoing three from its own jurisdiction; this is censurable); 1912, Martin v. Beatty, 254 Ill. 615, 98 N. E. 996 (insanity of two brothers, two sisters, and a nephew, held improperly excluded);
Indiana: 1869, Bradley v. State, 31 Ind. 492, 495, 503, 510 (insanity of a half-sister, mother, her twin brother, and a cousin, admitted, but only in connection with other evidence of insane conduct of the defendant); 1871, Sawyer v. State, 35 Ind. 80, 84 (preceding case approved; see quotation supra);
Iowa: 1868, State v. Felter, 25 Ia. 75 (insanity of ancestors, admissible); 1876, Ross v. McQuiston, 45 Ia. 147 (parental insanity, admissible); 1894, Sim v. Russell, 90 Ia. 656, 57 N. W. 601 (same); 1894, Denning v. Butcher, 91 Ia. 425, 59 id. 70 (same); 1897, State v. Van Tassel, 103 Ia. 6, 72 N. W. 497 (admissible as cumulative only, accompanying other evidence); 1899, State v. Robbins, 109 Ia. 650, 80 N. W. 1061 (murder; epilepsy of defendant's mother and brother and insanity of another brother, admitted);
Maine: 1885, St. George v. Biddeford, 76 Me. 598, semble (admissible);
Maryland: 1902, Berry v. Safe D. & T. Co., 96 Md. 45, 53 Atl. 720 (insanity in other members of the family, held inadmissible except after evidence of insanity in the person in issue); 1920, Mitchell v. Slye, 137 Md. 89, 111 Atl. 814 (testator's capacity; Berry v. Safe D. & T. Co. followed);
Massachusetts: 1868, Com. v. Andrews, Davis' Rep. 133 (murder; insanity of various ancestral relatives, admitted); 1868, Shailer v. Bumstead, 99 Mass. 112, 131 (paralysis, etc., of "several of the family of the testatrix", not admitted because of lack of foundation; but a proof of hereditary insanity is competent in support of evidence of the existence of insanity in any given case);
Michigan: 1868, People v. Garbutt, 17 Mich. 9, 17 (insanity of a brother, admitted; see quotation supra);
Minnesota: 1895, State v. Hayward, 62 Minn. 474, 65 N. W. 63 (ancestral insanity, admissible only to corroborate other and more direct evidence);

These limitations, in general, may be gathered from the following passages; it will be seen that no clear settlement of them has been reached, except on the point that there must be some other accompanying evidence of insanity by conduct-manifestations (ante, § 234) on the part of the person himself:

1844, MAULE, J., in R. v. Tucket, 1 Cox Cr. 103 (receiving evidence of the insanity of a maternal grandfather): "It is a matter of fact and not a matter of law, that insanity is often hereditary in a family; but I think you should prove that in the first instance by the testimony of a medical man, and then your question will be legitimate."

1856, THOMAS, J., in Baxter v. Abbott, 7 Gray 71: "With the fact that the father and mother or either of them had been insane, that the insanity had appeared in them about the same age and in same form, its existence in the child is rendered more probable and is believed upon less perfect evidence. The transmission of this predisposition to insanity is matter of general observation, and is recognized by the best medical authorities."

1859, PEARSON, J., in State v. Christmas, 6 Jones L. 471, 474: "[Hereditary insanity] would only be one link in the chain, and would not 'per se' establish the fact. . . . [The authorities being conflicting, yet] thus far the way seems to be clear. In order to render it admissible, the species of insanity which is alleged and that which is offered to be proved in respect to members of the family must be of the same character; and the instances to be proven must have been notorious, so as to be capable of being established by general reputation, and not left to depend upon particular facts and proof about which witnesses may differ and the consequence of which would be to run off into numberless and endless collateral issues, so that in trying the question as to the insanity of one, the supposed insanity of half a dozen would be drawn in."

1868, COOLEY, C. J., in People v. Garbutt, 17 Mich. 9, 17: "That insane tendencies are transmitted from parent to child there is now no longer a doubt; and though it was once ruled that proof that other members of the same family have decidedly been insane is not admissible either in civil or in criminal cases, yet this ruling has been rejected as unphil-

Mississippi: 1913, Prewitt v. State, 106 Miss. 82, 63 So. 330 (insanity of blood relatives, admitted; that the tendency to insanity is hereditable need not be expressly evidenced);
Missouri: 1878, State v. Simms, 68 Mo. 305, 309 (insanity of aunt and sisters, held proper to be considered, even though no other evidence "directly" tended to prove insanity); 1887, State v. Pagels, 92 Mo. 307, 4 S. W. 931 (insanity of persons not shown to be connections, held not "material", as ground for a continuance); 1899, State v. Soper, 148 Mo. 217, 49 S. W. 1007 (insanity of collateral kindred, rejected on the facts); 1917, State v. Rose, 271 Mo. 17, 195 S. W. 1013 (forgery; insanity of the defendant's mother's uncle, excluded);
New Jersey: 1846, State v. Spencer, 21 N. J. L. 196, 203, semble (admissible); 1921, State v. James, — N. J. L. —, 114 Atl. 553 (murder; family history showing a "taint of insanity", not admitted merely to induce the jury's recommendation of lesser punishment);
New York: 1882, Walsh v. People, 88 N. Y. 467 (insanity of "parents or relatives", admissible "in aid or corroboration of other proof"); 1906, Myer's Will, 184 N. Y. 54, 76 N. E. 920 (general paresis of the testatrix' mother and brother, excluded for lack of evidence that the particular form was hereditary or transmissible); 1906, Pringle v. Burroughs, 185 N. Y. 375, 78 N. E. 150 (ancestral or collateral insanity, not admitted without conduct-evidence of the person himself);
North Carolina: 1859, State v. Christmas, 6 Jones L. 471, 474 (see quotation supra); 1875, State v. Cunningham, 72 N. C. 469, 474 (insanity of uncles and aunts excluded, where there was no insane conduct of the accused himself in evidence; see quotation supra);
Pennsylvania: 1877, Laros v. Com., 84 Pa. 204, 209 (quoted supra); 1909, Com. v. Snyder, 224 Pa. 526, 73 Atl. 910 (Laros v. Com. approved); 1919, Com. v. Dale, 264 Pa. 362, 107 Atl. 743 (insanity in an ancestor need not first be shown before offering insanity in collaterals; but in criminal cases insanity in the accused himself must first be evidenced, and also the hereditary nature of the specific form of insanity found in the collaterals; and the testimony to insanity in collaterals must be based on personal observation;
Tennessee: 1875, Hagan v. State, 5 Baxt. 615 (insanity of a brother admitted, there being evidence of the accused's insane conduct);
Vermont: 1896, Titus v. Gage, 70 Vt. 13, 39 Atl. 246 (intemperance of parent, without medical testimony to its significance, inadmissible).

Compare § 165, ante.

osophical and unsound, and it is now allowed to prove the insanity of either parent, — or even of a more remote ancestor, since it seems well established that insanity sometimes disappears in one generation and reappears again in the next. . . . [In this case, insanity of a brother was admitted.] It sometimes occurs that persons in vigorous health and correct habits, who have nevertheless entered into a marriage which violates some physiological law, may become parents of weak and diseased children only, so that insanity enters the family for the first time in the person of the children, but through qualities derived exclusively through the parentage. . . . If a family of several children should be found without known cause to be idiotic or subject to mental delusions, the inference of hereditary transmission would in many cases be entirely conclusive, notwithstanding the inability to point out anything of a similar character in any ancestor. Insanity in a part of the children only would be less conclusive; but the admissibility of the evidence in these cases cannot depend upon its quantity, and it could never be required that it should amount to a demonstration."

1875, BYNUM, J., in State v. Cunningham, 72 N. C. 469, 474: "It is held admissible in corroboration. . . . To allow such evidence to go to the jury as independent proof of the insanity of the prisoner would be of the most dangerous consequence to the due administration of criminal justice; since there are but few persons, it is ascertained, who have not had ancestors or blood relations, near or remote, affected by some degree of mental aberration. To admit such testimony, then, under the conditions set forth in this case, would break down the strongest barriers to crime established by the laws of evidence as heretofore understood."

1877, AGNEW, J., in Laros v. Com., 84 Pa. 200, 209: "A Court is not bound to hear evidence of the insanity of a man's relatives . . . [or other collateral or secondary evidence] as grounds of a presumption of possible insanity, until some evidence has been given that the prisoner himself has shown signs of his own insanity."

§ 233. (3) Prior and Subsequent Insanity. A condition of mental disease is always a more or less continuous one, either in latent tendency or in manifest operation. It is therefore proper, in order to ascertain the fact of its existence at a certain time, to consider its existence at a prior or a subsequent time. The degree of continuity varies infinitely in various cases, and hence there can be little certainty in the inference from one period to another. Nevertheless, since it can never be known beforehand to what variety the case in question belongs in this respect, the facts of prior and subsequent existence cannot be absolutely known beforehand to be relevant. Much must depend on the type of insanity, as preliminarily indicated by the person's conduct at the time in question. There is also a further element of uncertainty in criminal cases, in that the accused has a strong motive to feign insanity after the act charged; and thus particular scrutiny is required in weighing the evidence of an accused person's subsequent insane conduct. In spite, however, of these uncertainties and difficulties, Courts are to-day universally agreed that both prior and subsequent mental condition, within some limits, are receivable for consideration; stress being always properly laid on the truth that these conditions are merely evidential towards ascertaining the mental condition at the precise time of the act in issue:[1]

§ 233. [1] ENGLAND: 1742, Sergeson v. Sealey, 2 Atk. 412 (inquisition of lunacy, found in 1726, and declaring insanity for eight years previous, admitted to show insanity in 1724); 1854, Beavan v. M'Donnell, 10 Exch. 184 (to show that the defendant's

1822, WASHINGTON, J., in Stevens v. Van Cleve, 4 Wash. C. C. 262: "The point of time to be looked at . . . is that when the will was executed. . . . The law permits evidence of such prior and subsequent incapacity to be given. But unless it bear upon that period and is of such a nature as to show incompetency when the will was executed, it amounts to nothing."

1854, SELDEN, J., in Waterman v. Whitney, 11 N. Y. 157: "The insanity or incapacity of the testator may be proved, not as important in itself, but as a means of arriving at his condition when the will was executed. . . . [It is useful] with a view to its reflex influence upon the question of his condition at the time of executing the will. . . . The object of the evidence is to show the mental state of the testator at the time when the will was executed. Of course, therefore, it is admissible only where it has a legitimate bearing on that question, and of this the Court must judge, as in every other case where the rele-insanity on the day of the contract was such as to be necessarily apparent to the plaintiff, the defendant's insane conduct before and after that day was admitted; Platt, B.: "The question is one of degree only; the further off the evidence is carried, the weaker it may be; but it is still evidence, though, not proof, of the fact of knowledge").

UNITED STATES: Federal: 1822, Stevens v. Van Cleve, 4 Wash. C. C. 262 (see quotation supra); 1858, U. S. v. Holmes, 1 Cliff. 98, 108 (see quotation supra); 1896, St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Greenthal, 23 C. C. A. 100, 77 Fed. 150 (insanity three weeks before, admitted; following U. S. v. Holmes);
Alabama: McLean v. State, 16 Ala. 679; 1886, Kramer v. Weinert, 81 Ala. 414, 415, 1 So. 26; 1895, Murphree v. Senn, 107 Ala. 424, 18 So. 264 (temporary aberration twenty years before, not admissible without evidence of intervening aberration); 1911, Odom v. State, 174 Ala. 4, 56 So. 913;
Arkansas: 1859, Clinton v. Estes, 20 Ark. 219, 231; 1891, Bolling v. State, 54 Ark. 588, 599, 16 S. W. 658 (accused's conduct and language after a killing, admissible "whenever they are so connected with or correspond to evidence of disordered or weakened mental condition preceding the time of the offence as to strengthen the inference of continuance and carry it by the time to which the inquiry relates and thus establish its existence at that time; or whenever they are of such a character as of themselves to indicate unsoundness to such a degree or of so permanent a nature as to have required a longer period than the interval for its production or development"; following the language of Com. v. Pomeroy, Mass. infra); 1894, Green v. State, 59 Ark. 246, 248, 27 S. W. 5 (insanity twenty years before, excluded on the facts); 1898, Green v. State, 64 Ark. 523, 43 S. W. 973 (defendant's mental condition after arrest and during custody, admissible); 1916, Mason v. Bowen, 122 Ark. 407, 183 S. W. 973 (testator's utterances received);
California: 1867, People v. Farrell, 31 Cal. 581 (no time limit can be fixed in general); 1885, Dalrymple's Estate, 67 Cal. 444, 7 Pac. 906; 1897, People v. Griffin, 117 Cal. 583, 49 Pac. 711 (feeble-mindedness six months later, admitted); 1918, Allen's Estate, 177 Cal. 668, 171 Pac. 686 (testator);
Columbia: (Dist.): 1904, Shaffer v. U. S., 24 D. C. App. 417, 433 (accused);
Connecticut: 1822, Grant v. Thompson, 4 Conn. 208; 1831, Kinne v. Kinne, 9 id. 101, semble; 1921, Bishop v. Copp, 96 Conn. 571, 114 Atl. 682 (range of time of inquiries, considered);
Florida: 1905, Starke v. State, 49 Fla. 41, 37 So. 850;
Illinois: 1862, Snow v. Benton, 28 Ill. 306, 308 (insanity ten or twelve years before, admitted); 1878, Reynolds v. Adams, 90 Ill. 147; 1893, Craig v. Southard, 148 Ill. 37, 46, 35 N. E. 361 (prior and subsequent mental condition of testator, admissible); 1897, Harp v. Parr, 168 Ill. 459, 48 N. E. 113 (prior mental condition of a testator, receivable); 1899, Nieman v. Schnitker, 181 Ill. 400, 55 N. E. 151 (testator's utterances before and after execution, admitted); 1903, Baker v. Baker, 202 Ill. 595, 67 N. E. 410 ("no fixed rule can be laid down"); 1904, Chicago U. T. Co. v. Lawrence, 211 Ill. 373, 71 N. E. 1024 (mental condition of an injured person); 1914, People v. Gavrilovich, 265 Ill. 11, 106 N. E. 521 (mental condition of accused at time of examination, admissible; and the expert's opinion how long it had existed);
Indiana: 1882, Dyer v. Dyer, 87 Ind. 13, 19 (mental condition of a testator the day before the will's execution, admitted); 1889, Staser v. Hogan, 120 Ind. 207, 217, 21 N. E. 911 ("It was proper to show the condition of the testator's mind at any time"); 1895, Bower v. Bower, 142 Ind. 194, 41 N. E. 523 (no fixed limits of time can be made); 1900, Enlow v. State, 154 Ind. 664, 57 N. E. 539; 1910, Taylor v. Taylor, 174 Ind. 670, 93 N. E. 9 (adjudication of insanity in 1906, held not improperly excluded, on the facts, to show insanity at the time of making a will in 1900); 1918, Ramseyer v. Dennis, 187 Ind. 420, 119 N. E. 716; vancy of testimony is denied. If the judge can see that the evidence offered cannot justly be supposed to reflect any light upon the mental condition of the testator at the time of making the will, he has an undoubted right to exclude it."
Iowa: 1868, State v. Felter, 25 Ia. 72, 75, 76; 1876, Ashcraft v. De Armond, 44 Ia. 233 (admitting evidence of continued preceding insanity; "It would be otherwise if her insanity

1858, CLIFFORD, J., in U. S. v. Holmes, 1 Cliff. 98, 108: "His acts, conduct, and declarations, not only throughout this voyage, but throughout his whole life, from early youth to the time of his arrest, had been introduced; . . . counsel had claimed and exercised the right to examine the witnesses so called upon all such occurrences, acts, and declarations in the life and conduct of the prisoner as tended to show that he was insane. . . . Beyond doubt the precise question to be tried in all such cases is whether the accused was insane at the time he committed the act, and to that point all the evidence must tend. Great difficulties surround the inquiry, and it is for that reason that the rules of law allow a wide range of testimony in the investigation."

were temporary in its nature, as where it was occasioned by the violence of disease or where she was subject to lucid intervals"); 1876, State v. Lewis, 45 Ia. 20 (defendant's condition subsequent to the time of the act, admitted); 1876, Ross v. McQuiston, 45 Ia. 147; 1884, State v. Jones, 64 Ia. 349, 355, 357, 360, 17 N. W. 911; 1895, Bever v. Spangler, 93 Ia. 576, 61 N. W. 1072; 1905, Glass' Estate, 127 Ia. 646, 103 N. W. 1013 (presumption as to senile dementia, discussed); 1906, Jones' Estate, 130 Ia. 177, 106 N. W. 610 (presumption defined); 1906, Wharton's Will, 132 Ia. 714, 109 N. W. 492; 1909, Speer v. Speer, 146 Ia. 6, 123 N. W. 176 (testator ill of bronchopneumonia and executing a will while ill; testimony of witnesses "on the day but not at the time, when this will was executed", as to his business capacity of mind, not admitted, because of "no probative force"; a singular example of a Court straining the law to avoid the supposed necessity of a new trial);
Kansas: 1897, State v. Newman, 57 Kan. 705, 47 Pac. 881 (condition "shortly before or after the homicide", admissible);
Kentucky: 1911, Banks v. Com., 145 Ky. 800, 141 S. W. 380;
Louisiana: 1870, State v. Hays, 22 La. An. 39 (accused's conduct and language before and after the time charged, admissible); 1904, State v. Lyons, 113 La. 959, 37 So. 890;
Maine: 1870, Robinson v. Adams, 62 Me. 412; 1885, St. George v. Biddeford, 76 Me. 598;
Maryland: 1833, Davis v. Calvert, 5 G. & J. 269 (testator's mental condition "both before and after that period", admissible); 1888, Spencer v. State, 69 Md. 28, 13 Atl. 809 (accused's condition three years before, excluded on the facts); 1902, Jones v. Collins, 94 Md. 403, 51 Atl. 398; 1905, Gesell v. Baugher, 100 Md. 677, 60 Atl. 481 (a sibylline utterance, purporting to follow the foregoing cases); 1920, Hutchins v. Hutchins, 135 Md. 401, 109 Atl. 121 (business transactions with the testator within a year before and after, admitted; with a distinction as to general opinion to incapacity; the distinction seems groundless);
Massachusetts: 1820, Somes v. Skinner, 16 Mass. 348, 358 (admitting previous extreme weakness of mind, to show present susceptibility to undue influence); 1841, Peaslee v. Robbins, 3 Mete. 164 (indorser's insanity, before and after indorsement, admitted); 1868, Shailer v. Bumstead, 99 Mass. 112 (see quotation supra); 1871, White v. Graves, 107 Mass. 327; 1875, Com. v. Pomeroy, 117 Mass. 148 (accused's subsequent condition admitted; see the phrasing followed in Bolling v. State, Ark. supra); 1878, Davis v. Davis, 123 Mass. 598; 1879, May v. Bradlee, 127 Mass. 420; 1882, Potter v. Baldwin, 133 Mass. 428; 1890, Lane v. Moore, 151 Mass. 87, 90, 23 N. E. 828; 1890, Woodward v. Sullivan, 152 Mass. 470, 25 N. E. 837; 1891, Dumangue v. Daniels, 154 Mass. 483, 485, 28 N. E. 900 (subsequent mental condition admissible; the trial Court's discretion to control as to time); 1896, Howes v. Colburn, 165 Mass. 385, 43 N. E. 125 (approving the trial Court's limitation to a period from about eight years before the execution of the will to about two and a half years after); 1896, Laplante v. Mills, 165 Mass. 487, 43 N. E. 294 (mental condition of a boy a year after his injury, received; "a boy who is dull at fifteen probably was dull at fourteen"); 1904, McCoy v. Jordan, 184 Mass. 575, 69 N. E. 358 (will; the range of time is in the trial Court's discretion); 1905, Hagar v. Norton, 188 Mass. 47, 73 N. E. 1073 (transfer of stock, etc., by deceased; Shailer v. Bumstead followed); 1909, Jenkins v. Weston, 200 Mass. 488, 86 N. E. 955 (the trial Court's discretion controls as to time); 1913, Aldrich v. Aldrich, 215 Mass. 164, 102 N. E. 487 (undue influence; circumstances 12 years prior, held not improperly excluded on the facts);
Michigan: 1893, Haines v. Hayden, 95 Mich. 332, 351, 54 N. W. 911 (subsequent mental condition, admitted on the facts);
Minnesota: 1880, Pinney's Will, 27 Minn. 282, 6 N. W. 791 (see quotation supra); 1895, State v. Hayward, 62 Minn. 474, 65 N. W. 63 (temporary delusions, of a different sort from that alleged against the witness, and existing some time before the trial, excluded); 1913, McAllister v. Rowland, 124 Minn. 27, 144 N. W. 412 (adjudication of insanity, made two months after the will, admitted);
Missouri: 1897, State v. Duestrow, 137 Mo.

1868, COLT, J., in Shailer v. Bumstead, 99 Mass. 112: "By common observation and experience the existence of many forms of mental development, especially that of weakness in those faculties which are an essential part of the mind itself, when once proved imply that the infirmity must have existed for some time. The inference is quite as conclusive that such condition must have had a gradual and progressive development, requiring antecedent lapse of time, as that it will continue when once proved for any considerable.

44, 38 S. W. 554 (liberal range of time allowed); 1897, Rhoades v. Fuller, 139 Mo. 179, 40 S. W. 760 (insanity twenty days later, excluded, partly because proved by a probate judgment of guardianship; see post, § 1671); 1901, Hamburger v. Rinkel, 164 Mo. 398, 64 S. W. 104; 1922, State v. Tarwater, — Mo. —, 239 S. W. 480 (murder; plea, insanity; "liberal latitude" approved);
Montana: 1909, State v. Crowe, 39 Mont. 174, 102 Pac. 579 (trial Court's discretion);
Nevada: 1889, State v. Lewis, 20 Nev. 342, 22 Pac. 241 (approving Com. v. Pomeroy, Mass.);
New Hampshire: 1871, State v. Jones, 50 N. H. 369, 382 (insanity "for a period of many years before the act", admitted); 1876, State v. Kelley, 57 N. H. 549 (insanity two months before, admitted); 1898, Pritchard v. Austin, 69 N. H. 367, 46 Atl. 188;
New Jersey: 1846, State v. Spencer, 21 N. J. L. 196, 203 ("Evidence of former attacks of insanity amounts to about this: It does not show that the prisoner was insane at the time of the homicide; but if there is any independent evidence that he was so, the former insanity increases the probability");
New York: 1854, Waterman v. Whitney, 11 N. Y. 157 (see quotation supra); 1888, People v. Hawkins, 100 N. Y. 408, 410, 11 N. E. 371, semble (accused's insanity two months later, admissible); 1891, People v. Wood, 126 N. Y. 249, 272, 27 N. E. 362 (diseased condition of the accused's brain, when examined by physicians, admitted to show insanity at the time of the killing charged); 1893, People v. Taylor, 138 N. Y. 398, 404, 34 N. E. 275 (condition during the four months between the homicide and the trial, admitted); 1896, People v. Nino, 149 N. Y. 317, 43 N. E. 853 (admitting language of the accused to the expert examining him in jail for insanity); 1896, People v. Hoch, 150 N. Y. 291, 44 N. E. 977 (examination of the accused, made just before and during trial, admitted);
North Carolina: 1820, State v. Scott, 1 Hawks 24, 25, 32 (homicide; conduct and utterances on the morning after, excluded; Henderson, J., diss., holding them admissible "not to prove the truth of the facts declared", but to allow inferences); 1839, Norwood v. Marrow, 4 Dev. & B. 451, 578 (subsequent insane conduct, admitted; practically repudiating State v. Scott); 1880, State v. Vann, 82 N. C. 631, 633 (insane language of the accused after the act, excluded);
No. Dakota: 1917, Westerland v. First Nat'l Bank, 38 N. D. 24, 164 N. W. 323 (voidable deed; judgment of insanity four years afterwards, held "entirely inadmissible, incompetent, irrelevant, and immaterial to prove insanity at a prior date"; entirely unsound, and erroneous, and unpractical);
Ohio: 1878, Wheeler v. State, 34 Oh. St. 394, 396 (inquisition of lunacy four years before, admitted);
Oklahoma: 1901, Queenan v. Terr., 11 Okl. 261, 71 Pac. 218;
Pennsylvania: 1821, Rambler v. Tryon, 7 S. & R. 93; 1822, Irish v. Smith, 8 S. & R. 576; 1845, Chess v. Chess, 1 Pa. St. 163; 1850, McTaggert v. Thompson, 14 Pa. 154; 1851, Louden v. Blythe, 16 Pa. 542; 1854, Wilkinson v. Pearson, 23 Pa. 120; 1861, Stauffer v. Young, 39 Pa. 455, 462, semble; 1871, Pidcock v. Potter, 68 Pa. 351; 1884, First Nat'l Bank v. Wireback's Ex'r, 106 Pa. 46; 1889, Herster v. Herster, 122 Pa. 239, 16 Atl. 342 (see quotation post); 1893, Hindman v. Van Dyke, 153 Pa. 243, 246, 25 Atl. 772 (condition four years before, admitted); 1895, Com. v. Bezek, 168 Pa. 603, 32 Atl. 109; 1921, Com. v. Loomis, 270 Pa. 254, 113 Atl. 428 (testimony at former trial in 1918 of L. now said to be insane; the adjudication of insanity in 1919, and his commitment, held not sufficient to show his present incompetency; an example of the law's pedantry, failing to distinguish between conclusive and sufficient evidence);
Rhode Island: 1904, State v. Quigley, 26 R. I. 263, 58 Atl. 905;
Vermont: 1853, Robinson v. Hutchinson, 26 Vt. 47 (see quotation supra); 1862, Fairchild v. Bascomb, 35 Vt. 398, 417 (condition four years before, admitted); 1918, Martin's Will, 92 Vt. 362, 104 Atl. 100 (will; an "extended period" covered);
West Virginia: 1878, Dinges v. Branson, 14 W. Va. 100, 105 (prior testamentary declarations, admitted to show capacity at a later time to recollect and carry out a plan);
Wisconsin: 1874, Burnham v. Mitchell, 34 Wis. 117, 134; 1889, Giles v. Hodge, 74 Wis. 360, 366, 34 N. W. 163; 1896, French v. State, 93 Wis. 325, 67 N. W. 706 (a time subsequent held not too remote on the facts); 1899, Small v. Champney, 102 Wis. 61, 78 N. W. 407 (mental condition when adjudicated insane, presumed to continue subsequently, but not to have existed antecedently, unless with other evidence of similarity of mental condition at prior time); 1901, Hempton v. State, 111 Wis. 127, 86 N. W. 596 (insanity fourteen years before, admitted).

Compare the cases cited post, §§ 1738, 1739.

period thereafter. . . . [Prior and subsequent declarations], if they are equally significant and no more remote in point of time, are equally competent, and may be quite as influential. . . . If therefore the statement or prior declaration offered has a tendency to prove a condition not in its nature temporary or transient, then, by the aid of the recognized rule that what is once proved to exist must be presumed to continue till the contrary be shown, the declaration, though prior in time to the act of validity of which is questioned, is admissible. Its weight will depend upon its significance and proximity."

1880, GILFILLAN, C. J., in Pinney's Will, 27 Minn. 283, 6 N. W. 791: "The gradual decay of his mental faculties from old age, . . . when it begins, is progressive and permanent; and if at one time it has reached such a stage that the man has become incapable of doing business, it would be contrary to all experience that he should recover. So, if in such a case it is shown that at any time subsequent to that in question the man's faculties are so far unimpaired that he is capable of transacting business, it is evidence that they were so unimpaired at the time in question."

There seems to be no agreed definition of the limit of time within which such prior or subsequent condition is to be considered; and in the nature of things no definition is possible. The circumstances of each case must furnish the varying criterion, and set determination of the trial judge ought to be allowed to control:[2]

1853, ISHAM, J., in Robinson v. Hutchinson, 26 Vt. 47: "Weakness of mind at the time of making the will may be inferred from weakness subsequent, . . . when the declarations were made so near the time of the execution of the will that a reasonable conclusion may be drawn as to the state of mind of the testatrix at the time the will was executed."

1889, CLARK, J., in Herster v. Herster, 122 Pa. 239, 16 Atl. 342: "The weakness of mind and consequent susceptibility to influence which is admissible in such a case must be shown to exist at the very time of the testamentary act. . . . The limitations which govern the admission of this quality of evidence must depend largely on the character of the unsoundness to be proved. There are types of mental unsoundness which appear suddenly and may be of short duration, and in such cases the proof, to be of any avail, must come near to the precise time when the act was performed; but the decadence of old age and many forms of mental derangement and imbecility are of slow advancement, and proof of their distinct development at any given period will afford pretty clear ground to infer their existence for a long period, either before or after, with a considerable degree of certainty. . . . The Court must judge, in each particular case, how far it will be profitable to extend the rule before and after the precise date in question. . . . Of course the objective point of inquiry, in every case, is the state of mind at the precise date of the testamentary act."

1890, C. ALLEN, J., in Lane v. Moore, 151 Mass. 87, 90 (holding that the mental condition before and after a given time, if near enough, is relevant to show the condition at that time when it is in issue): "The judge will determine whether the time is so remote, or whether the circumstances have so changed, that declarations then made would not be deemed satisfactory evidence tending to show the person's condition at the earlier period."

The question whether an inquisition or adjudication of lunacy is admissible at all raises a question of an exception to the Hearsay rule (post, § 1671). Supposing it admissible, then it evidences insanity at the time of inquisition, and the present question — of the relevancy of insanity at that time — is then the same as in cases where the insanity is otherwise evidenced by conduct or the like.

[2] This relegation to the trial judge's discretion is also approved in the following cases cited supra: Clinton v. Estes, Ark.; Enlow v. State, Ind.; Dumangue v. Daniels, Mass.; Wilkinson v. Pearson, Pa. The length of time which has in various cases been recognized as within the proper range of consideration is illustrated in the citations of the foregoing note.

§ 234. Other Principles affecting Proof of Insanity, discriminated. The only inquiry in this place is with the evidencing of mental capacity by circumstantial evidence. Other principles specially affecting the proof of capacity are dealt with elsewhere, and are chiefly the following: the qualifications, as to experience, of a witness to sanity (post, § 568); the qualifications of a witness, as to his observation of the person in question (post, § 689); the exception to the Hearsay rule, admitting utterances of the person in question (post, § 1734); the exception to the Hearsay rule, admitting reputation to prove insanity (post, § 1621); the exception to the Hearsay rule, admitting official inquisition or adjudication upon insanity (post, § 1671); and the application of the Opinion rule to testimony to insanity (post, § 1933).

§ 235. Intoxication. Intoxication, as a mental condition of temporary stupefaction, may be evidenced circumstantially in the same general modes that are available (ante, § 227) for mental capacity or condition in general. (1) It may be evidenced by the person's conduct.[1] (2) It may be evidenced by predisposing circumstances, i.e. by the drinking of intoxicative liquor.[2] (3) It may be evidenced by his prior or subsequent condition of intoxication within such a time that the condition may be supposed to be continuous.[3]

§ 235. [1] 1905, Smith v. State, 142 Ala. 14, 39 So. 329 (conduct in a saloon, admitted to show the extent of intoxication); 1897, State v. Harris, 100 Ia. 188, 69 N. W. 413 (burglary; to disprove the fact of the defendant's intoxication at the time, evidence admitted of a robbery by him on the same evening); 1904, Ford v. Kansas City, 181 Mo. 137, 79 S. W. 923 (specific instances of intoxication, admitted to corroborate medical testimony to a general intemperance, as being the real cause of plaintiff's suffering); 1896, Bagley v. Mason, 69 Vt. 175, 37 Atl. 287 (battery; boisterous and belligerent conduct of the defendant just beforehand, admitted to show the extent of the intoxicated condition in which the plaintiff alleged the defendant was).

[2] 1805, Tuttle v. Russell, 2 Day Conn. 202 ("Can a Court say that evidence to show that a man has within an hour before drunk a quart of rum is not relevant to prove that the man is drunk? . . . It is barely possible that the consequence of a man's drinking a quart of rum may not be drunkenness, but generally it is not only a highly probable but a certain consequence. Courts and juries in weighing evidence are to calculate on probabilities, not possibilities"; this was the argument, as affirmed by the Court); 1858, McDowell v. Boston, 26 Ga. 535 (the mere taking of laudanum at unspecified times was held not enough to show general impairment or temporary affection by it); 1911, Stouse v. State, 6 Okl. Cr. 415, 119 Pac. 271 (murder; that the defendants were drinking intoxicating liquor shortly before, admitted); 1912, Rogers v. State, 8 Okl. Cr. 226, 127 Pac. 365 (witness); 1845, Fleming v. State, 5 Hump. (Tenn.) 564 (drinking a pint of brandy, admitted).

For the use of intoxication as discrediting a witness, see post, § 933.

[3] 1900, Allen v. Allen, 73 Conn. 54, 46 Atl. 242 (divorce for habitual intemperance; habits after date of complaint, admitted); 1883, Upstone v. People, 109 Ill. 169, 175 (murder when intoxicated; intoxication the day before, admitted); 1905, Miller v. People, 216 Ill. 309, 74 N. E. 743 (limits of time as to the taking of intoxicating liquor, considered); 1857, Com. v. Howe, 9 Gray Mass. 113 (prior and subsequent intoxication, to show intoxication at the time of a confession, admitted); 1901, Raynor v. R. Co., 129 N. C. 195, 39 S. E. 821 (intoxication at 3.45 P.M., held no evidence of intoxication at 11 A.M. the same day; "neither drunkenness nor soberness is necessarily a continuing state; both conditions are liable to rapid and frequent fluctuation"; this ruling throws an odd light on the manners of inebriety in that jurisdiction); 1855, McCandless v. McWha, 25 Pa. 95 (prior intemperate habits, admitted); 1921, Gibbard v. Evans, 87 W. Va. 650, 106 S. E. 37 (negligent driving; defendant's intoxication when driving shortly prior, admitted); 1908, Pollock v. State, 136 Wis. 136, 116 N. W. 851 (intoxication 1½ hours later, excluded).

This use of a prior continuing condition is to be distinguished from the use of an intemperate

Topic IV: Evidence to prove Design or Plan

§ 237. General Principle. The existence of a design or plan is usually employed evidentially to indicate the subsequent doing of the act designed or planned (ante, §§ 102–113). An utterance in which a design or plan is asserted is admissible under an exception to the Hearsay rule (post, § 1725). The question here is how such a design or plan may be otherwise evidenced, i.e., circumstantially.[1] Of the three conceivable sorts of circumstantial evidence (ante, § 190), only two are practically available, viz.: (1) Conduct, as indicating the inward existence of a design; (2) Prior or subsequent existence of the design, as indicating its existence at the time in question.

Design or Plan is to be carefully distinguished from Intent. In many parts of the substantive law, particularly in the criminal law, the state of mind accompanying an act becomes legally important, and is for such purposes one of the propositions in issue. This may be termed Intent. It is not used evidentially to prove something else; it is one of the ultimate parts of the issue. Design or Plan, on the other hand, has almost invariably (except where a conspiracy is charged) a purely evidential use; the inference is to be from the design to the act, and thus the design must in its turn be evidenced. The two are practically as well as theoretically to be distinguished, because the conduct that evidences Intent (as may be seen post, §§ 302–304) is often of a different sort and needs fewer restrictions than conduct evidencing Design.

Design must also be distinguished from Emotion or Motive (anger, jealousy, and the like). Thus, threats of violence may evidence both a Design and an Emotion. Conduct as evidencing Emotion is dealt with elsewhere (post, §§ 394–46).[2] habit as evidence of an act of drinking done as a part of the habitual course of conduct (ante, § 96), and from the use of a condition of intoxication as evidencing incapacity to do a specific act (ante, § 85).

§ 238. Sundry Instances (Tools, Materials, Liquor Licenses, Preparations, Journeys, Experiments, Inquiries, Prophecies, and the like). The kinds of conduct which may evidence a design are innumerable in their variety. Any act, which under the circumstances and according to experience as naturally interpreted and applied would indicate a probable design, is relevant and admissible. It is true that the design indicated may be too indefinite to be itself relevant as evidence of an act (ante, § 106); but this does not affect the relevancy of the conduct to evidence that design.

§ 237. [1] From the point of view of logic and psychology as applicable to argument before the jury (not the rules of Admissibility), see the materials collected in the present author's "Principles of Judicial Proof, as given by Logic, Psychology, and General Experience, and illustrated in Judicial Trials" (1913), §§ 39–43.

[2] The occasionally hazy condition of judicial reasoning and nomenclature in this field is illustrated in an opinion (State v. Goff, 117 N. C. 755, 23 S. E. 355) admitting evidence of threats to kill as indicating which party was the aggressor, but using this singular distinction: "while this was not competent as evidence of motive, it was admissible to show temper."

Most evidence of this sort needs no judicial ruling to determine its relevancy, and the precedents deal with only a limited number of the possible uses of such evidence. The discretion of the trial Court should control in all these cases; it is impossible to lay down any general rule that will be definite enough to serve as a solution for each instance; and it is poor policy to attempt in a Supreme Court to pass upon the probative value of each given piece of conduct.

Any attempt to reconcile all the rulings is hopeless; there is no reason why they should be treated as binding precedents. The question is always one of experience and common sense in each case. The general judicial attitude is shown in the following passage:

1878, BREWER, J., in State v. Adams, 20 Kan. 320 (burglary; the four defendants held a meeting to arrange for the crime; a bar of iron and a pair of pincers were alone necessary, and these the defendant brought; the facts were admitted of the defendant having taken a carpenter's brace from a store and hidden it; a third person removed it, and the defendant never used it); "Would not the act be one tending to show preparation, — a preparation made fruitless by the unexpected act of another? Could it not be shown that the one charged with homicide immediately prior thereto was providing himself with several weapons, though one only was used? . . . If one weapon he stole, another he borrowed, and one (his own) he put in order, would proof as to the first be incompetent while evidence as to the others was admissible? . . . If no act or conduct of the defendant could be shown unless the motive therefor or the connection between it and the crime were made indisputably clear, the range of inquiry would be limited and narrow. It is enough that the act has an apparent or probable connection with the crime, and then the motive of the defendant and the weight of it as testimony are to be considered by the jury. . . . Must it be affirmatively shown that each weapon was procured with reference to the homicide before evidence concerning its procurement is competent? Or are the facts concerning all to be put in evidence, leaving their weight to be determined by the jury?"; and the latter is approved.

The acquisition or possession of instruments, tools, or other means of doing the act, is admissible as a significant circumstance; the possession signifies a probable design to use; the instruments need not be such as are entirely appropriate, nor such as were actually put to use.[1] In particular, the adver-

§ 238. [1] ENGLAND: 1855, R. v. Jarvis, 7 Cox Cr. 53 (the possession of a number of false coins, wrapped in separate papers, etc., admitted to show a plan to utter them).

UNITED STATES: Federal: 1849, U. S. v. Burns, 5 McLean 23, 26 (possession of instruments for counterfeiting, admitted); Alabama: 1886, Finch v. State, 81 Ala. 41, 42, 49, 1 So. 565 (borrowing a knife just before the affray in which the knife was used, admitted as "an act of preparation"); California: 1898, People v. Cuff, 122 Cal. 589, 55 Pac. 407 (poisoning by strychnia; defendant's purchase of chloroform, admitted); Florida: 1899, Mobley v. State, 41 Fla. 621, 26 So. 732 (murder by stabbing; purchase of poison and taking it to deceased's house, admitted as indicating a general design to kill deceased); Illinois: 1887, Spies v. People, 122 Ill. 1, 141, 12 N. E. 865, 17 N. E. 898 (the fact that many men came promptly to a place and procured bombs simultaneously, held to point to an "expectation that bombs would be found at that place at that time", and thus to tend to establish a specific plan for their use); Iowa: 1858, State v. Hinkle, 6 Ia. 384 (wife-poisoning; previous possession of arsenic, admitted); 1884, State v. Franks, 64 Ia. 39, 42, 19 N. W. 832 (burglary; prior possession of burglar's tools, admitted); Kansas: 1901, State v. Wayne, 62 Kan. 636, 64 Pac. 68 (possession of tools appropriate to a burglary, though not exclusively so, admissible); Massachusetts: 1849, Com. v. Wilson, 2 Cush. 590 (burglary of the City Hall in Charlestown; evidence was rejected of the possession of a key fitted to open the door of the Lancaster Bank); 1849, Com. v. Williams, 2 Cush. 584 (burglary; the possession of tisement or possession of the apparatus or a license for gaming,[2] or selling liquor,[3] evidences a design to game or to sell.

The presence of a person at a place or a journey towards it, together with behavior showing a desire for secrecy, may indicate a design to commit an unlawful act there.[4] But the indications of secrecy are not essential. In a civil case, for instance, a person's turning down the street to a railroad station would be some indication that he planned taking the train; so too, waiting openly under arms is some indication of a plan to use them, lawfully or unlawfully. The significant thing is the going to or being in a place under conditions which naturally suggest the supposed plan as a possible or probable explanation.[5] Where a person makes inquiries, either by word of mouth or by messenger, or by experimentation searches for knowledge, it is natural to infer that he designs to use the knowledge thus sought; and if the knowledge burglar's tools, admitted); 1870, Com. v. Choate, 105 Mass. 451 (arson; after evidence tending to show that the fire was set by means of a box containing a lighted candle and combustible materials, and not adapted to any but incendiary purposes, the fact was admitted of the defendant's possession of a similar box before the fire in question, as showing, with other things, "a use of his shop for the purpose of preparing boxes and materials for setting incendiary fires, including the fire alleged, in the same place, and all instigated by one motive"; distinguishing Com. v. Wilson, supra); Mississippi: 1876, Long v. State, 52 Miss. 23, 34 (murder by shooting; procuring a pistol on the same morning, admitted); Missouri: 1888, State v. Rider, 95 Mo. 474, 485, 8 S. W. 723 (murder; the procurement of a pistol just beforehand, admitted); New York: 1897, People v. Scott, 153 N. Y. 40, 46 N. E. 1028 (getting a revolver out of pawn a few days before, admitted, to show deliberate intent); Washington: 1889, State v. Webster, 21 Wash. 63, 57 Pac. 361 (murder; defendant's purchase and possession of cantharides, just before the shooting, admitted on the facts); 1911, State v. Hatfield, 65 Wash. 550, 118 Pac. 735 (possession of a corporate seal).

Compare the cases cited ante, § 88.

For the subsequent possession of stolen chattels, as indicating the act of stealing, see ante, § 153.

[2] There are a number of statutes dealing in the same way with this and related offences, but they are usually intended to lay down a rule for the burden of proof (post, § 2500), and do not add anything new to the law of admissibility. The following are merely a few examples: Mass. Gen. L. 1920, c. 271, § 19 (advertising, etc., a ticket, etc., for lottery, evidence of the existence of the lottery, etc.); 1895, Com. v. Gorman, 164 Mass. 549, 42 N. E. 94 (possession of policy slips, evidence of intent to game).

[3] Conn. Gen. St. 1920, § 2822 (Federal liquor license or tax-payment, to be evidence, with the possession of liquor, of possession with illegal intent); 1899, Guy v. State, 90 Md. 29, 44 Atl. 997 (Federal liquor license is evidence of sale); Mass. Gen. L. 1920, c. 138, § 60 (exposure of signs, etc., is evidence that liquor is there for sale); N. H. Pub. St. 1891, c. 112, § 25 (exposure of signs, labelled bottles, etc., or a Federal liquor-tax receipt, is admissible to show the illegal keeping of liquor); 1918, Claunch v. State, 83 Tex. Cr. 378, 204 S. W. 436 (Federal liquor license admitted); 1887, State v. Spaulding, 60 Vt. 228, 233, 14 Atl. 769 (Federal license, admissible to show actual sales; "for if he had the intent to do an act, it would be more probable that he did it than it would be if he had no such intent"); Vt. Gen. L. 1917, § 6593; (payment of Federal liquor-tax, to be evidence of being a common seller and of keeping a liquor-nuisance); 1906, State v. Nethken, 60 W. Va. 673, 55 S. E. 742.

[4] 1829, R. v. Wilson, 1 Law. Cr. C. 112 (murder in a churchyard; the fact was offered that just before the affair the defendant and two others "were lurking there clandestinely with a bundle of cloth; the object being to raise a presumption that they were there with an evil intent, and ergo that they must have had malice against all persons coming in their way and likely to interrupt them"; Littledale, J., rejected it); 1896, Smalls v. State, 99 Ga. 25, 25 S. E. 614 (waiting out in a field, armed, for a pursuing officer, admitted).

[5] A man's presence in a brothel is some evidence that he intended to and did commit adultery: 1828, Astley v. Astley, 1 Hagg. Eccl. 714, 720; 1831, Kenrick v. Kenrick, 4 id. 114, 138 (citing other cases); 1878, Latham v. Latham, 30 Gratt. Va. 307, 312 ("Such an act, wholly unexplained, might be considered evidence of guilt, but it is clearly not one which precludes explanation").

So, too, the fact of a man and woman, not husband and wife, spending the night alone in the same sleeping-room: 1798, Williams v. Williams, 1 Hagg. Consist. 299; 1887, Com. v. Clifford, 145 Mass. 97, 13 N. E. 345.

is needed or is adapted to help in doing the act in question, the inquiries or experiments are thus evidential of a design to do the act.[6] Obscure intimation and allusions are often significant.[7] Words of a person, uttered beforehand, indicating a knowledge that an event is about to occur or an act to [6] Ark. 1891, Bolling v. State, 54 Ark. 588, 596, 16 S. W. 658 (murder; buying a gun and practising shooting, a few weeks before, admissible); Conn. 1786, State v. Green, Kirby 89 (adultery; evidence admitted that the defendant hired a person to go to the woman's house and see whether her husband was at home); Ill. 1861, Com. v. Hersey, 2 Ill. 173, 177 (murder of a woman by poisoning; an inquiry two or three years before as to the methods of procuring abortions, excluded); Ind. 1909, Carter v. State, 172 Ind. 227, 87 N. E. 1081 (abortion with drugs; the woman's inquiries, a few days before, as to mechanical methods of producing miscarriage, excluded; unsound); Ky. 1896, Jackson v. Com., 100 Ky. 239, 38 S. W. 422 (evidence of inquiries about cocaine, and of its known effects and use, in procuring abortions, admitted to show a plan to procure one); Mass. 1885, Costelo v. Crowell, 139 Mass. 588, 2 N. E. 698 (defence of forgery to a promissory note; evidence rejected of the plaintiff's having shown a person how to imitate notes by tracing, the character-rule being invoked; unsound); 1910, Com. v. Howard, 205 Mass. 128, 91 N. E. 397 (wife-murder by strangling; a soldier's handbook, including instructions for the compression of the carotid artery, with the leaf turned down at that place, the book belonging to the defendant, admitted); N. Y. 1882, Walsh v. People, 88 N. Y. 462, 466 (murder by stabbing with a knife; a conversation of the defendant about the effect of throwing pepper into another's eyes and the punishment for it was admitted, as "tending to show that the prisoner was meditating the infliction of a personal injury upon some one and [with other evidence] a personal injury to the deceased"; evidence was also admitted of his having had the knife, used in the killing, sharpened on that morning, and of having the same morning asked the position of the heart in the body); R. I. 1899, State v. Mowry, 21 R. I. 376, 43 Atl. 871 (inquiries for a weapon like that used in a murder, and the presence of such a weapon at a third person's house, admitted); Vt. 1904, Wilmington S. Bank v. Waste, 76 Vt. 331, 57 Atl. 241 (forgery by H. of a note bearing W.'s signature; that in H.'s desk were found sheets of paper with defendant's name written several times, excluded, because no other evidence of H.'s authorship was given; erroneous).

Compare some of the citations ante, § 106.

[7] California: 1895, People v. Evans, — Cal. —, 41 Pac. 444 (the defendant spoke in the third person, saying that the man who had killed R. meant also to kill the deceased before he stopped); Connecticut: 1880, State v. Hoyt, 47 Conn. 518, 522, 538 (murder of a father; the defendant's declarations, in the previous May, that he should not be there to gather the corn they were planting, but should be in Kansas, admitted; also, "Folks talk about me; I will come home drunk some time and give them something else to talk about"); Illinois: 1920, People v. Newsome, 291 Ill. 11, 125 N. E. 735 (election frauds; defendant's prior statements explaining the case of such fraud by a certain method, admitted); Michigan: 1858, People v. Potter, 5 Mich. 1, 5 (just before coming to the place of the affray, the defendant remarked that "he had been reading 'Jack Rand', and he should not be surprised if he should turn highwayman sometime, for he had been struggling with poverty long enough" and, at the same time holding an open dirk-knife, said "if any man piled onto him, he would stick him"; this evidence was admitted, on the principle that "every occurrence, every remark, and the whole conduct of the prisoner, from the time he and the deceased came together until the consummation of the crime, are competent . . . for the purpose of illustrating the act itself by showing the influence which operated to produce the catastrophe, to establish malice, and to justify the act or mitigate the crime"); North Carolina: 1874, State v. Gailor, 71 N. C. 88, 90 (arson; the defendant's remark that "he would not be surprised if in three weeks there would not be a building on this hill, from the threats of B. M.", a third person, admitted); 1885, State v. Green, 92 N. C. 779, 782 (the crime being supposed to have been committed for money paid by another, evidence was admitted that the defendant said he would soon have some money); Pennsylvania: 1876, Continental Ins. Co. v. Delpeuch, 82 Pa. 235 (the deceased's pointing out his property just before death, held not relevant to show suicidal design); Virginia: 1829, Rowt v. Kile, 1 Leigh 217, 223 (instrument alleged to have been forged by J. R.; a remark of his that "his pen had not forgot to write", held not improperly excluded); 1895, Nicholas v. Com., 91 Va. 741, 21 S. E. 364 (the defendant's statements on several occasions that the deceased had heart disease and was liable to die at any time).

Compare the cases cited ante, § 106, "Generic Threats."

Some of the rulings cited under § 106, ante, could be as well considered from the present point of view.

The following case is odd: 1903, Hainsworth v. State, 136 Ala. 13, 34 So. 203 (murder; defendant's facial expression at a prayer-meeting two hours before, admitted).

happen, tend to show a design to do it or to coöperate in it, so far as it was not definitely expected or foreknown by others, because in that case the knowledge could be possessed only by the one planning it or privy to the plan; and the probative value of such evidence would vary with the particularity and exclusiveness of the foreknowledge thus indicated:

1752, Blandy's Trial, 18 How. St. Tr. 1122, 1132; the defendant had frequently told the servants that her father, the deceased, with whose murder she was charged, would not live long, basing the prophecy on the sight of his apparition and other things. Bathurst, arguing for the prosecution: "Mark how the destruction of this poor man is ushered into the world. Apparitions, noises, voices, music, reported to be heard from time to time in the deceased's house; even his days are numbered out, and his own child limits the space of his life but till the following month of October. What could be the meaning of this but to prepare the world for a death that was predetermined? Who could limit the days of a man's life but a person that knew what was intended to be done towards the shortening of it?"

1880, Loomis, J., in State v. Hoyt, 47 Conn. 518, 538: "Remote and obscure allusions to the act in contemplation are admissible as tending to show an existing disposition or design. . . . The fact that the language might possibly have an innocent meaning did not prevent its consideration by the jury, who would of course be called upon to decide whether such was the fact, or whether it was a dark hint thrown from a mind that already felt the shadow of the coming tragedy."

§ 239. Explanations of Incriminating Facts. According to the logical principle of Explanation (ante, § 34), it is always open to the person against whom such conduct is offered to explain away its force by showing some other hypothesis to be equally or more natural, as the reason for the conduct, than the design which it is claimed to evidence. Any explanation which is at all plausible should be received.[1]

§ 240. Similar Offences or Other Acts to show Plan or System. In the cases just considered, the conduct carried within itself the suggestion of design or plan. But acts which in themselves or alone carry no such suggestion may, when multiplied, or when compared with other acts or circumstances, suggest a common plan as the explanation or solution of the compared data. This kind of evidence has many difficulties; and the whole subject, for reasons of convenience, is dealt with elsewhere (post, §§ 300–371), where the distinction between the various uses of such evidence for proving Design, Intent, and Knowledge can best be examined.

§ 241. Prior or Subsequent Design. The time of a Design or Plan is seldom material. Wherever it is, the general principle (ante, § 190) is applied that the existence of a prior or subsequent condition is relevant to show its existence at the time in question; the length of the allowable interval depending on whether, under the circumstances of the case, there is any real probability that the continuance of the condition was interrupted. The application of the principle may be seen in the rulings dealing with Design or plan as evidence of an Act (ante, §§ 102–113).

§ 239. [1] 1881, People v. Malaspina, 57 Cal. 628 (reason for carrying a pistol, admitted); 1898, People v. Cuff, 122 Cal. 589, 55 Pac. 407 (poisoning by strychnia; custom of the place to have strychnia for vermin, admissible to explain the defendant's possession); 1822, Prindle v. Glover, 4 Conn. 266 (showing an innocent reason for a suspicious haunting of the premises on which the trespass took place); 1876, Com. v. Bowers, 121 Mass. 45 (adultery; the defendants were found in a bed-room at night; the fact that their plans in going to the town were innocent, excluded, apparently because the appearances against them were so strong); 1877, Com. v. Blair, 123 Mass. 242 (abortion; similar ruling); 1877, State v. English, 67 Mo. 136 (the defendant's journey to the place of a larceny, explained as called for by his business).

Topic V: EVIDENCE TO PROVE INTENT

§ 242. General Principle. The state of mind which accompanies an act is often of legal consequence as forming an ingredient necessary for the attachment of certain consequences.

(1) Criminal Intent. The state of mind accompanying a forbidden act is frequently an element material to make the act a crime. This state of mind, often spoken of as "malice", differs in different crimes. In no case is it malice in the sense of mere hostile feeling or enmity; for a religious fanatic who kills to please his Deity and to save his victim from the taint of heresy, or a parent who kills his child to save it from starvation, may have legal "malice." This state of mind is also to be distinguished from design or plan, which, as already noted (ante, § 237), is a purpose or aim, considered with reference to its future fulfilment. The notion of Intent, in crimes, may be also, in a broad sense, that of ultimate purpose or object, but it is regarded simply as a state of mind co-existing with the act, and is of a conglomerate nature peculiar to itself. Thus, when A shoots a pistol whose ball strikes X, A's state of mind as he shot may have been that he was pulling the trigger of a pistol whose ball would (a) strike a tree, (b) strike Z, (c) strike a person, X, who was about to assault A himself. The criminal law tells us whether either of these states of mind is criminal; but it does not need to generalize in one phrase or term the exact nature of all possible criminal states of mind; it merely defines the criminal state of mind essential for each respective crime. The idea of criminal Intent, then, usually partakes of deliberateness, knowledge, object, and the like; its absence is often indicated by the ideas of mistake, good faith, reasonable belief, and the like. So far as evidence of it is concerned, the evidence of emotion, of knowledge, or of design has a bearing only so far as emotion, or knowledge, or design enter by the criminal law as constituents of criminal Intent. In other words, there is no special evidence of Intent (with the exception to be mentioned) apart from evidence of emotion, of knowledge, of design. If those elements affect criminal intent (as they usually do), then whatever evidence would serve to prove those elements would be receivable, but no new or peculiar principle of evidence would be involved. If, for example, the charge is of breaking and entering with intent to steal, obviously "intent" here signifies "design", or "plan", and whatever would otherwise be receivable to show design would also be here receivable, — in particular, the conduct throwing light on the design of the person's entrance.[1] So if one is charged with wife-murder, his ill-feeling towards the wife would be an ingredient of criminal Intent, and whatever evidence would be otherwise suitable show motive (i.e. ill-feeling) would be receivable here also. So on a charge of uttering counterfeit notes, knowing them to be spurious, knowledge is an ingredient of the criminal intent, and whatever evidence would be otherwise suitable to show knowledge would here be appropriate. In short, Intent as a separate proposition for proof does not commonly exist. Knowledge, emotion, and design are distinct from each other, and have more or less distinct modes of proof. But as Intent is constituted of one or more of these as ingredients, it forms no separate title of proof; for each of the ingredients is to be proved in the way proper to itself.

There is, however, one element in Intent which is distinct from any of those above, and may thus have to be shown by different evidence. This is the element of deliberateness or wilfulness, — the negative of inadvertence, accident. Thus, one who incorrectly writes the addition of a column of figures may do so inadvertently or intentionally; one who knocks over a lamp and sets fire to a house may do so inadvertently or deliberately. This element is distinct from that of ignorance, or mistake through ignorance (i.e. the absence of knowledge). For instance, one who utters a counterfeit bill may have known it to be counterfeit, but may pay it out by inadvertence, having drawn from the wrong part of his pocket-book. So, on the other hand, one who sells tainted milk does not do it by accident, though he is ignorant of its bad quality. In other words, one may lack knowledge and yet act deliberately, or one may have knowledge and yet act inadvertently. Thus, this distinct element in criminal Intent consists not alone in the voluntary movement of the muscles (i.e. in action), nor yet in a knowledge of the nature of an act, but in the combination of the two, — the specific will to act, i.e. the volition exercised with conscious reference to whatever knowledge the actor has on the subject of the act.[2] We do not necessarily show this in showing knowledge; and, conversely, we may find this conceded and still have to show criminal knowledge. For instance, on the one hand, a person might know arsenic to be poisonous, and yet might administer it inadvertently to another; so that independently of showing his past knowledge of its nature, it might also be necessary to negative his inadvertence. On the other hand, a person might deliberately pull the trigger of a firearm though ignorant that it was loaded; and thus the deliberateness of the act — i.e. the combination of voluntary action with all the knowledge which the person had — would be unquestioned, and the further proof required would be that peculiar to showing knowledge of the particular firearm's contents. There may always thus be a residuum, apart from knowledge, which remains to be proved.

§ 242. [1] 1886, Reed, J., in State v. Teeter, 69 Ia. 718, 27 N. W. 485 ("It often occurs in human experience that the mere fact that a particular act has been done affords the best evidence of the motive or intention with which it was done. If one was to break and enter a building which was known to be on fire, the reasonable presumption from his act would be that his intention was either to attempt the extinguishment of the fire or the rescue of the property or persons within it. So if one was to be found in the night time in the act of breaking into a building in which money or property of great value was deposited, his act would give very strong evidence indeed of the motive or purpose which prompted it").

[2] Compare Austin's distinction between Will and Intention, quoted post, § 2413.

This residuum, the element of deliberateness, the negative of inadvertence or accident, may of course be evidenced by the surrounding circumstances and the conduct, as other mental states are. It may also be evidenced by Design; for, e.g., one who has planned to kill another is very unlikely to have acted inadvertently in shooting at him. It may also be evidenced by Knowledge, for one who knows, e.g. that arsenic is poisonous, is less likely than otherwise to administer it inadvertently. It may also be evidenced by Emotion; for one who is angry with another is less likely than otherwise to strike him inadvertently. All these elements, independently useful and provable as bearing on the doing of the act, help also to throw light on the intent accompanying the act.

But there is one peculiar mode of evidencing this deliberateness — the negative of inadvertence or accident — which stands by itself, in the sense that it may have no bearing distinctively on a previous Design or on a previous Knowledge or on a previous Emotion, and yet may help to throw light on deliberateness, this distinctive residuum, — namely, other similar acts. The doctrine of chances and the experience of conduct tell us that accident and inadvertence are rare and casual; so that the recurrence of a similar act tends to persuade us that it is not to be explained as inadvertent or accidental. The rulings dealing with this kind of evidence are for the sake of convenience dealt with elsewhere (post, §§ 300–371), in connection with the other principles to be distinguished.

(2) Testamentary Intent. The state of mind accompanying an act dealing with a will is frequently of consequence as an ingredient of the total act. A tearing or a cancelling of a will may or may not be a revocation according as it is done deliberately and knowingly or the reverse. The peculiar element of Intent, here as in the preceding case, consists not merely of knowledge of the nature of the paper, but in action with the presence of such knowledge and with the foresight of the consequences. Circumstances, conduct, knowledge, former design, and the like, — all evidence this element of intent, and no distinct principle of evidence is involved. Other similar acts have rarely a bearing; so far as they have, they are admissible (post, § 370). Former design to revoke, as indicating probable intent at the time of destroying or cancelling, is admissible (ante, § 112, and post, § 1737). Subsequent belief in revocation, as pointing back to an intent to revoke, may also be admissible (post, §§ 271, 1737). The Hearsay rule is here the chief obstacle to be considered (post, § 1737).

(3) Sundry Intents. The intent accompanying an act may be material in an act of delivery, payment, or the like. The only question of evidence arising concerns the Hearsay rule for language accompanying the act (post, §§ 1770–1786).

SUB-TITLE II (continued): EVIDENCE TO PROVE A HUMAN QUALITY OR CONDITION

TOPIC VI: EVIDENCE TO PROVE KNOWLEDGE, BELIEF, OR CONSCIOUSNESS

CHAPTER XI.

§ 244. General Analysis of the Subject. The notions Knowledge, Belief, and Consciousness are not precisely identical; but they have a common feature, which is the typical one so far as concerns the modes of evidencing these mental states. That feature is most nearly expressed by the term Consciousness, i.e. presence in the mind of an impression as to a given fact. Thus, a person's Knowledge of a city's streets may be inferred from his conduct in finding his way through them unerringly; his Consciousness of guilt may be inferred from his conduct in fleeing from arrest; his Belief in a friend's innocence of embezzlement may be inferred from his conduct in trusting him with money. The respective terms are by usage more usually associated with different relations in which this impression of mind arises; the term Belief is used commonly when the impression is thought of as bearing on present or future action, Consciousness when thought of as bearing on past action, and Knowledge when thought of in connection with the reality of external objects.

These states of mind may or may not, considered in themselves, be in issue or be evidential of something else; e.g., a person's state of mind as to the city's streets may not be evidential to show their actual condition, but may be legally material otherwise; his impression as to his own guilt may be evidential of that, but not of something else; his impression as to a friend's innocence may not be evidential of his innocence, but may be material in other respects. We are here not concerned, in theory at least, with the way in which one of these states of mind has come to be an object of proof, either as being an issue or as being itself evidential of something else. The substantive law tells us when any one of these states of mind is legally material to the issue; and the principles governing their relevancy evidentially to prove an act have already been considered (ante, §§ 172–177). It is assumed that somehow this kind of state of mind — impression, consciousness, knowledge, belief — is in the case, either as material to the issue or as relevant to prove something; and the question is how it is in its turn to be evidenced.

Of the three modes (Prospectant, Concomitant, Retrospectant) of evidencing a state of mind (ante, § 190), the first two are here the commonest, the third rarely calls for a ruling.

(1) Conduct or behavior (including language not used assertively) illustrates and points back to the state of mind producing it; and the state of mind which is variously termed knowledge, belief, or consciousness shows itself in the conduct of its bearer;

(2) External circumstances, calculated by their presence or occurrence to bring about the state of mind in question, are also available to show the probability that consciousness, knowledge, or belief subsequently ensued;

(3) A prior or subsequent state of mind indicates, within certain limits, its existence at the time in question.

These three typical modes of evidencing consciousness, knowledge, or belief have each their peculiar and common features, and must be examined separately. The inferences in the respective modes have so much in common that it is profitable to group them together.[1] The second of the above modes will for convenience' sake be considered first.

1. External Circumstances as evidencing Knowledge, Belief, or Consciousness

§ 245. General Principle. There are, in a broad analysis, four kinds of circumstances (events or things) which may point forward to the probability that a given person received a given mental impression (i.e. obtained knowledge, formed a belief, or was made conscious):

(1) The direct exposure of the fact to his sense of sight, hearing, or the like;

(2) The express making of a communication to him;

(3) The reputation in the community on the subject, as leading probably to an express communication;

(4) The intrinsic quality of the occurrence, as leading either to actual perception by his senses, or to express communication.

Throughout all these four modes there run two considerations, affecting some modes more strongly than others: (a) The probability that the person received an impression of any fact at all; and (b) The probability that from the particular occurrence he would gain an impression as to the specific fact in question. Doubt may arise upon either of these points, and the various modes above are stronger or weaker in one or the other of these considerations. The four modes may now be examined more in detail.

(1) Direct exposure of the fact to the senses. Here there is seldom any doubt as to the element (b) above; the question usually is whether the fact in question was brought within the range of the senses so as probably to be perceived at all. The typical case is the possession of a document. If a deed or a notice was laid on A's desk, the probability (greater or less according to circumstances) is that A read it. But actual possession by A is not necessary; the posting of a placard in a street through which A habitually passes is some evidence that A ultimately came to see and understand its contents. Occasionally the element (b) above is the emphatic one; for example, where A is charged with selling liquor to B, a minor, the appearance of B, as indicating A's knowledge of B's minority or his belief in B's maturity, was the fact brought before A, and the question is whether it would probably have informed him as to the further specific fact, namely, B's age.

§ 244. [1] From the point of view of logic and psychology as applicable to argument before the jury (not the rules of Admissibility), see the materials collected in the present author's "Principles of Judicial Proof, as given by Logic, Psychology, and General Experience, and illustrated in Judicial Trials" (1913), §§ 30–38.

(2) Express communication. Little difficulty can arise here. There may be a question as to whether the communication came from a source which the person was fairly bound to consider authentic; but this would be a question of substantive law, involving the elements of good faith, constructive notice, or the like. There may also be a question as to the interpretation of the communication, — whether its sense could properly be taken as of one sort or another; but this also is a question of substantive law.

(3) Repuiation. Here the element (a) is the important one. The probative considerations are that, when a matter is so much talked of in a community that a reputation arises about it, a member of that community, in his ordinary intercourse with others, will come to hear it mentioned, i.e. by express communication; and the question is whether the probability is that there would be such a general discussion and whether the person is likely to have learned of that discussion. The first part of this inquiry — whether a reputation can arise — depends on the nature of the matter; the second part depends on the situation of the person in question.[1]

(4) Quality of the occurrence, in general. Sundry cases here combine the considerations of all the preceding modes, as well as of both the elements (a) and (b) above. Thus, a former accident to apparatus owned by A may indicate that A learned of the defect in the apparatus, either because he probably observed the former accident or because he probably was told of it by his subordinate having charge of the apparatus, or because complaint was probably made to him; and not only is the probability (a) of his having learned of the former accident thus involved, but also the probability (b) that the former accident would have revealed to him specifically the existence of the defect. So, also, a former act of violence by the deceased, in order to have any value to show the slayer's ground for apprehension of an attack, must (a) not only have been communicated to the slayer, (b) but also must be such as would create a belief in the deceased's probable aggression.

Such being the various modes in which the evidence may operate, nevertheless in a given situation (as where an employer is to be charged with knowledge of an employee's incompetency, or a defendant accused of murder is to show belief in the deceased's probable aggression) the knowledge, belief, or consciousness may be sought to be evidenced by more than one of the above modes. Practically, therefore, it is more convenient to group the cases, not according to the above modes of operation, but according to the various ultimate facts the knowledge or belief of which is to be shown.

§ 245. [1] Whether the reputation of a fact is admissible to prove the fact itself is a question of the Hearsay rule, treated post, §§ 1580–1626, and has nothing to do with the present subject.

§ 246. (1) Defendant in Homicide; (a) Reputation of the Deceased. Where a defendant charged with murder asserts that he killed in self-defence, his state of mind at the time of the killing becomes material; and an important element in determining his justification is his belief in an impending attack by the deceased. The reputation of the deceased for a violent, dangerous, or turbulent disposition is a circumstance which would contribute to such a belief:

1848, LUMPKIN, J., in Monroe v. State, 5 Ga. 137: "Reasonable fear, under our code, repels the conclusion of malice; and has not the character of the deceased for violence much to do in determining the reasonableness or unreasonableness of the fear under which the defendant claims to have acted? Does it make no difference whether my adversary be a reckless and overbearing bully, having a heart lost to all social ties and order and fatally bent on mischief, or is a man of Quaker-like mien and deportment, one who never strikes except in self-defence and then evincing the utmost reluctance to shed blood? Who, knowing the character of Kyd the pirate, or of the infamous John A. Murrell, would not instantly, upon their approach armed with deadly weapons, act upon the presumption that robbery or murder or both were contemplated? We apprehend that the imminence of the danger, as well as the chances of escape, will depend greatly upon the temper and disposition of our foe."

1856, WALKER, J., in Franklin v. State, 29 Ala. 17: "Conduct of a man of peaceable character and harmless deportment might pass by without exciting a reasonable apprehension of impending peril; while on the other hand the same conduct from a man of notoriously opposite character and habits might reasonably produce a consciousness of the most imminent peril and a conviction of the necessity of prompt defensive action. Whenever such bad character on the part of the deceased thus illustrates the circumstances attending a homicide, and the circumstances, so illustrated, tend to produce a reasonable belief of imminent danger in the mind of the slayer, the character, as mingled with the transaction, is a part of it, and is indispensable to its correct understanding."

1875, ROBERTS, C. J., in Horbach v. State, 43 Tex. 250: "A man's character for violence, dependent upon his irascible temper, overbearing disposition, and reckless disregard of human life, is as much a part of himself as his judgment and discretion, his sight or hearing, his strength, his size, his activity, or his age, — any one of which may become a material fact to give a correct understanding of his conduct and the intention with which an act is done by him, and are therefore part of the 'res gestæ' when pertinent to the act sought to be explained. Their office in evidence is adjective, or auxiliary to a substantive fact to which they are pertinent and without which they are irrelevant and immaterial. They are helps to the understanding in construing human conduct. The mind cannot reject or disregard them. They, and all like helps, ever have been and ever will be elements in the formation of belief as to what a man designs by an act to which they are pertinent. . . . If then the character of the assailant in any case has helped to form a reasonable belief in the mind of the assailed that his life was then in danger, when the acts alone would fail to do it, the jury should in some way be informed of the character of the assailant, as well as of his acts, to enable them to understand that the belief was a reasonable one. . . . It is scarcely necessary to go into an explanation of the condition of things in this country which imperatively requires the admission of the proof of the character of the deceased for violence. . . . It is well and generally known that there are some violent and dangerous men in this country, who are in the habit of carrying pistols, belted behind them and in their pockets, who never think of fighting in any other way than with deadly weapons, who are expert in using them, and who, especially when intoxicated, bring on and press to the extreme of outrage their deadly encounters for causes and provocations that would be regarded as utterly trivial by peaceable men; and that if one of such persons, while engaged in an angry altercation, should suddenly step back and rapidly throw his hand behind him, it might readily be understood by those who saw it to mean that he was in the act of drawing a pistol to use it. The same act by one of the great mass of our peaceable citizens who are not in the habit of carrying weapons would suggest no such thought, and in such case the pistol would have to be drawn and exhibited before any such thing would be conceived, unless there had been some very extraordinary provocation. This state of things here is a substantial reality, well known and ostensible to the perception of every one at all familiar with the subject; and men act upon it, and are compelled to act upon it, in defending themselves from deadly assaults. . . . It may be deduced from these authorities that the general character of the deceased for violence may be proved when it would serve to explain the actions of the deceased at the time of the killing; that the actions which it would serve to explain must first be proved before it would be admissible as evidence; that if no such acts were proved as it would serve to explain, its rejection when offered in evidence could not be error; and that, if rejected when a proper predicate has been established for its admission, it is held to be error. . . . In arraying the facts to establish that he acted in self-defence, if an act of the deceased at the time of the killing is of doubtful import, or is otherwise of a character that it would be explained and construed more favorably for the accused by adding to it the proof of the character of the deceased for violence, then such proof is admissible."

The admissibility of such evidence is recognized, on principle, in all but a few jurisdictions.[1] The law varies, in the several jurisdictions, only § 246. [1] Federal: 1896, Smith v. U. S., 161 U. S. 85, 16 Sup. 483 (Gray, J.: "that the deceased had the general reputation of being a quarrelsome and dangerous person was competent, especially if his character in this respect was known to the defendant"; the "especially" here is an uncertain phrase, indicating an unfamiliarity with the principle); Alabama: 1833, Quesenberry v. State, 3 Stew. & P. 308, 315 ("if the circumstances were such as to leave any doubt" as to the necessity of self-defence admissible); 1853, Pritchett v. State, 22 Ala. 39 (admitted in cases of self-defence, because it "might very reasonably justify a resort to more prompt measures of self-preservation"; but the deceased "forfeits no right to his life", until "by an actual attempt to execute his threats, or by some act or demonstration at the time of killing, taken in connection with such character or threats, he induces a reasonable belief", etc.; this is the foundation of the "overt-act" doctrine, advanced later); 1856, Franklin v. State, 29 Ala. 10, 14 (character for turbulence, violence, revengefulness, bloodshed, and the like, admissible where the deceased's conduct in the light of the character would excite apprehension; not limited to doubtful cases); 1875, Eiland v. State, 52 Ala. 333 (same; "it should never be received when at the time of the killing there is no act or word of the deceased which can be illustrated or explained by it, or when there is not evidence conducing to show the killing was in self-defence"); 1880, Roberts v. State, 68 Ala. 165 (same; adopting the same phrasing as in the case of threats; see post, § 247); 1882, De Arman v. State, 71 Ala. 360 (bad character for peacefulness, admitted; not necessary to use any special form of words, such as "bloodthirsty", "quarrelsome", etc.); 1882, Storey v. State, 71 Ala. 329, 341 (admissible "in all cases where an issue of self-defence properly arises"); 1883, Williams v. State, 74 Ala. 18, 20 (admitted, citing the last three cases); 1889, Smith v. State, 88 Ala. 77, 7 So. 52 (principle affirmed); 1891, Amos v. State, 96 Ala. 120, 124, 11 So. 424 (not admitted where there were no facts that could excite a belief of peril); 1893, Karr v. State, 100 Ala. 4, 14 So. 851 (no conditions specified); 1898, Naugher v. State, 116 Ala. 463, 23 So. 26; 1898, Rufus v. State, 117 Ala. 131, 23 So. 144 (excluded, the defendant being "clearly at fault"); 1903, Morrell v. State, 136 Ala. 44, 34 So. 208 (excluded, there being no evidence of an overt act); 1905, Green v. State, 143 Ala. 2, 39 So. 363 (rule stated); 1909, Pate v. State, 162 Ala. 32, 50 So. 357 (repute in a place 8 miles away, admitted); 1917, Glover v. State, 200 Ala. 384, 76 So. 300 (deceased's habit of carrying a pistol, unknown to defendant, excluded);

Arkansas: 1874, Palmore v. State, 29 Ark. 248, 261, 263 (admitted); 1904, Long v. State, 72 Ark. 427, 81 S. W. 387 (reputation of the deceased residing in another State, excluded); California: 1858, People v. Murray, 10 Cal. 309 (admissible "when the circumstances of the contest are equivocal" as to self-defence); 1861, People v. Lombard, 17 Cal. 316, 320 (admissible "where the immediate circumstances of the killing render it doubtful whether the act was justifiable or not"); 1871, People v. Edwards, 41 Cal. 640, 643 (like People v. Mur-as to the definition of the chief details that are made conditions of admissibility.

These details, and certain distractions must now be noticed:

(a) Overt act. The abstract validity of the principle cannot be doubted. That the deceased's reputation should in such situations be accepted as affecting the defendant's apprehensions is clear. But the unconditional and indisray); 1896, People v. Howard, 112 Cal. 135, 44 Pac. 464 (admissible "in rare cases"); 1899, People v. Griner, 124 Cal. 19, 56 Pac. 625 (distinction between "character" and "general reputation", not decided); 1906, People v. Lamar, 148 Cal. 564, 83 Pac. 993;

Colorado: 1878, Davidson v. People, 4 Colo. 145, 150 (admitted, if an attack by the deceased is shown);

Delaware: 1845, State v. Thawley, 4 Harringt. 562 (excluded, on the theory that it is no excuse; Harrington, J., dubit.);

Florida: 1886, Bond v. State, 21 Fla. 738, 756 (excluded, because there was no evidence of hostile conduct at the time); 1891, Garner v. State, 28 Fla. 113, 136, 9 So. 835 (admissible when there was "some demonstration which", though otherwise innocent, "when received or considered in connection with or illustrated by such character, may arouse a reasonable belief of imminent peril" of death or great bodily harm; the Court to determine whether evidence of such exists, solving doubts in favor of the defendant); 1893, s. c. 31 Fla. 170, 174, 12 So. 638 (same); 1893, Roten v. State, 31 Fla. 514, 523, 12 So. 910 (admissible only after evidence of a hostile demonstration or overt act); 1894, Steele v. State, 33 Fla. 348, 350, 14 So. 841 (same as Garner v. State, semble); 1896, Hart v. State, 38 Fla. 39, 20 So. 805; Allen v. State, 38 Fla. 44, 20 So. 807;

Georgia: 1848, Monroe v. State, 5 Ga. 85, 137 (admitted); 1855, Keener v. State, 18 Ga. 194, 220 (same); 1855, Bowie v. State, 19 Ga. 7 (same); 1892, Croom v. State, 90 Ga. 430, 17 S. E. 1003 (character for violence towards negroes, excluded); 1903, Dannenberg v. Berkner, 118 Ga. 885, 45 S. E. 682 (rule applied);

Idaho: 1868, People v. Stock, 1 Ida. 218 (admissible, if the circumstances "raise a doubt" in regard to self-defence);

Illinois: 1885, Davis v. People, 114 Ill. 86, 95, 29 N. E. 192, semble (that he was "a good man in a fight", admissible); 1902, Carle v. People, 200 Ill. 494, 66 N. E. 32 (admissible, after other evidence tending to show the deceased's aggression);

Indiana: 1858, Dukes v. State, 11 Ind. 556, 565 (admitted where a question of self-defence arose); 1864, Fahnestock v. State, 23 Ind. 231, 237, semble (general character for violence when intoxicated, admissible); 1884, Boyle v. State, 97 Ind. 322, 324 (character admitted); 1891, Bowlus v. State, 130 Ind. 227, 28 N. E. 1115 (same);

Kansas: 1864, Wise v. State, 2 Kan. 419 (admissible, semble, where from other circumstances it appears that "the defendant was justified in believing himself in danger"); 1874, State v. Potter, 13 Kan. 414, 423 (admissible, semble, where there is a doubt as to self-defence and the testimony "may serve to explain the conduct of the deceased"); 1878, State v. Riddle, 20 Kan. 711, 714 (excluded on no clear rule; here there was an assault by the deceased, but not such as to excite fear of serious harm); 1879, State v. Scott, 24 Kan. 68, 70 (admitted; no rule stated); 1902, State v. Spangler, 64 Kan. 661, 68 Pac. 39 (admissible);

Kentucky: 1858, Payne v. Com., 1 Metc. 370, 379 (character, and the habit of carrying concealed deadly weapons, admitted; no general test laid down); 1871, Bohannon v. Com., 8 Bush 481, 488 (semble, admissible); 1893, Riley v. Com., 94 Ky. 266, 270, 22 S. W. 222 (admitted);

Louisiana: 1850, State v. Chandler, 5 La. An. 489 (excluded; no reason given); 1854, State v. D'Angelo, 9 La. An. 48 (same; Slidell, C. J., intimating possible exceptions); 1855, State v. Brien, 10 La. An. 453 (same as Chandler's case); 1856, State v. Jackson, 12 La. An. 679 (same); 1878, State v. Robertson, 30 La. An. 340 (admitted where aggression by the deceased is shown, and semble previous threats; the above cases ignored); State v. Burns, 30 La. An. 679 (the preceding case ignored, the early cases cited; the evidence rejected, as under a general rule, intimating that on a proper showing of self-defence, it might be admissible); 1880, State v. Vance, 32 La. An. 1177 (excluded, because no action evincing a hostile purpose at the time was offered, a prior conditional threat not sufficing); State v. Ricks, 32 La. An. 1098 (admissible, when "threats and hostile acts or demonstrations are proven"); 1881, State v. Jackson, 33 La. An. 1087 (admissible, if there was an "assault or hostile demonstration" at the time, prior threats not being a sufficient foundation); 1882, State v. McNeely, 34 La. An. 1022 (admissible in connection with previous threats alone); 1883, State v. Garic, 35 La. An. 970, 971 (a charge that it could be considered, "in connection with proof of an overt act", apparently approved); State v. Claude, 35 La. An. 71, 74 (admissible when "any assault or hostile demonstration" or other circumstances showing belief of danger is proved); 1884, State v. Watson, 36 La. An. 148 (admitted, if there were "threats made and communicated, followed by criminate admission of such evidence is dangerous. The danger is, not only that the deceased's reputed character, once in evidence, will be appealed to as justifying the deliberate destruction by private hands of a detested malefactor, but also that, though no plausible situation of self-defence is otherwise evidenced, this evidence will be improperly used to confuse the issue as if some act on the part of the deceased to induce the belief or apprehension that the threats were about" to be executed); State v. Birdwell, 36 La. An. 859, 861 (admissible only in case of an "overt act, assault, or hostile demonstration" at the time, and not merely of the use of previous threats); 1885, State v. Saunders, 37 La. An. 389 (admissible in case of a "hostile demonstration, overt act, or threats"; citing only State v. Garic); State v. Ford, 37 La. An. 443, 460 (same test; the trial Court is to determine whether the preliminary overt-act evidence suffices); State v. Janvier, 37 La. An. 644 (same); State v. Kervin, 37 La. An. 782 (same); State v. Jackson, 37 La. An. 896 (same); 1888, State v. Williams, 40 La. An. 168, 3 So. 629 semble (same); 1890, State v. Cosgrove, 42 La. An. 753, 7 So. 714 (same); 1891, State v. Paterno, 43 La. An. 514, 9 So. 442 (rejecting the character because of the "absence of danger and necessity for self-defence"; none of the above cases cited); 1892, State v. Christian, 44 La. An. 950, 954, 11 So. 589 (same as State v. Ford, including the rule of trial Court's discretion); 1893, State v. Stewart, 45 La. An. 1164, 1166, 14 So. 143 (same); State v. Nash, 45 La. An. 1137, 1141, 13 So. 732, 731 (rejecting the character because not communicated and because no overt act was shown); State v. Carter, 45 La. An. 1326, 14 So. 30 (dangerous character not received in mitigation, unless "hostile demonstration" is shown); 1894, State v. Barker, 46 La. An. 798, 802, 15 So. 98 (trial Court's findings control, unless affirmatively shown erroneous); State v. Williams, 46 La. An. 708, 15 So. 82 (same as State v. Ford; the "overt act" must be "some demonstration . . . of such character as to impress upon him that he was in imminent danger of his life or some great bodily harm"); State v. Beck, 46 La. An. 1419, 16 So. 368 (same as State v. Ford); State v. Green, 46 La. An. 1522, 16 So. 367 (same); 1895, State v. Vallery, 47 La. An. 182, 16 So. 745 (admissible, where there is "a hostile demonstration"; the trial Court's discretion controls); 1896, State v. Compagnet, 48 La. An. 1470, 21 So. 46 (same); 1901, State v. Napoleon, 104 La. 164, 28 So. 972 (admitted; no cases cited). From this maze of twisting precedents, which none but a Louisiana practitioner should be condemned to unravel, these conclusions could be ventured: (1) The law of to-day goes back only to Birdwell's and Ford's cases, in which the phrasing of the limitation and the doctrine of the trial Court's discretion are established; (2) Some later cases (erroneously, it would seem) still treat threats at the time of the affray as equivalent to an overt act of aggression; (3) In the Paterno case, the doctrine is laid down that the deceased's character and threats are also evidential as explaining away the inference of the defendant's malice from his prior preparations; this doctrine is apparently unsound as far as concerns the character-evidence; see post, § 247. Ensuing rulings centre chiefly on the question of the finality of the trial Court's ruling: 1904, State v. Golden, 113 La. 791, 37 So. 757 (the trial judge, not the jury, determines whether the overt act has been sufficiently evidenced, but his ruling may be reviewed); 1906, State v. Rodriguez, 115 La. 1004, 40 So. 438 (mode of preparing the judge's certificate of finding as to the overt act, under St. 1896, No. 113, requiring a bill of exceptions to be taken down at the time in writing; Provosty, J., diss., says that "the recognized purpose of that act was to take from the control of the trial judge, where the doctrine of State v. Ford [supra] had placed it, the statement of the facts upon which a bill has been retained"); 1906, State v. Craft, 118 La. 117, 42 So. 718 (rule of the trial Court's discretion, affirmed); 1907, State v. Mathews, 119 La. 665, 44 So. 336 (excluded, because no overt act was shown); 1919, State v. Benoit, 144 La. 254, 80 So. 329 ("the uniform jurisprudence in this State" requires proof of the overt act "to the satisfaction of the trial judge"); 1921, State v. Sandiford, 149 La. 933, 90 So. 261 (trial Court's finding of no overt act, reviewed and affirmed; cited more fully post, § 247);

Maine: 1837, State v. Field, 14 Me. 244 (the deceased's character as "quarrelsome, savage, and dangerous", excluded, as not amounting to an excuse; the present point of view was emphasized by the counsel, but was apparently not understood by the Court);

Massachusetts: 1845, Com. v. York, 7 Law Reporter, Mass. 497, 507 (character rejected, as without precedent and leading to multifariousness); 1854, Com. v. Hilliard, 2 Gray 294 ("general character and habits" as a "quarrelsome, fighting, vindictive, and brutal man of great strength", not admitted to show "reasonable cause to fear great bodily harm"; because "such evidence is too remote and uncertain"); 1858, Com. v. Mead, 12 Gray 167 (the defendant shot the deceased while the latter was choking him, as alleged; the fact was excluded, following the preceding case, of the deceased's remarkable strength and of his skill and practice as a garroter by seizing another by the throat in a peculiar and danger-there were real doubt about the necessity for defence and the apprehension of danger. Hence Courts have usually laid down certain conditions intended to prevent abuse of this evidence.

A common limitation is the broad one that other evidence shall be offered which serves to bring self-defence fairly into issue, — some appreciable evidence of the deceased's prior aggression, or of ground to believe in impending ous mode); 1905, Com. v. Tircinski, 189 Mass. 257, 75 N. E. 261 (the foregoing cases repudiated; the deceased's general character as a violent and quarrelsome man, known to the defendant, admitted);

Michigan: 1868, People v. Garbutt, 17 Mich. 9, 15 (excluded, because insanity, not self-defence, was the defence); 1878, Brownell v. People, 38 Mich. 732, 735 (that the deceased was "a powerful man of violent temper", admitted);

Minnesota: 1860, State v. Dumphey, 4 Minn. 438, 445 (admissible where there is doubt as to the premeditation of the defendant; opinion not clear);

Mississippi: 1849, Jolly v. State, 13 Sm. & M. 223, 225, semble (admissible, if the deceased appears as the aggressor); 1856, Cotton v. State, 31 Miss. 504 (character admissible); 1859, Wesley v. State, 37 Miss. 327, 346 (admissible, where the defendant had ground to apprehend an attack); 1872, Chase v. State, 46 Miss. 683, 703 (excluded, although the issue of self-defence was raised and strong evidence of it offered; the opinion is confused, and, though citing authorities profusely, does not show understanding of the principle); 1872, Harris v. State, 46 Miss. 319, 325 (approving the Chase case); 1881, Spivey v. State, 58 Miss. 858, 864 (admissible, where there is apparent danger from some overt act indicating a present purpose to do the accused some great bodily harm"); 1885, Moriarty v. State, 62 Miss. 654, 661 (expressing the rule substantially as in the preceding case); 1888, King v. State, 65 Miss. 576, 582, 5 So. 97 (character admissible, approving the preceding case); 1898, Smith v. State, 75 Miss. 542, 23 So. 260 (the defendant's testimony alone is enough to "lay the predicate" of "some testimony" of an overt act);

Missouri: 1853, State v. Jackson, 17 Mo. 544, 548 (excluded here, because no issue of self-defence was made); 1859, State v. Hicks, 27 Mo. 588, 590 (admitted, the issue being self-defence and the other evidence creating a doubt); 1872, State v. Keene, 50 Mo. 357, 360 (same); 1874, State v. Bryant, 55 Mo. 75, 78 (holding that character as a "desperate and dangerous" man, and not merely as to "peace and quiet", should have been admitted); 1875, State v. Harris, 59 Mo. 550, 552, 556 (admitted, but with the intimation that the deceased must appear to have made some demonstration at the time); 1876, State v. Elkins, 63 Mo. 165 (admissible in doubtful cases of self-defence); 1893, State v. Pettit, 119 Mo. 410, 414, 24 S. W. 1014 (admitted); 1893, State v. Kennade, 121 Mo. 405, 415, 26 S. W. 347 (excluded, because not communicated); 1907, State v. Zorn, 202 Mo. 12, 100 S. W. 591; 1910, State v. Colvin, 226 Mo. 446, 126 S. W. 448 (certain testimony held insufficient);

Montana: 1898, State v. Shafer, 22 Mont. 17, 55 Pac. 526 (admitted; there being evidence of deceased's aggression); 1899, State v. Shadwell, 22 Mont. 573, 57 Pac. 281 (similar);

Nevada: 1880, State v. Pearce, 15 Nev. 188, 191 (admissible, where "the circumstances are such as to raise a doubt" as to self-defence);

New York: 1866, People v. Lamb, 41 N. Y. 360, 366 (admissible only "where the defendant had reason to be in fear" of life or great bodily harm); 1881, Abbott v. People, 86 N. Y. 461, 469 (admissible only "where it is shown that an assault has been committed or threatened at the time when the homicide is committed or immediately preceding it, or is intimately connected with it so as to justify" action in self-defence); 1904, People v. Rodawald, 177 N. Y. 408, 70 N. E. 1 (admissible, if the reputation has come to the defendant's knowledge);

North Carolina: 1877, State v. Turpin, 77 N. C. 473, 477 (character as a violent and dangerous man; uncommunicated character also admissible, under § 63, ante; the limitation is made that there must be evidence tending to show self-defence, and that the evidence be wholly circumstantial; for the first time the necessity of communication is recognized in this State; the local precedents cited do not deal at all with the present question); 1879, State v. Chavis, 80 N. C. 357 (State v. Turpin recognized); 1893, State v. Rollins, 113 N. C. 722, 732, 18 S. E. 394 (excluded, where not known to defendant); 1897, State v. Byrd, 121 N. C. 684, 28 S. E. 353 (admissible, but only where there is "other evidence tending to show self-defence" or where "the evidence of the killing is entirely circumstantial"; but the latter seems to be said of uncommunicated character only);

Ohio: 1860, Gandolfo v. State, 11 Oh. St. 114, 118, semble (admissible); 1875, Marts v. State, 26 Oh. 162 (same); 1907, State v. Roderick, 77 Oh. 301, 82 N. E. 1082 (admissible; correcting the loose remarks in Marts v. State, supra, that besides reputation-evidence some other evidence of the actual character must be given); aggression, — for it is not always clear which is judicially meant. By some Courts it is said (more strictly) that the issue of self-defence (i.e., presumably, the impending of an attack) must be in doubt. Another and more specific form of limitation is the doctrine of "overt act", peculiarly developed in Louisiana and Florida. The notion here is that the deceased's reputation can have a 'bona fide' bearing on the defendant's apprehension only where there occurs, at the time of the affray, some conduct of the deceased which might be otherwise colorless, but when interpreted by his known character becomes apparently an act of aggression. Thus there must be some "overt act", i.e. of Oregon: 1894, State v. Morey, 25 Or. 241, 255, 35 Pac. 655, 36 Pac. 573 (admissible, when there is evidence "tending to show that the defendant was assailed by the deceased and in apparent danger"); 1911, State v. Parker, 60 Or. 219, 118 Pac. 1011 (holding that the jury are not to consider the threats unless they have a doubt as to the aggressor; but all attempts of this sort to control the jury by instructions of law are misguided);

Pennsylvania: 1794, Pennsylvania v. Robertson, Add. 246 (murder of an Indian in self-defence; the reputation of the time that the Indians were in an angry mood, and the bad repute of the deceased, considered by the Court as affecting the defendant's state of mind); 1867, Com. v. Lenox, 3 Brewst. 249, 251 (reputed character admissible "if the case showed" that the defendant was "under reasonable fear of his life from the deceased at the time"); 1863, Com. v. Ferrigan, 44 Pa. 388 (general deportment as to violence, rejected, there being no evidence of aggression calling for self-defence); 1893, Com. v. Straesser, 153 Pa. 451, 456, 26 Atl. 17 (admissible, if the issue is self-defence and if knowledge is shown);

Porto Rico: 1911, People v. Sutton, 17 P. R. 327, 330, 359 (uncommunicated bad character excluded); 1916, People v. Barrioe, 23 P. R. 772 (People v. Sutton affirmed);

South Carolina: 1860, State v. Smith, 12 Rich. 430, 443 ("a character and habits of violence, treachery, etc., such as might beget reasonable apprehensions of grievous bodily harm"); 1888, State v. Turner, 29 S. C. 34, 41 (admissible; it must not be merely "bad character, as contradistinguished from character for violence, ferocity, vindictiveness, etc., etc."); Tennessee: 1836, Wright v. State, 9 Yerg. 342 (malicious stabbing; self-defence not alleged; the deceased's character as a "turbulent, insolent, saucy fellow" held inadmissible, as not extenuating the offence); 1842, Carroll v. State, 3 Humph. 315, 317 (no general rule); 1859, Harmon v. State, 3 Head 243 (the desperate and dangerous character of the deceased, "in connection with previous threats", held admissible, on self-defence pleaded, as "explanatory of the state of defence in which the defendant placed himself"; the requirement of communication implied only); 1872, Williams v. State, 3 Heisk. 376, 397 (the deceased's violent character, known to the defendant, treated as admissible, the issue being self-defence); 1873, Jackson v. State, 6 Baxt. 452, 458, 465 (semble, same);

Texas: 1854, Henderson v. State, 12 Tex. 525, 530 (not clear); St. 1858, Feb. 12, Pen. Code 1911, Art. 1143 ("where a defendant accused of murder seeks to justify himself on the ground of threats against his own life, he may be permitted to introduce evidence of the threats made; but the same shall not be regarded as affording a justification for the offence unless it be shown that at the time of the homicide the person killed by some act then done manifested an intention to execute the threat so made. In every instance where proof of threats has been made, it shall be competent to introduce evidence of the general character of the deceased. Such evidence shall extend only to an inquiry as to whether the deceased was a man of violent or dangerous character, or a man of kind and inoffensive disposition, or whether he was such a person as might reasonably be expected to execute a threat made"); 1871, Dorsey v. State, 34 Tex. 651, 658 (applying the preceding statute); 1875, Horbach v. State, 43 Tex. 242, 255 (pointing out that the Code section was chiefly intended to settle a controversy as to the admissibility of threats, and is therefore not exclusive of character-evidence relevant under other conditions not therein specified; admitting character-evidence additionally to explain acts of the deceased at the time "of doubtful import", are capable of being "construed more favorably for the accused" by such evidence); 1892, Evers v. State, 31 Tex. Cr. 318, 324, 20 S. W. 744 (excluded, where no "act indicating any purpose" to kill or harm defendant was shown); 1893, Skaggs v. State, 31 Tex. Cr. 563, 21 S. W. 257 (reputation of the deceased acquired after the killing excluded); possible aggression, before the reputation-evidence can be received. This is a wise and fair limitation, provided it be not further refined by details which degenerate into quibbles, — a proviso not always observed. — In few Courts has any one form of these limitations been clearly laid down or consistently followed.

Vermont: 1876, State v. Lull, 48 Vt. 581 (admitted; here the character as "a violent and desperate man");

Virginia: 1872, Dock v. Com., 21 Gratt. 909, 911 (admissible; giving no general rule); 1900, Jackson v. Com., 98 Va. 845, 36 S. E.

Two peculiar questions may arise under the overt-act form of the doctrine. (1) Shall the question whether an overt act is sufficiently evidenced to lay the foundation for the reputation-evidence be left entirely in the hands of the trial Court? Unless our law is to become a mass of quibbles which no practitioner can master and every murderer will welcome, the answer must be in the affirmative.[2] (2) May the defendant's mere unsworn assertion of an overt act (where permitted instead of his sworn testimony) be considered as in itself some evidence of an overt act? It certainly should be;[3] but whether it is sufficient evidence for the trial Court should never be considered on appeal.

(b) Kind of character. The kind of reputed character of the deceased which should affect the defendant's apprehension may be any emotional trait that would naturally lead the former to make unprovoked aggression. Various phrasings are employed by the Courts to define this trait.[4]

(c) The reputation of a third person is relevant only so far as the third

487 (excluded, because the evidence did not tend to show self-defence); 1884, Harrison v. Com., 79 Va. 374 (admissible where "a case of self-defence is prima facie made out"; but the deceased's reputation, not the witness' personal opinion, is alone admissible);
Washington: 1896, State v. McGonigle, 14 Wash. 594, 45 Pac. 20 (excluded, because there was no contention of self-defence);
West Virginia: 1889, State v. Evans, 33 W. Va. 417, 424, 10 S. E. 792 (excluding hearsay — spoken of as reputation — to the influence of one of the two persons killed over the other, as affecting the defendant's reasonable fear; here it was perfectly immaterial whether the influence existed, and therefore whether reputation could be used to prove its existence); 1901, State v. Morrison, 49 W. Va. 210, 38 S. E. 481 (theory of admission pointed out); 1901, State v. Madison, 49 W. Va. 96, 38 S. E. 492 (admissible only where there is some evidence of self-defence);
Wisconsin: 1880, State v. Nett, 50 Wis. 524, 527 (admitting such evidence where the circumstances raise a question as to self-defence; and distinguishing on that ground the earlier ruling of Brucker v. State, 19 Wis. 539; 1865).

[2] 1885, Poché, J., in State v. Ford, 37 La. An. 443, 461: "Does the rule governing the admission of such testimony content itself with testimony of an overt act by the deceased, or does it require proof of such an act? . . . In passing on such a question, the trial Judge must of necessity be clothed with the authority to decide whether a proper foundation has been laid for the proffered evidence and that authority necessarily includes the discretion to ignore and not consider testimony which his reason refuses to believe."

[3] Contra: 1886, Bond v. State, 21 Fla. 738, 759; 1894, Steele v. State, 33 Fla. 348, 351, 14 So. 841. But since the accused has been enabled, in this jurisdiction, not merely to make a statement, but to become a witness (c. 4400, St. 1895, Rev. G. St. 1919, § 6080), it is properly held that his testimony alone may supply the overt act required: 1896, Hart v. State, 38 Fla. 39, 20 So. 805; Allen v. State, 38 Fla. 44, 20 So. 807.

[4] 1883, Williams v. State, 74 Ala. 18 (as a "turbulent, violent, and bloodthirsty man"); 1909, Pate v. State, 162 Ala. 32, 50 So. 357 (character as a man who would "take his adversary unawares", admitted); 1893, Garner v. State, 31 Fla. 170, 175, 12 So. 638 (must be a "violent and dangerous" character); 1891, Bowlus v. State, 130 Ind. 227, 28 N. E. 1115 ("strength, ferocity, vindictiveness, quarrelsomeness, etc."); 1881, Spivey v. State, 58 Miss. 858, 864 (admitting character as "violent, dangerous, or regardless of human life", but not as "overbearing, turbulent, or impetuous", because "the inquiry should be limited to such features of character as have a tendency to throw light on the apprehension of the accused because of that character").

Other phrasings will be found in n. 1, supra.

person at the time of the affray is associated with the deceased in the apparent aggression.[5]

(d) It is assumed throughout that the reputation offered was known to the defendant. Reputation in the neighborhood where both live is sufficient with nothing more. Reputation in any other place must be specifically shown to have been probably brought to the defendant's attention; his sojourn in the place where it prevailed would suffice.[6]

(e) In civil cases of assault or battery, or, for example, in a prosecution for rape, a similar situation — i.e. apprehension as affected by the opponent's reputation — may be presented, and similar evidence should be received.[7]

(f) The strength of the deceased may conceivably affect the defendant's apprehensions,[8] and also his potency for harm as indicated by his habitual carrying of weapons or his possession of them at the time of the affray;[9] these facts, if known to the defendant, should be considered as properly affecting his apprehensions.

(g) The prosecution may rebut the evidence of bad reputation, just as it may attempt to disprove any other allegation of the defence.[10] Most Courts refuse to allow the deceased's good reputation to be shown except in rebuttal of an alleged bad reputation.[11] Yet it is difficult to see, if a genuine issue of

[5] 1898, Anderson v. U. S., 170 U. S. 481, 18 Sup. 689 (murder of captain and mate; trial for the latter only; captain's ferocious character excluded; unsound, on the facts); 1895, Goldsmith v. State, 105 Ala. 8, 16 So. 933 (excluded; yet here the third person was taking part in the affray).

[6] The cases are cited in n. 1, supra.

The defendant's knowledge may be obtained otherwise than by reputation: 1901, State v. Burton, 63 Kan. 602, 66 Pac. 633 (defendant's personal knowledge or belief, however obtained, is admissible).

But a witness' personal knowledge or opinion of the deceased's character, even if it were admissible under the Opinion rule (post, § 1983), would not serve here, because it would not show the defendant's knowledge: 1899, State v. Shadwell, 22 Mont. 559, 57 Pac. 281.

[7] 1871, Strang v. People, 24 Mich. 1, 5 (where the prosecutrix gave as a reason for not complaining of an uncle's rape that he had been violent to his wife, etc.); 1897, Golder v. Lund, 50 Nebr. 789, 70 N. W. 397 (civil action, admitted).

For further illustrations of this class of evidence, see post, § 140.

[8] 1896, Smith v. U. S., 161 U. S. 85, 16 Sup. 483; 1871, State v. Collins, 32 Ia. 38; 1883, Com. v. Barnacle, 134 Mass. 215 (repudiating Com. v. Mead, infra, note 13); 1905, Com. v. Tircinski, 189 Mass. 257, 75 N. E. 261 (approving Com. v. Barnacle); 1909, Stevens v. State, 84 Nebr. 759, 122 N. W. 58 ("physical health and strength" of the prosecuting witness); 1880, State v. Nett, 50 Wis. 524, 527, 7 N. W. 344.

[9] 1902, Cawley v. State, 133 Ala. 128, 32 So. 227; 1904, Sims v. State, 139 Ala. 74, 36 So. 138 (excluded, because the defendant's knowledge was not shown); 1906, Rodgers v. State, 144 Ala. 32, 40 So. 572 (but the defendant's knowledge must be shown); 1906, Jackson v. State, 147 Ala. 699, 41 So. 178; 1897, People v. Schorn, 116 Cal. 503, 48 Pac. 495 (allowing the prosecution to deny this); 1902, People v. Adams, 137 Cal. 580, 70 Pac. 662; 1897, Daniel v. State, 103 Ga. 202, 29 S. E. 767; 1906, Warrick v. State, 125 Ga. 133, 53 S. E. 1027 (but the defendant's knowledge must be shown); 1897, McDouall v. People, 168 Ill. 93, 48 N. E. 86; 1858, Payne v. Com., 1 Metc. Ky. 370, 379; 1904, State v. Clayton, 113 La. 782, 37 So. 754, semble; 1909, Stockham v. Malcolm, 111 Md. 615, 74 Atl. 569 (plaintiff's carrying knuckles; here excluded for lack of evidence of overt act); 1888, King v. State, 65 Miss. 576, 582, 5 So. 97; 1900, State v. Yokum, 14 S. D. 84, 84 N. W. 389 (deceased's reputed habit of carrying firearms, admissible; reversing the ruling in s. c. 11 S. D. 544, 79 N. W. 835; Corson, J., diss.); 1902, State v. Ellis, 30 Wash. 369, 70 Pac. 963; 1903, State v. Crawford, 31 Wash. 260, 71 Pac. 1030.

Compare the cases cited ante, § 111.

[10] 1885, Davis v. People, 114 Ill. 86, 95, 29 N. E. 192; 1858, Dukes v. State, 11 Ind. 557, 565; 1892, Fields v. State, 134 Ind. 46, 56, 32 N. E. 780; 1876, Thomas v. People, 67 N. Y. 218, 224.

[11] 1904, Kennedy v. State, 140 Ala. 1, 37 So. 90; 1870, People v. Anderson, 39 Cal. 704; 1891, People v. Powell, 87 Cal. 348, 362, 25 Pac. 481; 1871, Pound v. State, 43 Ga. 88, self-defence is raised, why the prosecution should not be allowed to show, independently of such rebuttal, the deceased's good reputation as throwing light on the defendant's just apprehensions.[12]

(h) The actual character of the deceased, though unknown to the defendant, is admissible in most jurisdictions, from another point of view and therefore under different conditions, as evidencing the deceased's probable aggression (ante, § 63). A comparison of the rulings in each jurisdiction and of the requirements made for the two kinds of evidence is profitable.

(i) The tests applied in admitting communicated threats (post, § 247) are often the same as for the present subject, for the principle is in effect identical.

(j) The principle of admitting communicated single acts of violence by the deceased (post, § 248) is also the same, though the same tests are not applicable in every respect.

§ 247. (1) Defendant in Homicide; (b) Threats by the Deceased. On the same principle as that of the preceding section, threats of violence against the defendant, uttered by the deceased, and brought to the knowledge of the defendant, are relevant to show his belief of impending danger from the deceased. The state of the law in the various jurisdictions varies only in the phrasing of the generally accepted conditions of admissibility.[1]

129; 1874, State v. Potter, 13 Kan. 414, 423; 1895, State v. Vaughan, 22 Nev. 285, 39 Pac. 733; 1909, State v. Magill, 19 N. D. 131, 122 N. W. 330; 1906, Puryear v. State, 50 Tex. Cr. 454, 98 S. W. 258; 1872, Dock v. Com., 21 Gratt. Va. 909, 912.

The rule in Texas rests on the statute, P. C. 1911, § 1143, quoted supra, n. 1; but the Court has here read into the statute a limitation which does plain violence to its express words: 1906, Arnwine v. State, 50 Tex. Cr. 254, 96 S. W. 4 ("after proof of the communicated threat, the State may introduce evidence of the good character of the deceased, even where the defendant has not sought to do so; but this has never been extended, so far as we are aware, to instances of uncommunicated threats").

[12] Accord: 1842, Carroll v. State, 3 Humph. Tenn. 315, 317. Compare the doctrine about actual character (ante, § 63).

§ 247. [1] ENGLAND: 1713, Noble's Trial, 15 How. St. Tr. 740 (the deceased broke into the defendant's room with a constable to arrest him, and the defendant stabbed him in alleged self-defence; evidence was admitted that the deceased had once before "drawn his sword upon him, and once brought a pistol to his chambers on purpose to shoot him").

UNITED STATES: Federal: 1895, Allison v. U. S., 160 U. S. 203, 16 Sup. 252 (threats admissible); 1896, Wallace v. U. S., 162 U. S. 466, 16 Sup. 859 (same);

Alabama: 1851, Powell v. State, 19 Ala. 577, 581 (admitted); 1853, Pritchett v. State, 22 Ala. 42 (where the circumstances indicate self-defence; for the beginning of the "overt act" doctrine, as here applied, see § 246, ante); 1853, Carroll v. State, 23 Ala. 28, 36; 1859, Dupree v. State, 33 Ala. 380, 386; 1872, Hughey v. State, 47 Ala. 97, 163 (as "threats unaccompanied by acts" of aggression could not possibly excuse, mere threats alone are not receivable); 1875, Powell v. State, 52 Ala. 1 (communicated threats received); 1877, Payne v. State, 60 Ala. 80, 86 (no evidence of aggression by the deceased; threats made two weeks before, excluded; Pritchett's Case misunderstood); 1878, Myers v. State, 62 Ala. 603 (the jury should not consider the deceased's threats, unless there was "a present, impending purpose on his part, real or apparent, to put such threats into immediate execution"; i.e. the threats are admitted, and the absence of an "overt act" merely weighs with the jury, — a true construction of Pritchett's Case); 1878, Polk v. State, 62 Ala. 239 (threats of J. admitted, as an excuse upon a charge of carrying concealed weapons); 1880, Roberts v. State, 68 Ala. 164 (admissible only when "the deceased had sought a conflict with the accused, or was making some demonstration, or overt act of attack"; "in other words, the circumstances must properly raise a case of self-defence"; hence, such threats "cannot be excluded if there is the slightest evidence tending to prove a hostile demonstration"); 1881, Green v. State, 69 Ala. 8, 10 (threats a week before, excluded; but, as there was evidence of aggression, the ruling seems erroneous); 1898, Jones v. State, 116 Ala. 468, 23 So. 135 (excluded where there was "no act or hostile demonstration", etc.); 1901, Harkness v.

(a) As in the preceding topic, considerations of policy call for some restrictions calculated to secure the 'bona fide' use of such evidence. These may be, and frequently are, the same as those applied (in the preceding topic) to

State, 129 Ala. 71, 30 So. 73 (excluding threatening conduct, as distinguished from threatening words, on an improper application of the principle of § 951, post; Sharpe and Dowdell, JJ., properly dissenting); 1901, Willingham v. State, 130 Ala. 35, 30 So. 429 (Harkness v. State followed, by a majority); 1902, Andrews v. State, 134 Ala. 47, 32 So. 665 (overt-act rule, applied); 1902, Ragsdale v. State, 134 Ala. 24, 32 So. 674 (same); 1903, Johnson v. State, 136 Ala. 76, 34 So. 209 (excluded, there being no evidence of aggression); 1904, Gregory v. State, 140 Ala. 16, 37 So. 259 (rule applied); 1905, Dunn v. State, 143 Ala. 67, 39 So. 147 (rule applied); 1904, Gilmore v. State, 141 Ala. 51, 37 So. 359 (rule applied); 1906, Martin v. State, 144 Ala. 8, 40 So. 275 (rule applied); 1906, Skipper v. State, 144 Ala. 100, 42 So. 43 (excluded, because no issue of self-defence arose);

Arkansas: 1855, Atkins v. State, 16 Ark. 568, 584 (admitted); 1859, Coker v. State, 20 Ark. 53, 55; 1860, Pitman v. State, 22 Ark. 354, 356; 1874, McPherson v. State, 29 Ark. 225, 228 (the limitation suggested that threats are not admissible if there is no evidence tending to show apprehension of injury; no authorities cited); Palmore v. State, 29 Ark. 248, 261, 263 (admitted not only to throw light on the defendant's state of mind at the time of the affray, but also to negative the apparent malice of having armed himself beforehand); 1879, Harris v. State, 34 Ark. 469, 472 (admissible); 1904, Lee v. State, 72 Ark. 436, 81 S. W. 385;

Arizona: 1914, Nelson v. State, 16 Ariz. 165, 141 Pac. 704;

California: 1860, People v. Arnold, 15 Cal. 476, 480 (admissible); 1861, People v. Lombard, 17 Cal. 316, 320 (admissible; but not legally sufficient as a defence unless followed by an overt act); 1869, People v. Scoggins, 37 Cal. 676, 683 (same); 1879, People v. Taing, 53 Cal. 602 (excluded here because no preliminary showing of any kind was made); 1880, People v. Travis, 56 Cal. 251, 253 (threats admissible; no authorities cited or rule laid down); 1906, People v. Lamar, 148 Cal. 564, 83 Pac. 993;

Florida: 1886, Bond v. State, 21 Fla. 738, 752 (admissible when there are "circumstances which might reasonably cause him to believe that the deceased at the time of the killing had a purpose to carry them out"; though "no exact definition of an overt act can probably be given"); 1889, Smith v. State, 25 Fla. 517, 521, 6 So. 482 (same); 1891, Garner v. State, 28 Fla. 113, 133, 9 So. 835 (admissible when there is, "at least apparently, a hostile demonstration, or overt act of attack, tending to show" danger with other phrasings; the Court to determine whether evidence of such exists and to solve doubts in favor of the defendant); 1894, Steele v. State, 33 Fla. 348, 350, 14 So. 841, semble (same); 1902, Lane v. State, 44 Fla. 105, 32 So. 896 ("there must be some evidence of the overt act");

Georgia: 1846, Reynolds v. State, 1 Kelly 222, 230, semble (overt act not necessary); 1847, Hudgins v. State, 2 Ga. 173, 181 (communicated threats admissible; here excluded only on the absurd ground that the informant, who told the defendant, "Yonder comes J. A., and he will kill you", expressed his "opinion" only; see the Opinion rule, post, § 1963); 1848, Howell v. State, 5 Ga. 48, 54; Monroe v. State, ib. 85, 135 ("naked threats unaccompanied with personal violence", excluded); 1855, Keener v. State, 18 Ga. 194, 218, 225 (the deceased's demeanor and threats just before the affray, admitted; the limitation of Monroe's case in effect repudiated; no overt act necessary); 1858, Hawkins v. State, 25 Ga. 209 (same as Hudgins' case); 1859, Lingo v. State, 29 Ga. 470, 483 (threats uncommunicated, rejected); 1881, Coxwell v. State, 66 Ga. 309 (previous communicated threats admitted); 1904, Taylor v. State, 121 Ga. 348, 49 S. E. 303 (communicated expressions of peaceful intent, admitted in rebuttal);

Illinois: 1914, People v. Terrell, 262 Ill. 138, 104 N. E. 264 (excluded, because no evidence of an overt act was offered);

Indiana: 1863, De Forest v. State, 21 Ind. 23, 26 (admitted); 1883, Wood v. State, 92 Ind. 269, 273 (same); 1900, Enlow v. State, 154 Ind. 664, 57 N. E. 539 (same); 1911, Malone v. State, 176 Ind. 338, 96 N. E. 1 (threats excluded for lack of overt act);

Iowa: 1871, State v. Collins, 32 Ia. 36; 1875, State v. Woodson, 41 Ia. 425, 428; 1876, State v. Maloy, 44 Ia. 104, 114; 1877, State v. Elliott, 45 Ia. 490 (admitted in all of these cases);

Kansas: 1879, State v. Brown, 22 Kan. 222, 230 (assumed as admissible); 1880, State v. Scott, 24 Kan. 68, 70 (admitted; no rule stated); 1901, State v. Burton, 63 Kan. 602, 66 Pac. 633 (admitted);

Kentucky: 1855, Cornelius v. Com., 15 B. Monr. 539, 546 (admissible); 1869, Young v. Com., 6 Bush 318, semble (same); 1865, Philips v. Com., 2 Duv. 328, 329 (same); 1870, Carico v. Com., 7 Bush 124, 129 (same); 1871, Bohannon v. Com., 8 Bush 481, 488, semble (same); 1882, Lightfoot v. Com., 80 Ky. 521, semble (same); 1896, Com. v. Hoskins, — Ky. —, 35 S. W. 284 (admissible; but here they were too indefinite); 1896, Grayson v. Com., — Ky. —, 35 S. W. 1035 (threats of a year before, held not improperly excluded, but not threats of a month before); 1903, Morrison v. Com., the use of the deceased's character. But they are less frequently laid down for the present class of evidence, apparently for two reasons, — first, because there is less danger of improperly using the deceased's threats in justification — Ky. —, 74 S. W. 277 (overt-act rule apparently adopted);

Louisiana: 1859, State v. Mullen, 14 La. An. 577, 579, semble (admissible); 1878, State v. Robertson, 30 La. An. 340 (same): State v. Ryan, 30 La. An. 1177, semble (same); 1880 State v. Cooper, 32 La. An. 1084, semble (same); State v. Vance, 32 La. An. 1177, semble (same; but conditional threats excluded); 1881, State v. Jackson, 33 La. An. 1087, semble (admissible); State v. Fisher, 33 La. An. 1344, semble (same); 1884, State v. Birdwell, 36 La. An. 859, 861 (threats alone, without an "overt act, assault, or hostile demonstration" at the time, excluded); 1885, State v. Ford, 37 La. An. 443, 460 (same test; the trial Court to determine whether the preliminary overt-act evidence suffices); State v. Labuzan, 37 La. An. 489 (same); State v. Janvier, ib. 644 (same); 1886, State v. Spell, 38 La. An. 20 (same); 1887, State v. Brooks, 39 La. An. 817, 2 So. 498 (same as State v. Birdwell); 1889, State v. Demareste, 41 La. An. 617, 6 So. 136 (same as State v. Ford); 1890, State v. Cosgrove, 42 La. An. 753, 7 So. 714 (same); 1891, State v. Wilson, 43 La. An. 840, 9 So. 490 (same as State v. Birdwell, but phrasing the preliminary condition as "threat or hostile demonstration"); 1892, State v. Jackson, 44 La. An. 160, 161, 163, 10 So. 600 (same as State v. Ford; the deceased's ability to carry out the threats, not sufficient to admit them); 1893, State v. Harris, 45 La. An. 842, 845, 13 So. 199 (same as State v. Ford, emphasizing the trial Court's discretion); 1894, State v. Green, 46 La. An. 1522, 16 So. 367 (same); 1895, State v. King, 47 La. An. 28, 16 So. 566 (same); 1895, State v. Vickers, 47 La. An. 1574, 18 So. 639 (threats must be communicated); 1896, State v. Compagnet, 48 La. An. 1470, 21 So. 46 (same as King's case); 1897, State v. Pruett, 49 La. An. 283, 21 So. 842 (an overt act not required, where the only purpose was to explain away the defendant's expressed intention to kill the deceased, by showing his reasons for so threatening, i.e. to negative malice); 1898, State v. Wiggins, 50 La. An. 330, 23 So. 334 (admissible if an "overt act or hostile demonstration" is shown; the trial Court's discretion to determine this); 1899, State v. Frierson, 51 La. An. 706, 25 So. 396 (rule applied; trial judge's certificate not treated as sufficient on the subject of overt act; no authorities cited); 1903, State v. Tasby, 110 La. 121, 34 So. 300 (whether the trial judge's report as to the absence of evidence of an overt act is conclusive, not clear); 1903, State v. Forbes, 111 La. 473, 35 So. 710 (the Court remarks upon the importance of preserving "the stability of judicial decisions"; the trial judge's finding held conclusive); 1904, State v. Thomas, 111 La. 473, 35 So. 914 (threats, without an overt act, not admissible "as part of the 'res gestæ' and in mitigation"); 1906, State v. Rodriguez, 115 La. 1004, 40 So. 438 (mode of preparing an exception to the judge's ruling as to the overt act; cited more fully ante, § 246, n. 13); 1906, State v. Craft, 118 La. 117, 42 So. 718 (rule of the trial Court's discretion, affirmed; "that question is no longer open for discussion"; Breaux, C. J., diss.); 1907, State v. Mathews, 119 La. 665, 44 So. 336 (excluded, because no overt act was shown); 1912, State v. Harris, 131 La. 616, 59 So. 1009 (overt act must be shown, etc.); 1915, State v. Boudreaux, 137 La. 227, 68 So. 422 (State v. Ford followed; O'Niell, J., diss.); 1919, State v. Pairs, 145 La. 443, 82 So. 407 (trial judge's ruling as to hostile demonstration as a condition for admitting prior threats, held not conclusive; none of the foregoing cases cited; thus the see-saw of rulings continued to inject an interesting element of chance into criminal practice in this State); 1921, State v. Sandiford, 149 La. 933, 90 So. 260 (defendant had testified to a hostile demonstration by deceased at the time of the affray; he then offered testimony to the deceased's prior threats, to corroborate his own testimony to the hostile act and to his belief of danger; the trial judge excluded the evidence because "there was no doubt in the mind of the court as to who was the aggressor", and because threats were admissible only where "who was the aggressor is a very close or doubtful question"; held error, citing State v. Pairs, supra; on rehearing, held not error, because "we would not be justified in disturbing the ruling of the trial judge", and because the defendant had "failed to show by a preponderance of evidence that the deceased made a hostile demonstration", citing State v. Thomas, supra, and the cases of Golden, Craft, etc., ante, § 246; O'Niell, J., dissenting, deplores "that the judgment of this Court should begin again to oscillate, as it had been oscillating ever since the question was first presented" whether the defendant must first prove the hostile act by preponderance of evidence to the trial judge's satisfaction; pointing out the inconsistency of having a stricter rule for communicated threats than for uncommunicated threats (ante, § 111), in that the former also serve for the latter purpose, viz. to evidence who was the aggressor by doing the first hostile act; on second rehearing, the ruling is adhered to by the majority, who declare that State v. Pairs, supra, "was not intended to be a departure from the established jurisprudence" as to requiring proof of an overt act; citing with approval the above text in § 246, par. 1, a);

for the killing (less danger, that is, than where he can be shown to be an abandoned ruffian, a curse to the community), and, secondly, because specific threats of violence have a more decided bearing on the probability of Maryland: 1880, Turpin v. State, 55 Md. 462, 473 (admitted only when there was an overt act at the time and the defendant was in apparent imminent danger);

Michigan: 1868, People v. Garbutt, 17 Mich. 9, 15 (excluded, because insanity, not self-defence, was the issue); 1878, Brownell v. People, 38 Mich. 732, 735, 736 (threats and conduct admitted on the issue of self-defence); People v. Lilly, 38 Mich. 276 (admitting "language, manner, and acts"); 1902, People v. Tillman, 132 Mich. 23, 92 N. W. 499 (battery; plaintiff's prior attack upon defendant admitted);
Minnesota: 1860, State v. Dumphey, 4 Minn. 438, 449 (threats made ten days beforehand, admissible);
Mississippi: 1859, Wesley v. State, 37 Miss. 327, 346 (admissible, where the defendant had ground to fear an attack); Newcomb v. State, 37 Miss. 383, 400, semble (if communicated, admissible); 1870, Evans v. State, 44 Miss. 762, 772 (excluded, because the other evidence showed no possible case for self-defence); 1872, Harris v. State, 46 Miss. 319, 323 (excluded, for the same reason); 1877, Johnson v. State, 54 Miss. 430, 435 (reviewing all the cases, and concluding that the issue must be self-defence, and there must be testimony tending to show a demonstration by the deceased); Holly v. State, 55 Miss. 424, 428 (excluded, because there was no evidence of any "overt act" or "demonstration" which in the light of the threats could reasonably have caused fear of their execution); Kendrick v. State, 55 Miss. 436, 449, 450 (apparently applying the same rule); 1885, Moriarty v. State, 62 Miss. 654, 661 (expressing the rule substantially as in Holly's Case); 1900, Johnson v. State, — Miss. —, 27 So. 880 (threats held improperly excluded); Oden v. State, — Miss. —, 27 So. 992 (threats held properly excluded on the facts); 1920, Clark v. State, 123 Miss. 147, 85 So. 188 (conditional threats, admitted);
Missouri: 1853, State v. Jackson, 17 Mo. 544, 548 (excluded, no issue of self-defence being made, and the threats not being recent); 1856, State v. Hays, 23 Mo. 287, 310 (same); 1871, State v. Sloan, 47 Mo. 604 (approving the Hays case, but admitting here threats made continuously to within a recent time, the issue being self-defence); 1872, State v. Keene, 50 Mo. 357 (similar facts); 1875, State v. Harris, 59 Mo. 550, 552, 556 (admitted; but with intimations that there must be an attempt to execute); 1876, State v. Elkins, 63 Mo. 159, 163 (no general rule attempted; intimations that the threats must be fairly recent and that there must be an attempt to execute them at the time); 1877, State v. Alexander, 66 Mo. 148, 162 (admissible, if there is "evidence tending to show" the deceased the aggressor); 1879, State v. Guy, 69 Mo. 435 (threat excluded; obscure); 1882, State v. Harris, 76 Mo. 364 (threat received); 1897, State v. Reed, 137 Mo. 125, 38 S. W. 574 (admissible only where the issue of defence is raised); 1898, State v. Albright, 144 Mo. 638, 46 S. W. 620 (admissible only in connection with an overt act); 1900, State v. Hollingsworth, 156 Mo. 178, 56 S. W. 1087 (conditional threats admitted; compare § 107, ante); 1901, State v. Smith, 164 Mo. 567, 65 S. W. 270 (admissible);
Nebraska: 1895, Basye v. State, 45 Nebr. 261, 63 N. W. 811 (admissible, "where it is claimed that the killing was in self-defence");
Nevada: 1873, State v. Hall, 9 Nev. 58 (admissible only when at the time "something was done which would induce a reasonable man" to fear death or serious bodily harm);
New Jersey: 1824, State v. Zellers, 7 N. J. L. 237 (admissible); 1905, State v. Tolla, 72 N. J. L. 515, 62 Atl. 675 (murder of a man by a woman; the man's prior attempts to violate her, excluded in the absence of any act at the time indicating "a present intention to harm the defendant"); 1915, State v. Hocker, 87 N. J. L. 13, 93 Atl. 78 (prior communicated threats, admissible; State v. Tolla distinguished);
New Mexico: 1900, Terr. v. Hall, 10 N. Mex. 545, 62 Pac. 1083 (admissible "where there is proof of a hostile demonstration by the deceased at the time of the killing"; confused opinion); Terr. v. Pratt, 10 N. Mex. 138, 61 Pac. 104 (an anonymous threatening letter, if rightfully believed by the defendant to come from the deceased, is admissible);
New York: 1835, People v. Rector, 19 Wend. 589, 614 (murder at the defendant's door, the deceased standing there, and the defendant having been summoned by knocks on the door just before; the fact was admitted of a riotous breaking of the defendant's house a few nights before, and of threats to return, though the defendant did not know whether the deceased was one of that party; Bronson, J., dissenting at 601); 1873, Stokes v. People, 53 N. Y. 174 (threats admissible, "as tending to create a belief in the mind of the accused that his life was in danger, or that he had reason to apprehend some great bodily harm from the acts and motions of the deceased, when in the absence of such threats such acts and motions would cause no such belief");
North Carolina: 1844, State v. Scott, 4 Ired. 415 (the threats apparently held admissible, but treated as in this instance not important, since the deceased was not doing anything which could be referred to this design to in-aggression than mere dangerousness of character. It is therefore to be noted that the rulings on the two subjects in a given jurisdiction are not necessarily mutually applicable.

jure); 1877, State v. Turpin, 77 N. C. 473, 476 (threats admissible); 1897, State v. Byrd, 121 N. C. 684, 28 S. E. 353 (admissible only where there is "other evidence of tending to show self-defence" or where "the evidence of the killing is entirely circumstantial"; but the latter seems to be said of uncommunicated threats only);
Oklahoma: 1910, White v. State, 4 Okl. Cr. 143, 111 Pac. 1010 (not admissible where no issue of self-defence is made); 1918, Smith v. State, 14 Okl. Cr. 250, 174 Pac. 1107 (deceased's threats, not admitted, for lack of an overt act);
Oregon: 1870, State v. Dodson, 4 Or. 64 (uncommunicated threats, held properly excluded, when offered to show the defendant's apprehension; whether admissible for the purpose of showing deceased's actual intent, under § 110, ante, not decided; communicated threats, admitted); 1897, State v. Porter, 32 Or. 135, 49 Pac. 964 (communicated threats of a third person not acting with the deceased, excluded); 1898, State v. Bartmess, 33 Or. 110, 54 Pac. 167 (admissible; the conditions obscurely stated);
Pennsylvania: 1867, Com. v. Lenox, 3 Brewst. 249, 251 (admissible, "if the case showed" that the defendant was "under reasonable fear of his life from the deceased at the time"), 1881, Nevling v. Com., 98 Pa. 322, 336, semble (admissible, if there is evidence of a necessity for self-defence); 1918, Com. v. Principatti, 260 Pa. 587, 104 Atl. 53 (deceased's threats as a "black hand" agent, admitted);
Porto Rico: People v. Barrios, 23 P. R. 772 (uncommunicated threats, excluded; following People v. Sutton, cited ante, § 246);
South Carolina: 1860, State v. Smith, 12 Rich. 430, 443 (admissible); 1890, State v. Bodie, 33 S. C. 130, 11 S. E. 624 (same); State v. Wyse, 33 S. C. 591, 12 S. E. 556, semble (same);
Tennessee: 1858, Rippy v. State, 2 Head 218 ("previous threats, or even acts of hostility, . . . will not of themselves excuse the slayer; but there must be some words or overt acts at the time clearly indicative of a present purpose to do the injury; past threats and hostile actions or antecedent circumstances can only be looked to in connection with present demonstrations as grounds of apprehension"; this was said in repudiating the argument of the defendant that, after hearing of such recent threats, "he had a right to kill the deceased on sight"); 1872, Williams v. State, 3 Heisk. 376, 395 (the same doctrine laid down, and such threats assumed to be admissible); 1873, Jackson v. State, 6 Baxt. 452, 454 (the doctrine of the above cases approved, but the distinction pointed out that the evidence of former threats must be received and considered without any attempt on the judge's part to exclude it until some overt act at the time is shown; a decision reserved for such an extreme case as that of the deceased being asleep at the time);
Texas: 1854, Lander v. State, 12 Tex. 462, 484 (a full discussion of the proposition that prior threats are in themselves no legal excuse: but no decision as to admissibility); St. 1858, Feb. 12, Pen. Code 1911, § 1143 (quoted ante, § 246); 1870, Myers v. State, 33 Tex. 525, 542 (the Code is to be interpreted by common-law principles; threats are admissible only when they are distinctly directed against the defendant's life and when it is "unequivocally shown" that the deceased "was doing some act at the time of the killing which manifested an intention to carry the threat into execution"); 1871, Dorsey v. State, 34 Tex. 651, 657, semble (same); 1875, Horbach v. State, 43 Tex. 242, 255, 259 (declaring the object of the Code section to have been to settle a controversy as to the admission of threats, and holding that threats are admissible "as independent evidence without first having established a predicate for their admission by the proof of acts done at the time of the killing"; not citing Myers v. State); Irwin v. State, 43 Tex. 236, 241 (adopting apparently the same rule; but here holding not improper the rejection of cumulative evidence of threats which if admitted could not have served as a legal defence under the above section, because no act of violence at the time was shown); 1893, Mealer v. State, 32 Tex. Cr. 102, 107, 22 S. W. 142 (excluded, where the defendant "was in no possible danger" at the time);
Vermont: 1847, State v. Goodrich, 19 Vt. 117, 121 (previous affrays between the parties, and former attacks by the injured person on the defendant's house, and threats by the former, held not improperly rejected because not so offered as to indicate any influence in causing in the defendant a just fear of harm); 1916, Russ v. Good, 90 Vt. 236, 97 Atl. 987 (assault and battery; plea, self-defence; plaintiff's reputation as a fighting man, known to defendant, admitted; the trial Court determines as to remoteness);
Washington: 1888, White v. Terr., 3 Wash. D. 397, 403, 19 Pac. 37 ("admissible in all cases"); 1896, State v. McGonigle, 14 Wash. 594, 45 Pac. 20 (excluded because there was no contention of self-defence); 1896, State v. Cushing, 14 Wash. 527, 45 Pac. 145; 1897, s. c., 17 Wash. 544, 50 Pac. 512 ("overt act of attack" and "apparent imminent danger" of life therefrom are necessary; purporting to follow the Louisiana rule);
West Virginia: 1875, State v. Abbott, 8 W. Va. 743, 759 (admissible; rule obscure); 1889,

(b) Wherever the overt-act limitation is adopted, the rule should prevail (as in the preceding topic) that the trial Court's discretion determines the sufficiency of the evidence of an overt act.[2]

(c) The threats are required to have been communicated to the defendant, i.e. brought to his notice in some way; otherwise they have no bearing for the present purpose.

(d) The use of uncommunicated threats, as showing the probability of the deceased having been the aggressor, involves a different principle (dealt with ante, § 110); but the respective precedents are not always duly discriminated.

(e) The actual making of the threats is immaterial, if there was a communication made to the defendant of supposed threats.[3] This illustrates the contrast of principle with the doctrine of uncommunicated threats (ante, § 110).

(f) The threats of a third person, not joining in the deceased's overt act, would ordinarily be inadmissible.[4]

§ 248. (1) Defendant in Homicide: (c) Violent Acts of the Deceased. If it could be shown that the deceased had just before been running amuck in the streets, and that the defendant was informed that the deceased was on his way towards the defendant's locality, it is difficult to believe that any Court would decline to consider this conduct as bearing on the defendant's apprehensions. The fact that the circumstance creating apprehension is a single act or series of acts, instead of a general character, does not necessarily destroy its capacity to create apprehension. Nor does its distance in time from the moment of the affray necessarily have that effect. Such particular acts may or may not in a given case be calculated to create apprehension; but there is no reason for a fixed rule of exclusion, invariably forbidding their consideration:

1884, NIBLACK, J., in Boyle v. State, 97 Ind. 322, 326; "As in personal conflicts every man is permitted within reasonable limits to act upon appearances and to determine for himself when he is in real danger, it would seem to follow, as an inevitable consequence, that whoever relies upon appearances and a reasonable determination upon such appearances, as a defence in a case of homicide, ought to be allowed to prove every fact and circumstance known to him and connected with the deceased which was fairly calculated to create an apprehension for his own safety."

1906, MILES, J., in McQuiggan v. Ladd, 79 Vt. 90, 64 Atl. 503: "This was an action for assault and battery against John Ladd, Daniel Ladd, and Eugene Spicer. . . . As bearing

State v. Evans, 33 W. Va. 417, 425, 10 S. E. 792 (same).

The following ruling shows a different application of the same principle: 1857, People v. Shea, 8 Cal. 538 (assault with intent to kill; the prosecuting witness' reason for going armed, viz. that he had been told of something the defendant had said, admitted).

[2] 1897, State v. Pruett, 49 La. An. 283, 21 So. 842 (discretion of the trial Court as to overt acts conceded; but irrespective of this the defendant is entitled, under Act 99 of 1896, to have the testimony as to the alleged overt act taken down in writing for review); 1897, State v. Cushing, 17 Wash. 544, 50 Pac. 512 (discretion conceded).

[3] 1909, Morris v. Terr., 1 Okl. Cr. 617, 99 Pac. 760; 1912, Rogers v. State, 8 Okl. Cr. 226, 127 Pac. 365; 1909, Buckner v. State, 55 Tex. Cr. 511, 117 S. W. 802.

[4] 1906, State v. Mitchell, 130 Ia. 697, 107 N. W. 804 (threats of the defendant's landlord, a third person, excluded); 1903, State v. Forbes, 111 La. 473, 35 So. 710 (leaving it to the trial Court's discretion; Monroe, J., diss.; here the defendant claimed to have been aiming at the third person).

upon the reasonableness of the force used by Daniel in repelling the claimed assault of the plaintiff, the defendants claimed and gave evidence tending to prove that Daniel knew by observation and reputation at the time of the assault that the plaintiff when under the influence of intoxicating liquor, was a quarrelsome and dangerous man, and that on the occasion in question the plaintiff was under the influence of intoxicating liquor which was then detected by Daniel, and that, in consequence thereof, and having in mind what he knew and had heard of the plaintiff's character under such circumstances, he was afraid of him. . . .

"The plaintiff's first exception is to the admission of the testimony of Mrs. Ladd, Brown, and McCormick, wherein they testify that they had seen the plaintiff on different occasions under the influence of intoxicating liquor at times previous to the assault in question, and that on those occasions he was cross and ugly, as stated above. The plaintiff urges that this was error, because it was an attempt to prove character by specific instances. . . . The word 'character' has an objective as well as a subjective meaning, which is quite distinct. As applied to man, objective character is his actual character. Subjective character is such character as he possesses in the minds of others, and is the aggregate or abstract of other persons' opinions of him. . . . In a case like the one at bar, where the actions of a third person are to be effected by a knowledge of another's character, not only may the subjective character be involved, but the objective may as well, for the action of one, influenced by the character of another, is affected to the same extent by a belief in the truth of general report as it is by a knowledge of the fact; because in either case he believes he knows the fact, and it is that belief which is important. . . .

"It follows that it was admissible for the defendants to show what was observed as to the character of the plaintiff, as to being cross and ugly when under the influence of intoxicating liquor at a time previous to the alleged assault. And, in order to show that, it was necessary to show that he was under the influence of intoxicating liquor on those occasions. And, as the case tends to show that the defendant Daniel knew of those traits of character at the time of the alleged assault and battery, it was not necessary that every occasion observed, which went to make up and establish the existence of those traits of character, should be brought to the knowledge of the defendant in all their details. It was enough that he knew that such traits of character existed, communicated to him by the witnesses who testified respecting them or coming to him from other sources."

The state of the law has come on the whole to favor the admissibility of such facts.[1] Nevertheless, in the majority of jurisdictions, such evidence was,

§ 248. [1] ENGLAND: 1866, R. v. Hopkins, 10 Cox Cr. 229 (to show the defendant's state of mind when he killed his wife with a knife, evidence was received that the wife had often before attacked him and nearly strangled him, that his neck was sensitive with old abscesses, and that the wife on this occasion rushed at his neck);

UNITED STATES: Federal: 1898, Andersen v. U. S., 170 U. S. 481, 18 Sup. 689 (murder of captain and mate; trial for the latter only; maltreatment of the defendant by the captain and by the mate on preceding occasions, excluded on the facts, because no overt act at the time of killing was shown; no authorities cited);

Alabama: 1884, Jones v. State, 76 Ala. 15 (excluded); 1888, Davenport v. State, 85 Ala. 336, 5 So. 152 (same);

Arkansas: 1882, Campbell v. State, 38 Ark. 498, 508 (excluded); 1911, Coulter v. State, 100 Ark. 561, 140 S. W. 719 (excluded); 1922, Jett v. State, — Ark. —, 236 S. W. 621 (killing by an officer; deceased's conviction of robbery in Missouri, excluded);

California: 1865, People v. Henderson, 28 Cal. 465, 469, semble (recent acts of violence excluded, only because not communicated); 1891, People v. Powell, 87 Cal. 348, 362, 25 Pac. 481 (quarrels with other persons, inadmissible);

Columbia (District): 1916, Marshall v. U. S., 45 D. C. App. 373 (murder; "I knew how he [deceased] did policemen", admitted);

Delaware: 1874, State v. Woodward, 1 Houst. Cr. C. 455, 458 (shooting a trespasser; previous maraudings and personal violence by others in the neighborhood, excluded, there being no act of aggression at the time by the deceased);

Florida: 1891, Garner v. State, 28 Fla. 113, 138, 9 So. 835 (excluded); 1893, s. c., 31 Fla. 170, 175, 12 So. 638 (same);

Georgia: 1855, Bowie v. State, 19 Ga. 7 (excluding the fact that the deceased had fled from for a long time, absolutely excluded. In some instances this was probably due to a notion that the deceased's character is sought objectively to be shown by particular acts (on the principle of § 198, ante); but the real pur-the law in Tennessee, but intimating that if the crime would in its nature "excite the fears of a reasonable man", the fact might be received); 1871, Pound v. State, 43 Ga. 88, 128 (excluded, unless so connected with the killing as to "form a link", etc.); 1883, Doyal v. State, 70 Ga. 134, 147 (specific acts of violence, excluded); 1892, Croom v. State, 90 Ga. 430, 17 S. E. 1003 (excluded); 1897, Powell v. State, 101 Ga. 9, 29 S. E. 309 (excluded); 1906, Warrick v. State, 125 Ga. 133, 53 S. E. 1027 (excluded);

Idaho: 1911, State v. Louie Moon, 20 Ida. 202, 117 Pac. 757 (threats of associates of the deceased, excluded);
Indiana: 1884, Boyle v. State, 97 Ind. 322, 326 (former shooting and stabbing, etc., admitted); 1891, Bowlus v. State, 130 Ind. 227, 230, 28 N. E. 1115 (admitted); 1900, Enlow v. State, 154 Ind. 664, 57 N. E. 539 (admitted);
Iowa: 1902, State v. Sale, 119 Ia. 1, 92 N. W. 680; 95 N. W. 193 (deceased's violence at a remote prior time, excluded); State v. Beird, 118 Ia. 474, 92 N. W. 694 (instances of specific acts of violence on the same evening, held admissible);
Kansas: 1901, State v. Burton, 63 Kan. 602, 66 Pac. 633 (admissible);
Louisiana: 1898, State v. Fontenot, 50 La. An. 537, 23 So. 634 (excluded);
Michigan: 1893, People v. Harris, 95 Mich. 87, 91, 54 N. W. 648 (admissible); 1904, People v. Farrell, 137 Mich. 127, 100 N. W. 264 (admissible);
Mississippi: 1885, Moriarty v. State, 62 Miss. 654, 661 (various desperate acts, excluded; general reputation alone admissible); 1888, King v. State, 65 Miss. 576, 582, 5 So. 97 (that the deceased had made deadly assaults on others, to the defendant's knowledge, excluded);
Missouri: 1910, State v. Green, 229 Mo. 642, 129 S. W. 700 (excluded);
Montana: 1899, State v. Shadwell, 22 Mont. 573, 57 Pac. 281 (deceased's riotous conduct towards others on the same evening in defendant's presence, admitted; but "specific acts of violence" at other times, excluded; opinion not well considered); 1901, State v. Shadwell, 26 Mont. 52, 66 Pac. 508 (prior ruling approved); 1903, State v. Felker, 27 Mont. 451, 71 Pac. 668 (prior assaults by the deceased upon the same person, admitted); 1909, State v. Hanlon, 38 Mont. 557, 100 Pac. 1035 (prior specific acts of violence, here admitted; State v. Felker and State v. Shadwell approved but enlarged in scope);
Nevada: 1917, State v. Sella, 41 Nev. 113, 168 Pac. 278 ("particular acts or instances which were not a part of the 'res gestæ' nor connected therewith", not admissible);
New York: 1874, Eggler v. People, 56 N. Y. 643 (particular instances of exhibitions of temper, excluded); 1876, Thomas v. People, 67 N. Y. 222 (the making of assaults with a knife upon various other persons, some time before, excluded);
Ohio: 1907, State v. Roderick, 77 Oh. 301, 82 N. E. 1082 (acts of violence known to defendant by repute only, excluded; but semble such acts personally known to him may be admissible);
Oklahoma: 1906, Sneed v. Terr., 16 Okl. 641, 86 Pac. 70 (prior violence by deceased, the same night, admitted); 1906, McHugh v. Terr., 17 Okl. 1, 86 Pac. 433 (assault with intent; State v. Burton, — Kan. —, approved); 1912, Rogers v. State, 8 Okl. Cr. 226, 127 Pac. 365 (admitted); 1919, Thompson v. State, 16 Okl. Cr. 716, 184 Pac. 467 (manslaughter; deceased's specific acts of violence towards others", admitted); 1921, Elliott v. State, — Okl. Cr. —, 194 Pac. 267 (murder; deceased's prior specific acts of violence, not known to defendant, excluded);
Oregon: 1900, State v. Mims, 36 Or. 315, 61 Pac. 888 (excluded); 1908, State v. Doris, 51 Or. 136, 94 Pac. 44 (prior assault by a third person similar in size, etc., to the deceased, admitted);
Pennsylvania: 1893, Com. v. Straesser, 153 Pa. 451, 456, 26 Atl. 17 (single act of violence, unexplained, inadmissible);
Porto Rico: 1915, People v. Paris, 22 P. R. 370, 374 (but here excluded because there was no evidence of aggression);
South Carolina: 1897, State v. Dill, 48 S. C. 249, 26 S. E. 567, semble (excluded; but here merely cumulative); 1905, State v. Thrailkill, 71 S. C. 136, 50 S. E. 551 (excluded); 1905, State v. Dean, 72 S. C. 74, 51 S. E. 524 (State v. Dill approved); 1906, State v. Andrews, 73 S. C. 257, 53 S. E. 423 (admissible if "so connected in point of time or occasion with the fatal rencontre as to produce reasonable apprehension", etc.);
South Dakota: 1909, State v. Raice, 24 S. D. 111, 123 N. W. 708 (deceased's prior acts of violence to third persons, notified to defendant, excluded);
Texas: 1893, Skaggs v. State, 31 Tex. Cr. 563, 21 S. W. 257 (said to be sometimes admissible); 1903, Connel v. State, 45 Tex. Cr. 142, 75 S. W. 512 (patricide; specific acts of violence to other members of the family, excluded);
Vermont: 1906, McQuiggan v. Ladd, 79 Vt. 90, 64 Atl. 503 (quoted supra, 1);
Wyoming: 1916, Mortimer v. State, 24 Wyo. 452, 161 Pac. 766 (homicide by son of father in alleged protection of brother; the deceased's prior specific acts of violence known to the accused, held admissible; the facts of this case illustrate the injustice of a contrary rule).

pose is merely to show such conduct as would naturally excite apprehension, whether it objectively indicates a fixed trait of character or not. Certainly all analogies of the law (apart from the common sense of the situation) favor such evidence; for if particular vicious acts of an animal are relevant to show that its owner was warned of its viciousness (post, § 251), and if particular misconduct of an employee is relevant to show that his employer was warned of his incompetency (post, § 250), then particular deeds of unscrupulous violence may well be deemed relevant to show an apprehension of violence from such a person. The true solution is to exercise a discretion, and to admit such facts when common sense tells us that they could legitimately affect a defendant's apprehensions.

Distinguished, here use of prior quarrels or difficulties between the deceased and the accused as evidence of motive (post, § 396), as also the propriety of contradicting the fact of such prior acts of violence (post, § 263).

§ 249. (2) Employer of an Incompetent Employee: (a) Reputation of the Employee. Where by the substantive law an employer's liability for injuries done by his employee depends upon his selection of a competent employee, it is well settled in all jurisdictions that the reputation of the employee is receivable to show that the employee's character in respect to competency was known to the employer.[1] It is sometimes pointed out that the reputa-

§ 249. [1] Federal: 1896, Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Henthorne, 19 C. C. A. 623, 73 Fed. 634 (engineer's reputation for intemperance); 1896, Central Vt. R. Co. v. Ruggles, 21 C. C. A. 575, 75 Fed. 953; 1905, Southern Pac. Co. v. Hetzer, 135 Fed. 272, 276, 285, C. C. A. ("a general reputation for incompetence" is admissible); 1905, Huntt v. McNamee, 141 Fed. 293, 299, C. C. A., semble (admissible only after other evidence of specific acts); Alabama: 1853, Cook v. Parham, 24 Ala. 21, 34; 1894, Western Stone Co. v. Whalen, 151 Ala. 482, 38 N. E. 243 (captain of a towing vessel); 1903, Metropolitan W. S. E. R. Co. v. Fortin, 203 Ala. 454, 67 N. E. 977 (motorman of an elevated railroad); Illinois: 1872, Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Sullivan, 63 Ill. 293, 297 (intemperate habits); Indiana: 1871, Pittsburg F. W. & C. R. Co. v. Ruby, 38 Ind. 294, 311 (train-conductor); Kansas: 1895, Cherokee Co. v. Dickson, 55 Kan. 62, 39 Pac. 691; Maine: 1880, Dunham v. Rackliff, 71 Me. 345, 349, semble; Maryland: 1894, Norfolk W. R. Co. v. Hoover, 79 Md. 253, 263, 29 Atl. 994 (intemperate habits); Massachusetts: 1861, Gahagan v. R. Co., 1 All. 187, 190 (that a flagman was "careful, attentive, and temperate" in his "general habits and behavior"); 1865, Gilman v. R. Co., 10 All. 233, 235, 239 (intemperate habits); s. c., 1866, 13 All. 433, 444 (same); 1890, Monahan v. Worcester, 150 Mass. 439, 23 N. E. 228 (that he was "physically weak and partially blind and deaf"); 1895, Driscoll v. Fall River, 163 Mass. 105, 39 N. E. 1003 (reputation "of a foreman amongst a few workmen employed under him", excluded, as not likely to give notice to or require attention from the employer); 1902, Carson v. Canning, 180 Mass. 461, 62 N. E. 964 (reputation of an employee "around the building", held not improperly admitted); Michigan: 1870, Davis v. R. Co., 20 Mich. 105, 123 (engineer; a reputation, but not mere casual remarks, admissible); 1885, Hilts v. R. Co., 55 Mich. 437, 442, 21 N. W. 878 (intemperate habits); New Hampshire: 1873, State v. M. & L. Railroad, 52 N. H. 539, 549, semble; New York: 1897, Youngs v. R. Co., 154 N. Y. 764, 49 N. E. 1106 (like next case); 1898, Park v. R. Co., 155 N. Y. 215, 49 N. E. 674 (reputation receivable to show knowledge of incompetency, after specific acts showing the fact of it; here a reputation ten years before was excluded); Pennsylvania: 1911, Rosenstiel v. Pittsburg R. Co., 230 Pa. 273, 79 Atl. 556 (the learned judge here seems to be in error in supposing that any courts have a contrary rule); Texas: 1896, Texas and P. R. Co. v. Johnson, 89 Tex. 519, 35 S. W. 1042 (reputation of the wrong-doing servant among his fellow-employees, held sufficient to fix upon the employer a knowledge of his inefficiency, but not to fix such knowledge upon the plaintiff-employee, though he and the other servants were upon the same division and were personally acquainted; the opinion is a labored attempt to explain this absurdity); Utah: 1899, Stoll v. Daly Min. Co., 19 Utah 271, 57 Pac. 295; Wisconsin: 1913, Serdan v. Falk Co., 153 Wis. 169, 140 N. W. 1035 (reputation admissible, to evidence knowledge, after the

tion in a given instance may obtain in such a narrow or remote circle of persons that it is not likely to have brought notice of the character to the employer (on the logical principle of § 245, par. 3, ante); but this is simply a corollary of the general principle.

It is to be noted that the substantive law may be such that the evidential question, whether such reputation was likely to reach the employer, does not arise; i.e., it may be held that if a reputation of incompetency had arisen, then, even if the employer did not in fact hear of the reputation, yet his failure to learn of such an easily knowable thing is in itself negligence, as a matter of law, in that it involves failure to make inquiry concerning competence:

1870, COOLEY, J., in Davis v. R. Co., 20 Mich. 105, 123: "If the defendants continue a man in their employ who is so notoriously unfit as to have established a general reputation to that effect, it is unreasonable (the plaintiff argues) to suppose the officers of the defendants ignorant of that fact; unless we excuse their want of information on the ground of neglect of duty on their part to their employees and the public, so gross as to make it proper and just to hold them responsible to the same extent as if they were fully informed of all the facts."

1890, FIELD, J., in Monahan v. Worcester, 150 Mass. 440, 23 N. E. 228: "If a person is incompetent for the work he is employed to do, the fact that he is generally reputed in the community to want those qualities which are necessary for the proper performance of the work certainly has some tendency to show that the master would have found out that the servant was incompetent, if proper means had been taken to ascertain the qualifications of the servant." [2]

§ 250. (2) Employer: (b) Acts of an Employee. Since reputation is after all created originally by conduct, the use of reputation, for the purpose just noticed, gives also, by implication, a sanction to the probative value of particular acts of misconduct as giving warning of incompetency. Experience, too, in general as well as in the business of employers, tells that particular acts of incompetency are the usual and sufficient source of judgment upon an employee's incompetency. The only objection, then, can arise from the doctrines of Confusion of Issues and of Unfair Surprise (ante, § 202); yet, since the evidence is so closely connected with the issue of the pleadings, since it has a comparatively small range of time and place, and since the facilities of procuring testimony to expose a fabricated charge are ample, an objection on this score does not seem serious. The natural view, that such particular acts, if not isolated or lacking in marked significance, may in a given case be admissible as calculated to give warning to the employer, is well set forth in the following passage: [1] fact of incompetence has been evidenced, even though the knowledge is not disputed).

Distinguish the question what sort of reputation is admissible, under the Hearsay exception, to prove the fact of the employee's incompetence (post, §§ 1615, 1616, 1621), and the question of substantive law whether the employee's character is in issue (ante, § 80). The rulings upon these distinct principles are occasionally confused.

[2] Accord: Gilman v. R. Co. and Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Hoover, supra.

§ 250. [1] Accord: Federal: 1895, Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Camp, 13 C. C. A. 233, 65 Fed. 952, 958 (going to sleep on duty, etc.; "the entire record" of K. as an employee in the capacity concerned, admitted); 1903, Wabash S. D. Co. v. Black, 126 Fed. 721, 726, C. C. A. (previous bursting of two similar pulleys made by the same employees, admitted);

1874, ALLEN, J., in Baulec v. R. Co., 59 N. Y. 356, 358: "When character, as distinguished from reputation, is the subject of investigation, specific acts tend to exhibit and bring to light the peculiar qualities of the man, and indicate his adaptation or want of adaptation to any position, or fitness or unfitness for a particular duty or trust. It is by many or by a series of acts . . . that the actual qualities, the true characteristics of individuals, those qualities and characteristics which would or should influence and control in the selection of agents for positions of trust and responsibility, are known. . . . [But only a single instance of carelessness in eight years' service was here shown.] A single act of casual neglect does not 'per se' tend to prove the party to be careless and imprudent and unfitted for a position requiring care and prudence. Character is formed and qualities exhibited by a series of acts and not by a single act. An engineer might from inattention omit to sound the whistle or ring the bell at a railroad crossing; but such fact would not tend to prove him a careless and negligent servant of the company. . . . The question in this case was whether the single occurrence detailed by the witness, in connection with other circumstances and with his general character and conduct, was such as to make it necessary for the defendant, in the exercise of proper care and prudence such as the law enjoins, to discharge this switchman. I am clearly of opinion that there was not sufficient evidence to go to the jury."

1905, Southern Pac. Co. v. Hetzer, 135 Fed. 272, 279, C. C. A. (negligence of a fellow-servant; "specific acts of incompetence of the servant, notice of which was brought home to the master before the accident" are admissible, and also acts "so notorious that they ought to have been known"; but not specific acts "of which the master had no notice or knowledge prior to the alleged accident"); 1905, Huntt v. McNamee, 141 Fed. 293, 299, C. C. A. (there must be either specific acts "brought home to the knowledge of the master" or acts "of such nature and frequency that the master in the exercise of due care must have had them brought to his notice"); 1909, Pittsburgh R. Co. v. Thomas, 3d C. C. A., 174 Fed. 591 (negligent motorman as a fellow-servant; two prior negligent acts here held insufficient; good opinion, distinguishing between the concrete negligence of the specific act and the incompetence of the man doing the act); Indiana: 1871, Pittsburg, F. W. & C. R. Co. v. Ruby, 38 Ind. 294, 311; 1895, Evansville & T. H. R. Co. v. Tothill, 143 Ind. 49, 41 N. E. 709 (that a train-dispatcher had often run trains ahead of their schedule time; admitted on the question of the employer's notice of incompetency); Maryland: 1886, Baltimore Elev. Co. v. Neal, 65 Md. 438, 452, 5 Atl. 338, semble; 1894, Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Hoover, 79 Md. 253, 264, 29 Atl. 994; Massachusetts: 1898, Cox v. R. Co., 170 Mass. 129, 49 N. E. 97 (a watchman's habits of intoxication, for some years previous, receivable, as showing that the defendant might have discovered them by reasonable diligence); 1910, Igo v. Boston Elev. R. Co., 204 Mass. 197, 90 N. E. 574 ("Incompetence cannot be inferred from a single act of negligence"); 1911, Leary v. Webber Co., 210 Mass. 68, 96 N. E. 136 (prior instances admitted; opinion obscure); Michigan: 1870, Davis v. R. Co., 20 Mich. 105, 124; 1881, Michigan C. R. Co. v. Gilbert, 46 Mich. 176, 179, 9 N. W. 243; 1900, Shaw v. R. Co., 132 Mich. 629, 82 N. W. 618 (previous practice of mail agent in throwing mail-bag, admitted to show notice to the railroad company); New York: 1874, Chapman v. R. Co., 55 N. Y. 579, 585, semble; 1874, Baulec v. R. Co., 59 N. Y. 356 (see quotation supra); Pennsylvania: 1911, Rosenstiel v. Pittsburgh R. Co., 230 Pa. 273, 79 Atl. 556 (inconsistent statements, but apparently specific acts when known to the proper authority are admissible, contrary to Frazier v. R. Co., infra); Texas: 1895, Cunningham v. R. Co., 88 Tex. 534, 31 S. W. 629 (repudiating R. Co. v. Scott, 68 Tex. 694, 5 S. W. 501; R. Co. v. Rowland, 82 Tex. 171, 180, 18 S. W. 96 (disapproving the Frazier case, Pa., infra); 1898, Galveston, H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Davis, 92 Tex. 372, 48 S. W. 570 (provided the incompetence is otherwise shown); Utah: 1899, Stoll v. Daly Min. Co., 19 Utah 271, 57 Pac. 295 (usually a single act will not suffice);

Contra: 1894, Cosgrove v. Pitman, 103 Cal. 268, 275, 37 Pac. 232 (specific acts, not admissible; here, of intemperance; following Frazier v. R. Co., Pa.); 1896, Columbus R. R. Co. v. Christian, 97 Ga. 56, 25 S. E. 411 (following Frazier v. R. Co., Pa.); 1860, Frazier v. R. Co., 38 Pa. 104 (negligence of the defendant in employing a careless conductor; other acts of carelessness on the conductor's part, known to the defendant, rejected, because character is not to be evidenced by specific acts); 1913, Simon v. Hamilton L. Co., 76 Wash. 370, 136 Pac. 361 (acts of incompetency subsequent to the period of employment, excluded); 1913, Guy v. Lanark Fuel Co., 72 W. Va. 728, 79 S. E. 941 (company physician's competence; some specific instances of intoxication, held not enough on the facts to know defendant's knowledge of the physician's intemperateness).

While it is to-day generally conceded that such evidence is admissible, it is not usually specified whether the acts of incompetence must be by other evidence shown to have come to the employer's notice. It would seem that where the act is so flagrant that it would ordinarily be observed by or reported to the employee's superior officer, no other evidence would be required as a condition precedent to admission.

From the foregoing use distinguish the more controverted questions whether an employee's particular acts of negligence may be used directly to evidence the character itself, either as in issue (ante, § 208) or as offered evidentially (ante, § 199).

§ 251. (3) Owner of Vicious Animal. Where against the owner of an animal a scienter is to be proved (the knowledge of the animal's vicious quality), reputation of the animal is relevant, on the principle of the foregoing topics,[1] though the occasion for resorting to it is naturally rare. Particular acts of viciousness are also relevant, for similar reasons, and this application of the principle is long established in tradition.[2]

§ 252. (4) Owner or Possessor of a Dangerous Machine or Place. Of the four ways (ante, § 245) in which knowledge of the dangerous qualities of a thing or place might be obtained by its owner or possessor:

(1) (2) The first two seldom raise here any evidential question: Direct exposure to the senses[1] and express communication[2] are of course always legitimate modes of evidencing knowledge of the dangerous condition of a machine or place.

(3) The reputation of the place or machine, and the fact that its dangerousness or the existence of the defect was reputed or generally talked about, would be relevant as showing the probable carrying of information by some one

§ 251. [1] 1796, Jones v. Perry, 2 Esp. 482 (common report that defendant's dog had been bitten by a mad dog, admitted as indicating a duty to secure him); 1905, Palmer v. Coyle, 187 Mass. 136, 72 N. E. 844 (injury by a vicious horse; the reputation of the horse, admitted to show defendant's knowledge); 1889, Wormsdorf v. R. Co., 75 Mich. 472, 475, 42 N. W. 1000 (reputation of a horse among the railway employees for fractiousness).

[2] 1866, Worth v. Gilling, L. R. 2 C. P. 3 (previous attempts of a dog to bite, admitted to show the owner's knowledge of its disposition); 1856, Arnold v. Norton, 25 Conn. 92 (single bite of a dog); 1876, Graham v. Nowlin, 54 Ind. 391 (to show knowledge of the glandered condition of a mule sold, the fact was admitted of the existence of the same disease in the defendant's horses and his knowledge of it); 1906, Warren v. Porter, 144 Mich. 699, 108 N. W. 435 (injury by a runaway team; a former instance of its running away, known to the defendant, admitted); 1844, Kittredge v. Elliott, 16 N. H. 77 (single bite of a dog); 1850, Cockerham v. Nixon, 11 Ired. N. C. 269 (single attack of a bull); 1850, McCaskill v. Elliot, 5 Strobh. S. C. 196, 197 (single bite of a dog); 1876, Keenan v. Hayden, 39 Wis. 558 (dog).

§ 252. [1] 1883, Dotton v. Albion, 50 Mich. 129, 132, 15 N. W. 46 (injury at a cross-walk; "the further fact stands unquestioned that the street-commissioner actually resided in plain sight of this cross-walk"); 1888, Noyes v. Gardner, 147 Mass. 505, 508, 18 N. E. 423 (that one of the selectmen passed daily over a walk, admitted).

[2] 1892, Smith v. Whittier, 95 Cal. 279, 290, 292, 30 Pac. 529 (direction to the owner of an elevator by the maker, as showing the former's knowledge of its proper mode of use); 1916, Rockland & R. L. Co. v. Coe-Mortimer Co., 115 Me. 184, 98 Atl. 657 (negligence of dock-owner; dredging company's statements to the owner, admissible to show his reasonable belief); 1915, Dunn v. Salt Lake & O. R. Co., 47 Utah 137, 151 Pac. 979 (death by electric shock; operator's statement to deceased that wires were "dead", admitted).

to the person charged;[3] usually the question is one of constructive notice, not an evidential one.

(4) The nature of the defect itself, as likely to lead to discussion and report, is always a relevant circumstance.[4] The length of time of its existence (especially for a defect in a highway) is in such cases an additional circumstance always admissible;[5] but this becomes a question of substantive law, inasmuch as the length of time is commonly held to be capable of amounting in law to constructive notice, and by statute or otherwise a specific period is frequently established as constituting a default based on constructive notice.

The occurrence of former injuries at the same place or machine, and the existence of defects in other parts of it, are equally admissible, though less cogent in the probabilities suggested.[6] The element (a) (ante, § 245) re-

[3] 1891, Knowlton, J., in Chase v. Lowell, 151 Mass. 422, 426, 24 N. E. 212: "The fact that it [the highway-defect] was generally talked about in the community is a circumstance which may properly be considered. In such a case, notoriety derives its force as evidence, not merely from its suggestion that the defect was of such a kind that the authorities would have been likely to discover it in the first instance with their own eyes, but quite as much from the probability that their attention would have been brought by others to a matter which was generally talked about and in which they were interested." Accord: 1909, Miller v. Mullan, 17 Ida. 28, 104 Pac. 660 (mere rumor held inadmissible); 1867, Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Shannon, 43 Ill. 345 (admitting reputation of the unsafeness of a boiler); 1890, Chase v. Lowell, 151 Mass. 422, 426, 24 N. E. 212 (remarks made about a defect by persons looking at it, admitted); practically repudiating Hinckley v. Somerset, 145 Mass. 326, 328, 337, 14 N. E. 166 (1887), where conversations about it were excluded.

Distinguish here the use of a local custom for trespassers to walk on a railroad track at a certain part, as an element in determining the wanton management of a railroad train; here the custom does not evidence the knowledge; but the custom, plus knowledge by the engineer otherwise evidenced, may serve to fix his conduct as wanton: 1910, Birmingham So. R. Co. v. Fox, 167 Ala. 281, 52 So. 889.

[4] 1860, Donaldson v. Boston, 16 Gray Mass. 508 ("Upon the question of notoriety, the jury might consider whether the obstruction of travel was of such a nature that, if citizens passing by had seen it, they would have been likely to have forthwith informed such officers of its existence").

[5] 1890, Chase v. Lowell, supra.

[6] Federal: 1898, Valley R. Co. v. Keegan, 31 C. C. A. 255, 87 Fed. 849 (other defects in a railroad yard, admissible to show notice by an employee); 1882, District of Columbia v. Armes, 107 U. S. 519, 2 Sup. 840 (see the citation post, § 458, n. 2); 1914, Evans v. Erie R. Co., 6th C. C. A., 213 Fed. 129 (collision of a train with an automobile at a crossing; other accidents at the same place, admissible to show knowledge of the dangerous character of the place);
Alabama: 1904, Davis v. Kornman, 141 Ala. 479, 37 So. 789 (injury to an employee at a machine; prior similar defects of operation, admitted);
California: 1873, Malone v. Hawley, 46 Cal. 409, 413 (defect in an elevator; a former fall of the same elevator from a similar cause, admitted to show notice); 1903, Roche v. Llewellyn I. Co., 140 Cal. 563, 74 Pac. 147 (prior accident to a boiler on a third person's premises; held not admissible against the defendant on the facts);
Colorado: 1895, Colorado M. & I. Co. v. Rees, 21 Colo. 435, 42 Pac. 42 (leaving open an elevator-door on former occasions, admitted); 1908, Hotchkiss M. M. & R. Co. v. Bruner, 42 Colo. 305, 94 Pac. 331 (former mine accident, admitted to show notice; citing cases from Ind., Minn., N. Y., and Pa., and ignoring the foregoing case); 1913, Meeker v. Fairfield, 25 Colo. App. 187, 136 Pac. 471 (that other persons had before fallen at the same place, admitted to show notice);
Illinois: 1866, Chicago v. Powers, 42 Ill. 169, 173 (death by falling off a bridge insufficiently lighted; the fact that another person had fallen off the same bridge, admitted to show notice, on the part of the defendant's agents, of the condition of the bridge); 1894, Bloomington v. Legg, 151 Ill. 9, 14, 37 N. E. 696 (injury at a drinking-fountain; prior injuries admitted); 1905, Mobile & O. R. Co. v. Vallowe, 214 Ill. 124, 73 N. E. 416 (Chicago v. Powers approved); 1905, Frank v. Hanly, 215 Ill. 216, 74 N. E. 130 (employee's injury at a machine; prior injury to another employee at the same machine; and his notification to the defendant, admitted to show the latter's notice of the defect); 1907, Chicago v. Jarvis, 226 Ill. 614, 80 N. E. 1079 (prior falls at a coal-hole, admitted to show knowledge);
Indiana: 1881, Delphi v. Lowery, 74 Ind. 520, quires that the prior injury or defect should be such as would probably lead to a general publication of it or to a report being carried to the person charged (or his agent); and the element (b) (ante, § 245) requires that the prior injury or defect should be one which if known would naturally warn the person charged of the existence of the defect in question; for example, if it is an injury or "accident", it should have occurred in substantially the same

523 (injuries of other persons at the bridge where the intestate was drowned, admitted to show notice to the city);
Iowa: 1878, Moore v. Burlington, 49 Ia. 136, 137 (previous pilings of lumber at a place, admitted); 1884, Ruggles v. Nevada, 63 Ia. 185, 18 N. W. 866 (condition of a sidewalk "along there", excluded, chiefly as not amounting to constructive notice of a particular defect); 1887, Armstrong v. Ackley, 71 Ia. 76, 80, 32 N. W. 180 (condition of another part of a continuously unsafe sidewalk, admitted; distinguishing the preceding case); 1897, Faulk v. Iowa Co., 103 Ia. 442, 72 N. W. 757 (defect in railing at or near the place in question, admitted); 1900, Wilberding v. Dubuque, 111 Ia. 484, 82 N. W. 957 (prior injuries at a highway defect, admitted); 1902, Yeager v. Spirit Lake, 115 Ia. 593, 88 N. W. 1095 (other injuries on the same sidewalk, admitted); 1903, Kircher v. Larchwood, 120 Ia. 578, 95 N. W. 184 (condition of adjacent sidewalk, admitted to show notice); 1904, Potter v. Cave, 123 Ia. 98, 98 N. W. 569 (injury at a stairway; "previous accidents on this stairway and warnings to the defendant that it was dangerous", excluded, on the singular theory that "if dangerous in fact, his knowledge would be immaterial"; wholly ignoring the above Iowa cases, citing a few of those in § 458, post, but ignoring the later ones; a reprehensible opinion); 1904, Harrison v. Ayreshire, 123 Ia. 528, 99 N. W. 132 (defect near the walk where plaintiff was hurt, admitted); 1905, Farrell v. Dubuque, 129 Ia. 447, 105 N. W. 696 (condition of other similar frames erected on the street, admitted to show notice);
Kentucky: 1904, Crigler v. Ford, — Ky. —, 82 S. W. 599 (previous falls of an elevator, admitted); 1904, Yates v. Covington, 119 Ky. 228, 83 S. W. 592 (see the citation post, § 458, n. 2);
Maryland: 1912, Maryland El. R. Co. v. Beasley, 117 Md. 270, 82 Atl. 157 (prior operation of an automatic bell alarm, admitted); 1921, Cordish v. Bloom, 138 Md. 81, 113 Atl. 578 (injury on sidewalk; cited more fully post, § 458); 1921, Hagerstown & F. R. Co. v. State, — Md. —, 115 Atl. 783 (death by fall of a tree-limb on an electric wire; prior fall of other limbs, admitted to show notice of dangerous condition);
Massachusetts: 1887, Hinckley v. Somerset, 145 Mass. 326, 328, 337, 14 N. E. 166 (prior similar highway-accident, about the same place, admitted); 1888, Noyes v. Gardner, 147 id. 505, 508, 18 N. E. 423 (the condition of other planks in the same sidewalk, admitted); 1910, Bleistine v. Chelsea, 204 Mass. 105, 90 N. E. 526 (adjacent sewer's condition, admitted); 1913, Williams v. Winthrop, 213 Mass. 581, 100 N. E. 1101 (highway defect; "generally in this Commonwealth evidence of this character has been excluded");
Michigan: 1883, Dotton v. Albion, 50 Mich. 129, 131, 15 N. W. 46 (other defects in the same cross-walk, admitted); 1886, Smith v. Sherwood, 62 Mich. 159, 165, 28 N. W. 806 (other horses' shying at the same hole, admitted; "as more or less publicity would naturally be given to such occurrences, it tended to show that knowledge of such dangerous character was brought to the attention" of the defendant); 1889, Dundas v. Lansing, 75 Mich. 499, 504, 507, 42 N. W. 1011 (the defective condition of a street-crossing being the cause of the injury, the condition of the sidewalks "in the vicinity", "a block or more each way", and even express notice of the latter condition, held inadmissible as "too remote and indefinite"; the source of error in the opinion is that it relies upon inapplicable line of precedents, cited in § 458, post, which are not the law in Michigan); 1889, Tice v. Bay City, 78 Mich. 209, 44 N. W. 52 (defective condition of sidewalk "at other places beyond the defect which caused the injury", excluded); 1890, Campbell v. Kalamazoo, 80 Mich. 655, 659, 45 N. W. 652 (other defects of various sorts in the sidewalk in front of the same lot of land, admitted); 1890, O'Neil v. West Branch, 81 Mich. 544, 546, 45 N. W. 1023 ("other defects of long standing, existing in close proximity to the defect which causes the injury", admissible); 1891, Lombar v. East Tawas, 86 Mich. 14, 20, 48 N. W. 947 (other accidents at the same hole, admissible as tending "to show constructive notice to defendant; and, where the accident results in death or great bodily injury, it may by reason of its publicity tend to show actual notice"); 1892, Fuller v. Jackson, 92 Mich. 191, 205, 52 N. W. 1075 (the three preceding cases approved); 1893, Corcoran v. Detroit, 95 Mich. 84, 86, 54 N. W. 692 (defects in other parts of the road in the vicinity, admitted); 1894, Edwards v. Three Rivers, 102 Mich. 153, 60 N. W. 454 ("condition of the walk in the vicinity of the accident", admissible); 1895, Strudgeon v. Sand Beach, 107 Mich. 496, 65 N. W. 616 (defective parts of the sidewalk in the same block, admitted); 1896, Moore v.

place and mode; if it is another defect (as, in another part of the same sidewalk), it should be so closely associated with the one in question that the discovery of the former would naturally lead to the discovery of the latter or would warn of its existence. The facts of prior injuries and of other defects are generally conceded to be admissible, subject to certain varieties in the phrasing of the rule.

Kalamazoo, 109 Mich. 176, 66 N. W. 1089 (that others stepped into the same hole in the sidewalk, admitted); 1898, Butts v. Eaton Rapids, 116 Mich. 539, 74 N. W. 872 (condition of a walk six or eight months previously, admitted; condition of "whole length" in front of certain premises, admitted); 1900, Boyle v. Saginaw, 124 Mich. 348, 82 N. W. 1057 (condition of sidewalk in front of other lots, admitted); 1904, Gregory v. Detroit U. R. Co., 138 Mich. 368, 101 N. W. 546; 1908, Woodworth v. Detroit U. R. Co., 153 Mich. 108, 116 N. W. 549 (prior highway accidents, admitted); 1905, Hunter v. Ithaca, 141 Mich. 539, 105 N. W. 9 (Strudgeon v. Sand Beach followed); Minnesota: 1883, Gude v. Mankato, 30 Minn. 256, 258, 15 N. W. 175 (condition of the sidewalk "at and near the place", admissible); 1895, Burrows v. Lake Crystal, 61 Minn. 357, [illegible] N. W. 74 (former accidents, admitted); 1898, Wüta v. Interstate Iron Co., 103 Minn. 93, 115 N. W. 169 (former mine accidents under similar circumstances, admissible); Missouri: 1899, Young v. Webb City, 150 Mo. 333, 51 S. W. 709 (admitted);
Nebraska: 1886, Plattsmouth v. Mitchell, 20 Nebr. 228, 230, 29 N. W. 593 ("bad condition of the sidewalk in general at the place", admitted);
New Hampshire: 1857, Willey v. Portsmouth, 35 N. H. 303, 310 (former giving way of a culvert); 1917, Fuller v. Maine Central R. Co., 78 N. H. 366, 100 Atl. 546 (collision at a railroad crossing; prior death at the same crossing, admitted to show notice of danger);
New Jersey: 1899, Exton v. R. Co., 62 N. J. L. 7, 42 Atl. 486 (former disorderly conduct making a carrier's premises dangerous, admitted to show notice);
Oklahoma: 1903, Kingfisher v. Altizer, 13 Okl. 121, 74 Pac. 107 (defective bridge; other accidents at the same place, and other defects in the bridge, admitted to show notice); 1915, Chickasha v. White, 45 Okl. 631, 146 Pac. 578 (injury in a highway; other accidents at the same place, admitted);
Pennsylvania: 1898, Potter v. Natural Gas Co., 183 Pa. 757, 39 Atl. 7 (condition of a road up to a few weeks before, admitted); 1901, Fitzgerald v. E. E. Illum. Co., 200 Pa. 540, 50 Atl. 161 (defective insulation; that the wire had given out sparks for several weeks, admitted, as showing the defect to have "existed for such a period that it ought to have been known", by reason of its duty of "constant oversight and repair"); 1903, Reid v. Linck, 206 Pa. 109, 55 Atl. 849 (prior instances of falling through an elevator-shaft, admitted to show knowledge of its danger);
Rhode Island: 1871, Smith v. R. Co., 10 R. I. 24, 27 (other fires set by the defendant's engines, but only prior, not subsequent, to the one in question; compare § 452, post); 1903, McGarrity v. R. Co., 25 R. I. 269, 55 Atl. 718 (condition of telltales in a freight yard at other times, admissible to show the defendant's knowledge of their defective condition); 1904, Nelson v. Union R. Co., 26 R. I. 251, 58 Atl. 780 (injury by a trolley-pole's breaking a light globe; prior similar breakages admitted to show knowledge); 1908, Carr v. American Locomotive Co., 29 R. I. 276, 70 Atl. 196 (prior trouble with a valve admitted);
South Carolina: 1887, Bridger v. R. Co., 27 S. C. 456, 3 S. E. 860 (injury at a turntable; former injuries of others there, excluded, unless knowledge of them had been brought home to the defendant; present question ignored);
South Dakota: 1903, Waterhouse v. Schlitz B. Co., 16 S. D. 592, 94 N. W. 587 (collapse of other buildings of like construction, admitted to show notice);
Tennessee: 1900, Illinois C. R. Co. v. Wyatt, 104 Tenn. 432, 58 S. W. 308 (condition of adjacent platform-planking, admitted to show notice);
Utah: 1894, Thomas v. Springville, 9 Utah 426, 430, 35 Pac. 503 (shying of other horses at a hole, inadmissible); 1904, Johnson v. Union P. C. Co., 28 Utah 46, 76 Pac. 1089 (prior defective operation of a mine-car, admitted); 1911, Harris v. Ogden Steam Laundry Co., 93 Utah 436, 117 Pac. 700 (injury while made dizzy by gasoline fumes; instances of the effect of such fumes on other persons, admitted);
Washington: 1897, Elster v. Seattle, 18 Wash. 304, 51 Pac. 394 (injuries to others at the same place in a sidewalk, a week or ten days before, admitted to show notice); 1900, Piper v. Spokane, 22 Wash. 147, 60 Pac. 138 (similar; and also "declarations of other persons at the same time"); 1903, Shearer v. Buckley, 31 Wash. 370, 72 Pac. 76 (condition of a street in the same block, admitted); 1904, Franklin v. Engel, 34 Wash. 480, 76 Pac. 84 (trap-door to a cellar; Elster v. Seattle followed); 1905, Hansen v. Seattle L. Co., 41 Wash. 349, 83 Pac. 102 (prior accidents at the same and similar cog-wheels, admitted); 1913, Armstrong v. Yakima Hotel Co., 75 Wash. 477, 135 Pac. 233 (prior fall at a step, admitted);
Wisconsin: 1870, Weisenberg v. Appleton, 26

Distinguish the use of such prior injuries or other defects to show objectively the actual dangerous quality of the thing or place (post, §§ 437–458), or to show negligence of the employees (ante, § 199); the precedents under those principles often incidentally deal with this use also.

253. (5) Purchaser from an Insolvent or Lunatic. Where a transfer of property by an insolvent is in issue as being in fraud of creditors, and knowledge by the transferee of the transferor's insolvency is to be shown, the reputation of the transferor as to solvency is relevant to show the probability of that knowledge, provided it is a reputation in a locality frequented by the transferee. This is equally true whether the offeror of the evidence is attempting to show that the transferee believed in the transferor's solvency or merely that he was aware of the latter's insolvency.

Such a reputation of solvency is evidence of a belief in that solvency upon the same principle that reputation of a deceased's dangerous character (ante, § 246) evidences an apprehension of danger from him: [1]

1855, METCALF, J., in Bartlett v. Decreet, 4 Gray 113: "The testimony is admissible . . . on the ground that man's belief, as to matters of which they had not personal knowledge, is reasonably supposed to be affected by the opinions of others who are about them."

1855, MERRICK, J., in Heywood v. Reed, 4 Gray 579: "Individuals cannot in general resort to the most authentic sources of information to ascertain the pecuniary responsibility of parties with whom they deal. They are obliged to act upon opinions entertained and adopted in view of circumstances which are merely external and apparent, and hence they may well be presumed to be in some degree influenced in their transactions by the business credit and pecuniary standing which a party has acquired and maintained among his neighbors and acquaintances. When his motives to action in pecuniary transactions are called in question, considerations of this kind deserve attention."

Such a reputation of insolvency is evidence of knowledge of that insolvency in the same way that reputation of an employee's incompetency (ante, § 249) evidences the employer's probable knowledge of it: [2]

Wis. 56, 58 (general condition of a sidewalk sufficient, if known, to involve negligence, irrespective of knowledge of a particular defect); 1872, Ripon v. Bittel, 30 Wis. 614, 620 (same); 1882, Sullivan v. Oshkosh, 55 Wis. 508, 513, 13 N. W. 468, semble (general condition of a sidewalk, available to show notice of a particular defect); 1885, Spearbracker v. Larrabee, 64 Wis. 573, 575, 25 N. W. 555 (holes in a bridge at other places, admitted); 1889, Shaw v. Sun Prairie, 74 Wis. 105, 42 N. W. 271 (condition of a sidewalk "in the vicinity", "or the general bad condition of the same street, sidewalk, or bridge", admissible); Spaulding v. Sherman, 75 Wis. 77, 79, 43 N. W. 558, semble (same); 1891, Propsom v. Leatham, 80 Wis. 608, 611, 50 N. W. 586 (condition of a bridge at other points, admitted); 1900, Shafer v. Eau Claire, 105 Wis. 239, 81 N. W. 409 (similar); 1904, Duncan v. Grand Rapids, 121 Wis. 626, 99 N. W. 317 (general condition of a sidewalk, admitted); 1904, Lyon, v. Grand Rapids, ib. 609, 99 N. W. 311 (similar evidence excluded, not being material to show notice here); 1904, Hallum v. Omro, 122 Wis. 337, 99 N. W., 1051 (general condition of a sidewalk, for three years past, admitted); 1905, Pumorlo v. Merrill, 125 Wis. 102, 103 N. W. 464 (similar); 1908, Fleming v. Northern T. P. Mill, 135 Wis. 157, 114 N. W. 841 (machine).

§ 253. [1] Accord: Mass. 1855, Bartlett v. Decreet, 4 Gray 113; 1855, Heywood v. Reed, 4 Gray 579 (quoted supra); 1861, Carpenter v. Leonard, 3 All. 33; 1862, Whitcher v. Shattuck, 3 All. 319, 321 (mortgage); 1865, Metcalf v. Munson, 10 All. 492.

[2] Federal: 1893, Hinds v. Keith, 6 C. C. A. 231, 57 Fed. 10, 13 U. S. App. 222, 227 (notoriety of insolvency, not admissible to show buyer's knowledge, if not within the same community); Alabama: 1843, Branch Bank v. Parker, 5 Ala. 736 (Ormond, J., diss.); 1845, Lawson v. Orear, 7 Ala. 784, semble;

1858, STONE, J., in Price v. Mazange, 31 Ala. 701, 707: "Ability to pay, responsibility to the coercive power of an execution, is a weighty consideration with one who parts with his goods on credit. . . . It is difficult to believe that merchants and traders will not learn the pecuniary condition of their customers when that condition so vitally affects them and is notorious in the neighborhood in which they are operating it."

An express communication would also be receivable to show notice of insolvency;[3] and similarly, express assertions by the transferor would have some (if little) probative value to show the transferee's belief in his solvency.[4] The use of reputation to show the fact of insolvency or solvency itself is a different question, involving the propriety of making an exception to the Hearsay rule (post, § 1623).

On the same principle the reputation of the insanity of a transferor would be admissible to show probable notice of the insanity by the transferee.[5]

§ 254. (6) Adverse Possessor, Receiver of Stolen Goods, Keeper of Premises for Illegal Business, and other Dealers with Property. On the same principle, reputation of a property-interest may serve to evidence knowledge or good faith wherever that state of mind is important in dealings with the property. Thus, the owner's knowledge of an adverse possession set up as the foundation of a prescriptive title may be evidenced by the notoriety or repute of the possession.[1]

1858, Price v. Mazange, 31 Ala. 701, 704, 707 (that he was "notoriously insolvent"; see quotation supra); 1883, Humes v. O'Bryan, 74 Ala. 81 (Somerville, J.: "The rule should in our opinion have no application to persons living at a distance in another State, unless they are shown to have had an opportunity of hearing the common report by frequently visiting the residence of the alleged partners, or otherwise"); 1918, McAleer v. People's Bank, 202 Ala. 256, 80 So. 94 (recoverable preference; the assignor's reputation, admitted); Georgia: 1885, Kuglar v. Garner, 74 Ga. 765, 768 (note obtained by fraud and duress; "public notoriety" of the circumstances admitted to show the indorsee's knowledge); Louisiana: 1840, Brander v. Ferriday, 16 La. 296, 299 (mortgage); Massachusetts: 1848, Denny v. Dana, 2 Cush. 169 (setting aside a fraudulent preference; evidence that the business of the debtor was known in the community to be ruinous to those engaged in it); 1854, Lee v. Kilburn, 3 Gray 594; 1862, Cook v. Mason, 5 All. 212; 1875, Sweetser v. Bates, 117 Mass. 468; 1894, Bliss v. Johnson, 162 Mass. 323, 38 N. E. 446; Missouri: 1848, Benvist v. Darby, 12 Mo. 196, 205; North Carolina: 1899, Webb v. Atkinson, 124 N. C. 447, 32 S. E. 737. — Peculiar: 1916, Trimble v. Carlisle, 103 S. C. 411, 88 S. E. 28 (note executed by defendant to H. who fraudulently transferred to T.; H.'s good reputation for veracity having been testified to by T., to show T.'s good faith, defendant was not allowed to show H.'s bad reputation for veracity, in rebuttal; an extraordinary and impossible ruling).

[3] 1829, Vacher v. Cocks, M. & M. 355 (letters to a bankrupt, not as evidence of the fact of insolvency, but of his knowing that his condition was insolvent).

[4] 1861, Carpenter v. Leonard, 3 All. 33 (bona fides of a mortgagee; the express statements of the mortgagor admitted to show the former's grounds for believing in his solvency).

[5] 1860, Romilly, M. R., in Greenslade v. Dare, 20 Beav. 290, rejected it on the singular ground that "to admit evidence of general reputation to fix a defendant with knowledge of a fact, while that evidence would not be admissible to prove the fact itself, appears to me to be a violation of the first principle", etc.

§ 254. [1] 1894, Maxwell Land-Grant Co. v. Dawson, 151 U. S. 586, 603, 14 Sup. 458; 1858, Brown v. Cockerell, 33 Ala. 38, 47; 1899, Tennessee Coal I. & R. Co. v. Linn, 123 Ala. 112, 26 So. 245 (after evidence of the adverse possession); 1905, Henry v. Brown, 143 Ala. 446, 39 So. 325; 1906, Doe v. Edmondson, 145 Ala. 557, 40 So. 505 (title by prescription); 1899, Knight v. Knight, 178 Ill. 553, 53 N. E. 306 (title by prescription; reputation of ancestor's possession admissible to show notoriety of it and adversity of claim); 1880, Sparrow v. Hovey, 44 Mich. 63, 6 N. W. 93; 1904 Miller v. Shumway, 135 Mich. 654, 98 N. W. 385.

Distinguish the question whether reputation is admissible, under the Hearsay exception, to evidence title directly (post, §§ 1587, 1626).

So, too, a purchaser's knowledge of equitable or other interests may be evidenced by reputation;[2] and, the good or bad faith of one purchasing or receiving stolen goods,[3] or otherwise unlawfully dealing with chattels,[4] may be evidenced by repute or by express communications made to him. The leasing of premises for gaming, for liquor selling, for prostitution, or for any other illegal business likely to lead to general inquiry and discussion, may raise an issue of knowledge, which is provable by the repute of the house;[5] but usually other rules of evidence are involved (post, § 367).

§ 255. (7) Dealer with a Partnership. The modes usually available for showing notice of a dissolution of partnership, as against one who has dealt with its members after dissolution, are the first three already noted (ante, § 245), namely (1) exposure to observation, i.e. publication where the person would be likely to have seen it, (2) express communication, and (3) reputation or notoriety. (1) Here the only evidential question seems to be whether the newspaper containing the notice must be shown to have been subscribed to or taken by the person to be notified; but this question is rarely raised as one of admissibility, and is generally treated as one either of constructive notice or of the sufficiency of evidence on all the facts of the case.[1] (2) An

[2] 1901, Stephenson v. Kilpatrick, 166 Mo. 262, 65 S. W. 773 (to show notice, by a purchaser at a sale, of plaintiff's interest in the property, the community's general knowledge of certain litigation was held relevant). The following is another use: 1903, Jennings v. Rooney, 183 Mass. 577, 67 N. E. 665 (fact of a conversation admitted, to show that a vendee obtained first knowledge of the property from the broker and not from the vendor).

[3] Eng. 1824, R. v. Whitehead, 1 C. & P. 67 (conspiracy to defraud by B. and W.; to show W.'s good faith in the representations made to him by B., it was proved that "B. was a clergyman and most respectably connected"); 1859, R. v. Wood, 1 F. & F. 497 (receiving stolen goods; vendor's declarations to defendant, admitted); Can. 1908, Oldstadt v. Lineham, 1 Alta. 417 (ninety-three notes obtained by fraudulent misrepresentation; to show defendant's notice of the fraud when he purchased, his taking of similar notes from the same payee on former occasions was admitted); U. S. 1855, Spivey v. State, 26 Ala. 90, 93, 103 (larceny; statements to defendant of supposed owner, admitted to show defendant's good faith); 1879, State v. Waltz, 52 Ia. 227, 2 N. W. 1102 (larceny; information to the defendant that the things were not the property of the owner, admitted); 1904, State v. Simon, 70 N. J. L. 407, 57 Atl. 1016 (receiving goods; conversations with the seller, admitted); 1857, People v. Rando, 3 Park. Cr. N. Y. 336, 339, 341 (to disprove guilty knowledge of stolen goods possessed, evidence of the statements by the person bringing them, which induced the defendant to receive them, was offered; Peabody, J., diss.: "They should be admitted, not as evidence of the truth of the facts, but as evidence that such statements were made, without regard to the truth or falsity of them"; here rejected, erroneously, by the majority; but in 1881, in People v. Dowling, 84 N. Y. 485, the passage quoted was made the law).

Compare the cases cited post, § 1781 (declarations by the accused).

[4] 1870, State v. Graham, 46 Mo. 490 (maliciously killing H.'s hog; instructions given to defendant to kill his employer's hog, admitted to show his belief).

[5] 1905, Bashinski v. State, 122 Ga. 164, 50 S. E. 54; Ia. Comp. C.1919, § 988 (illegal liquor sales; "general reputation of the place kept, admissible to show "knowledge of the owner"); 1904, State v. Steen, 125 Ia. 307, 101 N. W. 96; 1906, State v. Brooks, 74 Kan. 175, 85 Pac. 1013 (knowingly permitting the use of a building for liquor sales; repute of the place as a liquor nuisance, admitted).

§ 255. [1] The earlier English cases are subjoined, in order to illustrate the method of dealing with such evidence: 1795, Godfrey v. Macauley, Peake 155 (notice of dissolution of partnership; Lord Ellenborough, C. J.: "The Gazette was not [conclusive] evidence of notice, any more than any other newspaper; . . . but in all cases, if published in the neighborhood of a person, it ought to be left to the jury whether he had notice of it or not"); 1816, Leeson v. Holt, 1 Stark. 186 (notice of a carrier's responsibility; Lord Ellenborough, C. J., "said that he would receive evidence of the advertisement in the Gazette, but that unless it were proved that the party was in the habit of reading the Gazette, the evidence would be of little avail. . . . The advertisement in the Times was not express communication raises no evidential question. (3) A reputation or notoriety of dissolution serves to evidence knowledge;[2] but here the question tends to become one of constructive notice or ostensible partnership, and thus of substantive law.

§ 256. (8) Maker of False Representations. Where a representation is made as to the credit of a third person to whom a loan or a sale is to be made, and in an action of deceit the knowledge of the incorrectness of the representations is to be shown, the reputation of the third person as to solvency or insolvency is relevant (on the principle of § 253, ante).[1] In general, wherever the knowledge of the incorrectness of representations is to be shown, any of the modes of evidence already noted in § 245 may become available.[2]

§ 257. (9) Seller or Transporter of Liquor. (a) Where a statute forbids the selling of intoxicating liquor to a person of known intemperate habits, the reputation of the vendee for intemperance is relevant to show probable knowledge by the seller;[1] and the other modes noted ante, § 245, would be admissible at all without proof that it was taken in by the party. The first instance in which such evidence was received was a case where a person . . . inserted a notice in a provincial Sunday paper, and the Court held that it was admissible in evidence because it was probable that the party had seen it, since he took in the paper and the advertisement related to his business." "It appeared that D. had occasionally read the Times newspaper, and Lord Ellenborough then admitted the advertisement contained in it to be read"); 1816, Jenkins v. Blizard, 1 Stark. 418, 420 (dissolution of partnership; "the notice had been advertised in the Morning Chronicle once only, and it did not appear that this individual paper had ever reached the plaintiffs", though it was proved that they took in the paper regularly; admitted); 1817, Munn v. Baker, 2 Stark. 255 (notice of a carrier's responsibility; an advertisement in the Gazette, rejected by Lord Ellenborough, C. J., "without proof of the plaintiff's having read the Gazette, since he might be expected to look into the Gazette for notices of the dissolution of partnerships, but not for notices by carriers of the limitation of their responsibility"); 1825, Rowley v. Horne, 3 Bing. 2 (notice by a carrier in a weekly paper to which the plaintiff subscribed; admitted, but held not sufficient); 1837, Hart v. Alexander, 7 C. & P. 746, 749, 751, 753; 2 M. & W. 484 (advertisements of dissolution of partnership in various newspapers, admitted). The following modern case illustrates that it is not a question of admissibility: 1898, Amer. F. I. Co. v. Landfare, 56 Nebr. 482, 76 N. W. 1068.

[2] 1883, Humes v. O'Bryan, 74 Ala. 81 (reputation of a dissolution of partnership, admitted; Somerville, J.: "It is based upon the probability that the plaintiff would be likely to know a fact of which no one else in the neighborhood seemed to be ignorant"); 1907, Bush & H. Co. v. McCarty Co., 127 Ga. 308, 56 S. E. 430 (evidence not here sufficient as offered); 1833, Cowen, J., in Halliday v. McDougall, 20 Wend. N. Y. 81, 89 ("Where a partnership has existed in fact, but has been dissolved, and a third person has yet dealt with one of the partners, and sues them all, insisting that he acted on the credit of the former concern, the question whether a partner who has retired shall yet be holden on a contract of the others, may depend on his having been known as a partner, for the notoriety of the fact may have influenced the conduct of the plaintiff").

§ 256. [1] 1837, Ward v. Herndon, 5 Port. 382, 384 ("no man is presumed to be so much of a recluse as not to know what is generally known and talked of in his neighborhood").

[2] 1918, McLean Medicine Co. v. U. S., 8th C. C. A., 253 Fed. 694 (fraudulent misbranding of drugs under U. S. St. 1906, June 30; testimonials by persons using the drug, admissible to show good faith); 1839, Com. v. Call, 21 Pick. Mass. 515 (false pretences; collecting money by representing himself to be an agent; to show that he had before that time to his knowledge been dismissed from his agency, evidence was received that he was dismissed for having lost his employer's money at a house of ill-fame); 1905, Connelly v. Brown, 73 N. H. 193, 60 Atl. 750 (deceit by a tenant; the landlord's statements to her, admitted, to show her belief in the truth of representations by her to the plaintiff as to the landlord's intent).

§ 257. [1] 1854, Elam v. State, 25 Ala. 53, 57; 1855, Stanley v. State, 26 Ala. 26 (excluded; but this case is repudiated in Stallings v. State, infra); 1859, Stallings v. State, 33 Ala. 425, 427 (indictment for selling liquor to one known to be intemperate; notoriety in the neighborhood admitted as indicating defendant's knowledge); 1876, Smith v. State, 55 Ala. 12; 1879, Tatum v. State, 63 Ala. 151.

equally available. (b) Where a statute forbids the knowing selling of liquor to a minor, the appearance of the vendee would be admissible as affecting the seller's probable knowledge (ante, § 222). (c) Where a statute forbids the knowing receipt of liquor for transportation, the reputation of the consignor as a trafficker in illegal liquor would be admissible.[2]

§ 258. (10) Party Prosecuting or Arresting without Probable Cause. (a) Where in an action for malicious prosecution for defamation, or for false arrest, the issue arises whether the prosecutor had reasonable grounds and acted in good faith, the bad reputation of the now plaintiff is a circumstance bearing on this state of mind, and is admissible.[1] There is no reason why the plaintiff's good repute should not be received in chief.[2] Particular acts of similar misconduct by the now plaintiff should be admissible, on the same principle (ante, § 248) that particular acts of violence by a deceased person are admitted to show the apprehensions of a defendant charged with homicide.[3] (b) In the same way, when in a prosecution for assaulting an officer

[2] 1920, State v. Crosswhite, 203 Ala. 586, 84 So. 813 (condemnation of property used in illegal transportation of liquors by defendant's bailee T.; notoriety of T.'s reputation as a "bootlegger", held admissible to show notice by defendant).

§ 258. [1] ENGLAND: 1773, Fabrigas v. Mostyn, 20 How. St. Tr. 94 ("While you knew Mr. Fabrigas what character did he bear? or how did he behave himself, as far as you had an opportunity of observing?" "As far as I could observe, he behaved very well, and had a very good character." . . . "While you knew him, I ask you, what was his behavior?" . . . "He always behaved with very great decency and decorum"; again at 142); 1799, Rodriguez v. Tadmire, 2 Esp. 721 (bad reputation as showing reasonable cause for suspicion, admitted); 1841, Downing v. Butcher, 2 Mo. & Rob. 374; CANADA: 1890, Halifax Banking Co. v. Smith, 29 N. Br. 462 (general principle conceded; but two judges dissenting as to its applicability); 1894, Olsen v. Lantalum, 32 N. Br. 526 (principle applied).

UNITED STATES: Ala. Martin v. Hardesty, 27 Ala. 458; Ind. 1873, Oliver v. Pate, 43 Ind. 132, 138; Kan. 1907, Emory v. Eggan, 75 Kan. 82, 88 Pac. 740 (but reputation in another city, such as not to be known to the defendant is inadmissible); Ky. 1811, Gregory v. Thomas, 2 Bibb 286; Mass. 1849, Bacon v. Towne, 4 Cush. 240; Mo. 1919, Boyers v. Lindhorst, 280 Mo. 5, 216 S. W. 536 (admissible, if known to defendant at the time); Mont. 1906, Martin v. Corrcadden, 34 Mont. 308, 86 Pac. 33; Nebr. 1887, Dorsey v. Clapp, 22 Nebr. 564, 568, 35 N. W. 389, semble; N. H. 1896, Beckman v. Souther, 68 N. H. 381, 36 Atl. 14 (as bearing on the plaintiff's replication of excess of force; the matter in each case to be left entirely to the trial Court's discretion); Oh. 1921, Melanowski v. Judy, — Oh. —, 131 N. E. 360 (reputation here excluded, because neither plaintiff nor defendant had ever even heard of one another; unsound, the reputation is admissible as evidence of the probable or possible knowledge by defendant of plaintiff's character; to require knowledge of the reputation first is to misapply the principle).

Contra, but unsound: 1817, Newsam v. Carr, 2 Stark. 69; 1876, Fitch v. Murray, Wood Man. 74, 88; 1906, Sinclair v. Ruddell, 16 Man. 53, 60.

[2] Accord: 1864, Ross v. Innis, 35 Ill. 487 (malicious prosecution; plaintiff's good character, admissible); 1919, Sappington v. Fairfax, 135 Md. 186, 108 Atl. 575 (good reputation, admissible in chief, to show lack of probable cause); 1897, Geary v. Stevenson, 169 Mass. 23, 47 N. E. 508 (plaintiff's good reputation, to negative probable cause); 1889, McIntire v. Levering, 148 Mass. 546 (malicious prosecution; plaintiff allowed "as part of her case", to introduce her good reputation); 1904, Thurkettle v. Frost, 137 Mich. 649, 100 N. W. 283; 1905, Shea v. Cloquet L. Co., 97 Minn. 41, 105 N. W. 552; 1884, Woodworth v. Mills, 61 Wis. 44, 56 (malicious prosecution; plaintiff's good character, offered "as a part of his case and not in answer to an attack", held admissible; leading opinion, by Taylor, J.); 1913, McIntosh v. Wales, 21 Wyo. 397, 134 Pac. 274 (plaintiff's good repute, admitted, even before it is impeached by defendant).

Contra: 1899, Claiborne v. R. Co., 46 W. Va. 363, 33 S. E. 262 (false arrest of a passenger; plaintiff's good character not admitted).

For the use of reputation in mitigation of damages in such actions, see ante, § 75. For the use of the testimony at the original trial, see post, § 1416.

[3] The precedents are for the most part to the contrary: 1799, Rodriguez v. Tadmire, 2 Esp. 721 (bad character as ground for suspicion and prosecution; particular acts excluded; though or resisting an arrest, the officer's right to arrest, and incidentally his reasonable ground for suspicion, comes in issue, the reputation [4] of the arrested person, and also prior particular acts [5] of similar misconduct, should be receivable as affecting his grounds of suspicion. (c) So, too, in any of the preceding actions, or in an action for battery involving a similar issue, the express communications of third persons are relevant to show the belief or good faith of the person arresting or prosecuting.[6]

§ 259. (11) Utterer of Forged or Counterfeit Paper or Money, Possessor of Stolen Goods, etc. Knowledge or notice is an essential ingredient of the plaintiff, suing for malicious prosecution, was allowed to ask); 1899, Williams v. Casebeer, 126 Cal. 77, 58 Pac. 380 (transaction ten years before, giving defendant ground to suspect plaintiff of larceny, inadmissible); 1811, Gregory v. Thomas, 2 Bibb Ky. 286 (excluded); 1902, Perkins v. Spaulding, 182 Mass. 218, 65 N. E. 72 (embezzlement of other articles from the same owner, admissible to show the owner's good faith in prosecuting); 1906, Martin v. Corscadden, 34 Mont. 308, 86 Pac. 33 (prosecution for larceny, the plaintiff's confession, communicated to the defendant, of prior larcenies, excluded, unsound); 1887, Dorsey v. Clapp, 22 Nebr. 564, 568, 35 N. W. 389 ("particular acts" of the arrested party said to be inadmissible to show the prosecutor's good faith; but the acts here excluded were such as could afford no reasonable suspicion of the charge made); 1909, Schoette v. Drake, 139 Wis. 18, 120 N. W. 393 (prior disorderly conduct of plaintiff on same day, admitted).

[4] Contra, but clearly wrong: 1864, R. v. Turberfield, L. & C. 495 (assault upon a constable; the issue being whether the constable had reasonable grounds for suspecting the accused of a felony; the question to the constable, "What did you know had been the prisoner's previous character?" was held improper); 1920, Little v. State, 150 Ga. 728, 105 S. E. 359 (murder of a police-marshal; to explain deceased's presence with intent to arrest defendant, defendant's reputation for violating the liquor law, held inadmissible; unsound).

[5] 1898, State v. Healey, 105 Ia. 162, 74 N. W. 916 (murder while deceased was attempting to arrest; robbery of third persons by other persons just before, received to show the deceased's reason for arresting); 1895, State v. Foley, 130 Mo. 482, 32 S. W. 973 (asking a defendant whether he was concerned in a former attempt to rob, allowed, as showing that the officer for an assault on whom he was now on trial had reason to arrest him on suspicion of the former offence).

Distinguish the following question: 1903, People v. Glennon, 175 N. Y. 45, 67 N. E. 125 (patrolman's neglect of duty in failing to arrest the keepers of a disorderly house; specific conduct of the inmates, admitted to show the defendant's knowledge of its character).

[6] England: 1773, Fabrigas v. Mostyn, 20 How. St. Tr. 137 (false imprisonment; defence, fear of the raising of a seditious mob by the plaintiff; statements to the defendant that a mob was being raised by plaintiff, admitted to show defendant's apprehensions; see the quotation post, § 1785); Canada: 1821, Redford v. Birley, 1 State Tr. N. S. 1071, 1174 (battery in dispersing a mob; whether persons expressed to the magistrates their apprehensions of danger, admitted, not as evidence of the alarm but as facts on which the magistrates might properly have acted; for a further consideration of the classes of evidence connected with mob violence, see post, § 1790); United States: 1913, Webb v. Gray, 181 Ala. 408, 62 So. 194 (defamation of plaintiff's chastity; purporting letters of plaintiff to L., admitting intercourse, shown by L. to defendant, admissible to evidence good faith); 1904, Griswold v. Griswold, 143 Cal. 617, 77 Pac. 672 (malicious proceedings in lunacy; the family physician's report to defendant, admitted to show his probable cause); 1922, Michel v. Smith, — Cal. —, 205 Pac. 113 (unlawful arrest of a deserter); 1854, Main v. McCarty, 15 Ill. 441 (battery; plea, resistance to the defendant while arresting; "what did persons in the crowd say" to the officers, admitted); 1870, Friend v. Hamill, 34 Md. 298, 308 (information to plaintiff, admitted in an action for malicious prosecution); 1849, Bacon v. Towne, 4 Cush. Mass. 240 (malicious prosecution; third person's information to the defendant, admitted); 1868, Simmons v. Holster, 13 Minn. 249, 258 (reasonable ground for charging the plaintiff as a thief, to disprove malice; the defendant had made the charge on the faith of Mrs. J.'s statement to him of what she had seen; Mrs. J.'s bad character for veracity was then admitted to show that the defendant "could not reasonably rely upon her statements"; compare Hastings v. Stone, Mass., cited ante, § 73); 1869, Castner v. Sliker, 33 N. J. L. 507, 508 (battery; plea, self-defence; statements of bystanders declining to interfere, admitted to show whether the defendant had reason to expect assistance).

For the application of the Hearsay rule here, see post, § 1789.

many crimes; and in some of these the knowledge may be acquired from former dealings with the same article or similar articles; i.e. on the principle of the fourth mode (noted ante, § 245), one experience with counterfeit money or with stolen goods may conceivably result in revealing the counterfeit or stolen character of the article, so that a knowledge arises which is applicable to the subsequent dealing now charged as criminal because done with knowledge. It is, however, so difficult to distinguish this use of former dealings to show Knowledge from the use of former dealings to show Intent or to show Design, that all three subjects are best dealt with together (post, §§ 300–371).

§ 260. (12) Possessor of a Document. The possession of a document is an important and often the only circumstance to show that its possessor has by reading it become aware of its contents; the inference rests on the probable operation of the element (1) already noted (ante, § 245):[1]

§ 260. [1] 1817, R. v. Watson, 2 Stark. 116 (placard); 1822, Scott v. Waithman, 3 id. 170 (possession by sheriff of writs giving information); 1843, R. v. Zulueta, 1 C. & K. 215, 224 (here not traced in fact to his possession); 1906, U. S. v. Greene, 146 Fed. 784, D. C. (a letter by defendant, in his letter-book, locked up and not sent, admitted); 1919, Galbreath v. U. S., 6th C. C. A., 257 Fed. 648, 659 (whether defendants as bank officers had authorized the false entries charged as offences; the defendant's knowledge of the contents of the bank records, not presumed, but required to be evidenced); 1916, People v. Halpin, 276 Ill. 363, 114 N. E. 932 (bribe-acceptance by a police officer; letters and telegrams received at the detective bureau of which defendant was chief and placed on file, admitted, though knowledge by the defendant was not expressly shown; the opinion however goes off on the ground of conspiracy, and fails to notice the present principle); 1907, State v. Ford, 76 Kan. 424, 91 Pac. 1066 (illegal sale of liquor; cited ante, § 150, n. 4); 1851, Holbrook v. Jackson, 7 Cush. Mass. 136, 147, 153 (transfer in fraud of creditors; books of the vendor, not a party, admitted to show his knowledge of his insolvency, irrespective of the authorship of the entries; "every merchant must be presumed to know and in fact from his balance sheet and books generally does know the state of his concerns"); 1901, People v. Higgins, 127 Mich. 291, 8 N. W. 812 (possession of a manuscript story of a murder, in the accused's handwriting admitted); 1885, State v. Stair, 87 Mo. 268 (murder; a written paper about how to kill the deceased, found in a pocket-book on defendant's person, admitted against him, after slight evidence of handwriting; but not admitted against his wife the co-defendant); 1883, Lovelace v. State, 12 Lea Tenn. 721 (larceny; postcard about the stealing, found in defendant's possession, admitted; "he is presumed to have known its contents"). For the question whether a partner or shareholder may be charged with notice of the books of the firm or corporation, see post, § 1074);

Distinguish the question whether keeping a document is a waiver of the right to dissent or rescind: 1898, McMaster v. Ins. Co., 30 C. C. A. 532, 87 Fed. 63, 171 U. S. 687, 18 Sup. 944, 183 U. S. 25, 22 Sup. 10; 1902, Bostwick v. Ins. Co., 116 Wis. 392, 89 N. W. 538, 92 N. W. 246; or is an admission of the truth of its contents (post, § 1073).

The following much-debated ruling rests on the present principle, together with that of § 148, ante, and the opinions are instructive, and are quoted ante, § 228, in considering evidence of insanity: 1837, Wright v. Tatham, 7 A. & E. 313, 325, 364, 369, 376, 390, 407; s. c., 5 Cl. & F. 670, 694, 703, 710, 716, 723, 736, 741, 767, 774 (a letter found in M.'s bookcase-cupboard, opened; if M. had been a person of sound mind, the inference would be that he had opened, read, and deposited it; but as his sanity was the main issue, the inference was not allowed by a majority of the judges). Here belongs also: 1909, Snell v. Weldon, 239 Ill. 279, 87 N. E. 1022 (obscene letters from a woman legatee to the testator, found in his trunk, excluded, on the ground that his moral delinquency was not material to insanity or to undue influence; but also on the erroneous ground that "the retaining the letters in his trunk did not necessarily imply assent to what they contained"; his retention of the series was at least some evidence of a sympathetic state of mind towards the writer, especially in view of his marginal comment on one of them, "the best letter of all, sure"; Wright v. Tatham not cited).

In Edmund Burke's speech, protesting against the rulings of the House of Lords excluding certain evidence in the trial of Warren Hastings, will be found a powerful argument on the subject of charging an official with knowledge of books existing within his control (1794, Cobbett's Parliamentary Hist., xxxi, 343–347).

1581, Campion's Trial, 1 How. St. Tr. 1050, 1066. Campion, the Jesuit, being charged with administering treasonable oaths, and a certain papist book being found in his "budget", Anderson, Queen's counsel, asked him: "To what end, then, should you carry this book about you if you were not purposed to do as it prescribeth?" Campion: "Many casualties and events may happen whereby a man may be endangered, ere he beware, by the carrying of a thing whereof he knoweth not, — as, either the malice of others that privily convey it amongst his other provisions, or his own negligence or oversight which marketh not attentively what he took with him."

1837, BOSANQUET, J., in Wright v. Tatham, 7 A. & E. 313, 364, 376: "Knowledge of letters and of other things found in a place accessible to him in his own house or apartments, may sometimes be presumed; such as writings connected with the charge, upon a charge of treason; notes or other documents forged or partly forged, upon a charge of forgery; instruments of coining or house-breaking, upon charges of coining or burglary."

This use of such evidence needs however to be distinguished from its use for other purposes, which are frequently associated in the same litigation; for (a) it may be used to evidence an assent to the document's contents or an admission of their truth (post, §§ 1073, 1074), or (b) the presence of the document on a person's premises or among his effects may be used to evidence his possession of it at a prior time (ante, § 157), and thus to lead to one of the above inferences; or (c) the possession of a document may serve other evidential purposes already sufficiently compared (ante, §§ 156, 157).

§ 261. (13) Miscellaneous Instances of Belief or Knowledge evidenced by Circumstances. In the four ways already noted (ante, § 245), belief or knowledge of various other facts may be properly evidenced. (1) By direct exposure to the senses, the observed appearance of a person or thing may evidence some quality material to the issue.[1] (2) Express communication is always a proper mode of evidencing knowledge or belief.[2] Communication to a hus-

§ 261. [1] 1874, Jaques v. Sax, 39 Ia. 370 (a minor's being engaged in business; appearance admitted); 1888, Hermann v. State, 73 Wis. 248, 41 N. W. 171 (personal appearance of a girl, admitted to show whether the defendant knew the girl to be under 21, in a prosecution for keeping a house of ill-fame knowing an inmate to be under 21).

[2] 1831, Taylor v. Willans, 2 B. & Ad. 845, 855, 858 (a letter to a justice of the peace, purporting to be from a Judge; admitted merely to show why the justice admitted an accused to bail); 1906, Ditto v. Slaughter, — Ky. —, 92 S. W. 2 (duress of a wife in signing a note under threats by the payee to prosecute the husband; whether the husband's report to the wife that threats had been made to him was admissible; the Court divided evenly); 1858, Tobin v. Shaw, 45 Me. 347 (the issue being whether the plaintiff's voluntary destruction of letters would prevent her from producing secondary evidence of them under the principle of § 1198, post, her sister was allowed to tell what advice she gave the plaintiff about destroying them, so as to negative the charge of fraudulent destruction); 1857, Com. v. Castles, 9 Gray 121 (charge that the defendant substituted a false deed for a deed which W. supposed he was signing; the difference in the deeds being shown, a prior conversation of the defendant with a third person was admitted to show that the defendant knew what W. was really intending to sign); 1911, Washoe Copper Co. v. Junila, 43 Mont. 178, 115 Pac. 917 (knowledge of a lode, as essential at the time of an application for placer patent; a "declaratory statement" as to the lode, void in form, not admissible to show knowledge in the community; sed quære); 1869, Williams v. Poppleton, 3 Or. 143 (consultation by other surgeons with one charged with malpractice).

The following ruling, on the Court's theory, perhaps belongs here, though it might also belong under § 231, n. 1, par. 2: 1908, Curtice v. Dixon, 74 N. H. 386, 68 Atl. 587 (deed made while insane and unduly influenced; to show that the grantor disliked the defendant on account of her quarrelsome disposition, his statement to that effect had been received; specific instances of such disposition were then received in corroboration, though these instances were not known to the grantor).

In defamation, wherever the defendant's privilege involves good faith, and he has merely band or wife is always receivable to show probable knowledge by the other (except where they are living apart or are not on good terms), because, while it is not certain that the one will tell the other, and while the probability is less upon some subjects than upon others, still there is always some probability, — which is all that can be fairly asked for admissibility.[3] (3) Reputation, or general discussion in a community or a part of it, may be useful in a variety of ways as showing the probability of knowledge or belief by a member of the community or a local circle.[4]

§ 262. (14) Insane Belief, as shown by Facts told to the Party. The present principle sometimes comes into play where a deranged mental condition is said to have been caused in part by a belief in certain facts. Here it may therefore be shown that the party was made aware of the supposed exciting facts by a repute or rumor or other form of communication, which thus tended to create the belief and cause the derangement.[1]

§ 263. Disproof of the Facts communicated. In some of the foregoing classes of cases — notably those of § 248 (deceased's violent acts) and § 262 (facts exciting mental derangement) — the question may arise whether the objective facts themselves may be disproved.

On the one hand, the non-existence of those facts seems at first sight to have no bearing; because it is the mere report or repute or communication (and not the truth of it) which has been introduced to show the party's state of mind; for example, in homicide, the reasonableness of the accused's apprehension of the deceased's aggression is equally great, if the accused has heard of a cruel and violent act of the deceased, even though that act was never committed. On the other hand, assuming that for any purpose the objective repeated a statement originally uttered by a third person, the name of the original author may thus become relevant: 1917, Culligan v. The Graphic, 37 D. L. R. 134, N. B.

[3] The precedents tend to be too strict: 1842, Oden v. Stubblefield, 4 Ala. 41 (Collier, C. J.: "It by no means follows that the wife informs the husband of everything she may hear, especially if it be not likely to interest or affect him in some way. Now it does not appear [in a case where notice of a previous unrecorded sale of slaves by the plaintiff to a third party was charged] that the defendant had or was about to acquire an interest in the slaves at the time the wife heard the deed from the plaintiff spoken of, so that it cannot be reasonably intended that she repeated what she heard"); 1843, Petrie v. Rose, 5 W. & S. Pa. 364, 366 (slander by a wife; communication of suspicious facts, tending to negative malice, to the husband of the defendant, held properly rejected).

[4] 1875, Clinton v. Howard, 42 Conn. 294, 310 (to show the diminished value of a frightened horse, evidence was admitted as to the extent of local knowledge of the horse having run away through this fright); 1888, Tucker v. Constable, 16 Or. 407, 409, 19 Pac. 13 (statutory action for unlawfully gelding an animal knowing it to be kept for covering; reputation, semble, held admissible; but here the indefinite fact that the animal was "generally known" to be so kept, was held insufficient); 1911, Murphy v. Atlanta & C. A. L. R. Co., 89 S. C. 15, 71 S. E. 296 (incompetence of employee known to employer; declarations of trainmaster at time of employment, admitted); 1906, Gulf C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Matthews, 100 Tex. 63, 93 S. W. 1068 (whether a person knew of M.'s death; his reading of newspapers and hearing conversations on the subject, admitted); 1888, State v. Flint, 60 Vt. 304, 310, 319, 14 Atl. 178 (notoriety of a crime in a village by a certain time, admitted to show knowledge by one there); 1917, Porter Screen Mfg. Co. v. Central Vermont R. Co., 92 Vt. 1, 102 Atl. 44 (injury to goods by a flood; newspaper announcement of the flood, excluded, because not shown to have been seen by defendant's agents).

Compare also the cases admitting character to show motive (post, § 390, n. 1).

§ 262. [1] Cases cited ante, § 231.

fact has a bearing, the rule against contradicting a witness on a collateral point (post, § 1001) should not stand in the way; for if the fact is relevant at all, it is not any more collateral than the rumor of it (post, § 1005).

That the objective truth, however, of the fact reported or rumored, may sometimes be relevant seems clear, namely, when the non-existence of the fact is offered as tending to show that the witness testifying to the communication of the alleged fact is not testifying truly. For example, on a prosecution for murder, the defence being insanity caused by brooding over the deceased's persistent pursuit of the virtue of the defendant's wife, suppose that the defendant's wife testifies in his behalf to numerous reports, made by her to the defendant, of the deceased's attempts to seduce her; now if it could be shown indubitably that such attempts upon the witness never took place, would this not make it less likely that the alleged communications of them were made by her? In other words, would not the witness to these communications be discredited on the material question whether the communications were ever made? As a mere question of natural reasoning, (post, § 990), the affirmative answer would seem plain. If we add to this the feature that the wife further testifies (on cross-examination) that the deceased's alleged attempts did in fact take place, we thus add the circumstance that the witness is proved to have falsified on that point (post, § 1000); and thus the lie on the fact of the attempts enables the prosecution to argue additionally that the witness is falsifying on the other fact of the communication of the alleged attempts to the defendant. From both points of view, therefore, it seems proper to allow the opponent to disprove the alleged acts, the communication of which is alleged to have produced the party's mental condition.[1]

§ 263. [1] The following ruling and statute confirms this result: 1907, Knapp v. State, 168 Ind. 153, 79 N. E. 1076 (homicide; plea, self-defence; the defendant testified to having heard before the affray that the deceased had clubbed to death a certain old man while arresting him; this fact, if true, was admissible on the principle of § 248, ante, to evidence the defendant's state of mind; the prosecution offered to show that in truth the old man had not been clubbed, but had died of senility and alcoholism; this was admitted as tending to show the improbability of the clubbing having occurred and therefore of the witness having heard of it by report; good opinion by Gillett, J.; it will be noticed that this is in effect the same point that arose in the Thaw trial for murder, N. Y., March, 1907); Va. St. 1908, c. 59, p. 54 omitted in Code 1919 (in homicide or assault with intent or cases under Code § 3671, when the accused has evidenced "that he believed a wrong to have been committed upon some member of his family", etc., whether on a "defence of insanity or as evidence of extenuating circumstances", the prosecution may evidence "the truth or falsity of the existence of such a wrong", whereon the accused may "introduce evidence in rebuttal as to such truth or falsity"). Contra, in principle: 1883, People v. Hurtado, 63 Cal. 288 (murder; the wife's confession of adultery with the deceased was testified to by the defendant; evidence tending to prove the fact of that adultery was not admitted for the defendant as corroborating his testimony to her confession; nor would the prosecution have been allowed to prove her innocence); 1907, Shipp v. Com., 124 Ky. 643, 99 S. W. 945 (murder; defence, insanity, partly caused by his wife's confession of infidelity with S.; his wife's character for chastity, held not admissible for the prosecution to show that she "was not guilty of the conduct ascribed to her"); 1913, People v. Harris, 209 N. Y. 70, 102 N. E. 546 (wife-murder; the accused having testified that his wife had told him that "she was in the family way by T.", the prosecution offered to show that the wife was not pregnant at all, as evidence that she did not make such a statement to him; held inadmissible, conceding the relevancy of the fact, as pointed out above, but emphasizing the principle of avoiding confusion of issues on collateral points; the reply in this case must be that as the accused rested

2. Conduct, as Evidence of Knowledge, Belief, or Consciousness

§ 265. General Principle. It has already been pointed out (ante, § 244) that a second chief sort of evidence for proving that mental state which is termed Knowledge, Belief, or Consciousness, consists of Conduct of the person to whom the mental state is attributed. In this sort of evidence, we argue from an observed effect — conduct — to the probable cause — a specific mental state; and not, as in the preceding sort (ante, §§ 245, 261), from cause to effect, i.e. from outward events to an ensuing mental state. The basis of the inference, here as elsewhere, is our experience of the operation of human nature. The general principle of Relevancy (ante, §§ 31, 38) applies, that the evidential fact should be received whenever the 'factum probandum' is at least a fairly possible or a probable inference, though not the conclusive or the most probable one.

But it is not in the application of the principle of Relevancy that the special difficulties of this subject are found. In only two or three of its applications are there any controverted points; the notable ones, perhaps, are the questions as to the inference from Innocent Conduct (post, § 293) and the inference from Non-Production of Testimony (post, §§ 285–291). The peculiar problem of this subject lies rather in the fact that conduct admissible enough from the present point of view may also be regarded as being in effect an assertion and therefore as obnoxious to the Hearsay rule, which excludes the use of testimonial assertions made out of court. For example, on an issue of legitimacy, the parents' conduct, in treating the child as legitimate, is a circumstance from which may easily be inferred their belief in his birth since his defence largely on the provocation involved in the alleged statement, the fact of the making of the statement could not be deemed collateral in any real sense; for nobody ever heard of an alleged threat by a deceased in a homicide case being excluded from refutation because it was collateral, and yet it plays precisely the same important part in the issue as the wife's statement here); 1907, Jones v. State, 51 Tex. Cr. 472, 101 S. W. 993 (homicide; the defendant's wife had told the defendant that the man had raped her; proof of a continued illicit intimacy between deceased and the wife, tending to show that her intercourse had been voluntary, excluded).

The judicial view contrary to that above expressed was given general notoriety in consequence of 'nisi prius' rulings in the Thaw trial (N. Y. City, March, 1907; murder of one believed to have seduced the defendant's wife), and the Loving trial (Houston, Va., June 27, 1907; murder of one believed to have ravished the defendant's daughter). The public comment called forth by these cases emphasized further the unfortunate possibilities of abuse inherent in that solution for unscrupulous or reckless persons.

The following case ignores this principle: 1914, People v. Jung Hing, 212 N. Y. 393, 106 N. E. 105 (murder; the defence being that the deceased had charged the defendant with taking a ring which deceased said he had given to his girl G. W., the prosecution called G. W. to prove that she did not know defendant, that she had never given him a diamond ring, and that deceased had never given her a diamond ring; held inadmissible, on the ground that deceased's supposed statements were evidenced merely as words provoking a quarrel, on the principle of § 1768, post, that hence their truth was immaterial, and hence G. W.'s testimony was erroneous; yes, but also, the facts, if facts, that deceased had not given her a diamond ring, etc., were evidence that deceased did not make any such charge to the defendant, and that defendant's witnesses were falsifying; this is so obvious to the plain man, and was so obviously the reason for introducing the evidence, that it is curious to find the Court of Appeals ignoring it; they could hardly avoid at least facing the point).

Compare the citations ante, § 228, n. 6, § 231, n. 1, § 1005, n. 7.

marriage, and from that belief may be inferred the ultimate fact; yet, this conduct of theirs is also, in another view, equivalent to a declaration of his legitimacy, and thus a hearsay statement, not to be received except as an admission of the parties to the suit or under some specific exception to the Hearsay rule. It is this double aspect of the conduct-evidence that presents the chief difficulty of principle. Again, when a person's utterances are offered as indicating his knowledge of a fact mentioned by him, the utterance may circumstantially reveal the 'factum probandum', his knowledge; yet the utterance cannot be used as an assertion, to evidence the truth of the fact asserted, because the Hearsay rule forbids; and thus it is necessary constantly to discriminate between the circumstantial and the testimonial use of such utterances.

The specific uses of conduct-evidence may now be noticed in detail, keeping in mind that the circumstantial use of such evidence presents little difficulty on principles of relevancy, and that it is the testimonial use which is obnoxious to Hearsay rule and thus creates a special complication.

§ 266. Conduct and Utterances, as Evidence of Knowledge or Belief, when a Fact in Issue. Conduct and word-utterances may betray the knowledge or belief of the actor or speaker, in so far as the specific act or utterance is of a tenor which cannot well be supposed to have been willed without the inner existence of that knowledge or belief. For example, A's act of boarding a railroad train is some evidence of his belief as to the destination of the train; B's act of taking a purse, found by him in the street, to the house of X, is some evidence that he knows or believes X to be the loser of the purse. So, also, for the verbal [1] utterance; A's mention of Charles the Great or selenium or the Klondike is some evidence that he knows or is aware of the existence of such a person, thing, or place.

For such instances of conduct, including utterances, as evidence of Knowledge or Belief, there can be no general test of Relevancy. Ordinary experience usually suffices, without controversy, to tell us whether the inference is at least a fairly possible one, and therefore whether the evidence is admissible. Every trial illustrates the principle; and such judicial rulings as have been made are seldom of use as precedents: [2]

§ 266. [1] "Verbal" is here used in its proper sense of "that which is expressed in words"; it is not synonymous with "oral", which is the term of contrast with "written."

[2] ENGLAND: 1759, Eugene Aram's Trial, Eng. (one Daniel Clark having been missing for thirteen years, a human skeleton was discovered and suspected to be his; at an inquest, Aram and Houseman, with whom Clark had been seen just before his disappearance, were summoned; and Houseman, when shown the bones, said: "This is no more Daniel Clark's bone than it is mine"; whence it was inferred that he knew something of the whereabouts of Clark; and he subsequently confessed, pointing out Clark's skeleton at an entirely different place);

UNITED STATES: Federal: 1899, Slavens v. R. Co., 38 C. C. A. 151, 97 Fed. 255 (injured person's declarations showing knowledge of danger, admitted; here justified under the 'res gestæ' notion, post, § 1745); Connecticut: 1879, State v. Allen, 47 Conn. 132 (language by the accused implying knowledge); 1904, State v. Kelly, 77 Conn. 266, 58 Atl. 705 (murder by strychnine; the defence being suicide, the deceased's statement when speaking of suicide, "I have got the stuff to do it with", not admitted to show possession of strychnine or knowledge of its qualities; also 1703, Hathaway's Trial, 14 How. St. Tr. 639, 654; cheating by pretending to be bewitched; one Dr. M. had been reviled by the populace for helping to exonerate Sarah M., who had been tried for bewitching the defendant; it was argued that "other people's censuring the doctor cannot be brought as evidence against my client"; but L. C. J. HOLT answered: "What other people have said, abstractedly considered, ought not to affect Richard Hathaway. But if there be evidence that Hathaway hath been guilty of deceit and a design to deceive people, will you not allow it to be given in evidence that the people have been deceived? . . . Now Dr. Martin's evidence is what Hathaway did and that people did believe him to be bewitched."

The important thing is that, so far as the evidential fact consists in an utterance of words, it is receivable for the present purpose, as circumstantial evidence; and that, so long as it is offered for that purpose only and not as an assertion to be credited like testimony, it is not obnoxious to the Hearsay rule. For example, A's mention of X's insolvency is receivable as circumstantial evidence of A's knowledge, but not as testimonial evidence of X's insolvency. The distinction is elsewhere examined, from the point of view of the Hearsay rule (post, § 1790); it is enough to note here that it is well established:

1810, DuBost v. Beresford, 2 Camp. 511; libel. Lord ELLENBOROUGH held "that the declarations of the spectators while they looked at the picture in the exhibition-room were evidence to show that the figures portrayed were meant [rather, were understood] to represent the defendant's sister and brother-in-law."

1890, KNOWLTON, J., in Chase v. Lowell, 151 Mass. 422, 24 N. E. 212 (notice of the rottenness of a tree's roots was in issue, and to show knowledge by the city the evidence mentioned was offered): "The acts of persons in looking at the roots were an important part of the evidence. From this it might be inferred that they noticed the decayed condition of the roots. . . . The remarks made at the time rendered it certain that the view of the roots gave notice of the defect to those who then saw them."

1892, FIELD, C. J., Com. v. Trefethen, 157 Mass. 188, 31 N. E. 961: "Suppose that it

excluding the deceased's statements, on finding dead chickens, "They are dead from strychnine", etc., on the ground of the 'res gestæ' rule, post, § 1773; this is unsound; the accused may have been plainly guilty, in the Court's opinion, and no new trial needed (ante, § 21), but that does not excuse the distortion of the rules of evidence; all the above evidence was admissible on the present principle); Florida: 1895, Leslie v. State, 35 Fla. 182, 17 So. 558 (an offer to return stolen property, as showing knowledge that it was stolen); Massachusetts: 1850, Com. v. Webster, Mass., Bemis' Rep. 178 (the defendant had asked whether they had found the whole of Dr. Parkman's body; indicating a knowledge that it had been cut up); 1896, Com. v. Crowe, 165 Mass. 139, 42 N. E. 563 (laughter, showing knowledge of the place of arson); 1903, Hayes v. Pitts-Kimball Co., 183 Mass. 262, 67 N. E. 249 (whether deceased was conscious before death; his utterances admitted); New York: 1905, Fox v. Manchester, 183 N. Y. 141, 75 N. E. 1116 (negligent maintenance of an electric wire; the defendant's officer's testimony at an inquest after the injury, stating that he knew of the defective wire before the injury, held to be a hearsay assertion of a past fact; a good illustration of the limits of the principle); North Carolina: 1880, State v. Howard, 82 N. C. 627 (murder; language showing that the defendant knew the deceased had money in his house); Ohio: 1853, Moore v. State, 2 Oh. St. 500, 506 (a few days after a murder by strangling, the defendant remarked that he could kill a man by strangling and described the process; admitted as indicating that the accused's mind was running on the subject, as the guilty person's would be); Vermont: 1896, Forbes v. Morse, 69 Vt. 220, 37 Atl. 295 (to show that a letter was written after July 30, the mention therein of facts occurring since that date was held some evidence); West Virginia: 1901, State v. Sheppard, 49 W. Va. 582, 39 S. E. 676 (language indicating a knowledge of the circumstances of the murder, admitted).

The following case rests on peculiar facts: 1886, R. v. Gunnell, 16 Cox Cr. 154 (under a statute exempting a bankrupt who first "disclosed" his malfeasance under examination, certain remarks of M. indicating his knowledge of the malfeasance were excluded).

had been denied at the trial that the deceased knew that she was pregnant, testimony that she had said that she was pregnant would be some evidence that she knew it [though not that she was so]." [3]

It is to be noted that there is a specific Hearsay exception for assertions as to declarant's mental condition; and thus an utterance of that particular sort — e.g. "I know where the money is", as distinguished from "The money is hid in my house" — is receivable equally by either of the two avenues, as circumstantial evidence and as a testimonial assertion; so that Courts seldom discriminate carefully; the use of such utterances under the Hearsay exception is considered post, §§ 1714, 1731. This exception includes also assertions of an internal state of physical suffering, existing at the time of the assertion, but not of a past condition (post, 1718).

When these utterances are by a party or privy in interest, they are of course receivable as Admissions (post, §§ 1076, 1081, 1083, 1086).

Nevertheless, the Hearsay exception, being subject to certain limitations, and the rule for a party's admissions, will often not suffice for the purpose in hand, and the present, or circumstantial, use of such utterances may become the only available one. For example, in actions on life-insurance policies, where the deceased's misrepresentations as to his health are in issue, his statements as to a prior illness would be inadmissible under the Hearsay exception to prove that illness, and might also not be receivable as a party's admissions (under § 1081, post); and yet, if the fact of the illness were otherwise evidenced, the deceased's statement might be receivable as circumstantial evidence of his knowledge of it.[4]

[3] Other illustrations are found in the preceding note. The following case ignores this principle: 1906, Salem News P. Co. v. Caliga, 144 Fed. 965, C. C. A. (libel for asserting that the plaintiff's picture was a mere copy of T.'s picture; conversations of persons showing their belief in the assertion, excluded).

[4] Federal: 1896, Mutual L. I. Co. v. Selby, 19 C. C. A. 331, 72 Fed. 980 (affidavits of third persons, the contents not being known to insured, excluded; Swift v. Ins. Co. cited); Illinois: 1901, Towne v. Towne, 191 Ill. 178, 61 N. E. 426 (insured's conduct and declarations admitted, on the issue of his knowledge of the contents of a certificate held by him); Indiana: 1905, Haughton v. Ætna L. Ins. Co., 165 Ind. 32, 73 N. E. 592 (insured's statements pending application for insurance, admitted to show "knowledge of his physical condition at the time of making the alleged false and fraudulent statements"); New York: 1875, Swift v. Ins. Co., 63 N. Y. 187 (the issue being whether a statement by the insured that he had not had scrofula was knowingly false, the insured's statements, made within a year previous, to persons who saw him walk lame and saw a sore in his side, as to the cause of the ailment, were admitted, as tending "to prove with more or less certainty, as the cause and character of the ailment are more or less in the common and unskilled knowledge of men, that the cause and character of it are known to him"; the opinion somewhat obscurely justifies the use of these statements also as admissions; it also requires that the statements be not too remote); 1876, Edington v. Ins. Co., 67 N. Y. 193 (similar); 1877, Dilleber v. Ins. Co., 69 N. Y. 256, 260 (similar); Pennsylvania: 1906, Nophsker v. Supreme Council, 215 Pa. 631, 64 Atl. 788 (rule of Swift v. Ins. Co., N. Y., applied, but not with a careful statement of the principle); Wisconsin: 1899, McGowan v. Supreme Court, 104 Wis. 173, 80 N. W. 603 (insured's statements of a condition of disease too remote in time to be material, not received as admissions; but, after other evidence of his condition at the time of application, held admissible to evidence his knowledge of that condition); 1902, Rawson v. Ins. Co., 115 Wis. 641, 92 N. W. 378 (insured's statements in 1895, admitted to show his knowledge of a disease, regardless of their remoteness from the issuance of a policy in 1896, where the alleged false representation was that he had never had the disease).

If the insured's knowledge is immaterial under the issues, then his statements are not receivable: 1880, Union Cent. L. I. Co. v. Cheever, 36 Oh. St. 201, 208.

§ 267. Conduct as Evidence of Belief, and thus of the Fact Believed; General Principle. In the cases dealt with in the foregoing section, the knowledge or belief — i.e. the mental condition — to be evidenced was of itself material to the issue as a 'factum probandum', — e.g. whether an insured knew of his illness, or whether the public were made to believe in a certain defamatory meaning. There is however a large class of cases where the belief or knowledge or consciousness (whatever may be the appropriate usage of terms for the mental condition) is of service only evidentially, as forming a second step of inference to some other fact which forms the ultimate object of proof.

It has already been noted (ante, § 172) that an act or event may be evidenced, retrospectively, by the traces left by it, and that, in theory, these evidential traces may be not merely physical and organic, but also mental or psychical, i.e. the evidence would consist in the consciousness or belief of some person as to the happening or doing of the prior event or act, which has left its impression on him. But, since his belief or consciousness can itself be evidenced only by his conduct or utterances, there would always be two steps of inference involved in using that belief or consciousness, — first, the conduct or utterance to evidence the belief, and next, the belief to evidence the act or event believed. Now the former of these inferences is of the class here concerned; and it is at this point, therefore, that we are able to take up the question whether, as a whole, this double step of inference is allowable.

What, then, are the objections to it? Plainly, that it is practically often equivalent to the inference from testimonial evidence, and that therefore we should be violating the Hearsay rule by accepting an extra-judicial assertion as evidence of the fact asserted. For example, on an issue of the existence of a lost will, suppose the fact to be offered that the deceased on his death bed told his daughter, "My will is in the iron chest"; or, on an issue of legitimacy, suppose the fact to be offered that the parents always treated the child as their own. In these instances suppose it to be argued that the deceased's utterance indicates circumstantially his belief in the will's existence, and that his belief in turn indicates the fact of the will's existence; or that the parents' conduct leads to the inference that they believed the child to have been born to them after marriage, and that this belief evidences the fact of such birth. Such a double circumstantial inference is in theory perfectly possible and proper. But, after all, is not the process practically equivalent to accepting the deceased's declaration and the parents' conduct in a purely assertive and testimonial fashion, i.e. to admitting directly their assertions about the will and the child, precisely as if they were on the stand and credit were asked for their testimonial assertions to that effect? And if such evidence were allowed to come in as circumstantial, could not any and every hearsay statement be brought in upon the same plea, by resolving it into a double inference, namely, by translating A's assertion, that he saw M strike

N, into an inference from his utterance to his belief and from his belief to the fact asserted? Short of such an extreme deduction, it seems at first sight impossible to stop. It is plain enough that the settled analogies in the rules of circumstantial inference, as well as the modes of reasoning in every-day affairs, justify us in claiming that the inference from conduct to belief and from belief to the fact believed is, in theory at least, a legitimate one. Yet, on the other hand there is force in the argument that the pretended double inference of a circumstantial sort is equivalent to giving credit to a testimonial assertion, and involves therefore a danger of evasion of the Hearsay rule. The latter argument has been well set forth in the following passages:

1838, VAUGHAN, J., in Wright v. Tatham, 5 Cl. & F. 670, 738 (the sending of letters to a testator by various persons was offered as conduct or "treatment" tending to show their belief in his sanity, and thus the fact of that sanity): "Acts performed by strangers, expressive not merely of opinion, but of the strongest conviction, even in cases where such conviction conflicts altogether with the interest of the person entertaining it, — even such acts as these the law will not allow to be presented to the minds of jurymen as evidence. They are merely opinions expressed in different language, — in the language of conduct, instead of the language of words. They may be acts involving a great sacrifice of personal interest, as the payment of a policy of insurance by an underwriter on a marine loss; and therefore as moral evidence they may be very cogent. Yet does the law, more rigid and inflexible, resist the weight of such moral evidence, although in the ordinary transactions common sense and experience might possibly yield to it. As acts of strangers, the law regards them as personal admissions, which cannot affect third parties; as the opinion of strangers, they bear the general insufficiency and infirmity of hearsay evidence, without any claim to the privilege which in some peculiar subjects of inquiry is extended to that class of proof."

PARKE, B., in the same case (in the lower Court), 7 A. & E. 313, 386: "For example, if a wager to a large amount had been made as to the matter in issue by two third persons, the payment of that wager, however large the sum, would not be admissible to prove the truth of the matter in issue. You would not have any right to present it to the jury as raising an inference of the truth of the fact on the ground that otherwise the bet would not have been paid. It is after all nothing but the mere statement of that fact with strong evidence of the belief of it by the party making it. . . . [To the same sort of evidence] belong the supposed conduct of the family or relations of a testator, taking the same precautions, in his absence, as if he were a lunatic; his election, in his absence, to some high and responsible office; the conduct of a physician, who permitted a will to be executed by a sick testator; the conduct of a deceased captain on a question of seaworthiness, who, after examining every part of the vessel, embarked in it with his family. All these, when deliberately considered, are, with reference to the matter in issue in each case, mere instances of hearsay evidence, mere statements, not on oath, but implied in or vouched for by the actual conduct of persons by whose acts the litigant parties are not to be bound. The conclusion at which I have arrived is that proof of a particular fact, which is not of itself a matter in issue, but which is relevant only as implying a statement or opinion of a third person on the matter in issue, is inadmissible in all cases where such a statement or opinion not on oath [in court] would be of itself inadmissible."

What exit did the common law take from this dilemma? It followed that instinct of compromise which has affected so many British institutions; it conceded something to both principles. In a few specific instances, mostly of traditional inheritance, it yielded fully to the theory of circumstantial inference; in a large group of other instances, it yielded in fact, but only because the evidence was commonly there also admissible for other reasons, and thus it became practically of no consequence which theory was relied on for its reception; and in all remaining instances it denied the propriety of the circumstantial inference and insisted on the application of the Hearsay rule to conduct which was equivalent to an extra-judicial assertion. These three classes of cases may now be briefly noticed in advance.

(a) First, where the desired inference leads up to a personal deed, of radical force and natural psychologic significance, and thus the circumstantial nature of the inference strongly dominates the testimonial aspect, a few classes of cases are recognized in which the former is conceded to be legitimate.

The distinction thus reached is a fairly practical one. For example, a criminal act leaves usually on the mind a deep trace, in the shape of a consciousness of guilt, and from this consciousness of guilt we may argue to the doing of the deed by the bearer of the trace. The reliance is not upon the testimonial credit of the person, but upon psychologic forces closely analogous to the forces of external nature. As an axe leaves its mark in the speechless tree, so an evil deed leaves its mark in the evil doer's consciousness. But as soon as that type of consciousness is left aside, and we turn to a consciousness based upon any other past experience, i.e. upon the impressions from hearing or seeing another's deed or an outward event in general, we are dealing with that commonplace sort of mental trace or impression which is the basis of ordinary assertions and testimony, and the circumstantial use of it becomes merged and swallowed up in the testimonial use. On some such real basis of distinction as this, then, we find that the circumstantial use of conduct and belief is plainly allowed by the law to be resorted to in a few classes of cases covering some sort of personal deed of emphatic significance and effect.

Of those classes, the following are chiefly to be noted: (1) a Consciousness of Guilt, as evidenced by flight or the like (post, §§ 273–291); this is ordinarily offered against the defendant in the case, and thus might be accounted for under the second class (b, infra), but it is also receivable of a third person, to show him to be the guilty one and thus to exonerate the defendant (ante, § 142), and must therefore be reckoned under the present head;[1] (2) a Belief in a Marriage, as evidenced by the conduct of a pair living and treating each other as husband and wife (post, § 268); this has been from time immemorial received, whether or not the persons are parties or privies to the suit, and is a plain use of the double circumstantial inference; (3) a Belief in Legitimacy, as evidenced by the treatment of a child by its alleged parents (post, § 269); this, again, is a tradition of long standing, and can be justified only on circumstantial grounds; (4) a Belief in Personal Name, Family History, and the like, as evidenced by conduct and language, and as tending to prove identity with a person in issue (post, § 270); this is recognized in a few instances only, but seems nevertheless orthodox; (5) a Belief in a Testamentary Act, as evidenced by the alleged testator's conduct and utterances (post, § 271); this use of such evidence has been sanctioned by a few judges, but there is a decided repudiation of it by others.[2]

§ 267. [1] This is also shown by the fact that the rules for Confessions (post, § 821) are treated as not applicable to such conduct.

(b) In the second class of cases is to be included that sort of conduct which is received only when it emanates from a party to the cause or a witness, and can therefore be equally justified as involving an admission or a self-contradiction. Such conduct, for example, as the fabrication or suppression of evidence, the failure to produce important witnesses or documents, indicates a consciousness that one's cause is a bad one or a weak one, and from this consciousness or belief may be inferred the fact that it is bad or weak, i.e. that facts essential for its support are lacking (post, §§ 273–293). So also, from a witness' failure on a former trial to state a fact which he now asserts, may be inferred that he did not then believe it and thus that it did not in truth occur. In criminal causes, such guilty conduct on the part of the accused may be treated as a trace of his own criminal deed, and thus would fall under the first class (a), above examined; and it is in fact so treated, by receiving it also when proved for persons other than the accused and by not applying to it the rules for confessions. But in civil causes, and for witnesses, the belief or consciousness relates back usually to some act or event not a personal deed, — as, for example, in the case of the assignee of a contract or the principal of a tortious agent, — and thus would fall usually without the class in which the circumstantial inference would be the primary one. Accordingly, while the circumstantial inference is always an underlying one and a real one, the assertive value of the evidence becomes more apparent; and in consequence, such conduct can be received only so far as there is some other avenue of entrance which removes from it the obstacle of the Hearsay rule.

Two such ways are open; such conduct from a party, even if treated as a plain assertion, is at any rate an Admission, and is therefore receivable as such in any case; such conduct from a witness is receivable of a self-contradiction or an act of corruption, and therefore receivable in any case. The result is that while the evidence is indeed conduct, and not assertion, yet the objection that it is equivalent to assertion, and therefore obnoxious to the Hearsay rule, is obviated by receiving it only when it is predicated of a party or a witness. In other words, the inference from conduct remains essentially circumstantial, but the danger of the conduct being accepted also as assertion is cured by restricting it to those cases where it would be received even though it were unmixed assertion. Hence it is sometimes judicially spoken of as an admission, or an "admission by conduct." More correctly speaking, it is still conduct, but the doctrine of Admissions serves to remove from it the reproach of its potential quality as an assertion. In short, the doctrine of Admissions is not the reason for its reception, but is the reason for its not being excluded.

[2] Another class of cases, not properly belonging here, consists of those in which the conduct of third persons is received as evidence of the dangerousness of a place, or the like (post, §§ 459 ff.).

All evidence, therefore, of that class is properly to be treated here, in collation with other inferences of a similar sort from conduct to belief or consciousness; except that, so far as witnesses are concerned, it is impracticable, in treatment, to separate this sort of evidence from other analogous sorts of impeaching evidence, and the principles are discussed together, post, §§ 956 ff., 1040 ff.

(c) Whatever remains, then, in the way of conduct-evidence as supporting an inference of the person's belief and thus of the fact believed, is in general, apart from the two preceding groups, declared inadmissible, as being too open to construction as assertions and therefore as mere hearsay. The reasoning on which this result is reached is sufficiently set forth in the passages from Wright v. Tatham, above quoted. The language of those opinions ignores, to be sure, the well-settled exceptions of the first group (a) just summarized; but, apart from these allowances, it fairly represents the general attitude of the law. Whatever instances of opposite tendency may be noted in the following sections, and however well-founded these may be in a given case, they must be regarded as casual and unusual.

§ 268. Marriage, as evidenced by Conduct, or "Habit." When the fact of marriage is in issue — whether a consensual or a ceremonial marriage — the subsequent conduct of the man and the woman said to have been the parties to it is receivable to evidence the marriage. This conduct is traditionally spoken of as "habit"; and this common source of proof, with the reputation-evidence which usually accompanies it, has come to be known by the phrase "habit and repute."

The logical nature of the argument indicates it plainly to fall under the present principle; that is, from the conduct of the man and the woman as married persons may be inferred their firm belief that they were at some prior time made husband and wife, and from this belief may be inferred the fact. That this sort of evidence is admissible seems not to have been questioned; there is an important question, depending upon a different principle, whether it is alone sufficient evidence of a marriage (post, §§ 2082–2088); there is another principle which governs the use of reputation as evidence of marriage (post, §§ 1602–1604); and there is still another principle which admits hearsay declarations of marriage under the Family-History exception to the Hearsay rule (post, § 1480 ff.); but the propriety of the present sort of evidence, exceptional though it is (as already pointed out in § 267), seems not to have been doubted. This is partly due to the circumstance that in any event it would commonly have been receivable from another point of view, — for example, as falling under the above Hearsay exception, when the persons in question were deceased; or as Admissions of a party, when the person whose conduct was offered, or his successor in interest, was a party to the cause. But, at any rate, it has commonly been used when no such mode of justifying it was tenable, and its propriety is now too firmly established to be for a moment questionable.

The following passage, from a writer the most learned and comprehensive in his familiarity with the traditions and the lore of genealogical controversies, serves to illustrate the scope of this class of evidence:

1844, Mr. J. Hubback, Succession, 247: "The parties' assertions of marriage and the general reputation of the fact may be evidenced with as much strength and distinctness by actions as by words. Thus the former may appear by their elopement and return as married persons. Their visiting with families of respectability was successfully relied on in the claim to the Say and Sele Barony, and was dwelt upon as a strong fact by Abbott, C. J., in summing up the evidence in the case of Beer v. Ward. And similar weight was ascribed to the fact of a husband procuring a woman to be presented at Court as his wife. . . . Proof of the observance of customs which are peculiar to the entry upon or subsistence of the state of marriage is evidence of the same description, and will assist the inference that the contract has been duly constituted. By the civil law the Roman custom of 'traductio ad domum' was a conclusive presumption of matrimony, and by the canon law similar weight was ascribed to it. if observed in places where it was a solemnity usual upon bringing brides to their husband's houses. So in England the circumstances of the man impaling the woman's arms with his own upon his plate, seals and carriage, and in another case that of the father of the person whose legitimacy was disputed having appointed with the clergyman a day for the mother to be churched, were severally treated as carrying considerable weight in evidence of marriage. On the same principle, the assumption by the woman of the name of the man, the 'gestatio annuli', or wearing by her of her wedded ring, or (in countries where a difference exists) of apparel peculiar to married women, are acts, which, if they be done 'sciente, vidente, et patiente viro', may be considered as so many tacit declarations by the parties of the existence of a marriage between them. To these circumstances may be added that of the parties joining as husband and wife in fines or other assurances for the purpose of passing the right of the latter to dower, and the entry in the register of the woman's burial by the description of the wife or widow of the man. And the mere cohabitation of two persons of different sexes, or their behavior in other respects as husband and wife, always affords an inference of greater or less strength, that a marriage has been solemnized between them. Their conduct being susceptible of two opposite explanations, is to be moral rather than immoral, and credit is to be given to their own assertions, whether express or implied, of a fact peculiarly within their own knowledge."

It may be noted that upon this principle a certificate of marriage which otherwise would be receivable only under the Hearsay exception (post, § 1645) may, if found in the person's possession, be admissible as exhibiting the person's belief as to his marriage.[1] The principle is also sometimes extended to § 263. [1] 1886, Camden v. Belgrade, 78 Me. 204, 209, 3 Atl. 652 ("a paper found in the possession of one of the parties to the alleged marriage, or produced by such party, purporting to be a marriage certificate, is admissible upon the ground that such a possession or such a production of it is equivalent to a declaration of such party that the facts stated in the certificate are true, . . . without separate and distinct evidence of its genuineness or that it was given by one acting in an official capacity"). Distinguish the following: 1848, Com. v. Morris, 1 Cush. Mass. 391 (adultery; unauthenticated certificate in possession of a woman said to be defendant's wife, excluded, her conduct not being evidence against him).

It has been suggested that conduct as a married person after cohabitation is ended is inad-admit, on an issue of breach of marriage-promise, the woman's subsequent conduct (in preparing a wedding-outfit, and the like) as evidence of her prior act of assent to the promise (post, § 1770).

§ 269. Legitimacy, as evidenced by Parents' Conduct. Upon an issue of the legitimacy of a child, the conduct of the parents towards the child is admissible on the present principle, as involving an inference from the parents' conduct to their belief as to the fact on which the legitimacy depends (time of birth, time of marriage, identity of the child, and the like), and then from that belief to the fact itself. Such evidence has traditionally been received since Solomon's day; though perhaps the more easily, inasmuch as it would usually, like the case of marriage-conduct (ante, § 268), be also defensible under the Family-History exception to the Hearsay rule, when the parents were deceased, or under the doctrine of Admissions, when the parents or their successors in interest are parties to the cause. But its orthodoxy from the present point of view is not only established by its traditional reception free from any reference to the limitations of those two special doctrines, but also is plainly declared as a matter of theory by the exposition of eminent judges: [1]

The Judgment of Solomon, First Book of the Kings, III, 16: "Then came there two women, that were harlots, unto the king, and stood before him. And the one woman said, O my lord, I and this woman dwell in one house; and I was delivered of a child with her in the house. And it came to pass the third day after that I was delivered, that this woman was delivered also: and we were together; there was no stranger with us in the house, save we two in the house. And this woman's child died in the night, because she overlaid it. And she arose at midnight, and took my son from beside me, while thy handmaid slept, and laid it in her bosom, and laid her dead child in my bosom. And when I rose in the morning to give my child suck, behold, it was dead: but when I had considered it in the morning, behold, it was not my son, which I did bear. And the other woman said Nay; but the living is my son, and the dead is thy son. And this said, No, missible, but this is perhaps not necessarily so; 1881, Dysart Peerage Case, L. R. 6 App. Cas. 489, 499, 502 (legitimacy of a child born in 1863, of an alleged informal marriage with A in 1844, another marriage with B having been openly celebrated in 1851; the husband's declarations, after 1851, of the first woman being his lawful wife, excluded; his conduct and statements "as one of the alleged marrying parties" up to that date would have been receivable; but after that date, the 'res gestæ' of the first cohabitation being ended, his statements were solely testimonial; the principle of party's admissions or of the pedigree exception being not here available).

Contra: 1886, Camden v. Belgrade, 78 Me. 204, 212, 3 Atl. 652. Compare the citations post, § 1770.

§ 269. [1] The authorities are few, because the matter has seldom been disputed; compare the cases cited under the Hearsay exception, post, § 1497, and also the following: England: 1856, Legge v. Edmonds, 26 L. J. Ch. 125, 139 (admitting the parents' conduct, but excluding letters as not mere conduct); 1914, Lloyd v. Powell Duffryn S. C. Co., Cl. C. 733 (whether a deceased workman was the father of an illegitimate child claiming as dependent; the deceased's acknowledgment of paternity, admitted; cited more fully post, § 1461; the opinions do not clearly state the principle). United States: 1904, Locklayer v. Locklayer, 139 Ala. 354, 35 So. 1008 (negro birth); La. Rev. Civ. C., 1920, §§ 193–195, 209 (quoted post, § 1492); 1906, Breidenstein v. Bertram 198, Mo. 328, 95 S. W. 828 (but here the further question is involved of the effect of a statute declaring that recognition of an illegitimate child, after marriage with the mother shall legitimate it); 1898, Erwin v. Bailey, 123, N. C. 628, 31 S. E. 844 (quarrels as to child's legitimacy, admitted).

For the question whose declarations as to illegitimacy are receivable under the Family-History exception to the Hearsay rule, see §§ 1492, 1494, post.

Compare also § 1790, post.

but the dead is thy son, and this is my son. Thus they spake before the king. Then said the king, The one saith, This is my son that liveth, and thy son is the dead; and the other saith, Nay; but thy son is the dead, and my son is the living. And the king said, Bring me a sword. And they brought a sword before the king. And the king said, Divide the living child in two, and give half to the one, and half to the other. Then spake the woman whose the living child was unto the king, for her bowels yearned upon her son, and she said, O my lord, give her the living child, and in no wise slay it. But the other said, Let it be neither mine nor thine, but divide it. Then the king answered and said, Give her the living child, and in no wise slay it: she is the mother thereof. And all Israel heard of the judgment which the king had judged; and they feared the king: for they saw that the wisdom of God was in him, to do judgment." [2]

1810, L. C. ELDON, in Banbury Peerage Case, App. to LeMarchant's Gardner Peerage Case, 490:[3] "Evidence of the conduct of the supposed parents of the child appears to me to be admissible evidence upon this question [of legitimacy]. My lords, when two women each claimed a particular child as hers, and called upon a person to decide between them, he ordered that the child should be severed into two parts, and that each take half; the true mother instantly waived her claim; and he decided, upon that, that the child was hers. What is the lesson which this story teaches? Not, perhaps, that mere declarations are evidence in such a case; for such declarations may be made for a temporary purpose (in that case both women made declarations, and one of course made false declarations); but it teaches that the conduct of a parent, the feelings of a parent — those feelings being inferred from such conduct — afford us some evidence assisting us in arriving at a right conclusion as to the matter in controversy. It has been argued at the bar that mere declarations of parents on such subjects are not admissible evidence to affect a question of legitimacy, and that conduct is precisely the same thing; that it is substantially nothing more than a declaration; that it is only a declaration by deed instead of by word. I will not say that all simple declarations are evidence in such a case; but I will say that the conduct of a husband and wife towards a person claiming to be their legitimate child is in some cases admissible evidence upon the question whether the husband and wife had sexual intercourse at such time as by the course of nature that child might have been the fruit of that intercourse. It is often a most material species of evidence. It is not always, but it is frequently a safe ground for inference; for it comes from the least suspicious source, that is, from the very individuals who are the most interested to give a different testimony. If there ever was a case where circumstantial evidence of this description is admissible, it is this."

1810, Lord REDESDALE, ib. 439, 447: "Acknowledgment of a child by the reputed father and mother as their child is generally the only evidence of the fact even that the child is the child of the woman, unless evidence of the persons present at its birth can be produced; and such acknowledgment is sufficient evidence, if not rebutted by clear evidence to the contrary."

1890, CLARK, J., in Woodward v. Blue, 107 N. C. 407, 12 S. E. 453 (Mourning Crisp, a mulatto, claimed as widow of Underzine Pelot, a slave of Greenlea, and Emily Woodward Blue as daughter of the marriage; the defence denied the marriage, and affirmed Greenlea to have been the father of Emily by Mourning; Greenlea's treatment of Emily was offered in evidence): "There being evidence to show non-access by the husband, the jury should not have been cut off from a knowledge of how Greenlea treated the child.

[2] A similar judgment is attributed in Japan by tradition to the great judge Oka Tadasuke, who lived in the early 1700s. By the Japanese version, the judge orders the two claimants to grasp the child and pull each one towards herself, the strongest to be the victorious claimant. The judgment is found in a popular collection known as "Oka Seidan", and has been translated by Mr. Walter Dening, in his "English Readers for Japanese High Schools", Book I, p. 131.

[3] Lord Eldon's remarks are also given in Nicolas, Adulterine Bastardy, 524.

It may be that it could have been shown that he betrayed fondness and affection for it, showed anxiety in its illness, lavished money on it, or educated it; and surely these things would be strongly corroborative of the evidence of the defendant, for it would be hardly expected that a white man should so act towards the child of Underzine his negro slave. Was not the violent grief of David the king upon the death of the child, some corroboration that he and not Uriah was its father?"

This conduct of recognition has by statute in some States been given an intrinsic effect in substantive law, i.e. the father's recognition, when "general and notorious", of a child as his child, suffices of itself to give the child a status of filiation, and thus to enable it, though illegitimate, to have such rights as the law gives to children. This aspect of "recognition" is examined post, § 1606.

§ 270. Identity, as evidenced by Belief and Knowledge of Personal Doings, Family History, and the like. On an issue of personal identity, the present principle finds one of its simplest and commonest applications. The situation is this: Whether X is A is the fact in issue; A is shown to have done a certain act, to have had certain marked and individual experiences; if X did this act or had this experience, he probably is A; thus, as indicating whether X did or had it, the fact of his present belief or consciousness or recollection becomes relevant, and therefore his conduct as evidencing that belief. This sort of evidence, of the commonest use in the affairs of every-day life, has of course its weaknesses; the fact of X's belief or recollection of the act may be explained away as due, not to his having actually done the act. but to his having heard of it from others; while the fact of his non-recollection may also be explainable as due merely to that failure of memory which increases in proportion to the lapse of time and the insignificance of the act. Thus the strength of the inference is proportionate, on the one hand (when he claims to recollect), to the improbability of the person's having learned of the act from others, and, on the other hand (when he fails to recollect), to the improbability of a forgetfulness of the particular act. The theory of this sort of evidence, and its application, are well expounded in that marvellous feat of judicial skill and endurance, the charge of the presiding judge in the second Tichborne trial:

1874, COCKBURN, C. J., in R. v. Castro (alias Orton, alias Tichborne), Official Report [1] of the Charge, I, 16; II, 327, 403; the claimant to the rich Tichborne estate purported to be Roger, the long-lost son, who had been given up for dead, after the news of his loss at sea, some twenty years before, in a vessel last heard of off the coast of South America; Roger had been brought up a Catholic, and attended a Catholic school at Stonyhurst, but had spent most of his youth in France, where he became more fluent in French than in English; he afterwards served a while in the army; he was some twenty-five years of age when he left on his travels. The claimant had lived for most of his manhood-life in the backwoods of Australia; and was said to be really Arthur Orton, a butcher of Wapping. At the civil trial for the title to the estates, in 1871,[2] the claimant's case finally broke down and was not submitted to the jury; he was then, in 1874, put on trial for perjury and convicted; in this trial he was not competent as a witness, but his testimony at the civil trial was used against him; and it is in this cross-examination that most of the instances referred to by the Chief Justice were found. On the claimant's cross-examination by Sir J. Coleridge, it appeared that though Roger had been three years at Stonyhurst School and lived on the quadrangle, the claimant thought that the quadrangle was "a part of a building"; that, though Roger had studied Latin and Greek, the claimant replied, when asked "Was Cæsar in verse or prose," "I don't recollect"; and "Was Cæsar a Latin writer or a Greek writer?" "I can't say; I suppose it was Greek"; and when shown a copy of Virgil, "It appears to me to be Greek"; and when asked, "Is mathematics the same thing as Chemistry?" "I have no recollection"; and "Has Euclid anything to do with mathematics?" "I don't know"; and when asked, "What is physiology?" "The formation of the head, I believe"; and when asked the meaning of the Stonyhurst motto, "Laus Deo Semper", answered "They mean, 'The laws of God forever.'" A list of Roger's library was read to him; he thought that the "Theatre de P. Corneille" was written "by one of the Fathers"; asked as to the "Life of John Bunyan", whether he was "a sportsman, a general, a bishop, a master of fox hounds, or a prizefighter", the claimant said it was "difficult to give an answer to such a question." Taking up these instances, the Chief Justice commented as follows: "Although outward appearance may deceive, yet if you are acquainted with what has passed through the mind of a man, and another man were to come forward and say, 'I am that man', you have only to ask him as to the events of the other man's life, those at least which must have remained impressed on his memory, and which, therefore, if he be the man, he must of necessity retain, to enable him to demonstrate that he is the man he says he is, or to enable you to pronounce that he is not. If his memory is not the memory of the man he seeks to personate, if he does not know the events of that man's life, if he does not know what thoughts, what feelings, what emotions, that man's mind underwent, he cannot be the individual. . . . Now you are in danger, in an inquiry of this nature, of being led into error by one of two alternatives. You may require too much; you may be satisfied with too little. You may require too much if you expect a man . . . to recollect every trifling individual occurrence of his life. . . . But there are things which it is next to impossible any one should forget, and in respect of those things we are entitled to require that a man should exhibit some knowledge when you know that they happened to a person whom he represents himself to be. . . . You must consider what it is you may fairly and reasonably and justly expect that a man should recollect. . . . Again, you may . . . also be satisfied with too little if you are led to accept, as true genuine knowledge, that which is not the honest production of the unaided memory, but knowledge derived from extraneous and adventitious sources. This is the danger into which persons too credulous have before now been led by imposture. . . . [He] may have acquired that knowledge from without, instead of possessing it from within. . . . What, then, are the things which would have impressed themselves on the mind and memory of a boy growing up into the period of adult life? For the recollections of boyhood still cling to us in after years with the freshness of the age to which they belong, and, though less vivid, even those of childhood do not wholly disappear. . . . [After the recital of various instances, the cross-examination is then quoted]: 'Do you recollect [from your studies] whether Cæsar was written in verse or prose? No, I do not. — . . . Did you ever do any Cæsar? I do not remember whether I did or not. — Is Cæsar a Latin writer or a Greek?' . . . To which comes the memorable answer, 'I should suppose Cæsar is Greek.' . . . Cæsar a Greek! Would Roger, do you think, have made that mistake? When Roger read Cæsar, did he believe he was reading Latin, or did he believe he was reading Greek? Is that a thing about which a person could make a mistake? Do you think that is what a man would be likely to forget?" [3]

§ 270. [1] The charge alone occupies two printed octavo volumes of some seven hundred pages each.

[2] Reported by Heywood, s. v. Tichbourne v. Lushington, in book form; the above-cited passages are found at pp. 200 ff., 390 ff.

[3] A neat summary of the various points of identity and difference between the defendant and Roger Tichborne and Arthur Orton will be found, in the form of an itemized list, in Charles Reade's "Readiana", in the chapter on "The Doctrine of Coincidences", first letter.

This application of the principle receives constant use in trials where personal identity is in issue, though few rulings need to be made or come to be recorded.[4] When the person in question is deceased, the Family-History exception to the Hearsay rule has usually served to admit his statements and his conduct; yet it is important to remember that much would properly be received from the present point of view which would be excluded if offered under the hearsay exception.[5]

§ 271. Testamentary Execution, as evidenced by the Testator's Belief and Declarations. If the fact of recollection or belief or knowledge of a past act is generally indicative as a mental trace of the doing of the act, and if the person's conduct and utterances are indicative of that belief, it would follow that the theory applies equally where the doing of a testamentary act is in issue. If A, for example, an alleged testator, has clearly exhibited a belief in the existence of a certain will of his the inference is natural that he has in fact executed it; otherwise, except on the hypothesis of an insane delusion, he could hardly have acquired the belief or consciousness of having done the act. So, too, if he has the belief that he has made no will, this tends to persuade us that in fact he has not.

Besides the instances above quoted, there were scores of others, notably, the defendant's ignorance of the contents of the sealed packet deposited by Roger when leaving England (Charge, I, 630 ff.), and of Roger's peculiar amusement of stupefying flies with cigar-smoke (Charge, II, 162, 167). It may be supposed that the strong presumption created by the extraordinary fact that Roger's own mother recognized and to the day of her death received the defendant as her son could never have been satisfactorily met except by this mass of striking evidence of the defendant's lack of the mental traces of Roger's early life.

[4] 1846, Smith v. Earl Ferrers, Cherer's Rep. 34, 323 (breach of marriage-promise; the plaintiff put in a long series of letters alleged to have been written to the plaintiff by the defendant, containing promises of marriage; the defendant claimed that the plaintiff had forged the letters herself; from the matters mentioned in the letters it was sought to be inferred that the plaintiff alone could not have known the things mentioned, but in fact they equally indicated that the defendant could not have written them because they mentioned numerous things that never happened to him; the defendant's case was clearly made out, and a nonsuit was taken; the case is an extraordinary one, in respect of the audacity of the claim, the ingenuity of the young woman, and the narrow escape of the defendant from the imposture); 1906, Thompson v. U. S., 144 Fed. 14, 20, C. C. A. (a witness allowed to identify a man by name, though she had "come to know" his name subsequently; "knowledge of the name by which the person is generally known is of sufficient reliability to be put in evidence"); 1889, Howard v. Russell, 75 Tex. 171, 179, 12 S. W. 525 (the identity of B. with S. being in question, B.'s statements as to his change of name, his residence, and his reasons for the change, were admitted); 1900, Smith v. Russell, 23 Tex. Civ. App. 554, 56 S. W. 687 (statements, by a person to be identified, as to coming from South Carolina, and being a single man, admitted); 1900, Nehring v. McMurrian, 94 Tex. 45, 57 S. W. 943 (statements by the person as to his name, family members, birthplace, etc., admitted).

The conduct of third persons seems equally admissible to identify: 1885, Willis v. Quimby, 31 N. H. 485, 487 (trespass; to prove defendant's identity, a deposition was offered, referring to "a man they said was J. M. I."; admissible, since "the only knowledge men generally have of the names of others is derived from the fact that they hear them so called"); 1877, Gillian v. State, 3 Tex. App. 132, 134 (conspiracy; "there was a man present that the crowd called W. G.", held not alone sufficient to prove identity, because of the motives for false appellation under the circumstances; but held admissible on the principle of Willis v. Quimby).

[5] See the citations under the Family-History exception to the Hearsay rule, post, § 1502, and also the discussion of principle in § 1791, post. In §§ 413, 667, post, are collected cases involving other modes of proving Identity; the use of Traces of Crime, as examined ante, §§ 149–154, sometimes involves what would loosely be termed a question of identity.

Compare the cases cited (ante, § 87, post, §§ 2024, 2148, 2149 (handwriting, typewriting, spelling, etc.).

The truth is that there is, for that step of the inference (i.e. from his belief to the past act) no ground for hesitation, either in principle or in practical good sense. The real doubt and weakness lies in the other and prior step of the inference, namely, from the person's conduct and utterances to his belief. Were we once firmly persuaded that the person actually possessed such a belief, we could not refuse to treat it as a strong piece of evidence. But how are we asked to conclude that he has the belief? From his conduct and utterances, by circumstantial inference, and it is here that the objections begin to have force. In the first place, and as a matter of circumstantial inference purely, it must be conceded that the probability of his feigning this conduct, in order to deceive designing relatives and to obtain peace and quiet, is in general experience not a small one; the circumstantial value of such evidence of his real belief may thus be thought too trifling. In the next place, it may be objected that the conduct and utterances thus offered are after all equivalent to mere assertions by him of the fact of his execution (or non-execution) of a will, and are therefore inadmissible as hearsay statements, since their assertive significance is so plain that their circumstantial use becomes a mere pretext. If, however, we can bring ourselves to consider these objections as forced and captious, the plain fact remains that such evidence would be admissible, in strict accordance with the general principle already examined (ante, § 267). This view has been taken by a number of Courts, more or less explicitly. In the following passages this view is phrased in one form or another:

1876, HANNEN, J., in Sugden v. St. Leonards, L. R. 1 P. D. 203: "Believing, as I do, the testator . . . [showed] a belief in his mind that the will was in existence at a time subsequently to that at which he could have revoked it, I am led to the conclusion that he had not in fact revoked it."

1844, MARSHALL, J., in Steele v. Price, 5 B. Monr. 69 (admitting, on the question of revocation, evidence of intention at different times and of a belief, just before death, that he still had a will, the will being in fact lost): "There is no principle of law or reason which either requires or can enable the mind to resist the accumulated force of that evidence of internal feeling and intention which is furnished by the uniform and unvarying tenor of a man's conduct and conversations through a long series of years."

1847, ORMOND, J., in McBeth v. McBeth, 11 Ala. 60 (the testator's declarations as to the existence of a will which could not be found were admitted on the issue of revocation): "It is then very clear that at this time he supposed the will to be in existence, and [this] repels the presumption of a voluntary cancellation or destruction of it previous to that time. . . . The necessary inference from the declarations of the testator a short time before his death is that he supposed it was then in existence, consequently did not by any act of his destroy or revoke it."

1867, APPLETON, C. J., in Collagan v. Burns, 57 Me. 458 (a subsequent intention not to revoke, as declared by the testator to his wife in various ways, was held admissible on the question whether the tearing of a torn will had been done by him and with intent to revoke): "The condition of the testator, . . . the state of his affections, when proved, may raise an improbability almost amounting to an impossibility that the testator himself intentionally destroyed his will; . . . they may show that up to the time of his death he believed his will was existing and would act upon his property, and consequently that its non-appearance, or its torn appearance, was the result of some cause other than the wish or intentional act of the deceased. . . . The evidence of the testator's declarations was offered to negative the intention to destroy and the fact of destruction of the will in question, by showing the true relation of the parties, the entire absence of intention to destroy, and hence the improbability of any destruction, intentional or otherwise, of the will by the party by whom it is conceded to have been made."

But this mode of reasoning has not been accepted by a majority of Courts. Some judges prefer, in admitting such evidence, to treat it frankly as a direct hearsay assertion which merits an exception of its own to the Hearsay rule. Others, representing perhaps the greater number of Courts, also regard the conduct and utterances as obnoxious to the Hearsay rule, but refuse to concede any exception for their benefit, and thus exclude them.[1] This variety of views, together with the possibilities of using a testator's declarations for certain other purposes by general concession, make it impracticable to examine at this point the general state of the law in regard to these related uses of such evidence; the authorities are collected and the various principles examined in dealing with the Hearsay rule (post, §§ 1736–1740). It is enough here to note that there is a plausible place, under the present principle, for the circumstantial use of such conduct and utterances.

§ 272. Sundry Inferences from Belief to Past Acts; Contracts, Appointments to Office, etc. The same mode of reasoning may of course, upon occasion, be resorted to in evidencing the execution of a contract or the doing of any other important act. No doubt this would frequently bring us into plain conflict with the Hearsay rule. But no doubt also such a reasoning process is constantly illustrated in the trials of every day, without any objection being conceived; and the following passage illustrates how wide an application the principle may receive while remaining within orthodox analogies:

1858, ERLE, J., in R. v. Forderingbridge, E. B. & E. 678, 684 (admitting conduct of master and apprentice to show the previous execution of an indenture of apprenticeship); "The execution here is whether upon this evidence a reasonable man would infer that the man had been bound apprentice. I know of no rule of law requiring technical proof of the existence of an indenture of apprenticeship, or of any other deed, or which prohibits the presumption of the existence of the deed from the circumstances. . . . The relations of landlord and tenant, of partnership, of marriages, are frequently presumed from the conduct of the parties being consistent with that state of things, and more consistent with that than with any other."

§ 271. [1] Very rarely, however, has a Court plainly considered and rejected the circumstantial argument as above explained; it is usually merely ignored. In the following case it was expressly repudiated: 1860, Boylan v. Meeker, 28 N. J. L. 274, 279 ("the plaintiffs relied upon the declarations and conduct of M. . . . to show that while living he never knew of the existence of such a will, and that therefore he had never knowingly executed the paper"; Whelpley, J., alone noticed this argument, in saying, "nor does ignorance of a fact, at a time long subsequent to its occurrence, raise a necessary presumption that the mind was never acquainted with it"; but his real reason for exclusion seems to have been the Hearsay rule, post, § 1736).

In its application to contracts and deeds, the principle is probably oftener applied than the number of recorded rulings indicates.[1] It has also an application in proof of the fact of appointment or election to office,[2] although here the reputation-element is probably the most important; the inference is at any rate so well conceded that the presumption of title to office (post, § 2535) is founded upon it. In other instances than these there seem to be few rulings upon this use of the inference.[3]

§ 273. Conduct, as evidence of Guilt; (1) Conduct in general; Demeanor when Charged or Arrested. It has already been seen (ante, § 267) that one of the common and established uses of the mode of reasoning here involved is the inference from guilty conduct to the commission of the guilty deed; and the place of this inference in the general scheme of Evidence-rules need be no further considered. So far as the employment of it in practice is concerned, the real opening for controversy arises in the first step of the inference, and not in the second. No one doubts that the state of mind which we call "guilty consciousness" is perhaps the strongest evidence (on the principle of § 172, ante) that the person is indeed the guilty doer; nothing but an hallucination or a most extraordinary mistake will otherwise explain its presence.[1] But, in the process of inferring the existence of that inner consciousness from the outward conduct, there is ample room for erroneous inference; and it is in this respect chiefly that caution becomes desirable and that judicial rulings upon specific kinds of conduct become necessary.

In general, it may be premised, any and all conduct may be open to this inference. The kinds of behavior which may properly suggest such a cause are beyond enumeration; they are as various and as changeable as men's dispositions and emotions. No conduct is conclusive; but, on the other hand, no conduct is entirely without significance, greater or less according to the circumstances:

§ 272. [1] 1858, R. v. Forderingbridge, E. B. & E. 678 (to prove that J. D. had executed with B. an indenture of apprenticeship, the fact of J. D.'s working in the shop of B. like other apprentices, of B.'s treating him as an apprentice, etc., was held sufficient); 1896, Wrigley v. Cornelius, 162 Ill. 92, 44 N. E. 406 (issue whether the defendant had ordered of the plaintiff 10,000 pictures or only 5,000 and as many more as he should need; evidence admitted that the plaintiff, immediately after receiving the order, had made a contract with a third person for 10,000 frames, to be delivered to the defendants, as throwing light on the terms of the contract).

Compare the cases under Interpretation, post, § 2465.

[2] 1860, Com. v. McCue, 16 Gray Mass. 226 (assault on the field-driver of a town; "the testimony of H. that he was a field-driver and had acted as such implies that he acted under the belief that he had been legally elected and qualified").

[3] 1743, Annesley v. Anglesea, 17 How. St. Tr. 1139, 1144 (to prove the delivery of Lady Altham of a child and heir in 1715, the fact was offered "that a bonfire was made upon this happy event, and drink publicly given to the neighbors and people who came in to testify their joy"; perhaps this rather illustrates § 269, ante); 1897, State v. Lee, 69 Conn. 186, 37 Atl. 75 (abortion; subsequent fear of the defendant shown by the woman just after the alleged attempt at abortion, admitted to indicate the fact of the alleged violence).

§ 273. [1] That this sort of evidence may be used for a defendant to prove a third person guilty, see ante, § 142.

That the rule for confessions does not apply to the use of guilty conduct, see post, § 821.

On the general nature of the inference, see the materials collected in the present author's "Principles of Judicial Proof" (1913), §§ 147-155.

1850, PARSONS, J., in Johnson v. State, 17 Ala. 618, 624: "We cannot say that facts, such as silence, which indicated unusual seriousness at such a moment, are inadmissible as evidence tending in some degree to show the prisoner's guilty knowledge of the condition of his wife, or to show his crime itself. Doubtless such a circumstance by itself should weight but little and it should be received with great caution, but we cannot say that it was wholly inadmissible. . . . A flight is universally admitted as evidence of the guilt of the accused, though not conclusive. If we take a flight as evidence of fear, and fear as evidence of a known cause of dread or apprehension, we arrive thus at the inference of crime. But it is sufficient perhaps for all practical purposes to regard a flight as immediate evidence of crime, because it betrays conscious guilt. In this instance, then, we take the flight, a thing of itself harmless and innocent, as evidence of conscious guilt, a necessary consequence of the crime itself, and the conscious guilt, of which the flight was evidence, is proof, in its turn, of the crime. In this instance, therefore, it is certain that the law admits evidence of the party's conduct, merely to prove his conscious guilt, which is proof of crime. Now this conscious guilt is merely internal, but the law allows that proof of it which consists of outward signs. Is a flight the only outward evidence of conscious guilt? So far from it, any indications of it, arising from the conduct, demeanor, or expressions of the party, are legal evidence against him. The law can never limit the number or kind of such indications."

1853, CALDWELL, J., in Moore v. State, 2 Oh. St. 502: "From our knowledge of the human mind and its workings, we expect, with almost positive certainty, that when it is the sole repository of so dreadful a secret it will affect the conduct and sayings of the person; hence the mind naturally looks to these with the most anxious scrutiny, and would require for its satisfaction, if such a thing were possible, a complete transcript of the person's conduct and sayings. . . . Sometimes a person is detected as the author of a crime by showing an unusual anxiety to discover the perpetrator; at other times the discovery is led to by the person showing too much indifference. In some instances the observation that the person appears to know too much about the transaction leads to the discovery; at other times the inquiry is started by his appearing to know too little. These are generally acts that in themselves show no disposition to do mischief; but it is because they are unnatural, because they tend to the conclusion that they are produced by a mind conscious of its guilt, that they are provable against the accused. They are in themselves nothing, except as showing the state of mind of the party."

1878, BRICKELL, C. J., in McAdory v. State, 62 Ala. 154, 159: "Any indications of a consciousness of guilt by a person suspected of or charged with crime, or who may after such indications be suspected or charged, are admissible evidence against him. The number of such indications it is impossible to limit, nor can their nature or character be defined. Presumptions or inferences may be, and often are, founded on circumstances which, of themselves, independent of the accusation, would not be ground of crimination. It is largely a question of fact, rather than a question of law, for the determination of the jury, whether particular conduct, or particular expressions of the accused, refer to a criminal offence, and spring from his consciousness of guilt. When it is clear that they have no relation to the offence, and that they ought not to have any influence with the jury, it is the duty of the Court to reject them as evidence. But however minute or insignificant they may be, shedding but a dim light upon the transaction, if they have a tendency to elucidate it they must be admitted."

Yet experience tells us that no fixed relations of inferences can be predicated for the same conduct in different persons. The same symptom is often the result of exactly opposite psychological conditions. This sort of evidence is admitted because there is a certain degree of uniformity in its meaning, but the variations from uniformity are so frequent, and depend so much upon personal character and local circumstances that no fixed rules should be laid down. Repeated judicial warnings tell us that the evidence is merely to be estimated as best we can in the light of our knowledge of human nature in general and of the accused in particular:

1846, ORMOND, J., in Smith v. State, 9 Ala. 990, 995: "The conduct of one accused of crime is the most fallible of all competent testimony. Those emotions or acts which might be produced in one person by a sense of guilt, or by the stings of conscience, might be exhibited by another, differently constituted, by an overwhelming sense of shame, and the degradation consequent upon a criminal accusation; the same cause producing opposite effects in different persons, owing to weakness or strength of nerve, and other inexplicable moral phenomena."

1850, SHAW, C. J., in Webster's Trial, Mass., Bemis' Rep. 486: "Such are the various temperaments of men, and so rare the occurrence of the sudden arrest of a person upon so heinous a charge [as murder], that who of us can say how an innocent or a guilty man ought or would be wholly likely to act in such a case, or that he was too much or too little moved for an innocent man? Have you any experience that an innocent man, stunned under the mere imputation of such a charge, though conscious of innocence, will always appear calm and collected? Or that a guilty man who, by knowledge of his danger, might be somewhat braced up for the consequences, would always appear agitated? Or the reverse? Judge you concerning it."

1881. MILLER, J., in Greenfield v. State, 85 N. Y. 86: "Such indications, however, are by no means conclusive, and must depend greatly upon the mental characteristics of the individual. Innocent persons, appalled by the enormity of a charge of crime, will sometimes exhibit great weakness and terror, and those who have been crushed with the weight of a great sorrow will manifest the greatest composure and serenity in their grief and meet it without the shedding of a tear. While the manifestations at such a time sometimes indicate excitement and great disturbances of the physical system, and do not always sanction an inference of guilt, they are admissible evidence for the jury to pass upon in view of the circumstances."

The general principle, as applied to the conduct of one accused of crime, finds illustration in a great variety of instances.[2] In those which have led to judicial rulings, there has seldom resulted an exclusion, because usually none but conduct having at least plausibly a guilty significance is commonly offered. Among these inexhaustible varieties of conduct, there are a few sorts which recur often and possess some uniform feature that gives rise to doubt or controversy. These may now be taken up in detail.

[2] Ala. 1850, Johnson v. State, 17 Ala. 618, 623 (see quotation supra); 1875, Levison v. State, 54 Ala. 519, 527 ("demeanor when arrested", admitted); 1878, McAdory v. State, 62 Ala. 154, 159 (questions by the defendant to the witness, of the former's own motion, as to the latter being in search of the culprit, held admissible on the facts; see quotation supra); 1882, Beale v. Posey, 72 Ala. 323 (demeanor admissible); Cal. 1903, People v. Farrington, 140 Cal. 656, 74 Pac. 288 (demeanor when found with stolen property, admitted); Colo. 1896, Boykin v. People, 22 Colo. 496, 45 Pac. 419 (demeanor of the accused during the trial, admitted); Ill. 1914, People v. Duncan, 261 Ill. 339, 103 N. E. 1043 (attempted suicide while in jail, admitted); Ind. 1898, Miller v. Dill, 149 Ind. 326, 49 N. E. 272 (forgery set up as a defence to a note; the payee's conduct in attempting to dispose of the note, admitted); Ia. 1903, State v. Dennis, 119 Ia. 688, 94 N. W. 235 (demeanor when identified); Kan. 1886, State v. Baldwin, 36 Kan. 10, 11, 12 Pac. 318 (admitting the accused's apathy as to a sister's death, charged against him; also the fact that he "was nervous and showed a great deal of fear" when arrested); 1917, Md. Freud v. State, 129 Md. 636, 99 Atl. 934 (fraudulent arson; unspecified conduct); Mich. 1883, People v. Wolcott, 51 Mich. 615 (excitement while boot-tracks were examined; excluded as depending too much on personal peculiarities); Mo. 1902, State v. Brown, 168 Mo. 449, 68 S. W. 568 (accused's reluctance to have his shoe measured, held admissible); N. Y. 1875, Lindsay v. People, 63 N. Y. 143, 155 (turning pale when arrested, admitted); 1881, Greenfield v. People, 85 N. Y. 75, 85 (wife-murder; the defendant's failure to shed tears the next morning, admitted; demeanor "at the time of his arrest, or soon after the commission of the crime, or upon being charged", is admissible; see quotation supra); 1904, Austin v. Bartlett, 178 N. Y. 310, 70 N. E. 855 (defendant's failure to call upon plaintiff after her injury, not admitted); N. Dak. 1897, State v. Coudotte, 7 N. D. 109, 72 N. W. 913 (attempted suicide of an Indian under arrest, not evidential of

§ 274. Same: (2) Demeanor during Trial. It has been judicially maintained that the demeanor of an accused person in court during the trial is too elusive to be justifiably considered as any indication whatever of his guilty consciousness:[1]

1892, BAKER, J., in Purdy v. People, 140 Ill. 50, 29 N. E. 700: "Evidence may be introduced which was not anticipated; a witness may greatly exaggerate a trifling circumstance, or may deliberately make a misstatement; a witness may fail to testify to a fact which the defendant fully believed was within the knowledge of such witness and would be stated by him; exaggerated denunciation may be indulged in by attorneys; the presiding judge may decide contrary to the expectations in regard to the admissibility of certain evidence, or may rule a point of law against him. Under these and other like circumstances, a prisoner (and especially in a trial where his life was at stake) might frequently (and especially so if he was not a hardened criminal) demean himself while under influence of his disappointment, fears, and feelings, in such a manner that an observer would regard his conduct and demeanor as indicative of guilt. It would be illogical and unjust, under circumstances, such as stated, to deduce a conclusion unfavorable to the defendant."

But none of the supposed dangers of mistake apply with any more force to this particular sort of conduct than to conduct in general. Moreover, it is as unwise to attempt the impossible as it is impolitic to conduct trials upon a fiction; and the attempt to force a jury to become mentally blind to the behavior of the accused sitting before them involves both an impossibility in practice and a fiction in theory. No other Court seems ever to have sanctioned such a proposal:[2]

1896, CAMPBELL, J., in Boykin v. People, 22 Colo. 496, 45 Pac. 419: "We know it to be a fact, grounded in human nature, that the conduct of a defendant or of a party to a suit during the trial is more or less potential, and has necessarily more or less influence with the guilty consciousness); Oh. 1853, Moore v. State, 2 Oh. St. 500, 506 (murder; conduct when informed of the finding of the body of the deceased, admitted; see quotation supra); Tex. 1875, Smith v. State, 42 Tex. 444, 447 (readiness to deliver up on demand a hog alleged to have been stolen, admitted); 1898, Holt v. State, 39 Tex. Cr. 282, 45 S. W. 1016, 46 S. W. 829 (that he "tucked his head and looked like he had done something wrong", when charged, admitted); 1901, Weaver v. State, 43 Tex. Cr. 340, 65 S. W. 534 (defendant's refusal, after arrest, to look on the body of the deceased, excluded, on the special principle of § 1072, post); Va. 1879, Dean v. Com., 32 Gratt. 912, 924 (admitting a failure to exhibit natural interest in the crime).

Compare also the citations under §§ 394, 396, post.

§ 274. [1] 1884, Rider v. People, 110 Ill. 11, 13, semble (accused's demeanor admissible, when "on the witness-stand and during the trial"); 1892, Purdy v. People, 140 Ill. 46, 49, 29 N. E. 700 (forbidding to consider his demeanor during the trial when he has not taken the stand; see quotation supra); 1892, Siebert v. People, 143 Ill. 571, 593, 32 N. E. 431 (approving Purdy's case); 1908, People v. McGinnis, 234 Ill. 68, 84 N. E. 687 (following Purdy's Case).

[2] Accord: 1893, Brewer, J., in Graves v. U. S., 150 U. S. 118, 14 Sup. 40; 1910, Waller v. U. S., 8th C. C. A., 179 Fed. 810.

In the Guiteau trial, for the killing of President Garfield, the accused's singular demeanor during trial was a chief source of evidence.

Compare § 946, post (witness' demeanor).

Court and jury upon the question of his credibility. . . . If this be so, we fail to perceive the vice in an instruction telling the jury that they may do the very thing which common experience and common observation teach that the human mind inevitably will do."

§ 275. Same: (3) Refusal to Undergo a Superstitious Test. The popular trust in certain superstitious and irrational tests of guilt is much more widespread than is commonly supposed; and it is not rare for the police or interested persons to employ these superstitions as a means of obtaining a clue.

The test itself is no evidence (ante, § 9). But the refusal of a suspected person to undergo such a test would properly be evidential of his guilty consciousness,[1] although it would be also open to explanation as due to his repugnance to an unpleasant situation or to ignorance of the superstition:

1875, BRICKELL, C. J., in Gassenheimer v. State, 52 Ala. 316: "The conduct, demeanor, and words of one charged with crime, about the time of its commission or of its discovery, or on his arrest for or on accusation of it, are admissible in evidence against him. The mental emotion he exhibits is a criminative fact of more or less force as it is connected with other facts and circumstances. Alarm, confusion, anger, resentment, or despair may be evinced, and may spring from a consciousness of guilt. In the olden time it was a popular superstition that the corpse of the slain would bleed afresh if touched by the murderer; and it was deemed almost conclusive of guilt that he who was charged with the murder refused to lay his finger on the body or to take his hand; in recent years persons suspected of murder have been required to touch the dead body, not because the old superstition was indulged, but that its effect on them — the emotion produced and manifested — could be observed."

1894, GANTT, P. J., in State v. Wisdom, 119 Mo. 539, 24 S. W. 1051 (testimony was offered that at the morgue the defendant was requested with others to put his hand on the corpse of the murdered man, but he refused): "It was simply a test proposed by some bystander, and it was offered as showing the manner in which the three suspects conducted themselves when it was proposed. While defendant had a perfect right to decline, either because of his instinctive repugnance to the unpleasant task, or because no one had a right to subject him to the test, and his refusal might not prejudice him in the minds of a rational jury; on the other hand, a consciousness of guilt might have influenced him to refuse to undergo the proposed test, however unreasonable it was, and it is one of the circumstances of the case that the jury could weigh."

1894, Feb. 21, Boston Transcript: "B. G. was on trial for the larceny of $365 from Simon Melnikoff, his lodging-house keeper. It will be remembered that when the crime was discovered seven persons who could possibly have taken the money were requested to step into a dark room in Melnikoff's house and touch a live hen fastened on a table. They were told that when the guilty party touched her she would make an outcry. Unknown to the men who entered the room the hen had been saturated with blueing. An inspection of the hands of the men who entered the room showed that all but Goldstein had touched the hen. His hands bore no marks of blueing, and when he was informed of the trick that had been played on him he said he did not understand the condition of the test to be that he must place his hand on the hen. Judge SHERMAN admitted this testimony, and in commenting on the weight it should have with the jury said: 'This test was not applied to determine who was guilty from the result of the thing itself, but it was believed that the guilty one, in the uneasy state of his conscience, would be overcome with dreadful superstition and avoid carrying out the test.'"

§ 275. [1] To these instances add the following: 1828, State v. Guild, 10 N. J. L. 171 (refusal to touch a corpse; admitted below, not criticised on appeal). The illegality of compelling such a test would be immaterial: post, § 2183. But distinguish the case of a refusal to submit one's feet to measurement, or the like; if this be regarded as compulsory self-crimination, then the refusal could not be admissible: post, § 2265.

§ 276. Same: (4) Flight, Escape, Resistance, or Concealment. Flight from justice, and its analogous conduct, have always been deemed indicative of a consciousness of guilt. The wicked flee, even when no man pursueth; but the righteous are bold as a lion. In our primitive system of law, the accused who fled, whether innocent or guilty, suffered forfeiture and escheat;[1] though this was rather a mode of deterring him from refusing to appear for judgment than an evidential rule. It is to-day universally conceded that the fact of an accused's flight, escape from custody, resistance to arrest, concealment, assumption of a false name, and related conduct, are admissible as evidence of consciousness of guilt, and thus of guilt itself:[2]

§ 276. [1] 1607 (?), Coke, 5 Rep. 109 b, Foxley's Case: "For although he be found Not Guilty, yet he shall forfeit his goods by the flying, 'quia fatetur facinus qui judicium fugit', and the law will not admit any proof against this presumption"; so also in 3 Inst. 232, 233; Pollock & Maitland, Hist. English Law, II, 588.

[2] In the following rulings the circumstance offered is flight, unless otherwise specified; and the evidence was admitted where not otherwise stated:

ENGLAND: 1826, R. v. Hazy, 2 C. & P. 458 (trespass; running away from the premises when detected, admitted as evidence of not being there by permission).

UNITED STATES: Alabama: 1853, Campbell v. State, 23 Ala. 44, 75 (plan to escape); 1856, Martin v. State, 28 Ala. 71, 81 (escape); 1871, Murrell v. State, 46 Ala. 89, 91 (same); 1875, Levison v. State, 54 Ala. 519, 527; 1877, Bowles v. State, 58 Ala. 335 (and that the flight was beyond the jurisdiction may be shown); 1881, Sylvester v. State, 71 Ala. 23, 26; 1883, Ross v. State, 74 Ala. 536; 1885, Clarke v. State, 78 Ala. 478; 1895, Whitaker v. State, 106 Ala. 30, 17 So. 456; 1895, Jackson v. State, 106 Ala. 12, 17 So. 333 (flight and assumption of alias); 1896, White v. State, 111 Ala. 92, 21 So. 330; 1905, Franklin v. State, 145 Ala. 669, 39 So. 979 (false statements as to identity); 1906, Allen v. State, 146 Ala. 61, 41 So. 624 ("all the facts connected with the flight" are admissible); 1906, Glass v. State, 147 Ala. 50, 41 So. 727 (resistance at the time of arrest, admitted);
Arizona: 1915, Leonard v. State, 17 Ariz. 293, 151 Pac. 947 (murder; robbery about the same time, admitted as a part of a scheme to escape; citing the above text with approval);
Arkansas: 1867, Flanigan v. State, 25 Ark. 92, 95 (concealment when inspected with others in order to be identified); 1881, Burris v. State, 38 Ark. 221, 225 (flight and escape);
California: 1873, People v. Strong, 46 Cal. 302 (escape, admissible, but, semble, not unless he knows the cause of the arrest); 1873, People v. Stanley, 47 Cal. 113, 118 (escape); 1880, People v. Wong Ah Ngow, 54 Cal. 151, 153 (same; but it does not raise a presumption); 1897, People v. Winthrop, 118 Cal. 85, 50 Pac. 390 (hiding, taking an assumed name, carrying around newspaper accounts of the crime); 1897, People v. Ashmead, 118 Cal. 508, 50 Pac. 681 (failure to return and claim the stolen goods taken from him, admitted); 1898, People v. Vidal, 121 Cal. 221, 53 Pac. 558 (flight from arrest for another crime, excluded); 1900, People v. Lee Dick Lung, 129 Cal. 491, 62 Pac. 71 (but not the mere receipt of letters from other persons advising flight); 1900, People v. Flannelly, 128 Cal. 83, 60 Pac. 670 (resistance to arrest); 1905, People v. Easton, 148 Cal. 50, 82 Pac. 840 (rule applies to a defendant pleading insanity); 1913, People v. Lee Nam Chin, 166 Cal. 570, 137 Pac. 917 (instructions discussed; knowledge of the corpus delicti is necessary, Sloss, J., diss. on this point); 1911, People v. Jones, 160 Cal. 358, 117 Pac. 176 (another instance of the futility of including in the instructions a disquisition of law on the inferences from flight; the opinion seems to approve the two erroneous notions mentioned in par. (a) and (b) supra);
District of Columbia: 1900, Funk v. U. S. 16 D. C. App. 478, 494 ("a confession of a contemplated assault for the purpose of escaping", admitted);
Florida: 1903, Carr v. State, 45 Fla. 11, 34 So. 892 (resistance); 1905, Wooldridge v. State, 49 Fla. 137, 38 So. 3 (and here the governor's proclamation of a reward, the sheriff's testimony of search, etc., were admitted to show the circumstances of the flight);
Georgia: 1852, Whaley v. State, 11 Ga. 123, 126 ("It is argued that this attempt to bribe the guard, in order to effect his escape, is consistent with innocence. But that is no test. Is it not an index of guilt?"); 1858, Revel v. State, 26 Ga. 275, 281 (escape); 1879, Smith v. State, 63 Ga. 168, 170; 1886, Sewell v. Vincent, 76 Ga. 836 (unless explained); 1897, Hudson v. State, 101 Ga. 520, 28 S. E. 1010; 1904, Johnson v. State, 120 Ga. 135, 47 S. E.

1796, L. C. J. EYRE, in Crossfield's Trial, 26 How. St. Tr. 216: "The prosecution say — and they say truly — if they make out that the conduct of the prisoner has been that he has either originally withdrawn himself from justice or that he has taken pains to secrete himself from justice after he was apprehended, that those are circumstances which do at least infer a consciousness of very great guilt, and, if there be no other reason assigned for the conduct of the party, very much corroborating and supporting the charges."

1850, PARSONS, J., in Johnson v. State, 17 Ala. 618, 624: "A flight is universally admitted as evidence of the guilt of the accused, though not conclusive. If we take flight as evidence of fear, and fear as evidence of a known cause of dread or apprehension, we arrive thus at the inference of crime. . . . In this instance, then, we take the flight, a thing of itself harmless and innocent, as evidence of conscious guilt, a necessary consequence of the crime itself; and the conscious guilt, of which the flight was evidence, is proof in its turn of the crime. In this instance, therefore, it is certain that the law ad-

510 ("the events and circumstances connected with the flight" are admissible; here, the denial of identity, etc.); 1905, Grant v. State, 122 Ga. 740, 50 S. E. 946 (flight on seeing the officer in another town, where he had no authority to arrest, admitted); 1921, Jones v. State, 26 Ga. App. 635, 107 S. E. 166 (defendant's failure to appear for trial and forfeiture of recognizance, admitted);

Idaho: 1870, People v. Ah Choy, 1 Ida. 317, 320 (admissible, but only to indicate the perpetrator; where the act is not denied, and the degree of homicide alone in question, excluded; this seems unsound, for there may be a guilty consciousness of the malice of the killing); 1901, State v. Lyons, 7 Ida. 530, 64 Pac. 236;

Illinois: 1874, Barron v. People, 73 Ill. 258, 260 (giving "straw bail" and forfeiting the recognizance; passing under an alias); 1893, Jamison v. People, 145 Ill. 357, 376 (murder; "the circumstances of the pursuit and capture of the defendant by the crowd of people", when he fled, admitted); 1904, McKevitt v. People, 208 Ill. 460, 70 N. E. 693 (resisting arrest, admitted);

Indiana: 1850, Porter v. State, 2 Ind. 435, 436; 1862, Hittner v. State, 19 Ind. 48, 50 (attempt to escape); 1877, Waybright v. State, 56 Ind. 122, 125 (flight does not create a real presumption of law); 1881, Batten v. State, 80 Ind. 394, 400; 1897, Anderson v. State, 147 Ind. 445, 46 N. E. 901 (resistance to arrest); 1900, Barton v. State, 154 Ind. 670, 57 N. E. 515 (failure to appear for trial when under recognizance);

Iowa: 1867, State v. Arthur, 23 Ia. 430, 432 (escape); 1877, State v. James, 45 Ia. 412 (same); 1879, State v. Fowler, 52 Ia. 103, 105, 2 N. W. 983 (resistance to a demand for the weapon, excluded); 1883, State v. Rodman, 62 Ia. 456, 458, 17 N. W. 663 (attempt to escape); 1890, State v. Van Winkle, 80 Ia. 15, 18, 45 N. W. 388 (departure sufficient, if occurring after knowledge that he was or would be charged); 1895, State v. Minard, 96 Ia. 267, 65 N. W. 147 (murder; the defendant's leaving the funeral procession on hearing that he was to be charged with the crime, admitted); 1895, State v. Seymore, 94 Ia. 699, 63 N. W. 663; 1900, Wise v. Schloesser, 111 Ia. 16, 82 N. W. 439 (breach of promise and seduction; doubted for civil cases; the doubt is unfounded); 1904, State v. Poe, 123 Ia. 118, 98 N. W. 587; 1905, State v. Richards, 126 Ia. 497, 102 N. W. 439; 1905, State v. Matheson, 130 Ia. 440, 103 N. W. 137; 1920, State v. O'Meara, 190 Ia. 613, 177 N. W. 563, 569 (knowledge of the charge is not necessary);

Kansas: 1897, State v. Thomas, 58 Kan. 805, 51 Pac. 228; 1902, State v. Stewart, 65 Kan. 371, 69 Pac. 335; 1905, State v. Kesner, 72 Kan. 87, 82 Pac. 720 (failure to appear for trial in pursuance to a recognizance bond);

Kentucky: 1866, Plummer v. Com., 1 Bush 76, 78; 1878, Kennedy v. Com., 14 Bush 345; 1888, Basham v. Com., 87 Ky. 440, 9 S. W. 284 (flight or concealment); 1891, Baker v. Com., — Ky. —, 17 S. W. 625; 1895, Clark v. Com., — Ky. —, 32 S. W. 131 (attempt to escape from jail); 1900, Saylor v. Com., — Ky. —, 57 S. W. 614 (failing to appear under a bail bond, admitted);

Louisiana: 1878, State v. Beatty, 30 La. An. 1267 (attempt to break jail); 1879, State v. Dufour, 31 La. An. 804 (escape); 1896, State v. Harris, 48 La. An. 1189, 20 So. 729; 1901, State v. Middleton, 104 La. 914, 28 So. 904; 1901, State v. Baptiste, 105 La. 661, 30 So. 146; 1905, State v. Nash, 115 La. 719, 39 So. 854 (flight is admissible, even when the killing was open and public; explaining State v. Melton, 37 La. An. 77 and later cases); 1906, State v. High, 116 La. 79, 40 So. 538 (two shots fired by defendant, in resisting arrest, admitted);

Maine: 1879, State v. Frederic, 69 Me. 400, 403 (allowable for flight when sought for arrest; whether he had been informed of the charge or not); 1908, State v. Lambert, 104 Me. 394, 71 Atl. 1092 (possession of a revolver at the time of arrest, admitted);

Massachusetts: 1876, Com. v. Tolliver, 119 Mass. 315 (flight or concealment); 1895, Com. v. Acton, 165 Mass. 11, 42 N. E. 329 (hiding beer from officers searching for liquor illegally kept; the intimation that this might be rejected if the search was illegal and the defend-mits evidence of the party's conduct merely to prove his conscious guilt, which is proof of crime."

1896, PARKER, J., in the Federal District Court for Western Arkansas, charging the jury in Starr v. U. S., 164 U. S. 627, 17 Sup. 224, and in Alberty v. U. S., 162 U. S. 499, 16 Sup. 864: "The law says that a man is to be judged by his consciousness of the right or wrong of what he does, to some extent. If he flees from justice because of that act, if he goes to a distant country, and is living under an assumed name because of that fact, the law says that is not in harmony with what innocent men do, and jurors have a right to consider it as an evidence of guilt, because he is an eyewitness to the occurrence, he knows how it did transpire, he is presumed to have a consciousness of that act. . . . It is a principle of human nature — and every man is conscious of it, I apprehend — that, if he does an act which he is conscious is wrong, his conduct will be along a certain line. He will pursue a certain course not in harmony with the conduct of a man who is conscious that he has ant knew this seems to be improper, because that would furnish merely a counter-explanation of the conduct);

Michigan: 1867, People v. Pitcher, 15 Mich. 397, 406 (concealment); 1878, Probasco v. Cook, 39 Mich. 717, 718 (resistance when arrested); 1895, People v. Caldwell, 107 Mich. 367, 374, 65 N. W. 216; 1900, People v. Keep, 123 Mich. 231, 81 N. W. 1097 (escape from jail of convict for another offence knowing of the present charge against him);
Mississippi: 1849, Cicely v. State, 13 Sm. & M. 202, 221 (hiding);
Missouri: 1851, Fanning v. State, 14 Mo. 386, 390 (attempt to escape); 1857, State v. Phillips, 24 Mo. 475, 484; 1873, State v. Williams, 54 Mo. 170 (attempt to escape after arrest); 1882, State v. Mallon, 75 Mo. 357 (breaking or attempting to break jail); State v. King, 78 Mo. 557; 1897, State v. Evans, 138 Mo. 116, 39 S. W. 462 (the mere fact of presence in another State when arrested is not enough); 1898, State v. Hopper, 142 Mo. 478, 44 S. W. 272 (mere return to home near by is not a flight); 1899, State v. Garrison, 147 Mo. 548, 49 S. W. 508 (escape from jail); 1906, State v. Spaugh, 200 Mo. 571, 98 S. W. 55 (resistance, and other circumstances, while in flight, admitted);
Montana: 1900, State v. Lucey, 24 Mont. 295, 61 Pac. 994 (inability of searchers to find the defendant); 1921, State v. Bonning, — Mont. —, 199 Pac. 274 (knowing receipt of stolen goods; flight when the charge was larceny, admitted);
Nebraska: 1898, McVey v. State, 55 Nebr. 777, 76 N. W. 438 (that the police had searched for the defendant unsuccessfully, admitted); 1901, George v. State, 61 Nebr. 669, 85 N. W. 840 (going to another part of the State); 1904, Kennedy v. State, 71 Nebr. 765, 99 N. W. 645 (attempt to escape); 1904, Woodruff v. State, 72 Nebr. 815, 101 N. W. 1114;
New Hampshire: 1856, State v. Rand, 33 N. H. 216, 225 ("the act of flying and escaping from the place, concealment and disguise of the person, and other acts and conduct of the like character");
New York: 1839, People v. Rathbun, 21 Wend. 509, 518 (advising an accomplice to break jail, admitted); 1880, Ryan v. People, 79 N. Y. 593, 601 (keeping out of the sheriff's way);
North Dakota: 1896, State v. Kent, 5 N. D. 516, 67 N. W. 1052; Oklahoma: 1913, Robinson v. State, 8 Okl. Cr. 667, 130 Pac. 121;
Oregon: 1890, State v. Lee, 17 Or. 488, 21 Pac. 455; 1905, State v. Ryan, 47 Or. 338, 82 Pac. 703; 1909, State v. Osborne, 54 Or. 289, 103 Pac. 62 (flight);
Pennsylvania: 1877, Lanahan v. Com., 84 Pa. 80, 86; 1913, U. S. v. Alegado, 25 P. I. 510 (homicide);
Tennessee: 1844, Tyner v. State, 5 Humph. 386 ("We are told by an early and most venerable authority that the wicked fly when no one pursues; and we are told elsewhere that conscience makes men cowards");
Texas: 1899, Buchanan v. State, 41 Tex. Cr. 127, 52 S. W. 769 (flight after a preliminary charge of another tenor for the same crime, but before indictment, not excluded); 1904, Bennett v. State, 47 Tex. Cr. 52, 81 S. W. 30 (efforts of the sheriff to find the defendant, admitted);
Utah: 1900, State v. Morgan, 22 Utah 162, 61 Pac. 527; 1921, State v. Crawford, — Utah —, 201 Pac. 1031 (attempt to escape while under two charges, held to raise no "presumption of guilt" as to either; unsound, so far as it may signify that the fact was inadmissible);
Vermont: 1901, State v. Shaw, 73 Vt. 149, 50 Atl. 863;
Virginia: 1902, Anderson v. Com., 100 Va. 860, 42 S. E. 865 (escape);
Washington: 1904, State v. Deatherage, 35 Wash. 326, 77 Pac. 504;
Wyoming: 1916, Harris v. State, 23 Wyo. 487, 153 Pac. 881 (larceny; mere failure to surrender voluntarily, not admissible).

On the same principle an attempt at suicide is admissible: 1914, People v. Duncan, 261 Ill. 339, 103 N. E. 1043; 1904, State v. Jaggers, 71 N. J. L. 281, 58 Atl. 1014; 1918, State v. Blancet, 24 N. M. 433, 174 Pac. 207 (murder); done an act which is innocent, right, and proper. The truth is — and it is an old scriptural adage — 'that the wicked flee when no man pursueth, but the righteous are as bold as a lion.' Men who are conscious of right have nothing to fear. They do not hesitate to confront a jury of their country, because that jury will protect them. It will shield them and the more light there is let in upon their case the better it is for them. We are all conscious of that condition, and it is therefore a proposition of the law that, when a man flees, the fact that he does so may be taken against him, provided he does not explain it away upon some other theory than that of his flight because of his guilt."
Contra: 1897, State v. Condotte, 7 N. D. 109, 72 N. W. 913.

This principle has been so many times sanctioned that its frequent modern repetition has become redundant, no further judicial attention should be paid to any bill of exceptions so presumptuous as to raise the question.[3] There remain only a few details that can be open to comment:

(a) It is occasionally required by a Court that the accused should have been aware that he was charged or suspected. This is unnecessary; it is the act of departure that is itself evidential; ignorance of the charge is merely a circumstance that tends to explain away the guilty significance of the conduct.

The limitation has also been advanced that flight is not admissible where the evidence of the offence is direct evidence; but this notion is groundless to the point of absurdity.[4]

(b) It has sometimes been said that an unexplained flight is the admissible evidence. But this is obviously unsound. The prosecution cannot be expected to negative beforehand all conceivable innocent explanations. The fact of flight is of itself significant; it becomes most significant when after all no explanation is forthcoming.

[3] The dissenting opinion of Deemer, C. J., in State v. Poe, Ia., supra, is the most sensible deliverance on this subject, and ought to put an end to judicial quibbling.

In the Federal Supreme Court, the evidential admissibility of the circumstance is conceded in a series of cases, in some of which however a charge of a trial judge (Parker, J., of Ark. W. D.) is disapproved for using the term "presumption": 1896, Hickory v. U. S., 160 U. S. 408, 16 Sup. 327; 1896, Alberty v. U. S., 162 U. S. 509, 16 Sup. 864; 1896, Allen v. U. S., 164 U. S. 492, 17 Sup. 154; 1897, Starr v. U. S., 164 U. S. 227, 17 Sup. 223. These cases, on the point of presumption, are ill advised in their attempts to assume the position of monitor over a great and experienced trial judge. In the Alberty case, the charge did not bear the construction put upon it above. In the Allen case, the opinion repudiates the notion that flight creates a "presumption", and then, in the very next paragraph, itself declares that fabrication of testimony creates a "presumption"; compare § 21, ante, note, §§ 2490, 2511, post.

The unfortunate influence of the above Federal cases may be seen in the following opinions: 1914, Stewart, U. S., 9th C. C. A., 211 Fed. 41 (an instruction held not to be within the rulings of the Hickory and Alberty cases); 1910, People v. Fiorentino, 197 N. Y. 560, 92 N. E. 195 (here the Court gives undue weight to Hickory v. U. S., and erroneously says that "flight of itself is no evidence of guilt" is "sound as an abstract proposition of law"; of course, the same would be true of any evidence whatever: "of itself" it is not proof; but it is absurd to single out flight as the subject for such a charge); 1911, Terr. v. Lucero, 16 N. M. 652, 120 Pac. 304 (following the Federal cases); 1911, State v. Papa, 32 R. I. 453, 80 Atl. 12. In the following case an instruction was held correct: 1915, Campbell v. U. S., 9th C. C. A., 221 Fed. 186.

Another form of quibble, using the present principle as a steeple-chase obstacle to win the game of a lawsuit, is to name all these possible aspects of the inference as instructions to the jury; of course the trial judge cannot be expected to divine just how the Supreme Court will agree on all details; hence frequent reversals; e.g. 1912, State v. Schmulback, 243 Mo. 533, 147 S. W. 966.

[4] 1922, Rowan v. U. S., 7th C. C. A., 277 Fed. 777 (decisive refutation of the notion; per Baker, J.).

(c) The flight of another person is relevant so far only as the accused has connived at it; [5] and it may then also become relevant as an act of suppression of testimony (post, § 278).

(d) Whether the fact of flight raises a presumption of law is a question of the rules of presumption (post, §§ 2490, 2511).

(e) On the logical principle of Explanation (ante, § 32), the accused may always endeavor to destroy the guilty significance of his conduct by facts which indicate it to be equally or more consistent with some other hypothesis than that of a consciousness of guilt: [6]

1878, COFER, J., in Kennedy v. Com., 14 Bush 346 (the accused offered to show that he fled, while being conducted to jail, because "the jail to which he was being conducted was in a filthy condition"); "When flight had been proved as furnishing evidence of guilt, it is competent for the accused to prove other causes which may have influenced him to fly, and leave the jury to decide whether his flight was caused by a consciousness of guilt and apprehension of conviction, or by such other causes as he may prove to have existed. But it would be clear that a mere aversion to lawful imprisonments could not be allowed to be given in evidence for that purpose. . . . The appellant [by appealing to the judge] thus had in his power the means of relieving himself from the danger which he claims to have apprehended from the condition of the jail. . . . Evidence of apprehended danger, in order to be admissible to rebut the inference of guilt which may be drawn from an escape and flight, should show such danger as could not have been readily,

[5] 1909, Lowman v. State, 161 Ala. 47, 50 So. 43 (flight of an accomplice, excluded); 1873, People v. Stanley, 47 Cal. 113, 118 (escape of a co-indictee, excluded); 1867, People, v. Pitcher, 15 Mich. 397, 406 (flight of an accomplice; admitted, the defendant having instigated the flight); 1879, Cummins v. People, 42 Mich. 142, 3 N. W. 305 (flight of an accomplice, found with the defendant when arrested, admitted); 1839, People v. Rathbun, 21 Wend. N. Y. 509, 518 (cited in the preceding note).

The following is of course correct: 1906, Boykin v. State, 89 Miss. 19, 42 So. 601 (that the county had paid the reward for the arrest of defendant as a fleeing homicide, excluded).

[6] 1885, Chamblee v. State, 78 Ala. 466, 468 (certain explanatory evidence, held irrelevant); 1902, Sanders v. State, 131 Ala. 1, 31 So. 564 (acts of a lynching mob three weeks after the flight, excluded); 1913, Goforth v. State, 183 Ala. 66, 63 So. 8 (postcards mailed by the accused shortly after his departure, admitted to indicate non-concealment of his whereabouts, and thus to rebut the inference of guilt of a murder from his flight); 1892, U. S. v. Cross, 20 D. C. 378 (explanation admitted); 1858, Golden v. State, 25 Ga. 527, 531 (fear of an attack from one who had already assaulted him, admitted); 1881, Batten v. State, 80 Ind. 394, 400 (fear of violence from bystanders, admitted); 1885, Welch v. State, 104 Ind. 347, 352, 3 N. E. 850 (excluded, because no evidence of the flight had been offered); 1901, Bradburn v. U. S., 3 Ind. T. 604, 64 S. W. 550 (that he had been advised to leave, to avoid vengeance by the deceased's friends, allowed); 1899, State v. Desmond, 109 Ia. 72, 80 N. W. 214 (defendant's attempt to escape, held explainable as due to fear of mob violence); 1860, Plummer v. Com., 1 Bush Ky. 76, 78 (fear of violence from soldiers and from the mob, admitted); 1876, Com. v. Tolliver, 119 Mass. 314 (the defendant having denied that he concealed himself and affirmed that he went about openly, evidence that he was disguised when going about was admitted); 1895, People v. Caldwell, 107 Mich. 374, 65 N. W. 213 ("It is always open to the person to make explanation of the reason of his escape, to show that he was not prompted by a consciousness of guilt", but a voluntary return after escape did not furnish such explanation); 1856, State v. Hays, 23 Mo. 287, 316 (explanation allowed); 1857, State v. Phillips, 24 Mo. 484 (popular excitement as a reason for flight, not admitted here, because it did not yet exist at the time of flight, nor could it be apprehended); 1882, State v. Mallon, 75 Mo. 355 (maltreatment admitted, in explanation); 1883, State v. King, 78 Mo. 557 ("the presumption or inference from guilt arising from flight may be modified or overthrown by testimony showing that the flight of the defendant was occasioned by other causes than consciousness of guilt"); 1896, State v. Taylor, 134 Mo. 109, 35 S. W. 92 (that he was willing to return when arrested, not admitted); 1916, Jackson v. State, 12 Okl. Cr. 406, 157 Pac. 945 (rape); 1913, State v. Hogg, 64 Or. 57, 129 Pac. 115 (flight to escape a mob).

Compare the doctrine post, § 293, as to conduct indicating consciousness of innocence.

efficiently, and with entire safety provided against by the accused, either by his own act or through the instrumentality of the officers of the law."

Such attempts at explanation are sometimes declared improper; but the general and sounder tendency is to admit them freely, leaving to the jury to pass upon their plausibility.

§ 277. Conduct, as evidence of Consciousness of a Weak Cause; (1) General Theory. The second class of cases already noted (§ 267, par. b) includes those in which the inference is towards an act or event not necessarily a personal deed, and thus the circumstantial nature of the evidence is less marked (though not less real) in comparison with its testimonial nature. For example, when A, the defendant in an action by B for slander, bribes a witness to assist in proving a plea of truth as to B's misdoing, A's conduct is some evidence of a consciousness that his cause is a weak one; and yet A can ordinarily have no personal knowledge, one way or the other, of B's misdeed, so that his belief or consciousness is not a mark or a trace of his own past act, but is an impression founded on all that he has been able to learn by inquiry. Thus if A were a third person, the evidential use of his conduct amounts to little more than using his hearsay assertion, and the objection expounded in Wright v. Tatham (quoted supra, 267) applies in fullest force. Consequently, such evidence would have to be confined to the conduct of parties in the cause, since for them it would at any rate be receivable as an admission; for any assertion by an opponent in the cause may be offered against him as an admission (post, § 1048). It is true that, so far as the conduct is that of a criminal defendant, it may be referred to a consciousness of his personal deed, and thus would fall under the first class already noted (§ 267, par. a; § 273). But the sort of conduct in question — suppression of evidence, bribery of witnesses, non-production of evidence, and the like — is as a matter of law receivable equally against civil parties, and must therefore be treated in the light of this broader use.

It is enough, then, for practical purposes to note that this kind of conduct, though circumstantial in its nature, is guarded against evidential misuse as hearsay by using it, in civil cases, only when predicated of the party opponent, i.e. only when it could be treated as an admission; while in criminal cases, though not theoretically so restricted, practically it does not exceed the same limits except in the rare instances when it is offered to prove a third person the really guilty party (ante, § 142).

So far as regards the nature of the conduct which is open to this inference, all that can be said, in generalizing, is that there are broadly two sorts; first, conduct indicating a consciousness of the weakness of the cause in general, — bribery, destruction of evidence, and the like; and, secondly, conduct indicating a consciousness of the weakness of a specific element in the cause, — failure to produce a particular witness or a document, and the like. In the former, the inference is an indefinite one, that the whole cause must be an unfounded one since such means are employed to sustain it; in the latter, the inference is a definite one, that the specific witness or document bears unfavorably on the cause.

§ 278 Same: (2) Falsehood, Fraud, Fabrication and Suppression of Evidence, Bribery, Spoliation, and the like. It has always been understood — the inference, indeed, is one of the simplest in human experience — that a party's falsehood or other fraud in the preparation and presentation of his cause, his fabrication or suppression of evidence by bribery or spoliation, and all similar conduct, is receivable against him as an indication of his consciousness that his case is a weak or unfounded one, and from that consciousness may be inferred the fact itself of the cause's lack of truth and merit. The inference thus does not apply itself necessarily to any specific fact in the cause, but operates, indefinitely though strongly, against the whole mass of alleged facts constituting his cause. The nature of the inference, in general, may be gathered from the following passages, which deal with one or another variety of conduct of this character:

1743, Craig dem. Annesley v. Earl of Anglesea, 17 How. St. Tr. (Ire.) 1217. In this celebrated case [1] the plaintiff claimed to be the legitimate son of the defendant's brother, and the true heir to the estates and peerage; he showed that at the age of 14 he had been kidnapped by the defendant's procurement and transported to Pennsylvania, and after 15 years' slavery had escaped back to England and instituted a suit to obtain his rights; while on the way to begin proceedings, he joined the gamekeeper of a friend in catching some poachers, and one of them was killed by a shot from his gun, which he claimed went off accidentally; he had been tried for murder and acquitted; he now proposed to show "that the relations of the deceased, being convinced that the killing was only accidental, had intended a very slight prosecution, but that the defendant, who was in no way related to or acquainted with the person killed, employed a solicitor and carried on a severe prosecution against Mr. Annesley at a very great expense, and declared 'he would spend £10,000 to get him hanged';" the purpose of this evidence was to "strengthen that evidence of the defendant's spiriting away the lessor of the plaintiff, and show the defendant's continued design of removing this gentleman from any possibility of asserting his birthright." MOUNTENEY, B. (for admission): "The foundation of my opinion is this: Every act done by the defendant, which hath a tendency to show a consciousness in him of title in the lessor of the plaintiff, must I think be admitted, beyond all controversy, to be pertinent and legal evidence in the present cause. I think that the evidence now offered hath that tendency, and consequently is proper to be admitted. This evidence of the prosecution, in my apprehension, stands exactly on the same footing with the evidence of the kidnapping, . . . for I can by no means enter into the distinction of lawful and unlawful acts, which seems to have so much weight with my lord chief baron. That unlawful act was not therefore, in my apprehension, to be admitted in evidence because unlawful, but because it had a tendency to show such a consciousness as I have mentioned in the defendant; and if the carrying on the prosecution (which must be admitted to be a very extraordinary, though lawful, act of the defendant) hath the same tendency, it ought upon the same principle to be admitted." DAWSON, B., was at first undecided, but later agreed with Mounteney, B. Chief Baron BOWES also, in charging the jury, finally showed his accord with the same general principle, in thus alluding to the kidnapping: "You will also consider whether these acts are not evidence to satisfy you that the defendant, in his own thoughts and way of reasoning, considered the staying of the boy here as what might some way prejudice his title. But whether, as insisted upon by the plaintiff's counsel, you ought to take this as an admission on the part of the defendant that the plaintiff was the lawful son of Lord Altham [earl of Anglesea], will deserve further consideration. Undoubtedly there is a violent presumption, because no man is supposed to be wicked without design, and the design in this act must be some way or other relative to the title; but whether or no it was the opinion of the trouble he might have from this lad that induced him to do the act, or a consciousness that the lad was the son of Lord Altham, must be left to your determination."

§ 278. [1] This great controversy led to three trials; the first, R. v. Annesley, 17 How. St. Tr. 1093 was for the murder; the second, Annesley v. Anglesea, was for the title to the estates; and the third, R. v. Heath, 18 How. St. Tr. 1, was for perjury committed by the chief witness for the defendant at the second trial. The remarkable feature is that, though the jury found for the claimant in the second trial, yet in the third, in which the whole cause was virtually re-tried, the jury acquitted of perjury the chief witness against the claimant at the second trial. The trials (omitting most of Heath's Trial) have been reprinted (1912) in the Notable English Trials Series (later termed Notable British Trials Series), under the distinguished editorship of Mr. Andrew Lang.

1870, COCKBURN, C. J., in Moriarty v. R. Co., L. R. 5 Q. B. 319: "The conduct of a party to the cause may be of the highest importance in determining whether the cause of action in which he is plaintiff, or the ground of defence if he is defendant, is honest and just, — just as it is evidence against a prisoner that he has said one thing at one time and another at another, as showing that recourse to falsehoods leads fairly to an inference of guilt. Anything from which such an inference can be drawn is cogent and important evidence with a view to the issue. So, if you can show that a plaintiff has been suborning false testimony, and has endeavored to have recourse to perjury, it is strong evidence that he knew perfectly well his cause was an unrighteous one. I do not say that it is conclusive; I fully agree that it should be put to the jury with the intimation that it does not always follow, because a man, not sure he shall be able to succeed by righteous means, has recourse to means of a different character, that that which he desires, namely, the gaining of the victory, is not his due, or that he has not good ground for believing that justice entitles him to it; . . . but it is always evidence."

1873, COCKBURN, C. J., in R. v. Castro (Tichborne Case), Charge to the Jury, I, 813: "These falsehoods [of the defendant], however, must not operate unduly to the prejudice of the defendant beyond this, that falsehood is a badge of fraud; and a case which is sought to be supported by means of deception may 'prima facie', until the contrary be shown, be taken to be a bad and dishonest case; and, further, the recourse to fraud and falsehood necessarily engenders distrust."

1905, PHILLIMORE, J., in R. v. Watt, 20 Cox Cr. 852: "The principle is in fact well established. . . . It is this, that the conduct in the litigation of a party to it, if it is such as to lead to the reasonable inference that he disbelieves in his own case, may be proved and used as evidence against him."

1850, SHAW, C. J., in Com. v. Webster, 5 Cush. 295, 316: "To the same head may be referred all attempts on the part of the accused to suppress evidence, to suggest false and deceptive explanations, and to cast suspicion without just cause on other persons, — all or any of which tend somewhat to prove consciousness of guilt, and, when proved, to exert an influence against the accused. But this consideration is not to be pressed too urgently; because an innocent man, when placed by circumstances in a condition of suspicion and danger, may resort to deception in the hope of avoiding the force of such proofs."

1862, BIGELOW, C. J., in Egan v. Bowker, 5 All. 452 (admitting evidence of subornation of a witness): "The inference is a reasonable and proper one that a person having an honest and fair debt will not endeavor to support it by falsehood and fraud; and the fact that he resorts to such means of proof has a tendency to show that he knows he cannot maintain his suit by evidence derived from pure and incorrupt sources."

1874, State v. Reed, 62 Me. 145; the following charge was approved: "There is no reason, if he is innocent, for withholding a single truth; there is every reason for uttering it if innocent. If guilty, if he does not confess, the resort in all cases is or must ever be to falsehood, evasion, or silence. . . . Each falsehood uttered by way of exculpation becomes an article of circumstantial evidence of greater or less inculpatory force."

1875, Ross, J., in Green v. Woodbury, 48 Vt. 6: "All authorized attempts of a party to suppress the testimony of the other party are clearly admissible, and are evidence that in such party's own conviction his case will not bear full examination. They show a consciousness in such party of the weakness of his own cause."

As the general principle applies in common to all these forms of conduct, it is not necessary, nor is it usually possible, to discriminate the precedents that apply it in one or another form. Roughly classifying them, they admit all forms of:

Personal falsification by the party in the course of the litigation; [2]

[2] Federal: 1869, U. S. v. Randall, Deady 524, 542, 543 (contradictions, misstatements, falsifications of entries); 1896, Wilson v. U. S., 162 U. S. 613, 16 Sup. 895 (false stories); 1893, Tucker v. U. S., 151 U. S. 164, 168, 14 Sup. 299 (affidavit of continuance); 1910, Waller v. U. S., 8th C. C. A., 179 Fed. 810 (feigning insanity); Alabama: 1873, Walker v. State, 49 Ala. 398, 401 (lying explanation of suspicious circumstances); 1875, Lavison v. State, 54 Ala. 519, 527 ("fabrication of evidence"); Arkansas: 1894, Jones v. State, 59 Ark. 417, 27 S. W. 601; s. c. 61 Ark. 88, 32 S. W. 81 ("false, improbable, and [or] contradictory statements" explaining suspicious circumstances against him); 1907, Weaver v. State, 83 Ark. 119, 102 S. W. 713 (affidavit for continuance; repudiating Burris v. State, 38 Ark. 221, infra, and Polk v. State, 45 Ark. 165, on the ground that they were decided when an accused was disqualified to testify); 1914, Billings v. U. S., 42 D. C. App. 413 (accused's false denial that he had before been arrested and photographed in the rogues' gallery, excluded); Indiana: 1897, Hinshaw v. State, 147 Ind. 334, 47 N. E. 158 (telling a false story); Maine: 1874, State v. Benner, 64 Me. 267, 289 (false stories); 1921, State v. Ward, 119 Me. 482, 111 Atl. 805 (murder); Massachusetts: 1902, Com. v. Devaney, 182 Mass. 33, 64 N. E. 402 (lying); 1906, Bennett v. Susser, 191 Mass. 329, 77 N. E. 884 (a "deliberate misstatement of fact" by a party on a material point may be considered by the jury "as an admission that his claim is wrongful"; but here the instruction was not held demandable; Michigan: 1880, People v. Arnold, 43 Mich. 303, 306, 5 N. W. 385 (defendant's statement at the prior trial, admitted and allowed to be shown false; Curley, J.: "It betrays a consciousness that, unless the jury are made to believe a falsehood, the case against the party is sufficient to convict him"; Christiancy, J., diss., but his opinion seems to rest on the rule that a witness is not to be contradicted on a collateral point, — a rule not here applicable, because it is the party's fabrication as defendant, not as witness, that is offered); 1905, People v. Hoffmann, 142 Mich. 531, 105 N. W. 838 (false affidavit of continuance); Missouri: 1901, State v. Furgerson, 162 Mo. 668, 63 S. W. 101 (false stories, etc.); Nevada: 1874, State v. En, 10 Nev. 277, 281 (larceny; different statements as to show possession was obtained, admitted); New York: 1874, Coleman v. People, 58 N. Y. 556, 560 (false statements received "as showing a consciousness of wrong"); Oregon: 1906, State v. Jennings, 48 Or. 483, 87 Pac. 524 (false statements); Wisconsin: 1879, Dickerson v. State, 48 Wis. 288, 293, 4 W. W. 321 (false stories).

Contra, but unsound: 1881, Burris v. State, 38 Ark. 221, 225 (an affidavit for continuance to secure absent witnesses had stated that they would prove threats of the deceased; on the trial these witnesses were offered by the State to testify that they had never heard such threats nor told the defendant about them; excluded, on the theory that the defendant's character was attacked; the present use of such evidence was ignored; it showed a corrupt falsification by the defendant).

1905, Darrell v. Com., — Ky. —, 88 S. W. 1060 (this astonishing ruling holds that where the State has avoided a demand for continuance by admitting an affidavit of testimony of absent witness, the State cannot show that the witness is dead and that the sworn statement as to his absence was false; compare § 2595, n. 2, post).

The apparent ruling in Brown v. State, 142 Ala. 287, 38 So. 268 (1904), that the fabrication of a statement of testimony of an absent witness ("showing") cannot be proved, where the party has neither formally introduced the showing nor called the witness, seems erroneous.

Distinguish the improper attempt to argue from the falsity of the defendant's case as a whole; this would be a begging of the question; 1892, Com. v. Trefethen, 157 Mass. 180, 199, 31 N. E. 961 ("To argue that, by the other evidence, the defendant is shown to be guilty and that therefore his denial of guilt is false and is additional evidence against him, ought not to be permitted").

Compare the principle of 'falsus in uno' as applied to witnesses (post, § 1008).

Fabrication or manufacture of evidence, by forgery, bribery, subornation, and the like; [3]

Suppression of evidence, by intimidation, eloignment, or concealment of witnesses or material objects,[4] or [3] ENGLAND: 1743, Craig dem. Annesley v. Anglesea, 17 How. St. Tr. 1217 (see quotation supra); 1806, Vowles v. Young, 13 Ves. Jr. 140 (forgery of a register; Erskine, L. C.: "Every case must depend upon its own circumstances"); 1870, Moriarty v. R. Co., L. R. 5 Q. B. 314 (attempts to suborn witnesses, by the plaintiff and by C. acting under his authority; Blackburn, J.: "I think there is no case or authority in which the present point was actually ruled, except the celebrated case of Annesley v. Earl of Anglesea"; the proper inference is that "he was very doubtful about his case, — not necessarily that he thought his case untrue, but that it was not a good one"; see quotation supra); 1876, Lacey v. Hill, L. R. 4 Ch. D. 537, 543 (Jessel, M. R.: "No man makes fictitious entries and commits forgeries except to conceal that which he knows ought to be concealed for his own credit; and therefore no one can doubt for a moment that Sir R. Harvey was perfectly well aware that he was committing these frauds"); 1680, Earl of Stafford's Trial, 7 How. St. Tr. 1461, 1479 (that the defendant had tried unsuccessfully to bribe a person to come as witness, admitted); 1905, R. v. Watt, 20 Cox Cr. 852 (that the defendant had induced a witness to testify falsely on a prior day in the same cause, admitted; good opinion by Phillimore, J.).

UNITED STATES: Federal: 1896, Allen v. U. S., 164 U. S. 492, 17 Sup. 154 (using false testimony); Illinois: 1882, Chicago C. R. Co. v. McMahon, 103 Ill. 485, 487 (attempt to bribe a witness; "it is in the nature of and implies an admission that he has no right to recover if the case was tried on the evidence as it exists, — that it is not sufficient to recover unless aided by suppressing evidence or the fabrication of more evidence"); 1903, U. S. Brewing Co. v. Ruddy, 203 Ill. 306, 67 N. E. 799 (subornation of witnesses); Iowa: 1905, State v. Koller, 129 Ia. 111, 105 N. W. 391 (adultery; the wife's attempt to dissuade the husband's witnesses, admitted); 1911, State v. Kimes, 152 Ia. 240, 132 N. W. 180 (subornation of a witness to perjury); Kentucky: 1920, Hall v. Com., 189 Ky. 72, 224 S. W. 492 (procuring a witness to testify falsely, admitted); Louisiana: 1904, State v. Gianfala, 113 La. 463, 37 So. 30 (offer of bribe to the deputy to release him); Massachusetts: 1862, Egan v. Bowker, 5 All. 449, 451 (suborning a witness, admitted, though the deposition had not been used); 1877, Com. v. Wallace, 123 Mass. 400 (attempt to bribe an arresting officer); 1881, Lynch v. Coffin, 131 Mass. 311, semble (attempt to suborn a witness); Michigan: 1874, People v. Mason, 29 Mich. 31, 39 (attempt to influence a witness and to bribe jurymen); Mississippi: 1903, Baker v. State, 82 Miss. 84, 33 So. 716 (defendant's request to B. to testify falsely if called, B. not being called, excluded; unsound); 1905, Dickey v. State, 86 Miss. 525, 28 So. 776 (attempt to suborn perjury); Nebraska: 1904, Blair v. State, 72 Nebr. 501, 101 N. W. 17 (removal of the prosecutrix); New Mexico: 1915, State v. Ancheta, 20 N. M. 19, 145 Pac. 1086 (attempt to bribe a witness); North Carolina: 1877, State v. Brown, 76 N. C. 222, 224 (using false testimony; but the falsities of a witness of the defendant must of course have been known to him beforehand); Oklahoma: 1921, Rogers v. State, — Okl. Cr. —, 197 Pac. 525 (unlawful possession of liquor; offer of money to arresting officers, admitted); Oregon: 1895, State v. Reinhart, 26 Or. 466, 38 Pac. 825 (false entries of account); Pennsylvania: 1898, McHugh v. McHugh, 186 Pa. 197, 40 Atl. 410 (attempt to suborn witnesses and to corrupt jurors, admitted; that defendant was acting as executrix only, immaterial); Vermont: 1855, State v. Williams, 27 Vt. 724, 726 (deposition); West Virginia: 1920, Maynard v. Bailey, 85 W. Va. 679, 102 S. E. 480 (letter offering a bribe, etc., admitted); 1921, State v. Weissenhoff, 89 W. Va. 279, 109 S. E. 707 ("money is no object to me; I want to get out of it", said to the sheriff, admitted).

[4] CANADA: 1888, Vye v. Alexander, 28 N. Br. 89, 93, 94, semble (libel; defendant's change of signature since litigation began, admissible to prove consciousness of guilt); 1889, Alexander v. Vye, 16 Can. Sup. 501 (foregoing case affirmed);

UNITED STATES: To the following, add the general Code provisions, cited post, § 285: Alabama: 1857, Liles v. State, 30 Ala. 24 (ordering his wife to hold her tongue about the matter, admitted); 1875, Levison v. State, 54 Ala. 519, 528 (a conversation with his associate, "Lie still, and keep your damned mouth shut", admitted); California: Cal. C. C. P. 1872, § 1963, Pac. 5 (it is presumed that "evidence wilfully suppressed would be adverse if produced"); 1895, People v. Chin Hane, 108 Cal. 597, 41 Pac. 697 (intimidation of witness); 1898, People v. Clausen, 120 Cal. 381, 52 Pac. 658 (failure of pawnbroker to enter goods in book required by law, evidence of guilty knowledge that they were stolen); Connecticut: 1896, State v. Hogan, 67 Conn. 581, 35 Atl. 508 (keeping away a witness); 1907, In re Durant, 80 Conn. 140, 67 Atl. 497 (intimidating a witness; the witness' deposition admitted, to show what had led to the intimidation); Indiana: 1900, Keesier v. State, 154 Ind. 242, 56 N. E. 232 (intimidation of witnesses;

Destruction or spoliation of material objects in general [5] or of documents in particular (post, § 291).

§ 279. Same: Other rules discriminated; Confessions, Impeachment of Witnesses, Failure to prove Alibi, etc. In applying the principle to the foregoing instances, no difficulty arises except so far as it becomes necessary to discriminate certain other principles.

(1) The rules of limitation for an accused's confession of guilt do not apply to conduct of the foregoing sorts, because a confession, properly so called, is a direct assertion of the incriminating fact and does not include within its definition mere conduct used circumstantially (post, § 821).

(2) A witness may be impeached by his corrupt conduct consisting in bribery or subornation of other witnesses or of court-officers; this is dealt with elsewhere (post, §§ 957 ff.).

(3) The mere failure to produce witnesses, documents, or chattels must be distinguished from the suppression or concealment of them; the inference

"such conduct is regarded as in the nature of an admission that the party has a bad case, which cannot be supported by honest proof"); Iowa: 1878, State v. Hudson, 50 Ia. 157 (furnishing money for an accomplice's escape); Maine: 1844, State v. Bruce, 24 Me. 72 (property obtained by threats; its subsequent concealment admitted); Massachusetts: 1877, Com. v. Wallace, 123 Mass. 400 (illegal liquor-selling; concealment of bottles); 1895, Com. v. Welch, 163 Mass. 372, 40 N. E. 103 (liquor-selling; refusal to let an officer see something hidden under the clothing and shaped like a bottle); 1899, Adams v. Swift, 172 Mass. 521, 52 N. E. 1068 (concealing identity after a collision); 1900, Jones v. Shattuck, 175 Mass. 415, 56 N. E. 736 (refusal to disclose one's name, on request, after a collision, admitted); 1910, Minihan v. Boston Elev. R. Co., 205 Mass. 402, 91 N. E. 414 (intimidation of witnesses); Missouri: 1907, State v. Mathews, 202 Mo. 143, 100 S. W. 420 (threats to dissuade the prosecuting witness from appearing, admitted); 1919, Rice v. Jefferson C. B. & T. Co., — Mo. —, 216 S. W. 746 (death by electric railway; defendant's concealment of death from relatives, and misrepresentation of its cause, held open to inference); 1921, State v. Howe, 287 Mo. 1, 228 S. W. 477 (attempting to "spirit away" a witness); New Mexico: 1918, State v. Riddle, 23 N. M. 613, 170 Pac. 61 (larceny of cattle; branding another's maverick in an unrecorded brand and later altering it to the party's own brand, admitted as "a form of deception . . . of highly probative value"); New York: 1915, People v. Willett, 213 N. Y. 368, 107 N. E. 707 (corrupt procurement of nomination; certain editorials by other persons, admitted as interpreting defendant's conduct in suppressing facts, etc.); 1916, People v. Galbo, 218 N. Y. 283, 112 N. E. 1041 (concealment of a body, as evidence of share in murder); North Dakota: 1899, State v. Rozum, 8 N. D. 548, 80 N. W. 480 (intimidation of witness); Porto Rico: Rev. St. C. 1911, § 1470 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1963); Vermont: 1864, State v. Barron, 37 Vt. 57, 61 (getting witnesses out of the way); 1898, State v. Taylor, 70 Vt. 1, 39 Atl. 447 (refusal to give name, age, and residence, to attending physician after arrest, held admissible, by a majority of the Court); Wisconsin: 1882, Snell v. Bray, 56 Wis. 156, 162, 14 N. W. 14 (letters to a witness urging non-appearance; also letters urging a particular tenor of testimony).

[5] 1898, Roberson v. State, 40 Fla. 509, 24 So. 474 (burning a house to destroy evidence of burglary, admitted); 1903, Weightnovel v. State, 46 Fla. 1, 35 So. 856 (abortion); 1881, Betts v. State, 66 Ga. 508, 512 (murder; throwing away money taken from the deceased); 1862, Com. v. Hall, 4 All. Mass. 306 (swallowing a counterfeit bill when arrested on the charge of uttering counterfeit bills); 1877, Com. v. Wallace, 123 Mass. 400 (illegally keeping liquor with intent to sell; destruction of the liquors); 1882, Com. v. Daily, 133 Mass. 577 (same; intentional breaking of a bottle); 1892, Com. v. Sullivan, 156 Mass. 487, 31 N. E. 647 (same; destruction of liquor); 1904, Harper v. State, 83 Miss. 402, 35 So. 572 (hypodermic injections, to prevent the victim from telling, excluded; absurd); 1883, State v. Dickson, 78 Mo. 438, 448 (murder; burying the dead body in a hole, and false statements as to the cause of the deceased's disappearance, admitted); 1920, State v. Moss, 95 Or. 616, 188 Pac. 702 (larceny of cattle; "the mere fact that one man's brand is found upon another man's animal" is not sufficient evidence, without connecting the defendant in some way with the branding).

from the former conduct is a more restricted one (examined elsewhere, post, §§ 285–291). In particular, the failure to establish an alleged alibi is to be distinguished from the use of perjury or subornation in an unsuccessful attempt to prove the 'alibi'; the latter admits of the usual broad inference from fraud, but the former amounts to nothing more than an inability to prove the specific fact of 'alibi':[1]

1866, WELCH, J., in Toler v. State, 16 Oh. St. 585: "The defendant's case is often much weakened by an unsuccessful attempt to prove an 'alibi.' But this result happens, not because of any implied or technical admission involved in the attempt, but because of fraud and subornation of perjury manifested in the attempt. . . . In no case can the attempt be held to involve an admission of crime, nor the simple failure to establish it afford any presumption of the defendant's presence at the time and place when and where the crime was committed. . . . It can have no effect upon the question of his presence at the place charged, otherwise than by disclosing falsehood and prevarication and thus affording general evidence of guilt."

(4) An offer of compromise is in general inadmissible (post, § 1062); hence, in a criminal prosecution, an offer of money to the injured party, which might otherwise be admissible as an attempt to bribe a witness, may be inadmissible if construable merely as an offer to redress the wrong.[2]

§ 280. Same: Fraud in Separate Litigation; Fraud by Agents. (1) The use of fraudulent practice in a separate litigation has of itself no other significance than a reflection on the opponent's general character as an unscrupulous man, and is of course from that point of view inadmissible (ante, §§ 55, 64). But, so far as the other litigation involves substantially the same issue or object as the present one, a party's fraudulent conduct in the former, indicating a consciousness of the weakness of his cause, carries the same indication for the present cause, since by hypothesis the two causes are substantially the same with reference to the party's motives. On principle, then, the misconduct of the party in other litigation should be received, provided the issue involved was in effect the same, or provided the interests at stake in that and the present litigation are so united that the motive to suc-

§ 279. [1] Accord: 1876, Porter v. State, 55 Ala. 107; 1902, Tatum v. State, 131 Ala. 32, 31 So. 369; 1883, Kilgore v. State, 74 Ala. 8; 1881, People v. Malaspina, 57 Cal. 628; 1869, White v. State, 31 Ind. 262, 264 ("The fabrication of an 'alibi', like the wilful introduction of false and fabricated evidence in support of any other ground of defence, is a circumstance against the accused"; but not the mere failure to succeed in showing an 'alibi'); 1904, State v. Aspara, 113 La. 940, 37 So. 883 (false statements as to alibi); 1878, Turner v. Com., 86 Pa. 54, 73; 1898, Ford v. State, 101 Tenn. 454, 47 S. W. 703.

Contra: 1922, Threet v. State, — Ala. App. —, 91 So. 890 ("an attempt to prove any material fact in defense, followed by a failure, is a circumstance to be weighed against the party making it", whether the fact be an alibi or any other fact; unsound); 1870, State v. Josey, 64 N. C. 56, 59, semble (mere failure to prove an 'alibi' suffices).

But any inference which merely accepts the failure of evidence to deny the fact, as indicating the truth of the fact, is permissible on the principle of § 285, post: 1865, Gordon v. People, 33 N. Y. 501, 508 (inference allowable for failure to account for whereabouts); 1879, Dean's Case, 32 Gratt. Va. 912, 925 ("the failure unexplained to assert the defence of an 'alibi' when it could first be made [here, at the preliminary examination], and if true would be conclusive, is always regarded . . . as a most suspicious circumstance", indicating that the 'alibi' was false).

[2] 1906, Sanders v. State, 148 Ala. 603, 41 So. 466 (rape; offer of money to the woman's father).

ceed unlawfully in the present case might be supposed to be furthered by fraud in the former one.[1]

(2) Where the fraudulent act — bribery, intimidation, spoliation, or the like — has personally been committed by an agent or other third person, and not by the party-opponent himself, it is obvious that the act must be brought home to the party's connivance or sanction, express or implied, in order to use it as indicating any consciousness on his part of a weak cause. In thus connecting it with the party, it is to be noted, on the one hand, that no mere technical theory of agency will suffice to charge him; for it is not a question of legal liability, but of actual moral connivance. On the other hand, no less should mere technical deficiencies of proof be allowed to exonerate him; due regard to the common probabilities of experience should be paid. For example, if a witness has been suborned by B, a clerk in the defendant's bank, it is idle to argue that such a clerk has no implied authority to tamper with witnesses, and therefore that some conversation or letter of the defendant, expressly authorizing B's errand, must be proved. Why should B meddle in such fashion, except upon some hint or order from the defendant? The relation between the two, together with common experience, should suffice to admit the fact, leaving to the defendant the opportunity to exculpate himself, as he easily could if innocent of any share. The common probabilities of such cases cannot be ignored; and it is better to admit such facts in the fair certainty that an innocent party can protect himself, than to exclude them by requiring such a degree of connecting proof as practically gives a general immunity to fraud and chicanery. Most Courts exhibit an undue tenderness for technicality in dealing with such evidence, and shut their eyes, with solemn pretence, to that which every one must believe to be deserving of strong suspicion. No general rule seems to have found acceptance;[2] but the wide variety of judicial attitude may be seen in the following passages:

§ 280. [1] The precedents do not show the sanction of any general rule; the phrasing above, in its second proviso, is illustrated by the first of the ensuing cases; 1743, Craig dem. Annesley v. Anglesea, 17 How. St. Tr. 1217 (see quotation ante, § 278; Bowes, C. B., seems to have dissented); 1896, Georgia R. & B. Co. v. Lybend, 99 Ga. 421, 27 S. E. 794 (a false affidavit in connection with a former trial of the same cause; Atkinson, J., diss., because of the incidental admission of facts affecting character); 1899, Fuller v. Fuller, 108 Ga. 256, 33 S. E. 865 (attempted subornation in another case, excluded); 1899, State v. Seevers, 108 Ia. 738, 78 N. W. 705 (institution of a collateral prosecution against complainant to hinder present trial, admitted); 1839, Com. v. Sacket, 22 Pick. Mass. 394 (offer of reward, on behalf of the opponent, for his testimony in a class of cases including the present, admitted; but here the impeachment of the witness seems alone to have been in mind); 1881, Hastings v. Stetson, 130 Mass. 76 (attempt to bribe a juror at a former trial of the same case, admitted); 1866, State v. Staples, 47 N. H. 113 (an offer of a bribe to a witness for help in a series of charges including the present, admitted).

For the use of similar evidence to impeach a witness as corrupt, see post, §§ 957–963, 1040; some of these cases involved witnesses who were also parties, and they might serve as precedents under the present head.

Compare also the use of other frauds as evidence of intent or plan (post, §§ 333, 340, 352).

[2] The precedents seem to furnish no accepted rule or test:

ENGLAND: 1743, Craig dem. Annesley v. Anglesea, 17 How. St. Tr. 1217 (see quotation supra, § 278); 1820, The Queen's Case, 2 B. & B. 302; s. c. Queen Caroline's Trial, Linn's

1820, ABBOTT, C. J., in The Queen's Case, 2 B. & B. 302 (answering the question, Whether the offer of a bribe, to a person not called as a witness, by one employed as an agent to procure evidence, is admissible): "This is a lawful employment necessary in many cases, . . . and, being a lawful employment, it is to be presumed, until the contrary be shown, that the employer means and intends that his agent shall execute it by lawful means. . . . The prosecutor may, up to the very moment when the proof is offered, be wholly ignorant of the wicked act of his agent; it is no less consistent that, having been informed of it, he may have rejected it with indignation and have repudiated the proffered testimony and withholden the witness from the Court; and if he be absent from the trial, which frequently happens, it may be impossible to prove his ignorance in the one case or the propriety of his conduct in the other. . . . [Nevertheless] I am by no means prepared to say that in no case and under no circumstances appearing at a trial it might not be fit and proper for a judge to allow proof of this nature to be submitted."

1901, VANN, J., in Nowack v. R. Co., 166 N. Y. 433, 60 N. E. 32: "If an honest man by mistake employs a dishonest one to look up witnesses for him, and the latter, through excess of zeal, resorts to bribery, although it was never thought of by his employer, it is better, for cleanliness and purity in the administration of justice, that the facts should be ed., iii, 168, 177, 184 (offer of bribe, made by A, not a witness, to B, not a witness, A being the party's agent to procure witnesses, but no authority to offer bribes being expressly shown; excluded, because the party may have been wholly ignorant of it; unsound, for (1) it is possible that the party was ignorant, but it is entirely unlikely; common probability suggests connivance as the most likely explanation, and a party's bribes can otherwise be hardly ever proved; (2) repeated instances of the sort indicate a general plan to bribe, on the principle of § 343, post, and from that may be inferred the probable bribery of other persons actually examined as witnesses, and this circumstance, no matter who gave the bribe, would be admissible under § 962, post; see the argument of Mr. Wilde and Lord Erskine, at pp. 172, 178, ubi supra).

UNITED STATES: Federal: Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Rambo, 8 C. C. A. 6, 59 Fed. 75, 82 (attempt at bribery by the "special agent" of the defendant, admissible);
Alabama: 1856, Martin v. State, 28 Ala. 71, 81 (suppression of evidence; third person's conduct, inadmissible unless a connection with the party is shown);
Arkansas: 1908, Strong v. State, 85 Ark. 536, 109 S. W. 536 (threats against witness for prosecution, by unknown person, admitted merely to rebut the defendant's allegation that the witness was testifying under a bias for the State, on the principle);
Illinois: 1870, Winchell v. Edwards, 57 Ill. 41, 48 (fabrication by a former party in interest, admitted); 1882, Chicago C. R. Co. v. McMahon, 103 Ill. 485, 488 (a clerk of the company offered the bribe; the solution is worked out by the doctrine of scope of employment, as making the principal responsible for malicious acts);
Indiana: 1907, Eacock v. State, 169 Ind. 488, 82 N. E. 1039 (procuring a witness to leave the State, by third persons with the defendant's privity, admitted);
Kentucky: 1902, Ashcraft v. Com., — Ky. —, 68 S. W. 847 ("that the prisoner's father, or any other person than the prisoner, had bribed or offered to bribe a witness in the case, could not be a relevant fact against the prisoner");
Louisiana: 1899, State v. Harris, 51 La. An. 1105, 26 So. 64 (admissions of subornation by a relative, not shown to be an agent, excluded);
Massachusetts: 1825, Com. v. Robbins, 3 Pick. 63 (husband's attempt to suborn the prosecutor not to testify, excluded as not made with the defendant-wife's privity); 1883, Com. v. Ryan, 134 Mass. 223, 225 (suppression of evidence by a prosecuting officer in a criminal case; undecided); 1888, Com. v. Locke, 145 Mass. 401, 14 N. E. 621 (same; destruction of liquors by the defendant's barkeeper, admitted); 1888, Com. v. McHugh, 147 Mass. 401, 18 N. E. 74 (same; destruction by a person present, without the defendant's objection, admitted); Com. v. Downey, 148 Mass. 14, 18 N. E. 584 (same; destruction of liquor by the defendant's wife, admitted); 1888, Com. v. Gillon, 148 Mass. 15, 18 N. E. 584 (same as Com. v. Downey); 1909, Com. v. Min Sing, 202 Mass. 121, 88 N. E. 918 (bribery of four persons, who did not in fact testify, by a police officer assisting in getting evidence, and by an interpreter used by him, excluded on the facts, no connivance of the prosecuting attorney being "suggested or suspected by the counsel for the defendant");
Michigan: 1860, Dillin v. People, 8 Mich. 357, 370 (attempts by accused's counsel and friends, to induce a witness' absence; "such testimony should only be allowed to go to the jury when some evidence accompanies it upon which the jury may inquire as to the prisoner's knowledge of and complicity in it"); 1903, People v. Salsbury, 134 Mich. 537, 96 N. W. 936 (it shown, with the fullest opportunity for explanation, than to exclude all evidence of the evil acts upon the ground that they were not authorized; because authority may properly be inferred from the nature of the employment. In such a case all doubt should be resolved, if possible, in the interest of clean evidence and the exposure of foul practices."

§ 281. Same: Explaining away the Suspicious Conduct. On the general logical principle of Explanation (ante, § 32) the opponent may always introduce such facts as serve to explain away, on some other hypothesis, the apparent significance of the fraudulent conduct. A consciousness of the weakness of the cause is the natural inference, but not the only possible one, from such conduct; and there is nothing to prevent the admission of facts which make some other inference more plausible.[1] must appear that the attempt to bribe was with the "consent or approval" of the party, "or at least knowledge or expectation that it had been or would be made");

Minnesota: 1896, Matthews v. Lumber Co., 65 Minn. 372, 67 N. W. 1008 (admissible if the agency is shown; here the person was only an officer of the law);
Mississippi: 1907, Jeffries v. State, 89 Miss. 643, 42 So. 801 (cloignment of the prosecutrix by the defendant's brother, excluded);
Missouri: 1878, State v. Rothschild, 68 Mo. 52, 54 (inducements to leave the State, made by persons not shown to be connected with defendant, excluded); 1901, State v. Huff, 161 Mo. 459, 61 S. W. 900 (improper attempts by a person claiming to represent the party, but not shown to be authorized, excluded); 1920, Gebhardt v. United R. Co., — Mo. —, 220 S. W. 677 (personal injury; attempt by plaintiff's father to suborn witnesses, admitted after evidence of conspiracy);
New York: 1901, Nowack v. R. Co., 166 N. Y. 433, 60 N. E. 32 (a corrupt offer by one concededly an agent to interview witnesses, admitted, the party being a corporation; Landon, Haight, and O'Brien, JJ., diss.; see quotation supra);
Ohio: 1883, Tullis v. State, 39 Oh. 200 (that money had been offered, though not by the opponent's agent, admitted);
Oklahoma: 1922, Freeman v. State, — Okl. Cr. —, 203 Pac. 1052 (attempt of defendant's attorney to suppress testimony, admitted);
Pennsylvania: 1876, Heslop v. Heslop, 82 Pa. 537 (efforts to tamper with a witness, by the defendant and her son jointly, admitted);
Texas: 1899, Luttrell v. State, 40 Tex. Cr. 651, 51 S. W. 930 (subornation by defendant's attorney; excluded for lack of proof of authority); 1913, Burnaman v. State, 70 Tex. Cr. 361, 159 S. W. 244 (corrupt offer by the accused's brother, who was also a witness, held admissible, Davidson, P. J., diss.; prior cases collected); 1915, Latham v. State, 75 Tex. Cr. 575, 172 S. W. 797 (erasure of the defendant's name as signed in a hotel register; the entry of it was an incriminating circumstance, and the erasure had been made since the arrest of accused, but there was no evidence to show who had erased it; admitted, one judge diss.); 1919, Porter v. State, 86 Tex. Cr. 23, 215 S. W. 201 (conduct of defendant's brother, showing consciousness of guilt, on arrival of the sheriff, admitted to show bias of brother as a witness; this solution is not sound; Davidson, P. J., diss.); 1920, Nader v. State, 86 Tex. Cr. 424, 219 S. W. 474 (murder; offer of money to the widow of the deceased, to refrain from testifying, held admissible so far as said to have been made by any person testifying for the defendant, but not by "any friends or relatives, attempted in behalf of an accused whose own connection therewith does not appear");
Vermont: 1875, Green v. Woodbury, 48 Vt. 5 (attempt to keep a witness away; "such acts must be the acts of the party, either directly or by authorization").

Distinguish the use of evidence of bribery or the like for the purpose of impeaching a particular witness, post, §§ 957–963; in that aspect, the witness' conduct, e.g. offering a bribe to another desired witness, is relevant to show his own corrupt interest or bias, and not the party's corrupt intent; hence the party's authority or connivance is immaterial, and need not be evidenced.

Compare the rulings in regard to using a compromise by an authorized person, post, § 1062.

§ 281. [1] 1903, Sherrill v. State, — Ala. —, 35 So. 129 (an explanation made some time after the flight, excluded); 1859, Com. v. Goodwin, 14 Gray Mass. 55 (as tending to explain away his falsehoods, the defendant was not allowed to show that he had formerly acknowledged the truth in the matter; apparently too strict a ruling); 1881, Lynch v. Coffin, 131 Mass. 311 (fabrication of evidence; explanation allowed); 1883, Homer v. Everett, 91 N. Y. 641, 646 (permitting an explanation of an alleged attempt to suborn); 1903, Evans v. State, — Tex. Cr. —, 76 S. W. 467 (flight).

Compare the principal allowing explanation of an admission (post, § 1058) and of a witness' prior self-contradiction (post, § 1044).

§ 282. Same: (3) Taking Precautions to remedy or prevent Injury; Conveying Property; Insuring against Risks; Offer of Compromise. The opponent's conduct in taking precautions to prevent an apprehended injury, or to remedy one already inflicted, may sometimes indicate a consciousness of wrong, in respect either to the party's identity as the wrongdoer or to his culpability in doing the act. For example, the precautions taken by the owner of an animal alleged to be vicious would be some evidence of his knowledge of that viciousness;[1] the regulations adopted by an employer for the conduct of a factory or a transportation system, may be some evidence of his belief as to the standard of care required, and thus of the negligent nature of an act violating those rules;[2] the conveyance of property, during litigation or just prior to it, may be evidence of the transferor's consciousness that he ought to lose;[3] the procurement of an abortion may indicate consciousness of the procurer's paternity;[4] and other instances may well occur.[5]

§ 282. [1] 1796, Jones v. Perry, 2 Esp. 483 (the precaution used in tying up a dog, admitted to show defendant's knowledge that it was fierce and dangerous); 1900, Sanders v. O'Callaghan, 110 Ia. 574, 82 N. W. 969 (keeping a dog chained so that it would not bite is an admission of his vicious character); 1883, Montgomery v. Koester, 35 La. An. 1091, 1093 (similar); 1888, Brice v. Bauer, 108 N. Y. 428, 431, 15 N. E. 695 (similar); 1914, U. S. Briones, 28 P. I. 367, 379.

[2] 1902, Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Eaton, 194 Ill. 441, 62 N. E. 784 (adoption of a rule requiring flags and torpedoes in a certain exigency, held an admission "that ordinary care required the course of conduct prescribed"); 1904, Stevens v. Boston Elev. R. Co., 184 Mass. 476, 69 N. E. 338 ("A rule made by a corporation for the guidance of its servants in matters affecting the safety of others", and its violation, raises an implication that there was a breach of duty towards the third person "as well as towards the master who prescribed the conduct that he thought necessary or desirable for protection in such matters. Against the proprietor of a business the methods which he adopts for the protection of others are some evidence of what he thinks necessary or proper to insure their safety"; good opinion by Knowlton, C. J., citing authorities); 1920, Bilodeau v. Fitchburg & L. St. R. Co., 236 Mass. 526, 128 N. E. 872 (injury by street-car to person on track; Public Service Commission's rules for headlights, etc., excluded; but defendant's book of rules for operation of cars, admitted); 1921, Parks v. United R. Co., — Mo. —, 235 S. W. 1067 (injury by a street-car; defendant's rule requiring motormen to stop before passing another car standing, admissible); 1913, Canham v. Rhode Island Co., — Vt. —, 85 Atl. 1050 (collecting the cases).

Contra: 1920, Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Stidham's Adm'x, 187 Ky. 139, 218 S. W. 460 (death at a railroad track; defendant's rules as to keeping a lookout on locomotives, excluded).

For the use of other persons' regulations, or municipal ordinances, to evidence negligence, see post, § 461.

[3] Accord: 1904, Camsusa v. Coigdarripe, 11 Br. C. 177, 192 (action for breach of trust; the trustee's conveyance of his property pending suit, held a proper subject for cross-examination); 1907, Pelkey v. Hodgdon, 102 Me. 426, 67 Atl. 218 (mortgage of property, admitted); 1906, State v. Kincaid, 142 N. C. 657, 55 S. E. 647 (seduction; transfer of property to evade the result of conviction, admitted); 1882, Heneky v. Smith, 10 Or. 349 (transfer of land, after a shooting, admitted); 1918, Chaufty v. DeVries, 41 R. I. 1, 102 Atl. 612 (personal injury; defendant's transfer of property immediately afterwards, admitted; authorities collected);

Contra: 1898, Miller v. Dill, 149 Ind. 326, 49 N. E. 272 (mere fact of conveyance of property, not received as an admission of a debt); 1892, Jackson F. C. S. P. & Tile Co. v. Snyder, 93 Mich. 325, 53 N. W. 359, semble (that the defendant had disposed of his property pending suit, excluded); 1901, Hocks v. Sprangers, 113 Wis. 123, 87 N. W. 1101 (defendant's attempts to dispose of his property, excluded).

[4] 1920, Thomas v. Jones [1920] 2 K. B. 399 [1921] 1 K. B. 22 (bastardy; semble, sending for a doctor is not an admission of paternity, the woman living in the same house as defendant); 1881, McIlvain v. State, 80 Ind. 71 (bastardy; the fact that the defendant had, after the complainant's pregnancy, procured abortion-medicine for her, admitted); 1894, Badder v. Keefer, 100 Mich. 272, 273, 58 N. W. 1007 (bastardy; defendant's inquiries of a physician for what was "good to get a young lady out of a fix", admitted); 1868, Fox v. Stevens, 13 Minn. 252; 1903, Gatzemeyer v. Peterson, 68 Nebr. 832, 94 N. W. 974 (bas-

But it is plain that the prior provision of insurance against a certain class of risks can permit no such inference; first, because insurance is mainly intended to guard against inevitable injuries for which no one may be to blame; and, secondly, even so far as it is intended to cover injuries caused by the insured's culpability (e.g. employer's liability insurance), this affords no indication of the insured's belief as to the specific injury at issue, for to assume that it was one of the class of injuries insured against is to beg the question.[6]

An offer to compromise presents special distinctions, examined fully post, §§ 1061, 1062 (Admissions). It suffices to note here that in general an offer tardy; defendant's offer to obtain medical aid to get rid of the child, admitted).

Contra: 1913, Bray v. U. S., 39 D. C. App. 600 (seduction; no authority cited); 1904, Darrell v. Com., — Ky. —, 82 S. W. 289 (but here because the charge was rape, and the defendant admitted the intercourse and alleged consent; no authority cited).

[5] 1911, Engel v. United Traction Co., 203 N. Y. 321, 96 N. E. 731 (discharge of motorman since the injury, excluded).

[6] CANADA: 1909, Hyndman v. Stephens, 19 Man. 187 (excluded); 1908, Longhead v. Collingwood Shipbuilding Co., 16 Ont. L. R. 64 ("This had been so ruled by myself and probably other judges, over and over again at nisi-prius").

UNITED STATES: Federal: 1920, James Stewart & Co. v. Newby, 4th C. C. A., 266 Fed. 287, 295 (employer's liability); California: 1903, Roche v. Llewellyn I. Co., 140 Cal. 563, 74 Pac. 147 (defendant's insurance against accidents held inadmissible to evidence negligence, and also to evidence the fact that the plaintiff was an employee of defendant and not of a third person); Columbia (Dist.): 1906, Capital C. Co. v. Holtzman, 27 D. C. App. 125, 138 (the fact of defendant's insurance against accident, excluded, except as affecting a witness' bias); Illinois: 1913, Mithen v. Jeffery, 259 Ill. 372, 102 N. E. 778 (defendant's protection by liability insurance not being admissible, questions to jurors on voir dire, intended to introduce the fact indirectly, as improper; prior Illinois cases cited); Maine: 1897, Sawyer v. Shoe Co., 90 Me. 369, 38 Atl. 311 (similar); Massachusetts: 1894, Anderson v. Duckworth, 162 Mass. 251, 38 N. E. 510 (admitting a conversation for other reasons, but cautioning against the use of this fact referred to in it); 1919, Dempsey v. Goldstein B. A. Co., 231 Mass. 461, 121 N. E. 429; Minnesota: 1899, Manley v. Minneap. Paint Co., 76 Minn. 169, 78 N. W. 1050 (employer's indemnity policy, not admissible as an admission of negligence); 1896, Barg v. Bousefield, 65 Minn. 355, 68 N. W. 45 (that defendant was insured against accidents in a particular mill, admitted solely as an admission that the employees there working, including the plaintiff, were employees of the defendant and not of a third person); 1908, Gracy v. Anderson, 104 Minn. 476, 116 N. W. 1116 (allowing a questioning of jurors as to insurance-interests, but not allowing the cross-examination of the defendant on this subject to affect his credibility, subject to the trial Court's discretion); New York: 1902, Cosselmon v. Dunfee, 172 N. Y. 507, 65 N. E. 494 (similar); Oregon: 1913, Zimmerle v. Childers, 67 Or. 465, 136 Pac. 319 (indemnity bond); Texas: 1922, Beazley v. Meyers, Tex. Civ. App., 238 S. W. 979 (exchange of automobiles; that defendant had received an indemnity bond from M. to cover the claim here involved, held inadmissible); Washington: 1913, Armstrong v. Yakima Hotel Co., 75 Wash. 477, 135 Pac. 232 (questions to jurors as to connection with indemnity companies, allowed; distinguishing this from questions directly intended to advise jurors that the suit was defended by an insurer; following Hoyt v. Independent Paving Co., 52 Wash. 672, 101 Pac. 367, and distinguishing Stratton v. Nichols L. Co., 39 Wash. 323, 81 Pac. 831; the distinction is futile; either the ascertainment of jurors' interest or the suppression of the fact of insurance must frankly be allowed to prevail; no compromise is worth while); Wisconsin: 1906, Chybowski v. Bucyrus Co., 127 Wis. 332, 106 N. W. 833 (offer to prove insurance, excluded); 1908, Wankowski v. Crivitz P. & P. Co., 137 Wis. 123, 118 N. W. 643 (counsel's remark as to insurance, held not prejudicial on the facts); 1919, Kellner v. Christiansen, 169 Wis. 390, 172 N. W. 796; 1920, Smith v. Yellow Cab. Co., 173 Wis. 33, 180 N. W. 125 (fact of defendant's insurance, excluded);

But the taking out of a policy may be an admission of ownership, where that is disputed (on the principle of § 283, note 5, post); 1904, Perkins v. Rice, 187 Mass. 28, 72 N. E. 323 (ownership of an elevator); 1920, Davis v. North Carolina S. Co., 180 N. C. 74, 104 S. E. 82.

Distinguish the use of such evidence to show a motive in the employer to be negligent or indifferent in care (post, § 393), or to show a bias in his testimony (post, § 949), or interest (post, § 969); and cases cited in § 393 (pecuniary circumstances as a motive).

to compromise, not involving an express admission of a claim or charge, is not receivable, and that the principle is equally applicable in criminal as in civil cases.

§ 283. Same: Repairs of a Machine, Highway, or the like, after an Injury; Offers to Remedy Harm. If machines, bridges, sidewalks, and other objects, never caused corporal injury except through the negligence of their owner, then his act of improving their condition, after the happening of an injury thereat, would indicate a belief on his part that the injury was caused by his negligence. But the assumption is plainly false; injuries may be and are constantly caused by reason of inevitable accident, and also by reason of contributory negligence of the injured person. To improve the condition of the injury-causing object is therefore to indicate a belief merely that it has been capable of causing such an injury, but indicates nothing more, and is equally consistent with a belief in injury by mere accident, or by contributory negligence, as well as by the owner's negligence. Mere capacity of a place or thing to cause injury is not the fact that constitutes a liability for the owner; it must be a capacity which could have been known to an owner using reasonable diligence and foresight, and a capacity to injure persons taking reasonable care in its use.

On this ground, then, namely, that the supposed inference from the act of improvement is not the plain and most probable one, such acts may be excluded.

To be sure, it may be argued that, on the general theory of Relevancy (ante, §§ 31, 38), it would suffice for admissibility if merely the inference was a fairly possible one,—leaving it to the opponent to argue that it was the less probable one. Theoretically, it would be perhaps difficult to deny this. But in the present instance an argument of policy has always been invoked to strengthen the case for exclusion. That argument is that the admission of such acts, even though theoretically not plainly improper, would be liable to the jury's over-emphasis, and would discourage all owners, even those who had genuinely been careful, from improving the place or thing that had caused the injury, because they would fear the evidential use of such acts to their disadvantage; and thus not only would careful owners refrain from improvements, but even careless ones, who might have deserved to have the evidence adduced against them, would by refraining from improvements subject innocent persons to the risk of the recurrence of the injury. Whatever then might be the strength of the objection to such evidence from the point of view of relevancy alone, the added considerations of policy suffice to make clear the impropriety of resorting to it. On one or another or both of these grounds have most Courts rested their reasoning: [1]

§ 283. [1] In three or four jurisdictions only is there any inclination to qualify or to repudiate this doctrine; the early contrary cases in Pennsylvania raised the question generally, and were followed in Georgia, Iowa, Kansas, and Minnesota; but since Morse v. R. Co., in Minnesota, and Columbia R. Co. v. Hawthorne, in the Federal Court, there has been little disposition to concede any force to the Pennsylvania view, and it has apparently been

1869, BRAMWELL, B., in Hart v. R. Co., 21 L. T. R. N. S. 263: "People do not furnish evidence against themselves simply by adopting a new plan in order to prevent the recurrence of an accident. I think that a proposition to the contrary would be barbarous. It would be (as I have often had occasion to tell juries) to hold that, because the world gets wiser as it gets older, therefore it was foolish before."

1892, COLERIDGE, L. C. J., in Beever v. Hanson, 25 L. J. Notes of Cases 132: "Now a perfectly humane man naturally makes it physically impossible that a particular accident which has once happened can happen again, by fencing or covering, or at any rate making safe the particular thing from which it arose. That, however, is no evidence of, and discarded in most courts where it was originally accepted:

ENGLAND: 1869, Hart v. R. Co., 21 L. T. R. N. S. 261 (injury by a railroad collision; subsequent improvement of tracks, excluded); 1892, Beever v. Hanson, 25 L. J. Notes of Cases 132 (injury on cogs of a machine; subsequent boarding of the cogs, excluded);

CANADA: 1900, Cole v. R. Co., 19 Ont. Pr. 104 (subsequent safeguards, excluded);

UNITED STATES: Federal: 1886, Osborne v. Detroit, 36 Fed. 36, 38 (injury at a defective sidewalk; subsequent repairs, admitted; no authority cited); 1892, Columbia R. Co. v. Hawthorne, 144 U. S. 202, 12 Sup. 591 (injury at a machine; subsequent placing of safeguards, excluded); 1900, Southern Pacific Co. v. Hall, 41 C. C. A. 50, 100 Fed. 760 (subsequent change of railroad hydrant, excluded); 1902, Choctaw O. & G. R. Co. v. McDade, 50 C. C. A. 591, 112 Fed. 889; s. c. on appeal, 191 U. S. 64, 24 Sup. 24 (changes of construction in a waterspout, admitted solely as affecting the measurement of its dimensions); 1904, Choctaw, O. & G. R. Co. v. McDade, 191 U. S. 64, 24 Sup. 24 (subsequent changes, admitted to explain away the evidence of subsequent measurements introduced by the defendant); 1904, Southern R. Co. v. Simpson, 131 Fed. 705, 711, 65 C. C. A. 544 (custom of whistling at a crossing since the accident, excluded); 1905, Davidson S. S. Co. v. U. S., 142 Fed. 315, 318, C. C. A. (subsequent precautions as to a breakwater, excluded); 1907, Armour v. Skene, 1st C. C. A., 153 Fed. 241 (injury by a runaway horse; defendant's discharge of the driver, a year later, not admissible); 1917, Bingham Mines Co. v. Bianco, 8th C. C. A., 246 Fed. 936 (death in a mine; subsequent repairs, excluded); 1918, Du Pont de Nemours & Co. v. Smith, 4th C. C. A., 252 Fed. 491 (personal injury; subsequent placing of protective apparatus for another purpose, held inadmissible);

Alabama: 1896, Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Malone, 109 Ala. 509, 20 So. 33 (the mere fact of repairs, held inadmissible; but in determining the condition at the time of the accident, the repairs may be considered); 1904, Jackson L. Co. v. Cunningham, 141 Ala. 206, 37 So. 445 (defective roadbed; changes of track-timbers, etc., admitted, to identify other timbers); 1904, Frierson v. Frazier, 142 Ala. 232, 37 So. 825 (ferry accident, subsequent placing of a rail, admitted only on cross-examination of a defendant who had testified to that subject); 1904, Davis v. Kornman, 141 Ala. 479, 37 So. 789 (injury at a machine; protective construction since the injury, excluded);

Arkansas: 1906, St. Louis S. W. R. Co. v. Plumlee, 78 Ark. 147, 95 S. W. 442 (subsequent removal of hand-car wheels for safety, excluded); 1907, Bodcaw L. Co. v. Ford, 82 Ark. 555, 102 S. W. 896 (subsequent repairs to a machine, excluded); 1912, St. Louis S. M. & S. R. Co. v. Steed, 105 Ark. 205, 151 S. W. 257 (repairs of a car, excluded);

California: 1891, Sappenfield v. R. Co., 91 Cal. 48, 61, 27 Pac. 590 (injury by failure of the pin in the drawhead of a car; subsequent adoption of an improved pin, excluded); 1896, Turner v. Hearst, 115 Cal. 394, 47 Pac. 129 (the discharge of the reporter, after the libellous publication, excluded); 1900, Limburg v. Glenwood L. Co., 127 Cal. 598, 60 Pac. 176 (wagon accident; subsequent remedy of defect, excluded); 1903, Kahn v. Triest-Rosenberg Co., 139 Cal. 340, 73 Pac. 164 (boiler-explosion; subsequent precaution, held inadmissible); 1903, Dyas v. Southern P. Co., 140 Cal. 296, 73 Pac. 972 (subsequent condition of a derrick structure, admitted to show its condition at the time in question, though incidentally involving a mention of the fact of repairs); 1904, Helling v. Schindler, 145 Cal. 303, 78 Pac. 710 (subsequent sharpening of planer's knives, excluded);

Colorado: 1874, Kansas P. R. Co. v. Miller, 2 Colo. 442, 468 (washing away of a bridge; subsequent different construction, admissible to show "that the first one was inadequate", but not to show negligence); 1888, Colorado Electric Co. v. Lubbers, 11 Colo. 505, 508, 19 Pac. 479 (injury to employee by electric shock; defendant's subsequent warning to employees as to mode of doing work, excluded); 1893, Anson v. Evans, 19 Colo. 274, 277, 35 Pac. 47 (subsequent renewal of ropes, excluded); Comp. St. 1921, § 2891 (railroad's appointment of appraiser for damage done by fire set, not to be evidence that fire "was set out or caused by the operating of such railroad"); 1907, Diamond Rubber Co. v. Harryman, 41 Colo 415, 92 Pac. 922 (subsequent removal of a pipe-arm causing the injury, excluded);

Connecticut: 1884, Nailey v. Carpet Co. 51 Conn. 524, 526 (injury at a door; subsequent closing-up of the door, excluded)

I protest against its being put forward as evidence of negligence. A place may be left for a hundred years unfenced, when at last some one falls down it; the owner, like a sensible and humane man, then puts up a fence; and upon this the argument is that he has been guilty of negligence, and shows that he thought the fence was necessary because he put it up. This is both unfair and unjust. It is making the good feeling and right principle of a man evidence against him."

1883, MITCHELL, J., in Morse v. R. Co., 30 Minn. 468, 16 N. W. 358: "Such acts afford no legitimate basis for construing such an act as an admission of previous neglect of duty. A person may have exercised all the care which the law required, and yet, in the light of 1901, Waterbury v. Waterbury T. Co., 74 Conn. 152, 50 Atl. 3 (subsequent restoration of a railing, not received as evidence that it was the defendant's workmen who had taken it down);

Georgia: 1898, Atlanta C. S. R. Co. v. Bates, 103 Ga. 333, 30 S. E. 41 (street-railroad company's rule for motormen at a certain place, received as an admission of its danger); 1902, Georgia S. & F. R. Co. v. Cartledge, 116 Ga. 164, 42 S. E. 405 (subsequent removal of a post near a railroad track, excluded; "our faith in the correctness [of prior decisions admitting such evidence], which in the past had already been much shaken, has succumbed . . .; we do, however, distinctly announce that those decisions are now overruled");

Idaho: 1898, Giffen v. Lewiston, 6 Ida. 231, 55 Pac. 545 (injury at a sidewalk; subsequent repairs excluded);

Illinois: 1882, Warren v. Wright, 103 Ill. 298, 302 (falling of a sidewalk; the fact and mode of rebuilding afterwards, excluded); 1890, Hodges v. Percival, 132 Ill. 53, 56, 23 N. E. 423 (falling of an elevator; subsequent construction of an air-cushion beneath it, excluded); 1891, Marder v. Leary, 137 Ill. 319, 323, 26 N. E. 1093 (elevator accident; improvements after the accident, inadmissible); 1892, Weber Wagon Co. v. Keil, 139 Ill. 644, 650, 29 N. E. 714 (injury from a slippery floor; subsequent change of the floor, held inadmissible); 1894, Bloomington v. Legg, 151 Ill. 9, 15, 37 N. E. 696 (removal of the injuring article, inadmissible); 1899, Howe v. Medaris, 183 Ill. 288, 55 N. E. 724 (machine; subsequent repairs, excluded); 1902, Taylorville v. Stafford, 196 Ill. 288, 63 N. E. 624 (subsequent repairs of a sidewalk, held not receivable as an admission, but only to explain a difference of measurement;

Indiana: 1883, Lafayette v. Weaver, 92 Ind. 477, 479 (injury at a sidewalk; subsequent repairs excluded); 1889, Terre Haute & I. R. Co. v. Clem, 123 Ind. 15, 23 N. E. 965 (injury at a railroad crossing; subsequent repairs excluded; repudiating the 'obiter dictum' in Goshen v. England, 119 Ind. 368, 373, 21 N. E. 977); 1891, Board v. Pearson, 129 Ind. 456, 28 N. E. 1120 (falling of a bridge; defendant commissioners' resolution to renew the bridge, excluded); 1898, Sievers v. P. B. & L. Co., 151 Ind. 642, 50 N. E. 877 (subsequent change of operation of an elevator, excluded);

Iowa: 1877, Cramer v. Burlington, 45 Ia. 627, 629 (injury at a sidewalk; subsequent repairs excluded, but on the theory that the acts of an agent, to operate as admissions, must be contemporaneous); 1882, Hudson v. R. Co., 59 Ia. 581, 584, 13 N. W. 735 (same); 1883, Coates v. P. Co., 62 Ia. 491, 17 N. W. 760 ("The existence of a general order [to block all frogs on the line] was important only as a circumstance in the nature of an admission that without some protection frogs are dangerous to employees"); 1888, Kuhns v. Wisconsin I. & N. R. Co., 76 Ia. 68, 72, 40 N. W. 92 (subsequent repairs of a track, not receivable as "an admission that the track was out of repair"); 1897, Hemmi v. R. Co., 102 Ia. 25, 70 N. W. 746 (fire from a locomotive; subsequent repairs considered); 1900, Sylvester v. Casey, 110 Ia. 256, 81 N. W. 455 (sidewalk-injury; subsequent repairs, held inadmissible); 1901, Wimber v. R. Co., 114 Ia. 551, 87 N. W. 505 (photograph of a track, showing the subsequent removal of the guard-rail in which plaintiff's foot had been caught, held properly admitted on the facts); 1899, Beard v. Guild, 107 Ia. 476, 479, 78 N. W. 201 (subsequent repairs to a hack, excluded; no Iowa cases cited, but three cases from other States); 1899, Frohs v. Dubuque, 109 Ia. 219, 221, 86 N. W. 342 (subsequent repairs to a sidewalk; the incidental mention of it, under proper instructions, held not error); 1904, Cronk v. Wabash R. Co., 123 Ia. 349, 98 N. W. 884 (subsequent condition of a track, excluded); 1904, See v. Wabash R. Co., 123 Ia. 443, 99 N. W. 106 (repairs at a crossing, excluded); 1906, Fitter v. Iowa Tel. Co., 129 Ia. 610, 106 N. W. 7 (injury by telephone poles; defendant's subsequent change in method of work, excluded, in an opinion which at last seems squarely to lay down a general rule against this evidence; of the above cases, however, only Hudson v. R. Co. is cited); 1907, Patton v. Sanborn, 133 Ia. 650, 110 N. W. 1032 (sidewalk; subsequent replacement, here admitted for other purposes);

Kansas: 1873, St. Joseph & D. C. R. Co. v. Chase, 11 Kan. 47, 56 (fire from engine-sparks; subsequent change of the smoke-stack, admitted); 1877, Atchison T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Retford, 18 Kan. 245, 249 (injury at a track near a coal-chute; subsequent removal of the track, admitted); 1885, Emporia v. Schmidling, 33 Kan. 485, 488, 6 Pac. 893 (injury at a sidewalk; subsequent removal of the walk ad-his new experience, after an unexpected accident has occurred, and as a measure of extreme caution, he may adopt additional safeguards. The more careful a person is, the more regard he has for the lives of others, the more likely he would be to do so, and it would seem unjust that he could not do so without being liable to have such acts construed as an admission of prior negligence. We think such a rule puts an unfair interpretation upon human conduct, and virtually holds out an inducement for continued negligence."

1889, ELLIOTT, J., in Terre Haute & I. R. Co. v. Clem, 123 Ind. 18, 23 N. E. 965: "The effect of declaring such evidence competent is to inform a defendant that if he makes changes or repairs, he does it under penalty. . . . True policy and sound reason require mitted to show it defective, but not to show notice); 1886, St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Weaver, 35 Kan. 412, 432, 11 Pac. 408 (derailment at a washed-out culvert; subsequent erection of a larger culvert, admitted); 1920, White v. Berkson B. C. & S. Co., 106 Kan. 239, 187 Pac. 670 (injury at a doorway; subsequent raising of the floor-level, excluded; noting prior rulings to the contrary); 1921, Juznik v. Kansas C. So. R. Co., — Kan. —, 199 Pac. 90 (collision at a railroad crossing; subsequent repairs, admitted);

Kentucky: 1891, Standard Oil Co. v. Tierney, 92 Ky. 367, 17 S. W. 1025 (fire of oil during transit; subsequent change of mode of shipping, etc., excluded); 1897, Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Bowen, — Ky. —, 39 S. W. 31 (precautions at a crossing; preceding case followed); 1897, Taylor v. R. Co., — Ky. —, 41 S. W. 551, semble (repairs to an engine said to have emitted sparks, excluded); 1905, Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Morton, 121 Ky. 398, 89 S. W. 243 (defective method of loading logs; subsequent safe use of another method, excluded, on the present principle; erroneous on the facts, because the principal object was merely to show by experiment that there was another method which was safe); 1920, Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Scott's Adm'r, 188 Ky. 99, 220 S. W. 1066 (collision at a railway crossing; subsequent cutting away of bushes and earth, admitted, to identify the condition of the place);

Maryland: 1894, Washington C. & A. T. v. Case, 80 Md. 36, 30 Atl. 571 (defective bridge; repairs fourteen months later, excluded); 1906, Ziehm v. United El. L. & P. Co., 104 Md. 48, 64 Atl. 61 (subsequent change in location of wires, excluded);

Massachusetts: 1890, Menard v. R. Co., 150 Mass. 386, 388, 23 N. E. 214 (injury at a railroad crossing; subsequent placing of a flagman there, excluded); 1891, Shinners v. Merrimack Locks, 154 Mass. 168, 28 N. E. 10 (fall of a bank of earth; subsequent treatment of the bank, excluded); 1892, Downey v. Sawyer, 157 Mass. 418, 32 N. E. 654 (injury at a wool-feeding machine; change of apparatus not admissible to show former defect or former negligent use); 1894, McGuerty v. Hale, 161 Mass. 51, 53, 36 N. E. 682 (subsequent covering of gearing, excluded); 1895, Chalmers v. Mfg. Co., 164 Mass. 532, 42 N. E. 98 (machine; substitution of another machine, excluded); 1897, Dacey v. R. Co., 168 Mass. 479, 47 N. E. 418 (injury at a switch; subsequent construction of a different kind of switch, excluded); 1904, Stevens v. Boston Elev. R. Co., 184 Mass. 476, 69 N. E. 338 (rule as to sounding a gong);

Michigan: 1883, Fulton Works v. Kimball, 52 Mich. 146, 149, 17 N. W. 733 (injury at a bridge; subsequent repairs, excluded); 1891, Lombar v. East Tawas, 86 Mich. 14, 18, 48 N. W. 947 (injury at a sidewalk; subsequent repairs, excluded); 1892, Thompson v. R. Co., 91 Mich. 255, 260, 51 N. W. 995 (injury at a crossing; subsequent removal of a building, excluded); 1893, Noble v. R. Co., 98 Mich. 249, 57 N. W. 126 (injury by a car-horse shying; subsequent separation of horses, excluded); 1906, Moon v. Pere Marquette R. Co., 143 Mich. 125, 106 N. W. 715 (collision; defendant's change of rules to prevent collisions, excluded); 1916, Sykes v. Portland, 193 Mich. 365, 159 N. W. 325 (injury by an electric shock; subsequent change of wires, admitted on the facts);

Minnesota: the evidence was here at first thought admissible, following the Pennsylvania rulings; 1874, O'Leary v. Mankato, 21 Minn. 65, 68 (injury at a ditch near a bridge; subsequent covering of the ditch, admitted); 1877, Phelps v. Mankato, 23 Minn. 276, 279 (injury at a post in a street, subsequent removal of the post, admitted); 1881, Kelly v. R. Co., 28 Minn. 98, 108, 9 N. W. 588 (injury at a railroad crossing; subsequent repairs, admitted); but this view was afterwards repudiated; 1883, Morse v. R. Co., 30 Minn. 465, 468, 16 N. W. 358 (derailment at a switch; subsequent repairs, excluded); 1893, Day v. Lumber Co., 54 Minn. 523, 525, 528, 56 N. W. 243 (injury by emission of furnace-sparks; subsequent improvement in the smoke-stack, excluded); 1897, Hammargren v. St. Paul, 67 Minn. 6, 69 N. W. 470 (sidewalk; subsequent repairs, excluded);

Missouri: 1882, Ely v. R. C., 77 Mo. 34, 46 (derailment at an embankment; subsequent alterations, excluded); 1885, Hipsley v. R. Co., 88 Mo. 348, 354 (railroad accident; subsequent repairs of the track, excluded); 1887, Brennan v. St. Louis, 92 Mo. 488, 2 S. W. 481; 1891, Alcorn v. R. Co., 108 Mo. 90, 18 S. W. 188 (repairs to a switch-block, excluded); 1905, Bailey v. Kansas City, 189 Mo. 503, 87 S. W. 1182 (subsequent repairs to a sidewalk, excluded); 1904, Schermer v. McMahon, 108 Mo. App. 36, 82 S. W. 535 (excluded); that men should be encouraged to improve or repair, and not be deterred from it by the fear that if they do so their acts will be construed into an admission that they had been wrongdoers. A rule which so operates as to deter men from profiting by experience and availing themselves of new information has nothing to commend it; for it is neither expedient nor just."

Nebraska: 1908, Pribbeno v. Chicago B. & Q. R. Co., 81 Nebr. 494, 116 N. W. 494 (subsequent change of a bridge to prevent a flood, excluded); 1917, Tankersley v. Lincoln Traction Co., 101 Nebr. 578, 163 N. W. 850 (subsequent boxing of electric wires, excluded); 1919, Anderson v. Union Pacific R. Co., 103 Nebr. 770, 174 N. W. 327 (overflow of surface water; subsequent placing of a culvert, excluded);
New Hampshire: 1892, Aldrich v. R. Co., 67 N. H. 250, 29 Atl. 408 (subsequent replacement of a switch by a new kind, excluded; Martin v. Towle, 59 N. H. 31, so far as inconsistent, overruled); 1908, Cummings v. Farnham, 75 N. H. 135, 71 Atl. 632 (change in method of work, not to be a basis of argument);
New Jersey: 1899, Flanigan v. Guggenheim S. Co., 63 N. J. L. 647, 44 Atl. 762 (injury from alleged defective ladder; ladder's destruction by defendant's employee after the injury, admissible as accounting for plaintiff's nonproduction of it and as discrediting employee's exculpatory testimony);
New York: 1871, Reed v. R. Co., 45 N. Y. 575 (derailment of a car; subsequent placing of new ties in the vicinity, excluded); 1874, Dougan v. Champlain Co., 56 N. Y. 1, 8 (falling off a steamdeck; subsequent boarding-up of the rail, excluded); 1877, Baird v. Daly, 68 N. Y. 547, 551 (swamping of a scow; subsequent towing of the scow at reduced speed, excluded); 1878, Dale v. R. Co., 73 N. Y. 468 (injury on a narrow bridge; subsequent erection of a wider one, excluded on the facts; but evidence of subsequent repairs said obiter to be admissible); 1878, Sewell v. Cohoes, 75 N. Y. 45, 54 (injury at a low bridge; subsequent removal of the bridge, held inadmissible to show negligence); 1888, Corcoran v. Peekskill, 108 N. Y. 151, 154, 15 N. E. 309 (injury at an area; subsequent fencing of the area, excluded); 1891, Getty v. Hamlin, 127 N. Y. 636, 27 N. E. 399 (bridge accident; subsequent repairs, excluded); 1907, Loughlin v. Brassil, 187 N. Y. 128, 79 N. E. 854 (subsequent repair of a machine, excluded);
North Carolina: 1916, McMillan v. Atlanta & C. Air Line R. Co., 172 N. C. 853, 90 S. E. 683 (subsequent changes in signals, excluded); 1920, Farrell v. Universal Garage Co., 179 N. C. 389, 102 S. E. 617 (loss of an automobile while at defendant's garage; subsequent installation of gates, excluded);
Oklahoma: 1913, Sloan v. Warrenburg, 36 Okl. 523, 129 Pac. 720 (fall of a telephone pole; improved method of replacing it, excluded); 1913, Shawnee G. & E. Co. v. Motesenbocker, — Okl. —, 135 Pac. 357 (electric wires; subsequent improvements of system, excluded); 1917, Chicago R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Jackson, 63 Okl. 32, 162 Pac. 823 (subsequent change of method in lifting handcars, excluded); 1920, Ferris v. Jones, 78 Okl. 154, 189 Pac. 527 (revised rule of behavior, posted by defendant after a boiler explosion, excluded);
Pennsylvania: 1865, Pa. R. Co. v. Henderson, 51 Pa. 315, 320 (injury on a railroad platform; subsequent removal of the platform, admitted); 1871, West Chester & P. R. Co. v. McElwee, 67 Pa. 311, 314 (injury on a railroad track; subsequent change in the track, admitted); 1873, McKee v. Bidwell, 74 Pa. 218 (injury at an elevator-opening; subsequent placing of a gas-light there, admitted); 1895, Lederman v. R. Co., 165 Pa. 118, 30 Atl. 725 (injury at railroad crossing; subsequent erection of gates there, admitted, "to rebut an inference that the gates were there at the time of the accident"); 1902, Smith v. Philadelphia Traction Co., 202 Pa. 54, 51 Atl. 345 (substitution of a new system of sanding tracks, held not evidence of negligence); 1902, Baron v. Reading Iron Co., 202 Pa. 274, 51 Atl. 979 (prior cases overruled; "in the later cases the rule has been recognized with reluctance, and doubt suggested as to its validity; the time has come when we should distinctly say that we do not approve the rule"; subsequent alteration of a railroad platform, here excluded); 1902, Elias v. Lancaster, 203 Pa. 638, 53 Atl. 507 (preceding case followed);
Rhode Island: 1902, McGarr v. National & P. W. Mills, 24 R. I. 447, 53 Atl. 320 (subsequent repairs to belting, excluded);
South Carolina: 1897, Farley v. C. B. & S. Co., 51 S. C. 222, 28 S. E. 193 (subsequent precautions at a machine; question undecided; McIver, C. J., for rejection); 1907, Worthy v. Jonesville Oil Mill, 77 S. C. 73, 57 S. E. 634; 1908, Plunkett v. Clearwater B. & M. Co., 80 S. C. 310, 61 S. E. 431 (subsequent repairs of machinery, excluded; "the question may be regarded as settled, under the case of Worthy v. Jonesville Oil Mill"); 1922, Holman v. Orangeburg, — S. C. —, 110 S. E. 675 (injury at a sidewalk; change of condition mentioned in order to verify the time testified to);
Tennessee: 1900, Illinois C. R. Co. v. Wyatt, 104 Tenn. 432, 58 S. W. 308 (subsequent repairs, excluded);
Texas: 1889, Gulf C. & S. F. R. Co. v. McGowan, 73 Tex. 355, 362, 11 S. W. 336 (washing out of a culvert; subsequent widening, excluded; but not as an absolute rule); 1889, Missouri P. R. Co. v. Hennessey, 75 Tex. 155, 158, 12 S. W. 608 (injury at a railroad crossing; subsequent lighting of the crossing, Accordingly, it is conceded, by almost all Courts, that no act in the nature of repairs, improvement, substitution, or the like, done after the occurrence of an injury, is receivable as evidence of a consciousness, on the part of the owner, of negligence, connivance, or other culpability in causing the injury.

There may of course be other evidential purposes for which the acts in question may be relevant; in that event, they are to be received, subject to a caution restricting their use to the specific proper purpose. In particular, (a) when the defendant's liability depends upon whether a landlord or his tenant was in control of premises, or upon whether a municipal corporation was exercising authority over a highway, the acts of control of such a person are provable, and an act of repair done after the injury may chance to be such an act.[2] (b) Again, since the condition of a place or thing at the time of an injury may always be evidenced by showing its condition before or after that time, provided no substantial change has occurred (post, § 437), the description of the condition of the place subsequent to the injury excluded); 1890, Gulf C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Compton, 75 Tex. 667, 675, 13 S. W. 667 (railroad accident; subsequent precautions, excluded);

Utah: 1896, Jenkins v. Irrigation Co., 13 Utah 100, 44 Pac. 829 (change in the method of using an irrigation ditch, made after suit brought, admitted to show consciousness of former negligence);

Vermont: 1834, Richardson v. W. & R. T. Co., 6 Vt. 496, 504 (injury by the falling of a bridge; subsequent erection of a stronger bridge, intimated to be not admissible); 1901, McGovern v. Smith, 73 Vt. 52, 50 Atl. 549 (injury at a crossing; defendant's maintenance of electric signals at other crossings, held no evidence of negligence in not having them at this crossing); 1901, Sias v. Consol. Lighting Co., 73 Vt. 35, 50 Atl. 551 (that the defendant, being the employer of the plaintiff, had furnished medical or nursing assistance, held not receivable); 1916, Desmarchier v. Frost, 91 Vt. 138, 99 Atl. 752 (motor-car colliding with a bridge; subsequent careful driving, excluded);

Washington: 1893, Christenson v. U. T. Line, 6 Wash. 75, 83, 32 Pac. 1018 (discharge of the defendant's employee causing the injury, excluded); 1894, Bell v. W. C. S. Co., 8 Wash. 27, 28, 35 Pac. 405 (subsequent changes in machinery, not admissible to show negligence); 1899, Carter v. Seattle, 21 Wash. 585, 59 Pac. 500 (sidewalk injury; subsequent repairs, excluded); 1906, Thomson v. Issaquah S. Co., 43 Wash. 253, 86 Pac. 588 (subsequent change here admitted to show that there was another feasible method of guarding a machine);

Wisconsin: 1871, Castello v. Landwehr, 28 Wis. 522, 530 (subsequent safeguards for a bridge, excluded); 1890, Lang v. Sanger, 76 Wis. 71, 74, 44 N. W. 1095 (planing-mill accident; subsequent repairs, excluded), 1894, Anderson v. R. Co., 87 Wis. 195, 202, 58 N. W. 79 (railroad accident; subsequent precaution as to speed, excluded); 1895, Jennings v. Albion, 90 Wis. 22, 62 N. W. 926 (subsequent repairs, excluded); 1898, Green v. Water Co., 101 Wis. 258, 77 N. W. 722 (supplying contaminated water; precautions after the injury, excluded); 1901, Kreider v. Wisconsin R. P. & P. Co., 110 Wis. 645, 86 N. W. 662 (subsequent repair of machinery, excluded); 1907, Odegard v. North Wis. L. Co., 130 Wis. 659, 110 N. W. 809 (sawmill; subsequent working, excluded).

[2] 1907, Diamond Rubber Co. v. Harryman, 41 Colo. 415, 92 Pac. 922 (sidewalk obstruction); 1883, Lafayette v. Weaver, 92 Ind. 477, 479 (repairs as acts of dominion by a city over a street; but the Court here practically infringes on the preceding rule by allowing this evidence even though "the city's obligation . . . were sufficiently shown by other evidence"; this is going too far); 1870, Manderschid v. Dubuque, 29 Ia. 73, 82 (repairs done to a highway by a city, admitted as acts of dominion); 1879, Readman v. Conway, 126 Mass. 374 (on the question whether landlord or tenant had the control of and the duty to repair a platform, the acts of the landlord in making repairs after the injury were admitted); 1904, Perkins v. Rice, 187 Mass. 28, 72 N. E. 323 (like Readman v. Conway); 1887, Brennan v. St. Louis, 92 Mo. 488, 2 S. W. 481 (acts of repair of a highway); 1905, Bailey v. Kansas City, 189 Mo. 503, 87 S. W. 1182 (city's repairs, not admitted where control was conceded); 1878, Sewell v. Cohoes, 75 N. Y. 45, 51 (injury at a low bridge built, by a coal company on land owned by the defendant city; subsequent removal of it by the defendant, admitted as an act of control involving responsibility); 1899, Siglin v. R. Co., 35 Or. 79, 56 Pac. 1011 (acts of repair of a fence admitted to show ownership).

may necessarily involve a mention of the fact of repairs;[3] but this use of the fact should be guarded against misuse for the forbidden purpose. (c) Furthermore, the failure to observe a precaution required by law may, if unexcused, be in itself a ground of liability, though it is sometimes dealt with in terms of a rule of evidence.[4]

For similar reasons, an offer to an injured person to remedy the harm suffered should be inadmissible. In particular, the offer of remedial assistance, to an injured person, by one whose apparatus or conduct has caused the injury or on whose premises the injury has occurred, ought not to be evidence of an admission of culpable causation.[5] And in general, an offer to pay money in settlement or compromise is as such inadmissible; here, however, the offer may be accompanied by an admission of liability, which is admissible, and is not excluded merely because it is involved in the offer to settle (post, § 1061).

§ 284. Same: (4) Failure to Prosecute; Failure to make Complaint; Failure to explain Innocence. (1) In general, a delay in instituting a prosecution,[1] or a reluctance, overcome only by the instigation of others,[2] is some indication — perhaps only a slight one in fact — of a consciousness of the weakness of

[3] A few instances of this occur in the citations of note 1, supra; e.g. in Alabama and Iowa. Other instances are as follows: 1907, Brunger v. Pioneer R. P. Co., 6 Cal. App. 691, 92 Pac. 1043 (machine); 1912, Koskoff v. Goldman, 86 Conn. 415, 85 Atl. 588 (admitted as contradictory of certain expert testimony); 1908, Sample v. Chicago B. & Q. R. Co., 233 Ill. 564, 84 N. E. 643 (subsequent filling of a hole, admitted to show error in the opponent's photograph); 1909, Consolidated G. E. L. & P. Co. v. State, 109 Md. 186, 72 Atl. 651 (electric wires).

So, also, a change of practice may be admissible to show that the different method was feasible for avoiding danger: 1919, Husbands v. Paducah & I. R. Co., 186 Ky. 294, 216 S. W. 840 (street obstruction; construction of a better way of access, admitted); 1919, Franklin v. Webber, 93 Or. 151, 182 Pac. 819 (installation of a guard, to show practicability of guarding without impairing efficiency of the machine, allowed); 1911, Fonder v. General Construction Co., 146 Wis. 1, 130 N. W. 884 (change in method of placing workmen at a derrick).

See, also, where the possibility of several causes requires such description: 1909, Place v. Grand Trunk R. Co., 82 Vt. 42, 71 Atl. 836.

[4] The following statute is typical: Ohio Gen. Code Annot. 1921, § 999 (failure of a factory proprietor to make alterations or safeguards ordered by inspector "shall be 'prima facie' evidence of negligence").

[5] 1921, Nage v. Reid, — Mass. —, 133 N. E. 98 (conduct of defendant's driver in carrying the injured child into a near-by building and then going to summon a doctor, held not admissible); 1908, Binewicz v. Haglin, 103 Minn. 297, 115 N. W. 271 (injury received on a building; the defendant's payment of a weekly sum to the injured man's wife, and his promises of further assistance, admitted, but treated as of little weight); 1914, Grogan v. Dooley, 211 N. Y. 30, 105 N. E. 135 (the plaintiff was injured while in the employ of the defendant; the mere fact that the defendant offered to pay the plaintiff's wages during disability and his physician's bill, held not admissible); 1911, Perez v. Guanica Centrale, 17 P. R. 927 (personal injury; furnishing medical attention, etc., is not an admission of liability); 1904, Clarke v. N. Y. N. H. & H. R. Co., 26 R. I. 59, 58 Atl. 245 (setting fire to timber by locomotives; that the defendant's employees aided in putting out the fire, held not to allow an inference).

§ 284. [1] 1902, R. v. Higgins, 35 N. Br. 18, 24 (failure of the accused to name G. as the guilty person, until the accused testified in his own behalf at the trial, admissible); 1895, Fussell v. State, 93 Ga. 350, 21 S. E. 97; 1908, Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Varner, 129 Ga. 844, 60 S. E. 162 (failure to complain of an injury, admitted); 1907, Page v. Hazelton, 74 N. H. 252, 66 Atl. 1049 (failure to demand an alleged debt, though in need of money); 1918, Marsh v. State, 16 Ala. App. 597, 80 So. 171 (arson: citing the above text with approval).

Contra: 1902, Davis v. Hamilton, 88 Minn. 64, 92 N. W. 512 (libel; plaintiff's failure to sue or otherwise call defendant to account for prior similar utterances by defendant, not receivable as an admission).

For a failure to make or file a claim, in answer to a request, etc., as constituting an admission by silent assent, see post, § 1072 (admissions).

[2] 1876, Rogers v. People, 34 Mich. 345.

one's cause. So also is the failure to sue or prosecute in the jurisdiction or court which would naturally be sought.[3] These are but a few illustrations of a great variety of the party's conduct which may be and constantly is inquired into as affecting his belief in the merits of his cause. Like all similar circumstances, it is of course open to explanation.[4]

(2) The failure to complain speedily of a rape is universally conceded to be a damaging circumstance against the woman making the charge. There is much question here over the allowable methods of explaining away, or meeting beforehand, this inference; and as the doctrines of impeachment and rehabilitation of witnesses are mainly concerned, the subject is examined in detail elsewhere (post, §§ 1134–1140).

(3) The woman's failure in travail to name her seducer, the father of her bastard, is by old tradition in some jurisdictions receivable as a significant fact. Here, too, the doctrines about witnesses come to be concerned, and the subject is examined elsewhere (post, § 1141).

(4) The failure to lodge immediate information of a robbery is similarly a circumstance discrediting the charge; for like reasons it is dealt with in another place (post, § 1142).

(5) The failure to protest one's innocence, on being arrested for a crime — a circumstance perhaps not to be distinguished from the conduct already considered in § 273 — leads to the question whether the fact of such protestation may be shown to repel in advance the inference that might otherwise have been made; this is considered elsewhere (post, § 1144).

(6) The failure to explain the possession of stolen goods, when arrested, is a significant circumstance which gives rise to the question whether an explanation actually made at the time is receivable; this trenches upon the Hearsay rule, and with other related questions is there considered (post, § 1781).

§ 285. Failure to Produce Evidence, as indicating Unfavorable Tenor of Evidence; (1) in general. The consciousness indicated by conduct may be, not an indefinite one affecting the weakness of the cause at large, but a specific one concerning the defects of a particular element in the cause. The failure to bring before the tribunal some circumstance, document, or witness, when either the party himself or his opponent claims that the facts would thereby be elucidated, serves to indicate, as the most natural inference, that the party fears to do so, and this fear is some evidence that the circumstance or document or witness, if brought, would have exposed facts unfavorable to the party. These inferences, to be sure, cannot fairly be made except upon certain conditions; and they are also open always to explanation by circumstances which make some other hypothesis a more natural one than the party's fear of exposure.

[3] 1894, Merritt v. R. Co., 162 Mass. 326, 38 N. E. 447.

Here also must be considered the scarcely distinguishable admissions by silence (post, § 1072) in failing to include a claim, to deny an opponent's claim, and the like.

[4] Cases cited supra, § 281; 1908, Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Varner, 129 Ga. 844, 60 S. E. 162 (complaint of injury uttered to B, not admitted to explain away a failure to complain to A; unsound).

But the propriety of such an inference in general is not doubted. The non-production of evidence that would naturally have been produced by an honest and therefore fearless claimant permits the inference that its tenor is unfavorable to the party's cause. Ever since the case of the Chimney-sweeper's Jewel,[1] this has been a recognized principle:[2]

285. [1] Of course the mode of reasoning was understood and applied long before this case. An earlier record of it is found in Ward v. Apprice, 6 Mod. 264 (1705), quoted post, § 291.

[2] ENGLAND: 1754, Canning's Trial, 19 How. St. Tr. 312; 1794, Rowan's Trial, 22 How. St. Tr. 1140, 1142, 1170; 1798, Bond's Trial, 27 How. St. Tr. 605; 1835, Boyce v. Chapman, 2 Bing. N. C. 222 (issue as to the stealing of the plaintiff's goods by the defendant's porter; the defendant's failure to call the porter, admitted); 1839, Tracy Peerage Case, 10 Cl. & F. 154, 180, 189 (failure to produce available witnesses, taken as negativing the fact alleged); 1874, Vaughton v. R. Co., 12 Cox Cr. 580, 588 (similar facts); 1880, R. v. Labouchere, 14 Cox Cr. 419, 432, Cockburn, C. J. (libel charging that the prosecutor gained his livelihood by card-sharping; that certain co-players were not produced by the prosecutor, was allowed to be considered; "you may fairly ask yourselves whether, if these persons had not been associated with the prosecutor in the evil practices alleged, he would not have been eager to produce them as witnesses to rebut the charges made against him").

CANADA: 1878, Briggs v. McBride, 17 N. Br. 663, 666; 1899, Hesse v. St. John R. Co., 30 Can. Sup. 218, 225, 234 (personal injury).

UNITED STATES: Federal: 1874, Steamship Ville du Havre, 7 Ben. 328, 332, 16 Fed. 943 (failure to call a steward who had trimmed a light, to show what condition the light was in); 1880, U. S. v. Schindler, 18 Blatch. 227, 230, 3 Fed. 338; 1882, The Fred M. Laurence, 15 Fed. 635; 1896, Kirby v. Tallmadge, 160 U. S. 379, 383, 16 Sup. 349; 1897, The Joseph B. Thomas, 81 Fed. 578 (failure to produce probable eye-witnesses); 1902, Re Kellogg, 113 Fed. 120, 130; 1902, Sauntry v. U. S., 55 C. C. A. 148, 117 Fed. 132 (principle applied to proof of the value of timber cut by a trespasser); 1903, Marande v. R. Co., 59 C. C. A. 562, 124 Fed. 42; 1906, Grunberg v. U. S., 145 Fed. 81, 89, C. C. A. (failure to call employees, inference allowed); 1906, Quilichini v. Agostini, 2 P. R. Fed. 258, 270 (fraud of Creditors); 1907, Le Brun v. Romero, 3 P. R. Fed. 225, 239 (negotiable instruments);
Alaska: Comp. L. 1913, § 1505 (like Or. Laws 1920, § 799, par. 5, 6);
California: C. C. P. 1872, § 1963 (it is to be presumed "5, that evidence wilfully suppressed would be adverse, if produced", "6, that higher evidence would be adverse, from inferior being produced"); § 2061 ("6. That evidence is to be estimated not only by its own intrinsic weight, but also according to the evidence which it is in the power of one side to produce and of the other to contradict; and, therefore, 7. That if weaker and less satisfactory evidence is offered, when it appears that stronger and more satisfactory was within the power of the party, the evidence offered should be viewed with distrust");
Connecticut: 1895, Throckmorton v. Chapman, 65 Conn. 441, 454, 32 Atl. 930 (conveyance in fraud of creditors: inference allowed for failure to call the debtor and his wife); 1921, Stuart v. Doyle, 95 Conn. 732, 112 Atl. 653 (collision of automobiles; defendant's failure to call two of his own employees, known only to himself held open to inference);
Columbia (Dist.): 1906, Alexander v. Blackman, 26 D. C. App. 541, 551 (inventor's wife and daughter, etc., in a patent case); 1919, Rappaport v. Capital Traction Co., 48 D. C. App. 359 (personal injury);
Florida: 1895, Leslie v. State, 35 Fla. 171, 17 So. 555 (failure to call a person who could have explained an alleged larceny; inference allowed);
Georgia: 1883, Mitchell v. State, 71 Ga. 128, 137 (homicide); 1885, Gainesville & J. S. R. Co. v. Wall, 75 Ga. 282 (failure of defendant to produce fireman of engine, in an action for killing a cow); 1885, Davis v. R. Co., 75 Ga. 645, 648 (similar); 1885, East Tennessee V. & G. R. Co. v. Culler, 75 Ga. 904, semble (similar); 1886, Savannah F. & W. R. Co. v. Gray, 77 Ga. 440, 442, S. E. 158 (similar; but on the facts the inference was held not proper); 1887, Harrison v. Kiser, 79 Ga. 588, 592, 4 S. E. 320 (employer's liability; inference denied on the facts); Code 1910, § 5749, P. C. 1910, § 1015 (a presumption arises, "where a party has evidence in his power and within his reach . . . and omits to produce it, or having more certain and satisfactory evidence in his power relies on that which is of a weaker and inferior nature", that the opponent's "charge or claim is well founded"); 1908, Georgia F. & A. R. Co. v. Sasser, 4 Ga. App. 276, 61 S. E. 505 (rule applied where depositions were used, as allowed in this State — see post, § 1415, n. 5 — though the deponents were present in court); 1922, Cook v. Korshak, 301 Ill. 603, 134 N. E. 49 (trover against a pawnbroker for a stolen diamond; cited more fully post, § 439; a Lord Mansfield was sadly needed in this case);

1722, Armory v. Delamirie, 1 Strange 505; a chimney-sweeper's boy, finding a jewel, took it to the defendant, a jeweler, for appraisal, but the defendant would not restore it. In an action of trover, in proving the value, "the Chief Justice [Pratt] directed the jury that unless the defendant did produce the jewel and show it not to be of the finest water, they should presume the strongest against him, and make the value of the best jewels the measure of their damages; which they accordingly did."

1774, Lord MANSFIELD, C. J., in Blatch v. Archer, Cowp. 66: "It is certainly a maxim that all evidence is to be weighed according to the proof which it was in the power of one side to have produced and in the power of the other to have contradicted."

1820, BEST, J., in R. v. Burdett, 4 B. & Ald. 122: "If the opposite party has it in his power to rebut it by evidence, and yet offers none, then we have something like an admission that the presumption is just. . . . The law does not impose impossibilities on parties; it expects that a man who has the means of knowing who may be witnesses shall call them."

1806, Mr. W. D. Evans, Notes to Pothier II, 128: "When weaker and less satisfactory testimony is tendered in support of a fact the nature of which will admit of elucidation from proofs of a more direct and explicit character, the same caution which rejects evidence of an inferior degree when higher evidence might be produced will awaken suspicion; and it will reasonably be supposed that a more perfect exposition of the subject would have laid open deficiencies and objections which a more obscure and uncertain representation was intended to conceal."

Indiana: 1897, Hinshaw v. State, 147 Ind. 334, 47 N. E. 158;
Iowa: 1883, State v. Rodman, 62 Ia. 456, 458, 17 N. W. 663:
Kansas: 1877, State v. Grebe, 17 Kan. 458;
Louisiana: 1899, Pruyn v. Young, 51 La. An. 320, 25 So. 124;
Maine: 1890, Freeman v. Fogg, 82 Me. 408, 411, 19 Atl. 907;
Massachusetts: 1860, Com. v. Clark, 14 Gray 367, 370, 373; 1862, Whitney v. Bailey, 4 All. 173, 175; 1895, Com. v. McCabe, 163 Mass. 102, 37 N. E. 777;
Michigan: 1875, Wallace v. Harris, 32 Mich. 380, 394; 1879, People v. Gordon, 40 Mich. 716, 720; 1882, Ruppe v. Steinbach, 48 Mich. 465, 466, 12 N. W. 658; 1921, Douglass v. Insurance Co., 215 Mich. 529, 184 N. W. 539 (failure to call defendant's agent);
Missouri: 1879, State v. Degonia, 69 Mo. 485, 490; 1918, State v. Kester, — Mo. —, 201 S. W. 62 (eye-witness of an assault);
Montana: Rev. C. 1921, § 10606, par. 5, 6 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1963); Rev. C. 1921, § 10672, par. 7 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 2061); 1909, Sullivan v. Girson, 39 Mont. 274, 102 Pac. 320 (diamond ring converted by defendant, who refused to produce it);
Nebraska: 1904, Chicago, B. & O. R. Co. v. Krayenbuhl, 70 Nebr. 766, 98 N. W. 44 (failure to call defendant's employee; inference allowed);
New Hampshire: 1900, Hersey v. Hutchins, 70 N. H. 130, 46 Atl. 33;
New York: 1860, People v. Dyle, 21 N. Y. 578 (inferences allowable from failure to contradict an accomplice on a material point);
North Carolina: 1876, State v. Smallwood, 75 N. C. 104, 106 (inference allowed from failure to call a witness overhearing a confession);
Oregon: Laws 1920, § 799, par. 5, 6, § 868 (similar to Cal. C. C. P. § 1963);
Pennsylvania: 1856, Fowler v. Sergeant, 1 Pa. 355 (malpractice; failure to call an assisting surgeon); 1883, Rice v. Com., 102 Pa. 408, 411 (seduction; failure to call a person present at an alleged confession of the defendant); 1862, Steininger v. Hoch's Ex'r, 42 Pa. 432 (failure to call a witness to the transaction, held open to inference); 1893, Hall v. Vanderpool, 156 Pa. 152, 26 Atl. 1069 (title to property claimed under the plaintiff's father; the plaintiff's failure to call her father, held open to inference); 1906, Green v. Brooks, 215 Pa. 492, 64 Atl. 672 (title to personalty; the plaintiff's failure to call his son, who was in court, held open to inference);
Philippine Isl. C. C. P. 1901, § 334, par. 5 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1963); 1910, U. S. v. Tria, 17 P. I. 303 (illegal voting);
Porto Rico: Rev. St. & C. 1911, § 1470 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1963); § 1530 (like ib. § 2061);
Texas: 1915, Ables v. State, 77 Tex. Cr. 302, 177 S. W. 1161 (larceny; defendant's sister testified for defendant that she and her husband counted certain money; on cross-examination, the fact that her husband, not called, was "in jail in Oklahoma" was held admissible; Davidson, J., diss.);
West Virginia: 1892, Robinson v. Woodford, 37 W. Va. 377, 391, 16 S. E. 602; 1902, Garber v. Blatchley, 51 W. Va. 147, 41 S. E. 222; 1903, Vandervort v. Fouse, 52 W. Va. 214, 43 S. E. 112 (but using the entirely improper phrase that a "conclusive presumption" is raised).

1846, NELSON, J., in Clifton v. U. S., 4 How. 247: "One of the general rules of evidence, of universal application, is that the best evidence of disputed facts must be produced of which the nature of the case will admit. This rule, speaking technically, applies only to the distinction between primary and secondary evidence; but the reason assigned for the application of the rule in a technical sense is equally applicable, and is frequently applied, to the distinction between the higher and inferior degrees of proof, speaking in a more general and enlarged sense of the terms. . . . Even in cases where the higher and inferior testimony cannot be resolved into primary and secondary evidence, technically, so as to compel the production of the higher, . . . the same presumption exists in full force and effect against the party withholding the better evidence, especially when it appears, or has been shown, to be in his possession or power, and must and should in all cases exercise no considerable influence in assigning to the inferior proof the degree of credit to which it is rightfully entitled."

1877, BREWER, J., in State v. Grebe, 17 Kan. 458 (approving an instruction that "where evidence which would refute or explain certain facts and circumstances of a grave and suspicious nature is peculiarly within the defendant's knowledge and reach, and he makes no effort to procure that testimony", an inference may arise): "It seems to us that that clause is only a recognition of a well-understood principle of human action. The instinct of self-preservation impels one in peril of the penitentiary to produce whatever testimony he may have to deliver him from such peril. Every man will do what he can to shield himself from the disgrace of a conviction of crime, and the burden of punishment. We all know this. We all expect it. Whenever then a fact is shown which tends to prove crime upon a defendant, and any explanation of such fact is in the nature of the case peculiarly within his knowledge and reach, a failure to offer an explanation must tend to create a belief that none exists. Will not a man, who can, explain that which unexplained will stamp him a criminal and consign him to the felon's cell? The criminal law furnishes in its rules more than one illustration of this principle. The possession of recently-stolen property casts upon the possessor the duty of explaining such possession. Why? Because the fact and manner of acquiring that possession are peculiarly within his knowledge and reach, and the instinct of self-preservation will compel him to give an explanation thereof consistent with his innocence, if any such explanation exists. Other illustrations might be cited, but it is scarcely necessary. The principle itself rests in the common knowledge and conviction of all."

This undoubted general principle has been frequently applied in numerous rulings, most of which throw no special light upon its doubtful features and are of little service as precedents.

§ 286. Same: (2) Witnesses not Produced. (a) Witnesses Unavailable or Privileged. There remains some uncertainty in the judicial treatment of certain conditions preliminary to the inference. It is plain that the inference is based, not on the bare fact that a particular person is not produced as a witness, but on his non-production when it would be natural to suppose that he would have been produced if the facts known by him had been favorable. What are the additional elements which justify us in saying that it would have been natural?

(a) In the first place, the person must be within the power of the party to produce. This is unquestioned.[1] This lack of power may be due to the person's absence from the jurisdiction, or to his illness, or to other circumstances.[2] In particular, it may be due to the party's ignorance of the whereabouts of the witness or the witness' possession of useful information,[3] or of the need of proving the facts in question;[4] for here knowledge is essential to power. Further, it may be due to the person's disqualification as a witness.[5] When the witness is privileged, and the privilege is independent of the party's control, the witness' claim of privilege renders the party unable to use his testimony;[6] but it would seem that the witness should at least have been summoned and asked, for he may waive his privilege.[7] But where the privilege is one which lies within the control of the party himself, it is obvious that the employment of the witness is in fact within the party's power; and thus, so far as the present principle is concerned, the inference might be justified. Nevertheless, the question arises whether thus the privilege might not be undermined and destroyed by indirection; and this depends so much on the nature of the privilege that it is better examined under the heads of the respective privileges.[8]

§ 286. [1] This is mentioned or assumed in almost all the cases, e.g.: 1909, Tetreault v. Connecticut Co., 81 Conn. 556, 71 Atl. 787 (personal injury); 1876, Schuell v. Toomer, 56 Ga. 168, 171; 1887, People v. Sharp, 107 N. Y. 427, 463, 14 N. E. 319; 1902, State v. Buckman, 74 Vt. 309, 52 Atl. 427.

Of course, a rule of evidence other than a rule of privilege for the party is a means of excluding evidence which he is always entitled to take advantage of; and his objection to prohibited evidence (or his failure to waive an objection) cannot in any way be construed to his disadvantage,[9] since by hy-

[2] Compare the circumstances allowed in explanation: post, § 287.

[3] 1896, State v. Fitzgerald, 68 Vt. 125, 34 Atl. 429; 1902, McKinstry v. Collins, 74 Vt. 147, 52 Atl. 438 semble (the testimony must be within the peculiar knowledge of the opponent; but the objecting party must show that it was not).

[4] Compare the rule as to notice to produce documents, post, § 291.

Whether a corporation can be defaulted for its failure to cause its officer, being out of the jurisdiction, to appear as a witness, is considered in Central Grain & S. Exch. v. Board of Trade, C. C. A., 125 Fed 463 (1903).

[5] 1893, Graves v. U. S., 150 U. S. 118, 120, 14 Sup. 40 (wife alleged to have been present at a place with defendant, and desired so as to allow of identification; she was incompetent, both for and against him; failure to produce her, not admissible); 1900, Knox v. State, 112 Ga. 373, 37 S. E. 416 (failure to call a minor, not shown competent, who was an eye-witness, not to be considered; Little, J., diss., because the witness was competent); 1920, Carney v. Sheedy, 295 Ill. 78, 128 N. E. 810 (disqualified as interested survivors); 1907, Jamison v. U. S., 7 Ind. Terr. 661, 104 S. W. 872 (wife incompetent for or against the accused); 1862, Carter v. Beals, 44 N. H. 408, 413 (party's husband disqualified; but otherwise, where he is as joint defendant qualified to testify for himself); 1904, Wright v. Davis, 72 N. H. 448, 57 Atl. 335 (a plaintiff disqualified as a survivor to some of the facts; the defendant's counsel allowed to allude to the plaintiff's failure to testify at all, but, on the principle of § 1807, post, not to assert that the defendant would have waived any disqualification of the plaintiff); 1909, Rhea v. Terr., 3 Okl. Cr. 230, 105 Pac. 314 (the defendant's wife being qualified to testify for him, but he and she being privileged that she should not testify against him, his failure to call her was held to be open to inference).

[6] This seems not to be questioned: 1912, Com. v. Spencer, 212 Mass. 438, 99 N. E. 266 (wife competent but not compellable); 1915, Hopkins v. State, 11 Okl. Cr. 385, 146 Pac. 917 (defendant's failure to call co-defendants and a co-defendant's wife, held not properly commented on).

[7] This situation would be chiefly likely to occur for a witness privileged not to produce documents, under the principle of § 2211, post; see the cases as to non-production of documents, post, § 291.

Compare the rule permitting the use of copies of documents in a third person's hands, but requiring that at least a demand or service of process be first shown: post, §§ 1211–1213.

[8] For the privilege between husband and wife, see post, §§ 2243, 2340; for the privilege between attorney and client, see post, § 2322; for the privilege against self-crimination, see post, §§ 2272, 2273; for the privilege covering patient's communications to a physician, see post, § 2386. The effect of claiming a privilege as a civil party may be sufficiently examined here, in § 289, post.

[9] 1901, Laird v. Laird, 127 Mich. 24, 86 N. W. 436 (failure to waive objection to incompetency by survivorship).

pothesis the evidence is prohibited, not for his personal sake on grounds independent of the value of the evidence, as privileged evidence is (post, § 2196), but because of the untrustworthiness of the evidence. No doubt a party usually does take advantage of such rules because the forbidden evidence is unfavorable, and no doubt the opponent constantly seeks by innuendo to give an unfavorable meaning to such objections. But the rules of evidence could never be enforced if parties were not guaranteed free scope in calling attention to the impending violation of the rules; and it is universally assumed and understood that no inference can lawfully be urged in consequence of such objections.

§ 287. Same: (b) Witnesses Prejudiced or Inferior in Value. (b) In the next place, the inference is clearly not a proper one where the person in question is one who by his position would likely be so prejudiced against the party that the latter could not expect to obtain from him the unbiassed truth.[1] Furthermore, it seems plain that possible witnesses whose testimony is for any reason comparatively unimportant, or cumulative, or inferior to what is already utilized, might well be dispensed with by a party on general grounds of expense and inconvenience, without any apprehension as to the tenor of their testimony. In other words, put somewhat more strongly, there is a general limitation (depending for its application on the facts of each case) that the inference cannot fairly be drawn except from the non-production of witnesses whose testimony would be superior in respect to the fact to be proved. This limitation should not be enforced with any strictness; otherwise it would become practically objectionable; but on principle it is sound, and has often been recognized:[2]

§ 287. [1] 1882, State v. Cousins, 58 Ia. 250, 12 N. W. 281 (inference not allowable for a failure to call an alleged accomplice). This doctrine is implied in the following cases: 1895, Com. v. McCabe, 163 Mass. 98, 39 N. E. 777 (illegal keeping of liquor; the failure of the defendant to produce persons present at the time of the seizure, allowed as ground for inference; their probable relations to the defendant being such as to make it useless for the prosecution to call them, when it had other evidence); 1898, Fonda v. R. Co., 71 Minn. 438, 74 N. W. 166 (defendant's failure to call the employee who injured the plaintiff, admissible, though he was equally accessible to plaintiff); 1921, People v. Slover, 232 N. Y. 264, 133 N. E. 633 (murder; failure to call a convicted accomplice, not a subject for inference); 1921, Button v. Knight, — Vt. —, 115 Atl. 499 (alienation of affections).

[2] Accord: Alabama: 1852, Patten v. Rambo, 20 Ala. 485 (two physicians had examined a slave, whose soundness was in issue; one only was called; the failure to call the other held no ground for an inference, without a showing that his testimony would have been more valuable); 1884, Jackson v. State, 77 Ala. 18, 21, 25 (two eye-witnesses of a homicide; no inference allowed against the prosecution for producing one only; so also for hearers of a dying declaration); 1885, Carter v. Chambers, 79 Ala. 223, 224, 231 (driver of the defendant's carriage, who ran over the plaintiff, not called; a charge that the failure to produce any available witness justifies an inference, rejected); 1892, Haynes v. McRae, 101 Ala. 318, 13 So. 270 (purchaser from an attached debtor, suing the sheriff: failure of the plaintiff to call the debtor as to the consideration of the sale, etc., held no ground for inference); 1900, Louisville & R. N. Co. v. Sullivan, 128 Ala. 95, 27 So. 760 (defendant's failure to call fireman of engine; no inference allowed); California: 1898, People v. Dole, — Cal. —, 51 Pac. 945 (C. C. P. § 1963, par. 6, quoted ante, § 285; "weaker" held hardly a proper synonym for "inferior"); Georgia: 1867, Doe v. Stevens, 36 Ga. 463, 473 (execution of a deed denied; held that proof by witnesses to an alibi, instead of witnesses to handwriting or the like, raised no inference); Michigan: 1904, Cavanagh v. Riverside, 136 Mich. 660, 99 N. W. 876 (highway injury; failure to call the highway overseer; inference not allowed); Porto Rico: Rev. St. & C. 1911,

1885, STONE, C. J., in Carter v. Chambers, 79 Ala. 223, 224, 231 (disapproving a charge that "if a party has a witness within his power to produce, and fails to produce him, the presumption is fair that the witness if produced would not support the right of the party"): "Carried to its extent, it would require of a suitor that he should produce all the witnesses, no matter how numerous they might be, who knew anything of the transaction. . . . There is a rule, and a just one, that if a party has a witness possessing a peculiar knowledge of the transaction, and supposed to be favorable to him, and fails to produce such witness when he has the means of doing so, this, in the absence of all explanation, is ground of suspicion that such better-informed testimony would make against him."

§ 288. Same: (c) Witnesses Equally Available to Both Parties. (c) It is commonly said that no inference is allowable where the person in question is equally available to both parties;[1] particularly where he is actually in court;[2] though there seems to be no disposition to accept such a limitation absolutely or to enforce it strictly.[3] Yet the more logical view is that the failure to

§ 1470 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1963): West Virginia: 1909, Cooper v. Upton, 60 W. Va. 618, 64 S. E. 523.

So, too, 'a fortiori', when it does not appear what the witness would testify to: 1886, State v. Starnes, 94 N. C. 973, 975.

For the rule in a few jurisdictions that all eye-witnesses must be called in criminal cases by the prosecution, see post, § 2079.

§ 288. [1] Federal: 1902, Erie R. Co. v. Kane, 55 C. C. A. 129, 118 Fed. 223, 239, semble (no inference to be drawn against either party, where the witness was an employee of defendant but was summoned by plaintiff and in court); 1913, Iowa Court R. Co. v. Hampton E. L. & P. Co., 8th C. C. A., 204 Fed. 961 (defendant's employee); Alabama: 1897, Nelms v. Steiner, 113 Ala. 562, 22 So. 435; 1899, Brock v. State, 123 Ala. 24, 26 So. 329 (defendant's failure to call one jointly indicated but separately tried for adultery; Tyson, J., rightly dissenting on the ground that a witness is not in truth "accessible" if, though present and compellable, he "may be so hostile to the prosecution or so connected with the defendant that his testimony would be unavailable to the State"); 1899, Coppin v. State, 123 Ala. 58, 26 So. 333 (similar); 1909, Goedan v. Austin, 161 Ala. 585, 50 So. 70; Arkansas: 1906, Mutual Industrial I. Co. v. Perkins, — Ark. —, 98 S. W. 709; Connecticut: 1858, Scovill v. Baldwin, 27 Conn. 316, 318; Georgia: 1900, Ray v. Camp, 110 Ga. 818, 36 S. E. 242; Indiana: 1882, Haymond v. Saucer, 84 Ind. 3, 13; 1887, Coleman v. State, 111 Ind. 563, 569, 13 N. E. 100; Hawaii: 1916, Terr. v. Meyer, 23 Haw. 121, 131 (larceny of cattle; non-production of putrefying hide, accessible to both parties; inference allowed against both, citing with approval the text above); Iowa: 1881, State v. Rosier, 55 Ia. 517, 8 N. W. 345; 1882, State v. Cousins, 58 Ia. 250, 12 N. W. 281; Massachusetts: 1913, Delaney v. Berkshire St. R. Co., 215 Mass. 591, 102 N. E. 901 (defendant's argument, calling attention to a statute allowing discovery of witnesses' names, and aiming to rebut a possible inference that the defendant had the power to produce more witnesses than the plaintiff, held properly suppressed by the trial court); Missouri: 1921, Atkinson v. United R. Co., 286 Mo. 634, 228 S. W. 483 (personal injury; defendant's failure to call as witness one of three physicians designated by the Court to examine the plaintiff, at the defendant's request, held not open to inference, the physician not being the defendant's witness); New York: 1922, Hayden v. New York R. Co., 233 N. Y. 61, 134 N. E. 826 (taxicab driver, in action by passenger against third person); Oklahoma: 1913, Fulsom-Morris C. & M. Co. v. Mitchell, 37 Okl. 575, 132 Pac. 1103; Vermont: McCabe's Will, 73 Vt. 175, 50 Atl. 804 (but here stated in modified form).

On this ground the following case apparently rests: 1887, Blackman v. State, 78 Ga. 592, 595, 3 S. E. 418 (trial having been postponed, on defendant's motion, to enable him to procure witnesses to an alibi, and the witnesses attending but not being called, no inference as to guilt was held allowable).

[2] 1891, Pollak v. Harmon, 94 Ala. 420, 10 So. 156 (purchase from an attached debtor; both grantors being in court, it was held that no suspicion or presumption could arise against the purchaser for not calling them); 1892, Bates v. Morris, 101 Ala. 282, 286, 13 So. 138 (the husband of the plaintiff, in Court and available for both parties; inference not allowed); 1895, Crawford v. State, 112 Ala. 1, 23, 21 So. 214; 1921, State v. Segar, 96 Conn. 428, 114 Atl. 389 (forgery; witness in Court and called by neither party; no inference allowable); 1885, Davis v. R. Co., 75 Ga. 645, 648.

[3] 1899, Frank Waterhouse Co. v. Rock Island A. M. Co., 38 C. C. A. 281, 97 Fed. 466 (opponent's failure to produce an employee to whom leave of absence has been granted, open to inference, the proponent having fruitlessly subpœnaed him); 1878, McAdory v. State, 62 Ala. 151, 157, 162 (presence of witnesses not called; left to trial Court's discretion); 1897, Western & A. R. Co. v. Morrison, 102 Ga. 319, produce is open to an inference against both parties, the particular strength of the inference against either depending on the circumstances.[4] To prohibit the inference entirely is to reduce to an arbitrary rule of uniformity that which really depends on the varying significance of facts which cannot be so measured.

§ 289. Same: (d) Party himself failing to Testify. (d) At common law the party-opponent in a civil case was ordinarily privileged from taking the stand (post, § 2217); but he was also disqualified; and hence the question could rarely arise whether his failure to testify could justify any inference against him. But since the general abolition both of the privilege and the disqualification (post, §§ 2218, 577), the party has become both competent and compellable like other witnesses; and the question plainly arises whether his conduct is to be judged by the same standards of inference. This question should naturally be answered in the affirmative:

1862, APPLETON, J., in Union Bank v. Stone, 50 Me. 595, 599: "There was evidence proving or tending to prove that a notice of demand and non-payment had been given the defendant. He had been notified to produce it, and did not. He was present and not a witness. If he had never received such a notice, he knew it, and, knowing it, would be little likely to omit an opportunity of stating a fact thus conclusively in his favor. The evidence tended strongly to charge him. A word from his lips might exonerate him from all liability. . . . If notice had been received, and the defendant knew it, he might well be silent. The utterances of the truth would establish the plaintiff's claim. . . . If he were a witness, he must either state the truth or a falsehood. If he testified truly, his hope of a successful defence was at an end. The defendant does not offer his own testimony. He prefers the adverse inferences which he cannot but perceive may be drawn therefrom, to any statements he could truly give or to any explanations he might make. He prefers any inferences to giving his testimony. Why? Because no inferences can be more adverse than would be the testimony he would be obliged by the truth to give. — The fact of not testifying was obvious to the jury. . . . No Court could perceive such a fact without attaching some degree of importance — more or less — to its existence, according to the necessity of the testimony and the emergencies of the defence. No judge exists who would not, if the trial had been before him, regard this as a fact bearing on 29 S. E. 104 (failure to put on the stand a material witness, who is however produced in Court, may be commented on by counsel; Simmons, C. J., diss.); 1917, People v. Munday, 280 Ill. 32, 117 N. E. 286 (conspiracy to defraud a bank; "if those transactions . . . were as fair and clean as counsel would have you believe, why is n't William Lorimer here?" held improper because L. "was as accessible to the State as to the defense"; unsound, because L. was the chief of the defrauders, and the defendant was merely his tool); 1899, Harriman v. R. Co., 173 Mass. 28, 53 N. E. 156 (failure to call a witness available for both; left to jury to infer upon the circumstances); 1919, London v. Bay State R. Co., 231 Mass. 480, 121 N. E. 394 (personal injury; defendant's failure to call its employee, not the subject of inference); 1900, Story v. R. Co., 70 N. H. 364, 48 Atl. 288 (defendant's failure to produce the engineer who had caused the accident, held admissible, even though plaintiff might have taken his deposition; yet "ordinarily no inference can be drawn because a witness equally at the command of each party is not called"); 1905, Lambert v. Hamlin, 73 N. H. 138, 59 Atl. 941 (employee of defendant, in the city at the time of trial; inference allowed against the defendant); 1892, Arbuckle v. Templeton, 65 Vt. 205, 211, 25 Atl. 1095 (inference not allowable from a mere omission to ask a witness while on the stand, because the opponent also might have asked).

[4] 1894, Mitchell v. R. Co., 68 N. H. 96, 116, 34 Atl. 674 (fireman, conductor, and M., being within ear-shot of a train, were not called to testify as to the bell-ringing; either party held entitled to argue as to the inference from this); 1901, State v. Slamon, 73 Vt. 212, 50 Atl. 1097 (undecided); 1892, Robinson v. Woodford, 37 W. Va. 377, 392, 16 S. E. 602, semble.

his decision. To direct a jury to disregard it would be to direct them to disregard a fact existent, material, and probative. However much so directed, they could not fail to perceive, and, perceiving, could not avoid regarding it."

1875, AGNEW, C. J., in Brown v. Schock, 77 Pa. 471, 478: "A man of ordinary intelligence must know that his failing to appear, when he had a strong motive to appear, would be evidence against him; if he relies upon his ability to disprove the motive imputed, he takes the risk, but he leaves the effect of his conduct, as a matter of evidence for the opposite side, to go to the jury."

1922, RUGG, C. J., in Attorney-General v. Pelletier, —Mass.—, 134 N. E. 406 (removal of a district attorney for misconduct of office): "The respondent did not testify. He called no witnesses. He offered no evidence. He rested at the conclusion of the evidence introduced by the informant. There was ample evidence introduced by the informant tending to prove that the respondent was guilty of many of the charges set forth in the information. This evidence, if believed, constituted abundant proof of malfeasance and misfeasance in office arising from motives utterly unworthy of an upright man. The case shown by the evidence vitally affected the official conduct and personal character of the respondent. Instant impulse, spontaneous anxiety, and deep yearning to repel charges thus impugning his honor would be expected from an innocent man. Refusal to testify himself or to call available witnesses in his own behalf under such circumstances warrants inferences unfavorable to the respondent. It is conduct in the nature of an admission. It is evidence against him. This principle of law has long been established and constantly applied. The reason is that it is an attribute of human nature to resent such imputations. In the face of such accusations, men commonly do not remain mute but voice their denials with earnestness, if they can do so with honesty. Culpability alone seals their lips. The law simply recognizes the natural probative force of conduct contrary to that of the ordinary man of integrity."

The only dissent from this view seems to be based on that subtle sentiment of honor (scarcely capable of appreciation outside of the Southern States) which recognizes the repugnance that an honorable and sensitive man feels to placing himself in a situation where his word may be doubted by reason of his interested motives. The legislation making parties competent has not even yet been received in those communities without scruple and apprehension. Where such motives of delicacy prevail, it would obviously be unfortunate to place that party in the dilemma of either violating his scruples by testifying or of suffering discredit by remaining silent:

1877, BLECKLEY, J., in Thompson v. Davitte, 59 Ga. 472, 480: "The request [which was properly refused] was based on the assumption that because the propounder was present and competent to testify, he was bound to do so, or else suffer by his failure to offer himself as a witness in his own case. We think, on the contrary, that it is becoming, and to be commended, in a party not to testify, if he can avoid it without positive injury to the cause of truth and justice. As long as he is unheard, there should be no presumption that his silence is counseled by prudence rather than by modesty. While his case should not gain by his forbearance to testify, neither should it lose by it. Public policy forbids that a suitor should feel constrained to mount the witness-stand for no purpose but to let the jury know that he has something to say in his favor, or to show them that he can face the terrors of a cross-examination without breaking down. The encouragement of anything like competition in swearing would be too sure to breed perjury. Let those testify in their own behalf who voluntarily present themselves; but let no uncharitable imaginations light upon those who stay away, merely because they might swear if they would."

These standards of honor, however, cannot be expected to be considered in the Courts of other communities not affected by them in daily life. Moreover, it does not appear that the Southern Courts are either unanimous or rigorous in applying them. It would be generally agreed, to be sure, that the mere fact of the party's failure to testify is not of itself open to inference; it is his failure when he could be a useful and natural witness (ante, § 287) that is significant. But, granting this much, it is to-day conceded, except in a few Courts or in peculiar instances, that the party's conduct is to be judged by the standard of other witnesses.[1]

§ 289. [1] ENGLAND: 1831, Taylor v. Willans, 2 B. & Ad. 845, 856 (malicious prosecution; the prosecutor's failure to testify at the prosecution, held not inapt "under the very peculiar circumstances of this case, to raise an inference that his motive was a consciousness that he had no probable cause for instituting the prosecution"); CANADA: Alta.: Rules of Court 1914, No. 378 (like Ont. Rule 275); 1916, Batt v. Batt, 27 D. L. R. 718 (alimony; plaintiff's failure to testify, though present in court, to the facts of desertion, etc., held to "militate strongly against her"); Manitoba: Rev. St. 1913, c. 46, Rule 473 (like Ont. Rule 275); New Brunswick: 1858, Tufts v. Hatheway, 4 Allen N. B. 62 (trover for cordwood taken; the defendant's failure to testify as to the exact quantity, usable to infer the amount to be unfavorable to him); Ontario: Rules of Court 1913, No. 275 (if the opponent is within the jurisdiction and fails on notice to appear as witness at the trial, judgment may be given against him).

UNITED STATES: Federal: 1895, Kirby v. Tallmadge, 160 U. S. 379, 383, 16 Sup. 349 (failure of defendants to take the stand to explain an alleged fraudulent purchase; inference allowed); 1919, Plunkett v. Livingston, 7th C. C. A., 258 Fed. 889 (action for false representations in a sale);
Alabama: 1880, McGar v. Adams, 65 Ala. 106, 110 (agent's good faith; defendant's failure to take the stand, held not necessarily to raise an inference, where, on the facts, he might "properly rely on that which his adversary introduces when it is without contradiction"); 1911, DuBose v. Conner, 1 Ala. App. 456, 55 So. 432;
California: 1909, Bone v. Hayes, 154 Cal. 759, 99 Pac. 172 (failure to testify in explanation);
Connecticut: 1895, Throckmorton v. Chapman, 65 Conn. 441, 32 Atl. 930 (inference allowed; but here it did not appear that the absence was unexplained, and the circumstance hence could not be considered); 1906, Hull v. Douglas, 79 Conn. 266, 64 Atl. 351 (inference allowed);
Georgia: 1875, Emory v. Smith, 54 Ga. 273, semble (no inference allowed); 1877, Thompson v. Davitte, 59 Ga. 472, 480 (see quotation supra);
Illinois: 1878, Moore v. Wright, 90 Ill. 470 ("it was a personal privilege"; no inference allowed); 1899, Harding v. American Glucose Co., 182 Ill. 551, 55 N. E. 577;
Kansas: 1908, Belknap Hardware Co. v. Sleeth, 77 Kan. 164, 93 Pac. 580 (client's refusal in a deposition to explain, "on advice of counsel", the advice being bad, held open nevertheless to inference);
Kentucky: 1906, Reinhardt v. Mark's Adm'r, — Ky. —, 93 S. W. 32 (but here not applicable; because the party was disqualified);
Louisiana: 1901, Bastrop State Bank v. Levy, 106 La. 586, 31 So. 164;
Maryland: 1903, Safe Deposit & T. Co. v. Turner, 98 Md. 22, 55 Atl. 1023;
Massachusetts: 1873, McDonough v. O'Neil, 113 Mass. 92, 96 (inference allowed); 1884, Lynch v. Peabody, 137 Mass. 92 (same); 1908, Howe v. Howe, 199 Mass. 598, 85 N. E. 945; 1922, Attorney-General v. Pelletier, 240 Mass. 264, 134 N. E. 406 (proceedings on information to remove a district attorney for malfeasance, etc.; respondent's failure to testify, allowed to be used as evidence; quoted supra);
Michigan: 1889, Mooney v. Davis, 75 Mich. 188, 193, 42 N. W. 802 (party's failure to testify in denial of certain representations attributed to him, held open to inference); 1890, Cole v. R. Co., 81 Mich. 156, 159, 45 N. W. 983 (personal injury: plaintiff's failure to testify, held open to inference on the facts; the rule is applicable where the party "possesses knowledge of the facts in controversy unknown to others who have been called as witnesses and such facts would supply positive evidence of what would otherwise be established by inference from other facts"); 1893, Cole v. R. Co., 95 Mich. 77, 80 (same case on re-trial; plaintiff's failure to testify, held open to inference); 1896, Connell v. McNett, 109 Mich. 329, 67 N. W. 344 (silence at a former trial; inference allowed); 1905, McDonald v. Smith, 139 Mich. 211, 102 N. W. 668;
Mississippi: 1901, Buncklev v. Jones, 79 Miss. 1, 29 So. 1000 (failure of plaintiff and his father to testify, held admissible under the circumstances);
Missouri: 1919, Clapp v. Kenley, 277 Mo. 380, 210 S. W. 10 (party to a fraud; inference allowable); but not here, where the opponent had used the party's deposition);
New Mexico: Annot. St. 1915, § 2172 (if op-

The party's refusal to submit to a physical examination should likewise be open to inference, for he is virtually withholding evidence; and this is generally conceded (post, § 2220); the curious thing is that it is equally conceded by Courts which decline to compel a submission and thus in effect recognize a privilege.

The failure of the accused in a criminal case to take the stand ought to permit, so far as the present principle is concerned, the same inference as for witnesses and parties in general. But here the question arises whether the use of such an inference would not indirectly infringe on the privilege; and this can best be considered after examining the privilege (post, §§ 2272, 2273).

The following principles are distinct from the foregoing, although in their application the difference is sometimes obscured: (1) that the failure of a witness (or party) to give certain testimony at a former trial which he now gives amounts to a self-contradiction (post, § 1042); that a party's silence during adverse testimony may sometimes be equivalent to assent and therefore to an admission of its truth (post, § 1072); that a party's failure to deny in a chancery answer the allegations of the bill may amount to an admission; this is a question of chancery pleading.

The effect of a party's failure to produce a document is dealt with in § 291, post.

posing party fails to testify when summoned, it shall be taken "as an admission 'pro confesso' unless otherwise ordered by Court," and judge may non-suit, order a general finding, or postpone on terms);
New York: 1877, Bleecker v. Johnson, 69 N. Y. 309, 311 (failure to call one of the defendants, held to authorize "the jury to say whether under all the circumstances the absence of the defendant was suspicious, so as to authorize an unfavorable inference");
North Carolina: 1868, Devries v. Phillips, 63 N. C. 53, 55 (no inference from the mere failure to call; but there may be "according to the circumstances, as the introduction or non-introduction of any other witness might be commented on"); 1889, Goodman v. Sapp, 102 N. C. 477, 9 S. E. 483; 1913, Powell v. Strickland, 163 N. C. 393, 79 S. E. 872 (like Devries v. Phillips); 1921, Maney v. Greenwood, 182 N. C. 579, 109 S. E. 636 ("Goodman v. Sapp, and the later cases approving it, has settled the law in this respect, notwithstanding the varying and not altogether consistent expressions used in some of the previous decisions");
Oklahoma: 1908, Brooks v. Garner, 20 Okl. 236, 94 Pac. 694;
Oregon: 1912, Bonelli v. Burton, 61 Or. 429, 123 Pac. 37;
Porto Rico: 1911, Fajardo v. Tio, 17 P. R. 230 (filiation; defendant's failure to testify held open to inference; citing the above text with approval);
Tennessee: 1898, Weeks v. McNulty, 101 Tenn. 495, 48 S. W. 809 (inference not allowable, if his testimony could add nothing valuable); 1911, Fisher v. Travelers' Ins. Co., 124 Tenn. 450, 138 S. W. 316 (of course, this inference may be made equally well where there are admissions which might be explained away);
Vermont: 1906, Sears v. Duling, 79 Vt. 334, 65 Atl. 90;
Virginia: 1906, Aragon Coffee Co. v. Rogers, 105 Va. 51, 52 S. E. 843 (bona fide purchase of a note by the plaintiff; the plaintiff's refusal on the stand to explain his motive for the investment, held open to inference);
West Virginia: 1885, Hefflebower v. Dietrick, 27 W. Va. 16, 23 (inference allowed against a defendant who did not testify to facts within his knowledge; the result partly affected by the presence of a demurrer to evidence); 1906, Loverin & B. Co. v. Bumgarner, 59 W. Va. 46, 52 S. E. 1000 (defendant's failure to testify in denial of letters, etc., though present at the trial, held open to inference).

The same inference may apply to the prosecuting witness in a criminal case: 1905, Morgan v. State, 124 Ga. 442, 52 S. E. 748.

On interrogatories before trial, an answer given after provisional refusal may prevent this use of the refusal: 1913, Harrington v. Boston Elev. R. Co., 214 Mass. 563, 101 N. E. 977 (a corporation president's answers, as party, to interrogatories, were refused by him subject to the Court's direction, later the Court directed him to answer, and he did so; held, that the reading of the original refusal to answer was improper).

§ 290. Same: (e) Sundry Distinctions: Criminal Cases; Good Character; Experts; Experiments; Depositions; Explanations; Nature of Inference; Burden of Proof; Presumptions. (1) The principle under consideration applies equally in criminal cases as in civil cases, both for the prosecution as for the accused.[1] So far, however, as it affects the accused, some complications arise in discriminating the generally prohibited inference from the accused's own failure to testify by claiming privilege, and the permissible inference from his failure to produce other evidence; and such problems are therefore best considered in connection with the privilege against self-crimination (post, §§ 2272–2273).

One thing only (which does not involve the effect of the privilege) may be noted here, namely, that by general concession the accused's failure to produce testimony to his good character is not open to the inference that the character is bad; since otherwise the rule (ante, § 57) would be evaded that the prosecution cannot invoke and prove his bad character until he offers to prove his character good.[2] But it is incorrect to say [3] that the accused's good character is presumed; this inconsistently gives him the untrammelled benefit of evidence which, if he had introduced it, might have been disputed. What really happens, or ought to, is that the defendant's character is simply a non-existent quantity in the evidence; this distinction has sometimes been expressly pointed out.[4]

§ 290. [1] The cases cited ante, passim, illustrate this; in particular, the passage quoted from Mr. J. Brewer in § 284.

[2] Federal: 1899, McKnight v. U. S., 38 C. C. A. 115, 97 Fed. 208; 1906, Lowdon v. U. S., 79 C. C. A. 361, 149 Fed. 673, 677; 1919, Hall v. U. S., 4th C. C. A., 256 Fed. 748 (sedition; failure of any friend or citizen to protest on behalf of defendant, or to testify for him, held improper to mention in argument); California: 1898, People v. Gleason, 122 Cal. 370, 55 Pac. 123; 1905, People v. Davis, 147 Cal. 346, 81 Pac. 718; People v. Lee, 1 Cal. App. 169, 81 Pac. 969 (qualifying the preceding); Illinois: 1920, People v. Haas, 293 Ill. 274, 127 N. E. 740 (but erroneously stating that "the cases are not in harmony in other States"; not citing Addison v. People, Ill., infra, n. 4; citing State v. McAllister, Me., infra, but ignoring the later cases in that State); Indiana: 1874, Fletcher v. State, 49 Ind. 134; Iowa: 1874, State v. Kabrich, 39 Ia. 277; 1876, State v. Dockstader, 24 Ia. 436; 1878, State v. Northrup, 48 Ia. 584; 1910, State v. Dudley, 147 Ia. 645, 126 N. W. 812; Nebraska: 1881, Olive v. State, 11 Nebr. 1, 29, 7 N. W. 444; New York: 1840, People v. White, 24 Wend. 524, 546, 554, 555, 560, 584 (Walworth, Ch., diss. at 537; this case overrules People v. Vane, 12 Wend. 82; 1834); 1845, People v. Bodine, 1 Den. 281, 292, 314; North Carolina: 1831, State v. Collins, 3 Dev. 118; 1847, State v. O'Neal, 7 Ired. 251; 1881, State v. Sanders, 84 N. C. 729; Pennsylvania: 1895, Com. v. Weber, 167 Pa. 153, 31 Atl. 481; South Carolina: 1839, State v. Ford, 3 Strobh. 522, 527, semble (here holding that the absence of good-character evidence simply leaves the defendant without such a benefit as it might have given in persuasion, and semble, that this is not the same as directing an inference that the character is bad).

The only jurisdiction in which any doubt remains is Maine: 1844, State v. McAllister, 24 Me. 139, 144 (inference allowed); 1854, State v. Upham, 38 Me. 261 (contra); 1862, State v. Tozier, 49 Me. 404 (left undecided).

[3] As in Mullen v. U. S., 1901, C. C. A., 106 Fed. 892.

[4] 1914, Price v. U. S., 8th C. C. A., 218 Fed. 149; 1914, Chambliss v. U. S., 8th C. C. A., 218 Fed. 154 (Smith, J., diss.); 1919, Galbreath v. U. S., 6th C. C. A., 257 Fed. 648 ("Mullen v. U. S. . . . is not to be taken as the law, in view of Greer v. U. S., 245 U. S. 559"); 1918, DeMoss v. U. S., 8th C. C. A., 250 Fed. 87; 1918, Greer v. U. S., 245 U. S. 559, 38 Sup. 209 (disapproving Mullen v. U. S.); 1904, Gater v. State, 141 Ala. 10, 37 So. 692; 1916, Warren v. State, 197 Ala. 313, 72 So. 624; 1908, McDuffee v. State, 55 Fla. 125, 46 So. 721 (approving the above comment); 1911, State v. Gruber, 19 Ida. 692, 115 Pac. 1; 1901, Addison v. People, 193 Ill. 405, 62 N. E. 235; 1880, Knight v. State, 70 Ind. 380; 1916, State v. Gaunt, 98 Kan. 186, 157 Pac. 447 (homicide); 1908, People v. Kemmis, 153 Mich. 117, 116 N. W. 554 ("We approve and adopt the rule

Failure to prove an attempted alibi involves a further distinction already noted (ante, § 279).

(2) The kind of witness or evidence is immaterial. The inference, for example, may be drawn from a failure to use expert testimony,[5] or a failure to employ experiments or samples or like instructive evidence.[6] So also the form of the testimony withheld is immaterial; the failure to take a deposition, where it could have been taken,[7] or to use a deposition, where it has been taken by the party not using it,[8] may be equally open to inference.

(3) In any event, the party affected by the inference may of course explain it away[9] by showing circumstances which otherwise account for his failure to produce the witness. There should be no limitation upon this right to explain, except that the trial judge is to be satisfied that the circumstances thus offered would, in ordinary logic and experience, furnish a plausible reason for non-production.[10]

stated by Mr. W."); 1906, People v. Pekarz, 185 N. Y. 470, 78 N. E. 294; 1913, People v. Lingley, 207 N. Y. 396, 101 N. E. 170 (approving the above passage); 1914, State v. Knotts, 168 N. C. 173, 83 S. E. 972; 1914, Durham v. State, 128 Tenn. 636, 163 S. W. 447.

[5] 1898, McKim v. Foley, 170 Mass. 426, 49 N. E. 625 (signature denied; failure to call experts said to have been consulted, admissible, in trial Court's discretion; doctrine may be applied to expert witnesses); 1901, Vergin v. Saginaw, 125 Mich. 499, 84 N. W. 1075 (failure to call physicians who had examined plaintiff's injuries; inference allowed); 1901, Wilkins v. Flint, 128 Mich. 262, 87 N. W. 195; 1886, Bullard v. R. Co., 64 N. H. 27, 31, 5 Atl. 838 (personal injury; plaintiff's failure to call one of the physicians consulted by her, held to be open to inference).

[6] 1900, Concord L. & W. P. Co. v. Clough, 70 N. H. 627, 47 Atl. 704 (failure to show subsoil at a view). Contra: 1893, U. S. Sugar Refin. v. Allis Co., 6 C. C. A. 121, 9 U. S. App. 550, 552, 56 Fed. 786 (rule refused to be applied to a buyer's failure to test a machine as evidence of its defects). 1880, Philadelphia v. Rule, 93 Pa. 15, 18 (action for pavement laid; failure to present samples of work done, held not to be considered);

For a party's failure to submit to corporal examination of his injuries, see post, § 2220.

For the non-production or concealment of chattels or other material objects, see post, § 291.

[7] Compare the cases cited ante, passim, and the following: 1895, Leslie v. State, 35 Fla. 171, 17 So. 555 (allowing comment on a failure to take out a commission, after filing interrogatories, for an alleged witness, so material that the failure indicated that the witness was a fictitious person); 1884, Judevine v. Weaks, 57 Vt. 278, 281.

Contra: 1901, Lindle v. Com., 111 Ky. 866, 64 S. W. 986 (introducing an affidavit for continuance containing the testimony of supposed absent witnesses, and then proving that the witnesses were present and that their testimony had not been offered by the accused either on the stand or by affidavit, held improper; this ruling seems unsound);

[8] 1882, Learned v. Hall, 133 Mass. 417, semble; 1885, Com. v. Haskell, 140 Mass. 128, 2 N. E. 773 (on the facts, held a matter for the jury to determine); 1904, People v. McGarry, 136 Mich. 316, 99 N. W. 147; 1917, Staples-Howe Printing Co. v. Building & L. Ass'n, 36 P. I. 417.

Distinguish the question whether the taking and filing of a deposition is such an adoption of it as amounts to an admission of its truth (post, § 1075); and also the question whether the opponent may use a deposition taken but not used by the other party (post, § 1389).

[9] On the general principle of Explanation, ante, § 34.

[10] Some of the following circumstances would have sufficed to forbid in the first instance any comment on the failure to produce: 1920, Bernhardt v. City Suburban R. Co., — D. C. App. —, 263 Fed. 1009 (physician's refusal to testify, or to examine for the purpose of testifying, held not an adequate explanation of the failure to call him; "plaintiff had his choice, either to call the doctor or suffer the effects of the presumption"; note the error here in referring to the inference as a "presumption"); 1917, Verdi v. Donahue, 91 Conn. 448, 99 Atl. 1041 (departure of a possible witness to Italy); 1905, Starke v. State, 49 Fla. 41, 37 So. 850 (but merely the service of a subpœna does not suffice, where an attachment for non-appearance was available); 1904, Foster v. Atlanta R. T. Co., 119 Ga. 675, 46 S. E. 840 (but the explanation cannot include a statement that the absent alleged eyewitnesses know nothing of the affair; this ruling is over-strict); 1905, Macon R. & L. Co. v. Mason, 123 Ga. 773, 51 S. E. 569; 1905, Warth v. Lowenstein, 219 Ill. 222, 76 N. E.

(4) The inference (supposing the failure of evidence not to be explained away) is of course that the tenor of the specific unproduced evidence would be contrary to the party's case, or at least would not support it. In other words, the inference does not affect indefinitely the merits of the whole cause, as it does when fraudulent conduct is involved (ante, § 277), but affects specifically and only the evidence in question.[11]

(5) The opponent whose case is a denial of the other party's affirmation has no burden of persuading the jury; and, therefore, until the burden of producing evidence has shifted, he has no call to bring forward any evidence at all, and may go to the jury trusting solely to the weakness of the first party's evidence. Hence, though he takes a risk in so doing, yet his failure to produce evidence cannot at this stage afford any inference as to his lack of it; otherwise the first party would virtually be evading his legitimate burden. This distinction has been recognized [12] and is unquestionable; but it has been little developed in its application. The nature of the two burdens of proof (post, §§ 2485, 2487) is here involved.

(6) So, too, where by the pleadings or otherwise a party has judicially admitted a fact favoring his opponent, the opponent may rely on this admission, and his failure to produce evidence to prove the admitted fact cannot be taken as evidence against the truth of the admission.[13]

(7) In a few instances the question arises whether conduct of the present sort raised a presumption of law, i.e. shifts to the opponent the burden of 378 (why a party's brother had left the country, allowed); 1875, Com. v. Costello, 119 Mass. 214 (that the missing witnesses had been threatened by the prosecuting officer with prosecution for perjury on a collateral charge, and had fled the jurisdiction); 1895, Com. v. McCabe, 163 Mass. 98, 39 N. E. 777; 1897, Rumrill v. Ash, 169 Mass. 341, 47 N. E. 1017 (failure to look for probable evidence: reasons for failure, allowed); 1898, Hall v. Austin, 73 Minn. 134, 75 N. W. 1121 (witness' illness, admitted in explanation); 1875, Pease v. Smith, 61 N. Y. 477, 482 (trover for goods stolen by the defendant's porter; the plaintiff allowed to show that the porter was then in prison for the theft, as explaining why he was not produced); 1913, Curtis & G. Co. v. Pribyl, 38 Okl. 511, 134 Pac. 71 (subpœnas for eye-witnesses who had failed to appear, admitted, as rebutting the inference from failure to call them); 1885, Hoard v. State, 15 Lea (Tenn.) 321 (person not summoned, shown to be mentally incapable); 1895, Weatherford M. W. & N. R. Co. v. Duncan, 88 Tex. 611, 32 S. W. 878 (a showing that the witnesses had been subpœnaed but were in defendant's employ); 1874, Durgin v. Danville, 47 Vt. 95, 105 (a former willingness to be examined, held allowable to explain away a later refusal on the score of feebleness); 1907, Weidner v. Standard Life & A. Ins. Co., 132 Wis. 624, 113 N. W. 50 (illness of eye-witnesses, admitted, as explaining the failure to call them).

[11] Accord: 1904, Harrison v. Harrison, 124 Ia. 525, 100 N. W. 344 (attempting to eloign a witness); 1905, McDonald v. Smith, 139 Mich. 211, 102 N. W. 668; 1908, State v. Callahan, 76 N. J. L. 426, 69 Atl. 957.

In the following opinion the two inferences were erroneously interchanged: 1887, Allen, J., in Bleker v. Johnson, 69 N. Y. 309, 311, 313 (the jury, on failure of the defendant to call a co-defendant, "might take a less favorable view of the testimony on the part of the defence", but should not infer "that his testimony would be adverse to the defendants").

[12] 1897, Brill v. Car Co., 80 Fed. 909 (the plaintiff was bound to prove an intent in the defendant to infringe; the defendant's failure to adduce testimony to the contrary, held to be no evidence); 1908, McDuffee's Adm'x v. Boston & Maine R. Co., 81 Vt. 52, 69 Atl. 124, brakeman killed; the defendant resting without evidence, held that no inference could be based thereon).

Yet it is a tenable view that this doctrine is unsound. Certainly, it is artificial; and it tends to obstruct the direct getting at the truth.

[13] 1893, East Tennessee V. & G. R. Co. v. Kane, 92 Ga. 187, 192, 18 S. E. 18.

producing evidence. These instances are examined in dealing with the various presumptions of law (post, §§ 2490, 2524).

(8) Whether a new trial should be granted on the ground of the successful party's withholding of evidence [14] depends upon the law of new trials (ante, § 21), and does not involve the admissibility of evidence.

§ 291. Same: (3) Documents or Chattels Destroyed or not Produced. The applicability of the general principle to an opponent's non-production or suppression of documents or chattels has always been assumed. From the beginning of the recognition of the principle in England, some sort of inference has been acknowledged to be legitimate.[1] In this country, similarly, the tradition has been continued and steadily enforced, in numerous in-

[14] As in Standen v. Edwards, 1 Ves. Jr. 133.

§ 291. ENGLAND: 1617, R. v. Arundel, Hob. 109 (title to a manor, claimed by the king; the title-deeds being "very vehemently suspicious to have been suppressed" on the defendants' behalf, the decree gave the land to the king "till the defendants should produce the deeds"); 1698, Anon., 1 Ld. Raym. 731 (Holt, C. J., said, "that if a man destroys a thing that is designed to be evidence against himself, a small matter will supply it"; and so "a copy sworn" was admitted to prove a note of defendant torn by him); 1705, Ward v. Apprice, 6 Mod. 264 ("if very slender evidence be given against him, then, if he will not produce his books, it brings a great slur upon his cause"); 1706, Sanson v. Rumsey, 2 Vern. 561 (the defendant, having burnt certain articles of marriage-settlement, was kept in jail "until he had consented to admit the articles were to the effect in the bill"); 1718, Young v. Holmes, 1 Stra. 70 (ejectment for a leasehold; "it being proved the defendant had the lease in her custody, and refusing to produce it, an attorney who had read it was allowed to give evidence of its contents; and the C. J. [Parker] said, he would intend it made against the defendant, it being in her power, if it was otherwise, to show the contrary"); 1721, Dalston v. Coatsworth, 1 P. Wms. 731 (bill for relief against suppression of a deed; decree made according to the contents as testified to); 1722, Armory v. Delamirie, 1 Stra. 505 (jewel refused to be produced by bailee; see quotation ante, § 285); 1749, Cookes v. Hellier, 1 Ves. Sr. 234 (L. C. Hardwicke: "If deeds or writings are destroyed by a party who would take benefits thereof, a court of equity 'in odium spoliatoris' will go farther than a court of law"); 1764, R. v. Smith, 3 Burr. 1475 (charge of trading without a license; refusal to produce it held to be sufficient evidence); 1769, Roe v. Harvey, 4 Burr. 2484, 2489 (the plaintiff in ejectment would not produce a deed affecting his title; L. C. J. Mansfield observed that the Court "leave the refusal to do it, after proper notice, as a strong presumption to the jury"); 1807, Clunnes v. Peggy, 1 Camp. 8 (sale of liquor; proof of bottles delivered, and nothing more; the jury authorized to assume that only the cheapest liquor of the plaintiff was therein); 1815, The Hunter, Dods. Adm. 480, 486 (spoliation "generates a most unfavorable presumption"); 1826, James v. Biou, 2 Sim. & St. 600, 606 (non-production of receipts, treated as "evidence that these receipts afford inferences unfavorable" to that party); 1826, Barker v. Ray, 2 Russ. 63, 73 (discussing the jurisdiction of Chancery in cases of spoliation, and negativing the existence of an absolute presumption; Lord Eldon, L. C.: "To say that if you once prove spoliation, you will take it for granted that the contents of the thing spoliated are what they have been alleged to be, may be in a great many instances going a great length"); 1841, Curlewis v. Corfield, 1 Q. B. 814 (non-production of a letter called for, held relevant to show its contents to be as claimed); 1854, Gray v. Haig, 20 Beav. 219, 224 (bill for an account; destruction by a party of documents of unsettled accounts, held ground for presuming "everything most unfavorable to him which is consistent with the rest of the facts"); 1857, Sutton v. Devonport, 27 L. J. C. P. 54 (to verify a description identifying a document, it was offered, but was objected to by the other party and was withdrawn; held, that the jury might infer it to be as described); 1858, Att'y-Gen'l v. Dean & Canons, 24 Beav. 679, 706 (suppression of a deed affecting title is "always to be taken most strongly against the persons" keeping it back);

CANADA: 1895, St. Louis v. R., 25 Can. Sup. 649 (account-books, etc.); 1905, Hale v. Leighton, 35 N. Br. 256 (a book of entries kept for both parties, but in the plaintiff's possession; the plaintiff's refusal to produce it, held open to inference, on the facts, but not merely because he did not produce the original on notice to produce).

Contra: but never law, being merely a casual aberration: 1913, Cooper v. Gibbons, 3 Camp. 363 (sale of goods, the defendant setting up a joint debtor; the non-production of his books by the plaintiff after notice, not allowed to be considered).

stances, where the opponent has destroyed, suppressed, or refused or failed to produce a document or chattel whose contents or quality came into issue or became relevant under the issues.[2]

[2] Federal: U. S. Code 1919, § 10104 (in proceedings not criminal under revenue laws, if the defendant or claimant refuses or fails to produce business documents, etc., on motion by the Government and order of the Court, and does not satisfactorily explain the refusal, "the allegations stated in the said motion shall be taken as confessed"); 1817, The Pizarro, 2 Wheat. 227, 241 (per Story, J., "a very awakening circumstance, calculated to excite the vigilance and justify the suspicions of the Court", but not always a ground for refusal of further evidence, nor, in prize cases, a substantive cause for condemnation); 1844, Hanson v. Eustace, 2 How. 653 ("the refusal to produce books, under a notice, lays the foundation for the introduction of secondary evidence", and "all inferences shall be taken from the inferior evidence most strongly against the party refusing to produce"; but "the refusal itself raises no presumption of suspicion or imputation to the discredit of the party, except in a case of spoliation or equivalent suppression"; "in other words, with the exception just mentioned, the refusal to produce books or papers upon notice is not an independent element from which anything can be inferred as to the point which is sought to be proved by the books or papers"; this is too narrow); 1846, Clifton v. U. S., 6 How. 242, 247 (falsely invoicing to defraud the customs; inference allowed where the books of account, and one of the sellers, being available, were not produced to show the prices); 1873, Chaffee v. U. S., 18 Wall. 516, 528, 544 (revenue frauds; defendant's failure to produce his books, held not to throw the burden of explanation upon him and to serve to remove reasonable doubt; poor opinion); 1884, U. S. v. Flemming, 18 Fed. 907, 916 (fraudulent gambling in stocks; inference allowable, from failure to produce account-books, that they would not help the defendant's case); 1893, Runkle v. Burnham, 153 U. S. 216, 225, 14 Sup. 837 (power of attorney; non-production held open to inference); 1900, Missouri K. & T. R. Co. v. Elliott, 42 C. C. A. 188, 102 Fed. 96, 102 (failure to produce train books, held open to inference); 1909, New York C. & H. R. R. Co. v. U. S., 212 U. S. 481, 29 Sup. 304 (corporation's failure to produce certain books); 1913, In re Herman, D. C. N. D. Ia., 207 Fed. 594 (destruction of letters by the party alleging a loan, considered); 1918, Hamburg-American S. P. Co. v. U. S., 2d C. C. A., 250 Fed. 747, 767 (conspiring to defraud the U. S.; comment allowed on failure to produce documents placed by defendant in the custody of the German embassy, because the papers had been voluntarily placed there and because no effort was made to obtain them for use in court); 1918, U. S. v. Leonhardt, U. S. Court for China, 1 Extra-terr. Cas. 790, 795 (conspiracy to defraud the government);

Alabama: 1916, Russell v. Bush, 196 Ala. 309, 71 So. 397 (destruction of a letter by the party when interrogated); 1917, McCleery v. McCleery, 200 Ala. 4, 75 So. 316 (ejectment);

California: 1866, Leese v. Clark, 29 Cal. 664, 668 (refusal to produce an original deed in possession; inference may be drawn, though an alleged copy is offered);

Connecticut: 1843, Merwin v. Ward, 15 Conn. 377 (party's books; whether an inference could be drawn from secondary evidence, undecided; but no presumption of law, and semble, no inference can arise where the documents would not be admissible without the opponent's consent);

Georgia: 1878, Davis v. Alston, 61 Ga. 225, 228 (no inference allowable, where the Court rules that the document need not be produced);

Illinois: 1846, Rector v. Rector, 8 Ill. 105, 119 (failure to produce bond; inference allowed as to contents); 1868, Law v. Woodruff, 48 Ill. 399 (breach of marriage-promise, the defendant's failure to produce the plaintiff's letters, after the defendant's answers to them had been introduced by them to the plaintiff, held not to raise a presumption, nor to require an unfavorable construction of defendant's letters); 1877, Gage v. Parmelee, 87 Ill. 329, 341 (partnership-settlement; inference from destruction of account-books, held on the facts not to overcome the weight of evidence); 1878, Downing v. Plate, 90 Ill. 268, 272 (contract and indorsements burned; inference to be drawn against the spoliator); 1882, Anderson v. Irwin, 101 Ill. 411, 415 (destruction of a will; slight evidence by the propounder, held to suffice); 1891, Carter v. Troy Lumber Co., 138 Ill. 533, 539, 28 N. E. 932 (no inference to be drawn from non-production where the document could be used only by the opponent's consent; moreover, that the production might prove "injurious to his case", other than by showing the contents and inferences from them to be as alleged, held not a proper inference from a failure to produce); 1902, Momence Stone Co. v. Groves, 197 Ill. 88, 64 N. E. 335 (rule applied to non-production of a book); 1919, Hudson v. Hudson, 287 Ill. 286, 122 N. E. 497 (grantor destroying a deed; "the presumption is that it conveyed the highest title it could convey, that is, a fee simple"); 1920, Vulcan Detinning Co. v. Industrial Com., 295 Ill. 141, 128 N. E. 917 (employee's death; widow's refusal to consent to autopsy after undertaker's preparation of body for burial, held not an admission);

Nevertheless, there remains much uncertainty as to the precise nature of the inference and the conditions in which it may legitimately be drawn. At the outset, certain unquestionable points may be removed from the discussion. (1) It is not here a question of a presumption of law, i.e. of a rule shifting the burden of producing evidence. There may be such a rule (post, § 2524), but, if it exists, it is independent of and additional to the present

Indiana: 1857, Thompson v. Thompson, 9 Ind. 323, 332 (presumption from spoliation, not conclusive);
Iowa: 1917, Jahn's Will, 184 Ia. 416, 165 N. W. 1021 (acknowledgment of a debt);
Louisiana: 1871, Lucas v. Brooks, 23 La. An. 117 (inference not drawn, upon the facts of the case from a destruction); 1884, Crescent C. I. Co. v. Ermann, 36 La.An. 841 (bills indicating to whom credit was given; inference drawn from non-production); 1902 Johnson v. Levy, 109 La. 1036, 34 So. 68 (inference allowed for certain drafts not produced); 1904, Hannay v. New Orleans Cotton Exch., 112 La. 998, 36 So. 831 (agency for investment; inference allowed from failure to produce contemporaneous writings);
Maine: 1829, Emerson v. Fisk, 6 Greenl. 200, 206 (inference allowable, but only after notice before trial to produce); 1858, Tobin v. Shaw, 45 Me. 331, 349 (inference allowable if notice to produce has been given); 1878, Davie v. Jones, 68 Me. 393 (book of accounts; inference allowable from non-production);
Massachusetts: 1830, Thayer v. Ins. Co., 10 Pick. 326, 329 (like Cross v. Bell, N. H., infra); 1859, Beecher v. Denniston, 13 Gray Mass. 354 (conversion of watch, etc.; defendant's concealment of them from plaintiff's value-witnesses held not to be without significance; opinion obscure); 1886, Berney v. Dinsmore, 141 Mass. 42, 5 N. E. 273 (conversion of pearl-ring; rule of Armory v. Delamirie, that the value of the best jewels should be presumed, repudiated; expert's testimony to value of a similar article should be taken); 1905, Com. v. Bond, 188 Mass. 91, 74 N. E. 293 (forgery; the defendant's destruction of the proceeds, etc., admitted); 1905, Sullivan v. Sullivan, 188 Mass. 380, 74 N. E. 608 (action on a note requiring an attesting witness' signature; an instruction that the defendant's destruction of it would justify the inference that it was a witnessed note, held proper on the facts);
Michigan: 1871, Page v. Stephens, 23 Mich. 357, 363 (books of account; inference allowable from non-production); 1893, Lambie's Estate, 97 Mich. 49, 55, 56 N. W. 223 (destruction of a second will by the parties benefited by the first is evidence that contents were as claimed against them; and is also evidence of due statutory execution); 1901, Battersbee v. Calkins, 128 Mich. 569, 87 N. W. 760 (inference allowed, on the facts); 1916, Barras v. Barras, 191 Mich. 473, 158 N. W. 192 (deed);
Mississippi: 1878, Botts v. Wood, 56 Miss. 136, 440 (spoliation, the inference can only be drawn when there is other evidence of contents; and it cannot be drawn when the other evidence fully supports the spoliator's claim);
Missouri: 1882, Pomeroy v. Benton, 77 Mo. 64, 85 (partnership account; defendant's destruction of book of account, after suit brought, held to be open to inference; careful opinion); 1886, State v. Chamberlain, 89 Mo. 129, 134, 1 S. W. 145 (destroying or concealing forged notes, inference allowable); 1918, Thomas v. Equitable Life Ass. Soc., 198 Mo. App. 533, 205 S. W. 533 ("green slip" on a policy);
New Hampshire: 1856, Cross v. Bell, 34 N. H. 82, 88 (the inference not to be drawn simply from the fact of non-production; but if some secondary evidence is given of the contents, "and such evidence is imperfect, vague, and uncertain, every intendment and presumption is to be made against the party who might remove all doubt by producing the higher evidence");
New Jersey: 1879, Jones v. Knauss, 31 N. J. Eq. 609, 614 (declaration of trust destroyed; "slight evidence of the contents of the instrument will usually in such a case be sufficient"); 1916, Rabinowitz v. Hawthorne, 89 N. J. L. 308, 98 Atl. 315 (plaintiff's testimony to profits lost, based on recollection, admitted; his failure to keep books of account, allowed to be considered as affecting the reliability of his testimony); 1917, Stuart v. Burlington Co. Farmers' Exchange, 90 N. J. L. 584, 101 Atl. 265 (crops not produced by fertilizer; plaintiff's failure to produce his books showing sales and losses, held not to require the rejection of his oral testimony);
New York: 1820, Jackson v. M'Vey, 18 Johns. 331, 334 (inference allowed from non-production, after some evidence of contents had been given); 1831, Life & Fire Ins. Co. v. Ins. Co., 7 Wend. 31, 34 (the same; the rule of this case is stated in full in Cross v. Bell, N. H., supra); 1922, McChesney's Will, Surr. Ct., 194 N. Y. Suppl. 893 (will executed in duplicate, testator and attorney each retaining one duplicate; failure to produce the duplicate retained by the testator, held to raise an inference of its revocation and therefore of the revocation of the other also); principle. Here the sole question is whether the jury may legitimately draw a certain inference from a certain fact. (2) If the document is the subject of a privilege, the inference is not available. This much may be here assumed, because the nature of a privilege is usually held to be incompatible with the allowance of an inference from exercising the privilege. It is true that, while at common law the privilege of an opponent in a civil case to withhold his documents was fully recognized (post, § 2219), nevertheless during all that time the courts permitted an inference to be drawn against the opponent refusing to produce.[3] But, since the general abolition of the privilege of a civil party, the propriety of such a ruling is removed from practical importance, and in the privileges that continue to exist the doctrine of the incompatibility of the privilege with an inference from its exercise is generally conceded.[4] (3) If a failure to produce on one's own behalf is the fact in question, it is at least necessary (under the general principle, ante, § 286) that the document be in the party's power to produce; and if a refusal to produce on behalf of the opponent is the fact relied upon, it is at least necessary that a demand or notice by the opponent should have been made, because
North Carolina: 1841, Little v. Marsh, 2 Ired. Eq. 18, 27. semble (inference allowable from spoliation);

Oregon: 1895, Connell v. McLaughlin, 28 Or. 230, 42 Pac. 218 (there must be other evidence of contents than the inference from non-production; but speaking of it confusedly as a presumption of law); 1896, Schreyer v. Mills Co., 29 Or. 1, 43 Pac. 719 (inference allowable from non-production);
Pennsylvania: 1826, Wishart v. Downey, 15 S. & R. 77, 79 (non-production of a receipt for money; inference allowable); 1837, McReynolds v. McCord, 6 Watts 288, 290 (destruction by the opponent; "before he can be fixed with the character of a spoiler, the purport of the paper must be proved to have been what it is surmised to have been"); 1870, Frick v. Barbour, 64 Pa. 120 (assumpsit; the non-production of receipts, held open to inference);
Philippine Islands: 1909, Samson v. Salvilla, 12 P. I. 497, semble (defendant's statement of contents of a document not produced plaintiff on notice is to be accepted);
Texas: 1890, Martin Brown Co. v. Perrill, 77 Tex. 199, 203, 13 S. W. 975 (no inference allowable, for documents inadmissible as irrelevant);
Utah: 1898, McIntyre v. Mining Co., 17 Utah 213, 53 Pac. 1124 (failure to produce a contract-copy because he was not sure that it was correct and was advised by counsel that if not correct it could not be used, semble, evidence of its terms being as claimed by opponent);
Vermont: 1905, Patch Mfg. Co. v. Protection Lodge, 77 Vt. 294, 60 Atl. 74 (boycott by a union; the defendant refused to produce its books; held that "the spoliation of evidence . . . cannot supersede the necessity of other evidence"; on the facts, this ruling was too favorable);
Virginia: 1905, Neece v. Neece, 104 Va. 343, 51 S. E. 739 (executor's suppression and concealment of deceased's title-deeds from the family, held open to inference under the present principle);
West Virginia: 1886, Bindley v. Martin, 28 W. Va. 773, 789 (contract of sale; the effect of withholding documents is not "to supersede the necessity of other evidence" but to furnish "matter of inference in weighing the effect" of other evidence); 1904, Stout v. Sands, 56 W. Va. 663, 49 S. E. 428 (the suppression is not an admission to the fullest extent; "there must be some other evidence in support of the claim; a 'prima facie' case must be made"; here said of a contract); 1918, Chambers v. Spruce Lighting Co., 81 W. Va. 714, 95 S. E. 192 (loss of profits of a hotel; failure to produce the register and other books, held to prevent recovery);
Wisconsin: 1879, Dimond v. Henderson, 47 Wis. 172, 174 (partner's accounting; the imperfect method of keeping the accounts, held to involve this principle against the accountant).

To the above rulings are to be added the statutory provisions collected post, § 1859, in dealing with the right to inspect an opponent's documents before trial; on his failure to permit such inspection or to produce at the trial, it is provided in a majority of jurisdictions that the Court may direct the jury to presume the contents to be as the demandant alleges it to be.

[3] All the cases cited supra, before the middle of the 1800s, illustrate this.

[4] For the privilege against self-crimination, see post, §§ 2264, 2273; the privilege against anti-marital testimony, see post, §§ 2233, 2243; the privilege against marital communications, see post, §§ 2337, 2340; the privilege against communications between attorney and client, see post, §§ 2307, 2322.

otherwise it does not appear that the party was not willing to produce.[5] (4) Upon the same general principle, namely, that the inference can arise only where the document was one that could have been used if produced, it is obvious that the inference is not available from mere non-production where the document would have been inadmissible on the possessor's or the demandant's behalf or is declared by the Court to be unnecessary or useless.[6]

These plain postulates being removed from consideration, the real field for controversy remains, namely (a) whether the inference alone will suffice as evidence of the contents of the document in question, and (b) whether there is in this respect any difference between spoliation or destruction and mere refusal or failure to produce.

(a) First, then, we meet with a strong current of authority which disfavors the sufficiency of the inference as of itself evidence of the contents. This view is carefully stated in the following passage:[7]

1806, Mr. W. D. Evans, Notes to Pothier, II, 145: "What is said [by Lord Mansfield][8] respecting leaving the refusal as a presumption to the jury should be received with considerable qualification; for it cannot be admitted that such a presumption should stand instead of all other evidence and supply the total deficiency of proof. It is only in weighing the effect and substance of evidence in its nature adequate to the support of a fact in question that the jury can take into consideration the opportunity allowed to the opposite side of contradicting the evidence if false, or of destroying the inference from it if erroneous, and thereby conclude that evidence otherwise suspicious is true, or that an inference otherwise slight and feeble is correct."

But, after all, why is any additional evidence required as a matter of law? All that is asked is that the jury be allowed to make the inference if they are in truth convinced to that effect. What hardship or unfairness is involved to the possessor of the document? He has deliberately failed to show, by production, that which it was in his power to show, and he has by hypothesis given no other fact in explanation than the apparent one, namely, that he is afraid to submit the document to the tribunal's inspection. If there were any risk of the inference being too strong, would he not immediately make production? And does not his failure to do so indicate that the production would, in his belief, be more damaging to him than any inferences which the tribunal may make for lack of the document itself? Add to this that no one who withholds evidence can be in any sense a fit object of clemency or protection. The truth is that there is no reason why the utmost inference logically possible should not be allowable, namely, that the contents

[5] As in Emerson v. Fisk, Me. The rules for the time and form of notice would naturally be the same as those for the notice which permits the non-possessor to use secondary evidence (post, §§ 1202-1210).

[6] As in Merwin v. Ward, Conn.; Carter v. Lumber Co., Ill.; Martin Brown Co. v. Perrill, Tex.; compare also Davis v. Alston, Ga.; Law v. Woodruff, Ill. Compare the rule as to inference from unanswered letters (post, § 1073).

So, also, no inference can be drawn where the failure to produce was not objected to and the secondary evidence was used virtually by common consent: 1919, Fagan v. Central R. Co., 93 N. J. L. 203, 107 Atl. 422.

[7] It is less lucidly stated in Hanson v. Eustace, U. S., supra, note.

[8] In Roe v. Harvey, supra, note 1.

of the document (when desired by the opponent) are what he alleges them to be, or (when naturally a part of the possessor's case) are not what he alleges them to be.

The existence of a contrary view seems to be due chiefly to two distinct influences. One of these is the general tendency at common law to regard litigation as a sport of high quality, and to concede to the parties the right to hamper and obstruct their opponents, so far as may be, by the retention of such casual advantages (including the possession of documents) as chance has placed in their hands at the outset. This spirit has been totally discountenanced at the present day by the statutes which almost universally have given the power of forcing an opponent to disclose beforehand his documentary evidence, and have thus radically condemned the gaming theory of the British common law (post, §§ 1847, 1859). The other influence is due to a half-conscious recognition of a logical requirement which must be kept in mind and yet does not properly affect the general principle. For example, when A desires to prove his title by a deed from X to Y, describing the land he claims, and upon B's failure to produce it, A shows that B has burned a deed from X to Y and argues that the deed be taken to read as he alleges, and B maintains that the burned deed, though from X to Y, concerned a piece of land totally different from the land in controversy, it is obvious that A has not yet made out a case ripe for inference; he is arguing from the supposed fact that B has destroyed the deed that A wants, but it does not yet appear that the destroyed deed was the one which A wants. In the words of an eminent judge, " the act of a spoiler [i.e. of a desired document] is in its nature equipollent to a confession; but before he can be fixed with the character of a spoiler, the purport of the paper must be proved to have been what it is surmised to have been." [9] In short, we must at least avoid the fallacy of begging the question. Thus, when B denies the identity of the document spoliated or the identity of the document failed to be produced, no inference can be drawn until the jury find the fact against B's denial, and obviously this cannot be done until some evidence of this identity has been introduced by A. It is this consideration of caution, this logical requirement, which seems to account partly for the rule as laid down by some Courts that some evidence of the contents of the document must be introduced as a preliminary to the use of the inference.[10]

Keeping in mind, then, the object of the requirement, the rule might correctly be stated as follows: The failure or refusal to produce a relevant document, or the destruction of it, is evidence from which alone its contents may be inferred to be unfavorable to the possessor, provided the opponent, when the identity of the document is disputed, first introduces some evidence tending to show that the document actually destroyed or withheld is the one as to whose contents it is desired to draw an inference. In applying this rule, care should be taken not to require anything like specific details of contents, but merely such evidence as goes to general marks of identity.

[9] 1837, McReynolds v. McCord, 6 Watts 288, 290 (the opponent had destroyed a paper obtained from the plaintiff's witness).

[10] The question cannot usually arise for a refusal to produce; for a refusal is usually made upon a specific demand and thus the identity of the document is likely to be apparent.

(b) In answering the preceding question, the second one has also been answered. There is no distinction, in the present connection, between spoliation and non-production. If the latter admits of the inference, certainly the former does also. But so far as spoliation or suppression partakes of the nature of a fraud, it is open to the larger inference already examined (ante, § 278), namely, a consciousness of the weakness of the whole case. In that respect it differs, of course, from a mere withholding of the document. It is in respect of an inference to the contents of the document that there is no difference between the two acts.[11]

Certain discriminations of other principles remain to be noticed. (1) The failure to produce a certain kind of document sometimes affords an inference of the document's non-existence,[12] and in various classes of cases a statutory rule of this sort has been created.[13] These rules, however, seem after all to be no more than an indirect method of placing upon the defendant in a criminal case the burden of producing evidence (post, § 2511); for while leaving on the prosecution the burden of proving that the defendant has not a license or certificate (as the case may be), the fact of his failure to produce one is made sufficient evidence of non-possession, i.e. in effect he must prove that he has it and this proof he must make by production. Had the burden fallen originally on the defendant of pleading and proving his license (as it naturally would have fallen), such statutes would not have been necessary. (2) Whether the non-production of a self-criminating document may be the subject of an inference is considered under the head of the privilege against self-crimination (post, § 2264). (3) The opponent's refusal to produce may serve as a ground for permitting the use of a copy or other secondary evidence, under other rules (post, §§ 1199–1210). (4) The effect of spoliation as evidence, not merely of the contents, but also of the due execution of the document, is more conveniently noticed elsewhere (post, § 2132).

§ 292. Silence, as equivalent to an Admission. Silence, when the assertion of another person would naturally call for a dissent if it were untrue, may be equivalent to an assent to the assertion. This, however, fixes the party, by adoption, with the other person's assertion, and thus it ceases to be a question of conduct-evidence, and involves a genuine admission in express words. For that reason it is dealt with under the head of Admissions (post, §§ 1071–1072).

[11] In the following case, this distinction was not noticed; 1921, Eno's Will, Sup. App. Div., 187 N. Y. Suppl. 757, 779 (destruction of testator's papers by executor; no other evidence of contents being offered, no inference was allowed; unsound).

[12] 1845, State v. Simons, 17 N. H. 83, 88 (illegal liquor-selling; non-possession of a license inferable from non-production of it).

[13] There are scores of such statutes, all told; the following are examples: Mass. Gen. L. 1920, c. 149, § 94 (failure to produce certificate of minor's proper age for employment, evidence of illegal employment); N. Y. Cons. L. 1909, Gen. Business, § 33 (refusal to produce peddler's license on demand, evidence of non-possession).

§ 293. Conduct, as evidence of Consciousness of Innocence (Accused's Voluntary Surrender, Refusal to Escape, Demeanor, etc.). If guilt leaves the psychological mark which we term "consciousness of guilt", and if this is available as evidence (ante, § 273), then the absence of that mark (which for want of a better term may be spoken of as "consciousness of innocence") is some indication of the absence of guilt, i.e. of not having done the deed charged. No Court seems to repudiate this proposition (ante, § 174); but the tendency to reject evidence of a consciousness of innocence is rather due to a distrust of the inference from conduct to that consciousness, since the conduct is often feigned and artificial.[1] Such distrust, however, seems § 293. [1] ENGLAND: 1679, Green's Trial, 7 How. St. Tr. 159, 207 (Witness: "It was a good evidence of his innocency that, when he had notice of it, he did not fly. . . . All that I say is, if flight be a sign of guilt, as no doubt it is — 'Adam, ubi es?' — and courageousness is a sign of innocency, then this man is innocent"); 1758, Barnard's Trial, 19 How. St. Tr. 833 (charge of sending threatening letters to the Duke of Marlborough; the letters twice made appointments for the Duke to come and pay the blackmail, at Kensington and at Westminster Abbey; he went, and on both occasions found the defendant passing, but, on accosting him, was answered that he knew not what the Duke meant; the defendant, a respectable bridge-builder, admitted his presence on those occasions, but denied all knowledge of the letters, and was allowed to prove, by his family and others, his public and frequent expression of surprise that the Duke should accost him in that singular way);

UNITED STATES: Alabama: 1850, Oliver v. State, 17 Ala. 587, 595 (that the accused went to town to surrender himself, but was persuaded not to do it till he had obtained bailmen, inadmissible; except under § 281, ante, to explain away flight); 1853, Campbell v. State, 23 Ala. 44, 79 ("the prisoner could no more make his appearance or conduct evidence than he could his declarations or admissions"; excluding evidence that "he appeared surprised on being informed of the murder"); 1867, Hall v. State, 40 Ala. 698, 700, 706 ("conduct and statements", excluded, for the same reason); 1872, Birdsong v. State, 47 Ala. 68, 71, 77 (like Oliver v. State); 1886, Jordan v. State, 81 Ala. 20, 23, 31, 1 So. 577 (refusal to escape, excluded; it would be "to allow him to make evidence for himself"); 1895, Henry v. State, 107 Ala. 22, 19 So. 23 (demeanor excluded; same reason); 1896, Dorsey v. State, 110 Ala. 38, 20 So. 450 (going voluntarily to the police-station, after hearing of the charge, excluded); White v. State, 111 Ala. 92, 21 So. 330 (immediate surrender to the police, admitted); 1901, Vaughn v. State, 130 Ala. 18, 30 So. 669 (defendant's voluntary surrender, excluded); 1904, Walker v. State, 139 Ala. 56, 35 So. 1011 (murder; defendant's offer to be taken to the dying person to see if she identified him, excluded); 1906, Allen v. State, 146 Ala. 61, 41 So. 624 (voluntary surrenders admissible only as contradicting or explaining evidence of flight); California: 1879, People v. Montgomery, 53 Cal. 576 (refusal to escape when able, excluded); 1896, People v. Shaw, 111 Cal. 171, 43 Pac. 593 (voluntary surrender, excluded); Florida: 1904, Thomas v. State, 47 Fla. 99, 36 So. 161 (excluded, where not part of the 'res gestæ'); Georgia: 1860, Pinkard v. State, 30 Ga. 759 (putting an officer on the track of the real criminal, admitted); 1895, Boston v. State, 94 Ga. 590, 21 S. E. 603 (voluntary surrender, admitted); 1897, Kennedy v. State, 101 Ga. 559, 28 S. E. 979 (failure to escape from jail, excluded); 1920, Summerlin v. State, — Ga. App. —, 85 S. E. 832 (voluntary surrender, admitted, to rebut alleged flight); Kansas: 1868, Lewis v. State, 4 Kan. 309 (failure to accept an opportunity to escape when others did, admitted; then explained away by the fact that the accused was ill); Massachusetts: 1861, Com. v. Hersey, 2 All. 173, 177 (refusal to escape, excluded); Michigan: 1860, Dillin v. People, 8 Mich. 357, 367 (subsequent mental condition or utterances, not admissible, except as part of the res gestæ or as explaining away facts introduced by the prosecution; here admitted for the latter purpose, by the majority); Mississippi: 1909, Bailey v. State, 94 Miss. 863, 48 So. 227 (defendant's refusal to accept an opportunity to escape from prison, excluded, Whitfield, C. J., diss.); Missouri: 1890, State v. Musick, 101 Mo. 260, 274, 14 S. W. 212 (voluntary surrender, excluded); 1892, State v. Smith, 114 Mo. 406, 424, 21 S. W. 827 (same); 1899, State v. McLaughlin, 149 Mo. 19, 50 S. W. 315 (voluntary surrender, excluded); 1900, State v. Strong, 153 Mo. 548, 55 S. W. 78 (that defendant went for a physician after the stabbing, excluded); New Hampshire: 1909, Hoxie v. Walker, 75 N. H. 308, 74 Atl. 183 (question not decided; here, the defendant's expression of indignation on hearing that a detective of the plaintiff was watching the defendant's house); New York: 1839, People v. Rathbun, 21 Wend. 509, 519 (refusal to escape, excluded); North Carolina:

improper. Certainly in the inferences of ordinary life we attach as much weight to that inference as to the inference of consciousness of guilt; the bearing of one accused person as consciously innocent impresses us no less strikingly than the bearing of another as consciously guilty. Moreover, it is judicially conceded (as noticed ante, § 273) that the inference of consciousness of guilt is a highly dubious one, and that the evidence is never to be emphasized or treated as of much value. If this be so, why should we strain a doubt to admit a dubious inference against the accused, and yet refuse to admit in his favor a scarcely more dubious one? Such an attitude is wholly inconsistent with itself and is out of harmony with the spirit of our law. Let the accused's whole conduct come in; and whether it tells for consciousness of guilt or for consciousness of innocence, let us take it for what it is worth, remembering that in either case it is open to varying explanations and is not to be emphasized. Let us not deprive an innocent person, falsely accused, of the inference which common sense draws from a consciousness of innocence and its natural manifestations. With singular perversity, however, a majority of the Courts profess to refuse to allow conduct to be considered for the purpose of drawing an inference of consciousness of innocence; but one consequence of this is the frequent occurrence of inconsistent rulings by the same Court.

1903, State v. Wilcox, 132 N. C. 1120, 44 S. E. 625 (refusal to escape, excluded; Connor, J., doubting); Oklahoma: 1906, Sneed v. Terr., 16 Okl. 641, 86 Pac. 70 (voluntary surrender, excluded); South Carolina: State v. Vaigneur, 5 Rich. L. 391, 403 ("the conduct of the accused, whether before or after he is charged . . . is a source of evidence, sometimes for him as well as the prosecution"); West Virginia: 1903, State v. Bickle, 53 W. Va. 597, 45 S. E. 917 (failure to escape from jail, when he might have done so, excluded).

Compare the citations post, §§ 1144, 1732, 1765, 1781, concerning the admissibility of an accused's protestations of innocence or other explanatory statements; and of an accused's expressions of loyalty in sedition cases, post, § 367.

SUB-TITLE II (continued): EVIDENCE TO PROVE A HUMAN QUALITY OR CONDITION

TOPIC VII: OTHER OFFENCES OR SIMILAR ACTS, AS EVIDENCE OF KNOWLEDGE, DESIGN, OR INTENT

CHAPTER XII

1. General Principles

2. Forgery and Counterfeiting

3. False Pretences or Representations

4. Knowing Possession or Receipt of Stolen Goods

5. Embezzlement

6. Fraudulent Transfers

7. Sundry Frauds; and Fraud in General

8. Larceny and Kidnapping

9. Robbery, Burglary, and Extortion

10. Arson

11. Rape and Abortion

1. General Principles

§ 300. Discrimination between Various Principles. In the two foregoing Chapters have been examined the principles upon which Knowledge, Intent, and Design may be evidenced. It remains to examine here the admissibility of similar offences or acts (i.e. similar to the one charged) offered for the purpose of showing such a Knowledge, Intent, or Design. Since the conditions may differ under which the same conduct will evidence one or another of these propositions, it is essential to compare the respective conditions before determining what test to apply to the offered evidence. Practically, the difference of theory may be important; for if these conditions are less stringent for one purpose than for another, and if the one purpose is by the nature of the issue a proper one, while the other is not, all will depend on the precise purpose involved and the requirements appropriate to it.[1]

It is worth while at this point to re-state briefly the distinction between Knowledge, Intent, and Design. (1) Knowledge signifies a being aware (ante, § 244); and, in the usual case of the present sort, this knowledge has to refer to the nature of a thing used in the alleged crime. Even where the doing of the act involved is not disputed, a knowledge existing at the time of the act may be in dispute. Thus, proof of knowledge becomes a usual necessity for certain offences, such as the uttering of forged or counterfeit paper and the possession of stolen goods; while it is rarely an element to be proved in other offences, such as robbery, rape, and homicide. (2) Intent involves often nothing more than knowledge or hostile feeling; or, what is practically not very different, if knowledge or hostile feeling (malice) can be shown specifically, there may be inferred immediately the criminal intent, without further evidence. But Intent more frequently signifies (ante, § 242) merely the absence of accident, inadvertance, or casualty, — a varying state of mind which is the contrary of an innocent state of mind, whatever may be pointed out by the nature of the crime as an innocent state of mind. Thus, in homicide the criminal intent may signify the absence of good faith as to self-defence or the absence of inadvertance; in assault with intent to rape, the criminal intent is a design to rape, instead of any other design; in embezzlement, the criminal intent is a will to hold the money unlawfully, as distinguished from a will to hold it for the owner or from a merely inadvertant possession. This element, then, of Intent — simple in its generality, yet changeable — is a different thing from Knowledge. In a given offence — as in uttering counterfeit money — the proof of Knowledge may practically affect the proof of Intent; but in such a case the evidence is directed specifically to show Knowledge and is governed by the rules appropriate to that subject. But if the issue does not involve specifically the element of Knowledge, then the rules about evidencing Knowledge have no application. In short, Intent may sometimes be indirectly got at by proving Knowledge; but this is not necessary nor is it (for most kinds of offences) usual; and since in any case Intent may be conceived of apart from Knowledge, the mode of proving Intent is a problem distinct from that of proving Knowledge, even where the latter is also concurrently available. (3) Design. The peculiarity of Intent, as a ' factum probandum ', is that an act is assumed as done by the defendant, and the issue is as to the kind of state of mind accompanying it. Design or Plan, however (with reference to present bearings), is not a part of the issue, an element of the criminal fact charged, but is the preceding mental condition which evidentially points forward to the doing of the act designed or planned (ante, §§ 237, 242). Thus, the peculiarity of Design is that the act is not assumed to be proved, and the design is used evidentially to show its probable commission. It is obvious that something more definite and positive is here involved than in the case of Intent. In proving Intent, the act is conceded or assumed; what is sought is the state of mind that accompanied it. In proving Design, the act is still undetermined, and the proof is of a working plan, operating towards the future with such force as to render probable both the act and the accompanying state of mind. The Intent is a mere appendage of the act; the Design is a force producing the act as a result.

§ 300. [1] From the point of view of logic and psychology as applicable to argument before the jury (not the rules of Admissibility), see the materials collected in the present author's "Principles of Judicial Proof, as given by Logic, Psychology, and General Experience, and illustrated in Judicial Trials" (1913), §§ 39–50, 121–129.

§ 301. Theory of evidencing Knowledge. In resorting to former offences or other similar acts to show Knowledge, it is sufficient to invoke the general principles of proving Knowledge, as already set forth. It may perhaps be practicable to employ acts of conduct as exhibiting ' a posteriori ' the inward state of mind (according to the principle of § 265, ante), — as when a person, finding his counterfeit coin closely examined by his vendor, attempts to run away. But such a case presents no problem of the present sort. The problem now to be dealt with — the use of evidence of former offences — involves the other general mode of showing knowledge, namely, the use of external circumstances likely ' a priori ' to have produced Knowledge. It has been seen (ante, § 245) that this mode of proof rests on the following process of thought. When fact X is used to show a person's knowledge of fact A, it is assumed (a) that through fact X there probably was received an impression by the person; and (b) that this impression would probably result in notice or warning of fact A. Thus (a) a prior injury to an employee by a machine would probably have come to the employer's notice in some way, and (b) the notice of the accident would probably reveal to him the defect in the machine. These two elements may not both be doubtful in a given case, but they are always impliedly present if the inference is to have any validity. Apply this to the class of cases we are now concerned with. Suppose A's knowledge of the poisonous nature of a substance X is to be shown; suppose the fact offered that he once gave it to a sick dog and that the dog died; if we are to base an inference of probable knowledge upon this, it is because we believe it probable (a) that the dog's death came to his notice, and (b) that the fact of the death would suggest to him that it was the substance X and not the illness that caused the dog's death. Again, suppose A's knowledge of the counterfeit nature of a certain silver dollar is to be shown; suppose the fact offered that he twice passed counterfeit ten-dollar bank-notes; if we are to base on this an inference of probable knowledge, it is because we believe it probable (a) that in the course of using the bank-notes, at one time or another up to their final disposal, some one probably doubted to him their genuineness, and (b) that a doubt as to the genuineness of the bank-notes would probably suggest a doubt as to the genuineness of the silver dollar. Again, if A's knowledge of the stolen character of a bar of iron is to be shown, and the fact is offered that he has also received and possessed a stolen bicycle, then our inference must assume (a) that A's receipt of the bicycle was under such circumstances as to suggest its vendor or pledgor to be a thief, or as to result in a reclamation by the owner and a warning to the defendant; so that (b) when the bar of iron was offered to A, by the same or another vendor or pledgor, the circumstances were such that the former transaction would naturally suggest that this bar of iron was also stolen.

Such, then, is the strict and legitimate scope of evidence of other similar acts to show Knowledge. The process of thought is: The other act must probably have resulted in some sort of warning or knowledge; this warning or knowledge must probably have led to the knowledge in question. There may occasionally be a logical short-cut or a condensation of this process — as where A at a former attempt to pass the same counterfeit bill, was expressly told that it was counterfeit — but such cases cause no difficulty; and the difficulty that does arise can always be accounted for by a doubt as to one or the other of the above two elements. The principle is clearly enough seen in its application in the detailed rules of the ensuing sections; but it has been expounded, more or less incompletely, in various judicial utterances:

1846, MAULE, J., in R. v. Dosset, 2 C. & K. 307: "If a person were charged with having wilfully poisoned another, and it were a question whether he knew a certain white powder to be poison, evidence would be admissible to show that he knew what the powder was because he had administered it to another person who had died."

1849, CRESSWELL, J., in R. v. Cooper, 3 Cox Cr. 547 (false charge of indecent conduct towards S. with the intent of extorting money, evidence of a previous obtaining of money by such means was offered): "If the prisoner is proved to have stated on other occasions that he had obtained money by the same means that are stated to have been used in this case, is it not a fair inference to make to the jury that his object was to obtain money here?" Serjt. Ballantine, for the defendant: " . . . That does not show that he had an intention to obtain money at this particular time. . . . Suppose the charge was breaking into a house with intent to steal; the fact of his having broken into the house before would show that he knew how the offence was to be accomplished, but it could not be adduced to show what his intention was on the second occasion; and this shows the difference between proof of knowledge and that of intention." CRESSWELL, J.: "The question is whether on this occasion he did an act with the design of effecting a certain object. One step in the proof would be to show that he would be likely to know that a certain result would follow; and if it can be proved out of his own mouth that he was aware that such a result would be produced, it is one ingredient in the necessary proof that he contemplated it. Suppose a charge against a man that he attempted to procure abortion; the same medicine might be administered with that intention or without it; if it could be shown that he had often given that medicine before and that he knew that abortion had always followed, surely that would be evidence against him. Or if, on a charge of wounding, a certain instrument had been used by the prisoner with a dangerous result, would not that be admissible to show that he knew the consequences of using it?"[1]

§ 302. Theory of evidencing Intent. To prove Intent, as a generic notion of criminal volition or wilfulness, including the various non-innocent mental states accompanying different criminal acts, there is employed an entirely different process of thought. The argument here is purely from the point of view of the doctrine of chances, — the instinctive recognition of that logical process which eliminates the element of innocent intent by multiplying instances of the same result until it is perceived that this element cannot explain them all. Without formulating any accurate test, and without attempting by numerous instances to secure absolute certainty of inference, the mind applies this rough and instinctive process of reasoning, namely, that an unusual and abnormal element might perhaps be present in one instance, but the oftener similar instances occur with similar results, the less likely is the abnormal element likely to be the true explanation of them. Thus, if A while hunting with B hears the bullet from B's gun whistling past his head, he is willing to accept B's bad aim or B's accidental tripping as a conceivable explanation; but if shortly afterwards the same thing happens again, and if on the third occasion A receives B's bullet in his body, the immediate inference (i.e. as a probability, perhaps not a certainty) is that B shot at A deliberately; because the chances of an inadvertent shooting on three successive similar occasions are extremely small; or (to put it in another way) because inadvertence or accident is only an abnormal or occasional explanation for the discharge of a gun at a given object, and therefore the recurrence of a similar result (i.e. discharge towards the same object, A) excludes the fair possibility of such an abnormal cause and points out the cause as probably a more natural and usual one, i.e. a deliberate discharge at A. In short, similar results do not usually occur through abnormal causes; and the recurrence of a similar result (here in the shape of an unlawful act) tends (increasingly with each instance) to negative accident or inadvertence or self-defence or good faith or other innocent mental state, and tends to establish (provisionally, at least, though not certainly) the presence of the normal, i.e. criminal, intent accompanying such an act; and the force of each additional instance will vary in each kind of offence according to the probability that the act could be repeated, within a limited time and under given circumstances, with an innocent intent. The general canon of logical inference already examined (ante, §§ 31, 32) is here applied and illustrated.

§ 301. [1] Other passages are as follows: 1882, Devens, J., in Com. v. Jackson, 132 Mass. 18 ("It is the knowledge which it may be inferred he must have derived from other transactions . . . that makes the evidence admissible as affording just ground for inference against him as to intent in the matter under examination"); 1811, Mitchell, C. J., in State v. Smith, 5 Day Conn. 175, 178 ("It is lawful to prove that the prisoner attempted to utter the note at different times and places where it had been suspected and challenged as false"); 1832, U. S. v. Roudenbush, 1 Baldw. 514 (the Court admits the uttering of other notes "if their general resemblance to the one laid in the indictment is such that a person who knows the one to be a counterfeit could not reasonably believe the others were genuine"; and excludes them if they are "so unlike in appearance that an honest man might think one good though the other was known to be bad"); 1873, Allen, J., in Coleman v. People, 55 N. Y. 81, 90 (referring to evidence of former receipt of stolen goods: "There must be such a connection of circumstances that a natural inference may be drawn that, if the prisoner knew one article was stolen, he would also be chargeable with knowledge that another was").

Such is the theory of evidencing Intent, as expounded, in various phrasings and for all sorts of offences, in repeated judicial utterances:

1848, Mr. Holmes, arguing in R. v. Mitchel, 6 State Tr. N. S. 599, 632 (challenging an array as not selected by the sheriff with impartial intent, and offering to show a disproportion between the Catholics and Protestants qualified and those actually summoned; the contention being approved by the Court): "We don't put it on the ground of religion. If a man were playing hazard, if all is fair and the dice are not loaded, there can be no honester game; but if one man always throws 'crabs', as it is called, while the other always throws in his own favor, the presumption is that the dice are loaded. So in this case there is strong evidence that all is not right. If the natural result of the proportionate number of those qualified to be placed on the panel should be that there would be on it two Catholics to one Protestant, and that we find that, so far from that being the case, there are of Protestants five to one on the panel, is not it the natural presumption that there has not been fair dealing in the construction of the panel?"

1874, COLERIDGE, C. J., in R. v. Francis, L. R. 2 C. C. R. 128: "It seems clear upon principle that when the fact of the prisoner having done the thing charged is proved, and the only remaining question is whether at the time he did it he had a guilty knowledge of the quality of his act or acted under a mistake, evidence of the class received must be admissible. It tends to show that he was pursuing a course of similar acts, and thereby it raises a presumption that he was not acting under a mistake. It is not conclusive, for a man may be many times under a similar mistake, or may be many times the dupe of another; but it is less likely he should be so oftener than once, and every circumstance which shows he was not under a mistake on any one of these occasions strengthens the presumption that he was not on the last."

1878, GROVE, J., in Blake v. Assurance Co., L. R. 4 C. P. D. 94, 98: "When the question is whether an act was or was not fraudulent, acts of a similar kind are given in evidence to show intention. I remember in a housebreaking case in which I was counsel, a man was found under suspicious circumstances in a bedroom; it was set up that he was there courting the servant; to show a guilty intention, ERLE, C. J., admitted evidence of the fact that he was seen in the house a week before under circumstances equally suspicious and which rebutted the idea that he was there for the purpose of courting. . . . To take the common instance of fraud committed by means of begging letters. If a single letter to one individual only were proved, the evidence would probably be insufficient for a conviction; but the particular transaction is shown to be a guilty one by proving that the person charged has done the same thing twenty times before, and that in each case he has told false stories and given fictitious names. Then is there any rule of law to exclude this evidence? I am of opinion that there is not. Where the act itself does not per se show its nature, the law permits other acts to be given in evidence for the purpose of showing the nature of the particular act; as, for instance, in cases of uttering counterfeit coin, even in some cases of murder, and generally wherever it is necessary to show the intent with which the act was done. . . . [So in this case] if you show similar shams, carried out under the same false name, and that the defendants are the people who put the money in their pocket in each case, the difficulty arising from any possibility of mistake in the case is removed, and the jury may reasonably be called upon to infer that the defendants intended to pocket the money of the plaintiff in the particular case."

1840, STORY, J., in Bottomley v. U. S., 1 Story 135 (to show defendant's fraudulent intent in undervaluations of imports, other instances were offered): "It appears to me clearly admissible upon the general doctrine of evidence in cases of conspiracy and fraud, where other acts in furtherance of the same general fraudulent design are admissible, first, to establish the fact that there is such a conspiracy and fraud; and, secondly, to repel the suggestion that the acts might be fairly attributed to accident, mistake, or innocent rashness or negligence. In most cases of conspiracy and fraud, the question of intent or purpose or design in the act done, whether innocent or illegal, whether honest or fraudulent, rarely admits of direct and positive proof; but it is to be deduced from various circumstances of more or less stringency and often occurring, not merely between the same parties, but between the party charged with the conspiracy or fraud and third persons. And in all cases where the guilt of the party depends upon the intent, purpose, or design with which the act was done, or upon his guilty knowledge thereof, I understand it to be a general rule that collateral facts may be examined into, in which he bore a part, for the purpose of establishing such guilty intent, design, purpose, or knowledge. . . . [After illustrating by the doctrines about counterfeit money, stolen goods, etc.] In short, wherever the intent or guilty knowledge of a party is a material ingredient in the issue of a case, these collateral facts, tending to establish such intent or knowledge, are proper evidence."

1876, Mr. Clark, Attorney-General, arguing, in State v. Lapage, 57 N. H. 245, 261 (the argument being approved by the Court): "Suppose the defendant were tried for breaking and entering the store at the north end of Elm Street in Manchester — the most northern of all the stores on that street — with intent to steal; suppose it were proved that he broke and entered that store; that he was arrested as soon as he entered it, and the only question were whether he intended to steal; suppose there were one hundred other stores on that street, and he had broken and entered every one of them, and stolen something in every one of them, beginning at the south end of the street and taking the stores in succession, on his burglarious march from one end of the street to the other; suppose he did all this in one night, and was completing his night's work when arrested; on the question of his intent in entering the one hundred and first store, would any one think of objecting to evidence of his one hundred larcenies in the other one hundred stores? His robbing one hundred stores would tend to show that he intended to rob the one hundred and first, just as his passing counterfeit money in the one hundred would tend to show that he intended to pass counterfeit money found in his possession in the one hundred and first. There would be no difference between his presence in the one hundred and first store, and his having counterfeit money in his pocket in that store, that would, on the question of intent, affect the admissibility of the evidence of what he had done in the other hundred stores.

Suppose, instead of robbing stores, he had robbed persons, going from one end of the street to the other, knocking down and robbing one hundred men, one after the other, and not touching a single woman; suppose when he had knocked down the one hundred and first man, and before he had had time to rob him, he had been arrested, and the question were whether he intended to rob him, — whether his last offence were an attempt to rob, or a mere assault, or an assault with intent to kill; would anybody suppose his robbing the other hundred men, after he knocked them down, was no evidence of the intent with which he knocked down number one hundred and one? Suppose the one hundred and one persons whom he assaulted were women; suppose he touched no man; suppose he had unsuccessfully attempted to ravish one hundred of them, and were arrested at the instant of his knocking down the one hundred and first, and the question were whether his last assault were a mere assault, or an assault with intent to commit a robbery, or an assault with intent to commit a rape; suppose the last woman assaulted should die of her injuries, and the defendant were indicted for her murder; . . . how would you expect, if you were the prosecuting officers, to find any better evidence of the defendant's intent than his attempts upon the other one hundred women? . . . If a ship-master lands in Congo, obtains a cargo of blacks, and carries them to Cuba, and four years and four months afterwards he is found at another place on the African coast, as far from Congo as Pembroke Academy is from St. Beatrice with a hundred blacks in his possession, — would anybody think that his proved intent or the former occasion had, as a matter of fact, no tendency to show what he intended to do on the latter occasion? . . . No man on earth would refuse to hear it, or to consider it, unless he were bound by some arbitrary and irrational rule overriding his understanding, and dictating a course at war with his common sense. . . . It is the spontaneous and irreversible judgment of every grade of intellect that has appeared, or is likely to appear, in this state of existence. It is an involuntary and unavoidable perception of the inherent and self-evident relations of conduct and intention; a mental revelation as natural as memory, and as trustworthy and unanswerable as consciousness."

1876, CUSHING, C. J., in State v. Lapage, 57 N. H. 245, 294: "Another class of cases consists of those in which it becomes necessary to show that the act for which the prisoner was indicted was not accidental, — e.g. where the prisoner had shot the same person twice within a short time, or where the same person had fired a rick of grain twice, or where several deaths by poison had taken place in the same family, or where the children of the same mother had mysteriously died. In such cases it might well happen that a man should shoot another accidentally, but that he should do it twice within a short time would be very unlikely. So, it might easily happen that a man using a gun might fire a rick of barley once by accident, but that he should do it several times in succession would be very improbable. So, a person might die of accidental poisoning, but that several persons should so die in the same family at different times would be very unlikely. So, that a child should be suffocated in bed by its mother might happen once, but several similar deaths in the same family could not reasonably be accounted for as accidents. So, in the case of embezzlement effected by means of false entries, a single false entry might be accidentally made; but the probability of accident would diminish at least as fast as the instances increased."

1896, TAFT, J., in Penn M. L. Ins. Co. v. M. L. B. & T. Co., 19 C. C. A. 286, 72 Fed. 422: "It is a well established rule of evidence that, where the issue is the fraud or innocence of one in doing an act having the effect to mislead another, it is relevant to show other similar acts of the same person having the same effect to mislead, at or about the same time, or connected with the same general subject-matter. The legal relevancy of such evidence is based on logical principles. It certainly diminishes the possibility that an innocent mistake was made in an untrue and misleading statement, to show similar but different misleading statements of the same person about the same matter, because it is less probable that one would make innocent mistakes of a false and misleading character in repeated instances than in one instance."

It will be seen that the peculiar feature of this process of proof is that the act itself is assumed to be done, — either because (as usually) it is conceded, or because the jury are instructed not to consider the evidence from this point of view until they find the act to have been done and are proceeding to determine the intent. This explains what is a marked feature in the rulings of the Courts, namely, a disinclination to insist on any feature of common purpose or general scheme as a necessary requirement for the other acts evidentially used. It is not here necessary to look for a general scheme or to discover a united system in all the acts; the attempt is merely to discover the intent accompanying the act in question; and the prior doing of other similar acts, whether clearly a part of a scheme or not, is useful as reducing the possibility that the act in question was done with innocent intent. The argument is based purely on the doctrine of chances, and it is the mere repetition of instances, and not their system or scheme, that satisfies our logical demand.

Yet, in order to satisfy this demand, it is at least necessary that prior acts should be similar. Since it is the improbability of a like result being repeated by mere chance that carries probative weight, the essence of this probative effect is the similarity of the instance. Suppose the blowing up of an American warship in Havana Harbor to be in question; the blowing up of various ships of various other nations in the preceding fifty years would have no significance as to the accidental nature of the occurrence (except to show that such an accident is possible); the blowing up of an American warship in the preceding year in Algiers would have scarcely more significance; but the blowing up of an American warship in the same year in Cadiz or in the same harbor of Havana would have striking significance. So, where the intent of an erroneous addition in a bookkeeper's accounts is in issue, the erroneous addition of a bill rendered to a former employer ten years before would have no significance, because it is still within the limits of ordinary casual error that such things should occur at intervals; but several other erroneous additions in the bookkeeper's own favor in the same year and the same book of accounts go to exclude the explanation of casual error, and leave deliberate intent as the more probable explanation. In short, there must be a similarity in the various instances in order to give them probative value, — as indeed the general logical canon requires (ante, § 33).

It is just this requirement of similarity which leaves so much room for difference of opinion and accounts for the bewildering variances of rulings in the different jurisdictions and even in the same jurisdiction and in cases of the same offence. Some judges incline to treat the judicial test of probative value as identical with the common-sense test, and to admit such instances as bear a similarity liberally interpreted by the standard of every-day reasoning. Other judges set their faces firmly against every instance which is not on all fours with the offence in issue, regardless of the consideration that justice consists quite as much in protecting the public against evil doers as in showing mercy to those whose guilt has been more or less skilfully concealed.

It is hopeless to attempt to reconcile the precedents under the various heads; for too much depends on the tendency of the Court in dealing with a flexible principle. One Court will be certain to exclude everything that is not too clearly probative for even technical quibblers to oppose, and sometimes will exclude even that. Another Court will accept whatever has real probative value. Something, however, may perhaps be gained by realizing, as to the former, that it is not the law, nor precedent, nor principle, nor policy, that will account for such rulings, but merely a rooted inclination to take the stricter view and a preference to err in favor of criminals and against innocent victims.

§ 303. Same: Anonymous Intent. It will be seen that the strength of the foregoing kind of inference does not rest exclusively on a given person's connection with the prior injurious transactions. It is possible to negative accident or inadvertence, and to infer deliberate human intent, without forming any conclusion as to the personality of the doer. Thus, if A's cellar-window is found broken, and the pieces falling inside, one morning after a high wind, he may well assume the probability that the force of the wind blew the glass in; but if on the next morning and the next he again finds a window broken in the same way, though no high wind prevailed the night before, he gives up the hypothesis of the force of the wind as the explanation, and concludes that a deliberate human effort was the highly probable cause of the breakage, although he can form no notion whatever of the personality of the doer. It is thus clear that innocent intent — accident, inadvertence, or the like — may be negatived by anonymous instances of the previous occurrence of the same or a similar thing. After assuming or proving the defendant's connection with the deed charged, then, to negative innocent intent, resort is had to the anonymous instances; and they may have equal force for that purpose, whether they are connected with the defendant or not. This mode of proof is not infrequently resorted to; and the following passage illustrates its judicial sanction:

1847, POLLOCK, C. B., in R. v. Bailey, 2 Cox Cr. 311 (arson; the fire had originated near the kitchen, where the accused stayed as servant; evidence was offered of two fires occurring shortly before in the prosecutor's shop and warehouse attached, though no connection of the prisoner or any one else with these was shown): "I think this is clearly evidence, and may be used at all events for the purpose of showing that the present fire which was the third on the same premises within so short a time, could not have been the result of accident. Surely, if a man finds certain mysterious circumstances to arise day after day in his establishment, he is at liberty to refer to them, if only for the purpose of showing that they could not have had their origin in accident and that a repetition of them could only lead to the conclusion that they resulted from malice and design. This course of evidence is not without precedent and authority, moreover; for on the trial of Donellan for the murder of Sir Theodosius Broughton by administering him some poison, evidence was given that a certain tree, which hung over a deep and dangerous brook near a spot where Sir Theodosius was accustomed to fish, had been sawn almost in two by some unknown person. This was proved to show that some one entertained a design against the life of Sir Theodosius, for he was accustomed to stand on that tree while engaged in fishing; and the natural presumption was that whoever cut the tree did so with the design of precipitating the deceased into the water. Those facts were given in evidence on the trial of Donellan for murdering Sir Theodosius afterwards, and were received, though quite unconnected with the prisoner, in order to show that some one entertained a design on his life and that the probability was that he had not come to a natural death."

The only limitation upon this mode of proof is that the defendant's doing of the act in issue must be shown by other evidence at some stage of the trial; and the anonymous instances should not be received until the trial Court is satisfied with the amount of evidence introduced or pledged for showing that connection.

§ 304. Theory of evidencing Design or System. When the very doing of the act charged is still to be proved, one of the evidential facts receivable is the person's Design or Plan to do it (ante, § 102). This in turn may be evidenced by conduct of sundry sorts (ante, § 234) as well as by direct assertions of the design (post, § 1725). But where the conduct offered consists merely in the doing of other similar acts, it is obvious that something more is required than that mere similarity, which suffices for evidencing Intent (ante, § 302). The object here is not merely to negative an innocent intent at the time of the act charged, but to prove a pre-existing design, system, plan, or scheme, directed forwards to the doing of that act. In the former case (of Intent) the attempt is merely to negative the innocent state of mind at the time of the act charged; in the present case the effort is to establish a definite prior design or system which included the doing of the act charged as a part of its consummation. In the former case, the result is to give a complexion to a conceded act, and ends with that; in the present case, the result is to show (by probability) a precedent design which in its turn is to evidence (by probability) the doing of the act designed.

The added element, then, must be, not merely a similarity in the results, but such a concurrence of common features that the various acts are naturally to be explained as caused by a general plan of which they are the individual manifestations. Thus, where the act of passing counterfeit money is conceded, and the intent alone is in issue, the fact of two previous utterings in the same month might well tend to negative innocent intent; but where the very act of uttering is disputed — as, where the defendant claims that his identity has been mistaken —, and the object is to show that he had a general system or plan of working off a quantity of counterfeit money and did carry it out in this instance, the fact of two previous utterings may be in itself of trifling and inadequate significance. So, on a charge of assault with intent to rape, where the intent alone is disputed, a prior assault on the previous day upon the same woman, or even upon another member of her family, might have probative value; but if the assault itself is disputed, and the defendant attempts, for example, to show an alibi, the same facts might be of little or no value, and it might be necessary to go further and to show (for example) that the defendant on the same day, with a confederate guarding the house, assaulted other women in the same family who escaped, leaving the complainant as the only woman accessible to him for his purpose. This requirement of common features for the various acts pointing to a common plan or system as their natural explanation has been set forth by the judges in varying phrases:

1878, LINDLEY, J., in Blake v. Assurance Co., L. R. 4 C. P. D. 94, 106: "I agree that in order to prove that A has committed a fraud on B, it is neither sufficient nor even relevant to prove that A committed fraud upon C, D, and E. Stopping there, I admit that proposition. But let it be shown that the fraud on B is one of a class of other transactions having common features, then I disagree altogether with that proposition. . . . The answer to the objection that evidence of frauds on other persons cannot be admitted is that this transaction is one of a class, that there are features in common, the features in common being a false pretence and a knowledge of that false pretence on the part of the defendant company; and the moment that is shown the plaintiff's case is established."

1858, SMITH, J., in People v. Stout, 4 Park. Cr. 127: "When several felonies are connected together as parts of one scheme or plot, like the different acts in a drama, and all tend to a common end, then they may be given in evidence to show the process of motive and design in the final crime."

1888, C. ALLEN, J., in Com. v. Robinson, 146 Mass. 571, 16 N. E. 452: "[In the case of] acts or crimes which are shown to have been committed as part of the same common purpose or in pursuance of it, in such cases there is a distinct and significant probative effect, resulting from the continuance of the same plan or scheme and from the doing of other acts in pursuance thereof. It is somewhat of the nature of threats or declarations of intention, but more especially of preparations for the commission of the crime which is the subject of the indictment. If, for example, it could be shown that a defendant had formed a settled purpose to obtain certain property which could only be got by doing several preliminary things, the last of which in the order of time was criminal, the government might show, on his trial for the commission of that last criminal act, that he had formed the purpose to accomplish the result of obtaining the property, and that he had done all of the preliminary things which were necessary to that end. This would be quite plain if the evidence of the purpose were direct and clear, — as, if a letter in the defendant's handwriting should be discovered, stating in terms to a confederate his purpose to obtain the property by the doing of the several successive acts the last of which was the criminal act on trial. In such case, no one would question that proof might be offered that the defendant had done all the preliminary acts referred to, which were necessary steps in the accomplishment of his purpose. But such purpose may also be shown by circumstantial evidence. It is, indeed, usually the case that intentions, plans, purposes, can only be shown in this way. Express declarations of intention, or confessions, are comparatively rare; and therefore all the circumstances of the defendant's situation, conduct, speech, silence, motives, may be considered. The plan itself, and the acts done in pursuance of it, may all be proved by circumstantial evidence, if they are of themselves relevant and material to the case on trial. . . . It is sometimes said that such evidence may be introduced where the several crimes form part of one entire transaction; but it is perhaps better to say, where they have some connection with each other, as a part of the same plan or induced by the same motive."

It will be seen that the difference between requiring similarity, for acts negativing innocent Intent, and requiring common features indicating common design, for acts showing Design, is a difference of degree rather than of kind; for to be similar involves having common features, and to have common features is merely to have a high degree of similarity. This is another reason why the precedents are so difficult to reconcile; for the Courts have not always perceived that there are in truth these two distinct purposes and therefore two distinct tests for such evidence. Nevertheless the distinction is a real one. It is to be seen in concrete illustrations, even though in abstract definition it is not easy to formulate. The clue to the difference is best gained by remembering that in the one class of cases the act charged is assumed as done, and the mind asks only for something that will negative innocent intent; and the mere prior occurrence of an act similar in its gross features — i.e. the same doer, and the same sort of act, but not necessarily the same mode of acting nor the same sufferer — may suffice for that purpose. But where the very act is the object of proof, and is desired to be inferred from a plan or system, the combination of common features that will suggest a common plan as their explanation involves so much higher a grade of similarity as to constitute a substantially new and distinct test. An occasional error in judicial rulings is to require the higher conditions of the present test where only the preceding test (for Intent) is needed. Thus, to show that certain representations as to goods sold (the making of the representations and their falsity being assumed) were deliberately and knowingly made, and not innocently, the former making of like representations about the same goods to the same or other persons is clearly of value to negative innocent intent; yet in at least one jurisdiction, in such cases, the Court has in terms required that these evidential instances shall be so connected by common features as to indicate a general fraudulent scheme or system. This is a misapplication of the stringent theory of Design or System to a case where the theory of Intent is alone involved. Such misapplications of the rigorous requirements of the Design principle are also met with in rulings upon other kinds of crimes; but the error involved in such rulings may be perceived by an analysis of the purposes of the evidence in a given case.

Two necessary limitations are to be observed in the use of this class of evidence of Design. (1) Anonymous acts are not available, as they are for evidencing Intent (ante, § 303); for the whole purpose of the evidence is to fix a design upon the defendant, as making it likely that he carried it out, and thus that it was he who did the act charged. Nevertheless, in the order of proof it may not be possible to evidence the defendant's connection with the previous acts until the acts themselves have been testified to; and hence the trial Court, applying the general principle of conditional admissibility (ante, § 14) may admit the latter portion of the evidence on the assurance that the defendant's connection with those acts will later be duly evidenced.[1]

(2) The object being to argue to the act charged from a design or plan to do it, the prior acts are received to show that system; since, however, it may require a number of acts and circumstances to furnish the desired mass of conduct illustrating this design or system, and since the production of only parts or fragments of it would in effect violate the principle and remain in evidence merely as affecting the defendant's character, the trial Court must pass upon the offer beforehand, to see whether if offered in its entirety it satisfies the proper test and is sufficient to go to the jury; and (on the same principle of § 14, ante) must, if the offer is sanctioned, require an assurance that it will be forthcoming in its entirety.[2]

§ 304. [1] The following is an example: 1865, People v. Frank, 28 Cal. 507, 518 (the order of proof being in the discretion of the trial Court). Compare §§ 1870, 1871, post, (order of evidence).

§ 305. Criminality of Act Immaterial; Character Rule, distinguished. It has already been noted (ante, § 216) that the criminality of prior acts thus offered does not affect their admissibility. Either they are relevant, by the above tests, or they are not; if they are not, they are rejected because they are irrelevant; if they are, they are received in spite of their criminality. The only bearing of the latter quality is that, if they are irrelevant, it furnishes another reason for excluding them, namely, the reason of Undue Prejudice, as enforced in the Character rule (ante, § 194); for these other criminal acts would not merely be irrelevant, but would go to evidence the defendant's character and career as bad and thus to create undue prejudice, — a mode of argument against him that is forbidden by a fundamental principle.

It is, however, to this reluctance to violate the Character rule that is due the strictness shown by the Courts in excluding prior criminal acts which do not strictly fulfil the rigorous tests just examined. If the admission of irrelevant evidence had been the only consequence of an error in the ruling, there would undoubtedly have been seen a greater liberality in the judicial application of the foregoing tests. The unsatisfactory result has been that, in this narrow and over-cautious anxiety not to infringe upon the Character rule, evidence highly appropriate to show Knowledge, Intent, or Design, and amply fulfilling the proper tests for that purpose, has often been excluded.

Of the other objections (than Undue Prejudice) from the point of view of that auxiliary policy which creates the Character rule (ante, § 194), the objection of Unfair Surprise is the only one that could be supposed to be here applicable. But it has never been treated by the Courts as of consequence. This rational and practical conclusion is easily understood when it is remembered that any other conclusion might result in shutting out most of the appropriate evidence, of this and other sorts, to prove a crime. The legal objection of Unfair Surprise, so far as it is ever recognized, is not founded on the notion that the opponent was not in fact anticipating this specific evidence (post, §§ 1845, 1849), but on the notion that he could not have anticipated evidence which might easily be fabricated beyond detection; and the objection is recognized as having force only when the evidence offered is of a class capable of involving the entire range of the person's life. Evidence tending to show, not the defendant's entire career, but his specific knowledge, motive, design, and the other immediate matters leading up to and succeeding the crime, is of a class always to be anticipated and is in each given instance rarely a surprise; moreover, the kernel of the objection of unfair surprise, namely, the impossibility of exposing fabricated evidence, is wanting where the evidence deals with matters so closely connected with a crime as design, motive, and the like:

[2] The following is an example: 1888, Com. v. Robinson, 146 Mass. 579 (the judge merely deciding that there was sufficient strength in the evidence to submit it to the jury, but not thereby giving it any greater weight with the jury).

1804, ELLENBOROUGH, C. J., in R. v. Whyley, 2 Leach Cr. L., 4th ed. 985: "The observation respecting prisoners being taken by surprise and coming unprepared to answer or defend themselves against extrinsic facts is not correct. The indictment alleges that the prisoner uttered this note knowing it to be forged; and they must know that without the reception of other evidence than that which the mere circumstances of the transaction itself would furnish, it would be impossible to ascertain whether they uttered it with a guilty knowledge of its having been forged, or whether it was uttered under circumstances which showed their minds to be free from that guilt."

§ 306. Other Evidential Purposes Discriminated. Other similar acts by a defendant may of course be available for other purposes than to show Knowledge, Intent, or Design. These other uses and their distinction from the present one will usually be apparent. It is worth while, however, to point out those which are often available at the same time as the present ones: (1) Motive. To show the hostility towards the deceased of a defendant charged with murder, a former assault by him upon the deceased would be relevant (post, § 396). Owing to the occasional failure of Courts to distinguish between Motive (Emotion) — the state of feeling impelling towards an act — and Intent — the mental state accompanying an act —, it is not always possible to know whether a ruling admitting such evidence is meant to deal with the subject of Motive or Intent. Its relevancy to show Motive (hostility) has never been doubted. (2) Identity. To identify a defendant as the perpetrator of the crime charged, it may become necessary to show former conduct of his, known to be the conduct of the perpetrator (post, § 413, ante, § 218). (3) Inseparable acts. In evidencing the act charged, it may be necessary to describe an affair which involves a number of acts, one or more others of which will also be crimes. Such proof is receivable, because it is inseparable from the act charged (ante, § 218). Courts often employ that principle — especially in proving deeds of violence (post, § 362) — as the sufficient source of admission, where that of Intent might equally have sufficed.[1]

It remains now to take up the various kinds of offences charged, and examine under each head the application of the foregoing principles to the use of other similar acts to evidence Knowledge, Intent, and Design.

§ 306. [1] For the use of an accused's confession of other crimes, see post, § 2100.

2. Forgery and Counterfeiting

§ 309. General Principle; State of the Law in Various Jurisdictions.[1] The chief forms of offence connected with forged and other counterfeit documents or money are: (1) making the false article; (2) possessing it knowingly with intent to utter; (3) knowing utterance of it. In the last two, the defendant's knowledge is always in issue; in the first, it is occasionally in issue, as where the act of writing is conceded but an authority is claimed. In all of them

§ 309. [1] ENGLAND: 1684, Lady Ivy's Trial, 10 How. St. Tr. 555, 621 (to prove the defendant's title deeds forged, the fact was admitted of her forging a number of deeds to support her title); 1777, Graft v. Lord Bertie, Peake Evid. 72 (to prove that a deceased attesting-witness had attested a forgery, the fact was offered that other bonds attested by him were forgeries; the objection was made that the plaintiff "could not be prepared to support the authority of other deeds"; and with hesitation Lord Mansfield rejected the evidence); 1792, Balcetti v. Serain, Parke 142, Buller, J. (action on a bill claimed to be forged by the drawer's clerk; the fact of a previous forgery of the defendant's name to another acceptance by the same clerk was rejected as not sufficiently connected); 1794, Gibson v. Hunter, 2 H. Bl. 288 (H. drew a bill on G., payable to F. (a fictitious person) or order, and indorsed in F.'s name; the plaintiff, a bona fide holder for value, sued G., and in order to show that G. knew this particular F. to be a fictitious person, offered the fact of the former issuance of such bills with irregularities and suspicious circumstances of such a nature that they must have made G. aware of the fictitiousness of F.'s name, and it was admitted); 1795, Viney v. Barss, 1 Esp. 293, Kenyon, L. C. J. (action against the acceptor of a bill; defence, that it was a forgery by the drawer; evidence of other similar forgeries by the drawer, excluded); 1804, R. v. Wylie, 1 B. & P. N. R. 92, 2 Leach 4th ed., 983 (indictment for uttering a forged bank-bill; the fact of three previous utterings in the preceding month to other persons was admitted; Ellenborough, L. C. J.: "The more detached in point of time the previous utterings are, the less relation they will bear to that stated in the indictment. But in such a case the only question would be, whether the evidence was sufficient to warrant the inference of knowledge from such particular transactions; it would not make the evidence inadmissible"); 1806, R. v. Hough, R. & R. 120, by all the Judges present (uttering a forged bill; the possession when arrested of three other bills upon the same drawee, admitted to show scienter); 1807, R. v. Ball, R. & R. 132; by all the Judges present except one (uttering a forged bank-note; the utterance of a similar one three months before, and the possession, at some previous time, of fifteen others, admitted, "subject to observations as to the weight of it, which would be more or less considerable according to the number of the other notes, the distance of time at which they were put off, and the situation of life of the prisoner, so as to make it more or less probable that so many notes should pass through his hands in the course of business"; Chambre, J., dissenting, partly on the ground of surprise); 1808, R. v. Ball, 1 Camp. 324 (uttering a forged bank-note; the fact admitted, to show knowledge, of the utterance of various notes of similar manufacture in the preceding six months; Heath, J.: "Everything that you said or did was proper to be admitted to show your knowledge of the forgery"); 1809, R. v. Taverner, Carr. Suppl. 195, Ellenborough, L. C. J., Thomson, C. B., and Lawrence, J. (uttering forged bank-notes; an uttering five weeks later excluded, "unless the latter uttering was in some way connected with the principal case or it could be shown that the notes were of the same manufacture"); 1813, R. v. Millard, R. & R. 245 (uttering a forged bank-note; the fact of uttering forged notes of other denominations and of the same and another bank two, five, and twelve months before respectively, held admissible; here the evidence was excluded, as not showing that they were forged; but some judges "seemed to doubt" whether the difference of qualities and the distance of time did not exclude the evidence); 1825, R. v. Moore, 2 C. & P. 235, Burrough, J. (charge of possessing an edger, for marking money round the edge, with intent to use it; the fact received of his having so used it); 1827, R. v. Smith, 2 C. & P. 633, Vaughan, B. (uttering a forged note; another uttering, charged in a second count, excluded, because so charged; and even the use of other uncharged utterings was said to have been questioned by many able lawyers; this ruling never represented the law); 1827, R. v. Hodgson, 1 Lew. Cr. C. 103 (to show guilty knowledge of a forged Edinburgh bank-note, the uttering by the defendant of forged Paisley bank-notes was doubted by Hullock, B., his own opinion being for admission, but many judges being thought by him to be against it; here the evidential notes were the subject of another indictment); 1828, R. v. Sunderland, 1 Lew. Cr. C. 102 (to show guilty knowledge of a forged Rochdale bank-note, the discovery on the defendant's person of two forged Bank of England notes was admitted); 1829, R. v. Phillips, 1 Lew. Cr. C. 105, Bayley, B. (to show guilty uttering of a bank-note, the conduct was admitted of the defendant while previously uttering other forged notes; also, the former uttering of a £1 note was admitted to show knowledge in uttering a £5 note); 1830, R. v. Kirkwood, 1 Lew. Cr. C. 103 (facts similar to R. v. Hodgson; Littledale, J., "without hesitation overruled the objections"); 1830, R. v. Martin, 1 Lew. Cr. C.

104, Littledale, J. (similar to R. v. Kirkwood); 1831, R. v. Smith, 4 C. & P. 411, Gaselee, J. (uttering a forged acceptance; other similar utterances in the next month of forged bills having the same parties' names, admitted, but subject to reservation for the Judges, because occurring subsequent to the charge in issue); 1835, R. v. Forbes, 7 C. & P. 224 (forging a bill, the issue being whether the defendant bona fide believed himself to have authority to sign; the fact of another similar forgery admitted to show intent: "clear proof" of the other forgery required); 1836, R. v. Ball, 1 Moo. Cr. C. 470, 7 C. & P. 429, by all the Judges (uttering forged Austrian notes; the fact of a recent forging and uttering of Polish notes, admitted "in support of the scienter"); 1837, R. v. Page, 4 B. & Ad. 122 (counterfeit utterance; possession of another counterfeit piece, admitted); 1855, R. v. Forster, Dears. Cr. C. 456, by five Judges (to prove a guilty uttering on Dec. 12, an uttering of a similar piece on Dec. 11 was shown; on that occasion the shopkeeper told the defendant the piece was bad, whereupon she promised she would bring her husband and her daughter to show where she got it, but she did not return: a subsequent uttering on Jan. 4 also admitted; the uttering of a shilling was admitted to show knowledge in uttering a crown); 1855, R. v. Jarvis, 7 Cox Cr. 53, Dears. Cr. C. 552, before five Judges (knowing possession of counterfeit coin; the discovery in different pockets, of many other coins of similar style and make, each wrapped in paper, was admitted); 1861, R. v. Weeks, Leigh & C. 18, by five Judges (knowing possession of a counterfeiting mould; previous utterance of a bad half-crown, not shown to fit the mould, admitted to show scienter); 1863, Roupell v. Haws, 2 F. & F. 784 (the defendants claimed title, against the heir-at-law, under a deed of gift from the testator; evidence of other forgeries (letters, leases, etc.) of the testator's son were received as showing under the circumstances a system to defraud of which the forgery of the deed of gift was a part); 1867, R. v. Goodwin, 10 Cox Cr. 534, Mellor, J. (another uttering admitted to show knowledge; ruled also that a former conviction of false uttering could not alone be admitted to show knowledge); 1914, Mason's Case, 10 Cr. App. 169 (uttering a forged deed; possession of two other sets of forged deeds, a fortnight and five months later, admitted). 1917, R. v. Kennaway, 1 K. B. 25 (forgery of L.'s will; forgery of F.'s will 18 years before, admitted, as explaining the reason for some details of defendant's act here).

UNITED STATES: Federal: 1827, U. S. v. Moses 4, Wash. C. C. 726 (like U. S. v. Roudenbush, 8 Pet. infra); 1832, U. S. v. Roudenbush, 1 Baldw. 514 (uttering; "if their general resemblance to the one laid in the indictment is such that a person who knows the one to be a counterfeit could not reasonably believe the others were genuine . . . , [other utterings are admissible, . . . but therefore inadmissible] when the notes are on different banks or so unlike in appearance that an honest man might think one good, though the other was known to be bad"); 1832, U. S. v. Doebler, 1 Baldw. 519, 524 ("if the note is of the same kind or character", other utterings are admissible); 1834, U. S. v. Roudenbush, 8 Pet. 288 (apparently recognizing the general doctrine by implication that other utterings are admissible to show intent); 1849, U. S. v. Burns, 5 McLean 23, 26 (uttering; possession of other coins, admissible); 1879, U. S. v. Brooks, 3 McArth. 315, 317 (obtaining money by a deed of trust on property got shortly before by a forged deed, admitted to show intent in a prosecution for forging the deed); 1903, Withaup v. U. S., 127 Fed. 530, 531, 62 C. C. A. 328 (forgery of a pension-check indorsement; forged vouchers, etc., admitted as evidencing a "single scheme to defraud"); 1904, Bryan v. U. S., 133 Fed. 495, 66 C. C. A. 389 (uttering counterfeit 5-cent pieces, possession of a mold for counterfeit 25-cent pieces, admitted); 1905, Dillard v. U. S., 141 Fed. 303, 308, C. C. A. (forgery of Chinese immigrant duplicate certificates; other forged duplicate certificates admitted to show intent); 1912, Ex parte Schorer, C. C., 197 Fed. 67, 77 (extradition; other uttering of similar forged acceptances, held sufficient on the facts, quoting § 312, supra); 1916, York v. U. S., 9th C. C. A., 241 Fed. 656 (conspiracy to pass counterfeit money, similar act 6 months prior to the conspiracy, admitted to evidence knowledge);

Alabama: 1849, Tharp v. State, 15 Ala. 749 (counterfeit utterance; previous passing of "other and similar spurious coin", admissible); 1903, Wright v. State, 138 Ala. 69, 34 So. 1009 (forgery; another forged order about the same time, admitted);

Arizona: 1902, Qualey v. Terr., 8 Ariz. 45, 68 Pac. 546 (falsification of books; other alterations of entries in the same book, admitted);

California: 1865, People v. Frank, 28 Cal. 507, 515, 517 (forgery; other forged notes or bills "uttered at or about the same time", "whether of the same kind or a different kind", admissible to show knowledge; the time before or after the charge in question being largely in the trial Court's discretion); 1866, People v. Farrell, 30 Cal. 316 (possession with intent to utter; sale of such counterfeit coin to a confederate, admissible to show intent); 1896, the criminal intent, including knowledge and other elements, will be in issue. In any of them, the act charged — making, possessing, or uttering — may be

People v. Sanders, 114 Cal. 216, 46 Pac. 153 (forgery; murder by the defendant of the person whose name was forged, before the date of the writing, admitted to show knowledge); 1896, People v. Whiteman, 114 Cal. 338, 46 Pac. 99 (forgery; other utterings admissible if clearly shown to be forged); 1898, People v. Creegan, 121 Cal. 554, 53 Pac. 1082 (forgery; a series of swindling schemes in other States a few months before, excluded); 1899, People v. Bird, 124 Cal. 32, 56 Pac. 639 (forgery; other similar forgeries, unconnected with defendant, held admissible to show intent only, after evidence of the 'corpus delicti'); 1902, People v. McGlade, 139 Cal. 66, 72 Pac. 600 ("other forgeries of similar instruments about the same time admitted); 1916, People v. Canfield, 173 Cal. 309, 159 Pac. 1046 (forgery; another similar offense, excluded on the facts); 1921, People v. Sindici, — Cal. App. —, 201 Pac. 975 (forgery; other forgeries about the same time, in the same manner, and against the same person, admitted to show a scheme to defraud);

Connecticut: 1811, State v. Smith, 5 Day 175, 178 (counterfeit utterance; Mitchell, C. J.: "It is lawful to prove that the prisoner attempted to utter the note at different times and places where it had been suspected and challenged as false"); 1832, Stalker v. State, 9 Conn. 341 (uttering a base half-dollar; evidence held admissible of other coins "on the same day or near the time", but not of the possession of an engraving like an unsigned bank-note; because "there must be a strong connexion in the subject matter");

Florida: 1894, Langford v. State, 33 Fla. 233, 14 So. 815 (uttering of a note with forged indorsements; other prior and subsequent utterings of notes with forged indorsements, etc., admitted to show knowledge and intent; knowledge of the others being forgeries, at the time of the uttering charged, need not be expressly shown); 1905, Wooldridge v. State, 49 Fla. 137, 38 So. 3 (forgery of school warrants; forgery of other similar warrants, admitted to show intent); 1906, Pittman v. State, 51 Fla. 94, 41 So. 385 (rule of Langford v. State applied);

Georgia: 1852, Hoskins v. State, 11 Ga. 92, 95 (altering the paper, admissible on a charge of making, to show intent); 1892, Lascelles v. State, 90 Ga. 347, 355, 375, 16 S. E. 945 (forgery; false representations as to wealth to the person defrauded, admitted);

Illinois: 1867, Steele v. People, 45 Ill. 152, 157 (forgery; "other forged checks", admitted); 1875, Blalock v. Randall, 76 Ill. 224, 229 (to show that R. had forged B.'s name, B. having concededly signed his name to documents of another sort, evidence was admitted of R.'s having fraudulently obtained the signatures of other persons by a method similar to that alleged by B.); 1880, Fox v. People, 95 Ill. 71, 75 (forgery; previous passing of "similar bills", admissible); 1893, Anson v. People, 148 Ill. 494, 503, 35 N. E. 145 (forgery; possession of other forged instruments about the same time, admitted to show intent and knowledge, though not to show the fact of forging);

Indiana: 1852, McCartney v. State, 3 Ind. 354 (other utterings of notes upon the same and different banks, admissible); 1859, Bersch v. State, 13 Ind. 439 (obscure); 1876, Harding v. State, 54 Ind. 359, 365 (forgery; other forged notes offered to the same parties at the same time, admitted); 1879, Robinson v. State, 66 Ind. 331, 334 (forgery; another forged note, made to secure the same debt, but in a different name, admitted); 1885, Thomas v. State, 103 Ind. 432, 2 N. E. 808 (utterings of similar forged instruments shortly before or after, admissible); 1886, Card v. State, 109 Ind. 415, 420, 9 N. E. 591 (forgery of a note; thirteen other forged notes with the same payee but a different maker, admitted; "in order to prove system, isolated crimes are admissible from which system may be inferred"; applying this to a charge of forgery);

Iowa: 1885, State v. Breckenridge, 67 Ia. 204, 25 N. W. 130 (forgery: other forgeries to show intent; left undecided); 1886, State v. Saunders, 68 Ia. 370, 27 N. W. 455 (forgery of a note to another person: question reserved; "the doubt seems to be whether the paper must not be of the same character or manufacture and precisely similar"); 1901, State v. Prins, 113 Ia. 72, 84 N. W. 980 (forgery; other forgeries of similar documents, admissible to show intent); 1902, State v. Prins, 117 Ia. 505, 91 N. W. 758 (forgery; other unspecified forgeries, admitted);

Kansas: 1907, State v. Calhoun, 75 Kan. 259, 88 Pac. 1079 (forgery of a note; forgery of similar notes transferred at the same time, admitted);

Kentucky: 1897, Barnes v. Com., 101 Ky. 556, 41 S. W. 772 (forgery; possession of similar forged checks, admitted to show intent); 1901, First National Bank v. Wisdom, 111 Ky. 135, 63 S. W. 461 (forgery of other notes by the same person as a part of one scheme, admitted); 1920, Rakestraw v. Sabree D. Bank, 189 Ky. 668, 225 S. W. 506 (defence of forgery, in action on a note; plaintiff bank's possession of six other notes forged in defendant's name, excluded, on the facts);

Maine: 1844, State v. McAllister, 24 Me. 139, 143 (counterfeit utterance; uttering of another bill on the same bank, admitted); 1879, Dodge v. Haskell, 69 Me. 429 (D. sued the defendant's testator on a note signed by him as surety for S.; defence, alteration by S. before delivery; evidence of the finding in the desk of S., who disputed, and a plan or system may be offered to evidence the doing; but this will rarely happen except in the first class of offences.

had absconded, numbers of forged and altered notes, blank and partly written notes, bearing the signatures of the testator and other persons, was excluded, on the theory that the argument from former forgeries and from bad character was inadmissible);
Maryland: 1880, Bishop v. State, 55 Md. 138, 144 (forged uttering; utterings of similar forged instruments about the same time, admitted);
Massachusetts: 1844, Com. v. Bigelow, 8 Mete. 235 (counterfeit utterance; former knowing passing, admitted); 1845, Com. v. Stearns, 10 Mete. 256, (former utterances, admissible); 1849, Com. v. Miller, 3 Cush. 243, 250 (uttering a forged promissory note; the utterance of thirty other similar ones, at or near the same time, admitted); 1858, Com. v. Price, 10 Gray 473 (possession with intent to utter; the fact received of the subsequent possession of counterfeit bills of banks in other States, to show intent); 1862, Com. v. Hall, 4 All. 306 (uttering; possession at the same time of another counterfeit bill, admitted to show intent); 1865, Com. v. Edgerly, 10 All. 184 (possession with intent to utter; previous possession of and attempts at uttering other counterfeit money, admitted to show "guilty knowledge"); 1882, Com. v. Jackson, 132 Mass. 18 (counterfeit utterance; Devens, J.: "It is the knowledge which it may be inferred he must have derived from other transactions, and not the intent that the defendant had in other transactions, that renders the evidence admissible as affording just ground for inference against him as to intent in the matter under examination"); 1888, Com. v. White, 145 Mass. 394, 14 N. E. 611 (forging bills for hides, the bill being used by the defendant as a voucher to the employer that the hides were bought by customers, thus enabling the defendant to obtain cash on them; the fact was received of the fabrication of many other bills of a like sort, before and after those in issue, not to show that a forgery was committed, but to show the defendant's fraudulent intent and knowledge);
Michigan: 1878, Carver v. People, 39 Mich. 786 (forgery; a general scheme shown to use forged instruments of the sort and in the way in question); 1893, Pearson v. Hardin, 95 Mich. 360, 366, 54 N. W. 904 (action against accommodation indorser; plea, that the note was raised; the fact that other notes indorsed by him at the same time were raised, excluded); 1905, People v. Peck, 139 Mich. 680, 103 N. W. 178 (embezzlement; a certain receipt from W. offered by the defendant was alleged to be forged; the forgery of other documents as W.'s, excluded);
Minnesota: 1915, State v. Lucken, 129 Minn. 402, 152 N. W. 769 (forgery of a bank check; the utterance of three other checks of the same signature, within an hour or two, to other persons, admitted);
Missouri: 1851, State v. Mix, 15 Mo. 153, 160 (utterings of other counterfeit bank-notes, of a similar kind, to other persons, before and after the time charged, admitted to show guilty knowledge); State v. Wolff, 15 Mo. 173 ("other acts of passing counterfeit money", admissible); 1893, State v. Minton, 116 Mo. 605, 611, 22 S. W. 808 (forgery of a deed; other forged deeds by defendant under the same name and in the same region, admitted to show intent and knowledge); 1898, State v. Hodges, 144 Mo. 50, 45 S. W. 1093 (uttering a check; similar utterance a few days previously, admitted to show intent); 1907, State v. Stark, 202 Mo. 210, 100 S. W. 642 (forgery of a deed; possession of another forged deed to the same land, admitted); 1920, State v. Plotner, 283 Mo. 83, 222 S. W. 767 (false entries in a bank-book; other offenses of the same character, admitted);
Montana: 1906, State v. Newman, 34 Mont. 434, 87 Pac. 462 (forgery of bounty certificates; other forged certificates, admitted);
Nebraska: 1899, Davis v. State, 58 Nebr. 465, 78 N. W. 930 (forgery of railroad ticket; other sales of such tickets to other persons by the defendant on the same day, admitted); 1901, Burlingim v. State, 61 Nebr. 276, 85 N. W. 77 (inciting forgery of a deed; another forged deed of the same land, admitted to show intent);
New Jersey: 1810, State v. Van Houten, 2 N. J. L. 248 (other utterings on the same day of other counterfeit bills on the same bank, admitted by the majority, to show knowledge and intent); 1838, State v. Robinson, 16 N. J. 507 (another uttering of a note on the same bank, admitted; "Vanhouten's case . . . has been followed ever since in this State"; acquittal on the charge of the other uttering, held immaterial); 1897, Ryan v. State, 60 N. J. 552, 38 Atl. 672 (counterfeit money; evidence of former offences, rejected on the facts);
New York: 1855, People v. Thoms, 3 Park. Cr. 256, 270 (possession with intent to utter; other altered notes found in the possession of the accused, admitted; but notes found in his wife's possession, who had just come from his house, excluded); 1874, People v. Corbin, 56 N. Y. 363 (forgery of A's name, the defendant's claim being that he had authority to write it, but the prosecution claiming a revocation of the authority; other forgeries, about the same time, of his father-in-law's name, excluded); 1887, People v. Everhardt, 104 N. Y. 591, 11 N. E. 62 (utterance of a forged check; utterance "of other forged checks by him upon other occasions", admitted to negative innocent uttering); 1900, Boyd v. Boyd, 164 N. Y. 234, 58 N. E. 118 (whether the defendant forged an assignment of a certificate of redemption in the

The precedents in the various jurisdictions exhibit the application of the following distinctions, both in civil and criminal cases, with more or less name of a deceased judgment-creditor; a similar forged assignment in the same hand and covering a similar transaction, admitted, on the principle of § 303, ante, to show that "an act which had been done by some one was in fact done by the person who designed and pursued the plan"; "there is neither reason nor authority to support the proposition that it must always be limited to cases where motive is material"); 1904, People v. Weaver, 177 N. Y. 434, 69 N. E. 1094 (other forged notes, not admitted on the facts; Werner, J., diss.); 1906, People v. Dolan, 186 N. Y. 4, 78 N. E. 569 (forgery of a note; utterance of other forged notes in the same and other names, admitted to show knowledge, and also to show a general plan; People v. Weaver, distinguished);

North Carolina: 1822, State v. Twitty, 2 Hawks 248, 258 (uttering a bank-note; former utterings of counterfeits of other banks, admitted to show knowledge);

North Dakota: 1908, State v. Murphy, 17 N. D. 48, 115 N. W. 84 (forgery of tax-receipts; other similar forgeries of receipts for taxes from the same and another taxpayer, admitted);

Ohio: 1831, State v. Hess, 5 Oh. 9 (the possession of other counterfeit bank-notes, secreted about the house, admitted); 1846, Reed v. State, 15 Oh. 217 (other counterfeit utterances about the same time, admissible; here of the same bank); 1862, Griffin v. State, 14 Oh. St. 55, 62 (uttering; the possession of counterfeit money similar in character, admissible); 1882, Lindsey v. State, 38 Oh. 507 (uttering a forged warranty deed); other forged warranty deeds and also deeds of trust admitted to show knowledge; sameness of kind not being essential);

Oklahoma: 1917, Montgomery v. State, 13 Okl. Cr. 652, 166 Pac. 446 (forgery; other forgeries admitted as part of a scheme);

Oregon: 1907, State v. Kelliher, 49 Or. 77, 88 Pac. 867 (forgery of school-land certificate papers; joint-indictee's forgery of numerous similar documents, not admitted on the facts);

Pennsylvania: 1893, Penns. Co. v. R. Co., 153 Pa. 160, 164, 25 Atl. 1043 (conversion; forged letter of attorney in issue; other draft forgeries found in defendant's desk of the signatures in question, admitted as showing a plan to forge the one in issue); 1899, Wheeler v. Ahlers, 189 Pa. 138, 42 Atl. 40 (alteration of a note by the maker after indorsement; similar alterations by the same person of similar notes transferred to plaintiff, admitted);

South Carolina: 1816, State v. Antonio, 2 Constl. Ct. 776, 783, 791, 797, 806 (the possession of "instruments calculated to coin money", offered to show the quo animo in passing; admitted, as not involving unfair surprise and as tending to show "that he must have had a knowledge of the baseness of the metal of which the false dollar was composed"; Nott, J., dissenting, because it "did not prove that he knew this dollar to be counterfeit; . . . unless indeed there was some proof, by comparison or otherwise, that these were the moulds in which the dollar passed by the defendant was cast"); 1829, State v. Houston, 1 Bail. 300 (forgery; possession of other such instruments, admitted to show intent; quoted ante, § 313); 1900, State v. Allen, 56 S. C. 495, 35 S. E. 201 (forgery of school certificates; forgery of other similar certificates for the same county within five months later, admitted);

Tennessee: 1840, Peck v. State, 2 Humph. 78, 86 (uttering false silver dollars; other utterings of similar coins, if distinctly shown, held admissible, whether before or after the time in issue; "the accidents of trade can hardly be supposed to have placed in his possession so much spurious money"); 1885, Foute v. State, 15 Lea 712, 719 (uttering forged bills for jail fees; the fact of uttering "other forged bills for jail fees", admitted "to prove the scienter"); 1890, Franklin v. Franklin, 90 Tenn. 48, 16 S. W. 557 (a will alleged to be forged by F.; other forgeries held admissible to show guilty motive "if it had been shown that he had written this will and the defence was that it was written innocently or by direction of the testator"; but "it was not competent to show that he had written this will by proof that he had forged other papers");

Texas: 1893, Strang v. State, 32 Tex. Cr. 219, 228, 22 S. W. 680 (forged utterance; that the defendant had embezzled other funds of the employer, held inadmissible, by a majority);

Vermont: 1830, Keith v. Taylor, 3 Vt. 153 (to prove that the name of E. as witness on a note purporting to be the defendant's had been forged by D., a former holder of the note, the fact was offered (1) that D. had written the body of the note; (2) that D. had forged another note, of the same date and about the same amount, with the name of the same E. as witness, but with a different person as maker; excluded); 1897, Redding v. Redding's Est., 69 Vt. 500, 38 Atl. 230 (other forgeries, not admitted to show the commission of the one in question);

Virginia: 1827, Finn v. Com., 5 Rand. 701, 709 (efforts of the accused to procure counterfeit money, expressed intentions to go where it could be got, and to cultivate the acquaintance of a counterfeiter, admitted as showing a scienter); 1830, Martin v. Com., 2 Leigh 745 (counterfeit uttering; uttering another note of a different amount, on a bank in the same State, admitted); Spencer v. Com., 2 Leigh 751, 756 (other forged notes, admitted); 1834, Hendrick's Case, 5 Leigh 769, 773, 776 (uttering a consistency. The falsification of documents in other frauds than forging and counterfeiting is dealt with elsewhere (post, § 341).

310. Evidence of Knowledge; (1) Other Utterings. The principle here applicable (ante, § 301) is that a former utterance is likely to have resulted in a questioning of the false article by the person to whom it was presented, and thus the attention of the defendant would have been called to its suspicious nature. The former utterance is thus relevant as showing that the defendant thereby probably acquired the knowledge charged.

Two questions here arise, as indicated by the general principle for evidencing Knowledge 'a priori' (ante, § 301): (1) Is the fact of a prior successful utterance likely to have given warning of the article's false character? Does it not rather show that no such warning was in fact received? In some of the cases it clearly appears that the defendant did receive such notice through an unsuccessful attempt,[1] or that his conduct betrayed such knowledge,[2] and in one ruling it is intimated that the prior uttering must have been an unsuccessful one.[3] Nevertheless no such requirement is laid down in the remaining rulings. One way to explain this is to suppose that the rulings proceeded from the point of view of Intent, for which purpose (post, § 312) the mere fact of uttering suffices; but this is incorrect, because in other aspects the Knowledge principle is consistently applied. The truth seems to be that though the single fact of successful utterance is not likely to have resulted in warning at that precise occasion, yet the person receiving the money or paper would probably ultimately have discovered its falsity or have had it returned to himself by some later transferee, and would then have notified the defendant if he could be found; and thus, except in infrequent cases, the chances of the defendant's receiving warning after even a successful utterance are appreciable and become very great with each additional utterance. (2) Even assuming that through the prior occasion a warning came to the defendant, would the warning about that piece of paper or money have involved a fair warning about the one charged, unless the two were of a similar sort? All Courts answer this in the negative, and require that the former article have some similarity to the one in question; for otherwise there is no probability of knowledge having been thereby received.[4] But, naturally, no general fixed rule can be laid down to determine what similarity should forged check; the fact admitted, to prove "guilty knowledge", of uttering forged checks on other banks on the day after);

West Virginia: 1914, First National Bank of Pennsboro v. Barker, 75 W. Va. 244, 83 S. E. 893 (alleged forgery of notes by the payee; his "frequent and general use of the names of his neighbors, without their knowledge or authority, as a means of securing money" by forgery, etc., admitted; a sensible and liberal decision):
Washington: 1922, State v. Weir, — Wash. —, 203 Pac. 953 (uttering forged check; issuing other checks on no funds, excluded);
Wisconsin: 1859, State v. Morton, 8 Wis. 352 (possession with intent; evidence to show scienter not stated; but evidence for the defendant that he had examined a "counterfeit-detector", admitted).

§ 310. [1] R. v. Forster, Eng.
[2] R. v. Phillips, Eng.
[3] State v. Smith, Conn.
[4] As well set forth in U. S. v. Roudenbush, U. S.

be required. The rulings exhibit views of all degrees of liberality and narrowness.[5]

§ 311. Same: (2) Other Possession. The possession of other forged or counterfeit articles operates in a different way to show Knowledge. The mere fact of possession has in itself no force for this purpose, though it may be relevant to show Intent (post, § 312). But the possession may involve conduct betraying a knowledge of the falsity of the article, — as where counterfeit coins are separately wrapped in paper [1] or counterfeit paper is kept secreted,[2] or tools are also found; [3] and thus the prior knowledge applies equally to the article in question. Here, moreover, similarity of the article would probably be immaterial, for the concealment indicates a general criminal knowledge.

§ 312. Evidence of Intent: (1) Other Utterings. The principle here applicable (ante, § 302) proceeds merely upon the doctrine of chances; it does not attempt to show knowledge or any other possible element of Intent; but it endeavors to negative inadvertence and any other innocent explanation. It argues that the oftener a like act has been done, the less probable it is that it could have been done innocently.[1] (a) It is therefore immaterial whether the other attempt to utter was unsuccessful, or whether it resulted in notice to the utterer; it is the bare fact of the uttering, or of the attempt to utter, that is evidential. (b) As to the similarity of the article uttered, it follows that the act as a whole must be like the act charged; so that the test is here in general the same as when it is desired to show Knowledge (ante, § 310). No effort seems to have been made to define more closely the similarity to be required; [2] but at least it seems clear that the specific principle applicable to evidence of Knowledge — a similarity such as would have warned the utterer of the falsity of the article in question (ante, § 310) — has no application here.

§ 313. Same: (2) Other Possession. The principle here operates precisely in the same way, — not as tending to show a probable warning, but as negativing, by repetition of instances, the possibility of innocent explanation.[1] The practical difference between the use of such facts to show Knowledge and

[5] R. v. Millard, R. v. Sunderland, R. v. Hodgson, R. v. Kirkwood, R. v. Martin, R. v. Phillips, R. v. Ball, R. v. Forster, Eng.; Stalker v. State, Conn.; State v. Saunders, Ia.; Lindsey v. State, Oh.; Martin v. Com., Va.; State v. Twitty, N. C.; U. S. v. Doebler, U. S.

§ 311. [1] R. v. Jarvis, Eng.

[2] State v. Hess, Oh.

[3] State v. Antonio, S. C.

§ 312. [1] 1887, Peckham, J., in People v. Sharp, 107 N. Y. 467, 14 N. E. 319 ("A man might think the money he passed was good, and he might be mistaken once or even twice; but the presumption of mistake lessens with every repetition of the act of passing money really counterfeit"); see also R. v. Francis, quoted ante, § 302.

[2] See the cases cited ante, § 309.

§ 313. [1] 1829, State v. Houston, 1 Bail. S. C. 300 ("His having a number of others of the same description is evidence of a general guilty purpose, of which the act under consideration is only a part; one may by accident come into the possession of a single counterfeit note or coin, but when he is possessed of many or passes many, it must be attributed to something more than accident"); 1853, Thurman, J., in Farrer v. State, 2 Oh. St. 73 ("The best evidence of this scienter . . . is proof that the accused had more spurious money in his possession than would be likely to come into the hands of an honest man in the ordinary course of business").

to show Intent is that in the former case (ante, § 311) something more than possession is theoretically necessary, while here the mere fact of possession is evidential.[2] The difference is also brought out by this, that another possession after the act charged would be evidential of Intent,[3] while it could in no way be evidential of anterior Knowledge.

§ 314. The foregoing Principles Compared. It is thus seen that the principles to be followed in evidencing Knowledge and Intent differ to some extent at certain points, — each one being in some respects more exacting, in some more lax, in its requirements than the other. Moreover, the Courts seem at some times to have the one principle in view, at some times the other. Which of the two is to control? Neither; and both. The truth is that Intent in general, as well as Knowledge in particular, is in this class of offences always open to be proved; that either object, or both, may be aimed at; but that the evidence should be appropriate to the purpose it is aimed at. The confusion of precedents seems to have come from instinctive perception of the requirements of one or the other of the principles, accompanied by a failure to observe that there were in reality two principles equally available. Every piece of evidence offered in the present connection has these two avenues of entrance, and its right to enter by either, on the general principle of Multiple Admissibility (ante, § 13), should be liberally construed.

§ 315. Evidence of Design or System. Where the act itself (forging, uttering, or the like) is disputed, and the resort of proof is to a plan or system as tending to show the doing of the act, the prior acts offered must be something more than an individual instance or two; they must be so connected by common features as to suggest a System or Plan (ante, § 304). (1) This sort of evidence has not always been intelligently treated by the Courts. It has occasionally been received; [1] it has occasionally been properly rejected; [2] but there are other rejections which cannot be supported,[3] and still others which can only be described as ridiculous and tending to dishonor our law of Evidence.[4] (2) Evidence amounting to proof of System or Design may of course be employed also where the act is not disputed, and the Intent alone (ante, § 312) is in issue; [5] the evidence here being merely stronger than is absolutely essential. But it would be erroneous to require such a systematic connection where proof of Intent alone is desired.

§ 316. Time of other Acts. (1) Whether subsequent acts of uttering should be admitted was in England at one time doubted; [1] but the doubt was afterwards solved in favor of admission,[2] and does not seem in this

[2] See for example the cases in England and Massachusetts.

[3] As in Com. v. Price, Mass.

§ 315. [1] Roupell v. Haws, Eng.; Blalock v. Randall, Ill.; Card v. State, Ind.; Carver v. People, Mich.

[2] Viney v. Brass, Balcetti v. Serani, Eng.

[3] Graft v. Lord Bertie, Eng.; Franklin v. Franklin, Tenn.; Redding v. Redding's Est., Vt.

[4] Dodge v. Haskell, Me.; Costelo v. Crowell, Mass.; Keith v. Taylor, Vt.

[5] Com. v. White, Mass.; Finn v. Com., Va.

§ 316. [1] R. v. Taverner, R. v. Smith.

[2] R. v. Forster.

country to have received any support.[3] Subsequent possession is equally admissible.[4] This result emphasizes the difference between evidencing Knowledge and evidencing Intent; for the subsequent uttering could of course result in no warning which should show Knowledge at the anterior time charged; while, in evidencing Intent, it is the repetition of instances that tends to negative innocence in particular instances, and thus it is immaterial whether the instances are found occurring before or after the act charged. (2) The length of time over which we may range in search of evidential instances is obviously determinable by no fixed rule. The precedents illustrate various lengths of time.[5] The discretion of the trial Court should here control.[6]

§ 317. Sundry Limitations. (1) The falsity of the other articles (forged or counterfeit) uttered or possessed must of course be shown.[1] But the defendant's knowledge of their falsity need not be shown.[2] The very kernel of the principle (either of Knowledge or of Intent) is that the fact of the uttering tends, in one way or another, to show the defendant's knowledge at the time in issue, either by the probable warning received or by the improbability of innocent intent in repeated instances; and the assumption throughout is that the bare fact of utterance tends to show this. (2) A possession or utterance by a co-conspirator, as making the defendant equally responsible if the other person was acting in connection with the defendant, involves a different principle from the present.[3] (3) Whether the contents and the uttering of another false article may be evidenced by the defendant's admission is a question of the rule requiring the production of an original (post, §§ 1205, 1255). (4) Whether the defendant's acquittal of a former forgery prevents the use of the former document for the present purpose, when its forgery is duly evidenced, is answered in the negative;[4] because the acquittal may have been due to the defendant's then ignorance of the falsity, or to lack of sufficient evidence of the falsity; and for the present purpose, its falsity is the only material fact.

No further limitations of a general nature have been proposed.

[3] People v. Frank, Cal.; Thomas v. State, n. d.; State v. Mix, Mo.; Peck v. State, Tenn.; Hendrick's Case, Va.

[4] Com. v. Price, Mass.

[5] R. v. Wylie, R. v. Hough, R. v. Ball, R. v. Millard, Eng.; State v. Smith, Stalker v. State, Conn.; People v. Frank, Cal.

[6] Distinguish the question of criminal pleading whether, as the act charged, any criminal act may be proved as of a time not specified in the indictment; this is sometimes governed by a statute, for the present class of cases; e.g., Me. Pub. St. 1883, c. 120, § 8.

§ 317. [1] R. v. Forbes, Eng.; People v. Whiteman, Cal.; Peck v. State, Tenn.

[2] Com. v. Bigelow, Mass., requires this; but the doctrine is not repeated in later rulings.

[3] 1827, U. S. v. Craig, 4 Wash. C. C. 729 (parts of the tools were found in other persons' possession, shown to be connected with the defendant in their operations).

[4] 1865, People v. Frank, 28 Cal. 507 (forgery of a draft; another draft admitted to show guilty knowledge, though defendant had been tried and acquitted on the charge of forging it; leading opinion, per Sanderson, C. J.); 1852, McCartney v. State, 3 Ind. 353 (forgery; similar to People v. Frank); 1881, Bell v. State, 57 Md. 108, 116 (forgery; similar to People v. Frank); 1838, State v. Robinson, 16 N. J. L. 507 (cited post, § 319, n. 1). 1829, State v. Houston, 1 Bail. S. C. 300 (uttering a forged note; similar to People v. Frank);

3. False Pretences or Representations

§ 321. General Principle; State of the Law in the Various Jurisdictions. The utterance of forged paper or counterfeit money is simply one species of false representation, — a representation in conduct instead of in words. Thus, the general principles of evidencing Knowledge, Intent, and Design, as examined for the preceding topic, apply equally to the present topic. It will be here necessary only to call attention to the specific application of those principles (ante, §§ 301–304). The precedents in the various jurisdictions exhibit the application of the ensuing distinctions with more or less consistency, and concern both civil and criminal cases.[1]

§ 321. [1] ENGLAND: 1702, Hathaway's Trial, 14 How. St. Tr. 664 (cheating by pretending to be bewitched by one Sarah M., so that he fasted, went into a trance, etc., through her bewitching; the popular belief was that the sorcery was true, for many people had seen him fasting for twelve weeks; to show that the fasting was a fraud, in that he secretly took food, evidence to that effect was offered covering the last two weeks of it, which, however, fell after the date of the information charging him, and was therefore objected to; L. C. J. Holt: "It is an evidence of his cheating since that time, and that out of the information [i.e. not charged]; but it is an evidence also to prove that his pretended fasting before was a mere deceit; for he then pretended to have fasted ten weeks before he came hither, and after pretends to continue fasting in the same manner; if that be proved to be a fraud, it is strongly to be inferred that this pretended fasting before was so too"); 1808, R. v. Roberts, 1 Camp. 399 (conspiracy by fraudulent representations to obtain goods; the defendants had held themselves out as wealthy in their mode of life; representations to that effect to another tradesman were admitted); 1824, R. v. Whitehead, 1 C. & P. 67 (cheating by false representations as to B.'s property; B.'s representations to the defendant, similar to those of the defendant to others, were admitted to show that the defendant was misled by B.; this is really a mode of proving good faith, under § 256, ante); 1831, Irving v. Motly, 7 Bing. 543, semble (other purchases by representations under similar circumstances, admitted to show fraud); 1856, R. v. Roebuck, D. & B. 24, before all the judges but one (obtaining money by offering to pawn a chain of false silver; the fact admitted of a subsequent offering of a similar false chain, and of the possession of twenty-six similar false chains); 1860, R. v. Holt, 8 Cox Cr. 411 (before five judges; the fact of another unauthorized obtaining of money near the same time, not admitted to show intent); 1864, R. v. Fuidge, L. & C. 390 (false pretences; the fact of the false obtaining of a similar article three days later was rejected, no reasons being given); 1871, R. v. Stenson, 12 Cox Cr. 111 (false pretences by causing an order to be given to A., a bookseller, purporting falsely to be from S., a lady of quality, for a book sold by the defendant; the fact of the sending of other false orders of the same sort was received to show the intent); 1874, R. v. Francis, L. R. 2 C. C. R. 128 (to show guilty knowledge of the falsity of a ring offered for pawn as a diamond, the fact was received of the offering, shortly before, to other pawnbrokers, of a false gold chain and of other alleged diamond rings; in one of the instances the broker told the accused that the diamond was not genuine; quoted ante, § 302); 1875, R. v. Saunders, 1 Q. B. D. 19 (false pretences by advertising to give work and requesting money by mail to play for the preliminary instructions; the fact received, to show intent, of a number of other persons having been induced afterwards by him in the same way to forward money on such advertisements); 1878, Blake v. Assurance Soc., 14 Cox Cr. 246, L. R. 4 C. P. D. 94 (action to recover a premium obtained by false pretences; H. agreed to lend money to the plaintiff, on condition that he insure his life with the defendant; the defendant insured his life, but H. failed to make the loan; to show that the defendant was in fraudulent collusion with H. for the purpose of obtaining premiums, the fact was admitted of similar policies issued and similar defaults of H. with reference to other persons, the person H. being a mere figurehead or fictitious person; quoted ante, § 302); 1899, R. v. Rhodes, 1 Q. B. 77 (false pretences in obtaining eggs; the obtaining of eggs from other persons by similar pretences shortly afterwards, admitted as "part of a scheme to fraud"); 1900, R. v. Ollis, 2 Q. B. 758, 764 (falsely passing a check upon no funds; similar passing of a check on the same bank to another person about the same time, held admissible, though the defendant had been acquitted of the latter charge on a trial therefor; Bruce and Ridley, JJ., diss.); 1904, R. v. Wyatt, 20 Cox Cr. 462, 1 K. B. 188 (obtaining credit for lodging, etc., under false pretences to W.; the facts that the accused had left other persons' apartments while in debt to them were admitted to show a fraudulent system and to negative mistake or honest

In a false representation or pretence, there is involved — alike in all the varieties of offence, and in most civil cases as well as in criminal cases — the motive); 1905, R. v. Smith, 20 Cox Cr. 804 (obtaining credit on false pretences as agent of M., the defendant alleging that he had merely given M.'s name as a reference, his representations to another vendor a few days later that he was agent of M. were admitted; R. v. Wyatt commented on; R. v. Holt discredited); 1909, Fisher's Case, 3 Cr. App. 176 (obtaining a car, pony, and harness by false pretences; an instance of obtaining a horse by false pretences, held admissible, but instances of obtaining on credit fraudulently fodder and provender, excluded; this ruling, quite unsound on principle, is like a revival of the old-fashioned vain subtleties; indeed, it is a stricter ruling than would have been rendered a century ago; on appeal, [1910] 1 K. B. 149, reversed, on the correct ground that the evidence was of other false representations not sufficiently similar to show a system of swindling by the same method); 1910, R. v. Ellis, 2 K. B. 747 (false pretences by an art-dealer in misstating the purchase-cost of an article; two other false pretences to the same buyer, during the preceding nine years, as to the genuineness of articles sold, held not admissible); 1910, Charlesworth's Case, 4 Cr. App. 167 (false pretences as to a fortune; other pretences to another person two years before, admitted on special grounds); 1911, Edinburgh Life Ass. Co. v. Y., 1 Dr. R. 306 (action to set aside a policy issued on fraudulent representations of a peculiar sort; similar representations made in obtaining other policies from the same and other companies, held admissible, but only after amendment of the plaintiff's pleadings); 1915, R. v. Kurasch, 2 K. B. 749 (false pretences; appellant taking the stand was cross-examined as to living with Mrs. D., his employer, as her husband; held admissible, under par. (f) of § 1 of the Act of 1898, quoted ante, § 194 a, being relevant to the circumstances of the case; following R. v. Rodley and R. v. Fisher);

CANADA: 1919, Larson v. Boyd, 46 D. L. R. 126, Can. S. C. (false representations in a land sale); 1919, R. v. Labrie, 60 D. L. R. 582, Que. (false pretences); 1897, Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Jonah, 1 N. Br. Eq. 482 (insurance policy; prior and subsequent similar frauds, admissible); 1889, Kidd v. Henderson, 22 N. Sc. 57 (false representations inducing a contract; the plaintiff's similar false representations to others, admitted, by two judges, and semble, by all).

UNITED STATES: Federal: 1859, Castle v. Bullard, 23 How. 172, 186 (fraudulent sale by an agent to an insolvent purchaser; similar connivance in purchases by the same person from others than the plaintiff, about the same time, admitted to show intent); 1868, Lincoln v. Claflin, 7 Wall. 132, 138 (case for obtaining goods by false representations as to assets; "other similar fraudulent transactions of the same parties with others, made about the same time", admitted to show intent); 1871, Butler v. Watkins, 13 Wall. 456, 464 (deceit; to show intent, the plaintiff was allowed to show "similar conduct towards another, at about the same time, and in relation to a like subject", here, the business of selling the plaintiff's goods for him); 1882, U. S. v. Snyder, 4 McCr. 618, 621 (false return as postmaster, in order fraudulently to increase his compensation, during the quarter ending Dec. 31, 1880; evidence admitted of similar false returns before and after that time, to show intent); 1894, Mudsill M. Co. v. Watrous, 9 C. C. A. 415, 61 Fed. 163, 172, 179 (fraudulent salting of ore-samples to induce a purchase; the salting of samples in prior negotiations of purchase with other persons, admitted as showing a plan to tamper with the samples; the opinion is one of the best illustrations of the principles of this chapter); 1896, Penn M. L. Ins. Co. v. Mechanics' S. B. & T. Co., 19 C. C. A. 286, 72 Fed. 413, 421 (whether a false answer in an insurance application was made with intent to deceive; similar false answers in applications for other policies, admitted); 1898, Spurr v. U. S., 31 C. C. A. 202, 87 Fed. 701 (false certification of checks by a bank president knowing the account to be deficient; prior approval of illegal stock-speculations of the cashier by the defendant, admitted to show intent); 1899, Bacon v. U. S., 38 C. C. A. 37, 97 Fed. 35 (false report to comptroller by president of national bank; previous false reports, admitted to show intent); 1911, Dyer v. U. S., 108 C. C. A. 478, 186 Fed. 614 (using the mails to defraud, by false representations as to medical skill and eminence; the prosecution was not allowed to show that the defendant had been three times convicted of various crimes in the U. S. and other times in England; either counsel or court missed the real point of objective here for obviously the prosecution, in showing the gross falsity of the representations that the defendant was a "noted expert" and "one of the greatest living specialists" in certain diseases, was entitled to show the defendant's life-events to be of the opposite character); 1916, Shea v. U. S., 6th C. C. A., 236 Fed. 97 (conspiracy to defraud by fake betting on horse races; a prior instance by the same parties with another victim, admitted, though using slightly different methods, but another instance, similar only in being a confidence game, was excluded); 1920, MacKnight v. U. S., 1st C. C. A., 263 Fed. 832, 838 (false pretences based on forged deeds caused to be recorded; similar false records in another country, admitted);

Alabama: 1897, Martin v. Smith, 116 Ala. 639, 22 So. 917 (contents of paper signed; false representations as to a similar paper shortly before general notion of Intent to deceive. Within this, and usually decisive in showing it (but capable, as already noted, of being evidenced by a separate excluded on the facts); 1899, Bomar v. Rosser, 123 Ala. 641, 26 So. 510 (similar representations, to one other person, about the same patent, not admitted to show the making of representations in issue);

Arkansas: 1898, White v. B. & F. G. Co., 65 Ark. 278, 45 S. W. 1060 (fraudulent purchase; other purchases about the same time, admissible only when connected by a common purpose); 1905, Johnson v. State, 75 Ark. 427, 88 S. W. 905 (conspiracy to cheat by betting on a race; similar acts, including subsequent ones, admitted to show intent);

Columbia (District): 1913, Partridge v. U. S., 39 D. C. App. 571 (false pretences as to a stock guaranty; similar false representation to another person, admitted on the facts);

Connecticut: 1805, Gardner v. Preston, 2 Root 205 (case for fraudulent representations as to T.'s solvency; similar representations to other merchants in the same town about the same time, admitted, as showing a combination to defraud; here, however, the combination was alleged in the declaration); 1899, Elwell v. Russell, 71 Conn. 462, 42 Atl. 862 (fraudulent representations as to a mortgage; subsequent conduct, admitted); 1905, Malley Co. v. Button, 77 Conn. 571, 60 Atl. 125 (goods procured by false representations; other similar representations to other stores, excluded);

Illinois: 1871, Allin v. Millison, 72 Ill. 201 (sale of a patent-right; the fact admitted that other purchasers had complained to the seller of the patent's worthlessness); 1902, Du Bois v. People, 200 Ill. 157, 65 N. E. 658 (similar transactions in a "confidence game" with other persons about the same time, admitted to show guilty knowledge); 1909, People v. Weil, 243 Ill. 208, 90 N. E. 731 (confidence game, here by borrowing money through impersonation; prior use of the same trick on another person, admitted); 1914, People v. Bertsche, 265 Ill. 272, 106 N. E. 823 (confidence game; other transactions with the same victim, admitted "to show guilty knowledge and intent"); 1920, People v. Emmel, 292 Ill. 477, 127 N. E. 53 (confidence game; a transaction three years before, excluded on the facts); 1921, People v. Shaw, 300 Ill. 451, 133 N. E. 208 (confidence game, by bogus express money-orders; similar acts in the same town the same evening, admitted, to show knowledge and intent); 1921, People v. Ullrich, 299 Ill. 250, 132 N. E. 488 (confidence game; other similar acts, here excluded because not sufficiently evidenced);

Indiana: 1882, Strong v. State, 86 Ind. 278 (false pretences to be a travelling Mason in distress; the fact excluded of a former false pretence of the same sort in an adjoining State a few years before, because such evidence is limited to cases where the act charged does not on the evidence carry with it "an evident implication of a criminal intent", as it did here; Elliott, J., diss.); 1897, Crum v. State, 148 Ind. 401, 47 N. E. 833 (larceny by trick, in furnishing counterfeit money; the fact of "other like crimes about the time", admitted to show intent; overruling Strong v. State, supra);

Iowa: 1882, State v. Rivers, 58 Ia. 102, 108, 12 N. W. 117 (false representations to a bank that a mortgage was a first lien; the defendant's bank account before and after the transaction, and other matters, admitted as indicating his intent); 1888, State v. Jamison, 74 Ia. 613, 617, 38 N. W. 509 (false representation of the contents of a mortgage in obtaining a signature to it; a prior similar pretence to the same person with a similar instrument, admitted); 1897, State v. Brady, 100 Ia. 191, 69 N. W. 290 (obtaining money by false warrants; former false warrants, admitted to show intent and also to show a systematic scheme of fraud); 1901, State v. Dexter, 115 Ia. 678, 87 N. W. 417 (obtaining property under false pretences; purchases from others on similar representations, admitted); 1902, State v. Soper, 118 Ia. 1, 91 N. W. 774 (false pretences; similar representations to others about the same time, admitted to show intent); 1905, State v. Seligman, 127 Ia. 415, 103 N. W. 357 (false pretences as life insurance agent; other similar transactions with other persons, admitted to show intent); 1906, Elbert v. Mitchell, 131 Ia. 598, 109 N. W. 181 (fraudulent representation as to hogs sold; similar false representations to other persons, admitted for the plaintiff to show intent or scienter, but similar honest transactions with others, not admitted for the defendant); 1908, Gibson v. Seney, 138 Ia. 383, 116 N. W. 325 (other false representations to other persons, as to a right of way, admitted); 1922, Farmers' Nat'l Bank v. Pratt, — Ia. —, 186 N. W. 924 (stock subscriptions; similar representations to other persons, admitted);

Kansas: 1906, State v. Briggs, 74 Kan. 377, 86 Pac. 447 (false pretences as to real estate loans; similar pretences to other persons, admitted); 1912, People's Bank v. Reid, 86 Kan. 245, 120 Pac. 339 (fraudulent notes; similar transactions with other persons, admitted);

Kentucky: 1897, Roche v. Coleman, 19 Ky. L. Rep. 985, 42 S. W. 739 (false representations as to shares of stock; similar representations to other persons, not received to show the fact of making);

Maine: 1826, McKenney v. Dingley, 4 Me. 172 (similar pretences as to solvency, to persons in the same town, about the same time, admitted); semble, that a general plan must have existed); Seaver v. Dingley, 4 Me. 306, 320 (similar, but more limited, evidence received; principle), is the element of Knowledge. Lastly, in the (here unusual) case where the act of making the representations is disputed, and resort is

(and no plan required, semble); 1840, Hawes v. Dingley, 17 Me. 341 (similar case; like fraudulent purchases of others about the same time, admissible; the testimony said "in most cases" to have involved a formed design thus to defraud, but such design apparently not held necessary);

Maryland: 1897, Carnell v. State, 85 Md. 1, 36 Atl. 117 (false representations as to money in bank; similar pretences as to such money, to another person, about the same time, admitted, first, to show guilty knowledge, and, secondly, to show that he had "devised a scheme to obtain goods wherever and from whomsoever he could" by such representations);

Massachusetts: 1832, Rowley v. Bigelow, 12 Pick. 307, 311 (trover for goods bought with fraudulent intent not to pay; the fact of similar purchases of like articles about the same time, admitted to show the fraudulent purpose); 1842, Com. v. Stone, 4 Metc. 43, 47 (cheating by knowingly passing the bill of a broken bank; evidence admitted of the passing of other similar bills, to show the scienter); 1848, Com. v. Eastman, 1 Cush. 189, 195 (conspiring to obtain goods from S. under pretence of buying and with intent not to pay; purchases from nine other persons under the same circumstances of insolvency, etc., admitted to show intent); 1857, Wiggin v. Day, 9 Gray 97 (replevin for goods obtained with fraudulent intent not to pay; evidence received of purchases of large amounts of personalty from others at the same time of insolvency, and their secreting); 1872, Jordan v. Osgood, 109 Mass. 457 (replevin for goods bought with intent not to pay, and bought under false pretences as to solvency; the fact was rejected of similar false representations to other persons at or about the same time; Morton, J.: "The transaction proposed to be proved for the purpose of showing the fraud which is the subject of controversy must be shown by some evidence, direct or circumstantial, to be so connected with it as to make it apparent that the defendant had a common purpose in both; but if the transaction is distinct and with no connection of design, it is not admissible. . . . The mere fact [in this case] that an insolvent trader makes misstatements as to his pecuniary condition does not justify the inference that he has formed a general scheme to cheat", and there being no other evidence of it, "the evidence of these distinct transactions therefore was not competent"; this opinion was rendered in full view of the preceding line of cases, and of those dealing with transfers in fraud of creditors (post, § 333), and was apparently intended to overrule the above line of cases, as well as those cited under § 333 except Williams v. Robbins, which it rehabilitates and makes law; the result is to apply the rigorous System rule (ante, § 304) even where the object is merely to show Intent, a result wholly unsound, as already suggested (ante, § 320), and out of harmony with the rule in other analogous situations; but this misapplication of the System rule in Massachusetts does not seem to extend beyond the present topic of false pretences, that of fraudulent transfers (post, § 333), and perhaps that of embezzlement (post, § 331); 1875, Haskins v. Warren, 115 Mass. 523, 538 (goods purchased fraudulently; the fact of other purchases admitted under the rule of Jordan v. Osgood); 1874, Com. v. Coe, 115 Mass. 481, 501 (cheating by the false pretence that a certificate of stock was genuine; the fact admitted of the use of other false certificates about the same time, to negative "casual and accidental" possession, and "to show guilty knowledge"); 1882, Com. v. Jackson, 132 Mass. 16 (false pretences as to the soundness of a horse; the fact of three similar false warranties in the preceding two months, rejected, as not indicating any single scheme or plan, "any more than the various robberies of a thief"); 1886, Com. v. Blood, 141 Mass. 575, 6 N. E. 769 (false pretences about the same article to other persons, admitted as parts of one fundamental scheme); 1902, Com. v. Lubinsky, 182 Mass. 142, 64 N. E. 966 (obtaining of goods from other persons about the same time by the same pretences, admitted to show intent: the Court still employs the language of the narrower rule as to a "common scheme to defraud"); 1905, Com. v. Clancy, 187 Mass. 191, 72 N. E. 842 (false pretences concerning a business sold; other similar transactions admitted, on the theory of conspiracy; Com. v. Jackson distinguished);

Michigan: 1879, Shipman v. Seymour, 40 Mich. 274, 280 (other purchases on similar false representations of solvency, two months before, admitted); 1880, Cook v. Perry, 43 Mich. 623, 626, 5 N. W. 1054 (sale; subsequent similar representations about the same property, made to a decoy, admitted); 1882, People v. Henssler, 48 Mich. 49, 52, 11 N. W. 804 (procuring indorsement to a note; similar previous false representations about other notes to the same person, admitted); 1886, People v. Wakely, 62 Mich. 297, 303, 28 N. W. 871 (sale; "previous acts of the same kind", admissible); 1887, Ross v. Miner, 67 Mich. 410, 35 N. W. 60 (obtaining goods by false pretences as to credit, etc.; purchases from others, and "the whole business" of the defendant, admitted); 1888, Stubly v. Beachboard, 68 Mich. 401, 422, 36 N. W. 192 (false representations as to encumbrances on the same lands to other parties, about the same time, admitted); 1905, People v. Hoffman, 142 Mich. 531, 105 had to a system or design to prove it, the stricter test applicable to proving Design may be invoked.

N. W. 838 (obtaining money by false vouchers for inquests; similar false vouchers, admitted to show knowledge and intent); 1919, People v. Rice, 206 Mich. 644, 173 N. W. 495 (false pretences; similar transactions before and after, admitted);
Minnesota: 1898, State v. Wilson, 72 Minn. 522, 75 N. W. 715 (obtaining money by personating an officer; that the defendant "had been engaged in practising like cheats", admitted to show intent); 1899, State v. Southall, 77 Minn. 296, 79 N. W. 1007 (false pretences by circulating "time checks"; circulation of others of the same tenor, admitted to show knowledge and intent); 1920, State v. Friedman, 146 Minn. 373, 178 N. W. 895 (obtaining money from M. by a swindling device; the use of an analogous swindling device on H. shortly afterwards, admitted); 1921, Albrecht v. Rathai, 150 Minn. 256, 185 N. W. 259 (false representations as to contents of a note given for a farm);
Missouri: 1892, State v. Jackson, 112 Mo. 585, 588, 20 S. W. 674 ("confidence game"; similar prior obtaining of money from another person three months before, admitted); 1897, Davis v. Vories, 141 Mo. 234, 42 S. W. 707 (fraudulent representations as to a copyright; similar representations, held admissible); 1898, State v. Turley, 142 Mo. 403, 44 S. W. 267 (similar representations to other merchants about the same time, admissible to show intent); 1898, State v. Wilson, 143 Mo. 334, 44 S. W. 722 (fraudulently obtaining and disposing of goods; similar transactions with other sellers on the same day in the same city, admitted to show intent); 1904, State v. Boatwright, 182 Mo. 33, 81 S. W. 450 (false pretences by a fake race; other fake races, etc., more than a year before, excluded); 1907, State v. Roberts, 201 Mo. 702, 100 S. W. 484 (fraud in exchange of lands for goods; similar fraud on another person about the same time, admitted to show intent); 1913, State v. Foley, 247 Mo. 607, 153 S. W. 1010 (false pretences; other similar frauds, admitted);
Nebraska: 1887, Cowan v. State, 22 Nebr. 519, 524, 35 N. W. 405 (obtaining goods by false pretences; such acts "in two other cases, entirely distinct and separate" from that at bar, excluded); 1896, Johnson v. Gulick, 46 Nebr. 817, 65 N. W. 883 (similar representations to other persons, not admitted to show the fact of making those charged); 1898, Morgan v. State, 56 Nebr. 696, 77 N. W. 64 (similar representations to another person shortly before, excluded); 1903, Barbar v. Martin, 67 Nebr. 445, 93 N. W. 722 (fraudulent representations to another stockholder, admitted);
Nevada: 1900, Swinney v. Patterson, 25 Nev. 411, 62 Pac. 1 (fraudulent representations in obtaining a note; similar ones made about the same time to other persons in the same place, admitted to show intent);
New Hampshire: 1839, Bradley v. Obear, 10 N.H. 477 (replevin for a horse bought by false representations of solvency; the fact received of the purchase of another horse about the same time by "similar fraudulent representations"); 1852, Angier v. Ash, 26 N. H. 109 ("acts or declarations evincing a fraudulent intention or purpose, if connected in point of time", admissible); 1868, State v. Call, 48 N. H. 126, 132 (cheating by false statements as to solvency; the mortgaging of most of his personalty within three days thereafter, to a third person, admitted to show intent); 1873, Hovey v. Grant, 52 N. H. 569 (trover for goods bought with intent not to pay; purchases from other persons about the same time while insolvent, admitted; the limits of time being a question of fact in each case);
New Jersey: 1907, Crosby v. Wells, 73 N. J. L. 790, 67 Atl. 295, 301 (fraud as a defence to an investment-contract; similar false representations as to the same investment, made to other persons, admitted);
New York: 1841, Cary v. Hotaling, 1 Johns. 311, 316 (purchase; similar representations to another person the day before, admitted to show intent); 1808, Allison v. Matthieu, 3 Johns. 235 (trover for goods obtained by false representations in buying furniture for L., said to be a rich foreigner, but really lacking in means and now absconded; the fact received, to show the intent, of similar representations about the same time to other persons); 1859, Hall v. Naylor, 18 N. Y. 588 (Comstock, J.: "K. & Co. concealed the fact of their insolvency, with a design of procuring the goods and not paying for them, it was a fraud which rendered the sale void if the plaintiff [seller] chose so to regard it. On the trial of such an issue, the 'quo animo' of the transaction is the fact to be arrived at: and it is therefore competent to show that the party accused was engaged in other similar frauds at or about the same time. The transactions must be so connected in point of time, and so similar in their other relations, that the same motive may reasonably be imputed to them all"; and accordingly evidence of a prior false representation not fraudulent was rejected); 1861, Hennequin v. Naylor, 24 N. Y. 139 (a case arising out of the same insolvency; this stricter rule was not applied, Hall v. Naylor not being cited, and mere prior purchases from others on the eve of suspension were admitted to show intent); 1864, Hathorne v. Hodges, 28 N. Y. 486, 489 (other purchases while insolvent, admitted in the same way); 1874, Bielschofsky v. People, 60 N. Y. 616 (false representations to obtain money; the same fraud on another person a day or two before, admitted; no cases cited); 1875, Weyman v. People, 62 N. Y. 623 (larceny by obtaining goods by false representations; the procuring of goods from others by the same means, about the same time, admitted, on the principle of Hall v. Naylor, that "the similarity in their leading features and characteristics justified the conclusion that they were pervaded and controlled by the same general intention"); 1880, People v. Shulman, 80 N. Y. 373, note (obtaining goods by false pretences; other such fraudulent obtainings, after and before, admitted; Hall v. Naylor's rule followed, that the transactions must have "some relation to or connection with the main transaction"); 1880, Mayer v. People, 80 N. Y. 364, 369, 372 (the same rule laid down, that the other acts, which may be either before or after the time in question, must show "a general purpose or scheme to obtain goods fraudulently", but the fact offered was merely of other false (i.e. incorrect) representations of solvency, and not of other fraudulent (i.e. knowingly false) representations, nor did the Court prescribe such a limitation); 1881, Shipply v. People, 86 N. Y. 376, 380 (larceny by false pretences; a "similar transaction" with another person, admitted, citing the last two cases); 1887, People v. Dimick, 107 N. Y. 13, 31, 14 N. E. 178 (representations as to insurance after knowledge of loss; other similar representations during the same season, as to other cargoes, admitted to show intent); 1897, People v. Peckens, 153 N. Y. 576, 47 N. E. 883 (larceny by false representations; transactions with other parties tending to show a fraudulent scheme to use the same devices, admissible, "provided the dealings are sufficiently connected in point of time and character to authorize an inference that the transaction was in pursuance of the same general purpose");

North Carolina: 1894, State v. Walton, 114 N. C. 783, 784, 18 S. E. 945 (false representations to a treasurer as to orders for money; other instances of the sort, admitted); 1897, State v. Durham, 121 N. C. 546, 28 S. E. 26 (similar representations to another person about the same time, admitted);

Ohio: 1878, U. S. Ins. Co. v. Wright, 3 Oh. St. 533 (fraudulent representations by an insurance agent; similar representations to others excluded, because not shown to be false nor known by him to be false); 1883, Tarbox v. State, 38 Oh. 581 (representations as to the breeding, etc., of two horses; "similar offences" shortly before, in another State, admitted to show knowledge);

Oklahoma: 1914, State v. Rule, 11 Okl. Cr. 237, 144 Pac. 807 (false official warrants; "other similar transactions under the same contract, whether before or afterwards", held admissible); 1921, Mathews v. State, — Okl. Cr. —, 198 Pac. 112 (false pretences; similar pretences to others, admitted on the circumstances);

Pennsylvania: 1868, Simons v. Vulcan Co., 61 Pa. 202, 204, 218 (assumpsit for money obtained by false representations in selling oil-lands; other prospectuses by the defendant, issued about the same time, admitted to show fraud); 1872, Com. v. Yerkes, Phila. Com. Pleas, 29 Leg. Intell. 60; 12 Cox Cr. 208, 215, 225, 226 (larceny and false pretences by obtaining a check from the City Treasurer for a purchase as agent for the sinking fund, never made in fact; the fact that upon similar previous transactions checks were thus given by the Treasurer on transactions to be perfected in the future, not received to show innocent intent; two Judges dissenting); 1893, Schofield v. Schiffer, 156 Pa. 65, 73, 27 Atl. 69 (similar representations by a debtor-buyer to third persons, admitted to show intent); 1896, White v. Rosenthal, 173 Pa. 175, 33 Atl. 1027 (action for deceit by false representations of solvency; a series of purchases admitted as indicating a scheme to obtain by fraud);

Rhode Island: 1902, State v. Letourneau, 24 R. I. 3, 51 Atl. 1048 (selling pills on false representations; similar sales to other persons after the sale charged, excluded; no authority cited);

Tennessee: 1870, Defreese v. State, 3 Heisk. 53, 62 (larceny by a fraudulent card trick; evidence admitted of other occasions when the defendant and his confederate used it to win money from other persons); 1891, Rafferty v. State, 91 Tenn. 655, 663, 16 S. W. 728 (representations as to loss by fire, made to obtain insurance money; evidence admitted of thirteen different claims of fire-loss by the defendant, within three years, in various cities, under different aliases, and of the similarity of the representations in those cases as to the articles lost; compare § 340, post);

Texas: 1920, Goree v. Uvalde Nat'l Bank, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 218 S. W. 620 (action on promissory notes other frauds by the bank's cashier, not admitted under the circumstances, to show that the amount of the defendant's note had been fraudulently altered);

Virginia: 1878, Trogdon's Case, 31 Gratt. 862, 870 (obtaining goods by false pretences; "similar representations about the same time to other persons", admitted);

Washington: 1896, State v. Bokien, 14 Wash. 403, 44 Pac. 889 (drawing a check knowingly on no funds; other such previous drawings excluded; a ruling clearly wrong; if any interim deposits had been made, it was for the defendant to make this explanation); 1906, State v. Oppenheimer, 41 Wash. 630, 84 Pac. 588 (obtaining money by false pretences; the obtaining from various other parties by similar false pretences, excluded, because not shown to be part of a scheme, following State v. Bokien and the unsound Massachusetts doctrine; it is a pity that this over-strict and unpractical rule should be approved instead of repudiated);

Wisconsin: 1903, Baker v. State, 120 Wis. 135, 97 N. W. 566 (false pretences; certain other

(1) Knowledge. Other former acts of a similar sort may in certain conditions show the likelihood of a warning being received (ante, § 301);[2] but this specific form of proof is rarely brought out clearly. No doubt with every prior occasion of the sort the probability grows that the prior promisees would have sought out and charged the defendant with the falsity of the representations; but this reasoning does not appear to be used by the Courts.

(2) Intent. The argument (ante, § 302) to the improbability of innocent intent from the repetition of similar acts is the apparently accepted ground for the use of this class of evidence. (a) As to the similarity of the other representations, no attempt has been made by the Courts to lay down a general test. The precedents illustrate a wide variety of ruling on this point.[3] A common-sense liberality is the best guide for decision. (b) As to the length of time over which the evidence should range, it is equally impossible to fix a general test; the circumstances of each case must determine.[4] Subsequent representations are equally admissible with prior ones;[5] because, on the principle of Intent (ante, § 316), it is the repetition of them that is significant, and a subsequent instance reduces the probability of innocence equally as well as a prior one. (c) Knowledge of the falsity of the other representations need not be shown;[6] for, if it could be shown, there would be an end of the proof, and practically the present question would never need to be discussed. It is the mere recurrence of similar incorrect (not necessarily knowingly false) representations which leads to the belief that they could not have been made innocently; we may assume that any given one might have been innocent, but cannot concede this when we notice the recurrence.

(3) Design. When the very act of making the representations is to be proved, and a system or design is to be argued from, the evidence is to be restricted by the rigorous rule applicable to that purpose (ante, § 304), i.e. there must be shown a connection of features, in all the instances, so strong as to indicate a system throughout them. What is to be noted is that occasionally a Court is found applying the same test where the doing of the act pretences and lies, excluded); 1904, Standard Mfg. Co. v. Slot, 121 Wis. 14, 98 N. W. 923 (contract; plea, false representations; similar representations to others, excluded, intent being immaterial); 1921, Industrial Coöp. Union v. Lewis, — Wis. —, 182 N. W. 861 (stipulation to consolidate actions, on a promissory note with plea of fraud; similar representations made at other time and place to one of the defendant's, held not admissible to show the fact of representations to defendant L.; unsound).

[2] R. v. Francis, Eng.; Allen v. Millison, Ill.; People v. Rice, Mich.; State v. Bokien, Wash.

[3] For example, Butler v. Watkins, U. S.; Tarbox v. State, Oh.; Simons v. Vulcan Co., Pa.

[4] 1880, Earl, J., in People v. Schulman, 80 N. Y. 373, note: ("It is obviously impossible to lay down any general rule limiting the time within which such transactions must have taken place. . . . Each case, as to the application of this rule, must depend largely upon its own circumstances, and not unfrequentiy the limit of them must rest entirely in the discretion of the judge presiding at the trial"); 1880, Mayer v. People, 80 N. Y. 364, 372 (approving the preceding).

[5] U. S. v. Snyder, U. S.; Hathaway's Trial, R. v. Saunders, Eng.; State v. Call, N. H.; People v. Shulman, N. Y.

[6] Jordan v. Osgood, Mass.; U. S. Ins. Co. v. Wright, Oh.; Hall v. Naylor, N. Y. Compare Mayer v. People, N. Y.

is not disputed, but the intent alone is in issue.[7] This is a wholly misplaced strictness, out of harmony with all other analogies, and resting on a confusion of Intent and System.

4. Knowing Possession or Receipt of Stolen Goods

§ 324. Other Possession of Stolen Goods; (1) Knowledge Principle. The act of possession is in this class of cases (except rarely) conceded, and the question is as to the criminal intent, and specifically, as to the knowledge accompanying the possession. In what way does the fact of possession of other stolen goods at other times throw light upon this knowledge or this intent?

(1) Knowledge Principle. From the point of view of the Knowledge principle the argument requires (ante, § 301) that the former possession be such as is likely to have led to a knowledge or a warning of the stolen character of those goods, and that such warning would have naturally warned the defendant also of the stolen character of the goods in question. (a) As to the first element, it may be assumed that the receipt of stolen goods is in itself always more or less likely to result in a warning, chiefly because the owner is apt to follow them up and reclaim them, but also in part because a purchase not made in the ordinary course of trade has often suspicious features about the vendor's offer. (b) As to the second element, the warning thus obtained can affect the subsequent receipt of other goods upon only one condition only, namely, that there is a similarity in the transactions, i.e. that the same person comes to dispose of the second article, or that the second article is of the same lot as the first. From these points of view, then, what are the essential limitations?

(a) The mere fact of possession would seem to be sufficient, as probably leading to a warning through the reclamation of the goods; and it is not necessary additionally to show that the receipt was accompanied by circumstances calculated in themselves to excite suspicion, or that the possession was so concealed as to show guilty knowledge. The latter features, however, are present in some of the precedents, though they do not seem to be treated as a requirement for every instance.[1] There are therefore three possible attitudes to take as to this element: The mere fact of possession suffices; or, The possession must have been obtained under suspicious circumstances; or, Neither of these suffices, and former knowing possession is always sufficient. The first view is that represented in most Courts in this country; the second is sometimes hinted at; the third is represented by R. v. Oddy, in England, — reached not so much on the above reasoning, as on the doctrine of auxiliary policy (ante, § 42), a doctrine which if rightly interpreted would exclude evidence of former possession under all conditions whatever.

[7] Hall v. Naylor, People v. Peckens, N. Y.; Com. v. Jackson, Mass.; see also the Maine cases. Of course, as stronger evidence of Intent, the prior acts may be so cumulated as to show a system, as in Carnell v. State, Md.; but it is one thing to allow such a system to be shown (which nobody would oppose) and quite another to require that it be shown.

§ 324. [1] E.g. R. v. Hinley, R. v. Primelt, Eng.; Lewis v. State, Kan.

(b) But it remains to be shown that such knowledge or warning would involve warning of the stolen character of the goods in question. In other words, there must be also shown a similarity in the transactions, either as to the person bringing the goods or as to their kind, such as would bring the former knowledge or warning to bear in the present instance. What circumstances constitute sufficient similarity is a matter about which no fixed rule can be laid down;[2] but it seems clear that this requirement in its general notion is essential upon the present principle. Moreover, it applies equally whether the proof is of former mere possession or of knowing possession;[3] because the possession is supposed merely to lead up to the inference of knowing possession (by element a, above), and when there is thus shown a knowing possession (directly or by this inference) it remains still to show that the former knowledge would have a bearing on the present knowledge, and it is just here that the similarity of the goods or the identity of their vendor is significant. Thus, even the former knowing possession of wholly different goods obtained from a different person could show nothing as to knowledge of the goods charged. From the point of view, then, of the Knowledge principle, it is necessary and sufficient to show (a) former receipt and possession (and, perhaps, under suspicious circumstances) (b) of goods similar as to the person bringing them or as to their kind or otherwise.

§ 325. Same: (2) Intent Principle. From the point of view of the Intent principle, the test of admission may be very different. The reasoning of this argument (ante, § 302) is that the recurrence of a like act lessens by each instance the possibility that a given instance could be the result of inadvertence, accident, or other innocent intent. Accordingly, the argument here is that the oftener A is found in possession of stolen goods, the less likely it is that his possession on the occasion charged was innocent. It is not a question of specifically proving Knowledge; it is merely a question of the improbability of an innocent Intent. Several practical differences result: (1) It is immaterial whether in the other instances a knowing possession is shown. It is the mere fact of the repeated possession of other stolen goods that lessens the chances of innocence. (2) It is immaterial that the other goods were similar in kind to those charged, or were received from the same person. On the contrary, the greater the variety of the goods and of the sources they came from, the more striking the coincidence, and the more difficult to believe that the explanation is an innocent one. (3) It is immaterial whether the other possessions occurred before or after the possession charged; it is the multiplication of instances that affects our belief, and not the time of their occurrence, — provided the time is not so distant as to be accountable for on the theory of chance acquisition. There are precedents which illustrate all the above three conclusions (except the last), i.e. which do not require that knowing possession be shown, nor that any similarity in the goods or the vendor be shown; and these precedents thus appear to go distinctly upon the theory of Intent, as above set forth, rather than upon the theory of Knowledge.

[2] Coleman v. People, N. Y.

[3] State v. Wood, Conn.

So far as concerns the reconciliation of the precedents, it may be said (a) that both the above theories (of Knowledge and of Intent) are legitimate; that it is open to show specifically Knowledge, if so desired, or to show, more generally, Intent; and that evidence which satisfies either of these purposes is proper, on the principle of multiple admissibility (ante, § 13); but that the two ought to be discriminated and to be employed intelligently, and without confusing the one with the other; (b) that the force of an argument based on the Intent theory lies in the multiplication of instances; that a single instance has from this point of view little or no weight; and that therefore it is much better, in accepting a single instance, to test it by the Knowledge theory, while in accepting several instances it is sufficient to judge it by the looser but then equally satisfactory Intent theory.

§ 326. Same: State of the Law in the Various Jurisdictions. In the light of the foregoing explanation, the precedents in the various jurisdictions, even in the same court, will be seen to be not always consistent;[1] but the signifi-

§ 326. [1] ENGLAND: 1826, R. v. Dunn, 1 Moo. Cr. C. 146. by all the Judges (knowing receipt of stolen goods; the fact of having received and pledged, within five months, various other goods stolen from the same persons and brought to the defendant by the same person, was admitted, "as an ingredient to make out the guilty knowledge"); 1833, R. v. Davis, 6 C. & P. 177, Gurney, B. (the finding on the accused of many other goods stolen from the same person, admitted; also their receipt at previous times; except the receipt of other articles charged in the indictment); 1843, R. v. Hinley, 2 Mo. & Rob. 524, 1 Cox Cr. 12, Maule, J. (knowing receipt of stolen goods; repeated acts of receiving stolen property "under circumstances which must have shown him that the property was not honestly obtained", admitted); 1851, R. v. Oddy, 2 Den. Cr. C. 264 (knowing receipt of stolen goods; the fact was rejected of the possession, at the same time, of four other pieces of cloth stolen by some one three months before from another mill and belonging to different persons; Pickering, for the prosecution: "It must be conceded that the moral weight of such evidence is irresistible. Suppose a thousand articles, all stolen at different times, either from the same or different persons, and all of them to be found in the possession of the prisoner; could any one doubt that he received them with a guilty knowledge? . . . Is the rule to be confined to cases which are in all particulars identical with Dunn's Case? Or is the evidence admissible if the goods have been received from the same person, though stolen from a different person or at a different time? Or will it be admissible if the other articles were only stolen from the same person, though received from a different one or at a different time?"; Alderson, B.: "Here the evidence merely went to show that the prisoner was in possession of other property which had been stolen in the previous December, and not that he had received such property knowing it to be stolen. Now the mere possession of stolen property is evidence, 'prima facie', not of receiving, but of stealing; and to admit such evidence in the present case would be to allow a prosecutor, in order to make out that a prisoner had received property with a guilty knowledge, which had been stolen in March, to show that the prisoner had in the December previous stolen some other property from another place and belonging to other persons"; Campbell, L. C. J., went chiefly on grounds of the Character rule); 1858, R. v. Primelt, 1 F. & F. 51 (to show knowing receipt of stolen lead, the fact was admitted of eleven sales of lead of the same sort, false names being given, and the lead in one case being certainly stolen).

The result of R. v. Oddy was a legislative change of the law: 1871, St. 34–35 Vict. c. 112, § 19: ". . . evidence may be given . . . that there was found in the possession of such person other property stolen within the preceding period of twelve months, . . . for the purpose of proving that such person knew the property [for which he is indicted] to be stolen." The possession offered in evidence under this statute must be possession at the time he is found in possession of the property charged in cance of each precedent can perhaps be understood by comparing it with the logical requirements of each principle.

the indictment: 1884, R. v. Carter, 15 Cox Cr. 448; affirming R. v. Drage, 14 Cox Cr. 85, Bramwell, L. J., and solving the doubt of Keating, J., in R. v. Harwood, 11 id. 388; 1909, Powell's Case, 3 Cr. App. 1 (the limitations of St. 34-35 Vict. c. 112, § 19 do not apply to proof of possession of other stolen goods offered to rebut evidence of honest intent). The soundness of this limitation may be questioned; but at any rate it is clear that the whole provision is based on the Intent theory.

But by the second half of the same statutory section, the possession at other times than the time charged may be shown by the fact that the defendant has "within five years immediately preceding been convicted of any offence involving fraud or dishonesty . . . for the purpose of proving that the person accused knew the property which was proved to be in his possession to have been stolen", provided seven days' notice in writing is given. The object of using only the conviction of the offence, instead of proving the offence in the ordinary way, is apparently to obviate Lord Coleridge's objection of unfair surprise and confusion of issues (ante, § 194), advanced in R. v. Francis, as the main reason for the Character rule; for those objections do not apply to proof by record of conviction. The theory of using the former offence under this clause is clearly that of Intent, not of Knowledge.

By St. 1916, 6 & 7 Geo. V. c. 50, § 43, sub. s. 1 (Larceny Act) the wording of the modern rule is changed, enlarging it to some extent: "[To show guilty knowledge, is admissible] (a) the fact that other property stolen within the period of 12 months preceding the date charged was found or had been in his possession"; 1918, R. v. Smith, 2 K. B. 415 (receiving stolen metal; other stolen goods having been found in defendant's possession, and this fact being admissible under the Larceny Act 1916, § 43, sub-s. 1, held (1) that defendant's statements made about the other goods were also admissible, (2) that the other goods might be produced, without first evidencing their theft).

CANADA: Crim. Code, R. S. 1906, c. 146, Crim. C. §§ 993, 994 (like Eng. St. 1871, supra; substituting three for seven days' notice).

UNITED STATES: Federal: 1909, Sapir v. U. S., 2d C. C. A., 174 Fed. 219 (receiving stolen property with knowledge; here, pieces of brass; receipt of other pieces of brass, etc., from another person, before and after, admitted); 1921, Degnan v. U. S., 2d C. C. A., 271 Fed. 291 (knowing receipt of shoes stolen from a railway car; possession of other shoes stolen from cars at the same station, admitted);
Alabama: 1875, Gassenheimer v. State, 52 Ala. 313, 318 (the stolen cotton being found at daybreak in defendant's store, the fact was rejected that during the preceding week persons had been seen going into the store just before daybreak with sacks of cotton and coming out with the sacks empty);
Connecticut: 1881, State v. Wood, 49 Conn. 429, 440 (holding it to be necessary and sufficient that the other goods were received from the same person, but not that they were of the same kind or stolen from the same place; the opinion makes no distinction between former knowing receivings and mere receivings);
Delaware: 1919, State v. Handy, 7 Boyce's 30 Del. 449, 108 Atl. 95 (receipt by defendant of other articles of jewelry stolen by the same thief from the same store, admitted);
Illinois: 1904, Schulz v. People, 210 Ill. 196, 71 N. E. 405 (receiving stolen rings; W. having stolen five or six rings, and D. having shown them all to the defendant, she purchased the two in issue; held error to offer the others in evidence; this is an over-strict ruling, especially as the opinion ignores the purpose of the evidence to show knowledge); 1907, Lipsey v. People, 227 Ill. 364, 81 N. E. 348 (receiving stolen goods, — here, electric light sockets; the delivery of another quantity of such goods about the same time, held admissible, citing one N. Y. case and a loose generality from a treatise, and ignoring the foregoing case); 1919, People v. Kohn, 290 Ill. 410, 125 N. E. 293 (receiving stolen goods; receipt of other goods not shown to have been stolen, held improper); 1921, People v. Niles, 300 Ill. 458, 133 N. E. 252 (perjury in denying a charge of receiving stolen property; subsequent receipt of other stolen property from the same thief, received, after former receipt of other stolen property was evidenced);
Indiana: 1895, Goodman v. State, 141 Ind. 35, 39 N. E. 939 (the stolen thing charged as received by the defendant was a calf, and the knowing receipt of a stolen horse was given in evidence); 1905, Beuchert v. State, 165 Ind. 523, 76 N. E. 111 (that "other stolen goods" were found, is admissible; here, on a charge of possessing bars of steel stolen from B., the possession of watches and jewelry stolen from other persons was admitted);
Iowa: 1905, State v. Levich, 128 Ia. 372, 104 N. W. 334 (receipt of other stolen goods from the same person, admissible);
Kansas: 1868, Lewis v. State, 4 Kan. 306 (larceny; the fact was admitted of the finding of many other stolen articles in premises carefully equipped for concealing such things, to show guilty knowledge, because "of the general knowledge men have that such an assortment would not be innocently gathered and secured");

§ 327. Other Modes of Evidencing. Needless to say, there are other modes of evidencing the knowledge or the intent of the person possessing the goods charged. The fact itself of their possession is some evidence of probable knowledge,[1] on the theory that the mode of acquisition would as a rule raise suspicion; and in a given instance the circumstances of acquisi-

Kentucky: 1914, Com. v. McGarvey, 158 Ky. 570, 165 S. W. 973 (knowing receipt of stolen goods; possession of other kinds of stolen goods, admitted, without showing knowledge that the other goods were stolen);
Massachusetts: 1861, Devoto v. Com., 3 Metc. 418 (possession of other stolen goods, admitted);
Missouri: 1851, State v. Wolff, 15 Mo. 168, 172, semble (possession of "various other articles of stolen property", admissible); 1866, State v. Harrold, 38 Mo. 497 (approving State v. Wolff); 1894, State v. Flynn, 124 Mo. 480, 27 S. W. 1105 (other articles stolen about the same time from the same and other persons, admitted); 1914, State v. Cohen, 254 Mo. 437, 162 S. W. 216 (receipt of stolen property; other receipt of different kinds of stolen property from the same person, admitted, without evidence of knowledge of their stolen character);
Nebraska: 1902, Goldsberry v. State, 66 Nebr. 312, 92 N. W. 906 (other transactions with stolen goods, admitted on the facts); 1920, Sheppard v. State, 104 Nebr. 709, 178 N. W. 616 (receiving a stolen automobile; prior acts of the sort, admitted);
New York: 1857, People v. Rando, 3 Park. Cr. 335, 339 ("a series of other acts of the like character", irrespective of the kind of goods or source of obtaining, admitted "to show the knowledge" and "to rebut any presumption of innocent mistake"); 1873, Coleman v. People, 55 N. Y. 81, 90, and 58 N. Y. 556, 560 (knowing receipt of twenty-two bars of pig-iron, the property of Burke; evidence rejected of the defendant's possession of some iron-railing stolen from Briggs; both lots had been bought by the defendant from boys, but not the same boys; Allen, J., after noting the limitations sometimes put, that the articles must have been stolen from the same person and brought to the defendant by the same person: "It is unnecessary to say that all these qualifications must exist; but to warrant the introduction of such evidence there must be such a connection of circumstances that a natural inference may be drawn that, if the prisoner knew one article was stolen, he would also be chargeable with knowledge that another was. . . . The Briggs iron had no connection with the pig-iron; it was taken from another place, belonged to another person, was of a different character, and received at another time and — for aught that appears — some of it from different persons. Assuming therefore that the prisoner received the Briggs iron and was chargeable with knowledge that it had been stolen, would that circumstance logically or legally charge him, or tend to charge him, with knowledge that the pig-iron was stolen?"; and the Court answered in the negative, while holding that "every case must depend upon its own circumstances"); 1874, Copperman v. People, 56 N. Y. 591 (knowing receipt of two parcels of sewing-silk; the knowing receipt from the same person of similar articles stolen from the same place, admitted); 1881, People v. Dowling, 84 N. Y. 486 (the rule is laid down, citing Coleman v. People, that other possession is admissible if the property was stolen from the same person and obtained from the same person, and if there is such a connection of circumstances, etc.; but this is a careless statement, and is probably entitled to no consideration); 1901, People v. Grossman, 168 N. Y. 47, 51, 60 N. E. 1050 (larceny of similar goods from the same owners by the same sellers to defendant, admissible); 1903, People v. Doty, 175 N. Y. 164, 67 N. E. 303 (knowing receipt of a stolen cowhide; receipt of other stolen hides from the same thieves, but stolen from other owners, admitted; two Judges diss.);
North Carolina: 1881, State v. Murphy, 84 N. C. 741 (larceny of a hog; possession in the same pen of another hog belonging to another person, admitted; the opinion fails to appreciate the bearings of the question);
Ohio: 1872, Shriedley v. State, 23 Oh. St. 130, 142 (possession of other goods, known to have been stolen, and received from the same thief, admissible);
South Carolina: 1893, State v. Crawford, 39 S. C. 343, 350, 17 S. E. 799 (possession of other kinds of stolen goods, admitted); 1909, State v. Winter, 83 S. C. 251, 65 S. E. 243 (prior receipt of similar goods, not knowing them to have been stolen, admitted); 1888, State v. Jacob, 30 S. C. 131, 8 S. E. 698 (like State v. Winter);
Texas: 1913, Kaufman v. State, 70 Tex. Cr. 438, 159 S. W. 58 (concealing stolen property, purchase and concealment of other goods of various sorts obtained from sundry owners by the same set of thieves, admitted as showing system); 1918, Wool v. State, 83 Tex. Cr. 113, 201 S. W. 1002 (knowing receipt of stolen goods; the opinions of the judges differed, on the facts); tion — for example, the low price paid [2] — may be available to strengthen this probability. Moreover, the conduct of the defendant in concealing the possession may, as always (ante, §§ 276, 278), evidence guilty knowledge. The possession of stolen goods in other evidential aspects has been considered elsewhere (ante, §§ 152–155).
Washington: 1893, State v. Humason, 5 Wash. 499, 503, 32 Pac. 111 (cattle; possession of other cattle, not shown to be stolen, excluded).

§ 327. [1] 1845, R. v. Brett, 1 Cox Cr. 261; 1862, R. v. Deer, Leigh & C. 240.

5. Embezzlement

§ 329. General Principle. Here the act of taking the property is usually conceded or otherwise proven, and the purpose of using other acts of the sort is to show the criminal knowledge or intent:

(1) The Knowledge principle (ante, § 301) has here little scope for application. It may occasionally happen that a former error in accounting would be likely to result in warning of it to its maker, but this does not in itself carry any probability of disclosure of the later error charged or of knowledge of the nature of the property taken.

(2) The Intent principle (ante, § 302) is the usually appropriate one, and is the one generally accepted by the Courts as governing the use of such evidence. Its theory is that the recurrence of similar takings of property, or, as in the usual case, similar incorrect entries in account-books, suffices to negative mistake or inadvertence on the occasion charged.[1] No doubt; the other instances must have occurred under circumstances fairly similar (ante, § 302); but no fixed rule is possible on this subject; whether the other acts must appear to have been done in the same employment or in the same series of accounts, or in the same account-book, must depend on the circumstances of each case.

(3) The System principle (ante, § 304) may equally be applicable here, where it is desired to argue from a system of embezzlements to the very act of taking in issue, and not merely to the intent in taking. As to this certain limitations may be noticed. (a) A few Courts are found saying [2] that evidence of other acts is receivable "not to prove that the defendant took the money", but to prove that "if he took it, it was done with fraudulent intent." This is unsound, if it is meant absolutely to exclude the inference from System evidence under any conditions; for where the requirements of that principle (ante, § 304) are met, such evidence is admissible even to show the very act of taking if it is disputed. (b) Occasionally an intimation is seen [3] that the other acts even when used merely to prove Intent, must be tested by the System rule (ante, § 304), i.e. must be so connected as to appear to be parts of a gen-

[2] 1860, People v. Levison, 16 Cal. 98.

§ 329. [1] 1888, Manisty, J., in R. v. Stephens, infra; 1887, Peckham, J., in People v. Sharp, 107 N. Y. 468, 14 N. E. 319 ("A man indicted for the embezzlement of funds by false entries might claim, with some degree of plausibility perhaps, that the entry was a mistake; but the probability of such mistakes would be greatly lessened by proof that other false entries of the same kind had been made at or about the same time by the same person").

[2] R. v. Stephens, Eng.; Com. v. Tuckerman, Mass.

[3] Com. v. Tuckerman, Mass.

eral system of embezzlement. This is also unsound; all that is required is that the other acts should have been done under sufficiently similar conditions to negative the reasonable chances of casual error. (c) In using the other acts to prove Intent, where the very act charged is also disputed, it is not necessary to apply the System test; the Intent evidence may be left to the jury with instructions not to use it unless they first believe from other evidence that the act charged was done.[4]

§ 330. Other Principles, discriminated. (1) To avoid the dangers of variance between indictment and proof, statutes have occasionally provided that upon an indictment charging a specific act of embezzlement a certain range of time in the proof is to be allowable. This provision deals with the time of the substantive offence charged, and will be strictly construed;[1] but it has no concern with the time of other acts used merely as evidential of the substantive offence. (2) Other questions of variance, or of the identity or the scope of the substantive offence are equally to be distinguished from the present question as to the evidential use of other acts.[2]

§ 331. State of the Law in the Various Jurisdictions. The precedents in the various jurisdictions illustrate with more or less consistency the foregoing principles, and concern both civil and criminal cases.[1]

[4] R. v. Stephens, Eng.

§ 330. [1] Mass. Gen. L. 1920, c. 266, § 53 (in prosecutions for embezzlement or fraudulent conversion, evidence is admissible of any such act within six months after the time alleged); 1882, People v. Donald, 48 Mich. 491, 12 N. W. 669 (prior embezzlements in June and September received at the trial; conviction held improper, apparently because they were offered as the very substance of the indictment, which charged embezzlement in November; a statute allowing a range of six months after the date charged excludes impliedly any prior offence); 1889, State v. Cornhauser, 74 Wis. 42, 41 N. W. 959 (same).

[2] 1871, R. v. Balls, L. R. 1 C. C. R. 328 (whether on an indictment for embezzling 1*l.* 1*s.* the embezzlement of sums separately within a short time might be shown in order to prove the total).

§ 331. [1] ENGLAND: 1861, R. v. Richardson, 2 F. & F. 343, 8 Cox Cr. 448, Williams, J. (embezzlement by a clerk, by increasing the figures of cash-payments and keeping the difference of money; the fact of many other incorrect entries of the same sort was admitted to negative mistake); 1861, R. v. Proud, L. & C. 97, 102 (embezzlement by false entries; other incorrect entries admitted, semble, to show guilty intent); 1864, R. v. Reardon, 4 F. & F. 79, Willes, J. (other takings, admitted to negative mistake); 1888, R. v. Stephens, 16 Cox Cr. 387 (on a charge of embezzlement of three separate sums, from the same master in the course of the same work, the evidence for all the counts was held properly considered under each; Manisty, J., quoting with approval Roscoe on Evidence: "'This cannot be done merely with a view of inducing the jury to believe that, because the prisoner has committed a crime on one occasion, he is likely to have committed a similar offence on another; but only by way of anticipation of an obvious defence, — such as that the prisoner did the act of which he was accused, but innocently and without any guilty knowledge, or that he did not do it because no motive existed in him for the commission of such a crime, or that he did it by mistake.' . . . It is not with a view of proving guilt, but of proving the intention with which the act was done, that you anticipate it [by such evidence]").

CANADA: 1914, R. v. Minchin, 15 D. L. R. 792, Alta. (theft of public moneys; to show the effect of a shortage, other discrepancies in cash items, partly by entries of clerks under defendant, were received).

UNITED STATES: Federal: 1896, American Surety Co. v. Pauly, 18 C. C. A. 644, 72 Fed. 470 (embezzlement by a bank; cashier by falsification of the books; to negative "mere oversight or negligence", similar acts of fraud and dishonesty, prior to the date of his surety bond, were admitted); 1900, Dorsey v. U. S., 41 C. C. A. 652, 101 Fed. 746 (making false entries, etc., in national bank; other false dealings with same bank, admitted, Sanborn, J., diss.); 1900, Wolfson v. U. S., 41 C. C. A. 442, 101 Fed. 430, 102 Fed. 134 (misapplication of national bank funds; instances of similar misapplication for three years previous, admitted to show intent; Boarman, J., diss., in an opinion full of misconceptions and singularly illiberal views);

6. Fraudulent Transfers

§ 333. Transfers in Fraud of Creditors. Here the question is whether the transfer was made with intent to defraud the transferor's creditors by deceiving, delaying, or hindering them. The act of transfer is conceded; no specific question as to Knowledge (except of insolvency) usually arises

California: 1884, People v. Gray, 66 Cal. 271, 274 (embezzlement by a clerk of the Harbor Commissioners; the fact was admitted of other acts of embezzlement while in that office, to negative ignorance or mistake); 1894, People v. Bidleman, 104 Cal. 609, 613, 38 Pac. 502 (embezzlement; the receipt, etc., of other sums than those charged, admissible as "tending to show a system" to conceal the takings and "the intent" of the taking);
Florida: 1896, Thalheim v. State, 38 Fla. 169, 20 So. 938 (a preceding embezzlement admitted); 1904, Eatman v. State, 48 Fla. 21, 37 So. 576 (embezzlement; prior conversions of other sums collected for the same employer, admitted to show intent);
Illinois: 1876, Kribs v. People, 82 Ill. 425 (embezzlement; fraudulent collection "of money belonging to other parties", excluded);
Iowa: 1905, State v. Carmean, 126 Ia. 291, 102 N. W. 97 (other transactions, held inadmissible on the facts); 1916, State v. Glaze, 177 Ia. 457, 159 N. W. 260 (embezzlement; other acts, excluded on the facts);
Kentucky: 1897, Shipp v. Com., 101 Ky. 518, 41 S. W. 856 (falsifying account-books; other false entries admitted to show a common purpose to deceive the bank officers); 1908, Morse v. Com., 129 Ky. 294, 111 S. W. 714 (embezzlement; other embezzlements admitted, with certain too refined distinctions as to the purpose); 1915, Clary v. Com., 173 Ky. 171, 173 S. W. 171 (embezzlement; a prior offence while in the same employ, excluded);
Louisiana: 1915, State v. Hammons, 137 La. 854, 69 So. 277 (embezzlement; another misappropriation eight months earlier, admitted);
Massachusetts: 1857, Com. v. Tuckerman, 10 Gray 173, 179, 197 (embezzlement by taking and using his employer's money; the fact was admitted of other embezzlements from the same employer having as transactions "a peculiar and intimate, if not also an inseparable, connection with" the transaction charged; "not for the purpose of proving or as having a tendency to prove that the defendant took the money charged in the indictment, but for the purpose of showing that if he took it, it was done with the fraudulent intent to convert it"); 1861, Com. v. Shepard, 1 All. 575, 581 (embezzlement; the fact received of another act of embezzlement in the same week and out of the same books, to show intent); 1902, Perkins v. Spaulding, 182 Mass. 218, 65 N. E. 72 (embezzlement of "other articles at about the same time, from the same owner, and under the same general circumstances", admissible to show intent); 1914, Com. v. Dow, 217 Mass. 473, 105 N. E. 995 (embezzlement from a corporation; transactions with another corporation whose accounts were connected, admitted); Gen. L. 1920, c. 266, § 53 (on a charge of embezzlement of money, etc., any embezzlement "committed within 6 months after the time stated" may be evidenced);
Michigan: 1895, People v. Hawkins, 106 Mich. 479, 64 N. W. 736 ("previous acts of embezzlement", admitted "to prove intent");
Minnesota: 1896, State v. Holmes, 65 Minn. 230, 68 N. W. 11 (prior takings admitted);
Montana: 1912, State v. Hall, 45 Mont. 498, 125 Pac. 639 (embezzlement; other offences of the same nature, admitted);
Nevada: 1918, State v. McFarlin, 41 Nev. 486, 172 Pac. 371 (embezzlement; other shortages, admitted);
New Jersey: 1906, State v. Newman, 73 N. J. L. 202, 62 Atl. 1008 (embezzlement of timber; another act of the same sort, excluded; erroneous on the facts); 1921, State v. Fisher, 94 N. J. L. 12, 114 Atl. 247 (embezzlement; similar misuse of the same party's money 18 years before, excluded);
Ohio: 1914, Baxter v. State, 91 Oh. 167, 110 N. E. 456 (embezzlement; other embezzlements at prior times and places, not admitted on the facts);
Oklahoma: 1911, Carter v. State, 6 Okl. Cr. 232, 118 Pac. 264 (embezzlement; other similar offences admissible, if a part of a system, to show that the defendant did take the money); 1919, Winston v. State, — Okl. Cr. App. —, 182 Pac. 249 (embezzlement; prior embezzlements from the same employer while in the same capacity, admitted);
Oregon: 1895, State v. Reinhart, 26 Or. 446, 38 Pac. 822 ("a series of connected transactions", covering "many acts done in a series of years", admitted);
Washington: 1912, State v. Downer, 68 Wash. 672, 123 Pac. 1073 (embezzlement; subsequent similar acts, admitted; prior rulings collected and explained);
Wyoming: 1894, Edelhoff v. State, 5 Wyo. 19, 27, 36 Pac. 627 (embezzlement of rents; other similar takings, admitted to negative mistake).

Compare the related precedents cited ante, § 321 (false pretences).

(ante, § 301); and the inquiry is simply as to the Intent accompanying the act.

On the Intent theory (ante, § 302), other transfers of property may have some bearing on this question by tending to negative the probability of good faith. They will have such a probative value whenever they are made under such circumstances that they cannot be naturally accounted for by the ordinary course of business in which such transfers occur from time to time with good faith. The difficulty is to determine what circumstances are essential to produce this improbability that the transfer was in that ordinary course of business which involves good faith. (1) The quantity of property conveyed will have great weight — as where all the debtor's estate is conveyed; but this is not an essential. (2) The persons to whom the transfers are made will have weight; because ordinary transfers are naturally made to various persons, and a multiplicity of transfers to the same person is hardly to be accounted for by good faith. Moreover, the family or friendly relationship of the transferee may strengthen the improbability. But it is not essential that the transferee should be the same person in each case or should be intimately related.[1] (3) The time of the other transfers has much weight; for in the ordinary course of business a large proportion of the entire property may be casually sold from time to time, but not repeatedly within a short time. But the time is chiefly important so far as the other transfers occur during the period when the transferor is insolvent; because the singularity of such transfers at that time is less accountable by the ordinary course of business than at any other time. It is usually said that the other transfers offered must have occurred about the same time or recently;[2] and perhaps they must have occurred during a time of insolvency, actual, or impending, but this should hardly be required as a rule. Subsequent as well as prior transfers equally avail to negative good faith.[3] (4) The consideration is material; for a voluntary transfer at such a time is singularly inconsistent with the probability of good faith. On the whole, then, while several sorts of circumstances are significant, their weight may vary in each case, and no one of them is essential, except that of time, and here no fixed rule can be laid down.

But it is not necessary that the rigorous test of the System rule (ante, § 304) should be applied, i.e. that the other transfers should be so connected as to disclose a general scheme (though one or two Courts do go to this extent);[4] it is enough that the other transfers occurred under such circumstances as to tend to negative good faith in the transfer charged. Nor is it necessary to show the other transfers fraudulent,[5] it is enough that they were made under some of the above circumstances; for it is the mere recurrence § 333. [1] Howe v. Reed, Me.

[2] Nelms v. Steiner, Ala.; Piedmont Bank v. Hatcher, Va.; for examples of exclusion, see Hardy v. Moore, Ia.; Flagg v. Willington, Me.

[3] Lynde v. McGregor, Mass. For a discrimination of this point, see § 335.

[4] E.g. Massachusetts.

[5] In some opinions the language intimates such a requirement, e.g. Whittier v. Varney, N. H.; but it is usually not called for; see, in particular, Bottomley v. U. S., U. S.; M'Elwee v. Sutton, S. C.

of the similar transactions which by the strange coincidence raises the improbability of good faith (ante, § 302); to require a showing of fraud in each of the evidential instances is both unnecessary in principle and impracticable in application.

§ 334. State of the Law in the Various Jurisdictions. The precedents in the various jurisdictions illustrate the development of the foregoing principles with more or less consistency.[1]

§ 334. [1] CANADA: 1916, Re Goodman, 28 D. L. R. 197, 29 id. 725, Man. (extradition for defrauding creditors in the U. S.; other acts of fraud considered);

UNITED STATES: Federal: 1840, Story, J., in Bottomley v. U. S., 1 Story 145 (describes the question as "whether a particular voluntary conveyance was made in fraud of creditors", and would admit "like [i.e. voluntary] conveyances to other persons who are mere volunteers, made about the same time"); 1893, Kellogg v. Clyne, 4 C. C. A. 554, 54 Fed. 696, 12 U. S. App. 174, 183 (fraudulent mortgage; other transfers by debtor about the same time, admitted); 1904, Kaufman v. Tredway, 195 U. S. 271, 25 Sup. 33 (preference to a brother under the bankruptcy act; certain transactions six or seven months before, admitted to show knowledge);

Alabama: 1843, Cummings v. McCullough, 5 Ala. 324, 332 (another deed, two days before, while insolvent, to the same person, admitted to show a scheme to defraud); 1852, Dent v. Portwood, 21 Ala. 589 (a deed for land on the same day to the same person, admitted to show the intent of a deed of slaves); 1853, Benning v. Nelson, 23 Ala. 801, 804 (another deed on the same day, admitted); 1897, Nelms v. Steiner, 113 Ala. 562, 22 So. 435 (admitting "other transactions which are fraudulent and which are in point of time contemporaneous or nearly so"); 1898, Davidson v. Kahn, 119 Ala. 364, 24 So. 583 (other transfers about the same time to other persons admitted);

Illinois: 1905, Fabian v. Traeger, 215 Ill. 220, 74 N. E. 131 (sale in fraud of creditors; another sale at the same time, admitted to show the intent);

Iowa: 1883, Hardy v. Moore, 62 Ia. 65, 70, 17 N. W. 200 (conveyances to the same person and others, nearly two years before, excluded as evincing no common purpose); 1902, Kelliher v. Sutton, 115 Ia. 632, 89 N. W. 26 (fraudulent mortgage; "other acts of a similar character, about the same time", admitted to show a connected scheme;

Louisiana: 1851, Lockhart v. Harrell, 6 La. An. 530, 532 (other transactions between the same parties, admitted);

Maine: 1830, Flagg v. Willington, 6 Greenl. 386 (similar sale to another person five years before, not admitted to show present dishonest motives); 1834, Blake v. Howard, 11 Fairf. 202 (similar sale to another person eight months before, excluded; semble not admissible at all, even though known to the present grantee; weak opinion); 1835, Howe v. Reed, 12 Fairf. 515 (in effect overruling the preceding; admitting fraudulent conveyances to other persons about the same time, to show the grantor's intent; the present grantee's knowledge of that intent being a separate fact, to be proved by separate evidence);

Massachusetts: 1831, Foster v. Hall, 12 Pick. 99 (conveyance alleged to be in fraud of creditors; other fraudulent conveyances to the demandant, at the same time and previously, admitted); 1852, Long v. Lamkin, 9 Cush. 361 (prior sales, excluded because no question of fraudulent transfer was involved); 1853, Cook v. Moore, 11 Cush. 213, 216 (similar facts to Foster v. Hall; prior fraudulent conveyance, admitted); 1860, Williams v. Robbins, 5 Gray 590 (bill to set aside a transfer in fraud of creditors; the fact of two other fraudulent transfers, excluded, because belonging to "a distinct, separate, and independent negotiation, and one had therefore no tendency to characterize or to evince the purpose or design of the parties in the other"; such transactions "must be shown to be so connected with it as to make it apparent that the parties had a common purpose in both"); 1861, Taylor v. Robinson, 2 All. 562 (other fraudulent conveyances to other persons, made on the same day, admitted to show fraudulent intent; subsequent ones semble excluded, on an erroneous application of the principle that admissions after title divested do not bind); 1866, Lynde v. McGregor, 13 All. 172, 174 (similar facts; subsequent fraudulent conveyances, admitted to show a fraudulent purpose); 1867, Winchester v. Charter, 97 Mass. 143 (similar to Taylor v. Robinson); 1872, Jordan v. Osgood, 109 Mass. 457 (adopts the rule of Williams v. Robbins as to showing System; quoted ante, § 321); 1899, Brownell v. Briggs, 173 Mass. 529, 54 N. E. 251 (deed alleged to be void against the grantor's wife, as made with intent to defraud her of rights at his decease; similar transfers of personalty to relatives and friends, admitted to show a general plan to defeat the wife's interest);

Michigan: 1888, Ganong v. Green, 71 Mich. 1, 9, 38 N. W. 661 (fraudulent mortgage; other conduct, such as releases of other mortgages, admitted on cross-examination);

Minnesota: 1895, Nicolay v. Mallery, 62 Minn. 119, 64 N. W. 108 (that notes had been im-

§ 335. Same: Other Kinds of Evidence. The fraudulent intent of the tranferor may be indicated by other circumstances not of the above sort, — such as the debtor's remaining in possession after the mortgage or sale,[1] the pendency of suits at the time of the sale,[2] and other circumstances[3] suggesting their own significance and not raising any difficulty of principle.

§ 336. Same: Other Principles, discriminated. The doctrine about Admissions, when made by a predecessor in title, as to the nature of his ownership or possession, has the effect, in an action against a transferee claiming bona fide acquisition of property from a debtor, of excluding the admissions of the debtor made subsequent to the transfer. This rule was in some early cases thought to exclude evidence of subsequent transfers as bearing on the debtor's intent.[1] But it is clear that these are not used in any sense as admissions of his intent, either then or at the time charged; they are used simply as circumstances negativing his former innocent intent at the time charged, and are not justly obnoxious to the above doctrine.[2] The various properly turned over by an insolvent about the same time to other creditors, to show a fraudulent plan to evade creditors, admitted); Mississippi: 1895, Uhler v. Adams, 73 Miss. 332, 18 So. 367, 654 (conveyances of lands between the same parties in other States, to show fraud against creditors in his conveyance; excluded on the facts);

New Hampshire: 1820, Lovell v. Briggs, 2 N. H. 223 ("it is established practice to admit evidence concerning different sales of a debtor's estate, made at or about the same time to show a fraudulent intent in the debtor to injure his creditors"); 1839, Whittier v. Varney, 10 N. H. 291, 294 (writ of entry by an attaching creditor to recover land transferred in alleged fraud of the creditors; fact admitted of other transfers of land by the debtor to the defendant about the same time and while insolvent; the other transfers must be shown fraudulent); 1852, Angier v. Ash, 26 N. H. 109 (affirming the doctrine); 1856, State v. Johnson, 33 N. H. 441, 456 (indictment for concealing the property of a debtor with intent to prevent its being taken by process; "evidence of other sales and dispositions of his property by the debtor to defraud his creditors, so connected in time and circumstances as to constitute parts of a general scheme of fraud", held admissible);
New York: 1833, Benham v. Cary, 11 Wend. 83 (like the next case); 1834, Jackson v. Timmerman, 12 Wend. 299 (transfer of land alleged to be in fraud of creditors; other contemporaneous transfers admitted to show intent);
North Carolina: 1855, Holmesly v. Hogue, 2 Jones L. 391 (fraudulent transfer of a slave; the fact of a sale by the debtor, six months before, of land which he did not own, rejected, as totally unconnected); 1895, State v. Jeffries, 117 N. C. 727, 23 S. E. 163 (transfer of a bicycle in fraud of creditors; pledge of a wagon, covered by the same mortgage, to another person five months later, held too remote in time);
Pennsylvania: 1851, Zerbe v. Miller, 16 Pa. 488, 495 (ejectment, the title depending on whether a conveyance by a father to his son was in fraud of creditors; other deeds and confessions of judgment by the father about the same time admitted to show intent); 1869, Heath v. Page, 63 Pa. 108, 125 (another deed, made five days before, admitted);
South Carolina: 1831, M'Elwee v. Sutton, 2 Bail. 128, 130 (trover; gifts about the same time to each of his other children, six or seven in number, admitted); 1831, Lowry v. Pinson, 2 Bail. 324, 328 (trespass to try title; another voluntary bill of sale about the same time, admitted);
Virginia: 1897, Piedmont Bank v. Hatcher, 94 Va. 229, 26 S. E. 505 ("other frauds of like character at or near the same time", admissible);
Wisconsin: 1894, Kaufer v. Walsh, 88 Wis. 63, 68, 59 N. W. 460 (purchase in fraud of creditors; other transactions of the sort by the buyer with other persons than this debtor, excluded).

§ 335. [1] 1846, Abney v. Kingsland, 10 Ala. 361 (with qualifications); 1831, Smith v. Henry, 2 Bail. S. C. 118, 123; 1833, s. c. 1 Hill S. C. 24; 1837, Reinhard v. Keenbartz, 6 Watts Pa. 94. This is the subject of a presumption (post, § 2515).
[2] 1831, Smith v. Henry, 2 Bail. S. C. 118, 123.
[3] 1864, Gray v. St. John, 35 Ill. 222 ("the manner in which he had recently obtained goods from his creditors", admitted).

§ 336. [1] In Foster v. Hall and Taylor v. Robinson, Mass., ante, § 334, believing the Admission doctrine, as laid down in Bridge v. Eggleston, 14 Mass. 249, to be applicable; traces of the same notion are also seen in the early Maine cases.
[2] As illustrated in Lynde v. McGregor, Mass., ante, § 334.

uses of a debtor's declarations, both as verbal acts and as admissions, in connection with fraudulent transfers, are dealt with elsewhere (post, §§ 1082–1086, 1727–1729, 1779–1780).

§ 337. Fraudulent Purchase with Intent not to Pay. The invalidity of a purchase made with intent not to pay rests on the falsity of the implied representation of an intent to pay; the transaction is so treated by the Courts, and the rulings are accordingly collected under that head (ante, § 321).

§ 338. Other Fraudulent Transfers. The principles of Knowledge and Intent (ante, §§ 301–304) may occasionally be applied to other kinds of transfers in which fraudulent intent is material.[1]

7. Sundry Frauds; and Fraud in General

§ 340. False Claim of a Cause of Action; Fraudulent Insurance. The bearing of former false claims of a similar sort may often be weighty. The exact principle of evidence applicable is perhaps not beyond doubt. The case is not the same as that of Extortion (post, § 352), because there the intent to be proved is not merely the intent to make a false claim, but to obtain money by making a false claim. Here the evidence seems to be sometimes in the nature of conduct exhibiting Guilty Consciousness (ante, § 280), or of an Admission (post, § 1060) or of the Self-Contradiction of a witness (post, § 1040) or his Corruption (post, §§ 956–964); yet the former false claims are hardly admissions of the falsity of the present claim. The truth seems to be that the recurrence of false claims of a similar sort tends to negative good faith in the present claim, and thus to show an intent to make a false claim; and it is this intent which is itself an Admission of the party inconsistent with the claim on the pleadings; if the Intent were declared in express words, this would be clear. In short, the former acts are not in themselves admissions, but are evidence of a lack of good faith which is equivalent to an admission.

§ 338. [1] 1859, Castle v. Bullard, 23 How. U. S. 172 (fraudulent sale by an agent to an insolvent; other fraudulent sales to him before and after time in question, admitted to show intent; also other false representations by the defendant to other persons, about the same time, as to the solvency of the buyer); 1920, Jones v. U. S., 9th C. C. A., 265 Fed. 235, 241 (action to recover moneys obtained by fraudulent filing of entries for patents of U. S. land; defendant's contracts of entry with other non-bona-fide settlers, admitted to show intent); 1820, Somes v. Skinner, 16 Mass. 348, 358 (conveyance alleged to have been obtained by undue influence; a series of former similar transactions between the same parties, rejected for showing a plan or bad character; but admitted for showing the grantor's susceptibility to the grantee's influence); 1882, Porter v. Throop, 47 Mich. 313, 320, 11 N. W. 174 (that G. P.'s will was made by undue influence of A. P., not admissible to show the same for the will of G. P.'s mother, to whom G. P. had bequeathed his property; on this and the preceding case, compare the citations under § 1738, post); 1818, Farrington v. Sinclair, 15 Johns. (N. Y.) 428 (to show a prior levy of execution to be collusive and fraudulent, the officer having given the debtor permission to use the article, the fact was received that similar permission was given for other articles levied on at the same time); 1820, Lovell v. Briggs, 2 N. H. 218, 223 (fraudulent purchase by an administrator from the heirs; the facts about other purchases from the other heirs, admitted to show improper dealing, since "the whole intestate estate was probably managed with similar views"); 1912, Welch v. Barnett, 34 Okl. 166, 125 Pac. 472 (fraud and undue influence in persuading an Indian to execute his will in favor of the petitioner, a white man; similar transactions with four other Indians, admitted; sensible opinion by Ames, C.).

Of the two possible rules to be applied, that of Intent and that of System (ante, §§ 302, 304), it seems clear that the former suffices.[1] The issue concerns the intent accompanying the claim, and the purpose is to negative good faith; the other incorrect claims must be so similar as not to be consistent with casual error; but they need not be so connected as to indicate a system.

§ 341. Sundry Frauds (Taxes, Mails, Measures, etc.). The principles of Intent and of System (ante, §§ 302–304) are illustrated in many other situations in which a fraudulent intent is in issue, and other similar acts may be received to evidence it, — for example, in the importation of goods with intent to defraud the Government, by undervaluation or otherwise;[1] in the falsification of documents or books, with intent to conceal or misuse;[2] in

§ 340. [1] Besides the following cases, reference may be made to the cases under Extortion (post, § 352) and to some of those under False Pretences (ante, § 320), especially Rafferty v. State, Tenn.: Federal: 1902, Jack v. Mutual R. F. Life Ass'n, 51 C. C. A. 36, 113 Fed. 49 (fraudulent insurance; conduct showing a fraudulent scheme of insurance, admitted); Iowa: 1895, Hood v. R. Co., 95 Ia. 331, 64 N. W. 261 (the plaintiff's claim for an injured eye was alleged to be fraudulent; fraud in making a claim upon an insurance company for other injuries was excluded); Kansas: 1906, State Life Ins. Co. v. Johnson, 73 Kan. 567, 85 Pac. 597 (insurance fraud); Massachusetts: 1831, Bradford v. Ins. Co., 11 Pick. 161 (to prove that damaged blankets received were not damaged by sea-water in transit, but by wetting in the consignor's factory to increase the weight fraudulently, the fact was offered of the receipt of many similar goods, by other consignees in the same year from the same consignor but in different vessels, the damage being similar and of a kind indicating a wetting at the factory; admitted as indicating merely that the damage probably did not arise from sea-water, but not as showing a general plan of the consignor to export wetted blankets); 1893, Miller v. Curtis, 158 Mass. 127, 131, 32 N. E. 1039 (charge of indecent assault; other instances, many years before, of the plaintiff making similar false charges against other men, held competent, if they showed "a purpose to obtain money" in that way; but here held not open to that construction); New York: 1890, Smith v. Nat'l Ben. Soc'y, 123 N. Y. 85, 25 N. E. 197 (applications to thirty-six different insurance companies, and other acts, admitted to show a general scheme to defraud by insuring and committing suicide); Pennsylvania: 1897, Young v. Doherty, 183 Pa. 142, 38 Atl. 587 (action on a note, said by defendant to be forged; evidence of the plaintiff's habit "of endeavoring to enforce unjust claims", excluded); Vermont: 1883, Lewis v. Barker, 55 Vt. 23 (the plaintiff claimed that the defendant had caused his goods to be largely over-insured and then burned them; attempts to defraud the insurance companies by making claims for goods not destroyed were admitted, though made after the fire; "the attempt to defraud the company into paying him for the oil, and the owners of the oil into not collecting it of him, was so connected with the main transaction as to make any part of the attempt admissible whether made before or after the fire; it was evidence relative to the scheme," etc.)

Compare the citations post, §§ 956–964 (impeaching a witness by showing corruption).

§ 341. [1] 1840, Bottomley v. U. S., 1 Story 135 (importation of goods under fraudulently false invoices; the goods in question were seized in May, 1838; and evidence was received of twenty-three false entries between Aug. 5, 1837, and March 15, 1838, the goods being "broadcloths of a similar character and description" to those seized, and shipped from the same port and persons, and that after the seizure, but before news could have reached England, four other importations of "broadcloths of the same character, cost, and value" as those seized, shipped from the same port and persons, and contained in cases marked like those seized and in numerical sequence, arrived and were stored, and were afterwards entered at a much higher valuation than those seized and under a consignor's oath taken not at the time of shipment, but long after the seizure in question; quoted ante, § 302); 1842, Wood v. U. S., 16 Pet. 342, 346, 356, 360 (fraudulent undervaluation of imported goods; the defendant had entered twenty-nine importations of which the four charged were a part, during the years 1839–40, of which fifteen were before and ten after the four charged; all of these invoices were overvalued, and all asserted an exporter's discount which was not given; these were admitted on the same principle as in Bottomley v. U. S., Story, J., delivering the opinion, and admitting "other acts and doings of the party of a kindred character, in order to illustrate or establish his intent or motive in the particular act").

[2] England: 1833, Thompson v. Mosely, 5 C. & P. 501, Lyndhurst, L. C. B. (alteration of a bill; the fact excluded of alterations in ten the substitution of false articles or measures, with the intent of cheating;[3] and in sundry modes of chicanery not coming under any general class.[4] other unspecified bills; "it is trying other issues, which the opposite party are not prepared to meet"; here the System rule was applicable); United States: 1913, Kettenbach, U. S., 9th C. C. A., 202 Fed. 377 (false entry by bank officer; false reports to the U. S. Comptroller, several years prior, admitted); 1904, Howard v. State, 72 Ark. 586, 82 S. W. 196 (false warrants by a county clerk; similar warrants to other persons, admitted to show intent); 1910, People v. Tomalty, 14 Cal. App. 224, 111 Pac. 513 (falsification of accounts; other similar offences, admitted); 1913, State v. O'Neil, 24 Ida. 582, 135 Pac. 60 (false report by a bank officer; other false reports admitted); 1857, Gardner v. Way, 8 Gray Mass. 189 (party's book of accounts offered to show a debt; to impeach its correctness, the fact that some years before this the plaintiff had kept two books of original entries so as to falsify his accounts, was excluded, because the former transactions were "remote and different"); 1912, People v. Marrin, 205 N. Y. 275, 98 N. E. 474 (notary charged with knowingly making a false certificate of acknowledgment of mortgage by J. C.; to show that J. C. was a myth, or to show knowledge by defendant of the false personation by the acknowledger, eight other instances were admitted of false certificates by defendant of acknowledgments by different other persons; three judges dissenting).

Compare the precedents under Embezzlement (ante, § 331) and Forgery (ante, § 318), crimes often committed by alteration of books or documents.

[3] 1920, Sears v. U. S., 1st C. C. A., 264 Fed. 257 (fraud and bribery of inspectors in performing a government contract for army shoes; the indictment charged conspiracy to buy and use outer and inner soles inferior to the contract requirements; evidence of using inferior middle soles was admitted to show intent; it is plain that this Court in its search for truth is not to be turned aside by the distinction between a hawk and a handsaw); 1920, Macdonald v. U. S., 1st C. C. A., 264 Fed. 733 (conspiracy to defraud the U. S. by counterfeit stamps on shoes made by defendant; evidence of corrupt transaction for inspection of other shoes for the U. S. made in the same factory under a separate contract, excluded; Anderson, J., diss., who is entirely right in declaring that "I can find no case in which the old technical rule has been given so wide an extension as in the majority opinion in the case at bar"); 1900, State v. Jamison, 110 Ia. 337, 81 N. W. 594 (using false weights; falsity of weights "at other times", admitted to show knowledge); 1882, Dibble v. Nash, 47 Mich. 589, 11 N. W. 399 (fraudulent substitution of other land; the defendant's offer to sell the original land to a third person, admitted to negative mistake); 1887, Reid v. Ladue, 66 Mich. 22, 25, 32 N. W. 916 (two or three false weighings in 1885, in a general course of dealing, held not sufficient to establish fraudulent weighing in 1877); 1876, Bainbridge v. State, 30 Oh. St. 264, 274 (knowingly delivering skimmed milk to a factory for cheese, with intent to defraud repeated deliveries to the same factory about the same time, admitted); 1832, Townsend v. Graves, 3 Paige Ch. N. Y. 453 (fraudulent drawing of a lottery; the defendant's fraudulent alteration of his account-book in a lodge a year before, excluded); 1905, Yakima V. Bank v. McAllister, 37 Wash. 566, 79 Pac. 1119 (action on a note; defence, that the signature was made by signing another document under which the defendants had fraudulently placed the note; other similar frauds by the defendants upon other persons, admitted to show a general scheme).

Compare the precedents under False Pretences (ante, § 321).

[4] Canada: R. S. 1906, c. 146, Crim. C. § 981, (advertising counterfeit money, etc.; any letter etc. concerning "any similar scheme or device to defraud the public" is 'prima facie' evidence of the "fraudulent character of such scheme or device"); United States: 1892, Continental Ins. Co. v. Ins. Co., 2 C. C. A. 535, 51 Fed. 884 (action to recover reinsurance moneys paid out by the plaintiff to third persons, a common agent of plaintiff and defendant having apportioned the reinsurance not according to good judgment or chance, as authorized, but through a fraudulent scheme in general to relieve the defendant from loss and throw it upon others; evidence of similar shiftings of loss by the agent upon other companies, admitted to show this scheme); 1901, Packer v. U. S., 46 C. C. A. 35, 106 Fed. 906 (using the mails to defraud by investment-circulars; other solicitations of a similar sort, admitted); 1904, Balliet v. U. S., 129 Fed. 689, 693, 64 C. C. A. 201 (fraudulent use of the mails; sundry reports, etc. of defendant, admitted); 1908, Jones v. U. S., 9th C. C. A., 162 Fed. 417, 427 (conspiracy to obtain land-grants by fraudulent homestead claims; other instances of similar fraudulent claims by defendants in connivance with other persons, admitted); 1910, Jones v. U. S., 9th C. C. A., 179 Fed. 584, 610 (fraudulent acquisition of public lands; similar transactions in another part of the State and by a different method, admitted); 1912, Marshall v. U. S., C. C. A., 197 Fed. 511 (fraudulent use of the mails in connection with a fraudulent society; the defendant's fraud in another like scheme at the same time, excluded, on not very intelligible grounds); 1914, Lueders v. U. S., 9th C. C. A., 210 Fed. 419 (concealment of bankrupt's estate; concealment of other property, admitted); 1914, Houston

§ 342. Perjury. On the analogy of the principles for False Representations (ante, § 309), a prior misstatement in the nature of perjury may have value as negativing mistake or 'bona fides' on the occasion charged.[1]

§ 343. Bribery. On a charge of bribery, any of the three general principles (ante, §§ 301–304) — Knowledge, Intent, and Design — may come into play. To show Knowledge of the nature of the transaction, a former transaction of the sort may serve, as indicating an understanding of the particular transaction.[1] To show Intent, another transaction of the sort may serve to negative good faith.[2] To show general Design, former attempts towards the same general end may be significant.[3]

v. U. S., 9th C. C. A., 217 Fed. 852 (conspiracy to defraud by collusive bids; prior overt acts not charged in the indictment, admitted); 1916, Samuels v. U. S., 8th C. C. A., 232 Fed. 536 (fraudulent use of the mails for sending a pretended remedy for disease; "evidence of other and similar ventures by the accused", admitted to show intent); 1918, Hallowell v. U. S., 9th C. C. A., 253 Fed. 865 (using the mails to defraud; similar letters to other persons, admitted); 1922, Jones v. U. S., 258 U. S. 40, 42 Sup. 218 (fraudulent entry of homestead land on old soldiers' rights; similar arrangements with soldiers' widows, held not improperly admitted in the trial Court's discretion, to show knowledge and intent); 1918, State v. Stiegler, 7 Boyce, 30 Del. 236, 105 Atl. 667 (conspiracy to cheat); 1914, People v. Strosnider, 264 Ill. 434, 106 N. E. 229 (confidence game; another instance of the same trick used on another person by the defendant, admitted); 1906, Packham v. Glendmeyer, 103 Md. 416, 63 Atl. 1048 (the testatrix left three wills; on an issue of fraud as to one of them, fraud as to another by the same parties was not admitted on the facts); 1909, Harris v. Delaware L. & W. R. Co., 77 N. J. L. 278, 72 Atl. 50 (forfeiture of a personal ticket for knowing misuse; the misuse on other occasions, admitted); 1905, Murray v. Moore, 104 Va. 707, 52 S. E. 381 (conspiracy to defraud; certain letters as to other fraudulent devices, excluded); 1920, State v. Williams, 94 Vt. 423, 111 Atl. 701 (State bank examiner's wilful neglect to report defalcation of State auditor; shortages in auditor's accounts more than three years previous during defendant's term of office, and at a period beyond the statutory bar, admitted, because "the longer such books and papers disclosed a shortage in the auditor's account, the greater the probability that the respondent knew of such shortage"); 1922, State v. Larson, — Wash. —, 204 Pac. 1041 (loaning money to a bank officer without authority; other loans, excluded on the facts).

§ 342. [1] Federal: 1840, U. S. v. Wood, 14 Pet. 430, 432, 437, 443 (perjury by falsely valuing imported goods; thirty-five letters indicating a general design of the sort, covering more than three years, admitted as showing a false swearing with intent to defraud); 1908, Williamson v. U. S., 207 U. S. 425, 28 Sup. 163 (conspiracy to suborn perjury in proceeding for the purchase of U. S. public lands; acquisition of State school lands by similar methods, admitted to show motive or intent); Georgia: 1903, Stone v. State, 118 Ga. 705, 45 S. E. 630 (subornation of perjury; other preparatory efforts to coach the false witnesses, admitted); Iowa: 1866, State v. Raymond, 20 Ia. 582, 588 (another perjury "relating to the same oath and subject-matter", allowed to evidence intent); 1916, State v. Lyon, 176 Ia. 171, 157 N. W. 742 (perjury in testifying that he did not sell liquor to H. on Aug. 25; other sales to H., admitted); Nevada: 1922, State v. Cerfoglio, — Nev. —, 205 Pac. 791 (perjury; three other criminal facts, admitted to show corrupt intent); New York: 1890, People v. Van Tassel, 156 N. Y. 561, 51 N. E. 274 (subornation of perjury; attempts to suborn for the same trial other persons not called as witnesses, admitted); 1902, People v. Doody, 172 N. Y. 165, 64 N. E. 807 (perjury in falsely testifying that he did not remember certain criminal acts; his prior testimony asserting and admitting those acts, here received to show that he did know and remember them).

Compare the cases cited post, § 963 (impeachment of a witness by other perjuries or admissions of perjury).

§ 343. [1] 1838, Webb v. Smith, 4 Bing. N. C. 373, 379 (bribery; the defendant stood in the front room of the house receiving voters, and gave a card to many; those receiving cards went to an adjoining room and received from another person £10 for each card; to show the defendant's knowledge of this handling of the money, the fact was received of his giving cards to other voters than the three charged, and of their receiving the money; Bosanquet, J.: "To show that he knew such cards would produce money, it was very important to prove that on the same day and in the same place he was cognizant of what passed in the inner room").

[2] California: 1899, People v. Hurley, 126 Cal. 351, 58 Pac. 814 (offering to accept a bribe, the defendant being a delegate to a nominating convention; similar solicitations to another

§ 344. Fraud in General; Latitude of Investigation. It is often said that, in evidencing fraud, a broad scope of investigation must be allowed,[1] and, in candidate for the same office about the same time, excluded; a ruling that wrongs the law and protects a rank crime); Indiana: 1901, Higgins v. State, 157 Ind. 57, 60 N. E. 685 (common councilman soliciting a bribe for the passing of an ordinance; solicitation about the same time of a bribe for another pending ordinance, admitted); 1919, Clevenger v. State, 188 Ind. 592, 125 N. E. 41 (bribery; other payments to the same person, admitted to show intent); Kentucky: 1915, Romes v. Com., 164 Ky. 334, 175 S. W. 669 (receiving a bribe to vote; receipt of bribes at former elections, excluded); Minnesota: 1898, State v. Durnam, 73 Minn. 150, 75 N. W. 1127 (demanding a bribe by a city councillor; similar demand of another member of the same firm about the same subject, admissible); 1903, State v. Fitchette, 88 Minn. 145, 92 N. W. 527 (taking money for appointment to office; similar transaction six months before, excluded; the opinion is over-scrupulous, and is of the sort that helps to create immunity for rascals); 1903, State v. Ames, 90 Minn. 183, 96 N. W. 330 (bribery; payment to defendant's agent by other persons, admitted on the facts; State v. Fitchette distinguished); Virginia: 1905, Haynes v. Com., 104 Va. 854, 52 S. E. 358 (bribery of an officer while under arrest on a charge of keeping a disorderly house; the defendant's acts of prostitution of little girls in the house, excluded); Washington: 1912, State v. Wappenstein, 67 Wash. 502, 121 Pac. 989 (bribe-taking, to abstain from enforcing the law against houses of ill-fame; receipt of bribes as to houses other than the two charged, admitted).

[1] CANADA: 1906, Shelburne and Queen's Election Case, Cowie v. Fielding, 37 Can. Sup. 604 (avoidance of election in 1904 for corrupt practices of agents; the agents' corrupt acts at a 1900 election, adopted by the respondent, not admitted to show their agency for him in 1904, or as evidence of system).

UNITED STATES: California: 1910, People v. Ruef, 14 Cal. App. 576, 114 Pac. 54 (bribery of a supervisor; other bribes admitted as a part of the same plan); 1910, People v. Glass, 158 Cal. 650, 112 Pac. 281 (bribery of supervisors in San Francisco; operations of the defendant company in Oakland, an adjacent city, excluded, on the ground that the transactions were offered only "to besmirch and degrade the defendant", and not to evidence motive, plan, or the like; as a sample of the unconscious inconsistency of the Court's attitude may be noted its asseveration that "it was not offered to show motive", followed in a few sentences by the assertion that it was offered to show that the defendant "had gone to the borderline of crime in the Oakland transaction and found that stopping there his efforts to prevent competition were without success", and hence "when the same problem arose in San Francisco . . . he became a lawbreaker and a criminal"; obviously, as the Court thus puts it, the failure in the Oakland transaction furnished a reason and motive in the choice of measures to be used in San Francisco; so that, by the Court's own way of putting it, the evidence clearly was admissible; two judges diss. on one or more points; the opinion of the majority exhibits signs of puffing and hard breathing in its labored efforts to state their case for reversal; it is unfortunate that this Supreme Court and others have at various times been so tender on behalf of persons charged with bribery that the inherent difficulties of conviction thus become almost insuperable; this tendency of Courts to construe narrowly the present principle is noticeable throughout the decisions here collected; the spot has been a putrid one in the law of evidence); Minnesota: 1920, Re Mason, Re Nash, 147 Minn. 383, 181 N. W. 570 (malfeasance in office by receipt of bribes; other similar offences, admitted to show a general scheme); Missouri: 1896, State v. Williams, 136 Mo. 293, 38 S. W. 75 (embracery; attempts to corrupt other jurors on the same panel about the same case, admitted to show intent); 1904, State v. Schnettler, 181 Mo. 173, 79 S. W. 1123 (municipal officer receiving a bribe for a street railway bill; receipt of another bribe for a lighting bill, admitted, as part of a general scheme); New York: 1887, People v. Sharp, 107 N. Y. 427, 456, 470, 14 N. E. 319 (indictment for offering a bribe in 1886 to a member of the Common Council of the City of New York, to influence his consent to a franchise for a surface railway on Broadway; the fact of the offer of a bribe in 1883 to the engrossing-clerk of the State Assembly to alter a bill so as to allow the construction of the same railway was rejected; the present principle and precedents were not considered, except by Peckham, J.; there is nothing to be said in support of this ruling; it is of the kind that breeds defiance of the law and encourages criminals in gambling on the result of judicial quibbles); 1914, People v. Duffy, 212 N. Y. 57, 105 N. E. 839 (bribery by a police sergeant; other collections of money from other persons for the same purpose, admitted); Ohio: 1914, State v. Davis, 90 Oh. 100, 106 N. E. 770 (soliciting a bribe for selection of a roadmaking machine; solicitation of other bribes from the same person and from another person, for similar purposes, admitted).

Compare the cases post, §§ 956–964 (impeaching a witness by showing bribery).

§ 344. [1] 1897, Nelms v. Steiner, 113 Ala. 562, 22 So. 435; 1870, Comstock v. Smith, 20 Mich. 345; 1860, Filley v. Register, 4 Minn. 391, 405 (grant in fraud of creditors); 1865, particular, that the range of cross-examination of the party charged must be liberal.[2] It is not easy to understand the exact significance of such statements. Apart from a ruling upon a concrete piece of evidence, they cannot mean much. If they mean that the principles of evidence are to be relaxed or abandoned, they are unsound. If they mean that evidence of System or of Intent is to take a wide range, they are useless except so far as they are reducible to some definite principle, such as those here involved (§§ 301–304, ante). Perhaps they are usually intended to suggest that many apparently innocent parts of a fraudulent scheme must be evidenced before the fraudulent significance of the whole can appear.[3] As to any particular liberty on cross-examination, nothing can be claimed for that situation beyond the general principle applicable to all witnesses (post, § 946).

8. Larceny and Kidnapping

§ 346. Larceny; General Principle. (1) The Knowledge principle (ante, § 301) may occasionally come into application, where the purpose is to show specifically that the defendant was aware that the property was not his own, by showing former acts which must naturally have led to a warning.[1] (2) The Intent principle (ante, § 302) is the one of most frequent application; for the recurrence of similar takings may serve to negative mistake, inadvertance, or good faith at the time charged, because this recurrence cannot be accounted for by the ordinary chances of innocent taking.[2] In this view the other instances offered may be subsequent as well as prior to the time charged.[3] They must occur under circumstances more or less similar, that is, so similar that the chance of innocent recurrence in the same way is lessened.[4] It is in such a case assumed that the act of taking is otherwise proved, and that the Intent is alone aimed at by such evidence. The theory of Anonymous Intent (ante, § 303) is also occasionally applicable; for mistake may be negatived by other instances of the same sort, even though the other instances cannot be connected with the defendant.[5] (3) The System principle (ante, § 304) is applicable where the act of taking is to be proved, and a general system leading up to the act is offered as the basis of infer-

Smalley v. Hale, 37 Mo. 103 ("to disclose its [the transaction's] true character, explain the acts of the parties, and throw light on their objects and intentions"); 1880, Massey v. Young, 73 Mo. 260, 273; 1898, Armagost v. Rising, 54 Nebr. 763, 75 N. W. 534; 1847, Kauffman v. Swars, 5 Pa. St. 31 ("No case of this sort could be made out if it were necessary to dissect the evidence, and show that every part of it was immediately connected with the party to be affected by it"); 1922, Colt & Co. v. Brown, — S. C. —, 110 S. E. 402 (fraud in making a contract); 1895, Leedom v. E. F. & C. Co., 12 Utah 172, 42 Pac. 208.

[2] 1876, Jacobsen v. Metzger, 35 Mich. 103; 1896, Cohen v. Goldberg, 65 Minn. 473, 67 N. W. 1149; 1897, Pincus v. Reynolds, 19 Mont. 564, 49 Pac. 145; 1897, Bennett v. McDonald, 52 Nebr. 278, 72 N. W. 268.

[3] 1861, Woodward, J., in Stauffer v. Young, 39 Pa. 455, 460, suggests that the ordinary doctrines of relevancy are not intended to be varied by such statements.

§ 346. [1] R. v. Bleasdale, Eng.

[2] Compare the quotations ante, § 302.

[3] R. v. May, Eng.

[4] R. v. Ellis, Eng., Dove v. State, Ark., People v. Cunningham, People v. Robles, People v. Lopez, Cal., Williams v. People, Ill., Barton v. People, Oh.

[5] State v. Van Winkle, Ia.

ence; here the other acts should be so connected by common features as to indicate a general plan. Such requisites are seldom fulfilled; and in most of the rulings the prior similar acts are excluded because their sole purpose is to show the doing of the act, and yet they do not fulfil the requirements of the System principle.[6] So far, however, as the object is merely to negative the innocent intent accompanying a proved act, the question should be governed by the Intent principle.

§ 347. Same: State of the Law in the Various Jurisdictions. The precedents in the various jurisdictions illustrate the development of the foregoing principles with more or less consistency.[1]

[6] Lewis v. State, Kan., Shears v. State, Ind., People v. Schweitzer, Mich., State v. Goetz, State v. Reavis, Mo., Cheny v. State, Oh., Walker's Case, Va., Schaser v. State, Wis.

§ 347. [1] ENGLAND: 1826, R. v. Ellis, 6 B. & C. 145 (larceny by a clerk; marked shillings were put into the till; the fact of several successive takings from the till on the same day was admitted "to show the character" of the act); 1845, R. v. May, 1 Cox Cr. 236 (larceny of money on the 9th by a servant in a shop; a larceny from the same till on the 13th was admitted, apparently to negative the idea of the money being placed on the defendant's person by others); 1848, R. v. Bleasdale, 2 C. & K. 765 (larceny of coal by cutting beyond the boundary-line beneath the surface; to show that the trespass was knowing, the fact was received of similar cuttings into the land of 30 other proprietors); 1858, R. v. Southwood, 1 F. & F. 356 (to show the stealing of three books of account, the fact of the destruction of another was held not "material"; "it would be merely bad conduct in one instance inducing a probability of bad conduct in another"); 1864, R. v. Reardon, 4 F. & F. 79 (other larcenies, admitted to negative mistake); 1911, Adamson's Case, 6 Cr. App. 205 (larceny by trick; similar offence a week later, admitted).

CANADA: 1897, R. v. McBerny, 29 N. Sc. 327, 328 (larceny by trick; other similar acts, admitted); 1916, R. v. Doyle, 28 D. L. R. 649, N. Sc. (stealing; questions to a witness about another and later theft by the accused, not connected with the offence charged, held improper, though no objection was made by accused's counsel; a new trial was ordered); 1916, Rivet v. The King, 27 D. L. R. 695, Que. (theft; other thefts admitted, on the facts); 1921, R. v. Doughty, 64 D. L. R. 423, Ont. (theft of bonds of S.; a former plan to extort money from S., admitted to evidence intent).

UNITED STATES: Federal: 1907, Chitwood v. U. S., 8th C. C. A., 153 Fed. 551 (secreting and stealing mail contents; defendant's destruction of mail by burning shortly before, admitted to evidence intent);
Alabama: 1839, State v. Wisdom, 8 Port. 511, 516 (negro-stealing; that the defendant was seen talking with other slaves shortly before, excluded); 1921, Dennison v. State, 17 Ala. App. 674, 88 So. 211 (larceny of an automobile; larceny of another automobile several months before and at a different place, excluded);
Arkansas: 1881, Dove v. State, 37 Ark. 261, 263 (larceny of a horse by a boy, who claimed that he had merely jumped on the horse and run away to escape a whipping from his father; evidence that the defendant had taken a bridle from another person, at an unspecified time and place, excluded); 1881, Endaily v. State, 39 Ark. 278, 280 (larceny of horses; larceny at the same time of a saddle and a bridle, taken from other persons and put on the horses, not admitted to show intent); 1920, Pearrow v. State, 146 Ark. 201, 225 S. W. 308 (larceny; similar crimes at same place, admitted to test credibility);
California: 1868, People v. Robles, 34 Cal. 591, 593 (larceny of sheep of R.; the fact of the theft of W.'s sheep, which were herded with R.'s, driven off and sold by the same persons, admitted as indicating intent); 1881, People v. Lopez, 59 Cal. 362 (finding of other horses, disappearing at the same time, in the defendant's possession, admitted); 1885, People v. Cunningham, 66 Cal. 668, 4 Pac. 1144, 6 Pac. 700, 846 (larceny of cattle; the defence being innocent purchase from a third person, the fact was admitted in rebuttal that cattle of another person were stolen from the same premises at the same time and found in the defendant's possession; Thornton, J., diss.); 1894, People v. Fehrenbach, 102 Cal. 394, 36 Pac. 678 (taking money deposited with a confederate; defendant's attempts to induce another to deposit in the same way, admitted);
Colorado: 1897, Housh v. People, 24 Colo. 262, 50 Pac. 1036 (larceny of sheep by fraud; similar transaction with another person at the same time, admitted to show intent);
Columbia (Dist.): 1905, Ryan v. U. S., 26 D. C. App. 74, 83 (larceny of a trunk; possession of a forged letter, held inadmissible); Delaware: 1910, State v. Effler, 25 Del. 92, 78 Atl. 411 (larceny by trick; similar tricks with other persons about the same time, admitted); 1913, Effler v. State, 27 Del. 62, 85 Atl. 731 (conspiracy to steal by trick; similar trick three months later, done upon another person, excluded; clearly unsound; the opinion misconceives the distinction between intent and identity);

Florida: 1903, Baldwin v. State, 46 Fla. 115, 35 So. 220 (larceny of grain; other acts forming part of a plan, admitted);
Illinois: 1897, Williams v. People, 166 Ill. 132, 46 N. E. 749 (assault with intent to steal; previous larcenies about the same place and time, admitted to show a general plan of picking pockets during the presence of a circus); 1902, Bishop v. People, 194 Ill. 365, 62 N. E. 785 (larceny of wire; defendant's stealing of another lot of wire, shortly before, excluded);
Indiana: 1871, Bonsall v. State, 35 Ind. 461 (larceny; robbery of the same person on the next day, excluded); 1897, Shears v. State, 147 Ind. 51, 46 N. E. 331 (other larcenies, not admissible to show the fact of commission of the larceny charged; nor even to show intent where as here "proof of the commission as charged carries with it the evident implication of a criminal intent"; wrong on both points, and of no value); 1916, Hawkins v. State, 185 Ind. 147, 113 N. E. 232 (conspiracy to commit larceny); 1921, Zimmerman v. State, — Ind. —, 130 N. E. 235 (larceny of automobile; another offence of the kind, admitted);
Indian Territory: 1905, Clampitt v. U. S., 6 Ind. T. 92, 89 S. W. 666 (larceny; possession of other similar stolen property, admissible);
Iowa: 1890, State v. Van Winkle, 80 Ia. 15, 18, 45 N. W. 388 (larceny of cattle; the stealing of other cattle from the owner in question at the same time, admitted as indicating that the cattle charged to have been stolen had not strayed but had been stolen); 1902, State v. Wackernagel, 118 Ia. 12, 91 N. W. 761 (larceny of hogs; larceny of harness, excluded on the facts); 1905, Bank of Irwin v. American Exp. Co., 127 Ia. 1, 102 N. W. 107 (loss of a package of money; that the bank had suffered recently from thefts of an unknown employee, excluded); 1906, Mier v. Phillips F. Co., 130 Ia. 570, 107 N. W. 621 (action for coal mined by the defendant underneath the plaintiff's land by crossing the boundary of the defendant's land; the fact that defendant had also mined under H.'s land adjacent was excluded; the present principles are ignored; R. v. Bleasdale, supra, not cited);
Kansas: 1868, Lewis v. State, 4 Kan. 306 (larceny; the fact admitted of the careful arrangement of the premises for concealing goods, the finding of many stolen articles secreted, etc., as showing "a combination between the appellant and the others to carry on a general stealing business"); 1883, State v. Thurtell, 29 Kan. 148 (larceny; the defendant's belonging to a gang of horse-thieves, excluded, because shown by reputation only, but also — this seems incorrect — irrespective of the mode of proof);
Louisiana: 1894, State v. Bates, 46 La. An. 849, 15 So. 204 (another larceny at a different time and place, excluded); 1898, State v. Marceaux, 50 La. An. 1137, 24 So. 611 (defendant's admissions of former similar larcenies and of a plan to continue them, admitted);
Maine: 1855, Pike v. Crehore, 40 Me. 503, 511 (to disprove the receipt of money sent by mail in September, 1834, the fact was offered of the finding in 1836, in the house inhabited in September, 1834, by the letter-carrier delivering letters at the alleged payee's town, of secreted letters, dated 1834, directed to persons in that town, and opened; excluded);
Maryland: 1921, McClelland v. State, 138 Md. 533, 114 Atl. 584 (jewelry; other larcenies by defendant from the same store in a series of visits, admitted to show "a common design or system");
Michigan: 1871, People v. Schweitzer, 23 Mich. 301 (prior larceny of other articles from the same person, excluded); 1894, People v. Machen, 101 Mich. 401, 404, 59 N. W. 664 (pocket-larceny; that the defendant shortly before was seen feeling in other persons' pockets, admitted to show intent); 1905, Seymour v. Bruske, 140 Mich. 244, 103 N. W. 613 (conversion of logs; defendant's "general business of converting the logs of other people in this lake", excluded; erroneous); 1921, People v. Di Pietro, 214 Mich. 507, 183 N. W. 22 (larceny of automobile; sale of other cars by defendant, admitted to show a scheme, etc.);
Minnesota: 1919, State v. Monroe, 142 Minn. 394, 172 N. W. 313 (larceny of an automobile; other similar acts showing system, admitted);
Missouri: 1863, State v. Goetz, 34 Mo. 85, 90 (larceny; other larcenies on the same day, about the same hour, and in stores near by, excluded, no connection being shown between the different felonies); 1880, State v. Reavis, 71 Mo. 421 (larceny of cattle; other larcenies of cattle excluded); 1922, State v. Kolafa, — Mo. —, 236 S. W. 303 (larceny of automobiles);
Montana: 1906, State v. Allen, Mont. 503, 87 Pac. 177 (larceny of horses; other larcenies of horses about the same time, admitted);
Nebraska: 1898, Davis v. State, 54 Nebr. 177, 74 N. W. 599 (larceny by bailee; fraudulent borrowing from a third person while using the horse taken, not received to show intent);
New Mexico: 1909, Terr. v. West, 14 N. Mex. 546, 99 Pac. 343 (larceny of a horse; stealing and selling of other horses, admitted); 1916, State v. Pino, 21 N. M. 660, 158 Pac. 131 (larceny; stealing of other cattle in the same herd, admitted; it was "but one single transaction");
New York: 1913, People v. Katz, 209 N. Y. 311, 103 N. E. 305 (larceny by manipulation of stocks; similar proposal made about the same time, admitted to show intent);
North Carolina: 1919, State v. Stancill, 178 N. C. 683, 100 S. E. 241 (larceny of tobacco from L.; larceny of tobacco from W., admitted as part of a series of transactions showing a general design); 1919, State v. Mincher, 178 N. C. 698, 100 S. E. 339 (larceny of a watch and money; State v. Stancill followed);

§ 348. Same: Sundry Limitations. (1) Throughout the preceding topics it has been seen that under the Intent theory the purpose was to negative innocent intent; if the jury find the act proved, they are to use the evidence in question to determine the Intent. It is immaterial that mistake or inadvertence has not been expressly set up by the defendant; for the prosecution is bound as a part of its case to prove the criminal intent and therefore to negative innocent intent; for example, if the jury on retiring agreed that the taking had been proved, and then proceeded to determine the intent, they might find themselves without sufficient evidence, if these former acts were not before them as a part of the evidence. It is therefore an error to suppose that the evidence under the Intent principle is only available after the defendant has expressly suggested mistake or inadvertence as his exoneration.[1]

No doubt it would be fairer to the cause of the defendant to exclude the evidence, if he does not propose to make any issue as to intent or inadvertence.

Ohio: 1833, Cheny v. State, 7 Oh., Pt. 1, 222 (larceny of a horse; subsequent engagement of the defendant with others "in one line as horse-thieves", excluded); 1849, Barton v. State, 18 Oh. 221 (a larceny of money from E., on the night before the alleged stealing of a horse from T., not admitted to show intent);
Oklahoma: 1899, Beberstein v. Terr., 8 Okl. 467, 58 Pac. 641 (larceny; other larcenies forming part of a general plan, admitted); 1921, Williamson v. State, — Okl. Cr. —, 200 Pac. 462 (larceny of meat; a "series of other similar larcenies" by defendant in the neighborhood, excluded on the facts);
Oregon: 1888, State v. Harding, 16 Or. 493 (larceny: that the defendant, while going to the place, assaulted a co-conspirator, admitted); 1900, State v. Savage, 36 Or. 191, 60 Pac. 610 (larceny from an express company; instances of a former plan to rob an express car of the same company, admitted);
Tennessee: 1884, Links v. State, 9 Lea 701, 712 (larceny by substituting a cheap ring for a valuable one in a jeweller's tray, while the jeweller was attending to another matter, the defendant having at the time purchased another cheap ring and left it for engraving; the fact of two similar acts in other stores, one in another State, admitted to negative mistake; compare State v. Defreese, ante, § 321);
Texas: Gilbrait v. State, 41 Tex. 567 (larceny of a bull; larceny of a steer belonging to another person, excluded, chiefly because the record showed the conditions and purpose of its use too imperfectly); 1892, Nixon v. State, 31 Tex. Cr. 205, 208, 20 S. W. 364 (larceny of a horse; prior possession and sale of other horses stolen from another place, excluded); 1898, Unsell v. State, 39 Tex. Cr. 330, 45 S. W. 1022 (theft of cattle; prior thefts of cattle, excluded on the facts); 1898, Holt v. State, 39 Tex. Cr. 282, 46 S. W. 829 (larceny; another larceny admitted on the facts); 1919, Mueller v. State, 85 Tex. Cr. App. 346, 215 S. W. 93 (larceny of cattle; theft of other cattle at the same time, admitted); 1921, Hunt v. State, 89 Tex. Cr. 89, 229 S. W. 870 (larceny of automobile; theft of other automobiles, not admitted on the facts);
Utah: 1913, State v. Bowen, 43 Utah 111, 134 Pac. 623 (larceny of a cow from B.; theft of five other cattle and a horse, as shown by the defendant's possession of their hides, without showing that any of them were stolen, held inadmissible; the opinion carelessly fails to make clear whether the other thefts, if duly evidenced, would have been admissible);
Vermont: 1892, State v. Kelley, 65 Vt. 531, 27 Atl. 203 (larceny; other stealings on the same trip of a wagon, admitted);
Virginia: 1829, Walker's Case, 1 Leigh 574 (larceny of a watch, chain, and key from T.'s house; the fact of the defendant's stealing on the same day a cloak from T.'s house, rejected);
Washington: 1901, State v. Gottfreedson, 24 Wash. 398, 64 Pac. 523 (larceny of a horse; defendant's larceny of another horse turned on the range with the former, excluded; unsound);
Wisconsin: 1874, Schaser v. State, 36 Wis. 429 (a former larceny from another person, excluded);
Wyoming: 1920, State v. Jones, 27 Wyo. 46, 191 Pac. 1075 (larceny; possession of other goods not shown to have been stolen, not admitted);

For other instances, compare the citations of larceny by trick, under false pretences (ante, § 321), of larcenies forming inseparable parts of an act (ante, § 218), and of larcenies identifying the goods taken (post, § 415).

§ 348. [1] 1894, People v. Tucker, 104 Cal. 449, 38 Pac. 195 (larceny of money from L. on Jan. 18; another larceny of money from L. on Jan. 17, offered to negative a defence that the taking on Jan. 18 was done to preserve L.'s money as a friend; excluded because no such defence was made).

But if the State should therefore wait till the defendant's case was put in, so as to find out whether such an issue is to be met by him, the State would then presumably be met by his objection that new matter cannot be first introduced on rebuttal (post, § 1873), and would thus be prevented from using the evidence at all. Either, then, (a) the rule for the scope of rebuttal must be liberally construed for the State in such cases; or (b) the accused must be required to announce, before the State closes, whether he will make an issue on the point of Intent (both of which alternatives seem improbable of acceptance); or (c) the rule must stand as stated above.[2]

(2) The defendant may equally resort to former acts as indicating a general honest purpose, provided there is similarity enough in the occasions to make the former acts relevant by the general principle.[3]

§ 349. Kidnapping and Enticement. On a charge of kidnapping, enticement to escape, or the like, the analogies of proof of larceny are applicable.[1]

9. Robbery, Burglary, and Extortion

§ 351. Robbery and Burglary; General Principle. (1) No opportunity seems here to arise for the application of the Knowledge principle (ante, § 301). (2) The Intent principle (ante, § 302) allows the use of another similar act wherever, assuming the act to be otherwise proved and the intent to be in issue, the recurrence of the act negatives the possibility of mistake or good faith.[1] (3) The System principle (ante, § 304) assumes that the act itself is to be proved and purposes to infer its probability from the existence of a general design or system; the other acts offered to show this should be so connected as to indicate a common design; but this requirement is often not met.[2]

[2] The above qualification was called forth by comments by H. H. Coleman, Esq., of Vicksburg, Miss.

[3] 1897, Hendry v. State, 39 Fla. 235, 22 So. 647 (larceny of cattle; a custom of cattle-owners to drive off and sell friends' cattle with their own, not admitted, where the defendant was not a friend of the owner of the cattle taken); 1869, Foster v. People, 18 Mich. 266, 277 (larceny of a horse; an attempt by the defendant, within six months before, to purchase a horse, not admitted to show honest intent, the defence being that the horse was purchased, not stolen).

§ 349. [1] 1849, Taylor v. Horsey, 5 Harringt. Del. 131 (business as a negro trader, admitted to show the intent of purchase, under a statute forbidding purchase with intent to export); 1841, Com. v. Turner, 3 Metc. Mass. 19 (kidnapping with intent to transport, the taking of the child not being disputed; the fact of the defendant's attempt on the previous day to get possession of another child, admitted to show his intent); 1913, People v. Pettanza, 207 N. Y. 560, 101 N. E. 428 (kidnapping; kidnapping of another boy, not admitted, on the facts); 1839, State v. Ford, 3 Strobh. S. C. 517 (indictment for stealing slaves; the fact received of an unsuccessful solicitation by the defendant to the witness, two years before, to undertake such work; O'Neall, J.; "Remoteness of time, where the party made declarations pointing to this corrupt intention, cannot render the evidence incompetent. . . . If it could be shown that he had thrown out dark hints to others who had declined, might it not be considered as the natural consequence that his solicitations would be followed up until he found his man?"); 1848, Cole v. Com., 5 Gratt. Va. 696 (advising slaves belonging to E. L. to escape; evidence of a similar advising of slaves belonging to other persons, excluded).

For enticement to prostitution, see post, §§ 357, 401.

§ 351. [1] Kidd's Trial, R. v. Briggs, Eng., People v. McGilver, Cal., State v. Cowell, Nev., State v. Desroches, La.

[2] Mason v. State, Ala., Ford v. State, Ark., Com. v. Scott, Mass., Lightfoot v. People, Mich., State v. Greenwade, Mo., Swan v. Com., Pa.

(4) The principle of Inseparableness (ante, § 218) will sometimes admit evidence of other offences inseparable from the narrative of the substantive act charged.[3]

In general the considerations applicable to the preceding topic (Larceny) are also here applicable.[4]

[3] 1849, Com. v. Williams, 2 Cush. Mass. 584 (burglary; the possession of a large number of burglar's tools was shown, but some of them were not fitted to the commission of the particular offence; admitted, because they were part of the mass or parcel, "without sanctioning the admission of evidence merely tending to show that the defendant had in his possession instruments adapted to the commission of other crimes"); 1905, State v. Rudolph, 187 Mo. 67, 85 S. W. 584 (murder during robbery; the deceased's presence under a warrant for the accused for another robbery, admitted).

[4] ENGLAND: 1696, Captain Vaughan's Trial, 13 How. St. Tr. 499 (treason by cruising under the French flag in the "Loyal Clencarty", with intent to capture English subjects and vessels; after proving the cruising in that vessel, the prosecution offered to show "that during this war, before and after the treason laid in the indictment, he was a cruiser upon and taker of the king's ships, and this fortifies the direct proof given of the intention; . . . we would produce collateral evidence, to induce a firmer belief of that special overt act, by showing you that he hath made it his practice during the war to aid and assist the king's enemies"; L. C. J. Holt: "I cannot agree to that . . . ; because a man has a design to commit depredation on the king's subjects in one ship, does that prove that he had an intention to do it in another?"; this ruling is clearly wrong, and is entirely inconsistent with the next one); 1701, Captain Kidd's Trial, 14 How. St. Tr. 154, 182 (piracy; the defendant was commissioned by the king in 1696 to destroy the pirates in the Indian seas, but was now charged with piracy in those regions; he admitted the capture of the ship as charged, but pleaded that it was done under his commission; to disprove this lawful intent, evidence was given of a series of previous and subsequent maraudings on the same voyage; L. C. B. Ward: "The seeming justification he depends on is his commissions. Now it must be observed how he acted with relation to them, and what irregularities he went by; . . . what he did before shows his mind and intention not to act by his commissions, which warrant no such things. . . . Now no man knows the mind and intention of another but as it may be discovered by his actions"); 1796, R. v. Vandercomb, 2 Leach 4th ed. 708 (burglary; a previous larceny from the same house, rejected); 1839, R. v. Briggs, 2 Moo. & Rob. 199, Alderson, B. (robbery; the fact received of the robbery by the defendant of another person at the same place a short time in hours before).

UNITED STATES: Alabama: 1868, Mason v. State, 42 Ala. 532 (the fact admitted of a series of other burglaries by the defendant and others under similar conditions, during the same week, and in the same region); 1921, Weathers v. U. S., 9th C. C. A., 112 Atl. 254) assault with intent to rob; other similar prior assaults, admitted to show intent);
Arkansas: 1879, Ford v. State, 34 Ark. 649 (murder committed during a robbery of B.; the fact received of a general plan to rob the stores of B., C., and J.); 1915, Davis v. State, 117 Ark. 296, 174 S. W. 567 (burglary; other burglaries the same night by the same persons in the same town, admitted);
California: 1874, People v. Dubois, 48 Cal. 551 (burglary; another burglary of the same room on the night before, excluded); 1885, People v. McGilver, 67 Cal. 55, 56, 7 Pac. 49 (burglary; that the defendant was arrested while breaking into another store and that burglar's tools were found upon him, admitted);
Illinois: 1921, People v. Armstrong, 299 Ill. 349, 132 N. E. 547 (burglary; other burglaries, by deft and a co-indictee, admitted on the facts);
Indiana: 1893, Frazier v. State, 135 Ind. 38, 41, 34 N. E. 817 (other burglaries by the defendant on the same night, admitted to show that he "was out on a mission of burglary");
Iowa: 1903, State v. Berger, 121 Ia. 581, 96 N. W. 1094 (burglary of a railroad car; sundry prior misdoings, excluded); 1904, State v. Donavan, 125 Ia. 239, 101 N. W. 122 (burglary; the finding of goods stolen from other parties, admitted);
Kansas: 1913, State v. Wheeler, 89 Kan. 160, 130 Pac. 656 (burglary; other burglaries, with which the defendant was not shown to be associated, held improperly admitted);
Louisiana: 1896, State v. Desroches, 48 La. An. 428, 19 So. 250 (breaking and entering with intent to rob; a shooting at the same time, admitted to show intent);
Massachusetts: 1877, Com. v. Scott, 123 Mass. 225, 234 (robbery of the Northampton Bank; the fact received of various criminal doings showing a general plan to rob banks, and in particular the one in question);
Michigan: 1868, Lightfoot v. People, 16 Mich. 507, 510 (burglary; a former burglary of the same house within a year, excluded); 1901, People v. Henry, 129 Mich. 100, 88 N. W. 77 (breaking and entering; convictions of larceny on two former unconnected occasions, excluded); 1909, People v. Burke, 157 Mich. 108, 121 N. W. 282 (blowing up a bank; conviction for a similar crime in 1904 in Indiana, excluded);

§ 352. Extortion and Blackmail (Robbery by Threatening Demands). The principles that here apply are those of Knowledge and of Intent. (1) It may be argued that the successful obtaining of money on a former occasion by similar means tends to show the acquisition of knowledge that money can be obtained in this way (ante, § 301). This argument, however, as here applied,[1] seems somewhat forced; such knowledge being a matter of common understanding and not needing to be proved. (2) It is clear, however, that the Intent argument is entirely applicable, i.e. the doing of similar acts at other times tends to negative the supposition that the demand on the occasion charged was made in good faith (for example, with a genuine desire to obtain compensation for supposed injuries). This use of such evidence is generally sanctioned.[2]

Mississippi: 1898, McGee v. State, — Miss. —, 22 So. 890 (robbery; independent assault committed at the same time and place by the defendant's employer upon another person, excluded);
Missouri: 1880, State v. Greenwade, 72 Mo. 300 (the robbery of H. was planned, and L. being mistaken for H. was first robbed; the fact of the plan and the robbery of H., admitted on the charge of robbing L.); 1903, State v. Spray, 174 Mo. 569, 74 S. W. 846 (robbery; another robbery near by and about the same time of night, excluded); 1907, State v. Toohey, 203 Mo. 674, 102 S. W. 530 (burglary of a sleeping-car; burglary of another car, coupled to the former, at the same time, admitted); 1919, State v. Cummins, 279 Mo. 192, 213 S. W. 969 (other burglaries of a co-conspirator admitted, on the facts); 1917, State v. Patterson, 271 Mo. 99, 196 S. W. 3 (robbery; attempt at extortion from B. in a similar manner, admitted);
Nevada: 1877, State v. Cowell, 12 Nev. 337 (burglary of A.'s house; the fact admitted, to show intent, that a few days beforehand the defendant had planned with others to rob A. on the street and desisted only because they learned that he had no money about him);
New Jersey: 1898, Leonard v. State, 60 N. J. L. 8, 41 Atl. 561 (possession of burglar's tools; conviction of larceny, and suspicious conduct near a dwelling, excluded);
New York: 1880, Hope v. People, 83 N. Y. 419, 423, 428 (robbery of the key of a bank; evidence admitted of two prior unsuccessful attempts by the defendant to rob the same bank, as indicating with other facts a general plan with other persons to rob the bank, the latter robbery being shown to have been committed by the key-robbers); 1904, People v. Loomis, 178 N. Y. 400, 70 N. E. 919 (confession of another burglary, not admitted on the facts); 1921, People v. Hassan, Sup. App. Div., 187 N. Y. Suppl. 115 (larceny and burglary; other prior crimes excluded, on the facts);
North Carolina: 1916, State v. Fowler, 172 N. C. 905, 90 S. E. 408 (burglary; other recent house-breakings, excluded on the facts);
Ohio: Coble v. State, 31 Oh. St. 100 (assault with intent to rob; an assault upon another person in the same vicinity about five minutes later, not admitted to show intent);
Oklahoma: 1917, Miller v. State, 13 Okl. Cr. 176, 163 Pac. 131 (robbery; another robbery the night before, excluded);
Pennsylvania: 1883, Swan v. Com., 104 Pa. 218 (robbery of a store of B. on the night of September 13; the fact of the defendant's complicity in a robbery of the house of R., "about the same time", in the same township, rejected, because there was no "system established between the offence on trial and that introduced, to connect it with the defendant");
Texas: 1894, Dawson v. State, 32 Tex. Cr. 535, 552, 25 S. W. 21 (prior and subsequent burglaries, admitted on the facts); 1898, Long v. State, 39 Tex. Cr. 537, 47 S. W. 363 (other burglaries in the neighborhood about the same time, excluded); 1903, Glenn v. State, — Tex. Cr. —, 76 S. W. 757 (burglary; other anonymous burglaries of the same house, excluded); 1907, Herndon v. State, 50 Tex. Cr. 552, 99 S. W. 558 (burglary; possession of goods stolen from another house, excluded on the facts);
Washington: 1902, State v. Norris, 27 Wash. 453, 67 Par. 983 (burglary of an adjacent house on the same night, admitted);
Wisconsin: 1881, Neubrandt v. State, 53 Wis. 89, 91, 9 N. W. 824 (breaking with intent to steal B.'s goods; the taking of goods of other persons from the same house at the same time, admitted to show the intent).

§ 352. [1] In R. v. Cooper, Eng., infra; quoted ante, § 301.

[2] ENGLAND: 1758, Barnard's Trial, 19 How. St. Tr. 825 (charge of sending threatening letters; a series of them offered; objection, not passed on, that "one felony, whoever it may affect, cannot be evidence of another felony"); 1830, R. v. Winkworth, 4 C. & P. 444, Parke, J. (robbery by demanding money under threats of violence; the accused, one of a mob in front of the prosecutor's house, came up and civilly advised him to give them money to get rid of them; to show that this was not bona fide

10. Arson

§ 354. General Principle; State of the Law in the Various Jurisdictions. (1) The Knowledge principle (ante, § 301) has here usually no scope for application.[1] (2) The Intent principle (ante, § 302) is constantly applied. Where the act itself is conceded or otherwise proved, and the subject is to negative inadvertence or accident, the recurrence of similar acts of firing by the defendant tends to diminish the possibility of an innocent explanation.[2] Moreover, the principle of Anonymous Intent (ante, § 303) is recognized as being here occasionally of peculiar utility; i.e. the recurrence of a similar fire may tend decidedly to negative innocent intent, even though the author of the other fires is not shown; thus, the prosecution having negatived innocent intent in the present fire by whomsoever set, the defendant may be advice, the fact was received of similar demands made at other houses on the same day by the same mob when the defendant was with it); 1819, R. v. Egerton, R. & R. 375, by all the Judges (robbery by threats of charging the prosecutor with sodomy; the fact of another attempt by the same threats on the next evening to rob the prosecutor was admitted "as confirmatory of the truth of the prosecutor's evidence, as to the transaction of the former day and as to the nature of those transactions"); 1849, R. v. Cooper, 3 Cox Cr. 547, Cresswell, J. (charge of feloniously accusing a person of an unnatural crime with intent to extort money; the fact offered of former obtaining of money by similar methods, as told by the accused to a comrade; admitted, to show knowledge of the likelihood of money being offered); 1855, R. v. McDonnell, 5 Cox Cr. 153, Erle, J. (excluding a former instance of a similar charge because the intent was clear here, if the prosecutor was to be believed at all); 1914, Boyle's and Merchant's Case, 10 Cr. App. 180 (blackmail by a newspaper editor; a similar transaction within a year, threatening another person, admitted, to negative "mistake or accident or absence of criminal intent"); 1914, R. v. Boyle and Merchant, 3 K. B. 339 (demanding money by threats; similar act two months previous, done to another person, held admissible to show intent);

UNITED STATES: California: 1898, People v. Lambert, 120 Cal. 170, 52 Pac. 307 (prosecutrix for rape by her father, allowed to be asked whether she had not planned to "put up jobs" on him to get him into prison and thus be free from control); Florida: 1899, Wallace v. State, 41 Fla. 547, 26 So. 713 (blackmail by threatening to accuse A. of keeping a bawdy-house; similar threats to other similar women, admitted to show intent); Illinois: 1903, Glover v. People, 204 Ill. 170, 68 N. E. 464 (maliciously threatening to kill, with intent to extort money, defendant's prior arrest, etc., of the person threatened, and his demand for money, admitted, as showing the parties' "previous relations"); Indiana: 1907, Eacock v. State, 169 Ind. 488, 82 N. E. 1039 (conspiracy to blackmail K.; other conspiracies to blackmail, admitted); Iowa: 1895, State v. Lewis, 96 Ia. 286, 65 N. W. 295 (extortion of money by a newspaper publisher; previous instances of extortion from other persons, admitted merely to show guilty intent); Massachusetts: 1893, Miller v. Curtis, 158 Mass. 127, 131, 32 N. E. 1039 (stated ante, § 340); Nebraska: 1908, State v. Routzahn, 81 Nebr. 133, 115 N. W. 759 (blackmail, by a chief of police, levied on a prostitute; the payment of such sums to the defendants by other prostitutes, held admissible); New York: 1921, People v. Ryan, 232 N. Y. 234, 133 N. E. 572 (blackmail by letters; sending of similar letters to other persons about the same time, admitted, but not the burning of another store, on the facts); Pennsylvania: 1893, Com. v. Saulsbury, 152 Pa. 554, 558, 25 Atl. 610 (extortion by a constable; similar obtaining of money from another person, excluded; clearly erroneous); Tennessee: 1848, Britt v. State, 9 Humph. 31 (the prosecutor was a stranger and the defendant was charged with obtaining money from him by false pretences that the prosecutor had passed counterfeit money and false pretences of having a warrant against him; to negative good faith, the fact was received of the defendant's having followed the prosecutor the next day into the adjoining country and extorted other money, etc., by falsely claiming that the latter had stolen his overcoat; citing R. v. Winkworth and R. v. Egerton); Washington: 1915, State v. Schuman, 89 Wash. 9, 153 Pac. 1084 (policeman accepting hush-money from prostitute; receipt of money from other prostitutes, admitted);

For some analogous cases, see the citations under False Claims, ante, § 340, and Impeachment of Witnesses, post, § 963.

§ 354. [1] It may have, where knowledge of the nature of combustible materials is to be shown.

[2] R. v. Dosset, Eng., Com. v. McCarthy, Com. v. Bradford, Mass.

shown to have kindled it.[3] (3) The System principle (ante, § 304) supposes the act itself of setting the fire to be desired to be proved, and accepts former acts of the kind as admissible to show a design or system from which the setting of the fire charged may be inferred, provided the other acts have common features indicating a common plan.[4] For this purpose, however (ante, § 304), the defendant's connection with the previous fires must be shown.[5] The disinclination of the Courts to resort to this System principle, and their aptness, when using its rigorous test, to misapply it to evidence of mere Intent, have been already spoken of (ante, § 304), and are to be disapproved.[6]

[3] R. v. Bailey, R. v. Gray, R. v. Nattrass, Eng., Faucett v. Nicholls, People v. Murphy, N. Y., State v. Thompson, N. C.

[4] R. v. Taylor, Eng., Martin v. State, Ala., State v. Raymond, N. J., Kramer v. Com., Pa., State v. Ward, Vt., State v. Miller, Wis.

[5] R. v. Reagan, Eng., People v. Kennedy, N. Y., State v. Freeman, N. C.

[6] The precedents are as follows: ENGLAND: 1839, R. v. Howell, 3 State Tr. N. S. 1087, 1098 (felonious burning at a riot; preceding burning of another house, admitted as evidence of a riot but not of design to burn the house charged); 1846, R. v. Dosset, 2 Cox Cr. 243, 2 C. & K. 306 (a hayrick had been fired by the discharge of a gun in the prisoner's hand; the facts of the rick having been fired the day before and the prisoner being seen near it with a gun were admitted; Maule, J.: "It is only by the conduct of the prisoner that a judgment can be formed whether the act was accidental or intentional"); 1850, R. v. Regan, 4 Cox Cr. 335 (the fact that the accused had given notice of other fires and claimed the rewards in the present case was apparently rejected as not strong enough); 1851, R. v. Taylor, 5 Cox Cr. 138 (evidence tending to show the accused's share in other rick-fires of the same night, excluded, except as bearing on his conduct as to the fire in question; the ruling seems erroneous, for part of the evidence was a threat "to light B. from end to end", and thus a general connection between the fires was supplied); 1866, R. v. Gray, 4 F. & F. 1102 (indictment for setting fire to the defendant's own house, with intent to obtain insurance-money; the fact was received, to negative accident, of the occurrence of fires in two of the defendant's former houses and of his claiming and receiving the insurance-money on both, though no evidence of the cause of these fires or of the defendant's connection with them was offered); 1882, R. v. Nattrass, 15 Cox Cr. 73 (charge of attempt to burn the house by setting fire to articles so that the house would catch fire; the fact was received that on the same day articles were found on fire at four different times in different parts of the house.

CANADA: 1911, R. v. Wilson, 4 Alta. 35 (arson to defraud; proposal to lure a third person, nine months before, to burn a building of the defendant, admitted).

UNITED STATES: Federal: 1914, Fish v. U. S., 1st C. C. A., 215 Fed. 545 (arson of a yacht for insurance, in October, 1910; the burning of another yacht by the defendant in October, 1909, and of an automobile in September, 1910, under similar circumstances as to insurance, etc., not admitted); Alabama: 1855, Brock v. State, 26 Ala. 104 (a subsequent firing of the same person's property, excluded; the point not raised); 1856, Martin v. State, 28 Ala. 71, 82 (arson with intent to defraud; a previous attempt to hire some one to burn the same house, admitted); 1904, Mitchell v. State, 140 Ala. 118, 37 So. 76 (arson of H.'s house; the arson of the house of H.'s brother on the same night, admitted); Arkansas: 1915, Shuffield v. State, 120 Ark. 458, 179 S. W. 650 (arson; defendant's burning of other premises the same night, admitted, but not his prior conviction for stealing chickens); Hawaii: 1900, Merricourt v. Norwalk F. Ins. Co., 13 Haw. 218, 224 (arson of one's own house in fraud of insurance; questions as to prior fire-losses of the plaintiff, excluded; no rule defined); Indiana: 1914, Kahn v. State, 182 Ind. 1, 105 N. E. 385 (arson; another fire in defendant's premises, five years before, excluded); Kentucky: 1906, Raymond v. Com., 123 Ky. 368, 96 S. W. 515 (arson of the barn of V., landlord of R.; the defendant was subtenant of R., and had been evicted by R. at the instigation of V.; the burning of R.'s barn four weeks before, excluded; flagrantly erroneous, the defendant having threatened to get even with both R. and V.; Hobson, C. J., diss.); 1917, Allen v. Com., 176 Ky. 475, 196 S. W. 160 (arson of tobacco barn; arson of other tobacco barns, admitted); Maryland: 1917, Freud v. State, 129 Md. 636, 99 Atl. 934 (fraudulent arson; plans for setting other fires, admitted); Massachusetts: 1876, Com. v. McCarthy, 119 Mass. 355 (arson on Sept. 10; to show intent only, the fact was admitted of a setting fire by the defendant on Aug. 24 and Sept. 6 to a shed ten feet distant from but connected with the building in question); 1878, Com. v. Bradford, 126 Mass. 42 (arson; the fact of the defendant's setting fire to the same mill a few nights before, admitted to show wilfulness and to negative accident or negligence; the Court apparently had in mind the stricter System rule, however, for they say that the evidence indicated "that the defendant then had a settled purpose in regard to it", and that such evidence must be near enough to "afford a presumption" that the design continues; compare this Massachusetts peculiarity, ante, § 321); 1920, Com. v. Leventhal, 236 Mass. 516, 128 N. E. 864 (arson; other burnings a few months before, admitted to show fraudulent intent); Missouri: 1903, State v. Jones, 171 Mo. 401, 71 S. W. 680 (burning of another house, and stealing of a horse, on the same night, admitted); 1918, State v. Bersch, 276 Mo. 397, 207 S. W. 809 (arson; other fires by the same parties, admitted); Nebraska: 1899, Knights v. State, 58 Nebr. 225, 78 N. W. 508 (arson; defendant's setting of other fires in adjacent buildings on the same night, admitted); New Jersey: 1891, State v. Raymond, 53 N. J. L. 260, 264, 21 Atl. 328 (arson in 1888 with intent to defraud; the occurrence of six fires between 1877 and 1883, in buildings in which the defendant was interested, excluded, even as negativing accident, because there was "not the slightest connection between it and them"; wrong application of the System theory); New Mexico: 1905, Palatine Ins. Co. v. Santa Fé M. Co., 13 N. M. 241, 82 Pac. 363 (fraudulent arson; former burning of the plaintiff's goods after increase of insurance, one year and a half before, excluded); New York: 1865, People v. Kennedy, 32 N. Y. 141 (burning of a barn; the defendant was a discharged employee living near by; the fact of an attempt by him to burn the employer's house about the same time was rejected, partly because the defendant was not sufficiently connected with it, partly because "we cannot presume that he burned the barn because we presume that he attempted to burn the house"; no authorities cited); 1876, Faucett v. Nichols, 64 N. Y. 377 (action against an innkeeper for goods lost negligently by fire; defence, that the fire was set by a third person wilfully; to negative the theory of carelessness in the defendant's household and show deliberateness by some one else, the fact was held admissible that on the same night an attempt was made to fire another building, near by, with kerosene, etc., as in the case of the defendant's building; but the Court say, obiter, without citing authorities, that such evidence could not have been admitted in a criminal charge against the defendant); 1892, People v. Murphy, 135 N. Y. 450, 456, 32 N. E. 138 (arson of a barn; the poisoning of the owner's horses, and the mutilation of his carriages, on the same night, where another's were untouched, admitted to show a general though anonymous scheme of destruction, including the barn); 1898, People v. Fitzgerald, 156 N.Y. 253, 50 N. E. 846 (defendant, a trustee of corporate property, was charged with arson of it; the burning of other corporate property and the defendant's private property, more than two years before, not shown to be incendiary, excluded); 1914, People v. Grutz, 212 N. Y. 72, 105 N. E. 843 (arson to obtain insurance-money; complicity in nine other arsons for the same purpose, not admitted on the facts; three judges diss.); North Carolina: 1856, State v. Freeman, 4 Jones L. 5 (two former attempts by the same servant, within a month or so, by setting fire to the same premises, here rejected, because the defendant was not connected with them); 1887, State v. Thompson, 97 N. C. 496, 1 S. E. 921 (arson of an outhouse; attempted burning of the dwelling itself at the same time, admitted as showing that the same person had fired both); 1897, State v. Graham, 121 N. C. 623, 28 S. E. 409 (burning of a landlord's dwelling; the defendant's burning of his former landlord's dwelling, ten months before, excluded); 1902, State v. McCall, 131 N. C. 798, 42 S. E. 894 (arson of a church; arson of a mill shortly before, excluded); Pennsylvania: 1878, Kramer v. Com., 87 Pa. 299 (setting fire to a hotel on May 23; the fires were put out; the fact admitted that on the 25th, the defendant, who was a resident of the hotel at both times, attempted to set fire to the hotel; "the purpose of the first attempt . . . was not complete, for that was to consume the building entirely; being saved, it was clearly the subject of a renewed purpose; and the evidence of this renewed purpose tended strongly to show that the person was the same who had made both attempts"); Philippine Islands: 1913, U. S. v. Evangelista, 24 P. I. 453 (arson; prior setting of another fire, admitted); Vermont: 1878, State v. Smalley, 50 Vt. 738, 750 (other burnings, not passed upon); 1888, State v. Ward, 61 Vt. 181, 17 Atl. 483 (an attempt by the defendant, four weeks previous, to burn the same barn, admitted); 1898, State v. Hallock, 70 Vt. 159, 40 Atl. 51 (arson of L.'s barn by defendant's procurement; an incendiary firing of L.'s dwelling-house six weeks before, admitted, to negative accident, and also to show, with other evidence, the defendant's plan to burn L.'s buildings); Wisconsin: 1879, State v. Miller, 47 Wis. 530, 3 N. W. 31 (forgery and larceny, not admitted on the facts as so intimately connected with the arson charged as to indicate a common purpose in all).

11. Rape, Abortion, and other Sexual Offences

§ 357. Rape; General Principle. (1) Here the Knowledge principle (ante, § 301) has no opportunity for application.

(2) The Intent principle (ante, § 302) clearly applies where the act is assumed as otherwise proved and the intent is in issue; i.e. in such cases, former acts of the kind are relevant to negative the intent as being of any other kind than to commit rape. (a) Where the charge is of assault with intent, the propriety of such evidence cannot be doubted. There should be some limitation of time, but merely to avoid the objection of unfair surprise (ante, § 194). There need be no limitation as to the person assaulted, because the only purpose is to negative any other than the rape-intent, and a previous rape-assault on another woman has equal probative value for that purpose, for it is the general desire to satisfy lust that is involved in this crime, and no particular woman is essential for this. Accordingly, where the charge is assault with intent, former acts of the sort should be received without any limitation except as to time; though the Courts can hardly be said to have accepted this result fully. (b) Where the charge is of rape, the doing of the act being disputed, it is perhaps still theoretically possible that the intent should be in issue; but practically, if the act is proved, there can be no real question as to intent; and therefore the Intent principle has no necessary application. The former acts, if available at all, must be available under the Design principle.

(3) The Design or Plan principle (ante, § 304) requires that the former act or acts should indicate, by common features, a plan or design which tends to show that it was carried out by doing the act charged. Here it is obvious that there is much room for difference of opinion in a given case. The committing of a single previous rape, or rape-attempt, upon another woman may not in itself indicate such a design, — a view carefully examined in the following leading case:

1876, State v. Lapage, 57 N. H. 289, 295, 299, 303. CUSHING, C. J.: "I think we may state the law in the following propositions: (1) It is not permitted to the prosecution to attack the character of the prisoner, unless he first puts that in issue by offering evidence of his good character. (2) It is not permitted to show the defendant's bad character by showing particular acts. (3) It is not permitted to show in the prisoner a tendency or disposition to commit the crime with which he is charged. (4) It is not permitted to give in evidence other crimes of the prisoner, unless they are so connected by circumstances with the particular crime in issue as that the proof of one fact with its circumstances has some bearing upon the issue on trial other than such as is expressed in the foregoing three propositions. . . . It should also be remarked that this being a matter of judgment, it is quite likely that Courts would not always agree, and that some Courts might see a logical connection where others could not. But however extreme the case may be, I think it will be found that the Courts have always professed to put the admission of the testimony on the ground that there was some logical connection between the crime proposed to be proved other than the tendency to commit one crime as manifested by the tendency to commit the other. In the case under consideration, I cannot see any such logical connection, between the commission of the rape upon Julienne Rousse and the murder of Josephine Langmaid, as the law requires. I am unable to see any connection by which from the first crime can be inferred that the respondent was attempting the commission of a rape when he committed the murder, if he did it, other than such inference as I understand the law expressly to exclude." SMITH, J.: "Proof that he committed a rape in Canada, four years previously, upon Julienne Rousse, shows what?

Not that he then had any design or intent to perpetrate a rape four years afterwards upon another woman whom he had never seen or heard of, or in a place two hundred miles distant where he had never been; not that he had then formed a design to rape and murder women whenever he might have opportunity; not that he had ever before or since committed that crime, — but that the defendant had a disposition to commit the crime of rape four years previously. No one will pretend that evidence that the prisoner had committed another murder, in Canada, or Texas, or Europe, could be shown on this trial. One cannot be convicted of murder, by showing that he has at some time and somewhere else committed another murder; or of larceny, by showing that he has committed the crime before, and therefore has an evil disposition inclining him towards that particular crime."

Nevertheless, a single previous act, even upon another woman, may, with other circumstances, give strong indication of a design (not a disposition) to rape; and a previous act of the sort upon the same woman ought in itself usually to be regarded as indicating such a design.

Courts have shown altogether too much hesitation in receiving such evidence.[1] Even when rigorously excluded from any bearing it may have upon § 357. [1] Assault with Intent: ENGLAND: 1913, Rodley's Case, 9 Cr. App. 69, 3 K. B. 468 (burglary with intent to rape; defendant's entry of another house on the same night and having intercourse with a woman, not admitted under the circumstances).

UNITED STATES: Federal: 1916, Hall v. U. S., 9th C. C. A., 235 Fed. 869 (assault upon a female child by her physician; a former similar instance with another child, nearly 3 years before, held inadmissible); California: 1875, People v. Bowen, 49 Cal. 654 (assault with intent to rape a child under ten; intercourse with other children under ten, excluded); Iowa: 1877, State v. Walters, 45 Ia. 389 (assault with intent to rape; other similar assaults upon the same person admitted, but not other similar assaults upon another person); 1899, State v. Desmond, 109 Ia. 72, 80 N. W. 214 (assault with intent to rape; defendant, giving a stage-entertainment, invited the complaining witness and other young girls separately behind the curtain; the facts of rape and other indecencies upon the others at that time, admitted to show intent); Kansas: 1880, State v. Boyland and McCurty, 24 Kan. 186 (assault on B. with intent to rape, by B's husband and a friend M., the husband helping M. violate A.; conduct and expressions of the husband, a few days later, in the presence of B. and M., rejected, though the Court conceded that it showed "a willingness on the part of the husband that the wife might be debauched by the other defendant"; an example of gross failure of justice through misapplication of the legal principles in favor of crime); 1896, State v. Stevens, 56 Kan. 720, 44 Pac. 992 (attempt to rape; evidence of an indecent assault upon the same person two years later, excluded); Wisconsin: 1901, McAllister v. State, 112 Wis. 496, 88 N. W. 212 (assault with intent to rape; similar assault on another woman living three blocks away, one hour before, excluded; unsound); 1903, Barton v. Bruley, 119 Wis. 326, 96 N. W. 815 (indecent assault; defendant's prior similar misconduct, excluded).

Rape: ENGLAND: 1836, R. v. Lloyd, 7 C. & P. 318 (liberties taken by the defendant with the prosecutrix, not admitted to show lustful intent); 1848, R. v. Chambers, 3 Cox Cr. 92 (former rape upon the prosecutrix, his granddaughter; here admitted to explain the child's condition); 1864, R. v. Reardon, 4 F. & F. 76 (carnal knowledge of a female child, the defendant lodging in the same house; the fact admitted of subsequent perpetrations of the same act two and four days later; Willes, J.: "I shall allow all the matters to be proved, in order to show the real nature of the case. . . . It has repeatedly appeared to me in cases of this sort that the man by a threat of violence deters the child from complaining, and thus acquires a species of influence over her by terror, which enables him to repeat the offence on subsequent occasions; and this seems to me to give a continuity to the transaction which makes such evidence properly admissible").

CANADA: 1912, R. v. Paul, Alta. S. C., 5 D. L. R. 347 (rape; similar act done by defendant to the prosecutrix' sister, a few minutes before, excluded).

UNITED STATES: Alabama: 1905, Funderburk v. State, 145 Ala. 661, 39 So. 672 (rape; subsequent intercourse with the woman's consent, on the same evening, not admissible for the State); California: 1895, People v. Fultz, 109 Cal. 258, 41 Pac. 1040 (on a charge of rape of his daughter, other rapes upon her by the defendant were admitted to explain the absence of signs of rape); Colorado: 1902, Bigcraft v. People, 30 Colo. 298, 70 Pac. 417 (rape upon defendant's daughter; other acts of intercourse excluded because not expressly offered in corroboration only); Delaware: 1921, State character (ante, § 194), it may carry with it great significance as to a specific design or plan of rape. There is no reason why it should not be received when it does convey to the mind, according to the ordinary logical instincts, a clear

v. Brewer, — Del. —, 114 Atl. 604 (assault with intent to commit rape; similar conduct to another girl 8 or 9 months before, excluded); Illinois: 1890, Parkinson v. People, 135 Ill. 401, 25 N. E. 764 (a preceding rape on the prosecutrix, held inadmissible; here, however, admitted as necessarily mentioned in describing the offence charged); 1896, Janzen v. People, 159 Ill. 440, 42 N. E. 862 (rape on May 1 on defendant's daughter M.; a rape on May 15 on another daughter Y., excluded); 1901, Addison v. People, 193 Ill. 405, 62 N. E. 235 (rape; defendant's conduct that day in becoming intoxicated and in treating a boy to beer, excluded); 1922, People v. Mason, 301 Ill. 370, 133 N. E. 767 (assault with intent to commit rape; the female was in fact under the age of consent, but the proof showed force; there were courts both charging and not charging force; prior and subsequent acts of lewdness, etc., with the same female, admitted); Iowa: 1904, State v. Trusty, 122 Ia. 82, 97 N. W. 989 (rape; prior intercourse, etc., admitted); 1904, State v. Carpenter, 124 Ia. 5, 98 N. W. 775 (similar); 1906, State v. Crouch, 130 Ia. 478, 107 N. W. 173 (rape of an imbecile; defendant's prior lascivious conduct towards the prosecutrix, admitted); 1910, Smith v. Hendrix, 149 Ia. 255, 128 N. W. 360 (civil action for rape; former assault on the woman admitted); 1915, State v. Robinson, 170 Ia. 267, 152 N. W. 590 (rape; other rapes of the same woman about the same time by the defendant's companions, admitted); Kansas: 1892, State v. Bonsor, 49 Kan. 758, 31 Pac. 736 (rape in July; the fact of previous intercourse by the defendant in June, and of efforts to conceal its resulting pregnancy, rejected; clearly unsound); Louisiana: 1904, State v. Johnson, 111 La. 935, 36 So. 30 (rape; that the defendants broke and entered another house near by on the same night, admitted, to show proximity and intent); 1904, State v. Lewis, 112 La. 872, 36 So. 788 (former rapes and threats of rape upon the same woman, offered to show her state of fear and submission; not expressly ruled upon); Maryland: 1898, Legore v. State, 87 Md. 735, 41 Atl. 60 (rape; prior indecent proposal of defendant to prosecutrix, excluded; no authority cited); Michigan: 1895, People v. Burwell, 106 Mich. 27, 63 N. W. 986 (where the woman's consent was alleged to have been forced, the fact that the defendant "had abused and beaten her [his daughter] before", and that he "was abusive to his wife and other children", was admitted); Mississippi: 1903, Dabney v. State, 82 Miss. 252, 33 So. 973 (rape; larceny in an adjoining room the same night, excluded); Missouri: 1903, State v. Scott, 172 Mo. 536, 72 S. W. 897 (prior attempts to rape the same woman, admitted); Nebraska: 1901, Reinoehl v. State, 62 Nebr. 619, 87 N. W. 355 (prior indecent language to the complainant, admissible); New Jersey: 1905, State v. Hummer, 72 N. J. L. 328, 62 Atl. 388 (carnal abuse; charges by other girls against the defendant, here admitted merely to explain away the impeachment of the police officer's testimony); 1916, State v. Boom, 89 N. J. L. 418, 99 Atl. 125 (carnal abuse of a female child; other criminal acts of accused with other persons, excluded); New York: 1859, Conkey v. People, 5 Park. Cr. 32, 35 (rape; violent conduct in the room by the defendant about the same time, in overturning the stove, throwing things out of the window, etc., admitted as indicating a purpose to alarm and coerce the woman); 1887, People v. O'Sullivan, 104 N. Y. 483, 10 N. E. 880 (rape by a Catholic priest upon his servant; the fact was received of an unsuccessful attempt, four days before, to ravish her; "it is always competent to show, upon the question of his guilt, that he has made an attempt to some prior time, not too distant, to commit the same offence"); North Carolina: 1877, State v. Laxton, 76 N. C. 216 (that the defendant "was running after one certain bad white woman," excluded); Oklahoma: 1905, Harmon v. Terr., 15 Okl. 147, 79 Pac. 765 (rape of another woman at the same time, by other men in the defendant's company, admitted); 1921, Dunscombe v. State, — Okl. Cr. —, 197 Pac. 1073 (assault with intent to rape; similar immoral acts with other females many months before, held improperly admitted on the facts); Oregon: 1914, State v. Jensen, 70 Or. 156, 140 Pac. 740 (assault with intent to rape a child; another assault on a different girl at another time and place, excluded); Tennessee: 1848, Williams v. State, 8 Hump. 585, 590, 594 (rape upon the defendant's daughter; the fact was admitted of a series of requests, threats, and attempts at the rape, extending about four months back, and beginning about eight months after the mother's death; Green, J.: "When a party for a series of months, by every persuasive, by importunity, by threats, and by force, seeks to gratify his lust for sexual intercourse with a particular woman, certainly every mind must perceive the force and relevancy of those facts to explain the intent with which he made an assault subsequently on the same woman"); Utah: 1909, State v. Williams, 36 Utah 273, 103 Pac. 250 (rape under age; the defendant's similar dealing with other little girls, excluded); Washington: 1896, State v. Thompson, 14 Wash. 285, 44 Pac. 533 (rape; a former "trouble" of a similar sort, excluded); Wisconsin: 1893, Proper v. State, 85 Wis. 615, 628, indication of such a design. There is room for much more common sense than appears in the majority of the rulings.

§ 358. Same: Other Principles discriminated. (1) Occasionally the former act will be receivable for other purposes independently of the present principles, — as, in explanation of certain physical appearances,[1] or under the doctrine of Inseparableness (ante, § 218).[2] (2) The use of former voluntary intercourse of the same complainant with the defendant, as indicating her general sentiments toward him and therefore the probability of her consent on this occasion, involves a question of Emotion or Motive, dealt with elsewhere (post, § 402). The logical principles are distinct, but their application cannot always be discriminated. In the one class of cases the evidence is appropriate for the prosecution; in the other, for the defence.

§ 359. Abortion. (1) The Knowledge principle (ante, § 301) has here no application in practice; though it is available to show a knowledge of the nature and effect of the instruments or drugs used, if that should be disputed.[1] (2) The Intent principle (ante, § 302) is available; other occasions of using such instruments or drugs, whether prior or subsequent,[2] tend to negative an innocent intent.[3] (3) The Design principle (ante, § 304), where the act itself is to be proved, would allow resort to former acts showing by common features a general design indicating that it was carried out by doing the act charged.[4] The precedents in the various jurisdictions illustrate these principles with more or less consistency.[5]

55 N. W. 1035 (rape; the prosecutrix and a girl E. slept together in the defendant's house; evidence of the defendant's previous indecent assaults and rape on E. while so living, admitted).

Rape under Age of Consent: this is practically the offence of fornication, consent being immaterial, and hence is dealt with under § 402, post.

§ 358. [1] R. v. Chambers, Eng., People v. Fultz, Cal.

[2] Parkinson v. People, Ill.

§ 359. [1] See the quotation, ante, § 301, from R. v. Cooper.

[2] R. v. Perry, Eng., Lamb v. State, Md.

[3] Com. v. Corkin, Mass., People v. Seaman, Mich.

[4] Baker v. People, Ill., People v. Sessions, Mich.

[5] ENGLAND: 1847, R. v. Perry, 2 Cox Cr. 223, Wilde, C. J. (administering a drug with intent to produce a miscarriage; subsequent administrations of other drugs admitted to show intent); 1906, R. v. Bond, 2 K. B. 389 (abortion; the use of similar instruments upon another woman three months later, to procure a miscarriage, admitted on the facts; two judges dissenting; it is rather odd that neither counsel nor any of the seven judicial opinions, though canvassing the related precedents, cites the above ruling of R. v. Perry, which appears to be the only prior one in England on this precise crime); 1912, Thomson's Case, 7 Cr. App. 276 (abortion in March, 1912; operation on the same woman for another pregnancy in September, 1911, admitted); 1920, The King v. Lovegrove, 3 K. B. 643 (homicide by abortion; a similar operation on another woman 9 months before, admitted to show intent);

CANADA: 1909, R. v. Pollard and Tinsley, 19 Ont. L. R. 96 (performance of an abortion upon another person some weeks before, not admitted, though the defendant acknowledged the act and the only issue was lawful purpose); 1918, Brunet v. The King, 42 D. L. R. 405, Can. S. C. (abortion; defendant's use of similar instruments on two other occasions, held admissible to evidence intent, apart from evidence of definite system; elaborate opinion by Anglin, J.).

UNITED STATES: Delaware: 1913, State v. Brown, 3 Del. 499, 85 Atl. 797 (abortion; another abortion, near the same time, upon another woman, admitted to evidence intent, but not design); Georgia: 1904, Sullivan v. State, 121 Ga. 183, 48 S. E. 949 (prior unsuccessful attempts on the same female, admitted); Illinois: 1883, Baker v. People, 105 Ill. 452, 456 (abortion; the fact of another attempt to cause an abortion in the course of the same pregnancy, excluded; clearly wrong); 1892, Scott v. People, 141 Ill. 195, 213 (attempt at abortion; two other attempts on the same woman by defendant, near in time, admitted to show knowledge and intent; such acts "may be proved whether they were prior or subsequent to the particular act charged"; People v. Baker not cited in the opinion); 1906, Clark v. People, 224 Ill. 554, 79 N. E. 941 (murder in attempting abortion; testimony by five or six persons that the defendant during several years preceding had "solicited patronage and held herself out as being able and willing to commit abortion", etc., admitted to show intent); 1908, People v. Hagenow, 236 Ill. 514, 86 N. E. 370 (abortion; the defendant's advertisements as a professional abortionist, and her habitual performance of abortions, admitted to show intent and means); 1917, People v. Schultz-Knighten, 277 Ill. 238, 115 N. E. 140 (abortion on E.; an abortion done upon R. in 1909, apparently held admissible); 1921, People v. Hobbs, 297 Ill. 399, 130 N. E. 779 (murder by abortion on C. in Feb. 1916; abortion done by defendant on M., in Nov. 1917, held admissible, but not so as to include the fact of death from the abortion); Iowa: 1899, State v. Moothart, 109 Ia. 130, 80 N. W. 301 (giving a drug with intent to cause miscarriage; subsequent use of an instrument on the same person for the same miscarriage, admitted); 1903, State v. Crofford, 121 Ia. 395, 96 N. W. 889 (murder by abortion; abortions by the defendant upon other women, excluded); 1914, State v. Moon, 167 Ia. 26, 148 N. W. 1001 (murder by abortion; other abortions by the defendant on other persons, excluded); 1922, State v. Rowley, — Ia. —, 187 N. W. 7 (attempt to produce a miscarriage; defendant's former acts of abortion, and her statements that she was in that business, admitted to negative innocent intent, the defendant here asserting that she had acted to save life); Kentucky: 1901, Clark v. Com., 111 Ky. 443, 63 S. W. 740 (abortion; other perpetrations of abortion admissible to prove intent, where the act in question is conceded but justified on the ground of necessity, but, by a majority of the Court, not admissible to prove a plan to do the act, its commission being denied); Maryland: 1886, Lamb v. State, 66 Md. 285, 7 Atl. 399 (attempt to procure abortion by drugs; a "subsequent attempt to accomplish the same purpose by a different means [viz., an operation] is admissible to show with what purpose and intent" he acted); 1913, Avery v. State, 121 Md. 229, 88 Atl. 148 (abortion; that the accused on the occasion of the woman's first visit had connection with another woman who accompanied her, excluded); Massachusetts: 1884, Com. v. Corkin, 136 Mass. 429 (the use of instruments with intent to produce a miscarriage; the use of them on the same woman a few days before, admitted to show the intent); Michigan: 1886, People v. Sessions, 58 Mich. 594, 600, 26 N. W. 291 (murder by abortion; the facts admitted on the frequent and habitual use of instruments by the defendant in other cases to produce abortion, and of the repeated proffer of services for that purpose); 1895, People v. Seaman, 107 Mich. 348, 65 N. W. 203 (abortion; the fact that the defendant's house was a place of resort for such practices, and that he had frequently performed such criminal operations, admitted to show a guilty intent; the defendant conceding that he had attended the case as a medical man); 1898, People v. Abbott, 116 Mich. 263, 74 N. W. 529 (a habit of performing abortions, receivable to show the intent of an operation); 1905, People v. Hodge, 141 Mich. 312, 104 N. W. 599 (manslaughter by abortion; performance of a similar operation upon a third person for the purpose of an abortion, admitted); Minnesota: 1916, State v. Newell, 134 Minn. 384, 159 N. W. 829 (manslaughter by abortion; defendant's consent to do a similar act to another person, admitted); New Mexico: 1921, State v. Bassett, 26 N. M. 476, 194 Pac. 867 (murder by abortion; later abortion upon the same person, admitted to show intent); Texas: 1915, Gray v. State, — Tex. Cr. —, 178 S. W. 337 (abortion; other offences excluded on the facts); Utah: 1918, State v. McCurtain, 52 Utah 63, 172 Pac. 481 (abortion, "similar operations upon other pregnant women", admitted); Washington: 1912, State v. Pryor, 67 Wash. 216, 121 Pac. 56 (abortion; rape and sodomy by the defendant upon the same woman, excluded).

§ 360. Indecent Exposure, Sodomy, Bigamy, Incest, Seduction, Adultery, etc. The same principles are occasionally applicable on charges of indecent exposure,[1] sodomy,[2] bigamy,[3] or enticement for prostitution,[4] and related offences.

§ 360. [1] 1915, Perkins v. Jeffery, 2 K. B. 702 (obscene exposure of person in July; the respondent taking the stand was cross-examined as to a former exposure to the same woman in May, and the prosecution offered to prove the fact if denied; held, under par. (f), § 1 of the Act of 1898, quoted ante, § 194*a*, that this former instance was admissible to show intent, but that an offer of "a systematic course of conduct", etc., should not be admitted "until the defence of accident or mistake, or absence of intention to insult is definitely put forward"); 1921, People v. Anthony, 185 Cal. 152, 196 Pac. 47 (indecent liberties with female child; defendant was manager of a home for children; similar acts with other children under his care at the same time, excluded; unsound; here the Court was induced apparently to record poor law because it believed that in this case the charges were not well proved); 1893, State v. Stice, 88 Ia. 27, 55 N. W. 17 (indecent exposure; prior and subsequent instances, admitted to show intent); 1918, State v. Weaver, 182 Ia. 921, 166 N. W.

But for the offences of adultery, seduction, rape under age of consent, incest, and certain others, there is commonly no question of Intent, and the significance of prior conduct of the defendant with the woman is usually to show, not Intent, but an Emotion of lust. This is perhaps not always to be distinguished from evidence of Design; but it is best examined under the principles applicable to evidence of Emotion (post, §§ 398–402).

12. Homicide and Homicidal Assault

§ 363. Homicide, including Murder by Poison. (1) The Knowledge principle (ante, § 301) has practically little application here; though it would be available to show a knowledge of the nature and injurious effects of a lethal weapon.[1]

379 (lascivious acts with a child; similar acts with another child, excluded); 1918, Perales v. State, 14 Okl. Cr. 601, 174 Pac. 1100 (vulgar language to women tending to breach of the peace; assaults made on two of the women, a few minutes later, excluded; unsound).

[2] ENGLAND: 1917, R. v. Thompson, 2 K. B. 630, and 1918, A. C. 221 (gross indecency with boys; possession of photographs of naked boys, and other appliances or implements, admitted); 1918, R. v. Twiss, 2 K. B. 853 (similar).

UNITED STATES: 1921, People v. Troutman, 187 Cal. 313, 201 Pac. 928 (lewd act with a child; similar acts with the same child, before and after, held admissible); 1912, People v. Swift, 172 Mich. 473, 138 N. W. 662 (sodomy; two prior acts, admitted); 1916, State v. Katz, 266 Mo. 493, 181 S. W. 425 (crime against nature; similar act to the same person the same night, admitted); 1913, State v. Start, 65 Or. 178, 132 Pac. 512 (sodomy; other similar acts with other persons at other times, excluded; the majority opinion indulges in some misplaced sentimentality which might have been spared, such as "the law will pursue him with the vindictive zeal of a Javert"; the dissenting opinion, by McBride, C. J.; frankly would admit the evidence to indicate "that he possessed that abnormal moral nature that was equal to committing the act charged"; this would mean a large inroad upon the character rule, and indeed the learned Chief Justice avows that "the necessity for many of these archaic rules has ceased, and they may well be relegated to the scrapheap of unnecessary judicial machinery"; to which we may thankfully agree, with the saving request that a dignified historical museum, not the despised scrapheap, be the place of consignment); 1913, State v. McAllister, 67 Or. 480, 136 Pac. 354 (crime against nature; commission of the same act with other boys, excluded, following the majority opinion in State v. Start; McNary, J., diss., in one able opinion); 1893, State v. Place, 5 Wash. 773, 774, 32 Pac. 736 (assault with intent to sodomy; conduct about an hour before on the same train but in another State, admitted).

[3] 1909, Robinson v. State, 6 Ga. App. 696, 65 S. E. 792 (bigamy; arrest for beating his first wife eight years before, excluded); 1901, State v. Graham, 23 Utah 278, 64 Pac. 557 (cohabitation with several women at a prior time, admissible to show intent during the time charged).

[4] Here compare the cases post, § 367 (keeping a disorderly house); Cal. 1898, People v. Elliott, 119 Cal. 593, 51 Pac. 955 (enticement for prostitution; that the defendant had attempted to entice other young girls into the same house for the same purpose, excluded; but it should have been received to show intent); Ill. 1920, People v. Chrfrikas, 295 Ill. 222, 129 N. E. 73 (abduction of a female; defendant's indecent liberties with the girl a few weeks before, admitted); Me. St. 1919, c. 112 (prostitution, pandering, etc.; "record of a prior conviction . . . shall be admissible"); Mich. 1921, People v. Petropoulapos, — Mich. —, 185 N. W. 730 (sharing proceeds of prostitution by S.; sharing proceeds with J. at the same house and time, admitted); Mont. 1915, State v. Jones, 51 Mont. 390, 153 Pac. 282 (accepting a prostitute's earnings; other immoral acts, excluded on the facts); 1921, State v. Pippi, 59 Mont. 116, 195 Pac. 556 (pimping; acceptance of earnings of another prostitute, admitted to show intent, plan, etc.); N. J. 1920, State v. Mayewski, 94 N. J. L. 491, 110 Atl. 906 (living off a prostitute's earnings; prior conduct of the sort, admitted); N. C. Con. St. 1919, § 4360 (pandering, pimping, etc.; "prior conviction", admissible); Wis. § 4581 h–1 (pandering; the prosecution "may show other similar acts for the purpose of showing the intent and disposition of the accused").

§ 363. [1] See the quotation from R. v. Cooper, ante, § 301.

(2) The Intent principle (ante, § 302) receives constant application; for the intent to kill is in homicide practically always in issue, and is to be proved by the prosecution, and the recurrence of other acts of the sort tends to negative inadvertence, defensive purpose, or any other form of innocent intent. For this purpose, therefore, the evidence is receivable irrespective of whether the act charged is itself conceded or not. Where (as usually) it is not conceded, the evidence of intent goes to the jury to be used by them only on the assumption that they find the act to have been done by the accused; it is then to be employed by them in determining the intent. This use of such evidence is universally recognized.[2] As to the similarity of the other acts, no fixed rule can be formulated. They certainly need not have been done to the same person;[3] they need not have accompanied more or less immediately the act charged,[4] and they may have been done even at a subsequent time.[5] The precedents show every variety of circumstances, and a correct application of the principle would receive any evidence of the sort which conveys any real probative indication of the defendant's intent.

(2*a*) The principle of Anonymous Intent (ante, § 303) finds occasional application, particularly in poisoning cases. Other instances of death by poison under somewhat similar circumstances serve to negative the supposition of inadvertent taking or of mistaken administration, even though the person responsible for the other poisonings is not identified; and thus, a criminal intent having been shown for the act charged, by whomsoever done, the defendant may be then shown to be its doer.[6]

(3) The principle of Design or System (ante, § 304) finds here frequent application. It supposes that a design or plan in the defendant is to be shown, as making it probable that the defendant carried out the design or plan and committed the act; and it receives former similar acts so far as through common features they naturally indicate the existence of such a plan, design, or system, of which they are the partial fulfilment or means. This principle is fully recognized in the precedents.[7] There has been occasional hesitation

[2] R. v. Mobbs, R. v. Roden, Makin v. Att'y-Gen'l, Eng., Smith v. State, Ala., Austin v. State, Melton v. State, Ark., People v. Walters, People v. Craig, Cal., Killins v. State, Oliver v. State, Fla., Reese v. State, Shaw v. State, Ga., State v. Fontenot, La., State v. Pike, Me., Com. v. Campbell, Mass., People v. Knapp, People v. Marble, Mich., State v. Testerman, State v. Martin, State v. Sanders, Mo., Walters v. People, N. Y., State v. Mace, N. C., People v. Coughlin, Utah, Poindexter's Case, Va., Albricht v. State, Wis.

Poisoning Cases: R. v. Mogg, R. v. Calder, R. v. Geering, R. v. Winslow, R. v. Garner, R. v. Flannagan, Eng., Johnson v. State, Ala., People v. Thacker, Mich., Goersen v. Com., Pa.

[3] R. v. Roden, Makin v. A.-G., Eng., Smith v. State, Ala., People v. Walters, People v. Craig, Cal., Killins v. State, Oliver v. State, Fla., Reese v. State, Ga., State v. Fontenot, La., People v. Marble, Mich., State v. Testerman, State v. Sanders, Mo., People v. Coughlin, Utah; so also in almost all the poisoning cases.

[4] R. v. Roden, Makin v. A.-G., Eng., Austin v. State, Ark., Shaw v. State, Ga., Poindexter's Case, Va.; so also in almost all the poisoning cases.

[5] Smith v. State, Ala., People v. Walters, People v. Craig, Cal., Killins v. State, Fla., People v. Marble, Mich., State v. Sanders, Mo., State v. Mace, N. C. Poisoning Cases: R. v. Geering, R. v. Heesom, Eng.

[6] R. v. Geering, R. v. Flannagan, R. v. Bailey, Eng.

[7] Melton v. State, Ark., State v. Smith, Ia., State v. Vaughan, Nev., Stephens v. People, People v. Shea, N. Y., Snyder v. Com., Com. v. Mudgett, Pa., Heath v. Com., Nicholas v. Com., Va. In Makin v. Att'y-Gen'l, Eng., it should have been applied, but the opinion is not clear on this point.

in applying it in poisoning cases;[8] but this hesitation is wholly unfounded, and numerous instances illustrate its equal applicability to such cases.[9]

The precedents in the various jurisdictions illustrate the application of the foregoing principles, with more or less consistency, to homicide in general.[10]

[8] R. v. Flannagan, Eng., People v. Thacker, Mich.

[9] R. v. Cotton (semble), R. v. Heesom (semble), Eng., Com. v. Robinson, Mass. (leading case), People v. Wood, N. Y., Farrer v. State (semble), Brown v. State, Oh., Shaffner v. Com. (leading case), Goersen v. Com., Pa.

[10] For convenience of reference the poisoning cases have been arranged separately in a second list, infra.

ENGLAND: 1853, R. v. Mobbs, 6 Cox Cr. 223 (murder of wife; things done to her by the defendant ten days before, not admitted to show intent; Coleridge, J.: "It is very difficult to draw the line in these cases"); 1864, R. v. Reardon, 4 F. & F. 79, Willes, J., semble (other killings, admissible to show intent); 1874, R. v. Roden, 12 Cox Cr. 630, Lush, J. (murder by suffocating her infant while in bed; the fact that the defendant had "had four other children who had also died in infancy at early ages", was admitted, on the authority of R. v. Cotton, infra); 1889, R. v. Crickmer, 16 Cox Cr. 701, Charles, J. (murder by stabbing; the fact of another stabbing by the defendant an hour before, admitted); 1893, Makin v. Att'y-Gen'l of N. S. Wales, 17 Cox. Cr. 704, Privy Council (murder of an illegitimate infant intrusted for keeping by its mother to the defendant and found buried on the defendant's premises; the fact was admitted of the finding, in the various premises where the defendant had lived about the time in question, of the buried bodies of other infants, respectively four, six, and two at each place, no deaths having been registered from those addresses, and of several other infants having been received on similar arrangements to the one in question; received, per L. C. Herschell, following R. v. Geering, infra, as "bearing upon the question whether the acts alleged to constitute the crime charged in the indictment were designed or accidental, or to rebut a defence which would otherwise be open to the accused"); 1914, Greenley's Case, 10 Cr. App. 273 (murder of a wife; shooting of two daughters shortly after discovery, admitted); 1915, George I. Smith's Trial (Notable British Trials; 1922), pp. 33, 272 (wife-murder by drowning her in a bath-tub the day after marriage; deaths of two other wives under similar circumstances, admitted).

CANADA: 1913, R. v. Gibson, 28 Ont. L. R. 525, 13 D. L. R. 393 (murder of R. while bargaining for the sale of junk; felonious assault on D., the companion of R., a few minutes later, held admissible).

UNITED STATES: Alabama: 1887, Lawrence v. State, 84 Ala. 424, 5 So. 33 (previous "difficulty", admissible to show "malice, or a motive"; but not "the particulars or merits" of the "difficulty"; 1889, Smith v. State, 88 Ala. 76, 7 So. 52 (quarrel with deceased and S.; the defendant's following up S. and shooting at him after shooting at the deceased, admitted); 1901, Miller v. State, 130 Ala. 1, 30 So. 379 (murder of a police-officer; conspiracy between the defendants to kill another officer at the same time, admitted);
Arkansas: 1842, Baker v. State, 4 Ark. 56, 61 (general principle stated, that other acts of violence are admissible to show intent); 1854, Austin v. State, 14 Ark. 555, 558 (murder by a slave, to show intent, "former grudges, former threats, previous lying in wait", etc., admissible; here, the slave's declarations that he would resist capture); 1884, Melton v. State, 43 Ark. 367, 371 (murder alleged to have been done in pursuance of a plan by the Ku-Klux Society to dispose of the deceased for having opposed the Society; the fact received that the defendant with others had on a former occasion gone masked to the deceased's house and flogged him as a part of the plan to stop his opposition);
California: 1893, People v. Walters, 98 Cal. 138, 141, 32 Pac. 864 (murder of a son; the killing of the mother immediately afterwards by an associate of the defendant, with the fact of a long-standing feud between the two parties, admitted to show intent); 1895, People v. Smith, 106 Cal. 73, 82, 39 Pac. 40 (murder of D.; the killing of C. in the same house at the same time, admitted to show that C. could not have killed D.); 1896, People v. Craig, 111 Cal. 460, 467, 44 Pac. 186 (wife-murder; after evidence of ill-feeling by the defendant against his wife's family generally, the fact that he shot the wife's brother at the same time as the shooting of the wife and then went immediately to her father and mother and shot them was admitted as showing that the shooting of the wife was not accidental); 1898, People v. Miller, 121 Cal. 343, 53 Pac. 816 (M. killed C. when C. stopped M.'s pursuit of a woman N.; the intent of the pursuit, admitted to show the intent against C.);
Colorado: 1915, Hillen v. People, 59 Colo. 280, 149 Pac. 250 (murder; attempted robberies about the same date and place, admitted; citing the above text with approval);
Columbia (Dist.): 1920, Bowman v. U. S., — D. C. App. —, 267 Fed. 648 (murder; subsequent assaults on an eye-witness, admitted);
Florida: 1891, Killins v. State, 28 Fla. 313, 333, 9 So. 711 (killing of the deceased's mother immediately afterwards, admitted to show intent); 1896, Oliver v. State, 38 Fla. 46, 20

So. 803 (shooting of another person at the same time and in the same affray, admitted); 1898, Milton v. State, 40 Fla. 251, 24 So. 60 (murder; shooting another at the same time, as negativing self-defence, admitted); 1900, West v. State, 42 Fla. 244, 28 So. 430 (murder; the killing of the only other man in the vicinity, just beforehand, robbery of a house being the motive, admitted to show intent);

Georgia: 1849, Reese v. State, 7 Ga. 373 (assault upon the deceased's father just before the murder; such evidence limited to "the time of the transaction"); 1878, Shaw v. State, 60 Ga. 246, 250 (wife-murder by beating; the fact of a similar beating four years before, admitted); 1914, Frank v. State, 141 Ga. 243, 80 S. E. 1016 (murder of a woman on the deceased's premises; prior lascivious conduct at similar stated periods with women on the premises, held admissible to show motive); 1922, Williams v. State, 152 Ga. 498, 110 S. E. 286 (murder; numerous other homicides of defendant's employees, admitted; this was the notorious case of peonage, in which the defendant, an employer of negroes under peonage contracts, directed ruthlessly the cruel killing of a dozen of them to prevent their escape and disclosure of his practices; the astonishing thing is that he received only a sentence of imprisonment for life);

Hawaii: 1904, Terr. v. Watanabe, 16 Haw. 196, 221 (murder; testimony as to the defendant's blackmailing, etc., admitted, presumably to show a general plan);

Idaho: 1900, State v. Taylor, 7 Ida. 134, 61 Pac. 288 (manslaughter; the defendant's shooting at a witness shortly afterwards while escaping, excluded);

Illinois: 1905, Brown v. People, 216 Ill. 418, 74 N. E. 790 (murder of R.; an assault in another room, a few minutes before, on M., excluded; unsound); 1914, People v. Pfanschmidt, 262 Ill. 411, 104 N. E. 804 (murder with arson; evidence of plans for a bank robbery having no relation to the murder, excluded); 1916, People v. Simmons, 274 Ill. 528, 113 N. E. 887 (murder; the defendant not allowed to be examined as to a family fight about six months before); 1916, People v. King, 276 Ill. 138, 114 N. E. 701 (murder of a police officer arresting the defendant for several holdups committed that evening; on cross-examination of defendant and a co-defendant taking the stand, they were asked about these holdups, and they admitted them; held not admissible to evidence motive, because, although apparently the mere fact of the holdups might have been evidenced, "in order to prove motive it was certainly not necessary to prove the details of all these holdups"; this is a feeble reason; the opinion exhibits the orthodox judicial tendency to protect the rank confessed villain with fostering strictness and to ignore the claims of sympathy for the robbed citizen and for the officer who sacrifices his life in the courageous performance of his duty); 1920, People v. Cione, 293 Ill. 321, 127 N. E. 646 (homicide; defendant's assault on deceased's wife, and larceny of his property, shortly afterwards, admitted; but disparaging the recital of "details of the robbery");

Iowa: 1916, State v. O'Donnell, 176 Ia. 337, 157 N. W. 870 (murder of wife; "inhuman abuse, assaults, and beatings" inflicted on her at prior times excluded; unsound);

Kansas: 1922, State v. King, — Kan. —, 206 Pac. 883 (murder of W.; homicide of R. and G. also admitted, as indicating a scheme to murder and despoil all three; careful opinion by Dawson, J.);

Kentucky: 1895, Saylor v. Com., 97 Ky. 184, 30 S. W. 390 (murder; killing of two other persons "at the same place and immediately afterwards", excluded; erroneous); 1896, Green v. Com., — Ky. —, 33 S. W. 100 (a nearly simultaneous killing; obscure); 1901, Bishop v. Com., — Ky. —, 58 S. W. 817, 60 S. W. 190 (murder of an officer; that the defendant had just killed another man and was fleeing from arrest, admitted as evidencing motive); 1903, O'Brien v. Com., 115 Ky. 608, 74 S. W. 666 (murder during a burglary; burglary of neighboring houses on the same night, admitted); 1905, Shepherd v. Com., 119 Ky. 931, 85 S. W. 191 (murder; defendant's admission that "he is the third one I have knocked down", excluded); 1921, Steale v. Com., 192 Ky. 223, 232 S. W. 646 (murder; defendant's bigamy, etc., held improperly admitted);

Louisiana: 1896, State v. Fontenot, 48 La. 305, 19 So. 111 (attacks by the defendant on a third person just before killing the deceased, admitted); 1909, State v. Blount, 124 La. 202, 50 So. 12 (murder; killing of two other persons at the same time, admitted);

Maine: 1876, State v. Pike, 65 Me. 111, 113 (manslaughter of wife by cruel abuse; other acts of violence on the same evening, admissible, but not "another distinct assault");

Massachusetts: 1863, Com. v. Campbell, 7 All. 541 (murder at 7 P. M. by one of a mob during the Draft Riots; riotous acts by the defendant at 1 P. M. of the same day, admitted to show the subsequent guilty intent, provided there was a general resistance and disturbance of the public peace such that the earlier and the later acts formed "a part of one transaction"); 1905, Com. v. Snell, 189 Mass. 12, 75 N. E. 75 (murder of K., who lived with H.; the defendant's plan to murder H., against which K.'s presence was an obstacle, etc., admitted);

Michigan: 1872, People v. Knapp, 26 Mich. 112, 116 (murder; the preceding affray, alleged to have involved a rape on the deceased, admitted); 1878, People v. Marble, 38 Mich. 117, 123 (murder of A.; three persons attacked at once; A. was killed outright, M. was pursued, and all fired at, within two minutes; the shooting and pursuit of M., admitted as "coloring" the act of attacking A.); 1901, People v. Dowd, 127 Mich. 140, 86 N. W. 546 (certain "acts of violence" to other persons, excluded); 1909, People v. Klise, 156 Mich. 373, 120 N. W. 989 (assault with intent; prior assault on a third person, excluded);

Mississippi: 1846, Dowling v. State, 5 Sm. & M. 664, 666, 686 (murder of a slave by an overseer, by beating; the fact excluded that the defendant's usual manner of punishing the slaves was by a thick wooden paddle); 1898, Herman v. State, 75 Miss. 340, 22 So. 873 (murder; defendant's assault on the deceased with a knife, about a year before, excluded); 1920, Herring v. State, 122 Miss. 647, 84 So. 699 (murder; prior independent assault on another person, excluded);
Missouri: 1878, State v. Testerman, 68 Mo. 408, 415 (murder; the cutting of another person by the defendant in the same affray, admitted); 1881, State v. Martin, 74 Mo. 547 (murder; two other indictments for felonious assault, excluded); 1882, State v. Sanders, 76 Mo. 35, 36 (a stroke at a bystander, who had seized the defendant after the killing and as he was escaping, admitted); 1882, State v. Emery, 76 Mo. 349 (previous assault to show intent to kill; obscure); 1900, State v. Tettaton, 159 Mo. 354, 60 S. W. 743 (murder; the killing of other members of the family at the same time, and the burning of the house, admitted); 1905, State v. Brown, 188 Mo. 451, 87 S. W. 519 (murder; assault on a hackman the same evening, excluded; on the facts, the ruling is an extreme example of morbid phantasmagoria); 1905, State v. Bailey, 190 Mo. 257, 88 S. W. 733 (murder of a non-union hack-driver; assault and robbery of another such driver just before, admitted); 1915, State v. Tatman, 264 Mo. 357, 175 S. W. 69 (murder during burglary; a prior assault, the same night, on a third person, admitted); 1915, State v. Sherman, 264 Mo. 374, 175 S. W. 73 (similar; the carrying of concealed weapons, admitted);
Montana: 1901, State v. Shafer, 26 Mont. 11, 66 Pac. 463 (conflict between the same parties a few hours before, admitted);
Nebraska: 1903, Jahnke v. State, 68 Nebr. 154, 94 N. W. 158, 104 N. W. 154 (prior attempts by other means to take the deceased's life, admitted); 1907, Clark v. State, 79 Nebr. 473, 113 N. W. 211 (murder while robbing; other robberies on the same night by the same gang, held admissible);
Nevada: 1895, State v. Vaughan, 22 Nev. 2, 39 Pac. 733 (whether or not the deceased had been the aggressor; former attempt by the deceased to shoot the defendant's brothers, excluded);
New Mexico: 1893, Roper v. Terr., 7 N. M. 255, 265, 33 Pac. 1014 (murder; previous attempt at robbery of another, not admitted on the facts to show intent to rob the deceased);
New York: 1859, Stephens v. People, 4 Park. Cr. 396, 511, 19 N. Y. 571 (wife-murder; to show a general design to get rid of all obstacles to marry a woman B., of which the wife-murder was to be one part, the fact was received of an attempt by the defendant to drive away B.'s suitor C., by sending him after the wife's death an anonymous letter reflecting on B.'s character); 1864, Walters v. People, 6 Park. Cr. 15, (murder by stabbing; acts of violence to the deceased on the day before, admitted to show deliberation of intent); 1893, People v. Larubia, 140 N. Y. 87, 35 N. E. 412 (murder; violence on behalf of the same paramour, four months before, excluded); 1895, People v. Shea, 147 N. Y. 78, 41 N. E. 508 (admitting, in a trial for homicide at the polls, the fact of a general plan to repeat votes and to intimidate by violence those who opposed, and of instances of this conduct); 1899, People v. Place, 157 N. Y. 584, 52 N. E. 576 (homicide of a stepdaughter; assault by defendant on her husband after the daughter's death and on his return, admitted to show intent); 1904, People v. De Garmo, 179 N. Y. 130, 71 N. E. 736 (manslaughter by beating a child; certain former acts of violence to the same child, not admitted: an over-strict ruling); 1908, People v. Governale, 193 N. Y. 581, 86 N. E. 554 (murder while being arrested; prior shooting affray leading to the pursuit, admitted on the issue of self-defence);
North Carolina: 1873, State v. Shuford, 69 N. C. 486, 492 (murder of a new-born child; the defendant's admission that she had "had a child this way before, and put it away", excluded; the evidence here left it uncertain whether the child was killed by an accident); 1896, State v. Mace, 118 N. C. 1244, 24 S. E. 798 (an assault, a quarter of an hour after a killing, upon an eye-witness who was going away to tell the news, admitted to show intent); 1905, State v. Adams, 138 N. C. 688, 50 S. E. 765 (murder of M. B.; the killing of her two children at the same time, admitted); 1910, State v. Plyler, 153 N. C. 630, 69 S. E. 269 (murder; prior attempt to assassinate the deceased, admitted);
North Dakota: 1907, State v. Hazlet, 16 N. D. 426, 113 N. W. 374 (murder; sodomy by the defendant, under circumstances not appearing, excluded);
Ohio: 1907, State v. Dickerson, 77 Oh. 34, 82 N. E. 969 (murder of a woman; arson of her house two weeks before by defendant, not admitted to show intent, and on the facts held not admissible to show motive);
Oklahoma: 1912, Clemmons v. State, 8 Okl. Cr. 159, 126 Pac. 704 (assault with intent to kill; the shooting of the same person by the defendant, two years before, excluded); 1911, Williams v. State, 4 Okl. Cr. 523, 114 Pac. 1114 (murder; a former assault admitted); 1915, Dykes v. State, 11 Okl. Cr. 602, 150 Pac. 84 (murder; other criminal acts, admitted on the facts);
Oregon: 1909, State v. La Rose, 54 Or. 555, 104 Pac. 299 (murder; two similar assaults on other persons within the next two days, admitted on the facts); Pennsylvania: 1877, Snyder v. Com., 85 Pa. 519, 521 (murder of the illegitimate infant of

Homicide by poisoning, though in substantive law not different in its elements, provides a special group of precedents illustrating the present principle;[11] because the deliberate features which usually attend the use the defendant's daughter; the fact of an incestuous rape upon her, excluded); 1896, Com. v. Mudgett, alias Holmes, 174 Pa. 211, 34 Atl. 588 (the killing of three children of the deceased so as to prevent the deceased's wife from learning of his death, admissible); 1898, Com. v. Wilson, 186 Pa. 1, 40 Atl. 283 (murder; attempt to rob another person at another time, and other unconnected crimes, excluded); 1901, Com. v. Major, 198 Pa. 290, 47 Atl. 741 (murder; prior burglary at another place the same evening, admitted as showing intent); 1901, Com. v. Biddle, 200 Pa. 647, 50 Atl. 264 (murder; casual mention of other crimes by an accomplice relating his intimacy, held not improperly admitted); 1920, Com. v. Morrison, 266 Pa. 223, 109 Atl. 878 (murder of a pursuer; the robbery for which defendant was being pursued, admitted); 1917, Com. v. Haines, 257 Pa. 289, 101 Atl. 641 (murder; defendant's share in other crimes, excluded);

Rhode Island: 1833, Avery's Trial, Newport, Hildreth's Rep. 41 (murder; anonymous letter making an appointment with the deceased, admitted "to rebut the presumption of suicide"; Eddy, C. J., Brayton and Durfee, JJ., sitting);
South Carolina: 1906, State v. Smalls, 73 S. C. 516, 53 S. E. 976 (murder; defendant's violent conduct to third persons just before, admitted);
South Dakota: 1904, State v. Coleman, 17 S. D. 594, 98 N. W. 175 (murder; certain forgeries admitted as showing motive and plan);
Tennessee: 1843, Stone v. State, 4 Humph. 27, 35 (murder; the fact that the defendant had shortly before set fire to the deceased's house, rejected, because proof of a separate felony could not be received; erroneous reason); 1907, Holder v. State, 119 Tenn. 178, 104 S. W. 225 (murder of a father by shooting, attempt to poison the whole family, admitted);
Texas: 1899, Barkman v. State, 41 Tex. Cr. 105, 52 S. W. 69 (murder; a single accidental prior killing, excluded);
Utah: 1896, People v. Coughlin, 13 Utah 58, 44 Pac. 94 (killing of another person in the same affray, to show intent, admitted);
Vermont: 1902, State v. Eastwood, 73 Vt. 205, 50 Atl. 1077 (murder of a wife's sister's husband at M.; defendant's shooting of his wife's sister at the same time, and of his wife and her mother immediately before, five miles away at East M., where he said "I have come to break up the family", held admissible to show "purpose, preparation, and intent");
Virginia: 1842, Heath v. Com., 1 Rob. 735, 738, 743 (murder of a woman by stabbing; the fact admitted of the shooting of her companion by the defendant just previously on the same night under circumstances indicating a design to do away with both); 1880, Poindexter's Case, 33 Gratt. 766, 788 (murder; a prior attack on the deceased by the defendant on the same morning, admitted); 1895, Nicholas v. Com., 91 Va. 741, 21 S. E. 364 (the defendant's giving strychnine to a wife and telling her to administer it in milk or coffee to the deceased, admitted; here the deceased in fact was drowned in a boat, which the defendant was charged with sinking);
Wisconsin: 1857, Albricht v. State, 6 Wis. 74 (manslaughter of his son by striking with a chisel; evidence of former strikings of the boy with an axe-helve and otherwise, not admitted even to show intent; clearly wrong); 1903, Paulson v. State, 118 Wis. 89, 94 N. W. 771 (murder; larcenies several years before, excluded); 1912, Dietz v. State, 149 Wis. 462, 136 N. W. 166 (murder in resisting arrest; to negative the defendant's assertion that he believed the officers to be private marauders, the defendant's course of conduct in prior years in resisting arrest under similar circumstances was admitted);
Wyoming: 1903, Horn v. State, 12 Wyo. 80, 73 Pac. 705 (defendant's assault, shortly before, on the deceased's father, admitted to show motive and identity).

Additional instances, analogous to the foregoing cases, are cited under § 106, ante, §§ 396, 397, post, dealing with acts of prior hostility as evidence of motive.

[11] POISONING CASES: ENGLAND: 1830, R. v. Mogg, 4 C. & P. 335 (mixing poison with a horse's feed; the administration to the other horses in the same stable, admitted to show intent); 1844, R. v. Calder, 2 Cox Cr. 348 (administration of similar drugs on subsequent days, admitted to show intent on the day in question); 1847, Pollock, C. B., in R. v. Bailey, ib. 312 (declaring evidence admissible, on a charge of poisoning, that the prisoner had attempted to drown the deceased by sawing nearly in two the limb of a tree on which the deceased was accustomed to sit when fishing); 1849, R. v. Geering, 18 L. J. M. C. 215 (murder of husband by arsenic-poisoning; evidence was offered of the death by arsenic, within six months later, of two sons of the defendant, and of the arsenical illness of a third son, to show (1) "that the deceased had in fact died of poison administered by some party", and (2) "to prove that the death of the deceased husband was not accidental"; objected to because the death and illness occurred after the death in issue; Pollock, C. B., Alderson, B., and Talfourd, J., approving, admitted it, "to determine whether such taking was accidental or not"; the prosecution also connected the defendant with the plan or system by showing that she generally cooked the meals for all four persons); 1860, R. v. Winslow, 8 Cox Cr. 397, Martin, B. (murder by antimony-poisoning; evidence that within six months three other persons in the same family, the prisoner being employed there, had died from antimony-poisoning, was offered chiefly "to exclude the supposition of an accidental poisoning in present case", but was excluded; no reason given); 1863, R. v. Garner and wife, 3 F. & F. 681, 4 Cox Cr. 346 (murder by arsenic-poisoning; the deceased was the mother of the male defendant; the latter sold arsenic for agricultural purposes; the fact that one of his own horses and some of his milk-customers, against whom he apparently had no feeling, had suffered from arsenic, had been received to show accidental administration; and the fact of the death of his former wife was then received to negative accident); 1864, R. v. Harris, 4 Cox Cr. 342, Willes, J. (general principle of R. v. Geering, approved); 1873, R. v. Cotton, 12 Cox Cr. 400, Archibald, J., Lush, J., and Pollock, B. (murder of the defendant's stepchild by arsenic-poisoning in July; the fact was received of the death of the defendant's two sons in the preceding November and March, and of one M., lodging in the house, in the preceding April; all were supplied with food by the defendant and all showed arsenic-traces; the evidence was received on the authority of Geering's and Garner's Cases); 1878, R. v. Heesom, 14 Cox Cr. 40, Lush, J. (murder of her child by arsenic-poisoning in October, 1877; evidence having been received of the death of another child of the defendant in March, 1876, and of the defendant's mother in November, 1877, by the same poison, both being in the same household, the fact was also received that the lives of all three had been insured a short time before by the defendant, and that on the death of the other two she had collected the insurance; following Geering's Case); 1884, R. v. Flannagan, 15 Cox Cr. 403 (two sisters, charged with the murder by arsenic of the husband of the second; evidence was offered of the deaths by arsenic-poisoning, within three years, of three other persons in the same household; Butt, J.: "I think, where the authorities are at all in conflict, the safest rule to be guided by is one's common sense, and I cannot conceive that on a charge of this nature it is consistent with common sense to exclude such evidence. It has been decided . . . in the case of poisoning by arsenic, that evidence of the deaths of people other than the deceased, whose death was the subject-matter of the particular inquiry might be given, with a view to showing not that the prisoner had poisoned the deceased, but that the deceased had in fact died by poison administered by some one; that is the extent to which that authority went, and that is the extent to which, I have no hesitation in saying, I shall admit evidence as to the other deaths in this case").

of poison give more frequent occasion for evidencing Design or System by a series of related acts.

UNITED STATES: Alabama: 1850, Johnson v. State, 17 Ala. 618, 622 (wife-murder by poison; a former attempt by the defendant to poison her, admissible to negative mistake);

Arkansas: 1920, Sneed v. State, 143 Ark. 178, 219 S. W. 1019 (murder of wife by strychnia), the defendant being the beneficiary of policies carried by his wife; evidence was not admitted of the recent death by poison, in defendant's household, of three other persons, viz. his mother-in-law, from whom his wife inherited an estate which she then devised by will to him; his infant child, born after the execution of that will and not mentioned therein; and his adopted daughter, whose life was insured for the benefit of defendant's wife: the ruling is based solely on the ground that the evidence of these deaths having been due to poison given by the defendant was insufficient);

Connecticut: 1918, State v. Gilligan, 92 Conn. 526, 103 Atl. 649 (murder by strychnine; the accused kept a home for the aged, payment being made by a lump sum in advance; deaths of three other inmates besides the one named in the indictment, not admitted on the facts, except under special conditions; careful opinion by Beach, J.; two judges diss. from the reasoning);

Georgia: 1904, Cawthon v. State, 119 Ga. 395, 46 S. E. 897 (poisoning of T.; after T.'s death, H. died, after drinking T.'s brandy; obscure ruling);

Iowa: 1897, State v. Smith, 102 Ia. 656, 82 N. W. 279 (the deceased was insured in the defendant's favor, and had died of poison; one year before, he had been shot in the head, but had only lost sight thereby; the complicity of the defendant, his wife, in the shooting, admitted); 1899, State v. Lightfoot, 107 Ia. 344, 78 N. W. 41 (poisoning a horse by strychnine; the presence of strychnine in other horse-boxes in the same barn, and the poisoning of other horses in other barns of the same owner, on the same night, admitted); 1921, State v. Browman, 191 Ia. 608, 182 N. W. 823 (theft as connected with murder);

Massachusetts: 1888, Com. v. Robinson, 146 Mass. 571, 16 N. E. 452 (murder by poisoning a brother-in-law, the obtaining of an insurance-benefit being the alleged motive; the prosecution, to show that the defendant had formed a general design to obtain the money by killing him, was allowed to give in evidence that her sister, the original beneficiary, and then a child of her sister, had died by poisoning within the previous five months while under the defendant's care, and that the brother-in-law had then appointed the defendant the beneficiary; ante, § 304); 1897, Com. v. Kennedy, 170 Mass. 18, 48 N. E. 770 (poisoning, by putting poison in a tea cup; the finding of the same poison in the same cup at other times, admitted to show an anonymous scheme);

Michigan: 1870, People v. Lansing, 21 Mich. 221, 226 (poisoning a grandmother by putting arsenic into wine; a similar attempt, a few days before, by putting arsenic into her food, admitted for another purpose, and the present question left undecided); 1896, People v. Thacker, 108 Mich. 652, 66 N. W. 562 (wife-poisoning; attempts to poison the wife's sister, living in the same household, held admissible to show intent and negative accident, but not to show the act itself of administering); 1903, People v. Quimby, 134 Mich. 625, 96 N. W. 1061 (poisoning of another child in the same way at the same time, admitted); 1906, People v. Collins, 144 Mich. 121, 107 N. W. 1114 (murder of L. by arsenic; death of W. by arsenic, four months before, W. living in the defendant's family, not admitted; no sufficient foundation being shown; Grant and Montgomery, J.J., diss., on the ground that it was admissible to show defendant's possession of arsenic); 1914, People v. Macgregor, 178 Mich. 436, 144 N. W. 869 (murder by arsenic poisoning; the defendant was a physician, attending the S. family; the father John W. died in 1908, the sons Peter in July, 1910, Albert in May, 1911, and Seyrel in August, 1911; the charge being the death of Seyrel, the death of Albert by arsenic poisoning was admitted);
Missouri: 1911, State v. Hyde, 234 Mo. 200, 136 S. W. 316 (murder of the father-in-law of defendant, a physician, by poisoning with strychnine and cyanide; killing of other members of the family, co-legatees with the defendant's wife of the deceased's fortune, by various poisons, including disease germs, offered to evidence intent, excluded, on the absurd and unfounded principle that the means of death used in the other instances must be "precisely similar"; the ruling is founded on the unsupported statement of a single treatise; Donellan's Case, supra, § 303, sufficiently shows the novelty and impropriety of such a limitation; offered to show motive, the other killings were held to be admissible, but not sufficiently evidenced);
New York: 1858, People v. Wood, 3 Park. Cr. 685 (murder of a sister-in-law by poison; the fact was admitted, to show a general purpose to get the brother's estate for himself, of the prior poisoning of the brother, the contemporaneous attempt at poisoning of his two children, the procuring himself appointed as their guardian, and the forging of claims against the estate; all these being "parts of a single transaction, influenced by a single motive, and designed to accomplish a single object"); 1901, People v. Molineux, 168 N. Y. 264, 61 N. E. 286 (murder of A. by poison sent to C. and taken by him and also by A.; the defendant's murder of B. by similar poison, more than a month previously, the only other common circumstances being that B. and C. were members of the same club as the defendant and that the defendant had conducted false correspondence with other persons in the names of B. and of C., held inadmissible, as not relevant to prove motive, intent, common plan, or any other evidential element; three judges dissenting); 1915, People v. Buffom, 214 N. Y. 53, 108 N. E. 184 (wife's murder of her husband by poisoning; subsequent killing of one of the children, held inadmissible);
North Carolina: 1892, State v. Best, 111 N. C. 638, 640, 15 S. E. 930 (wife-murder by poisoning; the presence of uneaten poisoned food in the house, admitted);
Ohio: 1853, Farrer v. State, 2 Oh. St. 54, 61, 67 (murder by arsenic of a child in F.'s family, by the defendant, the nurse, in December, 1851; the fact admitted of deaths of other members of the same family in the same way about the same time; but the fact rejected of the death of I., a former mistress of the defendant, in the same way, in the preceding August, before the defendant came to F.'s house; Bartley, C. J., diss.); 1875, Brown v. State, 26 Oh. 176, 180 (poisoning horses; the fact admitted of the poisoning of other horses about the same time in the same village, to indicate that the defendant had inflicted the injuries and had given out that a general epidemic prevailed, with the design of profiting by treating the horses professionally for cure);
Pennsylvania: 1872, Shaffner v. Com., 72 Pa. 60 (wife-murder by poison; the defendant had been criminally intimate with Susan C. for many years, during the life of his first wife, and married the deceased, his second, while Susan C. was still unmarried; the criminal relation continued, C. was married to S., and both lived in the defendant's house; S.'s life was insured for his wife in November, 1870; he died in February, 1871, and the defendant collected the insurance; then the defendant's wife died in June, 1871; an offer by the prosecution to show that the cause and circumstances of the two deaths were similar, and that the defendant attended both, was rejected, because the other facts did not show that the death of S. and the wife could have been "contemplated as parts of one plan in his mind in which the taking of S.'s life was part of his purpose of taking the life of his wife"; the opinion works out the application of the principle carefully and instructively, and is worth study as a useful illustration of method; though the conclusion reached is perhaps a strained one); 1882, Goersen v. Com., 99 Pa. 388, 390, 398 (wife-murder by arsenic-poison; the fact that the wife's mother, living in the same house and attended by the defendant, had died a few days before in the same way and that her daughter succeeded to her property in remainder after her life-estate, was received "to show his purpose and intent, and the system by which that purpose was to be accomplished, and to connect the death of both women with that purpose and intent"; also

§ 364. Assault with Intent; Other Crimes of Personal Violence. The principle of Intent (ante, § 302) here admits other acts of the defendant tending to negative innocent intent and thus to establish the criminal intent charged (to kill, to wound, to resist an officer, and the like). No fixed rule can be formulated as to the similarity which the other act must bear; it may be done to another person;[1] it may not accompany immediately the act charged;[2] and it may occur at a time subsequent.[3] The precedents illustrate these various aspects of the principle.[4]

"to rebut the theory that the death of Mrs. G. was the result of accident or suicide, or of the negligent or ignorant use or administering of arsenic by either his wife or by him");
Vermont: 1904, State v. Sargood, 77 Vt. 80, 58 Atl. 971 (poisoning of B.'s colts; H. having opposed defendant's desires, the attempted poisoning of H. was admitted as part of a plan);
Washington: 1913, State v. Hazzard, 75 Wash. 5, 134 Pac. 514 (murder by starvation; the deceased being one of two women who had jointly arranged to put themselves under the defendant's care, the illness of the other woman under the defendant's treatment was admitted);
Wisconsin: 1892, Zoldoske v. State, 82 Wis. 580, 599, 52 N. W. 778 (poisoning of E., the supposed intended wife of M.; the death of M.'s wife by poison, admitted to negative the accidental nature of E.'s death, E. and M.'s wife being obstacles in the way of defendant's marriage to M.).

§ 364. [1] People v. Wilson, Cal.; though this is not frequent, and its propriety is sometimes, though erroneously, denied: People v. Gibbs, N. Y.

[2] Ross v. State, Ala., State v. Merkley, Ia., State v. Patza, La., People v. Jones, N. Y.

[3] R. v. Voke, Eng.; in People v. Hopson, N. Y., a subsequent act was excluded.

[4] ENGLAND: 1823, R. v. Voke, R. & R. 531 (by all the Judges; assault with intent to kill; defence, accident; the fact of the accused having run away after the firing and concealed himself beside the road ahead, and then fired again at the same person, was received to prove the intent).

CANADA: 1877, Hickey v. Fitzgerald, 41 U. C. Q. B. 303 (assault; question to the plaintiff as to prior fights, excluded).

UNITED STATES: Federal: 1919, West v. U. S., 6th C. C. A., 258 Fed. 413, 419 (perjury on the hearing of an injunction against a strike with violence; assault upon another person contemporaneously, admitted); Alabama: 1878, Ross v. State, 62 Ala. 224 (assault with intent to commit murder; previous assaults upon the same person on the same evening, admitted to show intent); 1893, Horn v. State, 102 Ala. 144, 151, 279, 15 So. 278 (assault with intent to kill; an attempt to shoot the wife and the clerk immediately after, admitted; Freeman, J., diss.); 1898, Gaston v. State, 117 Ala. 162, 23 So. 682 (shooting a gun across a public road; defence, accidental discharge; declarations just before of an intent to shoot at Mr. Bryan's picture, admitted); 1899, Ellis v. State, 120 Ala. 333, 25 So. 1 (assault with intent to kill; previous "difficulty" between the parties, admitted); Arizona: 1919, Owen Guey v. State, — Ariz. —, 181 Pac. 175 (battery; prior assault on the same party and her sister, two years before, held not admissible); California: 1897, People v. Wilson, 117 Cal. 688, 49 Pac. 1054 (shooting an officer; a shooting of others just preceding the arrest, admitted to show intent); 1899, People v. Teixeira, 123 Cal. 297, 55 Pac. 988 (assault with intent; another assault about the same time upon the injured person's companion, admitted); Colorado: 1913, Rice v. People, 55 Colo. 506, 136 Pac. 74 (assault and battery; the defendant's admission, "This has been going on for 7 years", received); Illinois: 1921, People v. Lane, 300 Ill. 422, 133 N. E. 267 (murder; commission of other independent murders and robberies, recited in defendant's confession, held improperly admitted); Indiana: 1916, Underhill v. State, 185 Ind. 587, 114 N. E. 88 (assault; other prior quarrels excluded); Iowa: 1888, State v. Merkley, 74 Ia. 695, 39 N. W. 111 (burning an adopted child with a hot iron, with intent to kill; other similar burnings of the child admitted to show intent); Louisiana: 1848, State v. Patza, 3 La. An. 512 (stabbing with intent to kill; a former attempt to poison the same person by putting laudanum in her wine, admitted); 1900, State v. Cavanaugh, 52 La. 1251, 27 So. 704 (assault with intent to kill; assault on the same person the previous night, excluded); Missouri: 1897, State v. Raper, 141 Mo. 327, 42 S. W. 935 (defendant's riotous misconduct before an assault, admitted to show intent); New York: 1845, People v. Hopson, 1 Den. 574 (assault and battery on a constable and resisting him in performing his duty; an assault on him ten days later while the same proceedings of execution were being carried out, excluded); 1875, Kerrains v. People, 60 N. Y. 228 (the purpose of taking up a weapon, shortly before assaulting with it, admitted to show the purpose at the time of the assault); 1883, People v. Gibbs, 93 N. Y. 470 (assault with intent to kill M.;

§ 365. Other Principles, discriminated. (1) According to the principle of § 218, ante, another act may be evidenced so far as it is an inseparable part of the whole act charged. This is simply because in narrating the one it is impracticable to avoid describing the other, and not because the other has any evidential purpose. The phrase 'res gestæ' is sometimes used to sanction the admission of such acts, but it merely serves to obscure thought and to confuse principle. Either the act is an inseparable part of the main act or 'res gestæ', in which case it has no evidential function; or it serves to evidence intent or the like, in which case it must be tested by the foregoing principles. This latter purpose is often the one really in mind when this phrase is used, — as where the other act is said to "color" or "characterize" the main act charged;[1] obviously this is an evidential use, throwing light on the intent, and the phrase 'res gestæ' not only has no real application but introduces a loose and unworkable test.

(2) Another act of violence may need to be offered so as to assist in identifying the defendant, — as where it is shown that the same person did both acts, and then that the defendant did the other (post, § 413).

(3) Prior acts of violence by the defendant against the same person, besides evidencing intent, may also evidence emotion or motive, i.e. a hostility showing him likely to do further violence; this principle is elsewhere dealt with (post, § 396). The practical difference is that in the latter use the acts may range over a wider period of time (as indicating an enduring emotion) than in the present use, where they must be fairly near in time in order to throw light on the design or intent of the act charged.

(4) Threats of violence are in themselves expressions of a design to injure, and are accordingly dealt with elsewhere (ante, §§ 105–109).

the defendant had entered M.'s house, claiming the right to it, and about 8 o'clock shot at M.; then about half-past 9 J. came, and took M.'s part, who was absent, and the defendant attempted to shoot him; excluded, as throwing no light on the intent in assaulting M., and also because "the principle upon which evidence is admitted of other offences to show the intent . . . has no application to a case of this kind"; no cases cited; clearly wrong); 1885, People v. Jones, 99 N. Y. 667, 2 N. E. 49 (wife-murder, by shooting; as indicating whether he fired in anger to frighten her, or fired intending to kill, the fact was admitted of two prior shootings at his wife during the preceding twelve months; no cases cited); Oklahoma: 1915, Appleby v. State, 11 Okl. Cr. 284, 146 Pac. 228 (assault; another assault long prior, and an adultery, excluded); Pennsylvania: 1909, Com. v. House, 223 Pa. 487, 72 Atl. 804 (assault on a woman; assault on another woman about the same time, excluded); So. Dakota: 1918, Hansen v. Boots, 41 S. D. 96, 168 N. W. 798 (battery; cross-examination to prior assaults on other persons, held improper); Texas: 1892, Moore v. State, 31 Tex. Cr. 234, 236, 20 S. W. 563 (assault with intent to kill; indecent language to the assaulted, just before, admitted); 1900, Hamilton v. State, 41 Tex. Cr. 644, 56 S. W. 927 (assault with intent to kill; prior assaults on the same person during a year or more, admitted); 1904, Livingston v. State, 47 Tex. Cr. 405, 83 S. W. 1111 (assault by a father on his daughter; repeated attempts of the father to have intercourse with her, explaining her refusal to go with him, which led to the assault, excluded; unless the Supreme Court knew of facts not disclosed in the decision, it was a brutally unjust one); 1922, Solosky v. State, 90 Tex. Cr. 537, 236 S. W. 742 (unlawfully carrying a pistol); Vermont: 1866, Devine v. Rand, 38 Vt. 621, 627 (trespass for beating, kicking, throwing into the snow, placing on a hot stove, etc.; the various acts of cruelty admitted to show the intent, exemplary damages being allowable for wilful trespass); Washington: 1917, State v. Clark, 98 Wash. 81, 167 Pac. 84 (assault in a saloon; prior violent conduct, admitted on the facts).

§ 365. [1] E.g., People v. Marble, Mich., ante, § 363.

13. Miscellaneous Offences

§ 367. Riot, Trespass, Gaming, Electoral Offences, etc. The foregoing principles apply to this class of evidence in any offence where knowledge, intent, or design is to be proved. What is to be kept in mind is that the Intent principle (ante, § 302) is available wherever the intent accompanying an act is to be shown, the other acts being so far similar as to negative by their recurrence that innocent intent which might be conceded for one occasion but becomes less supposable with every repetition; and that the Design or System principle (ante, § 304) has application wherever the doing of the act itself is to be proved, and the design or system pointing towards it is to be inferred from other acts indicating by their common features its existence. These principles may thus have application on a charge of rioting, or the like,[1] keeping a disorderly house,[2] gambling, or keeping a lottery,[3]

§ 367. [1] 1820, R. v. Hunt, 3 B. & Ald. 566, 569, 573 (mob-meeting; acts of various parts of the mob admitted to show its intent as a whole); 1876, R. v. Mailloux, 16 N. Br. 499, 507, 512, 516 (indictment for a riot; evidence to explain away conduct previous to the day alleged was rejected, because it did not call for explanation); 1844, State v. Renton, 15 N. H. 169, 170, 174 (riot on the 4th of July, 1842; the fact that the celebrations on that anniversary in 1839, 1840, and 1841 were riotous, and that the defendant took part in them, excluded).

The various other questions of evidence that become material in proving mob violence are analyzed, with cross-references, post, § 1790.

[2] Fed. 1919, De Four v. U. S., 9th C. C. A., 260 Fed. 596 (keeping a house of ill-fame, under U. S. St. 1917, May 18, § 13, defendant's previous conduct of houses of ill-fame, admitted to negative guilty knowledge); N. J. 1896, Roop v. State, 58 N. J. L. 479, 34 Atl. 749 (former keeping of a disorderly house, that being the offence charged, excluded); 1897, Parks v. State, 59 N. J. L. 573, 36 Atl. 935 (keeping a disorderly house; matters connected with a similar offence in another State, excluded); N. Mex. St. 1921, c. 69, § 3 (prostitution; prior conviction admissible); St. 1921, c. 69, § 4 (similar, in a proceeding to enjoin keeping a house for prostitution); N. D. St. 1919, Mar. 7, c. 190, § 3 (prostitution offences; former conviction, admissible; quoted post, § 1620); Oh. Gen. Code Ann. 1821, § 13031–15 (keeping a house for prostitution, etc.; "a prior conviction" is admissible).

For other related offences (abduction, enticement for prostitution, etc.), see ante, § 360. For other acts to evidence character of inmates, see ante, § 204.

[3] Arkansas: 1921, Cain v. State, 149 Ark. 616, 233 S. W. 779 (conducting a gaming house: defendant's operation of other gaming houses in the same town, admitted); Florida: 1898, Toll v. State, 40 Fla. 169, 23 So. 943 (keeping a gaming room; where acts within the period charged are shown, acts prior and subsequent are admissible to illustrate); Illinois: 1866, Dunn v. People, 40 Ill. 469 (lottery; the defendant called it a "gift-sale"; and other envelopes and advertisements were admitted to show its real nature); 1871, Thomas v. People, 59 Ill. 160, 162 (lottery; other tickets, bills, and advertisements, connected with the same enterprise, admitted to show intent); 1908, First Nat'l Bank v. Miller, 235 Ill. 135, 85 N. E. 312 (gambling in grain contracts without intent to deliver, as a defence to a note; the payee's similar transactions with other persons, admitted, to show intent); 1912, People v. Viskniskki, 255 Ill. 384, 99 N. E. 621 (renting premises for gaming; two former instances of renting to the same party and their use for gaming, admitted); Kentucky: 1878, Miller v. Com., 13 Bush. 737 (maintaining a lottery; the fact admitted of its regular maintenance for several years preceding the time alleged); Louisiana: 1904, State v. Behan, 113 La. 754, 37 So. 714 (keeping a house for illegal faro-banking; prior similar acts of gaming not more than two weeks before, admitted to show knowledge and intent); Massachusetts: 1888, Com. v. Ferry, 146 Mass. 209, 15 N. E. 484 (pool-selling in rooms kept for the unlawful purpose of so selling, etc.; the carrying on of such transactions shortly before, admitted); New Jersey: 1885, Clark v. State, 47 N. J. L. 556, 4 Atl. 327 (sale of lottery tickets; the sale of a ticket to another person, not admitted "for the purpose of showing that the defendant would be likely to commit the crime charged"); Oklahoma: 1913, Dupree v. State, 10 Okl. Cr. App. 65, 134 Pac. 86 (gambling; former convictions for gambling, excluded); Texas: 1920, Watson v. State, 88 Tex. Cr. 227, 225 S. W. 753 (keeping a gaming house; committing a wilful trespass to property,[4] uttering a criminal libel,[5] refusing a vote,[6] or casting a vote,[7] packing a jury,[8] and sundry other offences and wrongs.[9] possession of a pistol next day when arrested, held inadmissible); Washington: 1919, State v. Kaukos, 109 Wash. 20, 186 Pac. 269 (conducting a gambling-game; operation of the game on other days, admitted; prior rulings collected).

Compare the cases cited ante, § 203, n. 2 (proof of an habitual or continuing offence, e.g. keeping a gaming house).

For reputation to evidence knowledge, see ante, § 254.

[4] 1897, Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Hill, 115 Ala. 334, 22 So. 163 (in proving, to recover a penalty, that a trespass was wilful and knowing, under the statute, the breaking down of the fence at the same time may be shown); 1909, Jaynes v. People, 44 Colo. 535, 99 Pac. 325 (poisoning a horse; rule stated); 1903, State v. Roscum, 119 Ia. 330, 93 N. W. 295 (malicious mischief; larceny of similar articles two years before, excluded); 1909, People v. Minney, 155 Mich. 534, 119 N. W. 918 (mutilating a horse by cutting off its tongue; other similar offences, excluded); 1895, Mayer v. R. Co., 90 Wis. 522, 63 N. W. 1048 (to show that the defendant had piled snow at a certain crossing, the fact that it had piled snow at other adjacent points was admitted).

[5] 1791, R. v. Pearce, Peake 75 (several other paragraphs about the plaintiff by the defendant were admitted in corroboration, to prove him the author); 1907, Price v. Clapp, 199 Term. 425, 105 S. W. 864 (libel in an anonymous letter written to the plaintiff's employer and calling the plaintiff a thief; the defendant and his wife were alleged as the writers, but denied it; admissions of the defendant's wife that she had written other anonymous letters, excluded: clearly unsound: the peculiar custom of writing anonymous letters served to identify the defendant on the issue before the court; post-office inspectors could have enlightened the court on this subject).

For the use of other libels to evidence malice, see post, § 403.

[6] 1870, Friend v. Hamill, 34 Md. 298, 305 (action by a Democrat for malicious and corrupt refusal of an election officer to allow him to vote; the fact was received of the defendant's prior declaration that the plaintiff and certain others should not vote, the fact that these persons were not allowed to vote, and the fact that they were all Democrats while the defendant was a Republican). Compare the jury cases infra.

The following case illustrates a similar application: 1899, People v. Alton, 179 Ill. 615, 54 N. E. 421 (mandamus to compel the allowance of the relator's negro children to attend the public schools; an ordinance authorized the superintendent or the board committee to assign pupils to specific schools; the relator's children were alleged to have been excluded from schools containing white children only and sent to schools containing negro children only; to prove that the exclusion was made with sole intent to discriminate on grounds of race, the treatment of other negro children by the defendant was admitted).

[7] 1895, People v. Shea, 147 N. Y. 78, 41 N. E. 508 (admitting evidence of previous repeating, to show a general design of fraudulent voting); 1919, State v. Unger, 93 N. J. L. 50, 107 Atl. 270 (receiving fraudulent votes; receipt of other illegal votes, admitted).

[8] 1848, R. v. Mitchel, 6 State Tr. N. s. 599, 630 (challenge to the array because not impartially selected by the sheriff; the fact that among the qualified persons the Catholics and the Protestants were as two to one, but on the panel were as one to five, held admissible as tending to show an unfair intent in the sheriff; quoted ante, § 302); 1848, R. v. O'Doherty, 6 St. Tr. 831, 881, 888 (same); 1848, R. v. O'Brien, 7 St. Tr. 1, 28, 30 (similar); 1848, R. v. Duffy, 7 St. Tr. 795, 859, 870 (similar facts allowed, but the ruling is obscure, apparently from a failure to distinguish between religious disproportion as a ground of challenge and the same as evidence of corrupt selection); 1903, Binyon v. U. S., 4 Ind. T. 642, 76 S. W. 265 (grand jurors discriminated against, in selection, on account of race; evidence held insufficient on the facts); 1903, Carter v. State, 45 Tex. Cr. 430, 76 S. W. 437 (similar question; evidence held insufficient).

[9] Federal: 1866, The Springbok, 5 Wall. 1, 7, 25, 27 (confiscation of goods of a neutral, captured between England and Nassau, and consigned to Nassau, a blockade of Confederate ports then prevailing; issue, whether the cargo was destined by the shippers for transshipment at Nassau to a Confederate port; to evidence the intention, the facts were admitted that two other vessels, the Gertrude and the Hart, recently captured on their way to blockaded ports, had a cargo consigned by the same shippers, of the same classes of goods marked in the same way, and that many consecutively numbered bales, missing in the other two vessels, were found on the Springbok); 1898, Safter v. U. S., 31 C. C. A. 1, 87 Fed. 329 (mailing lewd letters; subsequent adultery of the defendant with the addressee, held irrelevant); 1917, Alaska Packers' Ass'n v. U. S., 9th C. C. A., 244 Fed. 710 (unlawful destruction of salmon; takings of salmon subsequent to the date charged, admitted to evidence intent); 1918, U. S. v. Pineda, 37 P. I. 456 (negligence in erroneously filling a prescription for drug X with drug Y; similar error on another occasion, admitted to show negligence); Alabama: 1890, Dodd v. State, 92 Ala. 61, 9 So. 467 (carrying a concealed pistol; the fact of the use of a pistol shortly before, excluded); Illinois: 1906, Joseph Taylor Coal Co. v. Dawes, 220 Ill. 145, 77 N. E. 131 (injury to a mine-workman by an unlawful lowering of the cage at a speed forbidden by statute; the engineer's repeated lowering of the cage at such speed, admitted to show knowledge and wilfulness); Indiana: 1855, Thomas v. State, 103 Ind. 419, 431, 434, 2 N. E. 808 (knowingly sending a lewd letter; another letter to the same person, admitted); Massachusetts: 1916, Com. v. Lindsey, 223 Mass. 392, 111 N. E. 869 (unlawful practice of medicine; acts and conversations on other days than alleged, admitted); Michigan: 1919, People v. Wheaton, 207 Mich. 173, 173 N. W. 335 (illegal hunting; another similar act five days before, in the same region, excluded; the opinion does not seem to appreciate the principle involved); New Jersey: 1896, Meyer v. State, 59 N. J. L. 310, 36 Atl. 483 (knowingly and unlawfully prescribing medicine to C. without a license; the fact excluded of similar unlawful prescriptions to others; the Court treat it as character-evidence, and ignore its use as indicating intent or scheme); Wisconsin: 1920, State v. Till, — Wis. —, 177 N. W. 589 (unlawful practice of medicine on T.; visits of the same person at prior times to defendant, admitted to show intent).

368. Dealing in Liquors or Drugs. The violation of the laws in regard to intoxicating liquors involves constantly the use of evidence under the present principles. There were originally four chief varieties of offences under these laws: selling, being a common seller, keeping with intent to sell, and keeping a place for the purpose of sale. (1) The first may raise the question how far an intent may be evidenced by other instances, and how far a design or plan, as showing probably an actual sale, may be evidenced by former acts of the sort.[1] (2) The second involves the principle of separate instances to show a character or habit (ante, § 203).[2] (3) The third may raise the question how far other acts of keeping or selling may be received to show the intent;[3] (4) and the fourth may raise the same

§ 368. [1] Cluff v. State, 16 Ariz. 179, 142 Pac. 644; 1921, Richardson v. State, — Ariz. —, 201 Pac. 845 (manufacturing intoxicating liquor; prior offer to sale, admitted); 1920, Thompson v. State, 189 Ind. 182, 125 N. E. 641 (prior sales by defendant and co-defendant, admitted); 1922, Bullington v. Com., 193 Ky. 529, 236 S. W. 961 (selling whisky; other sales, excluded on the facts); 1912, State v. Oden, 130 La. 598, 58 So. 351 (illegal liquor selling; later sale in another parish, excluded); 1909, Lockard v. Van Alstyne, 155 Mich. 507, 120 N. W. 1 (damage by sale of liquor; on the issue whether the intent was to sell for medicine or to sell for beverage, the practice of the defendant to sell for beverage was admitted); 1910, People v. Giddings, 159 Mich. 523, 124 N. W. 546 (illegal sale; sales to others, admitted); 1877, State v. Shaw, 58 N. H. 73 (illegal liquor-selling; sales during the same month, admitted as showing a plan or course of business); 1920, State v. Donaluzzi, 94 Vt. 142, 109 Atl. 57 (prior similar transaction, admitted; here the question was whether an apparent theft by the alleged buyer was merely a pretence covering a sale); 1895, Fosdahl v. State, 89 Wis. 482, 62 N. W. 185 (illegal selling of whiskey on Oct. 29, 1892; illegal selling of beer and whiskey during the summer of 1892, excluded; but illegal possession during October, 1892, admissible, apparently to show the selling charged).

[2] 1915, Day v. U. S., 4th C. C. A., 220 Fed. 818 (dealing in liquor in 1910 and 1911 without paying tax; issue whether the business belonged to defendant's brother and the defendant acted only as agent; four acts of ownership by defendant in 1909, held inadmissible; unsound; no authority cited; Woods, J., diss.; the principle applicable is really that of § 382, post); 1921, Simmons v. People, 70 Colo. 262, 199 Pac. 416 (keeping for sale; other recent sales, admissible to show intent); 1890, People v. Haas, 79 Mich. 457, 461, 44 N. W. 928 (illegal sales shortly before the date charged, admitted); and instances cited ante, § 203.

[3] Federal: 1914, Taliaferro v. U. S., 5th C. C. A., 213 Fed. 25 (illegal sale of liquor; keeping also a bawdy-house held inadmissible; unsound on the facts); 1921, Basich v. U. S., 9th C. C. A. 290, 276 Fed. 290 (liquor nuisance; possession of similar liquor at another time and place, admitted); Maine: 1876, State v. Plunkett, 64 Me. 534 (keeping with intent; former sales admitted; here a conviction for illegal selling); 1919, State v. O'Toole, 118 Me. 314, 108 Atl. 99 (possession with intent to sell; possession more than a year before, admitted); Maryland: 1912, Curry v. State, 117 Md. 587, 83 Atl. 1030 (illegal sale; prior sales admitted to show intent and to evidence question.[4] (5) A fifth type of offence, issuing a medical prescription unlawfully, involves similar questions.[5]

The answers are not difficult, so far as they depend on the application of the foregoing principles. But in order to discriminate properly the various other questions of substantive law and criminal pleading which occasionally bear a superficial resemblance to the evidential questions, it would become necessary to consider a great variety of local statutory material and a mass of decisions having no bearing on the law of Evidence.

The widespread use of narcotic drugs has lead to repressive penal statutes, defining offences which broadly follow the types already established by the legislation against intoxicating liquors; and similar principles apply.[6] the "place of business" mentioned in the statute); Massachusetts: 1885, Com. v. Cotton, 138 Mass. 501 (keeping liquor with intent to sell unlawfully; the defendant was the driver of a wagon sent out from the city, where sales were lawful, to a suburb where they were unlawful; the fact of deliveries in the same suburb three and four months before was admitted to show intent); 1895, Com. v. Vincent, 165 Mass. 18, 42 N. E. 332 (keeping liquor illegally; to show intent, the fact was admitted of intoxicated men leaving the place some weeks before; that "the same condition of things existed both before and after the day named" was admissible "for the purpose of showing the intent with which the liquors were kept on the day set forth)"; Nebraska: 1897, Hans v. State, 50 Nebr. 150, 69 Mo. 838 (sales shortly before, admitted to show the intent of keeping); New Hampshire: 1903, State v. Wenzel, 72 N. H. 396, 56 Atl. 918 (keeping in December, not admitted to prove intent in April, on peculiar facts and theory); North Carolina: 1919, State v. Simons, 178 N. C. 679, 100 S. E. 239 (possession with intent to sell; possession of a new still two months later, admitted); 1920, State v. Beam, 179 N. C. 768, 103 S. E. 370 (keeping for sale, and selling liquor; several sales a year before, excluded); 1921, State v. Crouse, 182 N. C. 835, 108 S. E. 911 (making and keeping liquor with intent to sell; prior possession of a still in recent operation, admitted); Vermont: 1898, State v. White, 70 Vt. 225, 39 Atl. 1085 (keeping with intent to sell on June 18; keeping with intent to sell on Sept. 14 of same year, admitted to show intent); 1905, State v. Costa, 78 Vt. 198, 62 Atl. 38.

Another principle to be distinguished is that which, while allowing a range between certain dates for the offence proved at the trial, forbids the attempt to prove more than one as the basis of the charge, on the ground that each juror might regard a different one as proved, e.g. Boldt v. State, 72 Wis. 14, 38 N. W. 177.

[4] 1917, State v. Maguire, 31 Ida. 24, 169 Pac. 175 (liquor nuisance; other sales, etc., admitted); 1860, Com. v. Edds, 14 Gray Mass. 406, 408 (keeping a tenement used for illegal sales of liquor; after evidence of the keeping of the tenement, the fact of sales by others in the absence of the defendants was received); 1871, Sherman v. Wilder, 106 Mass. 537, 540 (the intent charged being to give a lease knowingly to one selling liquor illegally, the intent at another time was admitted); 1896, People v. Caldwell, 107 Mich. 374, 65 N. W. 213 (former sales, admitted to show a general plan).

[5] Colo. 1898, Chipman v. People, 24 Colo. 520, 52 Pac. 677 (sale of liquor said to have been in good faith for medicinal purposes; the sale being denied and the medicinal use being immaterial, evidence of other sales to disprove good faith was held improperly admitted); Mich. 1916, People v. Humphrey, 194 Mich. 10, 160 N. W. 445 (false prescription of whisky as a medicine; other frequent prescriptions, admitted); Mo. 1920, State v. Patterson, — Mo. App. —, 222 S. W. 882 (unlawful issuance of a liquor prescription by a physician; five other such prescriptions issued by defendant to the same person in the same month, admitted); Wash. 1917, Everett v. Cowles, 97 Wash. 396, 166 Pac. 786 (prescribing whisky without belief in illness, contrary to a city ordinance; other prescriptions to various persons about the same time, admitted); 1918, State v. Holland, 99 Wash. 645, 170 Pac. 332 (druggist's sale of alcohol not for mechanical purposes as represented by the buyer when registering; other recorded sales by defendant for such purposes, increasing many fold since the date of the prohibitory law, admitted); 1917, Seattle v. Hewetson, 95 Wash. 612, 164 Pac. 234 (prescribing whisky without good reason to believe in illness, etc., under a city ordinance; similar prescriptions to other persons, admitted; cases collected).

[6] Federal: 1917, Wallace v. U. S., 7th C. C. A., 243 Fed. 300 (sale of drugs under St. 1914, Dec. 17, Harrison Drug Act; convictions for similar sales in State courts prior to the date of the Federal statute, admitted to show "state of mind and motive"); 1919, Thompson v. U. S., 8th C. C. A., 258 Fed. 196 (unlawfully dispensing narcotic drugs, under U. S. St. Dec.

§ 369. Treason, Sedition. In treason, the period of the Restoration saw a general improvement in the definition of the crime as well as in its procedure and rules of Evidence (post, § 2036), — an improvement which was permanently established by the practice under Lord Holt after the Revolution and the accession of William and Mary. As a part of this advance there came in the doctrines of criminal law and pleading that treason must consist in an overt act (which was in truth a revival of an ancient limitation), and that no overt act other than such as is charged in the indictment can be proved as constituting the offence.[1] But this latter doctrine was one of pleading only; and it did not prohibit the use of other overt acts as evidential of Intent under the present principle;[2] and this result has been accepted in applying our own constitutional enactment of the same rule.[3]

In sedition (including seditious riot and seditious libel), other acts and utterances are receivable, under the present principles, to evidence seditious intent.[4] In the prosecutions under the Federal so-called Espionage Act

17, 1914, Anti-Narcotic Act; sales to other persons under similar circumstances, admitted to show intent); 1919, Workin v. U. S., 2d C. C. A., 260 Fed. 137 (illegal sale of narcotic drugs; other sales of such drugs, admitted where "there is some real connection between the extraneous crime and the crime charged"); 1919, Paris v. U. S., 8th C. C. A., 260 Fed. 529 (violation of U. S. St. 1914, Dec. 14, c. 1, Anti-Narcotic Act; certain other sales of narcotics many months before, here excluded); 1921, Dysart v. U. S., 5th C. C. A., 270 Fed. 77 (sale of morphine, under § 2 of Harrison Anti-Narcotic Act; defendant was a physician; defendant's issuance of prescriptions to a "large number of other persons", admitted, to show intent); 1921, Harris v. U. S., 2d C. C. A., 273 Fed. 785 (violation of the Harrison Narcotic Drug Act, U. S. St. 1914, Dec. 17, by a physician, charging 6 separate prescriptions in April, etc., 1919; evidence that during those three months defendant wrote 7940 prescriptions for narcotic drugs, admitted to show intent); 1921, Hoyt v. U. S., 2d C. C. A., 273 Fed. 792 (like Harris v. U. S.; defendant's purchase of large quantities of narcotic drugs, admitted); Georgia: 1910, Lee v. State, 8 Ga. App. 413, 69 S. E. 310 (prescription of cocaine not in good faith as medicine; defendant's frequent issuance of such prescriptions without inquiry, admitted; enlightened opinion by Powell, J.); 1911, Stanley v. State, 9 Ga. App. 141, 70 S. E. 894 (unlawful prescription of cocaine; frequent prescription of cocaine to others, without inquiry, admitted); Washington: 1918, State v. Smith, 103 Wash. 267, 174 Pac. 9 (druggist selling morphine without a prescription; illegal sales to four other persons, held not admissible on the facts).

Compare some analogous case in § 367, n. 9.

§ 369. [1] 1696, R. v. Vaughan, Salk. 634 ("a distinct overt act cannot be given in evidence unless it relate to that which is alleged or conduces to the proof of it. But if it conduce to prove an overt act alleged, it is good evidence").

For the history of the rule, see the following authorities: 1660, Regicides' Trials, 5 How. St. Tr. 947, 976; 1762, Foster, Crown Law, 245; 1803, East, Pleas of the Crown, I, 130.

Several States have placed this rule in statutes: Can. Dom. R. S. 1906, c. 146, Crim. C. § 847; U. S. Ariz. Rev. St. 1913, P. C. § 1044; Ark. Dig. 1919, § 3117; Cal. P. C. 1872, § 1103; Kan. Gen. St. 1915, § 8125 (in treason, "no evidence shall be given of an overt act that is not expressly laid in the indictment or information"); Mont. Rev. C. 1921, § 11978 (like Cal. P. C. § 1103); Nebr. Rev. St. 1922, § 10143; N. J. Comp. St. 1910, Crim. Proc. § 57; N. D. Comp. L. 1913, § 10839 ("nor can evidence be admitted of an overt act not expressly charged"); Wyo. Comp. St. 1920, § 7523.

[2] R. v. Vaughan, supra.

[3] 1799, U. S. v. Fries, Whart. St. Tr. 482, 585, 594 ("evidence may be given of other circumstances or even of other overt acts, connected with that on which the indictment is grounded, and occurring or committed in any other part of the district than the place mentioned, . . . to show the 'quo animo', the intent, with which the act laid was committed"); 1807, Burr's Trial, Robertson's Rep. I, 472 (acts of treason elsewhere than as charged, admissible, since they, "by showing a general evil intention, render it more probable that the intention in the particular case was evil").

[4] England: 1820, R. v. Hunt, 1 State Tr. N. S. 171, 476, 486, 491 (seditious meetings; resolutions at a similar meeting shortly before, admitted to show intent and design); 1821, of 1917, the well-established English precedents of a century before were given renewed application to the various kinds of actively disloyal conduct so effectively struck at by that legislation.[5] In the same way, the accused

Redford v. Birley, 1 St. Tr. N. S. 1071,1237 (seditious mob; antecedent doings of the same persons admitted); 1848, R. v. O'Brien, 7 St. Tr. N. S. 1, 75 (sedition; other speeches than those charged, six months before, admitted to show intent); Canada: 1918, R. v. Barron, 44 D. L. R. 332, Sask. (seditious words; prior similar utterances, admitted).

[5] Federal: 1918, U. S. v. Schulze, D. C. S. D. Cal., 253 Fed. 377 (charge of favoring by word or act the cause of a hostile country, under U. S. St. June 15, 1917, c. 30, § 3; defendant's utterances of pro-German sentiments at various times from 1915 to date of the indictment, admitted, to show intent); 1918, Deason v. U. S., 5th C. C. A., 254 Fed. 259 (charge under U. S. St. June 15, 1917, c. 30, § 3, Espionage Act, of obstructing the recruiting service, etc., by threats against a local board; other utterances against the Selective Service Act, before its passage on May 18, 1917, and before the date of the Espionage Act, admitted); 1918, Kirchner v. U. S., 4th C. C. A., 255 Fed. 301 (charge of making false statements with intent to interfere with military operations, etc., under U. S. St. June 15, 1917, c. 30, § 3; similar statements made by defendant before the date of the statute, admitted, to evidence intent); 1919, Rhubery v. U. S., 9th C. C. A., 255 Fed. 865 (charge under U. S. St. June 15, 1917, c. 30, of obstructing the recruiting service, etc., by utterances against the U. S. taking part in the war; other utterances of the same sort prior to the U. S. declaration of war, admitted); 1919, Hall v. U. S., 4th C. C. A., 256 Fed. 748 (obstructing the recruiting service, etc.; threats that "he would like to shoot the President", excluded, the offence being distinct); 1919, Coldwell v. U. S., 1st C. C. A., 256 Fed. 805 (charge under U. S. St. June 15, 1917, c. 30, § 3, of obstructing the recruiting service, etc., by utterances approving the action of certain men who had been convicted of unlawful refusal to serve as soldiers; other utterances in May, 1917, prior to the passage of the Espionage Act, urging refusal to register in June, 1917, under the Selective Service Act, admitted); 1919, Herman v. U. S., 9th C. C. A., 257 Fed. 601 (publication of a circular violating the Espionage Act, St. June 5, 1917, c. 30, opposing military service; the defendant's conversations expressing opinions similar to those in the pamphlet, admitted to show intent); 1919, Wells v. U. S., 9th C. C. A., 257 Fed. 605, 614 (charge under U. S. Criminal Code Mar. 5, 1909, § 6, of conspiracy to prevent by force the execution of U. S. Joint Resolution April 6, 1917, declaring war on Germany and directing the use of military forces, by utterances in April and May, 1917, urging resistance by force to military conscription; a resolution introduced by defendant at a meeting on May 23, 1917, after the passage of the Selective Service Act of May 18, 1917, admitted to show his "attitude of mind towards the Conscription Act"); 1919, Shidler v. U. S., 9th C. C. A., 257 Fed. 620 (charge under U. S. St. June 15, 1917, c. 30, § 3, Espionage Act, of promoting the success of the enemy cause by utterances against the war, against conscription, etc.; other utterances prior to the date of the declaration of war, admitted); 1919, Kammann v. U. S., 7th C. C. A., 259 Fed. 192 (seditious utterances during war; utterances prior to the entrance of the U. S. into the war, while the nation was neutral, excluded; unsound); 1919, Wolf v. U. S., 8th C. C. A., 259 Fed. 388 (seditious utterances on July 15, 1917, charged under the Espionage Act of June 15, 1917; utterances prior to the date of the statute, excluded; unsound); 1919, Equi v. U. S., 9th C. C. A., 261 Fed. 53 (violation of U. S. St. June 15, 1917, c. 30, Espionage Act, by inciting resistance to the U. S., etc.; former speeches of the defendant, uttered before the enactment of the statute, held admissible to show intent); 1920, Partan v. U. S., 9th C. C. A., 261 Fed. 515 (charge under St. June 15, 1917, c. 30, Espionage Act, of uttering disloyal language against the military forces; other articles distributed by defendant after declaration of war, admitted to show intent); 1920, Seebach v. U. S., 8th C. C. A., 262 Fed. 885 (charge under St. June 15, 1917, c. 30, Espionage Act, of attempting to cause insubordination in the military forces; other similar statements to other persons, admitted to show intent); 1920, Howenstine v. U. S., 9th C. C. A., 263 Fed. 1 (charge under St. June 15, 1917, c. 30, Espionage Act, of attempting to cause insubordination in the military forces; a newspaper article of Nov. 22, 1914, admitted to show defendant's state of mind); 1920, White v. U. S., 6th C. C. A., 263 Fed. 17 (charge under St. June 15, 1917, c. 30, Espionage Act, of attempting to cause insubordination in the military forces; statements made at other times and places "not too remote", admissible to show intent); 1920, Albers v. U. S., 9th C. C. A., 263 Fed. 27 (charge under St. June 15, 1917, c. 30, of attempting to cause resistance to the U. S., etc.; other utterances of defendant, in Sept. 1914–15, held admissible to evidence intent, not being too remote; here the defendant alleged that he was so drunk at the time of the utterances charged as not to realize what he said); 1920, Schoborg v. U. S., 6th C. C. A., 264 Fed. 1 (charge under St. June 15, 1917, § 3, as amended May 16, 1918, of supporting the enemy's cause by word or act; other similar may offer his other utterances and acts to evidence his loyal (i.e. non-seditious) intent,[6] — an application of the rule which became well enough established statements, "made at near-by times and places", admitted to show intent, and also to show the actual utterance of the words charged); 1920, Wimmer v U. S., 6th C. C. A., 264 Fed. 11 (like Schoborg v. U. S., first point); 1920, Lockhart v. U. S., 6th C. C. A., 264 Fed. 14 (like Schoborg v. U. S., first point); 1920, Anderson v. U. S., 8th C. C. A., 264 Fed. 75 (charge under St. June 15, 1917, tit. 1, § 3, Espionage Act, of attempting to cause disloyalty in the military forces; per Sanborn, J., "There is no longer any doubt that where, as in this case, the intent . . . is material, statements and acts similar to and made and done by him about the same time . . . are admissible in evidence to illustrate and prove his intent"; but when and where was there any doubt on the subject, unless perhaps in the learned judge's own mind?); 1920, Schurmann v. U. S., 9th C. C. A., 264 Fed. 917 (cancellation of a native German's naturalization certificate dated 1904; defendant's conduct in 1916–17 being shown, his declaration in 1917 that "I have sworn allegiance . . . but I didn't swear away my birthright", etc., admitted to evidence "original fraud" in 1904 in that he did not "absolutely and entirely renounce and abjure" all foreign allegiance); 1920, Bold v. U. S., 9th C. C. A., 265 Fed. 581 (charge under the Espionage Act of "supporting and favoring the cause of the German Government", etc.; utterances of similar import, to other persons, some before and some after the date of declaration of war by the U. S., admitted); 1920, American Socialist Society v. U. S., 2d C. C. A., 266 Fed. 212 (charge of wilfully obstructing enlistment, etc., under St. June 15, 1917, tit. 1, § 3, Espionage Act, by publishing a pamphlet "The Great Madness" in September, 1917; defendant's publication of similar pamphlets on prior occasions, admitted, to show intent); 1920, Holzmacher v. U. S., 7th C. C. A., 266 Fed. 979 (utterances, under Espionage Act, as amended May 16, 1918, § 3, abusing the U. S. military forces; utterances of a similar sort held not admissible, no question of intent being involved in the issue as to the utterance charged; so far as the offered utterances might be remote, the ruling might be tenable; but so far as it excludes other similar acts to evidence "whether it happened or did not happen", the ruling is unsound, for it ignores the principle of § 304, ante); 1920, Bochner v. U. S., 8th C. C. A., 267 Fed. 562 (obstructing recruitment, under St. 1917, June 15, tit. 1, § 3, Espionage Act; statements to parties not named in the indictment, admitted to show intent); 1921, Dierkes v. U. S., 6th C. C. A., 274 Fed. 75, 81 (violation of Espionage Act, 1917, June 5, § 3, as amended 1918, May 16; other utterances prior to dates of amendment and original act, but after the U. S. was at war, admitted);

Iowa: 1919, State v. Gibson, 189 Ia. 1212, 174 N. W. 34 (sedition; by the prosecution, whether the witness had at any time, "in talking with defendant, heard him speak favorably of the U. S. Government", allowed; that defendant was hostile to the American Red Cross, the Y. M. C. A., and the Army Y. M. C. A., allowed, these organizations being "in effect auxiliaries in the task" of conducting the national war);
Kansas: 1918, State v. Shumaker, 103 Kan. 741, 175 Pac. 978 (charge of casting contempt on the U. S. flag, by word or act, under Gen. St. 1915, § 3706; defendant's utterance, a year before, as to the "rags", meaning the flags, admitted to show intent); Montana: 1920, State v. Smith, 57 Mont. 349, 188 Pac. 644 (sedition; other seditious utterances, admissible, explaining State v. Kahn, 56 Mont. 108, 182 Pac. 107).

[6] England: 1683, Lord Russell's Trial, 9 How. St. Tr. 577, 622; 1684, Rosewel's Trial, 10 How. St. Tr. 147, 197, 206, 212; 1691, Grahme's Trial, 12 How. St. Tr. 645, 794; 1831, R. v. Cobbett, 2 State Tr. N. S. 789, 877 (seditious libel; the defendant's publications nine years before, received to negative wrongful motive or intent); 1839, R. v. Frost, 4 St. Tr. N. S. 85, 380 (treason; former anti-seditious conduct described); 1843, R. v. O'Connor, 4 St. Tr. N. S. 935, 1162 (sedition; acts of good conduct testified to); 1843, R. v. O'Connell, 5 St. Tr. N. S. 1, 537 (sedition; defendant's speeches in 1841, read to negative seditious intention); 1848, R. v. O'Brien, 7 St. Tr. N. S. 1, 260, 266 (sedition; past expressions of loyalty received); 1848, R. v. Rankin, 7 St. Tr. N. S. 711, 747 (seditious riot; former assistance to police in quelling riots, received); United States: 1920, Erhardt v. U. S., 7th C. C. A., 268 Fed. 326 (charge of wilfully obstructing army enlistment, under St. 1917, tit. 1, § 3, Espionage Act; the defendant's possession of the German kaiser's portrait having been shown, he was allowed to be asked whether he had kind feelings towards the kaiser, whether he had an intent to foster sentiment in Germany's favor, etc.). Contra, but grossly unsound: Federal: 1920, Howenstine v. U. S., 9th C. C. A., 263 Fed. 1 (charge under St. June 15, 1917, c. 30, Espionage Act, of attempting to cause insubordination in the military forces: defendant's statements prior and during the war "evidencing their opposition to Germany and the German cause and their patriotism toward the United States", excluded; unsound); Montana: 1919, State v. Kahn, 56 Mont. 108, 182 Pac. 107 (sedition, in uttering sentiments opposed to the existing war; defendant's conduct as to Red Cross, liberty loans, etc., was admitted, but state-as law, but was no doubt hampered by its apparent relation to other rules which might have prohibited it, such as the character-rule (ante, § 195), the rule for innocent conduct (ante, § 293), the rule for standard of behavior (ante, § 461), and the hearsay exception for declarations of a mental condition (post, § 1731).

§ 370. Conspiracy. In so far as the doctrine of overt acts applies also in the substantive law of Conspiracy, the same distinction has developed as in the case of treason, viz. that overt acts other than the one alleged in the charge may nevertheless be introduced to evidence Intent or Plan.[1]

14. Civil Cases

§ 371. In general. The foregoing principles are equally as applicable to civil cases as to criminal cases, i.e. to the use of other torts, sales, forgeries, or the like, in evidencing similar issues in civil cases. The peculiarity of the question involved is merely whether and under what conditions other similar acts are receivable to show Knowledge, Intent, or Design as to the act charged. This question is of much less frequent occurrence in civil cases than in criminal cases, mainly because the issues of intent and the like are less commonly open in civil cases. But wherever Knowledge or Intent or Design is relevant in a civil case the foregoing principles are equally applicable. Thus, where the act of forgery is in issue, there may be a criminal prosecution for the forgery or there may be a civil action based on the forged document, and the same evidence may be applicable in both. So, where a false representation is charged, it not only may be but usually is a civil case in which the issue arises and the foregoing principles become applicable. In almost every one of the foregoing classes of cases there are instances of the application of the principles in civil litigation. The salient feature is the nature of the issue and the kind of evidence offered, not the penal or the civil form of the proceeding. There are, however, a few classes of cases to be noticed in which the present principles may be applied, and yet the opportunity occurs practically in civil litigation only.

§ 372. Copyright Infringement. The infringement of copyright may be evidenced by the aid of the present principle, in connection with another one, actually different, but seldom distinguished in practice:

ments "favorable to our prosecution of the war and of our soldiers and sailors, and generally utterances indicating his loyalty to the U. S. and his loyal intent", were excluded; the opinion cites merely a treatise).

§ 370. [1] Ariz. Rev. St. 1913, P. C. § 1045; Ark. Dig. 1919, § 3118; Cal. P. C. 1872, § 1104 (conspiracy; an overt act must be alleged and proved; "but other overt acts not alleged may be given in evidence"); Iowa: Code 1919, § 9360; Kan. Gen. St. 1915, § 8126 (conspiracy; other overt acts not alleged may be evidenced); Minn. 1921, State v. Townley, 149 Minn. 5, 182 N. W. 773 (criminal conspiracy; other speeches of the accused, not admitted on the facts; the above English rulings distinguished); Mo. Rev. St. 1919, § 4030; Mont. Rev. C. 1921, § 11979 (like Cal. P. C. § 1104); Nebr. Rev. St. 1922, § 10142; Nev. Rev. L. 1912, § 7173; N. D. Comp. L. 1913, § 10849 (conspiracy, where overt act is necessary; "any other overt act not alleged in the information or indictment, may be given in evidence"); Okl. Comp. St. 1921, § 2700; Porto Rico: Rev. St. & C. 1911, § 6278; Tex. Rev. C. Cr. P. 1911, § 804; Wyo. Comp. St. 1920, § 7524.

(1) Where B's book is published subsequently to A's, and in B's is found a passage, similar to a passage in A's, but purporting to be composed by B, the reappearance of the same passage points back to A's book as the source of its borrowing, — on the principle of Traces (examined ante, §§ 148, 152). But B may explain away this indication, in showing that there were other sources from which the passage could equally well have been composed, — as, in a directory, from a canvass of the same persons, or, in a guide-book, from observation of the same places; the similarity in reproduction being thus more or less unavoidable. It is only in the rare case when A is the sole source of the information, or when the passages are peculiar in tenor and also identical in wording, that the inference from similarity is a necessary one. But this hypothesis of other sources is not available as an explanation where the same errors — either of fact or of printing — occur in B's passage as well as in A's; and accordingly the recurrence of such errors is a well-established mode of evidencing, to a high degree of probability, the copying of such a specific passage by B from A:

1858, Wood, V. C., in Spiers v. Brown, 31 L. T. 16: "The difficulty that arises in this class of cases [dictionaries] is that they only relate to a subject common to all mankind, and that the mode of expression and language is necessarily so common that two persons may to a very great extent express themselves in identical terms in conveying the instruction or information to society which they are anxious to communicate. The most obvious case is that of figures, such as a table of logarithms, where the calculations are so nicely performed that the result and the expression of the result must be identical; neither is it very easy to vary the order. The same may be said of directories, calendars, court guides, and works of that description. Those are cases on which the only mode of arriving at the amount of labor bestowed is by the common test resorted to of discovering the copy of errors and misprints, indicating a servile copying."

1852, Kindersley, V. C., in Murray v. Bogue, 1 Drewry 353, 360: "Now the use of showing the same errors in both is that . . . if the evidence is unsatisfactory on the question whether the defendant did use the plaintiff's work or not, to show the same errors in the subsequent work that are contained in the original is a strong argument to show copying; . . . which is the ordinary and familiar mode of trying the fact whether the defendant has used the plaintiff's book."

(2) But, assuming that in this way there is shown the probability of the copying the specific passages, it remains to invoke the present principles (of Intent and Design), and to argue that the copying of a number of such passages indicates a more extensive copying of other passages not otherwise shown to have been copied. This argument is always open, and its use has constantly been sanctioned; there can merely be a question of its weight in a given instance.[1] Just what its nature is, however, is not entirely clear.

§ 372. [1] England: 1809, Longman v. Winchester, 16 Ves. Jr. 269 (Royal Calendar, etc.; the "identity of the inaccuracies" taken as proof of "a vast proportion of the work" being mere copying); 1826, Mawman v. Tegg, 2 Russ. 385, 394 (Eldon, L. C.: "When a considerable number of passages are proved to have been copied, by the copying of blunders in them, other passages, which are the same with passages in the original book, must be presumed 'prima facie' to be likewise copied, though no blunders occur in them"); 1839, Lewis v. Fullarton, 2 Beav. 6, 13 (copying of parts taken as justifying an inference of further copying).

Canada: 1900, Cadieux v. Beauchemin, 31 Can. Sup. 370.

(a) It seems at first sight to be an argument from the System or Design principle (ante, § 304); i.e. because B in various instances copied from A's book, therefore he probably had a general plan to copy, which he carried out in other instances. (b) It is doubtful, however, whether a Court would give much weight to this argument as showing a copying of passages which are merely more or less similar. Practically, the argument is resorted to only where there is a certain similarity in specific passages, and this similarity is attempted to be explained as due to the use of common sources necessarily resulting in similar language or thought; this explanation may suffice to leave the Court in a state of doubt; but if it can be shown that there was copying in other passages also, this doubt may disappear and the Court become willing to believe that the similarity in question is not entitled to an innocent explanation. In short, the effect is precisely analogous to that of the Intent principle (ante, § 302), where the conceivable innocent explanation of the intent of an ambiguous act is negatived by other instances of the sort. So that perhaps the Intent principle is in essence the one here involved.

§ 373. Contracts (Sale, Agency, Lease, etc). There is a large class of civil issues in which at least one of the foregoing principles may receive frequent application, — the issue whether a specific contract was made; the fact being offered to be proved by other instances of the making of similar contracts. The argument here is that the other instances indicate a general plan, system, or habit of making such contracts, which was probably carried out in the specific instance, — as where a factory-hand, to show the agreed amount of his wages, offers instances of the same amount being paid to others in the same factory doing the same kind of work. This question theoretically

UNITED STATES: Federal: 1847, Webb v. Powers, 2 Woodb. & M. 497, 513 (coincidences in descriptions used to determine whether there was a systematic copying); 1869, Lawrence v. Dana, 4 Cliff. 1, 74 ("When a considerable number of passages are proved to have been copied by the copying of the blunders in them, other passages which are the same with the passages in the original book must be presumed, 'prima facie', to be likewise copied, though no blunders appear in them"; "coincidence of citations" and "identity in the plan and arrangement of the notes" were also treated as evidential); 1887, Publishing Co. v. Keller, 14 C. C. A. 213, 30 Fed. 772 (alleged infringement of a directory; the fact that in 2,800 names and addresses paralleled in the defendant's book 39 material errors were also reproduced, was taken as evidence of a general piracy; "in a case like this, when a close resemblance is the necessary consequence of the use of common materials, the existence of the same errors in the two publications affords one of the surest tests of copying; the improbability that both compilers would have made the same mistakes, if both had derived their information from independent sources, suggests such a cogent presumption of copying by the latter compiler from the first that it can be overcome only by clear evidence to the contrary"); 1888, Callaghan v. Myers, 128 U. S. 617, 660, 9 Sup. 177 (the improper use of the plaintiff's headnotes, etc., in some instances in every one of many volumes, taken by the Court as indicating similar use in a "large portion of the work"); 1895, Chicago D. D. Co. v. Chic. D. Co., 13 C. C. A. 8, 66 Fed. 977 (the defendant's directory contained about 60,000 names; 67 errors in the plaintiff's directory were shown to be repeated in the defendant's; no ruling as to evidence, except to admit the above and similar facts indicating system); 1897, West Pub. Co. v. Lawyers' Co-op. Pub. Co., 25 C. C. A. 648, 79 Fed. 756 (the defendant having made a digest of some 38,000 paragraphs, the piracy of a limited number (such as 303 out of 548 examined by the master) was held evidence of a systematic use of the plaintiff's material, indicating piracy in other portions not expressly pointed out; the opportunity and temptation to pirate being similar in the other portions); 1904, Encyclopædia Brit. Co. v. American N. Ass'n, 130 Fed. 460, 464, C. C. A.

has a place here. But it also verges on and often really is the question of proof of Habit. It is perhaps in most cases merely a matter of words whether these other instances be offered as evidencing a Plan, System, or Design, or be offered as evidencing a Habit or Course of Business. For this reason, and also because there are many instances which strictly involve only the question of Habit, and because the principle is in such cases practically the same for proving both Habit and System, the rulings on such evidence are collected under one head (§§ 376, 377, post).

SUB-TITLE II (continued): EVIDENCE TO PROVE A HUMAN QUALITY OR CONDITION

TOPIC VIII: EVIDENCE TO PROVE HABIT, STATUS, COURSE OF BUSINESS, OR CUSTOM

CHAPTER XIII

§ 375. General Principle. That a habit, course of business, or custom is relevant to show the doing of an act, has already been seen (ante, §§ 92–98). Evidence of Habit or Custom may of course be furnished testimonially, by a witness who asserts its existence in the form: "A has a habit of riding to the city"; "There is a custom of granting a discount." But the question is now of circumstantial evidence only. Of the three modes of evidencing circumstantially a human quality or condition (ante, § 190), two only are practically here available, namely, specific instances of conduct exhibiting the habit or custom, and the prior or subsequent existence of it. And first, of the former.

At the outset may be distinguished two kinds of things that come to be proved (1) Habit proper, i.e. a course of conduct by an individual; and (2) Custom, or usage, i.e. a course of conduct by a community or other body of individuals.

(1) In evidencing the Habit of an individual, it is impossible to group the precedents with entire exactness, because a Court occasionally excludes the evidence without making it clear whether its objection is to Habit as itself irrelevant to something else, or merely to the evidence of Habit. In general, wherever the evidence excluded is of individual instances, the precedent is considered here. Another obstacle arises through the occasional difficulty of distinguishing between Habit and other qualities. Where Habit and Disposition (or Character) may both be fairly applicable terms to describe a condition or quality — i.e. that of intemperance — specific acts would be in most cases inadmissible from the latter point of view (ante, §§ 194, 199, 203), but admissible from the present point of view. Where Habit and Design or

System are both conceivably applicable terms, the instances of specific conduct could equally well be treated from the latter point of view (ante, § 372). There must therefore be numerous instances in which the precedents could be as well considered under one principle as under another; and this difficulty is insuperable, until Courts become more exact in indicating the precise effect of their rulings on these points. It is worth while, then, to keep in mind the possible bearings of other principles; for example, the relevancy of Habit, as indicating the doing of an act (ante, §§ 92–98), and of Character or of Capacity, for the same purpose (ante, §§ 65, 85); so also the relevancy of specific conduct as indicating Character (ante, §§ 198–203), or Capacity (ante, §§ 219–225).

(2) In evidencing Custom or Usage of the community or of a trade, the foregoing difficulties do not arise.

§ 376. Individual Habit; Miscellaneous Examples. In general, where a habit of conduct is to be evidenced by specific instances, there is no reason why they should not be resorted to for that purpose. The only conditions (ante, § 32), are (a) that they should be numerous enough to base an inference of systematic conduct, and (b) that they should have occurred under substantially similar circumstances, so as to be naturally accountable for by a system only, and not as casual recurrences. As to the first condition, convenience requires that the discretion of the trial Court should control, in order to avoid the objections of Unfair Surprise and Confusion of Issues (ante, §§ 42, 194, post, §§ 1849, 1904). The following passage illustrates this consideration:

1883, Morton, C. J., in Com. v. Ryan, 134 Mass. 223 (murder; the debauched habits of the deceased were alleged by the defendant to have been the cause of her death, and he offered testimony directly to her intoxicated habits; but the facts of particular instances of intoxication were held admissible only in the discretion of the trial judge): "The question is whether . . . the defendant had the right to go into any number of individual instances of intoxication throughout her life, unrestrained by the discretion of the Court. We do not understand that the law gives him such a right. . . . It must be in the power of the Court to limit the amount of the testimony where it may be extended indefinitely, — as in cases of usage, or character, or genuineness of handwriting. Confirmed habits of drunkenness can usually be easily proved without going into the investigation of particular instances; while such investigations, if unlimited, would tend to raise a multiplicity of issues, and to distract and confuse the minds of the jury and to divert them from the real issues of the case. . . . It was within the discretion of the presiding justices to admit or reject the evidence offered of particular acts of drunkenness."

As to the second condition, it may be said that the Courts are apt to require too much, often ruling as if it were their function to require incontrovertible demonstration from each piece of evidence instead of merely to declare it relevant to be considered by the jury. The following passage illustrates the proper treatment:

1835, Shaw, C. J., in Howe v. Thayer, 17 Pick. 91, 96 (the defendant had given a general notice of dissolution of partnership to all creditors; the terms of the notice received by the plaintiff being in question, the terms of the notice to another creditor were admitted): "A man goes forth to a class of persons, all standing in the same relation, to give them a notice affecting their interests alike; if there are ten, and he gives a particular notice to nine, it leads to a probable inference that he gave a like notice to the tenth, where he states that he intended to make no distinction and believes that he notified all alike." [1]

That a negative habit may be shown, and not merely an affirmative one, seems unquestionable, i.e. that a person systematically omits to do a certain thing; separate instances suffice to persuade us on such matters in everyday life, and they should be received as probative in courts of justice. The only conditions are as before, namely, that the instances be sufficiently numerous, and that they occur under such circumstances as to indicate a general course of behavior under like circumstances.[2]

Subject to the foregoing considerations, and to the distinctions noted in § 375, the proof of habit by specific repeated instances of conduct is allowed in all varieties of situations.[3]

§ 376. [1] The following is an example of improper and pedantic treatment: 1837, Watts v. Fraser, 7 A. & E. 223, 232 (answering in the negative, "whether or not, in the absence of direct proof, it can be inferred from the printing of one newspaper [or book] which was not circulated, that another exactly corresponding with it was printed" and published in the usual way and quantity).

[2] Fed. 1897, Lake Erie & W. R. Co. v. Craig, 25 C. C. A. 585, 80 Fed. 488 (to show an abandonment of an employer's rule by the habitual sanction of its disobedience, instances of such sanction under circumstances not entirely similar are admissible; here, a rule forbidding train hands to go between cars in uncoupling); N. Car. 1906, Parrott v. Atlantic & N. C. R. Co., 140 N. C. 546, 53 S. E. 432 (to disprove an alleged custom of a conductor in taking tickets, instances of his not doing so were received); N. H. 1873, State v. M. & L. Railroad, 52 N. H. 528, 532, 549 (to show a habit of omitting the ringing of the bell and the blowing of the whistle at a particular crossing by a particular fireman and engineer, the fact was received of such omissions by them at that place during the preceding year); 1878, State v. B. & M. Railroad, 58 N. H. 410 (same; compare the citations ante, § 93); N. Y. 1877, Adams v. Ins. Co., 70 N. Y. 169 (whether a condition of an insurance policy had in fact been waived; the fact held inadmissible that he had never waived such a condition before in other it; the policies, or that he had constantly waived ruling is confused, however, by raising the question of corroborating an impeached witness).

[3] Fed. 1903, Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Summers, 60 C. C. A. 487, 125 Fed. 719, 723 (that the plaintiff on prior occasions on the same day had stopped, looked, and listened, before crossing the track, held inadmissible); Ind. 1898, Ferner v. State, 151 Ind. 247, 51 N. E. 360 (whether a person was "engaged in the practice of dentistry"; specific instances received); Ia. 1909, Gray v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 143 Ia. 268, 121 N. W. 1097 (deceased's practice of care at a crossing, admitted, but not particular instances); Kan. 1899, Eagon v. Eagon, 60 Kan. 97, 57 Pac. 942 (alienation of husband's affections by father; after evidence of defendant's solicitations of the son to abandon the plaintiff, defendant's evidence of a series of acts and solicitations of an opposite tenor were excluded; incorrectly, because they tended to show an habitual course of conduct, and thus to disprove the acts alleged by the plaintiff; Smith, J., diss.); Mass. 1861, Gahagan v. R. Co., 1 All. 187 (an issue was whether the defendant's cars were unreasonably standing across the highway; the fact of an unreasonable use of the highway for switching, etc., at times past, excluded; compare the citations ante, § 199); N. H. 1878, State v. Shaw, 58 N. H. 73 (illegal sale of liquor; sales at former times, admitted to show "a course of business according to which it would naturally be done"; compare § 367, ante); 1903, Reagan v. Manchester St. R., 72 N. H. 298, 56 Atl. 314 (collision; by a motorman, that he had often run at a speed of twenty miles, admitted); N. Car. 1884, Davis v. Lyon, 91 N. C. 444 (libel on a justice of the peace charging him with "habitual abuse of his authority for private gain" by receiving money; evidence received of other cases of his corrupt receipt of money as justice; compare the citations ante, § 203); Or. 1900, Wade v. R. Co., 36 Or. 311, 59 Pac. 875 (particular instances of high speed on former occasions, not admissible to prove speed on the present occasion; compare the citations ante, § 93); Vt. 1900, Clark v. Smith, 72 Vt. 138, 47 Atl. 391 (injury by negligent jerking of the car; that "the train was jerked violently at other stations", excluded.

Compare the citations ante, § 199.

§ 377. Same: in Contracts (Sale, Lease, Loan, Agency, Hiring, etc). It has already been pointed out (ante, § 372) that it is often difficult to say whether the idea of Habit or that of Plan or System is the more appropriate in evidencing a course of conduct in making contracts. This, however, is after all chiefly a question of words, for the underlying notion and the applicable principle are the same in each case. That principle is (ante, §§ 32, 33) (a) that the instances must be numerous enough, and (b) that they must have occurred under conditions so similar as to indicate a system, plan, or habit of doing that particular thing under similar circumstances. This principle has, however, found slow acceptance in application. The reason seems to have been chiefly a notion that because such evidence would in some cases clearly be improper (even under the above principle), therefore it must be in all cases improper, — an over-cautious attitude founded on a fallacy. Many precedents, however, do distinctly recognize the principle. It is impossible to reconcile all the conflicting precedents; but it is possible to explain most of them. The solution of any given case can easily be reached if it is remembered that no technical rule or general policy obstructs such evidence; that the only question can be whether the instances produced do have any real probative value to show a system or plan or habit; that in commercial affairs it is sometimes very unlikely, and sometimes very likely, that a particular contract or term of a contract will be habitually made; and that it is frequently possible to differ in opinion over the solution in a given case, while there may be no difference of opinions as to the principle applicable. The cases may be grouped under three heads: (1) the Authorization of an Agent; (2) the Making of some Other Contract, evidenced (a) by other contracts with the same person, (b) by other contracts with other persons.

(1) Authorization of an agent. Here the use of such evidence has always been sanctioned. Where a general authority to do an act is alleged, and the plaintiff relies on the defendant's having held out the third person as his agent, other instances of the plaintiff's having treated the person as agent for such an act are receivable to show a general holding-out of that person as agent.[1] This principle applies as well to a criminal agency as to a civil § 377. [1] England: 1794, Gibson v. Hunter, 2 H. Bl. 288 (H. drew a bill on G., payable to F., a fictitious person, or order, and indorsed it in F.'s name; the plaintiff, a 'bona fide' holder for value, in order to show in H. a general authority from G. to draw such bills, offered the fact of many other bills of the sort being drawn and accepted by H. with apparent consent of H.; the objection raised conceded that "a general authority to do such acts . . . can only be inferred by showing an acquiescence of the person supposed to have given such authority in other acts done with his privity or consent", and rested on the failure to show such actual privity to the former drawings; the evidence was held admissible, the grounds not appearing); 1800, Barber v. Gingell, 3 Esp. 61, Kenyon, L. C. J. (to show that the defendant had given authority to T. to accept the bill for him, the drawee, the fact was received of the defendant's having paid several bills drawn like the present by T., a general authority being thus inferable); 1830, Cash v. Taylor, Ll. & W. C. C. 178, K. B. (similar facts); 1845, Llewellyn v. Winkworth, 13 M. & W. 599 (authorizing the acceptance of another bill is evidence of a general authority to accept bills and therefore to accept the bill in question); 1869, Morris v. Bethell, L. R. 4 C. P. 765 (the fact of a single such former payment as in agency;[2] for though the facts making a person liable criminally for an agent's act may be different from those involving civil liability, the mode of evidencing a general authority is the same for both.[3]

(2) (a) Contract evidenced by other contracts with the same person. Here the making of other contracts with the same person should be received to show either the making in general or the specific terms of the contract in question, provided the other instances were so connected as to indicate a general plan or habit of which they were merely parts:[4]

Barber v. Gingell was held not improperly rejected, no general authority being set up).

United States: 1899, Lytle v. Bank, 121 Ala. 215, 26 So. 6 (the giving of other notes by an alleged agent, and their ratification, admitted); 1885, Sun Mut. Ins. Co. v. Barrel Co., 114 Ill. 99, 29 N. E. 477 (previous relations of a broker and an insurance company, admitted to show that the former was authorized to receive the plaintiff's premium); 1908, Hawkins v. Windhorst, 77 Kan. 674, 96 Pac. 48 (wife's authority to husband to sign checks; former instances admitted); 1854, Lee v. Tinges, 7 Md. 215, 235, 237 (to show ratification of certain settlements by an employer, the ratification of other such settlements by him during the same week was excluded, because made "under circumstances very different from those existing at the time of the occurrence of the principal matter"); 1851, Trull v. True, 33 Me. 367 (whether H. had given S. the authority to sign a note; their business relations admitted); 1917, Brownell v. Moorehead, — Okl. —, 165 Pac. 408 (injury to a passenger in a vehicle driven by A.; to show A. to be agent of the defendant J., former course of action by A. for J. was admitted); 1824, Irvine v. Buckloe, 13 S. & R. Pa. 35 (agency one or two years later, admitted); 1862, Stevenson v. Hoy, 43 Pa. 191, 196 (authority to give a written guaranty; similar guaranties by the same person previously recognized by the defendant, admissible); 1910, Valiquette v. Clark B. C. M. Co., 83 Vt. 538, 77 Atl. 869 (authority to draw a draft; the acceptance of three prior drafts, admitted).

Contra: 1905, Patterson v. First N. Bank, 73 Nebr. 384, 102 N. W. 765 (certificate of deposit signed by the president of a bank; prior instance of the bank's honoring such a document, excluded, partly because too remote, but partly on the erroneous theory that such evidence must involve an issue of fraud).

[2] Accord: 1909, People v. Zito, 237 Ill. 434, 86 N. E. 1041 (sales of cocaine; the clerk's authority being in issue, sales before and after the one charged were admitted).

Contra: 1896, People v. McLaughlin, 150 N. Y. 365, 44 N. E. 1017 (the fact of B. having acted as agent for the defendant in other cases of corrupt official conduct, not admitted to show that B., the actor in the present misconduct, was the defendant's agent then: "It is true that in civil actions upon contract the course of dealing between parties may be proved to establish a general agency, but that principle has no place in criminal jurisprudence").

[3] Cases cited ante, § 4, especially Lord Melville's Trial.

[4] ENGLAND: 1844, Bourne v. Gatliff, 11 Cl. & F. 45, 49, 70 (the defendant, a sea-carrier, claimed the right to deliver goods immediately on the wharf without further responsibility; the fact was received, from the consignor, of former bills of freight and of lading, and of the mode of other deliveries, in consignments between the same parties between the same countries; L. C. Lyndhurst: "That evidence was offered . . . to explain the meaning of the contract by showing what had been the meaning of the parties. It is said that the evidence offered was that of instances of individual contracts. Be it so; that does not render the evidence the less admissible; it may be open to observation on that ground, but it is not inadmissible").

CANADA: 1895, Bank of Nova Scotia v. Robinson, 33 N. Br. 326, 334 (false representations as to negotiable paper; certain similar prior transactions between the parties, admitted, but on varying grounds).

UNITED STATES: Federal: 1892, Holmes v. Goldsmith, 147 U. S. 150, 162, 13 Sup. 288 (whether the payee of a note was in fact an accommodation maker; the "relations", not specified, between the defendant and the payee, admitted); California: 1903, Zane v. Onativia, 139 Cal. 328, 73 Pac. 856 (whether a sum advanced by plaintiff was a loan to defendant or a deposit for plaintiff's expenses to be paid by defendant; the parties' prior relations as friends, admitted to show the probable intent); Illinois: 1897, Gardner v. Meeker, 169 Ill. 40, 48 N. E. 307 (whether a note was given for a gaming transaction; the prior and subsequent dealings of the parties, admissible, for a time within the trial Court's discretion); Iowa: 1899, Mabry v. Cheadle, — Ia. —, 80 N. W. 312 (action for attorney's services; on a plea denying a contract, a prior employment "as leading up to the second employment", allowed to be shown); 1903, Livingston v. Stevens, — Ia. —, 94 N. W. 925 (previous dealings between the parties showing a "system of dealings" in waiving a mortgage lien, admitted); Maine: 1890, Nickerson v. Gould, 82 Me. 512, 20 Atl. 86 (whether a note was a forgery; other pecuniary transactions between the parties, admitted); 1898, Wood v. Finson, 91 Me. 280, 39 Atl. 1007 (whether the contract for sale of oil to the defendant by a salesman E. involved also an agreement to insure the oil; terms of former similar sales between the same parties, through a salesman C., admitted to show the "probability or improbability of the contract being as claimed by the plaintiff"); Massachusetts: 1837, Tibbetts v. Sumner, 19 Pick. 166 (prior and usual course of dealings between the parties, admitted to show whether a particular sale was upon credit); 1859, Farnum v. Farnum, 13 Gray 508 (several prior dealings of lease and loan between the parties, rejected on the facts); 1875, Huntsman v. Nichols, 116 Mass. 521 (promissory note, made by F., alleged to have been indorsed by the defendant, who denied the indorsement; to show the likelihood of the indorsement, F. testified to several such transactions and indorsements about the same time); 1905, Galbin v. Beals, 187 Mass. 250, 72 N. E. 969 ("The fact that a landlord makes other repairs is not evidence that he agreed to keep the premises in repair"); Minnesota: 1875, Schwerin v. De Graff, 21 Minn. 354 (excavation-contract; the amount excavated in December, under similar conditions as to number of men, etc., admitted to show the probable amount in January and February); Missouri: 1876, Iron Mountain Bank v. Murdock, 62 Mo. 70, 74 (whether a bookkeeper had inserted an interest-clause in a promissory note without authority after indorsement; the fact that the maker had indorsed four other notes with a clause of that tenor, excluded as irrelevant); Nebraska: 1909, Fitch v. Martin, 84 Nebr. 745, 122 N. W. 50 (services rendered as attorney; "continued professional services" admitted of discretion to evidence "an annual renewal in the contract"); New Hampshire: 1851, Swamscot M. Co. v. Walker, 22 N. H. 457, 467 (whether the plaintiff's contract was made with the defendant or with W. and F.; the fact that the plaintiff had formerly refused to trust W. and T. for other articles, not admitted to show that they had not here contracted with W. & T.); North Dakota: 1905, Waldner v. Bowdoin S. Bank, 13 N. D. 604, 102 N. W. 169 (usury; habit of the defendant to charge usurious interest; not decided); Vermont: 1896, Welch v. Ricker, 69 Vt. 239, 39 Atl. 200 (to show no agreement to pay for goods furnished to I., the fact that the defendant had paid for goods thus furnished on another such agreement was excluded, as not relevant); 1898, Limerick Nat'l Bank v. Adams, 70 Vt. 132, 40 Atl. 166 (plaintiff claimed as 'bona fide' purchaser of notes; other purchases of similar notes from the same person, not received to show a 'bona fide' purchase in this instance); Wisconsin: 1899, Koehler v. Koehler, 104 Wis. 260, 80 N. W. 449 (alleged contract with a daughter for services; the fact of a similar contract three years before, excluded).

1878, PETERS, J., in Eaton v. Telegraph Co., 68 Me. 63, 67 (whether A had sold to B, or was merely holding for B, certain certificates of stock in the former's possession; the certificates were in A's name and bore assignments to B; the fact of A's possession as custodian of other certificates of the same stock made out in B's name was received): "The difficulty is to decide what is and what is not relevant evidence. The best authorities clearly sustain the doctrine that 'the fact of a person having once or many times in his life done a particular act in a particular way does not prove that he has done the same thing in the same way upon another and different occasion.' It is sometimes permissible to show, however, what men generally have done under certain circumstances and conditions, as showing how a particular man might act under the same surroundings. . . . Here the dealing inquired about was between the same persons at the same time and related to the same kind of property. The reason of the rule which excludes irrelevant testimony admits such as this."

(2) (b) Contract evidenced by other contracts with other persons. Here, obviously, though the principle remains the same, the other instances must be more marked in their similarity in order to be admissible to evidence a general plan or habit, because the element of a different personality is so important in affecting the making or the terms of a contract that the likelihood of making a similar contract with different persons is relatively much smaller.

Compare the citations ante, § 94 (habit of dealing, in sales and agencies), and post, § 462 (business patronage, to evidence quality of a chattel, etc.).

Distinguish the use of other transactions of the parties to interpret the meaning of a contract whose words are not disputed (post, § 2465).

It thus happens that the Courts are generally inclined to exclude such evidence, and, in the majority of instances, properly. In the much cited English case of Hollingham v. Head, there has sometimes been discovered an intimation that such evidence as a class is inadmissible; but the later ruling of Woodward v. Buchanan, and numerous American rulings, show that this is an error. There is merely a question in each instance of the probative value of the particular facts offered:[5]

[6] ENGLAND: 1792, Carter v. Pryke, Peake 95 (whether rent was payable quarterly or half-yearly; that the plaintiff's other tenants of the same description paid quarterly, excluded); 1806, Spencelcy v. Wilmot, 7 East 108 ('Qui tam' for usury; the fact that the borrower, alleging usury, had on the same and other days received sums for investment as agent, and not as loans, from third persons who belonged to the same circle of intimates as the borrower and the defendant, was rejected; since "whatever contracts the witness might have entered into with other persons for other loans, they could not be evidence of the contract made with the defendant, unless the witness had first said that he had made the same contract with the defendant as he had made with those persons; which he had not said"); 1833, Smith v. Wilkins, 6 C. & P. 180, Tindal, C. J. (assumpsit for goods sold to a wife; defence, that the credit was given to the defendant's father-in-law; the fact that other tradesmen had given her father credit when she bought, rejected); 1836, Borden v. Keverberg, 2 M. & W. 61 (the defendant having pleaded, in assumpsit, that credit had been given to her husband, the plaintiff, after proving her husband to be an absent alien, offered the facts that in her dealings with other tradesmen she had not disclosed her marriage, in order to prove that she had in the contracts with him presented herself as a 'feme sole'; the evidence was rejected, because her failure to disclose was not equivalent to an affirmative representation); 1870, Woodward v. Buchanan, L. R. 5 Q. B. 285 (action for plumbing work and materials on a house, the defendant being mortgagee, and the issue of fact being whether he or a contractor had hired the plaintiff; the fact was received that in building the same house and at the same time others of the contracts had been made by the defendant, as showing that he was systematically taking the responsibility; Mellor, J.: "Had the evidence applied to other houses, the authorities might be in point against the admissibility of the evidence").

UNITED STATES: Federal: 1899, Cravens v. Carter-Crume Co., 34 C. C. A. 479, 92 Fed. 479 (plaintiff agreed to sell his factory products to defendant only, and to close his factory, in consideration of certain shares in the defendant company and a guaranteed dividend; in an action to obtain the dividend, the defence being that the contract was unlawful as having for its object the restraint of trade, similar contracts of other manufacturers with the defendant were admitted); 1912, Chesterfield Mfg. Co. v. Leota Cotton Mills, C. C. A., 194 Fed. 358 (whether the plaintiff's cotton had been properly dyed by the defendant; to show that the trouble was due to the poor quality of cotton and not to the defendant's process, the defendant's evidence that three other mills' cotton had been properly dyed during the same period was excluded; erroneous);
Illinois: 1873, Stolp v. Blair, 68 Ill. 541 (assumpsit for $500 loaned for six months, without a note; the fact that the plaintiff had formerly loaned various persons such sums without notes, admitted as rebutting the inference that might be drawn from the failure to take a note);
Indiana: 1892, Schmidt v. Packard, 132 Ind. 398, 402, 31 N. E. 944 (indorsement of a note as transferring ownership; similar indorsements by him on the same day, held admissible to negative intent to transfer);
Kansas: 1893, Roberts v. Dixon, 50 Kan. 436, 31 Pac. 1083 (money loaned on cattle-investments; the terms of defendant's contracts with other investors in the same business, held not admissible to show the terms of plaintiff's investment);
Kentucky: 1898, Lexington & E. R. Co. v. Lyons, 104 Ky. 23, 46 S. W. 209 (whether representations as to a ticket were made; similar representations to another person about similar tickets, admitted);
Maine: 1909, Provencher v. Moore, 105 Me. 87, 72 Atl. 880 (horse-boarding; terms of plaintiff's offer to another person, excluded);
Maryland: 1903, Gill v. Staylor, 97 Md. 665, 55 Atl. 398 (wages of another hand in the same employ, not admitted to show the terms of the plaintiff's contract);
Massachusetts: 1906, Taylor v. Schofield, 191 Mass. 1, 77 N. E. 652 (commission on a patent-sale to C.; defendant's former agreement with P. for a sale, not admitted to show the terms of the present one or the reason for breaking it); 1917, Adams v. Dick, 226 Mass. 46, 115 N. E. 227 (action for repayment of moneys paid on account of fictitious stock transactions; that the defendant "had never carried on fictitious transactions" etc., held not improperly excluded; erroneous);

1858, WILLES, J., in Hollingham v. Head, 4 C. B. N. S. 388 (to show a warranty, by a travelling agent of a manure-company, that the guano should be equal to Peruvian guano, evidence that other contracts of his contained such a guaranty was rejected): "I am of Michigan: 1893, Davis v. Kneale, 97 Mich. 72, 76, 56 N. W. 220 (whether a contract by a subscriber to a factory was made conditionally by C.; the terms of the contract with another subscriber, excluded);

Minnesota: 1880, Roles v. Mintzer, 27 Minn. 31, 6 N. W. 378 (to prove that the plaintiff's wages were agreed to be his board only, and not $20 and board and washing, the defendant offered to show that about the same time the plaintiff offered to work for W. for board only; excluded, because "there is no presumption that a person will work for one man on certain terms from the fact that he is willing to work for some other man on those terms"); 1897, Murphy v. Backer, 67 Minn. 510, 70 N. W. 799 (defence of usury; question to the plaintiff whether he "had not made certain other usurious loans to other persons at other times," allowed in discretion);
New Hampshire: 1853, True v. Sanborn, 27 N. H. 383 (selling diseased beef; a sale of unwholesome beef by the defendant several years before, excluded, as not having such an intimate connection . . . as to lead naturally to the conclusion" alleged;
New York: 1827, Jackson v. Smith, 7 Cow. 717 (loans of money on land at an alleged usurious rate, the bond being dated Dec. 22; another usurious bond dated Dec. 21 was offered, and also the fact of two other persons who on applying for loans had been offered the same usurious terms; treated as showing "that N. was in the habit of loaning money at usurious interest", but excluded because it involved "his general character or habit as a usurer"; this is unsound; compare § 216, ante); 1893, McLoghlin v. Bank, 139 N. Y. 514, 522, 34 N. E. 1095 (whether a deposit bore interest; that the depositor had interest-bearing deposits at other banks, excluded); 1900, Lowenstein v. Lombard, 164 N. Y. 324, 58 N. E. 44 (to show the terms of a contract for carriage by sea, the fact was admitted of contracts by the same agent of the defendant with other parties about the same time, "for the purpose of defining the contract that was actually made"); 1912, Mance v. Hossington, 205 N. Y. 33, 98 N. E. 203 (action for services; cross-examination of the defendant about other suits brought against him by his employees for services, held improper);
North Carolina: 1902, Thompson v. Exum, 131 N. C. 111, 42 S. E. 543 (rent-contract of one tenant, not admitted to show the terms of another's);
Pennsylvania: 1876, Coxe v. Deringer, 82 Pa. 236, 258 (payment of taxes in 1832–33; the fact received of the owner's continuous payments on all five tracts in January of biennial periods from 1826 to 1844, then 1849 to 1868; "it was a very natural conclusion that a man who always paid his taxes promptly in biennial periods previous to the time of the sale [1834] would have paid them in time in 1832 and 1833");
Porto Rico: 1910, Belber v. Calvo, 16 P. R. 343 (services; contract with another for services, admitted on the facts);
Vermont: 1858, Phelps v. Conant, 30 Vt. 277, 282 (action on a promise to pay for goods furnished to W.; the fact that the defendant promised to pay another person for other goods furnished to W. was rejected; "nor is there any legal probability that he would pay one because he agreed to pay the other; . . . to have one fact prove another, there must be a necessary or probable connection between the two"); 1886, Aiken v. Kennison, 58 Vt. 665, 5 Atl. 757 (trover; defence, a contract of purchase different from that asserted by the plaintiff; the question whether the plaintiff had had "other transactions of a similar nature with other people dealing with him" was excluded, since the fact would not amount to "any such course of office or business as would suffice"); 1896, Jones v. Ellis, 68 Vt. 544, 35 Atl. 488 (to show that stock sold had been warranted, the fact of a warranty in sales of the same stock to another person was not admitted); 1897, Pictorial League v. Nelson, 69 Vt. 162, 37 Atl. 247 (representations to other persons in the same city in making similar contracts, excluded);
Virginia: 1901, Repass v. Richmond, 99 Va. 508, 39 S. E. 160 (action on a deputy-treasurer's bond; mode of execution of the other deputies' bonds, not admitted);
West Virginia: 1893, Hartman v. Evans, 38 W. Va. 669, 673, 18 S. E. 810 (usury; that loans to others by the same person were usurious, excluded);
Wisconsin: 1884, Kelley v. Schupp, 60 Wis. 76, 18 N. W. 725 (services in cutting logs, etc.; the defendant's promise to pay "one similarly situated", not admitted to show a promise to the plaintiff); 1893, Brunnell v. H. S. M. Co., 86 Wis. 587, 57 N. W. 364 (trimmer hired a saw-mill; the contracts of service of other trimmers as to a drawback, excluded); 1897, Oliver v. Morawetz, 95 Wis. 1, 69 N. W. 977 (to show the price at which a real-estate agent was authorized to sell, the fact of the price so authorized for another agent for the same piece at the same time was not admitted); 1901, Coman v. Wunderlich, 122 Wis. 138, 99 N. W. 612 (goods not equal to sample; similar insufficiency of similar goods sold to another person on the same day, excluded); 1904, Sullivan v. Manston M. Co., 123 Wis. 360, 101 N. W. 679, semble (whether grain was bailed or sold; usage admitted).

opinion that the evidence was properly disallowed as not being relevant to the issue. It is not easy in all cases to draw the line and to define with accuracy where probability ceases and speculation begins; but we are bound to lay down the rule to the best of our ability. . . . Now it appears to me that the evidence proposed to be given in this case, if admitted, would not have shown that it was more probable that the contract was subject to the condition insisted upon by the defendant. The question may be put thus: Does the fact of a person having once or many times in his life done a particular act in a particular way make it more probable that he has done the same thing in the same way upon another and different occasion? To admit such speculative evidence would I think be fraught with great danger. . . . If such evidence were held admissible it would be difficult to say that the defendant might not, in any case where the question was whether or not there had been a sale of goods on credit, call witnesses to prove that the plaintiff had dealt with other persons upon a certain credit; or in an action for an assault, that the plaintiff might not give evidence of former assaults committed by the defendant upon other persons, or upon other persons of a particular class, for the purpose of showing that he was a quarrelsome individual and therefore that it was highly probable that the particular charge of assault was well-founded. The extent to which this sort of thing might be carried is inconceivable."

In all of the foregoing uses, the precise purpose of the offer is important; for the same evidential fact may be affected by other rules, elsewhere dealt with; in particular (ante, § 94) concerning habit as evidence; (ante, §§ 300–370) concerning former instances of forgery, false representations, and the like, to evidence intent or design; and (post, § 379) concerning evidence of trade, custom or usage; also the rule for market-value, as evidencing the probable price of a sale (post, § 392), and for business patronage as evidence of another article's quality (post, § 462).

§ 378. Same: in Prescriptive Possession; Surveys and Boundaries evidenced by other Lines. A mode of argument which seems to belong here is that by which possession of a whole tract of land is sought to be inferred from specific instances of possession of parts of it. The inference seems to be genuinely one of the present sort, rather than one of mere prior or subsequent possession as a condition or state (post, § 382), because it involves the thought that the separate instances of conduct in relation to the land indicate a larger and habitual course of conduct. The conditions of admissibility are that the various acts should be so connected with each other, as to the topography of the place where they are done, that they suggest a system or course of conduct with reference to other parts of the adjacent land; i.e. that the various places where the acts are shown should be parts of one estate, manor, way, range, section, survey, or other entity, so that acts done upon these would naturally be done only as a part of a system to do them upon the other parts of the same entity. The doctrine has been fully developed in England:[1]

§ 378. [1] England: 1811, Stanley v. White (quoted supra); 1813, Barnes v. Mawson, 1 M. & S. 85 (Ellenborough, L. C. J.: "In the case of an encroachment on a waste, it might not be proved that any acts of ownership had been exercised by the lord upon the very spot; but showing acts of ownership upon other parts within the general ambit of the waste has always been deemed sufficient"); 1831, Doe v. Kemp, 7 Bing. 332 (issue as to the title to a slip of waste alongside a road; evidence offered for the defendant, as lord of the manor, of acts of ownership upon similar slips further along for several hundred yards, to a bridge,

1811, Ellenborough, L. C. J., in Stanley v. White, 14 East 332 (trespass for cutting trees; the title being in dispute, after evidence had been offered that the plaintiff's manor was surrounded on all sides by a belt of land extending fifteen feet beyond a circular hedge, the fact was offered by him of acts of ownership — involving prescriptive title — at parts of this belt other than that where the cutting had occurred; objection, that there was no connection proved between the titles of the several owners around the belt, without which no inference could be drawn in prejudice of one from acts of ownership exercised by the Stanley family against others): "The same law may be shown by general evidence to govern one entire district, though it may affect the rights of different persons in different parts. It is then one entire thing, 'quoad' that district; as in the case of the Border-law. In this case the eye may see that there is one continuity of belt; and the witnesses' proving that the Stanley family have asserted the same right from time to time against different owners in different parts of the belt is evidence of their general right."

1837, Parke, B., in Jones v. Williams, 2 M. & W. 326 (issue between opposite owners as to the title to the bed of a stream, whether the plaintiff owned the whole or only up to the middle; the fact was received that, further down, where the plaintiff's riparian estate was opposite X's land, the former was owner of the whole bed and had done acts of repairing, by taking stones and the like): "[Acts of enjoyment, when used to prove extended possession, need not be precisely on the same spot,] provided there is such a common character of locality between those parts and the spot in question as would raise a reasonable inference in the minds of the jury that the place in dispute belonged to the plaintiff if the other parts did"; so that the plaintiff was "entitled to show the taking of stones not only at the spot in question but all along the bed of the river."

Where the possession of the part is under a deed which covers a larger tract, the principle is the same,[2] but here the inference is stronger, because the

and again beyond it to a common; rejected, as to parts beyond the bridge, since the defendant, though owning enclosed lands adjacent to the slips of waste up to the bridge, owned none beyond it; Bosanquet, J.: "Where evidence is offered of acts done in other places than the place in dispute, it is for the judge to decide, in the first instance, whether there is such a unity of character in the different parts as to render evidence affecting a part not in dispute admissible with reference to the part in dispute"); 1837, Jones v. Williams (quoted supra); 1844, Doe v. Roberts, 13 M. & W. 520, 530 (Parke, B.: "How can you show a title to the whole estate except by acts of ownership in different parts?" Counsel: "That would be only where there is some evidence of a general right." Parke, B.: "There is such evidence here"); 1878, Lord Blackburn, in Bristow v. Cormican, L. R. 3 App. Cas. 641, 670 ("Acts of ownership on parts of a tract are evidence to prove ownership in the whole [quoting Parke, B., in Jones v. Williams]. This, which I think is the right rule, makes the weight of the evidence depend on the nature of the locality and of the acts, and on what it is reasonable for a jury to infer"); 1882, Neill v. Devonshire, L. R. 8 App. Cas. 135, 151, 166 (acts of fishery in several other parts of a river, admitted, there being evidence that the whole region was treated "as 'unum quid'").

United States: 1902, South v. Deaton, 113 Ky. 312, 68 S. W. 137 (possession of part of a tract, treated as evidence of possession of the whole); 1847, Bogardus v. Trinity Church, 4 Sandf. Ch. N. Y. 633, 746 (a series of acts of possession over a large district were apparently used on the present principle); 1867, Abel v. Van Gelder, 36 N. Y. 513, 515 ("The defendants offered to show that for a great number of years they had cut wood and timber yearly on the premises adjoining the 'locus in quo' and up to and along the line thereof, for the use of their adjoining premises. . . Where the 'locus in quo' and the territory on which the acts indicating ownership were done are similarly situated as regards inclosures and other circumstances, such acts may be proved with a view to show occupation of the land in dispute and an intention to maintain and assert their right of ownership").

The principle is equally applicable to the possession of personalty: 1827, Moon v. Hawks, 2 Aik. 390 (issue as to the title to a mare possessed by R., and claimed by him to be a gift from the plaintiff; R.'s possession and claim being 'prima facie' sufficient to show title, his possession and claim of another mare, delivered to him at the same time by the plaintiff in payment of a legacy, were admitted; "any act of ownership over either . . . would be evidence as it respects the other").

[2] E.g. 1884, Lancy v. Brock, 110 Ill. 609, 612.

But this use is seldom judicially distindeed, by marking the singleness of the entire tract, supplies the place of other evidence of unity of character.

The same principle seems to operate where, from the condition or bearing of a boundary or survey at one point, its condition or bearing at another point may be inferred, provided there is a unity between the two in the sense that the former is a part of the same general line or system of lines (township, range, section, or the like) as the latter is.[3]

§ 379. Custom or Usage, in Trade and Commerce. In evidencing a custom or usage (i.e. the habit of a body of persons) by specific instances, the same general principle as before is applicable; that is, the instances offered (a) should be sufficiently numerous to indicate a fairly regular course of business, and (b) should occur under conditions substantially similar to that in question.

(a) Under the first head, no difficulty seems to arise; the discretion of the trial Court should control.[1]

(b) Under the second head, it is obvious that there must be such a similarity or unity of conditions that what is done by one or more persons or sets of persons may be taken as indicating the probable general habit of the class of persons under similar circumstances. Here there is much opportunity for difference of opinion in given cases. The precedents illustrate all sorts of trades and usages, and no detailed generalization seems feasible.[2] It is guished from the rule of substantive law by which possession of a part, under a deed, is deemed legally equivalent to possession of the whole, i.e. a constructive possession; 1866, Bowman v. Wettig, 39 Ill. 416, 426 (possession of part under a deed to the whole is possession of the whole, and thus 'prima facie' evidence of title to the whole, as against a mere trespasser showing no paper title); 1907, Godfrey v. Dixon P. & L. Co., 228 Ill. 487, 81 N. E. 1089. Here the deed is used, as a verbal act, to color the possession, under the principle of § 1778, post; see Sedgwick and Wait, Trial of Title to Land, §§ 761–781.

[3] 1898, Olsen v. Rogers, 120 Cal. 225, 52 Pac. 486 (boundary line making uniform subdivisions; survey of one lot received to indicate the lines of an adjacent one); 1893, Goldsborough v. Pidduck, 87 Ia. 599, 601, 54 N. W. 431 (adjacent lines, etc., used to determine lines of connected blocks); 1844, Overton's Heirs v. Davisson, 1 Gratt. Va. 211, 227 (the description of another survey of a coterminous tract, admissible to show the boundary); 1856, Clements v. Kyles, 13 Gratt. Va. 468, 479 (same); 1895, Reusens v. Lawson, 91 Va. 226, 21 S. E. 347 (same).

§ 379. [1] Of course individual instances, offered one at a time, are receivable; the practical question is commonly whether enough have been offered to suffice to go to the jury (post, § 2494). But even a single one may suffice for this purpose: 1770, Doe v. Mason, 3 Wils. 63 (custom of descent); 1813, Roe v. Jeffrey, 2 M. & S. 92 (custom to bar entails; Ellenborough, L. C. J.: "It is true that one act undisturbed does not make a custom; but it will be evidence of a custom"). There was an old French law maxim, 'une fois n'est pas coutume' (Glasson, Hist. du droit, etc. de la Fr., vi, 546).

For the different question whether one witness' testimony may suffice to establish a custom, see post, § 2053.

[2] ENGLAND: 1842, Milward v. Hibbert, 3 Q. B. 120, 139 (to prove a custom of London as to the stowage of goods in regard to general average, a similar custom in other English ports was received); 1863, Falkner v. Earle, 3 B. & S. 360 (to prove a custom of trade between Liverpool and California, after incorporation with the United States, as to discounts on freight, a similar custom as to trade with Texas after incorporation and as to other ports of British North America, etc., was received); 1866, Place v. Allcock, 4 F. & F. 1074 (usage as to a bleaching-lien in Nottingham; usage at Loughborough admitted, by reason of "the vicinity of the places and the interchange of trade"); 1871, Fleet v. Marton, L. R. 7 Q. B. 126, 130, 134, 41 L. J. Q. B. N. S. 49 (action for the price of fruit on a sold-note signed by the brokers only, the dispute being whether in that trade brokers were liable on such notes for the default of principals; the custom of the trade being held to be involved in the contract, evidence was received, with some hesitation, of the custom on the point in the colonial market; Blackburn, J.: "It seemed to be conceded at the trial that the two trades were so far allied to each other that the same usages would be likely to prevail in both, and I thought that upon the question of the liability of a broker, evidence of his liability in a similar trade might be received").

enough to point out (1) that no particular circumstance is conclusive either pro or con; (2) that instances from another trade or another region are not necessarily without probative value, while instances from the same trade and the same locality are not necessarily admissible; and (3) that the question is not whether the offered instances fully prove the custom alleged, but merely whether they are receivable as having probative value:

UNITED STATES: Federal: 1870, Insurance Co. v. Weide, 11 Wall. 438 (to show that the value of the stock of goods burned could not have reached the amount claimed, viz. half the value of the annual sales, the fact was received from the defendant that persons in the same city and in the same business had on hand a stock only one fifth the amount of their annual sales; Davis, J.: "It would establish a fact connected with this kind of business, to wit, the uniform relation between the stock on hand and the annual sales"; adding, "it is true there are no reported cases on the subject"); 1894, Keystone Mfg. Co. v. Adams, 151 U. S. 139, 148, 14 Sup. 295 (profits of infringement; the profits made by other users of a patent, excluded); Alabama: 1863, Barnes v. Ingalls, 39 Ala. 201 (because "there are so many points in common between such an establishment [ambrotype and photograph gallery] and those in which the ordinary mechanic arts are pursued", a custom as to working hours in the latter was admitted to show the same in the former); Colorado: 1874, Sullivan v. Hense, 2 Colo. 424, 433 (number of feet in a mining claim; length of other claims in the district controlled by similar customs, admitted); 1878, Denver & R. G. R. Co. v. Glasscott, 4 Colo. 270 (action to recover the salary of a railroad-conductor; set-off for money collected on the trains from passengers without tickets and never delivered over; the fact that on trains making the same number of trips with substantially the same number of cars at the same rates of fare over the same route the receipts of the sort by another conductor had been much higher, was rejected; because, whether or not the habit of passengers in entering trains in forgetfulness of the prior purchase of tickets was subject to unvarying principles, yet the conditions were too complicated for investigation; this is unsound); Illinois: 1855, Caldwell's Trial, 1 Am. St. Tr. 614, 622, 634 (embezzlement as a railroad conductor; the average receipts of other conductors on the same run, admitted); Kansas: 1882, Sexton v. Lamb, 27 Kan. 429 (the fact admitted of the average waste of ice in handling, to show an original stock of ice as calculated from the part sold); Massachusetts: 1896, Todd v. Keene, 167 Mass. 157, 45 N. E. 81 (damages from failing to perform a contract to give a theatrical performance of a Shakespearean tragedy, in the profits of which the plaintiff was to share; the cash receipts of similar plays at the same theatre in the same town under the same auspices, rejected, because "there are too many elements of uncertainty and conjecture to make it safe to rely upon" such evidence; unsound); Michigan: 1877, Reynolds v. Ins. Co., 36 Mich. 131, 142 (to show the extent of the authority of an agent of an insurance company, the extent of authority given by other insurance companies on the same point, was excluded); Minnesota: 1861, Walker v. Barron, 6 Minn. 508 (a custom elsewhere as to a discount in boarding stage-employees, excluded, because not defined as to place or time); New Jersey: 1872, Jones v. Ins. Co., 36 N. J. L. 29, 43 (like Ins. Co. v. Weide, infra; excluded, because the circumstances were not similar); New York: 1834, Phœnix Ins. Co. v. Philip, 13 Wend. 81 (to show that the plaintiff's stock probably did not amount to the value claimed, the value of the largest stock in that business in the city was offered; excluded, as being a mere surmise; unsound); 1847, Howard v. Ins. Co., 4 Den. 507 (similar evidence was rejected on the principle of excluding opinions); Texas: 1895, Weatherford M. W. & N. R. Co. v. Duncan, 88 Tex. 611, 32 S. W. 878 (here the manner, not the fact, of the act was in issue, and hence the custom of railroads elsewhere was immaterial); Utah: 1897, Anderson v. Mining Co., 16 Utah 28, 50 Pac. 815 (to show the practice of employees in a certain mine, the general custom among miners of the camp under similar circumstances was admitted); Vermont: 1868, Hine v. Pomeroy, 30 Vt. 103, 104, 106 (whether an attorney had directed a process-server to take receiptors; the practice of other attorneys in the same city, excluded, because "there was no such relation of lawyers to each other, in respect to habits and modes and practice, in the details of professional service in matters of this kind, as to make what is true of some the ground of inference as to what is true of another").

1780, Noble v. Kennoway, 2 Doug. 510, the plaintiff's vessel, bound to Labrador, delayed landing her cargo and was captured; to show that the delay was reasonable and customary, and thus could not forfeit the insurance, the custom was offered in the Newfoundland trade to keep their goods on board several months; it was objected that "Newfoundland and Labrador are distant and discontiguous, and although the object of the voyages to both may be the fishery, yet the fishing trade is conducted very differently at different places; would the practice at Greenland, Nova Zembla, on the coast of Scotland, or in the new whale fishery in the Mediterranean, be evidence in this case?" Lord MANSFIELD, C. J.: "The trade of fishing on the coast of Newfoundland, especially from the west of England, has been known and practiced for many years. Since the treaty of Paris, a new trade has been opened to Labrador. . . . It is well known that the fishery is the object of the voyage, and the same sort of fishing is carried on in the same way at Newfoundland. I still think the evidence was properly admitted to show the nature of the trade." BULLER, J.: "If it can be shown that the time [of delay] would have been reasonable in one place, that is a degree of evidence to prove that it was so in another; the effect of such evidence may be taken off by proof of a difference of circumstances."

1867, PIGOT, C. B., in M'Fadden v. Murdock, 1 Ir. C. L. 218 (the question being as to proof from other trades of the fact and amount of loss in handling particular goods by retail): "It was argued that Mr. C. ought not to have been allowed to give evidence of what occurred in his own trade, or of the losses which he himself had sustained in the course of his own experience. If he founded his judgment on facts not similar to those which were proved in the present case, the argument would be most cogent. But if he stated (as I think he did) what occurred in his own trade in matters similar to those which, on the very point of controversy, were proved to have existed in the trade of the defendant, then the evidence would appear to be admissible."

1895, GAINES, C. J., in Texas P. R. Co. v. Reed, 88 Tex. 439, 31 S. W. 638 (excluding evidence of the custom on other railroads as to a foreman's authority over railroad hands): "Did the fact that other railroad companies give that authority to such servants tend to throw light upon the question? We think not. It is a matter of policy in the management of internal affairs upon which one manager would have one opinion, while another or all others might pursue a different course. One owner of a plantation might intrust his superintendent with power to employ and discharge hands; another might reserve that right to himself, or commit it to another agent. . . . [As to excluding evidence of the custom on the same road at large stations, while admitting the custom at small stations like the one in question,] the conditions at large stations, where much freight and many cars were to be handled, are so different from those at small places that we are of opinion that the practice at the latter raises no presumption that the same practice existed at the former."

Distinguish here the evidential use of a custom of other railroads, factories, or the like, as indicating the danger of certain apparatus or the reasonableness of certain precautions (post, § 461).

§ 380. Same: Customary Rights in Land. The use of other instances to prove a custom of descent or of other right affecting land has not been and is not likely to become common in the United States, because here such usages are rare.[1] But this sort of evidence has had frequent use in England, and the precedents on this point well illustrate the general principle. Instances occurring within the same manor, it is clear, will be received, because the original unity of the holding allows each instance to appear as merely one illustration of a general system working uniformly;[2] and the same principle may apply where a township, or other unity likely to involve community of conduct in the matter in question, is a common feature in all the instances.[3] On the same principle, however (though the matter was not clearly settled until Rowe v. Brenton), instances from other manors may be received, provided that, behind their apparent difference of conditions, a unity of some sort can be shown which makes instances from the one equally illustrative of a general system including and operating in the other.[4] The precedents on

§ 380.[1] 1869, Gilman v. Rippelle, 18 Mich. 145, 165 (other instances of a practice among French settlers of giving a possessory right to the eldest son, excluded, in the absence of direct testimony in the case in question).

[2] 1810, Doe v. Sisson, 12 East 62 (to prove a custom of descent in the female line, particular instances were received of such descent in other estates of the manor, as well as of a general reputation as to such custom of descent in the manor; the particular instances being, per Lord Ellenborough, C. J., "only so many branches derived from the same root").

[3] 1813, Blundell v. Howard, 1 M. & S. 292 (custom as to tithes; payments by other holdings in the same township, admitted to show its general character); 1842, Jewison v. Dyson, 9 M. & W. 540, 556 (custom of appointing coroners; the appointment of coroners in other places within the same grant, admissible); 1879, Lendrum v. Deazley, 4 L. R. Ire. 635, 639, 645 (usage as to tenant-sight in another part of the same estate, the usage on all parts of the estate being the same, admitted).

[4] 1637, Moulin v. Dallison, Cro. Car. 484 (whether an estate descended by custom to the eldest daughter in the manor of S.; after showing that S. was a part of a manor O., and thus establishing a unity of custom, the fact was received of the rule of descent in O.); 1672, Champion v. Atkinson, 3 Keb. 90 (whether in a copyhold estate a fine was due on the death of the lord in certain circumstances; the fact was received of the existence of such a custom in the copyhold estates of adjoining manors; no reason being given); 1725, Somerset v. France, 1 Stra. 654 (whether the tenant for life could collect by custom a fine from the customary tenants of the manor upon the death of the last admitting lord; the fact was received of a similar custom for other tenants of the plaintiff himself in other manors, no reason being given; but the fact of a similar payment by other tenants to other lords of manors was objected to because "each manor hath its particular customs, and they have no relation to one another but by accident"; Fortescue, J., was for admitting, because "it is very proper to enquire what are the qualities which attend other estates which are held by the same tenure"; Raymond, C. J., was opposed, because "I should readily admit that this evidence might be allowed if the customs of tenant-right estates were the same in all manors; but it is plain that the customs of these estates are different in different manors"; yet he yielded to supposed authority); 1778, Furneaux v. Hutchins, 2 Cowp. 807 (action for not carrying off tithes; plea, that they were not properly set out; the fact was rejected of a custom in the adjacent parishes to set them out as the plaintiff had done; Lord Mansfield, C. J.: "Proof of the custom in other parishes is no evidence to affect the parish in question, unless the custom had been laid as a general custom of the whole country"); 1793, Beebee v. Parker, 5 T. R. 26, 31 (descent-custom; Kenyon, L. C. J., speaking obiter, of outside instances: "and the latter has gone so far that the custom of one manor has been given in evidence to show the custom of another, where they are both governed by the Border-law"); 1813, R. v. Ellis, 1 M. & S. 652, 661 (whether a fishery was so connected with land as to be subject to a poor rate; Ellenborough, L. C. J., speaking of Somerset's Case, supra: "I have always thought that . . . this evidence is to be considered rather as evidence of a custom pervading one common district of manors, than as the custom of one manor to show the custom of another"); 1828, Rowe v. Brenton, 8 B. & C. 737, 758 (issue as to the ownership of coppermines, and the rights of a plaintiff who was a "conventionary lessee" in the copper on his land; there were 17 manors in the duchy, and some of the above tenancies, renewable every 7 years, existed in each manor; evidence was received as to the terms of the customary right of such a tenant in these other manors; Tenterden, L. C. J.: "The same character, whatever that may be, belongs to them all. . . . It certainly belongs to all those called 'free conventionaries' in this district. . . . Must we not, then, in fairness, in order to ascertain what are the relative rights of the lord and these tenants in one part of this district, enquire what are their rights in another?"; Bayley, J.: "I am of opinion that the usage which has prevailed in one part . . . is evidence to explain a grant expressed in similar terms as to any other part of the district"); 1842, Anglesey v. Hatherton, 10 M. & W. 218 (trover for coals, limestone, and ironstone, taken from the manors of C. and R.; issue as to the right of copyholders to this point are full of instruction upon the class of evidence dealt with in the preceding topics.

§ 381. Same: Other Principles discriminated. Certain aspects, in which the question arises whether the usage of others may be resorted to, are to be distinguished from the foregoing subject.

(1) When the nature of an external object is to be determined, its effect upon others may throw light upon its qualities. Thus, in a railroad accident, the conduct of other persons may show whether the situation was a terrifying and dangerous one; in a plea of breach of quality of an article sold, the patronage of other persons may throw light on its quality; in an issue as to the dangerousness of machinery, the conduct of others in taking precautions may throw light on its dangerous quality. In all these cases, the conduct of others is not offered as instances showing a general custom or habit; such a general custom would be irrelevant; it is offered as showing the effects produced on ordinary persons by the nature of the article, place, or machinery in question (post, § 461).

(2) Where a term of a contract is sought to be imported into it on the score of usage or custom, this usage or custom must be shown to have been known to and impliedly accepted by the party. As a principle of contracts this is clear; and accordingly a Court is occasionally found saying that such a custom must be a local one, — meaning merely that it must be brought home to the knowledge of the opponent. But, this being conceded, it still remains to prove the custom, and for this purpose instances in other districts may be received, as above seen. This evidential use is always allowable, the assumption throughout being that the principle of substantive law, sooner or later, in some way or other, will be satisfied and knowledge of the custom be brought home to the opponent. The local custom, i.e. the custom as known to the opponent, is required by the substantive law, but it may be evidenced by instances from other districts, on the principle of § 379, ante.

(3) Whether a custom or usage may thus be imported as a term of a written contract, or may be used to interpret a written contract, concerns the parol-evidence rule (post, §§ 2440, 2464).

take minerals; the fact was offered by the defendant of the custom in the adjoining manor of W., after first offering evidence that W. was only a subinfeudation of C. and hence the customs would presumably be the same, excluded; Abinger, C. B.: "It should be established clearly and beyond all controversy that the two manors originally formed one manor. . . . [As to the cases supra of 'border-law'] there prevails throughout those manors a particular species of tenure, called 'tenant-right'; . . . since in those manors all the tenants hold under the same right, if it should happen that in one particular manor no example can be adduced of what is the custom in any particular case, . . . in order to explain the nature of tenure, which is not confined to one manor but prevails in a great number, you may show what is the general usage with respect to that tenure"; and he then approves also of Rowe v. Brenton; Alderson, B.: "If indeed there be some general connecting link between them — as, for instance, if the customs in question be a particular incident of the general tenure which is common to the two manors, then you have a right to show what the custom of one manor is as to that tenure, for the purpose of showing what the custom of the other manor is as to that tenure; but you must begin by showing that there is a general tenure common to them both; that fact fails here").

(4) Whether testimony to a custom violates the Opinion rule (post, § 1955), and whether one witness alone suffices to prove a custom (post, § 2053), also involve different rules.

§ 382. Prior or Subsequent Status (Business, Possession, Ownership, Solvency, Coverture, etc.). It has already been seen (ante, § 190) that the prior or the subsequent existence of a quality or condition is evidential of its existence at a given time. This principle is equally applicable in evidencing a habit or cause of conduct. Its use is most frequent for facts which can at first sight hardly be ranked here in any natural classification, — facts roughly to be described as involving a human status or relation to external affairs; for example, possession, ownership, solvency, and the like. The possession or ownership of property, the incumbency of an office, the existence of a debt, of coverture, and such relations, in truth involve a human course of conduct or a human attitude or position regarded as voluntarily and habitually maintained towards outward things and events; and this seems their most appropriate place in any classification of propositions to be proved.

The prior or the subsequent existence of such a fact is always evidential to show its existence at a time in issue, upon the general experience that such facts involve a human attitude more or less continuous and permanent. The probability of continuance depends much, of course, on the nature of the specific fact and the circumstances of each case; and therefore, in setting a limit of time for the range of the evidence, the discretion of the trial Court should control. The principle is illustrated by many sorts of facts. Such evidence is receivable to show the mode of conducting a business,[1] the keeping of liquors illegally,[2] the possession of goods, land, or money,[3] the ownership of § 382. [1] 1792, R. v. Neville, Peake N. P. 91 (nuisance in carrying on the business of a melter of grease; an admission, made at a former place, that the business there was a nuisance, received, to "weigh more or less against him as it shall appear more or less like that where he before resided"); 1857, R. v. Fairie, 8 E. & B. 486 (nuisance; a conviction for a similar nuisance in the preceding year was offered, because "the same thing was done in 1856 that was done in 1855, and if that was so, it is important to show that what was done in 1855 was an offence"; excluded, because, per Campbell, L. C. J., "a collateral issue is raised" on the question whether the places were alike; repudiating R. v. Neville; Coleridge, J., accord; Williams, J., uncertain); 1912, Potlatch Lumber Co. v. Anderson, C. C. A., 199 Fed. 742 (lumber-camp injury; that no rules for protection from falling trees were in force a year before and a year after the injury in question, held properly admitted in trial Court's discretion).

[2] 1889, Com. v. Finnerty, 148 Mass. 162, 19 N. E. 215 (Knowlton, J.: "The illegal keeping of intoxicating liquor with intent to sell it, like keeping a nuisance, is a continuing offence, which may extend over a long or a short period of time. If attention is directed to any point of time during the keeping, there is a probability, from the very fact of keeping then, that the same condition has existed from some previous time, and will continue for some time into the future. And so, as to offences which are in their nature continuing, evidence has often been received of a condition a little before or a little after the time within which the offence must be proved"). Accord: 1871, Com. v. Carney, 108 Mass. 417, 1872, Com. v. Berry, 109 Mass. 366; 1873, State v. Colston, 53 N. H. 483 (keeping liquor illegally for sale on Dec. 6; the keeping liquor for sale in the same house — a hotel — a short time before, admitted, because "a state of things once shown to exist is presumed to continue until something is shown to rebut the presumption"). Compare the cases cited ante, § 367.

[3] 1817, R. v. Watson, 2 Stark. 116, 137 (treason; the finding of pikes in the defendants' house three months after their arrest, objected to because they might have been placed there by others, admitted; papers, etc., found similarly in a room that had been locked by the defendant and not opened in the interval, also property,[4] the existence of a debt,[5] the condition of solvency,[6] the condition of coverture,[7] the condition of residence,[8] the incumbency of office,[9] and so on.[10] The occasional repudiation of such evidence in some of the above precedents is not to be taken as a negation of the general principle, but only as a deter-admitted; compare the citations ante, § 149); 1898, Com. v. Williams, 171 Mass. 461, 50 N. E. 1035 (possession six months before, allowed); 1909, Sullivan v. Girson, 39 Mont. 274, 102 Pac. 320 (possession of a ring pledged); 1910, Tonopah & G. R. Co. v. Follanbaum, 32 Nev. 304, 107 Pac. 883 (land-patent; but erroneously declining to presume earlier from later possession); 1845, Wells v. Burbank, 17 N. H. 409 (possession of a tax-warrant by the deputy Secretary of State on June 1, admitted evidence of its possession by him on Sept. 1); 1847, Bogardus v. Trinity Church, 4 Sandf. Ch. N. Y. 633, 744 (the general principle of the continuance of a state of things once shown, applied to infer a subsequent from an earlier possession of land); 1868, Kennedy v. People, 39 N. Y. 245, 254 (possession of money, and sales of goods, six weeks and six months before, admitted; whether the time is too remote must "depend very much on the circumstances of each case"); 1870, Wilkins v. Earle, 44 N. Y. 172 (bailment of money to an innkeeper; the bailor's prior possession of such sums of money, admitted).

For the possession of a document, as indicating prior possession, see ante, § 157.

For the use of subsequent possession of money as indicating a prior act of larceny, etc., see ante, § 154.

For the possession or lack of money as involving incapacity to lend and therefore probable non-lending, see ante, § 224.

For the possession or lack of money as indicating a motive to do or not to do something, see post, § 392.

For the possession of goods, etc., as showing a prior larceny or other crime, see ante, §§ 149–153.

[4] 1855, Montgomery & W. P. R. Co. v. Webb, 27 Ala. 618 (ownership of corporation-stock in 1850, held admissible to show ownership in 1853); 1882, Donahue v. Coleman, 49 Conn. 464, 466 (freeholder as eligible to be appraiser; ownership six months before, admitted; the presumption to be "merely one of fact"); 1913, Carey v. Hawaiian Lumber Mills, 21 Haw. 506 (continuance of original corporators and stockholders, presumed); 1872, Com. v. Dearborn, 109 Mass. 370 (proprietorship of a shop in July, admitted to show proprietorship in December); 1878, Hanson v. Chiatovich, 13 Nev. 395 (recovery of personalty of a testator; ownership at death, inferred from prior ownership); 1909, Tate v. Rose, 35 Utah 229, 99 Pac. 1003 (ownership in 1875, to evidence ownership at time of action begun).

[5] 1809, Jackson v. Irvin, 2 Camp 50 (bankruptcy; a creditor's claim having been proved to exist several months before the bankruptcy, its continuance to the latter date was presumed); 1867, O'Neil v. Mining Co., 3 Nev. 141 (a debt due and unpaid, on Oct. 5, inferred to remain unpaid on Oct. 16); 1860, Eames v. Eames, 41 N. H. 177 (assumpsit for two weeks' board; the parties' relations for the previous year, admitted); 1854, Bell v. Young, 1 Pa. 175 (the existence of a note at testator's death, inferable from its prior existence).

[6] 1884, Cozzens v. Holt, 136 Mass. 237 (insolvency a short time before, admitted); 1891, Dumangue v. Daniels, 154 Mass. 483, 485, 28 N. E. 900 (insolvent's deed; lack of property "at some previous time", admissible "if there was nothing to show a change in this respect"; "his condition as to property at a subsequent time", also, if "not too remote"; the trial Court's discretion to control as to time); 1873, Body v. Jewson, 33 Wis. 402, 411 (insolvency at time of action, inferred from prior insolvency).

For insolvency as involving inability to lend and probably non-lending, see ante, § 224.

[7] 1881, Murdock v. State, 68 Ala. 567 (marriage-relation at the time of a trial for burglary, not evidence of the same relation at the time of the burglary; unsound); 1861, Erskine v. Davis, 25 Ill. 251, 256 (the single state indicates subsequent singleness; coverture indicates subsequent but not prior coverture; unsound).

[8] 1875, Daniels v. Hamilton, 52 Ala. 105 (former residence in a State, as making amenable to process, admitted); 1906, Winkelman v. White, 147 Ala. 481, 42 So. 411 (domicile of a non-resident mortgagor, presumed to continue); 1842, Prather v. Palmer, 4 Ark. 456 (residence as affecting bond for costs; residence 17 years before, admitted); 1854, Swift v. Swift, 9 La. An. 117 (absence from the State during five years after a party's death, inferable from absence after that period).

Compare the citations post, § 1312.

[9] 1849, Barelli v. Lytle, 4 La. An. 557 (office as justice on June 29, 1848; inference of prior incumbency on June 5, 1848, held not allowable).

[10] 1895, Brown v. Wren, 2 Q. B. 391 (partnership in April, 1892, evidence of its continuance in June, 1893, and Feb., 1894); 1886, Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Jones, 108 Ind. 565, 9 N. E. 476 (speed of a train at one place, admitted to show the speed at a place just beyond); 1919, Tyrrell v. Goslant, 93 Vt. 63, 106 Atl. 585 (speed of an automobile at a point a mile away from the place in question, admitted).

mination that in the case in hand the contingencies of change were too many to allow the prior or the subsequent condition of things to be of probative value; or that no presumption of continuity (post, § 2530), in the strict sense, will be enforced.

§ 383. Style of Handwriting or Spelling, as evidenced by Specimens. It has been noted already (ante, § 90) that, in proving a document to have been written by A, two distinct modes offer themselves, — first, testimony by a person who saw A write it, and, secondly, testimony of some other sort. The first mode is not concerned in any way with the character or style of A's handwriting; the witness testifies merely to seeing the act done, just as he would testify to seeing a blow struck or hearing a remark made. By the second mode there is merely a resort to A's type or character or habit of handwriting, and an inference from the type to the genuineness of the disputed writing. This evidential fact, the type of the handwriting, involves an inference from a kind of habit or skill (of handwriting) to an act done (the specific writing), and the nature of that inference has been already explained (ante, § 99). But this skill or style or habit of handwriting has in its turn to be evidenced. This may be done by either testimonial or circumstantial evidence; i.e. by the direct testimony of one who is familiar with A's style of writing, or by separate instances of his writing used circumstantially to show the general type. The former mode concerns the Qualifications of Witnesses to Handwriting (dealt with post, §§ 569, 693). The latter mode is here involved; the general process being the same as that of evidencing any human quality or trait by specific instances of its exhibition.

What are the necessary requirements of relevancy in evidencing a style of handwriting by specific instances?

(1) The first requirement is, of course, that the specimens should be those of the person whose handwriting-style is to be proved, i.e. that they should be genuine. This is rather a necessary preliminary assumption than a principle of relevancy; just as, to prove A's character, it is obviously only A's and not B's conduct that can have any bearing. But it is precisely this preliminary assumption that has vitally affected the history of the law on this subject; for when specimens of handwriting are offered as A's, since they must thus first be shown to be A's, this may introduce new issues which will complicate and prolong the trial, and perhaps thus involve an incidental burden which will cost more than the evidence is worth. These considerations of Auxiliary Policy (§ 43), which are independent of the principle of Relevancy, thus become of radical importance.

(2) The requirement of the principle of relevancy is that the specimens offered shall be such as are capable of affording an inference of the normal and general type or style of the writing. Various considerations might be thought of as affecting this capability. (a) The 'ex parte' selection of the specimens may be improper, as possibly resulting in only one aspect of the style. This suggestion has never found any acceptance; for while the variations of a person's style may be numerous, they are usually not; the difficulty of collecting misleading ones is great; any serious false impression could be easily exposed; and, finally, our whole system of proof is that of an 'ex parte' selection and offering of evidence. (b) The specimens may have been written at a time when there was a clear inducement to deceive, e.g. at the trial. This consideration is usually given much weight, and may suffice to exclude specimens so written. (c) The specimens may have been written so long ago that they do not represent the person's present style. This argument has never been considered as important; for, if the person's present style is different, it can easily be shown. (d) The specimens offered may not be numerous enough to illustrate the average or normal type. But one specimen usually does represent the type with sufficient accuracy; and, if it does not, the opponent may easily show this by counter-specimens. This objection has never prevailed.

Such are the considerations involved in the principle of Relevancy. If this alone were involved, there would have been no obstacle to the free use of this mode of proof, and no other limitations than the few simple ones above mentioned. But the considerations of Auxiliary Policy already specified, as well as others (in particular, the Opinion rule), the survival of certain earlier limitations arising at a time when proof by type of handwriting was looked on with suspicion, and the confusion of usage as to certain ancient and modern terms, all combined to introduce additional restrictions, more or less arbitrary in themselves, and not connected with any principle of relevancy. It would be impossible to understand or to expound the law of to-day without having in mind this historical development and these additional principles. Accordingly, the state of the law as affected by all of them can best be examined in one place, under the Opinion rule (post, §§ 1991–2027).

The collateral considerations above mentioned were seldom thought to apply to such traits as a person's mode of spelling, grammatical use of words, and the like; and not only could such a usage be freely used to show the authorship of a document, but the usage in its turn could be proved by specimens, without the above limitations historically peculiar to specimens of handwriting. For convenience, the precedents are dealt with at the same place with proof of handwriting by specimens (post, § 2024).

SUB-TITLE II (continued): EVIDENCE TO PROVE A HUMAN QUALITY OR CONDITION

TOPIC IX: EVIDENCE TO PROVE EMOTION (MOTIVE, FEELING, PASSION)

CHAPTER XIV.

§ 385. Theory of Motive. It has been already observed (ante, § 117) that the term "motive," as commonly used, does not serve to discriminate the two different processes to which it may be applied. (1) It may be attempted, first, to infer, from the existence in A of a desire or inclination to do act X, that this desire, urging him on, probably resulted in the doing of the act; as when it is argued that, because A desired and wished to get rid of B, he probably did do something towards getting rid of B. (2) Secondly, in proceeding in turn to evidence this desire or other emotion, certain circumstances may be offered as tending to show its existence; as when the argument is to the existence of this desire in A (a) from an injury which B has done to A, or (b) from A's outward conduct expressing such a desire, or (c) from the prior or subsequent existence of such a desire. The former process involves the evidencing of a Human Act, and has already been dealt with (ante, §§ 117–119). The latter process involves the evidencing of a Human Quality or Condition, and is the present subject. Under the former head, questions of evidence are rare; the rulings upon evidence are concerned usually with the latter process.[1]

§ 386. Discriminations between Motive and Intent or Design or Character. Whatever the psychological distinctions may be, the discriminations between Emotion and other human attributes or conditions are not always accurately observed practically in judicial language, nor are they easy to observe. At one point the line is not easy to draw between Emotion and Design (ante, § 237), at another point between Emotion and Disposition (ante, § 192), at another between Emotion and Intent or Belief (ante, §§ 245, 300). Hence, in classifying the precedents it cannot be supposed that they will always be found just where they would be expected; the absence of an accepted terminology, and the difficulties in the application of any terminology, necessarily leave a margin of uncertainty.

§ 387. Kinds of Inference. The modes of inference circumstantially to a human quality or condition, as already pointed out (ante, § 190), may be of three kinds, all of which come into use in the present subject: (a) From circumstances tending to excite, stimulate, or bring into play the emotion in question; (b) From outward conduct expressing and resulting from the emotion in question; (c) From the prior or the subsequent existence of the emotion in question, as indicating its existence at the time in issue. The first of these is a Prospectant indication (ante, § 43); the second is a Retrospectant indication; the third is of both sorts. Each sort of inference has its own dangers and difficulties.

a. CIRCUMSTANCES TENDING TO EXCITE AN EMOTION.

§ 389. General Principle; Knowledge of the Circumstances. It must be remembered that this mode of argument is equally available in civil as well as in criminal cases. One is perhaps apt to think of "motive" as a matter involved in criminal cases only. But a recollection of the process involved — that of inferring the existence of some emotion, from which in turn the doing of an act is to be inferred — shows that this process may be equally a feature of proof in civil cases, though not as frequently as in criminal cases.

The general inquiry is, What circumstances tend probably to excite a given emotion? Obviously, the whole range of human affairs is here involved. It would be idle to attempt to catalogue the various facts of human life with reference to their potency in exciting a given emotion. Such an attempt would exhibit two defects. It would be pedantic, because it is impossible to suppose that the operation of human emotions can be reduced to fixed rules, and that a given fact can have an unvarying quantity of emotional potency. It would be useless, because the emotional effect of any fact must depend so often on the surrounding circumstances that no general formula could provide for the infinite combinations of circumstances. Courts have therefore always been agreed that in general no fixed negative rules can be made; that no circumstance can be said beforehand to be without the power of exciting a given emotion; and that, in general, any fact may be offered which by possibility can be conceived as tending with others towards the emotion in question:

§ 385. [1] From the point of view of logic and psychology as applicable to argument before the jury (not the rules of Admissibility), see the materials collected in the present author's "Principles of Judicial Proof, as given by Logic, Psychology, and General Experience, and illustrated in Judicial Trials" (1913), §§ 29, 101–115.

1850, PARSONS, J., in Johnson v. State, 17 Ala. 627: "[The commission of the murder by some one having been established,] every ground from which a motive could arise may be proved against him [the defendant]. . . . With regard to the grounds from which a motive may be inferred, we may remark that the law has never limited them and never can limit them in number or kind."

1868, SANDERSON, J., in Lyon v. Hancock, 35 Cal. 376: "Malice, like fraud, is generally to be inferred from facts and circumstances. Hence the plantiff [in this case] is entitled to prove any facts or circumstances which tend, even in the slighest degree, to show malice on the part of the defendant. For the same reason, the defendant is entitled to prove any facts and circumstances which tend, in the slightest degree, to show a contrary motive. No fact or circumstance can therefore be properly excluded from the jury unless the Court is satisfied to a moral certainty that the jury can draw no rational presumption from it."

1854, PARKER, J., in Hendrickson v. People, 10 N. Y. 13, 31: "Considerable latitude is allowed on the question of motive. Just in proportion to the depravity of the mind would a motive be trifling and insignificant which might prompt the commission of a great crime. We can never say the motive was adequate to the offence; for human minds would differ in their ideas of adequacy according to their own estimate of the enormity of the crime; and a virtuous mind would find no motive sufficient to justify the felonious taking of human life." [1]

There is but one limitation that can be thought of as necessary and universal, namely, the circumstance said to have excited the emotion must be shown to have probably become known to the person; because otherwise it could not have affected his emotions:

1897, DALE, C. J., in Son v. Terr., 5 Okl. 526, 49 Pac. 923: "A motive cannot operate to influence until the facts which create the motive exist. The facts upon which a motive is based cannot operate upon the mind until they are known by the party against whom the motive is assigned. If one person should contemplate and undertake a great wrong against another, — such a wrong as would induce in the mind of the person against whom it was directed a motive to kill, — and yet such contemplated wrong was unknown to the party, it cannot be justly said that a motive to kill could exist, because the party wronged had no knowledge of the facts which would be necessary to create the motive." [2]

§ 389. [1] Accord: 1893, Moore v. U. S., 150 U. S. 57, 61, 14 Sup. 26 (approved in the following case); 1895, Goldsby v. U. S., 160 U. S. 70, 16 Sup. 216 (a watch-charm taken from the robbed person by a companion of the accused).

[2] Georgia: 1907, Sasser v. State, 129 Ga. 541, 59 S. E. 255; Indiana: 1871, Cheek v. State, 35 Ind. 492, 494 (the deceased's plan to help a third person to elope with the defendant's wife, admissible, if known to the defendant, to show hot blood); Iowa: 1884, State v. Shelton, 64 Ia. 333, 338, 20 N. W. 459 (murder; intimacy between the defendant's paramour and the deceased; knowledge by the defendant required); Kentucky: 1899, Pence v. Com., — Ky. —, 51 S. W. 801; Michigan: 1900, People v. Morgan, 124 Mich. 527, 83 N. W. 275 (deceased's right to a life-insurance policy; but here the ruling is erroneous on the facts, as Montgomery, C. J., diss., points out); 1908, Bachinski v. Bachinski, 152 Mich. 693, 116 N. W. 556 (whether a daughter was intentionally omitted from her father's will made when she was 11 years old; her conduct as a

Nevertheless, Courts are often called upon to rule upon the admissibility of various circumstances. It is to their reproach that they heed the majority of these calls. There is in most of the rulings no reason for the slightest doubt of the propriety of the evidence. The extreme vagaries and the desperate pugnacity of many of those who take on themselves the defence of criminals have raised questions which ought to have been silently ignored by the Courts, — a treatment which would tend much to the discouragement of crime and the lightening of the profession's burden of precedents.

The criminality of the circumstances involved in proof of the motive has no doubt often been the ground of objection, the character-rule (ante, § 194) being invoked in exclusion. But it has already been seen (ante, § 216) that the fact that the circumstance offered involves also another crime by the defendant charged is in itself no objection, if the circumstance is relevant for the present purpose.

A natural arrangement of the precedents would be according either to the various circumstances offerable or to the various emotions to be proved. Practically, however, it is not possible to attempt a consistent grouping on either principle; the precedents are therefore arranged in part on each principle.

§ 390. Motives for Murder. The circumstances which might excite a desire to kill are innumerable. It must be understood that the rulings of the Courts cover only those circumstances which counsel have cared to question, and that nowadays the fact that counsel care and dare to question a circumstance is not necessarily an indication that there is the slightest rationality in the question. The annals of trials illustrate many other circumstances judicially recognized as capable of becoming motives; and the absence of a ruling by a Supreme Court upon a particular circumstance casts no doubt upon its propriety. Among the instances most commonly offered for adjudication, the following may be noted:

Circumstances involving the sexual passion, in one aspect or another, and usually operating through the emotion of jealousy, may lead to a desire to kill:[1] prostitute at 18, excluded); 1913, People v. Auerbach, 176 Mich. 23, 141 N. W. 869 (murder; insurance on deceased's life for wife's benefit, as a motive for defendant, who might expect to marry her; held inadmissible, for lack of evidence of defendant's prior knowledge); New York: 1873, Stokes v. People, 53 N. Y. 176 (murder; an indictment for blackmailing procured by the deceased against the defendant, held inadmissible to show hostility, as the defendant had not known of it); 1898, People v. Fitzgerald, 156 N. Y. 253, 50 N. E. 846; Texas: 1899, Barkman v. State, 41 Tex. Cr. 105, 52 S. W. 73; 1921, Powers v. State, 88 Tex. Cr. 457, 227 S. W. 671 (murder; information to defendant, as to letters of deceased to defendant's wife, and insulting words, admitted to show his state of mind); Virginia: 1912, Mullins v. Com., 113 Va. 787, 75 S. E. 193 (murder); Wisconsin: 1909, Spick v. State, 140 Wis. 104, 121 N. W. 664 (the knowledge need not be directly evidenced; the trial Court's discretion controls; good opinion by Marshall, J.); 1920, State v. Barber, — Wis. —, 179 N. W. 798 (assault with intent to rape P., a boarder; defendant's wife, the only other inmate, was absent; her statement of intention not to return that night, held inadmissible, because not communicated to the defendant).

Contra, as to robbery: 1915, New v. Smith, 94 Kan. 6, 145 Pac. 880 (pointing out that the victim's possible possession of money suffices to tempt to robbery).

§ 390. [1] Alabama: 1850, Johnson v. State, 17 Ala. 625 (wife-murder; the fact admitted that in the preceding year he had attempted to carry on a liaison with an unmarried woman near by); 1899, Gafford v. State, 122 Ala. 54, 25 So. 10 (deceased's adulterous relations with the defendant's sister, admitted to show the

1894, State v. Reed, 53 Kan. 767, 774, 37 Pac. 174 (approving the language of counsel): "It has been universally conceded, since David wrote to Joab, 'Set ye Uriah in the forefront of the hottest battle, and retire ye from him, that he may be smitten and die', that the man who covets his neighbor's wife has a motive for desiring the death of his neighbor."

1863, THOMPSON, J., in Com. v. Ferrigan, 44 Pa. 386 (murder of a paramour's husband): "I agree that a solitary instance of illicit intercourse, especially if at a considerable distance in time from the period of homicide, . . . if received at all, should only be so with great caution, and where a probability existed that it would throw light on the motive of the deceased's probable aggression; Tyson and Haralson, JJ., diss.); 1903, Caddell v. State, 136 Ala. 9, 34 So. 183 (wife-murder; defendant's relations with a paramour, admitted); 1909, Rollings v. State, 169 Ala. 82, 49 So. 329 (murder; bad character of defendant's wife, without other evidence, excluded); 1914, Spicer v. State, 188 Ala. 9, 65 So. 972 (wife-murder; defendant's relations with other women, admitted);

Arkansas: 1879, Edmonds v. State, 34 Ark. 720, 730 (murder of a paramour; violence of the defendant, a few days before, to their child in the deceased's presence, admitted to show his feelings towards the deceased); 1909, Ware v. State, 91 Ark. 555, 121 S. W. 927 (murder; defendant's seduction of deceased's daughter, unknown to deceased, excluded);

California: 1895, People v. Gress, 107 Cal. 461, 40 Pac. 752 (the defendant's efforts to induce the deceased's wife to leave the deceased, excluded, because the killing was admitted and self-defence was the issue; this seems erroneous, because on the question whether the defendant was the aggressor, his prior motive to kill the deceased would be useful); 1900, People v. Brown, 130 Cal. 591, 62 Pac. 1072 (defendant's relations with the deceased's wife, admitted); 1904, People v. Wright, 144 Cal. 161, 77 Pac. 877 (certain adulterous relations excluded, following People v. Gress); 1905, People v. Cook, 148 Cal. 334, 83 Pac. 43 (murder of K. for indecent proposals to defendant's daughter; incestuous relation of defendant and his daughter, admitted; People v. Gress, supra, discredited on this point);

Connecticut: 1831, State v. Watkins, 9 Conn. 47, 52 (wife-murder; the relation of husband naturally suggests an inference of a desire to preserve, not destroy, the wife; to rebut this, the fact is admissible that the husband has been living in adulterous intercourse with another; Hosmer, C. J.: "Love extinguished by adultery gives way to hatred, and a desire to be free from the burden of a wife who is no longer the object of regard"); 1868, State v. Green, 35 Conn. 203 (wife-murder; the fact was admitted, to rebut the inference of affection, that the defendant was before married to another woman still living, and was therefore not the lawful husband of the deceased; following State v. Watkins);

Georgia: 1897, Shaw v. State, 102 Ga. 660, 29 S. E. 477 (train-wrecking; the defendant's illicit overtures to another woman, admitted to show a motive for wrecking the train, on which his wife was); 1901, Robinson v. State, 114 Ga. 56, 39 S. E. 862 (raped condition of the deceased, admitted); 1905, Gossett v. State, 123 Ga. 431, 51 S. E. 394 (murder; the defence being that the killing was done on sight of the deceased seducing the accused's daughter, the prosecution was allowed to prove the daughter's lewd character and the accused's knowledge of it, but not particular acts of her unchastity);

Idaho: 1904, State v. Levy, 9 Ida. 483, 75 Pac. 227 (relations with prostitutes);

Illinois: 1889, Farris v. State, 129 Ill. 521, 526, 21 N. E. 821 (subsequent rape of a wife, as indicating a motive for killing her husband half an hour before, not admitted; clearly wrong); 1894, Simons v. People, 150 Ill. 66, 75, 36 N. E. 1019 (murder of paramour; the relations between them, as shown by the defendant's letters, admitted); 1910, People v. McMahon, 244 Ill. 45, 91 N. E. 104 (murder of defendant's house-servant by poison; the servant being pregnant, by the defendant as alleged, the prosecution's offer to show the defendant to be on bad terms with his wife was rejected; quite unsound; no authority whatever cited); 1917, People v. Ahrling, 279 Ill. 70, 116 N. E. 764 (wife-murder; that defendant committed incest with his daughter aged 13, excluded);

Indiana: 1877, Binns v. State, 57 Ind. 46, 52 (pendency of a suit for divorce admitted to show a motive in the husband for wife-murder; but the merits of the dispute, as shown in the decree of divorce, excluded); 1893, Pettit v. State, 135 Ind. 393, 415, 34 N. E. 1118 (wife-murder; the wife's affection, relevant to show his state of mind); 1897, Hinshaw v. State, 147 Ind. 334, 47 N. E. 158 (wife-murder; the defendant's improper relations with another woman, admitted); 1908, Lawson v. State, 171 Ind. 431, 84 N. E. 974 (defendant woman's adultery, on a charge of husband-murder, admitted); 1910, Porter v. State, 173 Ind. 694, 91 N. E. 340 (wife-murder; defendant's illicit relations with other women, admitted);

Iowa: 1858, State v. Hinkle, 6 Ia. 380, 384 (wife-poisoning; the defendant's illicit relations with another woman, before the wife's death, admitted as indicating that "he would be more likely to desire her death"); 1880, State v. Kline, 54 Ia. 183, 6 N. W. 184 (assault with intent to kill; the fact admitted that the defendant had seduced the assaulted prisoner. Something must be necessarily left to the discretion of the judge in such a case. But a different case is presented when it is proposed to prove a continuous illegal intercourse down to the death of the slain. . . . He is a poor judge of human motives and impulses who cannot see, in such a relation as is proposed to be proved here between the de-woman and had solicited her to procure an abortion);

Kansas: 1894, State v. Reed, 53 Kan. 767, 774, 37 Pac. 174 (quoted supra);
Kentucky: 1896, Jackson v. Com., 100 Ky. 239, 38 S. W. 422 (murder of a paramour; the presence of an advanced fœtus, admitted as indicating a motive);
Louisiana: 1898, State v. Reed, 50 La. An. 990, 24 So. 131 (the keeping of a paramour, as a source of quarrel with the deceased, admitted); 1904, State v. Brown, 111 La. 696, 35 So. 818 (murder; deceased's admissions of adultery with defendant's wife, not admitted, on the facts, to show the deceased's motive for aggression, on a plea of self-defence);
Maryland: 1912, Meno v. State, 117 Md. 435, 83 Atl. 759 (abortion by the alleged seducer; the woman's intercourse with a third person as evidencing the latter's paternity, not admitted for defendant);
Massachusetts: 1869, Com. v. Madan, 102 Mass. 1, 4 (similar to Binns v. State, supra); 1910, Com. v. Howard, 205 Mass. 128, 91 N. E. 397 (wife-murder; the defendant's recent attempt to persuade his wife to an abortion, admitted with other circumstances to show a desire to get rid of her as a burden; also letters between the defendant and another woman showing an intimacy);
Michigan: 1873, Templeton v. People, 27 Mich. 502 (attempt at wife-murder; improper relations between the defendant and another married woman, admitted);
Minnesota: 1881, State v. Lawlor, 28 Minn. 216, 219, 9 N. W. 698 (an altercation at a drinking-saloon in which the deceased threw beer upon a woman L., and the accused then shot the deceased; the fact that L. was the defendant's paramour, admitted to show a motive for resenting her treatment);
Mississippi: 1896, Webb v. State, 73 Miss. 456, 19 So. 238 (seduction of the deceased admitted to show a motive for murder); 1901, Ouidas v. State, 78 Miss. 622, 29 So. 525 (illicit relations with the deceased's wife, admitted);
Missouri: 1897, State v. Duestrow, 137 Mo. 44, 38 S. W. 554 (wife-murder; the defendant's possession of a paramour, admitted); 1900, State v. Callaway, 154 Mo. 91, 55 S. W. 444 (similar);
Nebraska: 1879, St. Louis v. State, 8 Nebr. 405, 411, 1 N. W. 371 (wife-murder; criminal intimacy with another woman, before and after wife's death, admitted); 1896, Dixon v. State, 46 Nebr. 298, 64 N. W. 962 (abortion; the defendant's recent intercourse with the woman admitted, as showing an intimacy rendering the deed more probable);
Nevada: 1876, State v. Larkin, 11 Nev. 314, 328 (murder; the relations of the deceased to a certain woman, admitted to show motive);
New Jersey: 1900, State v. Abatto, 64 N. J. L. 658, 47 Atl. 10 (illicit relations with the deceased's wife, admitted);
New York: 1858, People v. Stout, 4 Park. Cr. 71, 115, 128 (murder; the defendant's criminal connection with the deceased's wife, admitted, though she was the defendant's sister and could never marry him; "in case the deceased was effectually disposed of and silenced, their fears of exposure and detection would naturally be lessened"); 1880, Pierson v. People, 79 N. Y. 424, 435 (defendant's marriage to the widow of the murdered man, admitted, as showing the desire to possess her as a motive for the killing); 1893, People v. Harris, 136 N. Y. 423, 437, 449, 33 N. E. 65 (wife-murder; defendant's admission of two former secret marriages, contracted to overcome the scruples of his victims, admitted as showing his motive to conceal the secret marriage with the deceased; adulterous intercourse of the defendant and a plan with his paramour to murder her future husband, admitted to show a motive); 1893, People v. Osmond, 138 N. Y. 80, 86, 33 N. E. 739 (wife-murder; illicit relations of the defendant's wife and her paramour, unknown to defendant, not admitted); 1895, People v. Buchanan, 145 N. Y. 1, 39 N. E. 846 (illicit relations of the defendant with the deceased, admitted); 1897, People v. Scott, 153 N. Y. 40, 46 N. E. 1028 (wife-murder; relations of the defendant with a paramour, admitted); 1897, People v. Sutherland, 154 N. Y. 345, 48 N. E. 518 (murder of a paramour; her letters, received by him, showing her view of their relations, receivable to indicate his motive; Bartlett and Martin, JJ., diss.; the ruling is of course correct, and the dissent is inexplicable); 1899, People v. Benham, 160 N. Y. 402, 55 N. E. 11 (wife-murder; illicit relations with another woman, admitted); 1903, People v. Montgomery, 176 N. Y. 219, 68 N. E. 258 (wife-murder by one having a paramour; the paramour's character for unchastity, excluded; erroneous, because, under the principle of § 68, ante, her character made more probable her adultery with the defendant);
Oklahoma: 1913, Miller v. State, 9 Okl. Cr. 255, 131 Pac. 717 (illicit relations as a motive for murder);
Oregon: 1906, State v. Martin, 47 Or. 282, 83 Pac. 849 (killing of the father of a girl M.: that defendant had seduced M., admitted as showing motive); 1909, State v. Hembree, 54 Or. 463, 103 Pac. 1008 (wife-murder; incest with the daughter, and the wife's discovery of it, as a motive, allowed);
Pennsylvania: 1863, Com. v. Ferrigan, 44 Pa. 386 (quoted supra); 1878, Turner v. Com., 86

ceased's wife and the prisoner, that it might lead to the perpetration of the crime charged, or who would deny that it would probably shed light on the motive. History is full of such examples."

The expediency of preventing the discovery of a former crime, or of evading an arrest or a persecution for it, may lead to the desire to kill: [2]

Pa. 54, 70 (adultery by the defendant with the deceased, admitted);
Texas: 1914, Brown v. State, 74 Tex. Cr. 356, 169 S. W. 437 (like Pettit v. State, Ind., but decided contra; Davidson, P. J., diss.);
Vermont: 1896, State v. Chase, 68 Vt. 405, 35 Atl. 336 (the defendant's adultery with the deceased's wife, admitted);
West Virginia: 1906, State v. Legg, 59 W. Va. 315, 53 S. E. 545 (wife's murder of husband; the wife's adultery, admitted);
Wisconsin: 1879, Mack v. State, 48 Wis. 271, 276, 4 N. W. 449 (husband-murder; criminal intimacy with a discharged employee, admitted to show motive).

Compare the citations post, § 398 (sexual passion at other times).

For the principle that the criminality of conduct showing motive is no objection, see ante, §§ 216, 305, 363.

[2] ENGLAND: 1830, R. v. Clewes, 4 C. & P. 222 (the fact was received of the murder of a third person by the deceased and of the defendant's ill-will to the third person, and his hiring the deceased to do the act, as furnishing a motive for destroying the deceased).

UNITED STATES: Federal: 1906, Thompson v. U. S., 144 Fed. 14, 18, C. C. A. (counterfeiting notes; defendant's admission that he was liable to arrest as an abortionist, admitted as showing a motive for the use of counterfeit money); Alabama: 1881, Marler v. State, 68 Ala. 580, 584 (the deceased's importance as a witness against the defendant in a pending divorce suit, admitted to show a motive for murder); s. c. 67 Ala. 55 (admitting also his desire to get rid of his wife by divorce); 1917, Hodge v. State, 199 Ala. 318, 74 So. 373 (murder of a sheriff; defendant's violation of liquor law, admitted to show motive); Arkansas: 1839, Dunn v. State, 2 Ark. 229 (the previous killing of E., whose murderers W. had attempted to discover and bring to justice, admitted as indicating a motive for the killing of W.); California: 1899, People v. Valliere, 123 Cal. 576, 56 Pac. 433 (that defendant, at the time of the alleged assault upon a jailer, was in jail under conviction, admitted to show motive); Colorado: 1905, Zipperian v. People, 33 Colo. 134, 79 Pac. 1018 (deceased's information against defendant for burglary, admitted); Columbia (District): 1921, McHenry v. U. S., — D. C. App. —, 276 Fed. 761 (murder; confession of a recent robbery, admitted to evidence motive for killing an officer); Iowa: 1895, State v. Seymore, 94 Ia. 699, 63 N. W. 661 (that defendant had reason to fear that the deceased, a partner in crime, would inform on him, admitted); Kentucky: 1898, Riggs v. Com., 103 Ky. 610, 45 S. W. 866 (that the deceased had made an accusation against the defendant, admitted; but not the truth of the accusation; this seems unsound); 1919, Music v. Com., 186 Ky. 45, 216 S. W. 116 (murder of an officer; prior robbery, admitted to show motive); Louisiana: 1861, State v. Mulholland, 16 La. An. 376 (that the deceased was killed while arresting the accused for another killing, admitted); 1896, State v. Fontenot, 48 La. An. 305, 19 So. 111 (that a person suspected the accused of stealing his wood and had engaged the deceased to watch it, admitted); 1910, State v. McKowen, 126 La. 1075, 53 So. 353; Massachusetts: 1920, Com. v. Feci, 235 Mass. 562, 127 N. E. 602 (former thefts by defendant, disclosed by deceased, as a motive for murder); Missouri: 1904, State v. Lewis, 181 Mo. 235, 79 S. W. 671 (that the deceased officer was killed while searching defendant's house to discover money robbed from a bank a month before, admitted); 1906, State v. Spaugh, 200 Mo. 571, 98 S. W. 55 (prior assault, as a motive for murdering the sheriff seeking to arrest, admitted); Montana: 1899, State v. Geddes, 22 Mont. 68, 55 Pac. 919 (the deceased's former complaint against defendant for assault, admitted; but not the facts of the assault); 1899, State v. Welch, 22 Mont. 92, 55 Pac. 927 (same principle applied to the same offence by another defendant); North Carolina: 1881, State v. Morris, 84 N. C. 756, 761 (murder; the fact that the defendant had been indicted for larceny, while the deceased, who was implicated, had been allowed to become State's evidence, admitted); Oklahoma: 1897, Son v. Terr., 5 Okl. 526, 49 Pac. 923 (that the deceased was trying to implicate the defendant in certain robberies, admitted); Texas: 1899, Barkman v. State, 41 Tex. Cr. 105, 52 S. W. 73 (murder; that deceased had testified against the defendant at an inquest on another death, admitted); Utah: 1900, State v. Morgan, 22 Utah 162, 61 Pac. 527 (murder of one of a sheriff's posse; defendant's prior commission of robbery, for which the posse were pursuing him, admissible to show motive to resist); 1918, State v. De Weese, 51 Utah 215, 172 Pac. 290 (wife-murder; defendant's autobiography recounting a burglar's career, admitted to evidence motive); Virginia: 1920, Williams v. Com., 128 Va. 698, 104 S. E. 853 (murder of police-officer: fact of police-search to arrest for another offence, admitted).

1896, BARTHOLOMEW, J., in State v. Kent, 5 N. D. 516, 67 N. W. 1052 (wife-murder; the alleged motive was a fear that the wife was about to discover the facts of his murder of his first wife 20 years before, his robbing of a bank, and the falsity of his present name and pretensions; proof of these past misdoings was received): "Obviously, this theory of the motive would be greatly strengthened by proof that he had committed the specified crimes in Ohio. While it is true that, in the case where proof of a collateral crime has been admitted for the purpose of showing motive, the relation between the two crimes was usually such as to indicate that the latter was committed in order to prevent an investigation into and an exposure of the former crime, that it was feared would be followed by prosecution and punished, yet we can discover no reason in principle for the limitation of the rule to that class of cases strictly. Any strong incentive must furnish an equally cogent reason for the admission of such testimony. . . . Whoever reads the record in this case, and particularly Kent's letters, will be irresistibly impressed with the thought that Kent at all times assumed high moral grounds, with an exalted standard of personal purity. There is evidence tending to show that he claimed for himself a higher social position than he was willing to concede to his wife. Under these circumstances, it would be intolerably galling to him to have his wife learn that he was in fact a felon, that he had married her under an assumed name, and that during all these years he had led a life of duplicity and hypocrisy. . . . Nor can we sanction the views of the learned counsel that these collateral crimes were too remote in time to furnish any motive for the commission of the crime here charged. Motive may or may not be affected by the lapse of time. Ordinarily a man who had committed a murder 20 years in the past would be just as much concerned to prevent exposure and punishment for that crime as though it were but one year in the past. And in this case, if the discovery by Mrs. Kent, at the time of her death, of these dark and criminal spots in her husband's life, would have been just as galling and humiliating to him as if discovered the first year of their married life, then his motive to prevent such discovery would be just as strong at the former time as at the latter."

So, also, and sometimes hardly to be discriminated, the conduct of the deceased in opposing or injuring or trying to injure the defendant, may furnish a motive.[3]

The defendant's relations with a third person having a desire to kill the deceased may induce him to coöperate, through the sympathy either of [3] Ala. 1877, Commander v. State, 60 Ala. 1, 7 (anticipated litigation as a motive for murder, admitted; but details as to the merits of the dispute, excluded); 1921, Nickerson v. State, 205 Ala. 684, 88 So. 905 (murder; deceased's filing of a criminal charge against defendant, admitted); Ga. 1906, Hayes v. State, 126 Ga. 95, 54 S. E. 809 (murder; indictment and judgment against the accused for gaming, the deceased having testified thereon against him, admitted); Ky. 1892, Martin v. Com., 93 Ky. 193, 19 S. W. 580 (murder; that the defendant had been indicted for robbery at the deceased's instance, admitted, but not the details of the fact); 1895, Com. v. Gray, — Ky. —, 30 S. W. 1015 (the facts as to a legal dispute existing between the defendant and the deceased, admitted); N. Y. 1875, Murphy v. People, 63 N. Y. 591 (litigation pending between the defendant and G., and the purpose of it, admitted to show a motive for the murder of H., also concerned in the suit and present with G. at the time of the killing); Or. 1909, State v. Finch, 54 Or. 482, 103 Pac. 505 (murder; the deceased's preferment of various charges against the defendant, admitted); Tenn. 1843, Stone v. State, 4 Humph. 27, 35 (murder; the fact admitted that the defendant had maltreated his wife, and that she was harbored by the deceased; Wis. 1909, Spick v. State, 140 Wis. 104, 121 N. W. 664 (deceased an informer upon a prior crime of defendant).

It will be noticed that the existence of a previous prosecution or litigation may appear, not merely as involving conduct of the opponent tending to excite the defendant's hostility, but also as involving conduct of the defendant expressing his hostility (post, § 395). Compare the similar principle applied to evidence of a witness' bias (post, §§ 949, 950, 967).

friendship or of domestic ties, or by reason of pecuniary hire or of fraternal pledges: [4]

1868, SANDERSON, J., in Lyon v. Hancock, 35 Cal. 372, 376 (the defendant had caused the arrest of the female plaintiff for throwing a brickbat at him from a window; to prove that she was the assailant, he offered the fact of the hostility of the plaintiff's husband and of herself against the defendant): "The presence of Mrs. Lyons in the street, and the absence of all other persons by whom the act might have been committed, were strong probabilities that the brickbat was cast by her. Taking in connection, does the fact, if such was the fact, that her husband entertained towards the defendant feelings of hostility, and had in her presence made threats against him, constitute another probability against her? Would she have been less likely to have cast the brickbat had the relationship between her husband and the defendant been friendly? . . . Suppose, upon coming to the street, the defendant had found two women, instead of one, of equal repectability and character, one of whom must have cast the brickbat, one the wife of his friend, the other of his enemy; would not the friendship of the one and the enmity of the other constitute probabilities to be taken into account in determining which perpetrated the act? Other probabilities being equal, as we have supposed, no one would hesitate to say that the act had been committed by the wife of the defendant's enemy and not by the wife of his friend."

Finally, a most common circumstance is the deceased's possession of money or property, as leading to the accused's desire to kill.[5]

The usual employment of these and other circumstances (as above) is by the prosecution, as evidencing the defendant's probable desire to injure and thus his probable doing of the injury. But where the defendant admits the act, he may wish to offer on his own behalf some of the foregoing kinds of circumstances, as tending to show hot blood, and thus to mitigate the degree of the crime. Here, however, the number and kind of circumstances that might naturally excite hot blood are much more limited.[6] Distinguish from this the effort to show, on a plea of insanity, that the defendant was under an hallucination as to the deceased's conduct (ante, § 228). There, obviously, the argument involves proof that the conduct had no existence, and that no reason existed for the belief in it; here it must be shown, either that it existed and came to the defendant's knowledge, or that he had been told that it existed or otherwise obtained reason to believe in it. The present argument is identical with the one (ante, § 231), admitting circumstances which, when known to a person, tend to bring on insanity.

[4] 1883, Bell v. State, 74 Ala. 421 (that others of the defendant's family disliked the injured person, excluded; unsound); 1891, Story v. State, 68 Miss. 609, 629, 10 So. 47 (the defendant never having seen the deceased until the day before, the instigation of a third person was shown as the motive); 1877, Hester v. Com., 85 Pa. 139, 155 (the fact was admitted that the defendant and others concerned were members of the Ancient Order of Hibernians, otherwise there known as Molly Maguires, the order being a combination for the purpose of assisting each other in crimes, each member taking an oath to commit any offence ordered; the membership thus supplying a motive for crimes otherwise apparently motiveless; this great trial, published in pamphlet form, illustrates the wide ramifications of motive-evidence); 1879, McManus v. Com., 91 Pa. 57, 66 (murder of a miner; the defendant's membership in the Molly Maguires and his subjection to the oath of the society, admitted to show a probable motive).

[5] 1884, R. v. Flannagan, 15 Cox Cr. 403, 411, Butt, J. (insurance-money); 1893, Moore v. U. S., 150 U. S. 57, 61, 14 Sup. 26 (murder; the deceased's possession of land claimed by the defendant's wife, admitted to show motive); 1895, Byers v. State, 105 Ala. 31, 16 So. 716 (possession of money); 1893, Graves v. People, 18 Colo. 170, 32 Pac. 63 (the defendant being in charge of property of the deceased, the fact of his having duly accounted for it was held admissible in explanation); 1919, People v. Strause, 290 Ill. 259, 125 N. E. 339 (murder; certain contract transactions, not admitted on the facts); 1903, Bess v. Com., 116 Ky. 927, 77 S. W. 349 (insurance-money, personalty, and defendant's arson, etc., admitted); 1881, State v. Crowley, 33 La. An. 782, 785 (possession of money); 1854, Hendrickson v. People, 10 N. Y. 13, 31 (wife-murder: disappointment with the father-in-law's will, admitted); 1868, Kennedy v. People, 39 N. Y. 245, 253 (possession of money "suggests a motive for committing a robbery, and so a motive to take the life of the deceased if that would facilitate the theft or contribute to its concealment"); 1901, State v. Sheppard, 49 W. Va. 582, 39 S. E. 676; 1903, Keffer v. State, 12 Wyo. 49, 73 Pac. 556.

Distinguish the mooted question of the accused's lack of money as indicating a motive (post, § 392).

§ 391. Motive for Other Deeds. The circumstances that may serve as motives for other deeds are innumerable; and the rulings, though naturally few, can hardly be classified except according to the crimes involved.[1]

[6] 1881, Combs v. State, 75 Ind. 215, 217 (information to the defendant about rumors as to the deceased's misconduct, excluded, because their tenor was not shown); 1862, Maher v. People, 10 Mich. 212, 217, 224 (to determine whether the killing was done in hot blood, the fact was admitted that the defendant was told, a few moments before, of his wife's adultery with the deceased); 1872, Hurd v. People, 25 Mich. 405, 412 (immediately precedent assaults by the deceased, admitted, as bearing on the defendant's provocation or fear of harm); 1860, Sanchez v. People, 22 N. Y. 117, 152 (information likely to result in passion reducing the degree of homicide, admitted); 1896, People v. Barberi, 149 N. Y. 256, 43 N. E. 635 (the preceding relations between the deceased and his mistress the defendant, admitted as showing a state of mind on her part consistent with a lesser degree of homicide).

This kind of evidence may of course be rebutted; 1921, Bryan v. Com., —Va.—, 109 S. E. 477 (murder of H.; defence, provocation by defendant's wife's confession of illicit relations with H.; the prosecution was allowed to show defendant's long prior knowledge of his wife's unchaste character and relations with other men).

§ 391. [1] Arson (compare also the citations post, § 392); 1876, Hinds v. State, 55 Ala. 145, 148 (lawsuit as a motive for arson, admitted); 1878, McAdory v. State, 62 Ala. 154, 158 (hostility to a bailor of property, admitted to show a motive for arson of the bailee's house); 1888, Long v. State, 68 Ala. 36, 38, 43, 5 So. 443 (that the defendant's divorced wife lived in the burned house and associated with its owner, admitted); 1896, Simpson v. State, 111 Ala. 6, 20 So. 572 (that the owner of the premises had recently refused to rent them to the defendant, excluded; unsound); 1919, State v. Taylor, 93 N. J. L. 159, 107 Atl. 423 (falsifying records of jury service; the character of a co-conspirator as an habitual drunkard, etc., not admitted to show that it was not probable that defendant would "make such a combination with such a man"); 1900, State v. Battle, 126 N. C. 1036, 35 S. E. 624 (arson; ill-will towards owner's agent, not of itself admissible to show motive; Clark, J., diss., in a weighty opinion); 1921, Dumas v. State, — Okl. Cr. —, 201 Pac. 820 (arson; of warehouse; fictitious drafts for goods, admitted to show motive); 1881, State v. Hunnett, 54 Vt. 83 (to show the alleged motive, hostility to the defendant's former wife, who had an interest in the building, the fact was rejected of the wife's petition for divorce on the ground of cruelty; and of other stages of the dispute; the fact of hostile feeling was held admissible, but not facts "calculated to inflame the minds of the jury against the respondent").

Suicide (compare also the citations ante, § 144): 1699, Spencer Cowper's Trial, 13 How. St. Tr. 1187 (murder of a woman; to disprove the theory of suicide, the Court allowed the deceased's reputation to be considered, as indicating that she had no shameful reason for destroying herself); 1876, Continental Ins. Co. v. Delpeuch, 82 Pa. 234 (belief in spiritualism, not admitted to show the likelihood of suicide).

Sundry Crimes and Wrongs: Alabama: 1895, McTeers v. Perkins, 106 Ala. 411, 17 So. 547 (near relationship, as bearing on the good faith of a conveyance, admitted); 1920, Richardson v. State, 204 Ala. 124, 85 So. 789 (murder; to show deceased's supposed motive in approaching his child in custody of his wife who was defendant's daughter, deceased's answer in his wife's divorce action was admitted, alleging that the wife was not a suitable person and thus permitting the inference that he would seek to obtain the child by force or fraud); Connecticut: 1834, Austin v. Austin, 10 Conn. 221, 224 (divorce for adultery; defence, fraudulent connivance with the co-respondent; the husband's harsh feelings towards his wife, not admitted as tending to show the fact of connivance); 1920, State v. Costa, 95 Conn. 140, 110 Atl. 875 (grudge against W., admitted as showing motive for assaulting C., through mistaking C. for W.); Indiana: 1851, Carter v. State, 2 Ind. 618 (on a charge of administer-

§ 392. Pecuniary Circumstances as creating a Motive (Poverty, to show a Crime, or negative a Loan; Market Value, to show a Sale-Price). In several ways the pecuniary circumstances, of one or another person or trying, may tend to show the excitement of a motive in some person. It will be convenient to distinguish the situations according as the evidence deals with (1) the pecuniary condition of A as exciting a motive in B; (2) the pecuniary condition of A as exciting a motive in himself; (3) the pecuniary value of a thing as exciting a motive to contract with a person; (4) pecuniary conditions in sundry aspects.

(1) (a) The possession of money by A may tend to show that B desired to rob or to kill him (ante, § 390). (b) The lack of money by A may tend to show that B would be unwilling to trust his promises, and therefore probably did not trust him; in particular, that B would be unwilling to lend A money,[1] or to sell goods to A, or to sell to him as principal[2]

ing drugs with intent to produce abortion, the fact of the administration of ergot having been introduced, it was held admissible to show that the popular opinion was that ergot would produce abortion, as evidence of the probable purpose of its use); Iowa: 1886, State v. Schaffer, 70 Ia. 372, 30 N. W. 639 (larceny; the search for and discovery of other stolen goods with the goods in question, admitted as showing the motive for making the search; the sheriff's possession of another warrant against the defendant, admitted as showing a motive for a thorough search for the defendant, the sheriff having testified that the defendant had absconded); 1895, Bailey v. Bailey, 94 Ia. 598, 63 N. W. 341 (character of the wife, as indicating the husband's reason for cessation of the affection supposed to have been alienated); 1905, State v. Koller, 129 Ia. 111, 105 N. W. 391 (adultery; the defendant's wife's violence, etc., to him, admitted in his favor); Maryland: 1874, Hays v. State, 40 Md. 633, 650 (abortion; the reputation of the house where the parties went, as one of ill-fame, admissible as indicating the likelihood of such a place being chosen for such an act); 1879, Robinson v. State, 53 Md. 151 (burglary of M.'s house; to show the defendant's real motive for presence there, the fact was admitted that M.'s wife was a lewd woman with whom he had formerly had intercourse; 1893, Benglesdorf v. Hanaway, 90 Md. 217, 44 Atl. 1011 (whether a certain statement had been made by plaintiff; that the facts were contrary to the alleged statement, not admissible as indicating that the statement was not made); Massachusetts: 1854, York v. Pease, 2 Gray 282 (a quarrel between the defendant and the next friend of the plaintiff, in an action by an infant for slander, admitted); Michigan: 1871, Strang v. People, 24 Mich. 1, 4, 10 (rape; defendant's statements to the complainant, admitted to show her fear); Missouri: 1883, State v. Grant, 79 Mo. 113, 137 (murder; the defendant's theft of butter, admitted to show the officer's reason for arresting).

For the principle that the criminality of conduct showing motive is no objection, see ante, §§ 216, 305, 363.

§ 392. [1] 1905, Security Trust Co. v. Robb, 142 Fed. 78, 84, C. C. A. (conversely, the defendant's possession of ample means may evidence the plaintiff's lack of good faith in making a demand for security); 1860, Marcy v. Barnes, 16 Gray Mass. 161, 162 (whether the defendant's name was on a note before it came into the plaintiff's hands or was fraudulently put there afterwards; the fact of inquiries made by the plaintiff, before taking the note, as to the standing of the defendant and the other maker, and of his being informed that the defendant was responsible financially but the other maker worthless, admitted, as showing the improbability of the plaintiff's having taken the note without the defendant's name); 1896, Cochrane v. W. D. Co., 64 Minn. 369, 67 N. W. 206 (insolvency of the alleged borrower, admitted).

[2] 1896, Plumb v. Curtis, 66 Conn. 154, 33 Atl. 998 (here the person in question had already bought as agent in similar transactions, and the person's lack of assets was admitted as tending to show that a change in the course of dealings had not occurred); 1858, Lee v. Wheeler, 11 Gray Mass. 236, 239 (poverty and lack of credit of W., admitted to show that the defendant gave credit to the defendant, not to W.).

Contra: 1821, Wheeler v. Packer, 4 Conn., 102, 106 (money paid on the credit of the defendants; to show that the money was paid, not on their credit but on the credit of the plaintiff's son, the defendants offered to show that the plaintiff's son had sufficient funds to be answerable, while the defendants were "entirely poor and unable to pay any part of it"; excluded, as "too vague" and "leading to interminable inquiries"; ruling unsound).

or to sell to him absolutely;[3] or to sell to him in good faith.[4]

(2) (a) The lack of money by A might be relevant enough to show the probability of A's desiring to commit a crime in order to obtain money. But the practical result of such a doctrine would be to put a poor person under so much unfair suspicion and at such a relative disadvantage that for reasons of fairness this argument has seldom been countenanced as evidence of the graver crimes, particularly of violence: [5]

1863, BIGELOW, C. J., in Com. v. Jeffries, 7 All. 548, 559, 566 (false pretences by representing that the defendant had an order for goods from an undisclosed principal; the fact of the defendant's insolvency at the time, as known to him, was offered): "It is doubtless true that in a large class of cases the poverty or pecuniary embarrassments of a party accused of crime cannot be shown as substantive evidence of his guilt. The reason for the exclusion of such evidence is that in those cases there is no certain or known connection between the facts offered to be proved and the conclusion which is sought to be established by it. It does not follow, because a man is destitute, that he will steal, or that when embarrassed with debt and incapable of meeting his engagements he will commit forgery. . . . Evidence of the pecuniary condition of the accused in such a case [as this] is not offered to show that he was under a peculiar temptation to commit the offence, or was more likely to cheat or defraud because he was in embarrassed circumstances, but for the purpose of showing the natural and necessary consequences of his act which the law presumes he intended. . . . If at the time of the transaction he was deeply insolvent, and was cognizant of his condition, the necessary consequence of his act was to deprive the vendor of his property without recompense or the chance of payment, and leads to the just and almost unavoidable inference that it was done with an intent to defraud."

Nevertheless in cases of merely peculative crime (such as larceny or embezzlement), and in civil cases where the issue is whether the defendant borrowed money or not, the fact that he was in need of it at the time is decidedly relevant to show a probable desire to obtain it and therefore a probable borrowing or purloining; and there is here not the same objection from the standpoint of possible Unfair Prejudice: [6]

The following seems to belong here: 1911, Dougherty v. White, 2 Boyce, 25 Del. 316, 80 Atl. 137 (action for work and labor, amounting to $900, against a deceased's estate; that the plaintiff, at the time of the supposed credit, borrowed money on notes for the testator, admitted to disprove his claim).

[3] 1887, Buswell T. Co. v. Case, 144 Mass. 350, 11 N. E. 549 (lack of credit of M., admitted to show that of two orders by him the plaintiff accepted that of a conditional and not an absolute sale).

[4] 1862, Cook v. Mason, 5 All. Mass. 212 (writ of entry for land conveyed to the defendant in fraud of creditors; the defendant's bad pecuniary credit at the time of the transfer, admitted to show that it would not "have enabled him to get credit . . . if the sale had been in good faith"); 1875, Sweetser v. Bates, 117 Mass. 466, 468 (same; admitted to show that the grantor would not have conveyed "in good faith in sole reliance upon her [the grantee's] future ability to pay").

[5] Accord: 1896, Reynolds v. State, 147 Ind. 3, 46 N. E. 31 (robbery); 1863, Com. v. Jeffries, 7 All. Mass. 548, 559, 566 (in general; quoted supra); 1905, Com. v. Tucker, 189 Mass. 457, 76 N. E. 127 (Com. v. Jeffries approved).

Contra: 1845, Tawell's Trial, Eng., Woodall's Celebrated Trials, I, 188 (admitted; but the editor cites a contrary ruling at another trial shortly before). But when a defendant, under the principle of par. (b), infra, seeks to show that his possession of money deprived him of any motive for crime, the fact may of course be disproved by the prosecution; 1881, Fulmer v. Com., 97 Pa. 503 (larceny; the fact of lack of money, admitted for the prosecution to rebut the defendant's evidence that he had plenty of money).

[6] Accord: 1905, Dimmick v. U. S., 135 Fed. 257, 70 C. C. A. 141 (larceny by a clerk of the mint; that he was in debt while there, admitted); 1898, Bridges v. State, 103 Ga. 21, 29 S. E. 859 ("financial embarrassment" as tending to show a motive for embezzlement, 1849, BELL, J., in Stevenson v. Stewart, 11 Pa. 309 (admitting, in rebuttal of a defence of forgery to a note. the fact that about the time of the alleged date the defendant was trying to borrow money): "Among the most common topics of inquiry is the pecuniary capacity of the supposed lender, and the necessitous condition of the alleged borrower; and these inquiries are legitimate. It is surely competent for the defendant to show . . . that the defendant was himself possessed of money and therefore not driven to the necessity of using his credit. If so, why should not the plaintiff be at liberty to prove that about the critical time the defendant was seeking to borrow? Standing unsupported, neither line of evidence would be sufficient to rebut the adverse allegation; but yet all must feel that in a doubtful case the facts I have supposed to be made out by the defendant would go far in his favor."

(b) On the other hand, the fact that a person was in possession of money tends to negative his desire to obtain it by crime or by borrowing, and is always admissible, the foregoing objection not being here applicable.[7]

Two inferences, involving other principles, must be here distinguished: (a) The inference that A probably did not lend money to B because A had no money to lend; this is inferring that A did not do an act because he had not the Means or Capacity to do it (ante, § 89); (b) the inference that A probably took money because after the time alleged he had large sums while before it he had little or none; this is inferring an act from the Traces of it (ante, § 154).

(3) The market value of an article bought may be received to show the probable price agreed upon; because the actual value would move the buyer to wish to obtain it for not more than that amount, and hence a serious difference between the actual value and the price alleged by the vendor would admitted); 1877, Harvey v. Osborn, 55 Ind. 535, 545 (which of two persons, joint makers of a note, was the surety for the other; the debt of one to the other admitted as showing him to be the principal); 1882, Costello v. Crowell, 133 Mass. 352, semble (financial embarrassment of the alleged maker of a note, admissible to show the likelihood of borrowing, the genuineness being disputed; on the other hand, to explain away financial embarrassment as a circumstance indicating a probable borrowing from the plaintiff, the fact of the defendant's ability to borrow at two banks was not received; the latter ruling seems erroneous); 1853, Covanhovan v. Hart, 21 Pa. 495, 502 (deed alleged to be in fraud of creditors; to show that the defendant had really made the advance for which the deed was said to be given in payment, the fact was admitted of the grantor's need of money at the time); 1872, Com. v. Yerkes, Phila. Com. Pleas, 29 Leg. Intell. 60, 12 Cox Cr. 208, 217, 225 (larceny and false pretences, by obtaining a check without consideration; the fact was admitted "that at the time he was sorely pressed for money and therefore had the strongest motive to commit the larceny"; Finletter, J., diss.); 1892, Befay v. Wheeler, 84 Wis. 135, 140, 53 N. W. 1121 (larceny of cash in bank by a bookkeeper; his default to the bank and falsified accounts just prior, admitted to show motive).

[7] 1865, R. v. Grant, 4 F. & F. 322 (indictment for burning the defendant's own house in order to obtain the insurance; the fact admitted, for the defence, of the defendant's easy circumstances, prompt payment of bills, etc.; Pollock, C. B.: "Surely it was material to show that her circumstances were such as not to raise any temptation to the act"); 1851, Stauffer v. Young, 39 Pa. 455, 461, 462 (little need of money, admitted to negative the borrowing of a large amount); 1871, Chahoon's Case, 20 Gratt. Va. 733, 738, 791 (forgery of the signature of H. on a bond; H.'s good pecuniary condition, admitted to negative the probability of his borrowing); 1871, Sands' Case, ib. 800, 803, 821 (similar); 1905, State v. Moyer, 58 W. Va. 146, 52 S. E. 30 (embezzlement); 1898, Knopke v. Ins. Co., 99 Wis. 289, 74 N. W. 795 (evidence of a sum lost in a fire should be of a sum large enough to deter from arson to gain the insurance).

Contra: 1897, Reynolds v. State, 147 Ind. 3, 46 N. E. 31 (robbery; the defendant's possession of money, excluded, practically overruling Cavender v. State, 126 Ind. 50, 25 N. E. 875).

throw discredit on the latter's claim. In the same way, where the price is not an issue, but the specific article is, a serious difference between the value of the article in question and the concededly agreed price tends to support an allegation that the article in question is not the one agreed upon:

1841, PUTNAM, J., in Bradbury v. Dwight, 3 Metc. 31, 33: "The presumption which arises from the uniform conduct of men under a given state of facts enters essentially into almost every cause to be tried. Very few cases are established by positive proof. If the fact, alleged by one party and denied by the other, be unusual, unaccountable, and not warranted by the circumstances which attended the transaction, it will not be likely to obtain credit with the jury. If (to come home to the question) the wood, which was standing on the defendant's lot, was worth far more than $1.25 a cord — and we must now take the fact to be so — is it reasonable to suppose and presume that he would have sold it at that reduced price? . . . The [below] rejected evidence would indeed only raise a presumption,[8] which might be rebutted by some particular circumstances that might have operated upon the defendant to sell for less than the known value. But this would not affect the admissibility of the evidence."

It is usually said that this evidence is receivable where the price or the identity of the article is disputed, or where the other evidence is conflicting, or where there is no direct evidence. On the whole, however, this limitation seems unnecessary; for either it is superfluous, since the question never can arise unless there is a dispute, or else it is stating the result of other principles (post, § 2430) so far as it means that a written contract could not be varied by such parol evidence. [9]

[8] I.e. a mere inference.

[9] Federal: 1898, Jefferson v. Burhans, 29 C. C. A. 481, 85 Fed. 952 (agreement for commissions for services; question left undecided);
Alabama: 1901, Timothy v. State, 130 Ala. 68, 30 So. 339 (value of land, admitted to show the probable price agreed on);
Iowa: 1877, Johnson v. Harder, 45 Ia. 677, 679 (price of land sold; value admissible "where there is a conflict in the direct evidence"; it "should be admitted with great caution, and limited to its strictly legitimate province; the danger is that it will be used to affect the sympathy of the Court or jury to secure the release of an improvident party from the trade actually made");
Massachusetts: 1841, Bradbury v. Dwight, 3 Metc. 31 (the terms of a lost written contract for the sale of timber being in dispute, the value per cord was received to show the probable terms); 1862, Rennell v. Kimball, 5 All. 356, 365 (whether the vendor of a share in a ship had agreed to pay for repairs then making; the value of the vessel at the time, the condition of the repairs, etc., admitted "to show that the plaintiff [vendee] would not have been likely to give so high a price as he did unless the vessel were to be put in good repair without expense to him"); 1865, Parker v. Coburn, 10 All. 82, 84 (value of land sold; general principle affirmed); 1871, Upton v. Winchester, 106 Mass. 330 (same; value of oak plank sold); 1871, Brewer v. R. Co., 107 Mass. 277, 278 (dispute as to the kind and quality of wood bargained for; value of the kind of wood delivered, admitted to show, as compared with the price agreed on, that such a price would not have been promised for such wood); 1879, Norris v. Spofford, 127 Mass. 85 (same; dispute as to which of two horses was sold); 1900, Copeland v. R. Co., 177 Mass. 186, 58 N. E. 639 (principle applied);
Michigan: 1875, Campau v. Moran, 31 Mich. 281 (contract to put in piling for $200; upon an issue as to the kind of work called for, evidence of the greater cost of the kind claimed by the defendant was held relevant for that purpose, but not to show that the work was properly done according to contract); 1892, Baughart v. Hyde, 94 Mich. 49, 51, 53 N. W. 915 (sale of chattels; excess of value over the alleged price, admitted); 1897, Raymond v. Day, 111 Mich. 443, 69 N. W. 832 (insurance commissions; other pecuniary arrangements between the parties, admitted to show the probable price); 1897, Shakespeare v. Baughman, 113 Mich. 571, 71 N. W. 875 (legal services; value not admitted on the facts to show the probable price; the rule is not confined to uncorroborated parties' testimony; prior rulings in this State examined); 1900, Stevens v. Beardsley, 122 Mich. 671, 81 N. W. 921 (rental agreement in dispute; the depreciation of rent of other business houses, admitted, but not the rent paid by another tenant of the same owner for another house); 1901, Grabowsky v. Baumgart, 128 Mich. 267, 87 N. W. 891 (contract to buy stock; value admitted as evidence of the price agreed on);

(4) In sundry other ways, not calling for special doubt or discrimination, pecuniary circumstances may properly be admitted as evidencing a motive for some one's action.[10]

Minnesota: 1862, Kumler v. Ferguson, 7 Minn. 442, 445 (dispute as to the consideration for a conveyance; the value of the land at the time, received); 1875, Schwerin v. De Graff, 21 Minn. 354 (same principle; value of services in grading); 1875, Miller v. Lamb, 22 Minn. 43 (same principle; consideration of a conveyance); 1893, Saunders v. Gallagher, 53 Minn. 422, 55 N. W. 600 (same principle; services in sawing logs); 1894, Zelch v. Hirt, 59 Minn. 360, 362, 61 N. W. 20 (same principle; condition and value of a horse bought, to show the terms of payment);
Nebraska: 1896, Blomgren v. Anderson, 48 Nebr. 240, 67 N. W. 186 (contract of hiring, the compensation alleged by the defendant to be board and lodging only; the fact admitted of the plaintiff's being offered $1.25 a day, as showing that he would not be likely to make such a contract as the former); 1909, Landis & Schick v. Watts, 84 Nebr. 671, 121 N. W. 980 (value of services, here excluded, because of an account stated; Root, J., diss.);
New Hampshire: 1860, Swain v. Cheney, 41 N. H. 232, 234 (drawing lumber; "the common price for conveying that precise kind of lumber over the same road and at the same time", admitted); 1869, Moore v. Davis, 49 N. H. 45, 56 (preceding case approved);
New York: 1889, Weidner v. Phillips, 114 N. Y. 458, 461, 21 N. E. 1011 ("When the fact as to the [terms of the] agreement was in dispute, the real value was an element for the jury to consider in determining which version of the story was the correct one"; here, the sale of marble); 1889, Rubino v. Scott, 118 N. Y. 662, 22 N. E. 1103 (same; value of services as broker);
North Carolina: 1897, Short v. Yelverton, 121 N. C. 95, 28 S. E. 138 (action for goods sold; denial of any purchase; defendant introduced the alleged real purchaser as witness who stated the alleged price; plaintiff offered to prove that he paid as much as that when buying the goods, as showing improbability of selling at the same price; excluded, Clark, J., diss.; the dissent being clearly correct);
Ohio: 1871, Allison v. Horning, 22 Oh. St. 138, 142 (excess of value of work over the alleged price, admitted to show the probable price agreed on);
Pennsylvania: 1871, Rauch v. Scholl, 68 Pa. 234 ("It is not an unfair presumption that he was to receive no more than the market value of the stone under his contract");
Vermont: 1861, Kidder v. Smith, 34 Vt. 294 (market value of a mare, admitted to show the probable price); 1906, Green v. Dodge, 79 Vt. 73, 64 Atl. 499 (market value of a lease, admitted to show the terms agreed on); 1916, Lamonda v. Parizo, 90 Vt. 381, 98 Atl. 981 (amount promised for a farm; price at sale to a third person, etc., admitted);
Washington: 1901, Wheeler v. Buck, 23 Wash. 679, 63 Pac. 566 (whether a specific rate of commission for sales was agreed for; rate of commissions allowed by other merchants for similar goods to the same party, admitted); 1901, Dimmick v. Collins, 24 Wash. 78, 63 Pac. 1101 (work on harvesting a crop; the value and condition of the crop, admitted to show the probable price; "the law assumes that men make fair bargains"; good opinion by Mount, J.); 1901, Coey v. Darknell, 25 Wash. 518, 65 Pac. 760 (following Dimmick v. Collins); 1913, Ffolliott v. Lord, 76 Wash. 30[illegible], 136 Pac. 126 (contract for car rentals; market costs, etc., offered on the present principle, excluded; foregoing cases ignored; three judges diss.);
Wisconsin: 1883, Kvammen v. Mill Co., 58 Wis. 399, 17 N. W. 222 (lath-sawing; evidence of the usual price of services of a different kind, excluded; the general question not decided); 1888, Valley L. Co. v. Smith, 71 Wis. 304, 306, 37 N. W. 412 (value admitted to show contract-price); 1888, Bell v. Radford, 72 Wis. 402, 39 N. W. 482 (price agreed for horses, received, there being a dispute as to the price); 1893, Mygatt v. Tarbell, 85 Wis. 457, 467, 55 N. W. 1031 (same principle; value of shares of stock sold); 1907, Anderson v. Arpin H. L. Co., 131 Wis. 34, 110 N. W. 788 (services in piling lumber, etc.; good opinion by Marshall, J.); 1921, Kunitz v. Ruske, 173 Wis. 639, 182 N. W. 347 (work on a house; reasonable value, admitted, provided there is "a direct conflict as to the contract price");
Contra: 1887, Seibert v. Householder, Pa., 10 Atl. 784 (terms of a contract as to price; evidence of what others were charging, excluded).

For the admissibility of specific sales of other property, as evidence of the value of the property in question, see post, § 463.

[10] 1900, Tarbell v. Forbes, 177 Mass. 238, 58 N. E. 873 (whether a bequest to stepchildren was in a will as executed; the testatrix' inheritance of an estate from her father, not admitted to show the probability of her leaving it to brothers rather than stepchildren; chiefly because of multiplicity and confusion

§ 393. Legal Duty or Liability as creating a Motive. The existence of a legal duty or liability is often of more or less probative value to show a fulfilment of it, because of the motive for action (or non-action) which it may inspire. But the variety of duties and of their surrounding circumstances is such that no specific rules can be laid down.[1] So far as any definite rule exists for a limited class of cases, it takes the shape of the presumption that official duties and legal proceedings were duly fulfilled (post, § 2534); but even this presumption is of uncertain and intermittent force.

b. CONDUCT EXHIBITING AN EMOTION.

§ 394. General Principle. Every one of the human qualities or conditions with which the foregoing chapters have been concerned may be evidenced by conduct exhibiting it (ante, § 190). The interpretation of that conduct proceeds always from experience as to the inferences to be drawn from particular kinds of conduct. Questions of evidence rarely arise over such inferences, so far as the evidence of Emotions is concerned, probably because these interpretations are fairly plain and indubitable. Courts have done little more than enunciate the general relevancy of Conduct to show Emotion:

1850, SHAW, C. J., in Com. v. Webster, 5 Cush. 295, 316: "The ordinary feelings, passions, and propensities under which parties act, are facts known by observation and experience; and they are so uniform in their operation that a conclusion may be safely of issues); 1883, Bathrick v. Detroit Post, 50 Mich. 629, 633, 16 N. W. 172 (poverty of the woman as bearing on the probability of seduction, admitted); 1885, Gaston v. Merriam, 33 Mich. 271, 277, 22 N. W. 614 (whether a deed's record was correct; the fact that the grantor did not own the property described but did own other property noted in the "reception-book", admissible); 1920, Bank of Union v. Stack, 179 N. C. 514, 103 S. E. 6 (whether a note was delivered on condition of a release of mortgage by M.; the insolvency of M., admitted as bearing on the probability of such an agreement).

§ 393. [1] 1917, Re Fletcher, Reading v. Fletcher, 1 Ch. 147, 155 (merger of leasehold and reversion; Astbury, J.: "When it is proved that a person was interested in preventing a merger, or under a duty to do so, subsequent dealings may no doubt be taken into consideration"); 1898, Miller v. Dill, 149 Ind. 326, 49 N. E. 272 (general rumor of C.'s pregnancy, admitted, to show probability of defendant's execution of a note said to have been given in compromise of an action for slander by C. against defendant for declaring her pregnant); 1849, Boston v. Weymouth, 4 Cush. Mass. 538, 541 (settlement of a pauper; the mere assessment of a tax upon him held no evidence that he paid the tax); 1894, Tremblay v. Harnden, 162 Mass. 388, 38 N. E. 972 (injury at a machine; that a defendant was insured against accidents, not admissible to show that he would be less careful); 1911, Bock v. Wall, 207 Mass. 506, 93 N. E. 821 (whether a dam had been maintained at a height for 20 years; a deed of C. covenanting so to maintain it, admitted); 1921, Sanderson Co. v. Carroll, — Mass. —, 130 N. E. 81 (action for money due from a sub-contractor under B.; issue whether defendant's contract was with B. or with plaintiff; the fact that defendant had already paid the full amount to B., excluded; unsound); 1899, German-American Bank v. Stickle, 59 Nebr. 321, 80 N. W. 910 (genuineness of accommodation-note-signature disputed; the fact that the defendant had made a previous note, of which this was said to be a renewal, admitted as tending to show execution); 1896, Welch v. Ricker, 69 Vt. 239, 39 Atl. 200 (evidence that the defendant was jointly interested with I. in a farm, received to show the probability of an agreement to become jointly liable with I. for goods furnished the farm); 1907, Virginia-Carolina C. Co. v. Knight, 106 Va. 674, 56 S. E. 725 (defendant's insurance against accidents to employees, not admissible to show that he would be less careful).

Compare the cases cited post, §§ 949, 969. Religious or moral duty may also evidence a motive: 1918, Reynolds v. Maryland Casualty Co., 274 Mo. 83, 201 S. W. 1128 (issue of suicide; that the assured "was a believer in God, a member of the Episcopal Church, and active in its Sunday school work," admitted).

drawn that, if a party acts in a particular manner, he does so under the influence of a particular motive."

1854, SCOTT, J., in Austin v. State, 14 Ark. 560: "The jury were sitting in judgment upon an act which in point of law was to be essentially characterized by the motive of the heart which prompted it. These in the order of Providence are hidden and beyond the reach of human law, until developed by acts of commission or of omission which present them to its judgment in determining the quality of the act brought in question. Every act, then, of either class, which in the range of probability could cast a ray of light upon the motive which produced the homicide in question, was legitimately within the range of the investigation, although occurring at an antecedent time or at another place."

Occasionally, specific conduct is passed upon.[1] But the questions that arise in connection with conduct involve usually the principles of the ensuing topics; i.e. prior or subsequent conduct is offered as showing the emotion at that prior or subsequent time, and the then emotion is thus offered as showing emotion at the time in issue; the doubt or objection being not as to the first of the two inferences, but as to the second.

c. PRIOR AND SUBSEQUENT EMOTION.

§ 395. General Principle. Where an Emotion is offered as evidencing an Act (ante, § 117), it is offered as existing at the time of the act; e.g. that A killed B, is inferred as probable from A's desire at that time to kill B. Where A's emotion is in issue, as in the case of malice in defamation, it is also predicated as existing at a specific time; and this will usually be the case wherever Emotion enters, either evidentially or as in issue. Thus, the existence of the same Emotion at a prior or a subsequent time can enter only as evidential of its existence at the time in issue; and then is presented the question how far it is thus evidentially available. The nature of the inference, it will be seen, is distinct from those of the two preceding sorts (i.e. from extraneous circumstances tending to the excitement of the emotion, and from conduct exhibiting the inward inspiration for the conduct). Here the argument is from an emotional condition once existing to its subsequent or prior § 394. [1] 1846, R. v. Gandfield, 2 Cox Cr. 43 (to explain his conduct in not disclosing a burglary, the witness, claiming that he had been afraid, was allowed to state his directions to his wife not to tell; Erle, J.: "conversations that explain a man's conduct are admissible"); 1890, Wims v. State, 90 Ala. 623, 8 So. 566 (calling a vile name, admitted); 1858, Dunham's Appeal, 27 Conn. 192, 196 (the feelings between testatrix and her sisters being material, a declaration of a sister as to the testatrix, "She is too ugly to die yet", was admitted to show the sister's feelings); 1895, State v. Seymore, 94 Ia. 699, 63 N. W. 661 (that deceased and defendant were not on speaking terms, admitted); 1895, State v. Hutchison, 95 Ia. 566, 64 N. W. 612 (that defendant, charged with a rape assault, made faces at the child during the trial, admitted); 1886, State v. Baldwin, 36 Kan. 10, 12 Pac. 318 (a state of despondency or cheerfulness as bearing on the probability of suicide, admitted); 1885, State v. Goodwin, 37 La. An. 713 (maliciously sending a threatening letter; conduct showing a bona fide desire to give the receiver an opportunity to clear himself of the charge threatened to be made, admitted); 1869, Blake v. Damon, 103 Mass. 209 (the defendant's state of mind towards the plaintiff being material, the fact of insulting remarks to the plaintiff was admitted to show the defendant's state of mind); 1872, Blackburn v. State, 23 Oh. St. 146, 149, 165 (a melancholy disposition more than six years before, admitted to show suicide).

For a testator's conduct and expressions, as evidencing his state of affections and of susceptibility to influence, see post, § 1739.

For a witness' conduct and expressions, as evidencing his bias, see post, §§ 950–952.

prolongation. The peculiar opportunity for error here is that the prior existing emotion may have been brought to an end before the time in issue, and that the subsequent existing emotion may have been first produced since the time in issue.

Practically this inference is of course usually associated with two others in a way which may obscure the real evidential question. For example, to show that A struck his wife, the fact is offered that he beat her five years before; here three steps of inference are involved: (1) the beating five years before evidences a then violent emotion towards her; (2) the violent emotion five years ago evidences a continuance of the emotion to the time in issue; (3) the violent emotion at the time in issue evidences the operation of the emotion in the act of striking as charged. Now as to the first and the third of these inferences (i.e. the inferences dealt with ante, § 394, and ante, § 117) there is and can be no question; it is as to the second that a question may arise; and it is with that question that we are here concerned. The superficial circumstance that the inference is presented along with others should not prevent us from perceiving its nature however obscured.[1]

§ 396. Hostility in general; Feeling at other Times. Where an emotion of hostility at a specific time is to be shown, the existence in the same person of the same emotion at another time is in general plainly admissible.[1]

§ 395. [1] From the point of view of logic and psychology as applicable to argument before the jury (not the rules of Admissibility), see the materials collected in the present author's "Principles of Judicial Proof, as given by Logic, Psychology, and General Experience, and illustrated in Judicial Trials" (1913), §§ 101–115.

The use of subsequent emotion sometimes encounters a judicial doubt, as the ensuing citations reveal. This may be due to the crude catchwood, "Presumptions reach forward, not backward" (Averett v. Averett, 189 App. Div. 250, 178 N. Y. Suppl. 405). Where did this groundless formula arise?

§ 396. [1] The cases are as follows: CANADA: 1919, R. v. Law, 19 Man. 259 (anonymous libel: various acts of malicious mischief done by the accused to the libellee's family, not admitted to show ill-will as making probable the defendant's authorship); 1907, R. v. Sunfield, 15 Ont. L. R. 252 (murder).

UNITED STATES: Alabama: 1860, McManus v. State, 36 Ala. 285, 292 (expressions of hostility against the deceased, half an hour after the fatal blow, admitted to negative sudden passion); 1877, Faire v. State, 58 Ala. 74, 79 (murder; previous malice admissible); 1877, Commander v. State, 60 Ala. 1, 7 (murder; previous litigation between the parties, admitted); 1878, Hudson v. State, 61 Ala. 333, 337 (arson of a mill; previous quarrels and lawsuits about it, admitted to show motive); 1879, Gray v. State, 63 Ala. 66, 73 ("previous threats, previous altercations, or prior combats", between the parties, admitted to show ill-will at the time of the killing; but the fact only, not the details of the dispute); 1883, McAnally v. State, 74 Ala. 17 ("the fact of such difficulty, and its gravity on the contrary", admissible; its merits or the particulars, not; "the tendency would be to divert the minds of the jury . . . to the merits of the former quarrel"); 1884, Tesney v. State, 77 Ala. 33, 38 (the defendant's prior unwillingness to go to the place where the deceased was later met and killed, admitted); 1900, Longmire v. State, 130 Ala. 66, 30 So. 413 (after the State's improper examination into particulars of a prior difficulty, the defendant was allowed to show all the particulars in rebuttal); 1904, Spraggins v. State, 139 Ala. 93, 35 So. 1000 (prior declarations of the defendant, that he would not fight fair, admitted); 1904, Kroell v. State, 139 Ala. 1, 36 So. 1025 (particulars of a former difficulty allowed on redirect examination for the State, the defendant having gone into them on the cross-examination); 1904, Gordon v. State, 140 Ala. [illegible] 36 So. 1009 (murder; previous difficulties not admitted for the defendant); 1904, [illegible] State, 140 Ala. 52, 37 So. 159 (a difficulty with deceased before the killing, and the defendant's expressions of animus immediately after, admitted); 1904, Pitts v. State, 140 Ala. 70, 37 So. 101 (deceased's curses, in a prior difficulty, excluded, under the rule forbidding details); 1905, Dunn v. State, 143 Ala. 67, 39 So. 147 (particulars of a prior difficulty, excluded); 1905, Sanford v. State,

What that limit of time should be must depend largely on the circumstances of each case, and ought always to be left to the discretion of the trial Court;

1871, LOCHRANE, C. J., in Pound v. State, 43 Ga. 88, 133: "No general rule can be distinctly traced over this disputed ground of judicial controversy. All we may assert, within the principle recognized, is that there must be some link of association, something

143 Ala. 78, 39 So. 370 (prior difficulty of deceased with a third person; particulars admitted on the facts to show motive; but the particulars of a prior difficulty between deceased and defendant were excluded); 1906, Patterson v. State, 146 Ala. 39, 41 So. 157 (particulars of a prior difficulty, excluded); 1906, Stallworth v. State, 146 Ala. 8, 41 So. 184 (similar); 1906, Morris v. State, ib. 66, 41 So. 274 (murder; expressions of hostility, admitted); 1908, Robinson v. State, 155 Ala. 67, 45 So. 916 (after the State shows prior difficulties, the defendant cannot show their details); 1913, Smith v. State, 183 Ala. 10, 62 So. 864 (details of prior threats sometimes admissible; later expressions of defendant's hostility, admitted); 1915, Moss v. State, — Ala. —, 67 So. 367 (rule of Robinson v. State, applied); 1921, Thornton v. State, — Ala. App. —, 90 So. 66 (assault with intent; particulars of prior difficulties, not admitted for defendant);

Arkansas: 1855, Atkins v. State, 16 Ark. 568, 581 (prior expressions of malice against the deceased, admitted); 1889, Billings v. State, 52 Ark. 303, 306, 310, 12 S. W. 574 (a casual altercation with the deceased some years before, excluded as not connected);

California: 1905, Arnold's Estate, 147 Cal. 583, 82 Pac. 252 (hostility of a legatee charged with undue influence:

Connecticut: 1862, State v. Alford, 31 Conn. 40, 43 (assault and battery; defence that the collision was accidental; to disprove this, the fact was admitted that the defendant and her family, though living in the same apartment-house, did not afterwards visit or inquire after the assaulted person, who was confined to her bed); 1878, State v. Riggs, 39 Conn. 498, 501 (a hostile feeling on the part of the defendant, not admitted as showing that he was "more likely to be the author of the libel in question"); 1917, Verdi v. Donahue, 91 Conn. 448, 99 Atl. 1041 (malicious prosecution; subsequent conduct of defendant, admitted);

Florida: 1898, Rawlins v. State, 40 Fla. 155, 24 So. 65 (threats "within a period not too remote", admissible); 1903, Sylvester v. State, 46 Fla. 166, 35 So. 142 (merits of a quarrel between deceased and defendant, excluded);

Georgia: 1871, Pound v. State, 43 Ga. 88, 123, 133 (murder; the fact that the defendant once refused to speak to the deceased a few months before, excluded); 1897, Daniel v. State, 103 Ga. 202, 29 S. E. 767 (deceased's hostility at a remote time, not shown continuous, excluded); 1900, Horton v. State, 110 Ga. 739, 35 S. E. 659 (isolated quarrel about six years before, excluded); 1906, Graham v. State, 125 Ga. 48, 53 S. E. 816 (defendant's hostile language before and after the homicide, admitted); 1906, Green v. State, 125 Ga. 742, 54 S. E. 724 (wife-murder; acts of ill treatment to the wife, not too remote, admissible); 1921, Wilson v. State, — Ga. —, 110 S. E. 8 (murder; details of prior difficulties, admitted on the facts);

Illinois: 1880, Tracy v. People, 97 Ill. 104 (to show that a person's entry into premises was not to avenge an insult, the fact admitted of his friendly presence there shortly before);

Iowa: 1878, State v. Westfall, 49 Ia. 328 (murder; the issue being who was the aggressor, the fact that one party had often tried to avoid quarrelling was admitted); 1880, State v. Moelchen, 53 Ia. 310, 314, 5 N. W. 186 (homicide; a quarrel received);

Kansas: 1893, State v. Sortor, 52 Kan. 531, 34 Pac. 1036 (prior quarrels admitted, but not the details);

Kentucky: 1895, Com. v. Gray, — Ky. —, 30 S. W. 1015 (murder; the deceased and the defendant had compromised a quarrel, and then the quarrel had broken out again; the details of the compromise received to see "which party was in the right and which in the wrong" in the quarrel; unsound); 1896, Tuttle v. Com., — Ky. —, 33 S. W. 823 (expressions of ill-will to the deceased seven months before; admitted); 1920, Morgan v. Com., 188 Ky. 458, 222 S. W. 940 (homicide; prior violence between the parties admitted); 1922, Frazier v. Com., 194 Ky. 240, 238 S. W. 769 (homicide; details of previous difficulties not admissible for the accused);

Louisiana: 1854, State v. D'Angelo, 9 La. An. 46 (murder; former quarrels received); 1856, State v. Jackson, 12 La. An. 679 (same); 1880, State v. Cooper, 32 La. An. 1084 (same; particulars may be shown to explain away malice); 1882, State v. McNeely, 34 La. An. 1022 (same; but here previous threats and the dangerous character of the deceased were admitted); 1884, State v. Birdwell, 36 La. An. 859, 861 (same);

Maine: 1906, Lenfest v. Robbins, 101 Me. 176, 63 Atl. 729 (trespass for assault; the defendant allowed to explain that the hostility "was not on his side");

Massachusetts: 1852, Com. v. Vaughan, 9 Cush. 594 (to show a motive for burning a barn, the fact was received that the same person had before begun a criminal prosecution against the owner; but no counter-explana-which draws together the preceding and subsequent acts, something which presents cause and effect in the transaction. . . . As if A, jealous of his wife, finds B with her, and forbids him speaking to her, and afterward meets B and her together, though weeks and even months have elapsed, the previous difficulty, though slight, would be proper evidence to go to the jury in case of homicide. But if A afterwards met B, and upon a new cause of quarrel, distinctly separate from the first, the difficulty sprang up, the acts relative to the first ought to be excluded as not throwing light upon the homicide, and the fact of unfriendly feelings existing is all which would be permitted."

tion of probable cause was allowed, since the fact of ill-will, and not its propriety, was alone involved); 1892, Com. v. Holmes, 157 Mass. 240, 32 N. E. 6 (hatred towards a murdered person; time of the former hatred to be in the discretion of the trial Court); 1901, Com. v. Storti, 177 Mass. 339, 58 N. E. 1021 (quarrel two years before in Italy, admitted on the facts);

Michigan: 1871, Josselyn v. McAllister, 22 Mich. 300, 304 (malicious prosecution; anger of the defendant when arrested in the present suit, not admitted, to show malice in the former suit by him); 1871, Druce v. Wheeler, 22 Mich. 439, 444 (trespass; other conduct showing malice, admissible as affecting damages); 1896, Tyler v. Nelson, 109 Mich. 37, 66 N. W. 671 (ill-feeling by defendant, as showing whether his collision with plaintiff was negligent or not; admitted);

Mississippi: 1904, Schrader v. State, 84 Miss. 593, 36 So. 385 (murder of C.; a prior quarrel between C. and A., a friend of the defendant, admitted); 1904, Thompson v. State, 84 Miss. 758, 36 So. 389 (murder; prior difficulties, etc., excluded on the facts); 1905, Brown (Tom) v. State, 85 Miss. 511, 37 So. 957 ("where the State itself introduces the previous difficulty, the defendant should be permitted to show the details and character of such difficulty", — in this case, "in order to show who was the aggressor in the difficulty resulting in the killing"); 1906, Brown (Tom) v. State, 88 Miss. 166, 40 So. 737 (same case; held by the majority, per Calhoun, J., that "the nature and character of previous difficulties" is admissible for the accused, even when the State does not first introduce the subject, on the theory of uncommunicated threats, ante, § 111; the trial Court is rebuked for not following "the plain statement" in the former opinion; but the truth is that the trial Court did follow it literally, and that the Supreme Court itself is in error in confusing the principle and precedents for uncommunicated threats of the deceased, ante, § 111, with the present principle; the opinion of Whitfield, C. J., specially concurring, takes the correct ground, and admits the details of the prior quarrel "so far as essential to show the common motive"); 1905, Hughes v. State, — Miss. —, 38 So. 33 (details of a prior quarrel not connected with the present affray, not admitted for the defendant; preceding authorities not cited); 1906, Brown (Leora) v. State, 87 Miss. 800, 40 So. 1009 (homicide; another difficulty between the families of the parties thirty minutes before, admitted; following Brown (Tom) v. State, supra);

Missouri: 1899, State v. Hudspeth, 150 Mo. 12, 51 S. W. 483 (murder; plea of self-defence; defendant's efforts to secure a peaceable settlement of the quarrel, excluded);

Nebraska: 1920, Schreiner v. Hutter, 104 Nebr. 539, 177 N. W. 826 (action for abuse of process; former utterances of ill-will, admitted to show bad faith);

Oklahoma: 1904, Wells v. Terr., 14 Okl. 436, 78 Pac. 124 (former difficulty, admitted to show malice of defendant); 1906, McHugh v. Terr., 17 Okl. 1, 86 Pac. 433 (assault with intent to kill; details of a prior difficulty, admitted for the defendant on the facts);

Oregon: 1874, State v. Garrand, 5 Or. 216 (defendant's threats to shoot a witness, just after the affray, for inquiring what was the matter, admitted to show malice; 1906, State v. Martin, 47 Or. 282, 83 Pac. 849 (killing of the father of a girl M.; prior difficulty with the deceased, over the seduction of M. by defendant, admitted);

South Carolina: 1904, State v. Adams, 68 S. C. 421, 47 S. E. 676 (prior difficulty admitted, but not the details); 1905, State v. Thrailkill, 71 S. C. 136, 50 S. E. 551 (details of a quarrel, just preceding, with a third person, admitted for the State);

Tennessee: 1899, Fitts v. State, 102 Tenn. 141, 50 S. W. 756 (accused's expressions after the killing, admitted);

Texas: 1898, Holley v. State, 39 Tex. Cr. 301, 46 S. W. 39 (former animosity, admissible, and the language expressing it, but not details of quarrels); 1921, Medford v. State, 89 Tex. Cr. 1, 229 S. W. 504 (murder; prior quarrels admitted;

Washington: 1905, State v. Armstrong, 37 Wash. 51, 79 Pac. 490 (details of prior quarrels admitted for the State in rebuttal of similar evidence for the accused);

West Virginia: 1901, State v. Sheppard, 49 W. Va. 582, 39 S. E. 676 (defendant's expression of feelings towards deceased, after arrest, held admissible).

Subsequent hostility is equally receivable;[2] that it arose only subsequently is matter for explanation by the opponent. The details of the conduct evidencing the hostility of a defendant should not ordinarily be gone into; they are irrelevant, even if they show that the hostility was justifiable, and they may, if offered against a defendant, cause unfair prejudice.[3] A friendly feeling at another time is equally receivable.[4] No further generalization of rules seems feasible.

Distinguish here certain other uses of similar evidence; in particular (1) former threats of a defendant as involving a Design to injure (ante, § 105); (2) former threats of a deceased as involving a Design to injure (ante, § 110) or as creating a Belief in probable aggression (ante, § 247); (3) previous prosecution or litigation as creating a Motive for injury (ante, § 390); and (4) former assaults to show Intent (ante, § 363); (5) former hostility of a witness to show Bias (post, § 951); (6) the application of the Hearsay rule to an accused's expressions of regret or explanation, see (post, § 1732); and (7) the use of prior assaults to show intent (ante, §§ 363, 364).

§ 397. Same: Hostility to Wife or Paramour. The precedents dealing with instances of hostility to a wife or a paramour form a numerous group by themselves, though the principle and its application are precisely the same as in the foregoing general instances.[1] The limit of time over which the evidence

[2] Ala., Conn., Or. 1922, Kane v. Oehler, — Mont. —, 205 Pac. 245 (malice of one converting a fence; subsequent conduct admitted).

[3] Ala., Mass.; but La. is contra. Compare the citations post, §§ 951, 952 (details of a quarrel, in impeaching a witness).

But the details of prior quarrels as showing the hostility of the deceased, on a charge of homicide, are not open to the same objection, and may be received on the principle stated in the opinion of Whitfield, C. J., in Brown v. State, Miss., cited supra, n. 1.

[4] Ill., Ia.

§ 397. [1] The cases are as follows: Federal: 1895, Thiede v. Utah, 159 U. S. 510, 16 Sup. 62 (wife-murder; the fact admitted of the wife having been seen at various times with black eyes, bruises, tears, etc.);
Alabama: 1850, Baalam v. State, 17 Ala. 451, 453 (wife-murder: that the deceased and the defendant had quarrelled and separated about a year before, admitted); 1850, Johnson v. State, 17 Ala. 626 (wife-murder: cruelty to her by the defendant for a time previous, admitted);
California: 1882, People v. Kern, 61 Cal. 244 (violent domestic conduct a month before, admitted); 1898, People v. Barthleman, 120 Cal. 7, 52 Pac. 112 (defendant's hostile expressions, received); 1898, People v. Chaves, 122 Cal. 134, 54 Pac. 596 (prior violence, admitted);
Connecticut: 1834, Austin v. Austin, 10 Conn. 221 (divorce for adultery; defence, a luring and connivance by her husband; his relation to her being in itself some evidence against this, the wife offered evidence of his repeated unkindness to her; rejected, as not relevant);
1868, State v. Green, 35 Conn. 203, 208 (wife-murder; the defendant's marrying again within five weeks after the death, admitted as showing his feelings toward the deceased at the time of her death);
Georgia: 1878, Shaw v. State, 60 Ga. 249, 250 (wife-murder; former quarrels between the parties, admitted); 1905, Roberts v. State, 123 Ga. 146, 51 S. E. 374 ("a long course of ill-treatment and cruelty", admitted); 1905, Campbell v. State, 123 Ga. 533, 51 S. E. 644 (husband-murder; the wife's prior expressions of ill-feeling, held admissible);
Illinois: 1893, Painter v. People, 147 Ill. 463, 35 N. E. 64 (murder of a paramour; former quarrels admitted); 1905, Parsons v. People, 218 Ill. 386, 75 N. E. 993 (wife-murder; prior quarrels, disagreements, and expressions of ill-feeling, admitted); 1919, People v. Laures, 289 Ill. 490, 124 N. E. 585 (murder of lover of fiancée; former and present marital relations of defendant, admitted to show motive);
Indiana: 1883, Doolittle v. State, 93 Ind. 272, 274 (assault and battery on a wife; previous ill-feeling between them, admitted); 1884, Koerner v. State, 98 Ind. 7, 10, 24 (same; previous quarrels, beatings, and threats during several years, admitted to show malice);
Iowa: 1895, Bailey v. Bailey, 94 Ia. 598, 63 N. W. 341 (prior quarrels, between husband and wife, admitted, to diminish damages in an action for alienation of affections); may range depends much on the circumstances of each case, and no fixed rule can be laid down:

1851, NASH, J., in State v. Rash, 12 Ired. 382, 384 (wife-murder): "On behalf of the prisoner it is said that the State was permitted to go too far back for its facts, and by that means the general ch racter of the prisoner was brought before the jury to speak against him. Not so. In the domestic relation, the malice of one of the parties is rarely to be proved but from a series of acts; and the longer they have existed and the greater the number of them, the more powerful they are to show the state of the feelings. A single expression and a single act of violence are most frequently the result of temporary passion, as evanescent as the cause producing them. But a long-continued course of brutal conduct shows a settled state of feeling inimical to the object."

1881, COLT, J., in Com. v. Abbott, 130 Mass. 472 (the fact of a husband's bad treatment of his wife and quarrels with her from 1873 to 1877, to show a motive for killing her in 1880, the two having lived together in the meantime, was excluded): "It is difficult, in dealing with this description of evidence, to define as matter of law, the precise limits which must practically control its admission. . . . [It was proper] to prove such a state of ill-feeling on the part of the husband, existing at the time of the homicide, as would

Kansas: 1908, State v. Moore, 77 Kan. 736, 95 Pac. 409 (wife-murder; former cruelty and brutality, extending over seven years, excluded, but too strictly);
Louisiana: 1912, State v. Simon, 131 La. 520, 59 So. 975 (wife-murder, prior violent acts of defendant admitted);
Massachusetts: 1881, Com. v. Abbott, 130 Mass. 472 (quoted supra); 1892, Com. v. Holmes, 157 Mass. 233, 239, 32 N. E. 6 (wife-murder; a course of violent conduct at various times during eight or nine years, admitted; an interval of cessation, or even of reconciliation, does not necessarily exclude the preceding conduct); 1919, Com. v. Russ, 232 Mass. 50, 122 N. E. 176 (wife-murder);
Mississippi: 1902, Raines v. State, 81 Miss. 489, 33 So. 19 (acts and words of violence, extending over the previous ten years, excluded; grossly erroneous);
Missouri: 1879, State v. Nugent, 71 Mo. 136, 140 (maltreatment of the wife, for the preceding two months, by cutting, shooting, and threatening her, admitted to show deliberateness and malice) 1900, State v. Callaway, 154 Mo. 91, 55 S. W. 444 (murder; former violence, admitted); 1908, State v. Page, 212 Mo. 224, 110 S. W. 1057 (murder; deceased's wife as paramour); 1908, State v. McNamara, 212 Mo. 150, 110 S. W. 1067 (wife-murder; lust for another woman); 1911, State v. Whitsett, 232 Mo. 511, 134 S. W. 555 (threat two years before, admitted); 1916, State v. Shoemaker, — Mo. —, 183 S. W. 322 (husband-murder), Nevada: 1896, Gardner v. Gardner, 23 Nev. 207, 45 Pac. 139 (divorce; husband's cruelty after suit begun, admitted to throw light on his previous acts);
New Jersey: 1913, State v. Overton, 85 N. J. L. 287, 88 Atl. 689 (murder of paramour and child; defendant's expressions eight months before, admitted);
New Mexico: 1905, Miera v. Terr., 13 N. M. 192, 81 Pac. 586 (paramour-murder; a threat of three years before, admitted);
New York: 1899, People v. Bernham, 160 N. Y. 402, 55 N. E. 11 (wife-murder; quarrels two years before, admitted); 1913, People v. Harris, 209 N. Y. 70, 102 N. E. 546 (husband's intimacy with a prostitute, during separation from his wife, not admitted on the facts, on his trial for the killing of the wife);
North Carolina: 1853, State v. Langford, Busbee 436, 442 (domestic quarrels, admitted); 1851, State v. Rash, 12 Ired. 382 (wife-murder; a long course of ill-treatment, admitted to show hostile feeling); 1912, State v. Wilkins, 158 N. C. 603, 73 S. E. 992 (wife-murder; prior quarrels, admitted);
Pennsylvania: 1879, Sayres v. Com., 88 Pa. 291, 292, 303, 309 (wife-murder by shooting; to show ill-feeling and malice, evidence admitted that the defendant had thrown her down stairs two years before); 1900, Com. v. Birriolo, 197 Pa. 371, 47 Atl. 355 (former violence, admitted); 1921, Com. v. Jones, 269 Pa. 589, 113 Atl. 57 (wife-murder; defendant's prior quarrels and threats, admitted; "the length of time intervening . . . does not affect the relevancy of the testimony");
Texas: 1919, Bibb v. State, 86 Tex. Cr. App. 112, 215 S. W. 321 (character of defendant's wife 8 years before, admitted, the issue being as to defendant's motive in attacking an alleged seducer);
Virginia: 1901, O'Boyle v. Com., 100 Va. 785, 40 S. E. 121 (murder of a paramour; defendant's violence to her in the preceding year, admitted);
Wisconsin: 1884, Boyle v. State, 61 Wis. 440, 444, 21 N. W. 289 (wife-murder; previous acts of abuse admitted, to "show that his disposition carried him at times to . . . personal violence upon her").

furnish him with a motive for the commission of the crime. But the difficulty is that the ill-feeling here offered to be shown was not of such a character as to afford a reasonable ground for the inference that it existed at the time of the murder. . . . The whole evidence fails to show such deeply seated and enduring hostility on the part of the husband as to lead to the presumption that without further manifestation and under the concealment of kindly relations, it continued to exist and so increase in power as to furnish a motive for the commission of the crime."

Here also, subsequent as well as prior emotion is receivable;[2] and the evidence has application occasionally in civil as well as in criminal cases.[3] No more detailed generalizations present themselves.

Distinguish the use of prior assaults to evidence Intent (ante, §§ 363, 364).

§ 398. Sexual Passion at other Times. The prior or subsequent existence of a sexual passion in A for B is relevant, on the same principle and to the same extent as in the foregoing topics, to show its existence at the time in issue. The circumstance that the prior or subsequent conduct exhibiting the passion is criminal does not alter the case nor affect the admissibility of the evidence (ante, § 216). But the different ways in which this evidence may be employed need to be discriminated, so that the present principle in its operation may not be confounded with others having different limitations. The precedents may be divided into three groups: (1) cases involving Adultery, Bigamy, Fornication, Criminal Conversation, Sodomy, Indecent Liberties and Incest; (2) cases involving Seduction, Bastardy, and Breach of Promise of Marriage; (3) cases involving Rape, and (4) cases involving carnal knowledge under the age of consent ("Statutory Rape").[1]

[2] Conn., Nev.

[3] Ia., Nev.

For the principle that the criminality of conduct showing motive is no objection, see ante, §§ 216, 305, 363.

§ 398. [1] The precedents are as follows, and will be dealt with in detail in the ensuing sections: 1. Adultery, Bigamy, Criminal Conversation, Fornication, Incest, Indecent Liberties, Sodomy (the issue is adultery, where not otherwise stated); ENGLAND; 1692, Duke of Norfolk v. Germaine, 12 How. St. Tr. 943 (crim. con.; at the end of the plaintiff's evidence, L. C. J. Holt: "Do you observe what you have proved? . . . You have not proved any lascivious conversation within these six years." Sol.-Gen.: "Pray, my lord, if your lordship pleases, this is the use we make in giving in evidence some things before, — to show the fact within the six years, their frequent meeting in a lascivious manner; and we make use of that before the sixth year to explain what use we make of it in matters done within the six years." L. C. J.: "For my part, I must declare, that these matters may be given in evidence to explain, but they are not to be given in evidence to any other purpose [i.e. damages]"; 1861, Boddy v. Boddy, 30 L. J. P. M. A. 23 (subsequent living together as showing previous adulterous inclination, admitted); 1900, Wales v. Wales, Prob. 63 (divorce for adultery; cohabitation subsequent to the date of the petition, admitted); 1910, Allen's Case, 4 Cr. App. 181 (incest in Nov. 1909; other incestuous acts between March and November, admitted); 1910, Ball's Case, 5 Cr. App. 238 (incest in 1910; incestuous acts in 1907, 1908, and 1909, excluded; "such evidence can only be receivable to show the mens rea in the doing of an act": the opinion ignores the distinction between moral character and specific incestuous passion); on appeal to the House of Lords, [1911] 1 K. B. 461, 6 Cr. App. 31, [1911] A. C. 47 (appeal allowed; evidence admitted, L. C. Loreburn pointing out the correct distinction); 1910, Ball's Case, 6 Cr. App. 89 (incest in December, 1909; incestuous acts some weeks later, admitted); 1913, Bloodworth's Case, 9 Cr. App. 80 (incest in 1912; intercourse in July, 1910, admitted); 1913, Barrow's case, 9 Cr. App. 236 (sodomy on July 18; sodomy on June 6 with the same boy, not admitted, because of insufficient evidence of the earlier act).

UNITED STATES: Alabama: 1848, State v. Crowley, 13 Ala. 172 (intercourse 18 months afterwards, excluded, as not fairly indicating prior relations; "what are such circumstances [of inference] cannot be laid down universally"); 1852, Lawson v. Swinney, 20 Ala. 65, 75 (intercourse before the statutory bar and after the date of the indictment, admitted as on the facts sufficiently connected in time); 1860, McLeod v. State, 35 Ala. 395, 397 (familiarities before the statutory period, admitted); 1875, Alsabrooks v. State, 52 Ala. 24 (familiarities since the indictment; admissible, after other evidence offered as to the time charged); 1903, Hill v. State, 137 Ala. 66, 34 So. 406 (adultery; other intercourse before and after, admitted, if an act is otherwise evidenced within the period charged); 1903, Bickley v. Bickley, 136 Ala. 548, 34 So. 946 (divorce for adultery; illicit relations not long before marriage, admitted); 1917, Herbert v. State, 16 Ala. App. 213, 201 Ala. 480, 77 So. 83, 78 So. 386 (seduction; intercourse subsequent to the date charged, admitted; held not error, in the Court of Appends, distinguishing Pope v. State, 137 Ala. 56; held error, in the Supreme Court following Pope v. State; but Pope v. State should have been repudiated);

Arkansas: 1906, Adams v. State, 78 Ark. 16, 92 S. W. 1123 (incest; prior intercourse, beyond the period of limitations, admitted);

California: 1894, People v. Patterson, 102 Cal. 239, 244, 36 Pac. 436 (incest; prior intercourse for several years, admissible); 1904, People v. Stratton, 141 Cal. 604, 75 Pac. 166 (incest; like People v. Patterson, supra, but the Court's opinion forgets to cite it); 1904, People v. Koller, 142 Cal. 621, 76 Pac. 500 (incest; subsequent and prior acts of intercourse or improper familiarity, admissible; "the only case in this State which has been called to our attention" is People v. Stratton, supra); 1906, People v. Morris, 3 Cal. App. 1, 84 Pac. 463 (preceding case followed); 1910, People v. Harrison, 14 Cal. App. 545, 112 Pac. 733 (sodomy; a series of former acts between the same parties, admitted);

Columbia: (Dist.): 1906, Dodge v. Rush, 28 D. C. App. 149, 156 (crim. con.; prior conduct, admitted);

Florida: 1886, Brevaldo v. State, 21 Fla. 789, 795 (prior adultery admissible, provided some other evidence of adultery within the time charged is first offered),

Georgia: 1897, Bass v. State, 103 Ga. 227, 29 S. E. 966 (fornication; former lascivious familiarities, within "a comparatively recent period", admitted), 1900, Taylor v. State, 110 Ga. 150, 35 S. E. 161 (incest; intercourse previous to the statutory period, admissible), 1906, Lipham v. State, 125 Ga. 52, 53 S. E. 817 (incest, prior intercourse in another county and another State, admitted); 1906, Nobles v. State, 127 Ga. 212, 56 S. E. 125 (adultery, improper conduct in another county, admitted),

Hawaii: 1896, Republic v. Waipa, 10 Haw. 442, 445 (adultery; act of intercourse before the date charged, admitted to show their relations);

Illinois: 1897, Crane v. People, 168 Ill. 295, 48 N. E. 54 (adultery; prior and subsequent acts of improper familiarity and adultery, in another county, receivable, even before evidence of the substantive act is offered); 1913, People v. Turner, 260 Ill. 84, 102 N. E. 1036 (incest; prior acts, covering a period of 4½ years, beyond the statute of limitations, admitted);

Indiana: 1859, Lovell v. State, 12 Ind. 18 (incest; subsequent intercourse, excluded as irrelevant); 1884, State v. Markins, 95 Ind. 464 (incest; prior intercourse, as well as lascivious behavior, admitted, distinguishing the preceding case as involving merely subsequent conduct, and yet approving Thayer v. Thayer, Mass., which admits both); 1894, Lefforge v. State, 129 Ind. 551, 29 N. E. 34 (incest; prior acts of familiarity, admitted);

Iowa: 1886, State v. Briggs, 68 Ia. 416, 423, 27 N. W. 358 ("the fact that the parties had the disposition, and on previous occasions had been guilty of acts of intercourse, was of the highest importance in determining whether they did indulge at that time [charged]"); 1897, State v. Hurd, 101 Ia. 391, 70 N. W. 613 (incest; former acts of intercourse admitted); 1901, State v. More, 115 Ia. 178, 88 N. W. 322 (adultery; subsequent undue familiarities, admitted); 1906, State v. Judd, 132 Ia. 296, 109 N. W. 892 (incest; prior acts admitted); 1909, State v. Brown, — Ia. —, 121 N. W. 513 (adultery; adulterous relations up to the time of the indictment, admitted); 1912, State v. Heft, 155 Ia. 21, 134 N. W. 950 (incest; prior acts, admissible; subsequent acts, not decided); 1917, State v. Pelser, 182 Ia. 1, 163 N. W. 600 (incest; subsequent acts, admitted);

Kansas: 1914, State v. Ball, 93 Kan. 606, 144 Pac. 1012 (concubinage; the parties' cohabitation some seven years before, admitted;

Kentucky: 1901, Smith v. Com., 109 Ky. 685, 60 S. W. 531 (incest; similar act within a few months, admitted); 1908, Robards v. Robards, — Ky. —, 109 S. W. 422 (divorce for adultery; other acts prior and subsequent, admissible);

Louisiana: 1903, State v. DeHart, 109 La. 570, 33 So. 605 (incest; prior acts admitted), Maine: 1881, State v. Witham, 72 Me. 531, 534 (adulterous intercourse before and after the time charged; admitted in discretion);

Maryland: 1898, Shufeldt v. Shufeldt, 86 Md. 519, 39 Atl. 416 (prior undue intimacy, received), 1917, Wagner v. Wagner, 130 Md. 346, 100 Atl. 364 (divorce for adultery; subsequent adultery here admitted to remove defense of condonation);

Massachusetts: 1833, Com. v. Merriam, 14 Pick. 518 (former improper relations with the defendant, admitted; "a woman who would so conduct herself would be more likely to commit the fact alleged against her than if her deportment had been modest and discreet"); 1854, Com. v. Horton, 2 Gray 355 (subsequent adultery with the same person in another county, excluded; no clear reason given); 1858, Com. v. Thrasher, 11 Gray 450

(adultery; prior acts for adultery and improper familiarity, admitted, "with the purpose of showing a disposition in the parties to commit such a crime and as bearing on the probability of its commission on the occasions alleged"; but subsequent acts rejected on the authority of Com. v. Horton); 1858, Com. v. Pierce, 11 Gray 447 (like Com. v. Thrasher); 1859, Com. v. Lahey, 14 Gray 92 (attempting to distinguish Com. v. Horton, 2 Gray 354, and following Com. v. Merriam); 1867, Com. v. Curtis, 97 Mass. 574 (prior and subsequent acts of sexual intimacy admitted, to show the adultery); 1869, Thayer v. Thayer, 101 Mass. 111 (divorce for adultery; adultery between the parties since the date of the libel, admitted; overruling Com. v. Thrasher and Com. v. Horton on this point; quoted post); 1873, Com. v. Nichols, 114 Mass. 288 (adultery in another county, admitted); 1888, Brooks v. Brooks, 145 Mass. 574, 14 N. E. 777 (divorce for adultery; indecent familiarities and sexual intercourse with the third person before marriage admitted as "tending to prove sexual intimacy with the same person" after marriage);
Michigan: 1858, People v. Jenness, 5 Mich. 305, 319 (incest; other acts of sexual intercourse and of familiarity, for five years preceding, admitted); 1881, People v. Carrier, 46 Mich. 442, 446, 9 N. W. 487 (enticement of a minor for prostitution, etc.; former illicit relations of the defendant with her admitted); 1893, People v. Skutt, 96 Mich. 449, 450, 56 N. W. 11 (incest; prior intercourse during eight years, admitted); 1900, Matthews v. Detroit J. Co., 123 Mich. 608, 82 N. W. 243 (improper conduct three months later, admitted); 1911, Merrill v. Leisenring, 166 Mich. 219, 131 N. W. 538 (alienation of affections; the parties' relations after suit begun, admitted); 1913, People v. Davis, 175 Mich. 594, 141 N. W. 667 (adultery; subsequent acts, excluded; ignoring Matthews v. Detroit Co.); 1920, People v. Luce, 210 Mich. 621, 178 N. W. 54 (indecent liberties; evidence of a similar offence with another child, not allowed to be shown in contradiction of defendant's denial on cross-examination); see the comments below, IV. Rape under Age, on People v. Brown, Mich., and People v. Palmberg, Mo.);
Missouri: 1907, State v. Pruitt, 202 Mo. 49, 100 S. W. 431 (incest; prior acts of intercourse and lascivious familiarity, admissible);
Nebraska: 1877, State v. Way, 5 Nebr. 283 (improper familiarities before and after the time charged, admissible); 1909, Peterson v. State, 84 Nebr. 76, 120 N. W. 1110 (incest; former acts here excluded, being offered by hearsay only);
New Hampshire: State v. Wallace, 9 N. H. 515 (previous improper conduct admitted, but treated rather as indicating a design); 1857, State v. Marvin, 35 N. H. 22, 28 (same); 1899, Burns v. Burns, 68 N. H. 33, 44 Atl. 75 (prior acts of familiarity, etc., admitted, 1909, Hoxie v. Walker, 75 N. H. 308, 74 Atl. 183 (alienation of affections of plaintiff's husband; defendant's hostile conduct to the husband two months after suit brought, held not improperly admitted in discretion);
New Jersey: 1899, State v. Snover, 64 N. J. L. 65, 44 Atl. 850 (adultery in another county, admitted); 1900, State v. Jackson, 65 N. J. L. 62, 46 Atl. 767 (other acts of adultery, admitted); 1900, State v. Snover, 65 N. J. L. 289, 47 Atl. 583 (prior adultery in another county, admitted); 1915, State v. Ruttberg, 87 N. J. L. 5, 93 Atl. 97 (fornication; acts of intercourse by defendant with another woman, excluded);
New Mexico: 1902, U. S. v. Griego, 11 N. M. 392, 72 Pac. 20 (adultery; conduct four years before, admitted);
New York: 1845, Lockyer v. Lockyer, 1 Edm. Sel. C. 108 (other improprieties, admitted); 1859, Stephens v. People, 19 N. Y. 549, 571 (wife-murder; the defendant's improper attachment to a third person being alleged as a motive, evidence of his feelings towards her nearly a year after the wife's death, admitted; "love and jealousy are generally conceded to be enduring passions"); 1922, Tuttle v. Tuttle, — N. Y. Sup. —, 191 N. Y. Suppl. 769 (divorce for adultery; subsequent relations of co-respondent with defendant, excluded);
North Carolina: 1882, State v. Kemp, 87 N. C. 538 (habitual illicit relations of the same persons more than two years before, admitted, as "shedding light upon the present relations if kept up"); 1883, State v. Pippin, 88 N. C. 646 (same); 1897, State v. Raby, 121 N. C. 682, 28 S. E. 490 ("facts that transpired since the finding of the indictment", admitted); 1899, State v. Beard, 124 N. C. 811, 32 S. E. 804 (fornication and adultery; other intercourse in another county, admitted);
Ohio: 1914, State v. Reineke, Oh., 106 N. E. 52 (incest; subsequent incestuous acts, admissible; distinguishing Rason v. State, unreported, which excluded such evidence in rape);
Oregon: 1904, State v. Eggleston, 45 Or. 346, 77 Pac. 738 (adultery; intercourse between the parties at other prior times, admitted);
Pennsylvania: 1799, Gardner v. Madeira, 2 Yeates 466 (crim. con.; admitting indecent conduct, etc., provided first some direct evidence is offered of the acts charged at the times specified); 1867, Sherwood v. Titman, 55 Pa. 77, 79 (crim. con.; improper intimacy between the defendant and the plaintiff's wife after the latter had left him, admitted, on the same principle as in Gardner v. Madeira); 1895, Com. v. Bell, 166 Pa. 405, 31 Atl. 123 (incestuous fornication; prior intercourse, barred by statute, admitted);
Rhode Island: 1899, Rose v. Mitchell, 21 R. I. 270, 43 Atl. 67 (alienation of wife's affections, intimacy of plaintiff's wife with defendant after separation, admitted as indicating prior state of feelings);

Tennessee: 1873, Cole v. State, 6 Baxt. 242 (improper familiarities between the persons, before the statutory period and after prosecution begun, held admissible);
Texas: 1870, Richardson v. State, 24 Tex. 142 (cohabitation for a "series of months", admitted); 1893, Burnett v. State, 32 Tex. Cr. 86, 22 S. W. 47 (incest; prior and subsequent intercourse, admissible); 1893, Wood v. State, 32 Tex. Cr. 476, 478, 24 S. W. 284 (slander charging incest; incest a few months before, admitted); 1898, Duncan v. State, 40 Tex. Cr. 591, 51 S. W. 372 (fornication; acts more than two years previous, excluded, except "under peculiar circumstances"; no authority cited); 1904, Clifton v. State, 46 Tex. Cr. 18, 79 S. W. 824 (incest; a series of subsequent acts, including some covered by other indictments, excluded; Burnett v. State, supra, overruled, on the authority of Smith v. State, infra, Rape under Age, and no other of the above cases cited; this opinion merits the censure of the Texas bar; it not only overthrows exact precedents, but in so doing it introduces, upon the scantiest consideration, a heretical and inferior rule, and creates unnecessary difficulties in the proof of this crime); 1905, Wiggins v. State, 47 Tex. Cr. 538, 84 S. W. 821 (rape and incest; prior acts of intercourse, excluded; Clifton v. State not cited); 1905, French v. State, 47 Tex. Cr. 571, 85 S. W. 4 (adultery; rule of Clifton v. State applied, but now held to admit acts of intimacy short of criminal intercourse, if not too remote); 1906, Gillespie v. State, 49 Tex. Cr. 530, 93 S. W. 556 (Clifton v. State followed; here excluding prior acts more than ten years before); 1909, Barrett v. State, 55 Tex. Cr. 182, 115 S. W. 1187 (incest; prior and subsequent acts admissible, following Burnett v. State); 1909, Skidmore v. State, 57 Tex. Cr. 497, 123 S. W. 1129 (incest; prior intercourse excluded; Davidson, P. J., this time again obtaining the upper hand, and declaring that as "Barrett v. State was decided upon the authority of Burnett v. State", which "had been overruled in Clifton v. State and followed in subsequent cases", and that as Clifton v. State "is correct", "the Barrett case therefore is overruled"; Ramsey, J., diss.; thus the seesaw goes on, certainly no such persistency of dissent has been recorded outside of the Federal Supreme Court); 1914, Vickers v. State, 75 Tex. Cr. 12, 169 S. W. 669 (incest; Barrett Case followed, admitting prior intercourse for a period of years); 1922, Rodriguez v. State, — Tex. Cr. —, 236 S. W. 726 (incest; subsequent intercourse received; prior rulings reviewed; rule of Skidmore v. State repudiated);
Utah: 1885, U. S. v. Musser, 4 Utah 153, 7 Pac. 389 (bigamous cohabitation; cohabitation with the same women before the date charged, admitted to show "his inclination and disposition to cohabit with the women"); 1886, U. S. v. Groesbeck, 4 Utah 487, 11 Pac. 542 (similar); 1887, U. S. v. Peay, 5 Utah 263, 14 Pac. 342 (similar); 1887, U. S. v. Smith, 5 Utah 232, 14 Pac. 291 (similar); 1901, State v. Neel, 23 Utah 541, 65 Pac. 494 (illicit intercourse; prior acts of familiarity, admitted in corroboration); 1912, State v. Hansen, 40 Utah 418, 122 Pac. 375 (adultery; subsequent acts inadmissible; State v. Hilberg, infra, followed);
Vermont: 1876, State v. Bridgman, 49 Vt. 202, 209 (adultery; "a great many acts of familiarity and several acts of adultery" within seven years, admitted; also other acts at a subsequent time); 1878, State v. Colby, 51 Vt. 291, 293, 296 (obscure); 1879, State v. Potter, 52 Vt. 33, 40 (adultery; acts seven years before, admitted);
Washington: 1903, State v. Wood, 33 Wash. 290, 74 Pac. 380 (incest; other prior acts of intercourse between them, admitted); 1905, State v. Nelson, 39 Wash. 221, 81 Pac. 72 (similar); 1914, State v. Jones, 80 Wash. 588, 142 Pac. 35 (seduction; subsequent acts of intercourse, admitted);
Wisconsin: 1858, Ketchingman v. State, 6 Wis. 426 (another adultery admitted, but under a second count); 1895, Porath v. State, 90 Wis. 527, 63 N. W. 1061 (familiarities, admitted).

II. Seduction. Breach of Marriage Promise, and Bastardy: ENGLAND: 1877, Verdin v. Wray, 2 Q. B. D. 611 (bastardy; acts of familiarity, before the probable time of begetting, with the alleged father, admitted); UNITED STATES: Ind. 1890, Ramey v. State, 127 Ind. 243, 26 N. E. 818 (bastardy; acts of intercourse prior to the alleged time of conception, admitted to show "the probability of intercourse having taken place at subsequent times"); 1905, Walker v. State, 165 Ind. 94, 74 N. E. 614 (bastardy; the defendant, alleging that B. was the father, was allowed to introduce the relatrix' admissions that she and B. had had intercourse on occasions prior to the time of conception); Ia. 1898, State v. Hughes, 106 Ia. 125, 76 N. W. 520 (defendant's statement, a week later, that he was going to the prosecutrix's house for intercourse, admitted); Kans. 1917, State ex rel. Botts v. Stout, 101 Kan. 600, 168 Pac. 853 (bastardy; defendant's indecent liberties with other women, excluded); Ky. 1919, Cline v. Com., 186 Ky. 429, 216 S. W. 594 (seduction; rape of prosecutrix by defendant some months later, not admitted, on the facts); Md. 1853, Keller v. Donnelly, 5 Md. 213, 219 (seduction; the defendant's relations with the daughter five years later, admitted as throwing light on their relations at the time alleged); Mich. 1876, People v. Clark, 33 Mich. 112, 115 (seduction; previous acts of intercourse, but not subsequent ones, admitted); 1900, People v. Jamieson, 124 Mich. 164, 82 N. W. 835 ("acts of intercourse and undue familiarity" before and after the alleged time of conception, admissible); 1902, People v. Elco, 131 Mich. 519, 91 N. W. 755 (seduction; intimate relations of the parties after pregnancy ascertained, admitted); N. Car. 1897, State v. Robertson, 121 N. C. 551, 28 S. E. 59 (seduction; later intercourse between the parties, admitted); S. Dak. 1912, State v. Holter, 30 S. D. 353, 138 N. W. 953 (seduction; subsequent acts, admitted); Tex. 1919, Ice v. State, 84 Tex. Cr. 418, 208 S. W. 343 (seduction; subsequent intercourse, admitted on the facts; prior cases explained); Vt. 1865, Thayer v. Davis, 38 Vt. 163 (bastardy; intercourse three years before, admitted, as showing a familiarity making the alleged intercourse more probable); Wash. 1914, State v. Tilden, 79 Wash. 472, 140 Pac. 680 (seduction; prior intercourse admitted).

Compare the additional cases cited post, § 401.

III. Rape (the evidence offered is, where not otherwise mentioned, of former intercourse between the parties, to show the woman's probable consent; compare also the cases cited ante, § 357);

ENGLAND: 1870, R. v. Cockcroft, 11 Cox Cr. 410, Willes, J.; 1871, R. v. Holmes, 12 Cox Cr. 141 (indecent conduct admitted; but not passed upon); 1887, R. v. Riley, 16 Cox Cr. 191 (Coleridge, L. C. J.: "It renders it more likely that she would or would not have consented"); and cases cited ante, § 200.

UNITED STATES: Ala. 1887, McQuirk v. State, 84 Ala. 435, 438 (admitted); 1889, Barnes v. State, 88 Ala. 204, 207, 7 So. 38 (rape; "prior acts of undue intimacy", received to show the complainant's probable consent); Ark. 1855, Pleasant v. State, 15 Ark. 624, 643 (admitted); Cal. 1896, People v. Rangod, 112 Cal. 669, 44 Pac. 1071 (question reserved); Ill. 1873, Shirwin v. People, 69 Ill. 56, 59, semble (admissible); Ind. 1880, Eyler v. State, 74 Ind. 49, 51 (admissible); 1888, Bedgood v. State, 115 Ind. 275, 278, 17 N. E. 621 (same); Iowa: 1919, Wildeboer v. Petersen, 187 Ia. 1169, 175 N. W. 349 (civil action for rape; prior acts of familiarity, admitted for the plaintiff); Mich. 1882, Hall v. People, 47 Mich. 636, 11 N. W. 414 (friendly relations of the parties, not improper, admitted to show that the defendant would probably seek to obtain intercourse by persuasion, not by force); 1888, People v. McLean, 71 Mich. 310, 38 N. W. 871 (admissible); Mont. 1898, State v. Bowser, 21 Mont. 133, 53 Pac. 179 (rape; the relationship between defendant and prosecutrix, admitted, to indicate that the latter resisted as much as could be expected); N. H. 1861, State v. Forschner, 43 N. H. 89 (admissible; put on the ground of character); 1863, State v. Knapp, 45 N. H. 151, 156 (rape; the defendant's indecent solicitations of the prosecutrix six months before, admitted as involving "a motive or passion that would render the commission of the act charged more probable"); N. Y. 1838, People v. Abbot, 18 Wend. 194 (admissible); 1857, People v. Jackson, 3 Park. Cr. 398 (same); 1874, Woods v. People, 55 N. Y. 516 (same); N. Car. 1846, State v. Jefferson, 6 Ired. 305 (that she had been his concubine, or had suffered him to take liberties, admitted); Oh. 1858, McCombs v. State, 8 Oh. St. 643, 646, semble (admissible); 1862, McDermott v. State, 13 id. 331, semble (same); Vt. 1894, State v. Hollenbeck, 67 Vt. 34, 30 Atl. 696 (the complainant's friendliness beforehand, admitted); Wis. 1893, Proper v. State, 85 Wis. 615, 628, 55 N. W. 1035 (rape; previous indecent assaults upon the complainant, admitted to show a desire to gratify his passions with her); 1902, Bannen v. State, 115 Wis. 317, 91 N. W. 964 (rape; prior relations of the parties, admitted to show probable consent).

IV. Rape under Age of Consent: ENGLAND: 1913, Shellaker's Case, 9 Cr. App. 240 (carnal knowledge of a girl under 16, prior to the six months limited by statute, admitted as evidence of an "amatory passion"); 1913, The King v. Shellaker, [1914] 1 K. B. 414 (carnal knowledge under 16; previous acts of intercourse, admitted; St. 1885, 48–9 Vict., c. 69, § 5, limiting time of prosecution, held not to exclude conduct more than six months earlier); 1914, Rogers' Case, 10 Cr. App. 276 (carnal knowledge of a girl under age; a previous similar offence, held admissible).

UNITED STATES: Arkansas: 1920, Howell v. State, 141 Ark. 487, 217 S. W. 457 (carnal knowledge of a female under 16; defendant's intercourse with her after 16, admitted); 1918, Crawford v. State, 132 Ark. 518, 201 S. W. 784 (rape under age; other similar offences, admitted on the facts);

California: 1903, People v. Edwards, — Cal. —, 73 Pac. 416 (rape under age; prior intercourse, and prior and subsequent improper familiarity, between the two, admitted "to prove the adulterous disposition of the defendant"; 1909, People v. Soto, 11 Cal. App. 431, 105 Pac. 420 (other acts before and after, admissible);

Colorado: 1919, Laycock v. People, 66 Colo. 441, 182 Pac. 880 (rape under age; other acts with the female, admitted);

Connecticut: 1907, State v. Sebastian, 81 Conn. 1, 69 Atl. 1054 (rape under age: intercourse three months later, admitted);

Idaho: 1904, State v. Lancaster, 10 Ida. 410, 78 Pac. 1081 (rape under age; prior acts of intercourse between the parties, admitted); 1911, State v. Henderson, 19 Ida. 524, 114 Pac. 30 (statutory rape; other intercourse before and after, admitted);

Illinois: 1910, People v. Everham, — Ill. —, 93 N. E. 373 (rape of a daughter under age; other acts with the same daughter, semble, admissible); 1911, People v. Gray, 2 51 Ill. 431, 96 N. E. 268 (rape under age; other intercourse with prosecutrix, admitted; also postal cards sent by defendant to her); 1912, People v. Gibson, 255 Ill. 302, 99 N. E. 599 (rape under age on C.; testimony of other young girls to the defendant's similar acts to them ranging over six months, excluded, also testimony of P. that at the same place and occasion and in the presence of C. defendant did the same act to P.; the latter ruling is absurd; such offences might almost as well be given immunity); 1919, People v. Findley, 286 Ill. 368, 121 N. E. 608 (rape under age; prior acts in another county, admitted); 1918, Barker v. State, 183 Ind. 263, 120 N. E. 593 (carnal knowledge of a female child; defendant's prior intercourse with the child, admitted);

Iowa: 1902, State v. King, 117 Ia. 484, 91 N. W. 768 (another act of intercourse a week or so later, admitted); 1893, People v. Abbott, 97 Ia. 484, 486, 56 N. W. 862 (admitted, to show their "relations" and "opportunity"); 1905, State v. Sheets, 127 Ia. 73, 102 N. W. 415 (rape under age; assault on other girls in the same place and the same day, admitted); 1910, State v. Neubauer, 145 Ia. 337, 124 N. W. 312 (lascivious conduct with a male minor; former similar acts with the same minor, admitted);

Kansas: 1904, State v. Borchert, 68 Kan. 360, 74 Pac. 1108 (other acts of intercourse between the parties, admitted); 1905, State v. Oswalt, 72 Kan. 84, 82 Pac. 513 (subsequent intercourse inadmissible); 1906, State v. Stone, 74 Kan. 189, 85 Pac. 808 (carnal knowledge under age; subsequent as well as prior acts of intercourse, etc., admitted; State v. Borchert approved); 1911, State v. Brown, 85 Kan. 418, 116 Pac. 508 (rape under age; subsequent intercourse, admitted);

Louisiana: 1921, State v. Wichers, 149 La. 643, 89 So. 883 (rape under age; other acts between the parties, admitted); 1922, State v. Emory, 151 La. — , 91 So. 659 (carnal knowledge of a minor; prior conduct with another female, excluded);

Michigan: 1906, People v. Brown, 142 Mich. 622, 106 N. W. 149 (subsequent acts of intercourse, after the statutory age, excluded, approving People v. Etter, 81 Mich. 570, 45 N. W. 1109, and apparently disapproving People v. Jamieson, supra, par. II of this note; no principle is stated, and the opinion entirely ignores the reasoning applicable to the question, and tends to confuse the precedents in this State); 1915, People v. Coston, 187 Mich. 538, 153 N. W. 831 (rape under age; former similar acts with the complainant's sister, excluded);

Minnesota: 1912, State v. Schneller, 120 Minn. 26, 138 N. W. 937 (rape under age; prior acts, admitted; subsequent acts, not decided); 1916, State v. Shtemme, 133 Minn. 184, 158 N. W. 48 (carnal knowledge under age; similar prior and subsequent conduct with other females who were with the one in question, allowed); 1921, State v. McPadden, 150 Minn. 62, 184 N. W. 568 (rape under age; prior and subsequent intercourse between the two, admitted); 1922, State v. Friend, — Minn. —, 186 N. W. 241 (statutory rape; defendant's intercourse with other girls under 18, etc., not admitted on the facts);

Mississippi: 1914, Collier v. State, 106 Miss. 613, 64 So. 373 (rape on his own daughter aged 13; subsequent acts of rape during nearly a year, excluded; unsound, being misled by the Texas decisions);

Missouri: 1906, State v. Palmberg, 199 Mo. 233, 97 S. W. 566 (rape under age; subsequent acts are inadmissible, but prior acts are admissible; it is unfortunate that this Court, upon a careful consideration of the subject, should adopt this illogical and unpractical view, which makes the rule of evidence run counter to human nature; in selecting People v. Clark, Mich., supra, as its guide, it took a Court which has been the most inconsistent on this subject and one whose precedents are therefore of small value); 1920, State v. Belknap, — Mo. —, 221 S. W. 39 (statutory rape; other assaults on the child admitted to show intent); 1920, State v. Harris, — Mo. —, 222 S. W. 377 (statutory rape; other acts of intercourse, excluded; repudiating the ruling in State v. Belknap, supra; the opinion makes an effort to find constitutional authority for this; unsound; Williams, P. J., diss.);

Montana: 1903, State v. Peres, 27 Mont. 358, 71 Pac. 162 (other intercourse with the prosecutrix, admitted); 1915, State v. Harris, 51 Mont. 496, 154 Pac. 198 (statutory rape; other intercourse between defendant and complainant, admitted);

Nebraska: 1904, Blair v. State, 72 Nebr. 501, 101 N. W. 17 (rape under age; improper familiarities between the two, admitted); 1904, Woodruff v. State, 72 Nebr. 815, 101 N. W. 1114 (subsequent intercourse with the prosecutrix, admitted); 1908, Leedom v. State, 81 Nebr. 585, 116 N. W. 496 (rape under age; subsequent acts of intercourse, admitted);

New Mexico: 1918, State v. Whitener, 25 N. M. 20, 175 Pac. 870 (statutory rape; other similar acts between the parties, admitted);

New York: 1900, People v. Flaherty, 162 N. Y. 532, 57 N. E. 73 (intercourse under age of consent; other intercourse admissible only in corroboration, when other evidence of act charged is in the case); 1914, People v. Thompson, 212 N. Y. 249, 106 N. E. 78 (rape under age; subsequent acts of intercourse, held admissible);

Ohio: 1906, State v. Lawrence, 74 Oh. 38, 77 N. E. 266 (rape under age; the defendant's confessions of other acts of intercourse with the child more than two years later, excluded); 1910, Boyd v. State, 81 Ohio 239, 90 N. E. 355 (rape under age; intercourses between defendant and prosecutrix within two months before, admitted);

Oklahoma: 1905, Cecil v. Terr., 16 Okl. 197, 82 Pac. 654 (rape under age; prior acts of intercourse, admitted, but not subsequent ones; the Court's assertion that "it is just as well settled that such subsequent acts" are inadmissible is wholly unjustifiable; only Michigan decisions are cited for this, and in that jurisdiction the precedents are confused and inconsistent); 1913, Morris v. State, 9 Okl. Cr. 241, 131 Pac. 731 (rape under age; subsequent acts, admitted; overruling Cecil v. Terr., supra); 1913, Allen v. State, 10 Okl. Cr. App. 55, 134 Pac. 91 (rape on the defendant's daughter aged 15; the prosecution's evidence that the girl had had a child by a negro was held improperly admitted; apparently this evidence was calculated to heighten the prejudice against the accused: moreover, the girl was apparently a degenerate and a maker of false charges); 1914, Flowers v. State, 10 Okl. Cr. 494, 138 Pac. 1041 (rape under age; other intercourse during the next three years, admitted); 1917, Penn v. State, 13 Okl. Cr. 367, 164 Pac. 992 (statutory rape; subsequent intercourse between the parties, admitted); 1918, Taylor v. State, 14 Okl. Cr. 400, 171 Pac. 739 (rape under age "continuous unlawful relation" between the parties, admitted); 1922, Marlow v. State, — Okl. Cr. —, 202 Pac. 1048 (rape under age; subsequent as well as prior acts of intercourse between the parties, admissible);

Oregon: 1897, State v. Robinson, 32 Or. 43, 48 Pac. 357 (other intercourse with the prosecutrix, admitted);

South Carolina: 1911, State v. Richey, 88 S. C. 239, 70 S. E. 729 (rape under age, prior and subsequent acts, admissible);

South Dakota: 1910, State v. Sysinger, 25 S. D. 110, 125 N. W. 879 (rape under age; former acts of intercourse, admitted); 1911, State v. Rash, 27 S. D. 185, 130 N. W. 91 (other intercourse with the prosecutrix, admitted); 1918, State v. Yeager, 41 S. D. 51, 168 N. W. 749 (rape under age; subsequent intercourse, admitted);

Tennessee: 1904, Sykes v. State, 112 Tenn. 572, 82 S. W. 185 (rape under age; prior and subsequent intercourse, admitted);

Texas: 1899, Rogers v. State, 40 Tex. Cr. 355, 50 S. W. 338 (other acts of intercourse between the parties, admissible to show the probability of the offence); 1903, Smith v. State, — Tex. Cr. —, 73 S. W. 401 (subsequent intercourse with the same woman, excluded; repudiating prior contrary rulings; Henderson, J., semble, diss.); 1903, Smith v. State, — Tex. Cr. —, 74 S. W. 556 (rape under age; prior intercourse in another county, excluded); 1904, Henard v. State, 46 Tex. Cr. 90, 79 S. W. 810 (rape under age; subsequent intercourse, excluded, following the foregoing cases; but the ruling is unsound on the facts, for the evidence tended to explain away a circumstance discrediting the prosecutrix); 1904, Henard v. State, 47 Tex. Cr. 168, 82 S. W. 665 (intimacy short of criminal intercourse is admissible); 1905, French v. State, 47 id. 571, 85 S. W. 4 (foregoing rule approved); 1911, Battles v. State, 53 Tex. Cr. 202, 109 S. W. 195, 63 Tex. Cr. 147, 140 S. W. 783 (rape under age; prior and subsequent intimacy, admissible; "it should be governed by the facts of each case" whether other acts of intercourse are admissible; prior cases examined, and a number declared to be overruled; Davidson, P. J., diss.); 1921, Crosslin v. State, 90 Tex. Cr. 467, 235 S. W. 905 (statutory rape; parties' prior acts of intercourse, admitted);

Utah: 1900, State v. Hilberg, 22 Utah 27, 61 Pac. 215 (subsequent acts are inadmissible; Bartch, C. J., diss. on this point, and properly); 1911, State v. Mattivi, 39 Utah 334, 117 Pac. 31 (rape under age; subsequent acts of intercourse, inadmissible; McCarty, J., diss. on this point; this would have been a good opportunity to repudiate the unsound precedent of State v. Hilberg);

Vermont: 1905, State v. Willett, 78 Vt. 157, 62 Atl. 48 (rape under age; other acts of intercourse before and since, admitted);

Washington: 1903, State v. Carpenter, 32 Wash. 254, 73 Pac. 357 (rape on a daughter under age; that the defendant had on several occasions attempted to induce another daughter to have intercourse with him, excluded; unsound; no authorities cited); 1903, State v. Fetterly, 33 Wash. 599, 74 Pac. 810 (other acts of intercourse between the parties, admitted); 1906, State v. Marselle, 43 Wash. 273, 86 Pac. 586 (rape under age; defendant's attempt to seduce another girl, excluded); 1906, State v. Mobley, 44 Wash. 549, 87 Pac. 815 (rape under age; other acts of intercourse, admitted); 1921, State v. Sigler, 116 Wash. 581, 200 Pac. 323 (rape under age; other acts of the sort with the girl, admitted); 1922, State v. Crowder, — Wash. —, 205 Pac. 850 (statutory rape; subsequent acts between the parties, and the details, admitted);

West Virginia: 1921, State v. Driver, 88 W. Va. 479, 107 S. E. 189 (attempt at rape under age; prior attempts on the same female, held admissible "to show the lustful disposition of the defendant"; which is unsound in statement, though correct in result);

Wisconsin: 1902, Lanphere v. State, 114 Wis. 193, 89 N. W. 128 (rape under the age of consent, the girl being in fact willing; other intercourse admitted); 1905, Grabowski v. State, 126 Wis. 447, 405 N. W. 805 (indecent liberties; prior liberties, admitted); 1910, Robinson v. State, 143 Wis. 205, 126 N. W. 750 (rape under age; lascivious approaches to other minor females, admitted, on the facts, to rebut a defence).

For pregnancy, as evidence, see ante, § 168, n. 3.

§ 399. Same: General Principles. The process of argument here involves (ante, § 395) three steps, namely, (a) from the Emotion to the Act charged, (b) from a prior or subsequent Emotion to this Emotion at the time charged, and (c) from Conduct to the prior or subsequent Emotion. The evidence as offered takes the reverse order; it consists in conduct, and from this the first inference is to the then emotion, from this next to the emotion at the time charged, and from this to the act charged. All these steps are implied in the offer of such evidence, and questions may arise as to any one of the steps; and, though the second is the only legitimate subject of the present treatment (the first and the third involving respectively the principles of § 117 and § 394, ante), it is convenient to deal with them all in this place.

(a) That a sexual desire of A for B is relevant to show the probability of A's doing that which will realize this desire cannot be and is not questioned; and no evidential difficulties arise at this point:

1869, COLT, J., in Thayer v. Thayer, 101 Mass. 113: "The evidence by which the act of adultery is proved is seldom direct. . . . When adulterous disposition is shown to exist between the parties at the time of the alleged act, then mere opportunity, with comparatively slight circumstances showing guilt, will be sufficient to justify the inference that criminal intercourse has actually taken place."

1876, WHEELER, J., in State v. Bridgman, 49 Vt. 210: "The offence charged in this case cannot ordinarily be committed till the restraints of natural modesty and the safeguards of common deportment and conventionality have been overcome by gradual approaches and the relations of the parties have been changed from those usually existing between the sexes to the most intimate. . . . Thus it appears that the true relation of the parties to each other in this respect is very material and proper to be shown."

1884, ELLIOTT, C. J., in State v. Markins, 95 Ind. 465: "It is a rule of elementary logic, as well as of rudimentary law, that evidence which tends to establish facts rendering it antecedently probable that a given event will occur, is of material relevancy and strong probative force. It is more probable that incestuous intercourse will take place between persons who have conducted themselves with indecent familiarity than between those whose behavior has been modest and discreet."

(b) That this desire at a prior or subsequent time is relevant to show the probable existence of the same desire at the time in issue is equally clear:

1799, HUME, B., in Brown v. Smith, Hume (Sc.) 32 (action for filiation of an illegitimate child, the time of intercourse being in doubt): "It is reasonable for the judge to consider the situation and circumstances of the parties at a later period; . . . and if these are still such as to afford them the like temptations and opportunities of meeting, . . . it is natural to presume that such an intercourse once commenced does not cease while those opportunities continue."

1852, GOLDTHWAITE, J., in Lawson v. Swinney, 20 Ala. 76: "The fact to be established by the evidence is that the parties lived together in a certain condition; and if this particular condition of life was proved to exist, both anterior and subsequent to the time alleged in or covered by the indictment, an inference might often be correctly drawn as the existence of this condition during the intermediate period."

1869, COLT, J., in Thayer v. Thayer, 101 Mass. 113: "It is true, that the fact to be proved is the existence of a criminal disposition at the time of the act charged; but the indications by which it is proved may extend, and ordinarily do extend, over a period of time both anterior and subsequent to it. . . . When once an adulterous disposition in two persons towards each other is shown to exist, a strong inference arises that it has had and will have continuance, the duration and extent of which may be usually measured by the power which it exercises over the conduct of the parties. It is this character of permanency which justifies the inference of its existence at any particular point of time from facts illustrating the preceding or subsequent relations of the parties. . . . The limit, practically, to the evidence under consideration is that it must be sufficiently significant in character and sufficiently near in point of time, to have a tendency 'to lead the guarded discretion of a reasonable and just man' to a belief in the existence of this important fact to be proved. If too remote or insignificant, it will be rejected, in the discretion of the judge who tries the case."

The limits of time over which the evidence may range must depend largely on the circumstances of each case,[1] and should be left to the discretion of the trial Court.[2] A subsequent existence of the desire is equally relevant with a prior one. It is true that the contingencies of error are different; i.e. in the former case, the desire may have been first induced by intervening circumstances, in the latter it may have been ended by them; but the strength of these contingencies is no greater in one instance than in the other. If for example the parties have been intimate during the entire year 1890, and an act of adultery is charged on July 1, an adulterous desire on Dec. 31 carries no less persuasive weight than an adulterous desire on Jan. 1. That there is any distinction is generally repudiated.[3]

(c) The conduct receivable to prove this desire at such prior or subsequent time is whatever would naturally be interpretable as the expression of sexual desire:

1899, GARRISON, J., in State v. Snorer, 64 N. J. L. 65, 44 Atl. 850: "Adultery, from its inherit stealth, is seldom provable apart from circumstances by which the disposition of the parties towards each other may be judged. This disposition develops gradually, and has a duration and progress that generally, if not always, antedate opportunity. Hence the total proof of adultery is not to be circumscribed by the time and space of a single act, but rather is to be extended as widely as the demonstration of the moral qualities involved may require. The discreet limit of such proof is the character of the conduct sought to be shown, — a point of which time, rather than geography, is apt to be the significant feature."

Sexual intercourse is the typical sort of such conduct, but indecent or otherwise improper familiarities are equally significant.[4] That the intercourse is also itself criminal is no objection.[5]

§ 400. Same: Discriminations in regard to Adultery and Incest. The foregoing principles apply equally to the sexual desire in all aspects. But § 399. [1] See instances in Eng., Mass., N. Y., N. C., Tex., Vt.; and the evidence may antedate the statutory period of limitation, as in Eng., Ala., Pa., Tenn.

[2] Mass., quoted supra; Me.

[3] Ala., Me., Md. (seduction), Mass., Nebr. (seduction), N. Y., Pa., Tenn., Vt. Contra, Ind., Mich. (seduction).

[4] As in Eng., Ala., Ind., Mass., Mich., Nebr., N. H., N. Y., Pa., Vt., Wis.

[5] Colt, J., in Thayer v. Thayer, 101 Mass. 113: "[If it were an objection,] evidence tending to establish an independent crime is to be rejected, although all acts which are only acts of improper familiarity are to be admitted in proof. There is no sound distinction to be thus drawn. There is no difference between acts of familiarity and actual adultery committed, when offered for the purpose indicated, except in the additional weight and significance of the latter fact. . . . There is no one act by which the moral status of the parties is more clearly defined"; see also the full discussion ante, § 216.

for each sort of acts in which it becomes relevant, certain discriminations need to be made.

Where adultery (civil or criminal) or incest is charged, the use of the evidence in question is to show a desire at the time charged, as indicating an act of intercourse, and thus the evidence is predicated of the one charged with that act. This distinction might become important where the sexual desire was evidenced, not by actual intercourse, but by solicitation or familiarities, which might be predicable of one only of the parties.[1]

§ 401. Same: Discriminations in regard to Seduction, Bastardy, Breach of Promise, and Alienation of Affections. Ordinarily, in seduction (whether an action by the parent or a criminal prosecution) and in bastardy, the act of intercourse being in dispute, the sexual desire at other times is offered as showing the probability of that act, and is predicated of the man charged with it; i.e. the use is the same as in the preceding subject, and is resorted to by the plaintiff or prosecutor. But in the statutory action (by the woman) or the criminal prosecution for seduction under promise of marriage, the prior willingness of the woman to have intercourse, as shown by acts, may be relevant for the accused to show the probability that she consented, on the occasion charged, without regard to any promise of marriage as an inducement.[1] The prior unchastity of the woman with other persons, as affecting her character and the parent's damages, raises a different question (dealt with ante, §§ 205, 210). So, too, the intercourse of the woman with third persons, in bastardy actions, as showing another paternity (ante, § 133), or as impeaching her testimonial credit (post, § 987).

In action for breach of promise of marriage, the present principle is more or less frequently involved, in inferring from the state of affections at one time to its state at another.[2] From this distinguish the question (post, § 1770) whether the woman's expressions and conduct of assent, occurring subsequently to the time of the man's alleged offer, are admissible under the verbal-act rule.

§ 400. [1] For other adulteries of the wife to mitigate damages in crim. con., see ante, § 211.

§ 401. [1] 1908, Lauer v. Banning, 140 Ia. 319, 118 N. W. 446 (seduction is admissible to corroborate the woman's assertion of promise of marriage); 1876, People v. Clark, 33 Mich. 112, 116 (Marston, J.: "Where parties thus indulge their criminal desires, it shows a willingness upon her part that a person of chaste character could not be guilty of, and although a promise of marriage may have been made at each time as an inducement, it would be but a mere matter of form, and could not alone safely be relied upon to establish the fact that she would not have yielded had such a promise not been made"); 1876, Bowers v. State, 29 Oh. St. 542, 546 (same).

But it seems also to admit occasionally of an opposite inference: 1897, Smith v. Hall, 69 Conn. 651, 38 Atl. 386 (relations of the parties before the alleged promise, while the plaintiff was married to another, admitted, to show the probability of a promise).

[2] 1831, Honyman v. Campbell, 2 Dow. Ch. 265, 282 (conduct of courtship is some evidence of marriage); 1901, Hahn v. Bettingen, 84 Minn. 512, 88 N. W. 10 (prior attentions are admissible even while the defendant was married to another woman); 1896, Osmun v. Winters, 30 Or. 177, 46 Pac. 780 (breach of promise; malicious letters after suit begun, admitted to show malice in breaking the promise); 1840, Carskadden v. Poorman, 10 Watts Pa. 82, 85 (penalty for marrying a minor without the parent's assent; preceding favorable attitude of the father to the match, admitted to show probable consent).

In actions for alienation of affections, the existence of unhappy marital relations prior to the defendant's interference is material on the issue of damages; because the less affection there was to lose, the less the damage.[3] Here no evidential question is involved, except that of using the spouse's expression of feeling under an exception to the Hearsay rule (post, § 1730).

§ 402. Same: Discriminations in regard to Rape. (1) (a) Ordinarily, the evidence offered is of the woman's prior improper conduct with the defendant, as showing an inclination on her part to consent to his embraces, and thus negativing an essential element in the crime charged. For this purpose, her submission to improper familiarities may be as significant as her allowance of actual intercourse.[1] (b) From this is to be distinguished the use of the woman's prior friendly feelings toward the defendant, as showing that he would more probably have attempted to obtain his purpose by persuasion than by force;[2] the inference here is really of a different sort (ante, § 389). (c) The fact of the woman's friendly feelings after the supposed rape is conduct in the nature of an inconsistency, and so far as it impeaches her testimony, is admissible (post, §§ 1040, 1143). (d) The woman's prior intercourse with a third person involves the question of character, and has been examined from that point of view (ante, § 200); over such evidence of character there has been more or less controversy; but over the evidence in (a), supra, there has been none.[3]

(2) (a) Former conduct predicated of the man may serve to show a passion, inclining him to attempt further gratification of his passion for this woman; though this use is seldom emphasized, where the conduct consists in voluntary intercourse, the use in (1) (a), supra, being the more important. But upon the same principle, former indecent solicitations by the man, or other conduct short of actual intercourse with the woman, tend similarly to show such a passion, and are receivable;[4] though they would not have been, from the point of view of (1) (a), supra. (b) The defendant's former rape or attempt at rape of the same woman may, like the voluntary intercourse in (2) (a), equally indicate a desire for this woman. But it may also be treated as evidencing a plan or design to obtain intercourse with her, or to throw light on the intent of a proved assault upon her (ante, § 357). (c) The defendant's former rape or attempt at rape of a third person cannot be treated as indicating a passion or desire for the woman in issue, i.e. cannot legitimately involve the present principle; either it indicates a lustful character generally and is thus inadmissible (ante, § 194), or it indicates a plan or intent to rape (ante, § 357).

[3] 1916, Smith v. Rice, 178 Ia. 673, 160 N. W. 6 (collecting the cases).

§ 402. [1] E.g., Eng., Ala., N. C.

[2] E.g., Mich., Vt.

[3] The following passage shows how the latter may be received, but not the former: 1876, Wheeler, J., in State v. Bridgman, 49 Vt. 212: "Evidence of like intercourse between them is admissible on an indictment [of him] for rape, and evidence of like acts of intercourse between her and other men is not, . . . not because it is in any wise more lawful for a man to commit rape upon a woman with whom he has had such intercourse, but because from the relations between them it is less likely that the intercourse was forcible."

[4] E.g., N. H., Or., Wis.

(3) In rape under the age of consent, the woman's consent is immaterial; the charge is therefore practically one of fornication. The evidence may be dealt with from the point of view of adultery and fornication (ante, § 400), where the intercourse was in fact voluntary; or it may be dealt with from the point of view of rape, where it was in fact forcible.[5]

Distinguish here the question whether under a statute limiting the offence to intercourse with a female of "previous chaste and virtuous character", such prior intercourse with the defendant negatives the statutory requirement.[6]

§ 403. Defamation: Other Utterances as evidencing Malice. The state of feelings, with reference to malice, of one who has uttered a defamatory statement, may become important, under the substantive law, in two ways: (1) as involving an excess of a privilege otherwise existing; (2) as affording ground for aggravation of damages.[1] The early notion that malice was also important in a third way, namely, as an essential element for the plaintiff's cause of action, is now generally repudiated.

For the purpose of showing this malice at the time of uttering the defamation charged, other utterances of the defendant may be offered; and the question arises whether and on what terms they are admissible. The 'nisi prius' rulings on this subject in England up to the middle of the 1800s fluctuated widely; and though the law was there clearly settled in 1851 by the House of Lords, the varieties of rulings in the previous period furnished no uniform guide for the earlier rulings in this country. Thus the numerous different distinctions for which there had been in England some authority were all reproduced here and there with new detailed varieties, in one or another jurisdiction in this country. All these variations rested upon some supposed reason; and it is essential to examine these reasons, as affording the key to the wide difference of rules which is still found in our different jurisdictions, and even in the precedents of a single jurisdiction. There are thus to be considered, first, the considerations of Relevancy, and, secondly, the considerations of Auxiliary Policy (ante, § 43).[2]

§ 404. Same: Principle of Relevancy. The probative value of other utterances as showing malice at the time charged rests on a double argument: (A) that the other utterance indicates malice at that time of utterance; and (B) that malice then indicates malice at the time charged.

(A) That the other utterance may indicate malice at that time is clear, on the general principle (ante, § 394) that all conduct, including language, is one of the legitimate sources of inference to the feeling that inspires it:

1863, SANFORD, J., in Swift v. Dickerman, 31 Conn. 285, 291: "It conduced to prove a fact from which a legitimate inference regarding the defendant's feelings and motives when he

[5] The cases have been placed separately, under par. IV, n. 1, § 398, ante.

[6] 1919, Branham v. State, 16 Okl. Crim. App. 308, 182 Pac. 525 (rape under age; prior intercourse of defendant with complainant, held not to amount to proof negativing complainant's "chaste and virtuous character")

§ 403. [1] But this way is not recognized in New York.

[2] The precedents are collected post, § 406.

spoke the words now sued for might be fairly deduced. Every uncalled for utterance of a defamatory charge is more or less indicative of the speaker's malice at the time of speaking. . . . His malice then was probable in this suit only for the sake of the inference which it authorized regarding his mental feelings when he spoke the words now declared on."

What are the limitations, if any, that result from this principle? [1]

(1) Expressions of hatred, ill-will, anger, and the like, not in themselves defamatory, are plainly receivable, as all concede.[2]

(2) An utterance in itself defamatory may (not necessarily does) also evidence such feelings, as is generally conceded. The suggestion that such an utterance when privileged is not thus evidential [3] has not been generally accepted, and seems unsound.

(3) Whether an unproved plea of justification (i.e. of truth) has such evidential force is questionable. It is certainly a repetition of the defamatory utterance; and, though a ' bona fide ' attempt to prove it would dispose of any notion of its malice, yet a total failure to attempt to prove it, coupled with the deliberate retention of it upon the record, may well be taken as at least evidence of malice. The English law came finally to receive for this purpose an unproved and unwithdrawn plea; [4] but legislation in several American States has repudiated this result; and perhaps it is wiser to require some additional circumstance strengthening the indication of malice.[5]

(4) The subject of the other utterances is in England not considered to be material; [6] for clearly a defamatory charge of a wholly different tenor may equally evidence a feeling of ill-will or malice. But in this country it is generally laid down (with varying phrases) that the other utterance must be upon the same subject.[7] Certainly it must be directed against the plaintiff,[8] or at least against a class of persons including him. But the limitation in the United States may be perhaps based on the doctrine of Unfair Surprise, to be referred to later.

(B) The second branch of the inference, that malice then indicates malice at the time charged, is merely another and legitimate application of the general principle already dealt with (ante, § 395). There can be and is no question as to the propriety of the argument:

1851, PARKE, B., in Barrett v. Long, 3 H. L. C. 395, 414: "We are all of opinion that under such a plea the publication of previous libels on the plaintiff by the defendant is admissible evidence to show that the defendant wrote the libel in question with actual malice against the plaintiff. A long practice of libelling the plaintiff may show in the most satisfactory manner that the defendant was actuated by malice in the particular § 404. [1] The precedents are collected post, § 406.

[2] Parke, B., in Wright v. Woodgate, Eng., Denman, L. C. J., in Simpson v. Robinson, Eng.

[3] N. J.

[4] Simpson v. Robinson, Eng. Accord: Me., Md., Mass., N. Y. Rejected: Mich.

[5] As in Conn. and Maine, and in the opinion of Mather, Sen., in King v. Root, N. Y.

[6] Wright v. Woodgate, Barrett v. Long, Hemmings v. Gasson, and others passim; contra, Finnerty v. Tipper, which would not be law.

[7] Cal., Conn., Mass., Minn., N. H., N. J., N. Y., Pa. (perhaps), S. C. (qualified), U. S., Vt., Va.

[8] Del., Mass.

publication, and that it did not take place through carelessness or inadvertence; and the more the evidence approaches to the proof of a systematic practice, the more convincing it is. The circumstances that the other libels are more or less frequent, or more or less remote from the time of the publication of that in question, merely affects the weight, not the admissibility, of the evidence."

1879, FOLGER, J., in Daly v. Byrne, 77 N. Y. 187: "It would tend to show malice to prove that libellous publications of the same nature were repeated from time to time after the first libel. Such articles, published after the commencement of the action, were not incompetent because of their essential nature, but because of a factitious and incidental consequence that might flow from the reception of them in evidence, to wit, that they might aggravate the damages, etc."

1885, BERRY, J., Gribble v. Press Co., 34 Minn. 345, 25 N. W. 710: "We take the rule to be so maintained, not arbitrarily or as a mere matter of precedent, but because it rests upon a common-sense judgment of human nature and a practical knowledge of its motives and its ways. The fact that a given libel has been preceded and followed by others of like tenor from the same source is one from which, as men are constituted, a legitimate inference may be drawn as to the 'animus', the spirit, with which the given libel was published. It has a fair tendency to show that the given libel was not published by accident or mistake, or even under a sudden impulse, or heedlessly, but by design and with a deliberate purpose to injure and prosecute the person libelled."

(1) The length of time elapsing between the evidential utterance and that charged may of course affect the strength of the inference. The English Courts treat the lapse of time as never affecting the admissibility of the utterances;[9] but in this country a few Courts have sought to put some rational limitation to it.[10] The matter ought to be left entirely in the hands of the trial Court.

(2) That the evidential utterances occurred subsequent to that charged, and, in particular, after action or trial begun, is equally immaterial, from the point of view of probative value; but a limitation is here suggested by the ensuing considerations of Auxiliary Policy.

Thus the limitations that result from the point of view of Relevancy are merely: That (perhaps) an unproved and unwithdrawn plea of truth is not receivable; that (in this country) the subject of the other utterances must be the same; and that (in this country, perhaps) the evidential utterance must not be too remote in time.

§ 405. Same: Principle of Auxiliary Policy. The real and substantial support of the attempt to exclude the present class of evidence has always been found in certain considerations of Auxiliary Policy (ante, § 43). These considerations have apparently at no time succeeded in effecting a total exclusion of the evidence; for it has in no jurisdiction and by no judge been excluded (it would seem) absolutely. But they have resulted in various proposed limitations upon its use, — limitations intended to obviate the supposed evil of one or the other of these objections. The amusing yet confusing feature of their application has been that exactly opposite conclusions have been occasionally deduced from the same reason, so that if all the deductions were sound, the law would be in a paradoxical and unmanageable state. It will be necessary to note the various distinctions, and also to attempt to indicate the condition of the law in each jurisdiction upon each point; the latter effort necessarily assuming (what experience sadly teaches us is not always the fact) that the latest ruling represents the law of to-day.

[9] Barrett v. Long, Eng.

[10] Mass., N. H. (the better phrasing).

(a) The first and chief argument is that other utterances, if allowed to go to the jury to show malice, will probably be used by them improperly for awarding additional damages: so that the plaintiff will obtain double damages, either for utterances already outlawed or already recovered for, or for utterances for which he may still sue and be paid as independent causes of action:[1]

1844, BRONSON, J., in Root v. Lowndes, 6 Hill 518, 519: "The plaintiff will be allowed to recover damages for an injury when the recovery will not be a bar to another action for the same cause. I know it is said that the judge must tell the jury not to give damages for the words which are not laid in the declaration. But suppose he does give that instruction; everybody knows that it will have little or no effect. However honestly the jury may intend to follow the guidance of the Court, it requires but a moderate acquaintance with the operations of the human mind to see that they will be misled by the introduction of such evidence. If, after proving the words laid imputing larceny, the plaintiff is allowed to prove other words imputing robbery or murder, it is past doubt that the latter words, whatever the judge may say to the contrary, will influence the jury in fixing the quantum of damage. . . . To tell the jury at one moment that the evidence is proper, and at the next that they must disregard it, involves a contradiction; and if the jury is composed of sensible men, they will either think lightly of the law or of those who administer it. But whatever they may think, they will give damages for the words not laid; and thus the defendant may suffer a double punishment for the same fault."

The answer to this argument is, first, that the jury can be cautioned not to apply the evidence improperly, a well-settled mode (ante, § 13) of dealing with evidence under the principle of multiple admissibility, and no more dangerous in this instance than in any other; and, secondly, that any attempt to carry out this objection logically will result either in a hopeless confusion of rules, or in mere unpractical refinements, or in the entire exclusion of useful and just evidence. The objection has been totally repudiated in England.[2]

(b) The other argument is that of Unfair Surprise and Confusion of Issues (ante, § 194; post, §§ 1849, 1904), which would exclude all utterances not charged in the declaration:

1844, BRONSON, J., in Root v. Lowndes, 6 Hill 518: "When the plaintiff does not go beyond the words laid in the declaration, I see no reason why he may not show that those words have been spoken on a dozen different occasions [because the judgment bars all the instances of utterance and there is no surprise]. . . . But very different considerations arise when we come to actionable words which are not laid in the declaration. To admit the proof of such words must be a surprise upon the defendant. It cannot be supposed that

[1] 405. [1] See this argument also in Defries v. Davis, Symmons v. Blake, Eng. Barwell v. Adkins, Pearson v. Lemaitre, Barrett v. Long, pointing out the warning to the jury as the sufficient answer to the objection.

[2] Plunkett v. Cobbett, Rustell v. McQuister, he will be prepared to try a matter of which the plaintiff has not complained. That is not all. If the plaintiff may prove the words, the defendant may justify as to those words, and thus the Court and jury will be led off from the point in controversy as presented by the pleadings, into the trial of an indefinite number of collateral issues." [3]

The answer to this argument is that it does not apply to matters evidential of a state of mind of the defendant relevant to the issue (ante, § 305); that it applies in strictness to character evidence and a few other well-known types; and that otherwise it would exclude any piece of evidence of which an opponent had not been specifically warned. It was early discountenanced in England,[4] and seems to have received little support in this country. The limitations, where they exist, are deduced usually from the preceding objection. What then are these proposed and competing limitations?

(1) It has been suggested that other actionable utterances be excluded.[5] to obviate the first objection above. The answer is that if the jury is bent on disregarding the instructions of the judge, they are just as likely to add to the damages for a non-defamatory utterance of hatred as for a defamatory one. The distinction has long been discarded in England,[6] and has been expressly repudiated in many jurisdictions here.[7]

(2) It has been suggested that at least other actionable utterances not already recovered for be excluded.[8] The answer is the same, that a jury that will disregard the instructions for the one class of words will so do equally for the other. The distinction did not become law in England,[9] and has not been accepted anywhere in this country.

(3) It has been suggested that just the contrary distinction be adopted, i.e. by excluding other actionable utterances already recovered for.[10] This is equally logical with the preceding one, though absolutely inconsistent with it; it is no less unpractical, and has been nowhere accepted.

(4) It has been suggested, from the same point of view as in (2) above, that actionable utterances not barred by limitation (and thus still available for other actions) be excluded.[11] The answer is still the same, that a jury is just as likely or unlikely to reckon improper damages for outlawed utterances as for others; and the distinction has generally been repudiated.[12]

(5) It has been suggested that just the contrary distinction be adopted, namely, by excluding other actionable utterances barred by limitation.[13] The answer is the same; and such a limitation is generally repudiated.[14]

[3] See this argument also in Finnerty v. Tipper, Eng., Shock v. M'Chesney, Pa.

[4] Mead v. Daubigny.

[5] Cook v. Field, Mead v. Daubigny, Defries v. Davis, Eng.; perhaps also in U. S. Fed.

[6] Buller, Scott v. Lord Oxford, Delegall v. Highley, Pearson v. Lemaitre, Barrett v. Long.

[7] Ala., Ind., Ia., Ky., N. H., N. J., N. C., Oh., Pa.; and of course where the broader limitations next mentioned are accepted, the present distinction is by implication abandoned.

[8] Symmons v. Blake, Eng.

[9] Barrett v. Long, and other cases supra.

[10] I.e. because they have been once paid for; advanced but repudiated in Conn.

[11] N. Y.

[12] Ala., Me., N. H., N. J., Oh., Pa., S. C., Va.

[13] Apparently no ruling has accepted this distinction.

[14] Barrett v. Long, Eng.; in this country, Ala., Ind., Me., N. H., N. J., N. Y., Oh., Pa., S. C., Va.

(6) It has been suggested that subsequent utterances — meaning, usually, utterances after action or trial begun — be excluded, chiefly for the first reason above, that they might be reckoned in the damages, although still available for another action;[15] the distinction being suggested by a confused notion that prior utterances would be barred by the present judgment. The latter notion is of course incorrect, for the judgment would bar only repetitions of the identical charge, if not only those set out in the declaration; and the former notion is unfounded, for the same reason as above, that a jury is just as likely to disregard instructions in the one case as in the other. The distinction seems to obtain in a few jurisdictions,[16] but has been generally repudiated.[17]

(7) It has been suggested that other actionable utterances be excluded entirely, except where the utterance charged is equivocal as to the feeling inspiring it,[18] — the apparent reason involving both of the above arguments, regarded as demanding exclusion except where there is absolute necessity. The distinction is plausible, but in practice would seldom exclude anything; and it is rarely advanced.[19]

The net result, then, of the arguments based on auxiliary policy is that on principle no limitations can be deduced from them, and that, except here and there, the various jurisdictions concur in repudiating all the suggested limitations.

§ 406. Same: State of the Law in the Various Jurisdictions. The precedents exhibit a variety of rules, involving the preceding distinctions, in the different jurisdictions.[1] Few Courts have passed upon all of the suggested points.

[15] Finnerty v. Tipper, Stuart v. Lovell, Pearce v. Ornsby, Eng.

[16] In this country, in Conn., N. Y., Tenn.; Folger, J., in Daly v. Byrne, 77 N. Y. 187: "[Libellous articles] published after the commencement of the action . . . [are excluded] because they might aggravate the damages found by the jury in this action while they also in themselves gave to the plaintiff the right to another action in which he might get damages again by reason of the publication of them."

[17] Rustell v. Macquister, Macleod v. Wakley, Chubb v. Westley, Defries v. Davis, Boyd v. Douglas, Barwell v. Adkins, Hemmings v. Gasson (qualified), Eng.; in this country, Ala., Ind., Ia., Ky., Me., Mass., Mich., N. H., N. J., N. C., Oh., Pa., S. C., Vt., Va., Wis.

[18] Stuart v. Lovell, Pearce v. Ornsby, Eng.; in this country, Ind., N. Y.

[19] Barrett v. Long, Eng., practically repudiates it; so also Oh., after originally accepting it.

§ 406. [1] ENGLAND: 1767, Buller, Nisi Prius, 7 ("After he has proved the words as laid, he may give evidence of other expressions made use of by the defendant, as proof of his ill-will towards him. . . . After verdict for the plaintiff and damages intire, where some of the words are not actionable, . . . if the words be in one count, the Court will intend that such as are not actionable were added only to show the malice of the party and that the damages were given for what were actionable"); 1785, Cook v. Field, 3 Esp. 133, Kenyon, L. C. J. (other utterances admitted, so far as not actionable in themselves, to show malice); 1791, Charlton v. Barret, Peake N. P. 22, Kenyon, L. C. J. (the same words at different times, admitted to show malice); 1792, Mead v. Daubigny, Peake N. P. 125 (other words admitted; objected to because of the surprise to the defendant; objection overruled, per Kenyon, L. C. J., because "the plaintiff may give evidence of any words used by the defendant, to show the spirit and temper by which he was actuated"; yet the evidence was limited to non-actionable words); 1793, Lee v. Huson, Peake N. P. 166, Kenyon, L. C. J. (other libellous writings admitted: objected to on the damages-ground); 1804, Plunkett v. Cobbett, 5 Esp. 136, Ellenborough, L. C. J. (another sale of the same libel to show absence of mistake; the jury being told not to reckon it in the damages); 1807, Rustell v. Macquister, 1 Camp. 49, Ellenborough, L. C. J. (other slanders spoken afterwards; objected to because the jury might consider them in the damages; objection overruled, because the jury could be instructed not to do so); 1808, Scott v. Lord Oxford, Peake N. P. 127, note, Lawrence, J. (other actionable words, admitted to increase damages); 1808, Tate v. Humphrey, 1 Camp. 73, note, Graham, B. (action for perjury; the false charge in another form, admitted to show malice; affirmed by the Judges); 1809, Finnerty v. Tipper, 2 Camp. 72, Mansfield, C. J. (other libels from subsequent numbers of the same journal, rejected; partly because of surprise, partly because they did not "so far refer to the subject of the declaration" as to be useful; yet the former precedents, so far as cited, were approved); 1817, Stuart v. Lovell, 2 Stark. 93, Ellenborough, L. C. J. (subsequent libels, held inadmissible, because the 'animus' was not equivocal and they would merely serve to enhance the damages); 1828, Macleod v. Wakley, 3 C. & P. 311 (another libel only two days before the trial, admitted; Tenterden, L. C. J.: "However late anything takes place, it may be evidence of a previous intention as to a previous fact"); 1834, Chubb v. Westley, 6 C. & P. 436, Park, J. (subsequent articles attacking the plaintiff, admitted to show the 'animus'); 1835, Defries v. Davis, 7 C. & P. 112, Tindal, C. J. (subsequent utterances of the same slander, but not of any other actionable words, admitted; "it has been a very usual course of late to restrict the evidence in that way; and there is good sense in so doing, as the jury ought not to mix up the words in question with other words in considering the amount of damages"); 1835, Pearce v. Ormsby, 1 Moo. & Rob. 455 (repetition of the slander after action begun; rejected by Abinger, L. C. B., because improperly tending to aggravate the damages, and because no equivocal phrase needed explanation); 1835, Symmons v. Blake, 1 Moo. & Rob. 477 (other slanders to the same effect, rejected by Patteson, J., on the same grounds; "the damages in this cause may be increased by those words, and yet this record be no evidence in a subsequent action which may be founded upon them"; hence, other slanders are admissible for which damages have already been recovered); 1835, Wright v. Woodgate, 2 C. M. & R. 578, Parke, B. ("conduct or expressions of the defendant showing that he was actuated by a motive of personal ill-will are admissible"); 1836, Bond v. Douglas, 7 C. & P. 627, Abinger, L. C. B. (other libels published of the plaintiff on the same subject within a few days afterwards, admitted, "to show the 'animus'"); 1836, Tarpley v. Blabey, 2 Bing. N. C. 437 (preceding libels on the plaintiff admitted to show 'animus'); 1837, Delegall v. Highley, 8 C. & P. 444, 449, Tindal, C. J. (procuring another publication of the libel, admitted to show malice, though in itself actionable); 1838, Park, J., in Webb v. Smith, 4 Bing. N. C. 379 (admitting "other libels and slanders proceeding from the same defendant"); 1840, Barwell v. Adkins, 1 M. & Gr. 807, C. P. (a subsequent repetition of the charge, admitted to show malice in the original charge; the judge's instructions being sufficient to guard against giving damages for the repetition); 1843, Pearson v. Lemaitre, 5 M. & G. 700, 719, C. P. (repetitions of the libel admitted; Tindal, C. J., noting that "it may be difficult to reconcile all the nisi prius cases": "This appears to be the correct rule, viz., that either party may, with a view to the damages, give evidence to prove or disprove the existence of a malicious motive in the mind of the publisher of defamatory matter; but that if the evidence given for that purpose establishes another cause of action, the jury should be cautioned against giving any damages in respect of it; . . . and that evidence tending to prove it cannot be excluded simply because it may disclose another and a different cause of action"); 1848, Simpson v. Robinson, 12 Q. B. 511 (Denman, L. C. J.: "Acts although subsequent might indicate the existence of motives at a former time; . . . and every other part of his conduct showing the same disposition may equally be laid before the jury, — refusing to make reparation for unjustifiable slander may have that effect"; here the act was the "putting a justification on record which he does not attempt to prove and will not abandon"; approving of Warwick v. Foulkes, 12 M. & W. 507 (1848), where a plea repeating the charge in justification was not attempted to be proved, and where Parke, B., said, "Surely the plaintiff has a right to give evidence to show that the charge was not one lightly made and soon abandoned, but that it was seriously made, and persevered in to the last moment"; but disapproving that case so far as it seemed to allow the repetition to be used for increasing damages or for anything but inferring malice; also in effect overruling Wilson v. Robinson, 7 Q. B. 68 (1845), where the repetition was in an abandoned plea, so far as the Court there, including Lord Denman himself, while repudiating the use of the evidence merely to increase damages, seemed to ignore its use to show malice); 1845, Long v. Barrett, 7 Ir. L. R. 439 (other libels published in the same newspaper, more than six years before, received to show malice, the jury being warned to consider them for that purpose only); 1851, Barrett v. Long, 3 H. L. C. 395, 401, 407, 414 (statutory plea denying actual malice; previous publications by the defendant of the plaintiff, in the same journal, extending over 10 years, admitted; quoted supra); 1852, Camfield v. Bird, 3 C. & K. 56, Jervis, C. J. (other slanderous words, at a time not specified, admitted to show 'animus'); 1858, Hemmings v. Gasson, E. B. & E. 346 (the fact that the defendant, six months after the utterance of a libel, charging a breaking and entering, had publicly charged the plaintiff with dishonoring bills and had called him a rascal, was offered to show malice, but rejected: Campbell, L. C. J.: "We do not say the evidence was admissible. . . . But we think that the learned judge should have pointed out more distinctly to the jury the length of time between the writing of the letter charged in the declaration and the subsequent expressions sought to be put in evidence").

CANADA: 1915, King v. Londerville, 25 D. L. R. 352, Lask. (slander; other words 'per se' actionable, admitted to show malice, on the general issue; Pearson v. Lemaitre followed); 1838, Rankine v. Clarke, Ber. N. Br. 303 (affidavit in a criminal case still pending, excluded); 1859, Tobin v. Shea, 3 Morris Newf. 257 (subsequent libels, admitted).

UNITED STATES: Federal: 1836, U. S. v. Crandell, 4 Cr. C. C. 683, 689, 692 (other uttered papers, admitted, "having relation to the libels charged" and not in themselves "substantive ground of prosecution"); 1901, Kansas City Star Co. v. Carlisle, 47 C. C. A. 384, 108 Fed. 344, 356, 362 (plea of justification, admissible, if not made in good faith; Sanborn, J., diss. on the ground that the issue of good faith is an improper one); 1913, Massee v. Williams, 6th C. C. A., 207 Fed. 222 (another utterance on the same day, admitted);

Alabama: 1845, Teague v. Williams, 7 Ala. 844 (repetition admissible, whether actionable or not, whether barred by statute or after suit begun; the jury not to consider it in giving damages); 1849, Scott v. McKinnish, 15 Ala. 666 (same); 1873, Sonneborn v. Bernstein, 49 Ala. 168, 170 (repetition after suit begun, admitted; no precedents cited); 1902, Riley v. State, 132 Ala. 13, 31 So. 731 (repetition subsequent to the time of the indictment, held admissible); 1904, Grant v. State, 141 Ala. 96, 37 So. 420 (prior utterances of a similar tenor, admitted); 1909, Cox v. State, 162 Ala. 66, 50 So. 398 'separate libellous letters, not admitted; foregoing cases not cited; a majority dissenting on this point); 1909, Butler v. State, 162 Ala. 71, 50 So. 400 (oral defamation; repetition since the date of indictment, admitted, solely to evidence malice, and not to evidence the uttering of the words charged; foregoing case not considered); 1913, Webb v. Gray, — Ala. —, 67 So. 194 (improved plea of truth, admissible, if not made in good faith, etc.);

California: 1875, Chamberlain v. Vance, 51 Cal. 75, 84 (similar utterances after action begun, admitted); 1888, Stern v. Loewenthal, 77 Cal. 340, 19 Pac. 579 (statements "at a different time", uttering a charge "of a different nature", excluded); 1892, Harris v. Zanone, 93 Cal. 59, 28 Pac. 845 ("other utterances of words of similar import", admissible); 1898, Westerfield v. Scripps, 119 Cal. 607, 51 Pac. 958 (repetition, or charge of similar import, receivable; plea of truth, without attempt to establish it, receivable); 1898, Hearne v. De Young, 119 Cal. 670, 52 Pac. 150 (repetition after suit begun, admissible); 1919, Scott v. Times-Mirror Co., 181 Cal. 345, 184 Pac. 672 (other libels "tending to show a malicious and vindictive attitude", admitted, though not of similar import; prior rulings analyzed);

Connecticut: 1786, Holmes v. Brown, Kirby 151 (other utterances after suit begun, excluded); 1837, Mix v. Woodward, 12 Conn. 262, 287, 292 (other utterances, but only of the same libel, admissible, the jury not to give damages for them; the dissent of Waite, J., at 288, did not affect this point); 1839, Flint v. Clark, 13 Conn. 361, 366 (same point); 1847, Williams v. Miner, 18 Conn. 464, 472 (same); 1863, Swift v. Dickerman, 31 Conn. 285, 290 (same; admissible though already recovered for); 1872, State v. Riggs, 39 Conn. 498, 501 (same as Williams v. Miner); 1879, Ward v. Dick, 47 Conn. 300, 304 (same; unproved plea of truth not admissible unless maliciously pleaded);

Delaware: 1854, State v. Jeandell, 5 Harringt. 475, 479 (other defamatory utterances, against the same person, prior to the one charged, admitted, but no others); 1909, Smith v. Singles, 6 Pen. Del. 544, 72 Atl. 977 (subsequent utterances admitted, even when plea of truth accompanies plea of not guilty);

Georgia: 1857, Adkins v. Williams, 23 Ga. 222 (prior utterances, admitted); 1897, Craven v. Walker, 101 Ga. 845, 29 S. E. 152 (repetition after suit brought, admissible);

Illinois: 1854, Sloan v. Petrie, 15 Ill. 425 (like the next case); 1866, Harbison v. Shook, 41 Ill. 141 (plea of justification not filed in good faith may evidence malice; the jury to decide upon good faith); Rev. St. 1874, c. 126, § 3 ("An unproved allegation of the truth of the matter charged shall not be deemed proof of malice unless the jury on the whole case find that such defence was made with malicious intent"); 1875, Hawver v. Hawver, 78 Ill. 412 (statute applied, construing an instruction); 1909, Ball v. Evening American Pub. Co., 237 Ill. 592, 86 N. E. 1097 (subsequent publication of similar "connected" libels, held admissible; whether admissible if unconnected, not decided, the opinion does not notice the numerous distinctions involved in the precedents of other Courts); 1910, People v. Strauch, 247 Ill. 220, 93 N. E. 126 (criminal libel; other libels by defendant; point not decided);

Indiana: 1831, Scott v. Mortsinger, 2 Blackf. 454, 457 (other words admitted, whether actionable or not, and whether after suit begun or not, under the general issue); 1834, M'Glemery v. Keller, 3 Blackf. 489 (same; the sole use being to show malice); 1836, Throgmorton v. Davis, 4 Blackf. 176 (words barred by statute, admissible); 1842, Burke v. Miller, 6 Blackf. 155 (admissibility of other words implied); 1843, McIntire v. Young, 6 Blackf. 498 (words since action begun, admitted; but admissibility said to be limited to cases where the malicious intent of the defendant is in doubt); 1844, Schoonover v. Rowe, 7 Blackf. 202 (admissible to show malice only); 1846, Forbes v. Myers, 8 Blackf.

74 (same): 1846, Teagle v. Deboy, 8 Blackf. 136 (like Burke v. Miller); 1847, Lanter v. McEwen, 8 Blackf. 496 (admissible, if the intent is equivocal, to show malice only); 1848, Burson v. Edwards, 1 Ind. 164 (like Forbes v. Myers); 1852, Hesler v. Degant, 3 Ind. 504 (words since suit begun, admitted to show malice only); 1854, Vincent v. Dixon, 5 Ind. 270 (rejected, because used in aggravation of damages); 1873, Meyer v. Bohlfing, 44 Ind. 239 (same); 1876, Downey v. Dillon, 52 Ind. 442, 450 (admitting defendant's former good feelings, but not for an unreasonable time previous; here conduct "always" exhibited was rejected);

Iowa: 1864, Beardsley v. Bridgman, 17 Ia. 292 (words uttered after suit begun, admissible to show malice, subject to a caution to the jury); 1868, Schrimper v. Heilman, 24 Ia. 505, semble (words uttered after suit begun, admitted); 1874, Ellis v. Lindley, 38 Ia. 461 (repetition admissible to show malice only); 1877, Prime v. Eastwood, 45 Ia. 640, 642 (repetition admitted); 1887, Hanners v. McClelland, 74 Ia. 320, 37 N. W. 389 (obscure); Code 1897, § 3593, Rev. C. § 8207 ("an unproved allegation of the truth of the matter charged shall not be deemed proof of malice unless the jury on the whole case finds that such defence was made with malicious intent"); 1902, Zurawski v. Reichmann, 116 Ia. 388, 90 N. W. 69 (assault by defendant on plaintiff, shortly afterwards, held admissible); 1902, Cushing v. Hederman, 117 Ia. 637, 91 N. W. 940 (utterance of similar words to another person, admitted);

Kentucky: 1822, Eccles v. Shackelford, 1 Litt. 36 (semble, only words not actionable are admissible); 1837, Allensworth v. Coleman, 5 Dana 315 (obscure); 1859, Letton v. Young, 2 Metc. 561 (admitting any language showing ill-will, actionable or not, after suit begun or not; the jury to be cautioned against including them in the damages); 1880, Campbell v. Bannister, 79 Ky. 208 (preceding case approved); 1901, Alcorn v. Powell, 22 Ky. 1353, 60 S. W. 520 (other similar utterances admitted);

Louisiana: 1828, Kendrick v. Kemp, 6 Mart. N. S. La. 500 (other words uttered within one year before suit begun, admitted);

Maine: 1839, Smith v. Wyman, 16 Me. 13 (repetition admitted, though after action begun; unproved plea of truth, admissible); 1851, White v. Sayward, 33 Me. 322 (subsequent utterances, admitted); 1853, True v. Plumley, 36 Me. 466, 478 (repetitions since suit begun, admitted); 1873, Harmon v. Harmon, 61 Me. 233 (utterance of the same charge at a time barred by statute, admitted); 1893, Conant v. Leslie, 85 Me. 257, 27 Atl. 147 (utterance of the same charge, before or after, but not of a different charge, admissible); Rev. St. 1916, c. 87, § 47 (unproved plea of truth is not a "proof of malice", unless the jury find that the defence was made with malicious intent);

Maryland: 1827, Duvall v. Griffith, 2 H. & G. 30 (another slander, admissible); 1834, Rigden v. Wolcott, 6 G. & J. 413, 419, semble (unproved plea of truth, admissible); 1902, Gambrill v. Schooley, 95 Md. 260, 52 Atl. 500 (other words actionable and forming the subject of a pending action, excluded);

Massachusetts: 1818, Jackson v. Stetson, 15 Mass. 48 (unproved plea of truth, admissible); 1825, Bodwell v. Swan, 3 Pick. 376 (other utterances admissible, provided they involve the same charge; utterances since action begun, admissible); St. 1826, c. 107, § 2 (plea of justification if unproved shall not "of itself be proof of the malice", but the jury "shall decide upon the whole case" whether it was pleaded with malicious intent); 1827, Hix v. Drury, 5 Pick. 296, 302 (the statute refers only to a plea of truth pleaded with a general issue as permitted by the statute; and not to a sole plea of truth); Mass. Rev. St. 1836, c. 100, § 19, Gen. L. 1920, c. 231, § 91 (plea of truth, "although not maintained by the evidence", is not "of itself" to be proof of malice); 1846, Goodrich v. Stone, 11 Pick. 486, 491 (repetition after action begun, admissible); 1848, Watson v. Moore, 2 Cush. 137 (other utterances admissible, if involving the same charge; the mere filing of a complaint in Court, no evidence); 1856, Baldwin v. Soule, 6 Gray 321 (repetition of the charge, admissible); 1866, Markham v. Russell, 12 All. 574 (prior and subsequent utterances of the same charge, admissible, though no damages could be awarded for them); 1869, Robbins v. Fletcher, 101 Mass. 116 (feeling of the defendant against a third person included in the alleged slander, admitted, as tending to prove its utterance; repetition of the slander, admissible to show malice); 1875, Clark v. Brown, 116 Mass. 508 (repetition admissible, but the jury should be cautioned not to increase the damages therefor); 1884, Com. v. Damon, 136 Mass. 449 (other utterances, admissible if "of such a nature as to indicate a persistent disposition of hatred or ill-will towards him, or if they appear to be a part of a settled purpose to bring him into public hatred, contempt, or ridicule, and are sufficiently near in time to afford a natural inference that the same state of mind existed when the publication complained of was made"); 1888, Sullivan v. O'Leary, 146 Mass. 322, 15 N. E. 775 (that the defendant had slandered other persons a few years before, excluded); 1915, Doane v. Grew, 207 Mass. 620, 108 N. E. 620 ("repetition of substantially the same slander may be shown");

Michigan: Comp. L. 1857, § 4548, Comp. L. 1915, § 12755 ("If the defendant in any action for slander or for publishing a libel shall give notice in his justification that the words spoken or published were true, such notice, though not maintained by the evidence, shall not in any case be of itself proof of the malice charged in the declaration"); 1868, Detroit Post Co. v. McArthur, 16 Mich. 446, 454 ("frequent recurrence of similar libels", admissible to show "recklessness" supporting exemplary damages); 1877, Scripps v. Reilly, 35 Mich. 371, 384, 393 ("the recurrence of similar libels", apparently held admissible to show such reckless conduct of the defendant's newspaper as would justify punitory damages); S. C. 3 Mich. 10 (similar evidence held inadmissible; these two opinions are not clear, except in that they take a too liberal attitude towards the publishers of libel); 1877, Proctor v. Houghtaling, 37 Mich. 41, 45 (failure to prove a plea of truth, not admissible); 1893, Randall v. News Ass'n, 97 Mich. 136, 145, 56 N. W. 361 (another charge of same sort, admitted); 1894, Thibault v. Sessions, 101 Mich. 279, 286, 59 N. W. 624 (subsequent publications on the same subject, after suit begun, admitted); 1896, Botsford v. Chase, 108 Mich. 432, 66 N. W. 325 (former utterances, admissible); 1899, Jastrzemboki v. Marxhausen, 120 Mich. 677, 79 N. W. 935 (under the statute, an unsustained plea may still be considered as evidence of malice, though not alone sufficient); 1906, Smith v. Hubbell, 142 Mich. 637, 106 N. W. 547 (subsequent similar utterance, admitted);

Minnesota: 1885, Reitan v. Goebel, 33 Minn. 151, 22 N. W. 291 ("other slanderous words of similar import, and so connected with them as to amount to a continuance of the same slander", at least if before suit begun, admissible); 1885, Gribble v. Press Co., 34 Minn. 342, 25 N. W. 710 ("other publications . . . containing substantially the same imputation as that sued upon, whether made before or after the latter, or after suit brought", admissible only to show malice, and thus give ground for exemplary damages; here an utterance six years before was admitted); 1886, Larrabee v. Tribune Co., 36 Minn. 141, 142, 30 N. W. 462 (approving the preceding case; the utterances need not be repetitions, if they "refer to the same matter and make substantially the same imputation"); 1895, Frederickson v. Johnson, 60 Minn. 337, 62 N. W. 388 (prior utterances of the same import, admissible); 1902, Jacobs v. Cater, 87 Minn. 448, 92 N. W. 397 (words not actionable 'per se' nor imputing the same charge, held inadmissible); 1921, Linnehan v. Sheeran, 150 Minn. 171, 184 N. W. 835 (slander of plaintiff and his brother, charging them with stealing; similar charge repeated as of plaintiff's brother, admitted);

Missouri: 1906, Yager v. Bruce, 116 Mo. App. 473, 93 S. W. 307 (unproved plea of justification may be considered, but only if filed in bad faith);

Montana: 1916, Fowlie v. Cruse, 52 Mont. 222, 157 Pac. 958 (subsequent repetitions, admissible);

Nebraska: 1903, Bee Pub. Co. v. Shields, 68 Nebr. 750, 94 N. W. 1029 (subsequent similar utterances, admitted); 1912, Thomas v. Shea, 90 Nebr. 823, 134 N. W. 933 (prior actionable utterances; not decided);

New Hampshire: 1827, Mason v. Mason, 4 N. H. 114, semble (repetition admissible); 1839, Chesley v. Chesley, 10 N. H. 337 (repetition admissible, even of actionable utterances); 1855, Symonds v. Carter, 32 N. H. 458 ((1) the other words may have been spoken at any time, "provided they were spoken so near the time of the actionable words or were otherwise so connected with them as to have a legitimate bearing upon the disposition of the defendant's mind at the time of uttering the slander complained of"; (2) they may be actionable words, though semble the judge should instruct the jury not to give damages for them; but (3), semble, they must be concerned with the same subject-matter); 1921, Saladino v. Gurdy, — N. H. —, 116 Atl. 436 (slander; other utterances in prior litigation, admitted);

New Jersey: 1836, Bartow v. Brands, 15 N. J. L. 248 (other words admissible to show malice); 1838, Dayton, J., in State v. Robinson, 16 N. J. L. 514 (other defamatory words, "if referring to those charged", admissible); 1843, Schenck v. Schenck, 20 N. J. L. 208 (other libels admitted, so far as they relate to the same charge, and even though uttered after suit begun); 1882, Evening Journal Ass'n v. McDermott, 44 N. J. L. 430 (previous or subsequent libels admissible, whether barred by limitation or not; the jury to be cautioned against giving damages for them; but a privileged repetition is inadmissible); 1888, Fahr v. Hayes, 50 N. J. L. 275, 281, 13 Atl. 261 (approving the preceding case); 1911, Ruskin v. Armn, 82 N. J. L. 72, 81 Atl. 342 (withdrawn plea of truth may be considered);

New Mexico: 1919, Henderson v. Dreyfus, 25 N. M. —, 184 Pac. 819 (subsequent repetition, if not privileged, admissible);

New York: 1810, Thomas v. Croswell, 7 Johns. 264, 270 (utterances, not libellous, against the plaintiff since action begun, admitted; semble, that libellous utterances would not be admissible, because the damages might be improperly increased); 1826, Matson v. Buck, 5 Cow. 499 (like the next case); 1827, Root v. King, 7 Cow. 613, 633 (an unproved plea, not withdrawn by an affidavit of falsity, admissible); 1829, King v. Root, 4 Wend. 140 (same case on appeal; doctrine below approved; but Mather, Sen., dissented at 150, with the distinction that the defendant must have so pleaded "knowing it to be false, or from a reckless disregard of consequences without having reasonable cause to suppose he could substantiate it"); 1832, Inman v. Foster, 8 Wend. 608 (solving the apparent doubt in Thomas v. Croswell, and holding that prior actionable utterances, but only those barred by limitation, could be used); 1838, Kennedy v. Gifford, 19 Wend. 297, 300 (confining the utterances to the subject of the original charge, and admitting a repetition after suit begun); 1844, Root v. Lowndes, 6 Hill 518 (the use of other utterances limited to the extent indicated by Thomas v. Croswell and Inman v. Foster, with regret that even that much had been conceded; see quotation ante, § 405; the whole use limited to proving malice in excess of privilege); 1846, Keenholts v. Becker, 3 Den. 346 (other utterances, not slanderous, before and after action brought, not admitted to show malice); C. C. P. 1848, § 165 ("whether he prove the justification or not, he may give in evidence the mitigating circumstances"); C. P. A. 1920, § 338 (substantially similar); 1849, Campbell v. Butts, 3 N. Y. 173, semble (action brought for words already used in a former action to show malice, but not then declared on; the practice in the former case impliedly approved); 1850, Fero v. Roscoe, 4 N. Y. 165 (not treating it as a question of malice, but of damages, and admitting an unproved plea of truth, even if 'bona fide' made); 1850, Howard v. Sexton, 4 N. Y. 157, 161 (slander for charge of perjury; (1) charge at another time, of robbery, excluded; the other utterance must be of the same charge, since the malice to be proved is "not mere general ill-will, but malice in the special case set forth in the pleadings"; (2) such repetition allowed only to show malice in excess of privilege, following Root v. Lowndes, or to explain an ambiguous utterance); 1854, Bush v. Prosser, 11 N. Y. 347, 356, 366 (statute noticed as changing the law for pleas of truth); 1863, Fry v. Bennett, 28 N. Y. 324, 327 (affirming the first point of the preceding case, but apparently violating it in admitting different libels; semble, contra to the preceding case on the second point); 1870, Thorn v. Knapp, 42 N. Y. 474 (repetition after trial begun, admissible; failure to prove plea of truth, admissible); 1870, Titus v. Sumner, 44 N. Y. 266 (prior utterances of the same slander admissible, if barred by the statute; following Inman v. Fowler; semble, contra to Howard v. Sexton on the second point); 1872, Bassell v. Elmore, 48 N. Y. 563, 566 (repetition of the same charge to time of trial, held admissible, without mentioning the limitations of the preceding and the following case); 1875, Frazier v. McCloskey, 60 N. Y. 337 (repetition of the slander after action begun, excluded, because where the words may be the subject of another action, damages might thus be given twice for them); 1877, Distin v. Rose, 69 N. Y. 122, 127 (total failure to prove a plea of truth may be considered, if the plea was inserted wantonly or maliciously; but need not be so considered; "the Code has made this change in the law, . . . because it seems incongruous to say that a failure to establish a justification may enhance the damages, and yet the facts proved under it may mitigate them"); 1879, Daley v. Byrne, 77 N. Y. 187 (repetition after action begun, excluded; see quotation ante, § 404); 1892, Enos v. Enos, 135 N. Y. 609, 32 N. E. 123 (repetition of the same charge in other words, admitted);

North Carolina: 1829, Brittain v. Allen, 2 Dev. 120, 125 (repetition admissible, even after action begun; whether to be only repetitions, is not considered; the judge to instruct the jury not to give damages for them; "no regard ought to be paid to the old rule, that these words must be such as were not actionable, that rule having yielded to common sense"); 1831, s. c. 3 Dev. 167; 1859, Lucas v. Nichols, 7 Jones L. 32, semble (utterances after action begun, admissible, but damages not to be given for them);

Ohio: 1832, Carter v. McDowell, Wright 100 (words since suit begun, not admissible, except to show the sense of the words charged); 1834, Seely v. Cole, Wright 681 (repetition admissible, semble); 1834, Flamingham v. Boucher, Wright 746 (words barred by the statute, admitted, but the jury cautioned to use them only to find malice); 1846, Fisher v. Patterson, 14 Oh. St. 418, 424 (other libels admissible only where the intent is doubtful); 1848, Stearns v. Cox, 17 Oh. St. 590 (preceding restrictions as to doubtfulness of intent and as to ambiguities, repudiated; other libels, after suit begun, or before the statute bar, actionable or not, held admissible, subject to a caution to the jury); 1855, Van Derveer v. Sutphin, 5 Oh. St. 293, 295 (same); 1871, Alpin v. Morton, 21 Oh. 536, 544 (approving the preceding cases);

Oklahoma: 1915, Beshiers v. Allen, 46 Okl. 331, 148 Pac. 141 (other similar utterances since suit begun, admissible to show malice but not to increase damage);

Oregon: 1893, Upton v. Hume, 24 Or. 420, 436, 33 Pac. 81 (plea of truth, unproved, to be evidence of malice only when the circumstances indicate it; utterance of a distinct charge, not admissible);

Pennsylvania: 1799, Shock v. M'Chesney, 2 Yeates 473 (charge of forgery; only "expressions of the same nature as those complained of" are admissible; "distinct slanders, charging the plaintiff with other distinct offences, should not be received in evidence, because the defendant cannot be prepared to meet them, and they form the subjects of other actions"); 1811, Wallis v. Mease, 3 Binn. 546, 550 (other and different words charging the plaintiff, admissible, whether actionable or not actionable, before or after suit begun, barred by the statute or not; but the jury are to be instructed not to give damages for them); 1816, Kean v. M'Laughlin, 2 S. & R. 469 (admitting the same words spoken since action begun; approving Wallis v. Mease); 1826, M'Almont v. M'Clelland, 14 S. & R. 359, 361 (repetition after suit begun, admitted, because "not a new charge for which a new action could be brought"); 1857, Elliot v. Boyles, 31 Pa. 65, 68 (words showing malice, but not actionable, were admitted; no rule given nor authority cited); 1878, Barr v. Moore, 87 Pa. 385, 394 ("other articles of the same tenor and character", admitted); 1893,

Com. v. Place, 153 Pa. 314, 318, 26 Atl. 620 (other libellous articles on the same subject, admitted to show malice); 1895, Seip v. Deshler, 170 Pa. 334, 32 Atl. 1032 (subsequent letters, admitted); 1899, Thompson v. M'Cready, 194 Pa. 32, 45 Atl. 78 ("testimony honestly given in a judicial proceeding of the circumstances connected with the utterance of slanderous words tending to mitigation" is not evidence of malice);
South Carolina: 1822, Miller v. Kerr, 2 McC. 286 (repetition after action begun, admitted; here malice is "the gist of the action", not merely affecting privileges or damages); 1836, Randall v. Holsenbake, 3 Hill S. C. 175 (repetition so long ago as to be barred, and previous to the words laid; the rule held to admit words not actionable, and other actionable words "relating to the same species of crime" either after action begun or previous to the period of limitations; to any broader rule they decline to "yield an unqualified assent"); 1846, Morgan v. Livingston, 2 Rich. 573, 585 ("anterior publications [outlawed by statute], as well as publications after suit brought" of the same charge, admissible);
Tennessee: 1812, Howell v. Cheatham, Cooke 247 (repetition admissible, but not after action brought); 1847, Witcher v. Richmond, 8 Humph. 475 (repetitions since suit begun, admitted as explaining the meaning of the original charge); 1871, Saunders v. Baxter, 6 Heisk. 369, 387 (prior expressions of hatred or ill-will, held admissible, but not subsequent ones, unless as explanatory of the former charge or containing an express admission of malicious intent at the former time); 1899, Russell v. Farrell, 102 Tenn. 248, 52 S. W. 147 (subsequent utterance excluded, unless it involves an explanation or an admission of the former one or of malice in the former one);
Vermont: 1870, Cavanaugh v. Noble, 42 Vt. 576 (utterances "of a similar character" admissible; here made just before suit begun); 1883, Knapp v. Fuller, 55 Vt. 311 (subsequent hostile utterance, admitted);
Virginia: 1839, Lincoln v. Chrisman, 8 Leigh 338, 342, 345 ("slanderous words of the same and like character", though barred by the statute, admitted); 1874, Hansborough v. Stinnett, 25 Gratt. 495 ("like words antecedent or subsequent", admissible);
Washington: 1905, Ott v. Press P. Co., 40 Wash. 308, 82 Pac. 403, semble (subsequent similar utterances about other persons in the same business, excluded);
West Virginia: 1902, Swindell v. Harper, 51 W. Va. 381, 41 S. E. 117 (similar utterances, before and after the utterance in issue, held admissible, if made before action begun);
Wisconsin: 1886, Bradley v. Cramer, 66 Wis. 297, 302, 28 N. W. 372, semble (subsequent utterances, admissible; no rule laid down); 1893, Born v. Rosenow, 84 Wis. 620, 622, 54 N. W. 1089 (utterances over three years before, admitted); 1906, Earley v. Winn, 129 Wis. 291, 109 N. W. 633 (repetitions admissible); 1909, Pfister v. Milwaukee F. P. Co., 139 Wis. 627, 121 N. W. 938 (an unsuccessful attempt to prove a justification is some evidence of malice, even under Wis. St. 1898, § 4201, similar to Mass. Rev. St. 1836; two judges diss.).

SUB-TITLE II (continued): EVIDENCE TO PROVE A HUMAN QUALITY OR CONDITION

TOPIC X: EVIDENCE TO PROVE IDENTITY

CHAPTER XV.

§ 410. Other Principles Discriminated. In evidencing that proposition commonly spoken of as Identity, there is apt to be a confusion in thought with two other processes which are really not germane.

(1) It is perhaps natural to apply the notion of Identity or Identification to the general process of proving an accused person guilty. He is said to be "identified" as the murderer or the thief; i.e. the whole process of proof and the whole mass of evidence is thought of as involving the "identity" of the accused and the guilty person. From this point of view, all distinctions between the various sorts of evidence heretofore analyzed are merged and become useless. That the accused planned the act, had a motive for the act, bore traces of the act, and so forth, are all merely "identifying" facts; because the real guilty person also must have planned, had a motive, borne traces, and the like. Such an indiscriminate confusion and merger of all sorts of probative elements would render close analysis impossible, and naturally excites suspicion of the propriety of the term "identification" as thus applied. In truth, there is no propriety in it. The term does have a distinctive application; but this loose and indefinite usage just referred to may be once for all discarded as useless and misleading.

(2) In arguing from subsequent traces of an act to the doing of an act, the argument of Identity sometimes is necessarily involved and needs to be distinguished. Suppose, for example, to prove a murder, evidence is offered that a gun found three days later in the defendant's possession is exactly fitted by a bullet found in the body of the deceased. Here there are two inferences involved: (a) "Because the defendant possessed the gun when found later, therefore he probably possessed it at the time"; this inference is always open to doubt, since the defendant may have borrowed the gun since the killing, or some third person may have surreptitiously placed the gun on his premises; (b) "Because the gun, thus possessed by the defendant at the time of the killing, fitted the bullet found in the body, therefore the defendant's gun must be the one that shot the deceased"; here the inference is open to doubt because the bullet may fit other guns, i.e. the fitting of the bullet is not a necessary mark of the identity of the gun that shot it. Now the first inference is an inference from subsequent Traces to the former act of possession or use of the gun; no question of Identity is involved. It is the second inference that involves the element of the Identity. This is why much of the evidence herein termed Traces, as pointing back to an Act (ante, §§ 148–177), may incidentally involve a question of Identity. The distinction has been already explained (ante, § 151); and the precedents on that subject are not here to be dealt with.

§ 411. General Principle of Identity-Evidence. Identity may be thought of as a quality of a person or thing, — the quality of sameness with another person or thing. The essential assumption is that two persons or things are first thought of as existing, and that then the one is alleged, because of common features, to be the same as the other. The process of inference thus has two necessary elements: (1) it is a Concomitant one, in its logical scheme (ante, § 130); and (2) it operates by comparing common marks, found to exist in the two supposed separate objects of thought, with reference to the possibility of their being the same. It follows that its force depends on the necessariness of the association between the mark and a single object. Where a certain circumstance, feature, or mark, may commonly be found associated with a large number of objects, the presence of that feature or mark in two supposed objects is little indication of their identity, because, on the general principle of Relevancy (ante, § 31), the other conceivable hypotheses are so numerous, i.e. the objects that possess that mark are numerous and therefore two of them possessing it may well be different. But where the objects possessing the mark are only one or a few, and the mark is found in two supposed instances, the chances of the two being different are nil or are comparatively small. Hence, in the process of identification of two supposed objects, by a common mark, the force of the inference depends on the degree of necessariness of association of that mark with a single object.[1]

For simplicity's sake, the evidential circumstance may thus be spoken of as "a mark." But in practice it rarely occurs that the evidential mark is a single circumstance. The evidencing feature is usually a group of circumstances, which as a whole constitute a feature capable of being associated with a single object. Rarely can one circumstance alone be so inherently peculiar to a single object. It is by adding circumstance to circumstance that we obtain a composite feature or mark which as a whole cannot be supposed to be associated with more than a single object.

§ 411. [1] From the point of view of logic and psychology as applicable to argument before the jury (not the rules of Admissibility), see the materials collected in the present author's "Principles of Judicial Proof, as given by Logic, Psychology, and General Experience, and illustrated in Judicial Trials" (1913), §§ 14–26.

The process of constructing an inference of identification thus consists usually in adding together a number of circumstances, each of which by itself might be a feature of many objects, but all of which together can conceivably coexist in a single object only. Each additional circumstance reduces the chances of there being more than one object so associated. The process thus corresponds accurately to the general principle of Relevancy (described ante, §§ 31–33).

It may be illustrated by the ordinary case of identification by name. Suppose there existed a parent named John Smith, whose heirs are sought; and there is also a claimant whose parent's name was John Smith. The name John Smith is associated with so many persons that the chances of two supposed persons of that name being different are too numerous to allow us to consider the common mark as having appreciable probative value. But these chances may be diminished by adding other common circumstances going to form the common mark. Add, for instance, another name-circumstance, — as that the name of each supposed person was John Barebones Bonaparte Smith; here the chances of there being two persons of that name, in any district however large, are instantly reduced to a minimum. Or, add a circumstance of locality, — for example, that each of the supposed persons lived in a particular village, or in a particular block of a certain street, or in a particular house; here, again, the chances are reduced in varying degrees in each instance. Or, add a circumstance of family, — for example, that each of the persons had seven sons and five daughters, or that each had a wife named Mary Elizabeth and three daughters named Flora, Delia, and Stella; here the chances are again reduced, in varying degrees, in proportion to the probable number of persons who would possess this composite mark. In every instance, the process depends upon the same principle, — the extent to which the common mark is capable of being associated, in human experience, with more than one object.[2]

§ 412. Test of Admissibility. The only matter that is here of concern is the admissibility of circumstantial evidence of identification; and it will easily be seen that very few questions can arise from this point of view. The usual matter of dispute, when such evidence is offered, is whether it is sufficient to found a presumption, or, as a mass of evidence, to support a verdict; and in this aspect it raises an entirely different question (post, §§ 2490, 2494).

So far as there can be any general principle of Admissibility, it is perhaps to be stated as follows: A mark common to two supposed objects is receivable to show them to be identical whenever the mark does not in human experience occur with so many objects that the chances of the two supposed objects are too small to be appreciable. But it must be understood that this test applies to the total combination of circumstances offered as a mark, and not to any one circumstance going with others to make it up.

[2] 1906, Webb v. Ritter, 60 W. Va. 193, 54 S. E. 484 (the above principle cited, in identifying land by the payment of taxes, etc.).

On the whole, and in practice, it is seldom practicable and seldom attempted to pass upon the admissibility of identifying circumstances; it is better to wait until all the circumstances have been offered, and then to pass upon them from the point of view of a presumption or the sufficiency of evidence (post, § 2494). If the circumstance has no real probative value, no harm will be done; while if it has such value in combination with other facts, good evidence may be excluded by passing upon it piecemeal; for it usually happens that the whole group of identifying circumstances cannot be put before the Court for a ruling at one point of time.

It may be noted that in accordance with the general principle of Explanation (ante, § 34), the party denying the identity may show that there are numerous objects equally possessing the evidential mark offered, so as to show that the chances of the two supposed objects being the same are very small.[1] It may also be noted that a mark of identity may be negative as well as affirmative; i.e. where a certain circumstance would be necessarily associated with an object in issue, the lack of that feature in a particular object offered tends to show that it cannot be the object in issue,[2] — in analogy with the argument from essential inconsistency (ante, §§ 135, 158).

§ 413. Circumstances Identifying a Person. Rulings upon admissibility are for the foregoing reasons comparatively rare.[1] In the reports of celebrated trials are to be found innumerable instances of such evidence;[2] but it is not necessary here either to attempt to analyze the various types of facts or to collate the recorded instances in such trials. Common experience is usually a sufficient test of relevancy in cases of this sort.

The precedents in which an express ruling has been called for have dealt with corporal marks,[3] voice,[4] mental peculiarities,[5] clothing,[6] weapons,[7]

§ 412. [1] 1859, Cooper v. State, 23 Tex. 343 (three sizes of shot being found both in the deceased's body and the defendant's gun, it was shown in explanation that mixed shot was in common use in the neighborhood).

[2] 1895, People v. Thiede, 11 Utah 241, 39 Pac. 837 (where the other man, alleged to have been the real murderer, must have been covered with blood, but was found not to be).

§ 413. [1] For instances of identifying by Traces circumstantially, see ante, §§ 148–177, and by skill or capacity, ante, §§ 83, 220.

[2] For copious illustrations of the varied circumstances that may be employed to indicate identity, see Hubback, Evidence of Succession, Pt. II, ch. V. (reprinted in the "Law Library", Johnson, Phila., 1845), and the present author's "Principles of Judicial Proof" (1913).

[3] 1874, R. v. Castro (Tichborne Case), charge of Cockburn, C. J., II, 1 ff., 307 ff.; I, 670 ff., 718 ff. (tattoo-marks, etc.; but there were no express rulings); 1875, Com. v. Sturtivant, 117 Mass. 131, 139 (a blow having been inflicted by the left hand, the fact that the defendant is left handed is admissible); 1904, State v. Miller, 71 N. J. L. 527, 534 (homicide; bloody prints of a hand on the wall, admitted to compare with accused's hand placed on the mark when arrested).

[4] 1903, Patton v. State, 117 Ga. 230, 43 S. E. 533; 1920, Brown v. Com., 187 Ky. 829, 220 S. W. 1052 (voice and height); 1870, Com. v. Williams, 105 Mass. 67; 1866, State v. Shinborn, 46 N. H. 502. Compare the cases cited ante, § 222, and post, § 660.

[5] 1850, Webster's Trial, Bemis' Rep. 89 (knowledge of anatomy, as shown in the mode of dissecting the deceased's body, admitted to identify the accused, a medical professor).

[6] 1881, Murdock v. State, 68 Ala. 569, 574 (correspondence of footprints, admitted); 1879, Jones v. State, 63 Ga. 395, 398, 401 (boot-tracks, etc., admitted); 1884, Story v. State, 99 Ind. 413 (clothing of the deceased).

[7] 1895, People v. Yee Fook Din, 106 Cal. 163, 39 Pac. 530 (possession of a weapon excluded, because the weapon was not shown to have been the one used); 1852, People v. Larned, 7 N. Y. 445 (that tools with which a bank was broken had come originally from the defendant's premises, 200 miles away, admitted); 1879, Dean's Case, 32 Gratt. Mass. 912, 923 name,[8] residence, and other circumstances of personal history.[9] The usual question, however, has been whether some combination of these circumstances is sufficient to support a verdict or raise a presumption (post, § 2529).

Additional illustrations may be found in rulings dealing primarily with other principles, — for example, with a person's subsequent belief or conduct as evidence of his past career (ante, § 270), with statements about facts of family history, as an exception to the hearsay rule (post, §§ 1487, 1488, 1501, 1791), and with specimens of spelling as indicating a person's authorship of a writing (post, § 2024).

Distinguish the questions whether the opinion rule applies to testimony of identity (post, § 1977), whether a voice may be evidenced by instances of its utterance (ante, § 222), or identified by one who has heard it (post, § 660), and whether a person's identity is sufficiently evidenced by the witness' "belief" or "impression" (post, § 728).

§ 414. Same: Finger-Prints. The use of finger-prints as evidence combines two inferences, as does virtually all evidence from Traces (ante, § 149); i.e. from the finding of the trace or mark it is inferred that some person bearing that trace or mark was present at the time and place of doing the act charged, and from the peculiarities of the trace or mark it is inferred that the accused was identical with that person. Now in the first step of inference — that from Traces — the finger-print ordinarily is neither stronger nor weaker than other similar inferences. But the second step of inference — that from identical marks — is here extraordinarily strong. On the general principle of § 411, ante, the presence, in two objects of testimony, of a combination of marks, all of which can conceivably coexist in a single object only, represents the highest possible degree of certainty that the two objects are identical. Whether in a given thing such a combination can exist obviously depends on observation and study of that thing, as reported by competent persons in the appropriate branch (murder with a gun; "it was proved that upon the examination of a large number of guns within a radius of eight miles of the scene of the murder, none were found of the same bore or which would carry precisely the same ball [as that found in the deceased's body]; two or three only . . . [might have carried it.] but these two or three were accounted for and proved to be where it was impossible the murderer of Fugate could have used them").

[8] Cases cited post, § 2529 and ante, § 270, n. 4.

[9] 1885, Lovat Peerage Case, L. R. 10 App. Cas. 763, 775 (statement of deceased members of a family, having no personal knowledge, as to a manslaughter by one of the ancestors, admitted as an identifying tradition, "a story adhering to that Alexander, but not as any evidence of the fact that a fiddler was ever killed by him or by anybody else"); 1905, Smith v. State, 165 Ind. 180, 74 N. E. 983 (the same witness need not testify to all the identifying circumstances: here the witness testified merely that she sold a revolver to a colored man, the defendant being colored); 1876, Com. v. Costello, 120 Mass. 358, 369 (fictitious signature to an appeal bond; name, residence, etc., of the real signer admitted to indicate the fictitious nature of the signer); 1871, Ruloff v. People, 45 N. Y. 224 (that X was known to be with Y and that Y was in a certain place, relevant to show X there); 1875, American Life Ins. & T. Co. v. Rosenagle, 77 Pa. 515 (to show that the person whose birth-date was testified to by two persons was the same person referred to by each, the dates of birth of the five other children of the same parents were admitted; here the similarity of circumstances showed that the person referred to was a member of the family in question); 1896, Bryant's Estate, 176 Pa. 309, 35 Atl. 571 (five different sets of claimants asserted the intestate to have been a member of their family, and the identity was ascertained by a careful collation of the facts true of the intestate and the various ancestors alleged).

of science. Do human finger-prints present a combination having that highest degree of certainty? Science answers that they do.[1] In brief, the accepted conclusion, after widest observation, is that several fixed and typical varieties of skin-marks on fingertips are clearly distinguishable, and that by the mathematical theory of probabilities the chance of two individuals bearing the same combination of such marks is so small as to be negligible, and that experience has confirmed this theory. Hence, identity of a combination of such fixed and typical marks is the strongest evidence of identity of person. Courts have therefore properly held such evidence admissible.[2]

But what are the conditions to be fulfilled, and the possibilities of error?

(1) Science must have confirmed, with fair concurrence, the above fact of experience for finger-prints in general, or for some similar species of marks. This can be shown by expert testimony (post, § 561), or by scientific authors (post, § 1693), but can now well afford to be judicially noticed without evidence (post, § 2582).

(2) A witness expert in the subject must state that the system of interpretation used by him in inferring identity of marks was a system accepted in the profession. There are several such systems; they differ chiefly in practical convenience only.

(3) The witness must further be able to state that the particular marks used as the basis of inference were distinct and numerous enough to afford

§ 414. [1] The subject is considered in the present author's "Principles of Judicial Proof" (1913), §§ 14–26.

A full account of systems of finger-print identification will be found in the following authoritative work: C. Ainsworth Mitchell, "Science and the Criminal" (1911, N. Y.).

The most comprehensive handbook on the subject is the following: H. H. Wilder and Bert Wentworth, "Personal Identification: Methods for the Identification of Individuals Living or Dead" (Boston, 1918); the authors are respectively professor of zoölogy in Smith College and former police commissioner of Dover, N. H. Their work sets forth all the scientific bases for finger-print identification, as well as the practical methods of employing it.

In Mark Twain's "Pudd'nhead Wilson", c. XXI (1893) there is a lucid account of the logic of finger-print identification; it occurs in a counsel's argument, and ends dramatically in freeing an innocent man charged with murder. This account was printed long before any extensive use had been made of the method in American governmental departments.

[2] England: 1909, Castleton's Case, 3 Cr. App. 74 (finger-prints on a candle left behind). United States: 1921, Moon v. State,— Ariz. —, 198 Pac. 288 (burglary; finger-print identity, admitted); 1911, People v. Jennings, 252 Ill. 534, 96 N. E. 1077 (finger-imprints, as interpreted by the scientific system of dactyloscopy, admitted leading opinion, by Carter, J.); Mich. Comp. L. 1915, § 1821 (State prison warden's description and measurement [of convict] by the Bertillon system or such other system as may be deemed proper for the identification of criminals", admissible to prove former conviction of person on trial); 1918, Richards v. Vermilyea, 42 Nev. 294, 175 Pac. 188 (murder of a stage-driver; finger-prints on an envelope in a mail-sack opened by the robbers, admitted to identify defendant; learned opinion by Coleman, J., placing the ruling on its proper logical basis); 1914, State v. Cerciello, 86 N. J. L. 309, 90 Atl. 1112 (finger-prints held admissible; but the Court's opinion here misses the real point of such evidence); 1915, State v. Connors, 87 N. J. L. 419, 94 Atl. 812 (burglary; facsimile of finger-prints on a post compared with defendant's finger-prints, admitted); 1921, Lamble v. State, 96 N. J. L.—, 114 Atl. 346 (murder; identity of finger-prints on automobile with defendant's finger-prints, evidenced by expert, admitted); 1915, People v. Roach, 215 N. Y. 592, 602, 109 N. E. 618 (murder; finger-prints on clapboards of the house of the homicide, admitted to identify defendant); 1917, People v. Sallow, Gen. Sess. N. Y. Co., 165 N. Y. Suppl. 915 (disorderly conduct; finger-print evidence admitted to show identity of former convictions); 1918, McGarry v. State, 82 Tex. Cr. 597, 200 S. W. 527 (burglary; finger-prints left on a window and made on a paper, admitted, with expert testimony).

an inference, under the system which he employs; and also that the marks thus used for study were reproduced or transferred by some reliable process from the original object on which they were impressed.

There is indeed also one possibility of the inference being fallible, but it occurs in the Traces-inference above noted, and not in the Identity-inference, e.g. finger-prints identical with A's may be found on a letter left at the scene of the act, and yet these may have been produced by B, who has surreptitiously elsewhere placed the letter where A touched it and has then carried the letter bearing A's imprint to the scene of the act.[3] This, and a few other ingenious and far-fetched expedients, might explain how A's finger-prints on the letter do not necessarily point to his presence at the scene. But such possibilities, though they must be recognized, belong decidedly to the other party to bring forward on the facts of a given case; they cannot affect the admissibility of the evidence. They indicate a possibility of weakness in the Traces-inference (ante, § 149), not in the Identity-inference; for they are comparable to the traditional method of explaining away e.g. the finding of stolen money in the accused's trunk by showing that an enemy placed it there in order to involve him in the charge.

§ 415. Same: Footmarks. For footmarks, there is also a double step of inference, viz. from the mark found to the presence of the maker at the time of the act, i.e. a Trace-inference (ante, § 149), and from the combination of features in the mark found to the person bearing the same combination of features, i.e. an Identity-inference.

Here, however, the second step of inference, in contrast to that from finger-prints (ante, § 414),is apt to be especially weak. This is because the features usually taken as the basis of inference — size, depth, contour, etc. — may not be distinctive and fixed in type for every individual, but may apply, even in combination, to many individuals. Hence their probative significance is apt to be small.

This ordinarily should not negative Admissibility, it merely affects weight. But popular looseness of thought is apt to overestimate this probative value; and accordingly Courts have sometimes excluded the evidence, mistakenly invoking the Opinion rule (post, § 1977) for the purpose.[1] No doubt a witness to identity of footmarks should be required to specify the features on which he bases his judgment of identity; and then the strength of the inference

[3] A telling illustration of this possibility is given by a clever author of fiction in a well-contrived detective story: R. Austin Freeman, "The Singing Bone" (London, 1913).

Still another such possibility is said to exist, in that a method has been invented of reproducing finger-prints artificially and thus of impressing their counterfeit on an object so as not to be distinguishable from impressions genuinely produced by the person himself whose fingers made the original print: Milton Carlson, "Finger Prints can be Forged" (Virginia Law Register, vol. V, N. S. p. 765, Feb. 1920). But as the method itself has been kept secret by the inventor, its practical availability must be doubted. Further information can be obtained from the International Association for Personal Identification, New York City.

§ 415. [1] The cases will therefore be found collected under various heads: ante, § 149 (Traces); ante, § 413 (Identity); post, § 571 (Expert Qualifications); post, § 660 (Observation); post, § 1977 (Opinion).

should depend on the degree of accurate detail to be ascribed to each feature and of the unique distinctiveness to be predicated of the total combination. Testimony not based on such data of appreciable significance should be given no weight.[2]

§ 416. Same: Criminality of Act Immaterial. It has already been seen (ante, § 218) that, where a circumstance is relevant for some purpose, the incidental revelation, in offering it, of other criminal conduct by a defendant does not stand in the way of receiving the evidence. The principle finds application here as elsewhere.[1]

§ 417. Circumstances Identifying a Chattel, Document, or other External Object. The principle of Identity applies as well to objects of external nature

[2] An example of this weakness can be seen in the argument of Mr. Wm. A. Beach for the accused, in Rubenstein's Trial (King's Co., N. Y., Jan. 31, 1876; Seller's Classics of the Bar, IV, 170).

§ 416. [1] ENGLAND: 1833, R. v. Fursey, 6 C. & P. 83, 3 St. Tr. N. S. 543, 551 (the kind of wound given to a third person by the accused, admitted to identify the weapon); 1836, R. v. Rooney, 7 C. & P. 517 (robbery of W., who was riding with U.; evidence of the finding of U.'s watch on the defendant admitted as identifying him as one of those taking part; "it makes no difference that Mr. U.'s watch is the subject of the next indictment"). UNITED STATES: Alabama: 1868, Yarborough v. State, 41, Ala. 405, 407 (disputed identity; the theft of other property, admitted to identify); California: 1857, People v. Butler, 8 Cal. 435, 439 (a question as to the defendant's business, answered by a statement that he was a gambler, held proper, since it might be relevant to identify the defendant or to test the witness' knowledge of him); 1897, People v. Ebanks, 117 Cal. 652, 49 Pac. 1049 (murder on Sept. 10; doings of the defendant a few days before, with a pistol and a sack, admitted to identify him); 1902, People v. Taylor, 136 Cal. 19, 69 Pac. 292 (a larceny, admitted to identify); Kansas: 1874, State v. Folwell, 14 Kan. 105, 109 (larceny of a horse; to identify the defendants, one who saw the wagon-tracks was allowed to say that he knew them because the wagon was his); Maine: 1867, State v. Bartlett, 55 Me. 200, 214 (to show a witness' acquaintance with the defendant and ability to identify him, the witness was allowed to say that he was an officer in a State prison; whether he might properly have said that he saw the defendant there was not decided); Massachusetts: 1875, Com. v. Sturtivant, 117 Mass. 123 (three persons found murdered in or about the same house; the fact was admitted that all were killed with the same weapon, at the same time); Missouri: 1907, State v. Toohey, 203 Mo. 674, 102 S. W. 530 (burglary); 1910, State v. Dunwoody, 231 Mo. 48, 132 S. W. 227 (fraudulent registration; registration elsewhere, admitted to identify); New York: 1875, Foster v. State, 63 N. Y. 619 (burglary; the taking of another article at the same time, admitted to identify the source of goods found in the defendant's possession); 1880, Hope v. People, 83 N. Y. 419, 423, 427 (robbery of the key of a bank from the cashier; at the time of the robbery of the key, all of the gang of robbers were masked; but upon a showing that the same gang subsequently robbed the bank, the fact was admitted of the defendant's participation in the latter robbery, to identify him); Oklahoma: 1908, Vickers v. U. S., 1 Okl. Cr. 452, 98 Pac. 467 (rape; a burglary about the same time, admitted to identify accused); Oregon: 1881, State v. Wintzingerode, 9 Or. 153, 157 (the identification of a gun used in the murder, and found in the defendant's possession, as one stolen from the deceased, admitted); 1900, State v. O'Donnell, 36 Or. 222, 61 Pac. 892 (larceny; possession of other stolen property, not admitted on the facts); Pennsylvania: Brown v. Com., 76 Pa. 319, 321, 337 (murder of Annetta K., at her house; the fact was offered of the murder of her husband, Daniel K., at the same time, near the house, with the same weapon, and of the possession of money in the house by the husband and of other circumstances showing that the two murders were committed by the same person; admitted, because "when two persons are murdered at the same time and place, and under circumstances evidencing that both acts were committed by the same person or persons, and were part of one and the same transaction or res gestæ, and tend to throw light on the motive and manner of the murder for which the prisoner is indicted", the second murder is admissible); 1881, Moyer v. Com., 98 Pa. 338, 349 (similar facts); Texas: 1908, Wyatt v. State, 55 Tex. Cr. 73, 114 S. W. 812 (robbery; another robbery on the same night, admitted); 1915, Collins v. State, 77 Tex. Cr. 156, 178 S. W. 345 (robbery).

See additional related instances cited ante, § 218 (inseparable acts).

(a place, book, document, or house) as to human beings. There is no room for the operation of the human will as affecting the validity of the inference, and hence there happens here to be no occasion for the discrimination, otherwise useful, between the second and third sub-titles of the present Title, i.e. evidence to prove a Human Quality or Condition, and evidence to prove a fact of External Nature.

The recorded rulings deal with chattels of various sorts,[1] and with documents, written or printed.[2]

§ 418. Utterances used to Identify Time or Place. It often happens that a place or a time is marked significantly by an utterance there or then occurring, so that the identification of it may alone be made, or best be made, by permitting the various witnesses to mention the utterance as an identifying mark. The utterance, not being used as an assertion to prove any fact asserted therein, is not obnoxious to the Hearsay rule (as explained post, § 1791), and may therefore be proved like any other identifying mark:

1865, COLT, J., in Earle v. Earle, 11 All. 1 (the libellant in divorce had called Ellen G. whose testimony tended if unexplained to show that she saw Mrs. E. sitting in the lap of § 417. [1] Can. 1921, R. v. Scheer, 57 D. L. R. 614, Alta. (automobile tires); U. S. 1896, Buchanan v. State, 109 Ala. 7, 19 So. 410 (defendant was charged with larceny from S. of a mixed lot of furnishing goods, ranging from shoe-tacks to shirts; S. had bought from G., who carried a large stock; comparison by the jury of the goods found in defendant's house and the original stock was held improper; no reason given; an absurd ruling); 1896, Crane v. State, 111 Ala. 45, 20 So. 590 (similar to the preceding); 1872, Com. v. Brooks, 109 Mass. 354 (the finding of a watch-ring at a certain place, admitted as evidence that a watch-robbery had taken place there); 1883, Com. v. Collier, 134 Mass. 203, 205 (to identify a barrel of beer as coming from S., the label of S. on the barrel was admitted; compare § 150, ante); 1888, Com. v. Kendrick, 147 Mass. 444, 18 N. E. 230 (identity of sampled beer with that possessed by the defendant; evidence "fairly establishing" it in the trial Court's opinion, held sufficient); 1875, DeArmond v. Neasmith, 32 Mich. 232 (gentleness of a heifer); 1882, Keith v. Tilford, 12 Nebr. 276, 11 N. W. 315 (herd of cattle).

For other cases illustrating the principle for stolen goods, compare the citations ante, §§ 148–152, 218.

[2] 1684, Lady Ivy's Trial, 10 How. St. Tr. 555, 617, 640 (defendant's title-deed shown to be forged because it read, in the recital of date, "the 13th day of November, in the 2d and 3d years of the reigns of our soveign lord and lady Philip and Mary by the grace of God king and queen of England, Spain, France, both Sicilies, Jerusalem, and Ireland, etc.", although the style of deeds until the next summer, when Philip acceded to the kingdom of Spain, was "king and queen of England, France, Naples, Jerusalem and Ireland, princes of Spain and Sicily"; this the Court calls "a natural, legal evidence, and a proper evidence in things of this nature to detect a forgery"); 1835, Johnson v. Morgan, 7 A. & E. 233 (libel by a song; to prove the contents of the particular song charged, the paper being lost, it was held sufficient evidence that 1000 copies of song had been printed by M., 300 of them put for sale with H., that the song charged had been bought of H., and that it corresponded with one produced which belonged to the 1000 copies; Coleridge, J.: "There is no rule, respecting the proof of identity, peculiar to the case of a printed paper; the evidence may depend upon correspondence in size, appearance, and other circumstances"); 1900, Carte v. Dennis, 5 N. W. Terr. 32, 45 (infringement of copyright of an opera; a printed copy produced held sufficiently identified); 1849, Com. v. Miller, 3 Cush. Mass. 243, 251 (to show that three certain notes were forgeries, thirty others were admitted, as indicating by the identity of marks that they were formed from one pattern by tracing); 1881, Shelden v. Warner, 45 Mich. 640, 8 N. W. 529 (three similar kinds of ink in each of two documents, used to show an identity of source); 1813, Southwick v. Stevens, 10 John. N. Y. 443, 446 (the source of a newspaper evidenced by the features of the type).

For other illustrations, see the rulings dealing with opinion testimony to the ink, paper, and other marks of documents (post, §§ 2024–2027), with the production of the original of a newspaper (post, §§ 1234, 1237), and the authentication of printed matter (post, §§ 440, 2150).

Mr. R. in Mrs. E's. bedroom; Mr. R. testified that while Mrs. E. was ill in bed in her house Mr. R. on one occasion, at Mrs. R.'s request, took Mrs. E. in his lap to enable Mrs. R. to make the bed, and when Mrs. R. returned after a moment's absence he said to her that "Ellen had been in"; Mrs. R. testified to a similar effect; to the admission of the statement by Mr. R. to his wife an objection was made): "It was important, as the case stood, for the libellee to satisfy the jury that Mr. and Mrs. R. were testifying to the same occasion. . . . Any circumstance or act occurring at that transaction and remembered by both witnesses would show that they were testifying to the same occasion and would be clearly competent. So we are of opinion that the conversation of the parties or any declarations made at the time are to be regarded as of the nature of verbal acts, and admissible for the purpose of identifying the occasion of which the witnesses speak. Statements used for this limited purpose are admitted without regard to the truth of the fact stated. . . . There is no violation of the rule against hearsay evidence."

This principle is generally accepted. But it is to be understood that the utterance cannot be used as having any assertive value; and some Courts occasionally refuse to allow the specific tenor of the utterance to be stated, where a special danger exists of giving improper credit to it as a hearsay assertion.[1]

From this use of identifying utterances by several witnesses testifying to a common time or place, distinguish the following superficially similar uses: (1) mentioning a third person's utterance as a reason for observing a particular fact (post, § 655); (2) mentioning it as a reason for recollecting a particular fact (post, § 730); (3) using one's own prior utterance of a fact to corroborate one's present testimony and repel the suggestion of recent contrivance (post, § 1130).

§ 418. [1] The principle is illustrated in the following cases: ENGLAND: 1846, R. v. Richardson, 2 Cox Cr. 361; Denman, L. C. J., and Alderson, B. (to show the date when a conversation with the accused about poison occurred, the witness was allowed to state a remark which he shortly afterwards made to C. about it, so that by calling C. the time could be fixed; but "of course it could only be used to fix the time of the prisoner's conduct"); UNITED STATES: Alabama: 1919, Rogers v. State, — Ala. —, 83 So. 359 (receiving stolen goods; larceny of goods from another owner, not allowed to be used on the facts as tending to identify the time, etc.): Georgia: 1887, Barrows v. State, 80 Ga. 194, 5 S. E. 64 (a remark of D. served to mark the time after which a witness obtained certain knowledge); Iowa: 1899, State v. Dunn, 109 Ia. 750, 80 N. W. 1068 (conversation admitted to fix a date); 1900, Stewart v. Anderson, 111 Ia. 329, 82 N. W. 770 (similar; left to the trial Court's discretion); Mass. 1850, Com. v. Webster, Mass., Bemis' Rep. 269, 295 (fixing the time of seeing a person, by notes written and received on that day, allowed); 1865. Earle v. Earle, 11 All. 1 (see quotation supra); 1876, Com. v. Piper, 120 Mass. 187; 1877, Com. v. Sullivan, 123 Mass. 221 (to fix the time of a sale, the fact was admitted of A's testimony to it having been given at a certain time before a magistrate); 1878, Whitney v. Houghton, 125 Mass. 452 (the time of a sale was in issue; testimony as to the date of a conversation by the defendant in which he mentioned the sale was rejected; if the sale was proved, this seems unsound); Michigan: 1883, People v. Mead, 50 Mich. 229, 15 N. W. 95 (note that in this Court some of the precedents in §§ 655, 730, post, where utterances fixing one's recollection or attention are held admissible, are used as though they fell under the present head); Rhode Island: 1899, Agulino v. R. Co., 21 R. I. 263, 43 Atl. 63 (the fact of A calling B's attention to a circumstance, admitted to corroborate); Vermont: 1861, Hill v. North, 34 Vt. 616 (time fixed by a remark); 1881, Weeks v. Lyndon, 54 Vt. 640, 647 (similar); 1895, State v. Young, 67 Vt. 450, 32 Atl. 252 (similar); 1898, Wilkins v. Metcalf, 71 Vt. 103, 41 Atl. 1035 (similar).

SUB-TITLE III: EVIDENCE TO PROVE FACTS OF EXTERNAL INANIMATE NATURE

(EVENTS, CONDITIONS, TENDENCIES, CAUSES, QUALITIES, AND EFFECTS, OF THINGS AND PLACES)

CHAPTER XVI.

INTRODUCTORY

TOPIC I: IDENTITY

TOPIC II: OCCURRENCE OF AN EVENT

TOPIC III: EXISTENCE (OR PERSISTENCE) IN TIME

TOPIC IV: TENDENCY, CAPACITY, QUALITY, CAUSE, OR EFFECT

1. General Principles

2. Precedents arranged by Subjects

A. INSTANCES OF MATERIAL EFFECTS, AS EVIDENCE

B. INSTANCES OF CORPORAL EFFECTS, AS EVIDENCE

INTRODUCTORY

§ 430. Distinction between this and the preceding Subjects. In the classification of circumstantial evidence, as already observed (ante, § 43), there can be, at certain points, no sharp distinction between a Human Act, a Human Quality or Condition, and a Fact of External Inanimate Nature, with reference to evidencing them as propositions to be proved. Some matters, such as death, may sometimes be viewed in either the first or the second aspect; for other matters, such as the possession of land, it may not be easy to distinguish between the second and the third. The propositions which come to be proved before tribunals of justice embrace every sort of fact in life, and no classification not purely arbitrary can divide them for practical purposes into classes always absolutely distinct. All that can be done is to separate by themselves such ' facta probanda ' as are more or less related with reference to the mode of evidencing them and the considerations of probative value affecting the evidentiary facts. The grouping already set forth (ante, § 43) seems to find justifications in such natural considerations. That at the point where the lines of grouping are drawn some obscurity exists is a necessary defect of all such classifications, and does not affect their general validity. The inter-relation of the matters grouped under the first sub-title (evidence to prove a Human Act) has already been seen. Certain sorts of evidentiary facts — Character, Design, Habit, Motive — are specially appropriate and common in proving such matters, and the peculiar restrictions of our law upon the use of character have there constantly to be distinguished from the use of other sorts of related evidence, and make a combined consideration indispensable. The matters in the second sub-title (evidence to prove a Human Quality or Condition) are related with equal closeness. The use of specific instances of conduct, with its appurtenant dangers of unfair surprise, undue prejudice, and confusion of issues, is common to all. The prohibition of character-conduct has constantly to be distinguished from the use of other conduct; and the considerations of probative value and of auxiliary policy which are there applicable must be studied in comparison in order to appreciate their proper significance.

Coming now to the third and present group, we find its distinguishing feature to be the absence of the element of a human will and of the human emotion, reason, and character as affecting conduct. The evidencing of a human act from antecedent or subsequent human attributes, and the evidencing of a human quality or condition from human conduct, involve a class of experience as to the meaning of human attributes and human conduct which is peculiar and distinct. Where the thing to be proved and the evidence to prove it do not contain these elements, the considerations of Relevancy (ante, § 30), affecting the inferences to be drawn, are necessarily different, and suggest naturally a distinct grouping for practical purposes. The considerations of Auxiliary Probative Policy (ante, § 42), where these human elements are lacking, have also a different force and bearing. Thus, for practical purposes, the third grouping is broadly marked out by considerations essentially connected with the propositions to be proved and the evidence to prove them. While there may easily be doubt and difference of opinion as to the appropriate group for a few topics, the validity of the grouping as a whole is not thereby affected.

The warning must here be repeated (ante, § 43) that for the classification of any evidential question, as well as for the working out of its solution, the only safe and scientific and practical way is to ask perpetually two questions: 1. What is the exact proposition to be proved? 2. What is the evidentiary fact from which the inference is desired to be drawn? With these two data in hand — the abscissa and the coördinate, so to speak, of the problem — most places in the topography of the law of Evidence ought easily to be found.

§ 431. General Principles of Relevancy. The general principles of Relevancy, or Probative Value, as already examined, here receive constant and copious illustration.[1] Their application is in some ways more normal and more instructive, because less complicated by the varying considerations of Auxiliary Probative Policy (ante, § 42) which come into play where human conduct is concerned. The exposition of principles (ante, §§ 30–36) will serve as an introduction to the treatment of the ensuing precedents; but specific reference to the various principles is also made, as occasion requires, at the appropriate places.

§ 432. Division of Topics. The kinds of ' facta probanda ' may be subdivided, having regard to those propositions evidenced by more or less associated facts and inferences, into four categories or groups:

I. Identity (for example, whether a machine delivered was the same as the one agreed to be delivered);

II. Occurrence of an Event (for example, whether a tree fell, or whether lightning struck a house);

III. Existence, or Persistence, in Time (for example, whether a defect in a street or a house was in existence at the time in issue);

§ 431. [1] From the point of view of logic and psychology as applicable to argument before the jury (not the rules of Admissibility), see the materials collected in the present author's "Principles of Judicial Proof, as given by Logic, Psychology, and General Experience, and illustrated in Judicial Trials" (1913), §§ 4–13.

IV. Tendency, Capacity, Quality, Cause, or Effect (for example, whether a place in a sidewalk was dangerous, or whether a gunshot could carry a certain distance).

Here, again, no specific single terms can accurately distinguish the different groups, nor is it possible always to draw the lines sharply between the various groups. The practical justification for the grouping will be best appreciated in consulting the precedents. Under one or another of these heads seem to come all the evidential questions that concern external inanimate nature.

It has already been seen (ante, § 43) that, for the purpose of grouping evidential facts involving similiar inferences, it is usually convenient to arrange them according as the inference is Prospectant, Concomitant, or Retrospectant, i.e. according as a view is taken forward in time from the evidentiary fact to the ' factum probandum ', or concurrently at the two, or backward from the former to the latter. This distinction, which has been seen to be practically useful in both the preceding groups of evidential material, is here equally useful in most of the topics.

§ 433. Combination of Different Inferences. A given evidentiary fact may and usually does involve (as already observable in dealing with the other materials) more than one of these processes of inference. For example, in proving a sidewalk-hole to be unsafe, the evidence may be that A fell there two weeks ago; this involves, first, an inference in the fourth group, namely that the place was then unsafe, and, secondly, an inference in the third group, namely, that its unsafeness two weeks before evidences its unsafeness at the time in issue; and either of these inferences may be rejected as unsound, while the other remains sound. Again, to prove the identity of a bale of goods delivered, its features six months before may be offered; and this involves the soundness of two inferences, one of the first and one of the third sort. Again, the question being whether a tree was lying across a street on January 1, the evidentiary fact that the tree was struck by lightning on July 1 preceding involves two inferences, namely, that the tree fell when struck, and that its fallen condition continued till the time in question, i.e. an inference of the second and one of the third sorts. Again, to show that a dust-explosion occurred in a certain room, the evidentiary fact that a dust-explosion previously occurred in the same room involves two and perhaps three inferences, — first, that there is a tendency in a room thus circumstanced for the dust to explode spontaneously, secondly, that as a result of this tendency an explosion did occur, and perhaps (intervening between these two), thirdly, that the condition at the previous time continued up to the time in question, — inferences, respectively, of the fourth, the second, and the third sorts.

In spite, however, of this incidental resort to two or more of the kinds of inference in one piece of evidence, the kinds of inference, as types, remain distinct. They are governed by distinct considerations and must be studied separately. Without analyzing them and studying them separately, nothing but confusion results. It has already been seen, for instance (ante, § 192), that in offering to prove an immoral act for the purpose of showing the same person to have done an act charged, we cannot neglect to separate the process of thought into its two elements of inference, i.e. (1) A's immoral act indicates probably an immoral trait; (2) this trait indicates the doing of the act in question; for while in general both of these forms of argument are forbidden, yet the prohibition is a limited one only and rests on distinct grounds for each, and thus it may happen that the immoral act offered in the particular case does not come within the prohibition of (1), nor does the immoral trait evidenced by it come within the prohibition of (2) — as, where the intercourse of a rape-complainant with a third person is offered to show the probability of her consent. The same analysis and caution is here necessary in order to avoid being misled by the superficial nature of an evidentiary fact. It is easy to misuse a rule by ignoring the reasons for it.

Topic I: IDENTITY

§ 434. Identity of One Object with Another. The mode of inference used in proving identity is precisely the same for objects of inanimate nature and for human beings. The principle has been already examined (ante, §§ 411–418), and the precedents upon the present subject have been there considered; so that no further notice of the subject is necessary.

Topic II: OCCURRENCE OF AN EVENT

§ 435. Scope of the Subject. This term (the Occurrence of an Event) may serve as a generalization to cover all cases where a thing is thought of as coming into being or as producing result, and includes therefore theoretically matters which might perhaps be conceived of also under the category of Existence. For example, if the 'factum probandum' be the destruction of a house, it might ordinarily be conceived of either as an event — the momentary fact of destruction, — or as a condition of existence — the state of being destroyed.[1] For practical evidential purposes, however, the choice of terms is here not important. The distinction between the second and the third groups is the distinction between the mere fact of occurrence or existence as such, and the fact of occurrence or existence with reference to time. In the present group it is asked how to prove the fact of destruction or non-destruction; and, with reference to the evidentiary matters pointing forward as causes of its probable destruction or pointing backwards as effects or traces of its destruction, it is immaterial whether we regard "event" or "condition", "occurrence" or "existence", as the more appropriate term for this category. In the mass of instances the notion of the occurrence of an event is the more appropriate term; and that term (subject to an exception pointed out post, § 437) will be employed as the general one.

§ 435. [1] "When successive phenomena are in question, these abstracted portions ['factum probandum' and evidentiary fact] may always themselves be viewed as events, even where so uneventful as hardly to deserve the name in popular language. Thus, where any quality of any thing changes ever so slightly — say, when a thermometer rises one degree —, we have what is here considered an 'event' . . . It may seem [in these examples] strange to call a large river or a large town 'events', but here the names are only used elliptically, for the growth of the town and the continued existence of the river." (Sidgwick, Fallacies, 333, 338).

§ 436. Occurrence of an Event, as evidenced from Cause or Effect. An event may be evidenced circumstantially by a cause or by an effect. This mode of inference is available in the three forms already mentioned (ante, § 432), — Prospectant, Retrospectant, and Concomitant. For example, the sinking of a ship is evidenced prospectantly by the presence of a storm in the vicinity; the occurrence of a fire is evidenced retrospectantly by the blackened ruins left as its traces; the revolution of car-wheels is evidenced concomitantly, by the motion of the car, to the person riding in it. This type of inference, though perhaps in practice the commonest of all, gives rise, nevertheless, to practically no judicial rulings. One reason for their rarity is that, for the occurrences of external or inanimate nature, testimonial evidence is commonly abundant. Another reason is that, where circumstantial evidence is resorted to, the instinctive logic which suggests the offer of evidence will also suffice to convince the tribunal and the opponent of its propriety; nobody, for instance, would object to the offer of certain blackened and charred wood as evidencing a fire. Still another reason is that, where the desired inference transcends the scope of ordinary instinct and experience, it is offered as the subject of a testimonial knowledge or opinion by an expert witness, — as where a physician testifies that froth in the lungs of a corpse evidences a certain kind of death. Another reason is that most events of external nature are associated with some human act, and hence the proof involves evidence of the act.[1] But a reason the most important for present purposes is that an inference of this type, though in form the first one to be put forward as the main inference, frequently — if not usually — resolves itself into another of a different type, and the evidential question comes to turn upon the other. This feature it is necessary to explain more fully. The process may be examined for each of the three modes of inference in turn, — prospectant (inference from a prior or causal fact), retrospectant (inference from an effect), and concomitant:

(1) Prior Cause, as the basis of inference. That a corporal injury will cause a permanent disability to work; that noxious fumes will cause the destruction of herbage; — these are examples of this sort of inference. The evidential offer may be put in this way: The fact of injury is offered as evidence that at a future time there will ensue an inability to work; the fact of noxious fumes is offered as evidence that at a future time there will ensue no herbage. Such evidential offers would unquestionably be recognized as proper. But in practice these offers involving an argument from cause to effect do not raise any evidential questions in the above form, but resolve themselves into others; and this in two chief ways: (a) Where the desired inference is to an unknown or future effect or state of things which it is said the evidential fact will probably cause, the inference rests on an important assumption which in its turn becomes the subject of a new evidential question. To take the second illustration above, and state it more accurately: The fact of these fumes having a tendency to destroy herbage evidences that in future they will probably result in destroying the herbage in question. Now the evidential offer is in this shape unquestionably sound; but this form of statement — while accurately illustrating the present type of argument — brings out the necessity of proving, in its turn, a fact of a new and different category, viz. this assumed tendency of the fumes to destroy herbage; and this fact of tendency (or capacity) is seen to be in reality the probable point of controversy. It is in attempting to evidence this alleged tendency that the troublesome evidential questions arise; and these questions, so numerous in practice, involve a different sort of inference and different considerations both of probative value and of collateral inconvenience (herein dealt with post, §§ 441–464).[2] (b) Where the desired inference is as to the cause of a concededly existing state of things or occurred event, the same situation is usually reproduced. Thus, in the above illustration, where herbage is conceded to have been destroyed, and the dispute is whether the fumes in question were the cause of the destruction, the evidential suggestion that something harmful to herbage was the cause which would probably effect the destruction of the herbage would plainly be proper; its relevancy is apparent. But the real point of controversy here, as in the preceding class of cases, now comes to be this supposed tendency of these particular fumes to destroy herbage; and it is in the process of evidencing this tendency that the evidential difficulties arise; and these, as just noted, involve different principles.

§ 436. [1] See examples under §§ 148–160, ante, which otherwise might be appropriately dealt with here.

(2) Subsequent Effect, as the basis of inference. That the falling barometer indicates the existence of an atmospheric disturbance; that the derailed car indicates the prior occurrence of a collision or other destructive event; — these are instances of inferences from effect back to the existence of a cause. Such inferences, however, rarely raise evidential questions in practice, for reasons the same as those just explained. Thus, in the illustration above used, the destruction of the herbage is evidently relevant, without question, as indicating the same destructive influence of atmosphere, soil, or the like; but in the further process of fixing on the fumes in question as the precise cause, either we proceed to offer that specific inference through an expert witness, who asserts as a matter of professional experience that the appearance of the herbage indicates specific fumes as the course (in which case no question of circumstantial relevancy arises), or, in attempting otherwise to fix upon the fumes as one of the probable destructive influences, it must first be shown that they have this tendency to destroy herbage; so that in evidencing this tendency, the argument sets up new auxiliary inferences, and has travelled into the scope of a new category of fact. Thus, in general, the inference from an effect to the existence or operation of a cause is usually so proper as to be unquestionable, or else leads to a new controversy as to whether the supposed cause has any causing tendency of the alleged sort, and this new controversy involves a different sort of inference.

[2] An example of the simple use of such evidence, offered in the form of an expert's assertion of a physical law, is this: 1909, Cutts v. Boston Elev. R. Co., 202 Mass. 450, 89 N. E. 21 (whether a passenger's fall from a car-platform was caused by the motorman's sudden turning on of the power; the defendant contended that such a jerk would have tended to throw the plaintiff inwards, the plaintiff contended that it might equally throw him outwards).

(3) Concomitant Events, as the basis of inference. An event cannot be inferred from its concomitant event except on the assumption that they have a common cause, or unless the inference is really not one of concomitancy but of cause and effect. An example of the latter sort is the inference of fire from smoke, i.e. it is really the inference of fire as a cause from smoke as the effect. An example of the former sort is the inference of revolving wheels from the motion of the car, i.e. there is really an inference, first from the motion to the motive power as a cause, and next, from the motive power to the revolution of the wheels as a common effect of the same cause. In some instances, however, for practical purposes, this latter analysis may be neglected and the inference treated as a single one; these instances are dealt with in the next sections. Otherwise, no separate problem is involved in this form of argument.

Topic III: Existence, or Persistence, in Time

There is, in strictness, no place for a separate category of mere Existence, as distinguished from Occurrence; for, as already suggested (ante, § 435), the notion of a thing's either coming into being or of its having been in being is an inclusive and single notion, with reference to which inferences from cause or from effect may equally be made. Thus in inferring future disability from corporal injury, it is immaterial whether the former be termed the occurrence of an event or the existence of a condition; the inquiry is merely how far we may infer towards it from something else as its cause or its effect; and the term Occurrence has therefore been employed (ante, § 435) as the one most generally applicable to the ' factum probandum.' Nevertheless, it is convenient to separate, for some purposes, a category of Existence in Time as the ' factum probandum ', i.e. those instances in which the Existence in Time of an object, condition, or quality is to be evidenced by a prior, subsequent, or concomitant existence. The inference may, as usual, be of one of these three general types; but the first two are not dissimilar in their operation, and may be considered together.

§ 437. (1) Existence, from Prior or Subsequent Existence; General Principle, applied in Sundry Instances (Highways, Machines, Buildings, Railway Tracks, etc.). When the existence of an object, condition, quality, or tendency at a given time is in issue, the prior existence of it is in human experience some indication of its probable persistence or continuance at a later period. The degree of probability of this continuance depends on the chances of intervening circumstances having occurred to bring the existence to an end. The possibility of such circumstances will depend almost entirely on the nature of the specific thing whose existence is in issue and the particular circumstances affecting it in the case in hand. That a soap-bubble was in existence half-an-hour ago affords no inference at all that it is in existence now; that Mt. Everest was in existence ten years ago is strong evidence that it exists yet; whether the fact of a tree's existence a year ago will indicate its continued existence to-day will vary according to the nature of the tree and the conditions of life in the region. So far, then, as the interval of time is concerned, no fixed rule can be laid down; the nature of the thing and the circumstances of the particular case must control.

Similar considerations affect the use of subsequent existence as evidence of existence at the time in issue. Here the disturbing contingency is that some circumstance operating in the interval may have been the source of the subsequent existence, and the propriety of the inference will depend on the likelihood of such intervening circumstances having occurred and been the true origin.[1] On landing at New York it can hardly be inferred that the steamer at the next dock has been there for a week; but it may usually be inferred that the dock has been there for some years; while the particular circumstances of appearance and the like will in the latter instance affect the length of time to which the inference could be carried back. Here, as with prior indications, the interval of time to which any inference will be allowable must depend upon the nature of the thing and the circumstances of the particular case.

The opponent, on the principle of Explanation (ante, § 34), may always attempt to explain away the effect of the evidence by showing that in the meantime other circumstances have occurred to raise a probability of change instead of continuance.

This general principle that a prior or subsequent existence is evidential of a later or earlier one has been repeatedly laid down, and has even been spoken of as a Presumption (post, § 2530):

1820, BEST, J., in R. v. Burdett, 4 B. & Ald. 124: "I am to presume a thing always [to have been] in the state in which it is found, unless I have evidence that at some previous time it was in a different state."

1847, SANDFORD, V. C., in Bogardus v. Trinity Church, 4 Sandf. Ch. 744: "It is a rule of evidence, founded on the experience of human affairs, that where a state of things is once established by proof, the law presumes that such a state of things continues until the contrary is shown or a different presumption is raised from the nature of the subject in question."

§ 437. [1] Quoted with approval in Potlatch Lumber Co. v. Anderson, C. C. A., 199 Fed. 742 (1912). The contrary statement, as to subsequent existence, by Gray, C. J., in Chandler v. Aqueduct Co., 122 Mass. 307 (1877), is wholly unsound; and has been repudiated by the neat remark in Laplante v. Mills, Mass., infra: "It is said that presumptions do not run backward; but that depends on the case."

1867, BIGELOW, C. J., in Com. v. Billings, 97 Mass. 405: "Facts and circumstances in their nature continuous may always be shown to exist anterior to the precise period when it is necessary to show their existence, unless the interval is too great to afford a reasonable inference that the same state or condition of things has remained unchanged."

1869, COLT, J., in Thayer v. Thayer, 101 Mass. 113: "The rule is that a condition once proved is presumed to have been produced by causes operating in the usual way, and to have continuance till the contrary be shown."

That no fixed rule can be prescribed as to the time or the conditions within which a prior or subsequent existence is evidential, is sufficiently illustrated by the precedents, from which it is impossible (and rightly so) to draw a general rule. They may be roughly grouped into two classes, — those in which the evidence has been received without any preliminary showing as to the influential circumstances remaining the same in the interval (thus leaving it to the opponent to prove their change by way of explanation in rebuttal), and those in which such preliminary showing is required. Whether it should be required must depend entirely on the case in hand, and it is useless to look or to wish for any detailed rules.

The precedents show the principle applied to all manner of subjects, — to the condition of a highway,[2] or of a bridge,[3] or of a railway track, station, or roadbed,[4]

[2] Connecticut: 1900, Dean v. Sharon, 72 Conn. 667, 45 Atl. 963 (the sameness of a highway's condition being shown, its condition after the accident was admitted); 1914, Ross v. Stamford, 88 Conn. 260, 91 Atl. 201 (presence of slippery snow and ice, without specifying the time, excluded); Iowa: 1895, Hunt v. Dubuque, 96 Ia. 314, 65 N. W. 319 (condition of a sidewalk a year before, admissible, if substantially unchanged); 1899, Bailey v. Centreville, 108 Ia. 20, 78 N. W. 831 (subsequent condition, unchanged, of a sidewalk, admitted); Massachusetts: 1884, Barrenberg v. Boston, 137 Mass. 231 (condition of a sidewalk as to ice, before and after the time in issue, admitted); 1902, Tobin v. Brimfield, 182 Mass. 117, 65 N. E. 28 (condition of a highway four or five days after an accident, held not improperly excluded in the trial Court's discretion); Michigan: 1892, Fuller v. Jackson, 92 Mich. 197, 203, 52 N. W. 1075 (condition of a sidewalk-plank the next morning, admitted); 1908, Williams v. Lansing, 152 Mich. 169, 115 N. W. 961 (sidewalk a week or two afterwards, admitted); Minnesota: 1898, Hall v. Austin, 73 Minn. 134, 75 N. W. 1121 (rotten condition of planking a week later, admitted); Missouri: 1904, Norton v. Kramer, 180 Mo. 536, 79 S. W. 699 (sidewalk); Pennsylvania: 1895, Link v. R. Co., 165 Pa. 75, 30 Atl. 820, 822 (condition of a sidewalk two days later, admitted); 1898, Potter v. Natural Gas Co., 183 Pa. 575, 39 Atl. 7 (similar condition of pipe in a road up to a few weeks previous, admitted); Tennessee: 1897, Rosenbaum v. Shoffner, 98 Tenn. 624, 40 S. W. 1086 (condition of the place of an accident next day, admitted); Vermont: 1910, Herrick v. Holland, 83 Vt. 502, 77 Atl. 6 (condition of highway holes four days later, when substantially unchanged, admitted); Washington: 1902, Bell v. Spokane, 30 Wash. 508, 71 Pac. 31 (subsequent condition of a sidewalk, admitted); Wisconsin: 1893, Schuenke v. Pine River, 84 Wis. 669, 677, 51 N. W. 1007 (condition of a highway at a later time, admitted).

See also, for this inference in combination with others, the cases cited post, Bailey v. Trumbull, Conn., § 458; Hudson v. R. Co., Ia., § 458; Stone v. Ins. Co., Mich., § 460; Quinlan v. Utica, Gillrie v. Lockport, N. Y., § 458.

[3] 1894, Jessup v. Osceola Co., 92 Ia. 178, 60 N. W. 485 (condition of bridge-planking, etc., a few days afterwards, admitted); 1894, Washington C. & A. T. v. Case, 80 Md. 36, 30 Atl. 571 (decayed condition of a bridge nearly a year after an accident, admitted; but the fact of subsequent need of repairs fourteen months after the accident was excluded).

[4] Alabama: 1890, Birmingham U. R. Co. v. Alexander, 93 Ala. 133, 136, 9 So. 525 (injury at a railroad track; its condition from one to five months thereafter, admitted, where coupled with evidence that its condition had remained unchanged); 1906, Redus v. Milner C. & R. Co., 148 Ala. 665, 41 So. 634 (condition of a railway track eighteen months later, excluded); or of a stream,[5] or of premises, without[6] or within,[7] or of machinery or apparatus,[8] or of a stock of goods,[9] or of sundry articles,[10] or of the condition of a human body[11] or of an animal.[12]

Connecticut: 1889, Dyson v. R. Co., 57 Conn. 24, 17 Atl. 137 (the condition of a railroad crossing in winter was shown, the accident having taken place in summer when the trees were in leaf); 1899, Cunningham v. R. Co., 72 Conn. 244, 43 Atl. 1047 (prior condition of a rail as to elevation above highway, admitted); Illinois: 1882, Pennsylvania Co. v. Boylan, 104 Ill. 595, 599 (defective planks in a culvert; the lasting capacity of repairs made nine months before, admitted to show whether there was need for repairs at the time); Indiana: 1915, Chicago & E. R. Co. v. Mitchell, 184 Ind. 383, 110 N. E. 265 (injury to a car-repairer; display of a repairer's flag at that place several days before, held not improperly admitted, in the trial Court's discretion); Missouri: 1885, Hipsley v. R. Co., 88 Mo. 348, 354 (injury by derailment; condition of the roadbed other than at time of accident, excluded); 1887, Stoker v. R. Co., 91 Mo. 509, 516, 4 S. W. 389 (condition of a culvert, as to overflowing, from one to three years before or after, excluded; but such condition is admissible "within such reasonable time as will from the nature and circumstances of the case induce or justify a reasonable presumption or inference that the condition is the same and unchanged"); 1906, Dean v. Kansas C. St. L. & C. R. Co., 199 Mo. 386, 97 S. W. 910 (condition of rails six months admitted; "we may be presumed to know that bad steel rails do not get any better by further use for six months or improve like wine with age"); North Carolina: 1897, Hampton v. R. Co., 120 N. C. 534, 27 S. E. 96 (appearance of the place of an accident more than two years later, after changes had occurred, excluded); Rhode Island: 1899, Agulino v. R. Co., 21 R. I. 263, 43 Atl. 63 (lighting of a station; its condition at prior and subsequent times, excluded on the facts as too remote);

[5] 1873, Lewin v. Simpson, 38 Md. 468, 483 (the overflow of back-water since suit begun, admitted to show the overflow before that time, in connection with a showing that the grade, etc., remained the same); 1873, Brooke v. Winters, 39 Md. 509 (the flow of a mill-stream after suit begun, admitted to show its flow before that time; but subject to the opponent's explanation as to the recent operation of other causes); 1861, Dewey v. Williams, 43 N. H. 384, 387 (diversion of a mill-stream; measurements of water-heights while the conditions "remained substantially unchanged", admitted).

[6] 1894, Osgood v. Chicago, 154 Ill. 194, 41 N. E. 40 (subsequent condition admitted, where the premises taken by eminent domain had changed somewhat between the taking and the trial); 1913, Whiting-Middleton C. Co. v. Preston, 121 Md. 210, 88 Atl. 110 (nature of excavation nineteen months later, admitted, no substantial change of conditions appearing); 1878, Ulrich v. People, 39 Mich. 245 (rape; condition of the field, where it was said to have occurred, more than a month later, as showing no traces of a struggle, excluded); 1898, Beardslee v. Columbia Tp., 188 Pa. 496, 41 Atl. 618 (place of accident; subsequent condition admissible, if substantial identity is not changed, and changes are pointed out; the trial Court's discretion to control).

[7] 1906, Foley v. Pioneer M. & M. Co., 144 Ala. 178, 40 So. 273 (condition of mine ventilation, thirteen hours after an accident, admitted); 1895, Colorado M. & I. Co. v. Rees, 21 Colo. 435, 42 Pac. 42 (previous open condition of an elevator-door, admitted, to show the defective absence of a lock); 1898, Sievers v. P. B. & L. Co., 151 Ind. 642, 50 N. E. 877 (condition of an elevator after an injury, admitted); 1896, Marston v. Dingley, 88 Me. 546, 34 Atl. 414 (subsequent condition of a habitation, admitted); 1877, Com. v. Powers, 123 Mass. 244 (keeping liquor with intent to sell; the condition of the room on the next day, as to fixtures, etc., admitted); 1900, Barker v. Mfg. Co., 176 Mass. 203, 57 N. E. 366 (subsequent condition as to the amount of steam in a room, admitted); 1901, Toland v. Paine F. Co., 179 Mass. 501, 61 N. E. 52 (condition of stairs four hours later, admitted); 1904, Droney v. Doherty, 186 Mass. 205, 71 N. E. 547 (condition of an elevator the next day, admitted, no change having been suggested); 1893, Leidlein v. Meyer, 95 Mich. 586, 591, 55 N. W. 367 (condition of premises injured by water, a year later, excluded); 1904, Meyers v. Highland B. G. M. Co., 28 Utah 96, 77 Pac. 347 (position of a plank in a mine, several hours later, allowed).

[8] 1898, Rockford C. R. Co. v. Blake, 74 Ill. App. 175, 173 Ill. 354, 50 N. E. 1070 (prior condition of car-brakes, received); 1900, Powers v. R. Co., 175 Mass. 466, 56 N. E. 710 (condition of a locomotive step, some time before and after, lack of change of condition not being shown, held not improperly excluded); 1903, Boucher v. Robeson Mills, 182 Mass. 500, 65 N. E. 819 (condition of defective machine-belt at time of trial, admitted, though altered by repair); 1921, State v. Claymonst, — N. J. L. —, 114 Atl. 155 (condition of arc-light at street-corner at 2 A.M., admissible to show its condition a few hours earlier); 1909, Corcoran v. Albuquerque Traction Co., 15 N. M. 9, 103 Pac. 645 (car-step's condition seven months before, admitted); 1903, Hannum v. Hill, 52 W. Va. 166, 43 S. E. 223 (condition of a broken telephone wire some months before and after the time in issue, excluded).

[9] 1904, Griffin v. Martel, — Conn. —, 58 Atl. 788 (value of a stock of goods sixteen months

The matter should be left entirely to the trial Court's discretion.

That the opponent may explain away the inference by other circumstances (as already noted) is also illustrated by the precedents.[13]

The presumption of continuity (post, § 2530) is founded on this inference.

These applications of the principle are analogous to the use of the same inference in evidencing, from prior or subsequent condition, a human quality, — habit, possession, ownership, partnership, and solvency (ante, § 382), emotion (ante, §§ 395–406), physical capacity (ante, § 225), insanity (ante, § 233), and character (post, §§ 1617, 1618). In the proof of a place or person by photographs (post, § 792), the principle is frequently applied.

Distinguish, however, the prohibition against using the subsequent repaired condition of a place or a machine as an admission of negligence (ante, § 283), and the propriety of using a prior dangerous condition as evidence of notice (ante, § 252).

§ 438. (2) Existence, from Concurrent Existence; the Whole evidenced by the Parts, etc. (Highways, Railway Tracks, Premises, etc.). The process of thought by which one thing concurrently indicates another rests on the assumption that in human experience the one is likely to be found associated with the other. This assumption, then, in one form or another, must underlie before, admitted); 1896, Scottish U. & N. I. Co. v. Stubbs, 98 Ga. 754, 27 S. E. 180 (an inventory of a stock of goods, made shortly before the fire and while another owned them, admitted); 1904, Union Hosiery Co. v. Hodgson, 72 N. H. 427, 57 Atl. 384 (joint use of steam; to show the amount of coal used, the consumption in the two or three years preceding and the year following, was held not improperly excluded in the trial Court's discretion, for dissimilarity of conditions, etc.).

[10] 1885, Mulliner v. Bronson, 114 Ill. 510, 513, 2 N. E. 671 (timber warranted of a certain quality when delivered; its quality after sawing and while being shipped, admitted; the opponent to show if possible that damage had occurred on the way); 1896, Laplante v. Mills, 165 Mass. 487, 43 N. E. 294 (the condition of a ladder two years after the accident, admitted, as involving the permanent and therefore unchanged structure of the ladder; "it is said that presumptions do not run backward; but that depends on the case"); 1865, Yates v. People, 32 N. Y. 512 (the question was whether the street-light would have shown the accused that his pursuer was an officer, and evidence of the light's power just before the trial was excluded); 1875, Lindsay v. People, 63 N.Y. 143, 147, 156 (blood-spots on a board; see post, § 451); 1878, King v. R. Co., 72 N. Y. 608 (subsequent condition of a piece of iron, admitted, the circumstances remaining the same); 1894, Foote v. Woodworth, 66 Vt. 216, 220, 28 Atl. 1034 (issue as to the soiled state of jars; test with a piece of paper, excluded, the conditions at the time in issue not being shown the same).

[11] 1893, People v. Hawes, 98 Cal. 648, 652, 33 Pac. 791 (murder; vest taken from deceased's body after burial, admitted, after evidence that condition remained the same); 1897, West Chicago St. R. Co. v. Kennedy-Cahill, 165 Ill. 496, 46 N. E. 368 (appearance of a person before and after an injury, admitted to show the source of illness); 1885, Williams v. State, 64 Md. 390, 1 Atl. 887 (condition of a human body some time after burial, admitted); 1892, French v. Wilkinson, 93 Mich. 322, 34, 523 N. W. 530 (injury by bite of dog; state of the limb three years later excluded); 1915, State v. Ilgenfritz, 263 Mo. 615, 173 S. W. 1041 (clothing and bloodspots thereon, not admitted because no proof was made as to the unchanged condition in the interim; unsound).

Compare the cases cited ante, § 225 (prior or subsequent physical condition)..

[12] 1874, Kansas S. Y. Co. v. Couch, 12 Kan. 612, 614 (to show the condition of cattle in Kansas in November, the fact of the condition of the cattle in Cherokee in October was rejected; "the fact that a thing is in a certain condition at one time is some proof that it is in the same condition at some subsequent time; but proof of this kind is usually confined to such things as are not liable to change suddenly or rapidly, and it is generally admissible only where better evidence cannot be obtained"); 1875, Freyman v. Knecht, 78 Pa. 141, 143 (a mare with diseased eyes; condition a year after the sale, admitted if the condition in the meantime was also shown).

[13] E.g. Dyson v. R. Co., Conn.; Brooke v. Winters, Md., supra.

any attempt to evidence the latter by showing the concurrent existence of the former. For practical purposes the situations may be grouped under three heads.

(a) Miscellaneous Instances. That the presence of smoke indicates the concurrent presence of combustion; that in coming upon sea-water in its natural place we are likely to come upon fish; that on apple-trees fruit is likely to be found in season, — these are illustrations of the form which this inference most usually takes. This form, however, is but superficially a concurrent indication; almost every apparent inference is in reality a prospectant one, i.e. from cause to effect. That apple-trees are likely to produce apples; that fire is likely to produce smoke, — such are the true forms of these arguments upon analysis. There are few, if any, genuine instances of concurrent argument of this sort;[1] and no rules of evidence have had occasion to be laid down. The inference in its true form has already been examined (ante, § 436, par. 3).

(b) Existence of the Whole inferred from a Part, or of one Part from Another. To argue to the whole from a part, or to one part from another, is also, in the last analysis, an argument from one effect of a common cause to another effect. But for practical purposes it is sufficient to treat the inference as an immediate one. The condition of the inference's propriety is that in human experience the whole has been found probably to exist with certain related parts; it is then admissible to use the existence of one of the parts as evidence from which to infer the presence of the whole or of one of the associated parts, — as where, observing a floating iceberg, it is inferred that beneath the water's surface is a larger mass of ice in the proportion usually found associated with such a mass above water; or where on observing, from one side of a locomotive, two driving-wheels, we infer that on the other side there are two similar ones. This sort of inference is common enough in trials, but does not seem to have raised any difficulties requiring rulings.[2]

(c) Condition or Quality in One Place, from Condition or Quality in Another. Logically of the same nature as the preceding, but in practice having a slightly different aspect, is the inference frequently desired to be made from the nature of a condition or quality in one place to the condition or quality at another place, usually in the vicinity. The logical assumption is that by a common cause or causes uniform effects have been produced over a given area, which is thenceforth related to the evidential place as a homogeneous whole to its parts. In practical application, therefore, the requirement is that the two places should be so related that they probably form parts of a homogeneous area including them both; and in such case the condition or quality of the one place is relevant to show the condition or quality of the other. This principle receives frequent application, — to highways,[3] to railway tracks, stations, and roadbeds,[4] to machines, buildings, and other

§ 438. [1] See Sidgwick, Fallacies, 333, for an exposition of this.

[2] 1904, Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Howell, 208 Ill. 155, 70 N. E. 15 (size of a freight-car, evidenced by the size of the series to which it belonged).

[3] Federal: 1886, Osborne v. Detroit, 36 Fed. 36, 38 (injury at a defective sidewalk; condition at another place near by, admitted, but on the theory that it would have led to notice of the defect in question); Connecticut: 1875, Taylor v. Monroe, 43 Conn. 42 (rejecting the fact of the safe condition of a place as shown by tests made at a different part where the conditions were different); 1899, Cunningham v. R. Co., 72 Conn. 244, 43 Atl. 1047 (condition of rail as to elevation above highway at other parts of a street, excluded); Idaho: 1909, Miller v. Mullan, 17 Ida. 28, 104 Pac. 660 (street-crossing; opinion not clear); Iowa: 1888, Hoyt v. Des Moines, 76 Ia. 430, 41 N. E. 63 (cited post, § 458); 1891, Riley v. Iowa Falls, 83 Ia. 761, 50 N. W. 33 (the condition of other planks "along the place of that accident", admitted); 1897, Faulk v. Iowa Co., 103 Ia. 442, 72 N. W. 757 (defect in a railing at or near the place in question, admitted); 1899, Bailey v. Centreville, 108 Ia. 20, 78 N. W. 831 (condition of sidewalk 200 feet away, admitted); Massachusetts: 1875, Brooks v. Acton, 117 Mass. 204 (injury at a ridge of ice and snow across the highway; to show its height, which was disputed, the fact of the depth of the snow in the adjoining woods was excluded, because the conditions were dissimilar); Michigan: Campbell v. Kalamazoo, 80 Mich. 655, 660, 45 N. W. 652, semble (condition of other parts of the sidewalk fronting the same lot, admitted); 1894, Edwards v. Three Rivers, 102 Mich. 153, 60 N. W. 451 (injury at a sidewalk; "condition of the walk in the vicinity", admitted); 1896, Wiel v. Mendon, 108 Mich. 251, 66 N. W. 58 (condition of the sidewalk several rods away, admitted); 1897, Canfield v. Jackson, 112 Mich. 120, 70 N. W. 444 (condition of the sidewalk in the vicinity of the accident, admitted); 1897, Haynes v. Hillsdale, 113 Mich. 44, 71 N. W. 466 (defects in other parts of the sidewalk built at the same time, admitted); 1902, Styles v. Decatur, 131 Mich. 443, 91 N. W. 622 ("general character and condition of that walk", admitted); 1908, Williams v. Lansing, 152 Mich. 169, 115 N. W. 961 (other defects in vicinity of a sidewalk, admitted); Minnesota: 1881, Kelley v. R. Co., Minn. 98, 100, 9 N. W. 588 (cited post, § 458); 1899, Lyons v. Red Wing, 76 Minn. 20, 78 N. W. 868 (condition of the adjacent sidewalk, admitted); New Hampshire: 1894, Emerson v. Lebanon, 67 N. H. 579, 39 Atl. 466 (condition of a highway-railing four years before, excluded on the facts); Oklahoma: 1903, Kingfisher v. Altizer, 13 Okl. 121, 74 Pac. 107 (defective bridge; "other defects in the bridge", admitted); Washington: 1919, Bullock v. Yakima Valley Transp. Co., 108 Wash. 413, 184 Pac. 641 (plaintiff was injured on a sidewalk and sued the county and the railroad company jointly; the latter introduced photographs showing the sidewalk's defective condition at other points, to evidence plaintiff's negligence in going upon it; held error as to the county, without an instruction that they were not evidence of the condition of the sidewalk at the point in question; unsound); Wisconsin: 1899, Conrad v. Ellington, 104 Wis. 367, 80 N. W. 456 (highway injury; general bad condition of the road in the vicinity two days before, admitted); 1901, Vielleese v. Green Bay, 110 Wis. 160, 85 N. W. 665 (sidewalk-condition "as far as the walk runs lengthwise", admitted); 1903, Hoffman v. North Milwaukee, 118 Wis. 278, 95 N. W. 274 (bad condition of a sidewalk across the street, admitted, not to show the condition at the place in issue, but to negative the plaintiff's negligence in going on the latter part).

For the use of such facts to evidence notice, see ante, § 252.

[4] 1885, Cleveland C. C. & I. R. Co. v. Newell, 104 Ind. 264, 267, 3 N. E. 836 (injury by derailment through a broken rail; the breaking of another rail at the same place on the same morning, admitted); 1875, Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Fox, 11 Bush Ky. 505 (injury by a defective railroad track; the defective condition of other portions of the same section, excluded as too remote); 1898, Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Henry, — Ky. —, 44 S. W. 428 (other holes in a station-platform, excluded; the present principle not noticed); 1893, Turner v. R. Co., 158 Mass. 266, 33 N. E. 520 (to prove that a frog became unblocked, not a short time before the accident, but long before, the fact of others being unblocked in the same vicinity was used, on the ground that they would probably not all have come unblocked at once); 1878, Grand R. & I. R. Co. v. Huntley, 38 Mich. 537, 540 (injury by derailment; defects in the track "where it was injured or displaced", admissible, but not "away from the scene of the injury"); 1883, Morse v. R. Co., 30 Minn. 465, 16 N. W. 358 (injury to an engineer, alleged to have happened through a broken rail and a defective switch; the fact was rejected of other defects in the same yard, because they were not shown to be the apparent result of the same causes); 1885, Hipsley v. R. Co., 88 Mo. 348, 354 (injury by derailment; condition of the roadbed other than "at the place of and the immediate vicinity of" the accident, excluded); 1887, Sidekum v. R. Co., 93 Mo. 400, 405, 4 S. W. 701 (derailment; the preceding case approved); 1871, Reed v. R. Co., 45 N. Y. 574, 576, 580, semble (defective ties, etc.; defective condition of the road half a mile away, excluded).

structures,[5] to natural growths and formations, weather conditions, and the like.[6] It would be a mistake to attempt to erect these specific rulings into hard-and-fast precedents; the law should do no more than recognize the general principle, leaving it entirely to the trial Court to apply it to each case. The steam-hammer of the Supreme Court is not needed to crack nuts.

§ 439. Same: Samples as Evidence of an Entire Lot. It is on the present principle that a sample is receivable in evidence to show the quality or condition of the entire lot or mass from which it is taken.[1] The requirement

[5] 1886, Fort Wayne v. Coombs, 107 Ind. 87, 7 N. E. 743 (a neighboring break in a sewer, admitted to show that the materials were defective); 1897, Snyder v. Albion, 113 Mich. 275, 71 N. W. 475 (decayed condition of timber in other parts of the same bridge, admitted); 1899, Rose v. St. Louis, 152 Mo. 602, 54 S. W. 440 (injury from the falling of a cornice-stone alleged to be rotten; condition of other stones in the cornice allowed to be shown); 1879, Plummer v. Ossipee, 59 N. H. 57 (Allen, J.: "The accident happened by the carriage running upon the log at its west end. The east end of the log was admitted to be in the highway. . . . Evidence of wheel marks upon the east end of the log was evidence of an obstruction at that place; and whether it was evidence of an obstruction at the place of the accident depended upon the similarity in size, form, and position, with reference to the travel upon the highway, of the west end of the log with the east end"); 1907, Lamb v. Philadelphia & R. R. Co., 217 Pa. 564, 66 Atl. 762 (condition of other parts of a roof, admitted); 1882, Randall v. Tel. Co., 54 Wis. 140, 11 N. W. 419 (injury by a fallen telegraph line; the fallen condition of the line at other near places and times, admitted to show the defective and negligent nature of the construction and maintenance); 1899, Baxter v. R. Co., 104 Wis. 307, 80 N. W. 644 (explosion of a boiler; defective part of a flue, admitted; Bardeen, J., diss.).

[6] 1892, Central R. Co. v. Ingram, 98 Ala. 395, 397, 12 So. 801 (absence of fog at an adjacent place where conditions were more favorable for it, admitted, to negative the existence of fog on the track); 1872, Cleland v. Thornton, 43 Cal. 437 (nature of timber burned; "character of the timber for milling purposes in that immediate neighborhood," admitted); Colo. Comp. L. 1921, § 3322 (drainage of contiguous mines; the Court may consider as evidence the effect of elevation or depression of water in "the same, contiguous, or separate lodes or mine", etc.); 1894, Hart v. Walker, 100 Mich. 406, 410, 59 N. W. 174 (the fact of hot weather in a place 12 miles away from that in issue, admitted); 1873, Stanbaugh v. Smith, 23 Oh. 594 (the existence of coal seams of certain thicknesses and quality upon other lands in a neighborhood, admitted to show the existence, quantity, and quality of coal on the premises in question).

§ 439. [1] ENGLAND: 1916, Wilkinson v. Clark, 2 K. B. 636 (violation of milk-standard law; a sample taken from the same cow on the day after the offence alleged, containing a percentage higher than standard, held admissible to show adulteration, provided conditions were similar); 1920, Smith v. Philpott, 1 K. B. 222 (like Wilkinson v. Clark; here a sample taken 3 days later was admitted); UNITED STATES: 1922, Cook v. Korshak, 301 Ill. 603, 134 N. E. 49 (trover against a pawnbroker for a stolen diamond ring; the defendant had refused to exhibit the diamond purchased by him; to prove value, the plaintiff produced two other diamonds originally in the same setting and called experts to their value; held error, the plaintiff's non-expert testimony to identity of quality being insufficient; unsound; inasmuch as the defendant had by his refusal to exhibit given rise to an inference on the principle of § 285, ante, the plaintiff should have been allowed to furnish her only available evidence; Lord Camden would have rendered a different decision); 1885, Epps v. State, 102 Ind. 539, 1 N. E. 491 (absence of arsenic in another sample from the same package, admitted to show the absence of arsenic); 1920, Davis v. Van Camp Packing Co., 189 Ia. 775, 176 N. W. 382 (plaintiff was poisoned by eating a can of pork and beans prepared by defendant; on the issue of defective condition and negligent preparation by failure to inspect, etc., the fact that other cans of beans purchased from the same consignment were found defective was admitted; "it is not necessarily evidence of other acts of negligence"); 1922, State v. Horowich, — Me. —, 116 Atl. 266 (illegal possession of liquor; intoxicating quality of samples of the same stock, admitted); 1888, Com. v. Schaffner, 146 Mass. 512, 514, 16 N. E. 280 (another sample taken by the inspector from the defendant's milk-wagon, on same day, at substantially the same time, admitted to show the bad quality of the milk); 1888, Com. v. Kendrick, 147 Mass. 444, 18 N. E. 230 (quality of liquor shown by samples); 1899, McConnell v. Lewis, 58 Nebr. 188, 78 is merely that the mass should be substantially uniform with reference to the quality in question, and that the sample portion should be of such a nature as to be fairly representative. [2] When the sample is not taken from the very substance or article in issue, but from another one, the only difference in the argument is that another inference is introduced, i.e. the inference of Identity (ante, § 411); it must first be evidenced that substance A is in nature identical, for the purpose in hand, with substance B, and then a sample from B, working through a double inference, evidences the nature of substance A. [3]

§ 440. Same: Sample Copies of Printed Matter. An impression from type (usually known by the unfortunate because ambiguous term copy) is evidence of the contents of another impression from the same type, the required assumption being merely that both were produced by the same type. [1] The easier mode of proof is usually by a witness who offers one impression as representing his recollection of the other (post, § 748).

The present principle, however, is to be distinguished from that which is involved when it is attempted from one type-impression to show the authorship, or publication, of another and similar one. Two cases may arise. (a) Where the fact of the person's having printed or published an entire mass of series or impressions is otherwise proved, then his publication of each and every one is shown by necessary implication. But this is the rare case. (b) Where the authorship (or publication) of a single impression is shown, the authorship of another impression exactly similar is not necessarily proved, although it ought at least to be regarded as evidenced, because the printing of one evidences in ordinary experience the probable printing of all others of the same content and appearance (ante, § 376). That question, however,

N. W. 518 (samples of leather, exhibited); 1895, Vietti v. Nesbitt, 22 Nev. 390, 41 Pac. 151 (the quality of ore shown by assays of ore "from the same ore body and near where the ore in question came from but in adjoining mine").

Compare the cases cited post, § 457.

[2] 1895, Fox v. Mining Co., 108 Cal. 369, 41 Pac. 308 (question discussed as to whether "battery-samples" are and "car-samples" are not the better index of ore-values); 1871, Brown v. Leach, 107 Mass. 367 (before testing by sample, the sample must be shown a fair one); N. Y. St. 1913, c. 223, p. 392 (amending Consol. L. 1909, Pub. Health by inserting a new § 240*a*, as to the mode of taking samples for evidence in trials under the public health law); 1916, Perry Bros. v. Diamond I. & S. Co., 92 Wash. 105, 158 Pac. 1008 (whether eggs had been spoiled by poor storage; samples of a lot, evidenced).

[3] 1899, Golden Reward M. Co. v. Buxton M. Co., 38 C. C. A. 228, 97 Fed. 413 (samples ore from an ore body of the same general character and forming a continuation of the same ore body, admitted); 1864, Jupitz v. People, 34 Ill. 520 (larceny of brass couplings; samples of couplings testified to be similar, admitted); 1920, Patterson v. Uncle Sam Oil Co., 107 Kan. 221, 191 Pac. 258 (injury by explosion of coal-oil due to presence of gasolene; the seller had not long before mixed gasolene and coal-oil in the same container, inadvertently; presence of gasolene in quantities purchased by two other persons, excluded, on the facts,; 1867, Com. v. Goodman, 97 Mass. 117 (to show a liquor to have been intoxicating, samples were admitted of liquor taken from one P., contained in barrels having a similar mark, and being also similar in color, flavor, and strength; careful opinion by Bigelow, C. J.);

For statutory provisions allowing samples to be used, see post, § 445.

Compare also § 457 (corporal effects as evidence).

§ 440. [1] 1837, R. v. Murphy, 8 C. & P. 308 (contents of a handbill, evidenced by other bills said to be similar).

Compare the cases cited under the principle of identity (ante, § 417) and the principle of producing the original (post, §§ 1234, 1237).

does not involve the present principle, i.e. the nature of the article, but involves the doing of an act, i.e. of authorship or publication.[2]

Topic IV: TENDENCY, CAPACITY, QUALITY, CAUSE, OR EFFECT

1. General Principles

§ 441. Scope of the Subject. It has already been noted (ante, § 436) how, in so many instances of other classes of cases, that which is the main or first apparent inference offered is upon analysis to be resolved into an inference of the present sort, i.e. in which the proposition to be evidenced is a tendency, capacity, or the like. It is thus easy to see why the great majority of the rulings are concerned with this specific sort of inference. Yet it is not to be supposed that the ensuing number of precedents indicates the relative actual frequency of the present sort of inference in trials. It is merely that the evidential difficulties of the subject occur chiefly in connection with the present type of inference, and thus lead naturally to a multiplication of rulings disproportionate to the actual frequency of the part played by this mode of inference.

What, then, is the mode of evidencing circumstantially a tendency, capacity, or quality of external inanimate nature? In general, the inference is from specific instances of observed effects, exhibitions, or illustrations, to the supposed tendency, capacity, or quality producing them. This inference from effects to capacity or tendency to produce those effects furnishes the general form to which all such processes are reducible. For example, the question at issue may be whether the vibrations of factory-machinery have caused a conceded injury in an adjacent house. The main controversy is whether the former is the cause of the latter; but, in searching among the probable causes, the argument is obviously confined to those things which have a tendency or capacity to produce such effects, and thus the real proposition of the proponent now becomes this, namely, that the factory-apparatus has a tendency or capacity to produce such effects. Thus, while one of the ultimate issues for the jury still remains the question whether the factory caused the injury, yet the subsidiary proposition to which the evidence has to be directed is whether the factory has such a tendency or capacity. In short, when it is desired to show broadly the occurrence of an event, or the cause of it, the process of thought usually resolves itself into two inferences, — first, that the capacity or tendency of something to cause the event is evidence that the event did so result therefrom; and, secondly, that something else is evidence of such a capacity or tendency; and it is the second of these inferences which in practice raises evidential questions.[1] The existence of a tendency, capacity, or quality may of course also come into issue independently of any question as to its being a cause, — for example, where the maintaining of a dangerous place is itself an offence. But, however it comes into issue, it is evidenced by using its observed effects.

[2] Compare the other principles as to authentication of printed matter (post, § 2150).

§ 441. [1] For the inference of defective or negligent construction from the single fact of the injury in issue, see post, § 2509 (presumption of negligence from accident).

§ 442. Principle of Probative Value (Relevancy). The requirements for this process of inference are indicated by the logical principles already examined at the outset (ante, §§ 30–36), and a brief re-statement will be sufficient. There is presented, as the 'factum probandum', a capacity or tendency in X to produce the specific effect B. This means that in the presence of a certain complex of circumstances the introduction of X will result in the occurrence of B; i.e. this alleged tendency or capacity in X is not an abstract and absolute one, but a limited and specific one, namely, a capacity, under the circumstances in which B occurred, to be followed by B. What X's capacity or tendency under other circumstances might be, is immaterial; the single question is whether there was such a capacity or tendency under the circumstances in hand. In looking elsewhere, therefore, to evidence this specific capacity or tendency by observing the same effect elsewhere, the requirement is that the circumstances elsewhere are the same as in the case in hand. Thus, if elsewhere are found similar results, B′ and B″, accompanying X, it cannot be inferred that they are the result of the alleged tendency of X, unless the other circumstances in those cases were similar to that in issue; because otherwise it cannot be known that some other circumstance, Y or Z, was not the cause of B′ or B″. In other words, unless the circumstances are the same, the door is open for other hypotheses that might account for the effects B′ and B″, as well as for B. Thus, if the proposition is that X factory's vibrations have a tendency to injure an adjacent building B, the falling of timbers in other adjacent houses B′ and B″ might not evidence such a tendency if B′ were an old house and B″ were a wooden house, while B was a new brick house; the case B′ would at most indicate a tendency in X to injure an old house, not a new house B; and the case B″ would at most indicate a tendency in X to injure a wooden house, not a brick house B. Or, again, if in a third house B‴, lying on the other side of X factory and next to Y factory also, there is a similar injury, it cannot be inferred that it is the result of a tendency in X to produce such an injury to B, because the factory Y may have caused, partly or solely, the injury to B‴. The general logical requirement is, then, that when a thing's capacity or tendency to produce an effect of a given sort is to be evidenced by instances of the same effect found attending the same thing elsewhere, these other instances have probative value — i.e. are relevant — to show such a tendency or capacity only if the conditions or circumstances in the other instances are similar to those in the case in hand.[1]

§ 442. [1] In the foregoing analysis the inference from other instances only is considered. The inference from the instance in issue (i.e. of negligent construction from the mere fact of the plaintiff's injury in an accident) is recognized as a presumption, and is dealt with post, § 2509.

But this similarity need not be precise in every detail. It need include only those circumstances or conditions which might conceivably have some influence in affecting the result in question. For instance, in the case put above, the circumstance that house B′ was of wood while house B was of brick would conceivably affect the case and likelihood of injury by vibration; but the circumstance that the inner walls in B′ were papered while those in B were kalsomined, or that the house B′ was painted red while the house B was painted green, or that the occupant of house B′ was a Presbyterian while the house B was occupied by a Methodist, — such a circumstance, though perhaps material in other aspects, could not have any bearing upon the likelihood of injury by vibration. A similarity between the two cases in respect to such circumstances, therefore, would not be required. The similarity that is required is, in short, a similarity in essential circumstances, or, as it is usually expressed, a substantial similarity, i.e. a similarity in such circumstances or conditions as might supposably affect the result in question.

The logical foundation of this principle has been already set forth in another place (§§ 30–33). As applied to the present sort of inference it has constantly received the sanction of the Courts; and whatever are the inconsistencies of its applications, there is substantial unanimity in the general reasoning:

1862, MERRICK, J., in Emerson v. Lowell Gaslight Co., 3 All. 410, 417 (the question here being whether the illness of the plaintiffs was caused by gas leaking from the defendant's pipes): "The evidence offered by the plaintiffs to show that, wherever the gas which escaped from the fracture in the defendant's pipe entered any dwelling-house in the neighborhood of the plaintiffs, sickness followed, was properly excluded. . . . The attending circumstances may be so different that the occurrence of sickness in one house would have no tendency to show the cause of illness in the occupants of another."

1864, CHAPMAN, J., in Hunt v. Lowell Gaslight Co., 8 All. 169, 171 (the issue being the same as in the preceding case): "The plaintiffs . . . were permitted to offer evidence that A. H. and his family had been in perfect health up to the time when the gas began to escape into their house, and that, immediately or soon after, every member of the family became seriously ill. . . . The sickness of these persons . . . is admissible merely for the purpose of showing the nature of the gas which came into the house, to the influence of which all the inmates were subjected alike. Evidence that inmates of another house were made sick in consequence of inhaling the gas . . . has been held to be inadmissible. The evidence should be limited to the effect of the gas upon those who have in common and under similar circumstances inhaled it."

1886, GARDNER, J., in Baxter v. Doe, 142 Mass. 558, 561, 8 N. E. 415 (to show that the plaintiff's illness on board the defendant's vessel was due to the defendant's failure to supply anti-scorbutic food and medicine, the fact was offered of a similar sickness of others of the crew, on board the ship, about the same time): "It is difficult to find a case where all the conditions and circumstances affecting all the crew were so similar. As suggested by the plaintiffs in their argument, the crew lived together in the same quarters, on the same vessel, for the same length of time, worked in the same employment, were subjected to the same climatic influences, hardships, deprivations, and manner of life, partook of the same food at substantially the same time; and of the crew of twelve, eight were affected at about the same time with about the same symptoms of disease. This evidence . . . tended directly to prove that the provisions served to the crew were unsuitable and insufficient, and that the sickness was occasioned by the want of anti-scorbutics."

1887, HOLMES, J., in Reere v. Dennett, 145 Mass. 28, 11 N. E. 938 (a stockholder alleged that the invention "naboli", for the manufacture of which the corporation was formed, was worthless to effect its represented object, the painless extraction of teeth; the inventor's patients were allowed to testify that it practically prevented pain, where similar operations had formerly been painful): "The objections made to it are . . . that the fact may admit of being explained by other causes than the conclusion sought to be established. In some cases, at least, it would seem that the painful fillings were performed by other dentists, so that it might be argued that the evidence was only a testimony to the skilfulness of the defendant's hand. But . . . when the fact sought to be proved is very unlikely to have any other explanation than the fact in issue, and may be proved or disproved without unreasonably protracting the trial, there is no objection to going into it. If a dozen patients should testify that when the defendant used his naboli, he filled their teeth without hurting them, and that he hurt them a good deal when he did not use it, supposing the testimony to be believed and not to be explained by fancy and a general disposition on the part of witnesses to think well of new nostrums, it would go far towards proving that naboli had some tendency to deaden pain."

1883, LORD, J., in State v. Justus, 11 Or. 182, 8 Pac. 337: "The object of the experiments made on the pasteboard targets which were offered in evidence was to prove by inference that the deceased came to his death by a near gunshot wound at the hands of the defendant. . . . [After describing the characteristics of 'near' wounds,] Now it must be manifest that there are here noted so many marked characteristics of near gunshot wounds which could by no possibility be reproduced or represented by experiments upon pasteboard, yet upon which the fact of a near wound is made to depend and often to be determined, that it would be utterly unsafe to apply the inferences sought to be deduced from such experiments to the facts in dispute, unless there can be found, in such experiments and in the subject-matter which it is their object to explain or illustrate, some point of similitude or ground of common resemblance, always present, as a result induced by a similarity of conditions or circumstances. . . . When it is considered how important it is that experiments should be based on conditions and circumstances as nearly as possible like the matter they are intended to illustrate, to avoid the liability of misconception or error from some supposed agreement or resemblance, we should certainly hesitate to admit such experiments", i.e. when made, as here, by non-professional witnesses not skilled in determining the essential appearances of such wounds.

1892, LORD, J., in Leonard v. So. Pac. Co., 21 Or. 555, 559, 28 Pac. 887 (admitting experiments as to whether a rail could have injured a wheel-flange): "There seems to be some hesitation in receiving evidence of experiments or demonstrations; and from the liability to misconception and error there can be no doubt that the experiments or demonstrations should be made under similar conditions and like circumstances. In all cases of this sort very much must be left to the discretion of the trial Court. But when it appears that the experiment or demonstration has been made under conditions similar to those existing in the case in issue, its discretion ought not to be interfered with. In the present case the things used for the purpose of demonstration were similar in size, material, and position, and were operated under conditions similar to the thing sought to be demonstrated."

1892, MILLER, C. J., in Chicago, St. L. & P. R. Co. v. Champion, — Ind. —, 32 N. E. 874: "During the trial the appellant placed a witness upon the stand, and proposed to show that shortly before the trial a test was made upon the siding on which the accident took place, and at about the same place, by letting a gondola car of the same kind as the one in use at the time of the injury down upon the siding. . . . Evidence of this kind should be received with caution, and only be admitted where it is obvious to the Court from the nature of the experiments that the jury will be enlightened rather than confused. In many instances a slight change in the conditions under which the experiment is made will so distort the result as to wholly destroy its value as evidence and make it harmful rather than helpful. In other cases a principle may be established by experiments made under circumstances quite different from the one under investigation, that will have an important and beneficial effect upon the investigation. . . . In our opinion the circumstances under which the experiment was made were sufficiently similar to the facts surrounding the happening of the accident to make it admissible in evidence for what it was worth." McBRIDE, J., dissenting: "It cannot be certain that the circumstances and conditions were in each case precisely the same."

There is also available here, but not so commonly, the subordinate form of argument known as the method of difference (ante, § 33). In ascertaining whether X is the cause of B, an examination may be made of sundry instances B′, B″, C, D, similar to each other in all other conditions except that X is present or absent; if it is found that wherever X is present, the effect B, B′, B″, is found, and that as soon as X ceases to be present a different effect, C or D, is found, it may be inferred that the difference of effect is produced by the difference in the absence or presence of X; because that is the only causative circumstance which is different in the different instances. The requirement is that the other instances, i.e. of B, B′, B″ not being found, should be similar in all substantial conditions except the absence of X. This mode of evidencing is in judicial investigations not so frequently available, because it is not usually feasible to find instances which fulfil these requirements; but so far as the issue admits of experiments in which the conditions can be thus artificially manipulated, the mode is equally feasible. Occasional instances are found in the precedents, usually in the form of proof of the absence of the harm in question before the alleged harmful act and then the supervening presence of the harm immediately after.[2]

§ 443. Principle of Auxiliary Policy. It has already been pointed out (ante, § 42) that, in ascertaining the principles of circumstantial evidence, the rulings of Courts are found to be much obscured, and the difficulty of clear treatment greatly increased, by the concurrent application of certain principles resting on notions of Auxiliary Probative Policy. The result of their concurrent application is the frequent exclusion of facts that are entirely relevant and would have been admitted if the principles of Relevancy alone were to be applied. It is important to distinguish the rule and the effect due to a principle of Relevancy from the rule and the effect due to a principle of Auxiliary Policy. The fact may be generally relevant, yet in a particular instance obnoxious to some rule of Auxiliary Policy; and if so, it may become proper to use it on some occasion to which the latter rule does not apply. Or the fact may be obnoxious to no rule of Auxiliary Policy, but merely irrelevant; and if so, it is impossible to use it at all, unless the offer can be so changed as to meet the requirements of Relevancy. It is therefore important, when a class of facts is found excluded, to ascertain whether the reason of exclusion is a reason of Relevancy or a reason of Auxiliary Policy.

[2] Wolkes v. Chadd, 3 Doug. 157, § 451, post; Kramer v. Messner, 101 Ia. 88, 69 N. W. 1142, § 451; Standish v. Washburn, 21 Pick. Mass. 237, § 451.

In practice, the Courts almost invariably indicate the reason for exclusion; and the material is plentiful for a correct understanding of the principles intended to be laid down by them.

Of the various considerations of Auxiliary Probative Policy recognized in the law, only two have any application to the present sort of evidence. (1) The reason of Unfair Surprise.[1] The notion here is that the production of various instances to evidence a tendency, capacity, or quality finds the opponent unprepared to answer such evidence, — unprepared to dispute the occurrence of the various instances, unprepared to test or to rebut or to explain away the varied facts thus perhaps for the first time brought to his attention; and that therefore, on account of the danger of relying on evidence thus not open to exposure by rebuttal, it should be excluded. (2) The reason of Confusion of Issues.[2] The notion here is that, in attempting to dispute or explain away the evidence thus offered, new issues will arise as to the occurrence of the instances and the similarity of conditions, new witnesses will be needed whose cross-examination and impeachment may lead to further issues; and that thus the trial will be unduly prolonged, and the multiplicity of minor issues will be such that the jury will lose sight of the main issue, and the whole evidence will be only a mass of confused data from which it will be difficult to extract the kernel of controversy. These reasons, as applied to the present sort of evidence, have been frequently invoked in judicial opinion:

1882, Lord O'HAGAN, in Metropolitan Asylum District v. Hill, 47 L. T. R. N. S. 29 (speaking for the rejection of evidence of the effects of other hospitals in spreading contagion, offered to show the noxious quality of the one in question): "Without proof as to the state and management of the other hospitals, so as to establish a substantive similarity, any inference drawn from a comparison of their operation with that of the H. asylum might have been quite fallacious and deceptive. But, even without regard to this, . . . it would have involved the jury in a multitude of collateral inquiries, calculated to confuse and embarrass them, and it might have been endlessly prolonged by an indefinite multiplication of objects of comparison. To keep such investigations within reasonable limits, and secure promptitude, precision, and satisfaction in the demonstration of justice, it seems to me that Courts should be very jealous of the admission of such proof."

1877, ASHBURN, J., in Insurance Co. v. Tobin, 32 Oh. St. 90 (excluding previous instances of steamboat disasters occurring through snags, etc., and yet without any shock or other coincident warning): "It was calculated to create as many collateral issues as special cases of such loss introduced. In this case the witness [to the former instance] says, 'No one knew anything about it at the time.' . . . This would probably become a disputed question, calling for the testimony of all the persons on the 'Sherman' at the time of the [prior] accident to settle the question of fact as to her case. Here would be a vexed but valueless collateral issue. . . . Very many cases [of similar accidents] were introduced in testimony on the part of the plaintiff. . . . This class of testimony was incompetent because calculated to surprise and take undue advantage of defendant at the trial. Ordinarily he could not be prepared to meet and contest the merits of each particular case of loss from unknown cause introduced. To deprive him of this privilege would be the denial of a legal right, and to admit them would overwhelm the case with collateral issues of fact, distract judicial investigation, leading to no valuable legal result."

§ 443. [1] This principle, in its other aspects, is dealt with ante, § 42, post, §§ 1849 ff.

[2] This principle, in its other aspects, is dealt with ante, § 42, post, §§ 1863, 1904 ff.

1879, DOE, C. J., in Amoskeag Co. v. Head, 59 N. H. 332, 337 (excluding evidence of sums paid for thirty-two other rights of flowage, as indicating value): "How far a trial can justly and reasonably go upon such [additional] issues is often a question of fact. The trial to which parties are entitled is not an endless one, nor one unreasonably protracted and exhausting. There may be a vast amount of evidence, relevant in a certain legal sense, but so unimportant, when compared with an abundance of better evidence easily available, as to be properly excluded. The parties being allowed upon collateral issues an equal range amply sufficient for the purposes of justice under the circumstances of the particular case, they are not necessarily entitled as a matter of law to go further in that direction."

1884, BARROWS, J., in Mayhew v. Mining Co., 76 Me. 113: "One substantial ground for excluding evidence of collateral facts is that it is seldom that such identity in all essentials is found that a legitimate inference respecting the one case can be drawn from the other, and a host of collateral issues are brought in to distract the attention of the jury from the real point. The fear of this has sometimes, perhaps, produced decisions excluding evidence which might throw light upon the issue."

1887, COLE, C. J., in Phillips v. Willow, 70 Wis. 9, 34 N. W. 731 (excluding the fact that two other persons had collided with the stone by which the plaintiff's sleigh had been overturned): "[Courts have excluded this evidence] because such evidence tends to draw away the minds of the jurors from the point in issue, and to excite prejudice and mislead them; and, moreover, because the adverse party, having had no notice of such a course of examination, is not presumably prepared to meet it. . . . It is apparent that if this testimony was relevant to prove a defect . . . , it would have been competent [in answer] to show that these persons were not driving carefully, or had skittish teams; also that hundreds had passed over this highway in safety with carriages, notwithstanding the alleged defect. So issue after issue would be raised, and facts collateral to the main issue made by the pleadings would multiply; the main issue forming new ones, and the suit itself expanding like the banyan tree of India, whose branches drop shoots to the ground which take root and form new stocks till the tree itself covers great space by its circumference."

The answers to these arguments of policy, however, are not difficult: (1) As to the argument from Unfair Surprise. In the first place, the inconvenience here urged is found in trying almost every issue whatever; for the evidence of an opponent is always to some extent unforeseen, and this is, in general, no valid objection (post, § 1845). In the next place, the risk does not usually exist to any serious extent in the present sort of issue, for the nature of the controversy readily suggests the sort of evidence that will be resorted to. Furthermore, the argument is rarely allowed elsewhere to prevail except to prevent certain modes of impeachment of character (ante, § 194; post, § 979), where otherwise the evidence might range over a whole lifetime; and it is not a serious objection in cases where the unexpected evidence bears directly upon the issue and but covers a small range both of time and of material. Lastly, the evil of shutting out that which is frequently the sole accessible or reliable evidence is much greater than the occasional disadvantage of surprise. The argument of surprise, it should be added, is very rarely pressed in this connection. (2) As to the argument from Confusion of Issues. In the first place, it must be noted that it is by no means universally, perhaps not usually, forceful; for the other instances offered of the tendency or quality are seldom numerous and are not commonly disputed. In the next place, the multiplicity and confusion is usually no greater than that which occurs in the trial of other matters with their numerous minor issues; and it would seem, having regard to the direct bearing of the present sort of evidence on that which is usually a main issue, that the disadvantage cannot be avoided without too great a sacrifice of useful evidence. Finally, and most important, wherever upon minor issues this disadvantage becomes a real and marked one, without compensating advantage from useful evidence, it is unnecessary to take the radical step of excluding such evidence in all cases by a universal rule; because a simple expedient is at hand, by which the evil can be stopped in such cases while the advantage of the evidence is retained for other cases, — namely, the expedient of leaving it to the discretion of the trial Court to draw a line of exclusion wherever the evil of confusion of issues impends. The whole objection in question is mainly (as Mr. Justice Holmes has neatly put it [3]) "a purely practical one, a concession to the shortness of life"; and it would be unworthy of the genius of our law if Courts should feel obliged to lay down a hard-and-fast rule of exclusion when such a simple expedient was at hand for preventing the supposed disadvantages.

§ 444. Discretion of the Trial Court. The true solution of the conflicting considerations, then, is that evidence of the sort, when relevant, should be admitted, unless in the discretion of the trial Court it seems to involve a serious inconvenience by way of unfair surprise or confusion of issues. Such is the solution clearly pointed out by many Courts:

1872, DOE, J., in Darling v. Westmoreland, 52 N. H. 401, 408: "Another cause of confusion [in the rulings] is the mixture of law and fact, and the lack of a distinction, lucidly and emphatically expressed, between what is matter of strict law and what is matter of judicial discretion. Judicial discretion, in its technical legal sense, is the name of the decision of certain questions of fact by the Court; and a close attention to the difference between fact and law, and the difference between an exercise of judicial discretion (unfortunately so called) and a decision of a question of law, will remove much of the obscurity in which the subject of the relevancy of evidence has been involved. . . . [In the Knapp case,[1] where, to show the defendant's extraordinary strength, various instances of his feats of strength were received,] the judge in the exercise of what is called judicial discretion, allowed the parties to go back fifteen years; and if he had allowed them to go back sixteen years, or only fourteen years, no question of law would have arisen as to the proper length of time. . . . The general relevancy of that class of evidence was matter of law. But how far back in the history of his life it was advisable to go for experimental knowledge of his strength was a question of fact, to be determined upon a variety of considerations, some of which are erroneously given in the books as reasons for the exclusion of irrelevant or collateral evidence as a matter of law. The decision of this question of fact was, in the peculiar and technical language of the law, an exercise of judicial discretion. . . . As to the number of experiments or experiences on many points, collateral in a certain sense, but relevant in a legal sense, it is impossible in the nature of the case for a limit to be fixed as a matter of law. But it does not follow that the law excludes all evidence of which it cannot measure a reasonable quantity."

[3] In Reeve v. Dennett, 145 Mass. 28, 11 N. E. 938.

§ 444. [1] 45 N. H. 148, 149, 154; ante, § 219.

1894, KNOWLTON, J., in Bemis v. Temple, 162 Mass. 342, 344, 38 N. E. 970 (admitting evidence of the frightening effect of a flag upon other horses): "The only objection to testimony of the last kind in such a case is that in testing it collateral issues may be raised. Such an objection in many cases is a sufficient reason for excluding the testimony. Whenever a line of inquiry will give rise to collateral issues of such number and difficulty that they will be likely to confuse and distract the jury and unreasonably protract the trial, it should not be permitted. But the mere fact that a collateral issue may be raised is not of itself enough to justify the exclusion of evidence which bears upon the issue on trial. Most circumstantial evidence introduces collateral issues, and ordinarily it is a practical question, depending upon its relations to the other facts and circumstances in the case, whether it should be received. It may be remote from the real issue or closely connected with it, and in many cases its competency depends upon the decision of questions of fact, affecting the practical administration of justice in the particular case, such that a Court of law will refuse to revise the ruling of the presiding judge, but will treat his ruling as a matter of discretion."

This sensible solution has not yet been generally accepted by many Courts, at least in express language. Where the question of Auxiliary Probative Policy has been considered, the evidence has more often been either rejected or accepted as if by a fixed rule, although the natural result has been a lack of uniformity in the rulings of such Courts. It is much wiser and more practical to leave the possible inconvenience to be determined by the tribunal best fitted to determine it, the trial Court, and to sanction the reception of all such relevant evidence subject to this exclusionary discretion based on inconvenience. This attitude is more and more frequently taken by the Courts, and will probably receive general approval as the true mode of dealing with such evidence.

§ 445. Distinction between Experiment and Observation. There are two ways in which the data may be obtained for evidencing tendency, capacity, or quality, on the principle under consideration. One is by using such instances as may be found ready at hand, — instances which have already occurred in the ordinary course of events and happen to be suitable for the purpose. The other is to reproduce artificially and expressly the appropriate conditions and then observe the data obtained by this effort and prearrangement. The former process is the simple one of Observation; the latter is that of Experiment. The former is, in general scientific acceptance, distinctly inferior for most purposes to the latter; because, in taking data just as they come, it is not usually feasible to secure precisely the proper conditions required for the validity or certainty of our inference; while in the latter the conditions may usually be prearranged precisely as they are needed in order to make a sound inference. Indeed, the former source of data, in the modern scientific world, is looked upon as concededly so inferior in probative value, as not to be resorted to except in such situations (for example, geological formations and human diseases) as do not usually admit of artificial prearrangement and control.

But this attitude of modern scientific thought is quite other than that which has been exhibited by many members of the bar and bench. There is a certain mental state which may in lenient moments be termed conservatism, but perhaps deserves to be called juristic narrowmindedness. It is often due to nothing more incurable than an ignorance of precedents and a bigoted fear of everything not technical. This attitude has shown itself, in many quarters, in the form of an alarm at experimental evidence, a disinclination to accept what does not come in the accustomed shapes of certified copies, sealed instruments, and sworn depositions. It is the same spirit that was so reluctant, at the beginning of the 1800s, to resort to expert evidence. It is the same spirit that is willing to doubt the propriety of showing to the jury the very thing whose existence is in controversy, and prefers that the regular and cumbrous indirections should instead be followed (post, § 1151). This spirit has led occasionally to a rejection of experiments offered under the present principle as evidence of a tendency, capacity, or quality. These rulings of rejection are usually to be compared to the shying of a horse,— an instance of instinctive but unreasoning repulsion.

Occasionally there is, to be sure, some independent and plausible reason for questioning the evidence; for example, experiments made in a court-room in the presence of the tribunal may be inconvenient and impracticable (post, § 1160); experiments have also (but improperly) been objected to because they are hearsay or ' ex parte ' only (post, § 1385); experiments of some kinds may be objectionable because they violate the privilege against self-crimination (post, § 2265). So far as these considerations apply to experiments, they apply to them in common with other forms of evidence, and may be dealt with under the other principles of evidence just indicated. But the present question is the simple one whether data whose relevancy is not questioned are objectionable or inferior because they have been obtained, not by observing merely such casual material as Nature has provided for us, but by carefully arranging the conditions so as to obtain by experiment more trustworthy results. That there should be such a distinction between Observation and Experiment would be unworthy of our law. That there is none has been made clear once for all in a classical passage by one of the greatest of American judges:

1872, Doe, in Darling v. Westmoreland, 52 N. H. 401: "Was the fright of Fletcher's horse competent evidence on the question whether the lumber was likely to frighten horses? . . . On the independent and general question of the horse-frightening capacity of a certain pile of lumber, what rule of law considers the fright of [the plaintiff's] horse as important and disregards the fright of Mr. Fletcher's horse as of no consequence at all? . . . If the question were, whether the lumber was capable of floating in water, or making a good fire, or being sawed or cut or planed in a specific manner, or supporting horses and wagons passing over a bridge, there could be no legal objection to the trial of an appropriate experiment upon it in the presence of the jury, or to the evidence of experiments that had been tried elsewhere. And there is no reason, outside of the technical rules of law, why its ability to frighten horses should not be tested out of court, and proved in court in the same manner.

When we want to know whether a certain horse is skittish or is capable of a certain speed, whether a certain substance is poisonous and destructive of animal or vegetable life, whether certain materials are of a certain strength, whether a certain field or a certain kind of soil is likely to produce a certain kind or amount of crop, whether a certain man or brute or machine is likely to perform a certain kind or amount of work, or whether anything can be done or is likely to be done, one way is to speculate about it, and another way is to try it. The law is a practical science, and when it is appealed to to direct what means shall be used to find out whether a certain pile of lumber is likely to frighten horses, if any one asserts that, on this subject, the law prefers speculation to experience, abhors actual experiment and delights in guesswork, the person advancing such a proposition takes upon himself the task of maintaining it upon some legal rule, distinctly stated by him and well established by the authorities. Such a proposition is not sustained by the reason of the law. It is sustained by nothing that can be justly called a principle. By what technical rule, at war with reason and principle, is it supported? . . . The experience of other persons, equally relevant on that point, has seemed [to some judges] to have an objectionable appearance, because it did not come into the case in the same unobjectionable way as that by which the plaintiff's experience was introduced. . . . The tendency to error has been aggravated by an exception (which is a peculiarity of precedents of English origin) excluding relevant evidence of a defendant's general and notorious disposition to commit such crimes or torts as that with which he is charged, and his habitual commission of crimes or torts of a like kind as proof of such disposition. . . . However much reverence may remain for ancient innovations in behalf of human life under circumstances no longer existing, and however strong may be the inclination derived from that reverence and from habit to adhere to the practice of excluding evidence of human character furnished by experience, the extension of that practice to the rejection of experimental knowledge of the character of inanimate matter ought to stop. . . . It is evident that the exception [of the charact · rule, above referred to], not being sufficiently emphasized as an exception and a very p liar one, has produced much confusion by seeming to countenance the idea that the has an antipathy against experimental knowledge in general."

There is an increasing judicial tendency to treat evidence of experiments in the spirit of Mr. Justice Doe's utterance; and it can hardly be supposed that the casual erroneous precedents would be regarded as a hindrance.[1]

§ 445. [1] In the following list are given numerous examples of the different kinds of rulings upon experiments as such; the list includes merely typical cases, and many others may be found in the citations of the ensuing sections. The rulings may be grouped as follows, all the cases named being cited more at length in the ensuing sections: (1) Admitting the experiments offered; (2) Excluding them, but only because the tests of relevancy were not fulfilled in the case in hand, and not because they were experiments instead of observed data; (3) Excluding them for no appreciable reason; (4) Excluding them because made before the jury (under § 1160, post); (5) Excluding them because 'ex parte' (under § 1385, post); (6) Excluded for sundry peculiar reasons; (7) Left to the trial Court's discretion.

(1) Under this head fall the following cases: Witches' Trial, cited supra; Cowper's Trial, post, §§ 457, 460; R. v. Palmer, § 457; R. v. Heseltine, § 451; Broder v. Saillard, § 451; People v. Hope, § 451; People v. Durrant, § 451; Chicago, St. L. & P. R. Co. v. Champion, § 451; Brooke v. R. Co., § 458; State v. Cater, § 457; Mo. P. R. Co. v. Moffatt, § 460; State v. Asbell, § 457; Champ v. Com., § 457; Swett v. Shumway, § 451; Eidt v. Cutter, § 451; People v. Morrigan, § 460; Stone v. Ins. Co., § 460; Becket v. Aid Assoc., § 457; Vaughan v. State, § 457; Dillard v. State, § 457; Berckmans v. Berckmans, § 460; Lindsay v. People, § 451; Smith v. State, § 460; Leonard v. R. Co., § 451; Sullivan v. Com., § 457; Boyd v. State, § 457; Byers v. R. Co., § 460; Moore v. State, § 457; Osborne v. Detroit, § 457; State v. Flint, § 460; State v. Ward, § 451.

(2) Under this head fall the following cases: Lou. & N. R. Co. v. Hill, post, § 460; Jones v. State, § 460; Lake E. & W. R. Co. v. Mugg, § 451; Libby v. Scherman, § 458; Painter v. People, § 460; McMurrin v. Rigby, § 460;

How much more in harmony with the pristine practice of our law is Mr. Justice Doe's attitude, than that of the modern rulings which he justly criticises, may be seen in the following record of one of Sir Matthew Hale's trials, more than two centuries ago:

1665, Witches' Trial, 6 How. St. Tr. 647, 697; the children claiming to be bewitched would go into fits, clenching their fists, and then opening them with a shriek when the supposed witch touched them, "which accident would not happen by the touch of any other person." It was suggested that the children "might counterfeit this distemper"; so the judge, Sir Matthew Hale, desired that several gentlemen would test one of the children with Amy Duny, a defendant, in another part of the Court. "They put an apron before her [the child's] eyes, and then one other person touched her hand, which produced the same effect as the touch of the witch did in the Court. Whereupon the gentlemen returned, openly protesting that they did believe the whole transaction of the business was a mere imposture. This put the Court and all persons into a stand."

§ 446. Distinction between Possibility, Capacity, Tendency, and Cause, as the object of Evidence; Evidencing a Possibility. The notion of Causation is by no means easy to analyze correctly; but it is enough to point out here that certain superficially different terms represent essentially the same evidential process. When it is asked, for example, whether certain factory-vapors were the cause of a destruction of herbage, the notion of "cause", simple as it seems, becomes upon analysis somewhat complex and at the same time indefinite. Stated in its broadest form, the notion of cause and effect is merely that of invariable sequence.

It is only rarely, however, if at all, that such an abstract assertion can be made in universal terms that will stand examination. Thus, that a bullet shot from a pistol into the heart "causes" — i.e. will invariably be followed by — death, is a seemingly impregnable assertion; and yet not only may it not be true of bullets of every size, but it may not be true, even with ordinarily large bullets, in instances recorded here and there; and, in the future, surgical skill may show that the instances of non-sequence of death might be made even more numerous. The assertion may then be amended by adding limiting conditions, so as to say that, provided this and that and the other be so, a bullet through the heart causes death. In short, instead of an absolute certainty or invariability of sequence, the assertion will be only of a very high probability of sequence. In most instances no one thinks of making an assertion in absolute form, and it is easy to see that an assertion of causation means usually only an assertion of high probability or strong tendency.

Com. v. Piper, § 451; Ulrich v. People, § 460; Klanowski v. R. Co., § 460; Justice v. State, § 457; West Pub. Co. v. Coop. Pub. Co., § 460.

(3) Under this head falls the following case: Evans v. State, post, § 457.

(4) Under this head fall the following cases: R. v. Palmer, post, § 457; Jumpertz v. People, § 460.

(5) Under this head belong the cases collected post, § 1385; no such principle of exclusion is recognized.

(6) Under this head fall the following cases: Wynne v. State, § 457; Polin v. State, § 451.

(7) Under this head fall the following cases: State v. Smith, § 451; Ball v. U. S., § 457.

The English and Canadian statutory rules, quoted post, § 1151, expressly authorize the judge to authorize "experiments or observations" to be made and samples to be taken.

Thus, the planting of seed in good soil at the right time of the year will probably result in a harvest in due season; but the result is not invariably certain, because no rain may fall or the land may be built upon or other influences may intervene. Though we should feel justified in speaking of the seed as the cause of the harvest, yet it would not be intended to assert anything more than that the seed has a tendency to produce the harvest. Coming now to an example of still weaker probability, suppose it to be asserted that gunpowder may spontaneously — i.e. without human meddling — explode, this is not saying that it will probably so explode, but merely that under a rare combination of circumstances it will do so, i.e. it has a capacity to do so. Capacity, then, is a quality representing the same process of thought as tendency; i.e. it represents the possibility of a result as compared with the probability of a result, and above them both is a notion of a still higher degree, rarely realized in experience, — that of absolute certainty of result. All these are in the same category; the difference is that in the highest degree we think of the sequence as occurring under any and every combination of other circumstances, but in the middle degrees under the ordinary combinations only, and in the lowest degrees under rare combinations only. The notion of causation is perhaps most commonly associated with the middle and highest degrees only; i.e. one would naturally enough say, "A bullet through the heart will cause death", and "Sowing seed will cause a harvest"; while in the lowest degree one would either not speak at all of cause or would qualify the statement, for example, by saying, "Gunpowder may cause spontaneously an explosion." The essential thing to note is that all these terms express only varying degrees of certainty or probability or possibility; and that they all belong to the same logical category of thought:

1884, Professor Alfred Sidgwick, Fallacies, 81, 285: "Abstract assertions of succession are commonly made with a large margin for the incalculable. We feel fairly contented in obtaining any hint of 'law', — any knowledge, that is, which may form a basis for even imperfectly secure inference and proof. The only alternative to 'Chance' is often 'Tendency', and our gladness to escape from Chance we dignify this as 'Law.' . . . Between mere guesses, hypotheses, theories, empirical laws, and 'laws of Nature', there are only continuous differences of degree in certainty, according to the nature and number of the tests they have stood and the duration of their past invulnerability. . . . The resemblance in uncertainty between a fanciful guess and a proved law may be less important than the difference in the degree of certainty; but the fact cannot be safely hidden that the resemblance exists. . . . The method of proving laws is one and the same, whether they be the merest wildest supposition or the soundest explanation of the facts of Nature."

In the precedents upon the present subject, then, there is no difference in logic or in legal principle between evidencing a capacity, a tendency, or a certainty of operation or causation. The only difference is as to the practical need or utility of one or the other degree of likelihood in the case in hand. Thus, if the issue is as to a spontaneous explosion of gunpowder, we may appreciably advance our proof by showing merely a capacity, i.e.

possibility, of such a result.[1] But, if the issue is as to the destruction of herbage by vapors, the capacity of the vapors to do this would probably be conceded, and the only useful way of advancing the proof will be to show, not merely a capacity, but a strong tendency to produce this effect.[2] Again, if the issue is as to the injury to an adjacent house by factory-vibrations, their tendency to produce some injury would perhaps be easily enough shown or conceded, and the desirable thing would be, in offering evidence of effects elsewhere, to show by them that a fair certainty of injury actually attended the vibrations.[3] Incidentally, however, these differences may bear on the question of admissibility, so far as the evidence is required to have an appreciable value for the particular issue at bar.

§ 447. Number of Instances required. It follows, from what has just been said, that the number of instances offered is immaterial, so far as the logical principle is concerned. The only difference will be as to the practical utility, for the case in hand, of the inference to be drawn. One instance may indicate a capacity to produce the result; but so feeble and indefinite a possibility may practically not advance the cause beyond what would be already conceded or easily accepted. So, too, a limited number of instances might show a tendency or common probability, and yet this tendency might be already beyond dispute and unnecessary to prove, and nothing short of an approach to certainty or universality of operation would advance the cause of the proof. Thus, an offer of one or two instances only might properly be rejected by a Court, if it would tend to show merely a capacity which was already beyond dispute. The jury might be inclined to give too great effect to a single instance; and if the claim of the proponent required for its proper evidencing the existence of a strong tendency or of an approximate certainty of result, the Court might be justified in rejecting an offer of such scanty scope as not to evidence anything more than a capacity or possibility. No Court seems to have rejected evidence on these specific grounds, though they would serve as justifying the rulings in several cases where the rejection of a single instance has been put upon other and insufficient grounds.[1] But usually, where the evidence is regarded by the Court as otherwise admissible, it is received without any criticism as to number of instances.[2] Where the purpose is to show the existence of a mere capacity, so as to negative the impossibility of a thing's occurrence, here a single instance is always admissible.[3]

§ 443. [1] Of this sort are some of the precedents in § 460, post, in which the question is whether a person could be distinguished or whether work could be done; and also in § 457, post, in which the question is whether e.g. a pistol could carry from a certain distance.

[2] Of this sort are most of the precedents in § 458, post, where the question is whether a place in a highway was dangerous, i.e. likely to cause injury to passers-by.

[3] This degree of strength of evidence seems never to have been required by Courts.

§ 447. [1] E.g. Hoyt v. Des Moines, § 458; Hudson v. R. Co., § 458.

[2] E.g. Bailey v. Trumbull, § 458; Tomlinson v. Derby, § 458; Gilmer v. Atlanta, § 458; Darling v. Westmoreland, § 460; Pomfrey v. Saratoga Springs, § 458; State v. Isaacson, § 457.

[3] E.g. Broder v. Saillard, § 451; R. v. Heseltine, § 451; Augusta S. R. Co. v. Dorsey, § 460; State v. Delaney, § 451; Davis v. State, § 460.

§ 448. Negative and Affirmative Instances; Evidencing an Impossibility. Whether an instance is to be regarded as affirmative or negative in form depends much on the issue as made by the parties. For example, if it were desired to prove performance of a warranty that a certain substance is calculated to deaden pain in dental operations,[1] instances of the substance having made operations painless are affirmative of the quality alleged by the warranty; but if a patient were suing the dentist for careless use of a substance calculated to produce pain, the offer of the same instances by the dentist would in form negative the alleged quality, i.e. they would be instances in which pain was not produced.

Assuming, then, that the issue is such that the instances are thus genuinely negative in purpose and form, is there any difference to be noted as to the conditions of their use, as distinguished from affirmative instances? Keeping in mind the principle just examined (ante, § 446), it will be seen that there is no difference of logical principle, though there is practically a difference in availability, according to the object of the evidence:

(1) Suppose that the proponent in the issue is (correctly) offering only to show a capacity — i.e. an occasional possibility — of producing the effect. Obviously, it is here logically of no avail to produce against him instances in which the effect was not produced. They do not meet his point; for it is quite consistent with the capacity or possibility of producing the effect that there should be many instances in which the effect was not produced; for example, if the proponent has evidenced by one or two instances the capacity of a pistol to carry two hundred yards, it is logically of no avail for the opponent to answer with a negative instance (or instances) in which it has not carried thus far. Logically nothing short of a universal negative will suffice.

Nevertheless, even a single negative may on certain conditions be receivable, and in the following way: If the proponent's witnesses to the capacity (or to the instances of capacity) are not to be believed, the opponent's negative instances are logically no answer; but it is impossible to say beforehand whether the jury will believe the proponent's witnesses. Assuming, then, that they do not believe them, and therefore that there is no affirmative instance of the alleged capacity in the field, even a single negative instance may suffice to show the non-capacity or impossibility on one condition, namely, that it is made equivalent to a universal negative. The only way to do this is to take an instance which by allowing for all possible counteracting causes shows that, even where they could not have operated, nevertheless the effect was not produced, i.e. there was an incapacity to produce it. For example, one instance of a pistol's not carrying 200 yards is simply a negative instance showing that it does not always carry that distance; but if we show that the greatest possible charge of powder was put in, the smallest possible bullet was used, and the most skilful marksman possible aimed it, and still it did not carry 200 yards, we have gone far to show that it is utterly incapable of carrying that distance, i.e. to prove a universal negative from a single instance. Where the precautions are thus sufficient to exclude the operation of possible counteracting influences, a single instance may be more trustworthy than a thousand of another kind, because it yields the assurance that if there were under any circumstances a possibility of producing the alleged effect, it would have been here produced. This is an example of the Method of Difference applied to show a negative.[2]

§ 448. [1] Compare Reeve v. Dennett, 145 Mass. 28, post, § 457.

In practice, the proponent seldom has occasion to allege merely a capacity, and that case may be neglected. But the opponent may meet the situation by denying even such a capacity, and then the above principles apply on the issue thus formed. So that the opponent may properly, in evidencing an impossibility, offer either (a) a universal negative, i.e. that no instances of such a capacity have occurred; (a′) one or more instances attended by such precautions or conditions as practically amount to a universal negative. As to (a), note that evidence merely of instances not having been heard of is not sufficient, unless they would have been heard of if they had occurred.[3] As to (a′), note that for purposes of mere admissibility (i.e. not demonstration), only a moderate degree of such precautions could be required.

(2) Suppose, however, that the proponent is aiming to show something stronger than a mere capacity, i.e. a general or usual tendency, and has evidenced this by a few instances; here, obviously, an equal or greater or less number of negative instances or perhaps even a single instance would help to show that no usual or general tendency could be predicated, and thus would be practically available to answer the showing made by the proponent.

(3) But suppose, finally, that the proponent is interested in showing a fair certainty or inevitableness of effect; here even a single negative instance would suffice to dispose of his contention. The proponent cannot claim that an effect is invariably found, if an instance is shown in which the effect is not found; for example, where it is claimed that a near gunshot wound always leaves powder-stains, a single instance will overturn this claim.

In practice, however, there is little discrimination to be made between the use of the negative instances in these three situations. If the distinction between these three possible attitudes of the proponent were sharply marked by the pleadings, then the foregoing discriminations would apply, and the opponent would have to regulate the use of his negative instances accordingly. But there is usually no such sharp demarcation; the proponent alleges the qualities of a certain object as the cause of the alleged effect, but he seldom is restricted to one of the above three purposes; i.e. he will hope to prove a universal or invariable production of the effect, but he will probably be satisfied if he can prove only a general tendency, and he may end by not evidencing any more than a mere capacity. At one and the same time he is making an attempt at all three; and therefore the opponent is entitled to offer whatever would be relevant against any one of the three, and cannot be criticised if his offer would be insufficient against some one, if it is sufficient against another.

[2] Sidgwick, Fallacies, 275, 282, 339 (quoted ante, § 33).

[3] Compare § 671, post.

To sum up, then:

(1) Where the proponent offers to show merely a capacity, or where the opponent invites the issue by proposing to show a non-capacity or impossibility, the latter's evidence may properly be of either of two sorts: (a) He may show that in all experience with the thing in question, no such effect had ever occurred; (b) He may show one or more instances attended by such conditions as make it probable that no such effect could possibly occur.

(2) Under the second head above, one or more negative instances are always receivable; but more may be required.

(3) Under the third head, a single negative instance is always receivable.

In general, the rulings are based upon the above principles; though occasionally an unwarranted distrust of negative instances is shown.[4]

§ 449. Explaining away the Proponent's Instances. An opponent who is not supporting his case by bringing in new data of his own, but confines himself to destroying the proponent's data, finds three ways at hand for diminishing their effect. The three ways have been examined already in dealing with Relevancy in general (ante, §§ 34, 35); and a brief notice of their application to the present sort of evidence will here suffice.

(1) The opponent may produce contradictory, or negative, instances; that is to say, the proponent's instances being offered to show a tendency or capacity to produce an effect, the opponent answers by producing other in-

[4] Typical cases may be grouped as follows.

I. Negative instances rejected:

1. Because of auxiliary policy, dissimilarity of conditions, or some other independent reason, and not because they were negative.

2. Because they were negative: (1) a. Improperly rejected under (1) a, supra; a′. Properly rejected under the same; b. Improperly rejected under (1) a′, supra; b′. Properly rejected under the same; (2) Improperly rejected under (2) supra; (3) Improperly rejected under (3) supra.

II. Negative instances received: (1) a. In the situation of (1) a, supra; b. In the situation of (1), b, supra; (2) In the situation of (2) supra; (3) In the situation of (3) supra.

Not all of the above sorts are represented in the rulings, but all are capable of occurring.

I, 1: Bauer v. Indianapolis, § 458; Branch v. Libbey, § 458; Balt. & Y. T. R. v. Leonhardt, § 458; Balt. & Y. T. R. v. State, § 458; Aldrich v. Pelham, § 458; Lewis v. Smith, § 458; Peverly v. Boston, § 458, Ulrich v. People, § 460; Temp. Hall Assoc. v. Giles, § 458; Polin v. State, § 451; Bloar v. Delafield, § 460.

I, 2 (1) a: Hodges v. Bearse, § 458; (1) a′: Balt. & Y. T. R. v. State, § 458; (1) b: no instances; (1) b′: Libby v. Scherman, § 458; Ulrich v. People, § 460.

I, 2 (2): Nave v. Flack, § 458 (express repudiation of this class of evidence); Bauer v. Indianapolis, § 458.

I (3): no instances.

II (1) a: Crofter v. R. Co., § 458; Tremblay v. Harnden, § 451; Doyle v. R. Co., § 458 (an express sanction of such evidence); Dougan v. Champlain Co., § 458; Baird v. Daly, § 458; Sinton v. Butler, § 458.

II (1) b: Epps v. State, § 457; Champ v. Com., § 457; Vaughan v. State, § 457; Smith v. State, § 460; Leonard v. State, § 451; Sullivan v. Com., § 457; Boyd v. State, § 457; Byers v. R. Co., § 460; Osborne v. Detroit, § 457.

II (2): Calkins v. Hartford, § 458; Wilson v. Granby, § 458; Hill v. R. Co., § 460; Salem D. R. Co. v. Adams, § 460; McCool v. Grand Rapids, § 458; Lester v. Pittsford, § 458.

II (3): Cowper's Trial, § 457.

stances in which the effect did not appear, arguing from this that the tendency must be only a limited one and does not produce its effects with any probability. The principles governing this use of negative instances have been considered in the preceding section.

(2) The opponent may show that, while the proponent's instances occur 'prima facie' under similar conditions, yet there was for one or more of them some attendant condition which was really important and was likely to have been the true source of the effect observed, so that the proponent's instance may or must be attributed to that other and not to the alleged tendency or cause in question. Thus he explains away the proponent's instance by showing that it does not mean what it seemed to mean.[1] Such explanatory circumstances are always receivable in evidence.[2] The only limitation is the policy of preventing confusion of issues (ante, § 443), — the fear of which indeed finds its chief justification, so far as it has any, in the necessary propriety of allowing this mode of explanation, when once the proponent is allowed to open the way with particular instances.

(3) The third method takes away the force of the proponent's instance by offering other instances in which the same effect is found, but without the presence of the alleged cause. The absence, in these additional instances, of the thing alleged to have the causing tendency, forces us to look upon its presence in the proponent's instance as merely accidental, and explains that instance away as due not to the alleged tendency but to something else. Thus, to show that an illness following Monday's dinner was not due to the ham eaten, an instance of the same illness following Tuesday's dinner, at which the dishes were the same except that no ham was eaten, indicates that some other dish was probably the common cause on both occasions. The limitations on the use of this form of disproof are that the conditions (otherwise than as to the alleged cause, e.g. the ham) were substantially the same on both occasions; for, unless this is ensured, it might be supposed that the alleged cause — e.g. the ham — might have operated in the one case and some other cause in the other case. It is only by confining the difference of the two instances to the single circumstance in question that the argument is effective to eliminate it as the cause.[3]

(4) The use of the Method of Difference (ante, § 442, at the end) is not to be confounded with the preceding modes of argument. It has in appearance a negative character, and may be resorted to in Disproof; but it does not operate by explaining away the proponent's evidence; it begins a new line of evidence, although that evidence may be directed to proving a negative proposition, i.e. that a certain thing was not a cause.

§ 449. [1] In § 35, par. 2, ante, this form of argument has been sufficiently illustrated.

[2] The process is common, though the precedents are few: Abend v. Mueller, § 451; Pettibone v. Smith, § 451.

[3] The following precedents illustrate it: Standish v. Washburn, § 451; Eidt v. Cutter, § 451; Pinney v. Cahill, § 457; Hoyt v. R. Co., § 458; Haynes v. Burlington, § 451.

This form of argument has been examined in § 35, par. 3, ante.

2. Precedents arranged by Subjects

§ 450. Principle of Classification. For the practical purposes of study and reference, it is better to consider the precedents in such an order that the rulings upon a given sort of tendency, capacity, or quality, can be found in one place. Each of these tendencies or qualities exemplifies in the rulings more than one of the preceding modes of argument, and in the foregoing examination of the principles the specific typical precedents have been noted in illustration. But it is chiefly desirable to be able to note the state of the law on a given sort of evidence in each jurisdiction. Moreover, other questions, requiring special consideration, incidentally arise under certain subjects, and can only be treated under the particular head of evidence involved.

How shall the various precedents be arranged most usefully for the present purpose? The principle involved is the evidencing of a tendency (capacity, or quality) by its effects. The precedents may therefore best be grouped according to the various kinds of tendencies (capacities, or qualities) and the various kinds of effects.

A preliminary grouping may be:

A. Material effects (for example, marks left by a pistol shot, damage done to houses by smoke, fire set by locomotive-sparks);

B. Corporal effects, including animal and human effects (for example, wounds produced by shots, disease produced by poison, injuries by dangerous highways);

C. Mental and Moral effects, i.e. on human conduct (for example, efforts to escape the danger of a railroad collision, time required by a workman for work, precautions required for a dangerous machine).

This classification is to some extent arbitrary, as all must be, in the sense that some cases might equally well go in one group or another. But the general lines of division are marked; and the grouping is the most useful, because it enables us to compare the employment of analogous kinds of effects, and to see how far the uses of related kinds of effects throw evidential light on each other.

A. INSTANCES OF MATERIAL EFFECTS, AS EVIDENCE

§ 451. Miscellaneous Instances (Factories, Railroads, Floods, Gases, Land, Machinery, Tools, Apparatus, Weapons, etc.). The tendency, capacity, or quality, so far as it exists, may show itself through its material effects.

1. Instances of the effects of its apparent operation under substantially similar circumstances will serve to evidence it, subject to the foregoing limitations of principle. In this way may be evidenced the existence (or not) of sundry nuisances, by the presence (or absence) of certain effects under similar circumstances (for example, of similar damage by other factories), streams, hospitals, sewers, operating under analogous conditions);[1] of the nuisance-nature of a railroad, by its injurious effects upon similar adjacent property, in respect to smoke, noise, vibration, and the like;[2] of the tendency of water, in various forms, by its effect under similar circumstances (for example, in the flowage of streams, the silting of harbors, the breaking of dams, the destruction of bridges, the drainage of swamps);[3]

§ 451. [1] England: 1839, Tennant v. Hamilton, 5 Cl. & F. 122 (nuisance in injuring the plaintiff's premises by smoke, etc.; evidence on both sides as to the condition of "land similarly circumstanced to those of the party complaining", admitted, per L. C. Cottenham, "for ascertaining what the effect was of the smoke and vapor emitted by this manufactory"); 1857, R. v. Fairie, 8 E. & B. 486, 488 (Coleridge, J., cited a former case in which, on a charge of nuisance, he admitted evidence of the similar effects of the defendant's manufacture carried on at another place, to show "the tendency of the manufacture to produce such effects"; Lord Campbell, C. J., agreed); 1876, Broder v. Saillard, 2 Ch. D. 692 (Jessel, M. R., in an action to restrain a noise-nuisance, admitted "a practical experiment performed by Mr. l'Anon, who actually only put in the stable a piece of wood with a horse's shoe attached, and when that was struck upon the ground he heard it on the second floor front [of the next house]; showing that it is distinctly heard . . ."); 1882, Metropolitan Asylum Dist. v. Hill, 47 L. T. R. N. S. 29 (whether a smallpox hospital was a nuisance in infecting a neighborhood; per Lord Selborne, L. C., evidence was admissible of "any similar or other facts from which the effect, or absence of effect, of other hospitals, and particularly of those at H. and S., on the surrounding neighborhoods, could either positively or approximately be ascertained"; accord, Lord Watson; contra, Lord O'Hagan; quoted ante, § 443); 1904, Attorney-General v. Nottingham, 9 Ch. 673 (smallpox hospital as a nuisance; experience of other similar hospitals as to the risk of infection, admitted by consent, following Hill v. Metrop. Asylum District, supra, but Farwell, J., writing the opinion, suggesting that "the admission of such evidence in chief is wrong in principle", on the ground of surprise and confusion of issues).

United States: 1899, Hoadley v. Seward & S. Co., 71 Conn. 640, 42 Atl. 997 (nuisance by a factory; effect of defendant's business upon other persons situated substantially the same as the plaintiff, admitted); 1871, Cooper v. Randall, 59 Ill. 320 (Walker, J., for the majority, admitting evidence in a nuisance case that the defendant's mill threw dust, smut, etc., on other houses: "It tended to show that the mill was capable of inflicting the injury complained of by appellant. If the deposit was general in the immediate neighborhood, and large quantities were deposited on other buildings similarly situated, it would be a just inference that the same was true of appellant's house"); 1900, Bradley v. R. Co., 111 Ia. 562, 82 N. W. 996 (condition of grass-roots in adjoining meadow under similar conditions, admitted); 1900, Hughes v. General Electric L. & P. Co., 107 Ky. 485, 54 S. W. 723 (nuisance of smoke, etc.; effect on other dwellings in vicinity, excluded; no authority cited); 1864, Lincoln v. Mfg. Co., 9 All. Mass. 181 (alleged poisoning of a stream by copper acids, destroying meadow-crops; that similar effects were produced upon other meadows along the river, excluded, for reasons of confusion of issues and because of the slight probative value; Standish v. Washburn, post, doubted).

[2] 1896, Metropolitan W. S. E. R. Co. v. Dickinson, 161 Ill. 22, 24, 43 N. E. 706 ("physical effects upon adjoining property of an elevated railroad of the same general character as this one in the way of noise, smoke, gases, etc.", not admissible; except that witnesses to value may be asked whether they are qualified by knowing it); 1905, Baltimore B. R. Co. v. Sattler, 100 Md. 306, 59 Atl. 654 (smoke nuisance; the effects produced on other property in the immediate neighborhood, admitted); 1851, Concord R. Co. v. Greely, 23 N. H. 237, 243 (inconveniences of a railroad on adjoining land, not allowed to be shown by the experience on adjacent lands, because of the collateral issues involved); 1891, Doyle v. R. Co., 128 N. Y. 488, 495, 28 N. E. 495 (damage by the operation of an elevated railroad; evidence received of the effect upon the premises similarly situated and "not too distant"; "the Court may undoubtedly in such case, in the exercise of its discretion, limit the number of witnesses to be called, and may confine the examination of the witnesses to premises in the vicinity, giving a reasonable range"); 1896, Hine v. R. Co., 149 N. Y. 154, 43 N. E. 414 (to show the effect of an elevated railroad upon the light coming to abutting premises, the effect upon premises across the street was admitted).

[3] ENGLAND: 1782, Folkes v. Chadd, 3 Doug. 157, Lord Mansfield, C. J. (admitted evidence of the state of other harbors along the same coast where no embankment existed, to show that no such change had occurred as at the harbor in question, where an embankment existed).

of the tendency of gases, by their injurious effects on other houses, trees, or water-supplies, or by their mode of operation in other apparatus; [4]

UNITED STATES: Alabama: 1906, Central of Ga. R. Co. v. Keyton, 148 Ala. 675, 41 So. 918 (effect of prior overflows of a sewer admissible to show "the consequences of the overflow under similar circumstances"); Indiana: 1914, Hardin v. Cook, 181 Ind. 698, 105 N. E. 231 (whether a tile-ditch could drain a certain tract; the successful drainage of a similar tract by such a ditch admitted); Kentucky: 1903, Louisville Water Co. v. Weis, — Ky. —, 76 S. W. 356 (flooding of a cellar from a leaking meter; the flooding of other cellars, offered to show that other causes had operated, held properly excluded in the trial Court's discretion); Maine: 1860, Clark v. Water Power Co., 52 Me. 75 (in an action for diverting a stream, injuries to another mill-owner were rejected on the facts, because "there were no elements of comparison offered which could afford any safe or reliable data for the judgment of a jury", and still other evidence, because the conditions "did not present such points of similarity to the plaintiff's mill and privilege as to afford any reliable data for comparison"); Massachusetts: 1838, Standish v. Washburn, 21 Pick. 237 (the extent of flowage of meadows; the plaintiff offered to show a change in the quality and quantity of his land-production in the previous ten years as compared with the anterior period; then the defendant offered to show like changes in other lands not flowed; the latter was rejected, so far as the other meadows were distant and presumably not under the same influences); 1872, Hawks v. Charlemont, 110 Mass. 112 (the occurrence of washouts at a previous occasion and a different place by a removal of stones in the same way as alleged against the defendant; the trial Court ruled that "if the plaintiff could show that the localities and all the elements entering into the occurrences taking place at each locality were alike", the evidence might be given; and this ruling was sustained); 1889, Verran v. Baird, 150 Mass. 142, 22 N. E. 630 (to show the effect of the breaking of the plaintiff's dam, the fact was offered of the appearance of a gully halfway between the dam and the plaintiff's property; but the other facts "necessary to make the gorge a measure of the volume and force of the water" were wanting, and the evidence was rejected); 1904, Burnside v. Everett, 186 Mass. 4, 71 N. E. 82 (overflow of a sewer; an instance of overflow two years before, held not improperly excluded on cross-examination; but the Court cites Collins v. Dorchester, post, § 458, n. 2, which ought rather to be treated as discredited by later rulings); Michigan: 1877, Pettibone v. Smith, 37 Mich. 580 (the low water in a stream was explained as the result of a succession of dry seasons, not of the defendant's diversion of water); 1921, Holcomb v. Alpena Power Co., 215 Mich. 382, 184 N. W. 587 (damage to land by flood from a dam; defendant's inability "to raise good crops upon the land as before", admitted); Minnesota: 1867, Dorman v. Ames, 12 Minn. 451, 456 (overflow caused by a dam; that certain changes observable in the land were also observed in other land, not admitted for defendant); New Hampshire: 1903, Roberts v. Dover, 72 N. H. 147, 55 Atl. 895 (back-flow of sewage; that the sewer had at other times flowed back into cellars on an adjacent street, admitted to show the adequacy of the sewer's capacity); North Carolina: 1903, Bullock v. Lake Drummond C. & W. Co., 132 N. C. 179, 43 S. E. 593 (effect of a canal in damaging adjacent property, excluded); Pennsylvania: 1839, Reed v. Dick, 8 Watts 480, 481 (admitting evidence of the behavior and condition of other vessels, to show the violence of a storm); 1891, Hoffman v. R. Co., 143 Pa. 503, 22 Atl. 823 (illustrating the force of discharge of water by experiment in Court, allowed); Vermont: 1865, Haynes v. Burlington, 38 Vt. 350, 363 (to show that the setting back of water was not the cause of injury to a building, etc., similar injuries to another building not touched by the water were rejected, because the other conditions did not appear to be "so similar that one would be any fair test for the other"); Virginia: 1915, Riverside & D. R. C. M. Co. v. Waugh, 117 Va. 386, 84 S. E. 658 (that other land similarly situated was similarly affected by the same freshet, admitted).

[4] Illinois: 1864, Ottawa G. & C. Co. v. Graham, 35 Ill. 348 (Walker, C. J.: "One of the questions controverted before the jury was whether the gas could pass through the earth the distance the well was situated from the tank, so as to affect the water. If it could be shown that it had so affected the water in other wells at the same or greater distance from the tank, such evidence" would be admissible); Kentucky: 1908, Black Diamond C. & M. Co. v. Price, — Ky. —, 108 S. W. 345 (subsequent mine explosions, not admitted; unsound; no authority cited); Massachusetts: 1879, Eidt v. Cutter, 127 Mass. 522 (whether the gases from the defendant's copperas works had caused the discoloration of the paint on the plaintiff's house; the defendant alleged that the discoloration was due to sewer gas; experiments made with painted boards, etc., were admitted for the plaintiff as showing that under circumstances substantially similar, except that the sewer gas was wanting, the same results were produced; but the matter was admitted as being the grounds of experts' opinions); 1900, Koplan v. Gaslight Co., 177 Mass. 15, 58 N. E. 183 (whether a leak in the defendant's pipes had caused an of other injurious operations and structures affecting the condition of land or buildings by vibration, burning, or otherwise;[5] of the tendency or quality of tools, weapons, vehicles, acids, and other materials, as indicated in their effects upon similar substances under similar conditions;[6] explosion; testimony to "a smell of gas near the place of the accident at different times within three months previously", admitted); New York: 1895, Evans v. Gas Co., 148 N. Y. 112, 42 N. E. 513 (to show that plaintiff's trees were injured by escaping gas, the fact was admitted of trees in the neighborhood being similarly affected at the time); Pennsylvania: 1902, Kilbridge v. Carbon D. & M. Co., 201 Pa. 552, 51 Atl. 347 (explosion of a gas cylinder; the fact that the defendant had sold 150,000 like cylinders, only one of which had ever exploded, treated as evidence to show their safety); Washington: 1904, Rowe v. Northport S. & R. Co., 35 Wash. 101, 76 Pac. 529 (injury to orchards, etc., by smelting furnaces; effect of the gases on vegetation in the vicinity, under similar conditions, admissible; but experiments before the jury as to the effect of sulphuric acid on different substances were excluded as not involving similar conditions; the partly dissenting opinion of Dunbar, J., is the preferable one); West Virginia: 1899, Barrickman v. Marion Oil Co., 42 W. Va. 634, 32 S. E. 327 (fire caused by negligent supply of natural gas to plaintiff's house; condition and pressure of gas in neighboring houses governed by same regulator, admitted).

[5] California: 1868, Clark v. Willett, 35 Cal. 544 (the effect of the tunnelling of the defendant, as detrimental to adjacent premises other than the plaintiff's, offered to show that the defendant caused the land to crack and settle; excluded on the ground of surprise and confusion of issues); 1911, Fountain v. Connecticut F. Ins. Co., — Cal. App. —, 117 Pac. 630 (whether a building wall fell before the fire began; an earthquake being the alleged cause of the fall, the fall of other buildings in the same block was excluded, the conditions being not shown to be substantially similar); 1911, Loomis v. Connecticut F. Ins. Co., 16 Cal. App. 532, 117 Pac. 642 (similar); Illinois: 1882, Abend v. Mueller, 11 Ill. App. 256 (action for injuries to soil and buildings caused by vibrations of the east end of the St. Louis Bridge; (1) evidence was admitted that at the west end the vibrations were more severe and that yet buildings were not injured; "Differences arising from diversity of soil or geological formation, if any, or otherwise, could readily have been ascertained on cross-examination or by the introduction of rebutting testimony"; (2) evidence of cracks, etc., caused in other buildings had been admitted; it was held then proper to show that these injuries were caused by vibrations of an adjacent Belt Railway and not by travel over the bridge); 1898, Sugar C. C. M. Co. v. Peterson, 177 Ill. 324, 52 N. E. 474 (falling of mine-roof in another place, not admitted); 1902, Fitzsimons & Connell Co. v. Braum, 199 Ill. 390, 65 N. E. 249 (injury to a building by dynamite blasts near by; the fact that adjacent buildings were or were not injured by the same blasting, excluded on the facts); Iowa: 1905, Castner v. Chicago B. & Q. R. Co., 126 Ia. 581, 102 N. W. 499 (effect of fire upon land similarly situated, admitted); 1906, Huggard v. Glucose S. R. Co., 132 Ia. 724, 109 N. W. 475 (former effects of wind in blowing objects similarly situated, held properly admitted, but experiments as to vibrations, etc., held properly excluded, in the trial Court's discretion); Louisiana: 1900, Seibert v. McManus, 104 La. 404, 29 So. 108 (experiments as to fire-construction, admissible when made under identical conditions); Maryland: 1921, Hagerstown & F. R. Co., v. State, 139 Md. 507, 115 Atl. 783 (death by fall of a tree-limb on an electric wire; prior fall of other tree-limbs, admissible to show decayed condition); New Jersey: 1909, Fishman v. Consumer's Brewing Co., 78 N. J. L. 300, 73 Atl. 231 (fire said to have been set by hot ashes in an adjacent stable; the occurrence of a fire at the same place from that cause in 1901, excluded); 1922, Foley v. New York O. & W. R. Co., — N. J. L. —, 116 Atl. 781 (injury by a rolling boulder: the prior fall of other stones, excluded, for lack of similarity of conditions).

[6] ENGLAND: 1873, R. v. Heseltine, 12 Cox Cr. 404 (arson; to show that the fire could have been set as claimed, experiments made with candles of different lengths, similar to those found in the débris of the fire, were admitted).

UNITED STATES: Federal: 1913, Otis Elevator Co. v. Luck, 9th C. C. A., 202 Fed. 452 (defective hook; another accident with the same hook fifteen months before, admitted);
Alabama: 1901, Decatur C. W. & M. Co. v. Mehaffey, 128 Ala. 242, 29 So. 646 (experiments two years before, not under substantially the same conditions, to show the swinging of a scaffold, excluded; 1901, Timothy v. State, 130 Ala. 68, 30 So. 339 (experiments as to the distance at which powder-marks will be left, held inadmissible);
California: 1874, People v. Brotherton, 47 Cal. 402 (that a powder possessed by the defendant had destroyed ink-traces in another check written with the same ink as the one alleged to have been altered by the defendant, admitted); 1882, People v. Hope, 62 Cal. 291, and of the tendency of a machine or apparatus, as shown by other instances of its operation under similar circumstances, to operate defectively or other-

295 (experiments in Court with burglar's tools, allowed, for an unspecified purpose); 1897, People v. Durrant, 116 Cal. 179, 48 Pac. 75 (fitting a chisel into marks on a door, allowed, the door, etc., being in the same condition);
Connecticut: 1881, State v. Smith, 49 Conn. 381 (experiments with pistols by an expert, to see from which one a bullet had been discharged; the trial Court's discretion in refusing, held conclusive);
Florida: 1908, Johnson v. State, 55 Fla. 46, 46 So. 155 (experiments before the jury as to mark made by a spur, held not improperly rejected in discretion); 1914, Martin v. State, 68 Fla. 18, 66 So. 139 (murder; experiments as to the distance of a pistol when discharged, held not improperly rejected);
Georgia: 1915, Standard Oil Co. v. Reagan, 15 Ga. App. 571, 84 S. E. 69 (experiments as to explosiveness of kerosene, allowed);
Illinois: 1884, Tomlinson v. Earnshaw, 112 Ill. 313 (to show that a sandstone having certain iron-spots in it was nevertheless of first quality, testimony was received that all such stones, even of first quality, had such spots); 1902, Jewell Filter Co. v. Kirk, 200 Ill. 382, 65 N. E. 698 (satisfactory operation of other filters of the same vendor, excluded, the similarity of circumstances not being shown);
Indiana: 1892, Lake Erie & W. R. Co. v. Mugg, 132 Ind. 168, 31 N. E. 465 (experiments as to the freezing of a boot to the rail on a cold day, made on the day of the injury, excluded, because the conditions were not similar; see quotation ante, § 442); 1892, Chicago, St. L. & P. R. Co. v. Champion, — Ind. —, 32 N. E. 874 (experiments in letting a gondola-car down upon a siding under similar conditions, admitted; see quotation ante, § 442); 1899, Thrawley v. State, 153 Ind. 375, 55 N. E. 95 (experiments with similar pistol and cartridges to determine carrying distance, allowed);
Iowa: 1900, Bach v. R. Co., 112 Ia. 241, 83 N. W. 959 (defective guard-rail; subsequent derailment under different conditions, excluded);
Massachusetts: 1869, Swett v. Shumway, 102 Mass. 368 (experiments by a witness as to the strength of similar horn and hoof rings when put together, admitted); 1876, Com. v. Piper, 120 Mass. 190 (murder by clubbing; experiments on a dynamometer with a bat of substantially the same form and weight as that alleged to have been used were rejected; Morton, J.: "Experiments of this character would tend to confuse and mislead rather than to assist the jury, unless they were shown to have been made under conditions the same as those existing in the case on trial. It was not shown in this case that there was a similarity in the conditions of the two events and the Court might properly in its discretion reject the testimony"); 1902, Kingman v. Lynn & B. R. Co., 181 Mass. 387, 64 N. E. 79 (dangerous operation of a ring in a car at other times on the same day, admitted); 1915, Thornhill v. Carpenter-Morton Co., 220 Mass. 593, 108 N. E. 474, 492 (experiments as to ignitive qualities of a gasoline substance, in the jury's presence, excluded in the trial Court's discretion);
Michigan: 1913, People v. Auerbach, 176 Mich. 23, 141 N. W. 869 (experiments as to a gun's discharge, held not improperly excluded in discretion);
Minnesota: 1901, Thiel v. Kennedy, 82 Minn. 142, 84 N. W. 657 (experiments with a wringer under similar conditions, rejected in discretion as involving confusion of issues); 1904, State v. Ronk, 91 Minn. 419, 98 N. W. 334 (experiments with a gun-target, excluded);
Missouri: 1913, State v. Bass, 251 Mo. 107, 157 S. W. 782 (results of observation and experiment as to conditions of powder-shells exploding, excluded, because not made under "similar conditions and circumstances"; the opinion's strict insistence on similarity is too nearly like the literal imitativeness of the simple-minded Chinese who — in Charles Lamb's essay at least — learned how to make roast pig; in the case in hand, indeed, the defendant's house had been burned down and his wife's body found in the ruins, but with gunshot wounds; two judges diss.);
Nebraska: 1883, Polin v. State, 14 Nebr. 540, 16 N. W. 898 (whether a revolver would go off at half-cock; an experiment by the sheriff, with the remaining cartridges, under order of the Court, not allowed at the defendant's request, because the Court could not order the sheriff, and because the experiment could have been tried equally well with the empty chambers);
New Hampshire: 1899, Little v. Head & D. Co., 69 N. H. 494, 43 Atl. 619 (test of strength of a hook, held not improperly excluded in discretion);
New York: 1875, Linsday v. People, 63 N. Y. 143, 147, 156 (tests of blood-spots on boards long after the murder, admitted, on evidence that their condition was the same);
North Carolina: 1854, Otey v. Hoyt, 2 Jones L. 72 (to show that a will was forged, by chemically removing the ink and writing in its place, a witness testified that "he had just seen an experiment performed whereby legible writing with ordinary ink had been erased and extracted from a piece of paper", which he then held in his hand, by the application of certain chemicals; excluded); 1915, Carter v. McGill, 168 N. C. 507, 84 S. E. 802 (sale of fertilizers wise (for example, in actions for breach of warranty or personal injury);[7] here the workings of other similar machinery (tools or apparatus) would with ingredients not equal to warranty; to show the cause of his deficiency of crops raised thereby, defendant offered to show that other farmers in the same vicinity used the same fertilizer and obtained no beneficial effects on crops; held admissible "if conditions were favorable to a correct test of its value");

Oklahoma: 1911, Gibbons v. Terr., 5 Okl. Cr. 212, 115 Pac. 129 (experiments as to bullet-marks on a door, held improperly admitted on the facts);
Oregon: 1892, Leonard v. R. Co., 21 Or. 555, 28 N. W. 887 (a scar on the outside of the bottom flange of a rail was alleged to have been made by the wheel of an engine on a rail crossing the first; experiments were received of the rolling of a similar wheel on a similar rail crossing, showing the impossibility of such a result; the experimental wheel was slightly smaller, but an increase of size would only have increased the impossibility; see quotation ante, § 442); 1920, Horn v. Elgin Warehouse Co., 96 Or. 403, 190 Pac. 151 (breach of warranty of wheat seed; to show the quality of the seed furnished, certain crops obtained by other buyers of defendant's seed were admitted); 1921, Hall v. Brown, 102 Or. 389, 202 Pac. 719 (contract to supply teams for raising a crop; results of crop on other lands, held not admissible because not shown to be under similar conditions);
Rhode Island: 1904, Cheetham v. Union R. Co., 26 R. I. 279, 58 Atl. 881 (derailment; experiments under similar conditions, admitted);
Tennessee: 1912, Hughes v. State, 126 Tenn. 40, 148 S. W. 543 (experiments with pistols to show effects of powder-burn on cloth, allowed);
Virginia: 1908, Richards v. Com., 107 Va. 881, 59 S. E. 1104 (shoe-tracks; substantially similar conditions required);
Vermont: 1888, State v. Ward, 61 Vt. 153, 17 Atl. 483 (experiments as to the similarity of sleigh-tracks, received); 1900, Hardwick S. B. &. T. Co. v. Drenan, 72 Vt. 438, 48 Atl. 645 (experiments as to adhesiveness of gummed paper, not admitted where similarity of conditions did not appear);
West Virginia: 1919, McClain v. Marietta Torpedo Co., 84 W. Va. 139, 100 S. E. 87 (experiments as to the phenomena of explosion of nitroglycerine, held not improperly rejected by the trial Court).

Distinguish such forms of contract as the following: 1917, American Agric. C. Co. v. McKinney, 174 Ky. 22, 191 S. W. 647 (refusal to pay notes given for fertilizer, because the material was worthless; crop failures for other farmers using it, excluded, the contract guaranteeing only the presence of essential ingredients, and not their effect).

For evidence from the effects of gunshots, drugs, etc., on human bodies, see §§ 457, 460, post.

[7] Federal: 1898, Taylor v. U. S., 32 C. C. A. 449, 89 Fed. 954 (counterfeiting; whether a machine could do certain work; allowed to be operated before the jury); 1908, Chicago Gt. Western R. Co. v. McDonough, 8th C. C. A., 161 Fed. 657, 667 (boiler explosion; four similar explosions of the same boiler within four years before, the conditions being substantially the same, admitted); 1922, Paterson B. & M. Co. v. Mesh, 3d C. C. A., 278 Fed. 615 (effect of storage on other lots of eggs, admitted); Alabama: 1904, Birmingham R. L. & P. Co. v. Bynum, 139 Ala. 389, 3 So. 736 (defective coupling; a witness allowed to state how often he had known cars with that coupling to break loose); Connecticut: 1904, Watson v. Bigelow Co., 77 Conn. 124, 58 Atl. 741 (defective boiler; lack of complaint by other purchasers of plaintiff's boilers, excluded, for confusion of issues, absence of similar conditions, etc.); Illinois: 1894, Phillips, J., in Bloomington v. Legg, 151 Ill. 9, 13, 37 N. E. 696 ("Where an issue is made as to the safety of any machinery or work of man's construction which is for practical use, the manner in which it has served that purpose, when put to that use, would be a matter material to the issue"); Indiana: 1876, Baber v. Rickart, 52 Ind. 594, 597 (whether a ditching machine would work as warranted; its manner of working at another place, admitted); Iowa: 1894, State v. Delaney, 92 Ia. 467, 61 N. W. 1040 (arson; to show that the fire might have been caused by a leaky gasoline stove, the fact was admitted of a former fire in the same house from the stove); Massachusetts: 1880, Brierly v. Davol Mills, 128 Mass. 291 (whether a loom attachment was capable of successful working; its working upon another loom of substantially the same construction and operation, admitted); 1894, Tremblay v. Harnden, 162 Mass. 383, 38 N. E. 972 (injury by a machine; that it "worked perfectly before the accident and had worked perfectly ever since", admitted); 1896, Flaherty v. Powers, 167 Mass. 61, 44 N. E. 1074 (habit of a machine to spatter, admitted, to show its behavior at the time of the accident); 1897, Roskee v. Pulp Co., 169 Mass. 528, 48 N. E. 766 (experiments with machinery to test its working, received); 1905, Gregory v. American Thread Co., 187 Mass. 239, 72 N. E. 962 (former defective operation of a machine, excluded in the trial Court's discretion as too remote); New Hampshire: 1903, Saucier v. N. H. Spinning Mills, 72 N. H. 292, 56 Atl. 545 (experiments with a carding-machine to test its operation, made under similar circumstances, admitted in the trial Court's discretion); New York: 1890, McCarragher v.

equally be receivable, provided the conditions were similar and a confusion of issues was not involved; but, in the first place, it should be understood that the other instances are merely evidential of the way the one in question probably worked, and should not be taken as a legal standard of adequate operation (post, § 461); and, in the second place, the issue in the case may be such that the other instances are less likely to be relevant (as where a different contract of operation was made), or that an instance of a special kind only is material (as where one machine is taken as the sample of sale).[8]

Rogers, 120 N. Y. 526, 24 N. E. 812 (injury at a machine; prior misworking of the same machine in the same way, admitted, to show "the condition of the machine"); Ohio: 1893, Findlay Brewing Co. v. Bauer, 50 Oh. 560, 35 N. E. 55 (admitting instances of the previous workings of a machine under another person, to show its defective character); Oklahoma: 1913, Curtis & G. Co. v. Pribyl, 38 Okl. 511, 134 Pac. 71 (injury from the belt of a rip-saw; experiments not admitted on the facts); Pennsylvania: 1896, Baker v. Hagey, 177 Pa. 128, 35 Atl. 704 (other instances of defective working of a plant for breaking steel, admitted to show its defective condition at the time in question); Utah: 1900, Konold v. R. Co., 21 Utah 379, 60 Pac. 1021 (experiments as to cause of explosion, held not improperly excluded in trial Court's discretion); Vermont: 1898, Perry v. Machine Co., 70 Vt. 276, 40 Atl. 731 (condition of a machine, as to operating, on the day of trial, admitted).

[8] Federal: 1917, May Department Stores v. Runge, 8th C. C. A., 241 Fed. 575 (injury at an elevator shaft; experiment as to the possibility of machinery operating in the manner alleged, held erroneously rejected; approving the text above in § 444); Alabama: 1880, Blackman v. Collier, 65 Ala. 312 (admitting the operations of similar machinery, to determine capacity); California: 1898, Stockton C. H. & A. W. v. Ins. Co., 121 Cal. 167, 53 Pac. 565 (machines destroyed by fire; to show that they were worthless, evidence by the defendant how other similar machines of the plaintiff had worked, excluded); Georgia: 1906, Standard C. Mills v. Cheatham, 125 Ga. 649, 54 S. E. 650 (condition of other machines on the same floor, with reference to a pulley slipping, admitted); Indiana: 1884, McCormick H. M. Co. v. Gray, 100 Ind. 285, 292 (sale of a harvester; defence, that it did not work well; that it ran harder than other machines, excluded, as "a comparison with standards not admitted to be true standards of excellence"); 1885, Nat'l B. & L. Co. v. Dunn, 106 Ind. 110, 115, 6 N. E. 131 (sale of a threshing engine; defence, that it was defective; the quantity of work of another engine of the same make and rated power, admitted, as merely showing "the possibilities" of such an engine, and not setting up a standard of quality); Iowa: 1887, Osborn v. Simerson, 73 Ia. 509, 512, 35 N. W. 615 (sale of a harvesting-machine; issue, its failure to work as represented; the way in which other similar machines worked, excluded, because it would be essential that the other machines should be similar and tried under similar circumstances, and this would introduce too many collateral and unforeseen issues); 1890, Davis' Sons v. Sweeney, 80 Ia. 393, 45 N. W. 1040 (showing that a machine was defective by telling what other similar machines would do, allowed); 1897, Kramer v. Messner, 101 Ia. 88, 69 N. W. 1142 (to show that a heating-apparatus did not fail because of defects in the building, the fact was admitted of favorable results obtained from another apparatus in the same house under severer conditions); 1911, Lehmann v. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co., 153 Ia. 118, 133 N. W. 327 (other instances of the operation of handcars, admitted); Massachusetts: 1831, Bradford v. Ins. Co., 11 Pick. 161 (to prove that damaged blankets were not damaged by sea-water in transit but by wetting in the consignor's factory to increase the weight, the fact was admitted of the receipt by other consignees, in the same year, from the same consignor, by different vessels, of many similar goods damaged in a similar manner); 1905, Fountaine v. Wampanoag Mills, 189 Mass. 498, 75 N. E. 738 (injury by frame-gears; the defective operation of another frame, not shown to be similar, excluded); 1909, Dulligan v. Barber Asphalt P. Co., 201 Mass. 227, 87 N. E. 567 (prior explosion in a tank, admitted); 1922, McCarthy v. Curry, -- Mass. —, 134 N. E. 339 (manipulation of gas-engine machinery; experiments on the same car, held not improperly admitted in the trial Court's discretion); Michigan: 1886, Gage v. Meyers, 59 Mich. 300, 306, 26 N. W. 522 (contract to sell cutter-woods; the workmanship and materials of others of the same lot shipped to other persons, not received; no authority); 1886, Osborne v. Bell, 62 Mich. 214, 218, 28 N. W. 841 (harvesting-machine, alleged to operate defectively; that all the others of 100 sold the same year worked well, excluded, as not tending to show "that the operation of the one in question was in accordance with the promise of the plaintiff"); 1898, Avery v. Burrall, 118 Mich. 672, 77 N. W. 272 (guaranty of boilers' working; working of other similar boilers under similar circumstances, admitted to show that

2. The evidencing of a tendency — e.g. of a machine — by its material effects is to be distinguished from two other matters, one of them involving a wholly different principle: (1) The evidencing of a defective or dangerous machine or highway by the occurrence of previous personal injuries has a special line of other precedents (dealt with post, § 458). (2) The inference to one human act of negligence from another similar act (in using, for example, the same machine or in driving the same street-car) is governed by different principles, and is dealt with under the character-rule (ante, § 199). This distinction is pointed out in the following passage:

1894, PUTNAM, J., in Central Vt. R. Co. v. Soper, 8 C. C. A. 341, 59 Fed. 879, 890 (in an action for damage caused by spontaneous ignition of dust by heated pulley-bearings, admitting evidence that similar ignition at those bearings had occurred before): "[The facts objected to] relate entirely to the tendency of things, inanimate things, being in this case machinery. The plaintiff in error argued as though they related to the peculiar habits of certain specified human beings. The distinction is a broad one; and, if it is kept in mind, the evidence was clearly admissible for the purpose, not of showing that the employees of the defendant below were negligent, but of showing . . . that it is the tendency of certain parts of rapidly-running machinery to get heated, and of dust in mills where grain is ground or stored to be of a highly inflammable character, . . . both for the purpose of showing a point where the fire might have originated and also of showing the necessity of care to guard that point."

§ 452. Sparks and Fires, as evidencing the Cause of a Fire; General Principle. There has been some confusion of precedents over the evidencing of the source of a fire (usually, a fire attributed to a railroad locomotive engine) by the fact of the emission of sparks or the setting of fires at other times by the same or other apparatus. The solution of the problem seems not to be difficult if the different issues involved are discriminated.

Two issues may come for investigation:

(1) The effort may be to prove the cause of the fire in question. The locomotive, or other apparatus (factory or mine chimney), is alleged as the cause; and this is sought to be evidenced by the fact that at other times there under proper management the boilers would work well); 1899, People v. Thompson, 122 Mich. 411, 81 N. W. 344 (explosion of boiler; experiments as to time of raising steam under similar conditions, admissible); Montana: 1905, Lander v. Sheehan, 32 Mont. 25, 79 Pac. 406 (action for the price of a stove; plea that it was defective and worthless; worthlessness of a similar stove sold to a third person by plaintiff, excluded; following Stockton C. H. & A. W. v. Ins. Co., Cal., supra); New Hampshire: 1898, Shute v. Mfg. Co., 69 N. H. 210, 40 Atl. 391 (cause of breaking of a pulley; breaking of another similar pulley, admitted); Oregon: 1919, Kohlhogen v. Cardwell, 93 Or. 610, 184 Pac. 261 (what space in an ordinary wagon-box 8 hogs would fill; experiments in loading hogs in a wagon under similar conditions, admitted); Pennsylvania: 1870, Tilton v. Miller, 66 Pa. 388 (refusal to accept gasburners purchased by sample, because they were not made according to sample; held, that while the maker did not guarantee a particular result or quality of work, and therefore evidence that they did not work well was immaterial, yet to determine whether they were made according to sample, the workings of the sample and the goods offered might be received for comparison); So. Carolina: 1921, Livingston v. Reid-Hart-Parr Co., — S. C. —, 109 S. E. 105 (sale of a defective farm tractor; faulty operation of similar machines sold by defendant to other persons, excluded, except on an issue of fraud); Vermont: 1885, Carpenter v. Corinth, 58 Vt. 216, semble (breaking of other horse-bits under similar conditions, admissible); Wisconsin: 1912, Guse v. Power & M. M. Co., 151 Wis. 400, 138 N. W. 195 (that similar hooks frequently broke or bent, admitted).

were emissions of sparks (i.e. flaming coals) from (a) the same engine or (b) other engines of the same owner. (a) The proposed inference, in the first case, is from the former spark-emissions to the existence of a capacity or tendency to such emissions by that specific engine, and thus to the possibility or probability of such an emission having occurred at the time in question and so having set the fire in question. (b) The proposed inference, in the second case, is to such a capacity or tendency in the class of engines passing over that line, and therefore to its probable existence in a particular engine passing by at the time in question, and thus to the same conclusion as before.

(2) In the preceding issue, the effort was merely to show that the defendant's engine caused the fire. But this alone will usually not suffice under the law;[1] it will be necessary further to show some kind of negligence; and this will commonly resolve itself into showing the maintenance of an engine so constructed as to be dangerously likely to emit sparks. This requires much more than a showing of mere capacity for emission. In the former issue the inquiry was merely whether the locomotive did once emit a spark and thus cause the specific fire, and the fact of capacity to do so was merely subsidiary and evidentiary to that; in the present issue the plaintiff proceeds directly to show habitual emission, i.e. a dangerous tendency, as a main element entering into legal negligence; and the showing must be not merely of a capacity to emit sparks, but of a tendency so strong that it may be regarded as negligence to maintain an engine so equipped. Such are the two issues; and the rulings upon the evidence for each may conceivably be different.

§ 453. Same: Discriminations. Before proceeding to examine the application of the present principles to the above issues, it is desirable to discriminate certain other evidential questions which often arise in such litigation but do not involve the present principles:

(3) In showing that a particular locomotive set a fire or emitted sparks, evidence is receivable that, shortly after it passed the place in question, stubble along the track was found on fire or live coals were found near the track. Here the inference is from the traces of fire to the origin of fire, — an argument of another kind (ante, §§ 148, 149), and not affected by the present principle.

(4) The question whether the mere fact of the setting of the fire in question, if brought home to the defendant, raises a presumption of negligence is a question of Presumptions (post, § 2509).

(5) The setting of fires by the same or other engines of the defendant at other times may be admissible to show notice of the defect, if there was one; here is involved the general principle of evidencing notice or Knowledge circumstantially (ante, § 252). Practically, there may be a serious difference in this use; since only prior fires could be relevant as indicating this fact of notice.

§ 452. [1] It might, in a jurisdiction where the railroad owner is by statute liable without negligence for the setting of fire by sparks.

(6) In order to show that a certain kind of spark-arrester or other piece of apparatus is such as a prudent person would use, the usage of other persons as to spark-arresters or like precautions may be offered; this raises a different question (post, § 461).

(7) In order to negative an argument drawn from the distance between the railroad track and the place fired, instances of the transmission of live coals to an equal or greater distance are receivable, as evidencing the capacity of locomotives in that respect; this inference is one of the elements in the evidential process of § 454.

Returning to the two issues stated in the preceding section, the situations thus presented are the following: (1) To show that a given locomotive caused the fire, by having the capacity to emit sparks, evidence is offered of spark-emissions at other times (a) by the same locomotive, or (b) by other locomotives on the same line; (2) To show a dangerously defective (and therefore negligent) construction in the locomotive, evidence is offered of spark-emissions at other times by the same locomotive or by others on the same line.

§ 454. Same: (1) Cause of the Fire, as evidenced by other Spark-emissions (a) by the same Locomotive. Here no difficulty seems to have arisen.[1] The § 454. [1] To the following precedents may be added those receiving the evidence under (1*b*) and (2), post; for the present point, though passed upon in comparatively few jurisdictions, would be regarded as involved in an affirmative ruling on those points: Ala. 1903, Alabama G. S. R. Co. v. Clark, 136 Ala. 450, 34 So. 971 (other emissions at or about the time, received); 1907, Sherrill v. Louisville & N. R. Co., 148 Ala. 1, 44 So. 153 (like Alabama G. S. R. Co. v. Clark); Cal. 1875, Henry v. R. Co., 50 Cal. 176, 183 (to show that the engine was the cause, other fires set by it are admissible); 1899, Liverpool, L. & G. Ins. Co. v. Southern Pac. Co., 125 Cal. 434, 58 Pac. 55 (previous emission of sparks by the same engine, admitted to show probable setting of a fire); Ill. 1898, Baltimore & O. S. W. R. Co. v. Tripp, 175 Ill. 251, 51 N. E. 833 (emission within ten days afterwards, admitted); Ky. 1901, Carpenter v. Laswell, — Ky. —, 63 S. W. 609 (setting of prior fires from defendant's smokestack, admitted); Mass. 1863, Ross v. R. Co., 6 All. 87 (sparks by the same engine under similar conditions, admitted to disprove the defendant's proposition that no sparks could reach the plaintiff's building, and thus to show "the physical possibility that fire could be so communicated"); 1881, Loring v. R. Co., 131 Mass. 469 (same); Mich. 1874, Hoyt v. Jeffers, 30 Mich. 181, 189 (mill-chimney; that it "had been in the habit of throwing sparks and setting fire to buildings, etc., for several years previous", the conditions of use, wind, etc., being the same, admitted to show that the chimney had caused this fire); N. H. 1888, Haseltine v. R. Co., 64 N. H. 545 (other fires set by the same engine a week later, admitted to show it to be the cause of the fire in question); N. Y. 1862, Hinds v. Barton, 25 N. Y. 544 (former emission of sparks, admitted to show "the capacity of this particular engine to emit igneous matter a greater distance than that intervening between it and the building" in question); 1888, Collins v. R. Co., 109 N. Y. 243, 249, 16 N. E. 50 (emission six months later; admitted only on a showing that the engine was permanently so constructed as to emit sparks or that it was in the same state of repair as before; no precedents cited; the ruling seems finical and unsound); N. Car. 1904, Cheek v. Oak G. L. Co., 134 N. C. 225, 46 S. E. 488 (setting of fire by the same engine one year later, excluded, on the ground of confusion of issues); 1906, Johnson v. Atlantic C. L. R. Co., 140 N. C. 574, 53 S. E. 362 (emissions of fire by the same engine shortly before or after, admissible; but here not the mere fact of a freight car being on fire without any other evidence of the engine causing it); Pa. 1876, Philadelphia & R. R. Co. v. Hendrickson, 80 Pa. 182, 189 (sparks and fires by the same engine, just before and after, admitted to show the cause); 1875, Pennsylvania Co. v. Watson, 81 Pa. 293, 296 (sparks and fires by the same engine, just before and after, admitted); 1891, Henderson v. R. Co., 144 Pa. 461, 477, 22 Atl. 851 (same; the time limit to be a reasonable one); Va. 1897, Patteson v. R. Co., 94 Va. 16, 26 S. E. 393 (other sparks by the same engine, admitted); Wis. 1882, Brusberg v. R. Co., 55 Wis. 106, 12 N. W. 416 (fires on the same trip of the same engine, close by, admitted to show it to be the cause of the fire).

emission of sparks by a locomotive at various times will naturally indicate a capacity to emit such sparks; the capacity rising into a tendency (i.e. the possibility rising towards a probability), in a given case, with the number or character of the instances (ante, § 446). Where the time of the other instances is somewhat removed, it is sometimes thought wise to require a preliminary showing that the condition of the engine had not changed in the meantime (ante, § 437); but the difficulty of such a showing by the plaintiff, and the ease for the defendant of showing such a change if it had occurred, make it much preferable to ignore this requirement and to leave it to the defendant, on the principle of Explanation (ante, § 449) to show such a change if he can. The other instances, moreover, may have occurred either before or after the time in question, for in either case they show the condition of the engine.

§ 455. Same: (1) Cause of the Fire, as evidenced by other Spark-emissions (b) by other Locomotives. Here there has been some difference of opinion, which can only be solved by an examination of the principles involved:

(1) Relevancy; (a) in General. The proposed inference, as already noted (ante, § 452), is to the defendant's engine as the possible cause of the fire, i.e. as having the capacity to cause it by emitting burning material. In evidencing that capacity by instances of it, one way — just examined — is to take instances of the specific engine's operation. But another and equally satisfactory way is to take instances of the operation of the class of engines of which it is a member; for what exists in the class is presumably to be found also in the individual, and to evidence such a capacity in the class is to evidence it in any one of the class. The argument up to this point has never been objected to, except in the following passage:

1883, ORTON, J., in Gibbons v. R. Co., 58 Wis. 335, 17 N. W. 132: "Evidence that other fires had been set by the fire machinery managed by the company, before or after or about the time of the fire in question, is confined to the same machinery which caused such fire, and which may bear upon the question of the sufficiency of such machinery or its management. . . . [It is said that] such evidence might tend to prove the possibility and consequent probability that some locomotive of the company caused the fire. . . . But it is submitted that a possibility can never establish a probability of a fact required to be proved in order to make a railroad company, or any party, liable in any action whatever; and the proposition is no sounder in logic than in law."

In answer to this argument, two things may be said. First, a given instance or two may show only a possibility; but this is reason only for excluding such slight evidence in that case, and not for excluding all such evidence without regard to the number or significance of such instances. Secondly, even a possibility or capacity is properly relevant (ante, §§ 446, 448). The object is to narrow down the conceivable range of causes by finding out what things were capable of producing the fire, and by then cumulating other evidence upon one of them. If mice had set a fire in the house, but once only, by getting at matches, this would be relevant as showing a possible cause.

The statement in the above passage that no one can be made liable upon a mere possibility is of course beside the point; because the possibility is not offered as constituting 'per se' a test of liability, but merely as evidence admissible towards accumulating a preponderance of evidence. The sound principle, as applied to the present sort of evidence, is expounded in the following passage:

1846, Piggot v. R. Co., 3 C. B. 229 (admitting evidence of sparks on other occasions from the defendant's locomotives). TINDAL, C. J. "[The evidence was admissible] to ascertain whether or not sparks such as those described could be emitted, from the engines used by the company, to the distance represented." MAULE, J.: "The evidence objected to was that other engines used on the defendant's line, of the same description as that which was said to have caused the injury here, had on various other occasions been seen to throw particles of ignited matter to a distance from the line as great or greater than the spot in question. The matter in issue was whether or not the plaintiff's property had been destroyed by fire proceeding from the defendant's engine, and involved in that issue was the question whether or not the fire could have been so caused. The evidence was offered for the purpose of showing that it could; and for that purpose it was clearly material and admissible."

1897, SAVAGE, J., in Dunning v. R. Co., 91 Me. 87, 39 Atl. 352: "It is admissible as 'tending to prove the possibility, and a consequent probability, that some locomotive caused the fire', — language from Railway Co. v. Richardson,[1] which has often been cited with approval. To show a possibility is the first logical step. That other engines of the same company, under the same general management, passing over the same track, at the same grade, at about the same time, and surrounded by the same physical conditions, have scattered sparks or dropped coals, so as to cause fires, appeals legitimately to the mind as showing that it was possible for the engine in question to do likewise. The testimony is illustrative of the character of a locomotive, as such, with respect to the emission of sparks or the dropping of coals. If the possibility be proved, other facts and circumstances may lead to a probability, and then to satisfactory proof."

(1) (b) Similarity of Construction. But the foregoing inference is based on the assumption that the engine in question is one of a class, and what is true of the class is true of the individual engine upon this assumption only. Not all engines are of the same construction or in the same condition with reference to a capacity to emit sparks, and therefore the instancing of such a capacity in some of them does not evidence such a capacity in another unless they belong to the same class with reference to construction, etc.; in short, unless the principle of substantial similarity of conditions (ante, § 442) is fulfilled. Upon this all agree; but the question arises whether the detailed showing of similarity of construction should be required in advance from the plaintiff, or whether the similarity should be assumed in certain cases, leaving it to the defendant, on the principle of Explanation (ante, § 449), to show, if he can, that the construction or condition was not similar. It seems wiser, where the other engines belong to the same owner or run over the same line, to assume this similarity, — first, because it is a probable one, and, next, because it is comparatively difficult for a plaintiff, though comparatively easy for a defendant, to produce the proper evidence. This was long ago pointed out in one of the earlier cases:

§ 455. [1] 91 U. S. 464.

1856, DENIO, C. J., in Sheldon v. R. Co., 14 N. Y. 220: "It is argued [that the evidence] . . . did not refer to any particular engine, and that it may be that the one which ran past the premises just before the discovery of the fire was quite a different one [from the others. . . . But] it would be practically quite impossible by any inquiries to find out the offending engine, for a large proportion of those owned by the company are constantly in rapid motion. The business of running the trains on a railroad presupposes a unity of management and a general similarity in the fashion of the engines and the character of the operations. . . . It is presumed to be in the power of the company, which has intimate relations with all its engineers and conductors, to controvert the fact sworn to, if it is untrue, or, if true in a particular instance, that it was not so in respect to the engines which passed the place at a proper time before the occurrence of the fire. The effect of the evidence would only be to shift the 'onus probandi' upon the company. . . . [It was in their power] to show that the special facts applicable directly to the occurrence of the fire were such as to overcome the general inference from the plaintiff's evidence."[2]

Where the other engines belong to another road, this assumption cannot be made; but upon a showing of such similarity, it would seem that instances of their operation would be receivable.[3]

(1) (c) Time of other instances. The other instances may be either before or after the time in question; though if the time was remote, a preliminary showing that no change had been made in construction would perhaps be proper.

(1) (d) Nature of Sparks. The setting of a fire is plainly an effect indicating a capacity to set fire. But the emission of burning coals of any sort is always regarded as sufficient, because it is clear that such a substance is always capable of setting fire.[4]

(2) Auxiliary Policy. The principle of auxiliary policy (ante, § 443), involving the considerations of unfair surprise and confusion of issues, has never been thought to exclude this sort of evidence;[5] for not only is the evidence of special importance, but it seldom involves any substantial risk of either of those sorts.

(3) Known engine. In Pennsylvania, the notion was early promulgated that the evidence of sparks from other engines is not receivable if the engine that passed at the time and must have been the one (if any) to set the fire is specifically known and identified.[6] It is not easy to see the precise reason for this limitation. The thought perhaps is that when the specific engine is known, there is no need of resorting to instances of the operation of other engines. But in reality the need may be and usually will be just as great; for it does not follow that, because it was known on this occasion, it was therefore known on the other occasions; and it may well be impossible to obtain instances of this particular engine's operation on other occasions. The principle that the operation of a specific machine may be learned from the

[2] Accord: Eng., Mo., Nev., N. Y., Or., U. S., Vt.

[3] Mass.

[4] Except that in Pennsylvania it is required that the evidence show repeated emission of sparks of unusual size.

[5] It was expressly repudiated in the following cases: 1875, Henry v. R. Co., 50 Cal. 176, 184 (at least for the case in hand); 1874, Hoyt v. Jeffers, 30 Mich. 181, 190.

[6] The earlier cases are cited post, § 456.

operations of its class is just as valid in the one case as in the other. A doctrine that proper evidence is always to be rejected because it is sometimes possible to get other and perhaps better evidence is certainly a novelty. This limitation about identified engines, which began as a local aberration, has threatened to spread into other jurisdictions, through their apparent ignorance of its purely local character.[7]

Subject to the occasional prevalence of the last limitation, this class of evidence for this purpose is accepted as admissible in virtually all jurisdictions.[8]

[7] E.g. Ill., Mo., N. C., S. C., U. S. C. C. A., Wis. (post, § 456).

[8] ENGLAND: 1846, Piggot v. R. Co., 3 C. B. 229 (the fact of sparks on other occasions from the defendant's engines was offered; it was objected that "it was not competent to the plaintiff in this case to prove the emission of sparks or ignited matter from the other engines, passing the spot on other occasions, without showing them to have been under the care of the same driver, driven at the same speed, with the same number of carriages and passengers, and of the same construction as the engine in use at the time of the accident"; admitted in spite of this objection).

UNITED STATES: Fed. 1875, Grand Trunk R. Co. v Richardson, 91 U. S. 454, 458, 470 (sparks by the defendant's engines, during the same summer, admitted to show that an engine of the defendant caused the fire; similarity of construction, etc., need not first be shown); 1892, Chicago S. P. M. & O. R. Co. v. Gilbert, 3 C. C. A. 264, 52 Fed. 711, 10 U. S. App. 375, 378 (emission of fire for several weeks previous in the same vicinity, admitted); 1893, Gulf C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Johnson, 4 C. C. A. 447, 54 Fed. 474, 10 U. S. App. 629, 631 (similar); 1902, Lesser Cotton Co. v. R. Co. 52 C. C. A. 95, 114 Fed. 133 (the engine being identified, and its spark-arrester being produced, the fact of emission of sparks by other engines of the defendant was held inadmissible, unless it appeared that they were constructed and operated similarly; the opinion does not clearly comprehend the principle); 1902, Texas & P. R. Co. v. Watson, 190 U. S. 287, 23 Sup. 681 (Grand T. R. Co. v. Richardson followed); 1914, Northern Pacific R. Co. v. Mentzer, 9th C. C. A., 214 Fed. 10 (fires set previously by other engines of the defendant admitted, no particular engine being designated in the complaint);
Alabama: 1901, Alabama G. S. R. Co. v. Johnston, 128 Ala. 283, 29 So. 771 (habitual emission of sparks by defendant's engines, admitted; the qualification about identified engines, not decided); 1906, Birmingham R. L. & P. Co. v. Martin, 148 Ala. 8, 42 So. 618 (prior emissions by the defendant's engines, admitted); 1921, Payne v. Hargrove, 206 Ala. 69, 89 So. 167 (spark-emissions from other engines of like equipment, admissible);
Arkansas: 1894, Railway Co. v. Jones, 59 Ark. 105, 111, 26 S. W. 595 (other fires by the same railroad's engines, perhaps admissible);
California: 1885, Butcher v. R. Co., 67 Cal. 518, 8 Pac. 174 (fires from other engines of the defendant, before and after, admissible "to show the cause of the injury"; two judges dissenting);
Delaware: 1921, Director-General of R. R. v. Johnston, — Del. —, 114 Atl. 759 (other fires by other engines, not admissible to show probable emission when the engine passing at the time is identified);
Georgia: 1897, Brown v. Benson, 101 Ga. 753, 29 S. E. (fires set "at various times before the fire occurred", by engines of the defendant, admissible; if remote in time, the conditions of repair must be shown the same);
Idaho: 1908, Osburn v. Oregon R. & N. Co., 15 Ida. 478, 98 Pac. 627 (other fires admitted; whether Pennsylvania rule applies, not decided); 1912, Fodey v. Northern Pacific R. Co., 21 Ida. 713, 123 Pac. 835 (Osburn v. R. Co., followed; admissible for other engines, even where the particular engine is identified);
Illinois: 1866, Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. McClelland, 42 Ill. 355 (sparks and fires by the defendant's engines, admitted to show that sparks could be thrown one hundred feet, all the engines being similar);
Indian Territory: 1903, St. Louis I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Lawrence, 4 Ind. T. 611, 76 S. W. 254 (admissible, where the engine in question is not identified);
Iowa: 1882, Babcock v. R. Co., 62 Ia. 593, 597, 13 N. W. 740, 17 N. W. 909 (another fire set by the defendant's engine in the right of way, not admitted to show that this one also caught there); 1884, Bell v. R. Co., 64 Ia. 321, 325 (other fires set by the defendant's engines in that region, excluded); 1919, International Harvester Co. v. Chicago M. & St. P. R. Co., 186 Ia. 86, 172 N. W. 471 (obscure);
Kansas: 1904, Sprague v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co., 70 Kan. 359, 78 Pac. 828 (to show the origin of the fire, where it is disputed, emissions by other engines of the defendant are receivable, whether the engine is identified or not); 1921, Otey v. Midland Valley R. Co., 108 Kan. 755, 197 Pac. 203 (other fires set by same locomotive, admitted to evidence the cause);

Kentucky: 1883, Kentucky C. R. Co. v. Barrow, 89 Ky. 643, 20 S. W. 165 ("in the absence of direct evidence as to the condition of that particular locomotive", former fires by other engines were held admissible); 1900, Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Samuels, — Ky. —, 57 S. W. 235 (R. Co. v. Barrow approved); 1909, Illinois Central R. Co. v. Hicklin, 131 Ky. 624, 115 S. W. 752 ("The admissibility of such evidence is no longer an open question"); 1910, Cincinnati N. O. & T. P. R. Co. v. Sadieville M. Co., 137 Ky. 568, 126 S. W. 118 (Barrow Case approved and followed); 1912, Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Guttman, 148 Ky. 235, 146 S. W. 731 (like Ill. C. R. Co. v. Hicklin); 1916, Chesapeake & O. R. Co. v. Meek, 169 Ky. 775, 185 S. W. 160 (subsequent emissions by the same engine, admissible); 1916, Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Brewer, 170 Ky. 505, 186 S. W. 166 (emission of sparks to greater distances, admitted);

Maine: 1893, Thatcher v. R. Co., 85 Me. 502, 509, 27 Atl. 519 (fires set by the defendant's other locomotives about the same time and in the same vicinity, admitted); 1897, Dunning v. R. Co., 91 Me. 87, 39 Atl. 352 (other fires by other locomotives about the same time and in the same vicinity, admitted; the Pennsylvania rule about identity of engine rejected; see quotation supra); 1917, Libbey v. Maine Central R. Co., 116 Me. 231, 100 Atl. 1025 (fires set by other engines, admitted, to show tendency in the class of engines and thus to evidence causation, even though negligence was by statute not in issue);

Maryland: 1873, Annapolis & E. R. Co. v. Gantt, 39 Md. 115, 134 (sparks and fires by other engines of the defendant, shortly before, admitted to show the capacity to cause the fire);

Massachusetts: 1881, Ross v. R. Co., 5 All. 87 (sparks and fires by engines of a similar sort on other roads, admitted to show "the physical possibility that fire could be so communicated", which the defendant had denied); 1900, McGinn v. Platt, 177 Mass. 125, 58 N. E. 175 (emission by other engines on the same road in the vicinity, received); 1901, Bowen v. R. Co., 179 Mass. 524, 61 N. E. 141 (emission of sparks by engines similarly equipped, received);

Mississippi: 1903, Alabama & V. R. Co. v. Ins. Co., 82 Miss. 770, 35 So. 304 (emission of sparks by other engines, just before and after, admitted);

Missouri: 1893, Campbell v. R. Co., 121 Mo. 340, 349, 25 S. W. 396 (fires by other engines of the defendant, before and after, at different places on the line, admissible); 1897, Matthew v. R. Co., 142 Mo. 645, 44 S. W. 802 (sparks from another engine of the defendant, admitted; no previous showing of similarity of kind or condition required);

Nevada: 1874, Longabaugh v. R. Co., 9 Nev. 271, 284, 288 (sparks and fires from the defendant's engines, within a few weeks, admissible, to show that an engine of the defendant caused the fire; similarity of construction need not first be shown);

New Hampshire: 1860, Boyce v. R. Co., 42 N. H. 97, 100 (sparks and fires by other engines, admitted, to show capacity for setting fire, provided they are all of similar construction, repair, and management); 1862, Boyce v. R. Co., 43 N. H. 627 (similar evidence admissible; but the above proviso held to be a point undecided); 1884, Smith v. R. Co., 63 N. H. 25, 29 (fires by the defendant's engines, all of similar construction, admitted "to show that this fire could have been and probably was set in the same manner"); 1903, Gerrish v. Whitfield, 72 N. H. 222, 55 Atl. 551, semble (that "such a mill as W.'s" had thrown live sparks as far as in the present case, admissible); 1916, Bailey Lumber Co. v. Boston & M. R. Co., 78 N. H. 94, 97 Atl. 555 (sparks from other similar engines, admitted; careful opinion by Walker, J.);

New York: 1856, Sheldon v. R. Co., 14 N. Y. 218, 220 (sparks from other engines of the defendant on the same track, admitted, "after" refuting every other probable cause of the fire, to show that the engines "were so managed as to be likely to set on fire objects not more remote than the property burned"; similarity of engine-construction need not be first shown; see quotation supra); 1862, Hinds v. Barton, 25 N. Y. 544, 546, semble (approving the preceding case); 1866, Field v. R. Co., 32 N. Y. 338, 346, 348 (live coals dropped at other times from the fire-pan; foregoing cases approved);

North Carolina: 1920, Matthis v. Johnson, 180 N. C. 130, 104 S. E. 366 (sparks from same engine on prior occasions, admitted);

Oklahoma: 1910, St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Shannon, 25 Okl. 754, 108 Pac. 401 (fires set by other engines of the defendant, admitted); 1922, Midland Valley R. Co. v. Taylor, — Okl. —, 204 Pac. 1102 (emission of sparks by other engines of identical construction, admitted);

Oregon: 1890, Koontz v. O. R. & N. Co., 20 Or. 3, 23 Pac. 820 (sparks and fire by other engines of the defendant, before and after, admissible, without showing similarity of make); 1907, Hawley v. Sumpter R. Co., 49 Or. 509, 90 Pac. 1106 (Grand Trunk R. Co. v. Richardson followed; but the mere occurrence of fires, without any connection shown with defendant's engines, is not enough);

Pennsylvania: 1875, Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Stranahan, 79 Pa. 405 (the emission of sparks in unusual quantities by other engines of the defendant, admitted to show the cause of the fire); 1891, Henderson v. R. Co., 144 Pa. 461, 487, 22 Atl. 851 (repeated sparks and fires about the same time, set by other engines of the defendant, admitted to show the cause of the fire, provided the engine is not identifiable; otherwise, the evidence of other fires and sparks must be restricted to it); 1909, American Ice Co. v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 221

§ 456. Same: (2) Defective Construction, as an element of Negligence, evidenced by other Spark-emissions. Here, as already noted (§ 452), the inference is in its nature broadly the same as in the preceding cases, i.e. from the observed operations of the engines to a construction or condition which, under the law of Torts and aided by other evidence, may be an element of negligence. But though the process of inference is the same, the present purpose is distinct from and additional to the preceding; and either one may be available without the other, — for example, where a statute makes the setting of fire by a locomotive negligence 'per se', in which case only the preceding use is required; or where the setting of the fire is conceded, in which case the present use alone is available. The principle is expounded in the following passages:

1858, BRAMWELL, B., in Vaughan v. R. Co., 3 H. & N. 743, 745, 750 (fires by the defendant's engines at other times were admitted without objection): "It was admitted that, with these precautions, the locomotive was the cause of setting fire to the defendant's banks, not daily but occasionally; so that . . . its use was dangerous, and what had happened on this particular occasion — that is, setting fire to the defendant's grass — was not a particular accident, but one of the habitual incidents to the use of the locomotive."

1891, CLARK, J., in Henderson v. R. Co., 144 Pa. 488: "If many of the company's engines, at or about the time, are without sufficient spark-arresters, and frequent fires are kindled in consequence, it may well be inferred, in view of the effectual character of mechanical inventions of this kind, not only that the fire in question originated from this cause, but that it occurred from the habitual negligence of the company in failing to provide sufficient spark-arresters."

1869, BARRETT, J., in Clearelands v. R. Co., 42 Vt. 457: "The argument is this: The evidence tended to show, and the fact was not denied, that the fire was set from an engine of the defendants: . . . other evidence tended to show that about the time, and on the day of the fire, and before it occurred, the defendants were running engines by the place in question that did scatter fire to such an extent that fires were set by it. The inference is that, of the defendants' engines, the one by which the fire was set was one that scattered fire. But it is already in evidence that an engine that will do that to such an extent is not

Pa. 439, 73 Atl. 873 (emission of sparks at another time is not alone sufficient evidence of cause in the absence of emission at or near the time); 1916, Knickerbocker Ice Co. v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 253 Pa. 54, 97 Atl. 1051 (emissions of sparks from another locomotive, admitted, the causing engine not being identified; none of the above cases cited);
Rhode Island: 1871, Smith v. R. Co., 10 R. I. 24, 27 (other fires set by the defendant's engines, admissible "to show the possibility of communicating fire by sparks from a locomotive");
Tennessee: 1872, Burke v. Louisville & N. R. Co., 7 Heisk. 451, 456, 464 (emissions of sparks by other engines of defendant, admitted to show "the possibility of the building being fired in the manner alleged"); 1882, Nashville & C. R. Co. v. Tyne, 7 Am. & Eng. R. R. Cases, 515 (foregoing case approved); 1904, Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Fort, 112 Tenn. 432, 80 S. W. 429 (foregoing cases approved);
Vermont: 1894, Hoskison v. R. Co., 66 Vt. 618, 30 Atl. 24 (sparks and fires by other engines of the defendant, admitted to show the capacity of the engines to set fire; the particular engine not being identifiable; similarity of construction need not first be shown); 1909, Ide v. Boston & Maine R., 83 Vt. 66, 74 Atl. 401 (remoteness of time of other instances is in trial Court's discretion);
Virginia: 1897, Kimball v. Borden, 95 Va. 203, 28 S. E. 207 (sparks by other engines of the defendant near the time, admitted);
Washington: 1902, Abrams v. R. Co., 27 Wash. 507, 68 Pac. 78 (other fires, admitted); 1903, Noland v. R. Co., 31 Wash. 430, 71 Pac. 1098 (admissible, if the specific engine is not identified);
Wisconsin: 1883, Gibbons v. R. Co., 58 Wis. 335, 17 N. W. 132 (fires set by the defendant's engines at other times, not admissible to show that the engine of the defendant's caused the fire, the engine being identified; where not identified, semble, the same result).

of proper construction and suitable repair. The reasoning is direct to the condition of the defendants' engine by which the fire was set."

The general nature of the inference being the same as in the preceding cases, the incidental questions that arise are analogous.

(1) It might be supposed, since here the purpose is to show a tendency and not a mere capacity to emit sparks, that a stronger quality of evidence would have been required. This seems not to have been done anywhere;[1] and for these presumable reasons, namely, that even a capacity to emit sparks may in a given case become an element of negligence, and that in any case the distinction (ante, § 446) between a capacity and a tendency (possibility and probability) is impracticable with the object of requiring a higher quality for evidence of the latter. These reasons justify the failure to make such a distinction.

(2) The other instances may be received from the same engine or from other engines of the same line; discrimination between the two seems rarely to have been attempted, — a just result, as already noted (ante, § 455). But any Court that might require similarity of construction to be shown in advance[2] would apply the requirement equally in the preceding class of cases and the present.

(3) The time of the other instances may be either before or after the time in question; if the time was remote, a preliminary showing that no change of condition had occurred might be required.

(4) Where the specific engine is known, the evidence as to other engines is excluded in a few jurisdictions;[3] the impropriety of this limitation has been already considered (ante, § 455).

The state of the law in the various jurisdictions is not as harmonious as upon the foregoing class of evidence.[4] But in no jurisdiction, apparently, is the evidence excluded absolutely; in a few only it is excluded conditionally.

§ 456. [1] Except that Pa. requires the repeated setting of fires by sparks of unusual size; but this is required equally for the preceding case; see Ia. also.

[2] See note 2 in § 455.

[3] Ga., Ill., Mich., N. C., Pa., Wis., and perhaps others.

[4] The phrase used in some of the ensuing precedents, that the evidence indicates "negligent habit" is hardly correct; the evidence indicates defective construction of the engine, which may be equivalent to negligence; but that it can be used to indicate a habit or character of the defendant's agents is perhaps doubtful, for the learned Courts using this language would hardly mean to involve the principles of the character-rule (ante, § 199). The precedents are as follows:

ENGLAND: 1841, Aldridge v. R. Co., 3 M. & Gr. 515, 522 (Tindal, C. J.: "If the plaintiff had proved that the engines had frequently set fire to stacks, that would have shown negligence"; but whether by indicating defective condition of the engine, or merely by tending to show a notice of such conditions, does not appear); 1858, Vaughan v. R. Co., 3 H. & N. 743, 745, 750 (fires by the defendant's engines at other times, admitted to show the dangerousness of the construction; see quotation supra; the ruling on appeal, in 5 H. & N. 679, 688, probably did not mean to deny this);

CANADA: N. Br. 1883, Robinson v. N. B. R. Co., 23 N. Br. 323, 332 (that fires frequently occurred along the right of way after the passing of trains, admitted); Ont. 1883, Canada C. R. Co. v. McLaren, 8 Ont. App. 564, 571 (prior emission of sparks by defendant's engine, admitted to show defective construction, by two judges); 1900, Peacock v. Cooper, 27 Ont. App. 128 (prior and subsequent emission of sparks by a steamboat, held admissible to show defective construction; but here the evidence was not sufficient under the rule).

UNITED STATES: Federal: 1875, Grand T. R. Co. v. Richardson, 91 U. S. 454, 458, 470 (sparks by the defendant's engines, during the same summer, admitted to show "a negligent habit of the officers and agents"; similarity of construction, etc., need not first be shown); 1892, Northern P. R. Co. v. Lewis, 2 C. C. A. 446, 51 Fed. 658, 7 U. S. App. 254, 272 (fires by other locomotives, admitted); 1902, Texas & P. R. Co. v. Watson, 190 U. S. 287, 23 Sup. 681 (Grand T. R. Co. v. Richardson followed);

Alabama: 1896, Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Miller, 109 Ala. 500, 19 So. 989 (the mere fact of adjacent fires long before, excluded); 1896, Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Malone, 109 Ala. 509, 20 So. 33 (that other fires had been set in the neighborhood by the defendant's engines, not admissible if "similar conditions did not exist");
Arkansas: 1894, Railway Co. v. Jones, 59 Ark. 105, 111, 26 S. W. 595 (other fires, as evidence of defective condition, must have been set by the same engine);
California: 1875, Henry v. R. Co., 50 Cal. 176, 183 (other fires by the same engine, admitted to show that its construction was defective); 1885, Butcher v. R. Co., 67 Cal. 518, 8 Pac. 174 (fires from other engines of the defendant, before and after, admissible to show "negligence in the construction or working" of the engines; two judges dissenting);
Florida: 1891, Jacksonville T. & K. W. R. Co. v. Peninsular L. T. & M. Co., 27 Fla. 1, 9 So. 661 ("former fires by the same engine", but not by others, admissible to show "defective condition or construction or improper management");
Georgia: 1892, East Tennessee V. & G. R. Co. v. Hesters, 90 Ga. 11, 15 S. E. 828 (in rebuttal of defendant's evidence of the proper condition of engines, the emission of sparks by other engines is receivable); 1900, Akins v. R. & B. Co., 111 Ga. 815, 35 S. E. 67 (emission by a locomotive not run on the day in issue, excluded); 1901, Central of Ga. R. Co. v. Trammell, 114 Ga. 312, 40 S. E. 259 (operation of other engines, not to be considered, if the engine setting the fire was identified);
Idaho: 1921, Allen-Wright Furniture Co. v. Hines, 34 Ida. 90, 200 Pac. 889 (fires set by other engines, admissible, even though the engine was identified, if equipment was the same);
Illinois: 1866, Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. McClelland, 42 Ill. 355, semble (fires by the defendant's engines, admitted, perhaps to show negligent construction); 1894, Lake Erie & W. R. Co. v. Middlecoff, 150 Ill. 27, 39, 37 N. E. 660 (setting of other fires by the same engine on the same day, admitted, to show negligence); 1898, First Nat'l Bank of Hoopeston v. R. Co., 174 Ill. 36, 50 N. E. 1023 (other fires by other engines of the defendant, not admissible, where the engine causing the fire is identified; erroneously assuming the Pa. and Wis. rule to represent the weight of authority); 1906, Illinois C. R. Co. v. Bailey, 222 Ill. 480, 78 N. E. 833 (rule of First Nat'l Bank v. R. Co. followed, but citing no authority);
Indiana: 1872, Gagg v. Vetter, 41 Ind. 228, 257 (fire attributed to sparks from the defendant's brewery-chimney; evidence that sparks had been seen coming from the chimney at other times, admitted to show that it was not well-constructed); 1900, Pittsburg C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Indiana H. Co., 154 Ind. 322, 56 N. E. 766 (setting of other fires, admitted to show negligence in the condition of the roadway); 1906, Cleveland C. C. & St. Louis R. Co. v. Loos, 38 Ind. App. 1, 77 N. E. 948 (where the engine is identified, fires by other engines are excluded);
Iowa: 1870, Gaudy v. R. Co., 30 Ia. 420 ("the repeated or unusual dropping of coals or excessive and continued emission of sparks, etc.," admissible to show "the fact of negligence"); 1882, Slossen v. R. Co., 60 Ia. 215, 14 N. W. 244 (other fires set on the same trip of the same engine, admitted to show that it "was not properly constructed or was out of repair"); 1886, Lanning v. R. Co., 68 Ia. 502, 505, 27 N. W. 478 (same, admitted as evidence of "defects in its construction, or that it was not in proper repair, or was negligently handled");
Kansas: 1873, St. Joseph & D. C. R. Co. v. Chase, 11 Kan. 47, 49, 54 (fires set by the defendant's engines within a few weeks, admitted to show "either that they were not properly constructed or that they were out of repair", the conditions in all the engines being similar); 1876, Atchison T. & F. R. Co. v. Campbell, 16 Kan. 200, 204 (previous fires by the same engine on the same day, with absence of fires from other engines, admitted to show that the former "was badly constructed and managed"); 1897, Atchison T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Osborn, 58 Kan. 768, 51 Pac. 286 (fires by other engines, excluded; no authorities cited); 1904, Sprague v. Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co., 70 Kan. 359, 78 Pac. 828 (where the engine is identified, emissions by other engines of the defendant are not admissible to show negligent construction or operation; the Court cites fourteen decisions from other jurisdictions, but pays no attention to the last two in its own records; the Court's logic is also fallacious);
Kentucky: 1897, Taylor v. R. Co., — Ky. —, 41 S. W. 551 (previous emission of sparks from the same engine, admitted to show negligence); 1907, Chesapeake & O. R. Co. v. Richardson, — Ky. —, 99 S. W. 642 (spark-emissions by other engines under the same management and similarly equipped, admitted);
Maryland: 1873, Annapolis & E. R. Co. v. Gantt, 39 Md. 115, 134 (sparks and fires by other engines of the defendant, shortly before, admissible to show negligence "in the construction and management of its engines", though the particular engine was identified; distinguishing Baltimore & S. R. Co. v. Woodruff, 4 Md. 242, 254, 1854, where weaker evidence of the sort was excluded);
Michigan: 1890, Ireland v. R. Co., 79 Mich. 163, 165, 44 N. W. 426 (fire by another engine of the company, not admissible to show defective construction, because the engine was identified; but other fires by the same engine are admissible); 1916, Stoddard v. Grand Trunk W. R. Co., 191 Mich. 507, 158 N. W. 7; 1918, Budd v. Ann Arbor R. Co., 200 Mich. 250, 166 N. W. 927 (omission of sparks by other engines, admitted to show physical possibility of sparks being carried beyond 450 feet);

Minnesota: 1885, Davidson v. R. Co., 34 Minn. 51, 24 N. W. 324 (sparks by the defendant's engines, "at or about the date" in question, admitted to show a "negligent habit"; but treated as "a matter not altogether free from doubt"; here the exceptions were the plaintiff's, and were based on the limit of time set, and the question of admissibility was thus not passed upon);

Mississippi: 1893, Tribette v. R. Co., 71 Miss. 212, 233, 13 So. 899 (emission of sparks by other engines of the defendant, excluded); 1903, Alabama & V. R. Co. v. Ins. Co., 82 Miss. 770, 35 So. 304 (fires by other engines, admitted, to show a "negligent habit" of the defendant);

Missouri: 1870, Fitch v. R. Co., 45 Mo. 322, 324, 327 (frequent fires by one of the defendant's engines, admitted to show defective construction); 1893, Campbell v. R. Co., 121 Mo. 340, 350, 25 S. W. 936 (fires by other engines inadmissible, where the engine is identified);

Nevada: 1874, Longabaugh v. R. Co., 9 Nev. 271, 284, 289 (fires and sparks by the defendant's engines, a few weeks before and after, admitted to show negligent management and construction);

New York: 1866, Field v. R. Co., 32 N. Y. 338, 346, 349 (after evidence that it is feasible to construct and manage engines so as to avoid scattering fires, the scattering of fire by other engines on former occasions is evidential that such engines are "out of order or improperly constructed", and thus are negligently managed); 1872, Webb v. R. Co., 49 N. Y. 420, 422, 424 (the dropping of live coals by the same engine for a month or two before, in the neighborhood, admitted to show defective construction); 1888, Collins v. R. Co., 109 N. Y. 243, 249, 16 N. E. 50 (the emission of large sparks by the same engine six months later, admitted only after a showing that its permanent mode of construction allowed such emissions or that its condition of repair was the same as to the time in question; no authority cited); 1894, Flinn v. R. Co., 142 N. Y. 11, 19, 36 N. E. 1046 (constant emission of sparks by the defendant's engines, considered, but held not to amount to negligence, but to show that upon the up-grade in question such emission was inevitable; the latter proposition seems to give the locomotive-owner the right to burn houses 'ad lib.');

North Carolina: 1900, Hygienic P. I. M. Co. v. R. Co., 126 N. C. 797, 36 S. E. 279 (the Henderson case, in Pennsylvania, followed in the limitation as to identified engines; Douglas, J., diss.); 1906, Knott v. Cape Fear & N. R. Co. 142 N. C. 238, 98 S. E. 150 (former emissions by the same engine, admitted); 1908, Whitehurst v. Atlantic C. L. R. Co., 146 N. C. 588, 60 S. E. 648 (other fire set by the same train the week before, admitted); 1918, Perry v. Branning Mfg. Co., 176 N. C. 68, 97 S. E. 162 (prior emission of sparks by the same engine, admitted);

Oregon: 1890, Koontz v. O. R. & N. Co., 20 Or. 3, 23 Pac. 820, semble (sparks and fires by other engines of the defendant, before and after, admissible to show "habitual negligence"); 1904, Anderson v. Oregon R. Co., 45 Or. 211, 77 Pac. 119 (Koontz v. R. Co. cited);

Pennsylvania: This inexcusable tangle of rulings was supposed to be unravelled by the Henderson case: 1848, R. Co. v. Yeiser, 8 Pa. 366, 371, 376 (the Court instructed that the fact of other fires by the defendant's engines was "of itself evidence of negligence"; this was disapproved on appeal; "It may be very true that there may be some difficulty in the proof, . . . but there is no reason that every principle of law should be uprooted by requiring no proof of negligence whatever"; thus treating the question as if it were whether the other fires amounted to negligence 'per se', and not whether they were merely evidence of negligence); 1854, Huyett v. R. Co., 23 Pa. 374 (distinctly ruling that the setting of other fires by the defendant's engines was some evidence of negligence, and thus removing the obscurity of the preceding case); 1875, Erie R. Co. v. Decker, 78 Pa. 293 (where the engine causing the fire is identified, the defects of other engines of the defendant are irrelevant); 1875, Pennsylvania Co. v. Watson, 81 Pa. 293, 296 (sparks and fires by the same engine, admitted as "evidence from which the jury may infer an imperfect and inferior spark-catcher and from this fact negligence"); 1879, Lehigh V. R. Co. v. McKeen, 90 Pa. 122, 123, 130 (sparks of unusual size, and fires, by the same engine at other times, admitted as evidence of negligence in the apparatus); 1880, Jennings v. R. Co., 93 Pa. 337, 340 ("evidence to prove defects in other engines of the company was irrelevant", citing R. Co. v. Yerger, 73 Pa. 121, which does not discuss that question at all; here the evidence was of unusually large sparks; also like the Latshaw case, infra); Philadephia & R. R. Co. v. Schultz, 93 Pa. 341 (like the McKeen case, supra); Reading & C. R. Co. v. Latshaw, 93 Pa. 449 ("the bare fact" of fires after the passing of the engine "was neither negligence, nor evidence from which a jury would be justified in finding negligence"); 1881, Albert v. R. Co., 98 Pa. 316, 321 (like the Decker case, supra, excluding sparks by other engines); 1886, Gowen v. Glaser, 3 Centr. Rep. 108 (sparks and fires by other engines, before and after, admitted (1) "to show that they have many engines with insufficient spark-arresters", and thus (2) "to lay the ground for an inference that it was one of these engines with insufficient spark-arresters which did this"); 1888, Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Page, 21 W. N. 52 (emis-

B. Instances of Corporal Effects, as Evidence

§ 457. Corporal Effects and Symptoms; Miscellaneous Instances (Proximity, Calibre, or Direction of a Weapon inflicting a Wound; Operation of a Drug, Liquor, Poison, Food, or Disease, on Human Beings or on Animals). So far as legal principle is concerned, no different one is here involved from that illustrated in the preceding general group of cases. But it is convenient to consider together the precedents in which the inference is made from the effects produced on the body, human or animal, to the tendency of a given thing.

Thus, the capacity or tendency of a weapon (gun or pistol) may be indicated sion of sparks by engines just before the fire, no evidence of negligence); 1891, Henderson v. R. Co., 144 Pa. 461, 476 (a: the mere fact of fire caused by the defendant's engine is no evidence of negligence, approving the Jennings and Latshaw rulings; the feature of this doctrine is that this Court is constantly confusing three distinct things, namely, (1) evidence admissible, (2) evidence sufficient to go to the jury, (3) facts amounting to negligence 'per se' and thus as matter of law taking the case from the jury; b: the emission of sparks of unusual size and the setting of numerous fires by the defendant's engines may be evidence for the jury; c: where the engine is identifiable, such evidence of the defective action of other engines is irrelevant; otherwise it is admissible, but should be confined to a reasonable time before and after; this case is intended to clear up the conflict of rulings and settle the law); 1897, Thomas v. R. Co., 182 Pa. 538, 38 Atl. 413 (other fires by the same engine on the same day, near by, admitted); 1905, Shelly v. Phila. & R. R. Co., 211 Pa. 160, 60 Atl. 581 (Henderson Case approved); 1909, Byers v. Baltimore & O. R. Co., 222 Pa. 547, 72 Atl. 245 (Henderson v. R. Co. followed); 1911, John Hancock Ice Co. v. Perkiomen R. Co., 231 Pa. 117, 80 Atl. 63 (other emissions of sparks, admitted where the engine causing the fire was identified);

Tennessee: 1903, Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Short, 110 Tenn. 713, 77 S. W. 936 (fires set nine or ten months before, admitted, but not fires set when the engines were equipped differently; the rule as to identified engines, not passed upon); 1904, Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Fort, 112 Tenn. 432, 80 S. W. 429 (other emissions of sparks from other locomotives of the defendant, admitted, "to show habitual negligence"; Pennsylvania rule of identification repudiated);

Utah: 1917, Gleason v. San Pedro L. A. & S. L. R. Co., 49 Utah 405, 164 Pac. 484 (emission of sparks by other engines, admitted, semble regardless of identifying the engine);

Vermont: 1869, Cleavelands v. R. Co., 42 Vt. 449, 456 (sparks and fires by other engines of the defendant, in the same season, admitted to show defective condition);

Virginia: 1881, Brighthope R. Co. v. Rogers, 76 Va. 443, 448 (sparks and fires of the same engine, admitted to show "negligence on the part of the defendant's employees, or, it may be defects" in the engine); 1896, New York P. & N. R. Co. v. Thomas, 92 Va. 606, 24 S. E. 264 (fires by the defendant's engines, before and after the time in question, admitted to show "negligence on the part of the defendants' employees, or defects in the defendant's engine, and also for the purpose of showing a negligent habit" of the defendant's agents); 1897, Kimball v. Borden, 95 Va. 203, 28 S. E. 207 (sparks by other engines of the defendant near the time, admitted to show "a negligent habit"); 1904, Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Briggs, 103 Va. 105, 48 S. E. 521 (fires set by other unidentified engines, not shown to be the same construction, excluded);

Wisconsin: 1882, Brusberg v. R. Co., 55 Wis. 106, 12 N. W. 416 (fires on the same trip of the same engine, close by, admitted to show defective construction or management); 1883, Gibbons v. R. Co., 58 Wis. 335, 17 N. W. 132 (fires set by the defendant's engines at other times; "such evidence might have weight in showing the negligence of the company", where the cause is shown to have been some engine of the defendant, but uni..entified); 1888, Allard v. R. Co., 73 Wis. 165, 40 N. W. 685 (the engine being identified, and its construction as to a screen being shown similar to the others of the defendant, fires set by the defendant's engines generally were not admitted to show defective construction); 1895, Menomenie R. S. & D. Co. v. R. Co., 91 Wis. 447, 65 N. W. 176 (other fires by the same engine, identified, during preceding months, excluded, because the engine had been repaired in the meantime; other fires by it after the time in question, absolutely excluded; other fires by it during the same month, excluded, because not shown to be from sparks of unusual size or thrown to unusual distance, and therefore not indicating any want of repair or improper management).

by the appearance of other wounds, with reference to size of bullet, proximity of weapon, nature of powder, or direction of the shot; [1] the specific tendency of a drug, poison, disease, food, or other substance, by the corporal symptoms or effects in other like situations, either on animals or on human beings; [2]

§ 457. [1] Federal: 1896, Ball v. U. S. 163 U. S. 662, 16 Sup. 1192 (a refusal to allow an experimental firing with the defendant's gun, held within the discretion of the trial Court): Alabama: 1896, Evans v. State, 109 Ala. 11, 19 So. 535 (experiments with a pistol to ascertain the relative size of the hole and the ball, excluded; no reason given); Florida: 1906, Hisler v. State, 52 Fla. 30, 42 So. 692 (target-experiments, to show the scattering of shot, admitted); Georgia: 1876, Wynne v. State, 56 Ga. 113, 118 (murder; experiments in firing the pistol found on the defendant, not allowed, because they might change the condition of the pistol); Iowa: 1897, State v. Cater, 100 Ia. 501, 69 N. W. 880 (to show the marks of shooting near at hand, experiments with a revolver of the same calibre were admitted); 1906, State v. Nowells, 135 Ia. 53, 109 N. W. 1016 (experiments as to powder-marks from gunshots, admitted, in discretion); 1910, Scott v. Homesteaders, 149 Ia. 541, 129 N. W. § 310 (experiments with pistol-shots on hog-flesh admitted); Kansas: 1896, State v. Asbell, 57 Kan. 398, 46 Pac. 770 (the effect of a pistol shot fired at human hair from a distance; experiments admitted); Maryland: 1919, Newkirk v. State, 134 Md. 310, 106 Atl. 694 (murder; experiments to show the distance of a gun-muzzle from the body of the victim, admitted); Massachusetts: 1905, Com. v. Tucker, 189 Mass. 457, 76 N. E. 127 (experiments as to cutting a body, excluded); Minnesota: 1897, Beckett v. Aid Assoc., 67 Minn. 298, 69 N. W. 923 (experiments made with a revolver and similar cartridges, admitted to show the effects of shooting near at hand); Mississippi: 1844, Vaughan v. State, 3 Sm. & M. 555 (evidence considered of experiments to show that the discharge of a gun at the same distance and with the same kind of shot was incapable of taking life); 880, Dillard v. State, 58 Miss. 386 (to learn whether a wound could have been inflicted from a certain position, experiments were received); Nebraska: 1904, Lillie v. State, 72 Nebr. 228, 100 N. W. 316 (experiments to show the distance of a pistol, as shown by powder-marks, admitted); Oklahoma: 1920, Irby v. State, —Okl. Cr. —, 192 Pac. 429 (murder; experiments to show distance of weapon from pistol wounds, admitted); 1921, Irby v. State, —Okl. Cr.—, 197 Pac. 526 (manslaughter; experiments as to marks made by powder burns, held admissible in the trial Court's discretion); Oregon: 1883, State v. Justus, 11 Or. 182, 8 Pac. 337 (to show that the marks of wounds on the deceased were those of near gunshot wounds, experiments on pasteboard targets were not received, because the conditions could not be made similar enough; see quotation ante, § 442); 1893, State v. Fletcher, 24 Or. 295, 298, 33 Pac. 575 (experiments as to the force of a bullet, with cartridges and pistol found on defendant, excluded because conditions were not shown similar); Pennsylvania: 1880, Sullivan v. Com., 93 Pa. 288, 296 (experiments were allowed to be described by which the effect, in blackening and tattooing the flesh, of a shot fired at short range, was demonstrated to be such that in the case at bar the deceased could not have committed suicide); Rhode Island: 1903, State v. Nagle, 25 R. I. 105, 54 Atl. 1063 (experiments with a pistol, to show the effect on a flesh-wound, admitted); Tennessee: 1884, Boyd v. State, 14 Lea 161, 171 (the allegation being that the deceased had committed suicide with a pistol, the Court admitted experiments made with pistols under similar conditions to show that the results would not be the same as those found upon the body of the deceased); 1896, Moore v. State, 96 Tenn. 209, 33 S. W. 1046 (an experiment, based on the appearances of a wound, to ascertain the relative positions of deceased and defendant, admitted); Wisconsin: 1908, Pollock v. State, 136 Wis. 136, 116 N. W. 851 (experiments with a pistol, admitted).

For cases dealing with non-corporal effects of weapons, see ante, § 451.

[2] ENGLAND: 1699, Spencer Cowper's Trial, 13 How. St. Tr. 1162 (murder; the body of the deceased was found in the river; the question was whether she had committed suicide or had been killed and thrown into the water; the prosecution advanced the proposition that the absence of water in the stomach showed that the person was dead before entering the water; the defence was allowed to testify to experiments, made by doctors, upon dogs, to show that a drowning person does not necessarily take water into the stomach); 1834, R. v. Webb, 1 Moo. & Rob. 405, 412 (manslaughter by administering noxious pills; to disprove the noxious quality, the fact was admitted of the cure of various diseases by them); 1836, R. v. Salmon, before Patteson, J., Pelham's Chronicles of Crime, ed. 1891, II. 417 (manslaughter by administering noxious pills; on behalf of the defendant, a medicine-vender, "a great many persons were called from all parts of the kingdom, who stated that they had taken large quantities of these pills, with the very best results, as a means of cure for almost every species of malady to which the human frame is subject; one person stated that he had taken no fewer than twenty thousand of them in two years, and that he had found infinite relief from swallowing them in very large doses"); 1856, R. v. Palmer, Annual Register 1856, p. 403, also Notable British Trials Ser. (to determine the tendency of strychnia to produce certain symptoms, experiments upon dogs and rabbits were described, and the observed symptoms in human beings; but the Court refused to allow dogs to be brought into the courtyard and killed by strychnia before the jury); 1908, Hales v. Kerr, 2 K. B. 601 (action against a barber for negligent use of razors, etc. by which he had cut the plaintiff and caused the plaintiff to have barber's itch, about October, 1907; the plaintiff never went to any other barber-shop; the fact that two other persons had acquired the itch at the defendant's shop, held admissible, as showing the uncleanly condition of the razors, etc.)

UNITED STATES: Federal: Osborne v. Detroit, 32 Fed. 36 (the plaintiff claimed to have been paralyzed by a fall; to demonstrate this, a pin was allowed to be thrust into her face, arm, and leg, in the presence of the jury); 1897, The T. F. Oakes, 82 Fed. 759 (common symptoms in a crew of sailors during a long voyage, admitted to show lack of proper food as the cause); 1898, U. S. v. Reed, 86 Fed. 308, 311 (master of a vessel withholding suitable food; that every person on board not eating in the cabin had scurvy, admitted); 1918, Sharples Separator Co. v. Skinner, 9th C. C. A., 251 Fed. 25 (mechanical milker; successful or unsuccessful operation of the machine, as to injury to cows, under similar conditions, but not otherwise, allowable);

Alabama: 1854, Bush v. Jackson, 24 Ala., 274, semble (in a suit on a warranty of a slave alleged to be subject to chronic pneumonia, the use of evidence of symptoms of other supposed cases of pneumonia was held inadmissible, unless somehow connected); 1893, Alabama G. S. R. Co. v. Collier, 112 Ala. 681, 14 So. 327 (injury to passenger by breaking of fire-extinguisher bottle; experiments in court to test the liquid, rejected on the facts); 1918, Supreme Lodge v. Gustin, 202 Ala. 246, 80 So. 84 (death at a lodge-initiation when subjected to an electrical "branding-board"; the subjection of other initiates to the same apparatus without injury, on the same and prior occasions, admitted);

California: 1893, Remy v. Olds, 4 Cal. Unrep. Cases 240, 34 Pac. 216 (whether vines died from lack of water; that others similarly situated died though plentifully supplied with water, admitted);

Illinois: 1863, Wallace v. Wren, 32 Ill. 150 (for the purpose of showing that a warranted horse had the glanders, the court permitted the plaintiff to show that a mule which worked with the horse took the disease and died; Caton, C. J.: "There was proof that glanders is contagious, and if that be so, then the proof was undoubtedly pertinent"); 1900, Grand Lodge v. Randolph, 186 Ill. 89, 57 N. E. 882 (injury to ankle; experience of H., similarly injured, as to time of healing, and the exhibition of his ankle to the jury, excluded as confusing the issues);

Indiana: 1885, Epps v. State, 102 Ind. 549, 1 N. E. 490 (absence of injurious effect from the same kind of substance when administered to another person, admitted to show absence of arsenic);

Iowa: 1899, Ware Cattle Co. v. Anderson, 107 Ia. 231, 77 N. W. 1026 (whether cattle failed to fatten because of poor pasture; gain of other cattle in similar pastures, admitted); 1912, Boerner Fry Co. v. Mucci, 158 Ia. 315, 138 N. W. 866 (vanilla ice-cream; experiments as to the jury's tasting it, held not improperly excluded);

Kansas: 1912, State v. Buck, 88 Kan. 114, 127 Pac. 631 (murder by poisoning; the witnesses having smelled the doses given by defendant to deceased, a substance was mixed and presented to them at the trial for smelling, to testify whether it had the same odor);

Kentucky: 1859, Champ v. Com., 2 Metc. Ky. 17, 26 (rape while unconscious from a supposed violent chloroforming; experiments showing unconsciousness to be an impossible result under the supposed circumstances, admitted);

Massachusetts: 1864, Hunt v. Lowell Gaslight Co., 1 All. 343, 345, 350; s. c. 8 All. 169, 171 (to show the noxious effects of the gas escaping into the house where the plaintiffs were visitors and became ill, the similar illness of all the other inmates of the house at the same time was received; the extent to which the particulars of the illness should be inquired into being left to the trial Court's discretion); 1862, Emerson v. Lowell Gaslight Co., 3 All. 410, 417 (see quotation ante, § 442); 1886, Baxter v. Doe, 142 Mass. 558, 561, 8 N. E. 415 (action for sickness incurred through failure of ship-owners to provide the sailors with proper food and anti-scorbutics; evidence of the similar sickness of others of the crew on board the ship about the same time that the plaintiffs were sick, admitted; see quotation ante, § 442); 1887, Reeve v. Dennett, 145 Mass. 23, 11 N. E. 938 (whether a substance "naboli" was calculated to ensure painless extraction of teeth; the experience in that respect of various persons who had used it, admitted; see quotation ante, § 442); 1894, Shea v. Glendale E. F. Co., 162 Mass. 463, 38 N. E. 1123 (whether the plaintiff had been poisoned by white lead in the defendant's factory; the similar illnesses of other employees under similar conditions, admitted); 1897, Com. v. Kennedy, 170 Mass. 18, 48 N. E. 770 (tea drunk by several persons together; effects upon some of them, admitted, to show that it was poisoned); 1909, Mountford v. Cunard S. S. Co., 202 Mass. 345, 88 N. E. 782 (whether the plaintiff had trachoma, a contagious eye-disease; the fact that other persons intimately associating with her did in particular, the intoxicating tendency of a liquor, by its effects upon others partaking it.[3]

In all these precedents, it is to be remembered, any and all of the principles and limitations already examined (§§ 441–449) may be involved; and further reference to them here is unnecessary.

§ 458. Similar Injuries to Other Persons at the same Machine, Highway, Railroad, or Building. If a white powder's tendency to produce illness may be evidenced by the symptoms following its administration, then in the not contract such a disease, held admissible in discretion);

Michigan: 1882, Pinney v. Cahill, 48 Mich. 586, 12 N. W. 86 (to show that a horse had died not from the defendant's driving but from disease, two previous instances when the horse fell ill while driven by other persons were received); 1897, People v. Holmes, 111 Mich. 364, 69 N. W. 501 (other cases in which a similar injury caused insanity, not admitted to show a defendant's insanity); 1899, People v. Thompson, 122 Mich. 401, 81 N. W. 344 (boiler-explosion; charge of manslaughter; the killing and injuring of other persons, admitted, to show the effects; but not their stay at hospitals, etc.);

Montana: 1899, Proctor v. Irvin, 22 Mont. 547, 57 Pac. 183 (injury to cattle by unlawful driving; comparative increase of plaintiff's cattle in former years and average increase of other cattle in the same year, admitted); 1903, Bar v. Struck, 9 Mont. 45, 74 Pac. 69 (killing and injuring sheep by dipping into a poisonous mixture for quarantine purposes; defendant's offer to show a similar dipping of other sheep without fatal results, excluded, because not based on similarity of effects);

Nebraska: 1909, Young v. Kinney, 85 Nebr. 131, 122 N. W. 678 (identity of a brand on a horse: other horses bearing the defendant's brand, allowed to be examined to determine its features);

Oregon: 1921, Kelty v. Fisher, —Or.—, 199 Pac. 169 (malpractice in causing death of F.; S. and F. were ill together, and defendant treated them both for the same illness; symptoms of S., and defendant's treatment of him, admitted);

South Dakota: 1895, State v. Isaacson, 8 S. D. 69, 65 N. W. 430 (whether a horse was poisoned; the immediate death of a hen to whom the contents of the horse's stomach were experimentally fed, semble, admissible);

Vermont: 1881, Weeks v. Lyndon, 54 Vt. 645 (that other persons had cured themselves of hernia, excluded); 1897, Willett v. St. Albans, 69 Vt. 330, 38 Atl. 72 (illness attributed to sewer-gas; the illness, from sewer-gas, of others living near by, excluded, because of irrelevancy, surprise, and confusion of issues); 1898, Bateman v. Rutland, 70 Vt. 500, 41 Atl. 500 (illness attributed to sewer-gas; that others living in adjacent houses were not so affected, excluded); 1916, Davis v. Dunn, 90 Vt. 284, 98 Atl. 80 (malpractice; to identify an X-ray photograph of plaintiff's hand, showing an abnormality, the plaintiff was allowed to use several other X-ray photographs of plaintiff's hand; but was not allowed to use an X-ray photograph of a so-called normal hand, to show in rebuttal that certain marks on the hand-bones were not normal; the trial Court's discretion to exclude collateral issues being confirmed).

[3] 1885, Knowles v. State, 80 Ala. 9 (Somerville, J.: "The most available mode of testing the nature and properties of fluid or drug, next to that of chemical analysis, is by its effect on the human system; that a liquor when taken in certain quantities intoxicated or failed to intoxicate the person taking it is as competent to prove or disprove its intoxicating qualities as it would be to prove the poisonous nature of a drug by the effect following its administration"); 1891, Brantly v. State, 91 Ala. 47, 8 So. 816 (selling spirituous, etc., liquors; the effect of the liquors upon the purchasers, admitted); 1893, State v. Lindoen, 87 Ia. 702, 704, 54 N. W. 1075 (mixing ingredients of a drink before the jury, excluded as not bearing on its intoxicating quality; compare §§ 1159, 1160, post); 1886, State v. Pfefferle, 36 Kan. 90, 91, 12 Pac. 406 (whether a beverage "phœnix" was intoxicating; its effect in stimulating and intoxicating various persons, admitted); 1890, State v. Adams, 44 Kan. 135, 24 Pac. 71 (whether a beverage "cider" was intoxicating; its effect in intoxicating those who drank it, admitted); 1885, Fairly v. State, 63 Miss. 333 (that a person was made drunk by certain bitters, admitted to show that they were spirituous); 1889, Com. v. Reyburg, 122 Pa. 299, 305, 16 Atl. 351 (the effect felt by persons drinking a liquor, admissible to show whether it was spirituous); 1904, State v. Good, 56 W. Va. 215, 49 S. E. 121 (sale of an intoxicating liquor called "Rikk"; the purchase and use of the same drink in similar bottles by other persons about the same time, without intoxicating effect, admitted; citing other rulings).

Compare the citations in § 439, ante, § 1159, post.

same way the tendency of a projecting spike in a gate to catch and tear the garment of a passer-by may be evidenced by instances of such tearings, or the tendency of a part of a highway to make the feet trip upon it may be shown by instances of trippings. The mass of precedents dealing with the use of other injuries (or "accidents") as evidencing the dangerousness of a place or a machine are concerned with an inference of precisely this form, i.e. an inference as to the harmful tendency or capacity of the machine, highway, building, or track, as indicated by the occurrence of such harm to human beings in other instances.

1. There is no objection from the standpoint of the character rule (ante, § 199); for the object of the inference is not to show previous acts of human negligence, nor even (directly and necessarily) a present negligence. The purpose is merely to show the nature of the machine or the place, as having a tendency to produce such human injuries; just as copper acids may have a tendency to destroy herbage or strychnia a tendency to produce convulsions. If it can be shown what that tendency is, it may then be possible to show that the maintenance of a place or machine of that tendency — i.e. likely to cause such harm — is negligence. But this additional conclusion is not necessarily involved in the evidential purpose, which seeks simply the illustration of the nature of the thing or the place by its observed effects.

Nor is there any virtue in the invocation of the maxim 'res inter alios acta'; that principle concerns the law of Judgments, and has nothing to do with the logic or probative value of evidence.

Equally immaterial is the argument, occasionally heard, that "the jury are trying the merits of this particular accident and none other." This is true enough; but just because the "merits of this particular accident" have to be investigated, it is necessary to learn the nature of the machine or place involved; and in learning its nature, the evidential view cannot be confined to the precise moment of the accident in question. That nature, being more or less continuous, has exhibited itself at other times and in other instances; and it is both rational and practical to look at other instances from which that nature is to be ascertained.

The only principles that can effect the exclusion of such instances are those of Relevancy and of Auxiliary Policy. What is their bearing?

(a) The principle of Relevancy, as already noted (ante, § 442), requires that the other instances of injuries received should have occurred under substantially similar circumstances. The application of this principle has already been sufficiently illustrated. Note, however, that a double inference usually is necessary, i.e. from the other instances to the tendency or condition at the time of their occurrence, and then from the tendency or condition at that time to its persistence at the time in question. The principle governing the latter inference has also been examined (ante, § 437). But often this double inference is treated by the Court as a single one, and an instance occurring at a remote time is disposed of as not occurring under similar circumstances. Yet there is in reality a second inference involved, — as may be seen where a prior tendency or condition is shown by direct testimony (ante, § 437) and not by instances of its effect, and then the inference is made from the prior to the later condition. It is enough to point out that there do come into play these two inferences, and that hence an instance may be excluded either because the circumstances were not similar or because the time was too remote.

(b) The principle of Auxiliary Probative Policy, as already noted (ante, § 443), requires the exclusion of such instances wherever, by the introduction of many new controversial points, there would result a confusion of issues, an unfair surprise, or an undue prejudice, i.e. disproportionate to the usefulness of the evidence. Occasionally a Court is found excluding such evidence absolutely and invariably because of this general possibility, and without regard to its actual operation in the case in hand. Such a treatment is unnecessary and finical. The rational and practical way is to exclude such evidence when it does in the case in hand clearly involve such consequences, but not otherwise; and to leave its treatment to the discretion of the trial Court, guided by this principle (ante, § 444).[1]

§ 458. [1] All the foregoing principles of §§ 442–449 are here illustrated; in particular, the principle for negative instances (§ 448) is important.

ENGLAND: 1866, Crofter v. R. Co., L. R. 1, C. P. 300 (injury on a defective staircase; evidence from the defendant was admitted without question, that about 43,000 persons had passed over it without injury during the previous year, in which alone it had been used).

UNITED STATES: Federal: 1882, District of Columbia v. Armes, 107 U. S. 519, 524, 2 Sup. 840 (injury on a sidewalk; that other persons had fallen at the same place, admitted; the objection of confusion of issues held not applicable where the evidence was not disputed; a much cited case, and a good opinion); 1886, Osborne v. Detroit, 32 Fed. 36 (injury at a defective sidewalk; a former injury of the same sort at the "same neighborhood" to two other persons, admitted, both to show the defective condition and to show notice to the defendant); 1896, Scott v. New Orleans, 21 C. C. A. 402, 75 Fed. 373 (injury on a sidewalk; other previous accidents at the same place, admitted); 1897, Patton v. R. Co., 27 C. C. A. 287, 82 Fed. 979 (previous derailments at the same place, received); 1914, Evans v. Erie R. Co., 6th C. C. A., 213 Fed. 129 (collision of a train with an automobile at a crossing; other accidents at the same crossing, admitted to show "the dangerous character of the place");
Alabama: 1872, Mobile & M. R. Co. v. Ashcraft, 48 Ala. 15, 32, semble (that the trains had run off the track seven or eight times in the previous month, admitted, to show its condition); 1891, Birmingham Union R. Co. v. Alexander, 93 Ala. 133, 9 So. 525 (injury by a wagon striking a car-rail; the fact admitted for the plaintiff that other similar injuries had been thus received, and for the defendant that the rail was constantly crossed in safety; "a knowledge of the experience of others . . . may enable the jury to weigh all the evidence before them in the light of the rule that like causes operating under like conditions produce like results"); 1893, Schlaff v. R. Co., 100 Ala. 377, 378, 388, 14 So. 105 (former injuries of other persons at a bridge, excluded); 1896, Birmingham v. Starr, 112 Ala. 98, 20 So. 424 (similar falls at the same place about the same time, e.g. a month before or after, admitted; but not of falls at other times or at times unspecified); 1897, Mayer v. Building Co., 116 Ala. 634, 22 So. 859 (defective cornice; evidence that one or more persons had stood safely upon another cornice of the same building similarly constructed, excluded); 1899, Southern R. Co. v. Posey, 124 Ala. 486, 26 So. 914 (another's experience at same guard-rail three weeks before, admitted); 1904, Davis v. Kornman, 141 Ala. 479, 37 So. 789 (injury at a machine; prior defects of operation, admitted); 1915, Southern R. Co. v. Lefan, 195 Ala. 295, 70 So. 249 (injury at a switch; whether the switch had continued in use for a year thereafter without repairs, held admissible; one judge diss.); 1915, Woodward Iron Co. v. Spencer, 194 Ala. 285, 69 So. 902 (injury at a slippery track; whether anybody had slipped there before, inadmissible);
California: 1869, Martinez v. Planel, 36 Cal. 578 (fall of another person at the same passageway six weeks before, excluded; following Collins v. Dorchester, Mass.); 1903, Dyas v. Southern P. Co., 140 Cal. 296, 73 Pac. 972

2. There would probably have been little difference of practice in the use of this class of evidence, if there had not been an early series of precedents in Massachusetts, beginning with Collins v. Dorchester, which attempted to cast discredit on the use of this evidence, and laid down an absolute rule of exclusion. That ruling proceeded from the point of view both of Relevancy and of Auxiliary Probative Policy, though without any full consideration of either reason; and, coming at a comparatively early date, served for a long time as a stumbling-block to many Courts whose instinct would have

(prior fall of a derrick, admitted, to show its defectiveness); 1906, Sheehan v. Hammond, 2 Cal. App. 371, 84 Pac. 340 (injury at a telephone factory; that no such injury had been received before, excluded, but on the futile and absurd ground that "the owner cannot by way of excuse show that no prior injury had occurred"); 1917, Sellars v. Southern P. R. Co., 33 Cal. App. 701, 166 Pac. 599 (injury in a railroad yard; lack of prior accidents, here excluded because conditions were not shown similar); 1918, Long v. John Breuner Co., 36 Cal. App. 630, 172 Pac. 1132 (slipping at a store-entrance; that another person had twice slipped at the same place, held admissible on the facts);

Colorado: 1907, Diamond Rubber Co. v. Harryman, 41 Colo. 415, 92 Pac. 922 (injury at a sidewalk obstruction; that other persons also had tripped on it, excluded; an old-fashioned decision, citing Collins v. Dorchester, et al.);

Connecticut: 1863, Bailey v. Trumbull, 31 Conn. 581 (omnibus upset into a ditch by an alleged highway defect; the fact received that on the next morning, before any change in the place, a loaded cart also upset at a place 15 or 20 feet distant, the distance not being such as to destroy the substantial similarity of conditions); 1865, Calkins v. Hartford, 33 Conn. 57 (injury by a fall on an icy sidewalk; that many persons had passed at the time without inconvenience, admitted; "if the plaintiff had offered evidence that a number of people had actually slipped upon it, this would have been strong proof that it was in a slippery and dangerous condition. . . . Men always act on such evidence in deciding whether they will risk their limbs or not. Why then should not proof that a number of persons passed over it and did not slip be admitted as tending to show that it was not in a slippery condition?"); 1875, Taylor v. Monroe, 43 Conn. 42 (see citation ante, § 439); 1876, Tomlinson v. Derby, 43 Conn. 562 (that other wagons ran into the same hole in the road, admitted); 1879, Wilson v. Granby, 47 Conn. 75 (previous similar loads carried over other bridges, admitted to show whether or not they were beyond the capacity of the bridge);

Georgia: 1878, Augusta v. Hafers, 61 Ga. 48 (injury by falling into a cellar-door opening on the street; two instances within five or six years of children falling into other such cellars, admitted, as "bearing remotely" on the question); 1886, Gilmer v. Atlanta, 77 Ga. 688 (injury by tripping over roots of a tree projecting across a sidewalk; the fact of another person having tripped at the same place some days before, admitted);

Illinois: 1882, Aurora v. Brown, 12 Ill. App. 131 (Lacey, J.: "The defect claimed in the walk was that it was so smooth that it was dangerous to travel on account of travellers slipping down upon it. How could it be told whether men's feet would slip while passing over it unless by experiment or trial, or to what extent or how badly they would slide? . . . Where it is attempted to be shown what has happened to others simply to illustrate a physical fact before or after the occurrence being investigated, if the conditions are the same, we can see no objection"); 1889, Hodges v. Bearse, 129 Ill. 89, 21 N. E. 613 (that no accident had happened during the 4½ years of an elevator's use, rejected, apparently because the evidence of negligence was strong); 1893, Libby v. Scherman, 146 Ill. 540, 34 N. E. 801 (whether the taking out of a barrel from a pile of barrels could be done without causing the pile to fall; experiment with similar barrels similarly arranged, in which they did not fall, excluded, partly because it was impossible to secure identical conditions, and because a confusion of issues would occur, partly because the question was not whether the pile would necessarily fall, but whether it was dangerously likely to fall if the single barrel were taken out); 1894, Bloomington v. Legg, 151 Ill. 9, 13, 37 N. E. 696 (injury at a drinking-fountain; similar injuries admitted to show dangerousness of the place; quoted ante, § 451); 1897, West Chicago St. R. Co. v. Kennelly, 170 Ill. 508, 48 N. E. 996 (that in a car-accident, others were thrown down in the same car, admitted); 1899, Illinois C. R. Co. v. Treat, 179 Ill. 576, 54 N. E. 290 (injury at railroad platform; prior injury to another at same place, admitted, after defendant's evidence that no other such injuries had been received); 1902, Taylorville v. Stafford, 196 Ill. 288, 63 N. E. 824 (that others had stumbled over the same place, admitted, as showing "that the common cause of the accidents is a dangerous and unsafe thing"); 1905, Mobile & O. R. Co. v. Vallowe, 214 Ill. 124, 73 N. E. 416 (injury at a coal led them to receive such evidence. Its fallacies, from both points of view, were first clearly exposed by Mr. Justice Doe, of New Hampshire, in his classical opinion in Darling v. Westmoreland (quoted ante, §§ 444, 445); and from that time the tide of rulings began to turn. The ensuing cases show how an absolute rule of exclusion, like that of Collins v. Dorchester, is chute; absence of injuries at that place for the several years it had been in use, offered to show its safety, excluded, on the ground of multifarious issues; the only "legitimate purpose of such evidence is to show notice", under § 252, ante); 1907, Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Rathneau, 225 Ill. 278, 80 N. E. 119 (freight car injury; that the witness did not know of any prior instance of a "stake being high enough to strike the rail", allowed); 1907, Chicago v. Jarvis, 226 Ill. 614, 80 N. E. 1079 (fall at a coal-hole; prior falls of ten or eleven other people, admitted to show "that the common cause of the accidents was a dangerous and unsafe thing"); 1920, Moore v. Bloomington D. & C. R. Co., 295 Ill. 63, 128 N. E. 721 (death at a railroad crossing; former accidents at the same crossing, excluded, the conditions not being similar);

Indiana: 1881, Delphi v. Lowery, 74 Ind. 520, 525 (former injuries to other persons at the same bridge, admitted; following Darling v. Westmoreland and repudiating Collins v. Dorchester, but not distinguishing between the present principle and that of showing notice to the city, ante, § 252); 1883, Nave v. Flack, 90 Ind. 205, 209, 214 (injury at the drive-way of grain-scales; the fact that others had passed in safety, excluded, because "men may and do use unsafe places without receiving injury, but this does not show that a place proved to be really dangerous is not so"; but evidence of other injuries there was received to show knowledge; compare § 448, ante); 1884, Bauer v. Indianapolis, 99 Ind. 56, 60 (injury at a sidewalk; that others had passed the same place in safety, excluded; first, because of the collateral issues involved, following Kidder v. Dunstable, Mass., infra; and, secondly, because the evidence proved nothing, as in Nave v. Flack, supra); 1888, Louisville N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Wright, 115 Ind. 378, 393, 16 N. E. 145, 17 N. E. 584 (injury at a low bridge on a railway; the former occurrence of three similar accidents at the same place, admitted); 1894, Salem S. & L. Co. v. Griffin, 139 Ind. 141, 38 N. E. 411 (injury at a mill-tramway, by being caught between a window and a car; another's prior injury in the same way, admitted); 1909, Laurie Co. v. McCullough, 174 Ind. 477, 90 N. E. 1014 (personal injury by slipping on an oiled floor in a store; that no similar accidents had occurred during a number of years of user of such floor-dressing, admitted); 1910, Laurie Co. v. McCullough, 174 Ind. 477, 92 N. E. 337 (injury on a floor dressed with oil; that no accidents had occurred elsewhere from the use of such oil under similar circumstances, admitted; Nave v. Flack and other cases, distinguished);

Iowa: In this jurisdiction the principle of notice (ante, § 252) is frequently not distinguished from the present principle; 1882, Hudson v. R. Co., 59 Ia. 581, 13 N. W. 735 (a horse caught his foot between rail and plank at a crossing; a similar injury at the same place to another person's horse six months before, excluded, for reasons of auxiliary policy); 1888, Hoyt v. Des Moines, 76 Ia. 430, 41 N. W. 63 (injury at a sidewalk; the fall of another person on the same sidewalk, excluded, because it did not appear that it occurred at the same place); 1890, Matthews v. Cedar Rapids, 80 Ia. 459, 45 N. W. 894 (states that the preceding ruling would be doubtful, if the question were an open one); 1890, Brooke v. R. Co., 81 Ia. 511, 47 N. W. 74 (Granger, J.: "It is also urged that the testimony of K. as to the experiments in placing his foot between the rails, showing where the foot would be caught, and where not, were erroneously admitted. We regard it as clearly competent. A very important fact to be known was whether, with the situation of the rails, a foot could or would be likely to be caught. We can hardly imagine testimony that would better show the fact than such experiments. The shoe that Brooke wore was before the jury, and the witness who made the experiments was there, and the relative size of the shoes worn by each could be known"); 1895, Hunt v. Dubuque, 96 Ia. 314, 65 N. W. 319 (that other people had stumbled at the part of the sidewalk in question, admitted); 1897, Bryce v. R. Co., 103 Ia. 665, 72 N. W. 780 (that no accident had occurred at a bridge during its nine years' use, excluded); 1901, Bailey v. Centerville, 115 Ia. 271, 88 N. W. 379 (sidewalk; that other persons had fallen at the same place, admitted, "for the purpose of calling the witness' attention to the walk"; compare § 655, post); 1906, Heinmiller v. Winston Bros., 131 Ia. 32, 107 N. W. 1102 (cited post, § 461, n. 2; Hudson v. R. Co., supra, apparently approved, ignoring the intervening cases);

Kansas: 1880, Topeka v. Sherwood, 39 Kan. 690, 18 Pac. 933 (injury by tripping against a projecting plank in December, by tilting it up in passing; the fact received of constant tiltings of this sort from March to December, and of four other falls, three before and one after the fall in question, at the same place but not on the same plank; "the plaintiff must prove that it was unsafe to walk over . . . ; the nowadays rarely attempted; and the two principles of relevancy and auxiliary policy are usually applied anew to each instance, as they ought to be. Strictly as a precedent, Collins v. Dorchester applied only to injuries in a highway, but its influence was to be seen in opinions upon evidence involving other sorts of injuries, and even, to some extent, over this whole group of simple fact that there were frequent accidents on this part of the sidewalk would tend to show that it was unsafe; . . . this walk had been tested by actual use, and this evidence tended to show that it was dangerous and unsafe"; the argument of surprise rejected, for the question was as to the condition of the sidewalk and the defendant ought to be prepared); 1904, Cunningham v. Clay, 69 Kan. 373, 76 Pac. 907 (Topeka v. Sherwood followed; admitting the fright of other teams to show the nature of a highway obstruction);

Kentucky: 1904, Yates v. Covington, 119 Ky. 228, 83 S. W. 592 (defective sidewalk; frequent instances of falls by other persons at the same place, admitted; following Dist. Columbia v. Armes, U. S., etc.);

Maine: 1855, Hubbard v. R. Co., 39 Me. 506 (injury at a place where the highway was dug away; previous upsettings of carriages at that place, excluded, for the reasons of auxiliary policy and because there were other ways of ascertaining the nature of the place); 1879, Parker v. Publishing Co., 69 Me. 173 (fall at an elevator-well; former injuries at the place, excluded, for reasons of auxiliary policy and on the authority of Collins v. Dorchester, Mass.); 1886, Branch v. Libbey, 78 Me. 321, 5 Atl. 71 (injury in the highway; that others had driven safely over the same place, excluded, for reasons of surprise and confusion of issues);

Maryland: 1886, Baltimore & Y. T. R. v. Leonhardt, 66 Md. 70, 78, 5 Atl. 346 (injury on a horse-car; whether an accident had ever before happened in that way, excluded; "the jury was trying the merits of this particular accident and none other"); 1889, Baltimore & Y. T. R. v. State, 71 Md. 573, 575, 584, 18 Atl. 884 (injury at a dangerous place in a road; whether during 32 years past there had been any complaint of the dangerousness of this place, excluded, because "it was no answer" if the place was unsafe; no authorities cited and no understanding of the question shown, in either of these two cases); 1892, Wise v. Ackerman, 76 Md. 375, 390, 25 Atl. 424 (elevator-injury; similar injury to another employee at a like elevator in the same building, excluded); 1919, Hagerstown & F. R. Co. v. Wingert, 133 Md. 455, 105 Atl. 537 (personal injury alighting from a car; the carriage of 100,000 passengers in the same car without injury, considered); 1921, Cordish v. Bloom, 81 Md. 138, 113 Atl. 578 (injury on sidewalk; injuries sustained by other persons at the same point, held admissible "under the peculiar circumstances of this case", as cumulative evidence of notice, not expressly disapproving Wise v. Ackerman in rejecting such facts as evidence of condition, but virtually allowing such use of it; why should not the Court frankly acknowledge the correct rule?);

Massachusetts: 1850, Collins v. Dorchester, 6 Cush. 396 (injury on a highway, through a supposed failure of a railing; that another person, riding there under similar circumstances, had suffered a similar accident, excluded below, as "a collateral issue", which would "result in testing one point in dispute by another"; this ruling was affirmed; Metcalf, J.: "It was testimony concerning collateral facts, which furnished no legal presumption as to the principal facts in dispute, and which the defendants were not bound to be prepared to meet"; citing Standish v. Washburn, ante, § 451); 1854, Aldrich v. Pelham, 1 Gray 510 (want of a railing as a defect in a highway, when two teams passed each other; the defendant offered to show that various other persons had passed each other at that place in the same way without injury; held, improperly admitted, because "each of these cases would present a distinct issue with all its attendant circumstances, and involve the consequences contemplated in Collins v. Dorchester"); 1858, Kidder v. Dunstable, 11 Gray 342 (issue as to the condition of a snowy road; that others had passed in safety, excluded); 1871, Lewis v. Smith, 107 Mass. 334 (action for mules lost by insufficient arrangements on the ferryboat transporting them; that such a boat had been run for thirty years previously without such an injury, excluded); 1872, Schoonmaker v. Wilbraham, 110 Mass. 134 (following Collins v. Dorchester, Aldrich v. Pelham); 1884, Peverly v. Boston, 136 Mass. 366 (injury on a ferryboat through catching the hand in a gate raised by an unauthorized person; issue as to the necessity of protecting the gate; that no accident had ever before happened at the gate, excluded); 1893, Marvin v. New Bedford, 158 Mass. 464, 466, 33 N. E. 605 (that no injury had ever occurred there before, excluded); 1894, Knowlton, J., in Bemis v. Temple, 162 Mass. 342, 345, 38 N. E. 970 (referring to these cases as decided on the ground of surprise and confusion of issues, he remarks that "in most of these cases" the applications of the principle to the facts "are generally deemed satisfactory", while "in others . . . apart from authority, it may be" that the fact offered "as a simple experiment might well have been proved"; the majority approve this opinion; see quotation ante, § 444);

evidential material. But Mr. Justice Doe's opinion utterly discredited it as an obstacle to the investigation of truth; even in its own jurisdiction it was gradually narrowed in its effect; and it would there presumably no longer be followed, even upon its precise state of facts. The precedents, how-1896, Flaherty v. Powers, 167 Mass. 61, 44 N. E. 1074 (injury at a machine; "the habit of the machine to spatter, down to just before the accident", admitted to show the "behavior of the machine"); 1898, Spaulding v. Lithograph M. Co., 171 Mass. 271, 50 N. E. 543 (injury by the seat of machinery tipping up; that it had tipped up before, admitted, as "instructive as to what happened to the plaintiff"); 1904, Cohen v. Hamblin & Russell Mfg. Co., 186 Mass. 544, 71 N. E. 948 (injury to a child at a machine; prior injuries to other children at the same machine, excluded); 1907, Yore v. Newton, 194 Mass. 250, 80 N. E. 472 (upsetting of a wagon in a highway; the effect of the highway on other wagons during five years, held not improperly excluded in the trial Court's discretion); 1910, Walker v. Williamson, 205 Mass. 514, 91 N. E. 885 (prior fall of a block, held not improperly excluded in discretion); 1913, Williams v. Winthrop, 213 Mass. 581, 100 N. E. 1101 (highway defect; Collins v. Dorchester followed); 1913 Williams v. Holbrook, 216 Mass. 239, 103 N. E. 633 (that other machines had skidded at that place, held admissible in discretion);

Michigan: 1885, McCool v. Grand Rapids, 58 Mich. 41, 46, 24 N. W. 631 (that another person had constantly driven over the same part of the highway without injury, admitted); 1889, Dundas v. Lansing, 75 Mich. 499, 508, 42 N. W. 1011 (other accidents to other people at the particular place, admissible to show that the place "was not reasonably safe and fit for travel"); 1891, Lombar v. East Tawas, 86 Mich. 14, 48 N. W. 947 (injury at a hole in a plank in the walk; that others had before fallen into the same hole, admitted, to show the existence and nature of the defect); 1892, Retan v. R. Co., 94 Mich. 146, 53 N. W. 1094 (injury in a sidewalk-hole; that others had caught their feet in the hole, admitted); 1893, Corcoran v. Detroit, 95 Mich. 84, 54 N. W. 692 (highway defect; that another person "broke his buggy" at the same place about the same time, excluded; no authorities cited); 1904, Gregory v. Detroit U. R. Co., 138 Mich. 368, 101 N. W. 546 (prior accidents at the same place, excluded; "such testimony is only admissible to show notice and knowledge of the defects", which was here conceded; the above cases prior to Corcoran v. Detroit are ignored); 1905, Vander Velde v. Leroy, 140 Mich. 359, 103 N. W. 812 (that others had fallen off the same sidewalk, excluded, the conditions having been materially changed); 1908, Woodworth v. Detroit United R. Co., 153 Mich. 108, 116 N. W. 549 (similar prior wagon-accidents at the same place in a highway, admitted; overruling Gregory v. Detroit U. R. Co.; admitting the evidence not merely to show notice, but to show the defective condition of the highway);

Minnesota: 1877, Phelps v. Mankato, 23 Minn. 276, 279 (injury at a post in the street; that "other teams had run into it", admitted to show its "dangerous character"); 1881, Kelly v. R. Co., 28 Minn. 98, 100, 9 N. W. 568 (injury at a crossing; that "similar accidents occurred by reason of the same defect, as tending to show that the absence of the plank rendered the crossing unsafe", admissible; but an accident at a different place and in a different mode was excluded); 1887, Phelps v. R. Co., 37 Minn. 487, 35 N. W. 273 (difficulties experienced by other travellers in crossing a place alleged to be unsafe were admitted; Mitchell, J.: "There was evidence tending to show that the highway was in substantially the same condition during this time as on the day of the accident, except that the obstruction was increased. . . . As to the materiality and competence of this evidence there is no room for doubt. . . . It is the practical test of common experience, often the most satisfactory evidence"); 1889, Doyle v. R. Co., 42 Minn. 79, 82, 43 N. W. 787 (whether a rail was dangerous by being worn out and splintered; that a witness had in 23 years' experience never heard of an injury from a rail so splintered, admitted; "if such evidence [of former injuries] is admissible to show that what is complained of was of a dangerous character, it must be that evidence would be admissible on the other side to show that in a long and constant use of such instrumentalities accidents had been unknown; that would be a proper means of showing that a thing which was not obviously dangerous was not in fact so"); 1895, Burrows v. Lake Crystal, 61 Minn. 357, 63 N. W. 745 (similar accidents to other pedestrians at the same place in a walk; question reserved);

Missouri: 1885, Hipsley v. R. Co., 88 Mo. 348, 354 (injury by derailment; "other accidents on other parts" of the road, excluded); 1897, Graney v. R. Co., 140 Mo. 89, 41 S. W. 246 (a boy thrown down by the alleged suction of air from a passing train; the effect of air upon mail sacks thrown from moving trains, excluded as not analogous in conditions); 1906, Charlton v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co., 200 Mo. 413, 98 S. W. 529 (proximity of a crane; another person's former experience, admitted);

New Hampshire: 1877, Griffin v. Auburn, 58 N. H. 121 (whether a tree was dangerously near the highway; collisions of other persons with the tree, admitted, in the trial Court's ever, in the various jurisdictions still show traces of its early misleading influence.

3. Distinguish here (1) the use of other injuries to show notice of a defective or dangerous place (ante, § 252); in some of the rulings, both points are decided; in others, the present principle is ignored; (2) the inference of a discretion); 1895, Dow v. Weare, 68 N. H. 345, 44 Atl. 489 (highway injury; similar accident to another person at that place several days before, held admissible in the trial Court's discretion); 1900, Whitcher v. R. Co., 70 N. H. 242, 46, Atl. 740 (experiments made since the accident, in stepping from cars, admitted); 1909, Fisher v. Boston & M. R. Co., 75 N. H. 184, 72 Atl. 212 (injury at a platform; passage of other persons without injury, admitted);

New Jersey: 1869, Temperance Hall Ass'n v. Giles, 33 N. J. L. 260 (injury by falling into an area by the sidewalk; testimony of a witness that there had been no such injury there before, though 10,000 persons had passed there yearly, excluded, partly because similarity of conditions was not shown, partly because of surprise and confusion of issues; the opinion, which is not consistent in its language, is often understood by other Courts to go further than it does, and next to Collins v. Dorchester it has done most to influence erroneous rulings); 1907, Bobbink v. Erie R. Co., 75 N. J. L. 913, 69 Atl. 204 (that other horses had caught their feet in a railroad frog, excluded); 1909, Alcott v. Public Service Corp., 78 N. J. L. 482, 74 Atl. 499 (wagon caught in a track-switch; other incidents of a similar sort at the same place, from 3 to 13 days before, held admissible; Temperance Hall Case distinguished, and impliedly disapproved);
New York: 1873, Dougan v. Champlain Co., 56 N. Y. 7 (dangerousness of a place on a steamboat deck; semble, that others had fallen overboard there, or that no accident had before occurred there, admissible); 1877, Baird v. Daly, 68 N. Y. 550 (that a scow, alleged to be unseaworthy, had or had not experienced similar accidents on previous similar occasions, admitted); 1877, Quinlan v. Utica, 74 N. Y. 603, affirming 11 Hun 217 (injury by slipping on a sidewalk; the slipping and falling of others upon it while it was in the same condition, admitted); 1887, Pomfrey v. Saratoga Springs, 104 N. Y. 459, 469, 11 N. E. 43 (injury by slipping on snow and ice; that another person had fallen in the same place, admitted); 1890, Hoyt v. R. Co., 118 N. Y. 399, 23 N. E. 565 (a wagon getting into a hole in the street; to show that the wagon was defective, a similar happening to it the next day in another place was received, as showing "that such defect tended in theory and operated in practice to overturn the wagon, and thus put this case in line with that numerous class of cases holding that, where a defect is shown to exist, that fact may be legitimately strengthened by proof of other and similar effects, both before and after the effects were produced which form the subject of the trial"); 1890, Gillrie v. Lockport, 122 N. Y. 403, 25 N. E. 357 (injury in the highway; the fall of another person two years before at the same place, excluded; previous injuries declared generally admissible to show that the place as tested by use is unsafe; but here the time was too remote; see ante, § 437); 1899, Fordham v. Gouverneur, 160 N. Y. 541, 55 N. E. 290 (injury on sidewalk; stumbling of others on the same evening on the same plank, admitted);
North Carolina: 1900, Raper v. R. Co., 126 N. C. 563, 36 S. E. 115 (accidents at other crossings similarly constructed, admitted);
Ohio: 1877, Insurance Co. v. Tobin, 32 Oh. St. 90 (previous instances of steamboat disasters occurring through snags, etc., and yet without any shock or other coincident indication, excluded, on account of surprise and confusion of issues); 1883, Sinton v. Butler, 40 Oh. St. 158, 168 (falling of an elevator; that it was "in constant use for well nigh five years without accident", admitted);
Oklahoma: 1903, Kingfisher v. Altizer, 13 Okl. 121, 74 Pac. 107 (injury on a defective bridge; other prior accidents at the same place, admitted to show the "state of repair"); 1915, Chickasha v. White, 45 Okl. 631, 146 Pac. 578 (other accidents in the highway, admitted; following Kingfisher v. Altizer);
Pennsylvania: 1879, Mansfield C. & C. Co. v. McEnery, 91 Pa. 185, 192 (defective bridge; experience of others in passing over it, admitted to show its condition); 1920, Lynch v. Meyersdale E. L. H. & P. Co., 268 Pa. 337, 112 Atl. 58 (death from an electric shock by a wire in the plaintiff's house; shocks received by other persons served by defendant's plant, both through the same transformer and through a different one, held admissible to show condition of the plant);
Rhode Island: 1898, Anderson v. Taft, 20 R. I. 362, 39 Atl. 191 (injury in a highway; that no such accident had happened there for 20 years, excluded; following Temp. Assoc. v. Giles, N. J.; ignoring Darling v. Westmoreland); 1899, State v. Mowry, 21 R. I. 376, 43 Atl. 871 (injury by diversion of uninsulated current; shocks received subsequently by others at the same place, admitted to show the condition as to insulation);
South Carolina: 1887, Bridger v. R. Co., 27 S. C. 456, 3 S. E. 860 (injury at a turntable: former injuries of others there, excluded, unless brought to defendant's knowledge; no authoridefect from the very fact of the injury in issue (ante, § 442), and the related presumption of negligence from the mere fact of injury (post, § 2509); (3) the fixing of the memory of a highway defect by the occurrence of a prior accident (post, §§ 655, 730); and (4) the inference of an admission of negligence from subsequent repairs (ante, § 283).

C. INSTANCES OF MENTAL AND MORAL EFFECTS, AS EVIDENCE

§ 459. General Principle. There is no reason why the tendency or quality of an object of external nature should not sometimes be as easily ascertainable from its mental or moral (psychological) effects as from its corporal or its material effects. Where the issue is as to the existence of a tendency to produce psychological effects, the tendency can usually best be proved by adducing instances of such effects, if they have attended the use or operation of the thing in question. For example, if on looking out of the window of a com-ties cited, and no appreciation of the nature of the question); 1898, Pearson v. Spartanburg Co., 51 S. C. 480, 29 S. E. 193 (bridge collapsing under a road-engine; cracking of the bridge at the former passing of such an engine, admitted);

Utah: 1892, Hurd v. R. Co., 8 Utah 241, 243, 244, 30 Pac. 982 (whether an engine started of itself; similar startings of other engines, excluded, but of the same engine, admitted); 1898, Snowden v. Coal Co., 16 Utah 366, 52 Pac. 599 (injury in a mine by the falling of a "clod"; that others had been injured by the falling of this "clod", rejected, on the theory that it was an attempt to use other negligent acts, under § 199, ante; no notice taken of the present principle); 1920, Barlow v. Salt Lake & U. R. Co., 57 Utah 312, 194 Pac. 665 (injury by slipping on a gravelled platform; to negative the platform's dangerous condition, defendant offered to show that in 18 months 50,000 tickets were sold to that station and no other injury was reported, excluded; "the proposed testimony . . . has no evidentiary force whatsoever"; the opinion's failure to perceive the logical distinction between proof and evidence is discouraging; all that logicians ever wrote on the principle of § 448, ante, might as well not have been written);
Vermont: 1835, Lester v. Pittsford, 7 Vt. 158 (admitting a previous passing over the same road with safety; no question raised); 1860, Kent v. Lincoln, 32 Vt. 591 (injury by being thrown from a wagon while crossing a waterbar; that others were thrown or jolted at the same place, admitted; such effects would be "in the nature of experiments to show the actual condition of the road"); 1867, Walker v. Westfield, 39 Vt. 247 (injury by being thrown out of a wagon which got into a mudhole; C.'s similar experience a day or two later, received, as no more irrelevant than "if the witness had testified that he went there the next day and with a measuring rule found the ditch to be three feet wide and two feet deep"); 1900, Sullivan v. D. & H. Canal Co., 72 Vt. 353, 47 Atl. 1084 (absence of accidents at railroad platform for 30 years, excluded, because the conditions were not shown the same); 1901, Lynds v. Plymouth, 73 Vt. 216, 50 Atl. 1083 (prior injuries to other persons at the same bridge, admitted); 1919, Thayer v. Glynn, 93 Vt. 257, 106 Atl. 834 (experiment as to a collision, with a different horse and automobile, admitted);
Washington: 1897, Elster v. Seattle, 18 Wash. 304, 51 Pac. 394 (injuries at the same place in the sidewalk to other persons a week or ten days before, admitted); 1901, Hansen v. Seattle L. Co., 41 Wash. 349, 83 Pac. 102 (prior accidents at the same and similar cog-wheels, admitted); 1903, Smith v. Seattle, 33 Wash. 481, 74 Pac. 674 (trap-door in a sidewalk; falls of other persons at the same place, admissible to show the condition of the sidewalk; following Elster v. Seattle and District v. Armes, U. S., supra); 1904, Franklin v. Engel, 34 Wash. 480, 76 Pac. 84 (preceding cases followed); 1913, Armstrong v. Yakima Hotel Co., 75 Wash. 477, 135 Pac. 233 (another fall at a step 47 days before, admitted, no change of conditions being shown: but improperly limited to the purpose of showing notice);
Wisconsin: 1887, Phillips v. Willow, 70 Wis. 6, 34 N. W. 731 (a stone obstructing the highway and overturning a sleigh; that others about the same time had collided with the stone, excluded; see quotation ante, § 443); 1894, Barrett v. Hammond, 87 Wis. 654, 657, 58 N. W. 1053 (prior injuries at the same place, excluded); 1901, Kroider v. Wisconsin R. P. & P. Co., 110 Wis. 645, 86 N. W. 662 (prior injuries at a machine, excluded); 1905, Garske v. Ridgeville, 123 Wis. 503, 102 N. W. 22 (prior instances of safe driving at a highway defect, excluded).

fortable home the persons on the highway are observed to be shuddering and turning up their ulster-collars, a natural inference is that the temperature without is extremely cold. Or, if on looking some distance ahead, as one drives through a street, all the vehicles are observed to be turning aside at a certain apparently vacant spot in the road, a natural inference is made that some obstruction exists, such as a pavement-hole or a broken electric wire.

This sort of inference from human or animal conduct is of constant service in daily life, and claims also an important part in the realm of evidence for litigated issues. It is of especial importance and utility, because of the absurd and fantastical extent to which the prohibitions of the Opinion-rule (post, § 1917) have been pushed; for if no direct testimony is to be permitted, by persons who can say (for example) whether a place was dangerous or safe, it becomes all the more necessary to grant the largest possible scope to circumstantial evidence by specific instances of the effects produced on human or animal conduct by the use or operation of the thing in question.

A possible objection is found in the Hearsay rule; i.e. in looking to a person's conduct as evidencing the material cause of the conduct, are we not virtually receiving the person's hearsay assertion as to the cause? The Hearsay rule excludes extra-judicial assertions only, i.e. deliberate utterances in terms affirming a fact (post, § 1362); and, although in effect an inference from conduct may be the same in result as an inference from assertion, nevertheless the two are distinct. Nor does the policy or spirit of the Hearsay rule apply; for that policy is to test the assertions of persons regarded as witnesses, by learning the source of their knowledge and by exposing its elements of weakness and error, if possible; and where the evidence is not dealing with a person's assertion as deriving force from his personal character, knowledge, or experience, it is not within the scope of the policy of the Hearsay rule. No doubt the line is sometimes hard to draw between conduct used as circumstantial evidence and assertion used testimonially.[1] Nevertheless the difference is a real one; and the preceding topics illustrate amply the acknowledged propriety of using conduct circumstantially.

Another objection that may occur is that the conduct of another person is not to be taken as a standard determining legal duty. This is undoubtedly true; but it is easy to distinguish between the conduct of another person as a standard of duty and the same conduct merely as evidence of the nature of the thing which is the subject of the duty. The importance and sufficiency of this distinction is dealt with elsewhere (post, § 461).[2]

§ 459. [1] One of the difficult cases where the line has to be drawn — the use of Conduct as evidencing Consciousness — has been fully discussed (ante, § 265), and reference may be made to that exposition for a more extended examination of the question, as also to the discussion post, §§ 1362, 1788, under the Hearsay rule.

[2] It is here impossible to collect all the cases defining this standard of care; yet many of them indirectly lead to an evidential rule.

In a few jurisdictions it is settled that the usual conduct of other persons is of itself a legal standard of care; e.g.: 1905, Boop v. Laurelton L. Co., 212 Pa. 523, 61 Atl. 1021.

In general, then, the phenomena of others' sensations and conduct — effects psychological, or mental and moral (for the term is immaterial, and no one word expresses the entire notion) — may serve to evidence the tendency, capacity, or quality of a material object of external nature, precisely as corporal or material phenomena may evidence it. The principles of Relevancy and of Auxiliary Probative Policy, as already examined (ante, §§ 442, 443), will determine the admissibility of a given piece of evidence. In general, the former requires that the circumstances under which the other conduct occurs should be substantially similar; the latter allows the exclusion of relevant evidence wherever it would, in the case in hand, involve an unfair surprise, an undue prejudice, or a disproportionate confusion of issues and waste of time.

§ 460. Measures of Time, Space, Light, Sound, Difficulty, or Capacity, as evidenced by Human Sensations or Conduct (Noises heard, Objects seen, Distances walked, Trains stopped, Work performed, etc.). In general, all those material conditions and qualities of material objects in external nature which become effective with reference to the ordinary sense-perceptions and muscular activities of human beings or animals may be evidenced by specific instances of such effects, — used subject to the limitations of the general principles already noticed.

Thus, a condition of light may be evidenced by instances of other persons' experience in seeing or identifying under similar circumstances;[1] this appli-

§ 460. [1] Federal: 1898, Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Helenthall, 31 C. C. A. 414, 88 Fed. 116 (whether a child could be seen on the track; experiments assumed admissible, but whether the similarity of conditions was for judge or jury, left undecided; it need not have been; of course it is for the judge); Alabama: 1897, Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Hill, 114 Ala. 587, 22 So. 169 (whether children could be recognized on a trestle at a certain distance; witnesses placed similar children on the trestle and then observed them from various distances; excluded because the conditions were "too variant"); 1903, Sherrill v. State, 138 Ala. 3, 35 So. 129 (experiments, as to the possibility of seeing an affray, made afterwards, under conditions not shown to be the same, excluded); California: 1898, People v. Woon Tuck Wo, 120 Cal. 294, 52 Pac. 833 (experiments three months later as to the possibility of distinguishing persons from a certain point, not improperly rejected in discretion, the conditions not being similar); Florida: 1905, Spires v. State, 50 Fla. 121, 39 So. 181 (whether a person could be recognized by the flash of a gun; an experiment for that purpose in the jury-room, held not improperly refused in the trial Court's discretion, chiefly because similarity of conditions was not shown); Georgia: 1846, Sealy v. State, 1 Kelly 220 (whether an object could be distinguished at night at a certain distance; evidence of one who had experimented, in company with another, "between the same hours of a similar star-light night", was rejected, because "the difference in men's visions and the uncertainty as to the exact quantity of light on both nights would render the proof too uncertain"); Illinois: 1893, Painter v. People, 147 Ill. 444, 459, 35 N. E. 64 (whether from a certain position a person below in the house could be recognized; experiments tried by both sides, "if competent at all", held of little weight, owing to the difficulty of testing the substantial similarity of conditions as to light, etc.); 1904, Hauser v. People, 210 Ill. 253, 71 N. E. 416 (burglary; whether the accused could be identified as testified to, allowed to be shown by tests of visibility made under the same conditions); 1905, Chicago & E. I. R. Co. v. Crose, 214 Ill. 602, 73 N. E. 865 (experiment as to seeing a railroad track, excluded, because the conditions were dissimilar); Indiana: 1880, Jones v. State, 70 Ind. 83, 84 (murder; experiments by sitting at night near the window in a room with a fire and a lamp to see whether a person without could be recognized, rejected; Worden, J.: "The experiments were not made at the house where Pigg was shot, but elsewhere; it would probably be difficult, if not impossible, to make an experiment elsewhere under just the circumstances that existed at the time Pigg was shot, including the extent and situation of the lights in the room, nation of the principle includes broadly all cases of the possibility of mistaken identity, as shown by other instances of mistaken recognition;[2] a condition of sound may be evidenced by instances of other persons' experience in hearing under similar conditions;[3] — the time required for walking or riding the extent of light or darkness outside, the quality of the window glass, etc."); Iowa: 1894, Burg v. R. Co., 90 Ia. 106, 116, 57 N. W. 680 (tests under similar conditions, to determine whether a person could be seen on a track, admitted); Maryland: 1899, Richardson v. State, 90 Md. 109, 44 Atl. 999 (experiments in identifying other persons by the light of the same street-lamp under similar conditions, admissible); Massachusetts: 1907, Baker v. Harrington, 196 Mass. 339, 82 N. E. 33 (fall on a hall-stairway; experiments and observations under conditions substantially the same, to test the light, held not improperly admitted in the trial Court's discretion); 1914, Trask v. Boston & Maine R. Co., 219 Mass. 410, 106 N. E. 1022 (collision at grade crossing; to evidence the dazzling effect of an electric light there placed, a witness' repeated experience at the same place was held properly excluded, because the conditions were not shown to be substantially similar); Michigan: 1888, Stone v. Ins. Co., 71 Mich. 81, 38 N. W. 710 (death by slipping into an excavation in the sidewalk; the impression received by one approaching it on the next night under the same circumstances, admitted); Mississippi: 1908, Harrison v. Southern R. Co., 93 Miss. 40, 46 So. 408 (experiments as to distance at which a trespasser could be seen on the track, allowed); New Hampshire: 1904, Healey v. Bartlett, 73 N. H. 110, 59 Atl. 617 (whether a testator was in such a position that he could see the attesting witnesses; experiments allowed in the trial Court's discretion); New Jersey: 1863, Berckmans v. Berckmans, 16 N. J. Eq. 127 (admitting experiments as to the possibility of seeing a certain event testified to); North Carolina: 1900, Cox v. R. Co., 126 N. C. 103, 35 S. E. 237 (experiments as to how far a man could be seen, admitted); Ohio: 1853, Smith v. State, 2 Oh. St. 517 (the injured person asserted that he had recognized the accused in the dark by the flash of the pistol as it was discharged outside his window at him; evidence of experiments under similar conditions showing the impossibility of such a recognition was declared admissible; Thurman, J.: "It was certainly lawful to disprove this statement by showing the impossibility or natural improbability of its being true. This is not denied, but it is said it could not be done by proof of experiments. If not, how could the proof be made? . . . Again, it is urged that the experiments in question were not made by looking through the same window pane that H. looked through. But does that deprive them of all value? Is there such a difference in common window-glass that the judgment could not in any degree be aided by an experiment made with an other pane?"); 1899, Schweinfurth v. R. Co., 60 Oh. 215, 54 N. E. 89 (experiments with men in a buggy, and an engine and train, made under circumstances similar to those of an injury sued for, and on the spot in the jury's presence, admitted); Oregon: 1920, State v. Holbrook, 98 Or. 43, 192 Pac. 640 (murder; whether the smoke of a gunshot could have been seen; experiments admitted); Texas: 1921, Panhandle v. S. R. F. Co., Haywood, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 227 S. W. 323 (experiments with a child on a track, admitted); Utah: 1897, Young v. Clark, 16 Utah 42, 50 Pac. 832 (experiments as to the possibility of seeing a child on a railroad bridge, received); Virginia: 1922, Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Henderson, Va., 111 S. E. 277 (death of a child: tests as to visibility on the track, held admissible in the trial Court's discretion); West Virginia: 1899, Bias v. R. Co., 46 W. Va. 349, 33 S. E. 240 (experiments made on the railroad-track, in the jury's presence, to show how far a person could be seen, allowed); Wisconsin: 1899, Emery v. State, 101 Wis. 627, 78 N. W. 145 (experiments as to time of disappearance of daylight, not admitted, because not under sufficiently similar conditions).

[2] 1824, R. v. Robinson, Annual Register, 1824, App. 23 (larceny, evidenced by a witness to the act; the defendant, to show mistaken identity, called a witness who "had seen two persons in custody very much resembling the prisoner"; "about six weeks ago he met a young man so much like the prisoner that he was quite surprised at the resemblance"); 1882, White v. Com. 80 Ky. 483 (the witness met the accused's double and was so strongly impressed by the identity that he twice approached him to speak to him as the defendant); 1850, Com. v. Webster, Bemis' Rep. 281, 5 Cush. 295, 302 (murder; after testimony that the deceased had been seen alive on the streets since the time alleged, evidence in rebuttal was offered that other persons had mistaken a certain man for the deceased, the fact indicating the existence of a similar person; excluded, unless the person himself was produced; unsound).

[3] Cal. 1899, People v. Phelan, 123 Cal. 551, 56 Pac. 424 (experiments as to hearing of sounds, made under conditions substantially similar, admitted); 1899, Sonoma Co. v. Stofen, 125 Cal. 32, 57 Pac. 681 (experiments as to the sound produced by kicking a safe-door, admitted, as made under substantially similar conditions); Colo. 1900, Starr v. People, 28 Colo. 184, 63 Pac. 299 (whether a conversation could be heard at a certain point; experiments under essentially the same conditions, held admissible); Kan. 1896, Missouri P. R. Co. v. Moffatt, 56 Kan. 667, 44 Pac. 607 (railway killing at a crossing; to show whether the sound-signals could have been heard, evidence was held admissible from persons who had stood at the spot and listened, "if the test is made at the place and under substantially similar circumstances"); 1909, Johnson v. Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co., 80 Kan. 456, 103 Pac. 90 (railway-crossing injury; experiments made under similar conditions to determine whether train noise would be deadened by adjacent land formation, etc., held admissible); Md. 1902, Gambrill v. Schooley, 95 Md. 260, 52 Atl. 500 (experiments as to the range of hearing of a voice, held admissible); Mass. 1906, Dow v. Bulfinch, 192 Mass. 281, 78 N. E. 416 (experiments to show whether conversation could be distinguished in an adjacent room, held not improperly excluded in discretion); Minn. 1899, State v. Smith, 78 Minn. 362, 81 N. W. 17 (whether a voice could be heard, etc., at a certain point; results of experiments, admitted). Compare § 222, ante.

a certain distance,[4] or for stopping a train within a certain distance,[5] may be evidenced by other instances under similar conditions; the height of a cattle-guard, with reference to the possibility of cattle leaping it, may be evidenced by instances of what cattle have done with similar fences; or the amount of animal feed, by the quantity consumed by others.[6]

There is therefore no reason why other miscellaneous instances of observation and experiment should not be received, subject to the foregoing limitations of principle.[7]

[4] 1699, Spencer Cowper's Trial, 13 How. St. Tr. 1162, 1178 (evidence received of experiments made in walking to the river, to show that it was impossible for the defendant to go and return within a certain time); 1887, Klanowski v. R. Co., 64 Mich. 279, 286, 31 N. W. 275 (experiments made by proceeding along the same road as the plaintiff just before the same train approached the crossing, to determine whether it could be safely made, excluded, because the distances and other conditions were not shown to be similar; Morse, J., diss.); 1900, People v. Gotshall, 123 Mich. 474, 82 N. W. 274 (time of going a distance; time taken by certain young men experimentally, not admitted to show time taken by an old man who was ill); 1888, State v. Flint, 60 Vt. 304, 308, 317, 14 Atl. 178 (time required to walk a certain distance; experiments in walking it, admitted in spite of partial dissimilarity of conditions).

[5] 1881, Augusta & S. R. Co. v. Dorsey, 68 Ga. 235 (to show whether an engine could have been stopped in time, the engineer related another instance in which he had done it under similar circumstances); 1914, Holzemer v. Metrop. St. R. Co., 261 Mo. 379, 169 S. W. 102 (test of time of car-stoppage, excluded for lack of a proper showing); 1914, Beckley v. Alexander, 77 N. H. 255, 90 Atl. 878 (experiments in stopping an automobile; left to the trial Court's discretion); 1895, Byers v. R. Co., 94 Tenn. 345, 29 S. W. 129 (an experiment evidenced that it was impossible to stop a train under the conditions in which the defendant failed to stop the train); 1903, Richmond P. & P. Co. v. Racks, 101 Va. 487, 44 S. E. 709 (time required for stopping cars of a substantially different construction, excluded).

[6] 1886, Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Hart, 22 Ill. App. 209 (on the question whether a cattle-guard was of such a construction that domestic animals could readily step over, evidence was offered that cows, heifers, steers, and horses had repeatedly been seen passing over; Baker, P. J.: "A fact that illustrates by experiment the condition of the subject-matter of the issue in controversy is not collateral to that issue, but is direct evidence bearing on it"); 1871, Carlton v. Hescox, 107 Mass. 410 (price of hay fed to the defendant's horse; the quantity fed being in issue, evidence of "how much hay an ordinary horse will eat or consume in a week", excluded, since the horse was with the defendant to be doctored, and therefore not in ordinary condition); 1895, Harwood's Adm'x v. R. Co., 67 Vt. 664, 32 Atl. 720, semble (that other cattle-guards, similarly circumstanced, and of like pattern, had sufficiently restrained cattle, received to show that the one in question was adequate).

[7] Federal: 1897, West Pub. Co. v. Lawyers' Coöp. P. Co., 25 C. C. A. 648, 79 Fed. 756 (the issue being whether the headnotes made by the defendant's editors from the plaintiff's reports were merely copied from the plaintiff's headnotes to these reports or were made by original labor and study of the reports, the plaintiff argued that the period of time between the publication of these reports and that of the defendant's headnotes made original study impossible; the defendant's offer to have his editors show their capacity for speed in the master's presence was held not improperly rejected in the trial Court's discretion, in view of the conditions being there much more favorable to high speed than at the time of the making of the headnotes in question); 1899, Golden Reward M. Co. v. Buxton M. Co., 38 C. C. A. 228, 97

In general, when a question arises whether at a certain machine, house, field, mine, or other thing, a certain act can be done, under given conditions of time, strength, skill, or achievement, "one way to do", in the language of Mr. Justice Doe (quoted ante, § 445) "is to speculate about it; and another way is to try it"; and it is a crude error to suppose that the law of evidence here "prefers speculation to experience, abhors actual experiment, and delights in guesswork."

Compare here (1) the use of other instances of a particular person's strength or skill, to show his individual strength or skill (ante, §§ 220–223); and (2) the propriety, in the present class of cases, of performing the experiments before the jury, instead of proving them by witnesses (post, §§ 1150–1161).

§ 461. Measure of Negligence, Danger, Insufficiency, Unreasonableness, Cruelty, Unskilfulness, or their opposites, as evidenced by Similar Conduct or Habits of other Persons or Animals (Horses' Fright, Passengers' Behavior, Safeguards for Railroads, Highways, and Machines, Commercial Customs,

Fed. 413 (trespass by mining a quantity of ore on the plaintiff's premises; to prove the total amount taken, the defendant offered to prove that the rate of output in its various slopes was the same, and that the total output divided by the total number of workmen, and multiplied by the number of men working in the slopes on the plaintiff's premises, would give the total tons of ore wrongfully taken; excluded, because on the facts confusing, unfair, and unnecessary); California: 1899, People v. Hill, 123 Cal. 571, 56 Pac. 443 (experiment as to getting over a fence, improper because not shown to be under similar conditions); Iowa: 1890, McMurrin v. Rigby, 80 Ia. 325, 45 N. W. 877 (experiments as to the possibility of a rape on a stairway as described by the plaintiff; rejected, because "the experiments were not made under such conditions as to size of persons as that the results would prove or disprove the claim of the plaintiff"); 1905, State v. Donovan, 128 Ia. 41, 102 N. W. 791 (seduction under hypnotism; defendant's power evidenced by other instances); 1906, Tackman v. Brotherhood, 132 Ia. 64, 106 N. W. 350 (suicide by hanging with a bridle; experiments with other persons under similar conditions, admitted to show the probability of accidental death); Illinois: 1859, Jumpertz v. People, 21 Ill. 408 (the defence having alleged that the deceased committed suicide, experiments were made before the jury with screws, ropes, hooks, etc., to test the possibility of the deceased having hung himself in the manner alleged by the accused; the objection was made, among others, that the conditions were not the same. The majority of the Court held that the verdict would not have been reversed for this alone, but declared that such experiments "should be permitted by the Court with great caution"); Louisiana: 1910, State v. McKowen, 126 La. 1075, 53 So. 353 (experiment as to the possibility of carrying a corpse in a wagon, allowed); Maryland: 1898, Baltimore C. P. R. Co. v. Conney, 87 Md. 261, 39 Atl. 859 (to show whether a person could ride on a street-car in a certain way, the fact that persons had ridden or could ride on similar cars of the same line was excluded); Massachusetts: 1839, Salem I. R. Co. v. Adams, 23 Pick. 256, 258, 264 (deceit in the sale of shoes; the plaintiff claimed that they were so packed in boxes, and the boxes so arranged, as to induce deception; to disprove this, their apparent condition, etc., as examined about the same time and under the same circumstances by another person, was admitted); Michigan: 1874, People v. Morrigan, 29 Mich. 5 (a pocketbook had been stolen from a coat-pocket while on the wearer; the fact was admitted of experiments made at a tailor's to determine the possibility of the theft, the coat being then "in the same condition in which it had been at the alleged robbery"); 1878, Ulrich v. People, 39 Mich. 245 (rape; experiments made in lifting girls over a fence as alleged by the complainant, to show the impossibility of this, excluded, because of liability to unfairness and because the lifting was not material); Nebraska: 1897, Davis v. State, 51 Neb. 301, 70 N. W. 984 (train-wrecking; to answer testimony that it was impossible with a monkey-wrench to remove certain nuts, testimony was admitted of one who had so removed similar nuts, the conditions being similar); Utah: 1898, Hayes v. R. Co., 17 Utah 99, 53 Pac. 1001 (whether an engine could pass a shed safely; experiment with another engine under similar conditions, allowed); Wisconsin: 1904, Zimmer v. Fox R. V. E. R. Co., 123 Wis. 643, 101 N. W. 1099 (experiments as to riding on a car, held allowable in the trial Court's determination as to similarity).

Malpractice, etc.). If a person is in the house and wishes to know whether he needs to take out his umbrella with him, and the condition of the atmosphere makes it difficult to see whether it is raining, he may look at the passers-by, and observe whether their umbrellas are lifted. If he wished to ascertain whether a hill was too steep to descend in a wagon without a brake, he would learn something by observing whether the brake was applied to others' wagons in descending. If he observed the workmen in a powder-factory wearing felt shoes, he might infer that the tendency of the powder was to explode from the concussion or friction of ordinary shoes, and that felt shoes were necessary with reference to obviating this tendency. In all these cases, he is judging of the nature or tendency of a material object from its effects on the conduct of others.

1. This tendency of the material object is usually not shown (as in preceding classes of cases) by its direct effects upon senses or muscles — as where a person uses his vision in sighting an object or feels pain upon eating a substance — but by its indirect effects, i.e. usually, by voluntary conduct, exhibited in avoiding or conforming to the supposed tendency of the object. Thus, the wearing of the felt shoes is that sort of conduct which the person is forced into in order to avoid the consequences of explosion by friction; the raising by the traveler of the protective umbrella is what he is put to in order to escape a drenching; and the use of the brake is resorted to for avoiding the danger of slipping down the hill. Nevertheless, the conduct is equally cogent evidentially as indicating the tendency of the material object. The only difference is that it approaches a degree nearer to the line between testimonial and circumstantial evidence, and thus raises more distinctly the question of the Hearsay rule. This possible application of the Hearsay rule was the reason for the exclusion of such evidence in Wright v. Tatham; but this question has already been referred to (ante, § 459), and it is enough to say that the rule has never been thought applicable except in Wright v. Tatham.

2. The chief difficulty here is of another sort. It arises from the necessity of distinguishing between the use of such facts evidentially and their use as involving a standard of conduct in substantive law. The distinction is in itself a simple one. (1) The conduct of others evidences the tendency of the thing in question; and such conduct — e.g. in using brakes on a hill, felt shoes in a powder-factory, railings around a machine, or in not using them — is receivable with other evidence showing the tendency of the thing as dangerous, defective, or the reverse. But this is only evidence. The jury may find from other evidence that the thing was in fact dangerous, defective, or the reverse, and the maintenance was or was not negligence, in spite of the above evidence. (2) Meanwhile, the substantive law tells them what the standard of conduct for negligence is; and this standard is a fixed one, independent of the actual conduct of others. To take that conduct as furnishing a sufficient legal standard of negligence would be to abandon the standard set by the substantive law, and would be improper. This conduct of others, then, (1) is receivable as some evidence of the nature of the thing in question, because it indicates what is the influence of the thing on the ordinary person in that situation; but (2) it is not to be taken as fixing a legal standard for the conduct required by law.

This distinction is patent enough, but it is sometimes judicially ignored. Such evidence is sometimes improperly excluded on the erroneous supposition that the mere reception of it implies that it is to serve as a legal standard of conduct. The proper method is to receive it, with an express caution that it is merely evidential and is not to serve as a legal standard. The correct treatment of it is well illustrated in the following two cases from the same jurisdiction:

1867, COLT, J., in Cass v. R. Co., 14 All. 448 (issue as to the care due from a bailee for hire): "What constituted such care [due and ordinary care] was a question of fact to be judged of with reference to all the circumstances, and especially with reference to the degree of care which other persons engaged in similar business in the vicinity were in the habit of bestowing on property similarly situated."

1868, WELLS, J., in Maynard v. Buck, 100 Mass. 40 (issue as to the negligence of a drover in losing cattle; an instruction was refused, that "if the defendant did the things that drovers of common prudence, engaged in the same business, ordinarily do, he was not guilty of such negligence as will make him liable"): "This is not the legitimate application of evidence admitted to show the usual practice in similar cases. . . . What had been done by others previously, however uniform in mode it may be shown to have been, does not make a rule of conduct by which the jury are to be limited and governed; it is not to control the judgment of the jury, if they see that in the case under consideration it is not such conduct as a prudent man would adopt in his own affairs. . . . It is evidence of what is proper and reasonable to be done, from which, together with all the other facts and circumstances of the case, the jury are to determine whether the conduct in question in the case before them was proper and justifiable."

3. It is to be remembered that the principles of Relevancy and of Auxiliary Policy (ante, §§ 442–444) apply here, with the same limitations as in the preceding topics; i.e. (1) the conduct of others must have occurred under circumstances substantially similar, and (2) there may be an exclusion of relevant evidence where in the case in hand it would, in the trial Court's opinion, involve a confusion of issues and undue waste of time.

In the application of this principle, then, the dangerous tendency of an object to frighten horses may be evidenced by instances of other horses being frightened by it under similar circumstances.[1] So, too, the tendency of an § 461. [1] ENGLAND: 1889, Brown v. R. Co., 22 Q. B. D. 391 (a heap of refuse and earth in a highway: to show its tendency to frighten horses, the fact was received of the shying of various other horses than the plaintiff's in passing the heap);

UNITED STATES: Connecticut: 1858, House v. Metcalf, 27 Conn. 631 (fright at a mill-wheel; to show that the wheel in motion was calculated to frighten horses, other instances of such fright were received); 1871, Knight v. Goodyear Mfg. Co., 38 Conn. 438, 442 (fright of other horses of ordinary gentleness by the same whistle at the same place, admitted to show the whistle's horse-frightening capacity); 1876, Tomlinson v. Derby, 43 Conn. 562 (that another horse was frightened by a highway-defect, admitted); Indiana: 1888, Cleveland R. Co. v. Wynant, 114 Ind. 525, 17 N. E. 118 (injury through fright of a horse at a box-car; previous fright of other horses at it, excluded; "it is not a subject to be pleaded or proved, whether a box-car or any other particular object is naturally cal-extraordinary situation to frighten human beings (as when in a collision the reasonableness of a person's conduct in jumping or rushing out is in issue) may be evidenced by the conduct of other persons similarly situated.[2] Where culated to frighten horses; this is to be determined by the Court and the jury, as applied to all the facts of the particular case before them"; the mere statement of such a reason is its own refutation); Iowa: 1906, Heinmiller v. Winston Bros., 131 Ia. 32, 107 N. W. 1102 (horse frightened by a steam shovel; fright of two other horses on the same day at the same place, admitted); 1913, Schmidt v. Dubuque Co., 136 Ia. 401, 113 N. W. 820 (fright of other horses at the same bridge, admitted); Kansas: 1897, Topeka Water Co. v. Whiting, 58 Kan. 639, 50 Pac. 877 (fright of other horses at an open hydrant, received); Maine: 1867, Hill v. R. Co., 55 Me. 438 (horse's fright at a whistle; fright of other horses at the same whistle, admitted, to shew "the usual effect of this whistle on horses of ordinary character"; the defendant might have shown that "no horse had ever been alarmed by it"); 1884, Crocker v. McGregor, 76 Me. 282 (whether escaping steam was likely to frighten horses; the fright of other horses, well-broken and ordinarily safe, admitted; "it tends to show the capacity of the inanimate thing to do the mischief complained of"); Massachusetts: 1894, Bemis v. Temple, 162 Mass. 342, 38 N. E. 970 (whether a campaign-flag overhanging a street was calculated to frighten horses; the effect of the flag under the same conditions upon other ordinary horses, admitted by the majority; Knowlton, J.: "The inquiry was in regard to the effect of an inanimate object upon an animal acting from instinct; the only way in which knowledge on this subject could be acquired is by observation of the effect of the object or of similar objects upon the animal. . . . The only possible difference in the results of different observations would arise from the difference in the horses", but this possible difference is not substantial); Michigan: 1889, Smith v. Sherwood, 62 Mich. 159, 28 N. W. 806 (fright of a horse at a hole in a bridge; the shying of other horses at the same hole admitted); Minnesota: 1903, Nye v. Dibley, 88 Minn. 465, 93 N. W. 524 (fright of other horses of ordinary gentleness, at a pile of stone, admitted); Nevada: 1904, Powell v. Nevada C. & O. R. Co., 28 Nev. 40, 78 Pac. 978 (fright of a horse at a whistle; fright of another horse at the same whistle, admitted); New Hampshire: 1872, Darling v. Westmoreland, 52 N. H. 40 (injury by the fright of a horse at a pile of lumber; previous fright of another horse, admitted; see quotations, ante, §§ 443, 444, 445); 1878, Gordon v. R. Co., 58 N. H. 396 (whether the noise of steam escaping from a locomotive was likely to frighten horses; the fright of other horses passing under like circumstances, admitted); 1896, Folsom v. R. Co., 68 N. H. 454, 38 Atl. 209 (fright of other horses "in the same or similar situation", admitted); 1897, Valley v. R. Co., 68 N. H. 546, 38 Atl. 383 (conduct of the same horse in passing the same pile of lumber at other times on the same day, admissible); Pennsylvania: 1898, Potter v. Natural Gas Co., 183 Pa. 575, 39 Atl. 7 (previous fright of another horse at the same noise, admitted); Rhode Island: 1899, Stone v. Pendleton, 21 R. I. 332, 43 Atl. 643 (horse frightened by a heap of sand; non-occurrence of fright by other horses at such heaps, excluded because too remote and because the conditions were not the same); Utah: 1894, Thomas v. Springville, 9 Utah 426, 430, 35 Pac. 503 (shying of other horses at a hole, admissible); Washington: 1909, Wilkie v. Chehalis Co. L. & T. Co., 55 Wash. 324, 104 Pac. 616 (one instance of another horse being frightened at fresh meat, excluded, apparently on the principle of § 41, ante; the present line of authorities not considered); Wisconsin: 1887, Bloor v. Town of Delafield, 56 Wis. 273, 34 N. W. 115 (fright of a horse at a box-car; that numerous other horses had been driven past without fright, excluded, on grounds of auxiliary policy; no authorities cited).

[2] 1872, Mobile & M. R. Co. v. Ashcroft, 48 Ala. 31 (conduct of others in jumping from the train, admitted); 1890, Mitchell v. R. Co., 87 Cal. 62, 25 Pac. 245 (conduct of other passengers, admitted to "show what they, being in the same dangerous situation, deemed prudent conduct"); 1899, Atlanta C. S. R. Co. v. Bagwell, 107 Ga. 157, 33 S. E. 191 (screams of other people in a car just before a collision, admitted to show plaintiff's state of mind before jumping); 1855, Galena & C. U. R. Co. v. Fay, 16 Ill. 558, 568 (conduct of other passengers, admitted "as tending to show how the circumstances of apparent danger impressed every one, and . . . vindicate it [the plaintiff's conduct] from rashness and imprudence from undue alarm"); 1899, Leary v. R. Co., 173 Mass. 373, 53 N. E. 817 (that other passengers were frequently confused and got out on the wrong side of the train, left to trial Court's discretion); 1904, Mullin v. Boston Elev. R. Co., 185 Mass. 522, 70 N. E. 1021 (injury received, while a passenger, during a collision of cars; that no other passengers received any injury, admitted to show the force of the collision, etc.); 1897, Holman v. R. Co., 114 Mich. 208, 72 N. W. 202 (conduct of other passengers in the same car at the time of a collision, admitted as indicating the existence of danger); 1877, Twomley v. R. Co., 69 N. Y. 161 (the issue being the danger of a particular situation and therefore the reasonableness of the plaintiff's the ordinary operation of a vehicle or place of work is in issue, with reference to the care to be used by passengers, employees, or highway travellers, or the possibility of safely riding, standing, passing, coupling, or climbing in a certain manner, the same principle applies, though the risk is greater of the jury's improperly confusing the evidential effect with the legal standard of care.[3] Where the conduct in jumping from a train, the action of other passengers was received, "as evidence of what was deemed prudent by those in the same situation, having an interest to take the least and avoid the greater hazard"); 1886, Hallahan v. R. Co., 102 N. Y. 199, 6 N. E. 287 (the plaintiff was injured by a collision between the car and a mail-crane; he was allowed "to show that others in the car heard the noise of the collision of the crane with the car, the confusion being the result of the collision and showing the nature thereof"); 1899, Agulino v. R. Co., 21 R. I. 263, 43 Atl. 63 (whether a plaintiff was negligent in believing that a train had come to a full stop; experience of others on the same train at other times, excluded).

Distinguish the following: 1905, Foss v. Portsmouth D. & Y. R. Co., 73 N. H. 246, 60 Atl. 747 (collision; that no other passenger had made complaint or claim, excluded, on the principle of § 1080, post).

[3] For this reason, and also because the evidence is frequently offered from the wrong point of view, most of the rulings exclude such evidence: Alabama: 1891, Warden v. R. Co., 94 Ala. 277, 285, 10 So. 276 (brakeman riding on a cross-beam in front of the engine; a custom so to ride, held admissible usually as throwing light on the propriety of conduct, but not admissible where the act was 'per se' negligent, as here); 1892, Kansas C. M. & B. R. Co. v. Burton, 97 Ala. 240, 251, 12 So. 88 (car left near the main line; similar principle laid down); 1892, Andrews v. R. Co., 99 Ala. 439, 12 So. 432 (similar facts and ruling as in Warden v. R. Co.); 1893, Hill v. R. Co., 100 Ala. 447, 451, 14 So. 201 (stepping from one street-car to another by the foot-boards, the cars being in motion; a custom of others excluded, for the above reason); 1896, George v. R. Co., 109 Ala. 245, 19 So. 785 (going between engine and car, while in motion, to uncouple them; same ruling); Georgia: 1893, Metropolitan S. R. Co. v. Johnson, 91 Ga. 466, 470, 18 S. E. 816 (crossing the street in front of a car; "usual custom" of pedestrians, excluded, as "no measure of diligence" for plaintiff); Illinois: 1883, Chicago R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Clark, 108 Ill. 118 (usual mode of coupling cars, excluded; the Court not noticing the evidential use of the fact); 1900, North Chicago S. R. Co. v. Kaspers, 186 Ill. 246, 57 N. E. 849 (that other passengers were accustomed to jump on a car in motion, not admitted "for the purpose of establishing a standard of ordinary care"; correct distinction not noticed); Indiana: 1910, Grand Trunk Western R. Co. v. Poole, 175 Ind. 567, 93 N. E. 26 (contributory negligence in going in front of cars to make couplings; custom in defendant's yards to do so, admitted); Kansas: 1890, Southern K. R. Co. v. Robbins, 43 Kan. 145, 23 Pac. 113 (climbing the ladder of a box-car; the practice of others, excluded as creating collateral issues); Massachusetts: 1867, Hickey v. R. Co., 14 All. 429 (riding upon a car-platform; a custom of others, excluded as "not tending to show that it was safe"); 1867, Caswell v. R. Co., 98 Mass. 194, 200 (whether the plaintiff was careless in going out on the platform from the waiting-room before the train arrived; the custom of passengers to do this, admissible as evidence); Michigan: 1890, Glover v. Scotten, 82 Mich. 369, 46 N. W. 936 (switchmen riding upon cow-catchers; a custom of others held not to be considered, the act being negligent 'per se'); 1903, De Cair v. Manistee & G. R. R. Co., 133 Mich. 578, 95 N. W. 726 (custom of employees to go in front of moving cars when coupling, admitted to show the plaintiff's care; Hooker, C. J., and Grant, J., diss., on the ground that such a fact is admissible only to show a waiver by the defendant of a rule forbidding such conduct); Minnesota: 1915, O'Neil v. Potts, 130 Minn. 353, 153 N. W. 856 (negligence in an automobile collision; custom as to signalling, admitted); 1918, Carson v. Turrish, 140 Minn. 445, 168 N. W. 349 (automobile collision; custom as to right of way, excluded on the facts); North Carolina: 1906, Wallace v. Seaboard A. L. R. Co., 141 N. C. 646, 54 S. E. 399 (custom as to coupling cars, adopted by the master carbuilders' association, admitted); Texas: 1882, Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Cowser, 57 Tex. 293, 303 (the usual mode of switching by prudent railroad men under similar circumstances, admitted); Utah: 1898, Nelson v. South. P. Co., 18 Utah 244, 55 Pac. 364 (contributory negligence in passing over the roof of a car; custom for persons to do so under such circumstances, admitted); West Virginia: 1889, Humphreys v. N. N. & M. V. Co., 33 W. Va. 135, 10 S. E. 39 (a locomotive fireman standing out on the tank-spout while watering the engine; a custom of others held not to prevent the act from being negligent 'per se'); Wisconsin: 1894, Colf v. R. Co., 87 Wis. 273, 276, 58 N. W. 408 (switchman jumping off a moving engine; the practice of employees, excluded, as involving confusion of issues; only one precedent cited, and that erroneously); 1897, Andrews v. R. Co., 96 Wis. 348, 71 N. W. 372 (custom as to other employees' mode of coupling, admitted, on the issue of contributory negligence).

care required of the owner of a railroad is in issue, this sort of evidence may serve in a variety of ways, — to indicate, for example, the adequate construction or operation of tracks, platforms, bridges, cars, turntables, spark-arresters, switches, or any object whose qualities are exhibited by the specific conduct or habitual practice of other persons or other railroads in using it.[4]

[4] CANADA: 1883, Robinson v. N. B. R. Co., 23 N. Br. 323 (railway fire set by sparks; the kind of fuel used on other railways, admitted);

UNITED STATES: Federal: 1875, Grand Trunk R. Co. v. Richardson, 91 U. S. 454, 458, 469 (fire set by locomotives; the defendant's negligence in not having the track properly watched was an issue; that "it was not the usual practice among railroads in that section of the country to employ a man", etc., excluded, because "the standard by which the defendant's conduct was to be measured was not the conduct of other railroad companies in the vicinity"); 1897, Henion v. R. Co., 25 C. C. A. 223, 79 Fed. 903 (injury at a platform by an approaching train; mode of construction of other platforms, excluded, because the platform could show for itself its safety or danger; semble, modes of approach of trains in other companies "possibly" pertinent ordinarily); 1905, Pittsburgh S. & N. R. Co. v. Lamphere, 137 Fed. 20, 69 C. C. A. 542 (custom as to telltales on low bridges, admitted);
Alabama: 1903, Northern Ala. R. Co. v. Mansell, 138 Ala. 548, 36 So. 459 (death at a stock-gap; the usage on other well-regulated roads, admitted, but not taken as a standard); 1909, Birmingham R. L. & P. Co. v. Morris, 163 Ala. 190, 50 So. 198 (rule and custom of a street railroad as to mode of stopping cars, admitted; approving the above distinction);
Colorado: 1906, Denver & R. G. R. Co. v. Burchard, 35 Colo. 539, 86 Pac. 749 (experience of other railroads as to the location of mail cranes, admitted);
Columbia (Dist.): 1894, Weaver v. R. Co., 3 D. C. App. 436, 448 (injury at a bridge; width of bridges on one other railroad, excluded; general principle undecided);
Illinois: 1893, Cleveland C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Walter, 147 Ill. 60, 64, 35 N. E. 529 (injury at a low bridge; usual height of bridges on other roads, excluded; yet conceding that it "might tend to prove" negligence); 1897, Chicago City R. Co. v. Taylor, 170 Ill. 49, 48 N. E. 831 (collision between horse-car and cable-car; the custom as to priority of passage at the time and place, received, but not the custom in another city);
Indiana: 1886, Louisville N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Pedigo, 108 Ind. 481, 484, 8 N. E. 627 (injury at a bridge; the use of tools and methods similar to those ordinarily so used, excluded as immaterial); 1888, Louisville N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Wright, 115 Ind. 378, 389, 390, 16 N. E. 145, 17 N. E. 584 (injury of a brakeman at a low bridge on a railway; that on other railways were maintained many bridges equally low, excluded; but semble that a general custom not to exceed that height might have been received); 1892, Lake Erie & W. R. Co. v. Mugg, 132 Ind. 168, 175, 31 N. E. 564 (condition of a track; custom of others to maintain a track in the same condition, excluded);
Iowa: 1872, Hamilton v. R. Co., 36 Ia. 31, 37 (freight-car loaded with timber; that a mode of loading as "usually and commonly loaded and carried over defendants' and all other railroads" would not be negligent, was denied by the Court); 1888, Hosic v. R. Co., 75 Ia. 683, 685, 37 N. W. 693 (absence of a footboard on a freight-car peculiarly loaded; a customary omission of footboards, held not to negative negligence); 1888, Metzgar v. R. Co., 76 Ia. 387, 389, 41 N. W. 49 (fire set by a locomotive; evidence that a similar style of smoke-stack was used on four other railroads, excluded as neither negativing negligence, nor tending "to establish any fact material"); 1894, Miller v. R. Co., 89 Ia. 567, 570, 57 N. W. 418 (fireman falling into a tender-manhole; usual construction of a manhole, excluded, because the good construction was conceded; custom of fireman to act as plaintiff did, admitted to show care); 1899, Keist v. R. Co., 110 Ia. 32, 81 N. W. 181 (construction of stock chutes; usual custom on other roads, excluded);
Kentucky: 1898, Berberich v. Bridge Co., — Ky. —, 46 S. W. 691 (custom of other railroads to give notice to carpenters working on a bridge, admissible);
Massachusetts: 1871, Bailey v. N. H. & N. Co., 107 Mass. 497 (absence of a flagman at a railroad crossing, excluded as evidence because the circumstances of other crossings would not be exactly similar and because collateral issues would be raised as to each crossing); 1916, Smith v. Gammino, 225 Mass. 285, 114 N. E. 205 (mode of guarding a pump, ruling not clear);
Michigan: 1874, Hoyt v. Jeffers, 30 Mich. 181, 191 (negligent mill-chimney; the use of spark-arresters elsewhere for locomotives, steamboats, saw-mills, etc., admissible as showing that there was an effective remedy available; not admissible to show negligence or care, except under similar circumstances; and, semble, not affording a test of legal duty in any event; leading case);
Minnesota: 1881, Kelly v. R. Co., 28 Minn. 98, 99, 9 N. W. 588 (defective planking at a crossing; the usual mode of planking, admit-

Thus also may be evidenced the condition of a factory, mine, house, vessel, machine, boiler, or other apparatus, with reference to the propriety of certain precautions in construction and operation; [5] or of a pavement, ditch, or other ted, because the care required was "that which men of prudence would usually exercise under like circumstances"); 1884, Kolsti v. R. Co., 32 Minn. 133, 134, 19 N. W. 655 (injury at a turntable; similarity of method of securing other turntables, admitted, because "the test is the amount of care ordinarily used by men in general in similar circumstances"; this is clearly wrong in the substantive law, but not the preceding case); 1889, Doyle v. R. Co., 42 Minn. 79, 43 N. W. 787 (condition of tracks; the use of old rails being shown, a general custom to do so was admitted as evidence of "care such as ordinary prudent men are accustomed" to use); 1900, Moldenhaur v. R. Co., 80 Minn. 700, 83 N. W. 381 (condition of headlights on other cars of defendant, under dissimilar circumstances, excluded);

Mississippi: 1902, Southern R. Co. v. McLellan, 80 Miss. 700, 32 So. 283 (that "other responsible railway companies used slag to ballast their roads", admitted on the issue of negligence);
Missouri: 1877, Koons v. R. Co., 65 Mo. 592, 597 (turntable injury; the custom of other railroads to leave turntables locked, excluded, the conduct of others being "no defence");
Montana: 1904, Orient Ins. Co. v. Northern P. R. Co., 31 Mont. 502, 78 Pac. 1036 (relative quantity of spark-emissions of other engines, admitted);
New Jersey: 1899, Exton v. R. Co., 62 N. J. L. 7, 42 Atl. 486 (injury to a passenger by scuffling of two hackmen standing on carrier's premises; former repeated similar conduct of these and other hackmen, admitted "to show the dangers connected with the use of this way to the baggage-room");
New York: 1864, Wilds v. R. Co., 29 N. Y. 315, 326 (injury by a railroad train; that the speed of the train in the city was not negligently fast, was held to be clear, if it was "not greater than that which had been usually practised for a considerable period, with the tacit consent of the community, and without accident"); 1912, Egelston v. New York C. & St. L. R. Co., 205 N. Y. 579, 98 N. E. 748 (regulations of other railroads as to shunting, admitted);
North Carolina: 1900, Raper v. R. Co., 126 N. C. 563, 36 S. E. 115 (mode of construction of other crossings of defendant, not admitted to show a standard of defectiveness);
Oregon: 1919, Garvin v. Western Cooperage Co., 94 Or. 487, 184 Pac. 555 (injury on a logging railroad; use of safety lines on other logging roads, admitted);
Pennsylvania: 1867, Frankford & B. T. Co. v. R. Co., 54 Pa. 345, 351 (use of similar spark-arresters on other lines, admissible "not as a rule of decision, but as a matter of evidence assisting the jury to judge what sort is ordinarily safe");
Rhode Island: 1901, Benson v. R. Co., 23 R. I. 147, 49 Atl. 689 (that cars were of a sort in common use on other railroads, allowed);
South Carolina: 1887, Bridger v. R. Co., 27 S. C. 456, 3 S. E. 860 (injury at a turntable; the practice of other railroads as to locking and guarding, admitted as evidence, but not as constituting a standard of care);
Texas: 1884, Gulf C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Evansich, 61 Tex. 3, 5 (the custom of other railroads not to lock turntables, held no standard of the defendant's care; also, semble, not admissible because the conditions of other turntables may be entirely dissimilar); 1890, Gulf C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Compton, 75 Tex. 667, 671, 13 S. W. 667 (custom of other railroads as to number of hands for a train, admissible, but not to constitute a standard of care); 1891, Gulf C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Harriett, 80 Tex. 73, 81, 15 S. W. 556 (similar evidence; "the custom of other railroads was legal evidence to the jury upon the question of negligence in sending out the train, but it was not conclusive upon the question"); 1894, Gulf C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Smith, 87 Tex. 348, 357, 28 S. W. 520 (custom of other railroads as to flying switches, not to be made "the absolute standard of judgment");
Vermont: 1884, Bryant v. R. Co., 56 Vt. 710, 712 (cutting away brushwood by a railway track; practice of others not allowable as a legal standard, but the Court does not clearly express the principle); 1895, Ranney v. R. Co., 67 Vt. 594, 32 Atl. 810 (that the station and track arrangements at other places were the same as at the place alleged to be dangerous, excluded, partly because substantial similarity was not shown);
Virginia: 1900, Southern R. Co. v. Mauzy, 98 Va. 692, 37 S. E. 285 (usual practice of loading among railroads in general, admitted, but not the mode used by a single other road); 1906, Southern R. Co. v. Blanford's Adm'x, 105 Va. 373, 54 S. E. 1 (custom of other railroads in Virginia, and other parts of defendant's railroad, as to switchlights, admitted).

[5] Federal: 1908, Chicago Gt. Western R. Co. v. McDonough, 8th C. C. A., 161 Fed. 657, 665 (boiler explosion; custom of other boiler owners as to annual inspection, admitted; careful opinion by Van Devanter, J.); 1913, Stone & Webster E. Co. v. Melovich, 9th C. C. A., 202 Fed. 438 (custom to guard cogwheels, admitted); 1917, Ketterer v. Armour & Co., 2d C. C. A., 247 Fed. 921 (trichinosis from damaged meat; general custom "to conduct the business in a given way", admissible);

Alabama: 1858, Hilders v. McCartney, 31 Ala. 501 (fire set by a torch on a steamer; custom of other steamers to carry such a torch, held not a justification); 1904, Davis v. Kornman, 141 Ala. 479, 37 So. 789 (injury at a machine; correct rule laid down);
Arkansas: 1893, Jones v. Lumber Co., 58 Ark. 125, 128, 23 S. W. 679 (whether a boiler was properly tested; usual tests used in the region, admitted, but not the conduct of another owner);
California: 1893, Burns v. Sennett, 99 Cal. 363, 373, 33 Pac. 916 (hoisting strap; usual mode of construction, admitted, not as a conclusive test, but as evidence of care);
Columbia (Dist.): 1905, Clements v. Potomac E. P. Co., 26 D. C. App. 482, 495 (custom as to uninsulated wires, excluded because here an express municipal prohibition applied);
Connecticut: 1905, Hazard P. Co. v. Somerville M. Co., 78 Conn. 171, 61 Atl. 519 (time of running of mills, on an issue as to unreasonable diversion of water; custom of other mills, admitted);
Florida: 1922, Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Shouse, — Fla. —, 91 So. 90 (personal injury; usual method of railroads in making flying switches, excluded; unsound);
Georgia: 1903, Arrington v. Fleming, 117 Ga. 449, 43 S. E. 691 (agistment; custom of other agisters as to fencing, admitted);
Illinois: 1898, Hartford Deposit Co. v. Sollitt, 172 Ill. 222, 50 N. E. 178 (negligence with an elevator; operating mode of other elevators, excluded; no authority cited); 1904, Illinois C. R. Co. v. Prickett, 210 Ill. 140, 71 N. E. 435 (boiler-explosion; the custom of other companies as to inspection must be that of "well regulated and prudently managed" ones); 1905, Hansell-Elcock F. Co. v. Clark, 214 Ill. 399, 73 N. E. 787 (iron column causing injury; the Court ignore the distinction between admitting evidence and fixing a standard of care; "usual and customary manner" of construction, said to be inadmissible); 1905, Siegel, Cooper & Co. v. Treka, 218 Ill. 559, 75 N. E. 1053 (usual manner of constructing elevator doors, excluded); 1908, Franey v. Union Stockyard & T. Co., 235 Ill. 522, 85 N. E. 750 (injury in climbing over a fence between stockpens; custom of others admitted as evidence of the degree of care required);
Indiana: 1908, Knickerbocker Ice Co. v. Gray, 171 Ind. 395, 84 N. E. 341 (oil pans and drains; custom "in most places", admitted); 1909, Laurie Co. v. McCullough, 174 Ind. 477, 90 N. E. 1014 (personal injury by slipping on an oiled floor in a store; the custom of using such floor-dressing in other stores in the same city, admitted; leading case);
Iowa: 1899, Taylor v. Star Coal Co., 110 Ia. 40, 81 N. W. 249 (admissible "in certain cases to prove what is negligence", though not "for the purpose of excusing negligence"; here, a custom as to mine-roofing, admitted); 1903, Hamilton v. Mendota C. & M. Co., 120 Ia. 147, 94 N. W. 282 (custom of other mines as to entries admitted); 1906, Wilder v. Gt. Western C. Co., 134 Ia. 451, 109 N. W. 789 (usual method of fastening pile drivers, admitted); 1917, Ricardo v. Central Coal & Coke Co., 100 Kan. 95, 163 Pac. 641 (injury in a mine; custom of "putting a room in safe condition", etc., admitted);
Kentucky: 1905, Mahan v. Daggett, — Ky. —, 84 S. W. 525 (nuisance; manner of disposing of sawdust in other mills, admitted); 1906, Louisville B. & I. Co. v. Hart, 122 Ky. 731, 92 S. W. 951 (custom in rolling-mills, admitted; good opinion, by O'Rear, J.); 1919, White's Admir. v. Kentucky P. Elev. Co., 186 Ky. 91, 216 S. W. 837 (death in a grain tank; custom as to using a rope in that elevator, admitted);
Maine: 1884, Mayhew v. Mining Co., 76 Me. 100, 111 (that a railing around a ladder-hole in a mine was not customary in other mines, excluded, because custom was no excuse for negligence);
Maryland: 1909, Consolidated G. E. L. & P. Co. v. State, 109 Md. 186, 72 Atl. 651 (electric lineman's practice);
Massachusetts: 1875, Hill Mfg. Co. v. P. & N. Y. S. Co., 125 Mass. 292, 298, 303 (careless construction of a New York pier with reference to fire; the mode of construction of similar piers in Boston under similar circumstances of risk, held not improperly excluded in the trial Court's discretion as involving collateral issues); 1894, Rooney v. S. & D. C. Co., 161 Mass. 153, 161, 36 N. E. 789 (employee injured at machinery; custom of guarding in other factories, excluded, because plaintiff assumed the risk of danger here); 1897, French v. Spinning, 169 Mass. 531, 48 N. E. 269 (running-board near shafting; that other mills were differently arranged, excluded, apparently because the plaintiff had assumed the risk); 1899, McMahon v. McHale, 174 Mass. 320, 54 N. E. 854 (usual play of part of derrick as elsewhere used, etc., admissible in trial Court's discretion); 1904, Dolan v. Boott Cotton Mills, 185 Mass. 576, 70 N. E. 1025 (uncovered machine-gearing; the condition of such gearing in other mills, held admissible, in the trial Court's discretion; distinguishing the rulings as to actions against towns for defective highways); 1906, Erickson v. American S. & W. Co., 193 Mass. 119, 78 N. E. 761 (boiler-tests; trial Court's discretion controls); 1918, Draper v. Cotting, 231 Mass. 51, 120 N. E. 365 (injury in a passenger elevator; the use elsewhere of safer appliances, held admissible); 1918, Wilson v. Alexander, 230 Mass. 242, 119 N. E. 754 (injury at a derrick; use of similar appliances by other employers "does not as matter of law relieve the defendant", though it is evidence admissible); Minnesota: 1909, Anderson v. Pitt I. M. Co., 108 Minn. 261, 121 N. W. 915 (custom as to part of the highway,[6] with reference to its proper mode of use; or of money

timbering mines, admitted); 1904, Anderson v. Fielding, 92 Minn. 42, 99 N. W. 357 (custom to use a certain tool, admitted, but not as conclusive); 1904, Dell v. McGrath, 92 Minn. 187, 99 N. W. 629 (customary number of men in skidding, admitted);
Missouri: 1896, Helfenstein v. Medart, 136 Mo. 595, 36 S. W. 863 (negligent running of a grindstone; the rate of speed in other similar factories, excluded, because it "was immaterial, and furnished no defence to the action");
New Hampshire: 1903, Saucier v. N. H. Spinning Mills, 72 N. H. 292, 56 Atl. 545 (equipment of other machines not shown to be in common use, excluded, but equipment in general use, admitted); 1918, Kier v. Parks, 79 N. H. 67, 104 Atl. 158 ("common practice" as to construction of garages, held admissible; but excluded on the facts);
New Jersey: 1898, Belleville Stone Co. v. Comben, 61 N. J. L. 353, 39 Atl. 641 (methods of other quarries as to the use of hanging ropes, admitted as evidence of negligence);
New York: 1904, Jenks v. Thompson, 179 N. Y. 20, 71 N. E. 266 (injury on a scaffold; general custom as to building scaffolds, admitted);
North Carolina: 1906, Jones v. Reynolds T. Co., 141 N. C. 202, 53 S. E. 849 (general custom as to protecting a machine, admitted);
Pennsylvania: 1894, Reese v. Hershey, 163 Pa. 253, 257, 29 Atl. 907 (general mode of use of machine in the trade, admissible); 1909, McGeehan v. Hughes, 223 Pa. 524, 72 Atl. 856 (bucket);
Rhode Island: 1901, McGar v. Worsted Mills, 22 R. I. 347, 47 Atl. 1092 (mode of lacing belts in other mills, admitted to show lack of safety);
Utah: 1903, Fritz v. Tel. Co., 25 Utah 263, 71 Pac. 209 (usual method of providing insulators, stringing wires, etc., admitted); 1904, Pence v. California M. Co., 27 Utah 378, 75 Pac. 934 (custom as to using inexperienced miners, admitted); 1922, Burke v. South Boulder C. D. Co., — Utah —, 203 Pac. 1098 (negligent operation of a ditch; custom as to construction and operation of ditches in the vicinity, excluded; unsound);
Vermont: 1894, Congdon v. Scale Co., 66 Vt. 255, 29 Atl. 253 (whether a wheel was properly guarded; the absence of guards on similar wheels in other factories, excluded, because the conditions of use were not similar);
Virginia: 1897, Richmond L. & M. W. v. Ford, 94 Va. 627, 27 S. E. 509 (injury in wheel-moving; the general practice of other such shops, but not of a single other, admissible); 1904, Parlett v. Dunn, 102 Va. 459, 46 S. E. 467 (usual method of putting up a derrick, allowed); 1904, Richmond & P. E. R. Co. v. Rubin, 102 Va. 809, 47 S. E. 834 (guard wires on telephone lines); 1906, Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Bell, 104 Va. 836, 52 S. E. 700 (water-gauge; making a peculiar distinction against testimony that other appliances are safer);
Washington: 1904, Crooker v. Pacific L. & M. Co., 34 Wash. 191, 75 Pac. 632 (custom as to guarding ripsaws, admitted); 1905, Dossett v. St. Paul & T. L. Co., 40 Wash. 276, 82 Pac. 273 (customs in other mills as to sawyers' duties, admitted); 1909, Smith v. Hewitt-Lea L. Co., 55 Wash. 357, 104 Pac. 651 (machinery; the precise decision is here difficult to discover);
Wisconsin: 1893, Faerber v. Lumber Co., 86 Wis. 226, 234, 56 N. W. 745 (use of similar burners elsewhere, excluded on the issue); 1905, Rylander v. Laursen, 124 Wis. 2, 102 N. W. 341 (spark-arrester of a mill; distinguishing between the evidence and the standard of care); 1908, Hamann v. Milwaukee Bridge Co., 136 Wis. 39, 116 N. W. 854 (custom elsewhere as to safeguards for a machine, admitted).

[6] Connecticut: 1893, Bassett v. Shares, 63 Conn. 39, 43, 27 Atl. 421 (team left unhitched; ordinary practice, excluded; no precedents cited); 1919, Jackson v. District, 48 D. C. App. 396 (manhole and cover; that the device was a standard one, admitted); Illinois: 1869, Champaign v. Patterson, 50 Ill. 61, 65 (manner of constructing sidewalks, etc., in other cities and towns of similar size, excluded, on the theory that this would be no justification); Iowa: 1904, Norris v. Cudahy P. Co., 124 Ia. 748, 100 N. W. 853 (conduct of other people at a highway trench, admitted); 1904, Kein v. Ft. Dodge, 126 Ia. 27, 101 N. W. 443 (highway injury; that the mode of construction was similar to that in general use in the city, admitted, but only to show the plaintiff's knowledge); Kansas: 1913, Howard v. Osage City, 89 Kan. 205, 132 Pac. 187 (injury at a ditch; plaintiff allowed to show that defendant had filled or bridged every other crossing except this one, to show "whether they had exercised even their own usual care" at this one); Louisiana: 1841, Barataria & S. C. Co. v. Field, 17 La. 422 (that many persons had been obliged to quit their houses on account of an overflow, admitted to show its nature); Massachusetts: 1868, Maynard v. Buck, 100 Mass. 40 (see quotation supra); 1871, Judd v. Fargo, 107 Mass. 264, 268 (the plaintiff's horse was frightened by the defendant's maple-sugar apparatus in the highway; that other persons in the vicinity were accustomed to use the highway in the same manner, excluded); 1893, Marvin v. New Bedford, 158 Mass. 464, 466, 33 N. E. 605 (that similar depressions in the sidewalk were common in other cities, excluded as irrelevant and confusing); 1906, Moynihan v. Holyoke, 193 Mass. 26, 78 N. E. 742 (slippery cellar-lights in a sidewalk; usual use of similar lights in other sidewalks, held admissible or not in the trial Court's determination; good opinion by Knowlton, J. C.); Michigan: 1904, Comstock v. Georgetown, 137 Mich. 541, 100 N. W. 788 (custom as to the or chattels,[7] with reference to the proper method of loading, warehousing, using, mending, or otherwise handling; and, in particular, of a business, or a stock of goods, with reference to the prudence of carrying it.[8] load taken upon a bridge, admitted in an action for an injury to the driver of a traction engine); North Carolina: 1904, Chaffin v. Fries M. & P. Co., 135 N. C. 95, 47 S. E. 226 (overflow by a dam; certain similar effects excluded and others admitted); Rhode Island: 1901, Laporte v. Cook, 22 R. I. 554, 48 Atl. 798 (custom of shoring up ditches of like character under similar circumstances, admitted); Utah: 1896, Jenkins v. Irrigation Co., 13 Utah 100, 44 Pac. 829 (to show negligence in cleaning out ditches, the practice of other irrigators in the same region was excluded); Washington: 1903, Smith v. Seattle, 33 Wash. 481, 74 Pac. 674 (protected condition of other sidewalks in the same city, admitted, partly on the present ground and partly as negativing contributory negligence).

Whether in medical matters a certain kind of remedy, skill, or treatment is necessary or sufficient, may often be evidenced in this manner.[9]

[7] Ala. 1848, Hatchett v. Gibson, 13 Ala. 587, 598 (like the next case); 1854, Gibson v. Hatchett, 24 Ala. 201 (whether a warehouse was negligently destroyed by fire; the precautions taken and efforts made for another warehouse, saved from burning, admissible, semble, if the conditions were the same); Cal. 1900, Arnold v. Fruit Co., 128 Cal. 637, 61 Pac. 283 (under a contract to handle fruit "in the most approved manner", the methods of the majority of fruit-handlers were allowed to be proved; the issue not being whether these were the best methods); Ia. 1885, McPherrin v. Jennings, 66 Ia. 625, 24 N. W. 242 (that no other person in that business had similar arrangements, excluded); Me. 1884, Mayhew v. Mining Co., 76 Me. 112 ("Defendant's counsel argue that . . . 'if one conforms to custom he is so far exercising average ordinary care.' The argument proceeds upon an erroneous idea of what constitutes ordinary care. 'Custom' and 'average' have no proper place in its definition"); Mass. 1867, Cass v. R. Co., 14 All. 448 (see quotation supra); 1878, Eastham v. Riedell, 125 Mass. 586, semble (what other persons in the same business do, admitted to evidence care); 1897, Hendrick v. R. Co., 170 Mass. 44, 48 N. E. 835 (general course of business of defendant in shipping cattle, admissible on the question of negligence); N. Y. 1894, Isham v. Post, 141 N. Y. 100, 110, 35 N. E. 1084 (action for negligence in lending the plaintiff's money on poor security; custom of other bankers and of the defendant to lend money on similar security, admitted); Pa. 1905, Pauksztis v. Raeder B. L. & P. Co., 212 Pa. 403, 61 Atl. 901 (customer's books burned at a book-binder's; the usage of book-binders to insure customers' books, admitted); Vt. 1902, Benedict v. Union Agricultural Soc'y, 74 Vt. 91, 52 Atl. 110 (custom of wheelmen as to the manner of riding in a race, admitted on an issue of contributory negligence); Wis. 1901, Chase v. Blodgett Milling Co., 111 Wis. 655, 87 N. W. 826 (negligence in shelling popcorn delivered to defendant; to show the fitness of the corn, the fact was admitted that corn of identical quality had been successfully shelled by other persons with similar machines).

[8] 1919, Friedman v. U. S., 6th C. C. A., 260 Fed. 388 (unlawfully dispensing narcotic drugs not in the course of professional practice, under U. S. St. Dec. 17, 1914, Anti-Narcotic Act; evidence admitted of the excessive quantities of the drug purchased and sold by defendant, in comparison with the quantities sold by other druggists in the vicinity in the ordinary course of business); 1907, Long v. Athol, 196 Mass. 497, 82 N. E. 665 (rescission for mutual mistake, the plaintiff being the accepted bidder on a contract based on erroneous engineer's estimates; that other bidders also relied on the estimate, held admissible on the issue of the plaintiff's negligence); 1872, Jones v. Ins. Co., 36 N. J. L. 29, 43 (to throw light on the amount of stock in a store in M. when burned, evidence of a resident of N. as to the prudent proportion of stock to sales in the same business was rejected; the principle of Ins. Co. v. Weide, infra, being conceded, but here, the towns being of very different size, etc., the difference of conditions was so great that "such testimony does not afford any reasonable inference" on the subject).

Distinguish the principle of § 379, ante, where the question is only of the fact, not of its prudence; the following case illustrates the difference: 1870, Ins. Co. v. Weide, 11 Wall. U. S. 438 (usual proportion of stock to sales, kept by persons in the same business and same city, received; here the evidence was really used to show a custom or habit, and was properly admissible from that point of view; in Jones v. Ins. Co., N. J., supra, the ostensible purpose of the evidence was to show the "prudent" proportion of stock).

Compare the cases cited in § 462, post.

[9] 1857, Wilkinson v. Moseley, 30 Ala. 574 (what prudent planters do in caring for sick slaves, admitted); 1902, Baker v. Hancock, 29 Ind. App. 456, 63 N. E. 323 (malpractice; instances of defendant's successful treatment of other persons for the same ailment, excluded on the facts; the ruling appears unsound);

Even in matters more nearly involving moral standards, some light may properly thus be obtained from the conduct of other persons, — as when the propriety of a schoolmaster's or ship-captain's discipline or treatment is evidenced by the practice of others;[10] or when a standard of cruelty or violence in general is evidence by other person's like methods;[11] or when the propriety of a method of commercial competition, judged by a standard of unfair trade, is evidenced by the custom or recorded practice of representative persons in the trade.[12]

It is sometimes said that a statute or municipal ordinance forbidding or enjoining certain conduct is evidence of negligence, on the question whether the doing or not doing of that kind act was negligent.[13] Now it is true that such an ordinance might be used evidentially, on the same theory as the numerous instances cited supra, because it is virtually a custom or usage having orthodox status. But in many of such opinions the Court has rather in mind the operation of the ordinance in substantive law, fixing a standard of negligence 'per se', on the theory explained in all treatises on Torts.[14] It seems 1881, DeMay v. Roberts, 46 Mich. 160, 163, 9 N. W. 146 (action against a physician for wrongfully bringing a lay assistant; custom of physicians as to calling such assistance, admitted); 1901, Challis v. Lake, 71 N. H. 90, 51 Atl. 260 (malpractice; the treatment of similar cases by other physicians, as offered to be proved by nurses, held properly excluded on the facts).

Compare the cases cited ante, § 457.

[10] 1824, Boldron v. Widdows, 1 C. & P. 65 (action for slander charging that the boys in the plaintiff's school were ill-fed, etc.; the quality of the provisions in another school, excluded, apparently because this was not the proper test); 1858, Hall v. Goodson, 32 Ala. 287 (whether a whipping was such as masters generally give, allowed); 1859, Lander v. Goodenough, 32 Vt. 114, 119, 125 (beating given by a schoolmaster; to show whether a rawhide was an instrument unreasonably severe, the fact was admitted that it was used in other schools in the vicinity).

[11] 1877, Murphy v. Manning, L. R. 2 Ex. D. 307 (whether the cutting of combs of fighting-cocks was a cruel ill-treatment under the statute; the custom as to such cutting, received without objection, but treated as not legalizing the operation or showing it a necessary one); 1884, Brady v. McArdle, 15 Cox Cr. 516, 523 (cruelty in dishorning cattle; the practice of so doing, semble, held no excuse); 1885, Callaghan v. S. P. C. A., 16 Cox Cr. 101, 104 (same charge; extent of the practice and its results, considered, upon the question whether it was a reasonable and necessary one); 1887, Lewis v. Fermor, L. R. 18 Q. B. D. 532 (prosecution for cruelly treating sows; that the treatment was a surgical operation, supposed to increase weight, and practised extensively, was considered, as affecting good faith); 1889, Ford v. Wiley, L. R. 23 Q. B. D. 203, 221 (prosecution for cruelly dishorning cattle; that cattle were not dishorned in most cattle-districts, considered, as showing by the results that the operation was not necessary for fattening, etc.).

Distinguish the following: 1854, Ward's Trial, Ky., 3 Amer. St. Tr. 70, 91 (homicide; plea, self-defence; custom in the community to carry arms, admitted, as rebutting the inference of malice from the accused having armed himself on the occasion in question).

[12] 1921, Kinney-Rome Co. v. Federal Trade Commission, 7th C. C. A., 275 Fed. 665 (whether it was an "unfair method of competition" under U. S. St. 1914, Sept. 26, § 5, for a manufacturer selling to wholesalers to "subsidize" the wholesaler's salesmen by secret commissions unknown to the retailers or to the purchasers; held not to be unfair; the practice, however, had been condemned as unfair, upon a "trade practice submittal" to manufacturers in the line involved, by all the answers except one, and by resolutions of various trade associations declaring it to be "manifestly unfair, vicious, and demoralizing"; this evidence was not offered in the Kinney-Rome case, but is the kind of evidence that should be admissible on the present principle, to show the standard of unfairness).

[13] 1905, Finnegan v. S. W. S. Mfg. Co., 189 Mass. 580, 76 N. E. 192; 1904, Frontier Steam Laundry Co. v. Connolly, 72 Nebr. 767, 101 N. W. 995 (ordinance requiring fire-shutters).

[14] See the present writer's exposition in Cases on Torts (1911), vol. I, Nos. 344, 529, pp. 766, 1050. Compare the instances cited ante, § 283, n. 8, § 459, n. 2.

unwise, therefore, to give any secondary status to such an ordinance, as evidence of negligence, whenever it is not to have the substantive status of a rule of negligence 'per se.' The regulations of a railroad or industrial company may have a bearing in cases like the present; but they are then virtually admissions by the company that certain conduct is or is not negligent (ante, §§ 282, 283); the present principle, as applied here in par. 3, deals with the evidential use of custom or regulations of third persons, not with the conduct of the party himself.

4. From the foregoing applications of the present principle, distinguish some questions commonly associated in litigation: (1) Whether (for example) a railroad or a factory is bound to provide the best available appliances, or appliances as good as those used by any one else in the same occupation, or whether a physician is bound to possess the skill commonly possessed in his locality or in the entire profession. These questions arise under the general principle of substantive law already noted (ante, § 459, supra, par. 2), and relate to the legal standard of duty for the case in hand. There are scores of precedents on this subject, but they have been noted here only so far as they tend to illustrate the distinction between the rule of substantive law and the rule of evidence. Facts rejected under the former may nevertheless be admissible under the latter. (2) The Opinion rule may forbid direct testimony by a witness upon care, prudence, reasonableness, safety, or skill of the conduct or the place or machine in issue (post, §§ 1949–1951); but that rule does not affect the present use of specific instances of conduct as circumstantial evidence. Much may depend, in a given ruling, on the form in which the witness' knowledge is asked for. (3) In actions for personal injury, the known custom of other persons (for example, to trepass on a railroad track) may in substantive law amount to a license or waiver, so as to exonerate the plaintiff from the rule of contributory negligence or assumption of risk. This is distinct from the present rule of Evidence. (4) On any issue of negligence, the respective functions of judge and jury may raise the question (post, § 2552) how far the judge, without laying down a rule of substantive law, is justified in ruling that there is not sufficient evidence of negligence, in the case in hand, to go to the jury.

§ 462. Business Patronage, as evidencing the Quality of a Place or Article. Where persons are found avoiding a particular region or repudiating a particular article, their conduct serves to evidence for us some defective or annoying or dangerous or other quality in it.

Thus, the patronage given to an article (as observed in the number of customers or amount of sales) may be resorted to for evidencing its quality;[1]

§ 462. [1] The rulings are not all as liberal as they might be: England: 1810, Holcombe v. Hewson, 2 Camp. 391 (assumpsit by a brewer against a publican for beer contracted to be bought; defence, that the beer was not of a fair merchantable quality; "the defendant afterwards proved that the beer supplied to him by the plaintiff was very bad, and that he had lost almost the whole of his customers before he began to deal with another brewer, since which he has carried on a thriving trade"; the plaintiff was not allowed to show that other purchasers of his beer were satisfied, since "the plaintiff might deal well with one or the patronage given to a place or house may indicate its discomforts.[2] The offer is usually of the difference of patronage before and after the alleged disturbing cause, i.e. a resort to the logical method of differences (ante, § 442).

Upon the same principle, a decrease in rental value, as involving a decrease in the patronage of lessees, will also serve to indicate the existence of a defective quality from some disturbing cause.[3] The difference between these and the ensuing cases of § 463 is merely that here the patronage, as expressed in sales or customers numbered, indicates some particular defect, discomfort, or other quality likely to affect patronage; in the other cases, the money-terms (price or value) indicate the net total effect or sum of all the qualities of the article, for purpose of transfer on the market. The propriety or impropriety of the evidence is the same in both cases; if it is received or rejected in the one, it should be received or rejected in the other.[4]

§ 463. Same: Value or Sales of Similar Land, Chattels, or Services. When the conduct of others indicating the nature of a salable article consists in offering this or that sum of money, it creates the phenomena of value, so-called. For evidential purposes, Sale-Value is nothing more than the nature or quality of the article as measured by the money which others are willing to lay out in purchasing it. Their offers of money not merely indicate the value; they are the value; i.e. value being merely a standard or measure in figures, those sums taken in net potential result, are that standard.

and not with the others", i.e. the article sold might not be the same).

United States: 1918, Kenney v. U. S., 5th C. C. A., 254 Fed. 262 (false accounts by a postmaster in returns of cancelled stamps; the fact that in the ordinary course of business in 98% of fourth-class offices the sales bore a certain relation to the cancellations, admitted); 1918, Lee v. Malleable Iron R. Co., D. C. E. D. Wis., 247 Fed. 795 (profits by infringement of patent; comparison of profits made with a new structure with those not containing the invention, to ascertain whether profits made were attributable to the invention infringed, not allowed); 1907, Hutchinson L. Co. v. Dickerson, 127 Ga. 328, 56 S. E. 491 (that similar lumber sold to other sawmills was sound, not admitted); 1884, Cunningham v. Stein, 109 Ill. 377 (the difference in sales of beer before and after the opening of the defendant's factory, alleged to have polluted the beer, admitted: "it was not conclusive; it was open to proof that other causes, and what causes, affected the sale of the beer"); 1913, Noyes v. Meharry, 213 Mass. 598, 100 N. E. 1090 (false representations as to patronage-value of a theater; the falling off in receipts immediately after the purchase, admitted); 1863, Barton v. Kane, 17 Wis. 37, 43 (contract for cigars; issue as to their quality; "that the plaintiff about the same time forwarded to other purchasers cigars the same in kind as those furnished the defendant, and that those purchasers made no complaint that the cigars received by them were damp, unseasoned, or unfit for use", excluded).

Compare the cases cited ante, § 377; there the question involves the variability of human conduct in forming contracts; here, the uniformity of quality of some inanimate substance; and in the present class of cases the doubt arises only to the extent that the variability of human conduct in the performance of similar contracts is involved.

[2] 1887, Drucker v. R. Co., 106 N. Y. 157, 164, 12 N. E. 568 (falling off of customers on account of smoke, noise, etc., of a railway, admitted); 1891, Doyle v. R. Co., 128 N. Y. 488, 497, 28 N. E. 495 (same); 1918, Chambers v. Spruce Lighting Co., 81 W. Va. 714, 95 S. E. 192 (breach of public utility service to a hotel; loss of profits evidenced by records of average patronage of customs before and after).

Compare § 461, n. 8, ante.

[3] 1891, Kane v. R. Co., 125 N. Y. 164, 187, 26 N. E. 278, semble (to show that the real cause of a decrease of rental value was not the defendant's act, such a decrease in neighboring property not affected by the defendant's act was held admissible); 1894, Cook v. R. Co., 144 N. Y. 115, 118, 39 N. E. 2 (rental values of "similar properties on the same street", used to show the defendant's act to be the cause of decrease; like the Kane case, supra).

[4] Yet in New York a distinction seems to be taken, as noted in the next section.

But the evidential question is not concerned with the many subsidiary principles of the law of Damages, or standard of value, that come into play. Whether an unaccepted offer of purchase at a certain figure may be looked to as determining value, or whether the price of a sale or the cost of making may be looked to, — these are questions which arise because value is a test formed by averaging results and because it is necessary to define the range over which the true idea of value permits the estimate to go. That is not an evidential process, but a process of average calculation. So, too, the question whether the value of the article at another time or another place may be resorted to depends on whether, in defining the range of data, it is fair for the purposes in hand to allow marketability at another place or time to be considered; there the process is still one of defining the range of the value-idea. It is true that there may occur here some applications of the principles already considered (ante, §§ 437, 438) for inferring the existence of a thing at one time or place from its existence at another time or place. But these applications of the principles of Evidence are in the rulings so bound up with the substantive principles of the standard of value that it would be impracticable to consider them here.[1]

1. There is, however, one question indirectly involving a rule of Evidence, — the question whether the value of another article is receivable in order to show the value of the article in issue. As the price at a sale is, by the law of Damages, conceded to be an element in the test of value (except perhaps in forced sales), this question is usually presented in the form, whether a sale of other property is admissible as evidence of the value of the property in question. In answering this question, it is found that the two leading princi-

§ 463. [1] Examples of these principles are found in the following cases: Whether value at a particular time may be evidenced by value at a prior or subsequent time: 1858, McLaren v. Birdsong, 24 Ga. 265, 270 (stock of goods attached; value some eight months previous, excluded); 1895, Bowden v. Achor, 95 Ga. 243, 22 S. E. 271; 1886, Denton v. Smith, 61 Mich. 431, 433, 28 N. W. 160 (value of a cow a year beforehand, admitted); 1887, French v. Fitch, 67 Mich. 492, 495, 35 N. W. 258 (sale-price of corporation stock three years subsequently, when business had been abandoned, excluded); 1890, Showman v. Lee, 79 Mich. 653, 661, 44 N. W. 1061 (sale-price of a stock of goods eight months subsequently, excluded); 1895, Johnston v. Ins. Co., 106 Mich. 96, 64 N. W. 5 (value some years before, admitted, the property having no settled market value); 1921, Budd v. Northern Pacific R. Co., 59 Mont. 238, 195 Pac. 1109 (heifer); 1869, Kelsea v. Fletcher, 48 N. H. 282 (price of a cow three years later, admitted); 1854, Dana v. Fiedler, 12 N. Y. 40, 49; 1895, Nelson v. Bank, 16 C. C. A. 425, 69 Fed. 805 (sale by court of an insolvent's assets three years seven months after the transaction; the Court pointing out that where assets are in court custody a sale after a considerable period may well be satisfactory evidence).

Whether value at a particular place may be evidenced by value at an adjacent place: 1894, Hudson v. R. Co., 92 Ia. 231, 60 N. W. 608 (beef-cattle; price at South Omaha and Chicago, admitted to show the value at Sioux City); 1871, Gilbert v. Kennedy, 22 Mich. 117, 137 (value elsewhere, admissible so far as it tends to regulate or control the home value); 1895, Blumenthal v. Meat Co., 12 Wash. 331, 41 Pac. 47; 1876, Siegbert v. Stiles, 39 Wis. 533, 536 (hogs; the price in McGregor, admitted to show value in Prairie du Chien).

Whether an offer to purchase or sell, as distinguished from an actual sale, is admissible, is a question of the standard of value: 1906, Yellowstone P. R. Co. v. Bridger C. Co., 34 Mont. 545, 87 Pac. 963 (collecting cases).

Whether business profits in one year may be evidenced by profits in another year, involves the present principle: 1913, Nelson Theater Co. v. Nelson, 216 Mass. 30, 102 N. E. 926 (value of a leasehold to an evicted theater operator; receipts and profits in prior years, held admissible).

ples already expounded come into joint application, — the principle of Relevancy and the principle of Auxiliary Policy (ante, §§ 442–444). According to the former, the value or sale-price of the other property is irrelevant unless the property is substantially similar in conditions; according to the second, it may also be excluded, though relevant, if it involves in the case in hand a disproportionate confusion of issues and loss of time.

The latter consideration has weighed so much with a few Courts that they have treated it as requiring the absolute and invariable exclusion of such evidence. This view is represented in the following passages:

1861, THOMPSON, J., in East Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Hiester, 40 Pa. 55: "If allowed, each special instance adduced on the one side must be permitted to be assailed and its merits investigated on the other; and thus there would be as many branching issues as instances, which if numerous would prolong the contest interminably. But even this is not the most serious objection. Such testimony does not disclose the public and general estimate, which in such cases we have seen is a test of value. It would be as liable to be the result of fancy, caprice, or folly, as of sound judgment in regard to the intrinsic worth of the subject-matter of it, and consequently would prove nothing on the point to be investigated. The fact as to what one man may have sold or received for his property is certainly a collateral fact to an issue involving what another should receive, and, if in no way connected with it, proves nothing. It is therefore irrelevant, improper, and dangerous."

1891, PARKER, J., in Matter of Thompson, 127 N. Y. 468, 28 N. E. 389: "[If such sales are some evidence of value], then 'prima facie' a case may be made out — so far as the question of damages is concerned — by proof of a single sale — , and thus the agreement of the parties, which may have been the result of necessity or caprice, would be evidence of the market value of land similarly situated, and become a standard by which to measure the value of land in controversy. This would lead to an attempt by the opposing party to show first, the dissimilarity of the two parcels of land; and, second, the circumstances surrounding the parties which induced the conveyance, — such as a sale by one in danger of insolvency, in order to realize money to support his business, or a sale in any other emergency which forbids a grantor to wait a reasonable time for the public to be informed of the fact that his property is in the market, or, on the other hand, that the price paid was excessive and occasioned by the fact that the grantee was not a resident of the locality nor acquainted with real values, and was thus readily induced to pay a sum far exceeding the market value. Thus, each transaction in real estate claimed to be similarly situated might present two side issues, which could be made the subject of as vigorous contention as the main issue; and, if the transactions were numerous, it would result in unduly prolonging the trial and unnecessarily confusing the issues; with the added disadvantage of rendering preparation for trial difficult."

It is enough to note (1) in answer to the argument from Relevancy, that since value is a money-estimate of a marketable article possessing certain definable qualities, the value of other marketable articles possessing substantially similar qualities is strongly evidential and is so treated in commercial life; all the argument and protestation conceivable cannot alter the fact that the commercial world perceives and acts on this relevancy; (2) in answer to the argument from Auxiliary Probative Policy, it may be noted that this objection may or may not exist in a given instance, and that the rational and practical way of meeting it is to allow the trial Court in its discretion to exclude such evidence when it does involve a confusion of issues, but otherwise to receive it, — a solution already considered in its general application to the present subject (ante, § 444).

Except in a few jurisdictions, this class of evidence is received.[2] In Massa-

[2] Federal: 1876, Stanton v. Embery, 93 U. S. 548, 557 ("price usually charged and received for similar services by other persons of the same profession [of the law] practising in the same Court", admissible); 1885, Kerr v. Com'rs, 117 id. 379, 385, 387, 6 Sup. 801 ("Sales of property of like character and quality, similarly situated and affected by the same causes, made under circumstances likely to produce competition among bidders, are sometimes resorted to", but the sales here offered were of land "relatively so different" as not to be evidential; this instruction and ruling were approved); 1886, Lehigh V. C. Co. v. Chicago, 26 Fed. 415, 419 (land; "sales of similar property in the vicinity", admitted); 1896, Schradsky v. Stimson, 22 C. C. A. 515, 76 Fed. 730 (rentals of other stores, not shown to have similar conditions, excluded); 1922, Jones v. U. S., — U. S. —, 42 Sup. 218 (timber land; other sales in adjoining townships, admissible in the trial Court's discretion);
Alabama: 1899, Ladd v. Ladd, 121 Ala. 583, 25 So. 627 (sales of other lands in the same locality about the same time, admissible, "at least on cross-examination"); 1904, Tennessee C. I. & R. Co. v. State, 141 Ala. 103, 37 So. 433 (sales of other similar coal lands, received);
Arkansas: 1887, Little Rock J. R. Co. v. Woodruff, 49 Ark. 381, 391, 5 S. W. 792, semble (sales of other lands, admissible, in trial Court's discretion);
California: 1868, Central P. R. Co. v. Pearson, 35 Cal. 247, 262 (sales of "adjoining lands", excluded, on the principle of confusion of issues; but cross-examination to test a value-witness may employ such material); 1899, Crusoe v. Clark, 127 Cal. 341, 59 Pac. 700 (value of similar services in the neighborhood, admitted);
Colorado: 1903, Loloff v. Sterling, 31 Colo. 102, 71 Pac. 1113 (Massachusetts doctrine approved);
Connecticut: 1904, Comstock v. Conn. R. & L. Co., 77 Conn. 65, 58 Atl. 465 (corporal injury to a keeper of a boarding-house: profits before and after the injury, admitted);
Georgia: 1898, Western & A. R. Co. v. Calhoun, 104 Ga. 384, 30 S. E. 868 (value of a mare; sales of other horses and of mules, excluded on the facts); 1913, Flemister v. Central Ga. P. Co., 140 Ga. 511, 79 S. E. 148 (similar sales, admissible; here excluded because of the form of the question);
Illinois: 1869, White v. Hermann, 51 Ill. 243, 246 (land; value of "other property of equal quality lying near to and similarly situated to this, at or near the date", admissible, or even "property of different quality in its immediate vicinity"); 1871, Cook v. Com'rs, 61 Ill. 115, 124 (value of adjacent lands, here excluded because too different in situation); 1876, St. Louis V. & T. H. R. Co. v. Haller, 82 Ill. 208, 211, semble (other sales allowable); 1880, Chicago & W. I. R. Co. v. Maroney, 95 Ill. 179, 182, semble (land; sale of an adjoining tract, admissible); 1883, Haish v. Payson, 107 Ill. 365, 371 (legal services; less beneficial results of similar services by others, in settling infringement claims under the same patent, excluded); 1884, Culbertson & B. P. & P. Co. v. Chicago, 111 Ill. 651, 654 (land; sales of "property in the vicinity and near the time", admitted); 1890, Sherlock v. R. Co., 130 Ill. 403, 22 N. E. 844 (excluding mere offers of other property); 1891, Louisville N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Wallace, 136 Ill. 87, 26 N. E. 493 (usual charge for similar legal services, admitted); 1891, O'Hare v. Chicago M. & N. R. Co., 139 Ill. 151, 157, 28 N. E. 923 ("voluntary sales of other lands, in the vicinity and similarly situated as affecting their value", are admissible; but here a mere deed reciting consideration was excluded); 1893, Peoria G. & C. Co. v. R. Co., 46 Ill. 372, 374, 34 N. E. 550 (sales of "other similar property, made at or about the same time", admissible); 1896, Metropolitan W. S. E. R. Co. v. Dickinson, 161 Ill. 22, 24, 43 N. E. 706 (effect of a similar railroad on values of other property, not admissible; except that witnesses to value may qualify by showing that they know it); 1896, Metropolitan R. Co. v. White, 166 Ill. 375, 46 N. E. 978 (specific nature of injury to rental values of other property, excluded, except as brought out in showing the source of the witness' qualifications); 1897, Nathan v. Brand, 167 Ill. 607, 47 N. E. 771 (attorney's services; others' usual charges, admitted as evidence of reasonableness); 1897, Boecker v. Naperville, 166 Ill. 151, 48 N. E. 1061, (sales of similar property receivable as affecting the value of the witness' testimony); 1900, Chicago Terminal T. R. Co. v. Bugbee, 184 Ill. 353, 56 N. E. 386 (effect of another railroad on a piece of land four miles away eight years before, excluded); 1902, Chicago v. Jackson, 196 Ill. 496, 63 N. E. 1013 (value of benefit to other properties by track elevations and depressions, excluded); 1902, Lanquist v. Chicago, 200 Ill. 69, 65 N. E. 681 (sales of similar property, admitted); 1903, Spohr v. Chicago, 206 Ill. 441, 69 N. E. 515 (allowable on cross-examination); 1904, Illinois, I. & M. R. Co. v. Humiston, 208 Ill. 100, 69 N. E. 880 (eminent domain; price paid other lands, excluded); 1904, Dady v. Condit, 209 Ill. 488, 70 N. E. 1088 (breach of contract to sell land; sales of similar lands in the vicinity, admitted to show "the actual cash value of the land in controversy at a certain chusetts and in New Hampshire the principle of leaving the matter to the trial Court's discretion to determine both the substantial similarity of conditions and the confusion of issues is well carried out. In some jurisdictions its use time"; prior rulings not noticed, except St. Louis, V. & T. H. R. Co. v. Haller); 1904, Springer v. Borden, 210 Ill. 518, 71 N. E. 345 (appraisal of valuation of lease; rental values in the vicinity, held not admissible; no authority cited); 1906, Chicago & S. L. R. Co. v. Kline, 220 Ill. 334, 77 N. E. 229 ("voluntary sales of other lands in the vicinity similarly situated" in locality and character, admissible); 1906, Chicago & S. L. R. Co. v. Mines, 221 Ill. 448, 77 N. E. 898 (sales of property not similar, excluded); 1907, Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Scott, 225 Ill. 352, 80 N. E. 404 (eminent domain; the amounts paid by this and other railroads for land in the vicinity, excluded); 1909, West Skokie Drainage District v. Dawson, 243 Ill. 175, 90 N. E. 377 (Peoria Gaslight Co. v. P. T. R. Co., followed); 1910, Aledo Terminal R. Co. v. Butler, 246 Ill. 406, 92 N. E. 909 (voluntary sales of similar lands, admitted, the trial Court to determine whether they are similar); 1913, Smith v. Sanitary District, 260 Ill. 453, 103 N. E. 254 (sales of similar property, admitted); 1915, Sanitary District v. Baumbach, 270 Ill. 128, 110 N. E. 331 (condemnation proceedings; other sales of land, excluded because dissimilar in conditions); 1915, Sanitary District v. Boening, 267 Ill. 118, 107 N. E. 810 (eminent domain; certain sales held improperly admitted because the lands were not similarly situated); 1920, Forest Preserve Dist. v. Barchard, 293 Ill. 556, 127 N. E. 878 (sales of land ten miles distant; trial Court's discretion controls); 1919, Pittsburgh C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Gage, 286 Ill. 713, 121 N. E. 582 (sales pending condemnation proceedings, not admissible); 1921, Forest Preserve Dist. v. Wallace, 299 Ill. 476, 132 N. E. 444 (condemnation proceedings; other recent voluntary sales of similar property, admissible); 1921, Mauvaisterre Drainage & L. Dist. v. Wabash R. Co., 299 Ill. 299, 132 N. E. 559 (prices paid to other persons for right of way of railroad, inadmissible);

Indiana: 1912, Cleveland C. C. & St. Louis R. Co. v. Smith, 177 Ind. 524, 97 N. E. 164 (eminent domain; other purchases for the same right of way, excluded, on mixed grounds, citing no Indiana cases; loosely worded);

Iowa: 1872, King v. R. Co., 34 Ia. 458, 461 (price of a similar right of way through an adjoining tract, excluded; such evidence "is admissible only where it appears that there is a uniformity in the character of the lands thus brought in question with those made a criterion of their value"); 1879, Cherokee v. Land Co., 52 Ia. 279, 3 N. W. 42 (prices of other lots in the neighborhood, admitted, although not precisely similar in all respects); 1884, Cummins v. R. Co., 63 Ia. 397, 404, 19 N. W. 268 (prices of other lots in the vicinity, excluded, because "it was not shown . . . that there was any similarity between the lots in question" and the others); 1901, Soper v. McClout, — Ia. —, 87 N. W. 724 (rental value of other similar farms, excluded); 1905, Simons v. Mason C. & F. D. R. Co., 128 Ia. 139, 103 N. W. 129 (eminent domain; price paid by the railway company for other rights of way, not similarly situated, excluded; but the ruling seems to apply to all prices paid under eminent domain); 1908, Watkins v. R. Co., 137 Ia. 441, 113 N. W. 924 (Pennsylvania and New York rule adopted); 1914, Hubbell v. Des Moines, 166 Ia. 481, 147 N. W. 908 (Watkins v. R. Co. adhered to);

Kansas: 1878, Atchison & N. R. Co. v. Harper, 19 Kan. 529, 534 (colts killed; value of other colts of like appearance and qualities, excluded, as affording an opening for too much uncertainty and as tending to confuse the issues); 1890, Kansas C. & T. R. Co. v. Splitlog, 45 Kan. 68, 25 Pac. 202 (unoccupied land; value of land in a settled neighborhood, excluded; but a general rule also intimated that, where expert testimony can be obtained, the values of other land should not be considered as evidence); 1891, Kansas C. & T. R. Co. v. Vickroy, 46 Kan. 248, 250, 26 Pac. 698 (the preceding case approved; but testing on cross-examination allowed, as in the following case); 1892, Chicago K. & N. R. Co. v. Stewart, 47 Kan. 703, 706, 28 Pac. 1017 (land; values of adjoining land allowed to be asked about to test value-witnesses on cross-examination; the present question left undecided);

Kentucky: 1901, Paducah v. Allen, — Ky. —, 63 S. W. 981 (sales of similar adjoining property, admissible); 1904, Chicago, St. L. & N. O. Co. v. Rottgering, — Ky. —, 83 S. W. 584 (similar); 1914, West Kentucky Coal Co. v. Dyer, 161 Ky. 407, 170 S. W. 967 (admissible);

Maine: 1842, Warren v. Wheeler, 21 Me. 484, 486, 491 (land; the prices of land "lying in the neighborhood" and also "more remote" in the same town, admitted); 1842, Fogg v. Hill, 21 Me. 529, 532 (tenancy; the rents of "similar tenements in the same neighborhood at and about the same time", admitted); 1882, Norton v. Willis, 73 Me. 580 (value of three horses; price paid for six horses, including these three, admitted);

Maryland: 1854, Moale v. Baltimore, 5 Md. 314, 324 ("the neighboring and contiguous lots may be looked to"); 1910, Baltimore, City of, v. Hurlock, 113 Md. 674, 78 Atl. 558 (sales etc. of property in the neighborhood, admitted, as the basis of the expert witness' testimony to value); is limited to the testing of value-witnesses on cross-examination. Even in the jurisdictions where it is rejected, its force is so far recognized that numerous absurd quibbles become necessary in order to distinguish between that which

Massachusetts: 1847, Wyman v. R. Co., 13 Metc. 316, 326 ("other sales between other parties of adjacent lots", admissible; though not compulsory sales nor jury-verdict valuations nor mere opinion-valuations); 1853, Davis v. R. Co., 11 Cush. 506, 509 (actual sales of other land, admissible); 1861, Boston & W. R. Co. v. O. C. & F. R. Co., 3 All. 142, 146 (the preceding cases approved); 1862, Paine v. Boston, 4 All. 168 ("actual sales of lots of land on the same street", admitted; no specific distance is too remote as a matter of law; "it was the province of the judge to determine whether the lots . . . were so similar in their situation, relative position, and other circumstances bearing on their value, as to make a sale of them evidence"; leading case); 1863, Shattuck v. R. Co., 6 All. 115, 117 (other land sales admitted; the trial judge to have discretion as to time and place); 1868, Ham v. Salem, 100 Mass. 350, 352 (rejection of values of other land in trial judge's discretion, approved); 1869, Benham v. Dunbar, 103 Mass. 365 (other land sales, held not improperly admitted in discretion); Presbrey v. R. Co., 103 Mass. 1, 8 (another sale of land condemned for a railroad, held improperly admitted under the circumstances, as including extra damages in the price); 1871, Lawton v. Chase, 108 Mass. 238, 241 (other sales of similar fallen timber, held not improperly rejected in discretion); 1873, Green v. Fall River, 113 Mass. 262, 263 (other land sales, held not improperly rejected in discretion as too far anterior in time); 1877, Chandler v. Aqueduct, 122 Mass. 305 (another land sale in a different town and three years later, held improperly rejected in the trial Court's discretion); 1879, Gardner v. Brookline, 127 Mass. 358, 363 (another sale of land of a peculiar kind in an adjoining town, held not improperly admitted in discretion); 1887, Sawyer v. Boston, 144 Mass. 470, 11 N. E. 711 (sales of other lots, much smaller, held not improperly admitted in discretion); 1888, Patch v. Boston, 146 Mass. 52, 57, 14 N. E. 770, 772 (sales a few months later and of improved lots, held not improperly admitted in discretion); 1888, Lowell v. Com'rs, 146 Mass. 403, 16 N. E. 8 (value of mill water-power in Lawrence, admitted to show value in Lowell, the conditions being the same); 1889, Thompson v. Boston, 148 Mass. 387, 19 N. E. 406 (the general principle affirmed; but a mere opinion of the value of another lot, excluded, as in Shattuck v. R. Co.); 1895, Amory v. Melrose, 162 Mass. 556, 558, 39 N. E. 276 (another sale in the same street and vicinity, held not improperly admitted in discretion); Lyman v. Boston, 164 Mass. 99, 41 N. E. 127 (other land sales admissible in discretion); Bowditch v. Boston, 164 Mass. 112, 41 N. E. 131 (same); Pierce v. Boston, 164 Mass. 92, 41 N. E. 229 (same); Teele v. Boston, 165 Mass. 88, 42 N. E. 507 (same; a mere difference in size is not conclusive); 1896, Buck v. Boston, 165 Mass. 509, 43 N. E. 496 (the usual principle); Beale v. Boston, 166 Mass. 53, 43 N. E. 1029 (like Thompson v. Boston); 1899, Manning v. R. Co., 173 Mass. 100, 53 N. E. 160 (similar); 1900, Old Colony R. Co. v. Robinson Co., 176 Mass. 387, 57 N. E. 670 (similar; but excluding the opinion of experts as to the conditions of these other pieces of property used in comparison); 1903, Sirk v. Emery, 184 Mass. 22, 67 N. E. 668 (like the preceding case); 1912, Fourth National Bank v. Commonwealth, 212 Mass. 66, 98 N. E. 686 (dissimilarity not shown on the facts); 1914, Burley v. Old Colony R. Co., 219 Mass. 483, 107 N. E. 365 (sale to an interested person, not in the open market, not admitted on the facts); 1922, Johnson v. Lowell, — Mass. —, 134 N. E. 627 (land condemnation; other sales, not improperly admitted in the trial Court's discretion);

Michigan: 1870, Comstock v. Smith, 20 Mich. 338, 346 (the value of one of several wells considered); 1877, Eggleston v. Boardman, 37 Mich. 14, 18 (amount paid to one lawyer, not admitted to show the value of another's services to the other parties in the same case; intimating that ordinarily such evidence as to "certain commodities" is admissible);

Minnesota: 1873, Lehmicke v. R. Co., 19 Minn. 464, 483 (sales of adjacent land, admissible); 1880, Stinson v. R. Co., 27 Minn. 284, 289, 6 N. W. 784 (sales of other lands, excluded "unless perhaps in an exceptional case, in which no other evidence can be had"); 1884, Seurer v. Horst, 31 Minn. 479, 480, 18 N. W. 283 (services; wage-rate of another employee of the defendant, excluded);

Mississippi: 1899, Board v. Dillard, 76 Miss. 641, 25 So. 292 (experts to value may be cross-examined as to other sales of like land about the same time); 1903, Board v. Nelms, 82 Miss. 416, 34 So. 149 (admissible, "in weakening opinion values");

Missouri: 1861, Lexington v. Long, 31 Mo. 369, 374 (benefit by betterment to opposite owners, excluded); 1878, Springfield v. Schmook, 68 Mo. 394 (damages allowed for other expropriated lands, excluded, because of confusion of issues and uncertainty of the inference); 1893, St. Louis K. & N. W. R. Co. v. Clark, 121 Mo. 169, 185, 25 S. W. 192 (land; sales of "similar property made in the neighborhood about the same time", admitted; distinguishing the preceding case); 1895, Forsyth Boulevard v. Forsyth, 127 Mo. 417, 30 S. W.

is rejected and that of which common sense compels a hearing. The doctrine of admission, moreover, is sometimes recognized for evidencing the value of services or chattels, when not recognized for land-value.

188 (value of similar pieces of land in the neighborhood, received); 1898, St. Louis O. H. & C. R. Co. v. Fowler, 142 Mo. 670, 44 S. W. 771 (sales must be of similar property); 1902, State v. Meysenburg, 171 Mo. 1, 71 S. W. 229 (shares of stock; sales of similar shares, admitted); 1909, Rourke v. Holmes, St. R. Co., 221 Mo. 46, 119 S. W. 1094 (Jamieson v. R. Co., N. Y., followed; foregoing cases ignored);

Nebraska: 1894, Kirkendall v. Omaha, 39 Nebr. 1, 6, 57 N. W. 752 (excluding, on the facts, sales of other land); 1897, Thompson v. Gaffey, 52 Nebr. 317, 72 N. W. 314 (reasonable plumbing charges; charges by other plumbers in the same city, excluded); 1904, Union P. R. Co. v. Stanwood, 71 Nebr. 150, 91 N. W. 191, 98 id. 656 (particular sales, excluded, except on cross-examination);

New Hampshire: 1849, March v. P. & C. R. Co., 19 N. H. 372, 376 (not clear); 1851, Concord R. v. Greely, 23 N. H. 237, 242 ("sales of other lands, similarly situated, in the vicinity of that in question", and made about the same time, admissible); 1855, White v. Concord R., 30 N. H. 188, 191, 208 (colt killed; sale of another colt of the same age, sire, etc., admitted; the case of Whipple v. Walpole, 10 N. H. 131, treated as a precedent, seems hardly to be one); 1858, Ferguson v. Clifford, 37 N. H. 86, 105 (sales of property "in the vicinity and about the same time, similar" to that in question, admissible); 1860, Carr v. Moore, 41 N. H. 131, 133 (price of horses of similar age and description, a year later, admitted; "it has been the uniform practice . . . to receive evidence of the price at which other property of like character and condition was actually sold in the vicinity at or about the same time"); 1860, Swain v. Cheney, 41 N. H. 232, 234 (services in hauling lumber; prices paid for similar services elsewhere in the neighborhood, admissible according to circumstances); 1861, Dewey v. Williams, 43 N. H. 384, 387 (prices at "times more or less remote and places more or less distant according to circumstances", admissible); Cross v. Wilkins, 43 N. H. 332, 334 (board at a hotel; price at a similar hotel in an adjacent town, admitted; the trial judge's discretion to control); 1862, French v. Piper, 43 N. H. 439 (leather; value in Boston, where approximate prices ruled, admitted); 1864, Kingsbury v. Moses, 45 N. H. 222, 223 (services as carpenter; price paid to the employer-defendant by the customer or the plaintiff's services, admitted; whether the time of such other sales is before or after suit brought does not affect their admissibility); 1869, Kelsea v. Fletcher, 48 N. H. 282 (that a controversy is pending at the time of such sales does not exclude them); 1872, Haines v. Ins. Co., 52 N. H. 467, 468 (house and farm; value of another farm, admitted, the question of remoteness in time and place being for the discretion of the trial Judge); 1876, Hoit v. Russell, 56 N. H. 559, 563 (land rule affirmed); 1879, Amoskeag Co. v. Head, 59 N. H. 332, 337 (flowage; the sums paid to thirty-two other persons for their rights of flowage, excluded, because not important enough to justify confusing the issues and protracting the trial; see quotation ante, § 443);

New Jersey: 1873, Montclair R. Co. v. Benson, 36 N. J. L. 557 (value of adjoining lots a year later, excluded, on the ground of confusion of issues; but the trial Court's discretion is apparently allowed some influence); 1892, Laing v. R. & C. Co., 54 N. J. L. 576, 25 Atl. 409 (sales of other land substantially similar, admissible, the trial judge's discretion to control); 1906, Hadley v. Board, 73 N. J. L. 197, 62 Atl. 1132 (Laing v. R. Co., followed); 1908, Brown v. New Jersey S. L. R. Co., 76 N. J. L. 795, 71 Atl. 271 (admissible in discretion); 1912, Manda v. Orange, 82 N. J. L. 686, 82 Atl. 869 (like Laing v. R. Co.); 1916, Manda, Inc. v. Delaware L. & W. R. Co., 89 N. J. L. 298, 98 Atl. 476 (condemnation proceedings; amount paid for other parcels, admissible in trial Court's discretion);

New York: 1873, Gouge v. Roberts, 53 N. Y. 619 (the cost of another ice-house, excluded, "as it raised a collateral issue leading to a comparison between the different structures, and could not legitimately aid" upon the issue); 1874, Blanchard v. Steamboat Co., 59 N. Y. 292, 294, 300 (sunken vessel; value of other vessels excluded; no reason given); 1886, People v. McCarthy, 102 N. Y. 630, 639, 8 N. E. 85 (prices named as consideration in various deeds, not received to show value of lands); 1889, McGean v. R. Co., 117 N. Y. 219, 224, 22 N. E. 957 (land rentals; rental values of "similar property in the same street", allowed to be compared); 1890, Huntington v. Attrill, 118 N. Y. 365, 378, 23 N. E. 544 (values of other seaside property, rejected because of confusion of issues); 1891, Matter of Thompson, 127 N. Y. 463, 470, 28 N. E. 389 (water-power; amounts paid for adjacent water-powers, excluded; see quotation supra); 1891, Roberts v. R. Co., 128 N. Y. 455, 473, 28 N. E. 486 ('obiter', proof of "the rental and fee value" of "buildings somewhat similar to plaintiff's" may be used); 1892, People v. Myers, 133 N. Y. 627, 631, 636, 30 N. E. 1150 ("the ordinary rule" excludes "sales of other real property in the same vicinity", first, because of confusion of issues, and, secondly, because of unfair surprise; here, such sales were admitted because no other evidence was attainable, and because

2. After instances of such similar sales have been received, it is proper, on the principle of Explanation (ante, § 449), to diminish the force of the evi-on the facts of the case the above objections were obviated); 1895, Jamieson v. R. Co., 147 N. Y. 322, 325, 41 N. E. 693 (rental value "in the vicinity", excluded); 1896, Witmark v. R. Co., 149 N. Y. 393, 44 N. E. 78 (affirming the preceding case; "There is no general or well-defined principle of the law of evidence that enables a party to establish the value of some particular or specific thing by proof of the value of another thing of the same class or general character. . . . Cases may doubtless be found where, in other jurisdictions, and in special statutory proceedings for determining the value of real property, more or less support is given to the contention of the plaintiffs' counsel. But in most, if not all, of them, it will be found that the inquiry was not governed by the rules of evidence that prevail at common law. . . . It will be found, we think, upon careful examination, that in most of these [older] cases the Court simply recognized a situation which the parties themselves had created by the general course of the trial, or by consent or acquiescence, and hence they are in no way in conflict with the decision" in the Jamieson case; this suggestion, that the rule in other jurisdictions has anything to do with a statute, and is not based on a common-law principle, is without foundation); 1901, Levin v. El. R. Co., 165 N. Y. 572, 59 N. E. 261 (cross-examination of the value of similar premises, allowed; direct examination to "the general course of values" in the vicinity, allowed); 1901, Shepard v. R. Co., 169 N. Y. 160, 62 N. E. 151 (Jamieson v. R. Co. followed); 1903, Robinson v. N. Y. El. R. Co., 175 N. Y. 219, 67 N. E. 431 (Jamieson's case approved; but, cross-examination to specific instances of sales being allowed, the re-direct examination may take up the instances thus brought out); 1906, Hindley v. Manhattan R. Co., 185 N. Y. 335, 78 N. E. 276 (damage by eminent domain, the defendant pleading prescription; the defendant's settlements with two hundred other abutters, excluded; following Jamieson v. R. Co.); 1907, Shaw v. N. Y. Elev. R. Co., 187 N. Y. 186, 79 N. E. 984 (value of adjacent premises, admitted on the facts; three judges diss.);

North Dakota: 1906, Vidger Co. v. Great Northern R. Co., 15 N. D. 501, 107 N. W. 1083 (apples; not decided);

Pennsylvania: 1859, Searle v. R. Co., 33 Pa. 57, 63 ("the market value is measured by the price usually given for such land in that neighborhood, making due allowance for differences of position, soil, and improvement; . . . [the French law] directs the market value to be ascertained by reference to recent actual sales in the neighborhood"); 1861, East Pa. R. Co. v. Hiester, 40 Pa. 53, 55 (the Searle case approved as allowing reference to "the selling price of land in the neighborhood"; "there certainly can be no objection to this test"; but it is then said to be available only as forming the basis of the witness' knowledge, and not admissible as an independent fact; see quotation supra; but it may be used on cross-examination to test a witness' qualifications); 1873, Pittsburg V. & C. R. Co. v. Rose, 74 Pa. 362, 369 (land; particular sales inadmissible, semble); 1873, Hays v. Briggs, 74 Pa. 373, 386 (the Hiester case approved); 1883, Vanderslice v. Philadelphia, 103 Pa. 102, 109 (value of another lot excluded); 1884, Pittsburg & W. R. Co. v. Patterson, 107 Pa. 461, 464 ("particular sales of alleged similar property under special circumstances", inadmissible; the reasoning of the Hiester case adopted); 1886, Pittsburg R. Co. v. Vance, 115, Pa. 325, 331, 8 Atl. 764 (same); 1890, Curtin v. R. Co., 135 Pa. 20, 30, 19 Atl. 740 (same); 1896, Becker v. R. Co., 177 Pa. 252, 35 Atl. 617 (same); 1906, Gorgas v. Philadelphia H. & P. R. Co., 215 Pa. 501, 64 Atl. 680 (eminent domain; "a witness may qualify himself . . . by showing that he has a knowledge of sales in the community, . . . but he cannot be interrogated in chief as to the money values of similar properties"; on cross-examination he may be asked "his knowledge of particular sales and the prices asked"); 1906, Davis v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 215 Pa. 581, 64 Atl. 774 (a witness to land-value may be cross-examined on 'voir dire' to test his qualifications, by asking him as to values; compare § 654, post); 1907, Schonhardt v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 216 Pa. 224, 65 Atl. 543 (cross-examination to other sales, not allowed where its object was "to have his testimony go to the jury on the question of value"); 1908, Neely v. Western Allegheny R. Co., 219 Pa. 349, 68 Atl. 829 (cross-examination allowed to particular sales, but not to particular values; the rule of this State, being unsound to start with, is now leading to tweedle-dum and tweedle-dee distinctions); 1910, Rea v. Pittsburg & C. R. Co., 229 Pa. 106, 78 Atl. 73 (cross-examination to a former sale of the same property, allowed); 1917, Llewellyn v. Sunnyside Coal Co., 255 Pa. 291, 99 Atl. 869 (rule of the Hiester case, applied); 1917, Stone v. Delaware L. & W. R. Co., 257 Pa. 456, 101 Atl. 813 (prior rulings sought to be reconciled); 1922, Wissinger v. Valley Smokeless Coal Co., 271 Pa. 566, 115 Atl. 880 (usual rule applied);

Rhode Island: 1893, Daigneault v. Woonsocket, 18 R. I. 378, 28 Atl. 346 (value of other remote and dissimilar land, excluded);

South Carolina: 1905, Kean v. Landrum, 72 S. C. 556, 52 S. E. 421 (value of timber on adjoining land, admitted);

Tennessee: 1901, Whorley v. Tennessee C. Expos. Co., — Tenn. —, 62 S. W. 346 (sales

dence by showing the conditions to have been dissimilar in some important points.[3]

§ 464. Same: Other Principles discriminated. (1) For the purpose of testing the opinion of a value-witness, by bringing out facts contradictory of his conclusion, it may be proper for the opponent to ask him on cross-examination about the sale-price of adjacent pieces of property; thus, one who places the value of the lot in question at $5000 may admit that a similar lot adjoining was sold for $3000 or for $7000. The effect of this is to exhibit an apparent error of judgment, for if the lots are really similar, their value should be about the same. This mode of impeachment rests on another principle (post, § 1004). It is conceded in some jurisdictions where the independent use of such similar instances to show value is forbidden.[1] It is occasionally forbidden, apparently on the theory that it involves a contradiction on a collateral point (post, § 1004); but that principle does not properly apply to any inquiry confining itself to cross-examination.[2]

(2) In order that a value-witness may qualify as to knowledge, he must appear to know the value of the article in question (post, § 713); he may of similar articles at other places, admitted to show the amount of loss of business); 1905, Union R. Co. v. Hunton, 114 Tenn. 609, 88 S. W. 182 (eminent domain; sales in the neighborhood, admitted);

Utah: 1912, Telluride Power Co. v. Burneau, 41 Utah 4, 125 Pac. 399 (not decided);
Vermont: 1849, Vilas v. Downer, 21 Vt. 419, 424 ("usual prices charged and received for similar services . . . by other men of the same profession with the plaintiff in the same vicinity and in the same Courts", admissible); 1897, Davis v. Cotey, 70 Vt. 120, 39 Atl. 628 (price paid for timber in the vicinity, receivable);
Washington: 1892, Seattle & M. R. Co. v. Gilchrist, 4 Wash. 509, 30 Pac. 738 (price of similar land about same time, admissible);
Wisconsin: 1882, West v. R. Co., 56 Wis. 318, 321, 14 N. W. 292 (sale of adjoining land, admitted); 1883, Watson v. R. Co., 57 Wis. 332, 349, 15 N. W. 468 (sales of lots "in the vicinity", some of them several years before, admitted, the trial judge's discretion controlling; but the use to test on cross-examination was the one here concerned); 1884, Washburn v. R. Co., 59 Wis. 364, 377, 18 N. W. 328 (same; such evidence admitted generally, "to test the accuracy of estimates thereof made by the witnesses"; but the other lands must be "similar in character, location, and value [?]", and the sales "not too remote in time"); 1896, Atkinson v. R. Co., 93 Wis. 362, 67 N. W. 703 (preceding case approved; but mere offers excluded); 1898, Stolze v. Term. Co., 100 Wis. 208, 75 N. W. 987 (other sales admissible, in the trial Court's discretion, if similar); 1909, American States S. Co. v. Milwaukee N. R. Co., 139 Wis. 99, 120 N. W. 844 (sales of similar land, admissible).

[3] 1847, Wyman v. R. Co., 13 Metc. 316, 326 ("open of course to any evidence explanatory of the circumstances attending such sale", and indicating the price as an unfair basis); 1896, Buck v. Boston, 165 Mass. 512, 43 N. E. 496 (witness to the value of land who had spoken to the value of adjacent farms; questions bringing out undesirable elements in the location, admitted).

§ 464. [1] As in Cal., Kan., supra; so also the following: 1896, Silverstein v. O'Brien, 165 Mass. 512, 43 N. E. 497 (a witness who has valued stock as worthless; question as to his having heard of orders for goods which would make it valuable, admitted).

[2] 1839, Tennant v. Hamilton, 5 Cl. & F. 122 (a witness for defendant, in an action for nuisance by smoke, had testified that adjacent premises A, B, etc., were not injured; on cross-examination he was asked whether G, a place, was injured; having answered "No", he was then asked if he knew that defendant had paid anything to the owner of G as compensation for alleged damage; held, that (1) the answer could not serve to test the correctness of his direct testimony, because he had not testified as to G, and (2) it could not be used to test his credit generally, because the inquiry was "perfectly collateral", and involved "a matter which was not relevant to the subject matter in dispute"; hence, even the question was rejected, because (it would seem) its purpose was to lay the foundation for a contradiction); 1889, Thompson v. Boston, 148 Mass. 387, 389, 19 N. E. 406 (a question as to his former estimate of adjacent land, held not improperly excluded in discretion).

therefore be asked on direct examination whether he knows the value of adjacent lands, without naming specific instances;[3] in such a case the present principle is not involved.

(3) Whether an opinion as to value is obnoxious to the Opinion rule involves the general principle elsewhere treated (post, §§ 1940–1944).

(4) The effect of a railroad in injuring the material condition of land, as evidenced by the material condition of adjacent land, depends upon the principle already dealt with (ante, § 451).

§ 465. Measure of Literary or Intellectual Propriety (Other Persons' Utterances in Libel or Sedition). On the same principle as the foregoing, the propriety of an alleged seditious or libellous utterance, with reference to its keeping within the bounds of fair criticism or moderate statement, as demanded by the exigency, is evidenced by a comparison with other persons' utterances whose propriety is conceded.[1]

Distinguish, however, the use of the defendant's own other utterances, to evidence his own normal state of mind (ante, § 367).

[3] E.g. as in Ill. and Pa., supra.

Compare the cases cited post, §§ 562, 655.

§ 465. [1] With the following cases compare those cited ante, § 367, concerning sedition and libel: England: 1817, Hone's Trial (Pamph.) (the defendant, charged with seditious libel, read various publications by eminent men, including the father of Lord Chief Justice Ellenborough himself, the presiding judge at the trial, to show that utterances of a similar sort were compatible with unquestioned loyalty and propriety of conduct; the defendant's acquittal on three successive trials was the immediate occasion of Lord Ellenborough's retirement from the Bench; how the case of R. v. Hone influenced this result is interestingly told in J. Routledge's "Chapters in the History of Popular Progress, chiefly in Relation to the Freedom of the Press and Trial by Jury", (1876), p. 433, and, most vividly, in Harriet Martineau's account of the trial in her "History of the Peace, being a History of England from 1816 to 1854", vol. II, pp. 138–143); 1843, R. v. O'Connell, 5 State Tr. N. S. 1, 533 (sedition by bringing Courts into contempt by encouraging resort to arbitration; rules of the Society of Friends, requiring resort to arbitration, admitted to show "that a vast number of the respectable portion of the community have done the same thing and have universally been considered as acting legally"); 1848, R. v. O'Brien, 7 St. Tr. N. S. 1, 275 (seditious utterances; former similar utterances of persons of high station and unquestioned loyalty, offered as "acts done by public men on particular subjects"; rejected); 1848, R. v. Duffy, 7 St. Tr. N. S. 795, 915 (seditious utterances; other speeches, by persons since in high office, offered to show that defendant "did not go beyond the latitude allowed to political writers"; received on account of the former practice, but not approved on principle). United States: 1819, Jacob Graber's Trial, Md., 1 Amer. St. Tr. 69, 97 (preaching rebellion to slaves; Mr. Martin for the defence quoted similar passages from Thomas Jefferson, to show that "men high in office, eminent in science, fair in character, and exalted in the confidence of their fellow-citizens . . . have condemned a system they conceived unwise and unnatural"); 1859, John Cook's Trial, Jefferson Co. Circuit Court, Va., quoted in Sellers' Classics of the Bar, IV, 138 (the accused was one of the Northerners who took part in the raid upon Harper's Ferry under John Brown; Daniel W. Voorhees, for the accused, argued that he was merely a humble and insignificant follower, misled by the violent utterances of influential Northern statesmen, viz. Seward, Giddings, et al., whom nobody thought of bringing to book criminally).

For examples of the comparison of other utterances by distinguished men, as showing that the defendant's utterance could not be a libel if the others were unaccused, see striking instances in Brougham's Speeches, Works, vol. IX, p. 18 (trial of Hunt), p. 230 (trial of Williams).

Compare also the admission of literary usage, to show a standard of meaning, post, § 1699.

The following ruling belongs here: 1901, State v. Ulsemer, 24 Wash. 657, 64 Pac. 800 (circulating obscene pictures; "use of similar pictures in commerce", excluded).

TITLE II: TESTIMONIAL EVIDENCE

INTRODUCTORY: GENERAL THEORY OF TESTIMONIAL EVIDENCE

CHAPTER XVII.

§ 475. In Theory a question of Relevancy is involved. The necessity for a distinction between Testimonial or Direct and Circumstantial or Indirect evidence has already been considered (ante, § 25). It was there noticed that a large class of evidence is differentiated from all others as governed by a set of rules of admission peculiar to itself, — a class including human assertions taken as the basis of an inference to the truth of the fact asserted. The process of all evidence is an inference from one fact to the existence of another, — from Evidence to Proposition (ante, § 2); and in the present class of evidence the uniform feature is that the inference is to be drawn from the fact of an assertion having been made to the truth of the matter asserted. How this inference is in practice constantly combined with the inference from circumstantial evidence, and how nevertheless the detailed principles applicable to each remain distinct and independent in application, has been already suggested (ante, § 25).

The rules governing the use of this sort of evidence — Testimonial Evidence — include mainly the rules prescribing the qualifications of witnesses, together with sundry rules for evidence used to explain away and diminish or to strengthen and restore the effect of testimonial evidence. Is it proper to regard such topics as topics of Relevancy? On principle, it is. The question whether A's assertion (or testimony) that B forged a note can be received to show that B forged is as much a question of relevancy as the question whether the discovery of forger's tools in B's room, or the flight of B from the city, can be received for the same purpose. Suppose a person to come upon the stand and, without a preliminary question, to assert that B forged the note. The mere fact that some casual person opens his mouth and utters these words has in itself little or no weight whatever; for there is as yet no substantial reason why one should pay any attention to his statements. But the fact that a witness A, being of sound mind and sufficient experience, having had opportunity to see what B did, and well recollecting the circumstances, is willing to assert that B forged the note, is a fact which we shall readily listen to as evidence. Some unknown person's assertion may be worthless; but a specific person's assertion, under certain conditions, acquires sufficient probative value to be at least considered. Any one of several circumstances being definitely lacking, it may have no probative value. If A is insane, for example, his assertion is mere chatter; if A is too young to understand what he is speaking of, his assertion is only an infantile repetition of what his elders have said in his hearing; if A cannot write, he cannot form any opinion as to what B wrote; if A was in St. Louis when B is said to have forged the note in New York, his assertion is idle gossip. In short, it is not every human assertion, as such, that is worth considering as the basis of an inference to the truth of the thing asserted; but only assertions made under certain conditions, — these usually consisting in the presence of certain personal qualities or circumstances in A, — i.e. his testimonial qualifications. Now these conditions and the mental process which induces us to recognize them are the same in essence as in the case of Circumstantial Evidence. A fact must rise to a certain degree of probative value before it can be considered at all (ante, §§ 32, 38), — that is the root notion of relevancy, as thus far examined; and the same notion is here involved. If it is desired to express the doctrine of testimonial qualifications in terms of Relevancy, it may be thus stated: The fact that an assertion is made by a person who is sane, of age, experienced in the subject-matter, acquainted with the circumstances, and so forth, is relevant to show the truth of the fact asserted.

The rules of Relevancy here, as with circumstantial evidence, will consist in a statement of these conditions under which the fact of the assertion will be received as having probative value. It is true, however, that in stating these conditions the phraseology of relevancy is not commonly employed; nor is it needed. It is sufficient to deal with the general question in its common forensic form, Under what conditions may Testimonial Evidence be received? — or, as covering most of the same scope, What are the qualifications of witnesses? It is only necessary to appreciate that scientifically the present subject is equally a part of the general topic of Relevancy.

§ 476. Method of Argument; Inductive or Deductive. What has already been noted as to the form of the inference (ante, § 30) applies equally to the present class of evidence. The rules which prescribe the relevancy of a class of evidence are here, as with Circumstantial Evidence, always in inductive form. It is only in the use of these rules that we find employed chiefly the deductive form. When the Court is asked to agree that testimony of a certain sort is relevant and admissible, it is asked to lay down the rule of law as a proposition reached inductively on the basis of experience. But when the Court has sanctioned this proposition, the counsel's argument then takes the deductive form; i.e. "Testimony of a specific class is by a certain rule admissible; the present testimony offered is of that class; therefore it is admissible."

§ 477. Three General Groups of Rules; Testimonial Qualifications, Impeachment, and Rehabilitation. It follows that the ordinary processes of inductive argument are here appropriate. Practically those which call for use are reduced to three:

First, in offering testimonial assertions and asking the Court to agree that assertions of that class are admissible, the simple question is whether other hypotheses affecting the credibility of the assertion are sufficiently negatived (ante, § 32). When the Court declares that the statement is under the conditions named admissible, it declares by implication that the sanity, the experience, the knowledge, and so forth, of the witness are such that the hypotheses of the assertion being idle chatter, ignorant gossip, or otherwise untrustworthy, are sufficiently negatived 'prima facie', and that the assertion is 'prima facie' worth listening to. Thus the other forms or requirements — substantial similarity of conditions, sufficient number of instances, and the like (ante, § 31) — do not arise for application at all, as they do in using circumstantial evidence; the simple reason being that the basis of inference here is a single homogeneous variety of evidence (human assertions), and not the myriad varied sorts of facts roughly grouped together under the term "circumstantial evidence." In offering testimonial evidence, then, the judge merely inquires whether experience and precedent have sanctioned certain conditions which must accompany the statements.

Secondly, just as in the use of circumstantial evidence it was observed that there are for the opponent certain ways of diminishing the force of the evidence after it was admitted (ante, § 34), namely, by showing that other hypotheses exist which are equally or more probable, or by adducing contrary instances of the same sort, — so here there is found a group of rules pointing to the analogous ways by which an opponent may diminish the force of testimonial evidence; and here, as there, these ways consist mainly either in explaining away the testimonial statement (as, by showing the witness' bad character for veracity, his inadequate experience or knowledge, his poor recollection, and so on), or in adducing contrary instances of the same sort (in the shape of previous contradictory statements, and the like).

Thirdly, since the new facts offered by way of discrediting the witness may themselves in turn be open to explanation taking away their apparent force of inference, so once more the original proponent of the witness may offer evidence, this time for such explanatory or rehabilitating purpose. In practice the process usually ends here; although in theory it might continue longer.

There are thus three general groups of rules to be considered, which correspond to these three general processes of argument:

I. Admissibility of Testimonial Assertions, i.e. Witness-Qualifications;

II. Impeachment of Testimonial Assertions;

III. Rehabilitation of Testimonial Assertions.

It might be objected (on the reasons given post, § 875) that this division of the field is artificial and unscientific, because the probative value of a testimonial assertion is one indivisible thing, and because scientifically all the data affecting that probative value (whether termed "qualifications", "impeachment", or "corroboration") involve this indivisible process of weighing the value of the assertion. The division is indeed artificial, but not unscientific. It is due simply to the fact that in forensic practice the bi-partisan nature of the proceedings allots to each party in turn the right and duty of adducing the evidential considerations that suit his side of the case. Hence, the adducing of the whole mass of considerations falls naturally into three stages, viz. first, the proponent, qualifying the witness, secondly, the opponent, impeaching him, and thirdly, the proponent again, corroborating him; this is the time-honored order of evidence peculiar to the Anglo-American system (post, § 1866).

This division of the field is not one which an ordinary scientist would follow in analyzing his evidence. But it is not unscientific; it is merely a provisional allotment due to the partisan and controversial nature of the proceedings and the necessity for some orderly rule.

§ 478. Analysis of Elements of a Testimonial Assertion: Observation, Recollection, Narration. Before proceeding to the consideration of these rules, an analysis is desirable of the elements of a piece of testimonial evidence; for upon this analysis will depend the grouping of topics, and from it may be surmised something of the necessary requirements of such evidence.

1. When a witness' statement is offered as the basis of an evidential inference to the truth of his statement — for example, the statement of A that B struck X —, it is plain that at least three distinct elements are present; or, put in another way, that there are three processes, in the absence of any one of which we cannot conceive of testimony. First, the witness must know something, i.e. must have observed the affray and received some impressions on the question whether B struck X; to this element may be given the generic term Observation. Secondly, the witness must have a recollection of these impressions, the result of his Observation; this may be termed Recollection. Thirdly, he must communicate this recollection to the tribunal; that is, there must be Communication, or Narration, or Relation (for there is no single term entirely appropriate).

Now the very notion of taking a human utterance as the basis of belief in the truth of the fact asserted impliedly attributes these three processes to the witness, — Observation, Recollection, Communication.[1] Whatever rules, § 478. [1] 1806, Evans, Notes to Pothier, II, 202: "All regard to testimony supposes the general proposition that witnesses, not having any motives for asserting what is false or suppressing what is true, having had an adequate opportunity of observing the subject to which they depose, having actually observed it with adequate attention, and having a distinct and perfect memory with respect to it, relate what they have seen or heard with accuracy and fidelity." 1906, Train, The Prisoner at the Bar, 224 ("The probative value of all honestly given testimony depends, naturally, first, upon the witness' original capacity to observe; second, upon the extent to which his memory may have played him false; and third, upon how far he really means exactly what he says. . . . The authoritativeness of everything these witnesses have to say must lie in their ability to see, remember, and describe accurately what they have seen").

therefore, limit the acceptance of testimonial assertions must have reference to some one or more of these elements.

Moreover, in the function fulfilled by each of the three elements or processes are to be found in general form the fundamental canons of which the various detailed rules will be the applications and from which they are sometimes direct deductions. Thus, the notion of Observation is that the external event has in some way or other impressed itself on the witness' senses, to be now reproduced to us in court. This impression of the witness, then (knowledge, observation, or whatever it be called), should adequately represent or correspond to the fact itself as it really existed or exists; and the practical rules under this head will be found to have, for their common purpose, the object of ensuring the probability of a fairly accurate knowledge on the part of the witness. Again, the function of Recollection is to recall or reproduce the original impressions of observation; and such rules as the law has laid down under this head are usually therefore merely applications of this fundamental notion that Recollection must fairly correspond with or reproduce the original Knowledge or Observation. Finally, the function of Narration or Communication is to reproduce for the apprehension of the tribunal the Recollected results — themselves already reproduced from Observation; and the common purpose of the varied rules under this head is to ensure that the story as told shall represent with fair accuracy what the witness once observed and now recollects.

2. The rules, thus analyzed, would however deal with the simple question, Does this witness actually know, recollect, communicate with sufficient accuracy? — a question requiring in each instance anew an investigation, and a decision based on the facts discovered. But experience has carved out certain rough rules of convenience which, if applied at the outset, may save the necessity of a detailed investigation as to the sufficiency of actual knowledge, recollection, and communication; for it is obvious that if we find the witness incapable — i.e. lacking in the very power — of acquiring adequate knowledge or of sufficiently recollecting or of properly telling, then further inquiry, whether he did in fact know or does in fact recollect or well relate, is useless and may be omitted. For instance, if A is put on the stand to testify to the color of a horse, it will be unnecessary to inquire whether and where and when he saw the horse, if it appears at the outset that he has been blind from birth. So, too, it would be unnecessary to ask B, who is put forward to testify to the results of a post-mortem examination, whether he was present and took part, if it appears at the outset that he knows nothing of medicine or of surgery. When the witness is found to lack the proper capacity or power, it becomes not only unnecessary but improper to consider whether he actually knows, for it is impossible for him to know; we do not trust his statement that he does know. Thus, in addition to the rules defining the requirements as to actual Knowledge, Recollection, and Communication, there arise other rules defining the kinds of Incapacity (to know, recollect, and communicate) which exclude the witness at the outset without further inquiry.

Of this incapacity there are three distinct sorts; First, there is an organic incapacity, affecting the inherent mental or moral powers, — of which insanity, infancy, dumbness, and the like, are instances. This sort of incapacity may affect the witness' power of knowing or of recollecting or of communicating or of doing all three, and must be examined with reference to each. Secondly, there is an incapacity involving a lack of power to judge rightly on particular subjects, and arising from lack of experience or training. This incapacity extends to particular topics only, not necessarily to the whole subject of litigation. Thirdly, there is an incapacity arising from an emotional relation to the controversy, e.g. from marital relationship or from pecuniary interest in the subject of the suit. This incapacity — nowadays recognized to a limited extent only — is supposed to involve an inability to give any credible testimony on the subject of the particular cause, and, when it exists, affects all three elements alike.

As for the names to be applied to these three sorts of incapacity, there are none of general acceptance. The first may be termed Organic, as affecting mental and moral functions or powers; the second Experiential, as involving a lack of sufficient experience or training; the third Emotional, as involving the dominance of untrustworthy motives.

§ 479. Any Assertion, whether in court or not, may be Testimonial Evidence. The use of the phrase "testimonial" evidence must not be understood as applicable exclusively to assertions made on the witness-stand. Any assertion, taken as the basis of an inference to the existence of the matter asserted, is testimony, whether made in court or not (ante, § 25). Thus, all the statements received under the exceptions to the hearsay rule are genuinely testimony (post, § 1361). Assertions made on the witness-stand are merely the commonest class of testimonial evidence. It follows that the qualifications of a witness are equally applicable in the use of extra-judicial assertions. In practice the Court does not always insist on proof of these qualifications beforehand; but many of the rules established for the hearsay exceptions (post, § 1424) are nothing more than applications of the rules of testimonial qualifications to extra-judicial assertions.

§ 480. Order of Topics. In accordance with the preceding analysis, the order of topics under the general title of Testimonial Evidence becomes:

Sub-title I: Qualifications of Witnesses.

Topic I: Organic Capacity; including

Sub-topic A: Mental Derangement (Insanity, Disease, Idiocy);

Sub-topic B: Mental Immaturity (Infancy);

Sub-topic C: Moral Depravity (Sex, Religion, Race, Infamy).

Topic II: Experiential Capacity.

Topic III: Emotional Capacity:

Sub-topic A: Pecuniary Interest;

Sub-topic B; Domestic Relationship.
Topic IV: Observation, or Knowledge.
Topic V: Recollection.
Topic VI: Narration, or Communication.
Sub-title II: Impeachment of Witnesses; with further subdivisions (noted post, § 881).
Sub-title III: Rehabilitation of Witnesses; with further subdivisions (noted post, § 1101).

SUB-TITLE I: TESTIMONIAL QUALIFICATIONS

INTRODUCTORY: GENERAL RULES AFFECTING TESTIMONIAL QUALIFICATIONS

CHAPTER XVIII.

§ 483. Time of Qualifications. The time of utterance of the testimony is the time when the qualifications must exist, because it is at that time that they are needed. Certain consequences follow from this axiom:

(1) In the case of insanity, an insanity prior to the time of trial is immaterial, unless it affected the person's power of correct observation at the time of the fact testified to (post, §§ 493, 497). On the other hand, prior insanity may suffice as evidence of the continuing existence of it at the time of observation or of delivering testimony (ante, § 233).

(2) In the case of infamy, the disqualifying conviction has of course occurred before the trial; but it is supposed to demonstrate a moral depravity continuing up to the trial. A pardon operates to remove the disqualification (post, § 523); but this, though justifiable only on the ground that the depravity had ceased, is a conclusion that does violence to the general principle. In such an irrational doctrine, however, as that of disqualification by infamy (now almost obsolete) it is needless to look for consistency.

(3) In the case of a deposition, the qualifications are required at the time of its taking; hence, the condition of the deponent at the time of its offering in court is immaterial; his intervening death or disqualification could not affect the trustworthiness of his statement when made. On this point, however, the judicial rulings sometimes have ignored sound principle (post, §§ 1408, 1409).

§ 484. Burden of Proof of Qualifications. The preëxistence, in the witness, of the requisite elements of capacity already enumerated (ante, § 478) is in theory required. In the practical enforcement of these requirements, however, it would be pedantic to require that their existence be expressly shown in every respect before the witness is permitted to testify. Experience has led to an arrangement by which the existence of the proper qualifications may in some classes of cases be assumed, until the opposing party proves or the witness reveals their absence; while in certain other classes of cases the qualifications are not assumed to exist, but must first be proved to exist by the party offering the witness.

Under the former head fall, in general, the elements affecting Organic and Emotional Capacity; under the latter head, those affecting Experiential Capacity, as well as the qualification of Observation (or Knowledge); for the elements of Recollection and Narration, there is no uniform doctrine. The detailed rules carrying out this general principle can better be examined under the respective qualifications. It is enough to note here that the lack of capacity by insanity or idiocy must be shown as a disqualification by the opposing party (post, § 497); that lack of capacity by infancy must in theory also be shown by him, though the witness' age and appearance usually serve to change the burden (post, § 508); and that interest and relationship must be shown, as disqualifications, by the opposing party (post, § 584); while the witness' experience (post, § 572) and observation, or knowledge (post, § 654) must be shown, as qualifications, by the offering party.

§ 485. Mode of Proof of Qualifications. Four ways are distinguishable for ascertaining the qualifications or lack of qualifications of a witness.

(1) The behavior of a witness, in court during trial, or after being called to the stand but before being sworn or formally questioned, may reveal his incapacity. This, however, would in practice be an available source for the cases only of idiocy, insanity, intoxication, or extreme infancy (post, §§ 497, 508).

(2) Before the witness is sworn as such, but after he is called and presented, a preliminary questioning of himself may be had, in order to ascertain by his own answers his condition as to qualifications. This questioning (known as ' voir dire ', when applied to ascertain disqualification by interest) formed originally a distinct stage of the proceeding; and it was perhaps properly so, because the answers of a (supposedly) unqualified person could not form testimony, and because it is convenient to mark definitely the time when the stage of testimony proper begins. But in modern practice (especially under the custom of administering the oath beforehand to the witnesses in mass) the separation of the two stages is usually ignored. Moreover, in proving the qualifications of experience (post, § 560) and knowledge (post, § 654), it was never practiced.

The detailed rules in regard to the mode of conducting this provisional examination are noticed later under the respective heads of insanity (post, § 497), infancy (post, § 508), infamy (post, § 523), and interest (post, § 583).

(3) Before the witness is sworn as such, but after he is called and presented, other witnesses may be used to evidence the facts of his incapacity. This, the commonest mode of proof, is ordinarily available as complementary to the foregoing two (post, §§ 497, 508, 562); but, for incapacity by interest, it was allowed (post, § 585, only on condition of not using the 'voir dire', — the exception being due merely to the disfavor which the Courts finally came to show towards that ground of disqualification.

(4) After the witness has been sworn, the progress of his direct examination or cross-examination may disclose his incapacity, and then he may be stopped and his preceding testimony ordered expunged; or, if merely grounds of doubt are disclosed, a questioning on 'voir dire', or other persons' testimony, may be resorted to. But at this stage, after the oath's administration, his incapacity will not be examined into in case the opponent has by the delay lost the right to make objection (post, §§ 486, 586); and this loss of the right might occur at different times for different incapacities.

The rules for ascertaining capacity to take the oath rest on special grounds (post, §§ 1816, 1823).

§ 486. Time of Objecting to Qualifications. Wherever a plain separation is preserved between the preliminary examination of 'voir dire' and the testimony proper, the rule can be strictly enforced that capacity is not to be questioned after the person is once sworn as a witness, except where the opposing party had no prior notice of the disqualifying fact, or where, having notice, he has made due objection but has been unable to prove the fact (post, § 586). But in a court where the witnesses are customarily sworn as such before any opportunity for questioning is given, this rule cannot be applied. Yet its principle may be carried out by requiring the opponent to make objection and offer proof before the testimony of the witness is begun, — so far at least as the opponent then is aware of any specific ground of objection (post, §§ 497, 586).

When the testimony is offered in the form of a deposition, the same general principle is applied, i.e. the objection, if the facts were known, must have been made at the time of the taking of the deposition, if it could then have been of any avail. Nevertheless, since the officer taking it has usually no authority to exclude testimony, in some classes of evidence the objection would be at that time without practical consequences, and hence there is no harm in permitting certain questions to be raised at the trial for the first time, provided the party offering the deposition has not been put in an inconvenient position for lack of the prior objection. The specific rules on this point have already been considered (ante, § 18).

§ 487. Judge, not Jury, to determine Qualifications. The orthodox division of function between judge and jury allots, without question, to the judge the determination of all matters of fact on which the admissibility of evidence depends (post, § 2550), and therefore of the facts of a witness' capacity to testify.

In this inquiry, on the one hand, the judge is not bound by the ordinary rules of evidence applicable to evidence offered to the jury (post, §§ 587, 2550); and, in particular, he need not permit cross-examination of witnesses called to prove or disprove another's qualifications (post, § 1385).

On the other hand, when the judge has once determined the admissibility of a witness, by applying the rules of law to the facts found by himself, the witness stands before the jury for them to judge of his credit as they see fit, untrammelled by the rules of law as to his qualifications (post, §§ 861, 1451, 2550); it would follow that if they rejected his testimony, it should be merely because, all things considered, they do not believe him, and not because they find him lacking by force of some legal definition of competency; with such definitions the jury have nothing to do.

It seems hardly worth while here to take note of the various fallacious principles or phrases which one time or another have been offered for acceptance at this point. For example, it has been more or less argued whether there is "a presumption that a witness speaks the truth." Now of course there is no presumption, in the correct sense of that term (post, § 2409). Not since the earlier days of superstitious ignorance have we been credulous and foolish enough to recognize legally (post, § 2032) that a human being's utterance of words in court was 'per se' operative to produce credence. But, on the other hand, equally of course, a witness' qualifications, shown preliminarily, give some probative value to his testimony as he begins to open his mouth. In short, the law and the tribunal start with assuming that every witness is at least worth listening to. Hence the question whether the trial judge is entitled or bound, in point of law, to tell the jury that "there is no presumption that a witness tells the truth" is a barren one. Most of the judicial discussion of this subject [1] is so crude as not to advance sound theory and practice in the least.

§ 488. Statutes affecting Qualifications. The rules of the common law respecting the qualifications of witnesses were highly restrictive. In the progress of thought, these restrictions came in many instances to be recognized as illiberal and unnecessary; and legislation has in several important respects abolished them either wholly or in part. The statutes affecting these changes have often embodied in the same enactment the change of diverse rules. In order to have before us in practicable form all the statutory data affecting a given rule, it is necessary to set out in one place the series of enactments or statutory sections dealing with the general subject, and then from time to time in the course of discussion refer to this single collection of statutory texts. Accordingly, it is most convenient to set out here in mass, for subsequent reference in detail, the statutes affecting organic and emotional capacity, i.e. insanity, infancy, infamy, interest, and marital relationship, reserving for other places the statutes, easily separable, which affect other rules of testimonial evidence.[2]

§ 487. [1] E.g. Burton v. Burton (1920), 113 S. C. 227, 102 S. E. 282.

§ 488. [2] The editions of collected statutes here referred to will be found enumerated in the List of Statutes, prefixed to this volume.

I. England: 1814, St. 54 Geo. III, c. 170 (rated inhabitants of parish, etc., to be competant in certain cases); 1833, St. 3 & 4 Wm. IV, c. 42 (removes disqualification by reason of verdict being usable for or against the witness); 1840, St. 3 & 4 Vict. c. 26 (similar to St. 1814); 1843, St. 6 & 7 Vict. c. 85, Lord Denman's Act ("Whereas the inquiry after truth in courts of justice is often obstructed by incapacities created by the present law, and it is desirable that full information as to the facts in issue, both in criminal and in civil cases, should be laid before the persons who are appointed to decide upon them, and that such persons should exercise their judgment on the credit of the witnesses adduced and on the truth of their testimony. Now therefore be it enacted, That no person offered as a witness shall hereafter be excluded by reason of incapacity from crime or interest from giving evidence", provided that this shall not render competent "any party to any suit", "or the husband or wife of such persons"); 1846, St. 9 & 10 Vict.

c. 95 (in suits in the county courts, "the parties thereto, their wives and all other persons" may be examined); 1851, St. 14 & 15 Vict. c. 99, § 1 (St. 6 & 7 Vict. repealed as to the proviso about parties); § 2 (parties, and persons on whose behalf a suit is brought or defended, are to be competent and compellable); § 3 (person charged with offence indictable or punishable with summary conviction, not to be affected by statute; neither husband nor wife to be "competent or compellable to give evidence for or against" the other in criminal proceedings); § 4 (action for breach of promise of marriage or in consequence of adultery, not to be affected); 1853, St. 16 & 17 Vict. c. 83, § 1 ("husbands and wives of the parties" shall be competent and compellable to testify "on behalf of either or any of the parties"); § 2 (but nothing shall render husband or wife competent or compellable to testify for or against the other "in any criminal proceeding or in any proceeding instituted in consequence of adultery"); § 3 ("no husband shall be compellable to disclose any communication made to him by his wife during the marriage, and no wife shall be compellable to disclose any communication made to her by her husband during the marriage"); 1859, St. 22 & 23 Vict. c. 61, § 6 (on wife's petition for divorce founded on adultery, coupled with cruelty or desertion, both husband and wife are competent and compellable as to the cruelty or desertion); 1869, St. 32 & 33 Vict. c. 68 ("Whereas the discovery of truth in courts of justice has been signally promoted by the removal of the restrictions on the admissibility of witnesses and it is expedient to amend the law of evidence with the object of still further promoting such discovery"); § 2 (parties to an action for breach of marriage promise, competent); § 3 (parties to any proceeding in consequence of adultery, and their husbands and wives, to be competent; but no answer as to a witness' own adultery to be compellable, unless the witness has already testified in disproof thereof); 1877, St. 40 & 41 Vict. c. 14 (on indictment or proceeding to try or enforce a civil right only, the defendant, and the defendant's wife or husband, to be competent and compellable); 1885, St. 48 & 49 Vict. c. 69, § 4 (in prosecutions for rape under age, where the girl in question "or any other child of tender years" does not in the Court's opinion understand the nature of an oath, the child's evidence may be given, without oath, if in the Court's opinion the child "is possessed of sufficient intelligence to justify the reception of the evidence and understands the duty of speaking the truth"; with a proviso requiring corroboration, for which see post, § 2061); 1889, St. 52 & 53 Vict. c. 44, § 8 (similar); 1898, St. 61 & 62 Vict. c. 36, Criminal Evidence Act:

§ 1 ("Every person charged with an offence, and the wife or husband, as the case may be, of the person so charged, shall be a competent witness for the defence at every stage of the proceedings, whether the person so charged is charged solely or jointly with any other person. Provided as follows: — (a) A person so charged shall not be called as a witness in pursuance of this Act except upon his own application; (b) The failure of any person charged with an offence, or of the wife or husband, as the case may be, of the person so charged, to give evidence shall not be made the subject of any comment by the prosecution; (c) The wife or husband of the person so charged shall not, save as in this Act mentioned, be called as a witness in pursuance of this Act except upon the application of the person so charged; (d) Nothing in this Act shall make a husband compellable to disclose any communication made by him to his wife during the marriage, or a wife compellable to disclose any communication made to her by her husband during the marriage; (e) A person charged and being a witness in pursuance of this Act may be asked any question in cross-examination notwithstanding that it would tend to criminate him as to the offence charged; (f) A person charged and called as a witness in pursuance of this Act shall not be asked, and if asked shall not be required to answer, any question tending to show that he has committed or been convicted of or been charged with any offence other than that wherewith he is then charged, or is of bad character, unless — (i) the proof that he has committed or been convicted of such other offence is admissible evidence to show that he is guilty of the offence wherewith he is then charged; or (ii) he has personally or by his advocate asked questions of the witnesses or the prosecution with a view to establish his own good character, or has given evidence of his good character, or the nature or conduct of the defence is such as to involve imputations on the character of the prosecutor or the witnesses for the prosecution; or (iii) he has given evidence against any other person charged with the same offence; (g) Every person called as a witness in pursuance of this Act shall, unless otherwise ordered by the Court, give his evidence from the witness box or other place from which the other witnesses give their evidence; (h) Nothing in this Act shall affect the provisions of section eighteen of the Indictable Offences Act, 1848, or any right of the person charged to make a statement without being sworn");

§ 2 ("Where the only witness to the facts of the case called by the defence is the person charged, he shall be called as a witness immediately after the close of the evidence for the prosecution");

§ 3 ("In cases where the right of reply depends upon the question whether evidence has been called for the defence, the fact that the person charged has been called as a witness shall not of itself confer on the prosecution the right of reply");

§ 4 "(1) The wife or husband of a person charged with an offence under any indictment mentioned in the schedule of this Act may be called as a witness either for the prosecution or defence and without the consent of the person charged. (2) Nothing in this Act shall affect a case where the wife or husband of a person charged with an offence may at common law be called as a witness without the consent of that person"); 1904, St. 4 Edw. VII, c. 15, § 12 (Prevention of Cruelty to Children Act; in trials of any person for offences under this act, "such persons shall be competent but not compellable to give evidence, and the wife or husband of such person may be required to attend to give evidence as an ordinary witness in the case and shall be competent but not compellable to give evidence"); 1908, St. 8 Edw. VII, c. 67, § 27 (Children Act; the provisions of the Criminal Evidence Act to apply); 1912, St. 2–3 Geo. V, c. 20, § 7 (vagrancy offences; wife or husband "may be called as a witness either for the prosecution or for the defence and without the consent of the person charged," saving cases where at common law the same might be done); 1914, St. 4 & 5 Geo. V, c. 58, Criminal Justice Administration, § 28 (husband or wife of a person charged with bigamy may be called for prosecution or defence, without consent of the person charged).

II. CANADA: DOMINION OF CANADA: Revised Statutes 1906, c. 152, § 142 (in trials under the Temperance Act, the respondent or the wife or husband of the respondent is compellable and competent); Crim. Code 1892, § 685, R. S. c. 146, § 1003 (rape under age, and indecent assault; like Eng. St. 1885, c. 69, § 4); R. S. c. 145, Evidence Act, § 3 ("A person shall not be incompetent to give evidence by reason of interest or crime"); Evid. Act § 4, as amended by St. 1917, 7–8 Geo. V, c. 14 (1. "Every person charged with an offence, and, except as in this section otherwise provided, the wife or husband, as the case may be, of the person so charged, shall be a competent witness for the defence, whether the person so charged is charged solely or jointly with any other person. 2. The wife or husband of a person charged with an offence against any of the sections 202 to 206 inclusive, 211 to 219 inclusive, 238, 239, 242 A, 244, 245, 298 to 302 inclusive, 307 to 311 inclusive, 313 to 316 inclusive of the Criminal Code, shall be a competent and compellable witness for the prosecution without the consent of the person charged. 3. No husband shall be compellable to disclose any communication made to him by his wife during their marriage, and no wife shall be compellable to disclose any communication made to her by her husband during their marriage. 4. Nothing in this section shall affect a case where the wife or husband of a person charged with an offence may at common law be called as a witness without the consent of that person. 5. The failure of the person charged, or of the wife or husband of such person, to testify, shall not be made the subject of comment by the judge, or by counsel for the prosecution"; [par. 2 of this statute seems to have been enacted in consequence of the divided opinions in Gosselin v. King, 1903, 33 Can. Sup. 255, cited post, § 2245]); Evid. Act, § 6 ("A witness who is unable to speak, may give his evidence in any other manner in which he can make it intelligible"); § 16 ("in any legal proceeding" the rule of Eng. St. 1885, c. 69, § 4, is adopted); St. 1920, 10–11 Geo. V, c. 46, § 92 (Dominion election offences; in any civil action for penalties, "the parties thereto, and the husbands or wives of such parties respectively, shall be competent and compellable" as in other civil actions; But such evidence shall not be used in any criminal proceeding under this Act against the person giving it).

ALBERTA: St. 1910, 2d sess., c. 3, Evidence Act, § 4 (no witness to be excluded for "any alleged incapacity from crime or interest"); § 5 ("every person offered as a witness shall be admitted to give evidence notwithstanding" interest or conviction of crime); § 6 ("the parties to an action", etc., shall be "competent and compellable to give evidence on behalf of themselves or of any of the parties"; "husbands and wives of such parties and persons shall, except as hereinafter otherwise provided, be competent and compellable to give evidence on behalf of any of the parties"); § 8 (like Eng. St. 1869, St. 32–33 Vict. c. 68, § 3); § 9 (like Eng. St. 1853, 16–17 Vict. c. 83, § 3).

BRITISH COLUMBIA: Revised Statutes 1911, c. 78, § 4 (like Dom. Evidence Act, § 4); § 6 (child; quoted post, § 1828); § 7 (like Dom. Evid. Act, § 4, par. 1, without the exception); §§ 12–15 (testimony of certain natives not understanding an oath may be received); § 22 (like Dom. Evid. Act, § 6); § 8 "[In civil proceedings, the parties] and their wives and husbands shall, except as hereinafter excepted, be competent as witnesses and compellable" as if not parties, etc.; provided that the plaintiff's testimony, in breach of promise of marriage, must be corroborated); § 9 ("No husband shall be compellable to disclose any communication made to him by his wife during the marriage", and no wife similarly); c. 67, § 27 (in divorce, the Court may order the examination or cross-examination of the petitioner, who shall however not be bound to answer any question tending to show him guilty of adultery); c. 81, § 75 (on trial of offences under the Factories Act, the defendant is "competent and compellable to give evidence"); c. 107, § 100 (contributing to a child's delinquency; like c. 78, § 6, supra).

MANITOBA: Revised Statutes 1913, c. 65, §§ 3, 4, 6 (like Dom. Evidence Act, §§ 3, 4, 6, except that § 4 stands as before the 1917 Amendment of the Dominion Act, i.e. it omits par. 2 and 4, and also in par. 1 the words "for the defence"); § 39 (like ib., § 16); c. 70, § 73 (in offences under the Factory Act, the accused shall be competent and compellable); St. 1912, R. S. 1913, c. 206, § 4 (family desertion; "the wife shall be a competent and compellable witness against the husband").

NEW BRUNSWICK: Consolidated Statutes 1903, c. 127, § 3 ("No person shall be incompetent to give evidence by reason of interest or crime"); § 4 ("(1) . . . the parties to the proceeding and the persons in whose behalf the action or other proceeding is brought or instituted, or opposed, or defended, and the husbands and wives of such parties shall, except as hereinafter excepted, be competent and compellable to give evidence. . . . (2) Nothing in this section shall apply to any suit, action or proceeding in any Court instituted in consequence of adultery"); § 5 ("On the trial of any issue joined, or of any matter or question, or on any enquiry arising in any suit, action or other proceeding in the Court of Divorce and Matrimonial Causes, or in any other Court, any husband shall be competent to give evidence for or against his wife, and any wife shall be competent to give evidence for or against her husband, whether such proceedings were instituted in consequence of adultery or otherwise"); § 6 ("Upon the trial of any person in any Court for any violation of any Statute of this Province, or upon the prosecution of any person for any penalty under any law of this Province, the person charged, and the wife or husband, as the case may be, of such person, shall be a competent witness, whether the person so charged is charged solely or jointly with any other person; provided, however, that neither such person, nor the wife or husband of such person, shall be compellable to testify, and that upon such trial no husband shall be competent to disclose any communication made by his wife to him during their marriage, and no wife shall be competent to disclose any communication made to her by her husband during their marriage"); § 9 ("Nothing herein shall render any party to a proceeding in any Court, instituted in consequence of adultery, or the husband or wife of such party, liable to be asked or bound to answer any question tending to show that he or she has been guilty of adultery, unless he or she shall have already given evidence in the same proceeding in disproof of his or her alleged adultery"); § 10 ("Nothing herein contained shall render any person charged with any offence against any law of this Province compellable to give evidence for or against himself, or the wife or husband of such person, as the case may be, compellable to give evidence for or against such person"); § 11 ("Nothing herein contained shall render any husband compellable to disclose any communication made to him by his wife during the marriage, nor any wife compellable to disclose any communication made to her by her husband during the marriage"); § 12 ("Nothing herein contained shall extend or apply to any prosecution instituted under and by virtue of the criminal laws of Canada for any breach of a Provincial Statute"); St. 1905, c. 7, § 41 (offences under the Factory Act; the person charged shall be "competent and compellable to give evidence in or with respect to such complaint, proceeding, matter, or question").

NEWFOUNDLAND: Consolidated Statutes 1916, c. 91, Evidence Act, § 1 (the parties and their beneficiaries, "and the husbands and wives of the parties" and of the beneficiaries, shall be "competent and compellable", except as otherwise declared; provided that "the party so called to testify may be cross-examined by the opposite party under the rules applicable to the cross-examination of witnesses"); § 2 (no person "charged with the commission of any indictable offence" shall be "competent and compellable to give evidence for or against himself or herself", nor shall any person be "compellable to answer any question tending to criminate himself or herself", nor shall any husband "in any such criminal proceeding" be "competent or compellable to give evidence for or against his wife", nor any wife similarly; but nothing here "shall preclude a defendant or the husband or wife of the defendant from becoming a witness, should he or she think fit, in any summary proceeding of a criminal or other nature" and "no witness in any proceeding instituted in consequence of adultery, whether a party to the suit or not, or the husband or wife of such party, shall be liable to be asked or bound to answer any question tending to show that he or she has been guilty of adultery, unless such witness shall have already given evidence in the same proceeding in disproof of his or her alleged adultery"); § 3 (marital communications; like Eng. St. 1853, c. 83, § 3); § 4 (breach of promise; like Ont. Rev. St. 1914, c. 76, § 11); § 6 ("no person offered as a witness shall be excluded by reason of incapacity from crime");

NORTHWEST TERRITORIES: St. 1901, c. 10, § 1 (rules of the Canada Evidence Act 1893, as now or hereafter amended, made applicable in this jurisdiction; compare ante, § 6 b); Can. Rev. St. 1886, c. 50, § 31 (interest as executor or as legatee of a will is not to disqualify a person as witness in proving the will).

NOVA SCOTIA: Revised Statutes 1900, c. 163, § 34 (no person shall be incompetent "by reason of incapacity from crime or from interest"); § 35 (the parties and beneficiaries and their husbands and wives shall be competent and compellable; provided that no "opposite or interested party" shall obtain a judgment, in any action against "the heirs, executors, administrators, or assigns of a deceased person", "on his own testimony, or that of his wife, or both of them, in respect to any dealing, transaction, or agreement with the deceased, or in respect to any act, statement, acknowledgment, or admission of the deceased, unless such testimony is corroborated by other material evidence"; compare the statutes post, § 2065); § 36 (the preceding shall not apply to any proceeding "instituted by the husband or wife in consequence of adultery"); § 37 (nothing herein shall render any person compellable "to answer any question tending to subject him to criminal proceedings or to prosecution for any penalty"; nor render any person charged in any criminal proceeding with "any offence under the statutes of the province, or the wife or husband of the person so charged, compellable to give evidence against the person so charged"); § 38 (marital communications; like Eng. St. 1853, c. 83, § 3); c. 100, § 164 (in offences concerning the sale of intoxicating liquors, "the person charged or the husband of such person shall be competent and compellable", saving the privilege against self-crimination); St. 1866, c. 13, § 11, in Rev. St. 1900, vol. II, p. 864 (in proceedings for divorce by the wife for adultery coupled with cruelty, husband and wife are "competent and compellable to give evidence of or relating to such cruelty").

Ontario: Revised Statutes 1914, c. 76, Evidence Act, §§ 4, 5 (neither interest nor conviction of crime is to disqualify, and every person shall be admitted notwithstanding interest or conviction); § 6 (parties and beneficiaries shall be competent and compellable, and also their husbands and wives, except as otherwise declared); § 8 (proceedings in consequence of adultery; parties and their husbands and wives shall be competent; but "the husband or wife, if competent only under this Act, shall not be asked or bound to answer any question tending to show that he or she has been guilty of adultery, unless he or she shall have already given evidence in the same proceeding in disproof of his or her alleged adultery"); § 9 (marital communications; like Eng. St. 1853, c. 83, § 3).

Prince Edward Island: St. 1889, c. 9, §§ 3, 4 (incapacity by crime or interest; like Eng. St. 1843, c. 85, without the provisos); § 5 (parties and beneficiaries, and their husbands and wives, are "competent and compellable", except as otherwise declared); § 6 (privilege against self-crimination reserved for all persons); § 7 (breach of promise; like Eng. St. 1869, c. 68, § 2); § 8 (adultery; like ib. § 3, except that the proviso is made applicable only to "the husband or wife if competent only under and by virtue of this Act"); § 9 (marital communications; like Eng. St. 1853, c. 83, § 3); § 10 (the "party opposing or defending, or the wife or husband of such party, shall be competent and compellable" in any proceeding under an act of this Legislature or before a justice of the peace or stipendiary magistrate when the matter is not a crime); St. 1906, 6 Edw. VII, c. 12 (St. 1889, c. 9, § 10, amended by striking out the words "not being a crime").

Saskatchewan: Revised Statutes 1920, c. 44, § 28 (like Ont. R. S. c. 76, § 4); § 29 (like ib. § 6); § 30 (like ib. § 9), § 36 (children; like Can. Evid. Act, § 16); St. 1920, c. 28, § 1 (amending Evid. Act, R. S. c. 44, § 29, by adding sub-sect. (2) that when "the evidence of any party defendant, or the husband or wife of such party, is taken at the instance of the adverse party," no sentence of imprisonment should be imposed).

Yukon: Consolidated Ordinances 1914, c. 30, § 34 (like N. Sc. Rev. St. 1900, c. 163, § 34); ib. § 35 (like N. Sc. Rev. St. 1900, c. 163, § 35); ib. § 36 (like N. Sc. Rev. St. 1900, c. 163, § 36); ib. § 37 (like N. Sc. Rev. St. 1900, c. 163, § 37); ib. § 38 (like N. Sc. Rev. St. 1900, c. 163, § 38).

III. United States: Federal: Revised Statutes 1878, and Code 1919; R. S. § 858 ("In the courts of the United States, no witness shall be excluded in any action on account of color, or in any civil action because he is a party to or interested in the issue tried; provided, that in actions by or against executors, administrators, or guardians, in which judgment may be rendered for or against them, neither party shall be allowed to testify against the other, as to any transaction with or statement by the testator, intestate, or ward, unless called to testify thereto by the opposite party, or required to testify thereto by the Court. In all other respects, the laws of the State in which the Court is held shall be the rules of decision as to the competency of witnesses in the courts of the United States in trials at common law and in equity and admiralty"; repealed by St. 1906, infra); R. S. § 1977, Code § 3541 ("All persons within the jurisdiction of the United States shall have the same right in every State and Territory to . . . give evidence . . . as is enjoyed by white citizens"); R. S. § 2140, Code § 4390 ("Indians shall be competent witnesses" in all cases concerning illegal sale of liquor to Indians); St. 1874, June 22, c. 391, § 8, Code § 10107 ("No officer, or other person entitled to or claiming compensation under any provision of this act [against evading customs laws] shall be thereby disqualified from becoming a witness in any action, suit, or proceeding for the recovery, mitigation, or remission thereof", and the defendant may testify); St. 1878, March 16, c. 37, Code § 1357 ("In the trial of all indictments, informations, complaints, and other proceedings against persons charged with the commission of crimes, offences, and misdemeanors, in the United States courts, territorial courts, and courts martial, and courts of inquiry, in any State or Territory, including the District of Columbia, the person so charged shall, at his own request but not otherwise, be a competent witness. And his failure to make such request shall not create any presumption against him"); St. 1887, March 3, c. 397, § 1, Code § 1358 ("In any proceeding or examination before a grand jury, a judge, justice, or a United States commissioner, or a Court, in any prosecution for bigamy, polygamy, or unlawful cohabitation, under any statute of the United States, the lawful husband or wife of the accused shall be a competent witness, and may be called, but shall not be compelled to testify in such proceeding, examination, or prosecution, without the consent of the husband or wife, as the case may be; and such witness shall not be permitted to testify as to any statement or communication made by either husband or wife to each other, during the existence of the marriage relation, deemed confidential at common law"); St. 1892, Code § 3658 (for this and other statutes affecting the Chinese, see post, § 516, incapacity by race); St. 1903, Code § 8804 (bankruptcy; the Court may "require any designated person, including the bankrupt and his wife", to appear for examination "concerning the acts, conduct, or property of a bankrupt whose estate is in process of administration under this Act; provided that the wife may be examined only touching business transacted by her or to which she is a party, and to determine the fact whether she has transacted or been a party to any business of the bankrupt"); St. 1906, June 29, Code § 1356 ("The competency of a witness to testify in any civil action, suit, or proceeding in the courts of the United States shall be determined by the laws of the State or Territory in which the court is held"); St. 1910, Mar. 26, No. 107, Code § 3572 (amending St. 1907, Feb. 20, § 3; importation of aliens for prostitution; in such prosecutions husband or wife shall be admissible against each other); St. 1911, Mar. 3, Code § 1155 ("No person shall be excluded as a witness in the Court of Claims on account of color or because he or she is a party to or interested in the cause or proceeding; and any plaintiff or party in interest may be examined as a witness on the part of the government"); 1904, Fajardo v. Costa, 1 P. R. Fed. 119, 123 (survivor of a transaction with a deceased agent, held competent under U. S. Rev. St. § 858); for the applicability of the Federal Statutes, see ante, § 6.

ALABAMA: Constitution 1901, Art. I., § 6 ("In all criminal prosecutions the accused has a right . . . to testify in all cases in his own behalf, if he elects so to do"); Code 1907, § 4007 ("In civil suits and proceedings, there must be no exclusion of any witness because he is a party, or interested in the issue tried, except that no person having a pecuniary interest in the result of the suit or the proceeding shall be allowed to testify against the party to whom his interest is opposed, as to any transaction with or statement by the deceased person whose estate is interested in the result of the suit or proceeding, or when such deceased person, at the time of such transaction or statement, acted in any representative or fiduciary relation whatsoever to the party against whom such testimony is sought to be introduced, unless called to testify thereto by the party to whom such interest is opposed, or unless the testimony of such deceased person in relation to such transaction or statement is introduced in evidence by the party whose interest is opposed to that of the witness, or has been taken and is on file in the cause. No person who is an incompetent witness under this section shall make himself competent by transferring his interest to another"); § 4008 ("No objection must be allowed to the competency of a witness because of his conviction for any crime, except perjury or subornation of perjury; but if he has been convicted of a crime involving moral turpitude, the objection goes to his credibility"; before 1907, the credibility clause read "infamous crime"); § 4013 ("Persons who have not the use of reason, as idiots, lunatics during lunacy, and children who do not understand the nature of an oath, are incompetent witnesses"); § 4014 ("The court must, by examination, decide upon the capacity of one alleged to be incompetent from idiocy, lunacy, or insanity, or drunkenness, or childhood"); § 4015 ("When the borrower is dead, and the usury is relied on as a defense, the representative of the borrower, having given ten days' notice to the plaintiff, or his attorney, of his intention so to do, is a competent witness to prove the usury, by swearing that he believes the contract to be usurious, if the plaintiff was the lender, unless the plaintiff denies on oath, in open court, the truth of the facts proposed to be sworn to by the defendant"); § 7894 ("On the trial of all indictments, complaints, or other criminal proceedings, the person on trial shall, at his own request, but not otherwise, be a competent witness; and his failure to make such request shall not create any presumption against him, nor be the subject of comment by counsel"); § 7895 ("There shall be no exclusion of a witness in a criminal case, because, on conviction of the defendant, he may be entitled to a reward, or to a restoration of property, or to the whole or any part of the fine or penalty inflicted; such objection is addressed to the credibility, not to the competency, of the witness"); § 7898 ("When two or more defendants are jointly indicted, the Court may, at any time before the evidence for the defence has commenced, order any defendant to be discharged from the indictment, in order that he may be a witness for the prosecution; and such order operates as an acquittal of such defendant, provided he does testify"); § 7899 ("When two or more defendants are jointly indicted, the Court may direct a verdict of acquittal to be entered in favor of any one of them, against whom there is not, in the opinion of the Court, evidence sufficient to put him on his defence; and being acquitted, he may be a witness"); St.

1903, Code 1907, § 7900 ("in all cases where a husband is charged with abandoning his family and leaving them in danger of becoming a burden to the public, the wife shall be a competent witness against her husband"); St. 1915, No. 826, p. 942 ("the husband and wife may testify either for or against each other in criminal cases, but shall not be compelled to do so").

ALASKA: Compiled Laws 1913, §§ 2254, 2255 (like Or. Laws 1920, §§ 1530, 1531); § 2258 (like ib. § 1534, omitting the last words, following "a right to cross-examination"); § 2259 (like ib. § 1535); § 1865 (like Or. Laws 1920, § 731, omitting the first sentence); § 1866 (like ib. § 732, par. 1 and 2, inserting in par. 1 after "time" the words "of the transaction and"); § 1867 (like ib. § 733, par. 1); St. 1913, Apr. 28, c. 75 (pandering; "a husband or wife shall be a competent witness against the other, and the wife may be compelled to testify" where the husband is defendant); St. 1915, Apr. 21, c. 12, § 3 (family-desertion; like the Washington law); St. 1915, April 23, c. 19 ("the fact that two or more persons are jointly indicted shall not render any one so indicted incompetent as a witness for or against his co-defendant, whether said co-defendants are tried jointly or severally"); St. 1919, c. 49, § 5 (family-desertion; like Wash. R. & B. Codes 1909, § 5935).

ARIZONA: Revised Statutes 1913, Civil Code, § 1674 ("Every person, including the party, may testify in any action or proceeding, civil or criminal, in court, or before any person who has authority to receive evidence, except as otherwise expressly provided by law"); § 1675 ("No person shall be incompetent to testify because he is a party to a suit or proceeding or interested in the issue tried, nor because he has been indicted, accused or convicted of a crime"); § 1676 ("No person shall be incompetent to testify on account of his religious opinions, or for want of any religious belief"); § 1677 ("The following persons cannot be witnesses in a civil action: 1. Those who are of unsound mind at the time of their production for examination; 2. Children under ten years of age, who appear incapable of receiving just impressions of the facts respecting which they are examined, or of relating them truly; 3. A husband cannot be examined for or against his wife, without her consent, nor a wife for or against her husband, without his consent; nor can either, during the marriage or afterwards, be, without the consent of the other, examined as to any communication made by one to the other during the marriage; but this exception does not apply to an action for divorce or a civil action by one against the other, nor to a criminal action or proceeding as provided in the Penal Code; or in an action brought by husband or wife against another person for the alienation of the affections of either husband or wife; or in an action for damages against another person for adultery committed by either husband or wife"); § 1678 ("In an action by or against executors, administrators, or guardians, in which judgment may be rendered, for or against them as such, neither party shall be allowed to testify against the others as to any transaction with or statement by the testator, intestate, or ward, unless called to testify thereto by the opposite party or required to testify thereto by the Court; and the provisions of this section shall extend to and include all actions by or against the heirs or legal representatives of a decedent arising out of any transaction with such decedent"); § 3861 ("either party may be a witness" in divorce proceedings); Penal Code, § 1225 (rules for witnesses in criminal cases are the same as in civil cases, except as otherwise provided); § 1226 ("All persons, without exception, otherwise than is specified in the next two sections, who, having organs of sense, can perceive, and, perceiving, can make known their perceptions to others, may be witnesses. Therefore, neither parties nor other persons who have an interest in the event of an action or proceeding, are excluded; nor those who have been convicted of crime; nor persons on account of their opinions on matters of religious belief; although in every case the credibility of the witness may be drawn in question"); § 1227 ("The following persons cannot be witnesses in a criminal action: 1. Those who are of unsound mind at the time of their production for examination; 2. Children under ten years of age, who appear incapable of receiving just impressions of the facts respecting which they are examined, or of relating them truly"); § 1228 ("There are particular relations in which it is the policy of the law to encourage confidence and to preserve it inviolate; therefore, a person cannot be examined as a witness in the following cases: 1. A husband cannot be examined for or against his wife, without her consent, nor a wife for or against her husband, without his consent; nor can either, during the marriage or afterwards, be, without the consent of the other, examined as to any communication made by one to the other during the marriage; but this exception does not apply in the following cases, and in such cases the husband or wife may be examined for or against each other as in case of other witnesses: (a) In a criminal action or proceeding for a crime committed by the husband against the wife, or by the wife against the husband. (b) In a criminal action or proceeding against the husband for the abandonment, failure to support or provide for, or failure or neglect to furnish the necessities of life to the wife or the minor children, the wife shall be a competent witness against the husband. — The wife may, at her own request, but not otherwise, be examined as a witness for or against her husband, and the husband may, at his own request, but not otherwise, be examined as a witness for or against his wife in the following cases (1) Upon a prosecution for bigamy or adultery, committed by either husband or wife, or for rape, seduction, or the crime against nature, or any similar offense, committed by the husband"); § 1229 ("A defendant in a criminal action or proceeding cannot be compelled to be a witness against himself; but if he offer himself as a witness, he may be cross-examined by the counsel for the Territory as to all matters about which he was examined in chief. His neglect or refusal to be a witness cannot in any manner prejudice him, nor be used against him on the trial or proceeding"); §§ 1039, 1040 (on joint indictment, the Court may, on prosecuting attorney's application, at any time before defendant has gone into his defence, discharge defendant to testify for prosecution; and when the Court believes that there is not sufficient evidence as to one to put him on his defence, it shall order his discharge, before evidence closed, to be witness for co-defendant); § 248 (pandering, etc.; the female is a competent witness to "any and all matters, including conversation with the accused, or by him, with or by third persons in her presence", notwithstanding marriage with the accused before or after the offence); St. 1921, c. 114, § 2 (filiation proceedings; "the mother of said child shall not be considered a competent witness in any case where the alleged natural father of said child shall be dead at the time of the trial").

ARKANSAS: Digest 1919, § 3121 ("No person shall be rendered incompetent to testify in criminal cases by reason of being the person injured or defrauded, or intended to be injured or defrauded, or because he would be entitled to satisfaction for the injury, or may be liable to pay the costs of prosecution"); § 3122 ("In all cases where two or more persons are jointly or otherwise concerned in the commission of any crime or misdemeanor, either of such persons may be sworn as a witness in relation to such crime or misdemeanor; but the testimony given by such witness shall in no instance be used against him in any criminal prosecution for the same offence"); § 3123 ("On the trial of all indictments, informations, complaints, and other proceedings against persons charged with the commission of crimes, offences, and misdemeanors, the person so charged shall, at his own request, but not otherwise, be a competent witness, and his failure to make such request shall not create any presumption against him"); § 3124 ("When two or more persons are indicted in the same indictment, either may testify in behalf of or against the other defendant or defendants"); § 4144 ("In civil actions, no witness shall be excluded because he is a party to a suit or interested in the issue to be tried; Provided, in actions by or against executors, administrators, or guardians, in which judgment may be rendered for or against them, neither party shall be allowed to testify against the other as to any transaction with or statements of the testator, intestate, or ward, unless called to testify thereto by the opposite party; Provided further, this section may be amended or repealed by the General Assembly"); § 4146 ("All persons except those enumerated herein shall be competent to testify in a civil action. The following persons shall be incompetent to testify: First: Infants under the age of ten years, and over that age if incapable of understanding the obligation of an oath; Second: Persons who are of unsound mind at the time of being produced as witnesses; Third: Husband and wife, for or against each other, or concerning any communication made by one to the other during the marriage, whether called as a witness while that relation subsists or afterward, but either shall be allowed to testify for the other in regard to any business transacted by the one for the other in the capacity of agent"); § 4147 ("All other objections to witnesses shall go to their credit alone, and be weighed by the jury or tribunal to which their evidence is offered"); § 3125 ("In any criminal prosecution a husband and wife may testify against each other in all cases in which an injury has been done by either against the person or property of the other"); § 4145 ("No person shall be disqualified to testify in any action, civil or criminal, pending in any of the courts of this State, by reason of having been convicted of any felony or other crime whatsoever; but evidence of his former conviction of any crime by a court of this or any other State or Territory of the United States shall be admissible" to affect his credibility); § 2416 (seduction; though marriage with accused has ensued, "such female shall be a competent witness against such accused", etc.); § 2709 (pandering; like W. Va. Code 1914, § 5171).

CALIFORNIA: Codes 1872, as amended to 1921 inclusive: Code of Civil Procedure, § 1879 ("All persons, without exception, otherwise than is specified in the next two sections, who, having organs of sense, can perceive, and, perceiving, can make known their perceptions to others, may be witnesses. Therefore, neither parties nor other persons who have an interest in the event of an action or proceeding are excluded; nor those who have been convicted of crime; nor persons on account of their opinions on matters of religious belief; although in every case the credibility of the witness may be drawn in question, as provided in section 1847"); § 1880 ("The following persons cannot be witnesses: 1. Those who are of unsound mind at the time of their production for examination. 2. Children under ten years of age, who appear incapable of receiving just impressions of the facts respecting which they are examined, or of relating them truly. 3. Parties or assignors of parties to an action or proceeding, or persons on behalf of whom an action or proceeding is prosecuted, against an executor or administrator upon a claim or demand against the estate of a deceased person, as to any matter of fact occurring before the death of such deceased person"); § 1881 ("There are particular relations in which it is the policy of the law to encourage confidence and to preserve it inviolate; therefore, a person cannot be examined as a witness in the following cases: 1. A husband cannot be examined for or against his wife, without her consent, nor a wife for or against her husband, without his consent; nor can either, during the marriage or afterwards, be, without the consent of the other, examined as to any communication made by one to the other during the marriage; but this exception does not apply to a civil action or proceeding by one against the other, nor to a criminal action or proceeding for a crime committed by one against the other, or in an action brought by husband or wife against another person for the alienation of affections of either husband or wife; or in an action for damages against another person for adultery committed by husband or wife"); Penal Code, § 675 (imprisonment affecting civil rights does not create incompetency as witness in a criminal case); § 1099 ("When two or more persons are included in the same charge the Court may, at any time before the defendants have gone into their defence, on the application of the district attorney, direct any defendant to be discharged, that he may be a witness for the People"); § 1100 ("When two or more persons are included in the same indictment or information, and the Court is of opinion that in regard to a particular defendant there is not sufficient evidence to put him on his defence, it must order him to be discharged before the evidence is closed, that he may be a witness for his co-defendant"); § 1102 ("The rules of evidence in civil actions are applicable also to criminal actions, except as otherwise provided in this code"); § 1322 ("Neither husband nor wife is a competent witness for or against the other in a criminal action or proceeding to which one or both are parties, except with the consent of both, or in case of criminal actions or proceedings for a crime committed by one against the person or property of the other, or in cases of criminal violence upon one by the other, or in cases of criminal actions or proceedings for bigamy, or adultery, or in cases of criminal actions or proceedings brought under the provisions of sections 270 and 270a of this code"); § 1323 (if the accused "offer himself as a witness, he may be cross-examined by the counsel for the people as to all matters about which he was examined in chief"; "his neglect or refusal to be a witness cannot in any manner prejudice him nor be used against him on the trial or proceeding"); § 266g (husband placing wife in house of prostitution; wife is "competent witness against her husband"); St. 1911, Feb. 8, p. 9, No. 865, § 2 (pandering; any female sought for prostitution is competent "for or against the accused as to any transaction or as to any conversation with the accused or by him with another person or persons in her presence, notwithstanding her having married the accused before or after" the offence, "whether called as a witness during the existence of the marriage or after its dissolution"); St. 1911, Feb. 8, p. 10, No. 866, § 2 (pimping; like the foregoing Act).

COLORADO: Compiled Laws 1921, § 5570 (in prosecution for failure to support, the wife is competent against the husband with or without his consent); § 5831 (on a trial in which a county is interested, the inhabitants are competent witnesses, if otherwise qualified); § 6555 ("All persons, without exception, other than those specified in the next three sections, and in the second, third, fourth, seventh, and eighth sections of chapter one hundred and four of the general laws may be witnesses. Neither parties nor other persons who have an interest in the event or proceeding shall be excluded; nor those who have been convicted of crime; nor persons on account of their opinions on matters of religious belief; although in every case the credibility of the witness may be drawn in question, as now provided by law; but the conviction of any person for any crime may be shown for the purpose of affecting the credibility of such witness; and the fact of such conviction may be proved like any other fact not of record, either by the witness himself (who shall be compelled to testify thereto), or by any other person cognizant of such conviction, as impeaching testimony or by any other competent testimony"); § 6556 ("That no party to any civil action, suit, or proceeding, or person directly interested in the event thereof, shall be allowed to testify therein of his own motion, or in his own behalf, by virtue of the foregoing section [now § 6555] when any adverse party sues or defends as the trustee or conservator of an idiot, lunatic, or distracted person, or as the executor or administrator, heir, legatee, or devisee of any deceased person, or as guardian or trustee of any such heir, legatee, or devisee, unless when called as a witness by such adverse party so suing or defending; and also, except in the following cases, namely: First: In any such action, suit, or proceeding, a party or interested person may testify to facts occurring after the death of such deceased person. Second: When in such action, suit, or proceeding, any agent of any deceased person shall, in behalf of any person or persons suing or being sued, in either of the capacities above named, testify to any conversation or transaction between the agent and the opposite party or parties in interest, such party or parties in interest may testify concerning the same conversation or transaction. Third: When in any such action, suit, or proceeding, any such party suing or defending as aforesaid, or any person having a direct interest in the event of such action, suit, or proceeding, shall testify in behalf of such party so suing or defending, to any conversation or transaction with the opposite party or parties in interest, then such opposite party in interest shall also be permitted to testify as to the same conversation or transaction. Fourth: When in any such action, suit, or proceeding, any witness not a party to the record, or not a party in interest, or not an agent of such deceased person, shall in behalf of any party to such action, suit, or proceeding, testify to any conversation or admission by any adverse party or parties in interest, occurring before the death and in the absence of such deceased person, such adverse party or parties in interest may also testify to the same admission or conversation. Fifth: When in any such action, suit, or proceeding, the deposition of such deceased person shall be read in evidence at the trial, any adverse party or parties in interest may testify as to all matters and things testified to in such deposition by such deceased person and not excluded for irrelevancy or incompetency. Sixth: In any such action, suit or proceeding, any adverse party or parties in interest may testify as to any conversation or admission, or as to all matters and things connected with the subject matter of said action, suit or proceeding, and which conversation and admission and matters and things aforesaid, occurred before the death and in the presence of such deceased and also in the presence of any member of the family of such deceased person over the age of sixteen years, or in the presence of any heir, legatee or devisee of such deceased person over the age of sixteen years; Provided, however, That such member of the family, heir, legatee or devisee as the case may be, is present at the hearing of said action, suit or proceeding, or whose testimony is or may be procurable at such trial. Seventh: When the defendant in any such suit has previously been required to testify under the provisions of section 7080 or section 7253 of the Revised Statutes of Colorado, 1908, the testimony so given if reduced to writing, or the stenographic minutes thereof, so far as the same relates to the estate concerning which or for the benefit of which suit is brought and is relevant to the issue in such suit and competent under the general rules of evidence, may be read in behalf of such defendant"); § 6558 ("That in any action, suit, or proceeding, by or against any surviving partner or partners, joint contractor or contractors, no adverse party or person adversely interested in the event thereof, shall, by virtue of section one of this act, be rendered a competent witness to testify to any admission or conversation by any deceased partner or joint contractor, unless some one or more of the surviving partners or joint contractors were also present at the time of such admission or conversation"); § 6559 (an assignment or release "made for the purpose of allowing such person to testify" does not make him competent); § 6560 (statute is not to affect the law in regard to the settlement of estates of deceased persons, etc., or to the acknowledgment or proof of deeds, or to the attestation of instruments required to be attested); § 6562 ("The following persons shall not be witnesses: 1. Those who are of unsound mind at the time of their production for examination. 2. Children under ten years of age who appear incapable of receiving just impressions of the facts respecting which they are examined or of relating them truly"); § 6563 ("There are particular relations in which it is the policy of the law to encourage confidence and to preserve it inviolate; therefore a person shall not be examined as a witness in the following cases: 1. A husband shall not be examined for or against his wife without her consent, nor a wife for or against her husband without his consent; nor shall either during the marriage or afterward be, without the consent of the other, examined as to any communication made by one to the other during marriage: but this exception does not apply to a civil action or proceeding by one against the other, nor to a criminal action or proceeding for a crime committed by one against the other"); § 6564 ("If a person offer himself as a witness, that is to be deemed a consent to the examination; also the offer of a wife, husband, attorney, clergyman, physician, or surgeon, as a witness, shall be deemed a consent to the examination within the meaning of the first four subdivisions of the last section"); § 7100 ("The party or parties injured shall in all cases be competent witnesses, unless he, she, or they shall be rendered incompetent by reason of his, her, or their infamy or other legal incompetency other than that of interest. The credibility of all such witnesses shall be left to the jury as in other cases"); § 7101 ("Hereafter in all criminal cases tried in any court of this State, the accused, if he so desire, shall be sworn as a witness in the case, and the jury shall give his testimony such weight as they think it deserves; but in no case shall a neglect or refusal of the accused to testify be taken or considered any evidence of his guilt or innocence"); § 7102 ("The solemn affirmation of witnesses shall be deemed sufficient"); § 2451 (married woman becoming special partner in limited firm "shall be a competent witness for or against her husband, the same as though a femme sole" in all proceedings arising out of partnership); § 5342 ("no person making a claim against the estate of any testator, intestate, or mental incompetent shall be permitted to prove the same by his or her own oath"); § 6846 (pimping; any offender is competent against any other offender, and "a husband or wife shall be a competent witness against the other, with or without consent").

COLUMBIA (DISTRICT): Code of Law 1919, § 921 (joint indictees; like Arizona P. C. §§ 1039, 1040); § 1063 ("Except as herein elsewhere provided, no person shall be incompetent to testify in any civil action or proceeding by reason of his being a party thereto or interested in the result thereof; but if otherwise competent to testify, he shall be competent to give evidence in his own behalf and competent and compellable to give evidence on behalf of any other party to such action or proceeding"); § 1064 ("If one of the original parties to a transaction or contract has since the date thereof died or become insane or otherwise incapable of testifying in relation thereto, the other party thereto shall not be allowed to testify as to any transaction or declaration or admission of the said deceased or otherwise incapable party in any action between said other party, or any person claiming under him, and the executors, administrators, trustees, heirs, devisees, assignees, committee, or other person legally representing the deceased or otherwise incapable party, unless he be first called upon to testify in relation to said transaction or declaration or admission by the other party, or the opposite party first testify in relation to the same, or unless the transaction or contract was made or had with an agent of the said deceased or otherwise incapable party, and the said agent testifies in relation thereto, or unless called to testify thereto by the Court"); § 1065 (if the former testimony of a party deceased or insane be used, "the opposite party may testify in opposition thereto"); § 1066 ("Where any of the original parties to a transaction or contract which is the subject of investigation are partners or other joint contractors, or jointly entitled or liable, and some of them have died, or otherwise become incapable of testifying, any others with whom the contract or transaction was personally made or had, or in whose presence or with whose privity it was made or had, or admissions in relation to the same were made, shall not, nor shall the adverse party, be incompetent to testify because some of the parties or joint contractors, or those jointly entitled or liable, have died or otherwise become incapable of testifying"); § 1067 ("No person shall be incompetent to testify, in either civil or criminal proceedings, by reason of his having been convicted of crime other than perjury, but such fact may be given in evidence to affect his credit as a witness, either upon the cross-examination of the witness or by evidence 'aliunde'; and the party cross-examining him shall not be concluded by his answers as to such matters. In order to prove such conviction of crime it shall not be necessary to produce the whole record of the proceedings containing such conviction, but the certificate, under seal, of the clerk of the court wherein such proceedings were had, stating the fact of the conviction and for what cause, shall be sufficient"); § 1068 ("In both civil and criminal proceedings, husband and wife shall be competent but not compellable to testify for or against each other"); § 1069 ("In neither civil nor criminal proceedings shall a husband or wife be competent to testify as to any confidential communications made by one to the other during the marriage"); St. 1906, Mar. 23, § 2, U. S. Stat. L. vol. 34, p. 87 (offence of failing to support one's family; "in all prosecutions under this act any existing provisions of law prohibiting the disclosure of confidential communications between husband and wife shall not apply, and both husband and wife shall be competent and compellable witnesses to testify to any and all relevant matters, including the fact of such marriage and the parentage of such child or children").

The following provisions of the Federal laws apply expressly to the District: U. S. St. 1878, March 16, Code 1919, § 1357 (accused in criminal cases).

Connecticut: General Statutes 1918, § 5735 ("In actions by or against the representatives of deceased persons, the entries, memoranda, and declarations of the deceased, relevant to the matter in issue, may be received as evidence; and in actions by or against the representatives of deceased persons, in which any trustee or receiver is an adverse party, the testimony of the deceased, relevant to the matter in issue, given at his examination, upon the application of said trustee or receiver, shall be received in evidence"); § 5706 ("A wife may be compelled to testify in any action brought against her husband for necessaries furnished her while living apart from him"); § 5705 ("No person shall be disqualified as a witness in any action by reason of his interest in the event of the same as a party or otherwise, or of his disbelief in the existence of a Supreme Being, or of his conviction of crime; but such interest or conviction may be shown for the purpose of affecting his credit"); § 5741 (Any party to a civil action may compel any adverse party or "any person for whose immediate and adverse benefit" the action was begun, etc., to testify); § 6634 ("Any person on trial for crime shall be a competent witness, and at his or her option may testify or refuse to testify, upon such trial, and if such person has a husband or wife, he or she shall be a competent witness, but may elect or refuse to testify for or against the accused, except that a wife when she has received personal violence from her husband, or is a woman described in §§ 6379 or 6391 of the General Statutes may, upon his trial for offenses arising out of such personal violence or from violation of the provisions of said sections, be compelled to testify in the same manner as any other witness. The neglect, or refusal, of an accused party to testify shall not be commented upon to the Court or jury").

Delaware: Revised Statutes 1915, § 3041 (family-desertion; no rule "prohibiting the disclosure of confidential communications between husband and wife shall apply, and both husband and wife shall be competent and compellable witnesses to testify against each other as to any and all relevant matters", including marriage and parentage; but with privilege against self-incrimination); §§ 3076, 3085 (in bastardy cases, the putative father may testify in his own behalf; the mother is a "competent witness, unless otherwise legally incompetent"); § 4212 ("No person shall be incompetent to testify in any civil action or proceeding whether at law or in equity, because he is a party to the record or interested in the event of the suit or matter to be determined; provided that in actions or proceedings by or against executors, administrators, or guardians, in which judgment or decree may be rendered for or against them, neither party shall be allowed to testify against the other as to any transaction with or statement by the testator, intestate, or ward, unless called to testify thereto by the opposite party"); § 4213 ("A party to the record in any action or judicial proceeding, or a person for whose immediate benefit such proceeding is prosecuted or defended, may be examined as if under cross-examination, at the instance of the adverse party, or any of them, and for that purpose may be compelled in the same manner, and subject to the same rules of examination as any other witness to testify; but the party calling for such examination shall not be concluded thereby, but may rebut his testimony by other evidence. A party proposing to examine a party adverse in interest may have the same process and means of compelling attendance and response as the law provides in the case of ordinary witnesses"); § 4214 ("No person shall be excluded from testifying as a witness by reason of his having been convicted of a felony, but evidence of the fact may be given to affect his credibility"); § 4215 ("Each and every person accused, or who shall be accused, of any felony, misdemeanor, or offence whatsoever, punishable by the laws of this State, now or hereafter in force, shall, upon his or her trial before any tribunal established by the Constitution or laws of this State, have the right to testify in his or her own behalf, and shall also have the right to testify for or against any other person or persons jointly tried with him or her; provided, however, that a refusal to testify shall not be construed or commented upon as an indication of guilt"); § 4216 ("It shall be lawful for a wife or a husband to testify for or against each other in both civil and criminal causes"); St. 1921, c. 184, § 5, substituting in Rev. Code a new § 3085, par. 25 ("In illegitimacy cases, the mother shall be a competent witness, unless otherwise legally incompetent").

FLORIDA: Revised General Statutes 1919, § 2705 ("No person, in any Court or before any officer acting judicially, shall be excluded from testifying as a witness, by reason of his interest in the event of the action or proceeding, or because he is a party thereto; provided, however, that no party to such action or proceeding, nor any person interested in the event thereof, nor any person from, through, or under whom, any such party or interested person derives any interest or title by assignment or otherwise, shall be examined as a witness in regard to any transaction or communication between such witness and a person at the time of such examination deceased, insane, or lunatic, against the executor, administrator, heir-at-law, next of kin, assignee, legatee, devisee, or survivor of such deceased person, or the assignee or committee of such insane person or lunatic; but this prohibition shall not extend to any transaction or communication as to which any such executor, administrator, heir-at-law, next of kin, assignee, legatee, devisee, survivor, or committeeman shall be examined on his own behalf, or as to which the testimony of such deceased person or lunatic shall be given in evidence"); § 3608 (executor's oath not admitted to prove will, if he is "interested in the estate therein bequeathed, or any part thereof"); §§ 4859–4860 (disputed ownership of live stock in certain cases, must be proved "by disinterested testimony"); § 6018 ("The provisions of law relative to the competency of witnesses and evidence in civil cases shall obtain also in criminal cases" except as otherwise provided); § 6076 ("Approvers shall not be admitted in any case whatever"); § 2702 ("In the trial of civil actions in this State, neither the husband nor the wife shall be excluded as witnesses, where either the said husband or wife is an interested party to the suit pending"); § 6080 ("In all criminal prosecutions the accused may at his option be sworn as a witness in his own behalf, and shall in such case be subject to examination as other witnesses"); § 2706 ("No person shall be disqualified to testify . . . by reason of conviction of any crime except perjury"); § 2704 ("A conviction of perjury shall make incompetent any person to testify in any court in this State, even if such person has been pardoned").

GEORGIA: Revised Code 1910, § 5785 ("Communications between husband and wife", excluded); § 5857 ("Religious belief goes only to the credit"); § 5858 ("No person offered as a witness shall be excluded, by reason of incapacity, for crime or interest, or from being a party, from giving evidence, either in person or by deposition [in any court or proceeding] . . . ; but every person so offered shall be competent and compellable to give evidence on behalf of either or any of the parties to the said suit, action, or other proceeding, except as follows: 1. Where any suit is instituted or defended by a person insane at the time of trial, or by an indorsee, assignee, transferee, or by the personal representative of a deceased person, the opposite party shall not be admitted to testify in his own favor against the insane or deceased person, as to transactions or communications with such insane or deceased person. 2. Where any suit is instituted or defended by partners, persons jointly liable, or interested, the opposite party shall not be admitted to testify in his own favor as to transactions or communications solely with an insane or deceased partner, or person jointly liable or interested. 3. Where any suit is instituted or defended by a corporation, the opposite party shall not be admitted to testify in his own behalf to transactions or communications solely with a deceased or insane officer or agent of the corporation. 4. Where a person not a party, but a person interested in the result of the suit, is offered as a witness, he shall not be competent to testify, if, as a party to the cause, he would for any cause be incompetent. 5. No agent or attorney-at-law of the surviving or sane party, at the time of the transaction testified about, shall be allowed to testify in favor of a surviving or sane party, under circumstances where the principal, a party to the cause, could not testify; nor can a surviving party or agent testify in his own favor, or in favor of a surviving or sane party, as to transactions or communications with a deceased or insane agent, under circumstances where such witness would be incompetent if deceased agent had been principal. 6. In all cases where the personal representative of the deceased or insane party has introduced a witness interested in the event of a suit, who has testified as to transactions or communications on the part of the surviving agent or party with a deceased or insane party or agent, the surviving party or his agent may be examined in reference to such facts testified to by said witness"); § 5859 ("There shall be no other exceptions allowed under the foregoing paragraphs"); § 5861 ("Nothing contained in section 5858 shall apply to any action, suit, or proceeding in any Court, instituted in consequence of adultery, or to any action for breach of promise of marriage"); § 5862, P. C. 1910, § 1038 ("Persons who have not the use of reason, as idiots, lunatics during lunacy, and children who do not understand the nature of an oath, are incompetent witnesses"); § 5863, P. C. 1910, § 1039 ("Drunkenness, which dethrones reason and memory, incapacitates during its continuance"); § 5864, P. C. 1910, § 1040 ("No physical defects in any of the senses incapacitates a witness. An interpreter may explain his evidence"); § 5865 ("The Court must, by examination, decide upon the capacity of one alleged to be incompetent from idiocy, lunacy, or insanity, or drunkenness, or childhood"); P. C. §§ 1036, 1037, par. 12 ("In all criminal trials the prisoner shall have the right to make to the Court and jury such statement in the case as he may deem proper in his defence. It shall not be under oath, and shall have such force only as the jury may think right to give it. They may believe it in preference to the sworn testimony in the cause"; but in so making a statement, he is not compellable "to answer any questions on cross-examination, should he think proper to decline to answer"; "no person, who in any criminal proceeding is charged with the commission of any indictable offence, or any offence punishable on summary conviction, is competent or compellable to give evidence for or against himself"); § 1037, par. 4 ("Husband and wife shall not be competent or compellable to give evidence in any criminal proceeding for or against each other, except that the wife shall be competent, but not compellable, to testify against her husband, upon his trial for any criminal offence committed, or attempted to have been committed, upon her person. She is also a competent witness to testify for or against her husband, in cases of abandonment of his child, as provided for in § 116 of this Code"); § 116 (as above); § 104 (wife to be a "competent witness", when husband is tried for maltreatment of wife); § 935 (accused's statement before a magistrate, regulated); § 379 (seduction; prosecution may be stopped by marriage; but if defendant does not comply with the conditions, "the wife shall be a competent witness to testify against the husband, except in cases pending on Dec. 20, 1899"); § 995 ("When defendants are separately tried, they shall be competent to testify for or against each other"); § 5041 (witness before arbitrators); St. 1911, No. 207, p. 68, Aug. 25 (amending Pen. Code, 1910, § 379, prosecutions for seduction, by omitting the last part after "husband", and substituting, "in all such cases, whether the marriage to suspend said prosecution was before or after indictment of said defendant").

HAWAII: Revised Laws 1915, § 2609 ("No person offered as a witness shall hereafter be excluded by reason of incapacity from crime (perjury or subornation of perjury only excepted) or interest, from giving evidence. . . . But every person so offered may and shall be admitted to give evidence, notwithstanding that such person may or shall have an interest in the matter in question, or in the event of the trial of any issue, matter, question or inquiry, or of the suit, action or proceeding in which he is offered as a witness, and notwithstanding that such person offered as a witness may have been previously convicted of any crime or offence except as aforesaid"); § 2611 (". . . It shall be lawful for such Court or person to receive the evidence of any minor, notwithstanding he may be destitute of the knowledge of God and of any belief in religion or in a future state of rewards and punishments. Provided always, that the evidence of such minor shall be given upon his affirmation or declaration to tell the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth, or in such other form as may be approved of and allowed by such Court or person as first aforesaid, and after he shall have been cautioned by such Court or person that he will incur and be liable to punishment if he do not tell the truth. Provided also, that no such evidence shall in any case be received unless it shall be proved to the satisfaction of such Court or such person, that such minor perfectly understands the nature and object of such declaration or affirmation as aforesaid, and the purpose for which his testimony is required"); § 2612 (" . . . Parties thereto, and the party on whose behalf any such action, suit, or proceeding may be brought or defended, and the husbands and wives of such parties and persons respectively shall (except as provided in §§ 2613, 2614) be competent and compellable to give evidence, either in person or by deposition, according to the practice of the Court, on behalf of either or any of the parties to the said suit, action or proceeding"); § 2610 ("The defendant in any criminal proceeding may give evidence on his own behalf, and thereupon be subject to cross-examination in like manner as any other witness, but in case any such person shall neglect or decline to offer himself as a witness, no inference shall be drawn prejudicial to such accused by reason of such neglect or refusal, nor shall any argument be permitted tending to injure the defence of such accused person on account of such failure to offer himself as witness"); § 2613 ("Nothing herein contained shall render any person who in any criminal proceeding is charged with the commission of any indictable offence, or any offence punishable on summary conviction, compellable to give evidence for or against himself; or (except as hereinafter mentioned) shall render any person compellable to answer any question tending to criminate himself, or shall in any criminal proceeding render any husband competent or compellable to give evidence against his wife, or any wife competent or compellable to give evidence against her husband, except in such cases where such evidence may now be given; provided also that in all criminal proceedings the husband or wife of the party accused shall be a competent witness for the defence"); § 2614 ("No husband shall be compellable to disclose any communication made to him by his wife during the marriage, and no wife shall be compellable to disclose any communication made to her by her husband during the marriage"); § 2949 (in divorce, the Court may in discretion "examine either or both of the parties upon oath, in order to prevent collusion"); § 2975 (in prosecutions for family-desertion, etc., no rule "prohibiting the disclosure of confidential communications between husband and wife shall apply"; "both husband and wife shall be competent and compellable witnesses" as to any relevant fact); § 3010 (in bastardy complaint, mother is admissible).

IDAHO: Compiled Statutes 1919, § 7935 ("All persons without exception, otherwise than is specified in the next two sections, who, having organs of sense, can perceive, and, perceiving, can make known their perceptions to others, may be witnesses. Therefore, neither parties nor other persons who have an interest in the event of an action or proceeding are excluded; nor those who have been convicted of crime; nor persons on account of their opinions on matters of religious belief; although in every case the credibility of the witness may be drawn in question, by the manner in which he testifies, by the character of his testimony, or by evidence affecting his character for truth, honesty, or integrity, or his motives, or by contradictory evidence; and the jury are the exclusive judges of his credibility"); § 7936 ("The following persons cannot be witnesses: 1. Those who are of unsound mind at the time of their production for examination. 2. Children under ten years of age, who appear incapable of receiving just impressions of the facts respecting which they are examined, or of relating them truly. 3. Parties or assignors of parties to an action or proceeding, or persons in whose behalf an action or proceeding is prosecuted, against an executor or an administrator, upon a claim or demand against the estate of a deceased person, as to any matter of fact occurring before the death of such deceased person"); § 7958 ("There are particular relations in which it is the policy of the law to encourage confidence and to preserve it inviolate; therefore a person cannot be examined as a witness in the following cases: 1. A husband cannot be examined for or against his wife, without her consent, nor a wife for or against her husband, without his consent; nor can either, during the marriage or afterwards, be, without the consent of the other, examined as to any communication made by one to the other during the marriage; but this exception does not apply to a civil action or proceeding by one against the other, nor to a criminal action or proceeding for a crime committed by violence of one against the person of the other"); §§ 8947–8948 (like Cal. P. C. §§ 1099, 1100); § 9129 ("The rules for determining the competency of witnesses in civil actions are applicable also to criminal actions and proceedings, except as otherwise provided in this Code"); § 9130 ("Neither husband nor wife are competent witnesses for or against each other in a criminal action or proceeding to which one or both are parties"); ("Except 1. with the consent of both, or 2. in cases of criminal violence upon one by the other, or, 3. in cases of desertion or non-support of wife or child by the husband"); § 9131 ("A defendant in a criminal action or proceeding to which he is a party, is not, without his consent, a competent witness for or against himself. His neglect or refusal to give such consent shall not in any manner prejudice him nor be used against him on the trial or proceeding"); § 8613 (civil death as a penalty does not render the persons "incompetent as witnesses" in criminal cases); § 8950 ("The rules of evidence in civil actions are applicable also to criminal actions, except as otherwise provided in this Code").

ILLINOIS: Revised Statutes 1874, c. 17, § 6, as amended (in bastardy trials, "the mother and defendant" are competent); c. 38, § 35 (when a witness is released by Court order from liability to prosecution, and compelled to testify, "the defendant shall also at his own request be deemed a competent witness"; but no inference shall be drawn, as in ib. § 426); c. 38, § 426 ("No person shall be disqualified as a witness in any criminal case or proceeding by reason of his interest in the event of the same, as a party or otherwise, or by reason of his having been convicted of any crime, but such interest or conviction may be shown for the purpose of affecting his credibility; provided, however, that a defendant in any criminal case or proceeding shall only at his own request be deemed a competent witness, and his neglect to testify shall not create any presumption against him, nor shall the Court permit any reference or comment to be made to or upon such neglect"); c. 38, § 491, St. 1893, June 17 (the wife to be competent in any case against the husband under the statute punishing abandonment of family, "as to any and all matters relevant thereto, including the fact of such marriage and the parentage of such children"); St. 1901, May 11, § 3 (in prosecutions for abandonment of wife or child, "such husband or wife shall be a competent witness to testify in any case brought against the one or the other under this act, and to any and all matters relevant thereto, including the facts of such marriage and the parentage of such child or children"); St. 1915, June 24, p. 470, § 7 (family-desertion; no existing rule "prohibiting the disclosure of confidential communications between husband and wife" shall apply; "both husband and wife shall be competent witnesses to any and all relevant matters"; including marriage and parentage); Rev. St. c. 51, § 1 ("No person shall be disqualified as a witness in any civil action, suit, or proceeding, except as hereinafter stated, by reason of his or her interest in the event thereof, as a party or otherwise, or by reason of his or her conviction of any crime; but such interest or conviction may be shown for the purpose of affecting the credibility of such witness; and the fact of such conviction may be proven like any fact not of record, either by the witness himself (who shall be compelled to testify thereto) or by any other witness cognizant of such conviction, as impeaching testimony, or by any other competent evidence"); § 2 ("No party to any civil action, suit, or proceeding, or person directly interested in the event thereof, shall be allowed to testify therein of his own motion, or in his own behalf, by virtue of the foregoing section, when any adverse party sues or defends as the trustee or conservator of any idiot, habitual drunkard, lunatic, or distracted person, or as the executor, administrator, heir, legatee, or devisee of any deceased person, or as guardian or trustee of any such heir, legatee, or devisee, unless when called as a witness by such adverse party so suing or defending, and also except in the following cases, namely: — First. In any such action, suit, or proceeding, a party or interested person may testify to facts occurring after the death of such deceased person, or after the ward, heir, legatee, or devisee shall have attained his or her majority. Second. When, in such action, suit, or proceeding, any agent of any deceased person shall, in behalf of any person or persons suing or being sued, in either of the capacities above named, testify to any conversation or transaction between such agent and the opposite party or party in interest, such opposite party or party in interest may testify concerning the same conversation or transaction. Third. Where, in any such action, suit, or proceeding, any such party suing or defending, as aforesaid, or any person having a direct interest in the event of such action, suit, or proceeding, shall testify in behalf of such party so suing or defending, to any conversation or transaction with the opposite party or party in interest, then such opposite party or party in interest shall also be permitted to testify as to the same conversation or transaction. Fourth. Where, in any such action, suit, or proceeding, any witness, not a party to the record, or not a party in interest, or not an agent of such deceased person, shall, in behalf of any party to such action, suit, or proceeding, testify to any conversation or admission by any adverse party or party in interest, occurring before the death and in the absence of such deceased person, such adverse party or party in interest may also testify as to the same admission or conversation. Fifth. Where, in any such action, suit, or proceeding, the deposition of such deceased person shall be read in evidence at the trial, any adverse party or party in interest may testify as to all matters and things testified to in such deposition by such deceased person, and not excluded for irrelevancy or incompetency"); § 4 ("In any action, suit, or proceeding, by or against any surviving partner or partners, joint contractor or contractors, no adverse party, or party adversely interested in the event thereof, shall, by virtue of section 1 of this Act, be rendered a competent witness, to testify to any admission or conversation, by any deceased partner or joint contractor, unless some one or more of the surviving partners or joint contractors were also present at the time of such admission or conversation; and in every action, suit, or proceeding, a party to the same, who has contracted with an agent of the adverse party, the agent having since died, shall not be a competent witness, as to any conversation or transaction between himself and such agent, except where the conditions are such, that under the provisions of sections 2 and 3 of this Act, he would have been permitted to testify, if the deceased person had been a principal and not an agent"; amended by St. 1899, April 24, by inserting after "such agent", the words, "unless such admission or conversation with the said deceased agent was had or made in the presence of a surviving agent or agents of such adverse party, and then only"); § 5 ("No husband or wife shall, by virtue of section 1 of this Act, be rendered competent to testify for or against each other as to any transaction or conversation, occurring during the marriage, whether called as a witness during the existence of the marriage, or after its dissolution, except in cases where the wife would, if unmarried, be plaintiff or defendant, or where the cause of action grows out of a personal wrong or injury done by one to the other or grows out of the neglect of the husband to furnish the wife with a suitable support; and except in cases where the litigation shall be concerning the separate property of the wife, and suits for divorce; and except also in actions upon policies of insurance of property, so far as relates to the amount and value of the property alleged to be injured or destroyed, or in actions against carriers, so far as relates to the loss of property and the amount and value thereof, or in all matters of business transactions where the transaction was had and conducted by such married woman as the agent of her husband, in all of which cases the husband and wife may testify for or against each other, in the same manner as other parties may, under the provisions of this act. Provided, that nothing in this section contained shall be construed to authorize or permit any such husband or wife to testify to any admissions or conversations of the other, whether made by him to her or by her to him, or by either to third persons, except in suits or causes between such husband and wife"); § 6 ("Any party to any civil action, suit, or proceeding, may compel any adverse party or person for whose benefit such action, suit, or proceeding is brought, instituted, prosecuted, or defended, to testify as a witness at the trial, or by deposition, taken as other depositions are by law required, in the same manner, and subject to the same rules, as other witnesses"); § 7 ("In any civil action, suit, or proceeding, no person who would, if a party thereto, be incompetent to testify therein, under the provisions of sections 2 or 3, shall become competent by reason of any assignment or release of his claim, made for the purpose of allowing such person to testify"); § 8 (nothing in this act is to affect the law as to the settlement of the estates of deceased persons, incapables, etc., or the proof of conveyances for record, or the attestation of instruments required to be attested).

INDIANA: Burns' Annotated Statutes 1914, § 519 ("All persons, whether parties to or interested in the suit, shall be competent witnesses in a civil action or proceeding, except as herein otherwise provided"); § 520 ("The following persons shall not be competent witnesses: First: Persons insane at the time they are offered as witnesses, whether they have been so adjudged or not; Second: Children under ten years of age, unless it appears that they understand the nature and obligation of an oath; . . . Sixth: Husband and wife, as to communications made to each other"); § 521 ("In suits or proceedings in which an executor or administrator is a party, involving matters which occurred during the lifetime of the decedent, where a judgment or allowance may be made or rendered for or against the estate represented by such executor or administrator, any person who is a necessary party to the issue or record, whose interest is adverse to such estate, shall not be a competent witness as to such matters against such estate: Provided, however, that in cases where a deposition of such decedent has been taken, or he has previously testified as to the matter, and his testimony or deposition can be used as evidence for such executor or administrator, such adverse party shall be a competent witness for himself, but only as to any matters embraced in such deposition or testimony"); § 522 ("In all suits by or against heirs or devisees, founded on a contract with or demand against the ancestor, to obtain title to or obtain possession of property, real or personal, of, or in right of, such ancestor, or to affect the same in any manner, neither party to such suit shall be a competent witness as to any matter which occurred prior to the death of the ancestor"); § 523 ("When in any case an agent of a decedent shall testify on behalf of an executor, administrator, or heirs, concerning any transaction, as having been had by him, as such agent, with a party to the suit, his assignor or grantor, and in the absence of the decedent; or if any witness shall, on behalf of the executor, administrator, or heirs, testify to any conversation or admission of a party to the suit, his assignor or grantor, as having been had or made in the absence of the deceased; then the party against whom such evidence is adduced, his assignor or grantor, shall be competent to testify concerning the same matter. No person who shall have acted as an agent in the making or continuing of a contract with any person who may have died, shall be a competent witness in any suit upon or involving such contract, as to matters occurring prior to the death of such decedent, on behalf of the principal to such contract, against the legal representatives or heirs of the decedent, unless he shall be called by such heirs or legal representatives. And in such case he shall be a competent witness only as to matters concerning which he is interrogated by such heirs or representatives. When, in any case, a person shall be charged with unlawfully taking or detaining personal property, or having done damage thereto, and such person by his pleading shall defend on the ground that he is executor, administrator, guardian, or heir, and as such has taken or detains the property, or has done the acts charged, then no person shall be competent to testify who would not be competent if the person so defending were the complainant; but when the person complaining cannot testify, then the party so defending shall also be excluded"); St. § 524 ("in all suits by or against any person adjudged to be a person of unsound mind and under guardianship, or against his guardian, founded upon any contract with or demand against said ward, or in any suit to obtain possession of the real or personal property of said ward, or to affect the same in any manner, neither party to said transaction shall be a competent witness to any matter which occurred prior to the appointment of said guardian; provided however that if the party to said transaction under guardianship should be adjudged by the Court competent to testify, then the other party to said suit shall not be excluded; provided further that the provisions of this act shall not apply to any case where a person has been adjudged to be of unsound mind before the taking effect of this act, nor to any contract made or transaction had before the taking effect of this act; also provided that in all cases contemplated by this act either party to such suit shall have the right to call and examine any party adverse to him as a witness, or the Court may in its discretion require any party to such suit or other person to testify, and any abuse of such discretion shall be reviewable on appeal"); § 525 ("When the husband or wife is a party, and not a competent witness in his or her own behalf, the other shall also be excluded; except that the husband shall be a competent witness in a suit for the seduction of the wife, but she shall not be competent"); § 526 ("In all cases in which executors, administrators, heirs, or devisees are parties, and one of the parties to the suit shall be incompetent, as hereinbefore provided, to testify against them, then the assignor or grantor of a party making such assignment or grant voluntarily shall be deemed a party adverse to the executor or administrator, heir, or devisee, as the case may be; Provided, however, that in all cases referred to in sections 276, 277, 278, and 279 of said act — said sections being numbered in the Revised Statutes of 1881, 498, 499, 500, and 501 — any party to such suit shall have the right to call and examine any party adverse to him as a witness, or the Court may, in its discretion, require any party to a suit, or other person, to testify, and any abuse of such discretion shall be renewable [reviewable?] on appeal"); § 527 ("In all actions by an executor or administrator on contracts assigned to the decedent, when the assignor is alive and a competent witness in the cause, the executor or administrator and the defendant or defendants shall be competent witnesses as to all matters which occurred between the assignor and the defendant or defendants, prior to notice of such assignment"); §§ 1015, 1019 (in a bastardy charge, "the mother of the child, if of sound mind, shall be a competent witness", and her written examination on making complaint before the justice may be used "to sustain or impeach the testimony of such witness"); § 1023 (on the death of the complainant in bastardy, her written examination before the justice "may be read in evidence"); § 2109 ("The rules of evidence prescribed in civil cases and concerning the competency of witnesses shall govern in criminal cases, except as otherwise provided in this act"); [Criminal cases:] § 2111 ("The following persons are competent witnesses: First. All persons who are competent to testify in civil actions. Second. The party injured by the offence committed. Third. Accomplices, when they consent to testify. Fourth. The defendant, to testify in his own behalf. But if the defendant do not testify, his failure to do so shall not be commented upon or referred to in the argument of the cause, nor commented upon, referred to, or in any manner considered by the jury trying the same; and it shall be the duty of the Court, in such case, in its charge, to instruct the jury as to their duty under the provisions of this section"); § 2117 ("When two or more persons are included in one prosecution, the Court may, at any time before the defendant has gone into his defence, direct any defendant to be discharged, that he may be a witness for the State. A defendant may also, when there is not sufficient evidence to put him on his defence, at any time before the evidence is closed, be discharged by the Court for the purpose of giving testimony for a co-defendant"); § 2356 (pandering; female who marries accused before or after the offence's date shall be competent for or against him whether called during marriage or after dissolution); § 3000 (illegitimate child of deceased intestate who has acknowledged parentage shall inherit; but "the testimony of the mother of such child or children shall in no case be received to establish the fact of such acknowledgment"); St. 1915, April 26, p. 139, § 3 (family-desertion; no rule "prohibiting disclosure of confidential communications between husband and wife shall apply", and both husband and wife shall be "competent and compellable witnesses to testify against each other").

Iowa: Constitution 1857, Art. 1, § 9 ("Any party to any judicial proceeding shall have the right to use as a witness, or take the testimony of, any other person, not disqualified on account of interest, who may be cognizant of any fact material to the case; and parties to suits may be witnesses, as provided by law"); Compiled Code 1919, § 7308 ("Every human being of sufficient capacity to understand the obligation of an oath is a competent witness in all cases, except as otherwise declared"); § 7309 ("Facts which have heretofore caused the exclusion of testimony may still be shown for the purpose of lessening its credibility"); § 7310 ("No person offered as a witness in any action or proceeding in any Court, or before any officer acting judicially, shall be excluded by reason of his interest in the event of the action or proceeding, or because he is a party thereto, except as provided in this chapter"); § 7311 ("No party to any action or proceeding, nor any person interested in the event thereof, nor any person from, through, or under whom any such party or interested person derives any interest or title by assignment or otherwise, and no husband or wife of any said party or person, shall be examined as a witness in regard to any personal transaction or communication between such witness and a person at the commencement of such examination, deceased, insane, or lunatic, against the executor, administrator, heir-at-law, next of kin, assignee, legatee, devisee, or survivor of such deceased person, or the assignee or guardian of such insane person or lunatic. But this prohibition shall not extend to any transaction or communication as to which any such executor, administrator, heir-at-law, next of kin, assignee legatee, devisee, survivor, or guardian shall be examined in his own behalf, or as to which the testimony of such deceased or insane person or lunatic shall be given in evidence"); § 7312 (a person who would be incompetent under the preceding section may have his deposition taken during the lifetime or sanity of the other party, to be used in case of death or insanity); § 7313 ("Neither the husband nor wife shall in any case be a witness against the other, except in a criminal prosecution for a crime committed by one against the other, or in a civil action or proceeding one against the other, or in a civil action by one against a third party for alienating the affections of the other, or in any civil action brought by a judgment creditor against either the husband or the wife, to set aside a conveyance of property from one to the other on the ground of want of consideration or fraud, and to subject the same to the payment of his judgment; but in all civil and criminal cases they may be witnesses for each other"); § 7314 ("Neither husband nor wife can be examined in any case as to any communication made by the one to the other while married, nor shall they, after the marriage relation ceases, be permitted to reveal in testimony any such communication made while the marriage subsisted"); § 9464 ("Defendants in all criminal proceedings shall be competent witnesses in their own behalf, but cannot be called as witnesses by the State; and should a defendant not elect to become a witness, this fact shall not have any weight against him on the trial, nor shall the attorney or attorneys for the State, during the trial, refer to the fact that the defendant did not testify in his own behalf; and should they do so, such attorney or attorneys will be guilty of a misdemeanor, and defendant shall for that cause alone be entitled to a new trial"); § 9465 (defendant taking the stand "shall be subject to cross-examination as an ordinary witness, but the State shall be strictly confined therein to the matters testified to in the examination in chief"); § 9470 (rules of evidence in civil cases to apply in criminal cases, so far as applicable and except as otherwise provided); St. 1907, c. 170, § 2, Code § 8846 (desertion of family; husband or wife to be competent for the State, "and may testify to any relevant acts or communications between them", but neither is "compelled to testify against the other under this Act", except by consent).

KANSAS: General Statutes 1915, § 7219 ("No person shall be disqualified as a witness in any civil action or proceeding by reason of his interest in the event of the same, as a party or otherwise, or by reason of his conviction of a crime; but such interest or conviction may be shown for the purpose of affecting his credibility"); § 7220 ("Nothing in the preceding section contained shall in any manner affect the laws now existing relating to the settlement of estates of deceased persons, infants, idiots, or lunatics, or the attestation of the execution of last wills and testaments, or of conveyances of real estate, or of any other instrument required by law to be attested"); § 7222 ("No party shall be allowed to testify in his own behalf in respect to any transaction or communication had personally by such party with a deceased person, where either party to the action claims to have acquired title directly or indirectly from such deceased person, or when the adverse party is the executor, administrator, heir-at-law, next of kin, surviving partner, or assignee of such deceased person, nor shall the assignor of a thing in action be allowed to testify in behalf of such party concerning any transaction or communication had personally by such assignor with a deceased person in any such case; nor shall such party or assignor be competent to testify to any transaction had personally by such party or assignor with a deceased partner or joint contractor in the absence of his surviving partner or joint contractor, when such surviving partner or joint contractor is an adverse party. If the testimony of a party to the action or proceeding has been taken, and he afterward die, and the testimony so taken shall be used after his death in behalf of his executors, administrators, heirs-at-law, next of kin, assignee, surviving partner, or joint contractor, the other party or the assignor shall be competent to testify as to any and all matters to which the testimony so taken relates"); § 7223 ("The following persons shall be incompetent to testify: First, persons who are of unsound mind at the time of their production for examination; second, children under ten years of age who appear incapable of receiving just impressions of the facts respecting which they are examined, or of relating them truly; third, husband and wife, for or against each other, concerning any communication made by one to the other during the marriage, whether called while that relation subsisted or afterward"); § 8130 ("No person shall be rendered incompetent to testify in criminal causes by reason of his being the person injured or defrauded, or intended to be injured or defrauded, or that would be entitled to satisfaction for the injury or is liable to pay the costs of the prosecution; or by reason of his being the person on trial or examination; or by reason of being the husband or wife of the accused; but any such facts may be shown for the purpose of affecting his or her credibility; provided, that no person on trial or examination, nor wife or husband of such person, shall be required to testify except as a witness on behalf of the person on trial or examination"); § 8130 ("The neglect or refusal of the person on trial to testify, or of a wife to testify on behalf of her husband, shall not raise any presumption of guilt, nor shall that circumstance be referred to by any attorney prosecuting in the case, nor shall the same be considered by the Court or jury before whom the trial takes place"); § 8150 (prosecution of two or more; Court may order any defendant discharged to be a witness for the State, at any time before "the defendant" has gone into his defence; when there is not sufficient evidence to put him on his defence, he may be discharged to testify for co-defendant, at any time before close of evidence); § 7579 (in divorce and alimony, "the parties thereto, or either of them, shall be competent to testify upon all material matters involved in the controversy to the same extent as other witnesses might do"); § 3415, St. 1911, c. 163 (family-desertion, etc.; the privilege for marital communications shall not apply; "both husband and wife shall be competent witnesses to testify against each other to any and all relevant matters"); § 5159, G. S. 1868, c. 50 (furnishing liquor to Indians; "Indians shall be deemed competent witnesses"); § 5511, St. 1885, c. 149 (liquor prosecutions; "members, shareholders, or associates in any club or association" etc., to be competent); § 7221 ("Any party to a civil action or proceeding may compel any adverse party or person for whose benefit such a proceeding is instituted, prosecuted, or defended, at the trial or by deposition, to testify as a witness in the same manner and subject to the same rules as other witnesses"); § 8132 (person receiving a bribe is competent against the person bribing); § 8138 (similar, for gaming offences); § 8134 ("no person shall be disqualified" in criminal cases by "conviction of a crime"); 1905, May v. May, 71 Kan. 317, 80 Pac. 567 (St. 1903, cc. 387, 388, applied to admit a husband's testimony to his wife's admissions).

KENTUCKY: Statutes 1915, § 172 (bastardy; the mother, "unless she is otherwise incompetent, may be a witness for all purposes"; and "if the party accused desire it unless he is otherwise incompetent, he shall be examined on oath"); § 1180 (conviction for false swearing or subornation of perjury, or for falsely making certain affidavits and reports, disqualifies "from giving evidence in any judicial proceeding or from being a witness in any case whatever"); § 1219*a* (abortion; the woman to be a competent witness); § 1645 ("In all criminal and penal prosecutions now pending or hereafter instituted in any of the courts of this Commonwealth, the defendant on trial, on his own request, shall be allowed to testify in his own behalf, but the failure to do so shall not be commented on or be allowed to create any presumption against him"); § 1646 ("The defendant requesting that he be allowed to testify shall not be allowed to testify in chief, after any other witness has testified for the defence"); § 1973 (the person against whom a witness testifies in gaming prosecutions is not competent to prove prior gaming against the witness); § 4838 (no executor to be as such incompetent for or against a will); Civil Code of Practice, 1895, as amended: § 605 ("Subject to the exceptions and modifications contained in section six hundred and six, every person is competent to testify for himself or another, unless he be found by the Court incapable of understanding the facts concerning which his testimony is offered"); § 606 ((1) "Neither a husband nor his wife shall testify, while the marriage exists or afterwards, concerning any communication between them during marriage. Nor shall either of them testify against the other. Nor shall either of them testify for the other, except in an action for lost baggage or its value against a common carrier, an innkeeper, or a wrongdoer, and in such action either or both of them may testify; and except in actions which might have been brought by or against the wife, if she had been unmarried, and in such actions either but not both of them may testify, and except that when a husband or wife is acting as agent for his or her consort either of them may testify as to any matter connected with such agency"; (2) "Subject to the provisions of sub-section seven of this section no person shall testify for himself concerning any verbal statement of, or any transaction with, or any act done or omitted to be done by, an infant under fourteen years of age, or by one who is of unsound mind or dead when the testimony is offered to be given, except for the purpose and to the extent of affecting one who is living, and who, when above fourteen years of age and of sound mind heard such statement, or was present when such transaction took place, or when such act was done or omitted, unless (a) the infant of his guardian shall have testified against such person with reference to such statement, transaction, or act; or (b) the person of unsound mind shall, when of sound mind, have testified against such person with reference thereto; or (c) the decedent, or a representative of or some one interested in his estate, shall have testified against such person, with reference thereto; or (d) an agent of the decedent or person of unsound mind, with reference to such act or transaction, shall have testified against such person with reference thereto, or be living when such person offers to testify with reference thereto." (3) "No person shall testify for himself in chief in an ordinary action, after introducing other evidence for himself in chief; nor in an equitable action after taking other testimony for himself in chief." . . (5) "If the right of a person to testify for himself be founded upon the fact that one who is dead or of unsound mind has testified against him, the testimony of such person shall be confined to the facts or transactions to which the adverse testimony related." (6) "A person may testify for himself as to the correctness of original entries made by him against persons who are under no disability — other than infancy — in an accounting according to the usual course of business, though the person against whom they were made may have died or become of unsound mind; but no person shall testify for himself concerning entries in a book, or the contents or purport of any writing, under the control of himself, or of himself and others jointly, if he refuse or fail to produce such book or writing and to make it subject to the order of the Court for the purposes of the action, if required to do so by the party against whom he offers to testify." (7) "The assignment of a claim by a person who is incompetent to testify for himself shall not make him competent to testify for another." (8) "A party may be examined as if under cross-examination at the instance of the adverse party, either orally or by deposition as any other witness; but the party calling for such examination shall not be concluded thereby, but may rebut it by counter-testimony." (9) "None of the preceding provisions of this section apply to affidavits for provisional remedies, or to affidavits of claimants against the estates of deceased or insolvent persons, or affect the competency of attesting witnesses of instruments which are required by law to be attested"); § 607 ("All other objections to witnesses shall go to their credit alone, and be weighed by the jury or tribunal to which their evidence is offered"); §§ 608, 609 (admits party's testimony in rebuttal of new testimony by opponent since deceased or become unsound in mind); Code of Practice in Criminal Cases, 1895: § 223 (like Stats. §§ 1645, 1646, supra); St. 1912, c. 103, p. 295 (add a new exception to C. C. P. § 606, par. 1, for divorce on the ground of cruelty); St. 1916, Mar. 23, p. 499 (pandering; like W. Va. St. 1911).

LOUISIANA: Annotated Revised Statutes 1915, § 1438 ("testimony of convicts for or against each other", admissible); Revised Civil Code 1920, § 2282 ("The circumstances of the witness being a relation, a party to the cause, interested in the result of the suit, or in the actual service or salary of one of the parties, is not a sufficient cause to consider the witness as incompetent"); § 2281, St. 1916, No. 157, p. 379 ("the competent witness in any proceeding, civil or criminal, in court, or before a person having authority to receive evidence, shall be a person of proper understanding, but: First. Private conversations between husband and wife shall be privileged. Second. Neither husband nor wife shall be compelled to be a witness on any trial upon an indictment, complaint or other criminal proceeding, against the other. Third. In the trial of all indictments, complaints and other proceedings against persons charged with the commission of crimes or offenses, a person so charged shall, at his own request, but not otherwise, be deemed a competent witness; and his neglect or refusal to testify shall not create any presumption against him"); St. 1910, No. 307, p. 524, § 8 (pandering, procuring, etc.; any female person involved is competent to testify "for or against the accused as to any transaction with the accused or by him with another person or persons in her presence", notwithstanding marriage with him, before or after the offense, and before or after dissolution of marriage); St. 1912, No. 105, p. 123, July 8 (family-desertion; "the wife shall be a competent witness for or against her husband").

MAINE: Revised Statutes 1916, c. 65, § 2 (in divorce, "either party may be a witness"); c. 87, § 112 ("No person is excused or excluded from testifying in any civil suit or proceeding at law or in equity, by reason of his interest in the event thereof as a party or otherwise, except as hereinafter provided, but such interest may be shown to affect his credibility: and the husband or wife of either party may be a witness"); § 113 ("No defendant shall be compelled to testify in any suit when the cause of action implies an offence against the criminal law on his part. If he offers himself as a witness, he waives his privilege of not criminating himself, but his testimony shall not be used against him in any criminal prosecution involving the same subject-matter"); § 117 ("The five preceding sections do not apply to cases where at the time of taking testimony or at the time of trial the party prosecuting or the party defending or any one of them is an executor or an administrator or is made a party as heir of a deceased party; except in the following cases: 1. The deposition of a party or his testimony given at a former trial may be used at any trial after his death, if the opposite party is then alive, and in that case the latter may also testify. 2. In all cases in which an executor, administrator, or other legal representative of a deceased person is a party, such party may testify to any facts admissible upon the rules of evidence, happening before the death of such person; and when such person so testifies, the adverse party is neither excluded nor excused from testifying in reference to such facts, and any such representative party or heir of a deceased party may testify to any fact admissible upon general rules of evidence, happening after the decease of the testator, intestate, or ancestor; and in reference to such matters the adverse party may testify. 3. If the representative party is nominal only, both parties may be witnesses; if the adverse party is nominal only, and had parted with his interest, if any, during the lifetime of the representative party's testator or intestate, he is not excluded from testifying, if called by either party; and in an action against an executor or administrator, if the plaintiff is nominal only, or, having had an interest, disposed of it in the lifetime of the defendant's testator or intestate, neither party to the record is excused or excluded from testifying. 4. In an action by or against an executor, administrator, or other legal representative of a deceased person, in which his account books or other memoranda are used as evidence on either side, the other party may testify in relation thereto. 5. In actions where an executor, administrator, or other legal representative is a party, and the opposite party is an heir of the deceased, said heir may testify when any other heir of the deceased testifies at the instance of such executor, administrator, or other legal representative"); 6. In all actions brought by the executor, administrator, or other legal representative of a deceased person, such representative shall not be excused from testifying to any facts admissible upon general rules of evidence, happening before the death of such person, if so requested by the opposite party; but nothing herein shall be so construed as to enable the adverse party to testify against the objection of the plaintiff when the plaintiff does not voluntarily testify"); § 118 ("The rules of evidence which apply to actions by or against executors or administrators apply in actions where a person shown to the Court to be insane is solely interested as a party"); § 124 ("No person is incompetent to testify in any Court or legal proceeding in consequence of having been convicted of an offence; but such conviction may be shown to affect his credibility"); c. 92, § 12 (on suggestion of death of a party, in an action that survives, the survivors if any on both sides may testify); c. 136, § 19 ("In all criminal trials the accused shall, at his own request, but not otherwise, be a competent witness. He shall not be compelled to testify on cross-examination to facts that would convict or furnish evidence to convict him of any other crime than that for which he is on trial; and the fact that he does not testify in his own behalf shall not be taken as evidence of his guilt. The husband or wife of the accused is a competent witness"); c. 102, § 6 (bastardy; mother "may be a witness"); c. 126, § 20 (pandering and pimping; the female may be a witness for or against the accused, or to conversations with him, "notwithstanding her having married the accused" before or after the offence, and whether called during marriage or after dissolution).

MARYLAND: Annotated Code 1914, Art. 35, § 1 ("No person offered as a witness shall hereafter be excluded, by reason of incapacity from crime or interest, from giving evidence, either in person or by deposition, according to the practice of the Courts, in the trial of any issue joined or hereafter to be joined, or of any matter or question, or on any inquiry arising in any suit, action, or proceeding, civil or criminal, in any Court, or before any judge, jury, justice of the peace, or other person having, by law or by consent of the parties, authority to hear, receive, and examine evidence; but every person so offered may and shall be admitted to give evidence, notwithstanding that such person may or shall have an interest in the matter in question, or in the event of the trial of any issue, matter, question, or inquiry, or of the suit, action, or proceeding in which he is offered as a witness, and notwithstanding that such person offered as a witness may have been previously convicted of any crime or offence; but no person who has been convicted of the crime of perjury shall be admitted to testify in any case or proceeding whatever; and the parties litigant, and all persons in whose behalf any suit, action, or other proceeding may be brought or defended, themselves, and their wives and husbands, shall be competent and compellable to give evidence in the same manner as other witnesses, except as hereinafter excepted"); . . . § 3 ("In acts or proceedings by or against executors, administrators, heirs, devisees, legatees or distributees of a decedent as such, in which judgments or decrees may be rendered for or against them, and in proceedings by or against persons incompetent to testify by reason of mental disability, no party to the cause shall be allowed to testify as to any transaction had with, or statement made by the testator, intestate, ancestor, or party so incompetent to testify, either personally or through an agent since dead, lunatic, or insane, unless called to testify by the opposite party, or unless the testimony of such testator, intestate, ancestor, or party incompetent to testify shall have [been?] already given in evidence, concerning the same transaction or statement, in the same cause, on his or her own behalf or on behalf of his or her representative in interest; nor shall it be competent for any party to the cause, who has been examined therein as a witness, to corroborate his testimony when impeached by proof of his own declaration or statement made to third persons out of the presence and hearing of the adverse party"); § 4 ("In the trial of all indictments, complaints, and other proceedings against persons charged with the commission of crimes and offences, and in all proceedings in the nature of criminal proceedings in any court of this State, and before a justice of the peace or other person acting judicially, the person so charged shall at his own request, but not otherwise, be deemed a competent witness; but the neglect or refusal of any such person to testify shall not create any presumption against him. In all criminal proceedings the husband or wife of the accused party shall be competent to testify; but in no case, civil or criminal, shall any husband or wife be competent to disclose any confidential communication made by the one to the other during the marriage; and in suits, actions, bills, or other proceedings instituted in consequence of adultery, or for the purpose of obtaining a divorce, or for damages for breach of promise of marriage, no verdict shall be permitted to be recovered, nor shall any judgment or decree be rendered, upon the testimony of the plaintiff alone; but in all such cases testimony in corroboration of that of the plaintiff shall be necessary").

Compare the decisions cited post, § 2065, n. 5, applying Art. 35, § 3, supra.

MASSACHUSETTS: General Laws 1920: c. 233, § 20 ("Any person of sufficient understanding although a party, may testify in any proceeding, civil or criminal, in Court or before a person who has authority to receive evidence except as follows: First, except in a prosecution begun under §§ 1–10 inclusive of c. 273 [family-desertion, etc.] neither husband nor wife shall testify to private conversations with the other; Second, except as otherwise provided in § 7 of c. 273, neither husband nor wife shall be compelled to testify in the trial of an indictment, complaint, or other criminal proceeding against the other; Third, the defendant in the trial of an indictment, complaint or other criminal proceeding, shall at his own request, but not otherwise, be allowed to testify; but his neglect or refusal to testify shall not create any presumption against him"); c. 273, § 7 (family-desertion; like Wash. St. R. & B. Code 1909, § 5435; omitting "for or" before "against").

MICHIGAN: Compiled Laws 1915, § 12551 ("No person shall be excluded from giving evidence in any matter, civil or criminal, by reason of crime, or for any interest of such person in the matter, suit, or proceeding in which such testimony may be offered, or by reason of marital or other relationship to any party thereto; but such interest, relationship, or conviction of crime may be shown for the purpose of drawing in question the credibility of such witness, except as is hereafter provided"); § 12552 ("On the trial of any issue joined, or in any matter, suit, or proceeding, in any court, or before any officer or person having, by law or by consent of parties, authority to hear, receive, and examine evidence, the parties to any such suit or proceeding named in the record, and persons for whose benefit such suit is prosecuted or defended, may be witnesses therein, in their own behalf or otherwise, in the same manner as otherwise, except as hereinafter otherwise provided; and the deposition of any such party or person may be taken and used in evidence under the rules and statutes governing depositions, and any such party or person may be proceeded against, and compelled to attend and testify, as provided by law for other witnesses. No person shall be disqualified in any criminal case or proceeding, by reason of his interest in the event of the same as a party or otherwise, or by reason of his having been convicted of any crime; but such interest or conviction may be shown for the purpose of affecting his credibility; provided, however, that a defendant in any criminal case or proceeding shall only at his own request be deemed a competent witness, and his neglect to testify shall not raise any presumption against him, nor shall the Court permit any reference or comment to be made to or upon such neglect"); § 12553 ("That when a suit or proceeding is prosecuted or defended by the heirs, assignees, devisees, legatees, or personal representatives of a deceased person, the opposite party, if examined as a witness on his own behalf, shall not be admitted to testify at all to matters which, if true, must have been equally within the knowledge of such deceased person; and when any suit or proceeding is prosecuted or defended by any surviving partner or partners, the opposite party, if examined as a witness in his own behalf, shall not be admitted to testify at all in relation to matters which, if true, must have been equally within the knowledge of the deceased partner and not within the knowledge of any one of the surviving partners. No person who shall have acted as an agent in the making or continuing of a contract with any person who may have died shall be a competent witness, in any suit involving such contract, as to matters occurring prior to the death of such decedent, on behalf of the principal to such contract against the legal representative or heirs of such decedent, unless he shall be called by such heirs or legal representatives. And when any suit or proceeding is prosecuted or defended by any corporation, the opposite party, if examined as a witness in his own behalf, shall not be admitted to testify at all to matters which, if true, must have been equally within the knowledge of a deceased officer or agent of the corporation and not within the knowledge of any surviving officer or agent of the corporation, nor when any suit or proceeding is prosecuted or defended by the heirs, assigns, devisees, legatees, or personal representatives of a deceased person against a corporation (or its assigns), shall any person who is or has been an officer or agent of any such corporation be allowed to testify at all in relation to matters which, if true, must have been equally within the knowledge of such deceased person; provided, that whenever the words 'the opposite party' occur in this section, it shall be deemed to include the assignors or assignees of the claim or any part thereof in controversy. Provided further that when the testimony of any person would be barred in case of the death of any of the persons hereinbefore mentioned it shall also be barred if such person shall have been adjudged to be and still is at the time of the trial insane or mentally incompetent as to all matters which if true must have been equally within his knowledge when he was sane and mentally competent. And provided further that whenever the deposition, affidavit, or testimony of such deceased party taken in his lifetime shall be read in evidence in such suit or proceeding, that the affidavit or testimony of the surviving party shall be admitted in his own behalf on all matters mentioned or covered in such deposition, affidavit, or testimony; and provided further that when the testimony or deposition of any witness has once been taken and used (or shall have heretofore been taken and used) upon the trial of any cause, and the same was, when so taken and used, competent and admissible under this act, the subsequent death of such witness or of any other person, shall not render such testimony incompetent under this act, but such testimony shall be received upon any subsequent trial of such cause"); § 11367 (in prosecutions for illegal marriage of persons sexually diseased, "a husband shall be examined as a witness against his wife and a wife shall be examined as a witness against her husband whether such husband or wife consent or not"); § 7791 (family-desertion; wife may testify against husband-defendant, "in all complaints under this Act"); § 12555 ("A husband shall not be examined as a witness, for or against his wife, without her consent; nor a wife, for or against her husband, without his consent, except in suits for divorce and in cases of prosecution for bigamy, and where the cause of action grows out of a personal wrong or injury done by one to the other, or grows out of the refusal or neglect to furnish the wife or children with suitable support and except in cases of desertion or abandonment, and cases arising under Act 136 of the Public Acts of 1905, relating to marriage, and except in cases where the husband or wife shall be a party to the record in a suit, action, or proceeding where the title to the separate property of the husband or wife so called or offered as a witness, or where the title to property derived from, through, or under the husband or wife so called or offered as a witness, shall be the subject-matter in controversy or litigation in such suit, action, or proceeding, in opposition to the claim or interest of the other of said married persons who is a party to the record in such suit, action, or proceeding; and in all such cases, such husband or wife who makes such claim of title, or under or from whom such title is derived, shall be as competent to testify in relation to said separate property and the title thereto, without the consent of said husband or wife, who is a party to the record in such suit, action, or proceeding, as though such marriage relation did not exist; nor shall either, during the marriage or afterwards, without the consent of both, be examined as to any communication made by one to the other during the marriage; but in any action or proceeding instituted by the husband or wife in consequence of adultery the husband and wife shall not be competent to testify"); § 12556 ("Whenever a child under the age of ten years is produced as a witness the Court shall by an examination, made by itself, publicly, or separate and apart, ascertain to its own satisfaction whether such child has sufficient intelligence and sense of obligation to tell the truth to be safely admitted to testify; and in such case such testimony may be given on a promise to tell the truth instead of upon oath or statutory affirmation, and shall be given such credit as to the Court or jury, if there be a jury, it may appear to deserve"); § 15500 (pandering, etc.; the female is competent to testify for or against the accused as to any transaction with him, etc., notwithstanding her marriage to him before or after the offence, whether called during marriage or after its dissolution); § 11428 (in divorce, "either party may, if he or she elect", testify); § 7756 (in bastardy proceedings, the woman shall be admitted as a witness, unless incompetent by reason of conviction of crime); § 7794 (desertion of wife married by seducer, etc.; wife may testify against husband without his consent).

MINNESOTA: General Statutes 1913, § 8375 ("Every person of sufficient understanding, including a party, may testify in any action or proceeding, civil or criminal, in court or before any person who has authority to receive evidence, except as follows: 1. A husband cannot be examined for or against his wife without her consent, nor a wife for or against her husband without his consent, nor can either, during the marriage or afterward without the consent of the other, be examined as to any communication made by one to the other during the marriage. But this exception does not apply to a civil action or proceeding by one against the other, nor to a criminal action or proceeding for a crime committed by one against the other, nor to an action or proceeding for abandonment and neglect of the wife or children by the husband." . . . 6. "Persons of unsound mind; persons intoxicated at the time of their production for examination, and children under ten years of age, who appear incapable of receiving just impressions of the facts respecting which they are examined, or of relating them truly, are not competent witnesses"); § 8376 ("The defendant in the trial of an indictment, complaint, or other criminal proceeding shall, at his own request and not otherwise, be allowed to testify; but his failure to testify shall not create any presumption against him, nor shall it be alluded to by the prosecuting attorney or by the court"); § 8377 ("A party to the record of any civil action or proceeding, or a person for whose immediate benefit such action or proceeding is prosecuted or defended, or the directors, officers, superintendent, or managing agents of any corporation which is a party to the record, may be examined by the adverse party as if under cross-examination, subject to the rules applicable to the examination of other witnesses. The party calling such adverse witness shall not be bound by his testimony, and the testimony given by such witness may be rebutted by the party calling him for such examination by other evidence. Such witness, when so called, may be examined by his own counsel, but only as to the matters testified to on such examination"); § 8378 ("It shall not be competent for any party to an action, or any person interested in the event thereof, to give evidence therein or concerning any conversation with, or admission of, a deceased or insane party or person relative to any matter at issue between the parties, unless the testimony of such deceased or insane person concerning such conversation or admission, given before his death or insanity, has been preserved, and can be produced in evidence by the opposite party, and then only in respect to the conversation or admission to which such testimony relates"); § 8504 ("Every person convicted of crime shall be a competent witness in any civil or criminal proceeding, but his conviction may be proved for the purpose of affecting the weight of his testimony, either by the record or by his cross-examination, upon which he shall answer any proper question relevant to that inquiry; and the party cross-examining shall not be concluded by his answer thereto").

MISSISSIPPI: Code 1906, § 1318, Hem. § 1051 (person convicted of perjury "shall not thereafter be received as a witness", until judgment reversed); § 1320, Hem. § 1053 (similar, for subornation of perjury); § 1679, Hem. § 1421 (in divorce suits, "the parties shall be competent witnesses for or against each other"); § 1915, Hem. § 1575 ("Every person, whether a party to the suit or not, shall be competent to give evidence in any suit at law or in equity, and shall not be incompetent by reason of any interest in the result thereof, or in the record as an instrument of evidence in other suits; and such weight shall be given to the evidence of parties and interested witnesses as, in view of the situation of the witnesses and other circumstances, it may fairly be entitled to. Any party may, by subpœna, as in other cases, compel any other party to the suit to appear and give evidence"); § 1916, Hem. § 1576 ("Husband and wife may be introduced by each other as witnesses in all cases, civil or criminal, and shall be competent witnesses in their own behalf, as against each other, in all controversies between them"); § 1917, Hem. § 1577 ("A person shall not testify as a witness to establish his own claim or defence against the estate of a deceased person which originated during the lifetime of such deceased person, or any claim he has transferred since the death of such decedent. But such person shall be permitted to give evidence in support of his claim or defence against the estate of a deceased person which originated after the death of such deceased person in the course of administering his estate; nor shall a person testify as a witness to establish his own or assigned claim or defence against the estate of a person of unsound mind, which originated before the ward became a 'non compos mentis'; but this shall not apply to claims or defences which arose in the course of the administration of the estate of such person"); § 1918, Hem. § 1578 ("The accused shall be a competent witness for himself in any prosecution for crime against him; but the failure of the accused in any case to testify shall not operate to his prejudice or be commented on by counsel"); § 1920, Hem. § 1580 ("A conviction of a person for any offence except perjury and subornation of perjury, shall not disqualify such person as a witness, but such conviction may be given in evidence to impeach his credibility. A person convicted of perjury or subornation of perjury shall not afterwards be a competent witness in any case, although pardoned or punished for the same"); St. 1920, Mar. 72, c. 212, § 6 (family-desertion; like Wash. R. & B. Code § 5435).

MISSOURI: Revised Statutes 1919, § 4033 ("No person shall be rendered incompetent to testify in criminal causes by reason of his being the person injured or defrauded or intended to be injured or defrauded, or that would be entitled to satisfaction for the injury, or is liable to pay the costs of the prosecution"); § 4035 ("When two or more persons shall be jointly indicted or prosecuted, the Court may, at any time before the defendants have gone into their defence, direct any defendant to be discharged, that he may be a witness for the State. A defendant shall also, when there is not sufficient evidence to put him on his defence, at any time before the evidence is closed, be discharged by the Court for the purpose of giving his testimony for a co-defendant"); § 4036 ("No person shall be incompetent to testify as a witness in any criminal cause or prosecution by reason of being the person on trial or examination, or by reason of being the husband or wife of the accused; but any such facts may be shown for the purpose of affecting the credibility of such witness; provided that no person on trial or examination, nor wife or husband of such person, shall be required to testify, but any such person may, at the option of the defendant, testify in his behalf, or on behalf of a co-defendant, and shall be liable to cross-examination, as to any matter referred to in his examination in chief, and may be contradicted and impeached as any other witness in the case; provided that in no case shall husband or wife, when testifying under the provisions of this section for a defendant, be permitted to disclose confidential communications had or made between them in the relation of such husband and wife"); § 4037 (the accused's failure to testify "shall not be construed to affect the innocence or guilt of the accused, nor shall the same raise any presumption of guilt, nor be referred to by any attorney in the case, nor be considered by the Court or jury before whom the trial takes place"); § 5410 ("No person shall be disqualified as a witness in any civil suit or proceeding at law or in equity, by reason of his interest in the event of the same as a party or otherwise, but such interest may be shown for the purpose of affecting his credibility; provided that in actions where one of the original parties to the contract or cause of action in issue and on trial is dead, or is shown to the Court to be insane, the other party to such contract or cause of action shall not be admitted to testify either in his own favor or in favor of any party to the action claiming under him, and no party to such suit or proceeding whose right of action or defence is derived to him from one who is, or if living would be, subject to the foregoing disqualification, shall be admitted to testify in his own favor, except as in this section is provided; and where an executor or administrator is a party, the other party shall not be admitted to testify in his own favor, unless the contract in issue was originally made with a person who is living and competent to testify, except as to such acts and contracts as have been done or made since the probate of the will or the appointment of the administrator; provided, further, that in actions for the recovery of any sum or balance due on account, and when the matter at issue and on trial is proper matter of book account, the party living may be a witness in his own favor, so far as to prove in whose handwriting his charges are, and when made, and no farther"); § 5412 ("Any party to any civil action or proceeding may compel any adverse party, or any person for whose immediate and adverse benefit such action or proceeding is instituted, prosecuted, or defended, to testify as a witness in his behalf, in the same manner and subject to the same rules as other witnesses; provided that the party so called may be examined by the opposite party, under the rules applicable to the cross-examination of witnesses"); § 5413 (foregoing sections not to affect the law of attestation of instruments required to be attested); § 5415 ("No married woman shall be disqualified as a witness in any civil suit or proceeding prosecuted in the name of or against her husband, whether joined or not with her husband as a party, in the following cases, to wit: First, in actions upon policies of insurance of property, so far as relates to the amount and value of the property alleged to be injured or destroyed; second, in actions against carriers, so far as relates to the loss of the property and the amount and value thereof; third, in all matters of business transactions when the transaction was had and conducted by such married woman as the agent of her husband; and no married man shall be disqualified in any such civil suit or proceeding prosecuted in the name of or against his wife, whether he be joined with her or not as a party, when such suit or proceeding is based upon, grows out of, or is connected with any matter of business or business transaction where the transaction or business was had with or was conducted by such married man as the agent of his wife: provided that nothing in this section shall be construed to authorize or permit any married woman, while the relation exists or subsequently to testify to any admission or conversation of her husband, whether made to herself or to third parties"); § 5418 ("The following persons shall be incompetent to testify: First, a person of unsound mind at the time of his production for examination; second, a child under ten years of age, who appears incapable of receiving just impressions of the facts respecting which they are examined, or of relating them truly"); § 5439, Laws 1895, p. 284 ("Any person who has been convicted of a crime is notwithstanding a competent witness; but the conviction may be proved to affect his credibility, either by the record or by his own cross-examination, upon which he must answer any question relevant to that inquiry, and the party cross-examining shall not be concluded by his answer"); § 265 (where the presumption of death applies, in applications for administration of estates, "no person shall be disqualified by reason of his or her relationship as husband or wife to the supposed deceased, or by reason of his or her interest in the estate of the person supposed to be dead").

MONTANA: Revised Codes 1921, § 10533 ("A witness is a person whose declaration under oath is received as evidence for any purpose, whether such declaration be made on oral examination or by deposition or affidavit"); § 10534 ("All persons, without exception, otherwise than is specified in the next two sections, who, having organs of sense, can perceive, and perceiving can make known their perceptions to others, may be witnesses. Therefore, neither parties nor other persons who have an interest in the event of an action or proceeding are excluded; nor those who have been convicted of crime; nor persons on account of their opinions on matters of religious belief; although, in every case, the credibility of the witness may be drawn in question, as provided in § 10508"); § 10535 ("The following persons cannot be witnesses: 1. Those who are of unsound mind at the time of their production for examination. 2. Children under ten years of age, who appear incapable of receiving just impressions of the facts respecting which they are examined, or of relating them truly. 3. Parties or assignees of parties to an action or proceeding, or persons in whose behalf an action or proceeding is prosecuted, against an executor or administrator, upon a claim or demand against the estate of a deceased person, as to the facts of direct transactions or oral communications between the proposed witness and the deceased, excepting where the executor or administrator first introduces evidence thereof, or where it appears to the Court that without the testimony of the witness injustice will be done.

4. Parties or assignors of parties to an action or proceeding, or persons in whose behalf an action or proceeding is prosecuted against any person or corporation, as to the facts of direct transaction or oral communication between the proposed witness and the deceased, agent of such person or corporation, and between the proposed witness and any deceased officer of such corporation, except when it appears", etc. as in par. 3); § 10536 ("There are particular relations in which it is the policy of the law to encourage confidence and to preserve it inviolate; therefore, a person cannot be examined as a witness in the following cases: 1. A husband cannot be examined for or against his wife, without her consent; nor a wife for or against her husband, without his consent; nor can either, during the marriage or afterward, be, without the consent of the other, examined as to any communication made by one to the other during the marriage; but this exception does not apply to a civil action or proceeding by one against the other, nor to a criminal action or proceeding for a crime committed by one against the other"); § 11603 (a person "convicted of any offence" is competent); §§ 11974, 11975 (like Cal. P. C. §§ 1099, 1100); § 12175 ("The rules for determining the competency of witnesses in civil actions are applicable also to criminal actions and proceedings, except as otherwise provided in this Code"); § 12176 ("Except with the consent of both, or in cases of criminal violence upon one by the other, neither husband nor wife is a competent witness for or against the other in a criminal action or proceeding to which one or both are parties"); § 12177 ("A defendant in a criminal action or proceeding cannot be compelled to be a witness against himself; but he may be sworn, and may testify in his own behalf, and the jury, in judging of his credibility and the weight to be given to his testimony, may take into consideration the fact that he is the defendant, and the nature and enormity of the crime of which he is accused. If the defendant does not claim the right to be sworn, or does not testify, it must not be used to his prejudice, and the attorney prosecuting must not comment to the Court or jury on the same"); § 12178 ("When two or more persons are jointly or otherwise concerned in the commission of an offence, any one of such persons may testify for or against the other in relation to the offence committed, but the testimony of such witness must not be used against him in any criminal action or proceeding").

NEBRASKA: Revised Statutes 1922, § 1521 ("either party [to a divorce suit] may be a witness as in other civil cases"); § 278 (bastardy; the mother is competent, except when convicted of a crime that would otherwise disqualify her); § 8835 ("Every human being of sufficient capacity to understand the obligation of an oath, is a competent witness in all cases, civil and criminal, except as otherwise herein declared. The following persons shall be incompetent to testify: First, persons of unsound mind at the time of their production; second, Indians and negroes who appear incapable of receiving just impressions of the facts respecting which they are examined, or of relating them intelligently and truly; third, husband and wife, concerning any communication made by one to the other during the marriage, whether called as a witness while that relation subsists or afterward"); § 8836 ("No person having a direct legal interest in the result of any civil action or proceeding, when the adverse party is the representative of a deceased person, shall be permitted to testify to any transaction or conversation had between the deceased person and the witness, unless the evidence of the deceased person shall have been taken and read in evidence by the adverse party in regard to such transaction or conversation, or unless such representative shall have introduced a witness who shall have testified in regard to such transaction or conversation, in which case the person having such direct legal interest may be examined in regard to the facts testified to by such deceased person or such witness, but shall not be permitted to further testify in regard to such transaction or conversation"); § 8837 ("The husband can in no case be a witness against the wife, nor the wife against the husband, except in a criminal proceeding for a crime committed by the one against the other, but they may in all criminal prosecutions be witnesses for each other; provided, however, that a wife shall be a competent witness against the husband in all prosecutions arising under § 39 of the Criminal Code [C. S. § 9584]"); § 8838 ("Neither husband nor wife can be examined in any case as to any communication made by the one to the other while married, nor shall they, after the marriage relation ceases, be permitted to reveal, in testimony, any such communication made while the marriage subsisted"); § 8841 ("The prohibitions in the preceding sections do not apply to cases where the party in whose favor the respective provisions are enacted waives the rights thereby conferred"); § 10139 ("No person shall be disqualified as a witness in any criminal prosecution by reason of his interest in the event of the same, as a party or otherwise, or by reason of his conviction of any crime, but such interest or conviction may be shown for the purpose of affecting his credibility. In the trial of all indictments, complaints, and other proceedings against persons charged with the commission of crimes or offences, the person so charged shall, at his own request, but not otherwise, be deemed a competent witness; nor shall the neglect or refusal to testify create any presumption against him, nor shall any reference be made to, nor any comment upon, such neglect or refusal"); § 10140 ("When two or more persons shall be indicted together, the Court may, at any time before the defendant has gone into his defence, direct any one of the defendants to be discharged, that he may be a witness for the State"; the accused "may also, when there is not sufficient evidence to put him upon his defence, be discharged by the Court", or may demand a verdict, to give evidence "for others accused with him"); § 9765 (pandering; any female enticed, etc., shall be competent, "including conversation with the accused or by him with third persons in her presence, notwithstanding her having married the accused either before or after" the offence).

NEVADA: Revised Laws 1912, § 5419 ("All persons, without exception, otherwise than as specified in this chapter, who, having organs of sense, can perceive, and perceiving can make known their perceptions to others, may be witnesses in any action or proceeding in any Court of the State. Facts which by the common law would cause the exclusion of witnesses may still be shown for the purpose of affecting their credibility. No person shall be allowed to testify:

"1. When the other party to the transaction is dead.

"2. When the opposite party to the action, or the person for whose immediate benefit the action or proceeding is prosecuted or defended, is the representative of a deceased person, when the facts to be proved transpired before the death of such deceased person; provided that when such deceased person was represented in the transaction in question by any agent who is living, and who testifies as a witness in favor of the representative of such deceased person, or, when persons other than the parties to the transaction, and claiming to have been present when the transaction took place, testify as witnesses in favor of the representative of such deceased person, in such case the other party may also testify in relation to such transaction.

"Nothing contained in this section shall affect the laws in relation to the attestation of any instrument required to be attested"); § 5420 ("No person shall be disqualified as a witness in any action or proceeding on account of his opinions on matters of religious belief, or by reason of his conviction of felony, but such conviction may be shown for the purpose of affecting his credibility, and the jury is to be the exclusive judges of his credibility, or by reason of his interest in the event of the action or proceeding as a party thereto or otherwise, but the party or parties thereto, and the person in whose behalf such action or proceeding may be brought or defended, shall, except as hereinafter excepted, be competent and be compellable to give evidence, either 'viva voce' or by deposition or upon a commission, in the same manner and be subject to the same rules of examination as other witnesses on behalf of himself, or either or any of the parties to the action or proceeding"); § 5422 ("When husband or wife is insane and has been so declared by a commission of lunacy, or in due form of law, the other shall be a competent witness to testify as to any fact which transpired before or during such insanity, but the privilege of so testifying shall cease on the restoration to soundness of the insane husband or wife, unless upon the consent of both, in which case they shall be competent witnesses"); § 5423 ("The following persons cannot be witnesses: 1. those who are of unsound mind at the time of their production for examination: 2. children under ten years of age who appear incapable of receiving just impressions of the facts respecting which they are examined, or of relating them truly; 3. Parties or assignors of parties to an action or proceeding, or persons in whose behalf an action or proceeding is prosecuted, against an executor or administrator upon a claim or demand against the estate of a deceased person, as to any matter of fact occurring before the death of such deceased person"); § 5424 ("A husband cannot be examined as a witness for or against his wife without her consent, nor a wife for or against her husband without his consent; nor can either, during the marriage or afterwards, be, without the consent of the other, examined as to any communication made by one to the other during the marriage. But this exception shall not apply to a civil action or proceeding by one against the other, nor to a criminal action or proceeding for a crime committed by one against the other"); § 7160 ("In the trial of all indictments, complaints, and other proceedings against persons charged with the commission of crimes or offences, the person so charged shall, at his own request but not otherwise, be deemed a competent witness; the credit to be given to his testimony being left solely to the jury, under the instructions of the Court, provided that no special instruction shall be given relating exclusively to the testimony of the defendant, or particularly directing the attention of the jury to the defendant's testimony"); § 7161 ("Nothing herein contained shall be construed as compelling any such person to testify. No instruction shall be given relative to the failure of the person charged with the commission of the crime or offense to testify, except, upon request of the person so charged, the Court shall instruct the jury that, in accordance with a right guaranteed by the constitution, no person can be compelled in a criminal action to be a witness against himself"); §§ 7168, 7169 (joint indictees; like Cal. P. C. §§ 1099, 1100); § 7451 ("The rules for determining the competency of witnesses in civil actions are applicable also to criminal actions and proceedings, except as otherwise provided for in this Act. The party or parties injured shall in all cases be competent witnesses; the credibility of such witnesses shall be left to the jury, as in other cases. In all cases when two or more persons are jointly or otherwise concerned in the commission of any crime or misdemeanor, either of such persons may be sworn as a witness against another, in relation to such crime or misdemeanor; but the testimony given by such witnesses shall in no instance be used against himself in any criminal prosecution, and any person may be compelled to testify as provided in this section"); § 7452 ("Except with the consent of both, or in cases of criminal violence upon one by the other, neither husband nor wife is a competent witness for or against the other in a criminal action or proceeding to which one or both are parties"); § 6483 (family desertion; wife to be competent "against her husband with or without his consent"); § 7530 (selling liquor to Indians; "Indians shall be competent witnesses"); St. 1913, Mar. 26, p. 445 (family desertion; wife a competent witness to all relevant matters, including marriage and parentage); St. 1921, c. 64, Mar. 8 (repeals Rev. St. 1912, § 7452).

NEW HAMPSHIRE: Public Statutes 1891, c. 224, § 13 ("No person shall be excused or excluded from testifying or giving his deposition in any civil cause by reason of his interest therein, as a party or otherwise"); § 16 ("When one party to a cause is an executor, administrator, or the guardian of an insane person, neither party shall testify in respect to facts which occurred in the lifetime of the deceased or prior to the ward's insanity, unless the executor, administrator, or guardian elects so to testify, except as provided in the following section"); § 17 ("When it clearly appears to the Court that injustice may be done without the testimony of the party in such case, he may be allowed to testify; and the ruling of the Court, admitting or rejecting his testimony, may be excepted to and revised"); § 18 ("When either party of record is not the party in interest, and the party whose interest is represented by the party of record is an executor, administrator, or insane, the adverse party shall not testify, unless the executor, administrator, or guardian of the insane person elects to testify himself, or to offer the testimony of such party of record"); § 19 ("In an action brought by an indorsee or assignee of a bill of exchange, promissory note; or mortgage against an original party thereto, the defendant shall not testify in his own behalf if either of the original parties to the bill, note, or mortgage is dead or insane, unless the plaintiff elects to testify himself or to offer the testimony of an original party thereto"); § 20 ("Husband and wife are competent witnesses for or against each other in all cases civil and criminal, except that neither shall be allowed to testify against each other as to any statement, conversation, letter, or other communication made to the other or to another person, nor shall either be allowed in any case to testify as to any matter which in the opinion of the Court would lead to a violation of marital confidence"); § 24 ("In the trial of indictments, complaints, and other proceedings against persons charged with the commission of crimes and offences, the person so charged shall, at his own request, but not otherwise, be a competent witness"); § 25 ("Nothing herein contained shall be construed as compelling any such person to testify, nor shall any inference of his guilt result if he does not testify, nor shall the counsel for the prosecution comment thereon in case the respondent does not testify"); § 26 ("No person shall be competent to testify on account of his having been convicted of an infamous crime, but the record of such conviction may be used to affect his credit as a witness").

NEW JERSEY: Compiled Statutes 1910, Disorderly Persons, § 23 (wife or husband may be witness in trial of husband deserting family); Evidence, § 1 ("No person offered as a witness in any action or proceeding of a civil or criminal nature shall be excluded by reason of his having been convicted of crime, but such conviction may be shown on cross-examination of the witness, or, by the production of the record thereof, for the purpose of affecting his credit"); § 2 ("In all civil actions in any Court of record in this State the parties thereto shall be admitted to be sworn and give evidence therein, when called as witnesses by the adverse party in such action; and when any party is called as a witness by the opposite party, he shall be subject to the same rules as to examination and cross-examination as other witnesses; provided, that no party to a suit shall be compelled to be sworn or give evidence in any action brought to recover a penalty or to enforce a forfeiture; and provided, also, that this section shall not apply to suits for divorce"); § 3 ("No person shall be disqualified as a witness in any suit or proceedings at law or in equity by reason of his interest in the event of the same as a party or otherwise, but such interest may be shown for the purpose of affecting his or her credit; provided, no party shall be sworn in any case when the opposite party is prohibited by any legal disability from being sworn as a witness"); § 4 ("In all civil actions any party thereto may be sworn and examined as a witness, notwithstanding any party thereto may sue or be sued in a representative capacity; provided, this section shall not extend to permit testimony to be given by any party to the action as to any transaction with or statement by any testator or intestate represented in said action, unless the representative offers himself as a witness on his own behalf and testifies to any transaction with or statements by his testator or intestate, in which event the other party may be a witness on his own behalf as to all transactions with or statements by such testator or intestate which are pertinent to the issue"); § 5 ("In any trial or inquiry in any suit, action, or proceeding in any Court, or before any person having by law or consent of parties authority to examine witnesses or hear evidence, the husband or wife of any person interested therein as a party or otherwise, shall be competent and compellable to give evidence the same as other witnesses, on behalf of any party to such suit, action or proceeding; provided, that nothing herein shall render any husband or wife competent or compellable to give evidence for or against the other in any action for criminal conversation, except to prove the fact of marriage, or to render any husband or wife competent or compellable to give evidence against the other in any criminal action or proceeding, except to prove the fact of marriage, and except as now otherwise provided by statute, or compellable in any action or proceeding for divorce on account of adultery to give evidence for the other, except to prove the fact of marriage; nor shall any husband or wife be compellable to disclose any confidential communication made by one to the other during the marriage"); § 6 ("The complainant or petitioner in any action or proceeding of an equitable nature in any Court, shall be a competent witness to disprove so much of the defendant's answer as may be responsive to the allegations contained in the bill of complaint or petition, and any defendant in any such action or proceeding shall be a competent witness for or against any other defendant not jointly interested with him in the matter in controversy"); § 12 (surviving party deceased party's representative is competent in new trial of action revived after other party's death); Criminal Procedure, § 57 ("Upon the trial of any indictment, the defendant shall be admitted to testify, if he shall offer himself as a witness; and upon any such trial, the wife or the husband of the defendant, as the case may be, shall be admitted to testify on behalf of the defendant, if he or she shall offer himself or herself as a witness; and upon any such trial, a married woman shall be admitted to testify against her husband when she is the complainant against him, if she shall offer herself as a witness. . . . Upon the trial of any indictment for falsely making, altering, forging, or counterfeiting, or for uttering or publishing as true, any record, deed, or other instrument or writing, no person named in such record, deed, or other instrument or writing, or whose name or any part of whose name is or purports to be written or signed therein or thereto, shall on that account be deemed and taken to be an incompetent witness"); Practice, § 140 (any party may cause an adverse party to be examined); St. 1917, Mar. 19, c. 61, § 5 (family-desertion; rule "prohibiting disclosure of confidential communications between husband and wife" shall not apply; both husband and wife "shall be competent and compellable witnesses to testify against each other to any and all relevant matters", including marriage and parentage); 1903, State v. Zdanowicz, — N. J. L. —, 55 Atl. 743 (the accused is competent for himself under the Crim. Proced. St. 1898, June 14, c. 237, § 57, though the Evidence Revision Statute of 1900, March 23, c. 150, repeals the former § 8, and contains no clause of like effect); St. 1913, Mar. 12, c. 69 (a party to a civil suit may at his own option give his testimony by deposition, and if "any other party to such suit" die, the deposition is admissible "notwithstanding it shall relate to transactions with or statements by such decedent").

NEW MEXICO: Annotated Statutes 1915, § 2163 ("No person offered as a witness shall hereinafter be excluded by reason of any alleged incapacity from interest, from giving evidence, either in person or by deposition, according to the practice of the court, on the trial of any issue joined, or of any matter in question or on any inquiry arising in any civil suit, action, or proceeding in any court, or before any judge, coroner, justice of the peace, officer, or person having, by law or by consent of parties, authority to hear, receive, and examine evidence in this State"); § 2164 ("Every person so offered shall be admitted to give evidence on oath or solemn affirmation in those cases wherein affirmation is by law receivable; notwithstanding that such person has an interest in the matter in question, or in the event of the trial of any issue, matter, question, or inquiry, or of the suit, action, or proceeding in which he is offered as a witness"); § 2165 ("Hereafter, in the courts of this State no person offered as a witness shall be disqualified to give evidence on account of any disqualification known to the common law, but all such common-law disqualifications may be shown for the purpose of affecting the credibility of any such witness and for no other purpose; provided, however, that the presiding judge, in his discretion, may refuse to permit a child of tender years to be sworn, if, in the opinion of the judge, such child has not sufficient mental capacity to understand the nature and obligation of an oath"); § 2169 ("On the trial of any issue joined, or of any matter or question, or on any inquiry arising in any civil suit, action, or other proceeding in any court of law or equity in this State, or before any person having, by law or by consent of parties, authority to hear, receive, and examine evidence, the parties to such proceedings, and the persons in whose behalf any such suit, action, or other proceeding is brought or instituted, or opposed or defended, shall, except as hereinafter excepted, be competent and compellable to give evidence, either 'viva voce' or by deposition, according to the practice of the court, on behalf of themselves or of either of the parties to the suit, action, or proceeding, and the husbands and wives of such parties and persons shall, except as hereinafter excepted, be competent to give evidence, either 'viva voce' or by deposition, according to the practice of the court, on behalf of either or any of the parties to the said suit, action, or proceeding"); § 2173 ("Nothing contained in this article shall apply to the trial, in any civil proceeding, of the question of the adultery of any party, or the husband or wife of any party to such action, suit, or proceeding"); § 2174

("No husband shall be compelled to disclose any communication made by his wife during the marriage, and no wife shall be compelled to disclose any communication made to her by her husband during the marriage"); § 2175 ("In a suit by or against the heirs, executors, administrators, or assigns of a deceased person, an opposite or interested party to the suit shall not obtain a verdict, judgment, or decision therein, on his own evidence, in respect to any matter occurring before the death of the deceased person, unless such evidence is corroborated by some other material evidence"); § 2166 ("In the trial of all indictments, informations, complaints, and other proceedings against persons charged with the commission of crimes, offences, and misdemeanors in the courts of this State, the person so charged shall, at his own request, but not otherwise, be a competent witness; and his failure to make such request shall not create any presumption against him"); § 2167 ("Hereafter the husband or wife of any defendant in any trial on a prosecution for crime before any Court or officer authorized to hear or try said prosecution shall be a competent witness to testify in favor [of,] but not against, such defendant; provided, that such husband or wife shall be a competent witness to testify against any such defendant where the prosecution is for any unlawful assault or violence forcibly committed by the defendant on the person of such witness"); § 2168 (in any prosecution for "incest, bigamy, polygamy, unlawful cohabitation, or adultery", the accused's husband or wife is competent, "and may be called, but shall not be required to testify without the consent of such husband or wife so called as a witness"); § 2171 (interrogatories to adverse party shall be annexed to pleading).

NEW YORK: Constitution 1895, Art. XIII, § 4 ("Any person charged with receiving a bribe, or with offering or promising a bribe, shall be permitted to testify in his own behalf in any civil or criminal prosecution therefor"); Civil Practice Act 1920, § 346 ("Except all otherwise specially prescribed, a person shall not be excluded or excused from being a witness, by reason of his or her interest in the event of an action or special proceeding; or because he or she is a party thereto; or the husband or wife of a party thereto, or of a person in whose behalf an action or special proceeding is brought, opposed, prosecuted, or defended"); § 347 ("Upon the trial of an action, or the hearing upon the merits of a special proceeding, a party or a person interested in the event, or a person from, through, or under whom such a party or interested person derives his interest or title by assignment or otherwise, shall not be examined as a witness in his own behalf or interest, or in behalf of the party succeeding to his title or interest, against the executor, administrator, or survivor of a deceased person, or the committee of a lunatic, or a person deriving his title or interest from, through, or under a deceased person or lunatic, by assignment or otherwise, concerning a personal transaction or communication between the witness and the deceased person or lunatic, except where the executor, administrator, survivor, committee, or person so deriving title or interest is examined in his own behalf, or the testimony of the lunatic or deceased person is given in evidence, concerning the same transaction or communication. A person shall not be deemed interested for the purposes of this section by reason of being a stockholder or officer of any banking corporation which is a party to the proceeding or interested in the result thereof"); § 349 ("A husband or wife is not competent to testify against the other, upon the trial of an action, or the hearing upon the merits of a special proceeding, founded upon an allegation of adultery, except to prove the marriage or disprove the allegation of adultery. However, if upon such trial or such hearing the party against whom the allegation of adultery is made produces evidence tending to prove any of the defenses thereto mentioned in § 1153 of this Act, the other party is competent to testify in disproof of any such defense. A husband or wife shall not be compelled, or, without the consent of the other if living, allowed to disclose a confidential communication made by one to the other during marriage. In an action for criminal conversation, the plaintiff's wife is not a competent witness for the plaintiff, but she is a competent witness for the defendant, as to any matter in controversy; except that she cannot, without the plaintiff's consent, disclose any confidential communication had or made between herself and the plaintiff"); § 350 ("A person who has been convicted of a crime is, notwithstanding, a competent witness in an action of special proceeding; but the conviction may be proved for the purpose of affecting the weight of his testimony, either by the record or by his cross-examination, upon which he must answer any question relevant to that inquiry; and the party cross-examining him is not concluded by that inquiry"); § 365 ("The Court or officer may examine an infant, or a person apparently of weak intellect, produced before it or him as a witness, to ascertain his capacity and the extent of his knowledge"); Penal Code 1909, § 2444 (substantially like C. P. A. § 350); § 2445 ("The husband or wife of a person indicted or accused of a crime is in all cases a competent witness, on the examination or trial of such person; but neither husband nor wife can be compelled to disclose a confidential communication, made by one to the other during marriage"); Code of Criminal Procedure, 1881, § 10 ("No person can be compelled in a criminal action to be a witness against himself"); § 392 (in criminal cases, the testimony of a child apparently under 12 not understanding an oath may be received if it is "of sufficient intelligence"; quoted more fully post, § 1828); § 393 ("The defendant in all [criminal] cases may testify as a witness in his own behalf, but his neglect or refusal to testify does not create any presumption against him") ; § 393*a* ("All persons jointly indicted shall, upon the trial of either, be competent witnesses for each other the same as if not included in the indictment"); Consol. L. 1909, Banking, § 145 (wife may testify in action by husband against savings bank to recover money deposited by wife as hers); St. 1912, c. 420, p. 816 (amending Greater New York Charter, § 685; desertion of family; in all complaints hereunder, wife is to be competent "against her husband as to all matters embraced in said complaint"); Justice Court Act 1920, § 248 (children; like C. P. A. § 305).

North Carolina: Consolidated Statutes 1919, § 1662 (in divorce cases, neither party is competent to prove adultery of the other, nor shall either's admissions be received for that purpose); §§ 905–907 (these sections, removing in part only the disqualification of parties, are presumably superseded by §§ 1792, 1793, infra); § 1801 ("In any trial or inquiry in any suit, action, or proceeding in any court or before any person having by law or by consent of parties authority to examine witnesses or to hear evidence, the husband or wife of any party thereto, or any person in whose behalf any such suit, action, or proceeding is brought, prosecuted, opposed, or defended, shall, except as hereinafter stated, be competent and compellable to give evidence as any other witness on behalf of any party to such suit, action, or proceeding. Nothing herein contained shall render any husband or wife competent or compellable to give evidence for or against the other in any action or proceeding in consequence of adultery, or in any action or proceeding for divorce on account of adultery (except to prove the fact of marriage), or in any action or proceeding for or on account of criminal conversation, except that in actions of criminal conversation brought by the husband in which the character of the wife is assailed she shall be a competent witness to testify in refutation of such charges. No husband or wife shall be compellable to disclose any confidential communication made by one to the other during their marriage"); § 1802 ("The husband or wife of the defendant" to be competent in all criminal cases, "for the defendant, but the failure of such witness to be examined shall not be used to the prejudice of the defense. Every such person examined as a witness shall be subject to cross-examination as are other witnesses"; confidential communications not disclosable, as in § 1801; no husband or wife compellable to give evidence against each other in criminal cases, "except to prove the fact of marriage in case of bigamy", and except in prosecutions for "assault and battery upon his wife, or for abandoning his wife or for neglecting to provide for her support"); § 1795 ("Upon the trial of an action, or the hearing upon the merits of a special proceeding, a party or a person interested in the event, or a person from, through, or under whom such a party or interested person derives his title by assignment or otherwise, shall not be examined as a witness in his own behalf or interest, or in behalf of the party succeeding to his title or interest, against the executor, administrator, or survivor of a deceased person, or the committee of a lunatic, or a person deriving his title or interest from, through, or under a deceased person or lunatic by assignment or otherwise, concerning a personal transaction or communication between the witness and the deceased person or lunatic, except where the executor, administrator, survivor, committee, or person so deriving title or interest is examined in his own behalf, or the testimony of the lunatic or deceased person is given in evidence concerning the same transaction or communication"); § 1792, ("No person offered as a witness shall be excluded by reason of incapacity from interest or crime, from giving evidence either in person or by deposition, according to the practice of the court, on the trial of any issue joined, or of any matter or question, or on any inquiry arising in any suit or proceeding, civil or criminal, in any court, or before any judge, justice, jury, or other person having, by law, authority to hear, receive, and examine evidence; and every person so offered shall be admitted to give evidence, notwithstanding such person may or shall have an interest in the matter in question, or in the event of the trial of the issue, or of the suit or other proceeding in which he is offered as a witness. This section shall not be construed to apply to attesting witnesses to wills"); § 1793 ("On the trial of any issue, or of any matter or question, or on any inquiry arising in any action, suit, or other proceeding in court, or before any judge, justice, jury, or other person having, by law, authority to hear and examine evidence, the parties themselves and the person in whose behalf any suit or other proceeding may be brought or defended, shall, except as otherwise provided, be competent and compellable to give evidence, either 'viva voce' or by deposition, according to the practice of the Court, in behalf of either or any of the parties to said action, suit, or other proceeding. Nothing in this section shall be construed to apply to any action or other proceeding in any court instituted in consequence of adultery, or to any action for criminal conversation"); § 1799 ("In the trial of all indictments, complaints, or other proceedings against persons charged with the commission of crimes, offences, and misdemeanors, the person so charged is at his own request, but not otherwise, a competent witness, and his failure to make such request shall not create any presumption against him. But every such person examined as a witness shall be subject to cross-examination as are other witnesses. Except as above provided, nothing in this section shall render any person, who in any criminal proceeding is charged with the commission of a criminal offence, competent or compellable to give evidence against himself, nor render any person compellable to answer any question tending to criminate himself"); §§ 1794, 1796 (preserves certain disqualifications for parties to actions on judgments rendered prior to Aug. 1, 1868).

NORTH DAKOTA: Compiled Laws 1913, § 7862 ("No action to obtain discovery under oath in aid of the prosecution or defense of another action shall be allowed, nor shall any examination of a party be had on behalf of the adverse party, except in the manner prescribed by this chapter"); § 7863 ("A party to an action, or in case a corporation is a party, the president, secretary or other principal officer or general managing agent of such corporation, may be examined as a witness at the instance of an adverse party or any of several adverse parties and for that purpose may be compelled in the same manner and subject to the same rules of examination as any other witness to testify either at the trial, or conditionally, or upon commission"); § 7868 ("A party examined by an adverse party as in this chapter provided may be examined on his own behalf, subject to the same rules of examination as other witnesses"); § 7869 ("A person for whose immediate benefit the action is prosecuted or defended, though not a party to the action, may be examined as a witness in the same manner and subject to the same rules of examination as if he was named as a party"); § 7870 ("A party to the record of any civil action or proceeding, or a person for whose immediate benefit such action or proceeding is prosecuted or defended, or the directors, officers, superintendent or managing agents of any corporation which is a party to the record in such action or proceeding, may be examined upon the trial thereof as if under cross-examination at the instance of the adverse party or parties or any of them, and for that purpose may be compelled in the same manner and subject to the same rules for examination as any other witness to testify, but the party calling for such examination shall not be concluded thereby, but may rebut it by counter testimony"); § 7871 ("No person offered as a witness in any action or proceeding in any court, or before any officer or person having authority to examine witnesses or hear evidence, shall be excluded or excused by reason of such person's interest in the event of the action or proceeding; or because such person is a party thereto, or because such person is the husband or wife of a party thereto, or of any person in whose behalf such action or proceeding is commenced, prosecuted, opposed, or defended, except as hereinafter provided: 1. A husband cannot be examined for or against his wife without her consent, nor a wife for or against her husband without his consent, nor can either, during the marriage or afterward, be, without the consent of the other, examined as to any communication made by one to the other during the marriage; but this subdivision does not apply to a civil action or proceeding by one against the other, nor to a criminal action or proceeding for a crime committed by one against the other. 2. In civil actions or proceedings by or against executors, administrators, heirs-at-law, or next of kin, in which judgment may be rendered or ordered entered for or against them, neither party shall be allowed to testify against the other as to any transaction whatever with or statement by the testator or intestate, unless called to testify thereto by the opposite party; and where a corporation is a party in proceedings mentioned in this section, no agent, stockholder, officer or manager of such corporation shall be permitted to testify to any transaction had with the testator or intestate. But if the testimony of a party to the action or proceeding has been taken and he shall afterwards die, and after his death the testimony so taken shall be used upon any trial or hearing in behalf of his executors, administrators, heirs-at-law, or next of kin, then the other party shall be a competent witness as to any and all matters to which the testimony so taken relates; provided, further, that in any action or proceeding by or against any surviving husband or wife touching any business or property of either, or in which the survivor or his or her family are in any way interested, such husband or wife will be permitted, if they shall so desire, to testify under the general rules of evidence as to any or all transactions and conversations had with the deceased husband or wife during their lifetime touching such business or property"); § 9381 (conviction of perjury or subornation disqualifies the person as a witness in any proceeding "upon his own behalf", and in any proceeding "between adverse parties", against objection, until judgment of perjury, etc., is reversed; but no rights innocently acquired by a person claiming under such proceedings shall be prejudiced by illegal admission of an infamous person); § 10834 ("When two or more persons are included in the same information or indictment, the Court may, at any time before the defendants have gone into their defence, on the application of the State's attorney, direct any defendant to be discharged from the information or indictment, that he may be a witness for the State"); § 10835 ("When two or more persons are included in the same information or indictment, and the Court is of the opinion that in regard to a particular defendant there is not sufficient evidence to put him on his defence, it must order him to be discharged before the evidence is closed, that he may be a witness for his co-defendant"); § 10837 ("In the trial of a criminal action or proceeding before any Court or magistrate of this State, whether prosecuted by information, indictment, complaint, or otherwise, the defendant shall, at his own request and not otherwise, be deemed a competent witness; but his neglect or refusal to testify shall not create or raise any presumption of guilt against him; nor shall such neglect or refusal be referred to by any attorney prosecuting the case, or considered by the Court or jury before whom the trial takes place"); § 9600 (family-desertion; like Wis. St. 1911, c. 576); § 10182 (offenses against liquor-law; buyers of the liquor, and members of a club, to be competent).

OHIO: General Code Annotated 1921, § 11493 ("All persons are competent witnesses except those of unsound mind, and children under ten years of age who appear incapable of receiving just impressions of the facts and transactions respecting which they are examined, or of relating them truly"); § 11494 ("The following persons shall not testify in certain respects: . . . 3. Husband or wife, concerning any communication made by one to the other, or an act done by either in the presence of the other, during coverture, unless the communication was made, or act done, in the known presence or hearing of a third person competent to be a witness; the rule shall be the same if the marital relation has ceased to exist. 4. A person who assigns his claim or interest, concerning any matter in respect to which he would not, if a party, be permitted to testify. 5. A person who, if a party, would be restricted in his evidence under the next following section where the property or thing is sold or transferred by an executor, administrator, guardian, trustee, heir, devisee, or legatee, shall be restricted in the same manner in any action or proceeding concerning such property or thing"); § 11495 ("A party shall not testify when the adverse party is a guardian or trustee of either a deaf and dumb or an insane person, or of a child of a deceased person, or is an executor or administrator, or claims or defends as heir, grantee, assignee, devisee, or legatee of a deceased person, except — 1. The facts which occurred subsequent to the appointment of the guardian or trustee of an insane person, and, in the other cases, subsequent to the time the decedent, grantor, assignor, or testator died. 2. When the action or proceeding relates to a contract made through an agent by a person since deceased, and the agent is competent to testify as a witness, a party may testify on the same subject. 3. If a party, or one having a direct interest, testify to transactions or conversations with another party, the latter may testify as to the same transactions or conversations. 4. If a party offer evidence of conversations or admissions of the opposite party, the latter may testify concerning the same conversations or admissions. 5. In an action or proceeding by or against a partner or joint contractor, the adverse party shall not testify to transactions with or admissions by a partner or joint contractor since deceased, unless they were made in the presence of the surviving partner or joint contractor; this rule applies without regard to the character in which the parties sue or are sued. 6. If the claim or defence is founded on a book account, a party may testify that the book is his account book, that it is a book of original entries, that the entries therein were made by himself, a person since deceased, or a disinterested person, non-resident of the county; the book shall then be competent evidence, and may be admitted in evidence in any case, without regard to the parties, upon like proof by any competent witness. 7. If after testifying orally a party dies, the evidence may be proved by either party on a further trial of the case, whereupon the opposite party may testify to the same matters. 8. If a party dies and his deposition be offered in evidence, the opposite party may testify as to all competent matters therein. Nothing in this section contained shall apply to actions for causing death, or actions or proceedings involving the validity of a deed, will, or codicil; and when a case is plainly within the reason and spirit of the last three sections, though not within the strict letter, their principles shall be applied"); § 11988 (parties in divorce and alimony cases are to be competent like any other witness); § 13659 ("No person shall be disqualified as witness in any criminal prosecution by reason of his interest in the event thereof, as a party or otherwise, or by reason of his conviction of any crime; and husband and wife shall be competent witnesses to testify in behalf of each other in all criminal prosecutions, and to testify against each other in all actions, prosecutions, and proceedings for failure to provide for, neglect of, or cruelty to, their child or children under 16 years of age. Such interest, conviction, or relationship may be shown for the purpose of affecting the credibility of such witness. Husband or wife shall not testify concerning any communication made one to the other, or act done by either in the presence of each other during coverture, unless the communication was made or act done in the known presence or hearing of a third person competent to be a witness, or in case of personal injury by either the husband or wife to the other, or in case of the failure to provide for, or the neglect or cruelty of either to their children under 16 years of age. The rule shall be the same if the marital relation has ceased to exist; but the presence or whereabouts of the husband or wife shall not be construed to be an act under this section"); § 13661 ("On the trial of all indictments, complaints, and other proceedings, against a person charged with the commission of an offence, such person at his own request shall be a competent witness. The neglect or refusal of such person to testify shall not create a presumption against him, nor shall reference be made to, nor comment made upon, such neglect or refusal"); the last sentence of this § 13661 is no longer law; see post, § 2272; § 13031–13037 (pandering, etc.; the female is a competent witness to "any and all matters, including conversations with the accused or by him with third persons in her presence, notwithstanding her having married the accused either before or after" the offence, and whether called "during the existence of the marriage or after its dissolution"); § 13670 ("When two or more persons are jointly indicted, before any of the accused has gone into his defense, the court may direct one of such accused to be discharged, that he may be a witness for the State. An accused person when there is not sufficient evidence to put him upon his defense, may be discharged by the court, or, if not so discharged, shall be entitled to the immediate verdict of the jury, for the purpose of giving evidence for others accused with him. Such order of discharge in either case shall be a bar to another prosecution for the same offense").

OKLAHOMA: Compiled Statutes 1921, § 1642 (infamy; like N. D. Comp. L. § 9381); § 585 ("No person shall be disqualified as a witness in any civil action or proceeding by reason of his interest in event of the same, as a party or otherwise, or by reason of his conviction of a crime; but such interest or conviction may be shown for the purpose of affecting his credibility"); § 586 (nothing in the preceding section is to affect the law as to the settlement of estates of decedents, etc., or as to the attestation of wills, etc.); § 587 ("Any party to a civil action or proceeding may compel any adverse party or person for whose benefit such action is instituted, prosecuted, or defended, at the trial or by deposition, to testify as a witness in the same manner and subject to the same rules as other witnesses"); § 588 ("No party shall be allowed to testify in his own behalf, in respect to any transaction or communication had personally by such party with a deceased person, when the adverse party is the executor, administrator, heir-at-law, next of kin, surviving partner, or assignee of such deceased person, where they have acquired title to the cause of action immediately from such deceased person; nor shall the assignor of a thing in action be allowed to testify in behalf of such party concerning any transaction or communication had personally by such assignor with a deceased person in any such case; nor shall such party or assignor be competent to testify to any transaction had personally by such party or assignor with a deceased partner or joint contractor in the absence of his surviving partner or joint contractor, when such surviving partner or joint contractor is an adverse party. If the testimony of a party to the action or proceeding has been taken, and he afterwards die, and the testimony so taken shall be used after his death, in behalf of executors, administrators, heirs-at-law, next of kin, assignee, surviving partner, or joint contractor, the other party or the assignor shall be competent to testify as to any and all matters to which the testimony so taken relates"); § 589 ("The following persons shall be incompetent to testify: First, persons who are of unsound mind at the time of their production for examination. Second, children under ten years of age who appear incapable of receiving just impressions of the facts respecting which they are examined, or of relating them truly. Third, husband and wife, for or against each other, except concerning transactions in which one acted as the agent of the other, or when they are joint parties and have a joint interest in the action; but in no case shall either be permitted to testify concerning any communication made by one to the other during marriage, whether called while that relation subsisted or afterwards"); § 2696 ("When two or more persons are included in the indictment, the Court may, at any time before the defendants have gone into their defence, on the application of the district attorney, direct any defendant to be discharged from the indictment, that he may be a witness for the Territory"); § 2697 ("When two or more persons are included in the same indictment, and the Court is of opinion that in regard to a particular defendant there is not sufficient evidence to put him on his defence, it must, before the evidence is closed, in order that he may be a witness for his co-defendant, submit its said opinion to the jury, who, if they so find, may acquit the particular defendant for the purpose aforesaid"); § 2698 ("On the trial of all indictments, informations, complaints, and other proceedings against persons charged with the commission of a crime, offences, and misdemeanors before any Court or committing magistrate in this Territory, the person charged shall at his own request, but not otherwise, be a competent witness, and his failure to make such request shall not create any presumption against him, nor be mentioned on the trial; if commented upon by counsel, it shall be ground for a new trial"); § 2699 ("The rules of evidence in civil cases are applicable also to criminal cases, except as otherwise provided in this chapter"); St. 1895, c. 41, § 29 ("neither husband nor wife shall in any case be a witness against the other, except in a criminal prosecution for a crime committed one against the other, but they may in all cases be witnesses for each other, and shall be subject to cross-examination as other witnesses, and shall in no event on a criminal trial be permitted to disclose communications made by one to the other, except on a trial of an offence committed by one against the other").

OREGON: Laws 1920, § 731 ("All persons without exception, except as otherwise provided in this title, who, having organs of sense can perceive, and perceiving can make known their perceptions to others, may be witnesses. Therefore neither parties nor other persons who have an interest in the event of an action, suit, or proceeding are excluded; nor those who have been convicted of crime; nor persons on account of their opinions on matters of religious belief; although in every case, except the latter, the credibility of the witness may be drawn in question, as provided in § 704"); § 732 ("The following persons are not admissible: 1. Those of unsound mind at the time of their production for examination. 2. Children under ten years of age, who appear incapable of receiving just impressions of the facts respecting which they are examined, or of relating them truly"; amended by St. 1893, p. 134, by permitting a deceased opponent's hearsay statements to be received; see quotation post, § 1576); § 733 ("There are particular relations in which it is the policy of the law to encourage confidence, and to preserve it inviolate; therefore a person cannot be examined as a witness in the following cases: 1. A husband shall not be examined for or against his wife without her consent, nor a wife for or against her husband without his consent; nor can either, during the marriage or afterwards, be, without the consent of the other, examined as to any communication made by one to the other during marriage. But the exception does not apply to a civil action, suit, or proceeding, by one against the other, nor to a criminal action or proceeding for a crime committed by one against the other"); § 734 ("If a party to the suit, action, or proceeding offer himself as a witness, that is to be deemed a consent to the examination also of a wife, husband, attorney, clergyman, physician, or surgeon on the same subject, within the meaning of subdivisions 1, 2, 3, and 4 of the last section"); § 1530 ("When two or more persons are charged in the same indictment, the Court may, at any time before the defendant has gone into his defence, on the application of the district attorney, direct any defendant to be discharged from the indictment, so that he may be a witness for the State"); § 1531 ("When two or more persons are charged in the same indictment, and the Court is of opinion that, in regard to a particular defendant, there is not sufficient evidence to put him on his defence, it must, if requested by another defendant then on trial, order him to be discharged from the indictment, before the evidence is closed, that he may be a witness for his co-defendant"); § 1533 ("The law of evidence in civil actions is also the law of evidence in criminal actions and proceedings, except as otherwise specially provided in this Code"); § 1534 ("On the trial of or examination upon all indictments, complaints, information, and other proceedings before any Court, magistrate, jury, grand jury, or other tribunal, against persons accused or charged with the commission of crimes or offences, the person so charged or accused shall, at his own request but not otherwise, be deemed a competent witness, the credit to be given to his testimony being left solely to the jury, under the instructions of the Court, or to the discrimination of the magistrate, grand jury, or other tribunal before which such testimony may be given; provided, his waiver of such right shall not create any presumption against him; that such defendant or accused, when offering his testimony as a witness in his own behalf, shall be deemed to have given to the prosecution a right to cross-examination upon all facts to which he has testified, tending to his conviction or acquittal"); § 1535 ("In all criminal actions, where the husband is the party accused, the wife shall be a competent witness, and when the wife is the party accused, the husband shall be a competent witness; but neither husband nor wife, in such cases, shall be compelled or allowed to testify in such case unless by consent of both of them; provided, that in all cases of personal violence upon either by the other, the injured party, husband or wife, shall be allowed to testify against the other; provided, further, that in all criminal actions for polygamy, or adultery, the husband or wife of the accused shall be a competent witness, and shall be allowed to testify against the other, and without the consent of the other, as to the fact of marriage"); § 1309–8 (administration of estates of persons absent and presumed dead; "no person shall be disqualified from testifying by reason of his or her relationship as husband or wife to the presumed decedent, or of his or her interest in the estate of such person"); § 2091 (placing wife in house of prostitution; "the wife shall be a competent witness against her husband"); § 2171 (non-support of family by husband; privilege as to confidential communications not to be applicable; wife to be "competent and compellable").

PENNSYLVANIA: Digest of Statute Law 1920: St. 1887, May 23, § 1, Dig. § 21835, Witnesses, ("Except upon a preliminary hearing before a magistrate for the purpose of determining whether a person charged with a criminal offence triable in the Court of Oyer and Terminer ought to be committed for trial, and except also upon a hearing under 'habeas corpus' for the purpose of determining whether bail ought to be taken upon a commitment for murder in the first degree, or for the purpose of determining in any case how much bail ought to be required, or for the purpose of determining in any case whether a person committed for trial ought to be further held, and except, also, upon hearings before a grand jury, in none of which cases shall evidence for the defendant be heard, and except also as provided in § 2 of this act, all persons shall be fully competent witnesses in any criminal proceeding before any tribunal"); ib. § 2, cl. (a), Dig. § 21836 ("In such criminal proceedings, a person who has been convicted in a court of this Commonwealth of perjury, which term is hereby declared to include subornation of perjury, shall not be a competent witness for any purpose, although his sentence may have been fully complied with, unless the judgment or conviction be judicially set aside or reserved [reversed?], or unless the proceeding be one to punish or prevent injury or violence attempted, done, or threatened to his person or property, in which cases he shall be competent to testify"); ib. § 2, cl. (b), as amended St. 1909, Apr. 27, § 1, Dig. § 21837 ("Nor shall husband and wife be competent or permitted to testify against each other, or in support of a criminal charge of adultery alleged to have been committed by or with the other, except that, in proceedings for desertion and maintenance, and in criminal proceeding against either for bodily injury or violence attempted, done, or threatened upon the other, or upon the minor children of said husband and wife, or the minor children of either of them, or any minor child in their care or custody or in the care or custody of either of them, each shall be a competent witness against the other; and except, also, that either shall be competent merely to prove the fact of marriage in support of a criminal charge of adultery alleged to have been committed by or with the other"); ib. § 2, cl. (c), Dig. § 21839 ("Nor shall either husband or wife be competent or permitted to testify to confidential communications made by one to the other, unless this privilege be waived upon the trial"); ib. § 4, Dig. § 21844 ("In any civil proceeding before any tribunal of this Commonwealth, or conducted by virtue of its order or direction, no liability merely for costs nor the right to compensation possessed by an executor, administrator, or other trustee, nor any interest merely in the question on trial, nor any other interest or policy of law, except as is provided in § 5 of this act, shall make any person incompetent as a witness"); ib. § 5, cl. (a), Dig. § 21845 (provisions of § 2, cl. (a), supra, applied to civil proceedings); ib. § 5, cl. (b), Dig. § 21846 (provisions of § 2, cl. (c), supra, applied to civil proceedings); ib. § 5, cl. (c), Dig. § 21847 ("Nor shall husband or wife be competent or permitted to testify against each other, except in those proceedings for divorce in which personal service of the subpœna or of a rule to take depositions has been made upon the opposite party, or in which the opposite party appears and defends, in which case either party may testify fully against the other, and except also that in any proceeding for divorce either party may be called merely to prove the fact of marriage"); St. 1913, Mar. 27, Dig. § 21850 ("In any proceedings brought by either the husband or wife to protect or recover the separate property of either, both shall be fully competent witnesses, except that neither may testify to confidential communications made by one to the other, unless this privilege be waived upon the trial"); St. 1887, May 23, § 5, cl. (e), Dig. § 21853 ("Nor, where any party to a thing or contract in action is dead, or has been adjudged a lunatic, and his right thereto or therein has passed, either by his own act or by the act of the law, to a party on the record who represents his interest in the subject in controversy, shall any surviving or remaining party to such thing or contract, or any other person whose interest shall be adverse to the said right of such deceased or lunatic party, be a competent witness to any matter occurring before the death of said party or the adjudication of his lunacy; unless the proceeding is by or against the surviving or remaining partners, joint promisors, or joint promisees, of such deceased or lunatic party, and the matter occurred between such surviving or remaining partners, joint promisors, or joint promisees and the other party on the record, or between such surviving or remaining partners, promisors, or promisees and the person having an interest adverse to them, in which case any person may testify to such matters; or, unless the action be ejectment against several defendants, and one or more of said defendants disclaims of record any title to the premises in controversy at the time the suit was brought and also pays into Court the costs accrued at the time of his disclaimer, or gives security therefor as the Court in its discretion may direct, in which case such disclaiming defendant shall be a fully competent witness; or, unless the issue or inquiry be 'devisavit vel non', or be any other issue or inquiry respecting the property of a deceased owner, and the controversy be between parties respectively claiming such property by devolution on the death of such owner, in which case all persons shall be fully competent witnesses"); ib. § 5, cl. (f), Dig. § 21854 ("But no person who is incompetent under clauses (a), (b), (c), and (d) [cl. d deals with attorneys' privileged communications] of this section shall become competent by the general language of clause (e)"); ib. § 6, Dig. § 21855 ("Any person, who is incompetent under clause (e) of section five by reason of interest, may, nevertheless, be called to testify against his interest, and in that event he shall become a fully competent witness for either party; and such person shall also become fully competent for either party by a release or extinguishment in good faith of his interest, upon which good faith the trial judge shall decide as a preliminary question"); St. 1891, June 11, § 1, Dig. § 21857 ("Hereafter, in any civil proceeding before any tribunal of this Commonwealth, or conducted by virtue of its order or direction, although a party to the thing or contract in action may be dead or may have been adjudged a lunatic, and his right thereto or therein may have passed, either by his own act or by the act of the law, to a party on a record who [re]presents his interest in the subject in controversy, nevertheless, any surviving or remaining party to such thing or contract or any other person whose interest is adverse to the said right of such deceased or lunatic party, shall be a competent witness to any relevant matter, although it may have occurred before the death of said party or the adjudication of his lunacy, if and only if such relevant matter occurred between himself and another person who may be living at the time of the trial and may be competent to testify, and who does so testify upon the trial, against such surviving or remaining party or against the person whose interest may be thus adverse, or if such relevant matter occurred in the presence or hearing of such other living or competent person"); ib. § 2, Dig. § 21858 (foregoing testimony made competent may be given by deposition, which will be competent even though the other person "may die or become incompetent after the taking of such deposition"); St. 1887, May 23, § 7, as amended by St. 1911, Mar. 30, § 1, Dig. § 21863 ("In any civil proceeding, whether or not it be brought or defended by a person representing the interests of a deceased or lunatic assignor of any thing or contract in action, a party to the record or a person for whose immediate benefit such proceeding is prosecuted or defended, or any other person whose interest is adverse to the party calling him as a witness, may be compelled by the adverse party to testify as if under cross-examination, subject to the rules of evidence applicable to witnesses under cross-examination, and the adverse party calling such witnesses shall not be concluded by his testimony; but such person so cross-examined shall become thereby a fully competent witness for the other party as to all relevant matters, whether or not these matters were touched upon in his cross-examination; and also where one of several plaintiffs or defendants, or the person for whose immediate benefit such proceeding is prosecuted or defended, or such director or officer, or such other person having an adverse interest, is cross-examined under this section, his co-plaintiffs or co-defendants or fellow-directors or officers, shall thereby become fully competent witnesses on their own behalf or on behalf of the corporation or association of which they shall be directors or officers, as to all relevant matters, whether or not these matters were touched upon in such cross-examination"); St. 1887, May 23, § 10, Dig. § 21864 ("Except defendants actually upon trial in a criminal court, any competent witness may be compelled to testify in any proceeding, civil or criminal; but he may not be compelled to answer any question which, in the opinion of the trial judge, would tend to criminate him; nor may the neglect or refusal of any defendant, actually upon trial in a criminal court, to offer himself as a witness be treated as creating any presumption against him, or be adversely referred to by Court or counsel during the trial"); St. 1867, Apr. 13, § 3, Dig. § 9063, Desertion (criminal proceedings for desertion and non-support; wife shall be competent for State, and husband also shall be "a competent witness"); St. 1899, April 11 (preamble stating a purpose to remove existing disadvantages of the wife); ib. § 1, Dig. § 21848 ("In any civil action brought against the husband to recover necessaries furnished to the wife, if the husband makes defence at the trial upon the ground that the wife had left him without justification or excuse before the necessaries were furnished, or upon any other ground which attacks the wife's character or conduct, she shall be a competent witness in rebuttal for the plaintiff"); ib. § 2, Dig. § 21840 ("In any criminal proceeding brought against the husband, if he makes defence at the trial upon any ground which attacks the wife's character or conduct, she shall be a competent witness in rebuttal for the Commonwealth"); St. 1903, Mar. 13, § 3, Dig. § 9068, Desertion (in a prosecution for a husband's failure to support, "the wife shall be a competent witness"); St. 1907, May 8, § 1, Dig. § 21849, Witnesses ("in all civil actions brought by the husband, the wife shall be a competent witness in rebuttal, when her character or conduct is attacked upon the trial thereof, but only in regard to the matter of her character or conduct"); St. 1907, May 29, § 3 (parent's neglect of child; rule against "disclosure of confidential communications between husband and wife" shall not apply); St. 1909, April 27, § 1, Dig. § 14603, Married Women (wife desertion; action for maintenance; "husband and wife shall be fully competent witnesses"); St. 1911, May 11, Dig. § 21837 (amending St. 1887, May 23, Clause b; husband and wife may testify to fact of marriage on a charge of bigamy); St. 1913, May 1, Dig. § 21851, Witnesses (civil action against husband by deserted wife; wife to be competent against husband); St. 1913, May 9, Dig. § 9158, Divorce (divorce; libellant competent to prove residence); St. 1919, July 12, Dig. § 9072, Desertion (family-desertion; "the wife" or any custodian of minor children "shall be a competent witness"); St. 1915, April 21, Dig. § 9177, Divorce ("in all proceedings for divorce the libellant shall be fully competent to prove all the facts", regardless of personal service, etc.; removing the limitations of St. 1887, § 5, supra, and amending St. 1911, June 8, which originally attempted the enlargement).

PHILIPPINE ISLANDS: Code of Civil Procedure 1901, § 382 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1879); § 383, par. 1 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1880, par. 1, adding "to such degree as to be incapable of perceiving and making known their perceptions to others"); par. 2 (like ib. par. 2); par. 3 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1881, par. 1, omitting the last two clauses); par. 7 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1880, par. 3, but including "persons of unsound mind" with deceased persons); Civil Code, ed. 1918, §§ 1244–1246 (like P. R. Rev. St. & C. 1911, §§ 4318–4320); § 1247 ("The following are disqualified by law: 1. Those directly interested in the suit; 2. Ascendants as to suits of their descendants and the latter as to those of the former; 3. The father-in-law or mother-in-law as to suits of the son-in-law or daughter-in-law, and vice versa; 4. The husband as to suits of his wife and the wife as to those of her husband; 5. Any person who is required to keep secret matters made known to him by reason of his station or profession, as to matters so communicated; 6. Those specially disqualified to be witnesses to certain instruments. — The provisions of paragraphs 2, 3, and 4 shall not be applicable to suits in which it is sought to prove the birth or death of children, or any other private family matter which it may not be possible to prove by other means"); Penal Code 1911, Gen. Order 58 of 1900, § 15 ("In all criminal prosecutions, the defendant shall be entitled . . . 3, to testify as a witness in his own behalf; but if a defendant offers himself as a witness, he may be cross-examined as any other witness; his neglect or refusal to be a witness shall not in any manner prejudice or be used against him"); § 34 (like Cal. P. C. § 1099; but replaced by Act No. 2709, infra); § 35 (like Cal. P. C. § 1100); § 55 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1879, omitting the exceptions); § 58 ("except with the consent of both, or except in cases of crime committed by one against the other, neither husband nor wife shall be a competent witness for or against the other in a criminal action or proceeding to which one or both shall be parties"); St. 1917, Act No. 2709 ("When two or more persons are charged with the commission of a certain crime, the competent court, at any time before they have entered upon their defense, may direct any of them to be discharged, that he may be a witness for the Government when in the judgment of the court: (a) There is absolute necessity for the testimony of the accused whose discharge is requested; (b) There is no other direct evidence available for the proper prosecution of the crime committed, except the testimony of said accused; (c) The testimony of said accused can be substantially corroborated in its material points; (d) Said accused does not appear to be the most guilty, and (e) Said accused has not at any time been convicted of the crime of perjury or false testimony or of any other crime involving moral turpitude").

PORTO RICO: Revised Statutes and Codes 1911; the first group of provisions are adopted from the test of the California Code of Civil Procedure; the second group represent the Spanish law of the original Civil Code; they are obviously inconsistent: § 1406 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1879); § 1407 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1880, omitting par. 3); § 1408 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1881, par. 1, omitting the last clause); § 1409 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1882, as originally enacted, now repealed; consent to the foregoing testimony of § 1408 is "conclusively implied" when the person who made the communication voluntarily testifies to it in whole or in part; and the judge may also infer a consent in a given case; furthermore, when one spouse is dead or incapacitated, the other may testify to communications with consent of the representative); § 4318 ("Evidence of witnesses shall be admissible in all cases in which it should not have been expressly forbidden"); § 4319 ("All persons, of either sex, who are not disqualified by natural incapacity or by the provisions of law, may be witnesses"); § 4320 ("The following are disqualified by natural incapacity: 1. — Lunatics or insane persons. 2. — The blind and deaf, in those things a knowledge of which depends upon sight and hearing. 3. — Minors under 14 years of age"); §§ 6271, 6272 (joint indictees; like Cal. P. C. §§ 1099, 1100); 1915, Wilcox v. Axtmayer, 23 P. R. 319 (St. 1904, disqualifying interested survivors, was replaced by St. 1905, Evid. Act §§ 38, 39, which adopted Cal. C. C. P. §§ 1879, 1880 without the clauses disqualifying survivors; the ruling seems unsound).

RHODE ISLAND: General Laws 1909, c. 292, § 37 ("No person shall be disqualified from testifying in any action at law, suit in equity, or other proceeding at law or in equity, by reason of his being interested therein or being a party thereto"); § 39 ("In the trial of every civil cause, the husband or wife of either party shall be deemed a competent witness; provided, that neither shall be permitted to give any testimony tending to criminate the other or to disclose any communication made to him or her by the other, during their marriage, except on trials of petitions for divorce between them, and trials between them involving their property rights"); § 43 ("No person shall be deemed an incompetent witness because of his conviction of any crime, or sentence to imprisonment therefor; but shall be admitted to testify like any other witness, except that conviction or sentence for any crime or misdemeanor may be shown to affect his credibility"); § 44 ("No respondent in a criminal prosecution, offering himself as a witness, shall be excluded from testifying because he is such respondent; and neglect or refusal so to testify shall create no presumption nor be used in argument against him"); § 45 ("The husband or wife of any respondent in a criminal prosecution, offering himself or herself as a witness, shall not be excluded from testifying therein because he or she is the husband or wife of such respondent").

SOUTH CAROLINA: Constitution 1882, Art. I, § 12 ("No person shall be disqualified as a witness . . . or be subjected in law to any other restraints or disqualifications in regard to any personal rights than such as are laid upon others under like circumstances"; this does not appear in the Constitution of 1895); Code of Criminal Procedure 1922, § 966 ("In the trial of all criminal cases, the defendant shall be allowed to testify (if he desires to do so, and not otherwise) as to the facts and circumstances of the case"); § 967 ("No person shall be required to answer any question tending to criminate himself, nor shall husband or wife be required to disclose any communication made to each other during their coverture"); § 970 ("In every case where two or more persons shall be charged in any indictment or fighting a duel, or being concerned therein, either of such persons may be used as a witness or witnesses in behalf of the State, by having his or their names stricken out of the indictment, or otherwise, at the discretion of the Attorney General or Solicitor, or other attorney acting for the State, conducting such prosecution, of which an entry shall immediately be made on the minutes of the Court"); Code of Civil Procedure 1922, § 667 ("A party to an action may be examined as a witness, at the instance of the adverse party, or of any one of several adverse parties, and for that purpose may be compelled, in the same manner and subject to the same rules of examination as any other witness, to testify, either at the trial, or conditionally, or upon commission"); § 672 ("A party examined by an adverse party, as in this Chapter provided, may be examined on his own behalf, subject to the same rules of examination as other witnesses. But if he testify to any new matter, not responsive to the inquiries put to him by the adverse party, or necessary to explain or qualify his answers thereto, or discharge when his answers would charge himself, such adverse party may offer himself as a witness on his own behalf in respect to such new matter, subject to the same rules of examination as other witnesses, and shall be so received"); § 673 ("A person for whose immediate benefit the action is prosecuted or defended, though not a party to the action, may be examined as a witness, in the same manner and subject to the same rules of examination as if he were named as a party"); § 674 ("A party may be examined on behalf of his co-plaintiff, or of a co-defendant, as to any matter in which he is not jointly interested or liable with such co-plaintiff or co-defendant, and as to which a separate and not joint verdict or judgment can be rendered. And he may be compelled to attend in the same manner as at the instance of an adverse party; but the examination thus taken shall not be used in the behalf of the party examined. And whenever, in the case mentioned in Sections 667 and 668, one of the several plaintiffs or defendants who are joint contractors, or are united in interest, is examined by the adverse party, the other of such plaintiffs or defendants may offer himself as a witness to the same cause or action or defense, and shall be so received"); § 683 ("No person offered as a witness shall be excluded by reason of his interest in the event of the action"); § 684 ("A party to an action or special proceeding in any and all courts, and before any and all officers and persons acting judicially, may be examined as a witness in his own behalf, or in behalf of any other party, conditionally, on commission, and upon the trial or hearing in the case, in the same manner and subject to the same rules of examination as any other witness; provided, however, that no party to the action or proceeding, nor any person who has a legal or equitable interest which may be affected by the event of the action or proceeding, nor any person who previous to such examination has had such an interest, however the same may have been transferred to or come to the party to the action or proceeding, nor any assignor of anything in controversy in the action, shall be examined in regard to any transaction or communication between such witness and a person at the time of such examination deceased, insane, or lunatic, as a witness against a party then prosecuting or defending the action as executor, administrator, heir-at-law, next of kin, assignee, legatee, devisee, or survivor of such deceased person, or as assignee or committee of such insane person or lunatic, when such examination, or any judgment or determination in such action or proceeding, can in any manner affect the interest of such witness or the interest previously owned or represented by him. But when such executor, administrator, heir-at-law, next of kin, assignee, legatee, devisee, survivor, or committee shall be examined on his own behalf in regard to such transaction or communication, or the testimony of such deceased or insane person or lunatic, in regard to such transaction or communication (however the same may have been perpetuated or made competent), shall be given in evidence on the trial or hearing in behalf of such executor, administrator, heir-at-law, next of kin, assignee, legatee, devisee, survivor, or committee, then all persons not otherwise rendered incompetent shall be made competent witnesses in relation to such transaction or communication on said trial or hearing. Nothing contained in section 8 of this Code of Procedure shall be held or construed to affect or restrain the operation of this section. 1. In any trial or inquiry in any suit, action, or proceeding in any court or before any person having, by law, or consent of parties, authority to examine witnesses or hear evidence, the husband or wife of any party thereto, or of any person in whose behalf any such suit, action, or proceeding is brought, prosecuted, opposed, or defended, shall, except as hereinafter stated, be competent and compellable to give evidence, the same as any other witness, on behalf of any party to such suit, action, or proceeding. 2. No husband or wife shall be compellable to disclose any confidential communication made by one to the other during marriage"); § 704 ("In any proceeding in any of the Courts of this State in which any transaction shall be impeached for fraud by a creditor, or creditors, of either party to such transaction, or by any other person interested in establishing such fraud, the survivor, or survivors, of the parties to such alleged fraud, when one or more of the said parties shall be dead, shall be competent and compellable to testify in behalf of such creditor or creditors, or other person interested in establishing such fraud, any law, rule, or usage to the contrary notwithstanding: Provided, That nothing herein shall render such survivor, or survivors, competent to testify in relation to such transaction in their own behalf in any proceeding instituted by him or them: Provided, further, That nothing herein shall render any person incompetent as a witness who is now competent under the laws and usage of this State"); Criminal Laws 1922, § 253 (perjury, and its penalty; "and the oath of such a person shall not be received in any court of record within this State").

SOUTH DAKOTA: Revised Code 1919, § 2717 ("No person offered as a witness in any action or special proceeding in any court or before any officer or person having authority to examine witnesses or hear evidence shall be excluded or excused by reason of such person's interest in the event of the action or special proceeding; or because such person is a party thereto; or because such person is a husband or wife of a party thereto or of any person in whose behalf such action or special proceeding is brought, prosecuted, opposed or defended, except as hereinafter provided: 1. [as amended by St. 1921, c. 412] A husband cannot be examined for or against his wife without her consent; nor a wife for or against her husband without his consent; nor can either, during the marriage, or afterward, be, without the consent of the other, examined as to any communication made by one to the other during the marriage; but this subdivision does not apply to a civil action or proceeding by one against the other, nor to a criminal action or proceeding for a crime committed by one against the other, including cases of bigamy and adultery, nor to any action brought by either the husband or wife against any person to recover damages for criminal conversation with the other, or for the alienation of the affection of the other, or for any cause that involves the moral reputation of the other. 2. In civil actions or proceedings by or against executors, administrators, heirs-at-law or next of kin in which judgment may be rendered or order entered for or against them, neither party nor his assignor nor any person who has or ever had any interest in the subject of the action adverse to the other party, or to his testator or intestate, shall be allowed to testify against such other party as to any transaction whatever with or statement by the testator or intestate, unless called to testify thereto by the opposite party. But if the testimony of a party to the action or proceeding has been taken and he shall afterwards die and after his death the testimony so taken shall be used upon any trial or hearing on behalf of his executors, administrators, heirs-at-law or next of kin, then the other party shall be a competent witness as to any and all matters to which the testimony so taken relates"); § 3759 (like N. D. Comp. L. 1913, § 9381); § 4877 (like N. D. Comp. L. 1913, § 10834); § 4878 (like N. D. Comp. L. 1913, § 10835, except that the Court must submit its opinion to the jury, who may then acquit the person for the purpose); § 4879 (in all proceedings against persons charged with crimes, "the person charged shall, at his own request, but not otherwise, be a competent witness, and his failure to make such request shall not create any presumption against him"); § 2979 (in action for seduction, where defendant has married the person seducted, the wife is admissible against her husband); § 4109 (desertion of wife or child; husband or wife competent, but not to be called "against the other without the consent of such other witness").

TENNESSEE: Shannon's Code 1916, § 5592 ("Every person of sufficient capacity to understand the obligation of an oath is competent to be a witness"); §§ 5595, 7199 ("Persons are rendered incompetent by conviction and sentence for the following crimes, unless they have been restored to full citizenship, under the law provided for that purpose, viz.: abuse of female child, arson and felonious burning, bigamy, burglary, felonious breaking and entering mansion house, bribery, buggery, counterfeiting, or violating any of the provisions to suppress the same, destroying will, forgery, housebreaking, incest, larceny, perjury, robbery, receiving stolen property, rape, sodomy, stealing bills of exchange or other valuable papers, subornation of perjury"); § 5596 ("In all civil actions in the Courts of this State, no person shall be incompetent to testify because he or she is a party to or interested in the issue tried, or because of the disabilities of coverture, but all persons, including husband and wife, shall be competent witnesses, though neither husband nor wife shall testify to any matter that occurred between them by virtue of or in consequence of the marital relation"); § 5597 ("It shall not be lawful for any party to any action, suit, or proceeding in any court of this State to testify as to any transaction or conversation with or statement by any opposite party in interest, if such opposite [party] is incapacitated or disqualified to testify thereto, by reason of idiocy, lunacy, or insanity, unless called by the opposite side, and then [only] in the discretion of the Court"); § 5598 ("In actions or proceedings by or against executors, administrators, or guardians, in which judgments may be rendered for or against them, neither party shall be allowed to testify against the other as to any transaction with or statement by the testator, intestate, or ward, unless called to testify thereto by the opposite party"); § 5600 ("In the trial of all indictments, presentments, and other criminal proceedings, in any of the courts of this State, the party defendant thereto may, at his own request but not otherwise, be a competent witness to testify therein"); § 5601 ("The failure of the party defendant to make such request and to testify in his own behalf shall not create any presumption against him. But the defendant desiring to testify shall do so before any other testimony for the defence is heard by the Court trying the case"); § 6655 ("no person verbally challenged" to a duel is competent to prove "the fact of such verbal challenge"); § 6859 (when a witness without his contrivance is examined by grand jury as to election offences, "no person against whom his evidence is given" is competent against him for an election offence committed prior to examination); § 7581 (convicts are competent against each other in prosecutions for prison offences); § 5593 (unbelievers are competent; quoted post, § 1828); § 5596*a* 1 ("In all criminal cases in the State, the husband or the wife shall be a competent witness to testify for or against the other"); § 5786 (attorney or other person may not testify in favor of assignee of former person interested with him, "under pretext of having transferred his interest", etc.).

TEXAS: Revised Civil Statutes 1911, § 3688 ("No person shall be incompetent to testify on account of color, nor because he is a party to the suit or proceeding or interested in the issue tried"); § 3689 ("The husband or wife of a party to a suit or proceeding, or who is interested in the issue to be tried, shall not be incompetent to testify therein, except as to confidential communications between such husband and wife"); § 3690 ("In actions by or against executors, administrators, or guardians, in which judgment may be rendered for or against them as such, neither party shall be allowed to testify against the others as to any transaction with or statement by the testator, intestate, or ward, unless called to testify thereto by the opposite party; and the provisions of this article shall extend to and include all actions by or against the heirs or legal representatives of a decedent arising out of any transaction with such decedent"); § 3691 ("No person shall be incompetent to testify on account of his religious opinions or for want of any religious belief"); § 4633 ("In all such suits and proceedings [for divorce from the bonds of matrimony] the husband and wife shall be competent witnesses for and against each other, but neither party shall be compelled to testify as to any matter that will criminate himself or herself"); Revised Penal Code 1911, § 91 ("Persons charged as principals, accomplices or accessories, whether in the same indictment or by different indictments, cannot be introduced as witnesses for one another, but they may claim a severance; and if any one or more be acquitted they may testify in behalf of the others"); § 506 c, St. 1911, p. 29 (pandering; the woman is a competent witness as to any transaction or conversation of the accused, notwithstanding marriage to him before or after the offense, and whether called during marriage or after dissolution); § 640 c, St. 1913, c. 101 (family-desertion; like D. Col. Code 1919, St. 1906); §§ 1449, 1450 (seduction; on a prosecution for marital misconduct after marrying the seduced woman, "the female so seduced shall be a competent witness against the defendant"); Revised Code of Criminal Procedure 1911, § 730 (on a prosecution of joint defendants, "when it is apparent that there is no evidence" against one, the jury may be directed to find a verdict as to him, "and if they acquit, he may be introduced as a witness in the case"); § 729 (State attorney may dismiss prosecution as to a defendant jointly indicted, "and the person so discharged may be introduced as a witness by either party"); § 788 ("All persons are competent to testify in criminal actions except the following: 1. Insane persons, who are in an insane condition of mind at the time when they are offered as witnesses, or who were in that condition when the events happened of which they are called to testify. 2. Children or other persons who, after being examined by the Court, appear not to possess sufficient intellect to relate transactions with respect to which they are interrogated, or who do not understand the obligation of an oath. 3. All persons who have been or may be convicted of felony in this State, or in any other jurisdiction, unless such conviction has been legally set aside, or unless the convict has been legally pardoned for the crime of which he was convicted. But no person who has been convicted of the crime of perjury, or false swearing, and whose conviction has not been legally set aside, shall have his competency as a witness restored by a pardon, unless such pardon by its terms specifically restore his competency to testify in a court of justice"); § 789 (in prosecutions for seduction, the female may testify); § 790 ("Any defendant in a criminal action shall be permitted to testify in his own behalf therein; but the failure of any defendant to so testify shall not be taken as a circumstance against him, nor shall the same be alluded to or commented on by counsel in the cause; provided, that where there are two or more persons jointly charged or indicted, and a severance is had, the privilege of testifying shall be extended only to the person on trial"); § 791 ("Persons charged as principals, accomplices, or accessories, whether in the same indictment or other indictments, cannot be introduced as witnesses for one another, but they may claim a severance; and if any one or more be acquitted, or the prosecution against them be dismissed, they may testify in behalf of the others"); § 793 ("All other persons except those enumerated in articles 788 and 805 [795?] whatever may be the relationship between the defendant and witness, are competent to testify"); § 794 ("Neither husband nor wife shall in any case testify as to communications made by one to the other while married; nor shall they, after the marriage relation ceases, be made witnesses as to any such communication made while the marriage relation subsisted, except in a case where one or the other is prosecuted for an offence; and a declaration or communication made by the wife to the husband, or by the husband to the wife, goes to extenuate or justify an offence for which either is on trial"); § 795 ("The husband and wife may in all criminal actions be witnesses for each other, but they shall in no case testify against each other except in a criminal prosecution for an offence committed by one against the other"); § 796 (like Rev. Civ. St. § 3691); § 797 ("A defendant jointly indicted with others, and who has been tried and convicted, and whose punishment was fine only, may testify for the other defendant after he has paid the fine and costs"); § 802 ("In trials for forgery, the person whose name is alleged to have been forged is a competent witness, and in all cases not otherwise specially provided for, the person injured or attempted to be injured is a competent witness").

UTAH: Constitution 1895, Art. I, § 12 ("In criminal prosecutions, the accused shall have the right . . . to testify in his own behalf; . . . a wife shall not be compelled to testify against her husband, nor a husband against his wife"); Compiled Laws, 1917, § 7122 ("All persons without exception, otherwise than is specified in the next two sections, who, having organs of sense, can perceive, and, perceiving, can make known their perceptions to others, may be witnesses. Therefore, neither parties nor other persons who have an interest in the event of an action or proceeding are excluded; nor those who have been convicted of crime; nor persons on account of their opinions on matters of religious belief; although, in every case, the credibility of the witness may be drawn in question, by the manner in which he testifies, by the character of his testimony, or by evidence affecting his character for truth, honesty, or integrity, or his motives, or by contradictory evidence; and the jury are the exclusive judges of his credibility"); § 7123 ("The following persons cannot be witnesses: 1. Those who are of unsound mind at the time of their production for examination; 2. Children under ten years of age who appear incapable of receiving just impressions of the facts respecting which they are examined, or of relating them truly. 3. A party to any civil action, suit, or proceeding, and any person directly interested in the event thereof, and any person from, through, or under whom such party or interested person derives his interest or title or any part thereof, when the adverse party in such action, suit, or proceeding, claims or opposes, sues or defends, as guardian of any insane or incompetent person, or as the executor or administrator, heir, legatee, or devisee of any deceased person, or as guardian, or assignee, or grantee, directly or remotely, of such heir, legatee, or devisee, as to any statement by or transaction with such deceased, insane, or incompetent person, or matter of fact, whatever, which must have been equally within the knowledge of both the witness and such insane, incompetent, or deceased person, unless such witness be called to testify thereto by such adverse party, so claiming or opposing, suing or defending, in such action, suit, or proceeding"); § 7124 ("There are particular relations in which it is the policy of the law to encourage confidence and to preserve it inviolate; therefore, a person cannot be examined as a witness in the following cases: 1. A husband cannot be examined for or against his wife, without her consent, nor a wife for or against her husband, without his consent; nor can either, during the marriage or afterward, be, without the consent of the other, examined as to any communication made by one to the other during the marriage; but this exception does not apply to a civil action or proceeding by or against the other, nor to a criminal action or proceeding for a crime committed by one against the other", nor for crimes referred to in an act making it a misdemeanor to fail to support family, being Comp. L. §§ 8112–8115, or in an act relating to pandering, being ib. §§ 8095–8101); § 9275 ("The rules for determining the competency of witnesses in civil actions shall be applicable also to criminal actions and proceedings except as otherwise provided in this Code"); § 8555 ("The accused shall not be compelled to give evidence against himself; a wife shall not be compelled to testify against her husband, nor a husband against his wife"); § 9278 ("Except with the consent of both, or in cases of criminal violence upon one by the other", or on charge of pandering or desertion, as provided in Comp. L. §§ 8095–8101, 8112–8115, "neither husband nor wife shall be a competent witness for or against the other in a criminal action or proceeding to which one or both shall be parties"); § 9279 ("If a defendant offers himself as a witness he may be cross-examined by the counsel or the State the same as any other witness. His neglect or refusal to be a witness shall not in any manner prejudice him, nor be used against him on the trial or proceeding"); § 9280 ("When two or more persons are jointly or otherwise concerned in the commission of an offence, any one of such persons may testify for or against the other in relation to the offence committed, but the testimony of such witness must not be used against him in any criminal action or proceeding"); § 8982 ("When two or more persons shall be included in the same charge, the Court may, at any time before the defendants have gone into their defence, on the application of the county attorney, or other counsel for the State, direct any defendant to be discharged, that he may be a witness for the State"); § 8983 ("When two or more persons shall be included in the same charge, and the Court shall be of the opinion that in regard to a particular defendant there is not sufficient evidence to put him on his defence, it must order him to be discharged before the evidence is closed, that he may be a witness for his co-defendant"); § 384 (bastardy issue; "the mother and defendant shall be admitted as competent witnesses"); § 4513 ("in criminal prosecutions the accused shall be entitled . . . to testify in his own behalf"); § 8101 (pandering; woman marrying accused may testify for or against him); § 8113 (family-desertion or non-support; husband and wife are competent for "all relevant matters"; privilege for marital communications "shall not apply"); § 8535 (civil death: like Cal. P. C. § 675).

VERMONT: General Laws 1917, § 1890 ("A person shall not be disqualified as a witness in a civil cause or proceeding, at law or in equity, by reason of his interest in the event of the same, as a party or otherwise, but such interest may be shown for the purpose of affecting his credit"); § 1891 ("In actions, except those founded on book account, where one of the original parties to the contract or cause of action in issue and on trial is dead, or is shown to the court to be insane, the other party shall not be admitted to testify in his own favor except to meet or explain the testimony of living witnesses produced against him, or upon a question upon which the testimony of the party afterwards deceased or insane has been taken in writing or by a stenographer in open court to be used in such action and is used therein; provided, however, that where such deceased or insane party, while living or before becoming insane, made entries in a book of accounts or cash-book, relating to the transactions involved in such action and showing the receipt or payment of money, in due course of business and before any controversy arose respecting the transaction to which such entries relate, such entries may be admitted in evidence as tending to show the facts therein recited to be true, in any action to which the estate of such deceased or insane party or his grantees or assigns, may be party, and the adverse party in all such actions may meet the evidence of such entries by any proper evidence. Causes pending on the twenty-eighth day of January, nineteen hundred and eleven, in which a trial on the merits thereof had actually been commenced, shall not be affected by the foregoing proviso, but all other causes so pending shall be subject thereto"); § 1892 ("When an executor or administrator is a party, the other party shall not be permitted to testify in his own favor, unless the contract in issue was originally made with a person who is living and competent to testify, except as to acts done or contracts made since the probate of the will, or since the appointment of the administrator, and to meet or explain the testimony of living witnesses produced against him"); § 1893 ("In actions founded on book account, and when the matter in issue and on trial is proper matter of book account, the party living may be a witness in his own favor, so far as to prove in whose handwriting his charges are, and when made, and no further, except to meet or explain the testimony of living witnesses produced against him"); § 1894 ("Husband and wife shall be competent witnesses for or against each other in all causes, civil or criminal, except that neither shall be allowed to testify against the other as to a statement, conversation, letter or other communication made to the other or to another person; nor shall either be allowed in any case to testify as to a matter which, in the opinion of the court, would lead to a violation of marital confidence, but nothing in this section shall be construed so as to prevent a libelant and libelee from testifying as to all matters in divorce causes"); § 1895 ("A person shall not be incompetent as a witness in any court, matter or proceeding, on account of his opinions on matters of religious belief; nor shall a witness be questioned, nor testimony taken or received, in relation thereto"); § 1897 ("A person shall not be incompetent as a witness in any court, matter or proceeding, by reason of his conviction of a crime other than perjury, subornation of perjury, or endeavoring to incite or procure another to commit the crime of perjury, but the conviction of a crime involving moral turpitude may be given in evidence to affect the credibility of a witness"); § 2354 ("In the trial of complaints, informations, indictments, and other proceedings against persons charged with crimes or offences, the person so charged shall, at his own request and not otherwise, be deemed a competent witness, the credit to be given to his testimony being left solely to the jury, under the instructions of the Court; but the refusal of such person to testify shall not be considered by the jury as evidence against him"); § 5379 ("In actions against a savings bank, savings institution, or trust company, by a husband to recover for moneys deposited by his wife in her name or as her money, the wife may be a witness as if she were an unmarried woman").

VIRGINIA: Code 1919, § 4498 (bribery offences; similar to ib. § 4780, infra); § 4579 (pandering, etc.); "any female hereinbefore referred to shall be a competent witness in any prosecution under this section to testify to any and all matters, including conversations with the accused or by him with third persons in her presence, notwithstanding she may have married the accused either before or after the violation of any of the provisions of this section, but she shall not be compelled to testify after such marriage"; § 4777 ("Approvers shall not be admitted in any case"); § 4778 ("In any case of felony or misdemeanor, the accused may be sworn and examined in his own behalf, and be subject to cross-examination as any other witness; but his failure to testify shall create no presumption against him, nor be the subject of any comment before the Court or jury by the prosecuting attorney"); § 4779 ("Conviction of felony or perjury shall not render the convict incompetent to testify; but the fact of conviction may be shown in evidence to affect his credit"); § 4780 ("No person prosecuted for unlawful gaming shall be competent to testify against a witness for the Commonwealth in such prosecution, touching any unlawful gaming committed by him prior to the commencement of such prosecution"); § 6208 ("No person shall be incompetent to testify because of interest; or because of his being a party to any action, suit, or proceeding of a civil nature; but he shall, if otherwise competent to testify, and subject to the rules of evidence and practice applicable to other witnesses, be competent to give evidence in his own behalf and be competent and compellable to attend and give evidence on behalf of any other party to such action, suit, or proceeding; but in any case at law, the Court, for good cause shown, may require any such person to attend and testify 'ore tenus', and, upon his failure to so attend and testify, may exclude his deposition"); § 6210 ("Husband and wife shall be competent to testify for or against each other in all cases civil and criminal except as otherwise provided"); § 6211 ("In criminal cases husband and wife shall be allowed, and subject to the rules of evidence governing other witnesses, may be compelled to testify in behalf of each other; but neither shall be compelled, nor without the consent of the other, allowed to be called as a witness against the other except in the case of a prosecution for an offense committed by one against the other, but if either be called and examined in any case as a witness in behalf of the other, the one so examined shall be deemed competent, and subject to the exception stated in the next section, may be compelled to testify against the other under the same rules of evidence governing other witnesses. The failure of either husband or wife to testify, however, shall create no presumption against the accused, nor be the subject of any comment before the court or jury by the prosecuting attorney. In the prosecution for a criminal offense committed by one against the other, each shall be a competent witness except as to privileged communications"); § 6212 ("Neither husband nor wife shall without the consent of the other be examined in any case as to any communication privately made by one to the other while married, nor shall either of them be permitted without such consent to reveal in testimony after the marriage relation ceases any such communication made while the marriage subsisted").

WASHINGTON: Constitution 1889, I, § 22 ("In criminal prosecutions, the accused shall have the right . . . to testify in his own behalf"); Remington & Ballinger's Codes and Statutes 1909, § 1210 ("Every person of sound mind and suitable age and discretion, except as hereinafter provided, may be a witness in any action or proceeding"); § 1211 ("No person offered as a witness shall be excluded from giving evidence by reason of his interest in the event of the action, as a party thereto or otherwise, but such interest may be shown to affect his credibility; provided, however, that in an action or proceeding where the adverse party sues or defends as executor, administrator, or legal representative of any deceased person, or as deriving right or title by, through, or from any deceased person, or as the guardian or conservator of the estate of any insane person, or of any minor under the age of fourteen years, then a party in interest or to the record shall not be admitted to testify in his own behalf as to any transaction had by him with or any statement made to him by any such deceased or insane person or by any such minor under the age of fourteen years; provided, further, that this exclusion shall not apply to parties of record who sue or defend in a representative or fiduciary capacity and who have no other or further interest in the action"); § 1212 ("No person offered as a witness shall be excluded from giving evidence by reason of conviction of crime, but such conviction may be shown to affect his credibility; provided, that any person who shall have been convicted of the crime or perjury shall not be a competent witness in any case, unless such conviction shall have been reversed, or unless he shall have received a pardon"); § 1213 ("The following persons shall not be competent to testify: 1. Those who are of unsound mind, or intoxicated at the time of their production for examination. 2. Children under ten years of age who appear incapable of receiving just impressions of the facts respecting which they are examined, or of relating them truly"); § 1214 ("The following persons shall not be examined as witnesses: 1. A husband shall not be examined for or against his wife without the consent of the wife, nor a wife for or against her husband without the consent of the husband; nor shall either, during marriage or afterwards, without the consent of the other, be examined as to any communication made by one to the other during marriage. But this exception shall not apply to a civil action or proceeding by one against the other, nor to a criminal action or proceeding for a crime committed by one against the other"); § 2147 ("Witnesses competent to testify in civil cases shall be competent in criminal prosecutions; . . . Indians shall be competent witnesses as hereinbefore provided [?], or any prosecutions in which an Indian may be a defendant"); § 2148 ("Any person accused of any crime in this State by indictment, information, or otherwise, may, in the examination or trial of the cause, offer himself or herself as a witness in his or her own behalf, and shall be allowed to testify as other witnesses in such case, and when the accused shall so testify, he or she shall be subject to all the rules of law relating to cross-examinations of other witnesses; provided, that nothing in this Code shall be construed to compel such accused persons to offer himself or herself as a witness in such case; and provided, further, that it shall be the duty of the Court to instruct the jury that no inference of guilt shall arise against the accused if the accused shall fail or refuse to testify as a witness in his or her own behalf"); § 2162 (joint indictees; substantially like Cal. P. C. §§ 1099, 1100, with "may" for "must" in the latter); § 2290 ("Every person convicted of a crime shall be a competent witness in any civil or criminal proceeding; but his conviction may be proved for the purpose of affecting the weight of his testimony; . . . he shall answer any proper question relevant to that inquiry, and the party cross-examining shall not be concluded by his answer thereto"); § 5935 (family-desertion; existing rules "prohibiting the disclosure of confidential communications between husband and wife shall not apply"; "both husband and wife shall be competent witnesses to testify for or against each other", to all facts, including marriage and parentage).

WEST VIRGINIA: Code 1914, c. 130, § 22 ("In any civil action, suit, or proceeding, the husband or wife of any party thereto, or of any person in whose behalf any such action, suit, or proceeding is brought, prosecuted, opposed, or defended, shall be competent to give evidence the same as any other witness on behalf of any party to such action, suit, or proceeding, except that no husband or wife shall disclose any confidential communication made by one to the other during their marriage"); § 23 ("No person offered as a witness in any civil action, suit, or proceeding shall be excluded by reason of his interest in the event of the action, suit, or proceeding, or because he is a party thereto, except as follows: No party to any action, suit, or proceeding, nor any person interested in the event thereof, nor any person from, through, or under whom any such party derives any interest or title by assignment or otherwise, shall be examined as a witness in regard to any personal transaction or communication between such witness and a person at the time of examination deceased, insane, or lunatic, against the executor, administrator, heir-at-law, next of kin, assignee, legatee, devisee, or survivor of such deceased person or the assignee or committee of such insane person or lunatic. But this prohibition shall not extend to any transaction or communication as to which any such executor, administrator, heir-at-law, next of kin, assignee, legatee, devisee, survivor, or committee shall be examined on his own behalf, nor as to which the testimony of such deceased person or lunatic shall be given in evidence; provided, however, that where an action is brought for causing the death of any person by wrongful act, neglect, or default under c. 103 of the Code, the physician sued shall have the right to give evidence in any case in which he is sued; but in this event he can only give evidence as to the medicine or treatment given to the deceased, or operation performed, but he cannot give evidence of any conversation had with the deceased"); § 24 ("No person shall be incompetent as a witness on account of race or color"); c. 152, § 17 ("Except where it is otherwise expressly provided, a person convicted of felony shall not be a witness, unless he has been pardoned or punished therefor, but a person convicted of felony and sentenced therefore, except it be for perjury, may by leave of Court be examined as a witness in any criminal prosecution, though he has not been pardoned or punished therefor, but a person convicted of perjury shall not be a witness in any case, although he may have been pardoned or punished"); § 18 (analogous to § 4780, Virginia Code, but covering a number of offences); § 19 ("In any trial or examination in or before any Court or officer for a felony or misdemeanor, the accused shall, at his or her own request, but not otherwise, be a competent witness on such trial and examination. The wife or husband of the accused shall also, at the request of the accused, but not otherwise, be a competent witness of such trial and examination. But a failure to make such request shall not create any presumption against him or her, nor shall any reference be made to or comment upon such failure by any one during the progress of the trial in the hearing of the jury"); c. 50, § 108 (special rules of competency before justices of the peace); c. 62, § 30, St. 1909, c. 60 (offences against the game laws; like c. 152, § 18); c. 147, § 3 (person convicted of perjury or subornation shall be adjudged incapable "of giving evidence as a witness"); c. 165, § 9 (offences by convicts; "all other convicts in the penitentiary shall be competent witnesses for or against the accused"); St. 1911, c. 22, Code 1914, § 5171 (pandering; the female shall be competent "to testify for or against the accused as to any transaction or as to any conversation with the accused, or by him with another person or persons in her presence", notwithstanding her marriage to him before or after the offence and whether called during the marriage relation or afterwards); St. 1911, c. 23, Code 1914, § 5315 (pimping; similar provision).

WISCONSIN: Statutes 1919, § 4068 ("No person shall be disqualified as a witness in any action or proceeding, civil or criminal, by reason of his interest in the event of the same, as a party or otherwise; and every party shall be in every such case a competent witness except as otherwise provided in this chapter. But such interest or connection may be shown to affect the credibility of the witness. Any person who is a party of record in any civil action or proceeding, or any person for whose immediate benefit any such action or proceeding is prosecuted or defended or his or its assignor, officer, agent or employee, or the person who was such officer, agent, or employee at the time of the occurrence of the facts made the subject of the examination, or in case a county, town, village, or city be a party, any officer of such county, town, village, or city, may be examined upon the trial of any such action or proceeding as if under cross-examination, at the instance of the adverse party or parties or any of them, and for that purpose may be compelled, in the same manner and subject to the same rules for examination as any other witness, to testify; but the party calling for such examination shall not be concluded thereby, and may rebut the evidence given thereon by counter or impeaching testimony"); § 4069 ("No person or stockholder, officer or trustee of a corporation in his or its own behalf or interest nor any person, stockholder, officer or trustee of a corporation from, through, or under whom a party derives his interest or title, shall be examined as a witness in respect to any transaction or communication by him personally with a deceased person or with a person then insane, in any civil action or proceeding in which the opposite party derives his title or sustains his liability to the cause of action from, through or under such deceased person or such insane person, or in which such insane person is a party prosecuting or defending by guardian, unless such opposite party shall first be examined or examine some other witness in his behalf concerning some transaction or communication between the deceased or insane and such party or person, or unless the testimony of such deceased person given in his lifetime or of such insane person be first read or given in evidence by the opposite party; and then, in either case respectively, only in respect to such transaction or communication of which testimony is so given or to the matters to which such testimony relates"); § 4070 ("No party, and no person from, through, or under whom a party derives his interest or title, shall be examined as a witness in respect to any transaction or communication by him personally with an agent of the adverse party or an agent of the person from, through, or under whom such adverse party derives his interest or title, when such agent is dead or insane or otherwise legally incompetent as a witness, unless the opposite party shall first be examined or examine some other witness in his behalf in respect to some transaction or communication between such agent and such other party or person; or unless the testimony of such agent, at any time taken, be first read or given in evidence by the opposite party; and then, in either case respectively, only in respect to such transaction or communication of which testimony is so given or to the matters to which such testimony relates"); § 4071 ("In all criminal actions and proceedings the party charged shall, at his own request, but not otherwise, be a competent witness; but his refusal or omission to testify shall create no presumption against him or any other party thereto"); § 4072 ("A husband or wife shall be a competent witness for or against the other in all cases, except that neither one without the consent of the other, during marriage, nor afterwards, shall be permitted to disclose a private communication, made during marriage, by one to the other, when such private communication is privileged. Such private communication shall be privileged in all except the following cases: 1. Where both husband and wife were parties to the action: 2. Where such private communication relates to a charge of personal violence by one upon the other: 3. Where one has acted as the agent of the other and such private communication relates to matters within the scope of such agency"); § 4073 ("A person who has been convicted of a criminal offence is, notwithstanding, a competent witness, but the conviction may be proved to affect his credibility, either by the record or by his own cross-examination, upon which he must answer any question relevant to that inquiry, and the party cross-examining him is not concluded by his answer"); § 4085 ("The Court before whom an infant or person apparently of weak intellect shall be produced as a witness may examine such person to ascertain his capacity and whether he understands the nature and obligations of an oath"); § 4581*h*–4583 (pandering; like W. Va. Code 1914, § 5171); § 4587*c* (family-desertion; like D. C. St. 1906; with a proviso against self-incrimination).

WYOMING: Compiled Statutes Annotated 1920, § 5804 ("All persons are competent witnesses, except those of unsound mind and children under ten years of age who appear incapable of receiving just impressions of the facts and transactions respecting which they are examined, or of relating them truly"); § 5805 ("In no case shall the husband or wife be a witness against the other, except in criminal proceedings for a crime committed by one against the other, or in a civil action or proceeding by one against the other, or an action brought by the husband for criminal conversation with or seduction of his wife, or in an action brought by either husband or wife for the alienation of each other's affections; but they may in all civil or criminal cases be witnesses for each other the same as though the marital relation did not exist"); § 5806 ("The following persons shall not testify in certain respects: . . . 3. Husband or wife, except as provided in § 5805. 4. A person who assigns his claim or interest, concerning any matter in respect to which he would not, if a party, be permitted to testify. 5. A person who, if a party, would be restricted in his evidence under § 5807, shall, where the property or thing is sold or transferred by an executor, administrator, guardian or trustee, heir, devisee, or legatee, be restricted in the same manner in any action or proceeding concerning such property or thing"); § 5807 ("A party shall not testify where the adverse party is the guardian or trustee of either a deaf and dumb or an insane person, or of a child of a deceased person, or is an executor or administrator, or claims or defends as heir, grantee, assignee, devisee, or legatee of a deceased person; except, 1. To facts which occurred subsequent to the appointment of the guardian or trustee of an insane person, and, in other cases, subsequent to the time the decedent, grantor, assignor, or testator died; 2. When the action or proceeding relates to a contract made through an agent, by a person since deceased, and the agent testifies, a party may testify on the same subject; 3. If a party, or one having a direct interest, testify to transactions or conversations with another party, the latter may testify as to the same transactions or conversations; 4. If a party offer evidence of conversations or admissions of the opposite party, the latter may testify concerning the same conversations or admissions; 5. In an action or proceeding by or against a partner or joint contractor, the adverse party shall not testify to transactions with or admissions by a partner or joint contractor since deceased, unless the same were made in the presence of the surviving partner or joint contractor; and this rule shall be applied without regard to the character in which the parties sue or are sued; 6. If the claim or defence is founded on a book account, a party may testify that the book is his account book, that it is a book of original entries, that the entries therein were made by himself, a person since deceased, or a disinterested person nonresident of the county; whereupon the book shall be competent evidence; and such book may be admitted in evidence in any case, without regard to the parties, upon like proof by any competent witness; 7. If a party, after testifying orally, die, the evidence may be proved by either party, on a further trial of the case, whereupon the opposite party may testify as to the same matters; 8. If a party die, and his deposition be offered in evidence, the opposite party may testify as to all competent matters therein. — Nothing in this section contained shall apply to actions for causing death, or actions or proceedings involving the validity of a deed, will, or codicil; and when a case is plainly within the reason and spirit of the last three sections, though not within the strict letter, their principles shall be applied"); § 5808 ("A party may compel the adverse party to testify orally or by deposition, as any other witness may be thus compelled"); § 7507 ("The defendant in all criminal cases, in all the courts in this State, may be sworn and examined as a witness, if he so elect, but shall not be required to testify in any case. If the defendant so elect, he may make a statement to the jury without being sworn, but the neglect or refusal to make a statement shall not create any presumption against him, nor shall any reference be made to nor shall any comment be made upon such neglect or refusal"); § 7520 ("When two or more persons shall be indicted together, the Court may, at any time before the defendant has gone into his defence, direct any one of the defendants to be discharged, that he may be a witness for the Territory. An accused party may, also, when there is not sufficient evidence to put him upon his defence, be discharged by the Court, or, if not discharged by the Court, shall be entitled to the immediate verdict of the jury, for the purpose of giving evidence for others accused with him"); § 4993 ("each party in a divorce proceeding shall be competent to testify in his or her own behalf"); § 5036 (desertion of family; like Wash. R. & B. Code 1909, § 5935); § 7511 (except as otherwise provided, the provisions for civil procedure as to witnesses apply in criminal cases so far as applicable).

SUB-TITLE I (continued): TESTIMONIAL QUALIFICATIONS

TOPIC I: ORGANIC CAPACITY

SUB-TOPIC A: MENTAL DERANGEMENT

(INSANITY, IDIOCY, DISEASE, INTOXICATION)

CHAPTER XIX.

§ 492. General Principle of Capacity. There was a period (and it has not long passed away) when the lunatic and the idiot, in the superstitious belief of the times, which regarded madness as an infliction sent from Heaven, were treated as incapable of being witnesses at all:[1]

1628, Sir EDWARD COKE, Notes upon Littleton, 246 b: "'Non compos mentis' is of four sorts: 1. An idiot, which from his nativity, by a perpetual infirmity, is 'non compos mentis.' 2. He that by sickness, grief, or accident, wholly loses his memory and understanding. 3. A lunatic that hath sometime his understanding and sometime not, 'aliquando gaudet lucidis intervallis', and therefore he is called 'non compos mentis' so long as he hath not understanding. 4. Lastly, he that by his own vicious act for a time depriveth himself of his memory and understanding, as he that is drunken."

1842, Professor Simon Greenleaf, Evidence, § 365: "It makes no difference from which cause this defect of understanding may have arisen; nor whether it be temporary and curable, or permanent; whether the party be hopelessly an idiot or maniac, or only occasionally insane, as a lunatic; or be intoxicated; or whether the defect arises from mere immaturity of intellect, as in the case of children. While the deficiency of understanding exists, be the cause of what nature soever, the person is not admissible to be sworn as a witness."

But this indiscriminate rule of exclusion, since the progress of our intelligence respecting mental derangement and defect, has been modified and rationalized. While it is still attempted to draw a line which prevents certain classes of persons from being listened to at all — a doubtful policy in any case (post, § 501) — the law endeavors to make its tests fit the purpose. The question being whether the person is trustworthy as a witness, the law now asks whether in each case the derangement or defect is such as to make the person untrustworthy as a witness; it no longer excludes absolutely:

§ 492. [1] Accord: Co. Litt. 6 b; Comyn's, Digest, "Testmoigne", A, 1; 1786, White's Case, 2 Leach Cr. C., 3d ed., 482; 1813, Livingston v. Kiersted, 10 Johns. 362. The only relaxation of this rule was permitted where the proposed witness was, at the time of trial, enjoying a lucid interval.

1851, R. v. Hill, 2 Den. & P. C. C. 254; [2] the proposed witness said: "I am fully aware that I have a spirit, and 20,000 of them; they are not all mine; I must inquire — I can, where I am; I know which are mine. Those ascend from my stomach to my head, and also those in my ears. . . . They speak to me constantly; they are now speaking to me. . . . I know what it is to take an oath; my catechism taught me from my infancy when it is lawful to swear"; he was then sworn, and gave a perfectly connected and rational account of a transaction which he reported himself to have witnessed; he was in some doubt as to the day of the week on which it took place, and said: "These creatures insist upon it it was Tuesday night, and I think it was Monday. . . . The spirits assist me in speaking of the date; I thought it was Monday, and they told me it was Christmas Eve, — Tuesday; but, I was an eye-witness." The defence contended that the witness was 'non compos mentis', and that as soon as any unsoundness of mind is manifested in a witness, he ought to be rejected as incompetent; the Court of Criminal Appeal negatived this. CAMPBELL, L. C. J.: "It has been argued that any particular delusion, commonly called monomania, makes a man inadmissible. This would be extremely inconvenient in many cases in proof either of guilt or innocence; it might also cause serious difficulties in the management of lunatic asylums. I am, therefore, of opinion that the judge must, in all such cases, determine the competency and the jury the credibility. . . . The rule which has been contended for would exclude the testimony of Socrates, for he had one spirit always prompting him." TALFOURD, J.: "It would be very disastrous if mere delusions were held to exclude a witness. Some of the greatest and wisest of mankind have had particular delusions."

1865, CHAPMAN, J., in Kendall v. May, 10 All. 64: "This is the only rational and just rule that can be adopted. Insanity exists in various degrees. . . . Persons who are affected to such an extent that it is expedient to place them in insane hospitals or under guardianship often possess sufficient knowledge . . . of events that took place in their presence to make them useful and trustworthy as witnesses. A rigid rule that would exclude the testimony of all such persons as untrustworthy witnesses would not be conformable to facts and therefore would not be founded in good sense."

1892, WALKER, J., in Worthington v. Mencer, 96 Ala. 310, 11 So. 72: "One's infirmity may be such as to render it expedient to place him under guardianship, and even to subject him to personal restraints, and yet he may be fully competent to understand the nature of an oath, to observe facts correctly, and to relate them intelligently and truly. A sweeping rule of disqualification which excludes such a person as a witness would be arbitrary and unsupported by sound reason. The true reason for not admitting the testimony of a person 'non compos mentis' in any case is because his malady involves such a want or impairment of faculty that events are not correctly impressed on his mind, or are not retained in his memory, or that he does not understand his responsibility as a witness. When the reason for the exclusion of the witness does not exist, he should be permitted to testify."

This broad and rational principle — that the derangement or defect, in order to disqualify, must be such as substantially negatives trustworthiness upon the specific subject of the testimony — is now practically everywhere accepted.[3]

[2] Also reported in 5 Cox Cr. C. 259; 15 Jur. 470; 5 Eng. L. & Eq. 547; 6 Moore P. C. 341.

[3] Federal: 1822, Evans v. Hettich, 7 Wheat. 470; 1882, District of Columbia v. Armes, 107 U. S. 521; 1897, Wright v. Express Co., 80 Fed. 85; 1897, Pittsburg & W. R. Co. v. Thompson, 27 C. C. A. 333, 82 Fed. 720 (principle of the Armes case applied; the mere fact of being a committed lunatic is not decisive, though it raises a presumption; the Ohio statute excluding persons of "unsound mind" does not change this principle); 1920, New York Evening Post v. Chaloner, 2d C. C.

In three particular respects this rationalization of the rule affects its present content; in two of them the field of competency becomes broader, in one of them narrower. First, the mere fact of derangement or defect does not in itself exclude the witness; the various forms of monomania are no longer treated as equivalent to complete lunacy. Secondly, the inquiry is always as to the relation of the derangement or defect to the subject to be testified about. If on this subject no aberration appears, the person is acceptable, however untrustworthy on other subjects. Thirdly, the mere fact of soundness at the time of trial is no longer sufficient; for derangement or defect at the time of the events to be testified to may make the person untrustworthy. — The inquiry looks to the capacity to observe as well as to the other elements, the capacity to recollect and to narrate.

§ 493. Capacity of Observation. If the inquiry is to deal with the relation of the derangement or defect of each person to his actual trustworthiness, it seems clear that each of the three elements (ante, § 478) must be considered.

Therefore, in the first place, an incapacity to observe intelligently at the time of the events to be observed would suffice to exclude the person:[1]

1859, WALDO, J., in Holcomb v. Holcomb, 28 Conn. 179: "The force of all human testimony depends as much upon the ability of the witness to observe the facts correctly as upon his disposition to describe them honestly, and if the mind of the witness is in such a condition that it cannot accurately observe passing events, . . . the story will make but a feeble impression upon the hearer."

But this necessary conclusion does not seem to have been yet generally accepted; the usual attitude is to consider as immaterial a derangement occurring before the time of testifying:[2]

A., 265 Fed. 204, 217; Alabama: 1877, Allen v. State, 60 Ala. 19, semble; 1892, Worthington v. Mencer, 96 Ala. 310, 11 So. 72 (quoted supra); 1892, Walker v. State, 97 Ala. 85, 12 So. 83; 1911, McKinstry v. Tuscaloosa, 172 Ala. 344, 54 So. 629 (Worthington v. Mencer followed); California: 1893, Clements v. McGinn, — Cal. —, 33 Pac. 920; Georgia: 1907, Cuesta v. Goldsmith, 1 Ga. App. 48, 57 S. E. 983 (following Pittsburg & W. R. Co. v. Thompson); Idaho: 1906, State v. Simes, 12 Ida. 310, 85 Pac. 914; Illinois: 1912, People v. Enright, 256 Ill. 221, 99 N. E. 936; Maryland: 1915, Weeks v. State, 126 Md. 223, 94 Atl. 774 (carnal knowledge of an imbecile; the imbecile held qualified to testify to the offence); Massachusetts: 1865, Kendall v. May, 10 All. 64 (quoted supra); Minnesota: 1881, Cannady v. Lynch, 27 Minn. 436, 8 N. W. 164; 1916, State v. Herring, 268 Mo. 514, 188 S. W. 169 (manslaughter of patients in an insane asylum by the attendants; the patients admitted to testify); Montana: 1909, State v. Berberick, 38 Mont. 423, 100 Pac. 209 (applied to a confession); Oklahoma: 1898, Guthrie v. Shaffer, 7 Okl. 459, 54 Pac. 698; Pennsylvania: 1921, Com. v. Loomis, 270 Pa. 254, 113 Atl. 428 (the disease must be such as renders the witness "incapable of understanding the obligation of an oath and of intelligently testifying as to facts he had observed"; a poor statement of the principle); South Carolina: 1893, State v. Weldon, 39 S. C. 318, 17 S. E. 689; Virginia: 1894, Coleman v. Com., 25 Gratt. 873; Washington: 1902, Czarecki v. R. & N. Co., 30 Wash. 288, 70 Pac. 750; West Virginia: 1915, State v. Hoke, 76 W. Va. 36, 84 S. E. 1054; — and the cases cited in the ensuing notes.

Compare the statutes quoted ante, § 488; their precise wording is not usually of importance, as applied in the decisions.

§ 493. [1] Accord: 1897, Wright v. Express Co., 80 Fed. 85, semble; 1892, Worthington v. Mencer, 96 Ala. 310, 11 So. 72; 1882, District of Columbia v. Armes, 107 U. S. 521. 1917, Thomas v. State, 73 Fla. 115, 74 So. 1; 1915, State v. Tetrault, 78 N. H. 14, 95 Atl. 669 (rape under age of feeble-minded female; the trial Court's discretion determines); 1922, Langston v. State, — N. C. —, 111 S. E. 561 (idiot witness).

[2] Accord: 1822, Evans v. Hettich, 7 Wheat. U. S. 470; 1853, Campbell v. State, 23 Ala.

1878, HORTON, C. J., in Sarbach v. Jones, 20 Kan. 500: "The existence of such delusions on his part at the time of the occurrences which he is called upon to relate goes to his credit and not to his competency, when he is of sound mind at the time he is called upon to testify. As there can be neither perfect sanity nor perfect insanity, so no witness, not incompetent within the statute, is to be absolutely excluded because he has been insane and is called upon to narrate matters some of which occurred while he is alleged to have been unconscious."

If this absence of limitation can be regarded as a deliberate step towards the doctrine of the future (post, § 501) that all attempts at exclusion for mental or moral incapacity be abandoned, and that each witness' testimony be taken for what it seems to be worth, after testing by cross-examination and impeaching by other evidence, then this step to that end is to be welcomed. But the apparent effect of these decisions seems, in some instances at least, to be an inadvertent one. The Courts have been desirous to point out that the fact of insanity is in itself no bar, and have thus declared broadly that any past insanity, merely as such, is no hindrance, if the witness is sane when testifying.

§ 494. Capacity of Recollection. The capacity to recollect is an essential part of the idea of testimonial qualification (ante, § 478), and is often noted by the Courts in their definitions.[1] But it seldom occurs as the subject of a specific form of disqualifying aberration.

§ 495. Capacity of Communication. The capacity of communication is the third essential requirement (ante, § 478), and is the one most commonly in controversy. It has two aspects:

(1) First, it involves a capacity mentally to understand the nature of questions put and to form and communicate intelligent answers.[1] (2) Secondly,

74; 1893, Clements v. McGinn, — Cal. —, 33 Pac. 920 (former commitment for insanity of a person since discharged does not render incompetent); 1859, Carlton v. Carlton, 40 N. H. 20, semble; 1922, Nations v. State, — Tex. Cr. — , 237 S. W. 570 (unvacated judgment of committal to asylum in March, 1920, the person having later been paroled, held not of itself to disqualify the witness). The statutes (ante, § 488) founded on the California Code are responsible chiefly for this result.

§ 494. [1] 1882, District of Columbia v. Armes, 107 U. S. 521; 1892, Worthington v. Mercer, 96 Ala. 310, 11 So. 72; 1810, Swift, Evidence, Conn., 46 ("sufficient memory to retain facts"); 1894, Bowdle v. R. Co., 103 Mich. 292, 61 N. W. 529; 1881, Cannady v. Lynch, 27 Minn. 436, 8 N. W. 164 (assimilating statute to common law); 1822, Hartford v. Palmer, 16 Johns. N. Y. 143 (understanding sufficient to "retain in their memory the events"); 1876, People v. Hospital, 3 Abb. N. C. 251, Ordronaux, C.; 1874, Coleman's Case, 25 Gratt. Va. 876 (sufficient "to retain in memory the events").

The plausible ruling has been made that a witness may not testify to his own prior insanity; 1919, Com. v. Dale, 264 Pa. 362, 107 Atl. 743 (homicide; to show the prior insane disposition of the accused's father, the father himself was not admitted to testify to his own insane impulses). But there is no ground of principle for this; and the reason advanced ("it would open the door to a very wide field, into which fraud, dishonesty, and perjury may creep") belongs to the general class of reasons that once formed the basis for extensive testimonial incapacity but were completely discarded more than two generations ago.

§ 495. [1] 1882, District of Columbia v. Armes, 107 U. S. 521; 1892, Walker v. State, 97 Ala. 85, 12 So. 83 ("narrate the transaction in what appears to be an intelligent, rational manner"); 1810, Swift, Evidence, 46, Conn. ("sufficient understanding to relate facts"); 1894, Bowdle v. R. Co., 103 Mich. 292, 61 N. W. 529; 1909, State v. Berberick, 38 Mont. 423, 100 Pac. 209 (insanity at the time of a confession); State v. Church, 199 Mo. 605, 98 S. W. 16 (confession admitted, subject to impeachment by evidence of insanity); 1874, Coleman's Case, 25 Gratt. Va. 876.

The following ruling seems erroneous: 1879, State v. Feltes, 51 Ia. 496, 1 N. W. 755 (insanity at the time of a confession, held not to exclude it).

does it involve a sense of moral responsibility, of the duty to make the narration correspond to the recollection and knowledge, i.e. to speak the truth as he sees it? It would seem that the clear absence of such a sense would disqualify the witness. The question is complicated by the necessity, in the earlier cases, of inquiring after that religious sense of the oath-obligation which was in former times paramount, and by the difficulty of determining whether the language of the judges was directed to that subject or to the present one. It is important to know whether, since the oath has been abolished or made optional (post, § 1828), an independent testimonial requirement exists, in the shape of a sense of moral responsibility to speak the truth. On principle, it seems to exist; and it has often been pointed out as essential with reference to mental derangement.[2]

§ 496. Standard of Intelligence is in Trial Court's Discretion. If it is asked further what shall be the standard by which this capacity to observe, recollect, and communicate is to be judged, the law is found very properly declining to lay down any more detailed rules. The trial Court must determine this capacity.[1] Any more restricted rule, however ingenious, would fail of its purpose, and would hamper rather than assist the process of procuring trustworthy testimony.

§ 497. Capacity Presumed; Methods of Ascertainment; Judge and Jury. (a) The general rule here applies (ante, § 484) that the capacity of the person offered as a witness is presumed; i.e. to exclude a witness on the ground of mental or moral incapacity the existence of the incapacity must be made to appear.[1]

[2] 1851, R. v. Hill, 2 Den. & P. C. C. 254, 5 Cox Cr. C. 259, semble; 1892, Worthington v. Mencer, 96 Ala. 310, 11 So. 72 ("understand his responsibility as a witness"); 1882, District v. Armes, 107 U. S. 521, semble; 1810, Swift, Evidence, 46, Conn. ("sense of right and wrong"; where "utterly incapable of any sense of truth", they are excluded); 1865, Kendall v. May, 10 All. Mass. 63 ("sufficient knowledge of the nature of an oath"; at this time religious tests had been abolished); 1881, Cannady v. Lynch, 27 Minn. 437, 8 N. W. 164 ("possess the ability and appreciate the duty to relate events truly"); 1822, Hartford v. Palmer, 16 Johns. N. Y. 142; 1874, Coleman's Case, 25 Gratt. Va. 876 ("a sufficient share of understanding to appreciate the nature and obligation of an oath, to distinguish between right and wrong");

Compare the cases cited post, § 1822 (oath-capacity).

§ 496. [1] Eng. 1840, R. v. Hill, 2 Den. & P. C. C. 254, semble; Federal: 1882, District of Columbia v. Armes, 107 U. S. 521; 1920, New York Evening Post v. Chaloner, 2d C. C. A., 265 Fed. 204, 217; Ariz. 1914, Fernandez v. State, 16 Ariz. 269, 144 Pac. 640 (an aged Indian woman); Cal. 1912, People v. Harrison, 18 Cal. App. 288, 123 Pac. 200; Del. 1841, Armstrong's Lessees v. Timmons, 3 Harringt. 345; Ia. 1906, State v. Crouch, 130 Ia. 478, 107 N. W. 173; Ky. 1909, Covington v. O'Meara, 133 Ky. 762, 119 S. W. 187; Mass. 1865, Kendall v. May, 10 All. 63; Minn. 1881, Cannady v. Lynch, 27 Minn. 436, 8 N. W. 164; Nebr. 1891, Davis v. State, 31 Nebr. 248, 47 N. W. 851; 1895, State v. Meyers, 46 id. 152, 64 N. W. 697; N. J. 1819, Den v. Vancleve, 2 South. N. J. 653; W. Va. 1915, State v. Hoke, 76 W. Va. 36, 84 S. E. 1054.

The following decisions commit an atrocity in the name of the law: 1907, State v. Smith, 203 Mo. 695, 102 S. W. 526 (rape on a deaf-and dumb woman); 1901, Lee v. State, 43 Tex. Cr. 285, 64 S. W. 1047 (rape by intercourse with a woman mentally incapable; the incapacity which is essential to the crime, held also to make the woman incompetent to testify).

For the degree of mental derangement that impeaches credibility, see post, § 932.

§ 497. [1] 1856, Formby v. Wood, 19 Ga. 581 (a lunatic's affidavit); 1888, Mayor v. Caldwell, 81 Ga. 78, 7 S. E. 99 (here the deposition of one afterwards adjudged a lunatic, examined by commission and certified to have been duly sworn, was assumed as competent); 1909, Covington v. O'Meara, 133 Ky. 762, 119 S. W.

What is sufficient in order that the offering party may be put to the necessity of adducing evidence of capacity, and the judge to the necessity of determining the existence of capacity, has not been made entirely clear by decisions. It may be supposed that a mere objection raised and a claim to have a 'voir dire' examination would suffice. Moreover, the offering of any extrinsic evidence whatever would suffice to make it necessary for the judge to record a similar finding; though an upper Court should pay no attention to the lack of such a finding unless the nature of the evidence appeared. But it is generally accepted that the fact that the witness is, at the time of testifying, or was shortly beforehand, a lawful inmate of an asylum for mental disease or defect, or an adjudged lunatic or defective, makes it necessary that his capacity should be examined into and an express finding appear.[2]

(b) The ways in which the insanity may appear are four: (1) The general behavior of the person, while in court and before taking the stand, may be such as to exhibit the derangement to the judge; (2) The person may be questioned on the 'voir dire', so that his condition appears at once;[3] (3) Other witnesses to the derangement may be offered before the person's testimony is begun;[4] (4) The examination or cross-examination may disclose clearly the incapacity, in which case the preceding part of testimony may be struck out; or may

187; 1918, Owen v. Com., 181 Ky. 257, 204 S. W. 162; 1881, Cannady v. Lynch, 27 Minn. 437, 8 N. W. 164; 1908, Williams v. State, 52 Tex. Cr. 430, 107 S. W. 825.

[2] 1834, Ex parte ——, 3 Dowl. Pr. 161, semble (habeas corpus ad test.); 1871, Spittle v. Walton, L. R. 11 Eq. 420 (in taking an affidavit from an inmate of an asylum, the preliminary inquiry into capacity must appear); 1897, Pittsburg & W. R. Co. v. Thompson, 27 C. C. A. 333, 82 Fed. 720 (cited ante, §492); 1909, Covington v. O'Meara, 133 Ky. 762, 119 S. W. 187 (judgment of lunacy four years before); 1835, Re Christie, 5 Paige Ch. 241 (petition by adjudged lunatic; officer certifying it must state that capacity has been examined); 1876, Ordronaux, C., in People v. Hospital, 3 Abb. N. C. 252 (witness formerly in asylum).

For the admissibility of a judgment of lunacy, see post, § 1671.

For prior and subsequent insanity, see ante, § 233.

In Mayor v. Caldwell, 81 Ga. 78, 7 S. E. 99 (1888), the decision held merely that the trial Court was not wrong in assuming the competency of the insane deponent and in leaving the jury to give the deposition what credit they pleased; there is no attempt to lay down the doctrine that the testimony of a conceded lunatic, if attacked, shall go to the jury without preliminary inquiry as to competency.

The apparent doctrine of Clements v. McGinn, — Cal. —, 33 Pac. 920 (1893), that a discharge from a State asylum is 'prima facie' evidence of competency, seems proper, and would render a preliminary examination in such case not indispensable.

[3] 1847, Attorney-General v. Hitchcock, 1 Exch. 95, per Parke, B.; 1882, District of Columbia v. Armes, 107 U. S. 521 (the Court may examine); 1920, New York Evening Post Co. v. Chaloner, 2d C. C. A., 265 Fed. 204, 216 (on defendant's objection to plaintiff's sanity as a witness, and on request for a 'voir dire' examination, the trial judge denied the request, and admitted the witness; held not error on the facts); Ariz. Rev. St. 1913, Civ. C. § 1688 (Court may examine); 1876, White v. State, 52 Miss. 216, 223 (defendant may examine as to sanity of prosecution's witness, even though the judge had before trial determined it to his own satisfaction). Contra, semble: 1921, Ellarson v. Ellarson, Sup. App. Div., 190 N. Y. Suppl. 6.

It would seem that it is not the judge's duty to examine, if he does not choose to; so that if the opponent himself declines to examine on 'voir dire', the judge's refusal to do so is proper in his discretion; contra: 1906, State v. Simes, 12 Ida. 310, 85 Pac. 914.

[4] 1847, Attorney-General v. Hitchcock, supra. Contra, but unsound: 1844, Robinson v. Dana, 16 Vt. 474. In Mayor v. Caldwell, 81 Ga. 78, 7 S. E. 99 (1888), a lunatic's deposition being offered, though the trial Court was held right in refusing to hear impeaching evidence and to determine for itself and in sending all the evidence to the jury to consider, the general doctrine of considering extrinsic evidence was not denied.

disclose grounds of doubt, in which case a 'voir dire' or other witnesses may be resorted to.[5]

(c) The preliminary determination of capacity is for the judge not the jury (ante, § 487, post, § 2550); and it is therefore an improper practice for the judge to leave the testimony provisionally to the jury, to be rejected by them if found ineligible according to legal standard;[6] the jury have nothing to do with preliminary questions of admissibility. But, after the Court has passed on the witness' capacity, it is still open to the jury to conclude that the witness is not credible and to reject the testimony entirely; and the Court's decision does not necessarily affect the estimate which the jury must make.[7]

§ 498. Deaf-and-Dumb Persons not Idiots. At the time when unscientific ideas prevailed concerning mental derangement and defect, the deaf-and-dumb were so far treated as idiots that they were presumed to be incapable of testifying, until the contrary was shown.[1] To-day this presumption has disappeared:[2]

> 1845, JEWETT, J., in People v. McGee, 1 Den. 21: "[The woman] was of sense sufficient to have intelligence conveyed to her and to communicate intelligence to T. by signs and motions. . . . If she had sufficient reason to have intelligence conveyed to her by T. and to communicate facts to the understanding of T., although she was not able to talk or write, she could have been sworn and testified through him by signs."

No doubt it may sometimes be wise to examine into the capacity of such persons; but ordinarily the only question will be as to the possibility of communicating with them (post, § 811) by some certain system of signs. So far as such persons are shown to be mentally defective, the principles applicable to lunatics will govern.

[5] 1866, R. v. Whitehead, L. R. 1 C. C. R. 33. Compare the cases cited post, § 1820 (oath).

[6] Accord: 1915, Shields v. State, 16 Ga. App. 680, 85 S. E. 1057 (useful contrast of opinions by Russell, C. J., and Broyles, J.); 1912, People v. Enright, 256 Ill. 221, 99 N. E. 936; 1911, State v. Whitsett, 232 Mo. 511, 134 S. W. 555 (citing the above text).

Contra: 1894, Mead v. Harris, 101 Mich. 585, 60 N. W. 284, semble; 1908, Williams v. State, 52 Tex. Cr. 430, 107 S. W. 825. In Mayor v. Caldwell, 81 Ga. 78, 7 S. E. 99 (1888), the decision was merely that the trial Court was not wrong on the facts in declining to withdraw the evidence (a deposition) from the jury.

It is strange that these contra Courts did not see how preposterous it is to try to bind the jury's mind by a legal definition of admissibility. The jury's only inquiry ought to be the general credibility of the witness, which is distinct (ante, § 12) from admissibility. Times seem degenerate when such fundamentals can be ignored.

[7] 1895, Bowdle v. R. Co., 103 Mich. 292, 61 N. W. 529 (McGrath, J., diss., construing Mead v. Harris, supra).

§ 498. [1] 1680, Hale, Pl. Cr. I, 34; 1786, R. v. Ruston, 1 Leach Cr. L., 4th ed., 408; 1827, Morrison v. Lennard, 3 C. & P. 127; 1769, Bl. Com. IV, 303; 1842, Greenl. Evid. § 366.

[2] Accord: 1896, Ritchey v. People, 23 Colo. 314, 47 Pac. 272 (a deaf-mute, admitted, in spite of difficulty in conducting the examination); 1906, State v. Simes, 12 Ida. 310, 85 Pac. 914 (rape of a female mentally incapable of consent; the woman held not thereby also incompetent as a witness); 1906, State v. Crouch, 130 Ia. 478, 107 N. W. 173; 1893, State v. Howard, 118 Mo. 127, 143, 24 S. W. 41 (deaf-mute not assumed mentally incompetent); 1893, State v. Weldon, 39 S. C. 318, 17 S. E. 689; 1882, Quinn v. Halbert, 55 Vt. 228 (admitting the testimony of one who "was bereft of the power of speech, and could not explain any position, but only assent or dissent in answer to a direct question by a nod or shake of the head").

Contra: State v. Smith, Mo., cited ante, § 496.

§ 499. Intoxication. It follows from the modern theory of mental derangement (ante, § 492) that intoxication, even habitual, does not in itself incapacitate a person offered as a witness. The question is, in each instance, whether the witness was so bereft of his powers of observation, recollection, or narration, that he is thoroughly untrustworthy as a witness on the subject in hand:[1]

1794, Walker's Trial, 23 How. St. Tr. 1153; re-examination of Thomas Dunn, an informer. Dunn [answering a question, to explain his past behavior]: "I went there when I was intoxicated, the same as I am now." Mr. Justice HEATH: "How long have you been intoxicated?" "Not very long; I have my recollection about me, though it may seem to the Court that I may be ill or may not." "Were you intoxicated when you gave your evidence just now?" "I was not. . . . Drunk or sober, I will speak the truth." Mr. Justice HEATH: "I do not know that we can examine a man that is drunk." The counsel for the prosecution, Mr. Law, proceeded to ask further questions. Mr. Justice HEATH: "How can you, Mr. Law, examine him after he has told you he is intoxicated? He has made himself so exceedingly drunk, it is impossible to examine him"; but the cross-examiner, Mr. Erskine, was allowed to proceed.

1854, CHILTON, C. J., in Eskridge v. State, 25 Ala. 33: "It does not follow necessarily that, because the party was much intoxicated, his reason was so far dethroned as to disable him from comprehending the effect of his admissions or from giving a true account of the occurrence to which they had reference."

First, then, the capacity of observation (ante, § 478) at the time of the events to be testified to, may be such as should exclude the witness as untrustworthy.[2] Yet here is found a tendency, already noted (ante, § 493), to forget this requisite, and to declare that the time of taking the stand is that which alone is to be considered:[3]

1824, DUNCAN, J., in Gebhart v. Shindle, 15 S. & R. 238: "The point of inquiry is the moment of examination; is the witness then offered so besotted in his understanding as to be deprived of his intelligence? If he is, exclude him; if he be a hard drinker, an habitual drunkard, yet if at that time he is sober and possessed of a sound mind, he is to be received."

Secondly, the capacity of recollection may appear to be so affected that the witness is untrustworthy:

1819, Hartford v. Palmer, 16 Johns. 143: "It is a temporary derangement of the mind; and it is impossible for such men to have such a memory of events of which they may have had a knowledge as to be able to present them fairly and faithfully."

Finally, the capacity of intelligent and truthful narration may appear to be destroyed temporarily. Here regard is to be had only to the time when the person is put on the stand to testify:[4]

1819, Hartford v. Palmer, 16 Johns. 143: "A present and existing intoxication to a considerable degree utterly disqualifies the person so affected to narrate facts and events in a § 499. [1] Accord: 1880, People v. Ramirez, 56 Cal. 536.

[2] 1883, State v. Costello, 62 Ia. 407, 17 N. W. 605, semble.

[3] Accord: 1874, Coleman v. Com., 25 Gratt. Va. 865.

[4] Accord: 1883, State v. Costello, 62 Ia. 407, semble; 1904, State v. Sejours, 113 La. 676, 37 So. 599 (intoxication at the time of the shooting, held not to disqualify on the facts); 1824, Gebhart v. Shindle, 15 S. & R. Pa. 238. Contra: 1921, State v. Magyar, — N.J.L. —, 114 Atl. 252 (a witness "grossly intoxicated" when testifying, admitted; no authority cited).

For drunkenness as impeaching credibility, see post, § 933.

way at all to be relied on. It would, we think, be profaning the sanctity of an oath to tender it to a man who had no present sense of the obligations it imposed."

1845, ROGERS, J., in Gould v. Crawford, 2 Pa. St. 90: "The Court will not suffer a person to be examined as a witness who is in such a state that he cannot understand the obligation of an oath. . . . Yet such cases must depend on the sound discretion of the Court that hears the cause. There are degrees of intoxication; of which the Court alone can judge."

A confession must be judged with reference to the time of its utterance; the mere fact of intoxication at the time does not of itself exclude the confession;[5] but drunkenness induced for the purpose of securing a confession may in the circumstances exclude the confession.[6]

§ 500. Disease, Blindness, etc. The capacity of observation may be otherwise so lacking, particularly through blindness, that the witness may be incompetent to testify on the specific subject to which the incapacity relates. The capacity of recollection or of communication may also be so affected by disease or otherwise as to lead to the same result.[1] The discretion of the Court must control.[2]

§ 501. Policy of Abolishing Disqualification through Mental Derangement. The tendency of modern times is to abandon all attempts to distinguish between incapacity which affects only the degree of credibility and incapacity which excludes the witness entirely. The whole question is one of degree only, and the attempt to measure degrees and to define that point at which total incredibility ceases and credibility begins is an attempt to discover the intangible.[1] The subject is not one which deserves to be brought

[5] 1696, Vaughan's Trial, 13 How. St. Tr. 507 ff.; 1835, R. v. Spilsbury, 7 C. & P. 187; 1904, R. v. Lai Ping, 11 Br. C. 102 (confession while depressed by opium, admitted); 1878, Lester v. State, 32 Ark. 730; 1879, State v. Feltes, 51 Ia. 496, 1 N. W. 755; 1914, Lindsey v. State, 66 Fla. 341, 63 So. 832; 1898, State v. Berry, 50 La. An. 1309, 24 So. 329; 1906, State v. Hogan, 117 La. 863, 42 So. 352; 1914, McCleary v. State, 122 Md. 394, 89 Atl. 1100 ("greater or less absence of mental faculty, as the result of intoxication" held not to exclude); 1857, Com. v. Howe, 9 Gray Mass. 112, semble; 1899, Com. v. Chance, 174 Mass. 245, 54 N. E. 551 (recent recovery from delirium tremens); 1881, State v. Grear, 28 Minn. 426, 10 N. W. 472; 1906, State v. Church, 199 Mo. 605, 98 S. W. 16 (insanity); 1862, Jefferds v. People, 5 Park. Cr. N.Y. 547; 1883, Williams v. State, 12 Lea Tenn. 212; 1897, Leach v. State, 99 Tenn. 584, 42 S. W 195 (slight intoxication); 1894, White v. State, 32 Tex. Cr. 625, 636, 25 S. W. 784; 1902, State v. Haworth, 24 Utah 398, 68 Pac. 155 (intoxication).

[6] Ga. Code 1910, § 5781 (admissions obtained by "drunkenness induced for the purpose" are not receivable); 1903, McNutt v. State, 68 Nebr. 207, 94 N. W. 143 (liquor given by the sheriff, who then questioned the accused; held inadmissible); 1886, McCabe v. Com—., Pa. —, 8 Atl. 54, semble (a confession made under the influence of liquor given by an officer to make the accused talk).

§ 500. [1] 1876, Isler v. Dewey, 75 N. C. 466; 1885, Hoard v. State, 15 Lea Tenn. 321, semble (wound in head).

[2] 1861, People v. Robinson, 19 Cal. 40 (confession in sleep); 1893, Dickson v. Waldron. 135 Ind. 507, 35 N. E. 1 (person injured by a wound); 1891, State v. Morgan, 35 W. Va. 260, 13 S. E. 385 (soliloquy at night while on a couch, admitted; semble, admissible even though made while asleep).

The following case raises an interesting question: 1913, State v. Strong, 83 N. J. L. 177, 83 Atl. 506 (confession to a clairvoyant, held inadmissible, semble).

It has been ruled that the use of opium, as affecting the powers of observation and recollection, cannot suffice to exclude the user: 1898, State v. Cannon, 52 S. C. 452, 30 S. E. 589 (morphine); 1895, State v. White, 10 Wash. 611, 39 Pac. 160.

For these defects as admissible to impeach the witness, see post, § 934.

§ 501. [1] From the point of view of logic and psychology as applicable to argument before the jury (not the rules of Admissibility), see the materials collected in the present author's within the realm of legal principle, and it is profitless to pretend to make it so. Here is a person on the stand; perhaps he is a total imbecile, in manner, but perhaps, also, there will be a gleam of sense here and there in his story. The jury had better be given the opportunity of disregarding the evident nonsense and of accepting such sense as may appear. There is usually abundant evidence ready at hand to discredit him when he is truly an imbecile or suffers under a dangerous delusion. It is simpler and safer to let the jury perform the process of measuring the impeached testimony and of sifting out whatever traces of truth may seem to be contained in it. The step was long ago advocated by the English commission of judges, in their proposals of reform,[2] and has been approved by two such distinguished writers on the law of Evidence as Mr. Best [3] and Mr. Justice Taylor.[4]

"Principles of Judicial Proof, as given by Logic Psychology, and General Experience, and illustrated in Judicial Trials" (1913; §§ 191–195).

[2] 1853, Common Law Practice Commissioners (Jervis, Cockburn, Martin, Barmwell, Willes, and Walton, all afterwards Judges, except the last), Second Report, p. 10: "Plain sense and reason would obviously suggest that any living witness who could throw light upon a fact in issue should be heard to state what he knows, subject always to such observations as may arise as to his means of knowledge or his disposition to tell the truth."

[3] Evidence, §§ 62, 144.

[4] Evidence, § 1210. It was originally proposed by Bentham: Rationale of Jud. Evid. b. IX, pt. III, c. VI (Works, VII, 427).

SUB-TITLE I (continued): TESTIMONIAL QUALIFICATIONS

TOPIC I (continued): ORGANIC CAPACITY

SUB-TOPIC B: MENTAL IMMATURITY (INFANCY)

CHAPTER XX.

§ 505. General Principle. That, with reference to the general capacity to observe, recollect, and narrate, the same principles apply to mental immaturity that are applied to mental derangement, seems undoubted. The question, however, of paramount importance in the earlier common law precedents has been the eligibility of children to take the oath; and the religious sense required for this has usually been the sole subject of argument, to the neglect of the question whether, independently of the oath, any particular degree of intelligence is necessary as a purely testimonial element. It is not always possible to determine whether the language of the Courts is used in view of the oath-test or of an independent testimonial requirement. But this much may be taken as settled, that no rule defines any particular age as conclusive of incapacity; in each instance the capacity of the particular child is to be investigated.[1]

§ 506. Capacity of Observation, Recollection, and Communication. (1) The capacity of observation (ante, § 478) is the first of the essential requirements, and has been occasionally so noted by the Courts.[1] (2) The capacity of § 505. [1] 1779, R. v. Brasier, 1 Leach Cr. L. 199 ("There is no precise or fixed rule as to the time within which infants are excluded from giving evidence; but their admissibility . . . is to be collected from their answers to questions propounded to them by the Court"; said primarily of the oath-test); 1902, State v. King, 117 Ia. 484, 91 N. W. 768 ("All modern decisions seem to declare intelligence, and not age, the proper test"). Accord: 1889, McGuff v. State, 88 Ala. 147, 7 So. 35; 1873, Draper v. Draper, 68 Ill. 17; 1866, State v. Ross, 18 La. An. 342; 1867, State v. Denis, 19 id. 193; 1903, State v. Williams, 11 La. 179, 35 So. 505; 1909, Chavigny v. Hava, 125 La. 710, 51 So. 696 (boy of 10 years, admitted); 1813, Com. v. Hutchinson, 10 Mass. 225; 1887, Hughes v. R. Co., 65 Mich. 10, 31 N. W. 605; 1913, New Orleans & N. E. R. Co. v. Mobly, 106 Miss. 323, 63 So. 665 (child of 6, admitted); 1909, Evers v. State, 84 Nebr. 708, 121 N. W. 1005; 1819, Den v. Vancleve, 2 South. N. J. 653; 1895, Terr. v. DeGutman, 8 N. M. 92, 42 Pac. 68; 1922, Rogers v. Com., — Va. —, 111 S. E. 231 (child under 6, admitted).

The statutory definitions of infants' capacity are collected ante, § 488.

§ 506. [1] 1874, Wade v. State, 50 Ala. 164 ("intelligent enough to observe"); 1883, Kelly v. State, 75 id. 22 ("of sufficient years and discretion to know what occurs"); 1867, Flanagin v. State, 25 Ark. 96; 1858, People v.

recollection is also an essential requirement;[2] though little likely to be called into question, and probably often intended to be covered by the expressions defining the next requirement. (3) For the capacity of communication, as in the case of mental derangement (ante, § 495), there are two elements to be taken into consideration: (a) There must be a capacity to understand questions put, and to frame and express intelligent answers.[3] (b) There must be a sense of moral responsibility, — a consciousness of the duty to speak the truth. Here it is that the difficulty chiefly comes in determining whether the Courts intend to establish a testimonial requirement independent of the oath. It would seem that they do.[4]

§ 507. Standard of Intelligence; Discretion of Trial Court. Agreeably to sound policy, and to the analogy of principle in cases of mental derange-

Bernal, 10 Cal. 66 ("sufficient intelligence to receive just impressions of the fact"; compare the phrasing of the California and related codes); 1890, Ridenhour v. R. Co., 102 Mo. 288, 13 S. W. 889 (applying the statutory definition); 1881, State v. Jackson, 9 Or. 459.

In People v. Delancy, — Cal. App. —, 199 Pac. 896 (1921) the elaborate opinions contain a careful analysis of these three elements as covered by Cal. C. C. P. § 1880.

[2] 1876, Stephen, Dig. Evid., Art. 107; 1883, Kelly v. State, 75 Ala. 22 ("of sufficient years and discretion . . . to remember what occurs"); 1867, Flanagin v. State, 25 Ark. 96; 1920, Anderson v. State, 88 Tex. Cr. 307, 226 S. W. 414.

[3] 1680, Hale, Pl. Cr., I, 302 ("of a competent discretion"); 1876, Stephen, Dig. Evid., Art. 107 ("understanding the questions put to him, giving rational answers to those questions"); 1874, Wade v. State, 50 Ala. 164 ("intelligence enough to narrate"); 1883, Kelly v. State, 75 Ala. 22 ("of sufficient intelligence to narrate what occurs"); 1858, People v. Bernal, 10 Cal. 66 ("sufficient capacity to relate facts correctly"); 1894, State v. Douglas, 53 Kan. 667, 671, 37 Pac. 172; 1894, White v. Com., — Ky. —, 28 S. W. 348 ("sufficient intelligence to truthfully narrate facts to which its attention is directed"); 1861, Com. v. Mullins, 2 All. Mass. 296 ("the possession of sufficient intelligence to testify in the case"); 1896, Com. v. Robinson, 165 Mass. 426, 43 N. E. 121 ("sufficient intelligence"); 1895, Territory v. De Gutman, 8 N. M. 92, 42 Pac. 68 ("sufficient discretion and understanding", "sufficient natural intelligence"); 1881, State v. Jackson, 9 Or. 459; 1920, Macale v. Lynch, 110 Wash. 444, 188 Pac. 517 (personal injury to a child under 6; his testimony 14 months later, excluded, owing to the mental effect of his sufferings, etc., in the interval).

[4] England: 1779, R. v. Brasier, 1 Leach Cr. L. 199 ("the sense and reason they entertain of the danger and impiety of falsehood"); 1876, Stephen, Evid., Art. 107, and App. Note XL ("knowing that he ought to speak the truth"); 1810, Swift, Evidence, 45 ("their sense of the obligation to speak the truth, . . . understand the distinction between right and wrong").

United States: 1895, Wheeler v. U. S., 159 U. S. 523, 16 Sup. 93 ("appreciation of the difference between truth and falsehood, as well as of his duty to tell the former"); 1889, McGuff v. State, 88 Ala. 150, 7 So. 35, semble ("sense and reason they entertain of the danger and impiety of falsehood"); 1907, Clinton v. State, 53 Fla. 98, 43 So. 312; 1878, Johnson v. State, 61 Ga. 36 ("the capacity to understand the nature of an oath, — which means, perhaps, the degree of intelligence the child shows, so as to satisfy the Court that she is impressed that she ought to tell the truth on such a solemn occasion rather than a lie"); 1869, Simpson v. State, 31 Ind. 90; 1905, Bright v. Com., 120 Ky. 298, 86 S. W. 527; 1842, State v. Whittier, 21 Me. 347, semble ("a sense of accountability for moral conduct"); 1813, Com. v. Hutchinson, 10 Mass. 225 ("a sufficient sense of the wickedness and danger of false swearing"); 1896, Com. v. Robinson, 165 Mass. 426, 43 N. E. 121 ("sufficient sense of the duty of telling the truth"); 1862, Washburn v. People, 10 Mich. 374, 386, semble; 1880, McGuire v. People, 44 Mich. 287, 6 N. W. 669, semble; 1887, Hughes v. R. Co., 65 Mich. 10, 31 N. W. 605 ("A child cannot testify unless capable of appreciating the obligation of his oath, if he takes an oath, or his affirmation if that is substituted. . . . He must be able to comprehend it; . . . disposed to tell the truth under some sense of obligation"); 1876, State v. Levy, 23 Minn. 108; 1920, Goy v. Director-General of Railroads, — N. H. —, 111 Atl. 855; N. Mex. Annot. St. 1915, § 2165; 1881, State v. Jackson, 9 Or. 459; 1895, State v. Reddington, 7 S. D. 368, 68 N. W. 170; 1893, State v. Michael, 37 W. Va. 568, 16 S. E. 803, semble.

Compare the precedents cited post, § 1821 (oath).

It would seem that, irrespective of theology, the child could be instructed in moral duties, for the purpose of testifying: 1902, State v. King, 117 Ia. 484, 91 N. W. 768.

ment and defect, the trial Court must be the one to determine finally, upon all the circumstances, whether the child has sufficient intelligence according to the foregoing requirements:[1]

1895, BREWER, J., in Wheeler v. U. S., 159 U. S. 523, 16 Sup. 93: "The decision of this question rests primarily with the trial judge, who sees the proposed witness, notices his manner, his apparent possession or lack of intelligence, and may resort to any examination which will tend to disclose his capacity and intelligence, as well as his understanding of the obligations of an oath. As many of these matters cannot be photographed into the record, the decision of the trial judge will not be disturbed on review, unless from that which is preserved it is clear that it was erroneous."

Nevertheless, the Supreme Courts, instead of enforcing this principle rigidly, continue to revise rulings upon the competency of children whom they have never seen or heard.[2] Time should not be wasted on such a task.

§ 507. [1] Accord: Ala. 1906, Birmingham R. L. & P. Co. v. Wise, 149 Ala. 492, 42 So. 821; Ark. 1910, Crosby v. State, 93 Ark. 156, 124 S. W. 781; Cal. 1896, People v. Craig, 111 Cal. 469, 44 Pac. 186; 1897, People v. Baldwin, 117 id. 244, 49 Pac. 186; 1901, People v. Daily, 135 id. 104, 67 Pac. 16; 1902, People v. Swist, 136 id. 520, 69 Pac. 223; 1904, People v. Stouter, 142 Cal. 146, 75 Pac. 780; 1921, People v. Lopez, — Cal. App. —, 197 Pac. 144; D. C. 1894, Williams v. U. S., 3 D. C. App. 335, 339; Ga. 1873, Peterson v. State, 47 Ga. 527; 1896, Minton v. State, 99 id. 254, 25 S. E. 626; 1915, Holden v. State, 144 Ga. 338, 87 S. E. 27; Ill. 1904, Shannon v. Swanson, 208 Ill. 52, 69 N. E. 869; 1921, People v. Johnson, 298 Ill. 52, 131 N. E. 149; Ind. 1912, Tyrrel v. State, 177 Ind. 14, 97 N. E. 14 (child of 8); Ia. 1902, State v. King, 117 Ia. 484, 91 N. W. 768; 1907, State v. Meyer, 135 Ia. 507, 113 N. W. 322; Ky. 1910, Merchant v. Com., 140 Ky. 12, 130 S. W. 793 (child of 8, admitted); Md. 1895, Freeny v. Freeny, 80 Md. 406, 31 Atl. 304; Mass. 1861, Com. v. Mullins, 2 All. 296; 1896, Com. v. Robinson, 165 Mass. 426, 43 N. E. 121; 1919, Com. v. Teregno, 234 Mass. 56, 124 N. E. 889 (child of 7, admitted); 1921, Com. v. Tatisos, — Mass. —, 130 N. E. 495; Mich. 1897, People v. Walker, 113 Mich. 367, 71 N. W. 641; Minn. 1876, State v. Levy, 23 Minn. 108; 1920, Maynard v. Keough, 145 Minn. 26, 175 N. W. 891 (defendant, a child of 8, testified to being bitten by defendant's dog three years before; competency "must be determined by capacity at the time the testimony is offered"); Miss. 1913, New Orleans & N. E. R. Co. v. Nobly, 106 Miss. 323, 63 So. 665; Mo. 1890, Ridenhour v. R. Co., 102 Mo. 288, 13 S. W. 889; 1896, State v. Nelson, 132 Mo. 184, 33 S. W. 809; 1896, State v. Prather, 136 Mo. 20, 37 S. W. 805; 1908, State v. Brown, 209 Mo. 413, 107 S. W. 1068; 1909, State v. Headley, 224 Mo. 177, 123 S. W. 577; 1913, State v. Anderson, 252 Mo. 83, 158 S. W. 817; N. H. 1895, State v. Sawtelle, 66 N. H. 488, 32 Atl. 831; N. J. 1900, State v. Cracker, 65 N. J. L. 410, 47 Atl. 643; 1905, State v. Tolla, 72 N. J. L. 515, 62 Atl. 675; N. Mex Annot. St. 1915, § 2165 (quoted ante, § 488); 1913, State v. Armijo, 18 N. M. 262, 135 Pac. 555; N. C. 1914, State v. Pitt, 166 N. C. 268, 80 S. E. 1060; 1919, State v. Phillips, 178 N. C. 713, 100 S. E. 577; N. D. 1907, State v. Werner, 16 N. D. 83, 112 N. W. 60; Okl. 1918, Darneal v. State, 14 Okl. Cr. 540, 174 Pac. 290 (applying Rev. L. 1910 § 5050); Or. 1881, State v. Jackson, 9 Or. 459; 1914, State v. Jensen, 70 Or. 156, 140 Pac. 740 (rape; child of 4, admitted); 1919, State v. Batcham, 94 Or. 524, 186 Pac. 5 (applying L. Or. L. § 732); Pa. 1905, Com. v. Furman, 211 Pa. 549, 60 Atl. 1089 (good opinion); 1913, Piepke v. Philadelphia & R. Co., 242 Pa. 321, 89 Atl. 124; P. I. 1913, U. S. v. Buncad, 25 P. I. 530, 536; S. C. 1813, State v. Leblanc, 1 Tread. Const. 357; Tenn. 1900, Burke v. Ellis, 105 Tenn. 702, 58 S. W. 855; Tex. 1905, Freasier v. State, — Tex. Cr. —, 84 S. W. 360; 1920, Carter v. State, 87 Tex. Cr. 299, 221 S. W. 603 (assault with intent to rape; children of 6 and 7, held qualified); 1917, Hipple v. State, 80 Tex. Cr. 531, 191 S. W. 1150 (attempt to rape a child of 3; the child not admitted); Ut. 1899, State v. Blythe, 20 Utah 378, 58 Pac. 1108; 1915, State v. McMillan, 46 Utah 19, 145 Pac. 833 (a girl of 8 years, admitted); Va. 1911, Johnson v. Com., 111 Va. 877, 69 So. 1104; 1922, Rogers v. Com., — Va. —, 111 S. E. 231; Wash. 1903, State v. Bailey, 31 Wash. 89, 71 Pac. 715; 1909, State v. Myrberg, 56 Wash. 384, 105 Pac. 622; 1911, Kalberg v. Bon Marche, 64 Wash. 452, 117 Pac. 227; 1917, State v. Smith, 95 Wash. 271, 163 Pac. 759; W. Va. 1901, Uthermohlen v. Bogg R. M. & M. Co., 50 W. Va. 457, 40 S. E. 410 (good opinion by Brannon, P.); Wis. 1894, State v. Juneau, 88 Wis. 180, 59 N. W. 580.

[2] 1895, Wheeler v. U. S., 159 U. S. 523, 1 Sup. 93 (child 5½ years old admitted); 1902, Walker v. State, 134 Ala. 86, 32 So. 703 (child of 10 years, held qualified); 1903, Castleberry v. State, 135 Ala. 24, 33 So. 424 (rape;

§ 508. Capacity Presumed; Method of Ascertainment. In the precedents dealing with the oath-test, the fact of capacity is not presumed but must be shown, where the child is under fourteen years of age,[1] or certainly where it is under seven years of age[2]; and the same rules are commonly applied under the present principle.[3] The method of ascertainment of children's testimonial capacity are the same as those employed for the oath, and the subject can best be examined under that head (post, § 1820).

§ 509. Policy of Abolishing Disqualification by Infancy. A rational view of the peculiarities of child-nature, and of the daily course of justice in our courts, must lead to the conclusion that the effort to measure 'a priori' the degrees of trustworthiness in children's statements, and to distinguish the point at which they cease to be totally incredible and acquire suddenly some degree of credibility, is futile and unprofitable.[1] The desirability of abandoning this the child, 8 years old, held competent); 1898, St. Louis I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Waren, 65 Ark. 619, 48 S. W. 222 (statute applied); 1913, Penny v. State, 109 Ark. 343, 159 S. W. 1127 (child of 9, held qualified); 1902, People v. Swist, 136 Cal. 520, 69 Pac. 223 (boy 6 years of age, held competent); 1921, People v. Delaney, — Cal. App. —, 199 Pac. 896 (lewd conduct with a boy not quite 4 years old; the age of the child held not to exclude him, if qualified under C. C. P. § 1880); 1894, Williams v. U. S., 3 D. C. A. pp. 335, 340 (admitting a child of 7½ years as competent); 1896, Gaines v. State, 99 Ga. 703, 26 S. E. 760 (excluded on the facts); 1896, Republic v. Ah Wong, 10 Haw. 524, 528 (child of 5, excluded on the facts; Judd, C. J., diss.); 1904, Sokel v. People, 212 Ill. 238, 72 N. E. 382 (a girl of nine, admitted); 1911, People v. Lewis, 252 Ill. 281, 96 N. E. 1005 (child of 6, admitted); 1907, State v. Meyer, 135 Ia. 507, 113 N. W. 322 (child of 6, admitted); 1902, State v. Wilson, 109 La. 74, 33 So. 85 (rape, the little girl, between 3 and 4 years old, held not sufficiently intelligent); 1901, Com. v. Ramage, 177 Mass. 349, 58 N. E. 1078 (child 6 years old, admitted); 1921, Com. v. Tatisos, — Mass. —, 130 N. E. 495 (child 5 years and 10 months old at the time of an alleged assault with intent to rape, held admissible in the trial Court's discretion); 1902, People v. Beech, 129 Mich. 622, 89 N. W. 363 (child of 6, held incompetent); 1903, Trim v. State, — Miss. —, 33 So. 718 (child 5 years of age, held competent); 1896, State v. Nelson, 132 Mo. 184, 33 S. W. 809 (child 9 years old, admitted); 1920, State v. Belknap, — Mo. —, 221 S. W. 39 (statutory rape; child of 9, admitted); 1920, Goy v. Director-General of Railroads — N. H. —, 111 Atl. 855 (boy of 7, excluded on the facts); 1905, State v. Tolla, 72 N. J. L. 515, 62 Atl. 675 (child of 6, admitted); 1921, State v. Claymoust, — N. J. L. —, 114 Atl. 155 (carnal abuse; child 4 years old excluded as a witness, but her identifying statement admitted); 1907, State v. Werner, 16 N. D. 83, 112 N. W. 60 (child of 8, admitted); 1913, Piepke v. Philadelphia & R. Co., 242 Pa. 321, 89 Atl. 124 (boy of 7, held improperly rejected); 1907, People v. Rivera, 12 P. R. 386, 399 (child of 5); 1912, U. S. v. Tan Teng, 23 P. I. 145 (rape; a girl of 7, admitted); 1913, U. S. v. Buncad, 25 P. I. 530 (murder; boy of 8, admitted); 1920, Anderson v. State, 88 Tex. Cr. 307, 226 S. W. 414 (negro boy of 7, held properly excluded on the facts); 1899, State v. Blythe, 20 Utah 378, 58 Pac. 1108 (child 6 years old, admitted); 1920, Getty v. Hutton, 110 Wash. 124, 188 Pac. 10 (child of 6, admitted).

Compare the statutes cited ante, § 488, and the cases cited post, § 1821 (oath).

§ 508. [1] 1680, Hale, Pl. Cr., I, 302.

[2] 1779, R. v. Brasier, 1 Leach Cr. L. 199; 1905, Clark v. Finnegan, 127 Ia. 644, 103 N. W. 970 (child of seven, admitted); and cases cited post, § 1821.

[3] 1904, Shannon v. Swanson, 208 Ill. 52, 69 N. E. 869 (at 14 there is a presumption of competency; below that age, there is to be an inquiry into his qualifications); 1902, State v. King, 117 Ia. 484, 91 N. W. 768 (child under 14, presumed incompetent); 1903, State v. Frazier, 109 La. 458, 33 So. 561 (a child of 10, whose dying declarations were admitted, presumed incompetent); 1887, Hughes v. R. Co., 65 Mich. 10, 31 N. W. 605, semble (here the child was under 7, and the failure of the trial judge to examine and expressly find sufficient understanding was held erroneous); 1895, Terr. v. De Gutman, 8 N. M. 92, 42 Pac. 68 (child under 14, presumed incompetent); 1893, State v. Michael, 37 W. Va. 568, 16 S. E. 803 (stating confusedly that under 14 there is no presumption of competency, and under 6 there is a presumption of incompetency; the effect being that below 14 the offeror must show the child's capacity).

The opponent's objection must be made at the time the witness is called to the stand: 1916, State v. Merrick, 172 N. C. 870, 90 S. E. 257.

§ 509. [1] From the point of view of logic and psychology as applicable to argument attempt and abolishing all grounds of mental or moral incapacity has already been noted, in dealing with mental derangement (ante, § 501). The reasons apply with equal or greater force to the testimony of children. Recognizing on the one hand the childish disposition to weave romances and to treat imagination for verity, and on the other the rooted ingenuousness of children and their tendency to speak straightforwardly what is in their minds, it must be concluded that the sensible way is to put the child upon the stand and let it tell its story for what it may seem to be worth. To this result legislation must come.[2] To be genuinely strict in applying the existing requirement is either impossible or unjust; for our demands are contrary to the facts of child-nature:

1881, Robert Louis Stevenson, Child's Play (in "Virginibus Puerisque"): "It is when we make castles in the air and personate the leading character in our own romances that we return to the spirit of our first years. In all the child's world of dim sensations, play is all in all. 'Making believe' is the gist of his whole life, and he cannot so much as take a walk except in character. . . . One thing, at least, comes very clearly out of all these considerations, that whatever we are to expect at the hands of children, it should not be any peddling exactitude about matters of fact. They walk in a vain show, and among mists and rainbows; they are passionate after dreams and unconcerned about realities; speech is a difficult art not wholly learned; and there is nothing in their own tastes or purposes to teach them what we mean by abstract truthfulness. . . . Show us a miserable unbreeched human entity, whose whole profession it is to take a tub for a fortified town and a shaving-brush for the deadly stiletto, and who passes three fourths of his time in a dream and the rest in open self-deception, and we expect him to be as nice upon a matter of fact as a scientific expert bearing evidence! Upon my heart, I think it less than decent."

1887, CAMPBELL, C. J., in Hughes v. R. Co., 65 Mich. 10, 31 N. W. 605: "We are compelled to apply the law as we find it, until changed by legislation. But we are greatly impressed with the practical imperfection of the present rules. In France, and probably elsewhere, the Courts refuse to administer an oath to children of tender years, and allow them to be examined without anything more than suitable cautions, leaving their statements on direct and cross-examination to be taken for what they are worth. This seems to be a sensible proceeding, and is probably quite as efficacious as our present system and less likely to abuse. . . . It would be better, we think, to put their testimony on the more rational ground that it is calculated to be of some value, and capable under a proper examination of being reasonably well weighed for what it is worth."

before the jury (not the rules of Admissibility), see the materials collected in the present author's "Principles of Judicial Proof, as given by Logic, Psychology, and General Experience, and illustrated in Judicial Trials" (1913), §§ 172–178.

[2] This advanced step has in effect been taken by the modern English statutes of 1889 and 1904, cited post, § 1828, and the Canadian statutes cited ante, § 488.

SUB-TITLE I (continued): TESTIMONIAL QUALIFICATIONS

TOPIC I (continued): ORGANIC CAPACITY

SUB-TOPIC C: MORAL DEPRAVITY

CHAPTER XXI.

515. General Principle. A quality which effects only the elements of Communication (ante, § 478) is Moral Depravity. One who is wholly capable of correct Observation and of accurate Recollection may still be so lacking in the sense of moral responsibility as to be likely to tell his story with entire indifference as to its correspondence with the facts observed and recollected by him. The question is whether any person should upon such grounds be deemed to lack the fundamental capacity of a witness.

There are two objections to any attempt to establish such an incapacity. The first is that in rational experience no class of persons can safely be asserted to be so thoroughly lacking in the sense of moral responsibility or so callous to the ordinary motives of veracity as not to tell the truth (as they see it) in a large or the larger proportion of instances; or, in more accurate analysis, no such defect, if it exists, can be so well ascertainable as to justify us in predicating it for the purpose of exclusion.[1] The second reason is that, even if such a defect existed and were ascertainable, its operation is so uncertain and elusive that any general rule of exclusion would be as likely in a given instance to exclude the truth as to exclude falsities. It is therefore not a proper foundation for a rule of exclusion.

§ 515. [1] The exposition of this has been made by Mr. Bentham, in a passage quoted for another purpose, post, § 519.

Nevertheless, this conclusion of rational experience is of comparatively modern acceptance. Tradition has handed down to us a number of instances in which certain classes of persons were either excluded or attempted to be excluded on the ground of moral irresponsibility or depravity. In times of more primitive development, such an attitude was not inconsistent with the prevailing social and moral notions;[2] and the abandonment of that attitude has been due to a change in those notions. Some of them never found positive recognition in judicial rulings; they remained merely as unsuccessful attempts. In other instances a definite recognition was given; and the abandonment has come either through judicial disowning or through legislative abolition.

The circumstances which were thus once conceived to involve a disqualification may be grouped as five in number: (1) Race or color; (2) Sex; (3) Religion; (4) Infamy (conviction of crime); (5) Turpitude of sundry sorts.

§ 516. (1) Alienage, Race, or Color. It is everywhere a deep-rooted instinct to distrust the alien of another nation, — much more the alien of another theology or race or color. The progressive diminution of the strength of this instinct, from the days of primitive commercial interchange between neighboring tribes to the modern solidarity of international commerce, has been almost imperceptibly slow; the last hundred years have probably seen more rapid progress, in European and American spheres, than all the preceding centuries. It is a part of this primitive instinct to distrust the good faith and honesty of the alien. It was a much-mooted question in Christendom, down into the 1600s, whether faith should be pledged or need be kept with infidels, or alien infidels, or alien enemies.[1] The singular inconsistency of such a maxim, in furnishing to the alien equal grounds for charging ourselves with the very fault which forms our pretext for condemning him, both typifies the hypocritical basis of all such rules, wherever persisting, and explains the slowness with which progress is made towards better mutual understanding between alien peoples. They are hypocritical, because they assume a superiority which does not in substance exist; and they obstruct progress, because they perpetuate our blindness to the degree of our own faults and of the alien's virtues.

[2] Compare the history of the rules for number of witnesses, post, § 2032.

§ 516. [1] 'Nullum valere fœdus cum hostibus religionis.' Different phases are seen in the following works: Grotius, De Jure Belli et Pacis, b. II, c. 15, § 8; Phillimore, International Law, 3d ed., vol. II, p. 74; Hallam, Literature of Europe, II, 163, 176, 179, Hallam, Middle Ages, II, 103; Laurent, Histoire du droit des gens, ed. 1865, X, 439; Lecky, Rationalism in Europe, II, 111; Hinschius, Kirchenrecht, VI, pt. 1, p. 99, § 364; Decretalium Greg. IX, lib. V, til. VII, De Haereticis, c. 1 ('Dubius in fide infidelis est, nec omnino credendum est qui fidem veritatis ignorant'); Coke, in Calvin's Case, 7 Rep. 2 a, 17 a ("All infidels are in law 'perpetui inimici', . . . for between them, as with the devils whose subjects they be, and the Christian, there is perpetual hostility and can be no peace"). Chief Justice Willes, in 1745, in that great landmark of enlightened legal opinion, the case of Omichund v. Barker (1 Atk. 21), commenting on this doctrine of Coke's as contrary to "common humanity", declared that "the devils, to whom he [Coke] has delivered them [the Pagans], could not have suggested anything worse.".

It is no doubt true that certain races are less strongly moved to constant truth-speaking than are others; and the causes, sociological and physiological, are sometimes not difficult to analyze.[2] But it is by no means certain that the English-speaking peoples are the most veracious; it is probable (according to travellers' reports) that some others excel them; so that the difference becomes merely a question of degree. Moreover, the quality of truth-speaking is only one part of the larger trait of honesty and loyalty in general; and, among the other qualities which go to make up that larger trait, there are certainly some in which the Occidental peoples are not much, if at all, superior to some of the Oriental peoples. Again, whatever comparison can be made at all between Occidental and Asiatic or African peoples, as to their standards of veraciousness, ought to be based on the respective practice of each people among its own members, i.e. the Chinese dealing with the Chinese, the German with the German, and so on; because there has everywhere and always been a tendency (rooted in human nature), as between aliens, to abandon reciprocally their own native standards, which they would have observed towards their own people; and thus such dealings afford no criterion for judging the normal standard of their people. Add to this, finally, that the classes of native persons with whom the resident alien comes into contact are usually the less scrupulous and honorable; and it will be understood that such observers have decidedly less trustworthy sources for forming a judgment upon the people as a whole, and that thus the reports which they send home are by no means a sound basis for public opinion and legislative enactment.[3] Taking all these considerations together, it may be concluded that any judgment of condemnation for the testimony of aliens in general, or of a particular race of people, is likely to be, in the first place, absolutely incorrect, as not founded on facts; in the second place, relatively unjust, as assuming a superiority of honesty which can only be hypothetical; in the third place, unwise, as tending merely to perpetuate ill-feeling and misunderstanding; and, finally, unsound in principle, as exclud-

[2] Some of them have been noted by the present writer in an article in the American Law Register, N. S., 1897, pp. 437, 445, entitled "The Administration of Justice in Japan.'

From the point of view of logic and psychology as applicable to argument before the jury (not the rules of Admissibility), see the materials collected in the present author's "Principles of Judicial Proof, as given by Logic, Psychology, and General Experience and illustrated in Judicial Trials" (1913), § 164–171.

[3] To offer here the authorities for the above generalizations would be to go too far astray. But the extent of material to support them would probably be surprising to most persons; the following may serve as a single illustration: Hon. C. W. Bradley, LL.D., in a report in H. Ex. Doc. 29, p. 176, 40th Cong., 3d sess.: "It is a mortifying fact that, were a balance to be struck between the aggregate losses suffered by Americans from Chinese pirates, Chinese thieves and debtors, on the one hand, and, on the other, the injuries inflicted on Chinese merchants, tradesmen, compradors, and citizens in the non-payment of debts honestly due them by American merchants, agents, shipmasters, mariners, etc., we should find that balance to our debt in a ratio of full 90 per cent. I speak advisedly. On the score, too, of official fidelity and punctuality in fairly carrying out their treaty obligations as against their own countrymen, I apprehend that the consular officers of America and Europe have been guilty of as many and as serious laches as can be produced against the native magistracy of China in their official shortcomings towards foreigners."

ing indiscriminately a mass of testimony which ought rather to be weighed and credited in each individual instance for what it may seem to be worth.[4]

Such exclusion of testimony, nevertheless, has existed, at one time or another, in four forms:

(a) Aliens, in general. It would seem that at one time in our history, for some purposes at least, a ban had prevailed against aliens as witnesses.[5] But this primitive notion has long since ceased to have any recognition;[6] except, to be sure, in our Federal naturalization statute.[7]

(b) Negroes. By the laws of the Southern States, before the Civil War, persons of the negro race were disqualified from testifying, either absolutely or only in proceedings against white persons; and even in some of the Northern and Western States the same rule obtained.[8] It does not seem to have been regarded as abrogated by implication through the Fourteenth Amendment to the Federal Constitution;[9] and such laws existed in at least one Southern State as late as 1876.[10] They now remain no longer in any jurisdiction, except perhaps Nebraska.[11]

[4] Compare what is said post, § 936, as to the discrediting of a witness by reason of race.

[5] Circa 1300, Waterford Custumal, c. 8 ("No foreigner shall be a witness against a citizen, unless he has no other witness, or unless he has come in a ship, etc."), in Bateson's Borough Customs, I, 168, Selden Society Pub., vol. XVIII, 1904; 1571, Duke of Norfolk's Trial, 1 How. St. Tr. 958, 1002 (Duke: "Is the Bishop of Ross a sufficient witness against me? There be points enough in the law to prove him no sufficient witness. He is a stranger and a Scot; a stranger can be no sufficient witness, much less a Scot; . . . if a Scot come into England without a passport, he may be a lawful prisoner. . . . [Bracton saith] they must be 'legales', lawful men, and so cannot strangers be, as the bishops of Ross and Rodolph"; L. C. J. Catlin: "Bracton indeed is an old writer of our law, and by Bracton indeed he may be a witness; a stranger, a bondman, may be a witness. Ask you all the Judges here." And the Judges affirmed that he may. . . . Attorney Wilbraham: "This were a strange device, that Scots might not be witnesses; for so, if a man would commit treason, and make none privy but Scots, the treason were unpunishable, and so were a kind of men found out with whom a man might freely conspire treason").

The early discrimination against Jews (Riggs' Select Pleas, Starrs, and Records of the Jewish Exchequer, p. 1; Selden Soc., vol. XV, 1902) was another phase of the same attitude.

[6] 1631, Lord Audley's Trial, 3 How. St. Tr. 401, 411 (a person who had not taken the oath of allegiance, held competent); 1634, Coke, Fourth Institute, 279 (says that Bracton's statement "is to be understood of an alien infidel").

[7] U. S. Rev. St. 1878, § 2165, cl. 6, being St. 1816, March 22, c. 32, § 2 (aliens applying for naturalization must prove their five years' residence by the oath or affirmation of citizens of the United States); 1892, Fong Yue Ting v. U. S., 149 U. S. 698, 730, 13 Sup. 1016 (statute noted as valid); St. 1906, June 29, § 4, c. 3592, Code 1919, § 3675 (naturalization laws revised; originally St. 1816, Mar. 22, above; beside the applicant's oath is required "the testimony of at least two credible witnesses, who are citizens of the U. S.", as to the facts of residence, moral character, etc.); ib. § 10, Code 1919, § 3680 (in case of less than five years' residence in the State where petition is filed, etc., etc., the residence there may be established by two witnesses, and the residence elsewhere by "two or more witnesses who are citizens of the U. S.", upon notice to the Bureau, etc.). Compare § 2066, post.

[8] In Iowa as late as the Code of 1855, § 2388. These statutes are collected in Appleton, Evidence, App. pp. 271–278. An interesting example will be found in Southard's Trial, Va., 1851, 2 Amer. St. Tr. 905, 907.

[9] No authorities on the precise point have been found.

[10] Ala. Code 1876.

[11] Nebr. Rev. St. 1922, § 8835; quoted ante, § 488.

There is an express prohibition against such exclusion in the following jurisdictions: U. S. Rev. St. 1878, §§ 858, 1078, now replaced by St. 1911, Mar. 3, c. 231, Judicial Code, § 186, Code 1919, §§ 1155, 1977; Tex. Rev. Civ. St. 1911, § 3688; W. Va. Code, Code 1914, c. 130, § 24. These statutes are set out ante, § 488.

(c) Indians. In the course of our "benevolent assimilation" of the Indian race — that process which with its moral problems need at least not have been shadowed by excessive assumptions of virtuous superiority [12] — there were a number of regions in which testimonial incapacity was by law predicated of the Indians.[13] These have now almost all disappeared in the course of enlightened progress.[14] The traces that remain will probably persist so long as, in any part of the community, that public opinion is recognized which regards the Indian chiefly as an object of selfish exploitation and unscrupulous plunder; for this brutal spirit is likely enough to combine with greed for the Indian's land a distrust of his testimony.

(d) Chinese. No statutory exclusion of the Chinese race as witnesses seems ever to have obtained in any State law except that of California; and this has there disappeared since the Code of 1872. The condition of public feeling in that community against the economic encroachments of Chinese laborers explains and extenuates (while it may not excuse) this blunder in the policy of the testimonial law. But the just and eloquent denunciation which that law once received from a Federal judge [15] seems to have been forgotten; for a similar law, though more restricted in scope, has since made its appearance in a place where it was less to be expected, namely, in the Federal statute-book.[16] Of these statutes it can only be said that they do not come consistently from a Legislature which in this series of enactments was itself breaking solemn treaty-faith with the very nation whose members it thus condemned as oath-breakers; and that the supposed special danger of perjury by Chinese attempting to evade those statutes of exile was precisely what might be expected from the people of any country when a hostile measure is attempted to be enforced by the harshest means.[17]

[12] Here, again, it would be impracticable to cite authorities upon the relative merits of Indian character; the following will indicate how incorrect some of the ordinary notions are: Professor N. S. Shaler, "Kentucky", 109: "In the early days, the Indian warfare was singularly humane; they never outraged their women prisoners; and rarely butchered their captives. They had now learned a more brutal warfare from the whites. There can be no question that the Indian customs of war were debased by the example of their enemies."

[13] An early exception may be found in the Massachusetts Colonial Laws (J. B. Thayer, in "A Chapter of History", Harvard Law Review, IX, 1).

[14] There apparently remains some sort of disqualification in the following statute: Nebr. Rev. St. 1922, § 8835; 1909, Pumphrey v. State, 84 Nebr. 636, 122 N. W. 19 (a Japanese presumed competent under this statute).

Indians are expressly made competent by Wash. R. & B. Code 1909, § 2147.

Discrimination by reason of race is expressly prohibited in W. Va. Code, c. 130, § 24; see also Kan. Gen. St. 1915, § 5158 (Indians). These statutes are set out ante, § 488.

[15] 1867, Sawyer, J., in People v. Jones, 31 Cal. 573 (where the accused, robbing a Chinaman, had said that it did not matter whether the latter recognized him, since a Chinaman could not testify against him).

[16] U. S. St. 1892, May 5, c. 60, § 6, Code 1919, § 3658 (Chinese claiming to remain in U. S. must prove the fact of residence prior to passage of the act "by at least one credible white witness"); 1892, Fong Yue Ting v. U. S., 149 U. S. 698, 726, 730, 742, 759, 13 Sup. 1016 (statute held constitutional; three judges dissenting); U. S. St. 1893, Nov. 3, c. 14, § 2, Code 1919, § 3645, amending § 6 of St. 1892 (a Chinese re-entering as a merchant formerly residing here must prove his mercantile character by "two credible witnesses other than Chinese"); 1900, Li Sing v. U. S., 180 U. S. 486, 21 Sup. 449 (statute applied).

Compare the authorities post, § 2054, as to requiring corroboration for Chinese testimony; and post, § 937, with reference to discrediting a witness by reason of his race.

[17] Of the "grievous wrong" of this statute

§ 517. (2) Sex. In spite of the example of some of the surrounding peoples, notably of Scotland,[1] there seems never to have been in the law of England any general testimonial disability based on sex.[2] This failure to discriminate against women is perhaps another illustration of what has been sometimes forgotten, that the oppressive civil disabilities, so often inveighed against, of women in England, had regard solely to the married state, and not to sex itself.

§ 518. (3) Religion. The religious belief of a witness was of consequence, at common law, chiefly with reference to his ability or willingness to submit to the test of the oath — a test wholly independent (as pointed out post, § 1823) of his testimonial capacity.[1] But there is an aspect in which the witness' religion may be considered as affecting his testimonial capacity, namely, when the religion sanctions false testimony. Does the belief in such religion — termed by Bentham "cacotheism"[2] — make its adherent so untrustworthy that he ought not to be listened to at all? Upon the considerations already noticed under the foregoing topics,[3] it would seem that even in this extreme case it is impolitic to exclude the witness; because he may perhaps tell the truth, and because the ordinary tests of untruth are sufficient to justify us in taking the risk of at least listening. The question is hardly likely to occur in practice; and yet, if the Jesuit, or the Roman Catholic in general, entertained this belief (as was sometimes formerly charged) that the Church in certain situations sanctioned false testimony, the very case would seem to be presented. Nevertheless, at the time when that charge against Papists and Jesuits was generally believed in Protestant England, the Courts steadily refused to make it a ground of exclusion;[4] though it was conceded to discredit the witness.[5] The conclusion is, then, that no rule of exclusion for "cacotheists" (as distinct from theological incapacity to take the oath) has ever been recognized in our law.[6] of 1892, Mr. Justice Brewer, himself the son of a missionary, has said judicially (Fong Yue Ting v. U. S., 149 U. S. 698, 744, 13 Sup. 1016): "In view of this enactment of the highest legislative body of the foremost Christian nation, may not the thoughtful Chinese disciple of Confucius ask 'Why do they send missionaries here?'" § 517. [1] 1705, Captain Green's Trial, 14 How. St. Tr. 1199, 1292 (Scotland; "in crimes atrocious, occult, and excepted, a woman is never refused").

[2] It is true that, as late as 1627, Coke in the Commentary on Littleton (6 b; see also 29 b, 158 b) says that "in some cases women are by law wholly excluded to bear testimony, as to prove a man to be a villein" (1285, 13 Edw. I, Brooke's Abridgment, De Nativo Habendo). But this likely refers to the even then obsolete process of "trial by witnesses", and not to the witnesses in the modern sense, who had only come into general use a century before Coke's time (post, § 575). The passage from Coke, quoted post, § 575, naming all the grounds of incompetency, does not name sex. For an interesting summary of the disqualifications by sex in the Roman and other foreign systems of law, see Best, Evidence, § 64; Hinschius, Kirchenrecht, VI, pt. 1, p. 98, n. 2, § 364.

§ 518. [1] The authorities upon capacity to take the oath are collected post, §§ 1815–1829.

[2] Rationale of Judicial Evidence, b. IX, pt. III, c. V, § 2 (Bowring's ed., vol. VII, p. 423); b. I, c. XI, § 7 (vol. VI, p. 271); Introductory View of the same, c. XXI, § 3 (vol. VI, p. 106).

[3] See also the passage from Bentham, quoted post, § 519.

[4] 1679, Whitebread's Trial, 7 How. St. Tr. 311, 361, 379 (Witness: "I hope a Roman Catholic may be a lawful witness"; L. C. J. Scroggs: "Yes, I deny it not"); 1685, Oates' Trial, 10 id. 1079, 1192.

[5] Post, § 936. There was a discrimination against Jews in Norman times; but this was probably due to their alien character (ante, § 516, n. 5).

[6] The only contrary expression was probably used of oath-capacity; 1823, O'Neall, J., in Anon., 1 Hill S. C. 258 ("the belief of a witness that he was not bound on oath to tell the

§ 519. (4) Infamy, by Conviction of Crime; History and General Policy. The disqualification of a person who has been convicted of crime seems not to have been fully established in our law until well on into the 1600s; although the readiness of the Crown lawyers in treason trials to favor all testimony for the prosecution, however tainted, may serve to explain the earlier instances of its admission in criminal cases as exceptions to a general rule. It is firmly enough established, and some learning about it already exists (though not without marks of novelty), by the end of the 1600s.[1]

The thought underlying this exclusion is nowadays plain enough; the man who has been guilty of a heinous crime cannot be trusted in any respect, therefore cannot be trusted in his testimony. This thought is one which might be supposed peculiar to the social stratification of England, where class degradation was of itself a serious source of untrustworthiness,[2] and where a judicial accusation of crime was in fact a perquisite chiefly of the "lower classes."[3] But the early prevalence of the same notion of incompetency in other systems of law, and its persistence in many of the Southern communities of our own modern democracy, indicate that there is something generic and universal in its origin. Perhaps this generic feature was confined to the effect of infamy as a punishment for crime, while its moral significance as a source of distrust in testimony was peculiarly marked in English conditions. At any rate, in one respect at least, English social facts affected its scope; for one of its irrational and inconsistent limitations, namely, that the judgment of conviction, and not the actual guilt, caused the disqualification, may be accounted for by remembering the English tendency (noted in other connections also, post, § 982) in social life to ignore offences so long as they do not bring the offender to the formal ignominy of legal condemnation, i.e. to accept an external, not an internal, standard of guilt. No doubt, this same limitation rested to some extent on the notion of disqualification as a part of the punishment for the crime, i.e. that the "infamy", or degradation, which by these social standards must follow immediately upon judgment of guilt, should naturally involve an exclusion from equal status in the witness-box.[4] truth would, if coming from his own lips, render him incompetent to be sworn").

§ 519. [1] 1613, Browne v. Crashaw, 2 Bulstr. 154 (two persons attainted of felony were excluded; for, per Coke, C. J., "he is not a fit person to serve of a jury, nor yet to be an indifferent witness; and by the same reason the testimony of such a one for a witness in all cases is to be rejected"); 1616, Earl of Somerset's Trial, 2 How. St. Tr. 965, 985 (illustrating the practice of using the sworn testimony of a convicted accomplice); 1637, Bishop of Lincoln's Trial, 3 How. St. Tr. 804, 807, 812 (an objection that a witness had been "sentenced in the Star Chamber", was overruled, since it was not "for any matter of perjury, or crime that should take his testimony").

[2] Post, § 575. Compare our traditional phrase "of poor but honest parents."

The earlier class-distinctions seem to have had some such disqualification attached; weavers and fullers, in the 1200s. could not bear witness against a free man: Beverly Town Documents, ed. Leach, Introd. p. xlv, text p. 134 (1209 A.D., Selden Society Pub., vol. XIV, 1900).

[3] "Most accused persons are poor, stupid, and helpless" (Stephen, History of the Criminal Law, I, 442).

[4] On the history of the various meanings of "infamy" and "infamous", as importing consequences of punishment and disqualification of various sorts, see the learned essay of Professor Henry Schofield, "Cruel and Unusual Punishment" (1911, Illinois Law Rev. V, 321; reprinted in his "Essays on Constitutional Law and Equity", 1921).

Nevertheless, in whatever degree the disqualification may have been thought of as a part of the punishment of the offender himself, it was obvious that this theory could not of itself justify the incidental punishment of innocent persons who might need the convict's testimony; and hence the justification had ultimately to be founded on some more acceptable reason. Hence, as soon as the rule begins to be reasoned about, we find it placed upon the more plausible theory of actual moral turpitude, i.e. the person is to be excluded because from such a moral nature it is useless to expect the truth, — a notion which at least avoided the fallacy of the punishment-theory, and came finally to be put forward as the orthodox one of the common law:

Ante, 1727, Chief Baron GILBERT, Evidence, 139: "The second sort of persons excluded from testimony for want of integrity are such as are stigmatized. Now there are several crimes that so blemish that the party is ever afterwards unfit to be a witness, . . . and the reason is very plain, because every plain and honest man affirming the truth of any matter under the sanction and solemnity of an oath is entitled to faith and credit, . . . but where a man is convicted of falsehood and other crimes against the common principles of honesty and humanity, his oath is of no weight, because he hath not the credit of a witness, . . . and he is rather to be intended as a man profligate and abandoned than one under the sentiments and convictions of those principles that teach probity and veracity."

1824, Mr. Thomas Starkie, Evidence, 83: "Since the object of the oath is to bind the conscience of the witness, . . . it follows also that the testimony of a person who by the turpitude of his conduct has shown that he is regardless of all laws both human and divine ought not to be received, for it cannot reasonably be expected that such a person would regard the obligation of an oath."

1810, Chief Justice SWIFT, Evidence, 52: "Persons convicted of crimes evincive of a want of regard for those moral and religious principles that constitute the obligation of an oath are excluded from testifying."

This theory, plausible enough at first sight, and calculated to persist until general social conditions permitted a different sort of reasoning to obtain recognition, sufficed to maintain the common-law doctrine in full force until the time of Bentham. His lucid exposition of its shortcomings and his determined attack upon its fallacies proved irresistible. The almost complete disappearance of this disqualification from Anglo-American law in the last century has been due to those arguments, first promulgated by him, of which the following are salient passages:[5]

1827, Mr. Jeremy Bentham, Rationale of Judicial Evidence, b. IX, pt. III, c. III (Bowring's ed. vol. VII, pp. 406 ff.): "Improbity, in whatever shape or degree, is still farther [than interest] from being a proper ground of exclusion. . . . Let us begin with perjury. In perjury may be seen by far the strongest case: the case in which the pretence for exclusion on the score of security against deception wears the fairest outside. . . . Perjury, in addition to the prevalence of the ordinary motives on some individual occasion or occasions, indicates the particular species of delinquency into which the individual has thus been impelled; viz. mendacity: the very species by which the most plausible of all pretences for exclusion on the ground of improbity is afforded. In any other case, the argument for the exclusion is no more than this: He has violated the obligations of morality in some sorts of ways; therefore it is more or less probable that he will, upon occasion, violate them in this sort of way. In the case of mendacity it runs thus: He has violated the obligations of morality not only in other sorts of ways, but in this very sort of way, on former occasions; therefore it is more or less probable that so he will on the occasion now in hand. For suspicion, a most perfectly proper ground; for rejection, none whatever. Reasons: those already mentioned [for interest and the like]; to which may be added those which follow. [1] In this line of delinquency, beyond most, if not all others, the scale is lengthy, the degrees are numerous. . . . To all these different levels the eye of judicial suspicion has the power of adjusting itself. Exclusion knows no gradations: blind and brainless, it has but one alternative; — shut or open, like a valve; up or down, like a steam-engine. . . . [2] When the door of the witness-box is shut against a proposed witness on this score, it is generally on the ground of some single transgression of this sort. But a single transgression of this sort, — what does it prove? . . . That on one assignable occasion the convict has been known to fall into that sort of transgression, which every human adult must also have fallen into, more times than one, on occasions assignable or unassignable. 'I said', says the Psalmist, 'I said in my wrath, all men are liars.' It was in his wrath that the observation came from him; but he need not have wished to retract it in his coolest moments. From a single lie told in the course of ever so long a life, a man may, without any grammatical impropriety, be denominated a liar. . . . Upon the whole, he who considers how few in comparison are the occasions in which any advantage (howsoever impure, and overbalanced by ultimate disadvantage) is to be gained by falsehood, will, I imagine, join with me in the opinion, that, from the mouth of the most egregious liar that ever existed, truth must have issued at least a hundred times, for once that falsehood, wilful falsehood, has taken its place. . . . What I am contending against (let it never be out of sight) is absolute rejection: rejection in all cases: — not suspicion and distrust. [3] The very repugnance, with which it is but natural the reader should have received the proposition of opening the door of justice to testimony of this tainted kind, is a sort of proof and earnest of the safety of the measure. . . . So broad, so prominent is the stigma — so conspicuous and impressive the warning which it gives, — the danger is, not that the man thus distinguished should gain too much credence, but that he should not gain enough. 'Fœnum habet in cornu.' [4] Suppose an inexorable door shut against him; or, although open, suppose an inexorably deaf ear turned to him; and observe the consequence: — that crimes, all imaginable crimes, may be committed with impunity, with sure impunity, on his person and in his presence. . . . [5] Infamy, and (as a visible sign of infamy) exclusion from the sanctuary of justice, . . . one of the instances, which, in but too great number, may be found in the English as well as other established systems, of the sort of punishment which has been called mis-seated punishment: punishment 'in alienam personam': a sort of punishment which, in this particular application of it, may be styled chance-medley punishment. The punishment does not fall upon the witness who is disqualified, but upon all persons who may have need of his evidence. A certain person has offended, and, to add a sting to his punishment, an unoffending crowd is collected below, and a pailful of punishment is thrown down upon their heads out of a window. An innocent stranger is laid hold of, and a sword run through his body, that with the point of it a useless scratch may be given to the caitiff who has provoked all this vengeance. . . . [6] If from that modification of improbity which consists in a breach of veracity on the very sort of occasion in question (viz. judicial testimony), no sufficient ground for exclusion can be deduced, — much less (it is evident) can it, from improbity manifesting itself in any other shape. . . . A sample or two must serve instead of a complete list. To judge of offences by punishments, the most detestable of mankind should be found in the class of traitors. . . . During the warfare between the Two Roses, — that is, from generation to generation, — the good people of England, good and bad together, were alternately loyalists and traitors: consequently, if the men of law were fit to be believed, in all that time scarce a man in the country that was fit to be believed. Look back, as above, to a few hundred years' distance in the track of time, you see a whole nation composed of traitors. Look on to few hundred degrees' distance in the track of space, you may see a whole colony composed of felons: and felons not 'in posse' merely, like the traitors, but 'in esse', duly converted into that state in due form of law. Upon the evidence of this or that one of those felons, this or that other of them has from time to time suffered death: murdered, thereby, or not murdered, is a question I leave undiscussed for the amusement of those who sent them there. . . . Take homicide in the way of duelling. Two men quarrel; one of them calls the other a liar. So highly does he prize the reputation of veracity, that, rather than suffer a stain to remain upon it, he determines to risk his life, challenges his adversary to fight, and kills him. Jurisprudence, in its sapience, knowing no difference between homicide by consent, by which no other human being is put in fear — and homicide in pursuit of a scheme of highway robbery, of nocturnal housebreaking, by which every man who has a life is put in fear of it, — has made the one and the other murder, and consequently felony. The man prefers death to the imputation of a lie, — and the inference of the law is, that he cannot open his mouth but lies will issue from it. 'Such are the inconsistencies which are unavoidable in the application of any rule which takes improbity for a ground of exclusion. Take it for a ground of suspicion only, all these absurdities are avoided. . . . If the legislator had his choice of witnesses upon every occasion, and witnesses of all sorts in his pocket, he would do well not to produce any, upon any occasion, but such over whose conduct the tutelary motives exercised despotic sway; in a word, to admit no other men for witnesses than perfect men. But perfect men do not exist: and if the earth were covered with them, delinquents would not send for them to be witnesses to their delinquency. In such a state of things, then, the legislator has this option, and no other: to open the door to all witnesses, or to give license to all crimes. For all purposes, he must take men as he finds them: and, for the purpose of testimony, he must take such men as happen to have been in the way to see, or to say they have been in the way to see, what, had it depended upon the actors, would have been seen by nobody."

[5] These arguments will be found epitomized in the treatise of Chief Justice Appleton of Maine, on Evidence (1860), c. III. Similar ones were published (circa 1823) by Mr. Justice Edward Livingston of Louisiana, in his introductory Report to the Code of Evidence (Works, ed. 1872, I, 468).

There can be, then, no justification for the disqualification of a person by reason of conviction of crime; and legislation has now in most jurisdictions recognized this, with more or less thoroughness, by abolishing the common law rule. In a few jurisdictions, nevertheless, it remains in full scope (though defined by statute), and in some others it is retained for the crime of perjury (quoted in full, ante, § 488). These anachronisms ought not to be longer countenanced:

1902, RIDDICK, J., in Vance v. State, 70 Ark. 272, 68 S. W. 37: "We take this occasion, also, to call attention to the backward state of the law in this State in reference to the competency of witnesses convicted of felony. The statutes which render such witnesses incompetent belong to a class of antiquated laws which suppress evidence, and which the wisdom of modern ages has discredited and shown to be unreasonable and injurious. They are of the same class as the laws which formerly forbade the parties to the suit from testifying, and closed the mouth of the defendant on trial for his life, and should be repealed, as these laws have been repealed, for such matters should go only to the credit or impeachment of the witness, not to the exclusion of his testimony. There is no valid reason why a person who knows anything material to the decision of a case on trial should not be permitted to tell it, whatever may be his character, the jury being allowed to weigh his testimony in connection with his character and antecedents. These statutes not only suppress evidence, but the application of them often presents difficult and doubtful questions, which, being decided in the hurry of trial, frequently result on appeal in reversals, and in this way justice is often thwarted. There are very few States[1] that now retain such laws, and we think our legislators might well consider whether they should not be repealed in this State also."

§ 520. Same: Kind of Crime that Disqualifies.[1]

1842, Professor Simon Greenleaf, Evidence, § 373: "It is a point of no small difficulty to determine precisely the crimes which render the perpetrator thus infamous. The rule is justly stated to require, that 'publicum judicium' must be upon an offence, implying such a dereliction of moral principle, as carries with it a conclusion of a total disregard to the obligation of an oath."[2] But the difficulty lies in the specification of those offences. The usual and more general enumeration is, treason, felony, and the 'crimen falsi.'[3] In regard to the two former, as all treasons, and almost all felonies were punishable with death, it was very natural that crimes, deemed of so grave a character as to render the offender unworthy to live, should be considered as rendering him unworthy of belief in a Court of Justice. But the extent and meaning of the term, 'crimen falsi,' in our law, is nowhere laid down with precision. In the Roman Law, from which we have borrowed the term, it included not only forgery, but every species of fraud and deceit.[4] If the offence did not fall under any other head, it was called 'stellionatus',[5] which included 'all kinds of cozenage and knavish practice in bargaining.' But it is clear, that the Common Law has not employed the term in this extensive sense, when applying it to the disqualification of witnesses; because convictions for many offences, clearly belonging to the 'crimen falsi' of the civilians, have not this effect. Of this sort are deceits in the quality of provisions, deceits by false weights and measures, conspiracy to defraud by spreading false news,[6] and several others. On the other hand, it has been adjudged, that persons

§ 520. [1] This topic, being practically almost obsolete, and destined soon to become entirely so, may be here sufficiently expounded by quoting the words of Professor Greenleaf, which have served to guide our Courts in their rulings since 1842. Those passages, including such notes as are here reproduced, are placed in quotation marks; the scanty modern rulings are added without such marks.

[2] "2 Dods. R. 186, per Sir Wm. Scott."

[3] "Phil. & Am. on Evid. p. 17; 6 Com. Dig. 353, Testmoigne, A. 4, 5; Co. Lit. 6, b.; 2 Hale, P. C. 277; 1 Stark. Evid. 94, 95. A conviction for petty larceny disqualifies, as well as for grand larceny: Pendock v. Mackinder, Willes' R. 665"; accord, for grand larceny, 1899, State v. Clark, 60 Kan. 450, 56 Pac. 767.

[4] "Cod. Lib. 9, tit. 22, ad legem Corneliam de falsis. Cujac. Opera, Tom. ix. in locum. (Ed. Prati, a. d. 1839, 4to, p. 2191–2200); 1 Brown's Civ. & Adm. Law, p. 425; Dig. lib. 48, tit. 10; Heinec. in Pand. Pars vii. § 214–218. The 'crimen falsi', as recognized in the Roman Law, might be committed, 1. by words, as in perjury; 2. by writing, as in forgery; 3. by act, or deed; namely, in counterfeiting or adulterating the public money, — in fraudulently substituting one child for another, or a supposititious birth, — or in fraudulently personating another, — in using false weights or measures, — in selling or mortgaging the same thing to two several persons in two several contracts, — and in officiously supporting the suit of another by money, &c., answering to the common law crime of maintenance. Wood, Instit. Civil Law, p. 282, 283; Halifax, Analysis Rom. Law, p. 134."

[5] "Dig. lib. 47, tit. 20, l. 3, Cujac. (in locum) Opera, tom. ix. (Ed. supra) p. 2224. Stellionatus nomine significatur omne crimen, quod nomen proprium non habet, omnis fraus, quæ nomine proprio vacat. Translatum autem esse nomen stellionatus, nemo est qui nesciat, ab animali ad hominem vafrum, et decipiendi peritum: Ib. Heinec. ad Pand. Pars vii, § 147, 148; 1 Brown's Civ. & Adm. Law, p. 426."

[6] "The Ville de Varsovie, 2 Dods. R. 174, but see Crowther v. Hopwood, 3 Stark. R. 21."

The following crimes have been held passed upon as sufficient or not to disqualify: 1908, U. S. v. Sims, C. C. N. D. Ala., 161 Fed. 1009 (embezzlement; careful opinion by Hundley, J.); 1912, Keliher v. U. S., C. C. A., 193 Fed. 8 (conviction of a misdemeanor subjecting to imprisonment for more than a year, held not to disqualify); 1913, Maxey v. U. S., 8th C. C. A., 207 Fed. 327 (conviction for fraudulent use of the mails, held to disqualify); Com. v. Dame, 8 Cush. Mass. 384 (maliciously obstructing railroad cars, not sufficient); 1910, Hawkins v. U. S., 3 Okl. Cr. 651, 108 Pac. 561 (murder-conviction disqualifies; here on a case arising from Indian Territory); 1897, State v. Green, 48 S. C. 136, 26 S. E. 234; (fraudulently disposing of a crop subject to lien, not sufficient); 1918, Cooper Grocery Co. v. Neblett, — Tex. Civ.

are rendered infamous, and therefore incompetent to testify, by having been convicted of forgery,[7] perjury, subornation of perjury,[8] suppression of testimony by bribery, or conspiracy to procure the absence of a witness,[9] or other conspiracy, to accuse one of a crime,[10] and barratry.[11] And from these decisions it may be deduced, that the 'crimen falsi' of the Common Law not only involves the charge of falsehood, but also is one which may injuriously affect the administration of justice, by the introduction of falsehood and fraud. At least it may be said, in the language of Sir William Scott,[12] 'so far the law has gone, affirmatively; and it is not for me to say where it should stop, negatively.'"

§ 521. Same: Judgment, not Guilt, Disqualifies.

1842, Professor Simon Greenleaf, Evidence, § 375 :[1] "We have already remarked, that no person is deemed infamous in law, until he had been legally found guilty of an infamous crime. But the mere verdict of the Jury is not sufficient for this purpose; for it may be set aside, or the judgment may be arrested, on motion for that purpose. It is the judgment, and that only, which is received as the legal and conclusive evidence of the party's guilt, for the purpose of rendering him incompetent to testify.[2] And it must appear that the App. —, 203 S. W. 365 (conviction for selling liquor without paying the federal revenue tax, imposing a sentence of hard labor; held not an infamous crime, and therefore not to disqualify under P. C. § 55).

[7] "R. v. Davis, 5 Mod. 74."

[8] "Co. Lit. 6, b.; 6, Com. Dig. 353, Testm. A. 5."

[9] "Clancey's case, Fortesc. R. 208; Bushell v. Barrett, Ry. & M. 434."

[10] "2 Hale, P. C. 277; Hawk. P. C. b. 2, c. 46, § 101; Co. Lit. 6, b.; R. v. Priddle, 2 Leach, Cr. Cas. 496; Crowther v. Hopwood, 3 Stark. R. 21, arg.; 1 Stark. Evid. 95; 2 Dods. R. 191."

[11] "R. v. Ford, 2 Salk. 690; Bull. N. P. 292. The receiver of stolen goods is incompetent as a witness; see the trial of Abner Rogers, p. 136, 137. If a statute declare the perpetrator of a crime 'infamous', this, it seems, will render him incompetent to testify: Phil. & Am. on Evid. p. 18; 1 Phil. Evid. p. 18; 1 Gilb. Evid. by Lofft, p. 256, 257."

[12] "2 Dods. R. 191. See also 2 Russ. on Crimes, 592, 593." Compare the same question as it arises from the use of conviction of crime to impeach a witness, post, § 980; the definition may in that case be somewhat different.

§ 521. [1] See note 1, § 520, ante.

[2] ENGLAND: "6 Com. Dig. 354, Testm. A. 5; R. v. Castel Careinion, 8 East 77; Lee v. Gansell, Cowp. 3; Bull. N. P. 292; Fitch v. Smalbrook, T. Ray. 32"; 1867, R. v. Webb, 11 Cox Cr. 133, Lush, J. (convict under death-sentence, disqualified, because under the old law a person attainted and sentenced to death was deemed civilly dead). CANADA: 1915, R. v. Kuzin, 21 D. L. R. 378, Man. (murder; a person convicted of murder and sentenced to death, held qualified as a witness; careful review of the subject by Cameron, J. A.); UNITED STATES: "People v. Whipple, 9 Cow. N. Y. 707; People v. Herrick, 13 Johns. N. Y. 82; Cushman v. Loker, 2 Mass. 108; Castellano v. Peillon, 2 Mart. La. N. S. 466"; 1901, Yates v. State, 43 Fla. 177, 29 So. 965 (there must be a judgment or sentence); 1915, State v. Marshall, 95 Kan. 628, 148 Pac. 675 (conviction of perjury, sentence to the penitentiary, and release on parole does not disqualify; the "civil rights . . . are not suspended until the actual incarceration begins," distinguishing prior cases); 1851, Smith v. Brown, 2 Mich. 161, 163 (verdict of perjury offered against B. to overthrow his answer in equity on the matter for which he was found guilty of perjury; excluded, because pending a motion in arrest of judgment B. had died; cases cited additionally to those above); 1888, Arcia v. State, 26 Tex. App. 193, 9 S. W. 685 (judgment on the verdict, not followed by sentence, held insufficient under local statutory provisions); 1888, Woods v. State, 26 Tex. App. 490, 508, 10 S. W. 108 (contrary result reached, where sentence was lacking, for an offence punishable only by fine); 1893, Jones v. State, 32 Tex. Cr. 135, 22 S. W. 404 (following Arcia v. State); 1896, Evans v. State, 35 Tex. Cr. 485, 34 S. W. 285 (same); 1900, Flournoy v. State, — Tex. Cr. —, 59 S. W. 902 (same); 1907, Rice v. State, 50 Tex. Cr. 648, 100 S. W. 771 (verdict without sentence does not disqualify); 1918, Burnett v. State, 83 Tex. Cr. 97, 201 S. W. 409 (similar).

It would follow that, if judgment appears to have been rendered, the party offering the witness must show that it has been reversed or the offence pardoned: 1878, State v. Howard, 19 Kan. 507, 509; 1899, State v. Clark, 60 Kan. 450, 56 Pac. 767.

But a mere showing that an appeal has been taken should not suffice: 1900, Best v. Best, 22 Wash. 695, 60 Pac. 58 (conviction suffices, though a pending appeal results later in reversal of judgment; yet in such case continuance should be allowed). Contra: 1898, Stanley v. State, 39 Tex. Cr. 482, 46 S. W.

judgment was rendered by a Court of competent jurisdiction.[3] Judgment of outlawry for treason or felony will have the same effect;[4] for the party, in submitting to an outlawry, virtually confesses his guilt; and so the record is equivalent to a judgment upon confession. If the guilt of the party should be shown by oral evidence, and even by his own admission (though in neither of these modes can it be proved, if the evidence be objected to), or, by his plea of guilty, which has not been followed by a judgment,[5] the proof does not go to the competency of the witness, however it may affect his credibility."[6]

§ 522. Same: Conviction in Another Jurisdiction.

1842, Professor Simon Greenleaf, Evidence, § 376:[1] "Whether judgment of an infamous crime, passed by a foreign tribunal, ought to be allowed to affect the competency of the party as a witness, in the Courts of this country, is a question upon which jurists are not entirely agreed. But the weight of modern opinion seems to be that personal disqualifications not arising from the law of nature but from the positive law of the country, and especially such as are of a penal nature, are strictly territorial, and cannot be enforced in any country other than that in which they originate.[2] Accordingly it has been held, upon great consideration, that a conviction and sentence for a felony in one of the United States, did not render the party incompetent as a witness, in the Courts of another State; though it might be shown in diminution of the credit due to his testimony."[3]

645 (disqualified only after sentence accepted or judgment affirmed); 1898, Foster v. State, 39 Tex. Cr. 399, 46 S. W. 231 (not disqualified pending appeal taken; the objector to show that the appeal had been dismissed).

A remarkable instance of enlightened judicial legislation is the following; 1916, Rosen v. U. S., 2d C. C. A., 237 Fed. 810 (sentence to the Elmira reformatory, held not a disqualifying conviction; "the tendency of modern thought is towards the abolition of the archaic rules"; Ward, J., diss.).

[3] "Cooke v. Maxwell, 3 Stark. R. 183."

[4] "Co. Lit. 6, b.; Hawk. P. C. b. 2, c. 48, § 22; 3 Inst. 212; 6 Com. Dig. 354, Testm. A. 5; 1 Stark. Evid. 95, 96. In Scotland it is otherwise: Tait's Evid. p. 347."

[5] "R. v. Hinks, 1 Den. Cr. Cas. 84", 2 C. & K. 462; 1919, Fitter v. U. S., 2d C. C. A., 258 Fed. 567, 575 (person pleading guilty, but not sentenced, is not disqualified).

[6] "R. v. Castel Careinion, 8 East 77; Wicks v. Smalbroke, 1 Sid. 51; T. Ray. 32, s. c.; People v. Herrick, 13 Johns. N. Y. 82." Compare the same question in relation to the impeachment of a witness, post, § 980.

Whether the judgment may be proved by asking the witness on cross-examination, i.e. otherwise than by a certified copy of the record, depends upon a different principle, examined post, § 1270.

Whether the conviction prevents the use of a deposition taken before conviction or the proof of an attesting signature affixed to a will or deed before conviction, involves other principles, examined post, §§ 1409, 1506.

§ 522. [1] See note 1, ante, § 520.

[2] "Story on Confl. of Laws, §§ 91, 92, 104, 620–625; Martens's Law of Nations, B. 3, c. 3, §§ 24, 25."

[3] "Com. v. Green, 17 Mass. 515, 539–549"; proceeding upon (1) the difficulty of raising an issue as to the record, (2) the diversity of ideas as to criminal conduct in different countries, (3) the hardship of disqualifying by old and forgotten offences in other lands, (4) the principle that penal laws have no effect beyond the jurisdiction, (5) the fact that infamy is a punishment as well as stigma on character.

Accord: 1891, Logan v. U. S., 144 U. S. 303, 12 Sup. 617; 1916, Brown v. U. S., 6th C. C. A., 233 Fed. 353 (conviction of felony in a Tennessee court, held not to disqualify a witness in a Federal court sitting in Tennessee); 1916, Rosen v. U. S., 2d C. C. A., 237 Fed. 810 (but, per Ward, J., only, conviction for forgery in New York, held to disqualify in the Federal District Court sitting in New York); 1905, Robinson v. State, 50 Fla. 115, 39 So. 465 (conviction not shown to be in a court of the State, held not to disqualify under Rev. St. 1892, § 1096); 1920, Day v. Lusk, — Mo. —, 219 S. W. 597 (conviction of crime in other States, held not to disqualify); 1878, Sims v. Sims, 75 N. Y. 466, 468; 1879, National Trust Co. v. Gleason, 77 N. Y. 400, 410; 1908, In re Ebbs, 150 N. C. 44, 63 S. E. 190 (State v. Candler, infra, discussed, in a proceeding for disbarment; point not decided); 1909, Samuels v. State, 110 Va. 901, 66 S. E. 222 (conviction of perjury in a Federal court sitting in Virginia does not disqualify in a Virginia court); 1910, Kain v. Angle, 111 Va. 415, 69 S. E. 355 (same).

Contra: 1824, State v. Candler, 3 Hawks N. C. 307 (Taylor, C. J.: "As truth and justice are not confined by geographical limits but are coextensive with the concerns and relations of civilized communities, the crime which in reason renders a witness incompetent § 523. Same: Disqualification removed by (1) Reversal of Judgment; (2) Pardon; (3) Serving of Sentence.

1842, Professor Simon Greenleaf, Evidence, §§ 377, 378: "The disability thus arising from infamy may, in general, be removed in two [three] modes; (1) by reversal of the judgment; (2) by a pardon; [and (3) by serving the sentence].

(1) The reversal of the judgment must be shown in the same manner that the judgment itself must have been proved, namely, by production of the record of reversal, or, in proper cases, by a duly authenticated exemplification of it.[1]

(2) The pardon must be proved by production of the charter of pardon under the great seal; and though it were granted after the prisoner had suffered the entire punishment awarded against him, yet it has been held sufficient to restore the competency of the witness; though he would, in such case, be entitled to very little credit.[2] The rule, that a pardon restores the competency and completely rehabilitates the party, is limited to cases where the disability is a consequence of the judgment, according to the principles of the Common Law.[3] But where the disability is annexed to the conviction of a crime by the express words of a statute, it is generally agreed that the pardon will not, in such a case, restore the competency of the offender; the prerogative of the sovereign being controlled by the authority of the express law. Thus, if a man be adjudged guilty on an indictment for perjury, at Common Law, a pardon will restore his competency; but if the indictment be founded on the statute of 5 Eliz. c. 9, which declares, that no person convicted and attainted of perjury, or subornation of perjury, shall be from thenceforth received as a witness in any Court of record, he will not be rendered competent by a pardon." [4] in one country must do so in all"); 1838, Chase v. Blodgett, 10 N. H. 30; 1880, State v. Foley, 15 Nev. 72; 1914, Goldstein v. State, 73 Tex. Cr. 558, 166 S. W. 149, 171 S. W. 708 (under C. Cr. P. § 788, as applied in Pitner v. State, 23 Tex. App. 366, 5 S. W. 210).

"In the cases of State v. Ridgely, 2 Har. & McHen. Md. 120; Clark's lessee v. Hall, Ib. 378; and Cole's lessee v. Cole, 1 Har. & Johns. Md. 572; which are sometimes cited in the negative, this point was not raised nor considered; they being cases of persons sentenced in England for felony, and transported to Maryland, under the sentence, prior to the Revolution."

§ 523. [1] See note 2, ante, § 521.

[2] "U. S. v. Jones, 2 Wheeler Cr. C. 451."

The rule that a pardon removes the disqualification has been recognized from the beginning, though in the earlier practice there was some difference of opinion whether the burning in the hand was also essential; England: 1673, Tong's Case, Kelyng 18; 1679, Reading's Trial, 7 How. St. Tr. 259, 296; 1680, Castlemaine's Trial, 7 How. St. Tr. 1067, 1083, 1089 (by the K. B. and C. P.; mere pardon for felony does not make competent, unless there was a burning in the hand); 1685, Fernley's Trial, 11 How. St. Tr. 381, 426; 1695, Crosby's Trial, 12 How. St. Tr. 1291, 1296; 1696, Rookwood's Trial, 13 id. 183, 185 (pardoned, but not burnt in the hand; admitted); Earl of Warwick's Trial, 13 How. St. Tr. 1011–1019 (given benefit of clergy, but the burning in the hand respited; excluded); United States: 1891, Boyd v. U. S., 142 U. S. 450, 12 Sup. 292; 1891, Logan v. U. S., 144 id. 303, 12 Sup. 617; 1913, Thompson v. U. S., 9th C. C. A., 202 Fed. 401 (perjury); 1913, Roberson v. Woodfork, 155 Ky. 206, 159 S. W. 793; 1834, Perkins v. Stevens, 24 Pick. Mass. 277 (a general pardon restores competency); 1880, State v. Foley, 15 Nev. 67, and cases cited; 1870, Curtis v. Cochran, 50 N. H. 242; 1904, Miller v. State, 46 Tex. Cr. 59, 79 S. W. 567 (here a question as to the application of a pardon to a different conviction); 1853, Anglea v. Com., 10 Gratt. Va. 696 (except for perjury, under the Virginia Code).

[3] "If the pardon of one sentenced to the penitentiary for life, contains a proviso, that nothing therein contained shall be construed, so as to relieve the party from the legal disabilities consequent upon his sentence, other than the imprisonment, the proviso is void, and the party is fully rehabilitated: People v. Pease, 3 Johns. Cas. N. Y. 333."

[4] "R. v. Ford, 2 Salk. 689; Dover v. Maestaer, 5 Esp. 92, 94; 2 Russ. on Crimes, 595, 596; R. v. Greepe, 2 Salk. 513, 514; Bull, N. P. 292; Phil. & Am. on Evid. 21, 22." Accord: Fla. Rev. G. St. 1919, § 2704. Contra: 1895, Diehl v. Rogers, 169 Pa. 316, 32 Atl. 424. "See also Mr. Hargrave's Juridical Arguments, Vol. 2, p. 221, et seq., where this topic is treated with great ability. Whether the disability is, or is not, made a part of the judgment, and entered as such on the record, does not seem to be of any importance. The form in which this distinction is taken in the earlier cases, evidently shows that its force was understood to consist in this, that in the former case the disability

1680, SCROGGS, C. J., in Castlemaine's Trial, 7 How. St. Tr. 1067, 1083: "In this I am clear: If a man were convicted of perjury, that no pardon will make him a witness, because it is to do the subject wrong. A pardon does not make a man an honest man; it takes off reproaches; . . . it is only to prevent upbraiding language, which tends to the breach of the peace. . . . [But otherwise for other felonies]; this I make more doubtful than the other, for a man, maybe, that hath committed a robbery would be afraid to forswear himself; for though one is a great, the other is a greater sin, and that in the subject matter."

(3) Professor Greenleaf, 'ubi supra': 'By Stat. 9 Geo. 4, c. 32, § 3, enduring the punishment to which an offender has been sentenced for any felony not punishable with death, has the same effect as a pardon under the great seal, for the same offence; and of course it removes the disqualification to testify; and the same effect is given by § 4, of the same statute, to the endurance of the punishment awarded for any misdemeanor, except perjury and subornation of perjury.[5] But whether these enactments have proceeded on the ground, that the incompetency is in the nature of punishment, or, that the offender is reformed by the salutary discipline he has undergone, does not clearly appear."

§ 524. Same: Statutory Changes. Acting upon the reasons already set forth (ante, § 519), the Legislatures of almost every jurisdiction have long ago either entirely abolished or narrowly restricted the disqualification by conviction of crime. The earliest statute seems to have been that of England, in 1843. The statutes in the United States, when not providing for entire abolition, usually retain the common law rule for perjury only (including subornation); while a few retain it in its original scope as to kinds of crimes, but apply it in criminal trials only; but neither of these limitations has any justification in logic or policy.[1] was declared by the statute, and in the latter, that it stood at Common Law."

For the same question, arising in relation to the impeachment of a witness, see post, § 980.

[5] "See also 1 W. 4, c. 37, to the same effect." 1909, State v. Blount, 124 La. 202, 50 So. 12; 1906, Quillin v. Com., 105 Va. 874, 54 S. E. 337 (confinement for sixty days in a jail on a 'capias pro fine' is not a satisfaction of a punishment of fine); 1910, Davidson v. Watts, 111 Va. 394, 69 S. E. 328.

§ 524. [1] The statutes have been already set out, ante, § 488; in the following list a rough summary is given, with the local rulings construing the effect of the statutes: ENGLAND 1843 (abolished); CANADA (abolished); UNITED STATES: Federal (local law to apply, but perjury and subornation disqualify; however, in consequence of the conformity principle, ante, § 6, the rule varied, until Rosen v. U. S., infra): 1913, Maxey v. U. S., 8th C. C. A., 207 Fed. 327 (person convicted of felony in a Federal court in Arkansas, held disqualified, under the common law rule, unchanged by Congress); 1917, McCoy v. U. S., 5th C. C. A., 247 Fed. 861 (trial in Florida; prior conviction of a witness in the Federal Court in Arkansas, held not disqualified, under Fla. Terr. St. 1843, Mar. 15, being the law in force there at the time of Florida's admission to the Union); 1918, Rosen v. U. S., 245 U. S. 467, 38 Sup. 148 (receiving stolen mail-matter; witness convicted of forgery in N. Y., held competent in a trial in the U. S. District Court for N. Y., on the principle of § 6, ante; the opinion is silent on the present principle, and is obscure); 1918, Reed v. U. S., 2d C. C. A., 252 Fed. 21 (conviction by military court-martial, held not to disqualify; citing Rosen v. U. S., supra); 1920, Ammerman v. U. S., 8th C. C. A., 277 Fed. 136 (conviction for felony, held not to disqualify; following Rosen v. U. S., supra); Ala. (abolished, except for perjury or subornation); Alaska: (abolished); Ariz. (abolished); Ark. (abolished); 1922, Johnson v. State, — Ark. —, 238 S. W. 23 (convicts from the State farm, admitted); Cal. (abolished); Colo. (abolished); Columbia (abolished, except for perjury); Conn. (abolished); Del. (abolished); Fla. (abolished, except for perjury); Ga. (abolished); Haw. (abolished, except for perjury and subornation); Ida. (abolished); Ill. (abolished); Ind. (semble, abolished); Ia. (semble, abolished); Kan. (abolished for civil cases); Ky. (no person convicted of perjury or equivalent offences is to be competent); 1886, Com. v. McGuire, 83 Ky. 57 (disqualification no longer exists except for perjury, etc., under Stats. § 1180); 1890, Com. v. Minor, 89 Ky. 555, 13 S. W. 5 (same; but this rule is limited to criminal cases, since § 606, Civ. Code, disqualifies convicts in civil cases); 1896, Hancock v. Parker, 100 Ky. 143, 37 S. W. 594 (admitting in a criminal

Where a statute removing a disqualification, e.g. of an accused, and a statute imposing a disqualification by infamy, apply to the same person, the former statute should of course by implication prevail.[2]

§ 525. (5) "Allegans turpitudinem suam"; General Principle. During the 1600s and 1700s there appeared in several quarters of the law of Evidence a tendency to recognize as a general principle of disqualification the maxim 'nemo turpitudinem suam allegans audiendus est.' The notion underlying the maxim is that a person who comes upon the stand to testify that he has at a former time spoken falsely or acted corruptly is by his very confession a liar or a villain, and therefore untrustworthy as a witness.

Before examining the validity of the principle as a whole for our law of Evidence, it will be desirable to notice the specific situations in which it has been invoked. There are five of these, each dealt with in a group of precedents independent of the other and only loosely connected by the general notion of the above maxim.

§ 526. Same: Accomplice, as disqualified by his Guilt. It was frequently urged against an accomplice, during the 1600s and 1700s, that since by his own confession he was guilty of crime, this turpitude thus acknowledged made him as incompetent as if it were proved by conviction for the crime. This argument is only broadly related to the above maxim, and yet this relation is frequently noticed in the opinions dealing with the other instances. It must be distinguished from the argument of disqualification as a co-indictee (post, § 580) and of disqualification by reason of a promise of pardon (post, § 580). The argument, however, was judicially repudiated from the very beginning — partly on the ground of necessity, partly on the ground that case a convict in penitentiary for obtaining money by false pretences); 1904, Illinois C. R. Co. v. McManus' Adm'r, 118 Ky. 780, 82 S. W. 399 (conviction for burglary does not exclude); La. (abolished); 1889, State v. Mack, 41 La. An. 1079, 1082, 6 So. 808 (held to be in criminal cases abolished); 1890, State v. McManus, 42 La. An. 1194, 8 So. 305 (same); 1903, State v. Williams, 111 La. 179, 35 So. 505; (State v. McManus approved); Me. (abolished); Md. (abolished, except for perjury); Mass. (abolished); Mich. (abolished); Minn. (abolished); Miss. (abolished, except for perjury and subornation of perjury); Mo. (abolished); 1920, Day v. Lusk, — Mo. —, 219 S. W. 597 (statute applied); Mont. (abolished); Nebr. (abolished); Nev. (abolished); N. H. (abolished); N. J. (abolished); 1921, State v. Magyar, — N. J. L. —, 114 Atl. 252 (under St. 1906, Evidence, § 1, conviction of perjury no longer disqualifies); N. M. (abolished); N. Y. (abolished); N. C. (abolished); N. D. (abolished, semble, except for perjury or subornation, conditionally); Oh. (abolished); Okl. (abolished, except for perjury and subornation of perjury, conditionally); 1904, Martin v. Terr., 14 Okl. 593, 78 Pac. 88 (convict, admissible); 1905, Wells v. Terr., 15 Okl. 195, 81 Pac. 425 (similar); Or. (abolished); Pa. (abolished, except in part for perjury); 1899, Com. v. Clemmer, 190 Pa. 202, 42 Atl. 675 (one under sentence of death, admitted); R. I. (abolished); S. D. (like N. D.); Tenn. (retained for a long list of crimes specified; convicts competent against each other for prison offences); 1887, Morgan v. State, 86 Tenn. 472 (statutory competency as defendant overrides disqualification by former conviction); Tex. (retained); Utah (abolished); Vt. (abolished, except for perjury or subornation or attempted subornation of perjury); Va. (abolished); Wash. (abolished, except for perjury); W. Va. (retained, except, for other than perjury-convictions, in criminal cases by leave of Court); Wis. (abolished); Wyo. (abolished).

[2] 1911, Turner v. State, 100 Ark. 199, 139 S. W. 1124 (a defendant in a criminal trial is not disqualified by prior conviction of crime).

turpitude, though self-confessed, was no hindrance unless there had been a conviction of crime:[1]

1663, Tong's Case, Kelyng 18: "It was resolved that some of those persons who were equally culpable with the rest may be made use of as witnesses against their fellows; . . . and the law alloweth every one to be a witness who is not convicted or made infamous for some crime; and if it were not so, all treasons would be safe, and it would be impossible for anyone who conspires with never so many others to make a discovery to any purpose."

1696, Charmock's Trial, 12 How. St. Tr. 1377, 1403. Defendant (objecting to the witness to treason): "He makes himself a criminal by his own confession, and that of a very heinous crime, and it is equal . . . as if he had confessed it upon an indictment, and then he law can take no notice of him as a good witness." L. C. J. Holt (charging the jury): "Now, as to that objection, I must tell you, . . . you may consider that traitorous conspiracies are deeds of darkness as well as wickedness, the discovery whereof can properly come only from the conspirators themselves. . . . And though men have been guilty of such heinous offences in being partakers or promoters in such designs, yet if they come in and repent and give testimonies thereof by discovering the truth, great credit ought to be given to them, for such evidence was ever accounted good."

1827, Abbott, C. J., in Thistlewood's Trial (Cato Street Conspirators), 33 How. St. Tr. 681, 921 as reported in Campbell's Lives, IV, 312: "Dark and deep designs are seldom fully developed except to those who consent to become participators in them, and can therefore be seldom exposed and brought to light by the testimony of untainted witnesses. Such testimony is to be received on all occasions with great caution; it is to be carefully watched, deliberately weighed, and anxiously considered. He who acknowledges himself to have become a party to a guilty purpose does by that very acknowledgment depreciate his own personal character and credit. If, however, it should ever be laid down as a practical rule in the administration of justice that the testimony of accomplices should be rejected as incredible, the most mischievous consequences must necessarily ensue; because it must not only happen that many heinous crimes must pass unpunished, but great encouragement will be given to bad men by withdrawing from their minds the fear of detection and punishment through the instrumentality of their partners in guilt; and thereby universal confidence will be substituted for that distrust of each other which naturally possesses men engaged in wicked projects and which often operates as a restraint against the perpetration of offences to which the coöperation of a multitude is required."

§ 526. [1] Accord: 1774, Clarke v. Shee, Cowp. 197 (action for money paid by the plaintiff's clerk from the plaintiff's funds to the defendant for a lottery chance; against the clerk's testifying for the plaintiff, Mr. Buller, afterwards Judge, argued that the clerk "is a 'particeps criminis', and therefore clearly incompetent, for no man shall be admitted to prove his own turpitude. as perjury or the like; this man was called to prove himself guilty of a breach of trust in embezzling his master's money and also of a breach of the Act of Parliament; therefore his evidence was inadmissible"; Mr. Davenport, for the defendant, argued that "here the plaintiff is an innocent person, and therefore had a right to call him"; Lord Mansfield, C. J., said that "there can be no doubt but that W. was an admissible witness"; citing the case of a man who had "taken the bribery oath" being called to prove himself bribed); 1775, Shaftesbury Case, 2 Doug. El. C. 2d ed. 303, 308, 315 (voter's confessions of bribery, objected to as not admissible "to invalidate what he had solemnly sworn" by the purging oath at the polls, a ruling of the House to this effect in 1696 being cited; objection repudiated; the reporter cites another House ruling, of 1715, in accord); 1833, Southampton Case, Per. & Kn. El. C. 213, 226 (repudiated).

In the United States an early trace of the doctrine appears: 1789, State v. Annice, N. Chipm. 9 (indictment for adultery with E.; E. not admitted "in this case" to prove her own turpitude); 1878, State v. Colby, 51 Vt. 291, 295 (preceding case repudiated).

It is surprising to see the point raised nowadays: 1905, Miller v. State, 165 Ind. 566, 76 N. E. 245 (receiving stolen goods; the thief may prove the theft).

In the Philippines and in Porto Rico the accomplice was under the Spanish system apparently disqualified; but this is no longer law: 1905, U. S. v. Ocampo, 5 P. I. 339; 1906, People v. Kent, 10 P. R. 325, § 45.

§ 527. Same: Witness retracting Former Perjured Testimony. The argument was often urged, during the 1600s and 1700s, and appears to have been generally accepted by the judges, that one who came to the stand to testify that upon a former oath he had sworn falsely was as a self-confessed perjurer incapable of trust:[1]

1685, Oates' Trial, 10 How. St. Tr. 1079, 1185. Attorney-General: "Pray acquaint my lord and the jury how you came to swear at the former trial, by whom you were persuaded, and how you varied from the truth." L. C. J. JEFFREYS: "I tell you truly, Mr. Attorney, it looks rank and fulsome. If he did forswear himself, why should he ever be a witness again?" Attorney-General: "'T is not the first time by twenty that such evidences have been given." L. C. J. JEFFREYS: "I hate such precedents in all times, let it be done never so often. Shall I believe a villain one word he says, when he owns that he forswore himself? . . . What good will the admitting him to be a witness do? For either what he swore then or what he swears now is false; and if he once swears false, can you say he is to be believed? . . . We are all of another opinion, that it is not evidence fit to be given."

It is noticeable that this same argument of L. C. J. Jeffreys appears again in another doctrine (post, § 530). But there, as here, it is unsound; the witness may be telling the truth now; whether he is doing so can best be left to the jury to consider under all the circumstances affecting his credit. To exclude one who now admits a former perjury, much more to exclude one who merely contradicts his former oath, is to shut out a possible source of truth; and to admit him can hardly serve to mislead, since the testimony is of itself open to suspicion. The doctrine by the 1800s came to be entirely repudiated:[2]

§ 527. [1] Accord: 1754, Canning's Trial, 19 How. St. Tr. 283, 450, 609, 632 (one Virtue Hall, who had recanted her testimony given at the trial of the supposed abductor Squires, was not now called on Canning's trial for perjury at the first trial, because the defendant's counsel, on the authority of Oates' Trial, thought her incompetent, and the trial judges agreed to this; Legge, B.: "I will never admit or suffer a person that will say they have been perjured in another affair"; but he conceded that the custom was contrary in trials for perjury-subornation).

[2] Accord: England: 1809, R. v. Teal, 9 East 307, 309 (conspiracy to make a false charge of paternity of a bastard; objected against the mother's testimony that she had before sworn to the prosecutor as father, but now was swearing the contrary, and "consequently she was to prove herself forsworn," so that "not only was she incompetent to contradict the fact she had before sworn to", but "she was incompetent witness for any purpose, on the ground of her acknowledged perjury and infamy" and that "it made no difference whether the infamy were found by verdict, or by the confession of the party tendered as a witness"; objection overruled; see quotation supra); 1816, Rands v. Thomas, 5 M. & S. 244 (assumpsit for goods furnished to a ship; defendant claimed not to have been owner, and called C. as the real owner to testify that C. had inserted the defendant's name on the register as part owner without the defendant's consent; objected that C. could not "contradict the oath which he had taken at the time of the registry"; held, that C. was competent, following R. v. Teal; repudiating the 'nisi prius' ruling on the same facts in Nickerson v. Thomas, 1 Stark. 85).

United States: 1887, U. S. v. Thompson, 31 Fed. 331 (subornation of perjury; disapproving People v. Evans, N. Y., infra); 1903, Stone v. State, 118 Ga. 705, 45 S. E. 630 (subornation of perjury; the perjurers' admission that they had committed perjury does not disqualify them); 1905, Chandler v. State, 124 Ga. 821, 53 S. E. 91 (retracting a self-confessed perjury); 1847, Aiken v. Kilburne, 14 Shepl. Me. 252, 261 (a debtor who had on oath in a petition of bankruptcy averred the contrary, admitted; see quotation supra); 1809, Amory v. Fellows, 5 Mass. 219, 228 (modern principle applied to will-witnesses; their false attestation does not make them not "credible"); 1875, Fitzcox v. State, 52 Miss. 923, 930 (maxim repudiated); 1906, Trafton v. Osgood, 74 N. H. 98, 65 Atl. 397 (a witness admitting prior perjury on the same point is not excluded); 1864, Dunn v. People, 29 N. Y.

1809, ELLENBOROUGH, L. C. J., in R. v. Teal, 9 East 307: "Though a person may be proved on his own showing, or by other evidence, to have forsworn himself as to a particular fact, it does not follow that he can never afterwards feel the obligation of an oath; though it may be a good reason for the jury, if satisfied that he had sworn falsely on the particular point, to discredit his evidence altogether. But still that would not warrant the rejection of the evidence by the judge; it only goes to the credit of the witness, on which the jury are to decide."

1847, SHEPLEY, J., in Aiken v. Kilburne, 14 Shepl. 252, 261: "In the course of judicial investigations, witnesses are found to testify differently on different occasions and at different times; sometimes [it is] because they have ascertained that they had made a mistake in their former testimony; at other times they exhibit a disposition to suit their testimony to the exigencies of the case; and on other occasions they acknowledge that they were induced to testify falsely at a former time. In no such case can the question of the competency of the witness to testify properly arise, for it cannot be judicially known how far his testimony may conform to or differ from his former testimony. If it could be known, so that the objection to his competency could be presented, it must be overruled, for it is the peculiar province of the jury in an action at law to decide whether the testimony of a witness should be entitled to any and if so to what credit under the circumstances in which it is presented to them."

§ 528. Same: Attesting Witness contradicting his Attestation. The general notion that a person cannot be heard to repudiate his own formal assertion made on a former occasion was responsible for the attempt, often made during the 1600s and 1700s, to forbid an attesting witness to repudiate his attestation by swearing that, though he did attest the execution, yet in fact he attested falsely. But this doctrine, though repeatedly urged by counsel and though apparently in harmony with popular notions of the time, was as constantly repudiated by the judges.[1]

523. 529 (abortion; the principal witness, the woman, admitted that she had sworn falsely before the magistrates; held that an instruction to disregard her testimony entirely was not proper; explaining Dunlop v. Patterson, 5 Cow. N. Y. 243); 1878, Deering v. Metcalf, 74 N. Y. 501, 504 (preceding case approved); 1888, People v. O'Neil, 109 N. Y. 251, 266, 16 N. E. 68 (same); 1905, State v. Pearson 37 Wash. 405, 79 Pac. 985 (witness admitting perjury at a former trial of himself, held competent); 1879, Mack v. State, 48 Wis. 271, 286, 4 N. W. 449 (rule repudiated).

Contra: 1869, People v. Evans, 40 N. Y. 1, 6 (subornation, following Dunlop v. Patterson; supra, and ignoring Dunn v. People).

Distinguish the doctrine of impeachment, 'falsus in uno, falsus in omnibus' (post, 1008).

Distinguish the following, resting on the principle of judicial admissions (post, § 2593): 1896, Marvin v. Sager, 145 Ind. 261, 44 N. E. 310 (agreement to use a deposition and not call the witness; the witness cannot be called after using the deposition).

§ 528. [1] England: 1683, Hudson's Case, Skinner 79 (two of the three swore that the testator was incapable and that his hand had been guided); 1694, Dayrell v. Glascock, ib. 413 (one of them would not testify that he saw the testator execute); 1696, Blurton v. Toon, ib. 639 (one of the witnesses denied seeing the execution, though admitting his hand; proof by the other's signature was opposed, but allowed); 1700 (?), Austin v. Willes, Buller N. P. 264 ("notwithstanding the three witnesses all swore to its not being duly executed, the devisee obtained a verdict"); 1762, Lowe v. Jolliffe, 2 W. Bl. 365 ("the three subscribing witnesses to the testator's will, and the two surviving ones to a codicil made four years subsequent . . . all unanimously swore him to be utterly incapable of making a will", etc.); 1768, Goodtitle v. Clayton, 4 Burr. 2224 (a new trial was granted, because the witnesses had "been admitted to give evidence against their own attestation"; Yates, J., thought this erroneous; Lord Mansfield, C. J., thought that "it is of terrible consequence that witnesses to wills should be tampered with to deny their own attestation"; but it does not appear that such evidence was understood to be prohibited, but merely untrustworthy); 1798, Lord Kenyon, C. J., in Jordaine v. Lashbrook, 7 T. R. 599, 604 (approving Lowe v. Jolliffe); 1812, Howard v. Braithwaite, 1

That the propounder of the will may, in spite of the attesting witnesses' denials, prove otherwise the genuineness of execution, involves a different principle, elsewhere considered (post, § 1302).

§ 529. Same: Invalidating one's Own Instrument; Rule in Walton v. Shelly. Closely related to the attesting-witness notion, and almost including it, is the thought that one who by his signature as party has acknowledged an instrument to be valid should not be heard to testify to facts destroying its validity. This notion, involving in part some idea of estoppel as applied to a witness, seems first to have been advanced against the obligor of an usurious bond attempting to prove the usury;[1] though here the controlling objection was afterwards accepted to be the doctrine of disqualification by interest (post, § 575), and from this point of view the propriety of such testimony was finally established.[2] The general maxim, however, had long before been given currency by that prolific maker of maxims, Lord Coke;[3] and in the first half of the 1700s there are other indications of a tendency to concede the impropriety of allowing a man to swear against his own deed;[4] the instances being complicated, however, like that of the usurious contract, by the rule as to disqualification by interest. But, finally, the doctrine appeared in a quarter where no objection based on interest could prevail; and the general principle was advanced (in one of those rulings in which Lord Mansfield exhibited his great power of persuading his colleagues into novelties) that a person should not be allowed by his testimony to invalidate any instrument to which he had given credit by his signature as a party:

1786, Walton v. Shelly, 1 T. R. 296; the objection was, when an indorser of notes was offered in defence to prove the usurious consideration of the notes, and thus of a bond given

Ves. & B. 202, 208 (Lord Eldon, L. C.: "their testimony is to be received with all the jealousy necessarily for the safety of mankind attaching to a man who upon his oath asserts that to be false which he has by his solemn act attested as true").

Ireland: Goodisson v. Goodisson, Ir. R. 1913, I, 31, 218 (witness to a will; testimony not to be rejected because contradictory of his attestation and a prior affidavit).

United States: 1905, Theriot's Succession, 114 La. 611, 38 So. 488 (notary and attesting witnesses allowed to testify to non-observance of formalities); 1895, Johnson v. Johnson, 44 S. C. 364, 22 S. E. 423 (witness who attests delivery, etc., may testify to the contrary); 1903, Ward v. Brown, 53 W. Va. 227, 44 S. E. 488.

Contra: 1795, Currie v. Donald, 2 Wash. Va. 58 (attesting witness to a deed cannot contradict its delivery).

§ 529. [1] 1628, Coke upon Littleton, 6 b ("It was also agreed by the whole Court [citing Smith's Case] that in an information upon the statute of usury, the partie to the usurious contract shall not be admitted to be a witness against the usurer, for in effect he should be 'testis in propria causa' and should avoid his own bonds and assurances and discharge himself of the money borrowed; and though he commonly raise up an informer to exhibit the information, yet 'in rei veritate' he is the partie"); 1670, Lassels v. Chatterton, T. Raym. 190, per Twisden, J. (to the same effect); 1702, R. v. Sewel, 7 Mod. 118 (obligor may testify to a fact "to invalidate or set aside" an obligation obtained by duress, "where the nature of the thing allows him no other evidence").

[2] 1768, Abrahams v. Bunn, 4 Burr. 2251.

[3] 1634, Coke, Fourth Institute, 279 (maxim cited). Coke, in Professor Thayer's epigram, "seems to have spawned Latin maxims freely."

[4] 1704, Title v. Grevett, 2 Ld. Raym. 1008 ("a man that conveys lands may be a witness to prove he had no title, because that is swearing against himself"); 1741, L. C. Hardwicke, in Man v. Ward, 2 Atk. 228 (the deposition of a grantor, covenanting against incumbrances, was offered against the grantee to prove that the grantor had fraudulently pretended a title; it was admitted, though regarded inadmissible "by the strict rules of law").

for them, "that he was called to invalidate a security which he had given, and that an indorser of a note, independently of any question of interest", could not do this. MANSFIELD, L. C. J.: "In this case, it seems to me that the witness had no interest in the present question, for either way he is discharged; . . . therefore, in point of interest, I think there is no objection to his competency. But what strikes me is the rule of law founded on public policy, which I take to be this: That no party who has signed a paper or a deed shall ever be permitted to give testimony to invalidate that instrument which he hath so signed. And there is a sound reason for it; because every man who is a party to an instrument gives a credit to it. It is of consequence to mankind that no person should hang out false colors to deceive them, by first affixing his signature to a paper, and then afterwards giving testimony to invalidate it. . . . The civil law says, 'Nemo allegans suam turpitudinem est audiendus.' Now apply this general maxim to the present case. . . . The obligee of this bond trusted to the notes; he gave them up as a consideration for the bond; he trusted to the name of the indorser, and that he knew of no objection to the notes; and yet this same person was afterwards called to say that they were given for an usurious and illegal consideration; therefore, on that ground, I am of opinion that he was an incompetent witness." WILLES, J.: "The present question falls within the general rule that no man shall be permitted to allege his own turpitude in having given credit to a false and illegal security." BULLER, J.: "I have always understood it to be a settled principle that no man shall be permitted to invalidate his own act."

The immense influence of Lord Mansfield's name may be seen from the vogue which was thus given in this country to the doctrine of Walton v. Shelly;[5] for in almost every American jurisdiction, and for the ensuing fifty years, this doctrine became the subject of repeated judicial discussion and was by many Courts accepted, — although it had been in England doubted and limited almost as soon as it was published[6] and was within a short dozen years completely repudiated. This came about in 1798:

KENYON, L. C. J., in Jordaine v. Lashbrook, 7 T. R. 603: "The proposition attempted to be established by the plaintiff is this, that for some technical reason, or for some reason of policy, a court of justice must shut its eyes and not suffer facts to be disclosed which may be laid before them by a witness who is not infamous in his character and who has no interest in the cause. If the law be so, there is some novelty in it. . . . The rule contended for by the plaintiff is this, that 'however infamously you (the defendant) have been used, whatever fraud may have been committed on you, whatever may be the rights of others, if I (the plaintiff) the party to the fraud can get on the instrument the name of the person who may be the only witness to the transaction, I will stand entrenched within the forms of law, and impose silence on that only witness, though he be a person of unimpeachable character and not interested in the cause.' But I cannot conceive on what ground such a proposition can be established. It is contradicted by every hour's experience. It would

[5] Compare the effect of his influence in fathering the unsound rules about parents "bastardizing their children" (post, § 2063), jurors impeaching their verdict (post, § 2352), and proof of "marriage in fact" (post, § 2085).

[6] 1789, Bent v. Baker, 3 T. R. 27 (assumpsit on a policy of insurance; for the defendant was called, to disprove liability, a broker who had been employed by the plaintiff to get the policy and had also underwritten it himself after the defendant had underwritten it; besides the objection of interest, it was urged against him that "a party shall not be permitted to give testimony to avoid an instrument which he himself has executed", citing Walton v. Shelly; Lord Kenyon, C. J., noticed this as follows: "Then it has been said that a person cannot be permitted to give evidence to invalidate an instrument which he himself has executed; but I cannot assent to that as a general proposition", citing Lowe v. Jolliffe, supra, § 527; Buller, J., noticing the same objection, said: "The ground of that objection is that it is holding out false credit to the world, and must be confined to negotiable instruments"; to which Lord Kenyon agreed).

tend to show that a party to an instrument shall not be permitted to contest the validity of it in a court of law, not only by his own evidence, but by any evidence whatever. . . . [It was contended] that policy required that the evidence offered by the defendant should be excluded; but it appears to me that there is at least as much policy in admitting it; for the consequence of admitting such evidence may be only to disappoint a remedy in a civil action, while the consequence of excluding it will be to encourage fraud and to authorize the person who has committed it to rely on his own fraud in a court of justice." GROSE, J.: "Before the case of Walton v. Shelly I never read of this ground of incompetency. The ground is that a man shall not disclose any fact that may invalidate an instrument which he has signed. And why may he not disclose a fact which, if true, it is his duty to the public to disclose? Because, it is said, he has given currency to the bill by putting his name upon it; and he shall not be permitted to impeach his own title. If he has done so, he has done a very illegal and improper act, and committed a fraud upon the public; [yet] if by his assistance the law has been violated and the revenue defrauded, he owes to the public, by way of retribution, a disclosure of the circumstances and the parties, that the scheme to rob the revenue may be frustrated. . . . But it is said: 'Homo allegans turpitudinem suam non est audiendus.' This, as a maxim applied to parties in a cause, may in some cases be true; but there, if both are 'particeps criminis', the rule applies, 'Potior est conditio defendentis.' A man shall not sustain an action upon a ground which proves him guilty of a breach of the law; so a man shall not recover money due upon an illegal consideration, such as usury, gaming, smuggling, or the like. But this rule does not extend to shut the mouths of witnesses guilty of criminal actions; it if did, witnesses daily received in courts of justice, and whom the policy of the law invites to come forward, must be rejected, — such as accomplices, and others concerned in illegal transactions. This class of men, as I said before, the policy of the law invites to disclose all they know, leaving their credit to the wisdom and discretion of the jury."

This ended the suggested doctrine in England.[7] Perhaps its end would not have been so speedy had not Lord Mansfield's successor been a man determined to overthrow the (to him) pernicious innovations of his great predecessor and intellectual antipathist.[8]

But in the United States Lord Mansfield's rule obtained for a time considerable vogue. Several Courts retracted, however, after its utter repudiation in England was pressed upon their notice; and even those retaining it were content to confine it to persons appearing as indorsers (or the like) of negotiable instruments, and to decline applying it to obligors of other contracts or grantors of deeds.[9] Almost [7] 1798, Jordaine v. Lashbrooke, 7 T. R. 599 (indorsee of a bill against the acceptor; the latter allowed to call the payee to prove that the bill, though dated at Hamburg, was in fact drawn in London, and therefore inadmissible for lack of a stamp); 1812, Jones v. Brooke, 4 Taunt. 464 (preceding case accepted as law).

[8] For another instance (there less creditable) of the influence upon the law of Lord Kenyon's succession to Lord Mansfield's place, see post, § 1858.

[9] The rulings in the various American jurisdictions are as follows: Federal: 1832, Bank of U. S. v. Dunn, 6 Pet. 51, 57 (Walton v. Shelly approved; intermediate indorser not admitted to prove a note given "under any circumstances which would destroy its validity"); 1834, Bank of the Metropolis v. Jones, 8 Pet. 12, 16 (drawer not admitted to prove fraud discharging indorser); 1835, Taylor v. Luther, 2 Sumn. 228, 235, per Story, J. (rule held not applicable to deeds); 1837, U. S. v. Leffler, 11 Pet. 86, 94 (rule not applicable to exclude official from proving his surety's bond to have been delivered in escrow); 1838, Scott v. Lloyd, 12 Pet. 145, 149 (rule assumed to be in force); 1845, Henderson v. Anderson, 3 How. 73, 80 (rule adhered to); 1851, Saltmarsh v. Tuthill, 13 How. 229 (same); 1876, Davis v. Brown, 94 U. S. 423 (action by second indorsee against first indorsees; one of the latter admitted to prove agreement with plaintiff not to hold defendants liable; Walton v. Shelly discredited; Bank v. Dunn qualified to the nothing has been heard of the doctrine in the last seventy-five years, even in those jurisdictions where it was preserved as law. This, however, above extent); 1901, Metropolitan Nat'l Bank v. Jansen, 47 C. C. A. 497, 108 Fed. 572 (Davis v. Brown followed); Alabama: 1827, Todd v. Stafford, 1 Stew. 199 (payee competent to impeach note's consideration; Walton v. Shelly repudiated; White, J., diss.); Arkansas: 1847, Tucker v. Wilamowicz, 8 Ark. 157, semble (Walton v. Shelly not accepted); 1852, Caldwell v. McVicar, 12 Ala. 746, 750, semble (same); 1856, Arnold v. McNeil, 17 Ala. 179, 187 (grantor of deed of trust, admissible to disprove execution; rule of Walton v. Shelly repudiated); Connecticut: 1802, Allen v. Holkins, 1 Day 17 (defendant, a subsequent lessee, offered the lessor to prove plaintiff's prior lease void; excluded, on the authority of Walton v. Shelly, because "no man should be admitted to swear against his own deed"), 1804, Webb v. Danforth, 1 Day 301 (point argued, but not decided); 1814, Townsend v. Bush, 1 Conn. 260 (drawer of usurious bill competent in action by payee, who has paid indorsee, against acceptor; Walton v. Shelly repudiated; the opinion of Swift, J., is the best of all the learned and sensible opinions on this subject with reference to the application of the doctrine to negotiable instruments); 1839, Jackson v. Packer, 13 Conn. 342, 359 (preceding case approved); Georgia: 1832, Slack v. Moss, Dudley 161 (payee of first note, competent to prove, in action on renewal note, that consideration of first note was gaming; Walton v. Shelly repudiated in an excellent opinion); 1881, McBride v. Bryan, 67 Ga. 584 (attorney confessing a judgment without authority for his client, held "incompetent to invalidate it", because "he committed a crime as a lawyer"); Illinois: 1840, Webster v. Vickers, 3 Ill. 295 (payee-indorser of note competent to prove breach of warranty of goods paid by note); 1841, Bradley v. Morris, 4 Ill. 182 (indorser of note competent to prove discharge, "although it had been held" that he would be incompetent to prove it void ab initio, except where he indorses without recourse); Iowa: 1840, Strang v. Wilson, 1 Morris 84 (indorser of note competent to prove holder's purchase for value, but, semble, not to "invalidate the instrument"); Kentucky: 1823, Gorman v. Carroll, 3 Litt. 221 (payee of note assigning without recourse competent to prove usury); Louisiana: 1821, Shamburgh v. Commagere, 10 Mart. 18 (indorser admissible to prove alteration after indorsement, but, semble, not to invalidate by prior facts); 1826, Cox v. Williams, 5 Mart. N. S. 139 (rule referred to as "not yet perfectly settled"); Maine: 1826, Deering v. Sawtel, 4 Greenl. 191 (mortgagor not admitted to prove note's usurious consideration, in writ of entry by mortgagee's assignee against mortgagor's grantee; Walton v. Shelly approved; rule confined to negotiable instruments); 1828, Chandler v. Moulton, 5 Greenl. 374 (maker of accommodation note for defendant's benefit, not admitted to prove usury in action by indorsee); 1837, Puck v. Appleton, 2 Shepl. 284 (indorser of note admissible to prove that waiver of notice was written on note after defendant's indorsement, a fact not affecting the note's validity at inception); 1841, Abbott v. Mitchell, 6 Greenl. 354 (indorser without recourse admissible to prove alteration before delivery); 1856, Lincoln v. Fitch, 42 Me. 456, 466 (indorser of acceptance, held not admissible to prove fraud in its inception); Maryland: 1810, Ringgold v. Tyson, 3 H. & J. 172 (indorser of note competent to prove payment, in action by indorsee against maker; Walton v. Shelly repudiated; see quotation post, § 531; Earle and Gantt, JJ., diss.); Massachusetts: 1795, Parker v. Lovejoy, 3 Mass. 565 (payee of note not admitted to prove usury, in action by indorsee against maker; approving Walton v. Shelly); 1807, Warren v. Merry, 3 Mass. 27 (indorsee of note against indorser; maker admitted to prove payment, but Walton v. Shelly approved); 1808, Churchill v. Suter, 4 Mass. 156 (like Parker v. Lovejoy; rule reaffirmed as good policy); 1813, Manning v. Wheatland, 10 Mass. 502 (rule reapproved); 1814, Stowell v. Flagg, 11 Mass. 368, 375 (like the next case); 1814, Loker v. Haynes, 11 Mass. 498 (grantor of deed admitted to prove fraud in deed, in action by grantor's creditor; rule confined "to negotiable instruments alone"); 1819, Fox v. Whitney, 16 Mass. 118 (rule not applicable to non-negotiable or non-negotiated paper); 1821, Hartford Bank v. Barry, 17 Mass. 94 (maker of note not admitted to prove usury in action by indorsee against indorser); 1821, Packard v. Richardson, 17 Mass. 122, 127 (rule applied to one signing as agent for maker); 1834, Hudson v. Hulbert, 15 Pick. 423, 426 (like Loker v. Haynes); 1840, Thayer v. Crossman, 1 Metc. 416 ("supposing the rule settled", it does not affect testimony to prove payment of a note indorsed after maturity); 1845, Dickinson v. Dickinson, 9 Metc. 471 (rule not applicable to vendor of colt warranting title, in action by true owner against vendee); Michigan: 1846, Orr v. Lacey, 2 Doug. 230, 238 (indorsee against indorser; accommodation acceptor admitted to prove bill void; Walton v. Shelly repudiated in an excellent opinion by Whipple, J.); Mississippi: 1832, Drake v. Henly, Walk. 541 (first indorsee admitted to prove facts occurring after indorsement); 1842, Routh v. Helm, 6 How. 127 (undecided; but rule held not applicable to a maker called for an indorser to prove payment); 1848, Williams v. Miller, 10 Sm. & M. 139 (same; rule not applicable to payee called for maker seems to be due to the belief that the general statutory abolition of disqualification by interest (post, § 776), which went on from 1850 to 1870, to prove payment); 1852, Watts v. Smith, 24 Miss. 77, 79 (same; payee suing as nominal plaintiff admitted to prove a note void on behalf of the maker, the title being still legally in the payee); 1870, Partee v. Silliman, 44 Miss. 272, 280 (undecided; but rule not applicable to an indorser not impeaching the paper "in its origin or at the time it was indorsed"); Missouri: 1841, Bank v. Hull, 7 Mo. 273, 276 (indorsee against indorser; maker competent; Walton v. Shelly repudiated); 1853, St. John v. McConnell, 19 Mo. 38 (Walton v. Shelly repudiated); New Hampshire: 1817, Houghton v. Page, 1 N. H. 60 (cc maker of note not admitted to prove usury in action by indorsee against maker); 1820, Bryant v. Ritterbush, 2 N. H. 212 (indorser admitted to prove payment before indorsement; rule confined to defences which affect purchasers for value without notice); 1830, Hadduck v. Wilmarth, 5 N. H. 181, 187 (grantor admitted against grantee to prove deed void; rule confined to "negotiable securities"); 1840, Haines v. Dennett, 11 N. H. 180 (indorsee of note against surety; maker admissible to prove alteration after execution and without defendant's knowledge; Walton v. Shelly and Houghton v. Page repudiated, in the best opinion on the subject, next to Mr. J. Swift's); New Jersey: 1811, Rosevelt v. Gardner, Penningt. 791 (Walton v. Shelly discussed; no decision); 1818, Ferris v. Saxton, 1 South. 1, 14 (Walton v. Shelly assumed to be law); 1839, Freeman v. Brittin, 2 Harrison 191, 194, 219, 229, 235, 238 (indorser of note, admitted to prove usury in action of indorsee against maker; Walton v. Shelly repudiated, by three judges against two; Ford, J., diss., says the most that has ever been said for the rule); New York: 1802, Winton v. Saidler, 3 Johns. Cas. 185 (payee of note not admissible to prove usury in action by one indorsee against another; by three judges against two including Kent, J.); 1807, Coleman v. Wise, 2 Johns. 165 (Walton v. Shelly approved, following Winton v. Saidler); 1813, Woodhull v. Holmes, 10 Johns. 231 (rule not applicable to proof of facts subsequent to execution); 1818, Skilding v. Warren, 15 Johns. 270 (preceding case followed); 1819, Powell v. Waters, 17 Johns. 176 (same); 1822, Tuthill v. Davis, 20 Johns. 285 (Winton v. Saidler doubted); 1825, Stafford v. Rice, 5 Cow. 23 ("Winton v. Saidler is not law"); 1825, Bank of Utica v. Hillard, Johns. 153, 159 (Winton v. Saidler deliberately overruled); 1829, Williams v. Walbridge, 3 Wend. 415 (same); North Carolina: 1819, Guy v. Hall, 3 Murph. 150 (Walton v. Shelly repudiated); Ohio: 1833, Stone v. Vance, 6 Oh. 246, 248 (payee admitted to prove facts of assignment, in action between assignee and maker); 1846, Treon v. Brown, 14 Oh. 483 (indorser not admitted to prove note void, in action between indorsee and maker; Walton v. Shelly followed); 1849, Rohrer v. Morningstar, 18 Oh. 579, 587 (rule not applied in action by indorsee taking after maturity); Pennsylvania: 1791, Clyde v. Clyde, 1 Yeates 92 (contract to divide land bought; one of the parties not allowed to "invalidate or disaffirm his own contract"); 1792, Stille v. Lynch, 2 Dall. 194 (payee excluded, in action between indorsee and maker; Walton v. Shelly cited); 1793, Pleasants v. Pemberton, 2 Dall. 196 (rule confined to negotiable instruments; not applied to a receipt); 1802, Balliot v. Bowman, 2 Binn. 162 (Jordaine v. Lashbrooke cited with approval); 1809, Baring v. Shippen, 2 Binn. 154, 165 (assignor of bond admitted to prove it fraudulently obtained; Pleasants v. Pemberton approved); 1818, Baird v. Cochran, 4 S. & R. 397 (rule not applied in action by indorsee taking after maturity); 1820, Hepburn v. Cassel, 6 S. & R. 113 (rule not applied to non-negotiable paper or paper not negotiated in regular course); 1839, Harrisburg Bank v. Forster, 8 Watts 304, 309 (rule recognized; intervening decisions cited); 1842, Davenport v. Freeman, 3 W. & S. 557 (maker inadmissible in action between indorsee and indorser); 1842, Parke v. Smith, 4 W. & S. 287 (like Baird v. Cochran); 1879, State Bank v. Rhoads, 89 Pa. 353, 357 (rule of Walton v. Shelly, the ground of which was "policy of law, not interest", held to have been abolished by St. 1869, ante, § 488, that "no interest nor policy of law" shall exclude a witness); South Carolina: 1796, Payne v. Trezevant, 2 Bay 23, 33 (payee of note allowed to prove usury, in action by indorsee against maker; Walton v. Shelly cited in argument); 1797, Canty v. Sumter, 2 Bay 93 (obligee of bond not admitted to impeach it in action by assignee; Walton v. Shelly cited); 1811, Croft v. Arthur, 3 Desauss. 223 (vendee of chattels admitted to invalidate the sale; Walton v. Shelly, if law, confined to negotiable instruments); 1817, Haig v. Newton, 1 McCord 423, 429, 433 (Walton v. Shelly treated as law; Cheves, J., diss.); 1825, Knight v. Packard, 3 McCord 72 (Walton v. Shelly definitely repudiated as not law); 1828, Simmons v. Parsons, 1 Bail. 62, 64 (Walton v. Shelly is "entirely exploded"); 1891, Reeves v. Brayton, 36 S. C. 384, 394, 401, 15 S. E. 658 (grantor of deed, not a party, allowed to prove defective execution); 1909, Merck v. Merck, 83 S. C. 329, 65 S. E. 347 (a grantee who afterwards conveys may in a suit between his grantee and a third person testify that the deed to himself was never duly executed; the contrary statement in Garrett v. Weinberg, 54 S. C. 127, 31 S. E. 341, distinguished); Tennessee: 1821, Stump v. Napier, 2 Yerg.

carried away with it the rule of Walton v. Shelly.[10] But this supposition is certainly erroneous; and Lord Mansfield himself (as seen above) expressly pointed out that the interest-objection was not involved. It is proper that a Court in which the rule once prevailed should expressly disown it, first, because the maxim 'allegans turpitudinem suam', on which it rests, has no place in our law,[11] and, secondly, because, so far as the policy of the law of negotiable instruments is involved, that policy makes decidedly against the rule and not for it.[12] It may safely be assumed that the rule of Walton v. Shelly would not to-day be sustained in any jurisdiction.

§ 530. Same: Official Contradicting his Own Certificate. A notion almost identical with that underlying the rule of Walton v. Shelly has led to the argument that an official who has certified to a specific fact as known to him to have occurred will not be allowed to testify, in contradiction to his certificate, that the facts were otherwise than as certified:

1839, BULLARD, J., in Briggs v. Stafford, 14 La. o. s. 381: "A public officer who has given a solemn certificate in his official character and under his seal cannot be listened to as a witness to prove it false. There is a degree of turpitude in certifying as to what the officer does not know to be true, as well as in certifying what he knows to be false. In either case, whatever may be the palliating circumstances 'in foro conscientiæ', we think the falsity of the certificate ought not to be shown by the testimony of the officer himself. 'Allegans turpitudinem suam non audiendus.'"

The notion has no better grounds for support here than elsewhere. If the certificate is not absolutely conclusive (post, §§ 1345–1352) and may be otherwise shown to be incorrect, then the official should be equally competent. The official doubtless should be punished, but not the party needing his testimony. The official is clearly capable of falsification, but the value of his testimony should be left to the jury:

1862, PECK, C. J., in Truman v. Lore, 14 Oh. St. 144, 151: "[The counsel admits that the certificate may be shown to state the facts incorrectly, because it was not made as a judicial act after a judicial investigation], but insists that public policy prohibits a magistrate from disproving a fact to which he has certified. But the argument loses much if not all of its force, when we consider he is not required to certify to any such thing or empowered to make any such investigation. The reasons which would close the lips of the magistrate also apply to the subscribing witnesses. . . . If all were excluded, public policy would be violated rather than promoted by the exclusion."

35 (Walton v. Shelly, and the whole principle of nemo allegans, etc., repudiated; excellent opinion by Whyte, J.); 1853, Smithwick v. Anderson, 2 Swan 573, 577 (Walton v. Shelly treated as law; but not applicable to paper negotiated after maturity); Texas: 1849, Parsons v. Phipps, 4 Tex. 341, 350 (Walton v. Shelly repudiated); Vermont: 1826, Nichols v. Holgate, 2 Aik. 138 (Walton v. Shelly repudiated); 1829, Chandler v. Mason, 2 Vt. 193, 197 (Walton v. Shelly approved, but the preceding case held to be a precedent); 1852, Pecker v. Sawyer, 24 Vt. 459, 462 (Nichols v. Holgate approved; Walton v. Shelly definitely repudiated); Virginia: 1825, Taylor v. Beck, 3 Rand. 316, 317, 340, 346 (Walton v. Shelly repudiated in excellent opinions by Carr, Green, and Coalter, JJ.).

[10] It was partly on this ground that it was abandoned in Pennsylvania.

[11] See § 531, post.

[12] For masterly expositions of this policy, see the opinions of Swift, J., in Townsend v. Bush, 1 Conn. 260; Gilchrist, J., in Haines v. Dennett, 11 N. H. 180; and Carr and Green, JJ., in Taylor v. Beck, 3 Rand. 316.

That such testimony is properly admissible ought not to be doubted, in view of the general denial on modern times of the analogous doctrines already examined, and of the total repudiation in our law of the maxim 'allegans suam turpitudinem' (as noted in § 531). Yet the contrary view finds occasional support.[1]

The question whether such an official certificate can be contradicted by any evidence whatever is a different one, involving the principle of conclusive testimony (post, § 1352).

§ 531. Same: 'Allegans suam turpitudinem', as a general Maxim. It is thus apparent that, of the specific instances in which the supposed doctrine of 'allegans suam turpitudinem' has been put forward or for a time accepted, none (except the last) have to-day any recognition as valid doctrines of the law of evidence. The truth is that the whole notion underlying that maxim is un-

§ 530 [1] The cases on both sides are as follows: Alabama: 1916, Qualls v. Qualls, 196 Ala. 524, 72 So. 76 (notary may impeach his own certificate of acknowledgment); Colorado: 1895, Shapleigh v. Hull, 21 Colo. 419, 41 Pac. 1108 (notary public not allowed to impeach his certificate of acknowledgment); Idaho: 1904, First Nat'l Bank v. Glenn, 10 Ida. 224, 77 Pac. 623 (acknowledgment of a mortgage by an Indian married woman; the notary not allowed to deny the taking of the acknowledgment; placed on the ground of vested rights); Illinois: 1902, Parlin & Orendorff Co. v. Hutson, 198 Ill. 389, 65 N. E. 93 (notary may impeach his certificate of acknowledgment); 1921, Union Colliery Co. v. Fishback, 299 Ill. 165, 132 N. E. 492 (contract signed and acknowledged by mistake; notary's testimony to mistake in text of instrument, admitted; Parlin & O. Co. v. Hutson not cited); Indiana: 1858, Wright v. Bundy, 11 Ind. 398, 406 (that a notary may impeach his own certificate, apparently assumed); Louisiana: 1839, Briggs v. Stafford, 14 La. o. s. 381 (notary not admitted to prove that the acts certified in protest were done by his clerk; see quotation supra); 1841, Oakey v. Bank, 17 La. 386 (notary not admitted to "contradict or strengthen" certificate of protest); 1843, Mathews v. Boland, 5 Rob. La. 200 (same); 1844, Peet v. Dougherty, 7 Rob. La. 85 (notary not allowed to testify in contradiction of express statement in certificate of protest); 1845, Follain v. Dupré, 11 Rob. La. 154 (principle conceded; but notary allowed to prove orally facts not provable by defective certificate); Maryland: 1862, Central Bank v. Copeland, 18 Md. 305 (magistrate not allowed to impeach his own certificate; citing Harkins v. Forsyth, infra); 1863, Matthews v. Dare, 20 Md. 270 (a justice of the peace taking a married woman's acknowledgment of a deed, which recited that he had "fully explained" it to her, was not allowed to show by any evidence that he had not read it over to her; but in this case he was a party and his knowledge of the contents of the deed was material); 1903, Nicholson v. Snyder, 97 Md. 415, 55 Atl. 484 (notary not allowed to impeach his certificate of a bankrupt's oath); Mississippi: 1843, Wood v. Trust Co., 7 How. Miss. 609, 632 (justice certifying a notarial act may not "falsify his own certificate", but may testify to facts rendering it illegal); 1858, Stone v. Montgomery, 35 Miss. 83 (an offer certifying to a married woman's acknowledgment cannot be admitted to impeach the correctness of the certificate); Ohio: 1862, Truman v. Lore, 14 Oh. St. 144, 151 (certificate of acknowledgment by justice of the peace; the magistrate's testimony to the acknowledger's feeble state of mind admitted; see quotation supra); Oklahoma: 1916, Effenberger v. Durant, 57 Okl. 445, 156 Pac. 212 (notary may impeach his own certificate of acknowledgment); Pennsylvania: 1821, Stewart v. Allison, 6 S. & R. 324 (notary may impeach his certificate of acknowledgment); 1898, Davis v. Monroe, 187 Pa. 212, 41 Atl. 44 (justice of the peace allowed to impeach his certificate of acknowledgment); Vermont: Carpenter v. Sawyer, 17 Vt. 121, 123 (town-clerk allowed to show that a record of advertisements by him was not properly made); Virginia: 1806, Baring v. Reeder, 1 Hen. & M. 154, 166, 175 (maxim repudiated by one judge, approved by another); 1840, Harkins v. Forsyth, 11 Leigh 294, 308 (justice or clerk cannot deny facts certified by "testifying to their own official perfidy"; but here no testimony at all was admissible); 1890, Hockman v. McClanahan, 87 Va. 33, 39, 12 S. E. 230 (approving Hawkins v. Forsyth, supra); Wisconsin: 1861, Adams v. Wright, 14 Wis. 408, 413 (notary may impeach his certificate); 1905, Wina v. Itzel, 125 Wis. 19, 103 N. W. 220 (notary allowed to impeach his certificate of acknowledgment of an aged woman's deed).

suited to support rules of Evidence.[1] That so many Courts have in so many distinct lines of precedents repulsed the attempts to establish it in one form or another has been due to a general perception that the entire notion has no place in our system. That this is the fundamental reason for the failure of those attempts, and that it is not a question of the unsoundness of a particular set of precedents but of the fallacy of the whole idea, may be seen from the following passages, in which by the most weighty judicial names the maxim is broadly repudiated from the domain of evidence:

1802, KENT, J., in Winton v. Saidler, 3 Johns. Cas. 185, 192: "The maxim 'nemo allegans', etc., is applicable to parties rather than to witnesses, and it goes no more to the exclusion of witnesses in civil than in criminal cases."

1810, CHASE, C. J., in Ringgold v. Tyson, 3 H. & J. 172, 176: "[The rule of Walton v. Shelly] is acknowledged to be a rule of policy, and adopted by the Court in that case in conformity to a maxim of the civil law, 'Nemo allegans suam turpitudinem est audiendus.' This as a rule of evidence was unknown in the common-law Courts in England prior to that case. . . . Unquestionably the rule in Walton v. Shelly cannot prevail as a general rule, because, in the cases of wills, deeds, and bonds, the witnesses to them may be examined to impeach their validity, — in the first case, to prove the insanity of the testator; in the second case, to prove the deed was not sealed or delivered; and in the third case, to prove the bond was given on an usurious consideration, or that the obligor was unlettered and that the bond was not read or was misread to him. The witnesses in these cases by their attestations held out there was no legal objection to them and that they will prove those requisites which are essential to their validity. . . . An accomplice is a legal and competent witness against the principal, and in giving testimony must declare his own turpitude and participation in the crime, which is a circumstance that [only] impeaches his credit. The maxim of the civil law, when considered with reference to the common law, may be understood as affecting the credit of the witness and declaring that he stands in that predicament which renders his testimony suspicious and that he ought to be heard with caution."

1814, TRUMBULL, J., in Townsend v. Bush, 1 Conn. 260, 267: "The maxim of the civil law that no man is to be heard who alleges his own turpitude or crime was never by any Court or judge before Lord Mansfield applied to the inadmissibility of a witness, but only to the rights of the parties in a suit or action. No suitor can support a claim in which the ground or consideration is an unlawful act of his own, nor can any defendant be heard on a defence grounded on his own unlawful act. But an accomplice in a crime, fraud, or any illegal transaction was always an admissible witness, unless immediately interested in the suit." SWIFT, J.: "Lord Mansfield, who had borrowed many valuable principles from the civil law and incorporated them with the common law, attempts to support his decision by what he says is a maxim of the civil law, 'Nemo allegans suam turpitudinem est audiendus.' But there is no such rule to be found in the civil law as applicable to witnesses; and it is the daily practice in the common law courts to admit witnesses to testify to facts which show they have been parties to trespasses, frauds, and crimes."

1817, NOTT, J., in Knight v. Packard, 3 McCord 71, 77: "The great objection that a person shall not be allowed to develop his own shame appears to me to be founded on mistaken principles. It is not a question whether a party shall be permitted to take advantage of his own wrong, but whether a witness may not be required or permitted to disclose a fraud although he may have been a party to it. How far such a circumstance may go to affect the credit of the witness is a distinct question. I am not aware of any rule or law which renders a witness incompetent on account of his having committed a fraud, unless he has been convicted in a court of justice of perjury or some infamous crime."

§ 531. [1] For a discussion of the maxim in its proper application to estoppels in substantive law, see Baker v. Preston, Gilmer 235 (1821); Laurenson v. State, 7 H. & J. 339 (1826).

1825, GREEN, J., in Taylor v. Beck, 3 Rand. 316, 341, 344: "The meaning of the maxim is that a man alleging his own turpitude impairs his own credit more or less, according to the degree and nature of the turpitude; and in this sense it is universally true, as a sensible rule for testing the degree of credit to which a witness is entitled; but has no application to the question of competency or incompetency. . . . The rule as to exclusion for infamy never, until the case of Walton v. Shelly, varied or was doubted. It was confined to cases of conviction for an infamous crime. Before that case, a witness was not rendered incompetent in any case, civil or criminal, by giving evidence of his own fraud, embezzlement, perjury, or felony."

1876, FIELD, J., in Davis v. Brown, 94 U. S. 423: "The maxim was plainly misapplied here by the great Chief Justice [Mansfield]; for it is not a rule of evidence, but a rule applicable to parties seeking to enforce rights founded upon illegal or criminal considerations. The meaning of the maxim is that no one shall be heard in a court of justice to allege his own turpitude as a foundation of a claim or right; it does not import that a man shall not be heard who testifies to his own turpitude or crimininality, however much his testimony may be discredited by his character."

SUB-TITLE I (continued): TESTIMONIAL QUALIFICATIONS

TOPIC II: EXPERIENTIAL CAPACITY

CHAPTER XXII.

1. General Principles

2. Rules for Particular Subjects of Experience

1. General Principles

§ 555. General Theory of Experiential Capacity; Expertness is Relative to the Particular Topic. That sort of capacity which involves, not the organic powers, moral and mental, requisite for all testimony, nor yet the emotional power of unbiassed observation and statement, but the skill to acquire accurate conceptions, may be termed Experiential Capacity. The person possessing it is commonly termed Expert.

Since upon some matters accurate understanding can never be attained without special preparation or familiarity, the rules of Evidence must recognize this, and must see to it that the testimonial statements offered as representing knowledge are not offered by persons who on the subject in hand are not fitted to acquire knowledge. Such fitness or skill to acquire accurate impressions comes from circumstances which may broadly be summed up in the term "experience." If, at the one extreme, be imagined the babe in arms, practically lacking in any such skill or fitness, and, at the other extreme, the trained professional student of a department of science, in whom the fitness exists in the highest degree, it is seen that this attribution of the source of the fitness to "experience" is sufficiently accurate for purposes of nomenclature.

In experience, then, are included all the processes — the continual use of the faculties, the habit and practice of an occupation, special study, professional training, and the rest — which contribute to produce a fitness to acquire accurate knowledge upon a given subject.

Three fundamental principles, involved in the very nature of this sort of capacity, are to be noted:

(1) The capacity is in every case a relative one, i.e. relative to the topic about which the person is asked to make his statement. The object is to be sure that the question to the witness will be answered by a person who is fitted to answer it. His fitness, then, is a fitness to answer on that point. He may be fitted to answer about countless other matters, but that does not justify accepting his views in the matter in hand. Conversely, if he is skilled enough to acquire knowledge on the matters in hand, it is immaterial that he is not skilled upon any or every other matter.

(2) It follows that there are no fixed classes of expert persons, in which a witness finds himself and remains permanently. A person may be sufficiently skilled upon one question, and totally unskilled upon the next. He may be competent to say whether the deceased had gray hair, and incompetent to say what killed the deceased; competent to say whether the deceased was asphyxiated, and incompetent to distinguish between coal-gas and water-gas; competent to say whether a hatchet was sharp, and incompetent to say whether a stain upon it was human blood. Since experiential capacity is always relative to the matter in hand, the witness may, from question to question, enter or leave the class of persons fitted to answer, and the distinction depends on the kind of subject primarily, not on the kind of person. It is thus, a mistake to think of experiential qualifications as sharply marked off into defined classes.[1] Since the change of a trifling feature in the general fact asked about may render the competent witness now incompetent, it is obvious that an accurate classification of topics with reference to experiential qualifications would involve divisions and subdivisions too numerous to conceive, and not of practical use.

(3) Again, it is misleading to think of some witnesses as experts and others as non-experts. In a strict sense, every witness whosoever is an expert. In other words, the very fact that he is allowed to speak at all assumes that he is fitted to have knowledge on the subject; though in the vast majority of matters no demonstration of his fitness is needed. It is common and not unnatural to confine the term "experts" to witnesses whose fitness, by reason of the subject-matter, needs to be first shown; but while there is, as will be seen, a practical distinction between the instances in which the fitness must be expressly shown and the instances in which it need not be, that is no reason for ignoring the fundamental principle that every witness whosoever is and must be, by hypothesis, fitted or "expert" in the matter about which he is allowed to give his supposed knowledge. In particular, it is a mistake to suppose that an " expert " must be a person professionally occupied upon the matter to be testified to. This is a mistake having its special origin in the doctrine of Opinion evidence, and can there better be considered (post, § 1923). It is sufficient here to note that the only requirement is that the witness must be fitted to acquire knowledge on the matter he speaks about; and, if he is thus fitted, that it is entirely immaterial whether he acquired his fitness by being professionally concerned in such matters.

§ 555. [1] This principle is expressly approved by Powers, J., in Conley v. Portland G. L. Co., 99 Me. 57, 58 Atl. 61 (1904).

§ 556. Different Kinds of Expert Capacity. Although (as just noted) there is no difference in principle between what may be termed the highest and the lowest expert, and though the single and uniform principle is that every witness must be sufficiently experienced for the matter in hand, yet it is possible and necessary in practice to distinguish two broad groups of matters with reference to experiential capacity. Between these two the distinction constantly becomes a question of law, because of reasons of practical convenience.

First, there is that class of matters as to which a sufficient experience is possessed by every person of ordinary fortunes in life, — the kind of skill in the ordinary use of the senses which is developed necessarily, in the course of the daily doings, for every mature member of society. To every one who is intelligent enough to take the witness stand at all is attributed a sufficient kind and degree of skill upon these matters. Hence, as the important practical consequence, no express preliminary evidence of the possession of skill in these matters is necessary. The opponent may by cross-examination expose its meagre quantity or poor quality; but that it exists in a sufficient degree in every one upon such matters is taken for granted.

Secondly, there is that class of matters as to which it is only by means of some special and peculiar experience, more than is the common possession, that a person becomes competent to acquire knowledge. Hence, the possession of this cannot be assumed, for an individual witness, but must be expressly shown beforehand.

This special and peculiar experience may have been attained, so far as legal rules go, in any way whatever; all the law requires is that it should have been attained. Yet it is possible here to group roughly two classes of experience which are usually, though not necessarily, found separately. (a) There is, first, an "occupational" experience, — the kind which is obtained casually and incidentally, yet steadily and adequately, in the course of some occupation or livelihood. From the advertising-agent to the woodchopper there is a long list of occupations in any one of which, and perhaps in that alone, the fitness will be obtained to acquire knowledge on a particular topic. (b) There is, secondly, a systematic training, directed deliberately to the acquisition of fitness and involving the study of a body of knowledge forming a branch of some science or art. This may be termed "scientific" experience. Now the line, if any can be drawn, between these two has no general legal significance. In truth no accurate line can be drawn. Each shades into the other imperceptibly. In some instances the witness will need both; in some instances he may have both, though he does not need both. Neither is generally favored above the other by the Courts. The question in each instance is whether the particular witness is fitted as to the matter in hand. On many points the nature of the subject is such that a scientific training is indispensable; but rulings requiring it made no general discrimination between the two sources of fitness; they simply apply the general principle and require the particular sort of experience which fits the witness to acquire knowledge on the particular matter: [1]

1888, CAMPBELL, J., in Kelley v. Richardson, 69 Mich. 436, 37 N. W. 514: "The phrase 'expert testimony' is not entirely fortunate as designed to cover all cases where a witness may give his opinions. . . . [First, as to impressions of cold or heat, and the like,] any person can give such impressions without special experience or special intelligence. Beyond these every-day matters, known to all men, are things which most, if not all persons can become qualified to judge by more or less opportunities of observation, local or habitual, but which require no peculiar intelligence. [Secondly,] then, there are branches of business or occupations where some intelligence is requisite for judgment, but opportunities and habits of observation must be combined with some practical experience. This seems to be the beginning or lower grade of what may properly be termed 'experts', — a word meaning only the acquisition of certain habits of judgment, based on experience or special observation. And the scale rises as the qualifications become nicer and require greater capacity or knowledge and experience, until it reaches scientific observers and practitioners in arts and sciences requiring peculiar and thorough special training."

The fundamental principle, that every witness whatsoever must be expert in the matter he speaks about, is not violated by the recognition of these two broad classes above. That principle is invariable. But the distinction between the two classes stands upon the practical consideration that, in matters of the first class, the skill or capacity, being that which the ordinary course of life furnishes, may be assumed to be possessed by every person offered as a witness and need not be shown beforehand; while in matters of the second class, the skill or capacity required being attainable only by an experience special, peculiar, and out of the ordinary, the possession of that experience by any person who is to speak on that point must first be expressly shown. The distinction is entirely practical, and is in principle sound and simple.

It thus comes about that the rulings of Courts applying the requirements of Admissibility for experiential capacity are broadly of two general sorts, answering the questions:

1. On what matters is that general experience, common to every member of the community, a sufficient qualification?

2. When something more than this general experience is necessary, what shall the requirements be, as to such special experience, for the particular matter to be testified to?

§ 556. [1] Approved in the following cases: 1916, Brantly, C. J., in De Sandro v. Missoula L. & W. Co. 52 Mont. 333, 157 Pac. 641 (caving of a ditch); 1907, Crosby v. Wells, 73 N. J. L. 790, 67 Atl. 295 (an oil-driller); 1909, Crosby v. Portland R. Co., 53 Or. 496, 100 Pac. 300.

More briefly put: 1. On a particular topic, is general experience sufficient? 2. If not, what sort of special experience is necessary?

The rules of law under these two topics form the legitimate subject of the present principle.[2] But before examining these rules, it is desirable to discriminate two other principles which have no bearing on the present subject, but are apt to be improperly associated with it.

§ 557. Opinion Rule, distinguished. There is a rule of Evidence (post, § 1918) which excludes, on the ground of superfluity, testimony which speaks to the jury on matters for which all the materials for judgment are already before the jury. This testimony is excluded simply because, being useless, it involves an unnecessary consumption of time and a cumbersome addition to the mass of testimony. In the majority of instances the testimony thus excluded will consist of an " opinion " by the witness, i.e. a judgment or inference from other facts, as premises, and it will be excluded because the other facts are already or may be brought sufficiently before the tribunal. If they are not or cannot be, then the witness' judgment or inference will be listened to. Thus, it will often depend on the special qualifications of the witness whether he can add anything valuable which the jury have not already for themselves. When, for example, the size and appearance of a skull-fracture has been testified to, the witness, if he is a person of only ordinary experience, cannot tell any better than the jury can whether the fracture is such as to have necessarily caused death; while, if he is a medical man, he is capable of adding considerably to the jury's information on that point. In the former case, his judgment, or "opinion", would be excluded; in the latter case, it would be listened to.

Thus, in applying this rule about the superfluity of opinions, the experiential Qualifications of the witness will be material; and it is because for that rule of law as well as for the present one the question of experiential qualifications is important, that there has often been a confusion of the two subjects. That there are two distinct subjects involved is not always seen. That they are distinct is certain. It is easy to see how in practice the result of the ruling upon the evidence may be very different according to the principle which is being applied. For example, suppose it is desired to show that certain stains on a garment are blood-stains. In applying the principle of testimonial expert qualifications, all that is asked is whether the witness, as a person of general experience only, is competent to distinguish blood-stains from other marks. Assume it to be decided that he is; then there comes to be applied the other principle as to the superfluity of opinions which the jury themselves have the material for forming. Here, if the garment is before the jury, the witness' opinion, as a layman, is superfluous (unless perhaps he saw it when the stains were fresher), and will be excluded. Yet, if the witness is specially experienced in such matters, he may be able to add something to the jury's information, even with the garment before their eyes; and he will therefore be listened to. Again, suppose it is a question whether the distance between two points is a rod or a mile. If the jury have seen the place, no help from any one, however expert a surveyor, is needed; and if they have not seen it and cannot, a person of ordinary experience is as useful as a surveyor. But if the issue is whether the distance is eighty rods or seventy-nine rods, then even if the jury cannot see it, and help is needed, the principle of experiential qualifications would perhaps make it necessary to call a surveyor.

[2] From the point of view of logic and psychology as applicable to argument before the jury (not the rules of Admissibility), see the materials collected in the present author's "Principles of Judicial Proof, as given by Logic, Psychology, and General Experience, and illustrated in Judicial Trials" (1913), §§ 220–231.

Thus, it is essential that the doctrine of Experiential Qualifications should not be confounded with the doctrine of superfluous Opinion evidence. Each has its legitimate rules, and both often may come into doubt with reference to the same piece of evidence; but they must be kept separate. The whole law of "opinion evidence", so called, may be and might well be modified or abolished; but that would not affect in the slightest the sound doctrine of experiential qualifications. Practically, the best plan for the advocate is to test each piece of evidence (if it seems to involve these doctrines) by asking himself the two distinct questions: first, Is this a matter upon which this witness is sufficiently qualified by experience? and, if it is, next, Is this a matter upon which the jury are or may be so well furnished with information that this witness cannot help them appreciably?

§ 558. Experience, and Observation or Knowledge, distinguished. It has been seen (ante, § 478), that Observation, or Knowledge, of the matter to be testified to is one of the essential elements of testimonial qualifications; its rules are examined elsewhere in detail (post, § 650). Here it is to be noted that, in practice, the line between Experience and Observation may sometimes be indistinguishable. It is not that there is any doubt about either being indispensable; that cannot be. It is merely that the circumstances which supply the one often supply the other also; and so the rule which requires or permits a witness of a certain sort to be accepted cannot in such a case be classified as belonging exclusively or certainly under the one or the other principle. This situation arises often with reference to value-witnesses. A ruling, for instance, that knowledge of sales in the vicinity is sufficient to qualify a value-witness, — is it a ruling as to experience or as to knowledge? The uncertainty arises from the fact that observation or knowledge of a thing involves, in these instances, two elements: acquaintance with the object or article itself, and acquaintance with the class of things into which it is desired to put the object. For example, knowledge of the value of a horse involves, first, a knowledge of the values of the different grades of horses, and, secondly, knowledge of the appearance and qualities of the particular horse, and the operation of estimating its value consists in comparing it with the several possible classes or grades and then placing it in one of them. It follows that the observation or knowledge necessary in such cases is twofold, — knowledge of values generally or the conditions affecting values, and knowledge of the thing to be valued. The same twofold process is necessary also in witnesses to identity or resemblance; for the witness must be acquainted with both the thing to be identified and the thing with which the identification is to be made or denied.

Now in this twofold qualification as to knowledge there is in itself involved nothing as to experiential qualifications. But the question may arise whether or not special experiential qualifications are not necessary for acquiring this knowledge of a class of things; and it is here that the practical difficulty of treatment begins. Suppose, for example, a witness is called to the identification of handwriting. Here, as has been already noted (ante, § 99), the process consists in first determining the generic features of a given person's handwriting and then affirming or denying that the piece of writing in issue belongs within that type of writing. Now suppose that testimony to the genuineness of bank-notes is offered on this point from a bank-cashier and a merchant. It will certainly be necessary to show the witness' knowledge of the class, i.e. the genuine notes, by evidence that he has handled and is familiar with the genuine notes; this is purely a question of his opportunities for knowledge of the class. But the further question may arise whether, in spite of such frequent opportunities by handling the notes, the merchant has sufficient skill to form a trustworthy opinion about the genuineness of notes as a class; and here a Court might insist on the witness possessing the peculiar skill which, for example, a cashier would have. Again, suppose a ruling that in order to testify to the value of real property it is or is not necessary that the witness should be a dealer in real estate; is this a ruling as to experiential capacity? It may be looked upon in that way, as holding that special experience is or is not necessary in order to be capable of acquiring intelligent knowledge about such values. On the other hand, it may be looked upon merely as determining that a full and accurate knowledge of such values (i.e. the classes or grades into one of which the property is to be placed) can or cannot be obtained exclusively by one whose occupation gives him a full survey of the field. In the former view, we are establishing a special experiential capacity as necessary; in the latter view, we require no special capacity, but insist on full opportunities for observing the class of things in question. Now the Court may in its opinion reveal which of these views it had in mind; but so seldom is this done and so commonly does the decision furnish merely the rule of thumb, without the principle, that it is practically out of the question to distinguish the two topics in the rulings. So, too, the rulings that (for example) a merchant who has handled genuine bank-notes may be a witness to genuineness are so closely connected in their practical bearings with the rulings about experts' qualifications that it is difficult to treat them separately.

In dealing, then, with the subject of expert qualifications as to values, and a few other topics, it will be desirable to examine all the rulings under the head of Knowledge or Observation (post, §§ 687–722), without attempting to distinguish sharply between principles which have not been expressly discriminated by the Courts.

§ 559. First Question: Is General or Ordinary Experience sufficient? The first of the two questions (ante, § 556) to be asked in applying the present principle is, whether, for a particular subject of testimony, the general or ordinary experience of a layman is sufficient. Here a warning needs to be sounded, at the outset, against the too noticeable tendency to be over-strict, and to insist upon special accomplishments, where justice would be better served by a laxer attitude. The witness is not the juror. He does not decide the issue; he merely furnishes a small contribution to the material for decision. He should not be required to qualify as if he were a final arbiter of facts. A stand must be taken, sooner or later, against the undue extension of the topics upon which special experience is to be required for testifying:

1866, PORTER, J., in People v. Gonzalez, 35 N. Y. 62: "The affairs of life are too pressing and manifold to have everything reduced to absolute certainty, even in the administration of justice. Some reliance must be placed in the intelligence and good faith of witnesses and the judgment and discrimination of jurors. Microscopes, chemists, and men of science are not always at hand; and criminals are neither anxious to court observation nor careful to preserve the evidences of their guilt."

Can any general canon be employed, in determining whether the topic is one upon which special experience shall be required? The following may be suggested: No special experience shall be required unless the matter to be testified to is one upon which it would clearly be presumptuous, under the circumstances of the case, for a person of only ordinary experience to assume to trust his senses, for the purposes of his own action in the ordinary serious affairs of life.[1]

§ 560. Second Question: What Special Experience is Necessary? (1) Qualification must be Expressly Shown. If for a particular topic the foregoing question is answered in the negative, and special experience is held to be necessary, the second question then presents itself: What sort of special experience is necessary? This will sometimes permit of a general rule, — as when it is laid down that a medical practitioner need not be a specialist in insanity to form an opinion on that subject. Whatever general rules of this sort have been vouchsafed are dealt with under the various topics of testimony (post, §§ 564–571). But commonly there can be no such general propositions for the topic at large. The decision must be a concrete one, i.e. upon the fitness of the individual witness, as shown by the circumstances of his experience.

Here two rules of method come into application: (1) The possession of the required qualifications by a particular person offered as a witness, must be § 559. [1] Compare the following: 1875, Endicott, J., in Com. v. Sturtivant, 117 Mass. 122: "[The condition is that] the facts upon which the witness is called on to express his opinion are such as men in general are capable of comprehending and understanding"; La. C. Pa. 1870, § 442 ("Experts may be appointed whenever the Court deems them necessary in order to obtain information or at the request of the parties to the suit").

expressly shown by the party offering him. This follows from the nature of the situation (ante, § 556), and is universally conceded.[1] It marks a contrast between this and the foregoing sorts of testimonial capacity (ante, § 484).

§ 561. Same: (2) Discretion of the Trial Court. (2) Secondly, and emphatically, the trial Court must be left to determine, absolutely and without review, the fact of possession of the required qualification by a particular witness. In most jurisdictions it is repeatedly declared that the decision upon the experiential qualifications of witnesses should be left to the determination of the trial Court.[1]

§ 560. [1] It is therefore seldom expressly ruled upon: 1879, State v. Secrest, 80 N. C. 450, 457; 1867, State v. Ward, 39 Vt. 225, 236; and the cases cited post, § 654, n. 1 (knowledge qualifications).

This was not allowed to be insisted on in Bishop Atterbury's Trial, 16 How. St. Tr. 494 (1723), but merely because the interest of the State demanded the preservation of the secrecy of such methods (post, § 2367).

§ 561. [1] CANADA: 1888, Preeper v. R., 15 Can. Sup. 401, 408, 410.

UNITED STATES: Federal: 1888, Stillwell Mfg. Co. v. Phelps, 130 U. S. 527, 9 Sup. 601; 1894, Union P. R. Co. v. Novak, 15 U. S. App. 400, 414, 9 C. C. A. 629, 61 Fed. 573; 1902, Bradford Glycerine Co. v. Kizer, 51 C. C. A. 524, 113 Fed. 895; 1908, Inland & S. C. Co. v. Tolson, 139 U. S. 551, 559, 11 Sup. 653; 1891, Chateaugay O. & I. Co. v. Blake, 144 U. S. 476, 484, 12 Sup. 731; 1913, Matheson v. U. S., 227 U. S. 540, 33 Sup. 355 (trial judge's discretion); 1916, Chautauqua Institution v. Zimmerman, 6th C. C. A., 233 Fed. 371 (magazine subscription lists);
Alabama: 1900, Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Sandlin, 125 Ala. 585, 28 So. 40; 1902, White v. State, 133 Ala. 122, 32 So. 139; 1905, Braham v. State, 143 Ala. 28, 38 So. 919; 1910, Stewart v. Sloss-Sheffield S. & I. Co., 170 Ala. 544, 54 So. 48; 1918, Hamilton v. Cranford Mercantile Co., 201 Ala. 403, 78 So. 401 (building destroyed by fire);
Arkansas: 1882, Hunnicutt v. Kirkpatrick, 39 Ark. 172;
California: 1880, Sowden v. Quartz Mining Co., 55 Cal. 451;
Columbia (Dist.): 1895, Lansburgh v. Wimsott, 7 D. C. App. 271, 274; 1905, Hamilton v. U. S., 26 D. C. App. 382, 391 (medical men); 1917, Washington R. & E. Co. v. Clark, 46 D. C. App. 89, 98;
Connecticut: 1897, State v. Main, 69 Conn. 123, 37 Atl. 80; 1898, Hygeia D. W. Co. v. Hygeia I. Co., 70 Conn. 516, 40 Atl. 534; 1900, Barber v. Manchester, 72 Conn. 675, 45 Atl. 1014; 1915, Coffin v. Laskan, 89 Conn. 325, 94 Atl. 370 (value); 1921, Richmond v. Norwich, 96 Conn. 582, 115 Atl. 11 (sound of gunshots);
Delaware: 1916, Manda, Inc. v. Delaware L. & W. R. Co., 89 N. J. L. 327, 98 Atl. 467 (land condemnation);
Florida: 1902, Davis v. State, 44 Fla. 32, 32 So. 822; 1904, Schley v. State, 48 Fla. 53, 37 So. 518;
Hawaii: 1919, Kamahalo v. Coelho, 24 Haw. 689, 695;
Illinois: 1921, People v. Sawhill, 299 Ill. 393, 132 N. E. 477 (accountant);
Indiana: 1886, Fort Wayne v. Coombs, 107 Ind. 85, 7 N. E. 743 (conclusive, unless there is no evidence at all of qualifications, or a palpable abuse of discretion); 1895, Jenney Electric Co. v. Branham, 145 Ind. 314, 41 N. E. 448; 1915, Eckman v. Funderberg, 183 Ind. 208, 108 N. E. 577 (insanity);
Maine: 1883, Higgins v. Higgins, 75 Me. 346; 1885, Fayette v. Chesterville, 77 Me. 33 ("in extreme cases, where a serious mistake has been committed through some accident, inadvertence, or misconception, his action may be reviewed"); 1888, State v. Thompson, 80 Me. 200, 13 Atl. 892; 1896, Marston v. Dingley, 88 Me. 546, 34 Atl. 414 ("unless it is made clearly to appear from the evidence that it was not justified or that it was based upon some error in law"); 1904, Conley v. Portland G. L. Co., 99 Me. 57, 58 Atl. 61;
Maryland: 1909, State v. Flanigan, 111 Md. 481, 74 Atl. 818; 1919, Newkirk v. State, 134 Md. 310, 106 Atl. 694 (murder: qualifications of witness to experiments with a gun);
Massachusetts: 1850, Lincoln v. Barre, 5 Cush. 591; 1858, Quinsigamond Bank v. Hobbs, 11 Gray 257; 1860, Marcy v. Barnes, 16 Gray 164; 1869, Swan v. Middlesex, 101 Mass. 177; 1869, Gossler v. Refinery, 103 Mass. 335; 1870, Com. v. Williams, 105 Mass. 68; 1874, Tucker v. Railroad, 118 Mass. 548; 1875, Lawrence v. Boston, 119 Mass. 132; 1882, Perkins v. Stickney, 132 Mass. 217 ("conclusive, unless it appears upon the evidence to be erroneous or to have been founded upon some error in law"); 1883, Com. v. Nefus, 135 Mass. 554; 1885, Campbell v. Russell, 139 Mass. 279, 1 N. E. 345; 1887, Warren v. Water Co., 143 Mass. 164, 9 N. E. 527; 1880, Hill v. Home Ins. Co., 129 Mass. 349; 1888, Lowell v. Com'rs, 146 Mass. 412, 16 N. E. 8; 1895, Amory v. Melrose, 162 Mass. 556, 39 N. E. 276; 1895, Com. v. Hall, 164 Mass. 152, 41 N. E. 133; 1901, Toland v. Paine F. Co., 179 Mass. 501, 61 N. E. 52; 1901, Bowen v. R. Co., 179 Mass. 524, 61 N. E. 141; 1903, White v. McPherson, 183 Mass. 533, 67 N. E. 643; 1904, Muskeget Island Club v.

Just how far this extends in each jurisdiction is difficult to say. In some, the ruling is not reviewable at all; in others, it is reviewable on certain con-

Nantucket, 185 Mass. 303, 70 N. E. 61 (conclusive unless "erroneous in law"); 1910, Martin v. Boston & N. St. R. Co., 205 Mass. 16, 91 N. E. 159 (but where the qualifying facts are undisputed, the upper Court may review); 1909, Carroll v. Boston Elev. R. Co., 200 Mass. 527, 86 N. E. 793; 1912, Com. v. Spencer, 212 Mass. 438, 99 N. E. 266 (physician); 1917, Boutlier v. Malden, 226 Mass. 479, 116 N. E. 251 (time of death); 1921, Cook v. Fall River, Mass., 131 N. E. 346 (hospital site);
Michigan: 1879, McEwen v. Bigelow, 40 Mich. 217; 1883, Ives v. Leonard, 50 Mich. 299, 15 N. W. 463, semble;
Minnesota: 1896, Blondel v. R. Co., 66 Minn. 284, 66 N. W. 1079; 1897, Beckett v. Aid Assoc., 67 Minn. 298, 69 N. W. 923; 1900, Backus v. Ames, 79 Minn. 145, 81 N. W. 766; 1901, Yorks v. Mooberg, 84 Minn. 502, 87 N. W. 115; 1905, Corse & Co. v. Minnesota Grain Co., 94 Minn. 331, 102 N. W. 728; 1905, Paterson v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 95 Minn. 57, 103 N. W. 621; 1916, Olthoff v. Great Northern R. Co., 135 Minn. 73, 160 N. W. 206 (speed of a train);
Missouri: 1896, Helfenstein v. Medart, 136 Mo. 595, 36 S. W. 863;
Nebraska: 1900, Missouri P. R. Co. v. Fox, 60 Nebr. 531, 83 N. W. 744; 1901, Omaha L. & T. Co. v. Douglas Co., 62 id. 1, 86 N. W. 936; 1903, Schmuck v. Hill, — Nebr. —, 96 N. W. 158; 1915, Meyers v. Western Union Tel. Co., 98 Nebr. 471, 153 N. W. 558 (value of cattle);
New Hampshire: 1860, Jones v. Tucker, 41 N. H. 549 (Doe, J.: "whether a witness has a special and peculiar knowledge is as much a question of fact as the question whether a search is diligent and thorough"); 1870, Dole v. Johnson, 50 N. H. 459; 1872, Ellingwood v. Bragg, 52 N. H. 490; 1881, Goodwin v. Scott, 61 N. H. 114; 1888, Carpenter v. Hatch, 64 N. H. 576, 15 Atl. 219; 1919, State v. Killeen, 79 N. H. 201, 107 Atl. 601 (handwriting);
New Jersey: 1896, New Jersey Z. & I. Co. v. L. Z. & I. Co., 59 N. J. L. 189, 35 Atl. 915; 1904, State v. Arthur, 70 N. J. L. 425, 57 Atl. 156; 1904, Burns v. Del. & A. T. & T. Co., 70 N. J. L. 745, 59 Atl. 220; 1906, State v. Monich, 74 N. J. L. 522, 64 Atl. 1016 ("if there be any legal evidence to support the finding" of admissibility, this suffices); 1916, State v. Mandelville, 88 N. J. L. 418, 96 Atl. 398 (analytical chemist, testifying on a charge of giving drugs to cause miscarriage); 1920, Leonard v. Standard Aero Co., 95 N. J. L. 235, 112 Atl. 252;
New York: 1877, Nelson v. Ins. Co., 71 N. Y. 460, semble; 1888, Slocovich v. Ins. Co., 108 N. Y. 62, 14 N. E. 802;
North Carolina: 1879, Flynt v. Bodenhamer, 80 N. C. 205; 1886, State v. Cole, 94 N. C. 964 (explaining State v. Parish, Busbee 239; State v. Secrest, 80 N. C. 450); 1895, Blue v. R. Co., 117 N. C. 644, 23 S. E. 275 (collecting previous rulings); 1900, Geer v. Durham W. Co., 127 N. C. 439, 37 S. E. 474; 1903, State v. Wilcox, 132 N. C. 1120, 44 S. E. 625; 1920, State v. Gray, 180 N. C. 697, 104 S. E. 647 (speed of automobile);
Oklahoma: 1913, Atchison T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Baker, 37 Okl. 48, 130 Pac. 577 (emergency brakes);
Oregon: 1900, Farmers' & T. N. Bank v. Woodell, 38 Or. 294, 61 Pac. 837; 1902, Ruckman v. Lumber Co., 42 Or. 231, 70 Pac. 811; 1906, State v. White, 48 Or. 416, 87 Pac. 137; 1909, Crosby v. Portland R. Co., 53 Or. 496, 100 Pac. 300;
Pennsylvania: 1869, Ardesco Oil Co. v. Gilson, 63 Pa. 152; Sorg v. Congregation, 63 Pa. 161; 1871, Delaware & C. Towboat Co. v. Starrs, 69 Pa. 41; 1884, First Nat'l Bank v. Wirebach's Ex'r, 106 Pa. 44; 1902, Stevenson v. Ebervale Coal Co., 203 Pa. 316, 52 Atl. 201;
Rhode Island: 1860, Howard v. Providence, 6 R. I. 514; 1863, Sarle v. Arnold, 7 id. 586; 1903, Ennis v. Little, 25 R. I. 342, 55 Atl. 884; 1912, Eastman v. Dunn, 34 R. I. 416, 83 Atl. 1057 (value witness);
South Dakota: 1905, Borneman v. Chicago, St. P. M. & O. R. Co., 19 S. D. 459, 104 N. W. 208; Tennessee: 1891, Powers v. McKenzie, 90 Tenn. 181, 16 S. W. 559; 1897, Bruce v. Beall, 99 Tenn. 303, 41 S. W. 445;
Utah: 1897, Wright v. S. P. Co., 15 Utah, 421, 49 Pac. 309; 1899, State v. Webb, 18 Utah, 441, 56 Pac. 159; 1901, Budd v. R. Co., 23 Utah 515, 65 Pac. 486; 1902, Garr v. Craney, 25 Utah 193, 70 Pac. 853;
Vermont: 1874, Wright v. Williams' Estate, 47 Vt. 232 ("so long as the evidence or facts do not constitute or conclusively show skill, and such skill is matter of fact to be inferred from such evidence or facts, the finding of the Court is not revisable in that respect as being error in law"); 1885, Lamoille Valley R. Co. v. Bixby, 57 Vt. 563; Carpenter v. Corinth, 58 Vt. 216, 2 Atl. 170; 1886, Bemis v. R. Co., 58 Vt. 641, 3 Atl. 531; 1901, Watriss v. Trendall, 74 Vt. 54, 52 Atl. 118;
Virginia: 1897, Richmond L. & M. W. v. Ford, 94 Va. 616, 27 S. E. 509; 1905, Virginia I. C. & C. Co. v. Tomlinson, 104 Va. 249, 51 S. E. 362; 1909, Hot Springs L. M. Co. v. Revercomb, 110 Va. 240, 65 S. E. 557;
Washington: 1902, Czarecki v. R. & N. Co., 30 Wash. 288, 70 Pac. 750; 1913, Bogart v. Pitchless L. Co., 72 Wash. 417, 130 Pac. 490 (lumbering).

Whether on voir dire cross-examination should be allowed is for the trial Court in its discretion to decide: 1916, People v. Kimbrough, 193 Mich. 330, 159 N. W. 533.

ditions; in others, the matter is left "largely" to the trial Court's discretion. But the language of the principle varies in different opinions; and, in practice, the rulings below are constantly reconsidered above, under the guise of ascertaining whether the "discretion" has been "abused." But the reform of the future will find in this principle the nucleus for a beneficent extension of the doctrine of judicial discretion (ante, § 16). Looking at the complication of facts often entering into a witness' competency and best understood by the trial judge alone, — looking at the comparatively trifling character (in relation to all the issues of a trial) of the topics over which controversy arises, — looking at the ample and sure safeguard of cross-examination to reveal the witness' real qualifications, — looking at the injustice of requiring the busy judges of the Supreme Courts to investigate such trifles, — in view of all these considerations, it cannot be doubted that the rule of the future ought to be: The experiential qualifications of a particular witness are invariably determined by the trial judge, and will not be reviewed on appeal.

§ 562. Sundry Principles: (1) Expert Witness Stating his Grounds of Opinion; (2) One Expert testifying to Another's Competency. (1) An expert witness, like any other witness, may be asked on the direct examination, or may be required, to state the grounds of his opinion, i.e. the general data which form the basis of his judgment upon the specific data observed by him. This is merely an application of the general principle of the knowledge-qualification (post, § 655). Distinguish from this the questions whether a hypothetical question may or must be employed (post, § 672); whether an expert witness may be cross-examined or contradicted as to the grounds of his opinion (post, §§ 938, 972, 992); and whether the statements of a patient to a physician may be offered in evidence under the exception to the Hearsay rule (post, § 1720).

(2) The experiential qualifications of a witness are usually established by his own testimony reciting the facts of his career and special experience.[1] But in impeachment of his qualifications (post, § 938), or in support of them when impeached (post, § 1104), the general character of the witness as to experiential competency may be testified to. Here the proof may be made by means of reputation (post, § 1621) or by means of another expert witness' personal opinion (post, § 1984), — methods which raise the distinct questions of the Hearsay rule and the Opinion rule.

§ 563. Method of Securing Unbiassed Experts. Judge's Selection of Experts. (1) Much has been declaimed about the partisanship and consequent untrustworthiness of the usual professional man as an expert witness. But it does not appear that the professional man is more biassed or more corrupt than the ordinary lay witness. It is merely that his bias or pecuniary subserviency, when it is discovered, is in a more marked and unpleasant contrast with that ideal of impartiality and trustworthiness which is naturally associated with abstract scientific truth.[1] So, too, the frequent inconclusiveness, uncertainty, and contradiction of expert testimony are not more radical than the same baffling features in testimony founded on ordinary observation by the layman's senses. They merely disappoint more sharply our usual conceptions of the accuracy of scientific knowledge. It is a question whether either of these popular (and natural) ideals is attainable. But if they may be in any degree approached, it certainly is desirable to improve upon the present method.

§ 562. [1] Cases cited post, § 655; which include also rulings on experiential qualifications.

Of course, the witness is not to decide his own qualifications: 1907, Glover v. State, 129 Ga. 717, 59 S. E. 816 (even where, as in this extraordinary case, he disclaims being an expert).

There are indeed serious difficulties to be met with by any other method, — in particular, the expense, the impracticability of classifying experts, the impropriety of interfering with the parties' voluntary choice, and the difficulty of adopting a fixed rule for all classes of cases and all communities. But the practice under the present method has for years exhibited shortcomings which are lamentable. Extreme cases, of frequent occurrence, [illegible] haken the faith of juries in expert witnesses. Professional men of [illegible] instincts and high scientific standards look upon the witness box as [illegible]lgotha, and disclaim all respect for the law's methods of investigation. By any standard of efficiency, the present method registers itself as a failure, in cases where the slightest pressure is put upon it. The situation being obvious on all hands, there is an extensive literature about it, mostly developed in the medical field.[2]

§ 563. [1] For the psychological elements of strength and of weakness in expert testimony as such, see the materials collected in the present author's "Principles of Judicial Proof" (1913), §§ 220–231.

[2] The literature was partly collected by the author in a list published in Bulletin No. 5, vol. XV, Northwestern University, "List of References on Problems of Contemporary Legislation", 1914, and Supplement, 1920; the following are the principal articles:

J. F. Stephen, "Expert Testimony" (Juridical Society Papers, II, 236).

Willard Bartlett, "Medical Expert Evidence: The Obstacles to Radical Change in the Present System" (American L. Rev., XXXIV, 1).

G. A. Endlich, "Proposed Changes in the Law of Expert Testimony" (Amer. L. Rev., XXXII, 851).

W. L. Foster, "Expert Testimony — Prevalent Complaints and Proposed Remedies" (Harvard L. R., XI, 169).

Learned Hand, "Historical and Practical Considerations Regarding Expert Testimony" (Harv. L. R., XV, 40).

L. A. Emery, "Medical Expert Evidence" (Amer. Law Rev., XXXIX, 481).

S. S. Cohen, "The Proper Scope of Scientific (So-Called Expert) Testimony in Trials Involving Pharmacologic Questions" (id., XXXIX, 187).

Medico-Legal Society, Journal (New York; various articles).

H. N. Somerville, and others (American Lawyer, XV, 309).

Massachusetts Legislature, 1908, Hearing before the Judiciary Committee on Bill of Massachusetts Medical Society.

Michigan Bar Association, Report of Committee (Proceedings of 1905; Judge W. B. Perkins, chairman; containing a bibliography, including articles in medical journals).

Maryland Bar Association, Report of Committee (Proceedings of 1909; containing a summary of arguments, with the text of the laws and proposed bills to date; C. W. Sams, Chairman of Committee).

Persifor Frazer, "Expert Testimony: Its Abuses and Uses" (American Law Register, 1902, XLI, N. S., L. O. S., 87).

Lee M. Friedman, "Expert Testimony: Its Abuses and Reformation" (Yale L. J., XIX, 247).

Journal of Criminal Law and Criminology (Northwestern University Building, Chicago). Vol. 1 and later (various articles).

Edward J. McDermott, "Expert Testimony" (Amer. L. Rev., XLVII, 35).

American Institute of Criminal Law and Criminology, Committee on Insanity and Crime, Edwin R. Keedy, Chairman, Reports of 1913, 1914 (Journal of Crim. Law, V, 643, VI, 672).

American Medical Association, Committee on Expert Testimony, Report of 1914.

Wisconsin Branch of the American Institute of Criminal Law and Criminology, Report of

The problem, however, is much the same in all fields of applied science, some of them merely being more common than others in ordinary trials. Most of the literature is critical and destructive. Few constructive proposals, that are at all feasible, have been made.

(2) The principal feature of the breakdown seems to be the distrust of the expert witness, as one whose testimony is shaped by his bias for the party calling him. That bias itself is due, partly to the special fee which has been paid or promised him, and partly to his prior consultation, with the party and his self-committal to a particular view. His candid scientific opinion thus has had no fair opportunity of expression, or even of formation, swerved as he is by this partisan committal.

The remedy therefore seems to lie in removing this partisan feature, i.e. by bringing him into court free from any committal to either party. Such a status for the expert would indeed not secure perfection. But it can be asserted that no measure can be effective which does not secure such a status for the expert witness.

How can this be done? The essential features, in the abstract, are that the State, not the party, shall be the one to pay his fee, and that the Court, not the party, shall be the one to select and summon him.

(3) The various concrete proposals, based on the foregoing essentials, reduce to three types: (A) One expedient is to substitute an official jury of experts where a scientific fact is in issue. Scientific men, not lawyers, are often found favoring this. But this proposal is wholly impracticable in our country, first, because the jury system constitutionally cannot thus be interfered with;[3] and, secondly, because in virtually all litigation the scientific fact is seldom more than a part of the issue, and therefore cannot be easily segregated for the purpose of being committed to a second and subsidiary jury.

(B) The second type of expedient is the appointment of only official experts as witnesses to take the place of paid partisan experts as witnesses, the latter being abolished. This is equally futile; first, because it interferes with the traditional right of the parties to adduce such evidence as they think useful; and secondly, because it would commit the fate of such issues completely to a body of men who, under certain local political conditions, would be wholly unreliable, and the new state of things would often be worse than the old.

Committee on Procedure, 3d Annual Meeting, 1911 (Journal of Criminal Law, etc., II, 724).

F. L. Ransome, "Geologists as Expert Witnesses" (Economic Geology, XV, 339, 1920).

John H. Gray, "Expert or Opinion Testimony in Rate Valuation Cases" (Utilities Magazine, I, No. 3, Jan. 1916).

[3] It is true that in the Admiralty practice, where skilled assessors are summoned to form a part of the tribunal, special expert nautical witnesses are not permitted to be used by the parties: 1842, The Gazelle, 1 W. Rob. 471; 1907, Bryce v. Canadian Pacific R. Co., 13 N. Br. 96, 108 (citing other cases). But the Court of Admiralty affords no precedent which would be of value for jury trials.

On the other hand, in patent practice, the expert witnesses, nominally so-called, are virtually the retained partisan assistants of counsel, and yet no movement of complaint is made against this method. The reason is the same though converse, viz. that, in the absence of juries, the abuse is not felt.

In short, a method employed in a court without juries is of little value as a precedent, either practically or constitutionally.

(C) The third type of expedient consists in authorizing the Court to call, on any such issue, an expert selected by the judge himself; this expert being merely additional to such experts as the parties may choose to call on their sides.[4] Modest as it seems, this expedient would remove most of the present

[4] The following three drafts of statutes may be taken as typical of the different species based on the above principle:

(1) The first attempt at legislative reform was made in Michigan, by St. 1905, No. 175: Sect. 1, Comp. L. 1915, § 12557: No expert shall receive a sum "in excess of the ordinary witness fees", unless by court order; and to pay or receive such a fee is made a misdemeanor; Sect. 2, § 12558: "No more than three experts shall be allowed to testify on either side as to the same issue in any given case", unless the trial Court permits additional ones; Sect. 3: "In criminal cases for homicide where the issues involve expert knowledge or opinion, the Court shall appoint one or more suitable disinterested persons, not exceeding three, to investigate such issues and testify to the trial"; the compensation is to be paid by the county, "and the fact that such witness or witnesses have been so appointed shall be made known to the jury"; but "this provision shall not preclude either prosecution or defence from using other expert witnesses at the trial"; Sect. 4, § 12559: "This act shall not be applicable to witnesses testifying to the established facts or deductions of science, nor to any other specific facts, but only to witnesses testifying to matters of opinion"). But Section 3 of this statute was held unconstitutional in People v. Dickerson, 164 Mich. 148, 129 N. W. 189; the absurdity of this decision is commented on in § 2484, post (judge's power to summon witnesses).

(2) The Medico-Legal Society of New York, at its March and May meetings (1907), discussed the subject, and the March, June, and September numbers (1907) of the Society's Journal published contributions. A Committee was appointed, under the chairmanship of Chief Justice Emery, of the Maine Supreme Court, to prepare a memorial to the Legislatures of the various States. The following bill was drawn under his advice, and was introduced in the Legislature of Maine: "Section 1. In any case, civil or criminal, in the supreme judicial court, or any superior court, when it appears that questions may arise therein upon which expert or opinion evidence would be admissible, the court, or any justice thereof in vacation, may appoint as examiner one or more disinterested persons qualified as experts upon the questions. The examiner, at the request of either party, or of the court or justice appointing him, shall make such examination and study of the subject matter of the questions as he deems necessary for a full understanding thereof, and such further reasonable pertinent examination as either party shall request. Reasonable notice shall be given each party of physical examination of persons, things and places, and each party may be represented at such examinations. Section 2. At the trial of the case either party or the court may call the examiner as a witness, and if so called he shall be subject to examination and cross-examination as other witnesses. For his time and expenses incurred in the examination and in attending court as a witness he shall be allowed by the court a reasonable sum, to be paid from the county treasury as a part of the court expenses. The court may limit the witnesses to be examined as experts to such number on each side as it shall adjudge sufficient for an understanding of the contention of the parties on the question. Section 3. When upon the trial of any case in either of said courts questions arise upon which expert or opinion evidence is offered, the court may continue the case and appoint an examiner for such questions as provided in Section 1. Section 4. In all cases in said courts where a view by the jury may be allowed, the court, instead thereof, may appoint one or more disinterested persons to make the desired inspection in the manner and under the same rules and restrictions as in the case of a view by the jury. The viewer thus appointed may be called as a witness by either party or by the court, and shall be subject to examination and cross-examination like other witnesses. He shall be allowed by the court a reasonable sum for time and expenses incurred, to be paid by the party asking for the view and taxed in his costs, or to be paid by the county as a part of the court expenses, at the discretion of the court."

(3) The committee on Crime and Insanity, of the American Institute of Criminal Law and Criminology, has prepared the following bill, which offers a platform that should unite general support: "Section 1. Where the existence of mental disease or derangement on the part of any person becomes an issue in the trial of a case, the judge of the trial court may summon one or more disinterested qualified experts, not exceeding three, to testify at the trial. In case the judge shall issue the summons before the trial is begun, he shall notify counsel for both parties of the witnesses so summoned. Upon the trial of the case, the witnesses summoned by the court may be cross-examined by counsel for both parties in the case. Such summoning of witnesses by the court shall not preclude either party from using other expert witnesses at the trial. Section 2. In criminal cases, no testimony regarding the mental condition of the accused shall be received from witnesses summoned by the ac-abuses. As soon as a clash of opinion appeared between the partisan experts, paid by the parties, the jury would turn for its real guidance to the impartial one selected and summoned by the judge, and his conclusions would have an almost decisive weight with the jury. At the same time, there would be no risk of suppressing possible truth by excluding the parties' experts; and the experts called by the parties would in fact be of service in exposing occasionally the errors of the official expert. There are, of course, a few details which would assist this whole process, but are not all essential to it:

(a) The judge's power should be exercised after notice by him to the parties, so as to encourage an agreement upon a selected name;[5] (b) The official expert should be allowed to draw up his statements in the form of a report, and to read this in the first instance as his testimony;[6] (c) The judge should be authorized to require a conference before trial between the Court expert and all the other experts intended to be summoned, so as to reconcile beforehand needless misunderstandings which give to the jury a groundless impression of scientific uncertainty and contradiction; these misunderstandings now develop through the keeping apart of the experts and their open baiting by the opposing counsel on the trial; (d) The official expert should of course be subject to cross-examination, if desired, by the parties (post, § 1371); (e) The State should pay the expert's special fee, where one is demandable (post, § 2203).

How successful can be this type of measure when intelligently and conscientiously administered is demonstrated in one field where it is already in use:

cused until the expert witnesses summoned by the prosecution have been given an opportunity to examine the accused. Section 3. Whenever in the trial of a criminal case the existence of mental disease on the part of the accused, either at the time of the trial or at the time of the commission of the alleged wrongful act, becomes an issue in the case, the judge of the court before which the accused is to be tried or is being tried shall commit the accused to the State Hospital for the Insane, to be detained there for purposes of observation until further order of court. The court shall direct the superintendent of the hospital to permit all the expert witnesses summoned in the case to have free access to the accused for purposes of observation. The court may also direct the chief physician of the hospital to prepare a report regarding the mental condition of the accused. This report may be introduced in evidence at the trial under the oath of said chief physician, who may be cross-examined regarding the report by counsel for both sides. Section 4. Each expert witness may prepare a written report upon the mental condition of the person in question, and such report may be read by the witness at the trial. If the witness presenting the report was called by one of the opposing parties, he may be cross-examined regarding his report by counsel for the other party. If the witness was summoned by the court, he may be cross-examined regarding his report by counsel for both parties. Section 5. Where expert witnesses have examined the person whose mental condition is an element in the case, they may consult with or without the direction of the court, and may prepare a joint report to be introduced at the trial." The Committee's Report has been approved by the Institute (see the citation supra, n. 2).

[5] That the judge has the power to summon a witness, even without express statutory authority, is noted post, § 2484 (judge's power to seek evidence).

[6] Such a report, made in the course of duty, might have been made admissible without calling the witness (post, § 1630), and would have been constitutionally not open to objection (post, § 1389). But here it would be impolitic to dispense with the opportunity for cross-examination.

Assuming therefore that the witness attends and is subject to cross-examination, no principle is violated by permitting him (or them) to read the report, as representing his testimony. This is done in all ordinary cases of a memorandum of past recollection (post, § 734), and the proposed practice is not essentially different. The authorities to this effect are noted post, § 1385.

1920, Dr. Francis D. Donoghue, Medical Adviser to the Massachusetts Industrial Accident Board (Proceedings of the Seventh Annual Meeting of the International Association of Industrial Accident Boards, U. S. Bureau of Labor Statistics, Bulletin No. 281, p. 277): "The medical sections of the law have been amended to provide that the written report of the impartial physician shall be admitted in evidence as a part of the record upon which a board member may base his decision. . . . The following are the sections of the law governing the medical features: 'Examination of employee by physician for board (Part III, section 8). — The industrial accident board or any member thereof may appoint a duly qualified impartial physician to examine the injured employee and to report. . . . The report of the physician shall be admissible in evidence . . . provided that the employer and the insurer have seasonably been furnished with copies thereof.' . . . The work of advising the board on the appointment of impartial physicians is a duty of the [Board's] medical adviser, for the purpose of having a uniform system based on expert knowledge of the requirements of the different cases that arise, and permitting of the selection and training of physicians in a manner that will insure impartial examinations and reports according to the technical requirements of the compensation law. . . . In all cases the aim in selecting physicians is to provide a man whose training and experience fit him to examine and report expertly according to the special features involved in the case, not only as to past disability but as to future treatment. In connection with the assignment of impartial physicians, according to the nature of the case and location, some interest may be attached to a brief statement of the process by which the impartial reports are handled at the office. Upon receipt of impartial reports these are in all cases first read by the medical adviser to make certain that the report properly covers the necessary points involved in the case. Copies are then made and sent to the employee, insurance company, and, in some instances, to other persons who have a direct interest in the case. The impartial examination is not related in any way to the examinations which the insurance company is permitted by law to have performed in its own behalf, by a physician appointed outside the jurisdiction of the board. The impartial examination is to assist the board and the interested parties in obtaining reliable medical opinions which under the law have the weight of being entirely separated from any direct interest in behalf either of the employee or the insurance company . . Probably the greatest factor in the satisfactory carrying out of the Massachusetts law has been its intelligent development along medical lines.

"Eliminating the professional witness. — The old form of controversy, by presenting witnesses for and against the claimant, so that the man's rights depended upon the weight of the evidence presented at a hearing, has been materially modified by the naming of so-called impartial physicians. . . . In the early days of the act, insurance companies and employees did not avail themselves to any large extent of the section in the law providing for the appointment of impartial physicians. This was due chiefly to the fact that the medical policy of the board had not been determined. With the appointment of a medical adviser, in 1914, and the adoption of a medical program providing, in part, for the appointment of specialists as impartial physicians, there was a great increase in the demand for impartial examinations. . . . The great success of the accident board has come from the utilization of the best medical brains in the Commonwealth. Members of the medical profession consider it an honor to serve as impartial examiners and are willing to make some sacrifice fully to preserve this feature of the law."

Legislative progress in the adoption of this type of measure has been slow.[7] But it is inevitably the way of the future.

[7] Compare with the following the statutes admitting certificates of analysis, etc., by experts (post, § 1674): CANADA: Ontario, Rules of Court 1913, No. 268 ("The Court may obtain the assistance of accountants, merchants, engineers, actuaries, and other scientific persons in such way as it thinks fit, the better to enable it to determine any matter in evidence in any cause or proceeding, and may act on the certificate of such person"), and similar provisions for the other provinces, cited post, § 1674.

UNITED STATES: Arizona: St. 1921, c. 131 (personal injuries; like S. D. St. 1921, c. 179); Rhode Island: Gen. L. 1909, c. 292, § 18 ("Any justice of the superior court may, in any cause, civil or criminal, on motion of any party therein, at any time before the trial thereof, appoint one or more disinterested skilled persons, whether they be residents or non-residents, to serve as expert witnesses therein: Provided, that the reasonable fees of such experts, according to the character of the service to be performed, as fixed by such justice, shall be paid by the party moving for such appointment, to the clerk of the court at such time as the justice shall prescribe; and the amount so paid shall form part of the costs in the cause. In criminal cases in the discretion of the court, on request of the defendant, expert witnesses may be furnished for the defendant at the expense of the state, on such terms and conditions as may be prescribed by the court"); § 19 ("Such experts, being first duly sworn before a justice or clerk of the court to make a faithful and impartial examination into the matters and things committed to them, and true report thereon to make according to the best of their knowledge, belief, and understanding, shall thereupon proceed to view and examine such persons, matters, and things, to read and hear such evidence, and in such manner, times, and places, whether by attendance at the trial of such cause or otherwise, and to report their findings, views, and opinions thereon, jointly or severally, orally or in writing, to the court where such cause shall be pending, before or at the trial thereof, in such manner as the justice appointing them, or any justice of the court sitting in the cause, shall prescribe; and such report, if in writing, shall form part of the record of the cause, and shall be produced in evidence at the trial thereof, and such experts shall attend to such trial until excused by the court: Provided, that any party to the cause may call and examine, or cross-examine, any such expert at the trial as to the matters, persons, things, views, findings, and opinions contained, mentioned, or referred to in any such report, without further summons");

South Dakota: St. 1921, c. 179 (in personal injury cases, the Court may direct a physical examination by a competent physician, etc.; but this shall not prevent "any other person or physician from being called and examined");

Vermont: Gen. L. 1917, § 2620 (quoted post, § 1837; authorizes courts to "order an examination to be made by an expert . . . in the investigation of a crime");

Wisconsin: St. 1921, c. 126, adding to Stats. § 4066 a new § 4066–1 ("Whenever, in any criminal case, expert opinion evidence becomes necessary or desirable the judge of the trial court may after notice to the parties and a hearing, appoint one or more disinterested qualified experts, not exceeding three, to testify at the trial. Before entering upon such investigation such experts shall take and subscribe the following oath, before the judge making the appointment or some officer designated by him: 'I do solemnly swear that I will make a faithful and impartial examination of the matters to be investigated by me and that I will make a true report thereon according to the best of my knowledge, belief and understanding. So help me God.' The compensation of such expert witnesses shall be fixed by the court and paid by the county upon the order of the court as a part of the costs of the action. The receipt by any expert witness summoned under this section of any other compensation than so fixed by the court and paid by the county, or the offer or promise by any person to pay such other compensation shall be unlawful and punishable as contempt of court. The fact that such expert witnesses have been appointed by the court shall be made known to the jury, but they shall be subject to cross-examination by both parties, who may also summon other expert witnesses at the trial, but the court may impose reasonable limitations upon the number of witnesses who may give opinion evidence on the same subject"); § 4066–2 ("No testimony regarding the mental condition of the accused shall be received from witnesses summoned by the accused until the expert witnesses summoned by the prosecution have been given an opportunity to examine and observe the accused, if such opportunity shall have been seasonably demanded"); § 4066–3 ("Whenever the existence of mental disease on the part of the accused, at the time of the trial, is suggested or becomes the subject of inquiry, the presiding judge of the court before which the accused is to be tried or is being tried may, after reasonable notice and opportunity for hearing, commit the accused to a state or county hospital or asylum for the insane to be detained there for a reasonable time, to be fixed by the court, for the purpose of observation, but the court may proceed under section 4700. In case of commitment to a hospital the court shall direct the superintendent of the hospital to permit all the expert witnesses summoned in the case to have free access to the accused for the purpose of observation. The court may also direct the chief physician of the hospital to prepare a report regarding the mental condition of the accused. This report may be introduced in evidence at the trial under the oath of the said chief physician who may be cross-examined regarding the report by counsel for both parties"); § 4066–4 ("Each expert witness appointed by the court may be required by the court to prepare a written brief report under oath upon the mental condition of the person in question and such report shall be filed with the clerk at such time as may be fixed by the court. Such report may with the permission of the court be read by the witness at the trial").

2. Rules for Particular Subjects of Experience

§ 564. Foreign Law. (1) In answering the first question (ante, § 559), as applied to this topic, the main controversy is whether a witness to foreign law must be by profession an advocate, attorney, or judge, or whether a layman, if he claims the knowledge, may be trusted to speak as to the state of the law. The earlier practice in England seems to have been often very liberal,[1] though Lord Ellenborough is reported as having insisted on the necessity of a professional character in the witness.[2] But in the leading cases of Vander Donckt v. Thelusson and the Sussex Peerage it was settled that, besides professional persons, persons of any occupation which makes it necessary for them to give special attention to legal topics may be listened to upon those topics; the application of this test being left for decision to individual cases:

> 1844, Lord LANGDALE, M. R. in Sussex Peerage Case, 11 Cl. & F. 117–134; (a Roman Catholic bishop, exercising certain judicial functions over marriages, was permitted to testify to the Catholic law of marriage): "The witness is in a situation of importance; he is engaged in the performance of important and responsible public duties; and, connected with them and in order to discharge them properly, he is bound to make himself acquainted with this subject of the law of marriage. That being so, his evidence is of the nature of that of a judge."
>
> 1849, MAULE, J., in Vander Donckt v. Thelusson, 8 C. B. 812, 824 (a witness to prove Belgian law had been a merchant and a commissioner in stocks and bills of exchange in Brussels, but was now an hotel-keeper in London; the question being as to the legal place of presentation of a note): "The question is whether he is a person having special and peculiar means of knowledge of the law of Belgium with regard to bills of exchange and promissory notes, one whose business it was to attend to and make himself acquainted with the subject. I think that, inasmuch as he had been carrying on a business which made it his interest to take cognizance of the foreign law, he does fall within the description of an expert. Applying one's common sense to the matter, why should not persons who may be reasonably supposed to be acquainted with the subject — though they have not filled any official appointment, such as judge or advocate or solicitor — be deemed competent to speak upon it? . . . All persons, I think, who practise a business or profession which requires them to possess a certain knowledge of the matter in hand are experts, so far as experts are required."

As to English law, then, these limits will not be transcended, i.e. there must be an occupation, making necessary a familiarity with law.[3] In the United § 564. [1] Cases cited infra.

[2] 1807, Richardson v. Anderson, 1 Camp. 66 ("there ought strictly to be some witness professionally acquainted with it").

[3] England: 1844, Sussex Peerage Case, 11 Cl. & F. 134 (repudiating the ruling of Wightman, J., in R. v. Dent, 1 C. & K. 97 (1843); followed with some hesitation in 1849, Vander Donckt v. Thelusson, 8 C. B. 824); 1903, Wilson v. Wilson, P. 157 (law of Malta proved by a doctor of civil law who has never practised there, but who had made professional researches into that law); 1916, R. v. Naguib, 1 K. B. 359 (bigamy of an Egyptian Mahomedan with an Englishwoman; to prove the validity of a former Egyptian marriage, the defendant's own testimony held not sufficient; he must "adduce expert evidence to prove the validity of the marriage"; prior cases commented on); 1918, Barford v. Barford and McLeod, Prob. 140 (marriage in Uruguay; a resident lawyer, admitted to the bar of Mexico, Madrid, Bolivia, Peru, and England, familiar with the law of Spanish-speaking countries, allowed to testify, no lawyer practising in Uruguay being available); Canada: 1912, The King v. Bleiler, 4 Alta. 321, 1 D. L. R. 878 (Wisconsin clergyman, acting there for seven years, admitted to testify to Wisconsin marriage law; following Sussex Peerage Case); 1911, R. v. Naoum, States no such special limitation has been laid down; an even more liberal policy has generally been followed. In some Courts it has been distinctly said that the experiential competence is independent of the witness' profession and will depend upon the circumstances of each case.[4] In other Courts special circumstances have led to special rules admitting particular classes of laymen.[5] Further than this, generalization seems impracticable.

(2) In answering the second question (ante, § 560), a number of rulings have passed upon the qualifications of particular witnesses; but they have little or no value as precedents.[6]

§ 565. Same: Custom as equivalent to Law. It has sometimes been necessary to point out that a custom of merchants, or the like, may in effect raise a question of law, and that therefore the witness' qualifications must be examined from that specific point of view.[1]

24 Ont. L. R. 306 (bigamy; marriage in Macedonia; one who had studied in a Greek school and Servian college (ecclesiastic?) held not sufficient).

Compare the following early cases: 1795, Lindo v. Belisario, 1 Hagg. Cons. 216 (Hebrew witnesses to the Hebrew marriage law were freely consulted who did not appear to fulfil the above limitations); 1791, Ganer v. Lady Lanesborough, Peake N. P. 18 (admitting a Jewess, as to the divorce custom of Hebrews on the continent).

By St. 1859, 22–23 Vict., c. 63, § 1, an opinion may be obtained from another British court in a region where a different law prevails, and by St. 1861, 24–5 Vict., c. 11, § 1, from any foreign court of a country with which a convention has been made for the purpose; see post, § 1675.

[4] 1852, Pickard v. Bailey, 26 N. H. 170 (a lawyer is not necessary, if the necessary experience otherwise appears); 1806, Kenny v. Clarkson, 1 Johns. N. Y. 394 (some intelligent person of the country in question suffices); 1829, Chanoine v. Fowler, 3 Wend. N. Y. 177; 1875, American Life Ins. & Trust Co. v. Rosenagle, 77 Pa. 515 (any one "who is or has been in a position to render it probable that he would make himself acquainted with it"; here a Catholic dean in Germany, who had the legal custody of the local marriage records, testified as to the law about them); 1871, Bird's Case, 21 Gratt. Va. 801, 808 (a priest or minister may testify to marriage law); W. Va. Code 1914, c. 13, § 4 (a judge may "consider any testimony, information, or argument that is offered on the subject").

[5] 1877, Wottrich v. Freeman, 71 N. Y. 601 ("all residents of a country, of a marriageable age and ordinary understanding, are familiar with the usual and customary forms of marriage"; here it was apparently enough if the customary form was followed); 1840, Phillips v. Gregg, 10 Watts Pa. 161, 170 (here the difficulty of obtaining lawyers acquainted with the early Louisiana Territory laws, and the general notoriety of marriage laws, was regarded as allowing a relaxation); 1877, State v. Cuellar, 47 Tex. 304 ("the practice has long prevailed in our courts of receiving the evidence of intelligent Mexicans who were not lawyers, in reference to the laws of Spain and Mexico in litigation pertaining to lands").

[6] 1867, McKenzie v. Gordon, 7 N. Sc. 153 (American consul, held not qualified to testify to the validity of a note without a revenue stamp); 1870, Armstrong v. U. S., 6 Ct. Cl. 226; Molina v. U. S., ib. 272; 1849, Layton v. Chaylon, 43 La. An. 319; 1895, Jackson v. Jackson, 82 Md. 17, 33 Atl. 317; 1858, People v. Lambert, 5 Mich. 349, 362 (excluding a constable, who had had some litigation involving the law in question); 1834, Marguerite v. Chouteau, 3 Mo. 540, 562 (early Spanish military official's opinion as to law of slavery of Indians, rejected); 1898, State v. Davis, 69 N. H. 350, 41 Atl. 267 (what "R. L. D." on the U. S. internal revenue office records meant; one who had consulted a circular of the Department held not incompetent); 1870, Barrows v. Downs, 9 R. I. 453.

§ 565. [1] But in most of the rulings the custom does not involve any matter of law: 1878, Third National Bank v. Cosby, 43 U. C. Q. B. 58 (American bank president admitted to testify to the legal currency of the U. S.; "any person, be he a practising lawyer or not, who comes within the description of a person 'peritus virtute officii'" is admissible); 1875, Wilson v. Bauman, 80 Ill. 493 (custom of employing an architect to superintend construction; "anybody who had any experience in the matter was competent"; here, building contractors); 1863, Kermott v. Ayer, 11 Mich. 181 (coinage; admitted); 1866, Phelps v. Town, 14 Mich. 379 (similar; excluded); 1870, Comstock v. Smith, 20 Mich. 342 (similar; admitted); 1859, Evans v. Ins. Co., 6 R. I. 47, 53 (meaning of "bar-iron"; "any person connected with the trade" so as "reasonably to be presumed to know the meaning", admissible).

Distinguish, however, the question whether usage may be evidenced by specific instances in other trades or places (ante, § 379); whether a single witness suffices to prove a usage (post, § 2053); and whether such testimony is obnoxious to the Opinion rule (post, § 1955).

§ 566. Same: Other Principles, distinguished. In the proof of foreign law, certain other principles, usually involved in practice, are here to be distinguished:

(1) Whether the professional witness may have acquired his knowledge by reading only, without practice, and whether he must be a resident of the country whose law is in issue, are questions of the adequacy of his knowledge, rather than of his skilled capacity (post, § 690);

(2) Whether, when statutory law is involved, the law may be testified to by an expert witness, instead of by the production of the text is a question of the rule for producing originals (post, § 1271);

(3) Whether the Opinion rule affects the testimony of a witness is still another important question (post, § 1953);

(4) Whether the foreign law may be evidenced by certified or printed copies of the statutes, or by legal treatises, or by printed reports of decisions, depends upon various exceptions to the Hearsay rule (post, §§ 1684, 1697, 1703).

§ 567. Value. It has been already noted (ante, § 558) that, since knowledge of the value of a thing involves knowledge also of the classes of value to which the thing may belong, it is impracticable to distinguish invariably the rulings upon Experiential qualification from the rulings upon Knowledge; and it is therefore more convenient to examine the law of the subject under the latter head (post, § 711–722).

§ 568. Medical and Chemical Matters (Health, Sanity, Poison, Blood, etc.); (1) Whether a Lay Witness suffices. Following the double division already noted (ante, § 559), it may be first inquired what topics there are upon which laymen in their ordinary experience are incapable of acquiring knowledge and forming opinions; and, next, what special training is required or is sufficient for the particular professional witness.

(1) When does ordinary experience suffice? The key to the various questions that here arise seems to be this: While on matters strictly involving medical science, as such, some special skill is needed, yet there are numerous related matters, involving health and bodily soundness, upon which the ordinary experience of everyday life is entirely sufficient. The line may sometimes be difficult to draw; but there can be no difficulty in determining that a layman may be received to state (for example) that a person was or was not apparently ill. Great liberality should be shown by the Courts in applying this principle, so that the cause of justice may not be obstructed by narrow and finical rulings. The correct doctrine has nowhere been better set forth than in the following passage:

1858, CAMPBELL, J., in Evans v. People, 12 Mich. 36: "The greatest difficulty encountered, in determining questions of competency of testimony on subjects connected more or less with medical science, is in ascertaining how far it is safe to suppose unprofessional observers are able to form a reliable judgment. There are some simple disorders which all persons are familiar with. Others require the very highest degree of medical skill to distinguish them from disorders having some resembling appearances or symptoms. . . . In the view of evidence now entertained by the best authorities, it is settled that a jury should be allowed to have placed before them all the means of knowledge which can be had without involving the danger of leading them to form conclusions not based on solid truth and not reliable as reasonably certain. . . . Circumstances may make whole communities familiar with diseases not known elsewhere, . . . and it often happens that persons having no general skill become very familiar with particular subjects. It would be very unwise to exclude such evidence merely because the range of the witness' knowledge is limited. There are as many grades of knowledge and ignorance in the professions as out of them. The only safe rule in any of these cases is to ascertain the extent of the witness' qualifications, and within their range to permit him to speak. Cross-examination and the testimony of others will here, as in all other cases, furnish the best means of testing his value."

To the modern reluctance of the English bar to dispute over trifling points of evidence must be attributed the absence of English rulings on this doctrine. In our own country, on the whole, narrow objections, though constantly made, are discountenanced, and a policy of considerable liberality is enforced.[1]

§ 568. [1] Laymen held admissible: England: 1916, R. v. Noakes, 1 K. B. 581 (illness preventing a deponent's attendance under § 1406, post; testimony of a medical man held not necessary); Federal: 1893, Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Rambo, 16 U. S. App. 277, 280, 8 C. C. A. 6, 59 Fed. 75 (appearance of suffering); 1896, Grayson v. Lynch, 163 U. S. 468, 16 Sup. 1064 (whether cattle had symptoms of a disease commonly called Texas fever); 1885, Knight v. Smythe, 57 Vt. 530 (general health appearance); 1906, Semet-Solway Co. v. Wilcox, 143 Fed. 839, C. C. A. (plaintiff's ability to work, as affected by his health); 1920, Pennachio v. U. S., 2d C. C. A., 263 Fed. 66 (opium);
Alabama: 1847, Milton v. Rowland, 11 Ala. 737 (the fact of disease, as externally apparent); 1855, Bennett v. Fail, 26 Ala. 610 (that a person was sick); 1857, Wilkinson v. Moseley, 30 Ala. 562 (same); 1859, Blackman v. Johnson, 35 Ala. 255 (same); 1859, Barker v. Coleman, 35 Ala. 225 (same); 1861, Fountain v. Brown, 38 Ala. 75 (same); 1861, Stone v. Watson, 37 Ala. 288 ("looked sick"); 1900, Dominick v. Randolph, 124 Ala. 557, 27 So. 481 (that a person is sick, allowable, but not that he has paralysis); 1919, Birmingham & A. R. Co. v. Campbell, 203 Ala. 296, 82 So. 546 (by a wife, as to a husband injured by defendant's locomotive, that between this injury and his death "he didn't have any other trouble", allowed);
Arkansas: 1916, Pfeiffer Stone Co. v. Shirley, 125 Ark. 186, 187 S. W. 930 (by a farmer, as to a person having appendicitis);
California: 1882, People v. Hong ah Duck, 61 Cal. 390 (kind of wound inflicted); 1895, People v. Gibson, 106 Cal. 458, 39 Pac. 864 (same); 1894, Robinson v. Fire Co., 103 Cal. 1, 4, 36 Pac. 955 (a person's healthy appearance); 1896, People v. Barney, 114 Cal. 554, 47 Pac. 41 (whether there was a hymen; a woman admitted);
Columbia (Dist.): 1894, District of Col. v. Haller, 4 D. C. App. 405, 411 (that the plaintiff was a "strong, able-bodied man" before the injury);
Florida: 1898, Edwards v. State, 39 Fla. 753, 23 So. 537 (where medical experts are not accessible, a layman may testify what would probably cause death);
Georgia: 1906, Green v. State, 125 Ga. 742, 54 S. E. 724 (smell of carbolic acid);
Illinois: 1876, Shawneetown v. Mason, 82 Ill. 339 (whether a juror was sick); 1892, Chicago C. R. Co. v. Van Vleck, 143 Ill. 480, 485, 32 N. E. 262 (ability to work; state of health); 1904, Chicago City R. Co. v. Bundy, 210 Ill. 39, 71 N. E. 28 (that the plaintiff was "in a nervous condition");
Indiana: 1897, Cleveland C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Gray, 148 Ind. 266, 46 N. E. 675 (a wife, as to the condition of her husband's health); 1907, Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Hadley, 170 Ind. 204, 82 N. E. 1025 (corporal injury; sundry questions allowed);
Iowa: 1903, Suddeth v. Boone, 121 Ia. 258, 96 N. W. 853 (that the smell of certain gas made him sick); 1914, Langdon v. Abrends, 166 Ia. 636, 147 N. W. 940 (physical ability);
Kansas: 1908, Federal Betterment Co. v. Reeves, 77 Kan. 111, 93 Pac. 627 (a person's appearance as to health and strength, before and after injuries, layman allowed);
Louisiana: 1904, State v. Lyons, 113 La. 959,

37 So. 890 (coroner's clerk allowed to identify the organs struck by the bullet);
Maryland: 1886, Baltimore & L. T. Co. v. Cassell, 66 Md. 432, 7 Atl. 805 (general healthy appearance);
Massachusetts: 1869, Com. v. Dorsey, 103 Mass. 413, 419 (whether hairs were human, and whose they were); 1896, Com. v. Flynn, 165 Mass. 153, 42 N. E. 562 (apparent physical condition of a person robbed);
Michigan: 1863, Evans v. People, 12 Mich. 33 (excluded as to whether a particular epidemic disease prevailed; but admitted as to whether sickness, in general, prevailed); 1874, People v. Olmstead, 30 Mich. 433 (cause of an illness); 1884, Peer v. Ryan, 54 Mich. 224, 19 N. W. 961 (veterinary surgery); 1889, Harris v. R. Co., 76 Mich. 229, 42 N. W. 1111 (ability of sick person to work and to use limbs); 1906, Krapp v. Metrop. L. Ins. Co., 143 Mich. 369, 106 N. W. 1107 (whether certain persons had died of consumption); 1915, Foster v. Krause, 187 Mich. 630, 153 N. W. 1066 (whether the plaintiff was able to work, allowed);
Missouri: 1912, Norris v. St. Louis I. M. & S. R. Co., 239 Mo. 695, 144 S. W. 783 (appearance as to health, allowed);
Nebraska: 1907, Souchek v. Karr, 78 Nebr. 488, 111 N. W. 150 (a professional nurse, as to the development of a child at birth, etc.; allowed);
New York: 1875, Lindsay v. People, 63 N. Y. 152 (freshness of a wound);
Oregon: 1907, State v. Megorden, 49 Or. 259, 88 Pac. 306 (effect of a blow); 1909, Crosby v. Portland R. Co., 53 Or. 496, 100 Pac. 300 (that the plaintiff's apparent health and physical condition had changed since the accident, allowed);
Pennsylvania: 1881, Allen's Appeal, 99 Pa. 198 (a woman who had borne four children was allowed to testify that a child at its birth was fully developed); 1888, United B. Mut. Aid Soc. v. O'Hara, 120 Pa. 265, 13 Atl. 932 (that a person had shortness of breath, allowed, but not that he had asthma);
South Dakota: 1919, Gartner v. Mohan, 41 S. D. 406, 170 N. W. 640 (ability to perform manual labor);
Tennessee: 1916, Roper v. Memphis St. R. Co., 136 Tenn. 23, 188 S. W. 588 (earning capacity of an injured person);
Texas: 1874, Wilson v. State, 41 Tex. 321 (sex of a skeleton);
Utah: 1906, Davis v. Oregon S. L. R. Co., 31 Utah 307, 88 Pac. 2 (ability to work, etc.);
West Virginia: 1892, Lawson v. Conaway, 37 W. Va. 159, 162, 16 S. E. 564 (physical ability); 1917, Ward v. Liverpool Salt & Coal Co., 79 W. Va. 371, 92 S. E. 92 (by a plaintiff, whether his injury was permanent, not allowed);
Wisconsin: 1874, Montgomery v. Scott, 34 Wis. 343 (whether a leg was broken); 1884, Wright v. Howard, 60 Wis. 122, 18 N. W. 750 (nature of present suffering; asked of the injured person on the stand); 1885, Baker v. Madison, 62 Wis. 143, 22 N. W. 141, 583 (capacity to work, etc.); 1887, Smalley v. Appleton, 70 Wis. 344, 35 N. W. 729 (general health); 1888, Bridge v. Oshkosh, 71 Wis. 365, 37 N. W. 409 (physical and mental condition as outwardly apparent).

Laymen held inadmissible: Federal: 1886, Dushane v. Benedict, 120 U. S. 647, 7 Sup. 696 (infected rags as a cause of illness);
Alabama: 1849, McLean v. State, 16 Ala. 679 (nature of a disease consisting in "fits"); 1903, White v. State, 136 Ala. 58, 34 So. 177 (how long a man had been dead when his body was seen); 1910, Clemmons v. State, 167 Ala. 20, 52 So. 467 (time of blood-coagulation after death; layman excluded);
Arkansas: 1860, Tatum v. Mohr, 21 Ark. 354, semble (nature of disease); 1861, Thompson v. Bertrand, 23 Ark. 733 (same); 1897, Redd v. State, 63 Ark. 457, 40 S. W. 374 (relaxation of muscles after death);
Georgia: 1895, Atlanta St. R. Co. v. Walker, 93 Ga. 462, 21 S. E. 48 (by the plaintiff, that his injury would be permanent); 1899, Atlanta C. S. R. Co. v. Bagwell, 107 Ga. 157, 33 S. E. 191 (whether dancing would injure a woman having "female trouble");
Iowa: 1906, State v. Nowells, 135 Ia. 53, 109 N. W. 1016 (whether a dying declarant was "delirious", excluded, but whether he was "wild" or "incoherent", allowable; this is indeed a valuable morsel of quibbling, — a veritable ensample of Carlyle's "owl-eyed Pedantry");
Kentucky: 1896, American Accident Co. v. Fidler, — Ky. —, 35 S. W. 905, 36 id. 528 (whether the deceased had typhoid fever; amputation of limb);
Maine: 1835, Boies v. McAllister, 12 Me. 308 (existence of pregnancy);
Massachusetts: 1868, Ashland v. Marlborough, 99 Mass. 47 (disease); 1894, Zimm v. Rice, 161 Mass. 571, 576, 37 N. E. 747 (by a plaintiff, that his pneumonia was due to taking a journey in consequence of an attachment);
Michigan: 1896, Lewis v. Bell, 109 Mich. 189, 66 N. W. 1091 (disease of horses; employee in a stable, excluded);
New York: 1903, Gray v. Brooklyn H. R. Co., 175 N. Y. 448, 67 N. E. 899 (by women, that their miscarriages were like the plaintiff's, excluded);
Pennsylvania: 1889, Lombard R. Co. v. Christian, 124 Pa. 123, 16 Atl. 628 (various answers permitted and excluded);
Utah: 1898, Murray v. R. Co., 16 Utah 356, 52 Pac. 596 (whether a jolt of a car would hurt a pregnant woman);
West Virginia: 1915, Mulvay v. Hanes, 76 W. Va. 721, 86 S. E. 758 (plaintiff not allowed to state the cause of her own miscarriage); 1922, Cook v. Coleman, — W. Va. —, 111 S. E. 751 (malpractice; plaintiff's testimony to her own barrenness, excluded).

On all the foregoing topics of testimony,

Of the particular topics most frequently arising for decision, it has been generally held that special qualification is not required upon the question whether a stain is of blood.[2]

Whether a lay witness may testify to sanity is a question which always occurs in conjunction with the question whether the rule against Opinion evidence should exclude such testimony, and the former question has played but a small part in the settlement of the rule of law in the different jurisdictions. It is conceivable that a Court might regard such testimony as proper under the former principle but improper under the latter. In fact, however, if a Court has excluded it on the former ground it has also excluded it on the latter. putting the chief emphasis on the latter, and if it has received it, has done so on both grounds; so that practically the rule of law stands or falls according to the determination of the latter question. The state of the law on that point is examined under the Opinion rule (post, §§ 1933–1938). The incompetency of the layman to form an opinion has nevertheless entered in part into the grounds of decision for the few jurisdictions which reject such testimony:

1879, Colt, J., in May v. Bradlee, 127 Mass. 421: "That question [of testamentary capacity], as it arises in the courts, is not often presented in a form in which it can be wisely determined by the opinions of unskilled observers, however numerous. There are forms of partial delusion, the influence of which can be detected only by persons of uncommon skill and experience, which defeat a will executed as the result of such a delusion. All forms of sanity and insanity, whether partial or general, are mental conditions which run into each other by insensible gradations, not easily separated and defined. The Courts do not deal with the plain cases only; those which come near the line, or where the disease is partial and limited, are those which most commonly occupy attention and require the application of skill and science."

But the propriety of accepting lay opinions, for what they may be worth, has been defended in the following sensible opinion, which represents the doctrine in all but a few jurisdictions:[3] compare the application of the Opinion rule (post, §§ 1974–1976), as to a person's appearance, etc.; it is not always possible to discover which rule the Court has in mind.

[2] 1898, Gantling v. State, 40 Fla. 237, 23 So. 857 (that stains of a certain color were found); 1901, State v. Rice, 7 Ida. 762, 66 Pac. 87; 1875, Com. v. Sturtivant, 117 Mass. 122 (direction of a stain); 1880, Dillard v. State, 58 Miss. 368; 1893, State v. Robinson, 117 Mo. 649, 23 S. W. 769 (that stains looked like blood); 1866, People v. Gonzalez, 35 N. Y. 62; 1881, Greenfield v. People, 85 N. Y. 83; 1888, People v. Deacons, 109 N. Y. 382, 16 N. E. 676; 1897, People v. Burgess, 153 N. Y. 561, 47 N. E. 889; 1885, People v. Thiede, 11 Utah 241, 39 Pac. 837; 1902, State v. Henry, 51 W. Va. 283, 41 S. E. 439.

[3] Compare with the following cases, which agree with the opinion quoted, the citations under § 689, post (qualifications as to Knowledge of the person said to be insane) and § 1938, post (application of the Opinion rule to sanity), all the admitting cases on the latter point being also authorities for admission on the present point: 1896, Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Leubrie, 18 C.C.A. 332, 71 Fed. 843; 1882, Smith v. Hickenbottom, 57 Ia. 737, 11 N. W. 664; 1871, State v. Reddick, 7 Kan. 149; 1881, Wood v. State, 58 Miss. 742; 1843, Clark v. State, 12 Oh. 487; 1897, Kaufman v. Caughman, 49 S. C. 159, 27 S. E. 16; 1901, Johnson v. State, 42 Tex. Cr. 618, 62 S. W. 756.

The only rulings taking the contrary view on this point have apparently been the following, with May v. Bradlee, supra: 1858, U. S. v. Holmes, 1 Cliff. 104, 106 (yet the court allowed it at p. 114); 1853, Dewitt v. Barley, 9 N. Y. 384.

The following ruling falls under the principle of § 505, ante: 1902, Collins v. People, 194 Ill. 506, 62 N. E. 902 (child of 13, held incompetent on the facts to testify to her father's mental condition).

1884, HARLAN, J., in Connecticut M. Life Ins. Co. v. Lathrop, 111 U. S. 612, 4 Sup. 533: "This position [that an ordinary observer may not state his judgment as to the sanity of one he knows] cannot be sustained consistently with the weight of authority, nor without closing an important avenue of truth in many, if not in every, case, civil and criminal, which involves the question of insanity. Whether an individual is insane is not always best solved by abstruse metaphysical speculations expressed in the technical language of medical science. The common sense and, we may add, the natural instincts of mankind, reject the supposition that only experts can approximate certainty upon such a subject. There are matters of which all men have more or less knowledge, according to their mental capacity and habits of observation, — matters about which they may and do form opinions sufficiently satisfactory to constitute the basis of action. While the mere opinion of a non-professional witness predicated upon facts detailed by others is incompetent as evidence upon an issue of insanity, his judgment based upon personal knowledge of the circumstances involved in such an inquiry certainly is of value; because the natural and ordinary operations of the human intellect, and the appearance and conduct of insane persons, as contrasted with the appearance and conduct of persons of sound mind, are more or less understood and recognized by every one of ordinary intelligence who comes in contact with his species. The extent to which such opinions should influence or control the judgment of the Court or jury must depend upon the intelligence of the witness as manifested by his examination, and upon his opportunities to ascertain all the circumstances that should properly affect any conclusion reached."

Whether an expert witness is required, in addition to any lay witnesses (e.g. in actions, for malpractice) involves a different principle, and is considered post, § 2090.

§ 569. Same: (2) What Special Experience is Necessary. (2) When on a medical topic ordinary experience does not suffice, what are to be the requirements of special experience? The chief question that here occurs is whether a general practitioner may testify on matters of a particular department of the science wherein specialists may presumably be had. Here the Courts seem not to have taken a sufficiently firm stand against the narrow objections frequently raised. It is not that the rulings themselves are illiberal, but that narrow doctrines are not repudiated with sufficient positiveness. The liberal doctrine should be insisted on that the law does not require the best possible kind of a witness, but only persons of such qualifications as the community daily and reasonably relies upon in seeking medical advice. Specialists are in most communities few and far between; the ordinary medical practitioner should be received on all matters as to which a regular medical training necessarily involves some general knowledge. This rule has been applied for sundry subjects, chiefly that of poisons,[1] and also for in-

§ 569. [1]Admitting a general practitioner: Federal: 1885, Kelly v. U. S., 27 Fed. 618 (need not be a specialist); Colo. 1897, Germania L. Ins. Co. v. Ross-Lewin, 24 Colo. 43, 51 Pac. 488 (toxicologist-physician, who had no personal experience with cases of cyanide of potassium poisoning); Fla. 1909, Copeland v. State, 58 Fla. 26, 50 So. 621 (strychnine poisoning); Ga. 1909, Towaliga Falls P. Co. v. Sims, 6 Ga. App. 749, 65 S. E. 844 (malarial fever from mosquitoes); Ill. 1888, Siebert v. People, 143 Ill. 579, 32 N. E. 431 (arsenic-poisoning; though the witness never had a case of it); Ia. 1858, State v. Hinkle, 6 Ia. 385 (chemical analysis); 1883, State v. Cole, 63 Ia. 698, 17 N. W. 183 (post-mortem examination for poison); Mass. 1869, Young v. Makepeace, 103 Mass. 53 (child-birth); 1894, Hardiman v. Brown, 162 Mass. 585, 39 N. E. 192 (brain-tumor as a source of disease; witness not familiar with such tumors in practice); Mich. 1896, People v. Thacker, 108 Mich. 652, 66

sanity.[2] In various rulings, also, the qualifications of particular physicians are determined, but without laying down general rules.[3]

N. W. 562 (a physician having a medical degree and a general practice, held competent to speak of symptoms of arsenic-poisoning in a patient treated by him, though he had had no personal experience in such cases, but has studied the subject); Mo. 1895, Seckinger v. M'f'g. Co., 129 Mo. 590, 31 S. W. 957 (need not be a specialist); N. Y. 1891, People v. Benham, 160 N. Y. 402, 55 N. E. 11 (poison, murder; general practitioner need not be a specialist in toxicology); N. C. 1870, Horton v. Green, 64 N. C. 67 (glanders, and animal diseases generally); S. Car. 1859, State v. Terrell, 12 Rich. L. 327 (strychnia-poisoning); S. Dak. 1909, State v. Kannuel, 23 S. D. 465, 122 N. W. 420 (arsenic poisoning); Tex. 1906, Rice v. State, 49 Tex. Cr. 569, 94 S. W. 1024 (medical experts who had had no personal experience in cases of strychnine poison, allowed to testify to its symptoms); Vt. 1875, Hathaway's Adm'r v. Ins. Co., 48 Vt. 351 (need not be a specialist).

Rejecting a general practitioner: 1863, Emerson Gaslight Co., 6 All. 146 (effects of gas on health); 1901, State v. Simonis, 39 Or. 111, 65 Pac. 595 (licensed physician, not allowed to testify to symptoms of arsenious poisoning).

A person expert in some other special department only was held incompetent in Fairchild v. Bascomb, 35 Vt. 409 (1862).

Compare the cases cited under § 687, post (medical knowledge founded on reading, without practice).

[2] 1911, Odom v. State, 172 Ala. 683, 55 So. 820; 174 Ala. 4, 56 So. 913 (an officer in charge of the transfer of insane persons, held not an expert); 1880, Estate of Toomes, 54 Cal. 515 (specialist not necessary); 1906, Dolbeer's Estate, 149 Cal. 227, 86 Pac. 695 (like Toomes' Estate); 1871, Davis v. State, 35 Ind. 497 (ordinary practice, plus some reading on insanity, sufficient); 1895, Phelps v. Com., — Ky. —, 32 S. W. 470 (not making a specialty of insanity, but having had cases of it); 1900, Abbott v. Com., 107 Ky. 624, 55 S. W. 196 (specialist not necessary); 1913, In re Whiting, 110 Me. 232, 85 Atl. 79 (specialist not needed); 1909, United R. & E. Co. v. Corbin, 109 Md. 442, 72 Atl. 606 (specialist not needed).

Contra: 1884, Reed v. State, 62 Miss. 409 (special study or practice necessary).

In Massachusetts the odd rule obtains that a general practitioner may testify if his opinion is based on personal observation, but not if it is based on a hypothetical question: 1856, Baxter v. Abbott, 7 Gray 78; 1859, Com. v. Rich, 14 Gray 336; 1868, Hastings v. Rider, 99 Mass. 624.

Compare the citations under § 687, post (physician's knowledge based on books).

[3] Federal: 1855, Allen v. Hunter, 6 McL. U. S. 307 (chemical subject); Ala. 1847, Tullis v. Kidd, 12 Ala. 648 (admitting a witness who had received a license as a physician, practised one year, then became a lawyer, and for sixteen years had not practised medicine but continued to keep up his medical reading); 1877, Mitchell v. State, 58 Ala. 419; 1878, Rash v. State, 61 Ala. 92, 95 (wounds); Ark. 1898, Green v. State, 64 Ark. 523, 43 S. W. 973 (physician, as to insanity; one admitted, another rejected); Cal. 1909, Kimic v. San Jose L. G. I. R. Co., 156 Cal. 379, 104 Pac. 986 (graduate nurse, allowed to testify as to reasons for giving a dose); D. C. 1905, Hamilton v. U. S., 26 D. C. App. 382, 391 (medical student excluded); Ill. 1921, Voight v. Ind. Com., 297 Ill. 109, 130 N. E. 479 (injury to spinal vertebra; graduate of chiropractic school, admitted); Ind. 1881, Noblesville E. G. R. Co. v. Gause, 76 Ind. 144; 1901, Isenhour v. State, 157 Ind. 517, 62 N. E. 40 (adulteration of milk); Kan. 1877, State v. Cook, 17 Kan. 395 (poison); 1887, Broquet v. Tripp, 36 Kan. 704, 14 Pac. 227 (sheep disease); 1888, Missouri Pac. R. Co. v. Finley, 38 Kan. 560, 16 Pac. 951 (cattle disease); Ky. 1897, Dugan v. Com., 102 Ky. 241, 43 S. W. 418 (reduction of weight of fired bullet); Md. 1896, Dashiell v. Griffith, 84 Md. 363, 35 Atl. 1094 (a professional nurse, who had nursed in 20 or 30 cases of bone felon, but not a student of surgery, not allowed to speak as to whether a felon was cut to the bone; a good example of petty and unfruitful interference with the discretion of a trial Court); Mich. 1880, People v. Niles, 44 Mich. 609, 7 N. W. 192 (wound of a horse); Miss. 1859, New Orleans J. & G. N. R. Co. v. Allbritton, 38 Miss. 246, 273; N. Y. 1897, People v. Koerner, 154 N. Y. 355, 48 N. E. 730; N. Car. 1883, State v. Sheets, 89 N. C. 549 (poisoning of an animal); Pa. 1882, Olmsted v. Gere, 100 Pa. 131; 1898, Com. v. Farrell, 187 Pa. 408, 41 Atl. 382 (when rigor mortis sets in); Vt. 1872, Masons v. Fuller, 45 Vt. 31 (whether a birth was premature; a professional nurse was allowed to testify); Va. 1828, Mendum v. Com., 6 Rand. 709, 721; Wash. 1918, Swanson v. Hood, 99 Wash. 506, 170 Pac. 135 (argument that a physician of one school is not competent to testify in a suit for malpractice against a physician of another school, repudiated); Wis. 1884, Vates v. Cornelius, 59 Wis. 617, 18 N. W. 474 (diseases of horses); 1902, Allen v. Voje, 114 Wis. 1, 89 N. W. 924 (whether a trained nurse is qualified to speak as to the dangerous significance of a certain temperature, not decided; yet it is difficult to see why such a question should cause protracted doubt).

The common law, it may be added, does not require that the expert witness on a medical subject shall be a person duly licensed to practise medicine;[4] but in at least three jurisdictions this requirement has been introduced by statute.[5] Except as an indirect stimulus to obtain a license, such a rule is ill-advised, first, because the line between chemistry, biology, and medicine is too indefinite to admit of a practicable separation of topics and witnesses, and, secondly, because some of the most capable investigators have probably not needed or cared to obtain a license to practise medicine.

§ 570. Handwriting and Paper Money. For the reasons already noted (ante, § 558), it is not always possible to distinguish the application of the present principle from that of the principle of Knowledge (post, § 693). Nevertheless the present one has a real place among the qualifications of a witness to handwriting.

(1) For handwriting in manuscript, the fundamental proposition of our law is that the general experience of the ordinary person is sufficient; in other words, any person able to read and write is competent to form and to express a judgment as to the genuineness of handwriting.[1] So often does the

[4] 1905, Macon R. & L. Co. v. Mason, 123 Ga. 773, 51 S. E. 569 (personal injury; a graduated but unlicensed osteopath, admitted to testify to the nature of the injury); 1897, Golder v. Lund, 50 Nebr. 867, 70 N. W. 379; 1899, People v. Rice, 159 N. Y. 400, 54 N. E. 48 (admissible if expert, though not licensed to practise or actually not practising); 1886, State v. Speaks, 94 N. C. 874 (the State Board examination required before practising is not necessary for testifying); 1905, People v. Rivera, 9 P. R. 454, 465 (murder; a 'praticante' who was not "a regularly qualified physician", held admissible to testify to an autopsy).

[5] Colorado: Comp. L. 1921, § 8927 (no physician may testify to insanity, in committal proceedings, unless he is reputable, a graduate of an incorporated medical college, etc., etc., in futile detail); Louisiana: Acts 1914, No. 56, p. 55, § 17 (no practitioner of medicine who has not obtained a certificate from the State Board of Medical Examiners shall "be allowed to testify as a medical or surgical expert in any court in this State"); 1907, State v. Howard, 120 La. 311, 45 So. 260 (statute applied to exclude a witness to bullet-wounds); Wisconsin: Wis. Stats. 1898, § 1436, as amended in Stats. 1919, § 1435 i, 1435 j (no person practising medicine etc. without a license or certificate shall testify "in a professional capacity" or "as an insanity expert", with exceptions for criminal cases and for extra-State licensees, etc.); 1874, Montgomery v. Scott, 34 Wis. 339, 343 (the plaintiff was taken to the house of H., after her injury, and the fracture reduced and dressed; held, that H. might testify whether the leg was broken, though he possessed no diploma; "the question whether a leg is broken is one of fact"); 1890, McDonald v. Ashland, 78 Wis. 25, 47 N. W. 434 (the diploma and the incorporation of the college may be proved orally by the witness himself, without producing the diploma or a copy of the charter); 1901, McCann v. Ullman, 109 Wis. 574, 85 N. W. 493 (under St. 1899, c. 82, providing that no person shall be "competent to testify as an expert witness" upon animal diseases unless registered as a veterinary surgeon, an unregistered person was excluded); 1902, Allen v. Voje, 114 Wis. 1, 89 N. W. 924 (whether the prohibition of the statute applies to those only who require a license for practice, or to all persons called as medical experts, for example a trained nurse, not decided); 1903, Lowe v. State, 118 Wis. 641 96 N. W. 417 (Rev. St. 1898, § 585, does not affect the testimonial qualifications of physicians); 1907, Hocking v. Windsor S. Co., 131 Wis. 532, 111 N. W. 685 (St. 1903, c. 426 held not applicable to a physician not testifying as an expert); 1912, State v. Law, 150 Wis. 313, 136 N. W. 803, 137 N. W. 457 (the statute does not apply to exclude testimony on topics of bacteriology etc. by unlicensed professors in a medical school).

§ 570. [1] 1893, Salazar v. Taylor, 18 Colo. 538, 544, 33 Pac. 369.

Whether the witness need even be able to read and write is perhaps doubtful; for many illiterate persons can distinguish signatures and hands without being able to decipher them in detail. Such a witness was rejected in Russell v. Brosseau, 65 Cal. 607 (1884). In Com. v. Borasky, 214 Mass. 313, 101 N. E. 377 (1913) an illiterate was allowed to identify checks by the picture on them.

subject of expert qualifications in handwriting come before the Courts that this subject is ordinarily thought of as exclusively one for experts. But a little reflection on every day's practice will demonstrate this error of thought. Where the witness is sufficiently qualified as to knowledge, i.e. where he has seen the person write or the like (post, § 693), no dispute is ever raised as to his experiential competency. Proper familiarity with the standard of comparison is all that is asked for, and no special skill in judging of writings is required. It is accepted law that the general experience of the ordinary person is sufficient, so far as experiential competency goes. Why, then, does the question of expert qualifications in handwriting ever arise? Because, when the specimens to be used are themselves before the jury, they may examine them to form an opinion as to the standard or type of writing, and hence the opinion of a person of ordinary experience only, based upon these specimens, being no better than that of the jury themselves, is not needed, and is excluded by the Opinion rule; and hence the only persons whose aid need be asked in studying these standards are those who have some special experience over and above that of the jury. Thus, under the Opinion rule, the question arises whether the person whose aid is offered is such a one as can contribute some skill not possessed by the jury. This is a different question from the present one of the Experiential Qualifications to be required of all witnesses; and is peculiar to the Opinion rule (post, § 2012).

The only questions that can here arise concern the skill required for something other than the identity of mere handwriting, for example, the kind or paper or ink, or the feasibility of an alteration; and here it may be proper to require special experience.[2]

(2) Bank-notes and Paper Money. Where the genuineness of a bank-note or other paper money involves not merely a signature's identity, but the texture, design, and general appearance of the document, as the basis of an opinion, may any person, having the proper familiarity with the class of notes in question, form and express an opinion as to its genuineness? This question has been little mooted since the issuing of bank-notes has come into the sole control of the Federal Government. An early line of decisions reached the sensible conclusion that a merchant, not being specially expert as to detecting counterfeits, could testify about the genuineness of a bank-note, provided he had the requisite familiarity with the class of notes in question.[3] Other Courts have since held that a bank-officer may testify to

Where, however, the handwriting is of a special style, special experience in reading it would be necessary; 1845, Crawford and Lindsay Peerage Cases, 2 H. L. C. 545 (where only a clerk who was familiar with mediæval Latin handwriting was permitted to testify by a copy to the tenor of an old document).

Compare the cases cited post, § 2012 (handwriting).

[2] 1897, Birmingham Nat'l Bank v. Bradley, 116 Ala. 142, 23 So. 53 (whether a check could be chemically altered without leaving traces; expert knowledge required); 1854, Otey v. Hoyt, 2 Jones L. N. C. 70 (the removal of inks from paper; witness excluded).

[3] Ky. 1841, Watson v. Cresap, 1 B. Monr. 196; 1918, Bates & Rogers C. Co. v. Fluharity's Guardian, 179 Ky. 668, 201 S. W. 10 (personal injury to the eye; an optician admitted); N. Car. 1805, U. S. v. Holtsclaw, 2 Hayw. 379, semble; 1824, State v. Candler, 3 Hawks 398, semble; 1844, State v. Harris, the genuineness of notes,[4] or of coin,[5] or to the fact of an erasure in a note.[6] The principle of Knowledge (post, § 705) is here not always easy to distinguish in its application.

§ 571. Miscellaneous Instances (Interpretation, Speed of a Train, Strength of a Structure, etc., etc., etc.). (1) In answer to the first of the two usual questions (ante, § 559) under this principle, there are a variety of rulings on miscellaneous topics, holding that a lay witness suffices;[1] the topics that seem to have called for frequent decision being those of the speed of a train or other vehicle,[2] and the existence of a condition of intoxication.[3]

5 Ired. 291, semble; 1851, State v. Cheek, 13 Ired. 120 ("who habitually receive and pass the notes of a bank for a long course of time, so as to become thoroughly acquainted with them"); 1877, Yates v. Yates, 76 N. C. 149.

On this general subject should always be consulted: Albert S. Osborn, "The Problem of Proof" (1922).

[4] 1896, Keating v. People, 160 Ill. 480, 43 N. E. 724 (treasury notes, national bank bills, and greenbacks; a paying-teller admitted to speak to their genuineness); 1873, Atwood v. Cornwall, 28 Mich. 339.

For the admissibility of bank-officials as expert witnesses to handwriting, see post, § 2012.

[5] 1913, Cardwell v. Breckenridge, Ont., 11 D. L. R. 461 (St. 1909, 1 Geo. V, c. 41, now Rev. St. 1914, c. 165, §§ 3, 25, held not to exclude a surveyor other than an Ontario surveyor); 1860, May v. Dorsett, 30 Ga. 118.

[6] 1864, Dubois v. Baker, 30 N. Y. 361; 1905, Savage v. Bowen, 103 Va. 540, 49 S. E. 668 (bank-officers, and a court-clerk, admitted to testify to the sameness of ink and the relative age of writings).

On the above points, compare the cases cited post, § 2024.

§ 571. [1] Federal: 1922, Lewinsohn v. U. S., 7th C. C. A., 278 Fed. 421 (whisky); Alabama: 1863, Barnes v. Ingalls, 39 Ala. 200 (admitting members of a family, as able to speak of the likeness of a portrait, but not of its quality of execution); 1897, McDonald v. Wood, 118 Ala. 589, 22 So. 489, 24 So. 86 (the location of a survey-line, by the owner of the land); 1903, Rarden v. Cunningham, 136 Ala. 263, 34 So. 26 (whether a mule is blind; expert not needed); 1914, Cedar Creek S. Co. v. Stedham, 187 Ala. 622, 65 So. 984 (automobile); Colorado: 1921, Enyart v. People, 70 Colo. 362, 201 Pac. 564 (whisky; "such testimony is not expert testimony, any more than that of one who has tasted salt or sugar"); Connecticut: 1845, Porter v. Mfg. Co., 17 Conn. 255 (sufficiency of a dam); Illinois: 1856, Frink v. Potter, 17 Ill. 408 (safety of a road); Maryland: 1875, Clagett v. Easterday, 42 Md. 629 (existence of a mill-site); 1886, Baltimore & L. T. Co. v. Cassell, 66 Md. 430, 7 Atl. 805 (whether a road was safe); Missouri: 1888, McPherson v. R. Co., 97 Mo. 256, 10 S. W. 846 (draining capacity of culvert); 1896, State v. Punshon, 133 Mo. 44, 34 S. W. 25 (experiments with a pistol); North Carolina: 1880, State v. Reitz, 83 N. C. 635 (identity of foot-prints); 1881, State v. Morris, 84 N. C. 761 (same); South Dakota: 1894, Vermillion Co. v. Vermillion, 6 S. D. 466, 61 N. W. 802 (height of a stream of water observed to be thrown from a water-main); 1898, Ochsenreiter v. Elev. Co., 11 S. D. 91, 75 N. W. 822 (condition of crop; layman in grain-growing country, competent).

[2] Federal: 1906, Porter v. Buckley, 147 Fed. 140, C. C. A. (speed of an automobile); 1919, Denver Omnibus & C. Co. v. Krebs, 8th C. C. A., 255 Fed. 543 (taxicab); Alabama: 1896, Highland Ave. & B. R. Co. v. Sampson, 112 Ala. 425, 20 So. 566; 1901, Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Stewart, 128 Ala. 313, 29 So. 562; 1917, Galloway v. Perkins, 198 Ala. 658, 73 So. 956 (automobile); 1921, Payne v. Roy, 206 Ala. 432, 90 So. 605; 1921, Taylor v. Lewis, 206 Ala. 438, 89 So. 581 (automobile); Arkansas: 1896, St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Brown, 62 Ark. 254, 35 S. W. 225 (how far a train had gone when it stopped); California: 1895, Howland v. R. Co., 110 Cal. 513, 42 Pac. 983 (whether a car could have been stopped); 1900, Johnsen v. Oakland S. L. & H. E. R. Co., 127 Cal. 608, 60 Pac. 170 (regular passengers allowed to testify to speed of cars); Colorado: 1906, Colorado & S. R. Co. v. Webb, 36 Colo. 224, 85 Pac. 683; Columbia (Dist.): 1903, Metropolitan R. Co. v. Blick, 92 D. C. App. 194, 213; Illinois: 1884, Louisville N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Shires, 108 Ill. 628 (undecided); Iowa: 1904, Cronk v. Wabash R. Co., 123 Ia. 349, 98 N. W. 884; 1904, Gregory v. Wabash R. Co., 126 Ia. 230, 101 N. W. 761; 1906, Line v. Grand Rapids & I. R. Co., — Ia. —, 106 N. W. 719; 1911, Sayne v. Waterloo C. F. & N. R. Co., 153 Ia. 445, 133 N. W. 781; Kansas: 1905, Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Holloway, 71 Kan. 1, 80 Pac. 31; 1909, Johnson v. Chicago R. I. & P. R. Co., 80 Kan. 456, 103 Pac. 90; Maryland: 1920, Waltring v. James, 136 Md. 406, 111 Atl. 125 (rate of speed of an automobile); Massachusetts: 1916, Johnston v. Bay State St. R. Co., 222 Mass. 583, 111 N. E. 391 (speed of a street-car); Michigan: 1868, Detroit & M. R. Co. v.

(2) In answer to the second of the two usual questions (ante, § 560), there are a variety of rulings determining the qualifications of an individual witness on a particular topic. That of most frequent occurrence is the interpretation of a foreigner's or mute's mode of speech.[4] None of the remaining miscellaneous rulings have any real value as precedents.[5] They were a

Van Steinburg, 17 Mich. 99 (but not the speed, in slowing up, necessary to bring to a stop at a given point); 1887, Guggenheim v. R. Co., 66 Mich. 154, 33 N. W. 161 ("any intelligent man who had been accustomed to observe moving objects"); 1899, Mott v. R. Co., 120 Mich. 127, 79 N. W. 3; 1906, Garran v. Michigan C. R. Co., 144 Mich. 26, 107 N. W. 284; Minnesota: 1916, Beecroft v. Great Northern R. Co., 134 Minn. 86, 158 N. W. 800 (train); Missouri: 1906, Stotler v. Chicago & A. R. Co., 200 Mo. 107, 98 S. W. 509 (reviewing the cases); Nebraska: 1903, Omaha St. R. Co. v. Larson, 70 Nebr. 591, 97 N. W. 824; 1920, Schmidbauer v. Omaha & C. B. St. R. Co., 104 Nebr. 250, 177 N. W. 336 (trial Court's discretion); Nevada: 1910, Sherman v. Southern Pacific Co., 33 Nev. 385, 111 Pac. 416; New Hampshire: 1881, Nutter v. Railroad, 60 N. H. 485; Oregon: 1918, Weggandt v. Bartle, 88 Or. 310, 171 Pac. 587; Pennsylvania: 1911, Dugan v. Arthurs, 230 Pa. 299, 79 Atl. 626; South Dakota: 1905, Borneman v. Chicago St. P. M. & O. R. Co., 19 S. D. 459, 104 N. W. 208 ("any person may become proficient"); Utah: 1895, Chipman v. R. Co., 12 Utah 68, 41 Pac. 562; Wisconsin: 1884, Hoppe v. R. Co., 61 Wis. 369, 21 N. W. 227; West Virginia: 1899, McVey v. R. Co., 46 W. Va. 111, 32 S. E. 1012; 1919, Alford v. Kanawha & W. V. R. Co., 84 W. Va. 570, 100 S. E. 402 (witness who had only once seen a passenger train stopped, excluded).

[3] 1887, People v. Monteith, 73 Cal. 8; 14 Pac. 373; 1876, Dimick v. Downs, 82 Ill. 572; 1887, Gallagher v. People, 120 Ill. 182, 11 N. E. 335; 1870, State v. Pike, 49 N. H. 407; 1868, Castner v. Sliker, 33 N. J. L. 97.

[4] 1900, Central of G. R. Co. v. Joseph, 125 Ala. 313, 28 So. 35 (interpreter speaking both languages, but not reading English writing, held competent); 1870, People v. Gelabert, 39 Cal. 664 (interpreter must understand the languages); 1874, People v. Ah Wee, 48 Cal. 238 (same); 1886, Skaggs v. State, 108 Ind. 56, 8 N. E. 695 (fair knowledge suffices); Ky. Stats. 1915, § 1020 (official interpreter must "speak fluently the English and German languages"); 1897, People v. Constantino, 153 N. Y. 24, 47 N. E. 37 (interpreter held competent); Pa. St. 1869, Feb. 18, § 3, Dig. 1920, § 12503 (official interpreter for Philadelphia; no person shall be used as interpreter or translator without a certificate of fitness given by the official interpreter); 1893, State v. Weldon, 39 S. C. 318, 17 S. E. 688 (any person able to communicate by signs with a mute is competent); 1867, Kuhlman v. Medlinka, 29 Tex. 392 (interpreter must understand both languages).

For the question when an interpreter may or must be called, and what other qualifications he must possess, see post, § 811. For the question whether an interpreter must be sworn and cross-examined, see post, §§ 1810, 1824.

[5] CANADA: 1887, Cain v. Uhlman, 20 N. Sc. 151 (one who was a mill-builder, and was used to taking levels but did not understand how to do so with a theodolite, was allowed to testify).

UNITED STATES: Federal: 1881, Pope v. Filley, 3 Fed. 69 (meaning of trade terms); 1894, Missouri Pac. R. Co. v. Hall, 14 C. C. A. 153, 66 Fed. 868 (shrinkage of cattle); 1903, U. S. v. Hung Chang, 126 Fed. 400, — D. C. — (whether a person was of Chinese race); Alabama: 1863, Barnes v. Ingalls, 39 Ala. 198 (the execution of photographic paintings); 1877, Campbell v. Gilbert, 57 Ala. 568 (qualities and use of a guano); 1877, Mobile & M. R. Co. v. Blakely, 59 Ala. 473, 481 (condition of a train, as to means of stopping it); 1878, Nelson v. Wood, 62 Ala. 175 (tanning); 1900, Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Sandlin, 126 Ala. 585, 28 So. 40 (track construction); 1900, Birmingham N. Bank v. Bradley, — Ala. —, 30 So. 546 (effects of Eureka acid on paper); Arkansas: 1906, Halliday M. Co. v. Louisiana & N. W. R. Co., 80 Ark. 536, 98 S. W. 374 (railroad rates); California: 1866, Blood v. Light, 31 Cal. 115 (dam); Colorado: 1897, Denver T. & F. W. R. Co. v. Smock, 23 Colo. 456, 48 Pac. 681 (condition of a freight-car); Connecticut: 1897, State v. Main, 69 Conn. 123, 37 Atl. 80 (destruction of trees affected by a contagious disease; the capacity of a deputy charged with the duty of investigating, assumed, semble, as indicated by his office); Illinois: 1897, Webster Mfg. Co. v. Mulvanny, 168 Ill. 311, 48 N. E. 168 (cause of an explosion); 1898, St. Louis & S. W. R. Co. v. Elgin C. M. Co., 175 Ill. 557, 51 N. E. 911 (transportation of condensed milk); 1916, Supolski v. Ferguson & L. Foundry Co., 272 Ill. 82, 111 N. E. 544 (practicability of fencing a drop for breaking scrap iron); Indiana: 1837, House v. Fort, 4 Blackf. 295 (defects of a horse); 1877, Hinds v. Harbon, 58 Ind. 123 (sewers); 1880, Indianapolis v. Scott, 72 Ind. 203 (soundness of timber); 1886, Fort Wayne v. Coombs, 107 Ind. 86, 7 N. E. 743 (sewers); 1887, Terre Haute v. Hudnut, 112 Ind. 549, 13 N. E. 686 (injury to a building); Iowa: 1874, Kilbourne v. Jennings, 38 Ia. 537 (construction of a house); 1875, Shulte v. Hennessey, 40 Ia. 356 (measure-waste of time for the Supreme Courts, and should have been disposed of under the doctrine of the trial Court's discretion (ante, § 561). The application of the Opinion rule (post, §§ 1949–1978) should be compared, upon all these topics.

ment of masonry); 1878, Sheldon v. Booth, 50 Ia. 210 (machinery); 1895, Kerns v. R. Co., 94 Ia. 121, 62 N. W. 692 (mode of coupling cars); 1899, Stomme v. Hanford P. Co., 108 Ia. 137, 78 N. W. 841 (fitness of elevator cable); Kansas: 1882, Sexton v. Lamb, 27 Kan. 429 (ice-handling); 1884, Sandwich Mfg. Co. v. Nicholson, 32 Kan. 666, 5 Pac. 164 (machinery); 1885, Missouri Pac. R. Co. v. Mackey, 33 Kan. 303, 6 Pac. 291 (duties of a fireman); 1898, Missouri P. R. Co. v. Johnson, 59 Kan. 776, 53 Pac. 129 (manner of inspecting car-timbers); Kentucky: 1897, U. S. Mail Line Co. v. Mfg. Co., 101 Ky. 658, 42 S. W. 342 (manner of breaking of glass); 1898, Williams v. R. Co., 103 Ky. 298, 45 S. W. 71 (locomotive's effect in starting train); Maine: 1856, Hammond v. Woodman, 41 Me. 207 (milling); 1904, Conley v. Portland G. L. Co., 58 Me. 61, 58 Atl. 61 (water-gas); Maryland: 1856, Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Thompson, 10 Md. 85 (disturbance of cattle by railroads, and the effects on their health); 1886, Baltimore Elev. Co. v. Neal, 65 Md. 451, 5 Atl. 338 (handling a tug); 1909, Harris v. Consolidation Coal Co., 111 Md. 209, 73 Atl. 805 (defect in mine-pipes); Massachusetts: 1847, Vandine v. Burpee, 13 Met. 288 (gardens); 1853, Carpenter v. Wait, 11 Cush. 257 (cattle-weight); 1870, Moulton v. McOwen, 103 Mass. 597 (damage to a building); 1895, Davis v. Mills, 163 Mass. 481, 40 N. E. 852 (qualities of flour); 1899, Childs v. O'Leary, 174 Mass. 111, 54 N. E. 490 (blasting); Michigan: 1866, Sisson v. R. Co., 14 Mich. 497 (machinery); 1896, Woods v. R. Co., 108 Mich. 396, 66 N. W. 328 (machinery); Minnesota: 1871, Clague v. Hodgson, 16 Minn. 339 (age of sheep, judged by the teeth); 1884, Kolsti v. R. Co., 32 Minn. 134, 19 N. W. 655 (turn-tables); 1885, Davidson v. R. Co., 34 Minn. 54, 24 N. W. 324 (sparks from locomotives); 1890, Armstrong v. R. Co., 45 Minn. 87, 47 N. W. 459 (care of horses); 1875, Blomquist v. R. Co., 60 Minn. 426, 62 N. W. 818 (construction of a derrick); 1899, Aultman Co. v. Mosloski, 77 Minn. 27, 79 N. W. 593 (defects in a threshing-machine); Missouri: 1896, Helfenstein v. Medart, 136 Mo. 595, 36 S. W. 863 (strength and safety-speed of grindstones); 1919, State v. Oertel, 280 Mo. 129, 217 S. W. 64 (felonious possession of burglar's tools; policemen held qualified to testify to burglars' style of tools); Montana: 1897, Holland v. Huston, 20 Mont. 84, 49 Pac. 390 (horse); Nebraska: 1884, Sioux City & P. R. Co. v. Finlayson, 16 Nebr. 587, 20 N. W. 860 (engine-boilers); 1887, Connelly v. Edgerton, 22 Nebr. 87, 34 N. W. 76 (saloon-fixtures); New Hampshire: 1845, Woods v. Allen, 18 N. H. 31 (ice-block at a mill); 1846, Wallace v. Goodall, 18 N. H. 452 (age of marks on trees); 1859, Page v. Parker, 40 N. H. 59 (soapstone-quarry); 1860, Blodgett Paper Co. v. Farmer, 41 N. H. 404 (machinery); New York: 1854, Bearss v. Copley, 10 N. Y. 95 (one whose occupation had changed from a tanner to a lawyer, admitted to speak about tanning); 1874, Hoyt v. R. Co., 57 N. Y. 678 (cause of railroad accident); 1881, Ward v. Kilpatrick, 85 N. Y. 415 (workmanship of furniture); 1886, People v. Buddensieck, 103 N. Y. 500, 9 N. E. 44 (photographs); North Carolina: 1849, Sikes v. Paine, 10 Ired. 280 (ship-repairs); 1859, State v. Jacobs, 6 Jones L. 286 (negro descent); Oregon: 1902, Duntley v. Inman, 42 Or. 334, 70 Pac. 529 (cause of a pulley's breakage); 1900, Farmers' & T. N. Bank v. Woodell, 38 Or. 294, 61 Pac. 837 (cultivation of beets); Pennsylvania: 1845, Pittsburgh v. O'Neill, 1 Pa. St. 342 (mode of summary reckoning in bricklaying); 1849, Detweiler v. Groff, 10 Pa. 376 (working a mill with a certain height of water); 1869, Ardesco Oil Co. v. Gilson, 63 Pa. 151 (strength of iron); 1889, Shaw v. Boom Co., 125 Pa. 327, 17 Atl. 426 (cause of ice-jam); 1895, Fraim v. Ins. Co., 170 Pa. 151, 32 Atl. 613 (effect of gasoline in cleansing in silver-plating); 1899, Haley v. Flaccus, 193 Pa. 521, 44 Atl. 566 (novelty in a glass-press patent); Rhode Island: 1858, Buffum v. Harris, 5 R. I. 250 (sufficiency of a drain); 1859, Evans v. Ins. Co., 6 R. I. 54 (meaning of trade terms); Vermont: 1874, James v. Hodsden, 47 Vt. 136 (knitting-machines); 1897, Conway v. Fitzgerald, 70 Vt. 103, 39 Atl. 634 (capacity of cars for carrying logs); Wisconsin: 1899, Baxter v. R. Co., 104 Wis. 307, 80 N. W. 644 (tendency of iron to crystallize).

SUB-TITLE I (continued): TESTIMONIAL QUALIFICATIONS

TOPIC III: EMOTIONAL CAPACITY

SUB-TOPIC A: INTEREST AS A TESTIMONIAL DISQUALIFICATION

CHAPTER XXIII.

§ 575. History of the Rules. The disqualification of parties and interested persons as witnesses on their own behalf is now practically obsolete throughout our law, except for a single situation. That the history of its origin is obscure and not precisely ascertained is therefore not a matter of such serious consequence to our understanding of the law of to-day. Nevertheless, its origin is so connected with other important traits in the history of the law of evidence that a survey is desirable of so much as is known or can be conjectured.

The main elements in the development are, first, that this disqualification does not appear for any of the ancient kinds of witnesses under the older modes of trial; secondly, that it did not exist for the modern witness, when that type of person began to be important (in the 1500s); and thirdly, that the disqualification does plainly appear, in the stage of incipiency, in the early 1600s; the problem being, therefore, to account for its introduction during the 1500s. In tracing these stages, we may distinguish, for convenience, the progress of the rule in civil trials at common law, in chancery practice, and in criminal trials.

1. Civil Trials at Common Law. (1) For the first period, it is to be remembered that under the older modes of trial, forerunning trial by jury and surviving for a time alongside of it, the persons who could be thought of as perhaps liable to disqualification after the manner of modern witnesses were of three chief classes, namely, the complaint-witnesses or ' secta ', the compur-gators or oath-helpers, who swore in aid of the party's oath or wager of law, and the transaction-witnesses and deed-witnesses, whose oath in certain classes of cases formed a mode of decision. Now for none of these classes does any disqualification appear by reason of partisan interest, dependency, or relationship. On the contrary, these persons were originally and usually taken from none other than the very clansmen, dependents, and other partisans of the plaintiff or defendant. For the 'secta', it is clear that "they might be relatives or dependents of the party for whom they appeared."[1] For the oath-helpers, it is equally clear that they not only might be, but originally (in some tribes) must be, of the party's clansmen.[2] For the transaction-witnesses and deed-witnesses it can hardly be less doubted that partisanship, in any of its forms, was not recognized as a disqualification;[3] in fact, we are told by the judges of the time, more broadly still, that "witnesses cannot be challenged."[4] When jury trial develops and enlarges in scope, and comes down into the 1400s as the dominant mode of trial, this last sort of "witnesses" — those who were sworn to attest the transactions done or deeds executed in their presence — come to play a frequent part in jury-trial itself;[5] that is, their oath ceases (to that extent) to form a distinct sort of trial. Thus the spectacle is presented of a body of jurors, with whom (yet more or less discriminated) are acting this special class of witnesses. As yet there are no other witnesses (in the modern sense) in jury trials. Thus the most important thing to note, in this stage, is that the only class (substantially) of persons, whose required qualities could have served as a type for the modern witness when he came in, were plainly understood to be not challengeable on any ground of partisanship, and perhaps not at all.

(2) The modern witness — i.e. any person who happens to know something about the facts in dispute and is summoned to inform the jury, and not § 575. [1] Thayer, Preliminary Treatise on Evidence, 12.

[2] Brunner, Deutsche Rechtsgeschichte, II, 379; Thayer, ubi supra, 25; Pollock and Maitland, History of English Law, II, 598. It is true that, by the custom of London, a non-partisan character came later to be required of these oath-helpers, in trial by wager of law; "they were not to be chosen by the accused himself, nor to be his kinsmen or bound to him by the tie of marriage or any other": Thayer, ubi supra, 27; Pollock and Maitland, ubi supra, II, 633. This possibly came about through the pressure of competition of jury-trial and was added to make the wager of law seem a little less one-sided in favor of defendants. It may also later have contributed a suggestion to the modern doctrine, as noted later.

[3] It is not mentioned in Brunner's list, ubi supra, II, 396, so also not in Thayer, ubi supra, 17–24. Professor Glasson has pointed out (Histoire du droit et des institutions de la France, VI, 547, 1895) that under the earlier feudal system of proof the opponent's right to dispute a witness by judicial combat served as a guaranty against false witnesses, and that only when judicial combat was abolished in 1260, and as a part of the reform of the proof-system, "the challenging of witnesses was replaced by the theory of disqualifications borrowed from the canon law."

[4] Thayer, ubi supra, 100, 103; 1339, Anon., 12 Lib. Ass. pl. 11, 12 (one of the witnesses to a deed was challenged because he was named as disseisor in the brief; but the challenge was not allowed, and "the court said that it had never seen witnesses challenged"); 1349, Anon., Lib. Ass. 110, cited in Thayer's Cases on Evidence, 2d ed., 306 (to prove a release, the witnesses named in it were joined to the jury; "one of the witnesses was challenged as being a relative of the plaintiff; but the challenge was not allowed, for witnesses are not challengeable, because the verdict will not be received from them, but from the jury").

[5] Thayer, Preliminary Treatise, 97–104.

as one of the jury — begins to be frequent in the middle of the 1400s; but not until another century does he furnish a substantial or major part of the information on which the jury act ;[6] up to this time the jury's own knowledge and extra-judicial inquiries have taken the place of our modern witness. Now as to this new sort of witness also, it is plain that during the 1400s there was as yet no disqualification on the ground of partisanship,[7] and that, on the contrary, the non-partisan witness was a rare figure and was, in the conception of the time, an unnatural one. This appears most plainly in the discouragements to which such a non-partisan person was subjected by the law of maintenance.[8] That law made it a matter of much risk for a truly indifferent person to give testimony to the jury; for unless he had been requested by the Court or jury (a request by the party only was of doubtful effect), he was liable to a charge of maintenance:

Professor James Bradley Thayer, Preliminary Treatise on Evidence, 126: "A writ of maintenance was brought [in 1433] in the King's Bench against one B, charging that in an assize of rent between the plaintiff and C the defendant had 'maintained' C. B answered that long before C had anything in the said rent he himself owned it; and he had granted it to C. When the said assize was brought against C, the latter came to B, the present defendant, and asked him to come to the assizes with him and bring his evidences relating to the rent; and accordingly B came with these and delivered to C certain ancient evidences to plead in bar against the plaintiff in his discharge of his warranty of the rent; this was all the maintenance. In discussing whether this really constituted maintenance, and if so whether it was justifiable, it was insisted that the defendant should not have come voluntarily, but only by way of voucher to warranty. . . . HALS, J., said: 'In a tort of maintenance, it is a good plea to say that he who is charged came and prayed us, since we were an old man of the region and had knowledge of the title of the land of which he was impleaded, that we would be with him to inform the jury about the title; and so we did, etc. So here it is good.' CHEYNE, C. J.: 'It will be adjudged a maintenance in your cases, because he has no cause or privity for maintaining the controversy more than the merest stranger in the world, unless the other had cause of warranty against him. . . . And as to what you say of its being a good plea in maintenance that he is an old man of the region and having better knowledge of the right and title of this rent, and his coming with the defendant to declare his right in the said rent, etc., I say that this is a real maintenance; for on such a ground everybody could justify a maintenance, and that would be against reason. But if he had shown a ground of maintenance on which the law presumes him bound to be with the party, then this would not be adjudged a maintenance, — as, if he were with his relation, or came with one because he was his servant or his tenant; he is bound to be with his servant or tenant; but it is not so in other cases.'"[9]

The underlying conception of the law, then, at this time of the 1400s, was something as follows: "Here are the jurors, indifferent persons, who know

[6] Thayer, ubi supra, 120–134.

[7] Fortescue, De Laudibus Legum Angliæ, c. 26 (writing about 1470), makes no note of any limitations; parties may produce "all such witnesses as they please or can get to appear on their behalf."

[8] Thayer, Preliminary Treatise, 122–134.

[9] This is from Y. B. 11 H. VI, 43, 36. Add the following, which carries the idea down a century later: 1535, Y. B. 27 H. VIII, f. 2, pl. 6 (a seneschal of a manor, who showed the jury certain leet-court records, held exonerated of conspiracy, i.e. maintenance, because the judges ordered the showing; Englefield, J.: "If a man be present in court, and the justices command him, because he has good knowledge of the jury, to give evidence to the jury, by reason of which he does give evidence to the jury, he is not punishable for conspiracy": Bromley, of counsel opposing, argued that it was otherwise if he were not sworn; Englefield, J.: "It is all one").

already more or less about this case; their oaths are to determine the issue; they are the selected ones for the purpose; no other man's oath is wanted; unless the jurors think that they need it, or the Court calls for it, any other man's oath is merely a meddlesome intrusion upon the carefully selected body of triers. To be sure, the party or his attorney may argue and labor with the jury and produce documents, and so also may his privies in title, vouchers and the like, or his dependents, stewards, tenants, and such other persons as share his interest in the issue. But beyond this no other person has any call to interfere." In short, so far as ordinary witnesses were coming to be used, they were presumably interested partisans. So far from interest being a disqualification, it was rather the disinterested persons who were likely to be treated as improper witnesses. Such is the state of the law as we emerge into the 1500s, with the modern witness becoming a more and more important functionary of jury trial.

(3) Passing over for the moment the dubitable time of the 1500s, and coming to Coke's time, the early 1600s, we find that, in some way or other, ideas have plainly changed in the interval. Interest is now unquestionably recognized as a disqualification. The modern witness is now the chief source of information to the jury;[10] there is a sharp discrimination between witness and jury; the deed-witness, who was formerly nearer to being a juror, is now almost assimilated to the ordinary witness; and for both sorts, without apparent distinction, rules of disqualification are now beginning to be laid down:

1627, Sir EDWARD COKE, Commentary upon Littleton, 6 a: "[As to witnesses to a deed] sometimes, though rarely [objections were allowed], which being found true, they were not to be sworne at all, neither to be joined to the jury nor as witnesses; as, if the witness were infamous, . . . or if the witnesse be an infidell, or of non-sane memory, or not of discretion, or a partie interested, or the like. But oftentimes a man may be challenged to be of a jury that cannot be challenged to be a witnesse; and therefore, though the witnesse be of the neerest alliance, or kindred, or of counsell, or tenant, or servant to either partie, or any other exception that maketh him not infamous or to want understanding or discretion or partie in interest, though it be proved true, shall not exclude the witnesse to be sworne, but he shall be sworne and his credit upon the exceptions taken against him left to those of the jury, who are tryers of the fact. . . . And the Courts in some books have said that they have not seene witnesses challenged, which is regularly to be understood with the limitations abovesaid."

Thereafter, from the middle of the 1600s, the rules about interest appear firmly established and begin to develop in fulness. What was the process of thought by which this doctrine was introduced? How comes it to be absent, and even repugnant, in 1500, and yet present and favored in 1650? Such is the problem.

For one thing, the explanation seems not to lie in any process of adaptation or imitation of the rules for jurors. Those persons were, in fundamental principle, indifferent between the parties; while witnesses proper were originally (as above noted) conceived of as naturally partisans. The juror's disqualification had existed from the beginning, and yet for at least one hundred years (in the 1400s) the two classes had gone side by side without any borrowing; so that it is hardly natural that a direct borrowing should take place in such tardy fashion. It is true that after jurors had come to depend for information chiefly on the witnesses in court (say, by 1600), it would be desirable to seek for unprejudiced persons as witnesses; and this later change in the jury's nature must have helped towards the new rule.[11] But that rule could hardly have obtained its beginning in that mode. Moreover, the traditional rules of qualification for jurors were numerous, and it is not easy to suppose that this particular one was picked out for imitation, while others equally appropriate were omitted.[12] For another thing, the explanation seems not to be that the rules of the ecclesiastical law were adopted or imitated. It is true that this particular disqualification is found long established, by adoption from the Roman law,[13] in the ecclesiastical rules as practised in England.[14] It is true also that the epoch in question was one in which great advances towards domination were being made by the ecclesiastical courts and their system, and that in other respects its rules were sought to be introduced into the common law.[15] Nevertheless, the same objections here occur that have been noted for the jurors' rules. Moreover, the sharp conflict between the two jurisdictions, reaching its height in Coke's time, would tend strongly against any such conscious adoption. Finally, there appear in the precedents no allusions to an express borrowing.

[10] Coke, 3 Inst. 26: "Most commonly juries are led by deposition of witnesses."

[11] The juror's disqualification by infamy was, for example, appealed to in this way by Coke as sanctioning such a rule for witnesses; ante, § 519.

[12] Britton, f. 134 (convicts of perjury cannot be jurors; nor "those who have suffered judgment of life and limb or punishment of pillory or tumbrell, nor those who want discretion, nor excommunicated persons, nor lepers removed from society, nor priests or clerks within holy orders, nor women, nor such as dwell away from the neighborhood, nor those who are above 70 years of age, nor allies in blood, nor such as claim any right in the tenement, nor villains, nor persons indicted or appealed of felony, nor those of the household of any of the parties, nor those who are liable to be distrained by either of the parties, nor their lords or counsellors or accountants"); Fortescue, De Laudibus, c. 25 (juror may be challenged "by alleging that the person so impanelled is of kin, either by blood or affinity, to the other party, or in some such particular interest as he can not be deemed an indifferent person to pass between the parties"). The disqualification by affinity or by household dependency never obtained for witnesses (post, § 600); if there was any direct imitation, this would almost certainly have been included.

[13] Digest XXII, 5; Codex IV, 20; Heineccius, Elementa Pandectarum, p. IV, c. 140 ("Quum vero censeatur testis idoneus esse in causa ubi interest ejus alterutruun vincere, consequens est ut nemo admittendus est in causa vel propria vel socii. Ut merito repellantur pater in causa filii, filius in causa patris, aliique potestati vel imperio alterius subjective vel domestici; ut patrones, tutores, curatores in causa clientis, pupilli, minorisve sui testimonium dicere non possunt; ut suspecti etiam sint amici et inimici, nec non qui jam ante in eum reum dixerunt testimonium").

[14] Corp. Jur. Eccl., Decret. P. II, Causa III, Qu. V, Causa IV, Qu. II, c. III, § 36 (servants and relations); Decret. Pars II, Causa III, Qu. V ("testes de domo accusatorum producendi non sint", including "consanguinei vel familiares"); Decretal. II, 20, de testibus, c. 24; 1726, Ayliffe, Parergon, tit. "Witnesses"; 1738, Oughton, Ordo Judiciorum, c. 99 (the list includes "amici intimi partis producentis, ac inimici capitales partis contra quem producuntur, affectionati, partiales, ac minus indifferentes; infames, criminosi, pauperes, egeni; ac consanguinei, et affines, ac famuli domestici, et de roba ac stipendio partis producentis").

[15] Post, § 2032.

What, then, is there to fall back upon as the explanation of the change? Here must be distinguished the two branches of the disqualification, namely, of parties and of other interested persons. The two are no doubt united in principle, in the later law; but they seem to have come into being at different epochs.

(a) The exclusion of interested persons not parties does not appear to have begun until after the time of Coke's commentary upon Littleton. This was written by 1627, but was not printed until 1642. From the time of his utterance (above-quoted) there are cases enough, in the reigns of Charles II and James II (1649–1688); but before that time, the Abridgments appear to note none.[16] Coke himself concedes that "the Courts in some books have said that they have not seen witnesses challenged." Moreover, as recently as 1613, a deed-witness, palpably interested in the issue, had been deliberately held competent;[17] and as recently as 1606 a statute had apparently been regarded as indispensable to prescribe non-partisanship for witnesses in trials on the Scotch border.[18] The reports of the State trials do not note a disqualification on this ground before 1640.[19] In civil cases, the only precedents of disqualification before Coke's time, if we rely on the industry of the abridgment-makers, are confined to the parties themselves.[20] Thus everything tends to indicate that the disqualification of interested persons not parties did not appear until the time when Coke wrote; and even then it had not been fully established.

(b) On the other hand, the disqualification of parties themselves seems clearly to have come in long before, that is, at least by the time of Elizabeth, as early as 1582, and to have been at that time a thing well understood and accepted.[21] The succeeding rulings between that time and 1650

[16] The only case before 1642 appears to be the following: 1630, Mericke v. King, Hetley 137 ("In evidence to the jury, he who had purchased the land in question (it was said by the Court) he shall not be a witness if he claim under the same title"); this is perhaps equivalent to the case of a party. The hitherto existing freedom is shown in the following case: 1535, Y. B. 27 H. VIII, f. 20, pl. 10 (replevin; defendant made conusance as bailiff of Lord Cobham for rent in arrear, and alleged a rent due to the lord; Lord Cobham then "passed out, and gave evidence" as to his seisin of the rent; and no objection to his competency was raised; yet he was an interested person).

[17] 1613, Anon., 1 Bulstr. 202 (witness to a deed of feoffment by livery of seisin, excepted to because afterwards he received an estate at will in the land, "and so by his oath was to make his own estate good"; exception "disallowed by the whole Court, and that he might well be sworn as a lawful witness to prove the executing of a feoffment by livery and seisin, this being in affirmance of the feoffment").

[18] St. 4 James I, c. 1, § 16 (the juries in trials of Englishmen for offences committed in Scotland are authorized "to receive and admit only such good and sufficient lawful witnesses upon their oaths, either for or against the party arraigned, as shall not appear to them or the greater part of them to be unfit and unworthy to be witnesses in that case, either in regard of their hatred or malice, or their favor and affection, either to the party prosecuting or the party arraigned, or of their former evil life and conversation"). On the other hand, seventy years before, in 1535, Parliament had recited, as one of the causes for transferring jurisdiction of piracy from the Admiralty to the common-law courts, the unsatisfactory mode of trial by the civil law in the former court, which required the offence to be either confessed or "directly proved by witnesses indifferent, such as saw their offences committed, which cannot be gotten but by chance at few times." It would seem that a change, or the beginning of it, was marked by the later statute.

[19] Infra, note 38.

[20] Infra, note 22.

[21] 1582, Dymoke's Case, Savile 34, pl. 81 (joint defendants joined "by covin to take away their testimony"; if this appears on the evidence, "the justices may and must receive their testimony").

seem all to have been instances of the parties themselves being offered as witnesses.[22]

The result, then, on these data, is that the disqualification of parties is recognized at least as early as Elizabeth's time, while that of interested persons at large does not appear till near 1650. From these facts and from Coke's own language (in the passage above quoted), it may be inferred that the latter form of the disqualification came as a development and an expansion of the former. There is little difficulty in accepting this origin of the latter form as the natural and sufficient one. The changed nature of the jury's function, and the contemporary examples, already set, of disqualification by infamy (ante, § 519) and by marital relationship (post, § 600) might have served to aid the result, but the principle of parties' disqualification would have been the direct root of the disqualification by interest in general. In final corroboration of this, it may be suggested that the imitation of any other of the existing bodies of rules against partisanship — namely, those for jurors and those for ecclesiastical witnesses — would necessarily have included the prohibition of family members as witnesses; whereas the common law from the outset repudiated such a doctrine. Now it would be consistent with the gradual development of the party's disqualification to extend it to persons interested in the issue, i.e. quasi-parties, but to fail to extend it to family relationship, which otherwise would have stood upon the same general principle and had been always so treated in other systems. In short, the development indicated by the course of the precedents is precisely that which 'a priori' would have been most natural.[23] Only upon that hypothesis can we plausibly account for the singularity of English law in ad-

[22] 1611 (?), Smith's Case, 12 Co. 69 (resolved, by Coke, C. J., that "the parties to the supposed usurious contract shall not be admitted witnesses, for this, that upon the matter they were 'testes in propria causa', and by their oath shall avoid their bond, etc."); 1617, Howard v. Bell, Hob. 91 (persons claiming tenant-right against the lord of the manor, allowed to join in defence, "by my lord Coke and myself", in the Star Chamber, "and the reason was that since the title was one against all, it was in effect but one's defence, . . . and therefore the courts of justice do every day deny them to be witnesses one for another in such general cases; . . . now as they are acknowledged parties to their prejudice in defence, so it is in reason that they be in like manner allowed for their advantage"; but the Lord Chancellor differed, i.e. from the conclusion); 1624, Anon., Godb. 326 (one of joint defendants against whom plaintiff discontinued, admitted); 1636, Creswick's Case, Clayt. pl. 64 (joint defendant, against whom no proof was made, admitted).

The Star Chamber followed rules of a hybrid sort, chiefly ecclesiastical in procedure; but where their rule is not from the latter law, it may be supposed to represent the common law; on the qualification of witnesses in the present respect they clearly had not adopted the church-law (they admitted a son for a father, for example); so that we may assume their rule to represent the contemporary one of the common law; it plainly excluded parties: infra, note 23.

[23] The following passages show how the rule would amplify: 1612, Dr. Manning's Case, 2 Brownl. 151 (Star-Chamber; bill for extortion; "if a man which is not party grieved exhibits bill for offence made to another person as against whom the offence was committed, he [the latter] shall not be allowed as witness, insomuch as he is party grieved, and by that he should be a witness in his own cause"); ante 1635, Hudson, Treatise of the Star Chamber, pt. III, § 21, in Hargr. Collect. Jurid. 205, 203 ("First of all, it is clear that a party can be no witness; . . . but the Court hath lately taken an honorable order to allow the answer and examining of any persons named defendants against whom there is no proof, but only their names put in to take away their testimonies, which is grown exceedingly common"; nothing is said of interested persons not parties).

mitting freely the plainest of partisan witnesses, namely, family members and servants.

There remains, then, but one element to account for, — the parties' disqualification itself, as apparently coming into existence during the 1500s. The explanation of this seems to be near at hand; it is a fruitful one for the rules of evidence, namely, the history of jury-trial as an institution competing with and gradually displacing the other modes of trial. Turning back to the 1400s, we find at that epoch but one of the older modes surviving in any vigor; this was wager of law, the then name for the primitive process of compurgation by the party's oath with oath-helpers. All through the 1400s, and with only gradually decreasing vogue during the 1500s, the defendant could still refuse to be tried by a jury, and demand a decision by his own wager of law, in actions (mainly) of detinue and debt,[24] — almost the commonest of the original civil actions; in London, this privilege of its freemen extended even to charges of felony.[25] For the maintenance of this privilege defendants struggled long and hard; in 1403, for example,[26] a special statute came to their aid and protected them against evasions of their right by plaintiffs who framed their action fictitiously in account and then appealed to a prejudiced jury and thus cut off the defendant from exonerating himself by oath alone.[27]

What is the significance of this long struggle, successful for two centuries at least? It seems to be this, that in wager of law alone, and not in jury-trial, could the party have the benefit of his own oath.[28] Before a jury the parties do not swear. They plead orally, or argue, or allege things "in evidence", — either by themselves or by their counsel;[29] but they do not take an oath. The oath is in that epoch a solemn and determinative proceeding, — a mode of trying and deciding; the oath of jurors is that of triers of the fact; so also the oath of compurgators; so also, originally, that of deed-witnesses and transaction-witnesses, and even in later times (as late as Coke's day) these might go out with the jurors and help to decide by their oaths. The hesitancy in admitting ordinary witnesses to testify was probably due in part to a sense of the incongruity of an oath which had in it no flavor of decisiveness. Hence can be conceived the unnaturalness of admitting the party to his

[24] Thayer, Preliminary Treatise, 29–31.

[25] Thayer, ubi supra, 27; Pollock & Maitland, Hist. Eng. law, II, 632.

[26] St. 5 H. IV, c. 8.

[27] It is not improbable that the contracts found frequently in the 1500s and 1600s, by which the obligor promises to pay if the obligee will make oath that a specific sum is due (Knight v. Rushwood, Cro. Eliz. 469; Bretton v. Prettiman, T. Raym. 153, and many others), came into vogue as a method of ensuring the availability of the obligee's oath, at a time when jury-trial was defeating him of that right (ante, § 7 a).

[28] In 1561, Harwood v. Lee, Dyer 196 b, it is noted as the special custom of London that "the defendant should be affirmed by the oath of the party." Further details are given in Bateson's "Borough Customs", vol. II, Introd. pp. 29–32 (Selden Society Pub., XXI, 1906).

For some references upon the later history of other forms of the party's decisory oath, see post, § 1815.

In the Boston Globe of Aug. 21, 1907, is noted a pending lawsuit in Lynn, Mass., the settlement of which was, by consent, to be left to the defendant's decisory oath, taken according to the Jewish law before a rabbi.

[29] Thayer, ubi supra, 112, 120, 122.

oath before a jury. That would have been another mode of "trial", not to be mixed with trial by jury. A verdict was one kind of "proof"; deed-witnesses might be another kind; and the party's oath was still a different kind; there could not be two kinds of "proof" together, i.e. two ways of testing and settling the truth. The party's oath, then, had no place in trial by jury; its appropriate place was in a distinct mode of trial, wager of law. It can hardly be anything but this contrast which explains the determined struggle to retain the privilege of wager of law; it was the sole proceeding in which a party could have the benefit of his own oath, i.e. virtually, as a modern witness.[30]

If this be so, it is easy to see that, from the very beginning of modern witnesses, the party was incapable of being one. When ordinary witnesses began, in the 1400s, to be called with only slowly increasing frequency, the matter would be of little consequence. But in the 1500s, as witnesses came to be more and more the reliance of the jury and the parties for evidence, the conceded incapacity of the party to take the witness' oath would be more and more noticeable. It would be more worth while for the opponent to appeal to this rule; and thus it would naturally tend to happen (as we find it happening in fact) that the opponent would seek to disqualify witnesses by joining them as parties. This would not naturally be found, 'a priori,' until some time in the 1500s; and it is in the late 1500s [31] that we find apparently the first reported case.

The result, then, may be summed up in this way: That the party's oath was necessarily excluded in jury trial; that, when modern witnesses came into vogue in the 1400s and 1500s, the party was naturally deemed incapable of being such a witness; that otherwise no rule or disqualification for interested persons was recognized in the earlier days of witnesses; and that finally, after Coke's time and probably under the influence of his utterances, the rule for a party was extended by analogy to interested persons in general.

2. Chancery Practice. In Chancery practice, the problem would seem at first sight to have been a simpler one; for the Chancellor modelled his procedure after the canon (or ecclesiastical) law, and would in all probability have followed those rules substantially, not only in the mode of examination of witnesses (as is well established) but also in the rules of incompetency.[32] Nevertheless, by the end of the 1600s, Chancery is found enforcing the common-law rules of incompetency, just as through all its later history it professed to follow in general the common-law rules of evidence.[33] There must, then, have been, at some stage, a departure from the canon-law rules for wit-

[30] This seems to have been first suggested by Chief Justice Cushing of New Hampshire, in 1876 (King v. Hopkins, 57 N. H. 334, 367, "the fact of the history of jury trial, that one great purpose of its introduction was the exclusion of the parties as witnesses").

[31] Supra, note 21. See also Hudson's Star-Chamber Treatise, quoted in note 23.

[32] A token of the influence is found, for example, in the fact that at common law, up to the 1600s, an objection to a witness was called a "challenge", while in Chancery the canon-law term "exception" was used.

[33] Ante, § 4.

nesses, and the puzzling thing is that this stage appears to have been at least as early as those common-law rules themselves. In the first place, the disqualification of parties is seen already in the time of Elizabeth;[34] this, however, was consistent enough with the canon law. But, secondly, in the Chancery reporters of the 1500s (chiefly Cary and Tothill) there appear no precedents for the exclusion of interested persons other than parties; this harmonizes with the common-law history, but departs from the canon law. Thirdly, the Chancellors, who sat with other judges in the Star Chamber and presided, did not there fix into its practice the canon-law rules of disqualification by family-relationship.[35] Finally, the Chancery practice is found preserving, from the very beginning of the reports, the canon-law rule for the compulsory examination of parties at the opponent's instance, i.e. negativing any privilege for the party,[36] — a rule in direct discord with the common law; and it is a singularity that the Chancellor, while thus proceeding consistently to adopt the canon-law rules in a matter so radical, should nevertheless have ignored them in other respects in which their difference from the common law was equally radical. The details of the origin of the Chancery rules, and the motives leading to its peculiar combination of methods, remain still to be learned with accuracy.

3. Criminal Trials. It remains to notice the progress of the rule in criminal cases. (1) So far as concerns the prosecution's witnesses, it would seem that no exclusion by reason of interest was attempted before very near the time of Coke's book;[37] and even after that time, little recognition is given to that rule.[38] There was, however, in crown cases in this epoch, especially in the trials for treason, which form most of those that have come down to us, no dispo-

[34] 1580. Hollingworth v. Lucy, Cary 129 (defendant, moving for a commission, alleges that the plaintiff had notified only Smith, another of the defendants, "who is little interested in the cause, but made a party, as the defendant's counsel supposes, to take away his testimony from the other defendants"); and the citations supra, note 22. But in the precedents of the 1400s the plaintiff himself is admitted freely to testify on oath in the Chancellor's court: Barbour, History of Contract in Early English Equity, pp. 147–149 (Oxford Studies in Social and Legal History, IV, 1914).

[35] Post, § 600.

[36] Post, § 2218.

[37] No mention is made of any rule of exclusion as late as 1557, in Staunford's Pleas of the Crown, b. 3, c. 8, and 1565, in Smith's Commonwealth of England, b. 2, c. 26.

[38] 1640, Lord Strafford's Trial, 3 How. St. Tr. 1381, 1434 (a copy of an alleged illegal warrant, testified to by the serjeant claiming to act under the defendant's command, was objected to by the defendant, since "what he swears to my prejudice is to his own advantage; nor can a man, by any equity in the world, be admitted to testify against another 'in suam justificationem'"; and the copy was excluded); 1643, Col. Fiennes' Trial, 4 How. St. Tr. 185, 212 (court-martial; argued for the prosecution that defendant's father was "but 'testes domesticus' at the best"); 238 (argued for the prosecution that "many of them [defendant's witnesses] are 'testes domestici', as his brother, kinsmen, servants, footboys; most of the rest his officers and soldiers, against whom we excepted as incompetent"; the Court here went in part on civil law rules of procedure); 1644, Archbishop Laud's Trial, 4 How. St. Tr. 315, 383, 389, 402 (argued as an objection by the defendant that a witness testified "in his own cause"); 1649, Duke of Hamilton's Trial, 4 How. St. Tr. 1155 (defendant objected unsuccessfully against a witness' testimony, "he being a party and now in hazard"); 1649, Lilburne's Trial, 4 How. St. Tr. 1269, 1342 (similar); 1660, St. 12 Car. II, c. 32 (seizures of goods illegally executed; the person seizing "shall not be admitted or allowed to give in evidence upon his or their oath or oaths"); ante 1680, Hale, Pleas of the Crown, I, 302 ("A man concerned in point of interest is not a lawful accuser or witness in many cases").

sition to concede objections to the crown's testimony;[39] and this sufficiently explains the tardiness in the adoption of the rules in criminal trials; indeed, at no later time was the rule of interest as strictly construed as in civil cases.

(2) The accused himself, like the parties in civil cases, had always, under jury-trial, been allowed to plead his cause orally in person. This in civil cases naturally came to be done usually by the counsel. But, since in criminal causes, the accused was not allowed to have counsel in felony cases (until statute conceded this, for treason in 1695, and for felony in 1836),[40] his statements covered without distinction whatever he had to say of law, of evidence, and of argument. In effect, he furnished evidence, i.e. material which affected the jury's belief; but he was not sworn, he had no standing as a witness, and in theory of the law he therefore gave no evidence. During the period of recorded trials down to the second half of the 1500s this theory appears not to have been emphasized; the accused made an address at the proper stage, and, as witnesses came on, he spoke and was questioned freely, as if his statements counted for something, though he was not sworn.[41] But by the time of James II, just before the Revolution, the Court is found expressly repudiating the notion that the accused's statements are to be taken as testimony.[42] This, it may be supposed, was in part due to the then recently established principle in civil cases of disqualification by interest.

(3) The accused was at common law not allowed to have any witnesses on his behalf. This (to our eyes) barbarous rule was perhaps not unnatural in the earlier days, when the jurors had so much knowledge of their own. At any rate, as late as the 1400s, it was not an extraordinary thing, seeing that the practice of calling witnesses in the modern sense was only just beginning in civil cases. But, in the next century, when their use in civil cases was common enough, they were still not admitted in criminal trials;[43] not on any theory of disqualification (it was still too early for that), but on the pretext that they were not needed, — the same pretext that forbade the employment of counsel.[44] No doubt also a general disinclination prevailed

[39] Compare the history of the rule for infamy, ante, § 519.

[40] 7 & 8 W. III, c. 3; 6 & 7 W. IV, c. 114.

[41] The following trials illustrate this: 1554, Throckmorton's Trial, 1 How. St. Tr. 862, 873; 1571, Duke of Norfolk's Trial, 1 How. St. Tr. 958, 979; 1588, Knightley's Trial, 1 How. St. Tr. 1263, 1267; 1603, Ralcigh's Trial, 2 How. St. Tr. 1, 11; 1615, Weston's Trial, 2 How. St. Tr. 911, 928; 1649, Duke of Hamilton's Trial, 4 How. St. Tr. 1155, 1161; 1661, James' Trial, 6 How. St. Tr. 67, 79; 1662, Tonge's Trial, 6 How. St. Tr. 225, 256; 1663, Moders' Trial, 6 How. St. Tr. 273, 278; 1664, Turner's Trial, 6 How. St. Tr. 565, 595.

Compare Mr. J. Stephen's account of this: Hist. Crim. Law, I, 325, 377, 440.

[42] 1678, Coleman's Trial, 7 How. St. Tr. 1, 65 (Coleman: "I came home the last day of August"; L. C. J. Scroggs: "Have you any witness to prove that?"; Coleman: "I cannot say I have a witness"; L. C. J.: "Then you say nothing"); 1681, Colledge's Trial, 8 How. St. Tr. 549, 681.

[43] 1554, Throckmorton's Trial, 1 How. St. Tr. 862, 885; 1590, Udall's Trial, 1 How. St. Tr. 1271, 1280, 1304.

[44] 1678, L. H. Steward Finch, in Lord Cornwallis' Trial, 7 How. St. Tr. 143, 149: "The fouler the crime is, the clearer and the plainer ought the proof of it to be. There is no other good reason can be given why the law refuseth to allow the prisoner at the bar counsel in matter of fact when his life is concerned, but only this, because the evidence by which he is condemned ought to be so very evident and so plain that all the counsel in the world should not be able to answer upon it."

to concede anything that would weaken the hands of the prosecution. There seems to have been some general support for this rule in the notions of the time, for not until the middle of the 1600s is there any relaxation.[45] Then, first, the accused is gradually allowed to produce witnesses, who speak, however, without oath;[46] next, he is given compulsory process for them;[47] and, finally, by statutes in 1695[48] and 1701[48] he is allowed to have them sworn in treason and in felony. From that time on, the ordinary principle of disqualification by interest, already established for civil cases, is enforced wherever it is applicable to a defendant's witnesses.

§ 576. Interest-Disqualification in general; Policy of the Rule; Statutory Abolition. The theory of disqualification by interest was merely one variety of the general theory which underlay the extensive rules of incompetency at common law. It was reducible in its essence to a syllogism, both premises of which, though they may now seem fallacious enough, were in the 1700s accepted as axioms of truth: Total exclusion from the stand is the proper safeguard against a false decision, whenever the persons offered are of a class specially likely to speak falsely; Persons having a pecuniary interest in the event of the cause are specially likely to speak falsely; Therefore such persons should be totally excluded. This theory may be perceived running through all the authoritative expositions of the doctrine:

1727, Chief Baron GILBERT, Evidence, 119 (Lofft's ed. 223): "For where a man, who is interested in the matter in question, would also prove it, it rather is a ground for distrust, than any just cause of belief; for men are generally so short-sighted, as to look to their own private benefit, which is near them, rather than to the good of the world, which, though on the sum of things really best for the individual, is more remote; therefore, from the nature of human passions and actions, there is more reason to distrust such a biased testimony than to believe it. It is also easy for persons, who are prejudiced and prepossessed, to put [45] There had been two statutes, of very limited extent, allowing witnesses to the accused, in 1589 (St. 31 Eliz. c. 4) and 1606 (St. 4 Ja. I, c. 1, § 16).

[46] 1645, Lord Macguire's Trial, 4 How. St. Tr. 653, 666 (Macguire: "I was told, when I came into the kingdom [from Ireland], that I might have witnesses"; Judge: "If you had witnesses here, we would hear them; but . . . we cannot protract time [to wait for them]. . . . If you will ask them [the king's witnesses] any questions for your defence, you shall"); 1649, Duke of Hamilton's Trial, 4 How. St. Tr. 1155, 1157, 1160 (defendant allowed to use some witnesses, but not granted a warrant for others); 1653, Faulconer's Trial, 5 How. St. Tr. 323, 357 (witnesses freely examined for the defendant; here under the Commonwealth); 1660, Hulet's Trial, 5 How. St. Tr. 1179, 1191 (under the Restoration; witnesses allowed, "but they are not to be admitted upon oath against the king"); 1661, James' Trial, 6 How. St. Tr. 67, 79; 1669, Hawkins' Trial, 6 How. St. Tr. 921, 933; 1678, Stayley's Trial, 6 How. St. Tr. 1501, 1508.

[47] Note that this reform comes in under the Restoration and before the Revolution: 1663, Twyn's Trial: 6 How. St. Tr. 513, 516 (L. C. J. Hyde: "Let's know their names, we will take care they shall come in"); 1664, Turner's Trial, 6 How. St. Tr. 565, 570 (L. C. J. Hyde: "The law will not admit us to summon any witnesses"); 1679, Reading's Trial, 7 How. St. Tr. 259, 278 (L. C. J. North: "There was never any subpœnas denied you; but you might have had them at any time"; and at pp. 288, 289, two witnesses were sworn).

Compare the history of compulsory process in general, post, § 2190.

[48] St. 7 Wm. III, c. 3, § 1; St. 1 Anne, c. 9, § 3. Compare the detailed history of the old rule in Thayer, Preliminary Treatise, 157, note, and the shorter account in Stephen, History of the Criminal Law, I, 350-354, 416.

In the Colonies, the earliest statute recognizing this new right of the accused to call witnesses was probably that of South Carolina, in 1712, now Code Crim. Pr. 1922, § 965.

false and unequal glosses upon what they give in evidence; and therefore the law removes them from testimony, to prevent their sliding into perjury; and it can be no injury to truth to remove those from the jury, whose testimony may hurt themselves, and can never induce any rational belief. If it be objected, that interest in the matter in dispute might, from the bias it creates, be an exception to the credit, but that it ought not to be absolutely so to the competency, any more than the friendship or enmity of a party, whose evidence is offered, towards either of the parties in the cause, or many other considerations hereafter to be intimated; the general answer may be this, that in point of authority no distinction is more absolutely settled; and in point of theory, the existence of a direct interest is capable of being precisely proved; but its influence on the mind is of a nature not to discover itself to the jury; whence it hath been held expedient to adopt a general exception, by which witnesses so circumstanced are free from temptation, and the cause not exposed to the hazard of the very doubtful estimate, what quantity of interest in the question, in proportion to the character of the witness, in any instance, leaves his testimony entitled to belief. Some, indeed, are incapable of being biased even latently by the greatest interest; many would betray the most solemn obligation and public confidence for an interest very inconsiderable. An universal exclusion, where no line short of this could have been drawn, preserves infirmity from a snare, and integrity from suspicion; and keeps the current of evidence, thus far at least, clear and uninfected."

1824, Mr. Starkie, Evidence, 83: "The law will not receive the evidence of any person, even under the sanction of an oath, who has an interest in giving the proposed evidence, and consequently whose interest conflicts with his duty. This rule of exclusion, considered in its principle, requires little explanation. It is founded on the known infirmities of human nature, which is too weak to be generally restrained by religious or moral obligations, when tempted and solicited in a contrary direction by temporal interests. There are, no doubt, many whom no interests could seduce from a sense of duty, and their exclusion by the operation of this rule may in particular cases shut out the truth. But the law must prescribe general rules; and experience proves that more mischief would result from the general reception of interested witnesses than is occasioned by their general exclusion."

The answer to this syllogism is merely that both its premises are unsound, — that pecuniary interest does not raise any large probability of falsehood, and that, even if it did, the risks of false decision are not best avoided by excluding such testimony. The classical expositions of these fallacies are found in the following passages: [1]

1827, Mr. Jeremy Bentham, Rationale of Judicial Evidence, b. IX, pt. III, c. III (Bowring's ed., vol. VII, pp. 393 ff.): "Ignoramus has for the purpose of this topic composed his system of psychology. What is it? A counterpart to the learned Plowden's system of mineralogical chemistry: equal as touching its simplicity — equal as touching its truth. Two parent metals, sulphur and mercury: the mother, sulphur; the father, mercury.

§ 576. [1] Mr. Bentham's was of course the first and greatest; the above quotation includes merely a few of the most typical and forcible passages from his argument. The other two quotations represent those which in the history of the law were next most potent in their practical consequences, namely, the utterances of the Commissions in England and America, whose proposals led directly to legislative reform. There were, of course, other admirable expositions, notably Lord Brougham's, in his speeches in Parliament, and Lord Denman's between 1824 and 1854, in his speeches, pamphlets, and articles. Both of these were Bentham's admirers. Perhaps the most comprehensive and concise, and the most profitable for perusal, next to Mr. Bentham's, are those of Chief Justice Appleton of Maine (a disciple of Bentham's) in his treatise (1860) on Evidence, chaps. I, IV, and Mr. Justice Edward Livingston (circa 1823), in his Introductory Report to the Code of Evidence (Works, ed. 1872, I, 424, 438 ff.); Livingston had read Bentham, probably in Dumont's earlier abridged edition.

Are they in good health? they beget the noble metals: are they in bad health? they beget the base. . . . In the view taken of the subject by the man of law, — to judge of trustworthiness, or at least, of fitness to be heard, interest of no interest is (flagrant and stigmatized improbity apart) the only question. . . . Between two opposite propositions, both of them absurd in theory, because both of them notoriously false in fact, the choice is not an easy one. But if a choice were unavoidable, the absurdity would be less gross to say, 'No man who is exposed to the action of interest will speak false', than to say, 'No man who is exposed to the action of interest will speak true.' Of a man's, of every man's, being subject to the action of divers mendacity-restraining motives, you may be always sure: of his being subjected to the action of any mendacity-promoting motives, you cannot be always sure. But suppose you were sure. Does it follow, because there is a motive of some sort prompting a man to lie, that for that reason he will lie? That there is danger in such a case, is not to be disputed: but does the danger approach to certainty? This will not be contended. If it did, instead of shutting the door against some witnesses, you ought not to open it to any. An interest of a certain kind acts upon a man in a direction opposite to the path of duty: but will he obey the impulse? That will depend upon the forces tending to confine him to that path — upon the prevalence of the one set of opposite forces or the other. All bodies on or about the earth tend to the centre of the earth; yet all bodies are not there. All mountains have a tendency to fall into a level with the plains; yet, notwithstanding, there are mountains. All waters seek a level; yet, notwithstanding, there are waves. . . . Any interest, interest of any sort and quantity, sufficient to produce mendacity? As rational would be it to say, any horse, or dog, or flea, put to a waggon, is sufficient to move it: to move it, and set it a-running at the pace of a mail-coach. . . . Take what everybody understands, money: for precision's sake, take at once £10; the £10 of the day, whatever be the ratio of it to the £10 of yesterday: to the present purpose, depreciation will not affect it. This £10, will its action be the same in the bosom of Crœsus as of Irus? in the bosom of Diogenes, as in that of Catiline? No man will fancy any such thing for a moment: no man, unless, peradventure, it may have happened to him to have been stultified by legal science. . . . In the eyes of the English lawyer, one thing, and one thing only, has a value: that thing is money. On the will of man, if you believe the English lawyer, one thing, and one thing only, has influence: that thing is money. Such is his system of psychological dynamics. If you will believe the man of law, there is no such thing as the fear of God; no such thing as regard for reputation; no such thing as fear of legal punishment; no such thing as ambition; no such thing as the love of power; no such thing as filial, no such thing as parental, affection; no such thing as party attachment; no such thing as party enmity; no such thing as public spirit, patriotism, or general benevolence; no such thing as compassion; no such thing as gratitude; no such thing as revenge. Or (what comes to the same thing) weighed against the interest produced by the value of a farthing, the utmost mass of interest producible from the action of all those affections put together, vanishes in the scale. . . . For a farthing — for the chance of gaining the incommensurable fraction of a farthing, no man upon earth, no Englishman at least, that would not perjure himself. This in Westminster Hall is science: this in Westminster Hall is law. According to the prints of the day, £180,000 was the value of the property left by the late Duke of Bridgewater. For a fraction of a farthing, Aristides, with the duke's property in his pocket, would have perjured himself. One decision I meet with, that would be amusing enough, if to a lover of mankind there could be anything amusing in injustice. A man is turned out of court for a liar, not for any interest that he has, but for one which he supposed himself to have, the case being otherwise. Instead of turning the man out of court, might not the judge have contented himself with setting him right? Would not the judge's opinion have done as well as a release? The pleasant part of the story is, that the fact on which the exclusion is grounded could not have been true. For, before the witness could be turned out of court for supposing himself to have an interest, he must have been informed of his having none: consequently, at the time when he was turned out, he must have ceased to suppose that he had any. Another offence, for which I find a man pronounced a liar, seems to make no bad match with the foregoing: it was for being a man of honour. 'Oh ho! you are a man of honour, are you? Out with you, then — you have no business here.' Being asked whether he did not look upon himself as bound in honour to pay costs for the party who called him, supposing him to lose the cause, and whether such was not his intention, — his answer was in the affirmative, and he was rejected. It was taken for granted that he would be a liar. Why? Because he had shown he would not be one. . . . Exceptions, self-contradictions, spring up everywhere under their feet: exceptions, and, as far as they extend, all reasonable. Reasonable, and why? Because, the rule itself being fundamentally absurd, everything must be reasonable which goes to narrow its extent. . . . V. Exception the fifth: — . . . Question: A man who at the time of his examination has an interest in the cause, — is he an admissible witness, he having had no interest at the time of the supposed fact? Decision in the affirmative. Because he was under no temptation when he had not to speak, therefore, when he is to speak, knowing him to be under temptation, you are to suppose him not to be so. Just as if a pilot were to say in a storm, the vessel among the breakers, Sit still, there is no danger. Why so? Because yesterday it was a dead calm. VI. Exception the sixth: — 'Voire dire.' Truth expected, in spite of interest. . . . When a witness produced against you has an interest in the business (meaning always a pecuniary interest), and you cannot get other evidence of it, or do not care to be at the expense, you address yourself to the witness himself, and ask him whether he has or no: if he speaks truth, he is turned out; if he perjures himself, he is heard. This operation is called examining a witness upon the 'voire dire.' 'Voire dire' is, in law French, to tell the truth. A man might look a good while, even in the vocabulary of English law, before he would find so silly a one. 'Come, my honest friend, I am going to put some questions to you. To the first of them, the court expects you to speak truth: to the others, as you please.'"

1853, English Common Law Practice Commissioners, Second Report,[2] p. 10: "Plain sense and reason would obviously suggest that any living witness who could throw light upon a fact in issue should be heard to state what he knows, subject always to such observations as may arise as to his means of knowledge or his disposition to the truth. The law of England, however, at least until a recent period, proceeded on a very different principle. Acting apparently on a distrust both of the integrity of witnesses and of the discernment of the tribunals, it sought to protect the latter from the possibility of being misled, by carefully excluding from giving testimony not only the parties to the cause, but any one who had any, even the most minute, interest in the result. Every person so circumstanced, however small and insignificant the amount of his interest, was presumed to be incapable of resisting the temptation to perjury; and every judge and juryman was presumed to be incapable of discerning perjury under circumstances peculiarly calculated to excite suspicion and watchfulness. It is painful to contemplate the amount of injustice which must have taken place under the exclusive system of the English law, not only in cases actually brought into court and there wrongly decided in consequence of the exclusion of evidence, but in numberless cases in which the parties silently submitted to wrongs from inability to avail themselves of proof which, though morally conclusive, was in law inadmissible. From the time, however, when the late Mr. Bentham first turned the attention of the public to the defects of the English law of evidence, the system of exclusion has been crumbling away before the power of discussion and improved legislation. . . .

[2] This Report was ten years subsequent to the abolition of the interest-disqualification; but the passage was useful as confirming by experience the wisdom of the steps so recently taken, and thus made it possible to obtain support for the further reform of abolishing marital incompetency, — a measure which followed immediately in 1854. It was in consequence of the First Report of this same Commission that the incompetency of civil parties had been abolished in 1851.

[After noting the three general statutes between 1843 and 1851, which had by successive steps removed incompetency for interest,] Such is the gradual progress of opinion and intelligence. A quarter of a century ago such a measure, if proposed, would doubtless have been treated as a wild and dangerous innovation, altogether unfit to be entertained by the Legislature. The new law has now been in practical operation for eighteen months; and according to the concurrent testimony of the bench, the profession, and the public, is found to work admirably and to contribute in an eminent degree to the administration of justice."

1848, New York Commissioners on Practice and Pleadings,[3] First Report, p. 246: "The rule appears to us to rest upon a principle altogether unsound; that is, that the situation of the witness will tempt him to perjury. The reason strikes at the foundation of human testimony. The only just inquiry is this; whether the chances of obtaining the truth are greater from the admission or the exclusion of the witness. Who that has any respect for the society in which he lives can doubt, that, upon this principle, the witness should be admitted? The contrary rule implies, that, in the majority of instances, men are so corrupted by their interest, that they will perjure themselves for it, and that besides being corrupt, they will be so adroit, as to deceive courts and juries. This is contrary to all experience. In the great majority of instances the witnesses are honest, however much interested, and in most cases of dishonesty the falsehood of the testimony is detected, and deceives none. Absolutely to exclude an interested witness, is therefore as unsound in theory, as it is inconsistent in practice. It is inconsistent, because the law admits witnesses far more likely to be biased in favor of the party, than he who has merely a pecuniary interest. A father may testify for his son; a child living with his father and dependent upon his bounty, may appear as his witness, nay, as his only witness, without question. Is the immediate gain of a dollar, by the result of a cause, so potent to outweigh integrity, while affection, consanguinity, dependence, are put down as dust in the balance? There is not another rule in the law of evidence so prolific of disputes, uncertainties, and delays, as that we are considering. Not a circuit is held, but question after question is raised upon it; nor a term where exceptions growing out of it are not debated. . . . England has outstripped us in this most necessary reform. Five years ago, an act of Parliament obliterated the rule from the laws of that country. . . . Lord Brougham has spoken of it, in the following language: 'This is certainly the greatest measure that has been carried under the head of judicial procedure, since the statute of frauds, that is, since the Restoration. It places the law of evidence at length upon a rational footing, and makes its provisions consistent with themselves. It protects judges and juries and parties, from the miscarriages, heretofore constantly produced, by the exclusion of important testimony; wisely opening the door to the witness, but reserving the estimate of his credit and the value of his evidence, to those who are to judge the cause. It also sweeps away the numberless nice and subtle distinctions in which the profession was wont to luxuriate; disencumbers our jurisprudence of a heavy load of useless decisions, resting upon refinements and not principles, and abridges the trial of causes, by shutting out those debates that used daily to arise upon the admission of proofs, which the common sense of mankind at once pronounced should be received, and which the law itself did receive in other instances, not distinguishable by the naked eye of plain reason. There have been few greater improvements in our judicial system, than those which are effected by this valuable statute.'"

It is not easy nowadays to appreciate why these plain objections remained so long without recognition:

[3] This Commission, appointed through efforts led by Mr. David Dudley Field, consisted of Messrs. Nicholas Hill, David Graham, and Arphaxad Loomis; but, before its labors began, Mr. Hill resigned and was replaced by Mr. Field. Compare with the above Report the Complete Report of 1850, p. 715, note to § 1708; this section, making "all persons without exception" competent, except specified classes, has served as the type for the legislation of a majority of our jurisdictions.

(1) One reason, certainly, is found in the much stronger influence, up to the 1800s, of the emotional element in all human conduct. The belief that a partisan would likely falsify, or at least distort unconsciously the truth, was then much closer than now to the facts of life; because partisanship did then have an influence which has now largely given place to cooler and more rational motives of action. This may be gathered from various features of life in those days. Partisanship then colored the whole existence and committed one to set views and courses of conduct which had no relation to a discriminating choice. Speech and action were more passionate and violent; witness Burke's diatribes against Warren Hastings, and the enormous excess of libel actions over their present number, as well as the extremities of abuse which were indulged in between gentlemen; compare the almost incredible vituperation employed against such majestic characters as Washington and Jefferson with the decline of political personalities in the last few decades. Motives then rested more on sentiment; witness the rise of Romanticism in literature and politics, the careers of Byron and Shelley, the vogue of "Paul and Virginia" and "Thaddeus of Warsaw." Note, too, that these features are still found surviving in the traditions of precisely that portion of our community — the South — where we may see with our own eyes that the emotional element — both in its highest and its lowest forms — predominates in the character. During the 1800s this predominance was gradually disappearing; the influence of scientific research and of industrial invention and organization made for a more rational and less emotional life. That influence, no doubt, has in part had its degrading effect in strengthening the calculative, sordid, and commercial standards of action; but it has also had the effect of establishing, in general, cool reason as the orthodox test of conduct. Thus, with the diminution of the control of mere emotion and partisanship over conduct and opinion, the rules of law which were natural enough while that domination existed, ceased gradually to correspond to the facts of life and survived as anachronisms. It became possible to see their fallacies as soon as their moral basis disappeared, but not till then. In short, not before the second half of the 1800s could it have been fairly expected that public opinion would demand or even support the abolition of disqualification by interest; nor yet, perhaps, does that abolition, in a few communities (chiefly in the South[4]), correspond to the facts of life and public opinion, as it certainly does in most.

(2) A second reason perhaps is to be found in that "dead weight of an oath" (in Mr. Justice Stephen's phrase), which in popular probative notions prevailed from primitive times and still is so difficult in some communities to make way against. As long as juries were inclined to give a numerical value to witnesses, to believe that ten witnesses were ten times as probative

[4] In 1898, Mr. N. J. Hammond, an accomplished and thoughtful member of the bar of Georgia, at one time Attorney-General, said to the writer that the abolition of parties' incompetency had in his opinion been a mistake. Perhaps there exist other doubters still; see Jenkins, J., diss. in Harman v. Harman, 1895, 17 C. C. A. 479, 70 Fed. 926, and ante, § 289.

as one witness, and to treat a sworn assertion on the stand as being good for so much testimony, irrespective of the witness' personal credit, so long might the Legislature well hesitate to admit to the stand persons who in their credit would certainly be weaker than the normal witness and would yet be indiscriminately counted as good witnesses by the jury. In other words, the tribunal's opportunity for a careful weighing of a witness' measure of credit, and the means afforded for doing so by cross-examination and the like, form the safeguards which induce us to take the risk of admitting interested witnesses; we rely on being able to make the proper allowance for the danger; if, then, the tribunal is apt to ignore those safeguards, the reason for admission is much weaker. Some such thought must have operated to prolong the delay in abolishing disqualification by interest.[5] Perhaps the two foregoing considerations sufficiently explain why the reforming legislation dates no earlier than the second half of the 1800s.

In England, the publication (in 1827) of Bentham's great treatise first furnished the arsenal of arguments for transforming public opinion. The weapons were wielded and the forces marshalled by Mr. (afterwards L. C. J.) Denman and Mr. (afterwards L. C.) Brougham.[6] Mr. Denman had indeed, as early as 1824, in reviewing the French edition of Bentham's work,[7] given voice to the new views; he had always been, and never ceased to be, far in advance of public opinion in his measures of reform. By 1843 the result was finally achieved, in the statute 6 & 7 Victoria, chapter 85, known ever since as Lord Denman's Act.[8]

In the United States, the English statutes served as an example, and it was soon followed. The earliest enactment abolishing interest as a disqualification seems to have been that of Michigan.[9] But the broad movement of reform in New York, led by Mr. David Dudley Field, brought results which attracted more general attention; and the legislation of that State, in 1848, was the direct means by which the reform of testimonial rules spread, within the next decade, to most of the other States.[10] The details of the old rule, in its application to the numerous circumstances of pecuniary interest, may [5] This consideration is noted, in dealing with the history of the rules of number, post, § 2032.

[6] The campaign of reform in the political field was signalized, within a year after the publication of Bentham's book, by Mr. Brougham's great speech, of Feb. 7, 1828, on the reform of procedure, in which occurred the oft-quoted peroration: "It was the boast of Augustus that he found Rome of brick and left it of marble. But how much nobler shall be the sovereign's boast, when he shall have it to say that he found law dear, and left it cheap; found it a sealed book, — left it a living letter; found it the patrimony of the rich, — left it the inheritance of the poor; found it the two-edged sword of craft and oppression, — left it the staff of honesty and the shield of innocence!" (Hans. Parl. Deb., 2d ser., vol. 18, p. 247).

[7] Edinburgh Review, March, 1824, vol. 40, p. 176. This French translation appeared before the English edition of the original.

[8] For Lord Denman's speech (then Chief Justice and a peer) in moving the second reading of this bill, see Hansard, Parl. Deb., 3d ser., vol. 61, p. 208, March 8, 1842. In 1833, a statute of 3 & 4 W. IV. c. 42, had removed this disqualification so far as it depended on the verdict being usable for or against the witness in other litigation. All these statutes are noted ante, § 488. It would seem also that the Admiralty Courts had for some time before these statutes ceased to regard interest as a disqualification: Dr. Lushington, in The Peerless, 1 Lush. 30, 41.

[9] Michigan, Rev. St. 1846, c. 102, § 99.

[10] See note 3, supra.

therefore be ignored as having no longer any importance.[11] In every jurisdiction under our law interest as a disqualification is expressly abolished.[12]

§ 577. Civil Parties' Disqualification; Statutory Abolition. The notion of interest at common law applied of course to the parties to the suit, for their interest in the event of the litigation was obviously the most marked. That this general principle of disqualifying interest was the real ground of their exclusion from testifying in their own favor is clear; and certain details of the rule rested directly on this theory, — for example, the consequence that a mere titular or nominal party was admissible, or a party against whom judgment had gone by default. The hardship and the anomaly, however, of this ground for exclusion were even more emphatic and apparent than in the case of ordinary interested persons.[1] To this branch of the rule also Mr. Bentham paid special attention in his scathing denunciations: [2]

1827, Mr. Jeremy Bentham, Rationale of Judicial Evidence, b. IX, pt. V, c. I (Bowring's ed. vol. VII, pp. 487, 507): "The reason which forbids the admission of the testimony is weaker in this case than in the case of an interested extraneous witness. The real magnitude of the interest being the same in both cases, — in the case of a party the interest is more palpable: the objection created by it is likely to act with greater force upon the judicial faculties of the magistrate: his mind is more surely open to it: the danger of deception is therefore less. If, in so far as it operates in his own favor, the testimony of the party is liable to be drawn aside from the line of truth by the action of this force, which is so obvious even to the most unobservant eye, — in so far as it operates in his disfavor, it possesses, in a degree superior to all other testimony, a claim to confidence. That, in this case, the error, if any there be in the testimony, is not a wilful one — is not accompanied, at the same time, with a knowledge of the falsity of the information, and of the tendency it has to operate to the deponent's prejudice — is a proposition, the truth of which is far more certain in this instance, than it can be in any other. Accordingly, as often as the testimony of a party is received — so sure as it enters into the mind of any one who has to judge of it — so sure is it to be analyzed, and, as it were, divided into two parts. To the part which is regarded as operating in the deponent's own favor, the incredulous, the diffident part of the judge's mind, applies itself of course: while the part regarded as operating in his disfavor, commands, on the part of the judge, an almost unlimited share of confidence: in a word, what portion of the mass is understood as belonging to this division, is, by the common sense and consent of mankind, universally regarded as the best evidence. Such is the evidence, of which, on the ideal supposition of extraordinary vexation, the rashness of a certain class of jurists has not hesitated to rob the treasury of justice. A party is not suffered to be examined on his own behalf. Observe the consequence; he is delivered without mercy into the hands of a mendacious witness on the other side. 'Your adversary, to make evidence for a suit he means to bring against you, sends an emissary to you to engage you in a conversation, that, when called upon as a witness, he may impute confessions

[11] Except for the rule (post, § 578) excluding survivors from testifying against a decedent. The scope for the application of the old rules is even there, however, so narrow that it will be sufficient to refer the reader to Professor Greenleaf's exposition of them, in his Treatise, §§ 329–430.

Distinguish, however, the rule for a valid attestation by a credible witness (post, §§ 582, 1292).

[12] The statutes are set forth ante, § 488. In general, the legislation was later in the Southern States than elsewhere.

§ 577. [1] "When as a boy I read the Pickwick Papers, I was always puzzled to know why Mr. Pickwick did not go into the witness-box, and say that he never promised to marry Mrs. Bardell, and explain how the good lady came to make such a mistake" (W. Blake Odgers, Esq., A Century of Law Reform, 1901, p. 217).

[2] Compare the arguments of Livingston and Appleton, in the citations ante, § 576, note 1.

to you such as you never made. When the evidence comes to be given at the trial, the witness tells what story he pleases: as for you, you must not open your mouth to contradict him, although, were you admitted to state what passed, it might be in your power to satisfy the judge, that the account given of the conversation by the witness could not possibly have been true. . . . Parties, how numerous soever, being excluded, while, in the character of an extraneous witness, the testimony of a single deponent is sufficient to warrant, and (if clear of contradiction, as well from within as without), in a manner to command, decision; — a single tongue obtains thus a certain victory over a thousand, that would have sounded in contradiction to it, had they been suffered to be heard. Every defendant is, 'par etat', by his station in the cause, a liar: a man who, if suffered to speak, would be sure to speak false, and equally sure to be believed. Every defendant is a liar. But every human being may, at the pleasure of every other, be converted into a defendant. Therefore, and by that means, every human being may, at the pleasure of every other, be converted into a liar, and, in that character, his capacity of giving admissible testimony annihilated. The 'jus nocendi', the power of imposing unlimited burthens by calumnies not suffered to be contradicted, is thus offered constantly upon sale, to every man who will pay the price for it. . . . In principle there is but one mode of searching out the truth: and (bating the corruptions introduced by superstition, or fraud, or folly, under the mask of science) this mode, in so far as truth has been searched out and brought to light, is, and ever has been, and ever will be, the same, in all times, and in all places, in all cottages and in all palaces — in every family, and in every court of justice: Be the dispute what it may, see everything that is to be seen; hear everybody who is likely to know anything about the matter: hear everybody, but most attentively of all, and first of all, those who are likely to know most about it — the parties."

Mr. Bentham had rightly perceived that the incompetency of parties could be treated as a different question from that of interested persons not parties; for, while the impropriety of their exclusion was more marked in rational policy, yet the common-law theory of interest was in their case most strongly applicable and the instinct against altering it would therefore offer more obstinate resistance. And so it did. In England, this stage of reform was not reached until 1851, eight years after the first great step had been taken; [3] and in most of the United States such an interval between the two steps similarly appears. [4] To-day the disqualification has everywhere disappeared,[5] and its details are no longer of any consequence.[6]

§ 578. Survivor's Disqualification against Opponent Deceased or Incapable. In almost every jurisdiction in the United States, by statutes enacted in connection with or shortly after the statute removing the general disqualification

[3] St. 14 & 15 Vict. c. 99, excepting actions for adultery and breach of marriage-promise; this exception was removed in 1869, St. 32 & 33 Vict. c. 68. In 1846, St. 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95, an experiment had already been tried, by admitting parties in the county courts.

[4] The earliest statute seems to have been that of Connecticut, in 1849, prior to the English Act. In Alabama, the disqualification by interest generally was removed in 1852, but that of parties not until 1867. But in some jurisdictions, at much earlier dates, statutes had made partial exceptions to the general disqualifications, e.g. in bastardy cases and in actions on book-accounts, suits involving municipal corporations, and suits before justices of the peace. Some of these statutes making parties competent provided, as a condition, that he should testify first of the witnesses on his side; see post, § 1869.

The old rules may be found in Greenleaf, Evidence, §§ 329–331.

[5] The statutes are set forth ante, § 488.

[6] Except under the Statutory rule of § 578, post. For the effect of one of the exceptions to the old rule, namely, that parties might make affidavits to the loss of a document, see post, §§ 1196, 1225.

by interest, an exception was carved out of the old disqualification and was allowed to perpetuate within a limited scope the principle of the discarded rule. The scope of this modern rule excludes the testimony of the survivor of a transaction with a decedent, when offered against the latter's estate.[1]

It does not appear that there was any precedent which could have served as an example;[2] and the almost universal vogue of this modern fragment of the old anomaly is therefore the more remarkable.

The defenders of this rule are usually content to invoke some vague metaphor in place of a reason, but occasionally there is found an attempt at a rational justification:

1873, BRICKELL, J., in Louis v. Easton, 50 Ala. 471: "This right and privilege [of testifying] must be mutual. It cannot exist in the one party and not in the other. If death has closed the lips of the one party, the policy of the law is to close the lips of the other."

1878, HAYMOND, J., in Owens v. Owens, 14 W. Va. 88, 95: "The law in the exception to the privilege to testify was intended to prevent an undue advantage on the part of the living over the dead, who cannot confront the survivor, or give his version of the affair, or expose the omission, mistakes, or perhaps falsehoods of such survivor. The temptation to falsehood and concealment in such cases is considered too great to allow the surviving party to testify in his own behalf. Any other view of this subject, I think, would place in great peril the estates of the dead, and would in fact make them an easy prey for the dishonest and unscrupulous."

The argument of the latter passage, that a contrary rule "would place in great peril the estates of the dead" sufficiently typifies the superficial reasoning on which the rule rests. Are not the estates of the living endangered daily by the present rule, which bars from proof so many honest claims? Can it be more important to save dead men's estates from false claims than to save living men's estates from loss by lack of proof?

The truth is that the present rule is open, in almost equal degree, to every one of the objections which were successfully urged nearly a century ago against the interest-rule in general. Those objections may be reduced to four heads: (1) That the supposed danger of interested persons testifying falsely exists to a limited extent only; (2) That, even so, yet, so far as they testify truly, the exclusion is an intolerable injustice; (3) That no exclusion can be so defined as to be rational, consistent, and workable; (4) That in any case the test of cross-examination and the other safeguards for truth are a sufficient guaranty against frequent false decision. Every one of the first three objections applies to the present rule as amply as to the old and broader rule. The fourth applies with less apparent force, because the opponent's testimony is lacking in contradiction. And yet, upon what inconsistencies is based even this support for the rule! For its defenders in effect declare the lack of this opposing testimony to be the sole ground for an exceptional rule adapted to that particular situation; and yet, since the deceased opponent is a party, he would have been by hypothesis a potential liar equally with the disqualified survivor; so that the rule rests on the supposed lack of a questionable species of testimony equally weak with that which is excluded. There never was and never will be an exclusion on the score of interest which can be defended as either logically or practically sound. Add to this, the labyrinthine distinctions created in the application of the complicated statutes defining this rule; and the result is a mass of vain quiddities which have not the slightest relation to the testimonial trustworthiness of the witness:

§ 578. [1] The statutes are set forth ante, § 488; the jurisdictions not recognizing this disqualification are half-a-dozen only. The interpreting decisions will not be given here, for three reasons: first, they depend largely on the wording of the local statute: secondly, they are extremely numerous, and usually cannot be correctly summarized without a voluminous statement of the circumstances of the case and a comparison with the various parts of the statute, for which the present space does not suffice; thirdly, they are usually accessible to every practitioner in the form of annotations to the statute. This conclusion has been reached only after a full examination of all the rulings in one of the States, and a collection of the current rulings in all the jurisdictions for a period of several years.

[2] Except the analogy of some earlier chancery rulings, which however merely required corroboration and did not exclude the witness (post, § 2065). But the expedient was an old one; it is found in several mediæval codes, e.g., "Nulla probatio testimonii de mutuo vel deposito valeat contra defunctos" (Pertile, Storia del diritto italiano, 2d ed., 1900, vol. VI, pt. 1, p. 400).

1895, CORLISS, J., St. John v. Lofland, 5 N. D. 140, 64 N. W. 930: "Statutes which exclude testimony on this ground are of doubtful expediency. There are more honest claims defeated by them, by destroying the evidence to prove such claim, than there would be fictitious claims established if all such enactments were swept away and all persons rendered competent witnesses. To assume that in that event many false claims would be established by perjury is to place an extremely low estimate on human nature, and a very high estimate on human ingenuity and adroitness. He who possesses no evidence to prove his case save that which such a statute declares incompetent is remediless. But those against whom a dishonest demand is made are not left utterly unprotected because death has sealed the lips of the only person who can contradict the survivor, who supports his claim with his oath. In the legal armory, there is a weapon whose repeated thrusts he will find it difficult, and in many cases impossible, to parry if his testimony is a tissue of falsehoods, — the sword of cross-examination. For these reasons, which lie on the very surface of this question of policy, we regard it as a sound rule to be applied in the construction of statutes of the character of the one whose interpretation is here involved, that they should not be extended beyond their letter when the effect of such extension will be to add to the list of those whom the act renders incompetent as witnesses."

1921, Mr. Henry W. Taft, "Comments on Will Contests in New York", Yale Law Journal, xxx, 593, 605: "This restriction not infrequently works intolerable hardship in preventing the establishment of a meritorious claim. Furthermore, it has been enforced with the most rigorous literalness, and has been the occasion of a labyrinth of subtle decisions. A long experience leads me to believe that the evils guarded against do not justify the retention of the rule. In the early development of our jurisprudence the testimony of all interested witnesses was excluded; but experience gradually led to the conclusion that the restriction should be relaxed and more reliance should be placed upon the efficacy of our process of investigating truth. Cross-examination, for instance, has been found to be well calculated to uncover a fraudulent scheme concocted by an interested party and where that has failed the scrutiny to which the testimony of a witness is subjected by the court and by the jury, has proven efficacious in discovering the truth, to say nothing of the power of circumstantial evidence to discredit the mere oral statement of an interested witness."

As a matter of policy, this survival of a part of the now discarded interest-qualification is deplorable in every respect; for it is based on a fallacious and exploded principle, it leads to as much or more false decision than it prevents, and it encumbers the profession with a profuse mass of barren quibbles over the interpretation of mere words.[3]

If any concession at all is to be made to the considerations of caution underlying the rule, there are three simple ways available, each of them in actual and tried operation, and each of them able to accomplish the purpose without following the crude, technical, and unjust method of disqualifying surviving witnesses. One of these, adopted in Oregon, New Mexico, and Canada, is to allow no recovery in such cases on the party's sole testimony, without corroboration of some sort.[4] The second, followed in Connecticut, Virginia, and Oregon, is to admit, as well as the surviving party, any extant writings or declarations of the deceased party on the subject in issue.[5] The third, invented in New Hampshire and followed in Arizona, is to exclude the testimony, except when it "appears to the Court that injustice may be done without the testimony of the party;"[6] this removes the arbitrary feature of the rule and gives flexibility.

The following incident deserves to be perpetuated as illustrating the honorable man's method of practising law under this rule (or any other rule, for that matter):

1921, Kinley v. Largent, — Cal. —, 200 Pac. 937. The action was brought to recover the sum of $3444, which appellant had turned over to decedent for investment in street bonds. Up to the time of his death he had made no report on the investment. Upon the trial appellant offered herself as a witness, whereupon the following statements by the court and the respective counsel were made: The Court: "Is this such a claim against an estate as bars the claimant from being a witness under section 1880 of the Code of Civil Procedure?" Mr. O'Brien: "I presume that the claimant would be disqualified as a witness under that section if an objection were made to her testimony. This matter, however, has already been discussed with the administrator and his attorney, and, in view of the fact that both the administrator and his attorney are convinced that an injustice would result if such an objection were made, they have decided not to make any objection to the competency of the plaintiff as a witness in her own behalf in support of her claim against the estate." Mr. Barry: "I want to say, your honor, that Mr. Largent, the administrator of decedent, was a next-door neighbor of the plaintiff and her husband for a long time prior to the latter's death. He became intimately acquainted with them, and knew, prior to the death of Kinley, that moneys had been so advanced to him by his wife, as now claimed by her. Under those conditions we feel that to interpose a technical objection to the competency of the plaintiff to testify as a witness in her own behalf in this

[3] Approved in the following opinions: 1907, Omlie v. O'Toole, 16 N. D. 126, 112 N. W. 677; 1917, Corbett v. Kingan, 19 Ariz. 134, 166 Pac. 290; cited with approval by the Virginia Code Commissioners of 1919 (Annot. ed. § 6209), in giving reasons for the abolition of the rule.

[4] Post, § 2065.

[5] Post, § 1576.

[6] N. H. Pub. St. 1891, c. 224, §§ 16, 17, quoted ante, § 488; 1919, Cobb v. Follansbee, 79 N. H. 205, 107 Atl. 630, reviews the entire body of rulings under this statute; 1920, Gosselin v. Griffin, 79 N. H. 510, 111 Atl. 854 (injury of an employee; deceased defendant not having been present, held that plaintiff's testimony was admissible, under Pub. St. c. 224, § 16); Ariz. 1921, Johnson v. Moilanen, — Ariz. —, 201 Pac. 634 (applying Rev. St. 1913, § 1678, quoted ante, § 488, and citing prior cases).

suit would result in an injustice. As we have no desire to be the cause of an injustice, we do not feel it right or proper to make such objection." . . . Appellant identified five drafts, aggregating $2467.10, which were admitted in evidence, and testified to other advances aggregating $979.50.

§ 579. Accused in Criminal Cases; Statutory Abolition. The disqualification of the accused in criminal cases to testify for himself seems not to have been questioned in policy until Bentham's time.[1] But his arguments in this respect took longer for their fruition in legislation than any other of his proposals for abolishing witnesses' incapacities. The order of their abolition was almost everywhere the same; first, that of interested persons, next and in short space, that of civil parties, and then after a long interval, that of accused persons; that of husband and wife came about at varying times in the third interval, and in some communities remains still unachieved.

The competency of accused persons was first declared in Maine, in 1864,[2] and was not finally reached in England until 1898;[3] it now remains unaccomplished in Georgia only. It came later, in general, in the Southern States; and it was sometimes there accompanied by the proviso that the accused should testify, if at all, first in order of the witnesses on his own side.[4]

What was the reason for the general slow arrival at this measure? Not entirely a failure to perceive the fairness of giving the accused an opportunity to tell his story in exculpation. This fairness must have been appreciated as soon as any perception was reached of the impropriety of excluding parties and other interested persons. Indeed, before that time, it had become customary in England to allow the accused to make a "statement" to the jury, i.e. to tell his story, not on oath and not as a witness, but in the guise of an address or argument on the testimony and the whole case.[5] A similar practice grew up or was introduced by statute in some of our own jurisdic-

§ 579. [1] See the quotations ante, § 577, and post, § 2250. Bentham's arguments are summarized in (1860) Appleton, Evidence, c. VII.

[2] Me. St. 1864, c. 280; said by Professor Thayer (Cases on Evidence, 2d ed., p. 1117) to be "the earliest statute permitting the defendant in a criminal case to testify. In Massachusetts it was allowed in 1866, in Connecticut in 1867, in New York and New Hampshire in 1869, in New Jersey in 1871."

[3] Ante, § 488, where the statutes of the various jurisdictions are collected. There had been several statutes in England before 1898, qualifying the accused in particular issues; they are collected in Best, Evidence, 8th ed., § 622 A; they begin in 1872. The statute of 1898 has needed little interpretation on this point: 1916, R. v. Wheeler, 1 K. B. 283 (under St. 1898, § 1, the accused is a competent witness after pleading guilty and on hearing to fix sentence, so as to be guilty of perjury).

[4] Post, § 1869.

[5] 1838, R. v. Malings, 8 C. & P. 242; 1838, R. v. Walkling, 8 C. & P. 243; 1844, R. v. Dyer, 1 Cox Cr. 113; 1846, R. v. Williams, 1 Cox Cr. 363; 1882, R. v. Shimmin, 15 Cox Cr. 122 (with a note referring to preceding inconsistent rulings now repudiated); 1885, R. v. Millhouse, 15 Cox Cr. 622 (limited to cases where defendant calls no witnesses). The following are good examples of such "statements": 1827, Corder's Trial, Pelham's Chronicles of Crime, ed. 1891, II, 151; 1831, Taylor's Trial, ib. 233.

For this practice, see also the following: 1883, Stephen, Hist. Crim. Law, I, 440; 1893, Lely, editor, in Best on Evidence, 8th ed., § 635 (explaining the construction put on the Prisoners' Counsel Act, 1836, St. 6 & 7 Wm. IV, c. 114); 1914, R. v. Krafchenko, 17 D. L. R. 244, Man. (since the Canada Evidence Act of 1893, permitting the accused to testify, the common law practice of making an unsworn statement has been abrogated by implication; history of the practice surveyed by Mathers, C. J.).

tions,[6] and still obtains in Georgia.[7] That the formal grant of competency, then, was so long withheld was due rather to a hesitation founded on the supposed interest of the accused himself. His failure to use the right of testifying would (it was believed) damage his cause more seriously than if he were able to claim that his silence was enforced by law. But, chiefly, his exercise of the right to testify would (it was believed), in subjecting him to the ordeal of cross-examination, place him in a situation in which even an innocent man would show at a disadvantage, and would injure more than assist his own cause:[8]

1868, STEELE, J., in State v. Cameron, 40 Vt. 555, 565: "In the great body of cases, no wise practitioner would permit his client, whether he believed him guilty or innocent, to testify when upon trial on a criminal charge. The very fact that he testifies as if with a halter about his neck, that he is under such inducement to make a fair story for himself, his character and his liberty if not his fortune and his life being at stake, is enough to usually deprive his testimony of all weight in his favor, whether it be true or false. This is the case even when his manner upon the stand is unexceptionable, while his critical condition often creates such apprehension and excitement that his manner is open to great criticism, and if he does make a mis-step after voluntarily assuming the responsibility of testifying, it will naturally be construed strongly against him. In short, his testimony is far more likely to injure him seriously than to help him a little. It is true that a clear intellect and perfect self-possession may enable an unscrupulous rogue to run the gauntlet of a cross-examination and make something out of this privilege; and the same qualities will be still more likely to help an innocent man to some advantage from it; but the true application of the statute [qualifying him] is only to those rare cases, when a word from the prisoner, and him only, will manifestly dispose of what otherwise seems conclusive against him."

1869, SAWYER, C. J., in People v. Tyler, 36 Cal. 522, 528: "The policy of such a statute has been considerably discussed by law writers and others, and, to our minds, the strongest objection that has been urged against it, is, that it places a party charged with crime in an embarrassing position; that, even when innocent, a party upon trial upon a charge for some grave offence may not be in a fit state of mind to testify advantageously to the truth even, and yet if he should decline to go upon the stand as a witness, the jury would, from this fact, inevitably draw an inference unfavorable to him, and thus he would be compelled, against the humane spirit of the common law, to furnish evidence against himself, negatively at least, by his silence, or take the risk, under the excitement incident to his position, of doing worse, by going upon the stand and giving positive testimony."

[6] E.g. 1861, People v. Thomas, 9 Mich. 314.

[7] 1895, Boston v. State, 94 Ga. 590, 20 S. E. 98, 21 S. E. 603; 1897, Hackney v. State, 101 Ga. 512, 519, 28 S. E. 1007; 1900, Tiget v. State, 110 Ga. 244, 34 S. E. 1023; 1900, Sharp v. State, 111 Ga. 176, 36 S. E. 633; 1900, Knox v. State, 112 Ga. 373, 37 S. E. 416; 1901, Cochran v. State, 113 Ga. 736, 39 S. E. 337; 1901, Peavy v. State, 114 Ga. 260, 40 S. E. 234; 1903, Dunwoody v. State, 118 Ga. 308, 45 S. E. 412; 1912, Lindsay v. State, 138 Ga. 818, 76 S. E. 369 (whether the defendant's counsel may elicit his evidence by questions is in the trial Court's discretion); 1912, Jones v. State, 12 Ga. App. 133, 76 S. E. 1070 (whether the accused may make a second statement, after rebuttal evidence by the State, is in the trial Court's discretion); 1921, Causey v. State, 26 Ga. App. 632, 107 S. E. 68 (weight to be accorded).

In Wyoming the accused may elect either to testify under oath or to make an unsworn "statement"; 1921, Anderson v. State, 27 Wyo. 345, 196 Pac. 1047.

For the question whether an accused making such a statement can be impeached, see post, § 892.

[8] The apprehensions of conservative lawyers, at the time of enacting this reform, as to its ill consequences upon interests of the innocent accused, may be seen forcibly set forth in an article on "Testimony of Persons accused of Crime", 1 Amer. Law Rev. 443 (1866); and it was even argued by some of the obstinate ones that the reform was unconstitutional: Wm. A. Maury, in 14 American Law Rev. 752 (1880).

These apprehensions, as experience seems to have shown, were unfounded, — at any rate, the second of them (the disadvantage of taking the stand); while the first (the disadvantage of claiming silence), protected as it is by the strict law forbidding any inferences to be drawn from such silence,[9] gives at least as much benefit as in common sense can be afforded to the accused who takes the unnatural and suspicious course of declining to testify for himself.

That an accused ought to be competent to testify can no longer be questioned.[10] The following passages illustrate what can be said for that proposition from the standpoint of judicial experience:

1883, Sir JAMES STEPHEN, History of the Criminal Law, I, 442: "I am convinced by much experience that questioning [the accused], or the power of giving evidence, is a positive assistance, and a highly important one, to innocent men, and I do not see why in the case of the guilty there need be any hardship about it. It must be remembered that most people accused of crime are poor, stupid, and helpless. They are often defended by solicitors who confine their exertions to getting a copy of the depositions and endorsing it with the name of some counsel to whom they pay a very small fee, so that even when prisoners are defended by counsel the defence is often extremely imperfect, and consists rather of what occurs at the moment to the solicitor and counsel than of what the man himself would say if he knew how to say it. When a prisoner is undefended his position is often pitiable, even if he has a good case. An ignorant, uneducated man has the greatest possible difficulty in collecting his ideas, and seeing the bearing of facts alleged. He is utterly unaccustomed to sustained attention or systematic thought, and it often appears to me as if the proceedings on a trial, which to an experienced person appear plain and simple, must pass before the eyes and mind of the prisoner like a dream which he cannot grasp. I will give an illustration of what I mean. . . . A man was indicted at a Court of Quarter Sessions for stealing a spade. The evidence was that the spade was safe overnight and was found in his possession next day, and that he gave no account of it. He made no defence whatever, and was immediately convicted. When called upon to say why sentence should not be passed upon him, he replied in a stupid way, 'Well, it is hard I should be sent to gaol for this spade, when the man I bought it of is standing there in court.' The chairman caused the man referred to to be called and sworn; the jury, after hearing him, recalled the verdict they had given, and the man was acquitted at once. . . . The propriety of making the parties competent witnesses in civil cases is no longer disputed. It is difficult to say why the same rule should not apply to criminal cases also. One objection to the admission of such evidence rests upon the false supposition that a witness is to be believed because he is sworn to speak the truth. The proper ground for admitting evidence is not that people are reluctant to lie, but that it is extremely difficult to lie minutely and circumstantially without being found out."

[9] Post, § 2272.

[10] For the history of the efforts at reform in England, and specimens of the arguments pro and con, see 99 Law Times 103; 100 Law Times 412; 101 Law Times 582; 103 Law Times 297; 104 Law Times 415; 32 Law Journal 210; 32 Law Times 362; 30 Law Times 218, 277, 288, 378; 31 Law Times 140, 151, 189; 1893, Mr. J. M. Lely, editor, in Best on Evidence, 8th ed., § 622 A; 1894, Serjeant Robinson, Bench and Bar, 4th ed., 296; 1915, Lord Alverstone, Recollections of Bar and Bench, p. 176.

A rational statement of the American experience under the modern rule will be found in Mr. (Assistant District Attorney) C. C. Nott's article, "In the District Attorney's Office", Atlantic Monthly, 1905, p. 481. The best survey of the question, from the point of view of experience, is found in Mr. (Assistant District Attorney) Arthur Train's invaluable and entertaining book, "The Prisoner at the Bar" (1906), pp. 161–164.

1908, Hon. E. J. SHERMAN (Justice of the Superior Court of Massachusetts), Recollections of a Long Life, 234: "James H. Vahey, during the trial [of Charles L. Tucker for murder, in 1904,] entered the judge's lobby, after the adjournment of court, Judges Sherman and Sheldon, Sheriff John R. Fairbairn and Mr. Vahey, being present; the following conversation took place: Mr. Vahey: 'Judge Sherman, you having had a large experience as attorney general and as a justice of this court in capital trials, I want to ask your advice, as I have had little or no experience in such cases and am a good deal embarrassed.' Judge Sherman: 'If I can properly advise you, I will.' Mr. Vahey: 'Shall I put the prisoner on the witness stand?' Judge Sherman: 'I do not think it would be proper for me to answer that question. Perhaps I can tell you what the rule and practice is among the best lawyers in such cases. If the attorney believes his client innocent, put him on the witness stand without hesitation. If, however, he believes him guilty, never put him on the witness stand. If the prisoner insists on being a witness and the attorney believes him guilty, the attorney should say to him: "I advise you not to testify, but as you have more interest in the case than I have, I shall not interfere."' 'What do you say, Judge Sheldon?' Judge Sheldon: 'I fully concur in what you say about the practice among the best lawyers in such cases.' Mr. Vahey: 'I thank you, gentlemen, for advising me.' Some days after, Mr. Vahey again entered the judges' office and said: 'After our interview the other evening, I told Tucker what you said to me concerning his being a witness. After talking with him a long time, I told him to think it over carefully and then to decide what to do. Subsequently he told me that he had decided not to be a witness, and thereby he relieved me of a great responsibility, and I did not have to advise him.'"

1915, Lord ALVERSTONE, Recollections of Bar and Bench, p. 176: "It will be convenient here to refer to the effect of the passing of the Act which enables prisoners to give evidence. I had long been impressed with the absolute necessity of such a measure in the interests of justice, for the protection of the innocent and (it may be) for the more certain conviction of the guilty. My main object was to enable an innocent man to give his own account of transactions in which he had been engaged, and which might appear to tell against him. . . . A short time before, I had as leader to Mr. Lockwood, conducted the defence in a civil action for fraud brought against a gentleman named Barber, who had been prosecuted and convicted at the Old Bailey for the same fraud, and had served two or three months in prison. The case was tried before Lord Coleridge; and Sir Charles Russell, who was counsel for the plaintiff, not unnaturally treated it as an undefended action, and opened a very serious fraud, mentioning the previous conviction. Lord Coleridge also took a very strong view against the defendant up to the end of the case for the plaintiff, which lasted more than two days. It being a civil action, I was able to call the defendant, who gave his evidence in a very straightforward manner, denying all the imputations of fraud, and showing that he and other members of his family had invested considerable sums of money in the company in connection with which the original charge had been made. He had not attempted to sell his shares, and had lost several thousand pounds. In the course of his examination in chief, the jury interposed and found that the defendant had not been guilty of fraud. Lord Coleridge often referred to the case, expressing the view that if the defendant's evidence could have been given at the criminal trial, he could not possibly have been convicted and punished. These are two important cases showing the value to an innocent man of being able to tell his own story.

"I was so convinced of the necessity for the amendment of the law in this direction that I had already introduced a Bill for several sessions into the House of Commons. At first it met with very lukewarm support; in some quarters there was considerable opposition. Many suggested that the power of the accused to give evidence would deprive the defending counsel of the advantage of the observations which the prisoner's inability to give evidence always enabled him to make to the jury — namely, that the mouth of the defendant, who alone knew the real facts, was unfortunately closed. Gradually, however, though still opposed by many eminent barristers and clerks of assize, my opinion gained ground, and after five or six years, Lord Halsbury, who was much interested in the matter, took up the Bill, and it became an Act of Parliament. . . .

"I regard the Act as a great protection to those who are made the subjects of unfounded or blackmailing prosecutions. . . . I think that the greatest protection which an innocent man can have is to be able to give an account of the matter at the earliest possible moment. I have, of course, discussed the question with many Judges, who are all practically now of my opinion. One Judge from Australia told me that he had worked under both systems, and that he would not now try a single case without giving the defendant the opportunity of giving evidence."

1919, Sir Edward Clarke, K. C., The Story of My Life, 144 (commenting on his defence of Clarke, the detective, in 1877): "It will be realised that my task in defending my client was a very difficult one. It would, indeed, in my opinion, have been practically impossible to obtain an acquittal if at that time the law had permitted accused persons to be called as witnesses. The strange rule which then prevailed by which neither a prisoner nor his wife was a competent witness (a rule which was the worst example of judge-made law which I have ever known) often operated cruelly against an innocent person; but in nine cases out of ten it was of advantage to the guilty."

§ 580. Same: Co-indictees and Co-defendants. There remains to-day, in spite of the statutory abolition of the accused's incapacity, a group of questions inherited from the common-law rule, and liable still to arise because of the incomplete and careless formulation of the statutes in some jurisdictions.

At common law, when two or more persons were tried upon the same charge, each and all were naturally disqualified.[1] Only by ceasing to be a party in the cause could one of them become a witness, for or against his co-defendants; and there were precedents concerning the manner in which a defendant could be deemed thus to have ceased to be a party. Now, when legislation came to remove the disqualification of the accused, the statutory phrase ran frequently that he should be receivable "in his own behalf", — thus omitting in terms to provide for competency on behalf of or against another defendant. However, before this legislation had made the change, statutes had been passed, in many jurisdictions, declaratory of the common-law rules as to the mode of making a co-defendant competent by removing him from the record, or settling some of the details left doubtful in that respect by judicial precedent; and these statutes, appropriate enough while the accused's disqualification continued, were often left upon the statute-book, in spite of successive revisions, after the general statute abolishing the disqualification had been enacted; so that it became necessary to reconcile the latter statute with the former. The result has been some confusion and uncertainty in the state of the law after the statutes' enactment, — an uncertainty wholly unnecessary if proper caution had been taken in framing them. To ascertain the present law, it is therefore necessary to consider what the rule of the common law was, and then to observe the effect of the statutory modification.

§ 580. [1] For the question whether the confession of one defendant can be used as an admission against the other, see post, §§ 1076, 1079.

For the right to cross-examine a co-defendant who takes the stand in his own behalf, see post, § 2276.

A. Common Law. (1) It is plain that a person not a party of record to the same charge would not be disqualified to testify, either for or against the accused. Hence, in the first place, a person who is merely an unindicted accomplice is as such not disqualified;[2] nor yet a person charged in another indictment.[3] Whether a person charged in another indictment for the same crime, as principal or as accessory, would be disqualified, was left doubtful,[4] though upon principle he was properly not to be treated as a party to the charge.

(2) Furthermore, a person who had been charged in the same indictment, but had ceased to be a party to the charge, by the time his testimony was offered, would cease to be disqualified. This principle was not disputed; the differences of opinion grew out of the question whether the cessation of his party-character should be tested by the technical state of the record or merely by his substantial lack of further interest in the result. In strictness, the former test might be more consistent with the settled doctrine already noted under (1) supra; but, in an enlightened view of the object of the disqualifying rules, the other test was preferable. Accordingly, there was good authority for the rules that a person jointly indicted would be admissible if he had ceased to have an interest in the result by virtue of an entry of nolle prosequi,[5] or of a formal acquittal or discharge,[6] or of a judgment of conviction on the verdict,[7] or of a judgment of conviction on

[2] This was hardly even doubted; compare the cases cited post, § 2056.

The only question ever seriously made was whether a promise of pardon disqualified the accomplice; and this was universally decided in the negative: 1662, Tonge's Trial, 6 How. St. Tr. 226, Kelyng 16 (Hale, C. J., and Brown, J., diss.); 1696, Charnock's Trial, 12 How. St. Tr. 1404, 1454; 1722, Layer's Trial, 16 How. St. Tr. 160 (Solicitor-General: "Suppose, then, for argument sake, that there was a promise of pardon made to a man upon condition that he should give evidence; I apprehend that would not disable him from being a witness"); 1920, Bush v. People, 68 Colo. 75, 187 Pac. 528; 1784, Com. v. Fairfield, Mass., Dane's Abr., c. 84, art. 2, § 3; 1898, State v. Reed, 50 La. An. 990, 24 So. 131; 1897, State v. Riney, 137 Mo. 102, 38 S. W. 718; 1897, State v. Magone, 32 Or. 206, 51 Pac. 452.

In a few jurisdictions, the trial Court's discretion was said to control: 1827, People v. Whipple, 9 Cow. 708, 713; 1875, Lindsay v. People, 63 N. Y. 143, 153; 1877, Wight v. Rindskopf, 43 Wis. 344, 348.

An interesting episode, illustrating this principle, is found in the trial of the Spanish pirates before Justice Story, in 1834: U. S. v. Gibert, 10 Amer. St. Tr. 699, 715.

For a promise of pardon as impeaching the credit of an accomplice, see post, § 967.

For moral turpitude as disqualifying an accomplice, see ante, § 526.

[3] 1867, McKenzie v. State, 24 Ark. 636; 1886, Ex parte Stice, 70 Cal. 51, 56, 11 Pac. 459; 1888, State v. Walker, 98 Mo. 95, 102, 9 S. W. 646, 11 S. W. 1133; 1906, Barbe v. Terr., 15 Okl. 562, 86 Pac. 61.

Contra: 1912, State v. Case, 61 Or. 265, 122 Pac. 304 (following State v. White).

[4] 1840, R. v. Lyons, 9 C. & P. 555 (one indicted separately as principal; (not decided); 1905, State v. Cobley, 128 Ia. 114, 103 N. W. 99 (admitted for the State); 1873, Davis v. State, 38 Md. 15, 47 (one indicted separately as accomplice, excluded); 1898, State v. Stewart, 142 Mo. 412, 44 S. W. 240 (one indicted separately as accomplice, admitted); 1898, State v. Black, 143 Mo. 166, 44 S. W. 341 (same); 1906, State v. Myers, 198 Mo. 225, 94 S. W. 242 (same; here an accomplice separately charged and convicted).

[5] 1741, L. C. Hardwicke, in Man v. Ward, 2 Atk. 228; 1896, Love v. People, 160 Ill. 501, 43 N. E. 710; 1891, State v. Steifel, 106 Mo. 129, 133, 17 S. W. 227; 1875, Lindsay v. People, 63 N. Y. 143, 153.

[6] 1893, State v. Minor, 117 Mo. 302, 305, 22 S. W. 1085; 1877, Kehoe v. Com., 85 Pa. 127, 137 (excluded, because no judgment was passed).

[7] 1736, R. v. Sherman, Lee cas. t. Hardwicke 303 (discharge, after plea in abatement); 1826, R. v. Rowland, Ry. & Mo. 401; 1857, R. v. O'Donnell, 7 Cox Cr. 337; 1915, R. v. McClain, 23 D. L. R. 312, Alta. (convicted accomplice, not yet sentenced, held competent for the Crown).

default,[8] or of a plea of guilty, with or without the passing of sentence or judgment thereon.[9]

(3) Does a severance of trials of persons jointly charged in a single indictment have the same effect in qualifying them as a discharge from the record? In form, it does not; they remain named together as parties. But in substance, it does; for they are tried by different juries, and nothing said by one to the other's jury can either help or hurt his own cause:

1884, PETERS, C. J., in State v. Barrows, 76 Me. 401, 408: "The argument against the admission of such evidence does not strike us with much force. It is almost universally admitted that an accomplice separately indicted may be a witness for the State, and any distinction arising between trials on a joint indictment and trials on separate indictments is not readily appreciated. The crime is supposed to be jointly committed in either case; . . . the interest and motives of the witness must be the same whether he is to be afterwards tried under the same or another indictment. As said by BEASLEY, J., in State v. Brien, [infra] 'The only reason for the rejection of such a witness is that his own accusation of crime is written on the same piece of paper with the charge against the culprit whose trial is in progress.' . . . Stringent as the rule [of interest] was, it did not apply to indictments to its full extent. . . . Courts seemed inclined to regard a co-defendant in a criminal case as not a party unless a party to the issue on trial. . . . To be incompetent to testify, the defendants must be in charge of the same jury."

The better opinion, then, was that an indictee for whom a severance had been granted was receivable, not only for the prosecution,[10] but also on behalf

[8] Contra: 1804, R. v. Lafone, 5 Esp. 154, Lord Ellenborough, C. J. (for the special case of a joint offence); this case, though often cited, seems to stand alone.

[9] The English rulings agreed to this, equally whether the witness was called for or against the co-defendant; 1738, R. v. Fletcher, 1 Stra. 633 (here after fine paid); 1840, R. v. Lyons, 9 C. & P. 555, 558 (here before sentence served); 1841, R. v. George, Car. & M. 111 (here before sentence passed); 1847, R. v. Hinks, 1 Den. Cr. C. 84, 2 C. & K. 462, 465, by all the judges (here before sentence passed); 1849, R. v. Arundel, 4 Cox Cr. 260 (here before sentence passed); 1875, R. v. Gallagher, 12 Cox Cr. 61 (same).

Contra: 1855, R. v. Jackson, 6 Cox Cr. 525 (here allowed only after sentence passed).

In the United States, it seems conceded that he may be called for the prosecution: 1847, Com. v. Smith, 12 Metc. Mass. 238 (here before sentence); 1891, State v. Jackson, 106 Mo. 174, 177, 17 S. W. 301 (here before sentence); 1900, State v. Young, 153 Mo. 445, 55 S. W. 82; 1919, State v. Reppley, 278 Mo. 333, 213 S. W. 477; 1897, State v. Magone, 32 Or. 206, 51 Pac. 452; 1900, State v. Savage, 36 Or. 191, 60 Pac. 610.

He ought to be equally admissible for the defendant: 1863, State v. Jones, 51 Me. 125 (either before or after sentence); 1875, Lee v. State, 51 Miss. 566, 568, 574.

Contra, unless sentence is passed: 1881, Henderson v. State, 70 Ala. 23, 24 (there must be "some order which amounts to an acquittal or a severance"; following R. v. Lafone, supra, note, and ignoring the other precedents); 1859, State v. Young, 39 N. H. 283, 284 (plea of 'nolo contendere', not sufficient without judgment; the rule being equally applicable to the plea of not guilty); 1871, State v. Bruner, 65 N. C. 499 ('nolo contendere'); 1877, Kehoe v. Com., 85 Pa. 127, 137.

[10] Eng. 1865, R. v. Winsor, 10 Cox Cr. 276, 300, 314, 320, 323, 326 (by all the judges); 1866, Winsor v. Regina, L. R. 1 Q. B. 289, 311, 320, 324, 327, 390, 396; U. S. 1891, Adams v. State, 28 Fla. 511, 533, 10 So. 106; 1838, Gilman's Trial, Ill., 5 Amer. St. Tr. 528, 556 (trial arising out of the destruction of Lovejoy's Abolition printing-press); 1873, State v. Prudhomme, 25 La. An. 522; 1886, State v. Mason, 38 La. An. 476; 1884, State v. Barrows, 76 Me. 401, 408 (see quotation supra); 1920, People v. Schultz, 210 Mich. 297, 178 N. W. 89; 1883, Evans v. State, 61 Miss. 157; 1876, Carroll v. State, 5 Nebr. 31, 35; 1868, State v. Brien, 32 N. J. L. 414; 1879, Noyes v. State, 41 N. J. L. 418, 429; 1859, Allen v. State, 10 Oh. St. 287, 303; 1869, Brown v. State, 18 Oh. St. 496, 509.

Contra: 1887, State v. Chyo Chiagk, 92 Mo. 395, 401, 4 S. W. 704; 1901, State v. Weaver, 165 Mo. 1, 65 S. W. 308.

of the co-indictee himself; yet on the latter point, by some obscure reasoning, the majority of Courts were opposed.[11]

B. Statutes. Let us now suppose that a statute has given to the accused person the right to testify, i.e. has removed his disqualification as a party. Such a statute exists, in one form or another, in every jurisdiction but one. This statute is now to be applied to the law as it stood, and the question is, what effect it has had upon the situations in which at common law a co-indictee was disqualified. Those cases were substantially two, (1) a co-indictee, after a severance of trial, called on the defendant's behalf (here, by the great majority of Courts excluded), (2) a co-defendant, tried at the same time, called either for or against the defendant (here by all Courts excluded).

(1) Separate trial. The plain object of the statute was to remove the disqualification of the accused as a party; his common-law incompetency as co-indictee was due solely to his being a party in interest; therefore any and every such disqualification has disappeared. This is impregnable logic, if the premises be conceded:

1881, SCHOFIELD, J., in Collins v. People, 98 Ill. 584, 587: "We do not deem it necessary to inquire what was the common law in this respect, since we are of opinion that the question is conclusively settled against plaintiff in error by our statute. It provides: 'No person shall be disqualified as a witness in any criminal case or proceeding by reason of his interest in the event of the same, as a party or otherwise, or by reason of his having been convicted of any crime; but such interest or conviction may be shown for the purpose of affecting his credibility; provided, however, that a defendant in any criminal case or proceeding shall only at his own request be deemed a competent witness. . . . If at common law Lacomb would have been an incompetent witness, it must have been because he was interested in the event of the suit, and under the above language it is wholly unimportant whether that interest arose from his being a party or otherwise, for in either event he is rendered competent. The proviso adds force to this view; it shows that it was intended that all defendants should be allowed to testify, for otherwise the proviso was wholly unnecessary. Under that section a defendant is unquestionably entitled to have the benefit, for what it is worth, of the evidence of a co-defendant; and the same right is equally clearly given to the State. The infamy arising from convicted guilt, and the interest resulting from being a party to the same case or proceeding, may now be considered for the purpose of determining what credence should be given to the testimony of the witness, but they no longer furnish any ground for excluding his testimony."

1884, PETERS, C. J., in State v. Barrows, 76 Me. 401, 410: "[Our statutory enactments] have weakened, if not abrogated, the argument of public policy. It was, no doubt, the [11] Pro: Eng. 1872, R. v. Payne, 12 Cox Cr. 118, semble; Can. 1863, R. v. Jerrett, 22 U. C. Q. B. 499, 511; 1906, R. v. Blais, 11 Ont. L. R. 345; U. S. 1881, Henderson v. State, 70 Ala. 23, 25; 1914, Lujan v. State, 16 Ariz. 123, 141 Pac. 706; 1846, Jones v. State, 1 Ga. 610, 617; 1854, Ward's Trial, Ky., 3 Amer. St. Tr. 70, 103 (murder); 1859, Allen v. State, 10 Oh. St. 287, 303.

Contra: U. S. 1856, Moss v. State, 17 Ark. 327, 330; 1891, Adams v. State, 28 Fla. 511, 534, 10 So. 106; 1859, State v. Nash, 10 Ia. 81, 85; 1856, Adwell v. Com., 17 B. Monr. Ky. 310, 318; 1873, Davis v. State, 38 Md. 15, 47 (for accessories); 1830, Com. v. Marsh, 10 Pick. Mass. 57; 1860, State v. Dumphey, 4 Minn. 438, 449; 1851, State v. Roberts, 15 Mo. 28, 59; 1887, State v. Chyo Chiagk, 92 Mo. 395, 401; 1813, People v. Bill, 10 Johns. N. Y. 95; 1917, State v. Schyhart, — Mo. —, 199 S. W. 205 (killing cattle); 1838, People v. Williams, 19 Wend. N. Y. 377; 1877, Kehoe v. Com., 85 Pa. 127, 137; 1853, Lazier v. Com., 10 Gratt. Va. 708, 716 (changed here by express statute, as applied in 1894, Smith v. Com., 90 Va. 759, 19 S. E. 843).

design of the Legislature that the objection to the competency of parties as witnesses should be removed both in civil and criminal cases. In crininal cases the provision is this: 'In criminal trials the accused shall at his own request, but not otherwise, be a competent witness.' . . . If the argument for the defendant is sound, then the common-law rule has become reversed; defendants can testify against each other when tried together, and cannot so testify when tried apart. . . . It would present a singular inconsistency in criminal procedure if . . . a co-defendant on trial may be called from the dock to the witness-stand, but a companion in guilt, included in the same indictment, not on trial, be excluded therefrom."

This is plain enough, when the witness is called for the prosecution, because at least that much was already conceded at common law.[12] But the reasoning applies equally to the witness called for his co-defendant, so that the common-law rule (as it had been applied by most Courts) must be deemed changed in that respect, by implication of the statute.[13]

(2) Same trial. The reasoning has precisely the same effect in its application to the case of the disqualification (unanimously conceded) at common law, namely, testimony of a co-defendant being tried at the same time. The statute has removed all his incapacity as a party, both in its direct effect upon himself and in its indirect effect upon others:

1900, SHELBY, J., in Wolfson v. U. S., 41 C. C. A. 422, 101 Fed. 430, 436: "When any defendant chooses to testify, the statute permits him to do so. It does not matter whether his testimony is for or against himself, or for or against his co-defendant. The only limitation in the statute is that he shall not be made a witness except on his own request. Being sworn as a witness at his own request, he is amenable, generally, to the rules governing [12] Federal: 1892, Benson v. U. S., 146 U. S, 325, 333, 13 Sup. 60 (explaining U. S. v. Reid. 12 How. 361); 1905, Wong Din v. U. S., 135 Fed. 702, 68 C. C. A. 340 (conspiracy to evade immigration law); 1917, Rosen v. U. S., 245 U. S. 467, 38 Sup. 148 (co-indictee admitted for prosecution; Benson v. U. S. followed); Arkansas: 1881, Casey v. State, 37 Ark. 67, 83, semble; Florida: 1899, Bishop v. State, 41 Fla. 522, 26 So. 703 (pleading guilty but not sentenced); 1900, Williams v. State, 42 Fla. 205, 27 So. 898; 1910, Menefee v. State, 59 Fla. 316, 51 So. 555 (Rev. St. § 2905, Gen. St. § 3975, excluding approvers, held not applicable to the witness offered); Idaho: 1905, State v. Knudston, 11 Ida. 524, 83 Pac. 226 (pleading guilty, but not yet discharged from the information); Illinois: 1881, Collins v. People, 98 Ill. 584, 587 (see quotation supra); Kentucky: 1907, Simpson v. Com., 126 Ky. 441, 103 S. W. 332; Louisiana: 1898, State v. Asbury, 49 La. An. 1741, 23 So. 322; 1901, State v. Slutz, 106 La. 637, 31 So. 179; Missouri: 1909, State v. Shelton, 223 Mo. 118, 122 S. W. 732; 1906, State v. Myers, 198 Mo. 225, 94 S. W. 242 (convicted); 1917, State v. Schyhart, — Mo. —, 199 S. W. 205 (nor does a promise of immunity bar the accomplice); New Jersey: 1899, Munyon v. State, 62 N. J. L. 1, 42 Atl. 577; New York: 1903, People v. Van Wormer, 175 N. Y. 188, 67 N. E. 299; Oklahoma: 1905, Wells v. Terr., 15 Okl. 195, 81 Pac. 425 (pleading guilty but not sentenced); South Carolina: 1910, State v. Kennedy, 85 S. C. 146, 67 S. E. 152; Texas: 1907, Burdett v. State, 51 Tex. Cr. 345, 101 S. W. 988 (after plea of guilty and before sentence); Vermont: 1917, State v. Nelson, 91 Vt. 168, 99 Atl. 881 (burglary); Virginia: 1894, Smith v. Com. 90 Va. 759, 19 S. E. 843; Washington: 1891, Edwards v. State, 2 Wash. 291.

Contra: 1906, State v. White, 48 Or. 416, 87 Pac. 137.

[13] Accord: 1892, Benson v. U. S., 146 U. S. 325, 337, 13 Sup. 60, semble; 1898, McGinnis v. State, 4 Wyo. 115, 53 Pac. 492; 1855, People v. Labra, 5 Cal. 184; 1862, People v. Newberry, 20 id. 439; 1905, State v. Knudston, 11 Ida. 524, 83 Pac. 226; 1881, Collins v. State, 98 Ill. 584, 587; 1893, State v. Bogue, 52 Kan. 79, 84, 34 Pac. 410; 1921, Welch v. State, 88 Tex. Cr. 346, 227 S. W. 300 (co-indictee for perjury, admitted for defendant).

Contra: 1885, Foster v. State, 45 Ark. 328; 1884, State v. Drake, 11 Or. 396, 402, 4 Pac. 1204; 1906, State v. White, 48 Or. 416, 87 Pac. 137 (the trial Court has discretion as to the one discharged); 1907, Burdett v. State, 51 Tex. Cr. 345, 101 S. W. 988 (for a misdemeanor).

other witnesses. He could testify against or for his co-defendant on trial with him, because the only reason why he could not do so at common law was that he was a party to the record and interested in the case. In other words, the only common-law reason for his exclusion was that he was a defendant also on trial. The statute clearly removes that objection. The fact that two defendants were on trial does not prevent the statute applying. There is nothing in it to confine its operation to cases where but a single defendant is named in the indictment."

This result is generally accepted, at least for a co-defendant called for the prosecution.[14] The reasoning applies with equal force to a co-defendant called for the accused,[15] though a few Courts, having perhaps in mind the common-law distinction, or going upon the special words of a statute, declined to take this last step.[16] There ought to-day to be no further question in any jurisdiction (except Georgia) that there is no limitation whatever on the qualification of a co-indictee or co-defendant to testify either for or against the accused.

§ 581. Testifying to One's Own Intent. Under the influence of some obscure suggestion, not easily traceable, the view has been often urged upon

[14] 1900, Wolfson v. U. S., 41 C. C. A. 422, 101 Fed. 430, 102 id. 134 (Boarman, J., diss.); 1898, People v. Plyler, 121 Cal. 160, 53 Pac. 553; 1888, Conway v. State, 118 Ind. 482, 484, 21 N. E. 285; 1878, State v. Hudson, 50 Ia. 157, 161, semble; 1899, Gilbert v. Com., 21 Ky. 544, 51 S. W. 804; 1915, State v. Lebleu, 137 La. 1007, 69 So. 808 (larceny); 1882, State v. Smith, 86 N. C. 705; 1918, U. S. v. Abanzado, 37 P. I. 658, 662 (applying Act No. 2709, which replaced Gen. O. 58, § 34, quoted ante, § 488); 1918, U. S. v. Alabot, 38 P. I. 698 (similar); 1919, U. S. v. Enriquez, 40 P. I. 603 (Act No. 2709 held not applicable to an accomplice not charged in the information; three judges diss.); 1903, People v. Ortiz, 4 P. R. 533, 545; 1915, People v. Alsina, 22 P. R. 426, 437 (C. Cr. P. § 239 applied); 1896, State v. Smith, 8 S. D. 547, 67 N. W. 619 (co-defendant may testify without limitation; Compiled Laws, § 7381, prevailing over §§ 7379, 7380, which prevailed over § 5260); 1900, State v. Hyde, 22 Wash. 551, 61 Pac. 718.

The following case rests on the peculiar provisions of the English statute: 1920, The King v. Paul, 2 K. B. 183 (burglary; under St. 1898, c. 36, § 1, quoted ante, § 196, a co-defendant who takes the stand and pleads guilty may be cross-examined to obtain testimony against other defendants).

[15] ENGLAND: 1909, Macdonnell's Case, 2 Cr. App. 322 (under St. 1898, c. 36, § 1, "a prisoner is a competent, though not a compellable, witness for a co-prisoner jointly indicted with him for the same offence").

UNITED STATES: Fed. 1900, Wolfson v. U. S., 41 C. C. A. 422, 101 Fed. 430, 436; Ill. 1881, Collins v. State, 98 Ill. 584, 587, semble; Iowa: 1867, State v. Gigher, 23 Ia. 318; 1879, State v. Stewart, 51 Ia. 312, 1 N. W. 646; S. Dak. 1896, State v. Smith, 8 S. D. 547, 67 N. W. 619; Tenn. 1892, Richards v. State, 91 Tenn. 723, 20 S. W. 533; Wyo. 1893, McGinnis v. State, 4 Wyo. 115, 53 Pac. 492.

In Kentucky, a statute (Cr. Code, § 234, as amended by St. May 1, 1886) formerly prohibited co-defendants from testifying on each other's behalf in cases of conspiracy; this was abolished by St. March 23, 1894, applied as follows: 1894, Thompson v. Com., — Ky. —, 26 S. W. 1100; 1895, Kidwell v. Com., 97 id. 538, 31 S. W. 131; 1902, Williams v. Com., — Ky. —, 68 S. W. 7 (following Kidwell v. Com.).

In Texas there is a peculiar doctrine as to the right of a defendant to insist on the State's guaranty of immunity to a co-defendant thus dismissed, in order that the defendant may call him without the obstacle of his claim of privilege: 1906, Puryear v. State, 50 Tex. Cr. 454, 98 S. W. 258.

[16] 1893, Ballard v. State, 31 Fla. 266, 284 (§§ 1095, 2863, 2908, do not abolish the common-law rule); 1899, State v. Angel, 52 La. An. 485, 27 So. 214; 1901, State v. Breaux, 104 La. 540, 29 So. 222; 1898, State v. Franks, 51 S. C. 259, 28 S. E. 908 (C. Cr. P. § 63, does not make a defendant competent for a co-defendant).

But the co-defendant is of course competent on his own behalf: 1901, State v. Sims, 106 La. 453, 31 So. 71.

For an exclusion under a special English statute, see the following: 1872, R. v. Payne, 12 Cox Cr. 118 (the reason being that his cross-examination might make him testify against himself).

In Louisiana, St. 1904, No. 41 removed all disqualification on the above grounds.

Courts that a person — especially a party — should be disqualified from testifying to his own intent or motive, even where that intent or motive is material to be investigated.

The argument is (so far as any has been vouchsafed) that such testimony may be falsified without the possibility of detection, and that therefore it is dangerous to permit an interested person to allege, in effect, whatever he pleases as to his own state of mind.[1] The answers to this argument are various and sufficient. In the first place, there is no precedent for it in the inherited common law; it is an attempt to create a rule without an analogy in the accepted doctrines of the judicial rulings. In the next place, it assumes that there is no counter-evidence available, and yet asks that the only evidence which it assumes to be available shall be excluded, — in other words, asks that a concededly proper issue be submitted to the jury with no evidence at all. In the third place, its assumption is incorrect in fact, namely, that there is no other available and sufficient evidence of intent or motive by which the person's own testimony can be tested and checked; for the evidence from conduct and circumstances and from others' testimony is not only a permissible but a potent source of belief,[2] and is amply sufficient to guard against falsification. Finally, the argument is at least of no higher value than the argument in favor of the unsatisfactory statutory rule against survivors' testimony (ante, § 578). It is merely of a piece with all crude attempts to disqualify a witness by reason of interest, — attempts which to-day must stand discredited by the general repudiation of that species of disqualification (ante, § 576). Some of these answers to the argument are represented in the following judicial utterances disapproving it, — a disapproval which is to-day practically unanimous:[3]

§ 581. [1] The argument is set forth in extracts from Alabama opinions quoted post, § 1966.

[2] Ante, §§ 237–242, 300–371, 385–406, post, §§ 661, 1963 ff.

[3] In all the following cases the testimony was held receivable:

ENGLAND: 1791, Answer of the Judges concerning Fox's Libel Act, 22 How. St. Tr. 296, 300, semble (quoted post, §§ 661, 1962); 1897, R. v. King, 1 Q. B. 214 (false pretences, by the prosecuting witness, as to his belief upon the representation).

UNITED STATES: Federal: 1872, Bank v. Kennedy, 17 Wall. 20, 26 (purpose of an advance of money); 1896, Wallace v. U. S., 162 U. S. 466, 16 Sup. 859 (the defendant's belief that the deceased was about to assault the defendant); 1909, Crawford v. U. S., 212 U. S. 183, 29 Sup. 260 (an accused having taken surreptitiously certain letters from a third person's file, with apparent intent to suppress inculpating evidence, it was held proper for him to state that his intent was not to suppress them, but to preserve them for use in his trial); 1912, Hedderly v. U. S., C. C. A., 193 Fed. 561 (intent of entrymen in filing upon public lands, allowed); 1916, Buchanan v. U. S., 8th C. C. A., 233 Fed. 257 (accused may testify to his belief); 1917, Sparks v. U. S., 6th C. C. A., 241 Fed. 777, 791 (fraudulent use of the mails; defendant's testimony to lack of fraudulent intent, and the circumstances thereof, held improperly rejected);

Alabama: see supra, in the text:

California: 1899, Kyle v. Craig, 125 Cal. 107, 57 Pac. 791 (intent in executing a deed 'mortis causa'; grantor's testimony to his intent); 1909, Fanning v. Green, 156 Cal. 279, 104 Pac. 309 (husband's gift to wife; the husband-plaintiff's testimony to his intent held admissible, the intent being here material in the substantive law); 1912, Runo v. Williams, 162 Cal. 444, 122 Pac. 1082 (malicious prosecution; whether defendant was actuated by malice, etc., allowed);

Colorado: 1906, Boulder & W. R. D. Co. v. Leggett D. & R. Co., 36 Colo. 455, 86 Pac. 101 (by a party, whether he intended to abandon a water-right, allowed);

Columbia (Dist.): 1902, Bass v. U. S., 20 D. C. App. 232, 242 (by one charged with false representation, as to his motive and belief);

1827, SAVAGE, C. J., in People v. Ferguson, 8 Cow. 107: "It is true, if the voter should swear falsely, you probably cannot convict him of perjury. But are we to reject every witness who comes to swear under such circumstances that if he swears false he cannot be convicted of perjury? I know of no such rule of evidence. If this principle is to be engrafted upon the law of evidence, we must always inquire, before a witness is sworn, whether he can be convicted of perjury if he swears falsely, and if not, he must be rejected."

Connecticut: 1910, Fox v. Shanley, 94 Conn. 350, 109 Atl. 249 (husband's intent in handing money to wife);
Florida: 1902, Lane v. State, 44 Fla. 105, 32 So. 896 (accused's belief as to danger calling for self-defence); 1904, Eatman v. State, 48 Fla. 21, 37 So. 576 (embezzlement; defendant allowed to speak as to his belief in his right to the money);
Georgia: 1902, Acme Brewing Co. v. Central R. & B. Co., 115 Ga. 494, 42 S. E. 8 (by a purchaser, as to his good faith in paying); 1903, Alexander v. State, 118 Ga. 26, 44 S. E. 851 (murder; by a co-indictee, that he did not intend violence);
Illinois: 1866, Miner v. Phillips, 42 Ill. 131 (by a debtor, as to his good faith in making a sale alleged to be fraudulent); 1894, Wohlford v. People, 148 Ill. 296, 298, 36 N. E. 107 (assault; by defendant, whether he intended to act in self-defence); 1894, Pope v. Hanke, 155 Ill. 617, 40 N. E. 839, semble (by one buying or selling stocks on a margin, as to his intent to take or give delivery); 1914, People v. Peters, 265 Ill. 122, 106 N. E. 513 (defendant's intention in bribery); 1918, People v. Scott, 284 Ill. 465, 120 N. E. 553 (homicide; by a defendant, whether he believed he be acting in his father's or his own defence, held allowable);
Indiana: 1864, Zimmerman v. Marchland, 23 Ind. 474 (grantee's intent, properly immaterial, but testimony excluded improperly on the present ground; practically repudiated in the ensuing cases); 1876, Greer v. State, 53 Ind. 420 (by one indicted for assault with intent to rape, as to his intention); 1876, White v. State, 53 Ind. 595 (by one indicted for larceny, as to his intention at the time of taking); 1880, Shockey v. Mills, 71 Ind. 288 (by a debtor, as to his intent in selling property alleged to have been transferred in fraud of creditors); 1881, Bidinger v. Bishop, 76 Ind. 244, 255 (by the alleged dedicator of a street, as to his intention); 1883, Parrish v. Thurston, 87 Ind. 440 (by a purchaser, as to his belief in the representations of the seller); 1883, Sedgwick v. Tucker, 90 Ind. 271, 281 (by a debtor, as to his intent in an alleged fraudulent conveyance); 1885, Over v. Schiffling, 102 Ind. 193, 26 N. E. 91 (the precise kind of intent does not appear); 1885, Heap v. Parrish, 104 Ind. 36, 39, 3 N. E. 549 (by the defendant in an action for malicious prosecution, as to his motive in prosecuting); 1888, Ross v. State, 116 Ind. 497, 19 N. E. 451 (by one accused of selling liquor unlawfully to a minor, as to his good faith); 1883, Sedgwick v. Tucker, 90 Ind. 281 (by a debtor, as to his intent in a transfer alleged to be fraudulent);
Iowa: 1865, Watson v. Cheshire, 18 Ia. 202, 211 (by an indorser, as to his belief in the truth of his representations); 1878, Selz v. Belden, 48 Ia. 451 (by a debtor, as to his intent in an alleged fraudulent conveyance, if relevant); 1885, Frost v. Rosecrans, 66 Ia. 495, 23 N. W. 895 (mortgagee, as to his knowledge of debtor's intent to defraud); 1886, Browne v. Hickle, 68 Ia. 330, 333, 27 N. W. 276 (general principle; see quotation infra); 1897, Zimmerman v. Brannon, 103 Ia. 144, 72 N. W. 439 (admissible where intent is relevant; but intent of a promisor in a guaranty is not); 1897, Counselman v. Reichart, 103 Ia. 430, 72 N. W. 490 (intent not to make actual purchases, as constituting a gambling contract); 1899, Kruse v. S. & W. Lumber Co., 108 Ia. 352, 79 N. W. 118 (by a creditor, that he did not accept a note in payment of a claim against the defendant); 1899, Chew v. O'Hara, 110 Ia. 81, 81 N. W. 157 (extortion; defendant's belief in the charges); 1900, Bartlett v. Falk, 110 Ia. 346, 81 N. W. 602 (by a person deceived, as to his reliance upon the false representations); 1902, Flam v. Lee, 116 Ia. 289, 90 N. W. 71 (by one imprisoned, as to his mental suffering); 1902, McDermott v. Mahoney, 119 Ia. 470, 93 N. W. 499 (by an intending purchaser, in an action by the broker against his employer for services, whether the witness was ready and willing to buy); 1906, Huggard v. Glucose S. R. Co., 132 Ia. 724, 109 N. W. 475 (to an employee, whether he relied on a promise to repair, allowed); 1906, Helm v. Anchor F. Ins. Co., 132 Ia. 177, 109 N. W. 605 (fraud in insurance, by the plaintiff, that he had no intent to deceive the defendant, admitted); 1909, Larson v. Thoma, 143 Ia. 338, 121 N. W. 1059 (intent to purchase); 1914, Pooley v. Dutton, 165 Ia. 745, 147 N. W. 154 (alienation of affections; the wife's testimony to the effect of letters on her affections); 1916, State v. Menilla, 177 Ia. 283, 158 N. W. 645 (murder of defendant's husband; that defendant "believed her son's life was in imminent danger", allowed);
Kansas: 1890, Gardom v. Woodward, 44 Kan. 758, 761, 25 Pac. 199 (by a debtor, as to the intent of an alleged fraudulent conveyance; good opinion, by Valentine, J.); 1901, State v. Kirby, 62 Kan. 436, 63 Pac. 752 (by a defendant, as to the meaning of his remark); 1911, State v. Hetrick, 84 Kan. 157, 113 Pac. 383

1867, SANDERSON, J., in People v. Farrell, 31 Cal. 576, 582: "If under the new rule [of competency] parties are to be kept in harness and not allowed to explain their actions and words, when they admit of explanation and when explanation is needed in order to exhibit the whole truth, but half the evil which was felt under the old rule has been removed. It is no answer to say that this enables a party to substitute a false motive for the true one or to convert words spoken in one sense into another. If the argument proves anything it

(false pretences; whether the cashier would have paid if he had not believed the defendant to be the party personated, allowed);
Louisiana: 1888, State v. Wright, 40 La. An. 589, 592, 4 So. 486 (accused's intent just before the affray); 1896, State v. Dillon, 48 La. An. 1365, 20 So. 913 (by a defendant in larceny, as to his intent in taking the goods);
Maine: 1836, Corinna v. Exeter, 13 Me. 328 (by an officer, whether an act was done in good faith); 1857, Edwards v. Currier, 43 Me. 484 (by a purchaser, as to his motives in a purchase alleged to be in fraud of creditors); 1857, Wheelden v. Wilson, 44 Me. 18 (same); 1897, Cushing v. Friendship, 89 Me. 523, 36 Atl. 1001 (one's intent in removing, as affecting domicile); 1906, State v. Morin, 102 Me. 290, 66 Atl. 650 (intention in taking a Federal liquor-license); 1907, Pelkey v. Hodgdon, 102 Me. 426, 67 Atl. 218 (motive in placing a mortgage, admitted; quoting the above text);
Maryland: 1875, Roddy v. Finnegan, 43 Md. 490, 501 (by one arrested, as to his intention in the act charged as illegal and as justifying the arrest); 1884, Fenwick v. State, 63 Md. 239 (by a defendant, as to his purpose in getting the weapon in question; good opinion, by Yellott, J.); 1902, Gambrill v. Schooley, 95 Md. 260, 52 Atl. 500 (intent to resume distilling); 1915, Bavington v. Robinson, 127 Md. 46, 95 Atl. 1067 (slander; plaintiff's testimony to effect upon his feelings, admitted);
Massachusetts: 1857, Fisk v. Chester, 8 Gray 508 (intent of residence of one whose domicil is in question); 1863, Thacher v. Phinney, 7 All. 149 (by a debtor, as to the intent of a transfer); 1863, Lombard v. Oliver, 7 All. 157 (intent as to residence); 1870, Reeder v. Holcomb, 105 Mass. 94 (same); 1874, Snow v. Paine, 114 Mass. 526 (fraudulent transfer); 1876, Safford v. Grant, 120 Mass. 20, 21, 26 (by a creditor, as to his reliance upon false representations); 1885, Chesley v. Thompson, 137 Mass. 136 (slander; defendant's testimony to his own mental suffering, admitted); 1890, Stevens v. Stevens, 150 Mass. 557, 559, 23 N. E. 378 (by the maker of a deed, as to its delivery with intent to pass title); 1895, Crandell v. White, 164 Mass. 54, 41 N. E. 204 (by one selling stocks on margin, that he had no intention to take delivery, under a statute making this material); 1900, Pollock v. Morrison, 172 Mass. 83, 57 N. E. 326 (intent to build a permanent fence); 1900, Faxon v. Jones, 176 Mass. 206, 57 N. E. 359 (malice as affecting damages); 1874, Knight v. Peabody, 116 Mass. 362 (false representations; "What induced you to sign, etc.?" allowed); 1906, Toole v. Crafts, 193 Mass. 110, 78 N. E. 775 (false representations inducing a waiver by defendant; defendant's testimony to his state of mind as to knowledge, allowed); 1912, Kapigian v. Der Minassian, 212 Mass. 412, 99 N. E. 264 (intent as to domicile);
Michigan: 1869, Watkins v. Wallace, 19 Mich. 75 (intent of a debtor as to an assignment alleged to be fraudulent); 1883, People v. Quick, 51 Mich. 547, 18 N. W. 375 (by a defendant in larceny, as to his intent in touching the owner of the goods); 1885, Spalding v. Lowe, 56 Mich. 366, 374, 23 N. W. 46 (by the defendant, as to his own belief and motive, in an action for malicious prosecution); 1912, Isbell v. Anderson C. Co., 170 Mich. 304, 136 N. W. 457 (good faith in declaring a forfeiture);
Minnesota: 1872, Hathaway v. Brown, 18 Minn. 423 (fraudulent transfer; the Court doubted as to the propriety of receiving the debtor's testimony as to his own intention; but the question was not involved); 1875, Berkey v. Judd, 22 Minn. 287, 297 (purchase, on the faith of false representations; the purchaser, as to his own belief and reliance, admitted; repudiating the doubt in Hathaway v. Brown); 1877, Garret v. Mannheimer, 24 Minn. 193 (by a defendant in malicious prosecution, whether he believed his claim valid; approving Berkey v. Judd); 1898, Albion v. Maple Lake, 71 Minn. 503, 74 N. W. 282 (pauper's intent in residence); 1903, State v. Ames, 90 Minn. 183, 96 N. W. 330 (receipt of bribe; by the person bribing, as to her purpose in paying money, admitted); 1905, Grout v. Stewart, 96 Minn. 230, 104 N. W. 966 (intent in delivering a deed in performance of a contract, allowed); 1920, Collins v. Joyce, 146 Minn. 233, 178 N. W. 503 (services rendered; defendant's testimony that he performed the services on the credit of J., not of B., admitted);
Mississippi: 1894, Ferguson v. State, 71 Miss. 805, 813, 15 So. 66 (by a seduced woman, that she yielded in reliance on a promise of marriage); 1910, Oakes v. State, 98 Miss. 80, 54 So. 79 (by a defendant in libel, what was his motive in publishing, allowed);
Missouri: 1878, Van Sickle v. Brown, 68 Mo. 627, 634 (by the defendant in malicious prosecution, as to his good faith and lack of malice in the prosecution); 1881, State v. Banks, 73 Mo. 592, 595 ("'A fortiori' the rule ought to apply in criminal causes also, where the intent which prompts an act is always vitally important");
Montana: 1896, Gassert v. Noyes, 18 Mont.

proves too much, and shows that the radical change which has been made is in all respects founded in folly rather than in wisdom. For the truthfulness of the parties when upon the witness stand we must depend, as in the case of other witnesses, upon the obligations of their oath and their reputation for truth and veracity. If these can be relied upon for the truth of statements made in reference to acts and words of which the eye and ear may take notice, they may for the same reason be accepted as guarantees for the truth of statements

216, 44 Pac. 959 (intention as to non-abandonment of user of a water-right);
Nebraska: 1903, Hackney v. Raymond B. C. Co., 68 Nebr. 624, 94 N. W. 822 (by a creditor, as to his intent in a transfer); 1903, McCormick Harv. M. Co. v. Hiatt, — Nebr. —, 95 N. W. 627 (waiver of breach of warranty; the plaintiff's testimony to his motive in conduct apparently a waiver);
Nevada: 1877, State v. Harrington, 12 Nev. 135 (by a defendant, on a trial for murder, as to whether he believed he was in danger);
New Hampshire: 1860, Gale v. Ins. Co., 41 N. H. 175 (general statement); 1860, Blodgett Paper Co. v. Farmer, 41 N. H. 402 (intent, as to title and as to good faith of creditors, of parties to a sale); 1861, Severance v. Carr, 43 N. H. 67 (intent with which property, alleged to have been stolen, was taken); 1864, Graves v. Graves, 45 N. H. 323 (by a debtor, as to his motive in a transfer alleged to be in fraud of creditors); 1864, Hale v. Taylor, 45 N. H. 406 (intent of a buyer in taking away goods which he subsequently refused to accept in satisfaction of the contract of sale); 1868, Delano v. Goodwin, 48 N. H. 205 (in general); 1880, Homans v. Corning, 60 N. H. 419 (intent of a corporation officer as to the liability for improvements charged by him on the corporation); 1884, Downes v. Society, 63 N. H. 152 (intent in a gift);
New Jersey: 1871, Mulford v. Tennis, 35 N. J. L. 256, 260 (intent as to transfer attacked by creditors);
New York: 1827, People v. Ferguson, 8 Cow. 107 (voter's intent; see quotation supra); 1833, Cunningham v. Freeborn, 11 Wend. 244, semble (by a debtor, as to his motive in making a transfer alleged to be in fraud of creditors); 1856, Seymour v. Wilson, 14 N. Y. 567 (same); 1860, Griffin v. Marquardt, 21 N. Y. 122 (same); 1862, Forbes v. Waller, 25 N. Y. 439 (same); 1864, McKown v. Hunter, 30 N. Y. 625 (by a defendant, in an action for malicious prosecution for perjury, as to his belief in the materiality of the testimony said to involve perjury; see quotation supra); 1866, Bedell v. Chase, 34 N. Y. 388 (by a purchaser, as to his motive in a sale alleged to be in fraud of creditors); 1867, Osborn v. Robbins, 36 N. Y. 375 (whether a note was intended to be given to procure release from unlawful imprisonment); 1868, Thurston v. Cornell, 38 N. Y. 287 (a lender, as to whether the charge for the loan was intended as usurious compensation); 1870, Dillon v. Anderson, 43 N. Y. 236 (approving the preceding instances); 1870, Cortland Co. v. Herkimer Co., 44 N. Y. 22 (the motive in removing a pauper, by one who took part in doing so; removal with intent, etc., being penalized); 1872, Fiedler v. Darrin, 50 N. Y. 443 (usury); 1875, Kerrains v. People, 60 N. Y. 228 (defendant, in a prosecution for assault with intent to kill, as to his purpose in taking up the weapon); 1876, Turner v. Keller, 66 N. Y. 66 (one's knowledge of his authority as an agent being relevant, his statement as to his belief that he had it was received); 1880, Bayliss v. Cockcroft, 81 N. Y. 363, 371 (usury); 1882, Starin v. Kelly, 88 N. Y. 420 (the general doctrine as to intent affirmed; a purchaser from a debtor allowed to answer as to his intention to defraud creditors, although notice of the debtor's fraud was alone legally necessary, so far as the purchaser was concerned, to avoid the transfer); 1884, People v. Baker, 96 N. Y. 340, 349 (by a defendant, as to his intent, on a charge of obtaining money fraudulently); 1887, Crook v. Rindskopf, 105 N. Y. 482, 12 N. E. 174 (fraudulent transfer); 1890, Hard v. Ashley, 117 N. Y. 617, 23 N. E. 177 (whether a party to a compromise relied on the other's representations); 1899, Davis v. Marvine, 160 N. Y. 269, 54 N. E. 704 (intent as to purpose of an alleged usurious loan); 1912, Noonan v. Luther, 206 N. Y. 105, 99 N. E. 178 (defendant's intent in expelling a licensee);
North Carolina: 1882, King, 86 N. C. 603, 606 (general principle, applied to accused persons); 1888, Phifer v. Erwin, 100 N. C. 59, 63, 6 S. E. 672 (by a debtor, as to his intent in an alleged fraudulent mortgage); 1890, Nixon v. McKinney, 105 N. C. 23, 28, 11 S. E. 154 (similar); 1900, Autry v. Floyd, 127 N. C. 186, 37 S. E. 208 (by a defendant, as to his lack of malice in prosecuting plaintiff); 1903, Bright v. Tel. Co., 132 N. C. 317, 43 S. E. 841 (by the addressee of a telegram, that he would have done certain things had he received the message in ample time); 1903, State v. Hall, 132 N. C. 1094, 44 S. E. 553 (by a defendant, as to his purpose in going to the place of the homicide); 1921, State v. Jessup, 181 N. C. 548, 106 S. E. 833 (larceny; defendant's testimony to lack of intent by himself and by M. jointly indicted, admissible);
North Dakota: 1903, State v. Tough, 12 N. D. 425, 96 N. W. 1025 (by a defendant, as to his belief of ownership in entering a railroad car having coal of another person); Ohio: 1866, White v. Tucker, 16 Oh. St. 468, 470 (by the defendant in malicious prosecution, as to his belief in the charge made against made in respect to motives and intents of which the mind or inner man alone can take cognizance. Nor is there, in our judgment, any well-grounded reason for apprehending that this rule will obstruct rather than advance the ends of justice. There is no more danger of imposing upon the jury falsehood or pretence in respect of motives and intents than there is of doing the like in respect to visible or external circumstances. The jury can as readily distinguish between the false and the true in respect to the former as to the latter. If the motive or intent assigned is inconsistent with the external circumstances, it must be dis-

the plaintiff; good opinion by Day, J.); 1896, Grever v. Taylor, 53 Oh. St. 621, 42 N. E. 829 (goods fraudulently bought; by the vendor, as to whether he relied on the false representations); Pennsylvania: 1883, Juniata Bldg. Ass'n v. Hertzel, 103 Pa. 507, 511 (admissible "wherever the character of the transaction depends on the intent of the party"); 1896, Com. v. Julius, 173 Pa. 322, 34 Atl. 21 (whether a release was signed on the faith of representations); 1896, Weaver v. Cone, 174 Pa. 104, 34 Atl. 551 ("What induced you to sell for $80?");
Rhode Island: 1902, Charbonnel v. Seabury, 23 R. I. 543, 51 Atl. 208 (by one suing for deceit, as to his reliance on the representations);
South Carolina: 1900, McGhee v. Wells, 57 S. C. 280, 35 S. E. 529 (deed in fraud of creditors);
South Dakota: 1920, Warner v. Hopkins, 42 S. D. 613, 176 N. W. 746 (intention to abandon a homestead);
Texas: 1886, Hamburg v. Wood, 66 Tex. 176, 18 S. W. 623 (transfer in fraud of creditors; by the transferee, as to his motive in accepting the property transferred);
Utah: 1875, Conway v. Clinton, 1 Utah 215, 221 (by one charged with malicious destruction of property, as to his motive); 1895, People v. Hughs, 11 Utah 100, 39 Pac. 492 (accused's intent);
Vermont: 1865, Hulett v. Hulett, 37 Vt. 581 (by one whose domicil was in question; see quotation supra); 1886, Stearns v. Gosselin, 58 id. 38, 3 Atl. 193 (by a debtor, as to his intent in an alleged fraudulent transfer); 1908, Taplin v. Marcy, 81 Vt. 428, 71 Atl. 72 (intent of a vendor in taking lien notes on lumber, allowed);
Virginia: 1898, Jackson v. Com., 96 Va. 107, 30 S. E. 452 (by a trespasser, as to his malice); 1903, Litton v. Com., 101 Va. 833, 44 S. E. 923 (murder; by the accused, as to his intent to shoot, allowed);
West Virginia: 1889, State v. Evans, 33 W. Va. 417, 424, 425, 10 S. E. (by the accused, as to his belief of the necessity of shooting, and his malice); 1914, State v. Alderson, 74 W. Va. 732, 82 S. E. 1021 (accused's intent as to shooting, etc.); 1919, State v. Panetta, 85 W. Va. 212, 101 S. E. 360 (by the accused, why she shot the deceased, allowed); 1921, State v. Arrington, 88 W. Va. 152, 106 S. E. 445 (murder: "What was your purpose in firing the gun?" allowed);
Wisconsin: 1874, Wilson v. Noonan, 35 Wis. 321, 355, 363 (libel; malice or intent being material on the question of damages, the defendant may testify on the subject, "wherever the act complained of is not clearly and necessarily inconsistent with the supposition that such bad intent or malice did not or may not have existed"; quære as to this limitation, which ought to apply, if at all, equally to other sorts of evidence); 1881, Sherburne v. Rodman, 51 Wis. 474, 478, 8 N. W. 414 (by a defendant in malicious prosecution, as to his belief and good faith in his claim); 1885, Plank v. Grimm, 62 Wis. 251, 22 N. W. 470 (by one sued for assault, as to intent in approaching the plaintiff); 1885, Arnold v. White, 62 Wis. 401 (by a debtor, as to the alleged fraudulent intent in contracting); 1894, Commercial Bank v. Ins. Co., 87 Wis. 297, 303, 58 N. W. 391 (by an insured, as to his intent to defraud in altering books); 1896, Emery v. State, 92 Wis. 146, 65 N. W. 848 (by a defendant, as to his intent in making a threat); 1898, Fischer v. State, 101 Wis. 23, 76 N. W. 594 (intent of defendant as to intimidating another person); 1901, Yerkes v. Northern Pacific R. Co., 112 Wis. 184, 88 N. W. 33 (that the plaintiff relied on the defendant's promise to repair machinery, allowed; but that he would not have continued at work except for the promise, excluded on the theory of the opinion rule, — a vain and quibbling distinction); 1904, Strasser v. Goldberg, 120 Wis. 621, 98 N. W. 454 (estoppel; whether the other party relied on the statement, allowed); 1906, Brown v. State, 127 Wis. 193, 106 N. W. 536 (rape; to the prosecutrix, "Was it against your will?", allowed); 1916, Ertel v. Milwaukee El. R. & L. Co., 164 Wis. 380, 160 N. W. 263 (collision; "whether you thought you could pass over the track safely or not", allowed).

In the following rulings, the testimony was excluded, on perhaps the present grounds, but the rulings may be otherwise supported: 1896, Harris v. Lumber Co., 97 Ga. 465, 25 S. E. 519 (by an alleged promisor, as to his own intent to buy); 1892, Vawter v. Hultz, 112 Mo. 633, 640, 20 S. W. 689 (by a defendant, that he shot to protect his life).

Compare the cases cited post, § 1963 (opinion rule).

The admission of hearsay declarations of intention (post, §§ 1725 ff.) is another application of the foregoing principle.

carded as false. If on the contrary they are consistent, there is no reason why they may not be true."

1876, NIBLACK, J., in White v. State, 53 Ind. 596: "Because the intent is a fact which cannot in the nature of things be positively known to others, and is hence a matter about which other witnesses cannot directly testify, does not in our opinion affect the rule."

It is to be regretted, however, that, by a misunderstanding of the history of the rule, an unnecessary concession has sometimes been made, by a few judges, to the argument in its favor. This concession is that there once was some sort of a rule by which "the intent must be inferred from the acts and words of the party", and that its cessation is due to the fact that it is now impliedly "removed by the abrogation of the rule which created it", namely, of the party's disqualification.[4] The truth is, however, that even while parties were entirely disqualified the question was presented, in the shape of testimony to his own intent by a third person, not a party, whose intent was material under the issue, — for example, a voter or a debtor, — and that, in that shape, the question was answered plainly in the negative by several Courts.[5] There was, then, already established a doctrine that a person might properly testify to his own intent, whenever it was material. There was, also, no rule that parties in particular might not testify to their own intent, but merely a general rule disqualifying parties altogether; and thus, when the latter rule was abolished altogether, parties became qualified to testify to whatever other persons had been qualified to testify to, including the fact of their own intent. Thus the statutory changes had nothing to do with the validity or origin of the present rule; they simply made it possible to raise, against parties, a question which had no occasion to be raised against them before that time. It had been raised for other persons, and settled; and it now remained merely to raise it and settle it in a particular new application. The statutory abolition of parties' disqualification is not the source of validity for the present rule, but merely explains the subsequent frequency of a ruling which in that application was before that time unnecessary.

In only one jurisdiction has any clear sanction been given to a rule that parties or other persons are disqualified to testify to their own intent or motive.[6] In all others where the question has been raised there is a general repudiation of that notion in all its aspects.

It remains to be noted that this sort of testimony, or any other whatever, to the fact of a person's intent or motive, is of course receivable only on the assumption that the intent or motive is a fact permissible to be proved under the substantive law involved in the case. This assumption conditions the [4] E.g. by Sanderson, J., in People v. Farrell, 31 Cal. 576, quoted supra.

[5] As in People v. Ferguson, N. Y., quoted supra, and in other cases cited supra.

[6] This is in Alabama. The rulings are collected post, § 1966, in order to distinguish them from others concerning testimony to a third person's intent, and the like; the rulings in that jurisdiction on these topics are in hopeless confusion and exhibit an unprecedented narrow artificiality.

admissibility of all evidence (ante, § 2) and of this sort in particular. Hence, if for any reason of substantive law the person's intent or motive is not provable at all, it is not provable by such testimony. But rulings of that tenor are not rulings upon a question of evidence: [7]

1886, REED, J., in Browne v. Hickle, 68 Ia. 330, 333, 27 N. W. 276: "When it is material to determine the motive or intention with which an act was done, the testimony of the one doing the act, as to his motive or intention, is competent evidence. But . . . the questions to be determined [in this case] were whether the parties entered into a contract for the termination of the lease, and, if so, what were the terms and conditions of their agreement. These questions must be determined from the conduct and language of the parties during the agreement. If an agreement was entered into by the parties, the undertaking of the plaintiff therein must be determined alone from what was said and done by him at the time. His secret motives or intentions are entirely immaterial. We think, therefore, that the Court properly excluded the evidence."

From the present question of evidence are also to be distinguished two other questions of evidence: (1) whether a person may testify to another person's intent or state of mind in general; this involves the principle of adequacy of sources of knowledge, examined elsewhere (post, § 661); (2) whether a person's testimony to another's intent or meaning or state of mind in general is excluded by reason of the Opinion rule; this is a question of complicated bearings, and is dealt with under the Opinion rule (post, § 1962).

§ 582.] Testamentary Attesting-Witness' Competency. Whether the person attesting a will is eligible to act as such is purely a question of the substantive law applicable to the validity of wills. The object of the statute is not to determine the competency of persons called to testify to the will, but to secure the execution of the will under formalities of a specified sort.[1] The [7] The following cases will serve as examples of the various ways in which a rule of substantive law may affect the solution: 1871, Columbus v. Dahn, 36 Ind. 334 (rejecting testimony by the alleged dedicator of a street as to his intention); 1888, Ross v. State, 116 Ind. 497, 19 N. E. 451 (rejecting testimony as to one's intent to violate the law); 1902, Donovan v. Driscoll, 116 Ia. 339, 90 N. W. 60 (by a son working for his father, as to his own expectation of pay, excluded); 1859, Quimby v. Morrill, 47 Me. 470 (the intention of a promisor to be bound was allowed to be asked about by the opponent); 1844, Jones v. Howland, 8 Metc. 385 (whether in addition to the fact of knowledge of insolvency by the debtor, a distinct element, the intent to make a preference, need be shown); 1877, Perry v. Porter, 121 Mass. 523 (admitting evidence of a grantor's intent, the issue being whether she had been fraudulently misled into signing); 1895, Nash v. Minn. T. I. & T. Co., 163 Mass. 574, 40 N. E. 1039 (whether one making false representations intended to state a falsity); 1844, Hibbard v. Russell, 16 N. H. 417 (excluding the secret intent of a person promising in words to pay a note); 1860, Gale v. Ins. Co., 41 N. H. 174 (an uncommunicated intent to choose between two policies covering the same risk, excluded); 1860, People v. Saxton, 22 N. Y. 309 (rejecting testimony, by one casting an ambiguous ballot, as to his intention); 1870, Dillon v. Anderson, 43 N. Y. 236 (excluding an uncommunicated intent, with reference to a contract made).

Add to these illustrations the cases which involve the question whether one charged with slanderous or libellous utterances may testify to his meaning intended: 1890, Townshend, Slander & Libel, 4th ed., § 139; 1881, Odgers, Libel & Slander, 1st Am. ed., p. 93; 1898, Newell, Libel & Slander, 2d ed., c. 15, § 22.

Compare also the analogous illustrations arising under the limitations of the opinion rule and the parol evidence rule, post, § 1971, and §§ 2400–2478.

§ 582. [1] This was amply established in an early period of the statute's application, in luminous and classical opinions: 1746, Wyndham v. Chetwynd, 1 Burr. 425; 1765, Doe v. Hindson, Hinds v. Kersey (Eng.), 1 Day 41, note; 1845, Taylor v. Taylor, 1 Rich. L. 531, 534.

will is required to be contained in writing, to be signed by certain persons, and to be signed in the presence of certain persons; if these rules are followed, the will is valid in form, and no one of the rules is more a rule of evidence than another (post, § 2456).

Certain corollaries ensue from this principle and illustrate it. In the first place the rule of validity, requiring attestation by certain persons, remains to be satisfied, whether or not any one of those persons appears as a witness. For example, the rule that certain of these persons must be called in preference to others to testify (post, § 1290) is a rule of evidence independent of the rule of validity, and may be dispensed with while the latter remains in full force. Secondly, if one of them, appearing as a witness on the stand, is entirely qualified at the time of testifying, still his incompetency at the time of attesting renders the will invalid; though this part of the doctrine has been usually changed by statute.[2] Finally, if one of these persons, when called to testify, is incompetent to do so, but was competent under the statute at the time of attesting, the will is nevertheless valid;[3] the statute's object is satisfied when the execution takes places with the specified formalities; i.e. it prescribes a rule of substantive law, not of evidence. The consideration of these statutes, therefore, involving as they do the theory of the substantive law as to the validity of wills, would here be out of place.[4]

§ 583. Voir Dire; Mode of Ascertaining Disqualification: (1) Time of Interest that Disqualifies. The doctrine of disqualification by Interest is now of little practical consequence. It is applicable solely, and that only in a modified degree, to the statutory class of persons disqualified as survivors to testify against an opponent deceased or incapable, and even then in some only of the jurisdictions (ante, § 578). So far as the details of the old rule are concerned, by which are determined the time when the disqualifying interest is to exist and the mode in which its existence is to be ascertained, it will therefore suffice, for to-day's purpose, to call attention to the principles

[2] Sometimes, as in Arizona, this is done by making a real rule of evidence, as by requiring corroboration: post, § 2066.

[3] 1865, Sparhawk v. Sparhawk, 10 All. 155.

[4] The statutes affecting the subject may be found by consulting the citations post, §§ 1290, 1310, 1510, 2049–2051.

Consult the following opinions: Del. 1915, Hudson v. Flood, 28 Del. 450, 94 Atl. 760; Ill. 1907, Gump v. Gowans, 226 Ill. 635, 80 N. E. 1086; 1909, Jones v. Griesler, 238 Ill. 183, 87 N. E. 295 (executor); 1909, Fearn v. Postlethwaite, 240 Ill. 626, 88 N. E. 1057 (wife of executor); Ind. 1908, Hiatt v. McColley, 171 Ind. 91, 85 N. E. 772; 1909, Wisehart v. Applegate, 172 Ind. 313, 88 N. E. 501; 1920, Pfaffenberger v. Pfaffenberger, 189 Ind. 507, 127 N. E. 766; Kan. 1904, Lanning v. Gay, 70 Kan. 353, 78 Pac. 810, 85 Pac. 407; Ky. 1903, Savage v. Bulger, — Ky. —, 76 S. W. 361, 77 S. W. 717; Mass. 1903, O'Connell v. Dow, 182 Mass. 541, 66 N. E. 788; Miss. 1908, Swanzy v. Kolb, 94 Miss. 10, 46 So. 549 (opinion by Whitfield, C. J.); Mo. 1905, Mann v. Balfour, 187 Mo. 290, 86 S. W. 103; 1920, Yant v. Charles, — Mo. —, 219 S. W. 572; Pa. 1915, Johnson's Estate, Thompson's Appeal, 249 Pa. 339, 94 Atl. 1082; Vt. 1094, Wheelock's Will, 76 Vt. 235, 56 Atl. 1013; Wis. 1920, Johnson's Estate, 170 Wis. 436, 175 N. W. 917.

Compare also the cases cited post, § 1510, n. 4 ("credible" attesting witnesses).

In a number of States, the statutes removing the common-law disqualifications of witnesses at trials are particular to distinguish the present subject, and go on to provide (but superfluously) that "the provisions of the preceding sections shall not affect the law relating to the attestation of the execution of last wills and testaments or any other instrument"; e.g. Vt. Gen. L. 1917, § 1900.

already examined (ante, §§ 483–487) for testimonial qualifications in general, and to set forth summarily their application to the present subject by approved passages of exposition from the period when the rules of interest were in full force. And, first, of the

(1) Time of Interest that Disqualifies. Ordinarily, the time when the witness is called upon to testify is the time when his qualification must exist. But, in order to avoid the abuse of the rule against interested witnesses, exceptions to that principle were here recognized:

1842, Professor Simon Greenleaf, Evidence, § 418: "It has been laid down in general terms, that where one person becomes entitled to the testimony of another, the latter shall not be rendered incompetent to testify, by reason of any interest subsequently acquired in the event of the suit.[1] But though the doctrine is not now universally admitted to that extent, yet it is well settled and agreed, that in all cases where the interest has been subsequently created by the fraudulent act of the adverse party, for the purpose of taking off his testimony, or by any act of mere wantonness, and aside from the ordinary course of business, on the part of the witness, he is not thereby rendered incompetent. And where the person was the original witness of the transaction or agreement between the parties, in whose testimony they both had a common interest, it seems also agreed, that it shall not be in the power either of the witness, or of one of the parties, to deprive the other of his testimony, by reason of any interest subsequently acquired, even though it were acquired without any such intention on the part of the witness, or of the party.[2] . . . If the subsequent interest has been created by the agency of the party producing the witness, he is disqualified; the party having no right to complain of his own act."[3]

§ 584. Same: (2) Burden of Proving Disqualification. The burden of proving disqualification by interest is upon the party objecting to the witness. This was never doubted.[1] Although the state of the record might of itself serve to show the interest, still, so far as anything whatever needed to be done to make the interest apparent, it must be done by the objector.

§ 585. Same: (3) Mode of Proving Disqualification. So far as a mere reference to the record of the cause does not suffice, the objector finds two sources of evidence available, first, evidence of the ordinary sort (from other persons), and secondly, the witness' own answers, either on his general examination or on a special preliminary examination ("voir dire") had for the purpose:

1746, L. C. HARDWICKE, in Lord Lovat's Trial, 18 How. St. Tr. 585, 597, 730: "The party objecting may either put it to the oath of the witness produced or call witnesses to prove it. If he puts it to the oath of the witness produced, then he is concluded as to the point of competency by the answer he gives, unless the other side consents to waive that."

§ 583. [1] "See Bent v. Baker, 3 T. R. 27, per Ld. Kenyon, and Ashhurst, J.; Barlow v. Vowell, Skin. 586, per Ld. Holt; Cowp. 736; Jackson v. Rumsey, 3 Johns. Cas. 234, 237."

For a deposition, the time of taking it is the material time, and subsequent interest acquired before trial does not exclude: 1862, Cameron v. Cameron, 15 Wis. 1, 5 (subsequent marriage to a party).

Compare the cases cited post, § 1409 (deponent disqualified by interest).

[2] "Forrester v. Pigou, 3 Campb. 381; 1 Stark. Evid. 118; Long v. Bailie, 4 S. & R. Pa. 222; 14 Pick. Mass. 47; Phelps v. Riley, 3 Conn. 266, 272; R. v. Fox, 1 Stra. 652."

[3] "Hovill v. Stephenson, 5 Bing. 493."

§ 584. [1] 1843, Densler v. Edwards, 5 Ala. 34 (citing cases); 1886, Hill v. Helton, 80 id. 532, 1 So. 340; 1903, Terr. v. Cheong Kwai, 15 Haw. 280 (wife).

1801, Mr. Peake, Evidence, 186: "When a witness was liable to any objection on account of interest, etc., the old rule was to examine upon the 'voire dire' as to his situation or call other witnesses to prove the fact which rendered him incompetent. The party against whom he was produced had his election which of these modes he would pursue; but he could not adopt both; and if the witness denied his interest, no other evidence could afterwards be produced to prove it, for the purpose of rendering him incompetent."

1842, Professor Simon Greenleaf, Evidence, §§ 424, 423: "A witness is said to be examined upon the 'voire dire', when he is sworn and examined as to the fact whether he is not a party interested in the cause.[1] And though this term was formerly and more strictly applied only to the case where the witness was sworn to make true answers to such questions as the Court might put to him, and before he was sworn in chief, yet it is now extended to the preliminary examination to his interest, whatever may have been the form of the oath under which the inquiry is made. . . . The mode of proving the interest of a witness is either by his own examination, or by evidence 'aliunde.' But whether the election of one of these modes will preclude the party from afterwards resorting to the other, is not clearly settled by the authorities. If the evidence offered 'aliunde' to prove the interest is rejected, as inadmissible, the witness may then be examined on the 'voir dire.'[2] And if the witness on the 'voir dire' states that he does not know, or leaves it doubtful whether he is interested or not, his interest may be shown by other evidence.[3] It has also been held, that a resort to one of these modes, to prove the interest of the witness on one ground, does not preclude a resort to the other mode, to prove the interest on another ground.[4] And where the objection to the competency of the witness is founded upon the evidence already adduced by the party offering him, this has been adjudged not to be such an election of the mode of proof, as to preclude the objector from the right to examine the witness on the 'voir dire.'[5] But, subject to these modifications, the rule recognized and adopted by the general current of authorities is, that where the objecting party has undertaken to prove the interest of the witness, by interrogating him upon the 'voir dire', he shall not, upon failure of that mode, resort to the other to prove facts, the existence of which was known when the witness was interrogated.[6] The party, appealing to the conscience of the witness, offers him to the Court as a credible witness; and it is contrary to the spirit of the law of evidence, to permit him afterwards to say, that the witness is not worthy to be believed. It would also violate another rule, by its tendency to raise collateral issues.[7] Nor is it deemed rea-

§ 585. [1] "Termes de la Ley, Verb. Voyer dire. And see Jacobs v. Laybourn, 11 M. & W. 685, where the nature and use of an examination upon the voir dire are stated and explained by Ld. Abinger, C. B."

[2] "Main v. Newson, Anthon's Cas. 13. But a witness cannot be excluded by proof of his own admission that he was interested in the suit: Bates v. Ryland, 6 Alabama R. 668; Pierce v. Chase, 8 Mass. 487, 488; Commonwealth v. Waite, 5 Mass. 261; George v. Stubbs, 13 Shepl. 243."

[3] "Shannon v. The Commonwealth, 8 S. & R. 444; Galbraith v. Galbraith, 6 Watts 112; Bank of Columbia v. Magruder, 6 Har. & J. 172." The Court may hear additional evidence; 1903, White Memorial Home v. Haeg, 204 Ill. 422, 68 N. E. 568.

[4] "Stebbins v. Sackett, 5 Conn. 258."

[5] "Bridge v. Wellington, 1 Mass. 221, 222."

[6] "In the old books, including the earlier editions of Mr. Starkie's and Mr. Phillips's Treatises on Evidence, the rule is clearly laid down, that after an examination upon the 'voir dire', no other mode of proof can in any case be resorted to; excepting only the case, where the interest was developed in the course of trial of the issue. But in the last editions of those works it is said, that 'if the witness discharge himself on the "voir dire", the party who objects, may still support his objection by evidence'; but no authority is cited for the position: 1 Stark. Evid. 124; Phil. & Am. on Evid. 149; 1 Phil. Evid. 154. Mr. Starkie had previously added these words — 'as part of his own case' (see 2 Stark. Evid. p. 756, 1st ed.); and with this qualification the remark is supported by authority, and is correct in principle. The American Courts have followed the old English rule, as stated in the text: Butler v. Butler, 3 Day 214; Stebbins v. Sackett, 5 Conn. 258, 261; Chance v. Hine, 6 Conn. 231; Welden v. Buck, Anthon's Cas. 9; Chatfield v. Lathrop, 6 Pick. 418; Evans v. Eaton, 1 Peters C. C. 322."

[7] "The question of competency is a collateral question; and the rule is, that when a witness is asked a question upon a collateral point, his answer is final, and cannot be contradicted; that is, no collateral evidence is sonable to permit a party to sport with the conscience of a witness, when he has other proof of his interest. But if evidence of his interest has been given 'aliunde', it is not proper to examine the witness, in order to explain it away."[8]

§ 586. Same: (4) Time of Making Objection. The general principle (ante, §§ 18, 486) is that an opponent must object at the time of the offering of the witness, and that if he allows this time to go by, though aware of the ground for objection, he should be treated as waiving the objection. This principle, as applied to interested witnesses, seems to have been substantially repudiated in modern times in England, so that no limitation of time remains for the objection, so long at least as the witness is still on the stand. But the orthodox principle was preserved by the American Courts:

1801, Mr. Peake, Evidence, 186: "[The old rule was that] if he appeared to be incompetent, either by his own examination on the 'voire dire' or by other evidence, the objection was immediately made; for if not taken before he was sworn in chief, it was considered as too late after he had been examined by the party calling him and cross-examined by the other side. But the modern practice is to swear the witness in chief in the first instance, and if at any time during the trial it be discovered that he is in a situation which renders him incompetent, it is then time to take the objection."

1843, L. C. B. ABINGER, in Jacobs v. Layborn, 11 M. W. 685, 692: "A counsel who knows of an objection to the competency of a witness may very fairly say, 'I will lie by, and see whether he will speak the truth; if he does not, I will exclude his evidence.' I see no hardship or injustice at all in that course. . . . In other words, an examination on the 'voir dire' may be instituted at any period of the examination."

1842, Professor Simon Greenleaf, Evidence, § 421. "In regard to the time of taking the objection to the competency of a witness on the ground of interest, it is obvious that, from the preliminary nature of the objection, it ought in general to be taken before the witness is examined in chief. If the party is aware of the existence of the interest, he will not be permitted to examine the witness, and afterwards to object to his competency, if he should dislike his testimony. He has his election, to admit an interested person to testify against him, or not; but in this, as in all other cases, the election must be made as soon as the opportunity to make it is presented; and, failing to make it at that time, he is presumed to have waived it forever.[1] But he is not prevented from taking the objection at any time during the trial, provided it is taken as soon as the interest is discovered.[2] Thus, if discovered during the examination in chief by the plaintiff, it is not too late for the defendant admissible for that purpose. But if the evidence, subsequently given upon the matter in issue, should also prove the witness interested, his testimony may well be stricken out, without violating any rule: Brockbank v. Anderson, 7 Man. & Gr. 295, 313."

[8] "Mott v. Hicks, 1 Cowen 513; Evans v. Gray, 1 Martin N. S. 709"; 1902, Dowdy v. Watson, 115 Ga. 42, 41 S. E. 266.

For the rule that the original of a document showing interest need not be produced on the voir dire, see post, § 1258.

§ 586. [1] "Donelson v. Taylor, 8 Pick. 390, 392; Belcher v. Magnay, 1 New Pr. Cas. 110"; but see Jacobs v. Laybourn, supra, for the modern English rule contra.

For modern American applications of the rule, see the following: 1892, Benson v. U. S. 146 U. S. 325, 332; 1863, Leslie v. Sims, 39 Ala. 101; 1882, Binford v. Dement, 72 Ala. 491; 1909, Chicago Title & T. Co. v. Sagola L Co., 242 Ill. 468, 90 N. E. 282; 1903, Slattery v. Slattery, 120 Ia. 717, 95 N. W. 201; 1898, State v. Downs, 50 La. An. 694, 23 So. 456; 1903, Summerlin v. R. Co., 133 N. C. 550, 45 S. E. 898; 1895, Pillow v. Impr. Co., 92 Va. 144, 23 S. E. 32; 1897, Spence v. Repass, 94 Va. 716, 27 S. E. 583.

[2] "Stone v. Blackburn, 1 Esp. 37; 1 Stark. Evid. 124; Shurtliff v. Willard, 19 Pick. 202. Where a party has been fully apprised of the grounds of a witness's incompetency by the opening speech of counsel, or the examination in chief of the witness, doubts have been entertained at nisi prius, whether an objection to the competency of a witness can be postponed: 1 Phil. Evid. 154, note (3)."

to take the objection.[3] But if it is not discovered until after the trial is concluded, a new trial will not, for that cause alone, be granted;[4] unless the interest was known and concealed by the party producing the witness.[5] The rule on this subject, in criminal and civil cases, is the same.[6] Formerly, it was deemed necessary to take the objection to the competency of a witness on the 'voir dire'; and if once sworn in chief, he could not afterwards be objected to, on the ground of interest. But the strictness of this rule is relaxed; and the objection is now usually taken after he is sworn in chief, but previous to his direct examination. It is in the discretion of the Judge to permit the adverse party to cross-examine the witness, as to his interest, after he has been examined in chief; but the usual course is not to allow questions to be asked upon the cross-examination, which properly belong only to an examination upon the 'voir dire.'[7] But if, notwithstanding every ineffectual endeavor to exclude the witness on the ground of incompetency, it afterwards should appear incidentally, in the course of the trial, that the witness is interested, his testimony will be stricken out and the Jury will be instructed wholly to disregard it.[8] The rule in Equity is the same as at Law;[9] and the principle applies with equal force to testimony given in a deposition in writing, and to an oral examination in Court. In either case, the better opinion seems to be, that if the objection is taken as soon as may be after the interest is discovered, it will be heard; but after the party is 'in morâ', it comes too late.[10] One reason for requiring the objection to be made thus early is, that the other party may have opportunity to remove it

[3] "Jacobs v. Laybourn, 11 M. & W. 683. And see Yardley v. Arnold, 10 M. & W. 141; 6 Jur. 718."

[4] "Turner v. Pearte, 1 T. R. 717; Jackson v. Jackson, 5 Cowen 173."

[5] "Niles v. Brackett, 13 Mass. 378."

[6] "Commonwealth v. Green, 17 Mass. 538; Roscoe's Crim. Evid. 124."

[7] "Howell v. Lock, 2 Camp. 14; Odiorne v. Winkley, 2 Gallis. 51; Perigal v. Nicholson, 1 Wightw. 64. The objection that the witness is the real plaintiff, ought to be taken on the voir dire: Dewdney v. Palmer, 4 M. & W. 664; 7 Dowl. 177, s. c."; 1905, Vickery v. State, 50 Fla. 144, 38 So. 907 (the trial Court in discretion may let all the witnesses be sworn to testify, and postpone their 'voir dire' examination till each one is called).

[8] "Davis v. Barr, 9 S. &. R. 137; Schillenger v. McCann, 6 Greenl. 364; Fisher v. Willard, 13 Mass. 379; Evans v. Eaton, 1 Peters C. C. 338, 4 Fed. 559; Butler v. Tufts, 1 Shepl. 302; Stout v. Wood, 1 Blackf. 71; Mitchell v. Mitchell, 11 G. & J. 388.

"The same rule seems applicable to all the instruments of evidence, whether oral or written; Scribner v. M'Laughlin, 1 Allen 379; and see Swift v. Dean, 6 Johns. 523, 536; Perigal v. Nicholson, Wightw. 63; Howell v. Lock, 2 Campb. 64; Needham v. Smith, 2 Vern. 464.

"In one case, however, where the examination of a witness was concluded, and he was dismissed from the box, but was afterwards recalled by the Judge, for the purpose of asking him a question, it was ruled by Gibbs, C. J., that it was then too late to object to his competency: Beeching v. Gower, 1 Holt's Cas. 313; and see Heely v. Barnes, 4 Denio 73.

"And in Chancery it is held, that where a witness has been cross-examined by a party, with full knowledge of an objection to his competency, the Court will not allow the objection to be taken at the hearing: Flagg v. Mann, 2 Sumn. 487."

[9] "Swift v. Dean. 6 Johns. 523, 538; Needham v. Smith, 2 Vern. 463; Vaughan v. Worrall, 2 Swanst. 400. In this case, Lord Eldon said, that no attention could be given to the evidence, though the interest were not discovered until the last question, after he has been 'cross-examined to the bone.'

"See Gresley on Evid. 234–236; Rogers v. Dibble, 3 Paige 238; Town v. Needham, id. 545, 552: Harrison v. Courtauld, 1 Russ. & M. 428; Moorhouse v. De Passou, G. Cooper, Ch. Cas. 300; 19 Ves. 433, s. c. See also Jacobs v. Laybourn, 7 Jur. 562, 11 M. & W. 685."

[10] "Donelson v. Taylor, 8 Pick. 390. Where the testimony is by deposition, the objection, if the interest is known, ought regularly to be taken 'in limine'; and the cross-examination should be made 'de bene esse', under protest, or with an express reservation of the right of objection at the trial; unless the interest of the witness is developed incidentally, in his testimony to the merits. But the practice on this point admits of considerable latitude, in the discretion of the Judge: United States v. One Case of Hair Pencils, 1 Paine 400, 15 Fed. 924; Talbot v. Clark, 8 Pick. 51; Smith v. Sparrow, 11 Jur. 126; The Mohawk Bank v. Atwater, 2 Paige 54; Ogle v. Pelaski, 1 Holt's Cas. 485; 2 Tidd's Pr. 812."

In Missouri, a cross-examination is a waiver as to new matter only: 1907, McCune v. Goodwillie, 204 Mo. 306, 102 S. W. 997.

"As to the mode of taking the objection in Chancery, see 1 Hoffm. Chan. 489, Gass v. Stinson, Sumn. 605."

by a release; which is always allowed to be done, when the objection is taken at any time before the examination is completed.[11] It is also to be noted as a rule, applicable to all objections to the reception of evidence, that the ground of objection must be distinctly stated at the time, or it will be held vague and nugatory." [12]

1877, STAPLES, J., in Hord v. Colbert, 28 Gratt. 49, 54: "The authorities leave no room for doubt; they hold that if the party be aware of the existence of the interest, he will not be permitted to examine the witness and afterwards to object to his incompetency if he should dislike his testimony."

§ 587. Same: (5) Judge, not Jury, to determine Disqualification. The following passage has no doubt often served to influence judicial rulings:

1842, Professor Greenleaf, Evidence, § 425: "The question of interest, though involving facts, is still a preliminary question, preceding, in its nature, the admission of the testimony to the Jury. It is therefore to be determined by the Court alone, it being the province of the Judge, and not of the Jury, in the first instance, to pass upon its sufficiency.[1] . . . In determining the question of interest, where the evidence is derived 'aliunde', and it depends upon the decision of intricate questions of fact, the Judge may, in his discretion, take the opinion of the Jury upon them. And if a witness, being examined on the 'voir dire', testifies to facts tending to prove that he is not interested, and is thereupon admitted to testify; after which opposing evidence is introduced, to the same facts, which are thus left in doubt, and the facts are material to the issue; the evidence must be weighed by the Jury, and if they thereupon believe the witness to be interested, they must lay his testimony out of the case." [2]

But it is necessary to point out that the doctrine of the last sentence in this passage is unsound. When the judge has ruled upon admissibility, all question of a rule of law is at an end.[3] The jury cannot again apply the rule of admissibility. If they reject a witness' testimony, it is not because they find him to be ineligible by the technical rules of interest, but merely because on the whole they do not believe him. The fallacy of the above doctrine has been elsewhere sufficiently considered in other applications (ante, §§ 487, 497; post, §§ 861, 1451, 2550).

[11] "Tallman v. Dutcher, 7 Wend. 180; Doty v. Wilson, 14 Johns. 378; Wake v. Lock, 5 C. & P. 454."

[12] "Camden v. Doremus, 3 Howard 515, 530; Elwood v. Deifndorf, 5 Barb. S. C. R. 398; Carr v. Gale, Daveis, R. 337, 2 Fed. 434."

For depositions, see the additional cases cited under the general principle ante, § 18.

§ 587. [1] "Harris v. Wilson, 7 Wend. 57."

[2] "Walker v. Sawyer, 13 N. H. 191"; 1902, Dowdy v. Watson, 115 Ga. 42, 41 S. E. 266 (the trial judge, on objection, should determine the facts by a preliminary examination, though he may in his discretion submit the question to the jury).

[3] 1843, L. C. B. Abinger, in Jacobs v. Laybourn, 11 M. & W. 685, 691 ("When a man is examined on the voir dire, the examination is only to satisfy the conscience of the judge, the jury having nothing to do with it").

SUB-TITLE I (continued): TESTIMONIAL QUALIFICATIONS

TOPIC III (continued): EMOTIONAL CAPACITY

SUB-TOPIC B: MARITAL RELATIONSHIP AS A TESTIMONIAL DISQUALIFICATION

CHAPTER XXIV

1. In General

2. Who is excluded as a Spouse?

3. On whose behalf is a Spouse excluded?

4. Exceptions to the Rule

5. Statutory Abolition

1. In General

§ 600. History of the Rule; No other Family Relationship disqualifies. The history of the disqualification by marital relationship can better be examined at the same time with the privilege based on the same relationship (post, § 2227). It suffices to observe here that the disqualification first comes into notice about or just before the recognition of interest in general as a disqualification, — that is, the time of Sir Edward Coke's First Institute, 1628. It is easy to see that whatever considerations were then moving to create the one disqualification might coöperate to cause the other, — although no directly common origin or association appears in the precedents.

But the singularity is that other grounds of disqualification which would naturally be linked with the present one, and were recognized as unquestionably united with it in the two other legal systems of the time — the Roman civil and the ecclesiastical law [1] — failed wholly of recognition in any respect in our own law, namely, the ground of filial or paternal relationship and of domestic dependency. That servant and master were admissible for each other was always the law.[2] That father and son, as well as other family relations, were admissible for each other was never doubtful; though the objection was in the beginning frequently raised (upon the analogy, probably, of the civil and the ecclesiastical rules).[3] This anomaly is difficult to explain. It may perhaps be attributable to nothing more than the scholastic reasoning, peculiar to the times, which sufficed for Coke's mind, namely, the legal identity of the two spouses (post, § 601). This theory, which of course did not apply to the parental relationship, assimilated the wife to the husband, and thus made her share his disqualification (ante, § 575).

§ 601. Policy of the Rule. In considering the reasons upon which the rule rests and the policy of altering it, the distinction must be kept in mind between the incapacity of the one spouse to testify for the other and the privilege not to testify against the other. This distinction (more amply examined post, § 2228) warns us that we are here considering only the reasons for disqualifying them when voluntarily coming forward in favor of each other, — reasons quite independent of those affecting the privilege of not being compellable or allowable to testify against each other.

(1) The earliest reason to be met is a piece of metaphysical fiction, and calls for no attempt to answer it:

1628, Sir Edward COKE, Commentary upon Littleton, 6 b: "It hath been resolved by the justices that a wife cannot be produced either for or against her husband, quia sunt duæ animæ in carne una."

(2) A second reason, later advanced, was the marital identity of interest, i.e. the same reason that sufficed for interested persons in general:

Ante 1726, Chief Baron GILBERT, Evidence, 133: "'The second corollary to this general rule [of exclusion from interest] is that husband and wife cannot be admitted to be witnesses for or against each other; for if they swear for the benefit of each other, they are not to be believed, because their interests are absolutely the same, and therefore they can gain no more credit when they attest for each other than when any man attests for himself."

§ 600. [1] For these rules, see the quotations ante, § 575, n. They obtained in Louisiana, as a follower of the civil law, under the original code of that State (§ 2260); but have since been abolished; Rev. Civ. C. 1920, § 2282, Rev. L. 1915, § 1191.

[2] Citations ante, § 575, passim (history of disqualification by Interest).

[3] England: 1630, Moor's Case, Hetley 137 ("Hutton said, there can be no exception to the witness who is cozen to the party, to hinder his evidence in our law; to which all agreed"); Ante 1635, Hudson, Treatise of the Star Chamber, pt. III, § 21, in Hargr. Collect. Jurid. 205 ("The son may be a witness for the father"); Ante 1726, Gilbert, Evidence, 133 ("But no other relation is excluded, because no other relation is absolutely the same in interest. But by the civil law, servants and children were excluded because the parents and masters had absolute power over them, and therefore under that law they swore with manifest interest to themselves"); 1727, Dalton, The Country Justice, 2d ed., c. 164; 1752, R. v. Oakhampton, 1 Wilson 332, Sayer 45, McNally, Evidence, 182 ("Mere relationship, how near soever the relation may be, does not go to the competency of a witness").

United States: 1904, Brown v. State, 142 Ala. 287, 38 So. 268 (father); 1848, N. Y. Commissioners' Report (quoted ante, § 576).

This reason is a plausible one, and serves well enough for most situations at common law, where the wife's property interests in her husband's estate would place her equally under the disqualification of an interested person, and 'vice versa.' But the theory fails when pushed to extremities; for the disqualification prevailed, by general acceptance, even where their property interests were wholly independent (post, § 603).

(3) There must be, then, some further reason; and this, naturally, is the supposed bias of affection, — that partisanship which may, ordinarily, be assumed from the very existence of the marital relation:

1854, SAMUELS, J., in Johnston v. Slater, 11 Gratt. 321, 323: "From the intimate relation between husband and wife, and from the strong bias of feeling towards each other, the law has provided that neither shall be a witness in regard to any subject in which the other is interested."

(4) But still a fourth reason — fantastic enough — has been advanced, analogous to that which has been advanced for the privilege (post, § 2228) and yet different in its origin, namely, the danger of that disturbance of marital peace which might occur if the wife, being available for the husband, should be expected by him to come forward and perjure herself:

1860, SARGENT, J., in Kelley v. Proctor, 41 N. H. 139, 142: "We believe that the true reason why a wife should not be allowed to testify either for or against her husband at common law has always been a sort of compound reason, founded partly in interest, to be sure, and the identity of the persons, but partly also upon conditions of public policy. . . . We think that considerations of public policy — the fear of sowing dissensions between man and wife, and of occasioning perjury . . . — are equally satisfactory reasons why they should not be allowed to testify in each other's favor. It is to be feared that in some instances, if not in many, if it were understood that a wife could testify for her husband but not against him, where the husband has the misfortune to be litigious and the still greater misfortune to be unprincipled, that the wife would find herself called upon too often to choose between her duty to her God and the requirements of (not to say her duty to) her husband, — between violating the obligations of her oath and incurring the displeasure of him whom she has promised to love, honor, and obey."

(5) And, finally, since a wife, if called by her husband, must be subjected to a cross-examination which might call for truths unfavorable to his cause, the same danger (whatever it amounts to) here recurs again, with such added and similar dangers (from telling the truth against him) as the privilege (post, § 2228) is designed to forefend.

What, then, of these various reasons? Is there any soundness in them?

As to the first, no one has ever thought it worth either defending or answering.

The second does not even adequately explain the law; but, so far as it does, it stands or falls by its prototypes, the reasons for disqualification by interest in general, which are now universally repudiated (ante, § 576).

The third reason is nothing more than the second in another variety — i.e. the supposed danger of falsification by a witness subject to the bias of marital affection, instead of the bias of pecuniary interest; and it can hardly be contended that the danger in this form is different enough in degrèe to override the arguments applicable in opposition to the other form (ante, § 576). In short, the possibility of falsification by wife or husband is no more a reason for exclusion than the same possibility by a person pecuniarily interested; and the objectionable inconsistencies and irrational quibbles which disfigured the rule are as much apparent in the one form as in the other.

The fourth argument, based on the ground of possible dissension, is open to the objections, first, that it is a mere apprehension, not worthy of consideration as appreciable; secondly, that it deprives honest causes of upright testimony for the sake of preventing dishonest causes from using false testimony; thirdly, that it attempts to distort the natural rules of testimony for the sake of preventing marital infelicities which either ought to be otherwise and more directly remedied, or else rest upon such deep-seated causes that it is useless to expect to remedy them by legal interference. In other words, where the husband of the supposed unprincipled sort exists, the attempt to regulate his daily domestic tyranny by the casual application of a rule of evidence is ridiculous; and, beyond this, to build up, for all families not so afflicted, a rule of universal deprivation having this abnormal type of masculine Borgia for its basis, is to go to fantastic extremes of caution.

Finally, the possibility of adverse testimony on cross-examination is an objection which need not be entertained on behalf of one who has himself — by hypothesis — called his wife in his favor; he desires to use her testimony, and may be therefore supposed to accept the risk of unwelcome results on cross-examination. The law cannot properly refuse him the right to her testimony on account of a risk which he himself is willing to assume. Add to all this, that the rule is equally open to all those general objections which weigh against the rule of disqualification by interest (ante, § 576).

In the following passages are expounded the chief of the foregoing answers:[1]

1852, Erle, J., in Stapleton v. Crofts, 18 Q. B. 367, 377: "If the question be considered with reference to the interest of truth, it is clear the exclusion of essential information as a means for finding truth is absurd. It is not doubted that wives often possess essential information as to matters within the usual province of a wife, and as to those conducted by her as agent for her husband, and as to those which she happened to witness. If essential witnesses are excluded, there is the certain evil of deciding without knowledge, and there is the probable evil of shaking confidence in the law. . . . The idea that husbands would generally suborn their wives to perjury, and persecute them if they spoke truth, is to my mind unworthy of the time. There is no reason to suppose that wives, if admitted, would be worse treated in respect of their testimony than in respect of any other part of their conduct, or be more prone to untruth than any other class of witnesses; and if, by reason of the exclusion of the wife, the husband has to suffer an adverse judgment contrary to the truth, and [therefore to suffer] the consequent loss, he would dissent with much reason from the zealous declarations that such a mean for protecting the peace of his family and the sanctity of his marriage was better than administering the law according to truth."

§ 601. [1] The arguments are more fully presented in the following works: 1828, Bentham, Rationale of Judicial Evidence, book IX, pt. IV, ch. V, § 4 (Works, Bowring's ed., vol. VII, p. 480); Circa 1823, Livingston, Introductory Report to the Code of Evidence (Works, ed. 1872, I, 452 ff.); 1860, Appleton, Evidence, c. IX.

1853, English Common Law Practice Commission, Second Report, 11: "The highly satisfactory result of these more enlarged views [represented by the abolition of disqualification by interest in general] induces us to consider whether an exception preserved by the late statute, namely, the exclusion of husband and wife as witnesses for or against each other, may not be abolished. . . . The incompetency of husband and wife to be witnesses for one another is said to rest on three grounds: 1st, Identity of interest; 2d, the consequent danger of perjury; 3d, the policy of the law, which, as it is said, 'deems it necessary to guard the security and confidence of private life, even at the risk of an occasional failure of justice', and which rejects such evidence, because its admission would lead to domestic disunion and unhappiness. The first two grounds are manifestly no longer tenable, since the parties to suits have been themselves made competent to give evidence. It remains to be considered how far the third ground should be allowed to exclude testimony which may be essential to justice. In the first place, it seems clear that no disturbance of domestic happiness need be apprehended from permitting husband and wife to call one another as witnesses. The evidence may in many cases be indispensable. A wife often keeps her husband's books, conducts his business in his absence, pays or receives money for him. Even in matters in which she may take a less active part, her testimony may be the only one to prove facts essential to the vindication of her husband's rights, or it may be valuable as confirmatory of the evidence of other witnesses: so, the testimony of the husband may be material to the wife in matters relating to her separate estate, to the proof of her coverture, if sued as a feme sole, and the like. It seems difficult to assign any reason why the law should be more tender of the domestic happiness of married persons than they are themselves disposed to be; the only danger that can be suggested is, that evidence might be extracted from the witness, by the adverse party, prejudicial to the interest of the married plaintiff or defendant, and that some bitterness of feeling might arise in consequence; but of the probability of such a result the married couple are themselves the best judges. Should any fact be thus brought to light which would otherwise have remained unproved, the interests of truth will be thereby promoted, and any transient interruption of conjugal harmony from such a circumstance, or from disappointment occasioned by the evidence falling short of what was expected, would be a trifling evil compared to the mischief which must result from the exclusion of testimony essential to the ends of justice and truth."

§ 602. Same: Statutory Alterations. The validity of this misguided rule of the common law could not long have remained unquestioned, as soon as any discussion was raised regarding the propriety of the general rules for competency of witnesses.

In England, Bentham launched against the rule his well-merited invectives, and in this country they were presented in the treatises of Livingston and of Appleton. The first step was taken in England as early as 1846, when husband and wife were made admissible in the county courts.[1] Then in 1853, after parties and interested persons had been made competent,[2] husbands and wives were made admissible in civil cases, except for proceedings founded on adultery.[3] This exception in civil cases was removed in 1869;[4] and finally, the incompetency in criminal cases was abolished in 1898.[5]

§ 602. [1] St. 9 & 10 Vict. c. 95.

[2] The statute of 1851, 14 & 15 Vict. c. 99, §§ 2, 3, had been held not to remove by implication the marital incompetency.

[3] St. 16 & 17 Vict. c. 83, § 4.

[4] St. 32 & 33 Vict. c. 68, § 3.

[5] St. 61 & 62 Vict. c. 36, § 1. All these statutes are set forth ante, § 488.

In Canada, marital disqualification is removed, for criminal cases throughout the Dominion, and for civil cases in most of the jurisdictions.

In the United States, the progress has been, in most jurisdictions, equally slow, and in some even slower. Furthermore, it has been made in very similar stages, — that is, the marital disqualification has usually not been recognized as outgrown until after the disqualification of parties and interested persons had been removed, and the recognition has been given force in civil cases earlier than in criminal cases. These distinctions seems to be somewhere obscurely rooted in the subject, so that the instant apprehension of the unsoundness of all of these limitations has seldom been found.

No vestige of these outworn rules now remains, in most jurisdictions. In a few, the common law rule is still sanctioned by statute for civil cases only; and a few show the "bad eminence" of preserving this cruel antiquated injustice in criminal cases.[6]

It is therefore necessary to consider, under each part of the subject, first, the scope of the rule at common law, and, secondly, the effect of statutory alterations.

§ 603. Theory of the Common-Law Rule; Relationship, not Property Interest, excludes. The fundamental theory of the common-law rule was that the relationship, not the pecuniary interest, caused the disqualification; hence, the rule applied even where the witness offered had no interest in the estate of the spouse who was a party to the suit:

1855, LEE, J., in William & Mary College v. Powell, 12 Gratt. 372, 383: "Thomas J. Powell is offered as a witness [for his wife's estate] in support of the settlement made by him upon his wife, [which is now sought to be set aside as void against creditors, husband being insolvent]. For this purpose he was clearly incompetent. . . . That he was not himself personally interested because he was bound for the college debt in any case, or that his interest was the same either way, does not vary the case. The authorities cited show that his incompetency does not rest upon the narrow ground of a personal and direct interest, but upon other and different principles. Indeed, the incompetency has been maintained even where the husband's interest was the other way. Thus, in an action by the trustee for a wife against the sheriff for taking goods which were her separate property, under an execution against the husband, the husband was held to be an incompetent witness for the plaintiff (the wife being regarded as the real plaintiff), although he had an interest on the other side, in having his debt satisfied by the levy of the execution."

This theory was maintained, without dissent, whenever occasion arose.[1]

[6] These statutes are set out ante, § 488.

§ 603. [1] 1792, Davis v. Dinwoody, 4 T. R. 678 (action for value of goods, seized on execution against L., by executrix of trustee under a marriage-settlement on L.'s wife; L. not admitted for the plaintiff, although he would be liable if his wife's goods were not); 1830, Terry v. Belcher, 1 Bail. s. c. 568, 571 ("in law they are identical, notwithstanding any contract that may exist between them"); 1844, Osborn v. Black, Speers Eq. s. c. 431, 435; 1860, McDuffie v. Greenway, 24 Tex. 625, 629; 1855, William & Mary College v. Powell, 12 Gratt. Va. 372, 382 (see quotation supra); 1873, Murphy v. Carter, 23 id. 477, 488; 1881, Fink v. Denny, 75 Va. 663, 669; 1886, Mills v. Spencer, 81 Va. 751, 755.

In particular, the husband was disqualified even in suits concerning the wife's separate estate: 1838, Trenton B. Co. v. Woodruff, 2 N. J. Eq. 117, 131; 1835, Warner v. Dyett, 2 Edw. Ch. N. Y. 497; 1840, Hosack v. Rogers, Nevertheless, it was not always consistently carried out to its complete extent. Furthermore, it was applied, not in spirit, but only in technical strictness, i.e. the fact of bias was not looked for anew in each case and the rule applied wherever such bias was to be presumed; but the principle, though placed upon the above ground, was once for all reduced to a rule, framed for the specific and limited case of a wife or husband testifying for the other's interest, and was then enforced on those technical lines. Thus it often admitted persons in situations where such a bias would in fact be equally likely, and excluded them in situations where such a bias would be by no means likely. These peculiarities may be further noticed in dealing with the details.

The classes of questions that arise fall naturally under four heads: Who is excluded as being a spouse? On whose behalf is a spouse excluded? What exceptions exist, at common law or by statute? How far have statutes abolished the general rule?

§ 604. Waiver; Sundry other Principles discriminated. (1) The doctrine of waiver applies exclusively to Privilege (post, § 2242); a disability cannot be waived. One spouse, therefore, cannot by any attempted waiver be enabled to call for the favoring testimony of the other.[1]

(2) The question of pleading in chancery, whether the answer of wife or husband can be used for the other as co-party, rests on other principles than the present rule of evidence.[2]

(3) The use of hearsay statements of a wife or husband, admissible under recognized exceptions to the Hearsay rule, seems never to have been regarded as limited by the present disqualification.[3]

(4) Whether one may testify to his own marriage involves usually no other question than perhaps the interest-disqualification, and, when that prevailed, was answered in the affirmative.[4]

8 Paige N. Y. 229, 242: 1845, Burrell v. Bull, 3 Sandf. Ch. N. Y. 15, 24.

The rule has been applied in other than the ordinary tribunals: 1898, Seaton v. Kendall, 171 Ill. 410, 49 N. E. 561 (wife incompetent, in arbitration proceedings between husband and third person).

§ 604. [1] There cannot be the slightest doubt upon principle, but the few rulings are not satisfactory, partly owing to the usual statutory regulation, in the same section (e.g. Cal. C. C. P. § 1881), of both the disqualification and the privilege, the language of the one being in truth inappropriate for the other: 1852, Barbat v. Allen, 7 Exch. 609 (waiver not allowed, because the consent was not given till after the judge's ruling of exclusion; whether it could have sufficed, if made before, was the subject of difference of opinion); 1898, Falk v. Witham, 120 Cal. 479, 52 Pac. 707 (incapacity of the other spouse to consent does not allow an examination); 1862, Russ v. Steamboat War Eagle, 14 Ia. 363, 375 (waiver allowable under a statute expressly sanctioning a waiver: the rule being applicable in practice to the case of a husband objecting to his co-party calling the wife); 1865, Blake v. Graves, 18 Ia. 312, 318 (same: by a majority); 1901, Murphy v. Ganey, 23 Utah 633, 66 Pac. 190 (an implied consent suffices, under Rev. St. § 3412).

Supposing, however, that by statute the disqualification is removed, the question may arise whether the spouse has waived the right to call the other: 1890, Wolford v. Farnham, 44 Minn. 159, 46 N. W. 295 (wife's objection to husband's being called against her is not a waiver preventing her from calling him later in her behalf).

[2] See Frank v. Lilienfeld, 1880, 33 Gratt. 377, 380.

[3] Examples may be found post, in §§ 1718, 1730 (wife's declarations of affection, etc.), 747, 1772 ff.

[4] 1736, Stapleton v. Stapleton, Lee temp. Hardwicke 277. For cases where the present principle is genuinely involved, see post, § 607.

2. Who is excluded as a Spouse?[1]

§ 605. Mistress; Bigamous Marriage. The rule excluded such a person only as fulfilled the technical definition of lawful husband or wife. No doubt this was an absurd limitation; because, on the orthodox theory of marital bias (ante, § 603), the existence or absence of the bias would probably not depend on the technical validity of the relation. Nevertheless, it is needless to complain of a minor absurdity in a rule which had its very foundation upon a fallacious notion of testimonial principles.

It followed that a mistress or concubine, being not a legal wife, was admissible.[2] It followed also that, if there had been a bigamy, the first spouse alone, being the only lawful one, was inadmissible;[3] though here some uncertainty existed as to the extent to which the proof of the first marriage must go in order to qualify the later spouse or disqualify the prior one.[4]

3. On whose behalf is a Spouse excluded?

§ 606. General Principle. Husband or wife is excluded from testifying for the other. What is it, then, to testify for the other? Is it merely to speak favorably for the other in any sense, — for example, by speaking to the other's credit as a witness, or by corroborating his testimony, or by contributing any fact whatever which palpably redounds to the advantage of the other in any respect whatever?

If the theory of marital bias (ante, § 603) were to be carried out in the fullest intent, such would be the effect of the principle; for the supposed marital bias would affect any and every topic of testimony. But that theory is not logically carried out. It is limited (as already noted in § 603) by a strictly technical definition of advantage or profit. To speak for another is understood in the narrow sense of speaking for his legal interest in the cause in hand. No other advantage or profit or credit which may be favored by the testimony is § 605. [1] The word "spouse" will here be employed, to avoid the cumbrousness, not to say confusion, which the use of "husband and wife" involves. We need such a single word for purposes of scientific legal discussion. It exists in the Continental law and in our own Louisiana law.

[2] 1889, R. v. Nan-e-quis-a-ka, 1 N. W. Terr. 211 (an Indian marriage, held sufficient on the facts); 1867, Flanagin v. State, 25 Ark. 92; 1876, Rickerstricker v. State, 31 Ark. 207; 1871, Hill v. State, 41 Ga. 484, 496, 503; 1811, Meunier v. Couet, 2 Mart. La. 56; 1854, Johnson v. Melville, 9 La. An. 308, semble; 1870, Dennis v. Crittenden, 42 N. Y. 542, 546; 1872, Birdsall v. Patterson, 51 N. Y. 43, 47.

[3] 1702, Broughton v. Harpur, 2 Ld. Raym. 752 (ejectment; first wife not admitted for defendant to prove a marriage prior to that under which the plaintiff claimed); 1842, State v. Patterson, 2 Ired. 346, 354 (second wife admitted).

[4] 1905, State v. Wilson, 5 Penn. Del. 77, 62 Atl. 227 (assault with intent; a woman who had signed a bond, etc., as defendant's wife, not excluded); 1898, Lowery v. People, 172 Ill. 466, 50 N. E. 165 (if a first marriage is in controversy, a second alleged wife is incompetent); 1899, Clark v. People, 178 Ill. 37, 52 N. E. 857 (forgery; alleged second wife admissible, on a showing that the first wife was living and undivorced at the time of the second marriage).

So, also a marriage since the time of the transaction or crime will disqualify: 1904, Elmore v. State, 140 Ala. 184, 37 So. 156 (wife excluded).

On these points, consult also the precedent post, § 2230–2239, under Privilege, where the same question arises and the rulings are more numerous.

regarded as requiring this prohibition. The other person must have an interest in the event of the cause, in order that the spouse's testimony be admissible. This limitation was formed in analogy to the general rule disqualifying interested persons (ante, § 576), and it was convenient enough as a test; although a little reflection shows that the adoption of it in the present connection was by no means a necessary logical consequence. In other words, the common law made two distinct assumptions, first, that a specific kind and quantity of interest would probably induce a person to falsify, and, secondly, that precisely the same kind and quantity of interest, no more and no less, must be at stake for that person in order that the person's husband or wife should probably be induced to falsify.

The principle finds application in several aspects:

§ 607. Interest in the Cause; Nominal Party. On the one hand, the fact that the one spouse is interested in the event of the cause, even though not as a party to the record, serves to exclude the testimony of the other spouse.[1]

§ 607. [1] In the following cases this rule was applied to exclude the witness: England: 1701, Tiley v. Cowling, 1 Ld. Raym. 744 (carrier's action for trover against person wrongfully taking goods consigned; consignor's wife, not admitted for plaintiff, because the judgment and testimony could be used by the consignor in suing the carrier); 1826, Cornish v. Pugh, 8 Dowl. & R. 65 (wife of defendant's bail, excluded);

Ireland: 1824, Corse v. Patterson, 6 H. & J. 153 (wife not admitted for husband's mortgagee sued in replevin by another person);

United States: 1824, Griffin v. Brown, 2 Pick. Mass. 303, 308 (action against the sheriff for a debtor's escape; debtor's wife not admitted for the defendant to prove the debtor's insolvency, because the judgment would be conclusive as to damages in the sheriff's action against the debtor); 1866, Young v. Gilman, 46 N. H. 484, 486; 1829, Leggett v. Boyd, 3 Wend. N. Y. 376 (wife of a special bail, excluded); 1814, Snyder v. Snyder, 6 Binn. Pa. 483, 487, 492 (against plaintiff heirs, defendant claimed title by administrator's sale; the husband of one who would obtain dower if the sale was set aside, not admitted for plaintiff; but this was put partly on the ground that the verdict would be used in the probate court in distribution proceedings; Yates, J., diss., because her interest was contingent only); 1819, McComb v. Dillo, 5 S. & R. Pa. 305, 307 (wife excluded, under analogous circumstances); 1868, Pringle v. Pringle, 59 Pa. 281, 288 (administrator's suit; husband of daughter of intestate, not admitted for plaintiff, her interest not being contingent); 1871, Carpenter v. Moore, 43 Vt. 392 (wife of heir is inadmissible in a will contest); 1874, Wheeler v. Wheeler's Estate, 47 Vt. 637, 646 (an heir in a suit to charge an advancement is a party, though not of record); 1882, Labaree v. Wood, 54 Vt. 452 (test is whether the judgment can be used for or against the husband; if so, his wife is incompetent; here, the wife of a grantor was excluded in a suit between his creditor and a grantee); 1873, Murphy v. Carter, 23 Gratt. Va. 477, 488; 1878, Warwick v. Warwick, 31 Gratt. Va. 70, 76; 1886, Lindsay v. McCormick, 82 Va. 479, 481, 5 S. E. 534.

In the following cases this rule was applied to admit the witness: England: 1670, R. v. Parris, 1 Sid. 431 (information against P. for obtaining a judgment against the wife of L. before her marriage, the execution having been extended upon the husband's estate; the Court set aside the judgment, "and principally on the wife's evidence, quod nota"; probably because the document on which the judgment was based was obtained from her in private at a tavern by P.); 1788, R. v. Cliviger, 2 T. R. 263 (pauper settlement; to prove that M. was not J.'s wife, E. was offered as his first wife to prove the marriage; her interest in charging him with her support, held no objection; in effect discrediting R. v. Reading, 1734, Lee cas. temp. Hardw. 79, on this point; compare the rule as to wife's testimony to non-access, post, § 2063);

United States: 1904, Lanning v. Gay, 70 Kan. 353, 78 Pac. 810, 85 Pac. 407 (husband of a legatee, allowed to testify at probate as a subscribing witness); 1870, Parsons v. People, 21 Mich. 509, 513 (adultery with S.; S. admissible for prosecution, though her husband was by statute the necessary complainant); 1830, Richardson v. Learned, 10 Mich. 261, 268 (trustee for wife's separate property suing for it; husband admitted for the plaintiff, his interest being contingent only); 1833, Coffin v. Jones, 13 Mich. 441, 445 (action against a deceased administrator's surety; administrator's wife admitted for defendant); 1860,

On the other hand, the fact of the one spouse being a nominal party to the record, without real interest in the issue, does not exclude the other spouse.[2]

§ 608. Same: Effect of Statutes qualifying Parties and Interested Persons. Suppose, now, that by a statute, which does not expressly affect the disqualification of the spouse offered as a witness,[1] the disqualification of parties and interested persons is abolished; what test remains for determining the matters examined in the foregoing section? The test whether one was attempting to testify for the other is there seen to be whether the other was legally interested in the cause and thus himself was disqualified; since that interest no longer disqualifies the other, and its definition for that purpose is no longer important, shall it nevertheless remain as the test for the present purpose? To preserve it would seem to be anomalous; and yet to invent any other would be hazardous.

There is a singular dearth of authority; in one jurisdiction the old test of interest has been preserved — for example, a wife may not testify for a husband who is interested and yet is himself competent by statute;[2] in another jurisdiction, the husband must be a party, in order that the wife may be disqualified.[3] On one point, however, most are properly agreed, namely, that so far as interest has been preserved as a disqualification by statute, i.e. in the case of a survivor against a decedent (ante, § 578), there the survivor's spouse is of course disqualified, in direct obedience to the common-law analogy.[4]

State v. Borden, 6 R. I. 495 (assault and battery on the wife by a third person, the husband being liable for costs as prosecutor; wife admissible for the prosecution); 1857, Rutland & B. R. Co. v. Lincoln, 29 Vt. 206, 209 (admitting the wife of a husband merely liable on a bond for costs); 1806, Baring v. Reeder, 1 Hen. & M. Va. 154, 157, 164, 171, 172 (wife admissible where her husband, though interested, is not a party nor bound by the result; two judges dissenting).

[2] The principle was applied in the following cases: 1738, Cotton v. Luttrell, 1 Atk. 451 (husband of a wife made party-defendant without being interested in the event, admitted for her co-parties); 1840, Young v. Richards, 2 Curt. Eccl. 371, 374 (wife of an executor, excluded, in probating a will); 1884, Ross v. Ross, Can. Sup., Cassels' Dig. 1893, p. 306 (husband of executrix, in a suit for her removal, not admitted); 1888, Beale v. Brown, 17 D. C. 574, 576 (wife admitted to testify for herself where the husband was joined as a formal party only); 1872, Ruth v. Ford, 9 Kan. 17, 29; 1897, Collins v. Wilson, — Ky. —, 39 S. W. 33 (wife admitted where the husband was only next friend suing for a child); 1861, Donnelly v. Smith, 7 R. I. 12 (husband and wife suing for wages earned by her before marriage; wife not admitted); 1864, Bonet v. Stowell, 37 Vt. 258 (wife of a 'prochein ami', admitted).

§ 608. [1] This aspect of these statutes is discussed post, § 619.

[2] 1890, Craig v. Miller, 133 Ill. 300, 307, 24 N. E. 431 (repudiating the following case: 1882, Lincoln Ave. & N. C. G. R. Co. v. Madaus, 102 Ill. 417, 419); 1904, Schneider v. Sulzer, 212 Ill. 87, 72 N. E. 19.

[3] 1877, Higbee v. McMillan, 18 Kan. 133.

[4] Accord: Illinois: 1886, Treleaven v. Dixon, 119 Ill. 548, 553, 9 N. E. 189 (explaining prior cases); 1888, Way v. Harriman, 126 Ill. 132, 137; 1889, Shaw v. Schoonover, 130 Ill. 448, 455, 22 N. E. 589; 1894, Bevelot v. Lestrade, 153 Ill. 625, 631, 38 N. E. 1056; 1895, Pyle v. Pyle, 158 Ill. 289, 41 N. E. 999; 1895, Stodder v. Hoffman, 158 Ill. 486, 41 N. E. 1082; Nebraska: 1905, Hiskett v. Bozarth, 75 Nebr. 70, 105 N. W. 990 (distinguishing, but not soundly, between husband and wife as witness); Pennsylvania: 1889, Bitner v. Boone, 128 Pa. 567, 18 Atl. 404; 1900, Myers v. Litts, 195 Pa. 595, 46 Atl. 131; West Virginia: 1886, Kilgore v. Hanley, 27 W. Va. 451, 454; 1912, Freeman v. Freeman, 71 W. Va. 303, 76 S. E. 657; Wisconsin: 1896, Valentine's Will, 93 Wis. 45, 67 N. W. 12.

Contra: 1906, Bentley v. Jun, — Nebr. —, 107 N. W. 865 (husband of plaintiff admitted, where the plaintiff's success would give her property "in which her husband would have no direct legal interest"); 1906, White v. Poole, 74 N. H. 71, 65 Atl. 255; 1906, Guillaume v. Flannery, 21 S. D. 1, 108 N. W. 255 (under a statute expressly qualifying husband and wife in general, a wife not pecuniarily interested may testify).

§ 609. Co-defendants. Where a person is co-defendant and desires to call for himself the spouse of another defendant, the question arises whether the spouse can be said to be testifying for the other defendant. The latter is a party to the record, and thus ordinarily any testimony given in the cause would be testimony for him. Nevertheless, ways were found at common law for withdrawing him from the record or otherwise removing his actual interest in the issue; and a special group of rules were developed for this situation, where one defendant was desired to be called for a co-defendant. On the general principle already examined (ante, § 606), whatever rule defined the other defendant's interest as a disqualifying one would also define the spouse's disqualification. The rules for a co-defendant called on behalf of a defendant have been already examined in detail (ante, § 580); it is therefore enough here to note that those rules served equally here to determine the admissibility of the spouse.[1]

These rulings would depend somewhat upon the terms of the survivor-statutes (ante, § 578); and for the reasons there stated, no attempt is here made to collect them fully.

§ 609. [1] The rules were applied in the following cases; compare with them the precedents post, § 2236, under Privilege, as to calling the spouse against a co-defendant:

ENGLAND: 1739, R. v. Frederick, 2 Stra. 1095 (co-defendant's wife excluded, "it being a joint trespass and impossible to separate the cases of the two defendants in the account to be given of the transaction"); 1804, R. v. Locker, 5 Esp. 107 (conspiracy for procuring a ward to marry one of the defendants; the defendant-husband's wife, the ward, not admitted to exonerate the other defendants); 1826, R. v. Smith, Mood. Cr. C. 289 (burglary); 1830, R. v. Hood, Mood. Cr. C. 281, 289 (assault); 1843, Hawkesworth v. Showler, 12 M. & W. 45 (joint trespass against S. and B.; the trespass by S. being clearly proved, S.'s wife was not allowed to exonerate B.; "where a person who is the defendant upon the record is entirely removed from it, whether by a judgment by default, or by a verdict pronounced in his favor, or by the jury not being charged with his interest at all at the time, in those cases, and in those only, his wife can be examined as a witness"); 1844, R. v. Bartlett, 1 Cox Cr. 105 (larceny; co-defendant's wife admitted, with hesitation, where "the defence of each is distinct"); 1847, R. v. Denslow, 2 Cox Cr. 230 (horse-stealing; co-defendant's wife not admitted to prove alibi, because this would benefit the husband by impeaching the prosecutor); 1872, R. v. Thompson, 12 Cox Cr. 202 (larceny; joint indictment and trial; wife of one excluded).

UNITED STATES: Federal: 1868, U. S. v. Addatte, 6 Blatchf. 76 ("when trials are separate, the wife may testify in favor of or against any one other than her husband, except in cases where the acquittal of one defendant works the acquittal of the rest, as in cases of conspiracy and the like"); Alabama: 1895, Holley v. State, 105 Ala. 100, 17 So. 102; Arkansas: 1859, Collier v. State, 20 Ark. 36, 46; 1881, Casey v. State, 37 Ark. 67, 85; 1919, Dean v. State, 139 Ark. 433, 214 S. W. 38 (wife of person separately indicted for same offence, excluded, on the facts, for the defendant); California: 1883, People v. Langtree, 64 Cal. 256, 30 Pac. 813; Georgia: 1885, Trowbridge v. State, 74 Ga. 431, 434; 1898, Stephens v. State, 106 Ga. 116, 32 S. E. 13; Illinois: 1898, Gillespie v. People, 176 Ill. 238, 52 N. E. 250 (co-defendants jointly tried; wife of one, incompetent, unless the grounds of defence are distinct); 1920, People v. Holtz, 294 Ill. 143, 128 N. E. 341 (murder of W. and attempted murder of H. by Mrs. W. and Mrs. H.; H. was called on behalf of Mrs. W., and his testimony would have exonerated both Mrs. H. and Mrs. W.; held inadmissible; a notable example of the shocking absurdity of the ancient law still prevailing in this State, and a proof of the scandalous indifference of the Legislature to the condition of the law); Kansas: 1888, Arn v. Mathews, 39 Kan. 272, 18 Pac. 65 (defendant's wife not admitted for co-defendant where the defence was joint); Kentucky: 1858, Thompson v. Com., 1 Metc. Ky. 13, 15 (wife of co-indictee not on trial, admissible); 1861, Cornelius v. Com., 3 Metc. Ky. 481, 483 (same); 1904, Henning v. Stevenson, 118 Ky. 318, 80 S. W. 1135 (wife of one of several will-contestants, not admissible for the others); 1903, Dovey v. Lam., 117 Ky. 19, 77 S. W. 383 (action for battery against five jointly; the wife of one of them, admitted to testify for the other four; cases cited from Idaho and Indiana, but not the preceding ones in this State); 1919, Bailey v. Waddy, 184 Ky. 451, 212 S. W. 459 (husband of one of several will-contestants, not admissible for the other contestants, under Civ. C. § 606); Maine: 1849, State v. Worthing, 31 Me. 62

§ 610. Death and Divorce. (1) If the one spouse is deceased, the other spouse is qualified to testify on behalf of the estate, the heirs, or any other person succeeding to the deceased's interests; because there is no living person interested to whom the witness bears the relation of spouse. The reason is thus not that "those feelings and influences, supposed to exist during the conjugal estate, have ceased",[1] for they are quite as likely to remain; but merely that the rule of thumb founded on that supposed bias (ante, § 603) has ceased to be applicable:[2]

(wife of a co-indictee, not on trial, and defaulted, admitted); Massachusetts: 1804, Com. v. Easland, 1 Mass. 15 (assault and battery; wife of co-indictee tried jointly, excluded); 1854, Com. v. Robinson, 1 Gray 555 (burglary; similar ruling); Michigan: 1843, Pullen v. People, 1 Doug. Mich. 48 (wife of co-indictee tried separately, inadmissible); 1863, Morrissey v. People, 11 Mich. 327, 331, 341 (contra, for co-indictee tried jointly, under the statute of 1861; Manning, J., diss.); Pennsylvania: 1833, Com. v. Manson, Ashm. Pa. 32, 39 (wife of a co-defendant separately tried, admissible); South Carolina: 1821, State v. Anthony, 1 McC. S. C. 285 (wife of co-indictee, not on trial, admitted for the defendant); 1855, State v. Bradley, 9 Rich. 168, 171 (similar; but testimony that would criminate her husband was excluded); 1866, State v. McGrew, 13 Rich. 316; 1866, State v. Drawdy, 14 Rich. 87, 89 (like State v. Anthony); 1881, State v. Workman, 15 S. C. 540, 546 (wife of co-defendant on trial, not admitted); 1881, State v. Dodson, 16 S. C. 451, 460 (same); Tennessee: 1840, Moffit v. State, 2 Humph. 99 (wife of a co-indictee separately tried, held admissible); Vermont: 1904, State v. Sargood, 77 Vt. 80, 58 Atl. 971 (killing of colts; wife of a co-respondent, jointly tried, excluded for the defendant); Wisconsin: 1854, Schœffler v. State, 3 Wis. 823 (husband not admitted for wife's co-defendant jointly tried); 1874, Heath v. Keyes, 35 Wis. 668, 672 (wife of a nominal co-defendant; undecided); 1877, Stewart v. Stewart, 41 Wis. 624, 626 (wife of co-defendant, excluded unless the wife is otherwise competent for the husband specifically); 1896, Bartlett v. Clough, 94 Wis. 196, 201, 68 N. W. 875 (mechanic's lien; wife of co-defendant having same defence, excluded).

§ 610. [1] 1876, Taliaferro, J., in Reilly v. Reilly's Succession, 28 La. An. 669, 670.

[2] Accord: Connecticut: 1808, Stanton v. Wilson, 3 Day 37, 39, 55 (widow allowed to testify in suit by administratrix for services rendered by deceased husband); Illinois: 1873, Deniston v. Hoagland, 67 Ill. 265, 268 (widow allowed to testify for the heirs in a bill for specific performance of a contract to sell land to her deceased husband); 1914, Monaghan v. Green, 265 Ill. 233, 106 N. E. 792 (widow held not admissible, on behalf of the sons contesting a will on the ground of undue influence, to testify to matters pending marriage; the decision turns upon the peculiar wording of Rev. St. c. 51, § 5); Indiana: 1858, Carpenter v. Dame, 10 Ind. 125, 128 (wife of deceased obligee in a bond, admitted for the heirs against the maker); Kansas: 1878, Jaquith v. Davidson, 21 Kan. 341, 347 (action by G. D., revived after his decease; his widow and executrix admitted for his estate; "Mr. D. being dead, she was no longer testifying for or against him"); Kentucky: 1904, Turner's Trustee v. Washburn, — Ky. —, 80 S. W. 460; Louisiana: 1876, Reilly v. Reilly's Succession, 28 La. An. 669 (widow testifying against a claim of defendant against husband's estate); 1878, Leyman v. Levy, 30 La. An. 745, 749 (husband testifying to deceased wife's claim against himself); 1878, State v. Ryan, 30 La. An. 1176 (widow testifying against one charged with murdering her husband); Massachusetts: 1867, Robinson v. Talmadge, 97 Mass. 171 (similar to the next case); 1869, Litchfield v. Merritt, 102 Mass. 520, 524 (widow admitted for the husband's executor suing on a debt to the husband); 1917, Thaden v. Bogan, 139 Minn. 46, 165 N. W. 864 (action for price of land, defendant being B.; administrator; B's widow held admissible for the defendant); Missouri: 1872, Spradling v. Conway, 51 Mo. 51, 54 (admitting a widow, in a proceeding for distribution of husband's estate); 1909, Brown v. Patterson, 224 Mo. 639, 124 S. W. 1 (widow admitted on behalf of her husband's grantee); New York: 1809, Jackson v. Bard, 4 John. 230, 233 (widow admitted in suit to recover lands claimed through her husband); 1809, Jackson v. Van Dusen, 5 N. Y. 144, 158 (same); North Carolina: 1821, Harrison v. Burgess, 1 Hawks 385, 393 ("after his death, she is as competent as any one"); 1833, Hester v. Hester, 4 Dev. 228, 229; Ohio: 1855, Stober v. McCarter, 4 Oh. St. 513, 516 (widow may testify for husband's administrator as to the estate); Pennsylvania: 1846, Cornell v. Vanartsdalen, 4 Pa. St. 364, 373 (widow admitted for executor in action against him for testator's debt); South Carolina: 1833, Capehart v. Huey, 1 Hill S. C. 407, semble (widow competent on a bill against husband's administrators); Vermont: 1863, Mathewson v. Sergeant's Est., 36 Vt. 142, 144, semble;

1846, ROGERS, J., in Cornell v. Vanartsdalen, 4 Pa. St. 364, 374: "It is somewhat difficult to understand how the point can arise, when her testimony is offered in favor either of the former husband or of his estate after his death. She may have a strong bias, it is true, but that goes to her credit and not to her competency. But in what respect public policy arising from the domestic relation forbids her to testify is not apparent to my mind."

(2) For the same reason, one whose marital relation has been ended by divorce may be called on behalf of the divorcee.[3]

4. Exceptions to the Rule

§ 612. Necessity, as creating Exceptions at Common Law (Injuries to the Wife, Bailments, Account-books, etc.). The rules of interest-disqualification always recognized certain exceptions founded on a supposed necessity (ante, § 576), i.e. the presumed impossibility, in specifically defined situations, of obtaining other witnesses; and this analogy was followed in recognizing certain exceptions to the marital disqualification.

(1) There was an exception of indefinite extent, chiefly confined to actions by the husband for injury to the wife.[1]

(2) There was, in a few jurisdictions, an exception here for all cases in which the one spouse could have been admitted, by the necessity-exception to the Privilege rule, to testify against the other, i.e. the exceptions to the two

1903, McDowell v. McDowell's Est., 75 Vt. 401, 56 Atl. 99 (wife of a deceased mortgagee, admitted in a foreclosure suit); West Virginia: 1878, White v. Perry, 14 W. Va. 66, 78 (widow admitted to prove 'bona fides' of husband's grant); Wisconsin: 1905, Schultz v. Culbertson, 125 Wis. 169, 103 N. W. 234 (widow admitted in an action against the executor on a contract).

Contra: 1871, Reeves v. Herr, 59 Ill. 81 (wife testifying for husband's executor; but this ruling receives countenance from the careless wording of the statute); 1855, William & Mary College v. Powell, 12 Gratt. Va. 373, 382; 1882, Smith v. Bradford, 76 Va. 758, 765; 1886, Mills v. Spencer, 81 Va. 751, 755.

[3] 1916, Merritt v. Cravens, 168 Ky. 155, 181 S. W. 970 (alienation of affections; plaintiff's divorced wife, admitted for him, under Civ. C. § 606); 1850, Dickerman v. Graves, 6 Cush. Mass. 308; 1838, Ratcliff v. Wales, 1 Hill N. Y. 63; 1877, Wottrich v. Freeman, 71 N. Y. 601.

§ 612. [1] Compare with these precedents the analogous exception to the Privilege rule, post, § 2239: ENGLAND: 1694, Thompson v. Trevanion, Skinner 402 (wife's statements immediately upon an injury, receivable on the principle of the Hearsay exception, § 1718, post; here admitted for the husband suing in trespass for the battery); 1710, Anon., 11 Mod. 224 (husband's action for battery of wife; wife admitted); 1734, R. v. Reading, Lee cas. temp. Hardwicke 79 (filiation order charging the husband); 1899, Dunning v. West, 51 La. An. 618, 623, 25 So. 306 (here both were admitted); 1906, Martin v. Derenbecker, 116 La. 495, 40 So. 849 (modifying the preceding case, in the light of St. 1902, No. 68, amending Civ. Code, § 2402); Missouri: 1900, Cramer v. Hurt, 154 Mo. 112, 55 S. W. 258 (wife allowed to testify for husband in action for loss of services by defendant's mal-practice, where the defendant took the stand); 1903, Turner v. Overall, 172 Mo. 271, 72 S. W. 644 (fraud in securing a trust deed from the wife; husband admitted).

defendant with a married woman's bastard; the woman held a sufficient sole witness to prove intercourse with defendant, "which is usually carried on with such secrecy that it will admit of no other evidence", but not to prove her husband's absence and non-access, "whereas this might be made to appear by other witnesses", and "there is no necessity that can justify her being an evidence"); 1752, R. v. Rook, 1 Wilson 340 (same); 1807, R. v. Luffe, 8 T. R. 193, 202 (same; as to this last series of precedents, compare the modern rule as to wife's testimony to non-access, post, § 2063).

UNITED STATES: Arkansas: 1916, Pudgett v. State, 125 Ark. 471, 188 S. W. 1158 (wife not received for defendant to contradict alleged admissions overheard in conversations with her; unsound); Louisiana: St. 1898, No. 190 (quoted ante, § 488; in actions for personal injuries to a wife, the wife is admissible, but not rules were made identical.[2] As the two rules — that of disqualification and that of privilege — were utterly distinct both in reason and in scope, this attempt to assimilate the exceptions by a reversible rule of thumb was purely arbitrary and irrational, and received little recognition.

(3) Wherever the interest-disqualification suffered an exception on the ground of necessity, it would seem that the spouse of the interested person thus admitted became also admissible, — for example, to prove account-books by suppletory oath[3] or to prove the contents of packages bailed and lost.[4] This exception is hardly to be reconciled with the doctrine (ante, § 608) that the removal by statute of the interest-disqualification does not remove the marital disqualification; but consistency in the application of an artificial rule is not to be expected.

§ 613. Statutory Exceptions: (1) Joint Parties; Effect of Statute making Party Competent. The exceptions carved out of the rule by statute are numerous, and vary markedly in the different jurisdictions. Certain exceptions, however, are common to several jurisdictions, and the judicial interpretation of them may be of service reciprocally.

(1) (a) Suppose the spouse offered as a witness to be also a party, and suppose a statute to have made parties competent, while leaving married persons incompetent or omitting to provide for them; which of these statutory provisions is to override the other? In most jurisdictions, it has been held, without further discrimination, that the statutory qualification of parties was absolute, and by implication made the spouse competent whenever entitled as a party to testify.[1] In some jurisdictions, a more narrow con-

[2] Compare the corresponding necessity-exception under the Privilege rule, post, § 2239: 1844, State v. Neill, 6 Ala. 685 (wife admitted for the husband, on a charge of assaulting and beating her); 1882, Tucker v. State, 71 Ala. 342 (same); 1862, Com. v. Murphy, 4 All. Mass. 491 (similar); 1857, People v. Fitzpatrick, 5 Park. N. Y. Cr. C. 26 (similar).

[3] 1845, Littlefield v. Rice, 10 Metc. Mass. 287, 290 (wife allowed to make suppletory oath to her husband's account-books kept in part by her).

[4] 1860, Illinois C. R. Co. v. Taylor, 24 Ill. 323 (here, to prove the contents of a lost trunk); 1871, Freeman v. Freeman, 62 Ill. 189, 191; 1876, Crane v. Crane, 81 Ill. 165, 171; 1877, Galbraith v. McLain, 84 Ill. 379, 383; 1846, McGill v. Rowand, 3 Pa. St. 451 (loss of goods by a carrier; plaintiff's wife's testimony to the contents, admitted; "the principle of necessity which alone enables a party under certain circumstances to prove the contents of a box or trunk applies with as much if not greater force to the wife as to the husband; the wife usually packs her husband's trunk and always her own"; no precedent cited).

For another similar exception, in one jurisdiction, on the ground of agency, see post, § 616.

§ 613. [1] For all the statutes here involved, see ante, § 488;
Arkansas: 1881, Klenk v. Knoble, 37 Ark. 298, 302 (if also a party, the wife "quoad hoc might testify for herself"); 1891, R. Co. v. Amos, 54 Ark. 159, 163, 15 S. W. 362 (joint action for personal injuries; each competent for self alone);
Illinois: 1892, Kusch v. Kusch, 143 Ill. 353, 357, 32 N. E. 267 (consequently, if a bill is dismissed against the wife, during the hearing, when the wife is called, she is incompetent);
Indiana: 1872, Bennifield v. Hypres, 38 Ind. 498 (action by husband and wife against husband and wife for slander of the plaintiff wife; each wife allowed to testify as a party in interest; reviewing the prior differences of opinion in Carnie v. Murphy, 28 Ind. 88; Albaugh v. James, 29 Ind. 398; Crane v. Buchanan, 29 Ind. 570; Ward v. Colyhan, 30 Ind. 395; Mousler v. Harding, 33 Ind. 176; Newhouse v. Miller, 35 Ind. 463); 1874, Rogers v. Rogers, 46 Ind. 1, 4; 1876, McConnell v. Martin, 52 Ind. 434, 436; 1880, Clouse v. Elliott, 71 Ind. 302, 304; 1883, Sedgwick v. Tucker, 90 Ind. 271, 279); Vermont: 1903, Hathaway's Will, 75 Vt. 137, 53 Atl. 996 (the wife of the proponent of a will, held disqualified in probate proceedings; but

struction has been adopted, and the mere fact of being a nominal party not interested (otherwise if a real party in interest) was held not sufficient to qualify a spouse, on the ground that the interest-statute had not changed the position of such persons.[2] In a few other jurisdictions, a still narrower construction has been followed, by holding in effect that the statute qualifying parties did not entitle a spouse who was a party to testify at all; i.e. if both M and N were real parties in interest, neither could testify; but if N was a nominal party only, M could testify, because at common law (ante, § 607) M was competent; while N could not testify, because M, the other spouse, was a party in interest.[3]

Thus is practised the sublimation of repulsive quibbling, over a series of combinations which have no real relation to the witness' truth-telling probabilities in any of the situations.

(b) In a number of jurisdictions, the matter is made plain by expressly providing that husband and wife shall be competent "where they are joint parties and have a joint interest", or (sometimes) " a separate interest."[4] But not the wife of a legatee, who is herself as legatee joined as a party);

Wisconsin: 1862, Barnes v. Martin, 15 Wis. 240, 246 (husband admitted, in action for wife's injuries); 1863, Hackett v. Bonnell, 16 Wis. 417, 476 (wife's separate property; husband admitted); 1866, Farrell v. Ledwell, 21 Wis. 182; 1877, Holmes v. Fond du Lac, 42 Wis. 282, 285; 1877, Getzlaff v. Seliger, 43 Wis. 297, 302; 1880, Kaime v. Omro, 49 Wis. 371, 372, 5 N. W. 838; 1882, Snell v. Bray, 56 Wis. 156, 160, 14 N. W. 14 (even when a nominal party only); 1884, Hoverson v. Noker, 60 Wis. 511, 514, 19 N. W. 382; 1885, Strong v. Stevens Point, 62 Wis. 255, 261, 22 N. W. 425.

The same result was sometimes reached where the witness was merely interested and thus to that extent qualified by statute: 1885, Strong v. Stevens Point, 62 Wis. 255, 262, 22 N. W. 425 (admitting a wife for the husband suing as administrator for death of a child, the two being jointly interested, though she was not a party).

[2] Missouri: 1872, Tingley v. Cowgill, 48 Mo. 291, 296; 1872, Fugate v. Pierce, 49 Mo. 441, 444; 1873, Buck v. Ashbrook, 51 Mo. 539; 1873, Owen v. Brockschmidt, 54 Mo. 285, 288; 1874, Charles v. R. Co., 58 Mo. 458, 461; 1874, Harriman v. Stowe, 59 Mo. 93, 95; 1875, Evers v. Life Ass'n, 59 Mo. 429, 433; 1875, Cooper v. Ord, 60 Mo. 420, 430; 1877, Hearle v. Kreihn, 65 Mo. 202, 206; 1879, Steffen v. Bauer, 70 Mo. 399, 404 (nor is the witness confined to matters affecting his own interest); 1880, Joice v. Branson, 73 Mo. 28; 1882, Wood v. Broadley, 76 Mo. 23, 34; 1885, Bell v. R. Co., 86 Mo. 599, 606 (Steffen v. Bauer approved); 1889, Harrington v. Sedalia, 98 Mo. 583, 589, 12 S. W. 342; 1903, Layson v. Cooper, 174 Mo. 211, 73 S. W. 472 (admitting a wife as real party in interest, but not merely as owner of property in controversy); 1920, Pischel v. Marceline C. & M. Co., — Mo. —, 221 S. W. 74 (personal injury; Layson v. Cooper approved);
New Jersey: 1867, Metler's Adm'r v. Metler, 18 N. J. Eq. 270, 276;
New York: 1867, Maverick v. R. Co., 36 N. Y. 378, 380.

[3] Virginia: 1874, Statham v. Ferguson, 25 Gratt. 28, 34; 1882, Hayes v. Mutual Prot. Ass'n, 76 Va. 225, 227 (insurance policy); 1884, Burton v. Mills, 78 Va. 468, 470; 1886, Farley v. Tillar, 81 Va. 275, 279 (sole trader); 1886, Perry v. Ruby, 81 Va. 317, 323; 1886, Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Prindle, 82 Va. 122, 126 (personal injury); 1886, Lindsay v. McCormick, 82 Va. 479, 481, 5 S. E. 534; 1887, Nicholas v. Austin, 82 Va. 817, 825, 1 S. E. 132; 1888, Jones v. Degge, 84 Va. 685, 688, 5 S. E. 799; 1890, Crabtree v. Dunn, 86 Va. 953, 959, 11 S. E. 1053; 1891, Defarges v. Ryland, 87 Va. 404, 406, 12 S. E. 806; 1891, Thomas v. Sellman, 87 Va. 683, 687, 13 S. E. 146.
West Virginia: the same result was reached under a statute expressly preserving the marital disqualification; 1872, Wheeling v. Trowbridge, 5 W. Va. 353; 1877, Hill v. Proctor, 10 W. Va. 59, 83; 1877, Rose v. Brown, 11 W. Va. 122, 133; 1878, Campbell v. White, 14 W. Va. 122, 148; 1880, Lawrence v. Dubois, 16 W. Va. 443, 457; 1881, Zane v. Fink, 18 W. Va. 693, 742; 1883, Anderson v. Snyder, 21 W. Va. 692, 644. But in West Virginia this was changed by St. 1882, c. 130, § 22.

[4] Compare also the analogous rulings under the Privilege rule, post, § 2235: Kansas: 1881, Jenkins v. Lewis, 25 Kan. 479, 481; 1889, Chicago K. & W. R. Co. v. Anderson, 42 Kan. 297, 21 Pac. 1059; Louisiana: 1871, Keller v. Vernon, 23 La. An. 164; 1878, Willis v. Ward, 30 La. An. 1282; 1882, Shantz v. Stoll, this merely perpetuates the spirit of the vain distinctions of the common law.

§ 614. Same: (2) Separate Estate. It is sometimes provided that the one spouse shall be admissible for the other in trials "concerning the separate estate of the wife." [1] The common-law rule in this respect (ante, § 603) is thus directly abrogated.

§ 615. Same: (3) Wife as if Unmarried. It was often provided that the disqualification shall cease in cases where "the wife would if unmarried be plaintiff or defendant",[1] — a clause which perhaps was intended to cover chiefly actions for injuries to or by the wife, but is in fact to-day of large scope, if liberally interpreted.

§ 616. Same: (4) Agents. A common exception is that which qualifies husband and wife wherever the transaction in issue was alleged to have been conducted by the wife as agent for the husband, or (sometimes) by either as agent for the other.[1] Under this clause, it seems to be proper enough to 34 La. An. 1237; 1886, Beltran v. Gauthreaux, 38 La. An. 106, 111; 1888, Johnson v. Boice, 40 La. An. 273, 275; 4 So. 163; 1899, Watson v. Lyons, 51 La. An. 1697, 26 So. 440 (action by father for loss of services of child and on behalf of the child for latter's personal illness; wife held incompetent on the former issue alone; following Lapleine v. R. Co., 40 La. An. 661, 4 So. 875); 1904, Schoppel v. Daly, 112 La. 201, 36 So. 322 (husband admitted, in an action by the wife for personal injuries); 1906, Bianchi v. Del Valle, 117 La. 587, 42 So. 148 (in the wife's suit for personal injuries, the husband, being joined, may not testify for her); but the effect of these rulings is altered, for actions for personal injuries to a wife, by the statute and cases cited ante, § 612, n. 1.

§ 614. [1] The statute was applied in the following cases: Illinois: 1871, Northern Line P. Co. v. Shearer, 61 Ill. 263; 1872, Biggins v. Brockman, 63 Ill. 316, 320; 1873, McNail v. Ziegler, 68 Ill. 224; 1874, Anderson v. Friend, 71 Ill. 475; 1875, Hawver v. Hawver, 78 Ill. 412, 414; 1876, Davenport v. Ryan, 81 Ill. 218, 219; 1879, Pyle v. Oustatt, 92 Ill. 209, 216; 1879, Funk v. Eggleston, 92 Ill. 515, 532; 1879, Mueller v. Rebhan, 94 Ill. 142, 148; 1882, Otis v. Spencer, 102 Ill. 622, 626; 1899, Pain v. Farson, 179 Ill. 185, 53 N. E. 579; 1903, Cassem v. Heustis, 201 Ill. 208, 66 N. E. 283; 1904, Booker v. Booker, 208 Ill. 529, 70 N. E. 709; 1907, Linkemann v. Knepper, 226 Ill. 473, 80 N. E. 1009; 1913, Marks v. Madsen, 261 Ill. 51, 103 N. E. 625.

§ 615. [1] The statute was applied in the following cases: Illinois: 1872, Mitchell v. McDougall, 62 Ill. 498, 506; 1872, Krebaum v. Cordell, 63 Ill. 23, 25; 1874, Anderson v. Friend, 71 Ill. 475, 477; 1875, Hawver v. Hawver, 78 Ill. 412, 414; 1878, Pigg v. Carroll, 89 Ill. 205; 1878, Marshall v. Peck, 91 Ill. 187, 190; 1879, Mueller v. Rebhan, 94 Ill. 142, 148; 1882, Otis v. Spencer, 102 Ill. 622, 626; 1883, Smith v. Long, 106 Ill. 485, 488; 1893, Francis v. Rhoades, 146 Ill. 635, 642, 35 N. E. 232; 1916, Dinquel v. Dacco, 273 Ill. 117, 112 N. E. 337 (homestead estate; husband admitted for the wife); Kentucky: 1883, Wise v. Foote, 81 Ky. 10, 13; 1888, Howard v. Tenney, 87 id. 52, 55, 7 S. W. 547; 1892, Covington v. Geyler, 93 id. 275, 283, 19 S. W. 741; 1901, Smith v. Doherty, 109 Ky. 616, 60 S. W. 380; 1902, Board v. Moore, — Ky. —, 66 S. W. 417; 1904, Henning v. Stevenson, 118 Ky. 318, 80 S. W. 1135; 1907, Taylor v. Johnson, — Ky. —, 99 S. W. 320 (action to cancel shares of stock); 1908, Walker's Assignees v. Walker, — Ky. —, 114 S. W. 338 (note by partnership); 1911, Weber v. Lape, 145 Ky. 769, 141 S. W. 67 (joint liability); 1919, Baskett v. Rudy, 186 Ky. 208, 217 S. W. 112.

§ 616. [1] Arkansas: 1899, American Expr. Co. v. Lankford, 35 C. C. A. 353, 93 Fed. 380 (interpreting the Arkansas statute); 1900, Gunter v. Earnest, 68 Ark. 180, 56 S. W. 876; 1908, Taylor v. McClintock, 87 Ark. 243, 112 S. W. 405; Illinois: 1875, Trepp v. Barker, 78 Ill. 146; 1875, Hayes v. Parmalee, 79 id. 563; 1876, Robertson v. Brost, 83 Ill. 116, 118; 1884, Powell v. Powell, 114 Ill. 329, 2 N. E. 162; 1907, Donk Bros. C. & C. Co. v. Stroetter, 229 Ill. 134, 82 N. E. 250; Indian Territory: 1897, America Express Co. v. Lankford, 1 Ind. T. 233, 39 S. W. 817; Kansas: 1878, Fisher v. Conway, 21 Kan. 18, 23; 1887, Wichita & W. R. Co. v. Kuhn, 38 Kan. 104, 106; 16 Pac. 75; 1888, Pfefferle v. State, 39 Kan. 128, 130, 17 Pac. 828; 1888, Paulsen v. Hall, 39 Kan. 365, 369, 18 Pac. 225; Kentucky: 1904, Logsden v. Stern, 117 Ky. 217, 77 S. W. 927 (St. 1898, c. 1, construed to mean that each may testify to the matters within his or her knowledge, but not both to the hold that the person offered under it may also be the one to prove the agency which thus qualifies the witness.[2]

This exception was instituted on the general principle of necessity (ante, § 612); and hence, in at least one jurisdiction it is found developed as an original part of the common law.[3]

§ 617. (5) Desertion of Family. The statutes declaring desertion of family to be a penal offence contain almost invariably a provision that the wife is admissible to prove marriage, parentage, and other relevant facts.[1] But this provision would of course usually be employed as an exception to the husband's privilege to withhold her testimony against him (post, § 2240), and not as an exception to her disqualification to testify on his behalf.

§ 618. Same: (6) Sundry Statutory Provisions. The further local variations of statute would be here unprofitable to examine in detail. The tenor of the statutes (ante, § 488) is usually sufficiently clear, and judicial interpretation seems to be needed in only casual instances.[1] same matters); 1914, B. Nicholson v. Patrick, 160 Ky. 674, 170 S. W. 20 (action for malpractice); Louisiana: 1905, Shepherd v. Schonaker, 115 La. 542, 39 So. 554; Missouri: 1878, Williams v. Williams, 67 Mo. 661, 663; Oklahoma: 1912, Fish v. Bloodworth, 36 Okl. 586, 129 Pac. 32; 1913, Western N. L. Ins. Co. v. Williamson H. F. Co., 37 Okl. 213, 131 Pac. 691; 1917, Chicago R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Cotton, 62 Okl. 168, 162 Pac. 763 (personal injury to a wife); Vermont: 1861, Eastabrooks v. Prentiss, 34 Vt. 457; 1865, Orcutt v. Cook, 37 Vt. 515; 1868, Lunay v. Vantyne, 40 Vt. 501, 503; 1874, Bates v. Cilley, 47 Vt. 1, 7; 1888, Martin v. Hurlburt, 60 Vt. 364, 367, 14 Atl. 649; 1891, Pierce v. Bradford, 64 Vt. 219, 23 Atl. 637; 1892, Bates v. Sabin, 64 Vt. 511, 517, 24 Atl. 1013; 1896, Pingree v. Johnson, 69 Vt. 225, 39 Atl. 202; 1901, Farr v. Bell, 73 Vt. 342, 50 Atl. 1107; 1905, Miller v. Stebbins, 77 Vt. 183, 59 Atl. 844; 1906, Boyce v. Bolster, 79 Vt. 40, 64 Atl. 79 (wife not admitted to prove a book account; the trial took place before St. 1904, No. 60, p. 78, quoted ante, § 488); Wisconsin: 1911, Karlen v. Hadinger, 147 Wis. 78, 132 N. W. 591.

[2] Accord: Mo. 1893, Leete v. State Bank, 115 Mo. 184, 204, 21 S. W. 788 (repudiating Williams v. Williams, supra); 1899, Long v. Martin, 152 Mo. 668, 54 S. W. 473; 1901, Reed v. Peck, 163 Mo. 333, 63 S. W. 734 (approving Leete v. Bank and Long v. Martin). Contra: Vt. 1897, Jenne v. Piper, 69 Vt. 497, 38 Atl. 147 (agency must first appear otherwise); Mo. 1878, Williams v. Williams, 67 Mo. 661, 663; 1882, Wheeler & W. Mfg. Co. v. Tinsley, 75 Mo. 458, 459 (like Williams v. Williams).

[3] Wisconsin: 1862, Birdsall v. Dunn, 16 Wis. 235, 239 (on the analogy of the similar exception to the general rule of disqualification by interest); 1863, Hobby v. Wisconsin Bank, 17 Wis. 167, 169 (husband admissible to prove "the contract made by him as the agent of the wife, the receipt or payment of money, or other acts done by him within the scope of his agency); 1865, Meek v. Pierce, 19 Wis. 300, 302; 1867, Mountain v. Fisher, 22 Wis. 93, 97; 1872, Butts v. Newton, 29 Wis. 632, 640; 1872, O'Conner v. Ins. Co., 31 Wis. 160, 167; 1874, Ainsworth v. Barry, 35 Wis. 136, 141; 1876, Menk v. Steinfort, 39 Wis. 370, 375; 1876, Hale v. Danforth, 40 Wis. 382; 1878, Chunot v. Larson, 43 Wis. 536, 538; 1878, Marsh v. Pugh, 43 Wis. 597, 600 ("probably she is a competent witness to prove the agency"); 1885, Meade v. Gilfoyle, 64 Wis. 18, 26, 24 N. W. 413; 1896, Hager v. Streich, 92 Wis. 505, 509, 66 N. W. 720; 1898, Goesel v. Davis, 100 Wis. 678, 76 N. W. 768.

§ 617. [1] The statutes are collected ante, 488.

§ 618. [1] CANADA: 1889, McFarlane v. R., 16 Can. Sup. 393 (assault on a peace officer; defendant's wife excluded); 1902, Corkum v. Corkum, 40 N. Sc. 488 (crim. con. by force; plaintiff's wife not admitted in his favor, under Rev. St. c. 163, § 36).

UNITED STATES: Arkansas: 1921, Witham v. State, 149 Ark. 324, 232 S. W. 437 (murder; defendant's wife not admissible on his behalf, under St. 1919, No. 66); Georgia: 1905, Graves v. Rivers, 123 Ga. 224, 51 S. E. 318 (under Code § 5272, the parties to an action for breach of promise of marriage are disqualified); 1913, Anderson v. Anderson, 140 Ga. 802, 79 S. E. 1124 (cited post, § 2245, n. 5); Illinois: 1895, Johnson v. McGregor, 157 Ill. 350, 41 N. E. 559 (admitting the husband for the wife, where she sues, after the statutory period of six months, for the penalty, payable by one who wins in gambling, to any person suing); 1920, Ohio Oil Co. v. Industrial Commission, 293 Ill. 461, 127 N. E. 743 (widow's testimony that she had heard the deceased tell the employer's

5. Statutory Abolition

§ 619. Statutory Abolition of Interest-Disqualification does not include Disqualification of Spouse. Since the principle of the common law had for its basis the marital bias, and not the bias of interest in the event (ante, § 603), it followed that a statute making interested persons competent could not be construed to make married persons competent by implication. Ultimately, the ground of exclusion was the same, namely, the supposed danger of falsification; but, as specific rules, they rested on distinct sources of such danger, and hence their abolition would be required to be effected by distinct provisions. Such was the result reached by almost every Court before whom the question was raised.[1] agent that he was injured, not admitted to show notice); 1921, Zimmer v. Zimmer, 298 Ill. 586, 132 N. E. 216 (bill for partition of estate of Sarah Z.; the widower, John Z., held not competent as to transactions of a warranty deed, etc., with the deceased wife); Kentucky: 1899, Bright's Ex'rs v. Swinebroad, 106 Ky. 737, 51 S. W. 578 (Civ. C. § 606 construed, as to one or the other, but not both, being admitted); 1903, s. c., 73 S. W. 1031; 1903, Williams v. Williams, — Ky. —, 71 S. W. 505 (under Civ. C. § 606, a husband is not admissible for the contestants of a will, where his wife has already testified in her own interest on the same side); 1904, Floore v. Green, — Ky. —, 83 S. W. 133 (under Civ. C. § 606, a husband is admissible in a probate contest where his wife is interested but does not testify); 1905, Com. v. Woelfel, 121 Ky. 48, 88 S. W. 1061 (preliminary issue of an accused's sanity; the wife not admissible for him); 1907, Mitchell v. Brady, 124 Ky. 411, 99 S. W. 266 (under Civ. C. § 606, a wife may testify for the administrator-husband in an action for the death of their child); 1915, North River Ins. Co. v. Dyche, 163 Ky. 271, 173 S. W. 784 (insurance inventory, husband as agent); New Hampshire: 1899, Chase v. Pitman, 69 N. H. 423, 43 Atl. 617 (statute applied); Vermont: 1895, Wheeler v. Campbell, 68 Vt. 98, 34 Atl. 35 (wife admitted, where the husband was not a party); 1917, Phelps v. Utley, 92 Vt. 40, 101 Atl. 1011 (crim. con.; plaintiff's wife admitted for the plaintiff, under Pub. St. § 1592); Virginia: 1899, Hoge v. Turner, 96 Va. 624, 32 S. E. 291 (statute applied); 1899, Crowder v. Garber, 97 Va. 565, 34 S. E. 470 (statute 1897–8, applied); 1901, First National Bank v. Holland, 99 Va. 495, 39 S. E. 126 (under St. 1897–8, deceased husband's declarations, made when free from debt, are admissible to prove gift to wife); Washington: 1896, Speck v. Gray, 14 Wash. 589, 45 Pac. 143 (wife not admissible in crim. con. actions by husband); Wisconsin: 1900, Miller v. State, 106 Wis. 156, 81 N. W. 1020 (murder; defendant's wife excluded); 1903, Kraimer v. State, 117 Wis. 250, 93 N. W. 1097 (assault on I.; defendant's wife excluded); 1905, Grabowski v. State, 126 Wis. 447, 105 N. W. 805 (lascivious conduct; defendant's wife excluded).

Under the Michigan clause as to "actions instituted in consequence of adultery", the following rulings have been made: 1870, Parsons v. People, 21 Mich. 509, 515 (statute does not exclude the wife in a criminal prosecution for adultery with her); 1880, Egbert v. Greenwalt, 44 Mich. 245, 247, 6 N. W. 654 (wife admitted for her husband in crim. con.; no question raised); 1882, Mathews v. Yerex, 48 Mich. 361, 12 N. W. 489 (wife not admissible for the husband in action for crim. con.); 1883, People v. Lovejoy, 49 Mich. 529, 531, 14 N. W. 485, semble (admissible in an action for enticement); 1885, Gleason v. Knapp, 56 Mich. 291, 294, 22 N. W. 865 (husband not admissible in his action for crim. con.); 1890, Carter v. Hill, 81 Mich. 275, 279, 45 N. W. 988 (same); 1914, Hirdes v. Ottawa Circuit Judge, 180 Mich. 321, 146 N. W. 646 (action for having intercourse with the plaintiff's wife after making her intoxicated; if this was adultery, the wife was not competent under Comp. L. § 10213; if it was rape, she was competent; what loud Jovian laughter must resound when Mercury calls attention to us mortals making rules of credibility depend on the varieties of criminality in issue!).

§ 619. [1] ENGLAND: 1852, Barbat v. Allen, 7 Exch. 609; 1852, Stapleton v. Crofts, 18 Q. B. 367 (Erle, J., diss.).

UNITED STATES: Federal: 1873, Lucas v. Brooks, 18 Wall. 436, 453; Ark. 1877, Collins v. Mack, 31 Ark. 684, 688 (repudiating the 'obiter dictum' in Magness v. Walker, 26 id. 470); D. C. 1886, Holtzman v. Wagner, 16 D. C. 15; 1896, Foertsch v. Germuller, 9 D. C. App. 351, 356; Ill. 1871, Mitchinson v. Cross, 58 Ill. 366, 368; 1882, Lincoln Ave. & N. C. G. R. Co. v. Madaus, 102 id. 417, 422; Mass. 1857, Barber v. Goddard, 9 Gray 71; Miss. 1859, Dunlap v. Hearn, 37 Miss. 471, 474 (overruling Lockhart v. Luker, 36 id. 68); N. H. 1860, Kelley v. Proctor, 41 N. H. 139, 141; 1862, Smith v. R. Co., 44 N. H. 325, 334; N. J. 1862, Handlong v. Barnes, 30 N. J. L. 69;

§ 620. Statutory Express Abolition. The statutes expressly abolishing the common-law marital disqualification speak usually for themselves with sufficient plainness; they have been already set forth in full (ante, § 488). From time to time, judicial declarations of their effect have been given, but, owing to the gradual changes of statute in each jurisdiction, these must be weighed in connection with the tenor of the contemporary statute.[1]

1862, Bird v. Davis, 14 N. J. Eq. 467, 478; 1865, Marshman v. Conklin, 17 N. J. Eq. 282, 288; 1865, Staats v. Bergen, 17 N. J. Eq. 293, 303; 1866, Cramer v. Reford, 17 N. J. Eq. 367, 383; 1868, Yetman v. Dey, 33 N. J. L. 32; N. Y. 1853, Hasbrouck v. Vandervoort, 9 N. Y. 153, 161; 1868, Hicks v. Brander, 2 Abb. App. Cas. 362; N. Car. 1869, Rice v. Keith, 63 N. C. 319; Ohio, 1859, Bird v. Hueston, 10 Oh. St. 418, 429; S. Car. 1881, State v. Workman, 15 S. C. 540, 546; Tenn. 1871, Goodwin v. Nicklin, 6 Heisk. 257; Vt. 1832, Carr v. Cornell, 4 Vt. 116; 1852, Manchester v. Manchester, 24 Vt. 649; 1860, Cram v. Cram, 33 Vt. 15, 20; Wis. 1866, Farrell v. Ledwell, 21 Wis. 182.

Contra: Ala. 1870, Robison v. Robison, 44 Ala 227, 233; 1871, Miller v. State, 45 Ala. 24, 26; 1872, Johnson v. State, 47 Ala. 7, 33; 1872, Lang v. Waters, 47 Ala. 624, 636; 1873, Rowland v. Plummer, 50 Ala. 182, 193; 1874, Sumner v. Cooke, 51 Ala. 521; 1877, Chapman v. Holding, 60 Ala. 522, 533; 1888, Hussey v. State, 77 Ala. 121, 135; Conn. 1850, Merriam v. R. Co., 20 Conn. 354, 363; 1854, Lucas v. State, 23 Conn. 18, 20; Ind. 1879, Hutchinson v. State, 67 Ind. 449; Pa. 1870, Yeager v. Weaver, 64 Pa. 425, 427 (turning on the statute's peculiar wording).

§ 620. [1] Federal: 1919, Adams v. U. S. 8th C. C. A., 259 Fed. 214 (under no Federal statute to date is the husband qualified to testify for the accused wife in a criminal case; Stone, J., diss., but mistaking the question to be one of privileged communications); 1919, Fitter v. U. S., 2d C. C. A., 258 Fed. 567, 575, (defendant's wife held not erroneously excluded, though the opposite ruling would not have been held error); 1920, Jin Fuey Moy v. U. S., 254 U. S. 189, 41 Sup. 98 (violation of the anti-narcotic act; defendant's wife not admissible in his favor; "the relaxation of the rule in this regard by § 858, Rev. St. U. S., being confined to civil cases");

Ark. Disqualification not abolished: 1877, Collins v. Mack, 31 Ark. 684, 688; 1878, Phipps v. Martin, 33 Ark. 207, 210; 1878, Berlin v. Cantrell, 33 Ark. 611, 621; Conn. Disqualification not abolished in criminal cases: 1854, Lucas v. State, 23 Conn. 18, 20; D. C. 1920, Early v. Early, D. C. App., 261 Fed. 1003 (husband and wife are competent in divorce proceedings, under Code § 1068); Del. 1916, Williams v. Betts, 11 Del. Ch. 128, 98 Atl. 371 (disqualification abolished by St. 1907, now Rev. C. 1915, § 4216); Fla. Disqualification abolished in criminal cases: 1894, Walker v. State, 34 Fla. 167, 169, 16 So. 80; Ind. Disqualification entirely abolished: 1879, Brown v. Norton, 67 Ind. 424; 1879, Hutchason v. State, 67 Ind. 449; 1881, Roberts v. Porter, 78 id. 130, 133; Ind. T. 1913, Birdwell v. U. S., 10 Okl. Cr. App. 159, 135 Pac. 445 (under Ind. T. St. 1899, § 1974, a defendant's wife cannot testify for him); Kan. 1911, Harris v. Brown, C. C. A., 187 Fed. 6 (Kansas Gen. Stat. 1909, § 5915, C. C. P. § 321, held to abolish marital incompetency except for marital communications); La. 1896, State v. Pain, 48 La. An. 311, 19 So. 138 (wife is inadmissible in criminal suits generally); Miss. Disqualification entirely abolished: 1876, Rushing v. Rushing, 52 Miss. 329; 1876, Barry v. Sturdivant, 53 Miss. 490, 493; 1886, Ellis v. Alford, 64 Miss. 8, 12, 1 So. 155; 1894, Saffold v. Horne, 72 Miss. 470, 482, 18 So. 433 (giving a history of the legislation); Nebr. Disqualification abolished: 1897, Smith v. Meyers, 52 Nebr. 70, 71 N. W. 1006; Ohio: Disqualification abolished for civil cases: 1881, Howard v. Brower, 37 Oh. St. 402, 404, 409; Okl. Disqualification not abolished for civil cases: 1897, Nix v. Gilmer, 5 Okl. 740, 50 Pac. 131; Pa. Disqualification abolished for civil cases: 1870, Yeager v. Weaver, 64 Pa. 425, 427; 1874, Ballentine v. White, 77 Pa. 20, 26; 1893, Evans v. Evans, 155 Pa. 572, 576, 26 Atl. 755; W. Va. Disqualification abolished, except for spouse of disqualified survivor; 1889, Kilgore v. Hanley, 27 W. Va. 451, 454.

SUB-TITLE I (continued) : TESTIMONIAL QUALIFICATIONS

TOPIC IV: TESTIMONIAL KNOWLEDGE

CHAPTER XXV.

A. GENERAL PRINCIPLES OF KNOWLEDGE

1. Preliminary Distinctions

§ 650. Observation, Opportunity to Observe, and Knowledge; their difference, and their practical sameness.

§ 651. Distinction between Experience and Knowledge.

§ 652. Knowledge may rest upon a Hypothetical Basis.

§ 653. Knowledge often a double element, including (1) a Class of things, and (2) the Thing to be classed.

§ 654. Burden of Proof of Knowledge Qualification.

§ 655. Same: Witness asked to specify the Grounds of his Knowledge.

2. Degree, Quality, and Sources of Knowledge

§ 656. Judicial Phrasings of the Principle of Knowledge.

§ 657. (a) Knowledge must be founded on Personal Observation by the Senses, not on Hearsay.

§ 658. (b) Knowledge need not be Positive or Absolute; Admissibility of a "Belief", "Impression", "Opinion", or the like.

§ 659. (c) Knowledge must involve Rational Inferences from Adequate Data.

§ 660. Same: Inference of Identity of Person by Voice or Appearance; of Age from Appearance; of Chattels from their Qualities; Miscellaneous Instances of Inadequate Knowledge.

§ 661. Same: Testimony to Another Person's State of Mind.

§ 662. Same: Improbabilities in Scientific Testimony.

§ 663. Same: Speculative Testimony to Personal Injuries and to Values.

§ 664. Negative Knowledge; Testimony that a Fact would have been Seen or Heard, had it occurred.

3. Hearsay Knowledge exceptionally admitted

§ 665. (1) Official Records; (2) Scientific Instruments and Tables (Vacuum Rays, etc.); (3) Expert Learning founded on Books.

§ 666. (4) Execution and Contents of Documents not personally observed.

§ 667. (5) Testifying to One's Own Age, or to an Adoptive Child's Age; or (6) to Another Person's Name, or (7) Residence.

§ 668. (8) Conversations through an Interpreter.

§ 669. (9) Information received by Telephone or Dictagraph.

§ 670. (10) Testimony of Deceased or Absent Persons under the Hearsay Exceptions.

4. Hypothetical Questions

§ 672. General Theory.

§ 673. False Theory: "Usurping the Province of the Jury."

§ 674. Actual Observation not necessary; Hypothetical Presentation may be sufficient.

§ 675. Where Personal Observation is had, Hypothetical Presentation is unnecessary.

§ 676. Where Personal Observation is lacking, Hypothetical Presentation must be used.

§ 677. Personal Observation is not necessary, when Hypothetical Presentation is used.

§ 678. The same Skilled Witness may testify from both Personal Observation and Hypothetical Presentation.

§ 679. Only Skilled Witnesses may be asked Hypothetical Questions.

§ 680. If the Premises fail, the Conclusion must be disregarded.

§ 681. Form and Scope of the Question; (1) Particularization of the Premises to be used; Questions based on Testimony in the Case.

§ 682. Same: (2) Kind of Data that may be assumed in the Question; not All the Facts, but Any Facts of which there is Evidence.

§ 683. Same: (3) Form of Question must be expressly Hypothetical.

§ 684. Hypothetical Questions on Cross-examination.

§ 685. Length of Hypothetical Question.

A. General Principles of Knowledge

1. Preliminary Distinctions

§ 650. Observation, Opportunity to Observe, and Knowledge; their difference, and their practical sameness. It is obviously impossible to speak with accuracy of a witness' "knowledge" as that which the principles of testimony require. If the law received as absolute knowledge what he had to offer, then only one witness would be needed on any one matter; for the fact asserted would be demonstrated. When a thing is known to be, it is; and that would be the end of inquiry. A witness cannot be assumed beforehand, by the law, to know things; the most it can assume is that he thinks he knows. The law assumes that the matter is in truth of some particular complexion, but also realizes that to determine what its real complexion is the tribunal may have to listen to various persons; the statements of some of these it will reject, and of others it will accept. But from the persons to whom the tribunal will listen the law will attempt to require some qualification which will make them worth listening to. It will not presume to determine beforehand which witness is correct — i.e. which one really knows, — but it will ask that each one offered shall be one 'prima facie' likely to know, — in short, shall have had an opportunity of observing what was or what happened and shall have directed his attention or observation to the matter. This is as far as the law can go.

Accordingly, the rules upon the subject in hand are all concerned, not strictly with the witness' knowledge, but with his opportunities of observing and his actual observation. For example, if it is a question of the aggressor in an affray, what the tribunal will ask for is, not persons who really "know" who the aggressor was, but persons who have been so situated that they had an opportunity of observing and did observe the affair.[1]

The practical tests, then, and the detailed rules, are in strictness concerned with observation and not with knowledge. Nevertheless, as the ultimate aim often gives name to the method, it may be said, roughly but sufficiently, that the qualification here involved is Knowledge, — at least as distinguished from Experience, Sanity, and the other qualifications of capacity to know.

§ 651. Distinction between Experience and Knowledge. Observation of the matters to be testified to is an essential conception in the qualifications of every witness without exception (ante, § 478). By Observation is meant that direction of attention which is the source of impressions, and thus of knowledge. The distinction between Experience (ante, § 558) and Observation is that the former concerns the mental power or capacity to acquire knowledge on the subject of testimony, while the latter concerns the actual exercise of the faculties upon the subject of testimony. Competency as a witness is inconceivable without the presence of both these elements.

It is true that the distinction between Experience and Observation is sometimes lost sight of in the practical tests applicable to certain subjects of testimony. For example, when a Court adopts the rule of thumb that farmers in the vicinity of a certain piece of land may testify to its value, it is ruling upon both these subjects; it is ruling that farmers are persons of sufficient experiential qualifications, and it is also ruling that persons in the vicinity have sufficient observation or knowledge of the general class of values in question and of the piece of land in question. Again, when a Court rules that a bank-cashier who has handled the kind of notes alleged to be counterfeit may testify to the genuineness of the one in question, it is ruling that bank-cashiers are experientially qualified to form an opinion on the matter, and it is also ruling that the handling of the notes sufficiently ensures observation or knowledge of the general type of note in question. In these instances, as well as in others, the rule of thumb does not distinguish the two principles. But the practical convenience of such rules need not prevent us from recognizing that two distinct principles are involved, or that the two elements must always exist however obscured.

§ 650. [1] From the point of view of logic and psychology as applicable to argument before the jury (not the rules of Admissibility), see the materials collected in the present author's "Principles of Judicial Proof, as given by Logic, Psychology, and General Experience, and illustrated in Judicial Trials" (1913), §§ 234–238.

§ 652. Knowledge may rest upon a Hypothetical Basis. The direction of attention which constitutes the source of the knowledge will usually be made upon matters as they present themselves to the senses out of court. But the observation may also be directed to the same matter hypothetically placed before the witness in court. Thus, a physician may examine a patient at his home and observe certain symptoms, whence he reaches the conclusion that a fever exists; but the same symptoms may be stated to him by counsel in court, and he may then reach the same conclusion, and it will be receivable, except that it will rest upon the hypothesis that the symptoms stated to him actually existed. Here the direction of attention to the symptoms is that observation which the law requires before receiving his conclusion as to the nature of the disease; but in the one case the alleged symptoms are learned by his own senses and rest on his own testimonial credit, while in the other case they rest on the hypothesis that other persons will testify them to be true. In §§ 672–684, the theory of the hypothetical question and its detailed rules are examined in full.

§ 653. Knowledge often a double element, including (1) a Class of things, and (2) the Thing to be classed. In certain subjects the observation must be of a double sort. For example, a witness to the value of a horse must be acquainted with the value-standards for different classes of horses, and must also be acquainted with the particular horse to be valued (post, § 720). A witness to the genuineness of handwriting must be acquainted with the type or standard of the handwriting of the alleged writer, and must also see the disputed writing which he is to say does or does not belong to that type (post, § 693). A witness to the identity of a person, a voice, or anything else, must be familiar with the person or voice or other things as to which the identity is asserted, and must also see or hear or otherwise perceive the thing to be identified with it.[1] In short, wherever the subject of the testimony consists in § 653. [1] Witnesses sometimes, though well enough qualified on the first element, jump to a conclusion on the second one, especially in matters of Identification; e.g. the Russell Will Case, Boston "Transcript", Feb. 14, 1910 (the issue in a will case was the identity of the claimant purporting to be Daniel Blake Russell. Mrs. George Moulton, a former resident of Melrose, testified that she knew Daniel Blake Russell in 1880. She said that he was a slight youth with sloping shoulders and long, slender hands, and that the claimant was entirely different from him. Mrs. Moulton said that she was well acquainted with all the Russell family and had been an intimate friend of Mrs. Daniel Russell. On cross-examination she said she went to the Hotel Commonwealth in Boston a few weeks ago to see the claimant, but that Mr. Simpson had refused to allow her to see him. "This is news to me," broke in Mr. Simpson. "Would you agree to have an interview with him now?" The witness said that she thought she would. "Of course you haven't any especial feeling about this whole matter, have you?" he asked. "Yes, indeed, I have," replied Mrs. Moulton in evident excitement. "I think it is a shame for a man who isn't Daniel Blake Russell to pretend that he is. I made up my mind from reading the newspapers, before I ever came to the court room or saw him, that he wasn't the right man").

classifying or identifying or testing or authenticating, the witness' observation necessarily involves two elements, (1) an observation of the class, type or standard, and (2) an observation of the thing to be classified or identified. Both elements must be supplied in his testimony. Under the particular topics of testimony, the rules applying this principle may be examined.

It may be noted that here it is not uncommon to supply the second element by hypothetical presentation (post, § 672). Thus, in valuing the cost of a house's construction, the witness may have actual observation of only the value-standards of different sorts of houses, and then the features of the particular house to be valued may be placed before him by hypothetical description. So a witness to the identity of a murdered person with one J. S. may have had actual observation of J. S. but not of the body of the murdered man, and the latter element may be supplied by showing him a photograph assumed to be that of the deceased, and then verifying the photograph as that of the deceased.

§ 654. Burden of Proof of Knowledge Qualification. It has already been noted (ante, §§ 484, 497, 508, 560, 584), that in adults the general Mental Capacity to testify is assumed, and need not be shown beforehand; and that the same is true of that capacity whose absence is indicated by the term Interest; while Experiential Capacity is not assumed, if the subject calls for special experience, and the possession of it must be made to appear beforehand. These differences are based on practical convenience and probabilities, for the probability is that the average witness will be sane (and thus sanity may be assumed), and the probability is that the average witness will not have special experience (and thus it cannot be assumed).

Analogy would indicate, then, that since the probabilities are all against a particular person, out of all persons, having been one to observe the particular matter in hand, it cannot be assumed that he is one of the few admissible persons, and his qualifications as to observation, or knowledge, must be made to appear beforehand. Such is the generally accepted rule. The witness, before he refers to the matter in hand, must make it appear that he had the requisite opportunities to obtain correct impressions on the subject; and the first questions put to him should be and usually are directed to laying this foundation:[1]

1870, MORTON, J., in Wetherbee v. Norris, 103 Mass. 564, 566 (approving a ruling, in the trial Court's discretion, that a witness to reputation must be asked beforehand whether he knows the reputation): "The same principle is applicable to the examination of witnesses upon other subjects. It often occurs, in the trial of cases, that the judge is called upon to inquire of a witness whether he has knowledge of the matter of which he is called to testify. If it appears to be doubtful whether the witness understands and appreciates his duty to testify only to what he knows of his own knowledge, or if for any reason there is danger that he may testify to hearsay, it is the right and it may be the duty of the presiding judge to inquire of him if he has knowledge of the matter as to which he is asked to testify. . . . Whether the circumstances of this case required the preliminary question to be put was a matter within the judicial discretion of the presiding judge."

§ 654. [1] 1900, Cleveland T. & V. R. Co. v. Marsh, 63 Oh. 236, 58 N. E. 821 (whether a person was a trainman); 1903, Friday v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 204 Pa. 405, 411, 54 Atl. 339 (a witness to land-values may be subjected to cross-examination as to his qualifications before expressing an opinion on direct examination); 1904, Davis v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 215 Pa. 581, 64 Atl. 774 (similar); 1899, Gorkrow's Estate, 40 Wash. 563, 56 Pac. 385 (prior statement of qualifications may be required, in trial Court's discretion.)

Compare the general rule for voir dire as to interest (ante, § 585) and as to experience (ante, § 560, n. 1).

Where this preliminary inquiry is omitted, the opposing counsel cannot afterwards object to it as a technical violation of rules; this is usually placed on the theory that the knowledge may be presumed,[2] but it is more correct to place it upon the rule (ante, § 18) that a failure to make objection at the proper time is a waiver of the objection. Yet where the subsequent course of the examination develops a total lack of opportunity of knowledge, no doubt the testimony may be struck out, on the ground that the waiver was merely of the requirement of the preliminary burden of proof, and not of the substantial qualifications of the witness.

The importance of enforcing this general rule is illustrated in the following passage, where the unsuccessful counsel was, in strictness, in the right:

1888, Parnell Commission's Proceedings, 36th day, Times' Rep. pt. 10, p. 18; the Irish Land League and its leaders being charged with complicity in certain crimes, particularly in the Phœnix Park assassination of 1882, certain of the known criminals testified that their body, the Invincibles, had received assistance-money from the League; it had turned [illegible]n cross-examining one of them, that his testimony to the receipt of this money from [illegible]eague officers was not based on his knowledge at all, but merely on what he had [illegible]rom others; another of these persons was now asked on direct examination as follows:

A. James: "Tell me of your own knowledge whether you know of his receiving any money from the Land League." Sir C. Russell: "My Lords, I would ask my learned friend to be particular as to that question 'of his own knowledge' after the experience we had of Delaney's evidence. 'Did he see any one pay him?' is the proper form of question." Sir H. James: "I think not." Sir C. Russell: "With great deference, my Lords, it is. We had a deliberate statement the other day in answer to a similar question put to a witness, 'Did you know this?' and 'Did you know that?' and, afterwards in cross-examination, it turned out that he did not know it of his own knowledge, but it was what had been told him. I want to guard against a repetition of that. The proper form of question as I submit is, 'Did he see any money paid?'" Sir H. James (to the witness): "You understand what I mean — do you know this of your own knowledge?" Sir C. Russell: "I am objecting to the form of the question." President HANNEN: "It is a very usual form of question." Sir C. Russell: "I respectfully say, in view of the reasons I have given, that the proper question is, 'Did he see any money paid?'" President HANNEN: "I shall not interfere with the discretion of counsel in asking a question in a manner which is quite usual." Sir C. Russell: "I have pointed out the danger — the great danger — of putting the question in the form in which my learned friend is putting it." President HANNEN: "Precisely so; and you have also shown where the safeguard lies, namely, in cross-examination."

[2] 1904, Norman P. S. Co. v. Ford, 77 Conn. 461, 59 Atl. 499 (where a deposition shows that the witness speaks from hearsay only, the answer may be struck out; though "if the witness had been present to testify, the Court could have received these answers on the assumption that he was speaking of what he knew; leaving it to the defendants to show the contrary if they could, on cross-examination or otherwise"); 1874, Pearson v. Wheeler, 55 N. H. 41 ("Where nothing appears to the contrary it is to be presumed that what the witness stated was within his knowledge, and that his knowledge was derived from proper sources"); 1867, Field v. Tenney, 47 N. H. 513, 522; 1900, Glauber Mfg. Co. v. Voter, 70 N. H. 332, 47 Atl. 612; 1874, Fassin v. Hubbard, 55 N. Y. 471 (deposition; if knowledge would at least have been possible, from what appears, it may be presumed).

§ 655. Same: Witness specifying the Grounds of his Knowledge. The party offering a witness may desire to make plain the strength of the witness' grounds of knowledge and the reasons for trusting his belief. This is a legitimate purpose. But, in pursuing it, the witness often will naturally state circumstances which may give indirectly some unfavorable impressions against the opposite party, — as where the witness is asked, "What made you notice the defendant's features?" and replies, "Because he was the same man who stole my wagon last year." Or he may relate other persons' utterances which would be inadmissible as hearsay, but for their present utility.

Nevertheless, on the principle of multiple admissibility (ante, § 13), the general rule is that the witness may[1] on the direct examination state the particular circumstances which legitimately affected his knowledge or recollection, even though the fact would otherwise be inadmissible;[2] the judge's § 655. [1] Put he is of course not obliged on direct examination to state his reasons: 1905, Com. v. Johnson, 188 Mass. 382, 74 N. E. 939, 1918, State v. Stegner, 276 Mo. 427, 207 S. W. 826 (handwriting).

[2] Accord: Alabama: 1895, Dickson v. Bamberger, 107 Ala. 293, 18 So. 290 (general principle, but too narrowly stated); 1905, Braham v. State, 143 Ala. 28, 38 So. 919 (insanity); Arizona: 1921, Moon v. State, 22 Ariz. 418, 198 Pac. 288 (burglary; finger-print identity having been testified to by experts, the witness was allowed to illustrate the certainty of such identification by taking the jurymen's finger-prints on a series of cards and identifying them; also to relate his experiences in other cases of finger-print identification); California: 1907, Salmon v. Rathjens, 152 Cal. 290, Pac. 733; Connecticut: 1876, Tomlinson v. Derby, 43 Conn. 562 (reasons for knowing that a highway-defect existed); Florida: 1914, Alford v. State, 47 Fla. 1, 36 So. 436 (occurrence of a fire, as the reason for fixing a date of seeing defendant, allowed); Georgia: 1908, Albany Phosphate Co. v. Hugger, 4 Ga. App. 771, 62 S. E. 533 (witness testified to present recollections based on a marked calendar lost: "the weather bureau reports verified what I had on my calendar"; the last reference held doubtful, but admitted); Illinois: 1919, People v. Baker, 290 Ill. 349, 125 N. E. 263 (murder; to explain the witness' notice of defendant's actions, he mentioned on cross-examination that deceased had called his attention to defendant's presence; but on re-examination he was not allowed to give the rest of deceased's remarks, alluding to defendant's hostile feelings); Kentucky: 1895, Kendall's Ex'rs v. Collier, 97 Ky. 446, 30 S. W. 1002 (reasons for knowing handwriting); Maryland: 1910, Mayor of Baltimore v. Hurlock, 113 Md. 674, 78 Atl. 558 (value-witness); Massachusetts: 1859, Dickenson v. Fitchburg, 13 Gray 556 (expert; general principle); 1864, Lincoln v. Mfg. Co., 9 All. 192 (same); 1878, Williams v. Taunton, 125 Mass. 40 (same); 1890, Hunt v. Boston, 152 Mass. 169, 25 N. E. 82 (same); 1896, Com. v. Bishop, 165 Mass. 148, 42 N. E. 560 (the witness' reason for identifying defendant was that the latter had come to him to be treated for a certain disease); 1897, Com. v. Kennedy, 170 Mass. 18, 48 N. E. 770 (identity of purchaser of poison); 1899, Leslie v. R. Co., 172 Mass. 468, 52 N. E. 542 (expert; general principle); 1902, O'Malley v. Com., 182 Mass. 196, 65 N. E. 30 (expert not allowed to state that his opinion was based on a consideration of sales not otherwise evidenced, without specifying them); 1905, Com. v. Tucker, 189 Mass. 457, 76 N. E. 127 (certain experiments, not admitted under the present rule); Michigan: 1864, Angell v. Rosenbury, 12 Mich. 241, 257 (whether notes produced were the same as those shown to witness by plaintiff; reasons for noticing them particularly, allowed to be stated; quoted supra); 1868, Detroit & M. R. Co. v. Van Steinburg, 17 Mich. 99, 107 (to indicate the fixing of a witness' attention on the fact of a locomotive bell having been rung or not, the witness was allowed to say that it had been then talked of, but not to state that "people said that the bell was not rung"), 1895, Cole v. R. Co., 105 Mich. 549, 63 N. W. 647 (words uttered, admitted to show how thing was remembered); 1900, Grenell v.

instruction to the jury must be relied upon for preventing their improper use of the fact:

1856, GREEN, C. J., in State v. Fox, 25 N. J. L. 575, 602 (in fixing the recollection of a time, the remark of a neighbor was used; "she said, 'Perhaps the man I met on Thursday morning might have had something to do with it'"): "The evidence was not offered or admitted to prove the truth of the facts stated to the witness, but merely to show what it was that called the attention of the witness to a fact stated by her or that fixed the fact in her recollection. Whether the statement of the third person was true or false was perfectly immaterial. The fact that the communication was made, and not its truth or falsity, was the only material point. The conversations were not hearsay, within the proper meaning of the term."

1864, CHRISTIANCY, J., in Angell v. Rosenbury, 12 Mich. 241, 257: "It was very important, in determining the credit to be given to the witness' recollection, to know whether any or what reason existed at the time to induce the witness to give particular attention to the appearance of the notes [then shown to him]. The value of his recollection would depend entirely upon the degree of attention with which he observed the facts and the reasons which operated upon his mind to excite that attention and to fix the facts in his memory. He should therefore have been allowed to state any facts which had that effect, whether relevant to the issue or not."

Compare a similar use of hearsay utterances to identify a time, place, or person (ante, § 416) to corroborate a witness (post, § 1129), and to exhibit the grounds of a physician's opinion (post, § 1720), or other expert's opinions (ante, § 562). The theory of the Hearsay rule on this point is dealt with post, § 1791.

Cross-examination to impeach the witness' sources of knowledge is noticed post, §§ 991–995, ante, § 463.

2. Degree, Quality, and Sources of Knowledge

§ 656. Judicial Phrasings of the Principle of Knowledge. Courts have often uttered in broad terms the general principle of the necessity of Observation as a source of Knowledge. The following passages illustrate their attitude:

1824, Mr. Thomas Starkie, Evidence, 79, 127: "To render the communication of facts perfect, the witnesses must be both able and willing to speak or to write the truth. It is necessary that they should possess, in the first place, the means and opportunity of ac-

R. Co., 124 Mich. 141, 82 N. W. 843 (similar); Montana: 1921, State v. Bess, 60 Mont. 558, 199 Pac. 426 (expert to effect of flat-nosed bullets); Nebraska: 1911, Brown v. Chicago B. & Q. R. Co., 88 Nebr. 604, 130 N. W. 265 (child's exclamation directing witness' attention); New York: 1879, O'Hagan v. Dillon, 76 N. Y. 170, 173 (a witness testifying to the hanging of a lamp at the place where an injury occurred, allowed to be asked: "Is your recollection refreshed, or your attention called to that from any circumstance, any accident that happened there?"); Oklahoma: 1917, Chicago R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Jackson, 63 Okl. 32, 162 Pac. 823 (patient's statement is the basis for physician's opinion); Pennsylvania: 1865, Howser v. Com., 51 Pa. 341 (that the witness on arriving home had told to her parents what she had heard and seen, and that they replied, allowed); Rhode Island: 1903, State v. Nagle, 25 R. I. 105, 54 Atl. 1063 ("Whenever the opinion of a person is deemed to be relevant, the grounds on which such opinion is based are also deemed to be relevant"; here, of experiments with a pistol as to the appearances of wounds); Vermont: 1913, Miller v. Pearce, 86 Vt. 322, 85 Atl. 620 (recollecting an act of defendant by a remark made about it).

This objection to testimony, however, must be distinguished from the objection based on the so-called Hearsay rule. Under the present principle, the law declines to accept a witness X's statement (for example) that he knows A struck B, because it appears that X had no personal observation but received his impressions from others' information. But if X were to testify, "Y told me that A struck B first", then he would appear to know sufficiently the fact of Y's making the assertion, and the question then becomes whether Y's assertion, thus proved, is admissible. Then it is that the Hearsay rule rejects the proof of X's assertion as a statement untested by oath and cross-examination. In other words, so long as it is attempted to argue directly from the witness X's statement to the striking of B by A, the question is one of the sufficiency of X's knowledge; it is only when the assertion of Y, a person not in court, is put forward testimonially that we are concerned with the Hearsay rule in the strict sense. The distinction is more fully examined elsewhere (post, § 1361).

Exceptional cases, under the present principle, when knowledge founded on hearsay may suffice, are later considered (post, §§ 664–670).

§ 658. (b) Knowledge need not be Positive or Absolute; Admissibility of a "Belief", "Impression", "Opinion", or the like. The second corollary of the general principle of knowledge is that the result of the witness' observation need not be positive or absolute knowledge. Such a degree of certainty cannot be demanded, even in theory (ante, § 650); it suffices if he had an opportunity of personal observation and did get some impressions from this observation. But in the attempt to name this quality of knowledge which suffices, the terms available are so loose and indefinite that other principles come naturally to introduce confusion. If positive knowledge is not required, does an "impression" or "belief" or "opinion" suffice? Here the operation of four different principles must be distinguished, because such terms may be criticized from the point of view of all four:

(1) "Belief" or "impression" may signify merely the degree of positiveness of his original observation of the facts. The witness may have had actual observation of the matter in hand, but the result may have been a not very definite or positive impression; for example, he saw a man and "thought" that it was the accused. In such cases there is no legal objection whatever to receiving such impression as the witness gained from his observation. In

Bynum, 137 N. C. 491, 49 S. E. 955 (proceedings at an auction); Philippine Isl. C. C. P. 1901, § 276 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1845); Porto Rico: Rev. St. & C. 1911, § 1387 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1845); South Carolina: 1906, Rouss v. King, 74 S. C. 251, 54 S. E. 615 (accounts, etc.); Tennessee: 1874, Woodward v. State, 4 Baxt. 324 (the witness heard a shot and saw a man running, and when he learned that W. had made threats against the deceased he thought the man running must be W.; excluded); Texas: 1881, Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Burke, 55 Tex. 339; 1888, Gilbert v. Odum, 69 Tex. 673, 7 S. W. 510; 1895, Texas & P. R. Co. v. Reed, 88 Tex. 439, 31 S. W. 1058 (witnesses testifying without knowledge as to a foreman's authority over railroad hands).

The following ruling is peculiar, and rests on the principle of § 654, ante: 1857, Willey v. Portsmouth, 35 N. H. 308 (the witness said that the place at which W. fell was within the highway; but he was not present when W. fell; held, that as he might have learned of the place's identity by admissions of the party's or otherwise in an adequate way, the answer was proper).

other words, the degree or quality of his knowledge, so far as there was actual personal observation by him, is no ground of objection.[1]

(2) "Belief" or "impression" may signify the degree of positiveness of the witness' recollection; i.e. may signify that he obtained entirely clear and positive impressions at the time, but that since then his memory has faded, and his recollection to-day is so weak that he is not able to call it more than an "impression" or to say more than "I think." The deficiency comes merely in the quality of his recollection. Here again, the law makes no objection on such grounds. It welcomes whatever quality of recollection he is able to bring.[1] In general, then, where there has been actual observation, the quality of the impression received at the time and the quality of persistence of that impression are no grounds of objection; for the simple reason that Courts must accept the facts of human nature and must not insist on what they cannot fairly expect.

(3) "Belief" or "impression" may signify a lack of actual personal observation; when this is the case, the main principle (§§ 656, 657, ante) excludes such testimony. The shades of meaning in such expressions are often elusive; but if the present meaning appears, there is no question of the judicial attitude against admission:

1820, R. v. Dewhurst, 1 State Tr. N. S. 529, 590. Mr. Raines (cross-examining): "Upon your oath, did you not see something very like that which I have read to you?" Witness: "I cannot recollect." Mr. Raines: "Will you swear you do not believe what I have read to you?" BAYLEY, J.: "It must be belief from recollection." Mr. Raines: "I should have thought it was a legitimate question capable of being answered." BAYLEY, J.: "If it admits of a legitimate answer. It may not; because he might say 'I believe it, because I have heard people say so.'"

1810, Chief Justice SWIFT, Evidence, 111: "A witness must swear to facts within his knowledge and recollection, and cannot swear to mere matters of belief."

1820, HENDERSON, J., in State v. Allen, 1 Hawks 9: "The law requires that he who deposes to a fact should have the means of knowing it. Grounds of conjecture and opinions are not sufficient."

1839, WESTON, C. J., in Clark v. Bigelow, 16 Me. 247: "'Impression', though it may convey the idea of a certain degree of recollection, is an equivocal term. It may have been derived from the information of others, or from some unwarrantable deduction of the mind from premises not well established, . . . [in which case] it cannot in our judgment be safely or legally received."

1856, GOODENOW, J., in Lewis v. Brown, 41 Me. 451: "In general, the opinion of a witness is not evidence; he must speak of facts. It may have been derived from some unwarrantable deduction of the mind, from premises not well established."

1859, SAWYER, J., in State v. Flanders, 38 N. H. 332: "An impression may mean an understanding or belief of the fact as derived from some other source than personal observation, — as the information of others"; and this would not be admissible.

1877, BRICKELL, C. J., in Wood v. Brewer, 57 Ala. 517: "A witness generally must depose

§ 658. [1] The authorities on this point are examined in dealing with Recollection (post, § 728); because, though the principles are well settled, the rulings do not always distinguish the exact objection involved, and must therefore be marshalled in one place. The rulings in the ensuing note of the present section are only those in which it is clear that the objection was based on a lack of actual personal observation.

to facts within his knowledge, and cannot be permitted to testify upon mere conjecture or belief."

What the Courts repudiate, then, is a mere guess, an exercise of the imagination, a suspicion, a conjecture, offered in place of the result of actual personal observation; it is from this point of view only that a "belief" or "opinion" or "impression" is not to be received.[2]

(4) A "belief" or "impression" or "opinion" may, though otherwise admissible, be obnoxious to the Opinion rule, because all the data on which it is founded may be capable of being stated fully by the witness to the jury, and thus his inferences from them become superfluous. The operation of this rule is examined in detail elsewhere (post, §§ 1962, 1969).

§ 659. (c) Knowledge must involve Rational Inferences from Adequate Data. The third corollary of the general principle of Knowledge (ante, § 656) is that the witness' knowledge (assuming it to be based on personal observation) must not appear to lack adequate data as its basis of inference. For example, when Sherlock Holmes tells his companion that the neatly dressed person who is seen passing on the street is a banker, the father of six children, and a German by birth, the ordinary intelligence wonders at a statement based on such apparently invisible data. Yet if a man passed by in working clothes daubed with lime and brickdust, the ordinary intelligence would admit that any observer had the right to assert positively that the

[2] In the following rulings the testimony was excluded, except where otherwise stated:

ENGLAND: 1821, Redford v. Birley, 1 State Tr. N. S. 1071, 1171 (battery in dispersing a mob; Evans: "Do you believe there was [anybody cut]?"; disallowed; Holroyd, J.: "You must get that fact from a witness who saw the wound inflicted").

UNITED STATES: Fed. 1879, Atchison R. Co. v. U. S., 15 Ct. Cl. 141; Patten v. U. S., ib. 290 (the estimates of experts, roughly fixing a percentage of gross cost or earnings as representing a certain element of the total, were rejected and the items were carefully reckoned); 1896, Crane Co. v. Columbus Const. Co., 20 C. C. A. 233, 73 Fed. 984 (an estimate of the cost of pipe-laying; "mere guesses, prepared without personal knowledge of the facts", excluded); Ala. 1882, McDonald v. Jacobs, 77 Ala. 525, 527 ("reasons for belief" not amounting to personal knowledge); Ark. 1850, Jordan v. Foster, 11 Ark. 142 ("opinion" as a mere guess); Cal. 1886, Tait v. Hall, 71 Cal. 152, 12 Pac. 391 ("impression" of conduct, based on a guess from other acts); Ga. 1831, Bank v. Brown, Dudley Ga. 62, 65 ("The belief or persuasion of a witness cannot be received as evidence, unless it rests upon a sufficient legal foundation"); 1868, Macon & W. R. Co. v. Johnson, 38 Ga. 436 ("opinion", here based on inference, not sight; but admitted upon the facts); Ida. 1891, Terr. v. McKern, 2 Ida. 759, 26 Pac. 123 ("thought" the defendant received an object from another person, but did n't see it); Ky. 1834, Jones v. Chiles, 33 Ky. 33 (the witness "understood" that a certain possession existed); Minn. 1893, Lovejoy v. Howe, 55 Minn. 353, 354, 57 N. W. 57 (impression based on something heard, not on knowledge); N. H. 1846, Tibbetts v. Flanders, 18 N. H. 292 (understood); 1864, Kingsbury v. Moses, 45 N. H. 225 (impression); N. Y. 1873, Higbie v. Ins. Co., 53 N. Y. 604 (by a physician, "an impression sufficient to satisfy his own mind, but not enough to base a medical opinion upon"); N. C. 1895, State v. Lytle, 117 N. C. 799, 23 S. E. 476 ("I met a low, chunky man; it was dark; he had his back to me; I took him to be L.", held admissible; "I only judged it was L. from the fact that I had heard he had gone up the road that day", held inadmissible); Or. 1898, Farmers' Bank v. Saling, 33 Or. 394, 54 Pac. 190 (one who had means of observation allowed to state his "understanding" as to the membership of a firm; "the understanding was not based upon hearsay evidence"); Pa. 1839, Carmalt v. Post, 8 Watts 411 (impression); 1860, Duvall's Ex'r v. Darby, 38 Pa. 59 (same); Tenn. 1900, Endowment Rank v. Allen, — Tenn. —, 58 S. W. 241 (physician's testimony that "he thought" deceased took an overdose of medicine, excluded as "a mere conjecture").

Compare the cases cited post, § 728, admitting testimony of "impressions."

man was a bricklayer. Thus it is that the law may reject testimony which appears to be founded on data so scanty that the witness' alleged inference from them may at once be pronounced absurd or extreme.

This principle, however, sound as it is in theory, can seldom have frequent application. When the source of knowledge is so insufficient, Courts will rarely need to pronounce the formal exclusion of the testimony. Its weakness is self-exhibited. The risk of excluding a useful though small item of testimony is greater than the risk of admitting testimony capable of exaggeration. Cross-examination will usually furnish the exposure.

When the testimony, thus appearing to the ordinary layman to lack a rational basis, is founded on observations made with esoteric methods or apparatus — vacuum-rays, telepathy, and the like — this method should be explained by the witness; and, if it is vouched for as accepted in his branch of learning, it suffices to admit his testimony (post, §§ 665, 795).

§ 660. Same: Inference of Identity of a Person by Voice or Appearance; of Age from Appearance; of Chattels from their Qualities; Miscellaneous Instances of Inadequate Knowledge. In the application of the foregoing principle, Courts have shown no tendency to follow a narrow policy of exclusion. In most of the instances it needs no argument to perceive that the testimony was at least worth receiving. It has been properly held, for example, that a witness may testify to a person's identity from his voice alone,[1] or from observing his stature, complexion, clothing, or other marks,[2] or from § 660. [1] ENGLAND: 1660, Hulet's Trial, 5 How. St. Tr. 1185, 1187 (Counsel: "Did you mark the proportion of his body, or his habit, what disguise he was in?"; Witness: "He had a pair of freeze trunk breeches, and a vizor, with a grey beard"; Defendant: "I desire to know of him how he comes to know that I was there at that time?"; Witness: "By your voice"); 1692, Harrison's Trial, 12 How. St. Tr. 846, 850, 861, 862; 1806, The Threshers' Trial, 30 How. St. Tr. 197, 198, 204, 222; 1805, Picton's Trial, 30 How. St. Tr. 245; 1874, R. v. Castro (Tichborne Case), Charge of Cockburn, C. J., 4 ff.

CANADA: 1917, R. v. Murray & Mahoney, 33 D. L. R. 702, Alta. (robbery; identification by voice alone, held sufficient).

UNITED STATES: Ark. 1912, Rhea v. State, 104 Ark. 162, 147 S. W. 463 (voice distinguishing a white from a negro); Fla. 1907, Mack v. State, 54 Fla. 55, 44 So. 706; Ga. 1895, Fussell v. State, 93 Ga. 450, 21 S. E. 97 (a voice heard in the darkness); 1903, Patton v. State, 117 Ga. 230, 43 S. E. 533 (witness to a voice, held not well qualified on the facts); Ill. 1890, Ogden v. People, 134 Ill. 599, 25 N. E. 755; Ind. 1895, Deal v. State, 140 Ind. 354, 39 N. E. 930; Kan. 1901, State v. Herbert, 63 Kan. 516, 66 Pac. 235; Mass. 1870, Com. v. Williams, 105 Mass. 67 (hearing the voice only once before); 1904, Com. v. Kelley, 186 Mass. 403, 71 N. E. 807 (assault by night); Mo. 1884, State v. Hopkirk, 84 Mo. 288 (voice and motion); Mont. 1910, State v. Vanella, 40 Mont. 326, 106 Pac. 364; Okl. 1921, Patton v. State, — Okl. Cr. —, 200 Pac. 878 (labels and government stamps as evidence of bottle-contents being whiskey); Pa. 1874, Brown v. Com., 76 Pa. 319, 328, 338 (one who carries on a conversation through the soil-pipe of a prison or through a speaking-tube may form an opinion as to the identity of the person speaking with him; here the witness was familiar with the speaker's voice); Tex. 1906, Waggoner v. State, — Tex. Cr. —, 98 S. W. 254.

For the cases admitting the sound of a voice as circumstantial evidence, see ante, § 222.

For identification by voice on the telephone, see post, § 669.

For identification in general, see ante, §§ 410–416.

For the opinion rule as excluding this class of testimony, see post, § 1977.

[2] England: 1830, R. v. Shaw, 1 Lew. Cr. C. 116 (murder; "a witness was called to prove comparison of shoes and shoe-marks; Parke, J., asked him if he had looked at the soles of the shoes and examined them with the foot-marks before he put the shoe in the mark; the witness answered in the negative. Parke, J., desired the jury to reject the whole inquiry relating to the identification by shoe-marks").

United States: 1882, Beale v. Posey, 72 Ala. 332 (mode of walking); 1902, Trulock the sight of the person's photograph;[3] and that a witness may testify to a person's age[4] or intoxication[5] merely from his appearance. So, too, chattels may be identified by their appearance and other qualities.[6] In sundry other instances the principle may need to be applied.[7]

It may be noted that of course the law does not refuse testimony based on artificial experimentation, merely as such.[8]

v. State, 70 Ark. 558, 69 S. W. 677 (mode of walking); 1904, Alford v. State, 47 Fla. 1, 36 So. 436 (identification from clothes, etc. allowed; but the witness must have had personal knowledge); 1881, State v. Lucas, 57 Ia. 502, 10 N. W. 868 (a peculiar shrugging of the shoulders); 1872, State v. Woodruff, 67 N. C. 91 ("The law allows persons to testify to such identity or to such resemblance who have had an opportunity of seeing such persons, if but for an instant"); 1895, State v. Lytle, 117 N. C. 799, 23 N. E. 476 ("I judged it to be L. from his chunky build", held admissible); 1885, Lipes v. State, 15 Lea Tenn. 125 (any person who had seen the defendant's feet, allowed to testify to their peculiarities).

There is apt to be a hasty judgment of identity, especially among ignorant persons and at the time of excitement, as when a murderer is pursued. Hence the extreme caution shown by some Courts in requiring a solid basis for such testimony. For footprints especially there is a stricter rule in some States (ante, § 415).

For identification in general, see ante, § 413.

For the opinion rule, as applied to identity, see post, § 1977.

For the privilege against self-crimination, as applied to compulsory identification by voice or foot-measure, see post, § 2265.

[3] 1883. Brooke v. Brooke, 60 Md. 529, 533; 1886, Marion v. State, 20 Nebr. 240, 29 N. W. 911.

For the use of photographs to identify, see also post, § 792.

[4] 1875, Benson v. McFadden, 50 Ind. 433; 1896, State v. Bernstein, 99 Ia. 5, 68 N. W. 442 (selling liquor to a minor).

For the inference to age from appearance as circumstantial evidence, see ante, § 222.

For inference from a child's resemblance to its paternity, see ante, § 166.

For the exhibition of a person to the jury, as evidencing his age or paternity, see post, § 1154.

[5] 1878, Aurora v. Hillman, 90 Ill. 61.

For other ways of evidencing intoxication, see ante, § 235.

[6] 1916, Terr. v. Meyer, 23 Haw. 121 (weight of cattle estimated by looking at them); 1887, State v. Rainsbarger, 74 Ia. 204, 37 N. W. 153 (identification of a buggy by its rattle, allowed); 1873, Com. v. Aaron, 114 Mass. 255 (seeing sales of liquor which the witness supposes was whiskey and ale; admitted); Com. v. Dowdican, 114 Mass. 257 (seeing liquor which "looked like" whiskey, admitted); 1902, Ainsworth v. Lakin, 180 Mass. 397, 62 N. E. 747 (identification of a wagon by its rattle, allowed).

[7] Federal: 1898, Northern P. R. Co. v. Hayes, 30 C. C. A. 576, 87 Fed. 129 (how fast a train was going, by one who was struck by it from behind but did not see it; excluded); 1849, Hopper v. Com., 6 Gratt. 687 (identity of a garment); Ala. 1852, Nolin v. Parmer, 21 Ala. 71 (a surveyor's knowledge of land); Cal. 1895, People v. Chin Hane, 108 Cal. 597, 41 Pac. 697 (that a pistol-shot sounded as though fired inside a building, admitted); Conn. 1859, Babcock v. Bank, 28 Conn. 306 (knowledge of another's pecuniary condition); Ill. 1894, Carter v. Carter, 152 Ill. 434, 28 N. E. 948, 38 N. E. 669 (testimony to an unseen adultery, from sounds heard in an adjoining room, admitted); Ia. 1864, Messer v. Reginniter, 32 Ia. 313 (surveyor's knowledge of land); 1905, Bryce v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 129 Ia. 342, 105 N. W. 497 (by a brakeman, that he could tell by the sensation, etc., that the emergency brake was set, allowed; good opinion by Weaver, J.); Mass. 1852, Rich v. Jones, 9 Cush. 337 (goods examined by an expert had not been identified as the plaintiff's); 1866, Hamilton v. Nickerson, 13 All. 352 (usage of trade; "such knowledge of the practice and course of business as to create the belief or conviction of its existence"; "witnesses who had active and constant experience of the manner in which the trade was conducted in relation to the matter in controversy"); 1872, Com. v. Pease, 110 Mass. 412 (knowledge of the mode of making an established article several years before); 1891, Lynch v. Moore, 154 Mass. 335 (habits of a horse); Mich. 1905, Wright v. Crane, 142 Mich. 508, 106 N. W. 71 (speed of an automobile; witness not qualified on the facts); N. C. 1880, State v. Reitz, 83 N. C. 635 (the defendant had lived with the witness three or four weeks and had worn an old pair of boots of his, twisting them out of shape in using them; knowledge of the type of footprints held sufficient); Tenn. 1835, Burns v. Welch, 8 Yerg. 119 (capacity of a saw-mill); Tex. 1874, Albright v. Corley, 40 Tex. 113 (basis for estimating the number of cattle in a range).

The application of the principle should be left to the determination of the trial Court: 1888, Stillwell Mfg. Co. v. Phelps, 130 U. S. 527, 9 Sup. 601; 1890, Montana R. Co. v. Warren, 137 U. S. 353, 11 Sup. 96.

[8] 1886, Citizens' Gaslight Co. v. O'Brien, 118 Ill. 180, 8 N. E. 310; 1869, Swett v. Shum-

§ 661. Same: Testimony to Another Person's State of Mind. The argument has been made that, because we cannot directly see, hear, or feel the state of another person's mind, therefore testimony to another person's state of mind is based on merely conjectural and therefore inadequate data. This argument is finical enough; and it proves too much, for if valid it would forbid the jury to find a verdict upon the supposed state of a person's mind. If they are required and allowed to find such a fact, it is not too much to hear such testimony from a witness who has observed the person exhibiting in his conduct the operations of his mind:[1]

1791, Answer of the Judges to the House of Lords, concerning Fox's Libel Act, 31 Geo. III, c. 60, 22 How. St. Tr. 300: "Your lordships' fourth question is, 'Is a witness produced before a jury in a trial as above, by the plaintiff, for the purpose of proving the criminal intentions of the writer, or by the defendant, to rebut the imputation, admissible to be heard as a competent witness in such trial before the jury?' . . . [Assuming that the criminal intent is material and allowable to be proved or denied at all, then] cases may be put where a witness is competent and admissible to prove the criminal intention, on the part of the prosecutor; and it may be stated as a general rule, that in all cases where a witness is competent and admissible to prove the criminal intention, a witness will also be competent to rebut the imputation."

1882, BOWEN, L. J., in Edgington v. Fitzmaurice, L. R. 29 Ch. D. 459: "The state of a man's mind is as much a fact as the state of his digestion. It is true that it is very difficult to prove what the state of a man's mind at a particular time is; but if it can be ascertained, it is as much a fact as anything else."

way, 102 Mass. 366; 1878, Williams v. Taunton, 125 Mass. 40; 1879, Eidt v. Cutter, 127 Mass. 524.

For the admissibility of experiments as circumstantial evidence, see ante, § 445. For the propriety of performing experiments before the jury, see post, § 1161.

§ 661. [1] Accord: 1902, Spencer v. Peterson, 41 Or. 257, 68 Pac. 519 (intent as to dedication of a way); 1840, Devling v. Williamson, 9 Watts Pa. 311, 316 (a witness to an interview; that "the contract was considered at an end by all parties", admitted); 1885, Plank v. Grimm, 62 Wis. 251, 253, 22 N. W. 470 (by a defendant in assault, as to his belief in the plaintiff's intention in wielding a weapon). Contra, but only more or less unsound: Fed. 1897, Rucker v. Bolles, 25 C. C. A. 600, 80 Fed. 504 (whether a person intended to remain a resident of New York; an acquaintance allowed to testify to his conduct only, not his intention); Cal. 1906, Sneed v. Marysville G. & E. Co., 149 Cal. 704, 87 Pac. 376 (boy killed by electrical contact; his mother's testimony that he did not know of electrical dangers, excluded; unsound on the facts; McLaughlin, J., diss.); Ga. 1903, Durrence v. Northern Nat'l Bank, 117 Ga. 385, 43 S. E. 726 (by B., that D. bought land in good faith and without notice, excluded); Me. 1857, Edwards v. Currier, 43 Me. 484 ("one not a party to the sale could not know the motives of those who were parties"); Mich. 1869, Gilman v. Riopelle, 18 Mich. 162 (excluded, "unless the motive was expressed"); Minn. 1866, State v. Garvey, 11 Minn. 163 (whether an assailant in firing intended to shoot the witness); 1901, State v. Pierce, 85 Minn. 112, 88 N. W. 417 (abortion; the defendant claimed that he was merely treating the woman for a vaginal disease; the woman's testimony as to his purpose in the operation, excluded; such a ruling affronts common sense); Nebr. 1901, Peterson v. State, 63 Nebr. 251, 88 N. W. 550 (whether the accused believed certain liquor to be intoxicating, excluded); Tex. 1921, Jones v. State, 89 Tex. Cr. 577, 232 S. W. 847 (homicide; deceased's wife's testimony that "she knew her husband was going to shoot the dog", held inadmissible); Ut. 1897, State v. Carrington, 15 Utah 480, 50 Pac. 526 ("no witness can state with what purpose another performed an act"); 1898, State v. Kilburn, 16 Utah 187, 52 Pac. 277 (whether the defendant meant, by certain expressions, that he was going to steal, excluded, from a hearer); 1898, Reese v. Min. Co., 17 Utah 489, 54 Pac. 759 (that the deceased knew the facts affecting his danger, excluded).

The Alabama rulings are also contra, and seem to have been the origin of this heresy; but they are so mixed with the application of the Opinion rule that they are placed under that head with the other Alabama rulings (post, § 1966).

1818, TILGHMAN, C. J., in Delancy v. Little, 4 S. & R. 503 (admitting testimony by Z. of what C. M. intended in locating a tract): "It has been argued that the intention of Charles McCormick, being confined to his own breast, was not a fact to which the witness could swear. This is a very subtle argument; but I cannot say that I feel the force of it. A man's intentions may be manifested by his words or his actions, and, when known, may be sworn to with as much certainty as any other fact. When a witness undertakes to swear to a thing of that kind, the jury who hear the oath will value it at what it is worth."

From the foregoing question, distinguish the questions (1) whether the Opinion rule affects testimony to another person's state of mind (post, § 1962), and (2) whether the Interest rule prevents a witness from testifying to his own state of mind (ante, § 581).

§ 662. Same: Improbabilities in Scientific Testimony. The inexpediency of applying the present principle (ante, § 659) in any but rare instances is the more apparent when a Court assumes to intrude into the technical domain of the engineer, the physician, and other scientific professional men, and to deny the possibilities of knowledge therein, by refusing to listen to that which appears, to the lay understanding of the tribunal, as an incredible assertion or an unlikely inference. Sometimes the exclusion has rested, not wholly on the impossibility of knowing the matter, nor yet wholly on the insufficiency of the particular witness' data of inference, but on mixed grounds, amounting to this, that the subject is one in which certain and accurate results are difficult to reach and upon which most persons' opinions will be merely notional and conjectural, so that it is not worth while to listen to testimony at all. In other words, the Court claims for the jury the exclusive privilege of guessing.[1]—The whole theory is of the past, unpractical, and ill-founded, and is obnoxious to the modern principle of receiving whatever light can be thrown upon the issue by competent persons and then leaving their credit to the jury:[2]

§ 662. [1] The following rulings illustrate various aspects of the tendency: 1857, State v. Knight, 43 Me. 133 (that no such a difference exists between the appearances of the blood of a man and of a sheep as will permit the identification of the former, excluded); 1859, Anon., 37 Miss. 58 (in a bastardy case, testimony that pregnancy from a first coition was highly improbable was rejected by the Court as "too uncertain, indefinite, and hypothetical", "mere speculative opinion"); 1900, Smitson v. S. P. Co., 37 Or. 74, 60 Pac. 907 (Moore, J.: "There may be certain physical facts the proof of the existence of which must necessarily overcome, as a matter of law, all testimony to the contrary. The present is not an age of miracles, and, if testimony be introduced at a trial which transcends the ordinary laws of the universe, the Court, being obliged to take judicial notice of such laws, would probably be compelled to reject such testimony"; applying it to testimony about a railroad accident); 1881, McLain v. Com., 99 Pa. 99 (the result of scientific investigation, that human blood cannot be distinguished from that of some animals, was not sanctioned as binding).

Compare the Opinion rule, as applied to testimony to possibility and probability (post, § 1976).

Distinguish those cases in which a mere possibility is not relevant in the cause: 1873, Davis v. State, 38 Md. 35 ("a mere possibility, not a rational probability"; here the question was "what kind of an instrument could have inflicted the wounds?", and it was allowed under the circumstances).

[2] Accord: 1905, Post v. U. S., 135 Fed. 1, 11, 67 C. C. A. 569 (fraud in mental healing; good opinion by Shelby, J.); 1905, Sun Ins. Office of London v. Western W. M. Co., 72 Kan. 41, 82 Pac. 513 (spontaneous combustion); 1870, Horton v. Green, 64 N. C. 67.

For testimony founded on observation by scientific apparatus — vacuum-ray, stethoscope, etc. — see post, §§ 665, 795.

Compare the criticisms of Bentham, Rationale of Judicial Evidence, b. V, c. XVI, § 5 (Bowring's ed. vol. VII, p. 87).

1851, RUFFIN, C. J., in State v. Clark, 12 Ired. 154: "When professors of the science swear they can thus distinguish, it would be taking too much on themselves, for persons who like Judges, are not adepts, to say the witness cannot thus distinguish, and on that ground refuse to hear his opinions at all. By such a course the judge would undertake of his own sufficiency to determine how far a particular science, not possessed by him, can carry human knowledge, and to determine it in opposition to the professors in that science."

§ 663. Same: Speculative Testimony to Personal Injuries and to Values. (1) In comparatively recent years, a few Courts have refused to accept, in personal injury trials, testimony as to the possible time of persistence of the injury or the possible development of certain consequences. As to this, first, the same answer may be made as to the general attitude already considered. If physicians are willing to estimate certain consequences as probable or possible, it is hardly proper for judges to affirm the untrustworthiness of these conclusions. The worthlessness, in casual instances, of the testimony of hired and unscrupulous physicians is no more a reason for rejecting all such testimony indiscriminately than the constant abuse of expert testimony generally is a reason for excluding all expert testimony without distinction. Next, it must be said that the Courts have in many of these rulings proceeded upon a confused apprehension of a legitimate doctrine of the law of Torts, namely, that recovery may be had for such injurious consequences only as are fairly certain or probable, not for merely possible harm. That is, a Court, in holding that the physician may not testify to possible harmful consequences, is not always ruling that testimony to possible consequences is evidentially improper, but is meaning to rule that such possible consequences are as a matter of substantive law not entitled to consideration at all. This is often the real explanation for such rulings.[1] But the evidential doctrine in question has little standing elsewhere,[2] and should not be extended.

(2) At one time it was advanced as a reason for rejecting opinions as to value that they dealt with a matter essentially uncertain, speculative, and incapable of definite ascertainment, and hence should not be the subject of testi-

§ 663. [1] California: 1907, Cordiner v. Los Angeles Traction Co., 5 Cal. App. 400, 91 Pac. 436 (personal injury); Iowa: 1921, Kime v. Owens, 191 Ia. 323, 182 N. W. 398 (personal injury; questions as to "possibility" of permanent injury, held improper); New York: 1872, Filer v. R. Co., 49 N. Y. 45 (whether an inflammation would probably recur, admitted); 1884, Strohm v. R. Co., 96 N. Y. 306; 1888, Turner v. Newburgh, 109 N. Y. 308, 16 N. E. 344 (whether injury caused disease, admitted); 1889, Griswold v. R. Co., 115 N. Y. 63, 21 N. E. 726 (distinguishing future recovery from present harm from the access of a new disease); 1889, McClain v. R. Co., 116 N. Y. 467, 22 N. E. 1062 (same); 1891, Wallace v. Oil Co., 128 N. Y. 580, 27 N. E. 956; 1911, Cross v. Syracuse, 200 N. Y. 393, 94 N. E. 184 (the Strohm case explained and limited); Wisconsin: 1909, Bucher v. Wisconsin Central R. Co., 139 Wis. 597, 120 N. W. 518 (permanence of impotency).

Compare the citations under the Opinion rule (post, § 1976).

[2] 1908, Donnelly v. Chicago City R. Co., 235 Ill. 35, 85 Ill. 233 (probable effect of injury, admitted); 1916, Fellows-Kimbrough v. Chicago City R. Co., 272 Ill. 71, 111 N. E. 499; 1889, Louisville N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Lucas, 119 Ind. 592, 21 N. E. 968 (probable result of an injury, admitted); 1850, Dupré v. Desmaret, 5 La. An. 591; Dupré v. Prescott, ib., 592; 1860, Paty v. Martin, 15 La. An. 620 (in these cases the testimony was not rejected; it was merely declared insufficient); 1888, Peterson v. R. Co., 38 Minn. 515, 39 N. W. 485 (probability of recovery, admitted).

Most of the cases on this subject deal with the Opinion rule (post, § 1676).

mony at all. The ground of the opponents of value-testimony was soon shifted to the Opinion rule, and the contest has since been settled in that field (post, § 1940); but the present reason, though of little consequence in the law of to-day, was advanced by eminent judges in leading opinions:

1840, NELSON, C. J., in Lincoln v. R. Co., 23 Wend. 434 (rejecting testimony to the probable loss of profits in business): "There may be a tolerable conjecture of the amount of damage, . . . but their opinions can rise no higher than mere conjecture. In the nature of the case no set or series of facts exists to which the application of their peculiar knowledge would naturally lead with anything like mathematical certainty. . . . Assume the whole [of the grounds] to be true, and loss does not follow with anything like the exactness that exists in matters of science and skill, more especially to any given amount. Even with the jury the damage, beyond the actual expenses out, can at best rise but little above conjecture." [3]

§ 664. Negative Knowledge; Testimony that a Fact would have been Seen or Heard had it occurred. In applying the foregoing principle requiring that the witness' inferences be based on adequate data (ante, § 659), Courts have often been asked to exclude testimony based on what may be called negative knowledge, i.e. testimony that a fact did not occur, founded on the witness' failure to hear or see a fact which he would supposedly have heard or seen if it had occurred. But there is no inherent weakness in this kind of knowledge. It rests on the same data of the senses. It may even sometimes be stronger than affirmative impressions. The only requirement is that the witness should have been so situated that in the ordinary course of events he would have heard or seen the fact had it occurred. This sort of testimony is constantly received, — particularly in proof of the failure to give railroad signals, the loss of a chattel, the absence of a witness, the non-existence of a fictitious person, the non-payment of money, and other negative facts.[1]

[3] Accord: 1837, Norman v. Wells, 17 Wend. N. Y. 162, Cowen, J.; 1847, Fish v. Dodge, 4 Denio N. Y. 318.

It must be noted that the present reason, though no longer advanced, was quite different from that based on the Opinion rule; and thus it was possible for the same Court to reject value-testimony on the present ground (Lincoln v. R. Co., 23 Wend. 434, value of business profits) and to admit it where the present objection did not exist (Brill v. Flagler, ib. 356).

Moreover, traces of this notion still survive at the present day in some courts and classes of cases, — where a Court rejects an estimate of what the value of land would have been if a railroad had not passed by (post, §§ 1943).

§ 664. [1] In the following rulings the testimony was received, except where otherwise noted: ENGLAND: 1780, Maskall's Trial, 21 How. St. Tr. 681 (a person at a riot, not seeing the accused among the active part of the mob); 1832, R. v. King, 5 C. & P. 123 (fictitious character of a name forged; testimony by a person who was otherwise unacquainted with the locality, but had made special inquiries, was admitted); 1834, R. v. Brannan, 6 C. & P. 326 (clerk in one department of a large commercial house, admitted to prove that no customer of a certain name was known to it).

CANADA: New Brunswick: 1918, Hallett v. Bank of Montreal, 43 D. L. R. 115 (money in an envelope); Ontario: 1906, Kastor Advertising Co. v. Coleman, 11 Ont. L. R. 262, 267 (whether certain advertisements were published, etc.); Nova Scotia: 1904, Hart v. Taylor, 37 N. Sc. 155 (conversations); Saskatchewan: 1921, Canadian Bank of Commerce v. Bezy, 63 D. L. R. 696, Sask. (mortgage payment).

UNITED STATES: Federal: 1897, Rhodes v. U. S., 25 C. C. A. 186, 79 Fed. 740 (whether a person had sore eyes; relatives and fellow-soldiers allowed to testify that they did not see the disease); 1902, Texas & P. R. Co. v. Watson, 190 U. S. 287, 23 Sup. 681 (setting fire to cotton); 1904, Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Andrews, 130 Fed. 65, 70, 64 C. C. A. 399 (railroad train); Alabama: 1850, Thomas v. Degraffenreid, 17 Ala. 607 (one who had lived 25 years in the family, who never knew or heard of a certain member being given and

1850, CHILTON, J., in Thomas v. Degraffenreid, 17 Ala. 607 (the issue being the title to slaves): "The witness C. states his intimacy with the family of A. T. [the alleged owner]. . . . If his relation to the family was such as he would in all probability have known the existence of a fact ostensible and notorious in its character had it existed, his want of all knowledge on the subject may be received as some evidence of its non-existence."

1876, COOLEY, C. J., in Chambers v. Hill, 34 Mich. 524 (excluding the testimony of a neighbor, who had formerly lived a short time in the family, as to conversations in the having certain slaves); 1853, Gilbert v. Gilbert, 22 Ala. 533 (relatives of the deceased, living in the neighborhood, who never heard of a will being made, excluded); 1853, Nelson v. Iverson, 24 Ala. 17 (an intimate friend who lived near by, who never knew of a transfer of a slave); 1857, Pool v. Devens, 30 Ala. 675 (did not see money given); 1858, Ward v. Reynolds, 32 Ala. 389, semble (a neighbor of old standing, who never knew or heard of a slave being unsound); 1859, Blakey's Heirs v. Blakey's Ex'x, 33 Ala. 614, 618 (one who had often boarded with the testator, and had never known of any "serious difficulty" between his wife and himself); 1875, Bennett v. State, 52 Ala. 370, semble (did not see or hear a person leave the room); 1880, Killen v. Lide, 65 Ala. 508 (excluding testimony that the witness would have known if his friend L. had any money, but believed he had none); 1884, Tesney v. State, 77 Ala. 33, 37 (testimony of a bystander, in a position to hear, that he did not hear the defendant curse); 1897, Burton v. State, 115 Ala. 1, 22 So. 585 (not finding a revolver, after searching in the likeliest place, admitted); 1900, Tennessee C. I. & R. Co. v. Hansford 125 Ala. 349, 28 So. 45 (if in a position to observe, allowable; here as to the ringing of an engine-bell, etc.);

Arizona: 1921, Davis v. Boggs, 22 Ariz. 497, 191 Pac. 116 (ringing the engine bell);

California: 1894, People v. Eppinger, 105 Cal. 36, 38 Pac. 538 (police-officer's search, held sufficient); 1896, People v. Sanders, 114 Cal. 216, 46 Pac. 153 (that a sheriff who had searched the whole region had not been able to find a trace of one J. K., admitted, to show that no such person existed); 1913, Thompson v. Los Angeles & L. D. B. R. Co., 165 Cal. 748, 134 Pac. 709 (witnesses who heard no motorman's signal, admitted);

Colorado: 1912, Colorado & S. R. Co. v. Lauter, 21 Colo. App. 101, 121 Pac. 137 (locomotive whistle);

Columbia (Dist.): 1895, Le Cointe v. U. S., 7 D. C. App. 16 (by a person present, that he heard no loud tones, etc.);

Connecticut: 1849, Abel v. Fitch, 20 Conn. 96 (arbitrators, testifying that they did not see an interlineation in the submission, and did not hear the subject of it argued);

Delaware: 1913, Philadelphia B. & W. R. Co. v. Gatta, 27 Del. 38, 85 Atl. 721 (careful opinion by Woolley, J.);

Florida: 1900, Gray v. State, 42 Fla. 174, 28 So. 53 (failure of neighbors to see a person about his home);

Georgia: 1848, Matthews v. Poythress, 4 Ga. 287, 295 (by a third person, that the plaintiff had never received value for a note); 1853, Johnson v. State, 14 Ga. 63 (a person working on a road, that he saw no one pass during a given time); 1881, McConnell v. State, 67 Ga. 635 (in general); 1896, Killian v. R. Co., 97 Ga. 727, 25 S. E. 384, semble (in general); 1906, Warrick v. State, 125 Ga. 133, 53 S. E. 1027 (murder);

Illinois: 1857, Coughlin v. People, 18 Ill. 267 (by a bystander, that the defendant did not strike the blow); 1861, Great Western R. Co. v. Hanks, 25 Ill. 242 (by an agent, that he did not make a purchase alleged); 1865, Rockwood v. Poundstone, 38 Ill. 201 (by a witness to boundaries, that he did not see a landmark); 1866, Frizell v. Cole, 42 Ill. 363 (by a bystander, that certain words were not spoken); 1882, Pennsylvania Co. v. Boylan, 104 Ill. 595, 599 (testimony by a track-workman, as to defective planks, that he did not know of any and would have known of them if there);

Indiana: 1882, Burchfield v. State, 82 Ind. 584 (by a bystander, that he did not hear a shot from a certain place); 1910, Grand Trunk Western R. Co. v. Reynolds, 175 Ind. 161, 92 N. E. 733 (railroad signals);

Iowa: 1898, Trimble v. Tautlinger, 104 Ia. 665, 74 N. W. 25 (non-hearing of certain words in a conversation, inadmissible);

Kansas: 1921, Weir v. Kansas City R. Co., 108 Kan. 610, 196 Pac. 442 (street-car gong);

Maryland: 1905, Northern C. R. Co. v. State, 100 Md. 404, 60 Atl. 19 (bystanders not hearing an engine-bell, said to be some evidence);

Massachusetts: 1824, Com. v Hershell, Thacher Cr. C. 70, 74 (to disprove that the defendant had sent goods to Charleston, testimony was received of the carter usually employed by him in shipping, that he had carried no such goods for the defendant); 1856, Com. v. Cooley, 6 Gray 352, 354 (by a bystander, that he did not hear anything said); 1898, Walsh v. R. Co., 171 Mass. 52, 50 N. E. 453 (that a passerby did not hear the locomotive-bell rung); 1899, McMahon v. McHale, 174 Mass. 320, 54 N. E. 854 (that employees saw no one inspect a derrick); 1904, McDonald v. N. Y. C. & H. R. R. Co., 186 Mass. 474, 72 N. E. 55 (railroad signals); 1909, Slattery v. New York N. H. & H. R. Co., 203 Mass. 453, 89 N. E. 622; family about a son's absence): "Had the witness lived in the family at the time, the proposed evidence might have had some value, especially as the subject was one of high importance to the parties concerned and, if spoken of at all, would have been likely to be discussed more or less by all the family. But the fact that a matter of family concern is not talked about before the neighbors is no evidence that it is not talked about at all."

1880, STONE, J., in Killen v. Lide, 65 Ala. 508: "Want of knowledge of things open to the senses, in a person who had the opportunity of knowing such fact if it existed, is some evidence, though slight, that the thing did not exist."

Nevertheless, from some source not traceable, there lingers in the judicial mind, in many quarters, an antiquated notion that negative impressions are not so probative as affirmative impressions; and a charge to the jury often embodies that notion, where the witnesses differ.[2] The truth is that the con-

Michigan: 1874, People v. Marion, 29 Mich. 31, 38 (that no such officer existed in the county, the witness having been personally acquainted with all); 1876, Chambers v. Hill, 34 Mich. 524 (quoted supra); 1882, Marcott v. R. Co., 49 Mich. 101, 13 N. W. 374 (the question "Could the whistle have blown anywhere near C. station and you not have heard it?" was excluded, because the witness might have been otherwise occupied so as not to notice the bell; this is erroneous); 1884, People v. Sharp, 53 Mich. 523, 525, 19 N. W. 168 (sheriff's failure to find an alleged subscribing witness, admitted to prove the name to be fictitious); 1894, Edwards v. Three Rivers, 102 Mich. 153, 60 N. W. 454 (whether a person had been lame, had varicose veins, etc.; that intimate acquaintances had never known of it, admitted);
Minnesota: 1906, Cotton v. Willmar & S. F. R. Co., 99 Minn. 366, 109 N. W. 835 (ringing of bell);
Missouri: 1920, State v. Smith, — Mo. —, 222 S. W. 455 (here the Court imprudently allows itself to be entrapped by an anonymous treatise into saying "Negative evidence is admissible only if it tends to contradict positive evidence introduced by the other party"; where this preposterous fallacy started is not worth investigation; but it represents poor sense, poor psychology, and poor justice; in the present case, a charge of murder by poisoning with strychnine in whisky, the accused's evidence, from twelve druggists in the county, that no strychnine had been sold to him for at least two years previously, was excluded; thus do absurd and unjust results flow from plausible word-jingles);
New Hampshire: 1844, Lyford v. Thurston, 16 N. H. 399, 407 (by a deed's subscribing witness, that he did not see any consideration paid);
New York: 1838, People v. Abbot, 19 Wend. 192, 194 (rape; an occasional resident in a family, not allowed to testify to not seeing any improper liberties said by the prosecutrix to have been taken with her secretly by the defendant); 1910, People v. Faber, 199 N. Y. 256, 92 N. E. 674 (approving the above passage);
North Carolina: Purnell v. R. Co., 122 N. C. 832, 29 S. E. 953 (by persons near cars, that they saw no flagman's light);
Oregon: 1900, State v. Mims, 36 Or. 315, 61 Pac. 888 (carrying weapons);
Pennsylvania: 1921, Rapp v. Central R. Co., 269 Pa. 266, 112 Atl. 440 (railroad crossing collision); 1916, Simons v. Philadelphia & R. R. Co., 254 Pa. 507, 98 Atl. 1080 (train signal);
Utah: 1922, Jensen v. Oregon S. L. R. Co., — Utah —, 204 Pac. 101 (locomotive signals);
Vermont: 1875, State v. Phair, 48 Vt. 377 (by a passenger in a midnight train, that he did not see A. on it); 1909, Ide v. Boston & Maine R., 83 Vt. 66, 74 Atl. 401 (that no other cause for a fire was seen than engine-sparks, allowed); 1912, Barney's Adm'x Quaker Oats Co., 85 Vt. 372, 82 Atl. 113 (that the deceased and others had never been heard to say anything about the danger of a dust explosion, admitted); 1911, Comstock's Admr. v. Jacobs, 84 Vt. 277, 78 Atl. 1017 (wife's not hearing of directions given by husband);
Washington: 1898, State v. Lattin, 19 Wash. 57, 52 Pac. 314 (by one living with the deceased, that he had never seen the latter with a pistol); 1911, Kahaley v. Frye, 62 Wash. 43, 113 Pac. 247 (injury by a runaway team);
Wisconsin: 1873, Ralph v. R. Co., 32 Wis. 181 (that a person did or did not receive an order from the other); 1911, Brown v. Milwaukee E. R. L. Co., 148 Wis. 98, 133 N. W. 589; 1913, Marinette v. Goodrich T. Co., 153 Wis. 92, 140 N. W. 1094 (whistle);
Washington: 1921, Smith v. Inland Empire R. Co., 114 Wash. 441, 195 Pac. 236 (railroad collision).

[2] This kind of evidence usually gives rise to a quibbling and futile discussion as to the relative weight of positive and negative testimony; the rule of law, however, has really nothing to say on such subjects, which go to the jury for determination. In the following cases, and many cited supra, the Supreme Court was improperly asked to hold that an instruction on the relative weight of negative knowledge should be given: 1906, Dillman v. McDaniel, 222 Ill. 276, 78 N. E. 591; 1905, ditions affecting correctness and fullness of observation are so numerous and varied that the one under consideration has a negligible or minor status.[3] Modern psychology sneers (or smiles) at the law's crude assumption that the complexities of human perception can be handled by some rules of thumb about negative testimony or the like.

The analogies of this use of negative testimony are seen in the rules admitting testimony of inability to find a document, to prove its loss (post, §§ 1196, 1678), or to find an attesting witness, to prove his absence (post, § 1312); of the absence of an entry in a public record (post, § 1633) or in an account-book (post, §§ 1531, 1556), to prove that no such transaction took place; of the absence of repute in a family (post, § 1495), to prove that the event of family history did not occur; and of the lack of traces or news of a person or a thing (ante, §§ 158–160) to show circumstantially that the person or thing is deceased, or non-existent, or is absent.

3. Hearsay Knowledge exceptionally admitted

§ 665. (1) Official Records; (2) Scientific Instruments and Tables (Vacuum Rays, etc.); (3) Expert Learning founded on Books. Under the general principle of Knowledge (ante, §§ 656, 657), testimony founded not on personal observation, but on the information of others, is inadmissible. But this cannot be enforced as a rule of unbending rigidity. There must be exceptions; for the affairs of life often recognize a practical trustworthiness in beliefs not founded altogether on personal observation. The law of Evidence must follow the facts of life. In a number of instances it has recognized exceptions to the rule.

(1) The records of a public office are not personally known by the official successors to be authentic. But their place of custody is of itself sufficient circumstantial evidence of genuineness (post, § 2158); and for much the same reason the belief of the succeeding incumbents is recognized as competent knowledge. In this and a few related ways, the testimony of a public officer, and even of private persons having to do with a mass of records, may be received.[1] So, too, a public officer's certificate or entry of a transaction actually

State v. Murray, 139 N. C. 540, 51 S. E. 775.

A rule-of-thumb for measuring testimonial weight has here grown up in some jurisdictions: "Where two witnesses, unimpeached, contradict each other, the presumption is in favor of the witness who swears affirmatively"; 1919, Estill v. Estill, 149 Ga. 384, 100 S. E. 365; 1920, Fullerton Lumber Co. v. Hosford, 42 S. D. 642, 176 N. W. 1017 (purchase of coal); 1908, Anderson v. Horlick M. M. Co., 137 Wis. 569, 119 N. W. 342; 1920, Suick v. Krom, 171 Wis. 254, 177 N. W. 20 (slander).

The rule is a discredit to the science of law, and should be discarded. The vain lucubrations to which it leads have no relation to the real probative value of specific testimony.

[3] From the point of view of logic and psychology as applicable to argument before the jury (not the rules of Admissibility), see the materials collected in the present author's "Principles of Judicial Proof, as given by Logic, Psychology, and General Experience, and illustrated in Judicial Trials" (1913), §§ 234–238, especially the passage from Professor Hans Gross, which elaborately analyzes the psychology of perception.

§ 665. [1] Canada: 1916, Canadian Pacific R. Co. v. Jackson, 27 D. L. R. 86, Can. Sup. (personal injury; actuarial table testified to be "one in actual use by a company dealing in that class of business", held proper as a basis of testimony, even if the witness is not sufficiently expert to be able "to explain the performed by his subordinates, not by himself, may be received.[2] But this is not yet conceded for the account-books of a private person.[3]

(2) The use of scientific instruments, apparatus, and calculating-tables, involves to some extent a dependence on the statements of other persons, even of anonymous observers. Yet it is not feasible for the scientific man to test every instrument himself; furthermore he finds that practically the standard methods are sufficiently to be trusted. Thus, the use of a vacuum-ray machine may give correct knowledge, though the user may neither have seen the object with his own eyes nor have made the calculations and adjustments on which the machine's trustworthiness depends. The adequacy of knowledge thus gained is recognized for a variety of standard instruments.[4] In some instances the calculating tables or statistical results are admitted directly, under an exception to the Hearsay rule.[5]

(3) The data of every science are enormous in scope and variety. No one professional man can know from personal observation more than a minute fraction of the data which he must every day treat as working truths. Hence a reliance on the reported data of fellow-scientists, learned by perusing their basis on which the table was prepared or to give an opinion worth something as to its reliability or correctness");

United States: 1894, Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Keegan, 152 Ill. 413, 418, 39 N. E. 33 (personal knowledge of existence of abstracts, etc., made before the fire of 1871, not required); 1886, Worcester v. Northborough, 140 Mass. 397, 402, 5 N. E. 491 (clerk of adjutant-general's office, of over twenty years' service, allowed to testify to custom of office prior to his incumbency); 1897, Westfield Cigar Co. v. Ins. Co., 169 Mass. 382, 47 N. E. 1026 (a city engineer, as to the official actions of his office, though really performed by a predecessor, admitted); 1884, Anderson v. Volmer, 83 Mo. 403, 407 (bill of goods sold; witness knowing nothing of it except from his books, excluded); 1897, Southern I. C. Line v. R. Co., — Tenn. —, 42 S. W. 529 (statements as to car mileage, etc., made by the general manager of the plaintiff, admitted, though not based in every detail on his own observation); 1890, Hill v. Kerr, 78 Tex. 217, 14 S. W. 566 (knowledge of the filing and date of filing of surveyor's notes, based in part on their mere presence in the office, admitted).

Contra: 1916, Com. v. Quinn, 222 Mass. 504, 111 N. E. 405 (false representations as to F. and M. being wealthy manufacturers at S.; a member of the board of assessors at S., not admitted to testify that neither F. nor M. were assessed for any property; the ruling is based on the ground that the assessor's record was the best evidence; but the ruling should have construed the testimony as to the assessor's testimony to the fact of no property, and should frankly have accepted the principle that an official assessor is qualified to testify on that point; there is too little flexibility in the requirement of personal knowledge as hitherto applied).

[2] Post, § 1635.

[3] Post, §§ 1530, 1555.

[4] The cases on vacuum rays, which deal chiefly with photographs, are placed post, § 795.

The cases on different forms of lenses are placed post, § 795, and on the telephone and the dictagraph, post, § 669.

Other examples are as follows: 1896, Grayson v. Lynch, 163 U. S. 468, 16 Sup. 1064 (veterinary surgeons in the Department of Agriculture, allowed to testify to the districts particularly infected with Texas cattle-fever, though they had not personally been there); 1898, More's Estate, 121 Cal. 608, 54 Pac. 97 (counting sheep by a registering-machine, verified by the witness as accurate in its operation, allowed); 1897, Hatcher v. Dunn, 102 Ia. 411, 71 N. W. 343 (a thermometer used in making tests, the variations indicated by a certificate of test made at Yale College and attached to the instrument, admitted); N. Y. St. 1851, c. 134, § 33, Civil Practice Act 1920, § 356; (no surveyor shall testify to a survey of lands without oath or other evidence, on demand, that "the chain or measure used by him was conformable to the standards of the State" at the time of survey; official sealer's certificate, admissible); Oh. Gen. Code Ann. 1921, § 2619 (surveyor not to testify to land-survey until he has sworn, if required, that his chain or measure was of legal standard); 1901, State v. McDaniel, 39 Or. 161, 65 Pac. 520 (fire department secretary, allowed to testify from an automatic indicator that no alarm had sounded).

[5] Post, § 1706.

reports in books and journals. The law must and does accept this kind of knowledge from scientific men. On the one hand, a mere layman, who comes to court and alleges a fact which he has learned only by reading a medical or a mathematical book, cannot be heard. But, on the other hand, to reject a professional physician or mathematician because the fact or some facts to which he testifies are known to him only upon the authority of others would be to ignore the accepted methods of professional work and to insist on finical and impossible standards. Yet it is not easy to express in usable form that element of professional competency which distinguishes the latter case from the former.[6] In general, the considerations which define the latter are (a) a professional experience, giving the witness a knowledge of the trustworthy authorities and the proper source of information, (b) an extent of personal observation in the general subject, enabling him to estimate the general plausibility, or probability of soundness, of the views expressed, (c) the impossibility of obtaining information on the particular technical detail except through reported data in part or entirely. The true solution must be to trust the discretion of the trial judge, exercised in the light of the nature of the subject and of the witness' equipments. The decisions show in general a liberal attitude in receiving technical testimony based on professional reading.

§ 666. (4) Execution and Contents of Documents, not personally observed. (a) A witness who testifies to the execution of a document, not merely to the handwriting,[1] will usually have seen the very act of affixing the signature.[2] Nevertheless, he may have observed circumstances which will suffice in place of this. The sufficiency of such circumstantial evidence is dealt with under the subject of Authentication of Documents (post, §§ 2131, 2148–2154). Moreover, he may have seen and heard the maker's subsequent acknowledgment of the document's genuineness. Such an acknowledgment would, as against the maker himself, be sufficient as an admission (post, §§ 1300, 2131); but, apart from that, it is an act of adoption of the document, equivalent to a reëxecution, and hence is now universally conceded to be a sufficient basis of testimony (post, § 1648). In the case of wills, the execution has been by statute everywhere made a formal act, in which the attesting witness' pres-

[6] 1879, Central R. Co. v. Mitchell, 63 Ga. 176, 180 (based partly on book-learning; admitted); 1906, Remsburg v. Iola P. C. Co., 73 Kan. 66, 84 Pac. 548 (expert on explosives, speaking partly from book learning, admitted); 1901, New York P. & N. R. Co. v. Jones, 94 Md. 24, 50 Atl. 423 (a private surveyor not allowed to testify that certain marks of the U. S. survey signified the altitude; a singular ruling); 1872, Howard v. Gt. Western Co., 109 Mass. 385 (a witness who had made a study of coals, etc., yet not dealt in them, and testified to a fuel's composition, admitted); 1888, Slocovich v. Ins. Co., 108 N. Y. 62, 14 N. E. 802 (shipping-expert; knowledge founded on Lloyd's books, etc., admitted); 1903, Scott v. R. Co., 43 Or. 26, 72 Pac. 594 (an engineer, not experienced in railroad building, but acquainted with the scientific literature, and otherwise experienced, allowed to testify to the approved slope of a railroad embankment).

For the cases concerning such testimony to medical matters, foreign law, and values or prices, see post, §§ 687, 690, 719.

For a physician's testimony based on the patient's statement of symptoms, see post, § 688.

§ 666. [1] For handwriting, see post, § 693.

[2] 1869, Filley v. Angell, 102 Mass. 68 (excluded, where the attesting witness was not present at a note's execution).

On this point, compare the ancient practice post, § 1510; Thayer, Prelim. Treat. Evid. 97.

ence is technically necessary (post, § 2456), so that the ordinary principle of testimonial knowledge has ceased to operate, and the requirements of the statute are the sole tests.

(b) A witness to the contents of a document may sometimes lack personal observation; but this rule is best examined in dealing with the subject of copies in general (post, § 1277).

§ 667. (5) Testifying to One's Own Age, or to an Adoptive Child's Age; or (6) to Another Person's Name, or (7) Residence. (5) Strictly speaking, one cannot exactly know his own age except upon hearsay information; for he is not capable of knowing this, or anything, until an appreciable time after birth. But practically a person's belief on this point has a satisfactory basis. Courts have commonly preferred to accept this practical certainty rather than to insist on academic nicety.[1] But in any case one may know whether at a particular time he was of one age or another, if the difference is as much as the time that must have brought him to the age of observation.[2] Moreover, a person who does not know the date of another's birth or of his own may know, by the association of events, whether he or the other was over or under a certain age at a certain time.[3]

§ 667. [1] Accord: Cal. 1896, People v. Ratz, 115 Cal. 132, 46 Pac. 915; Ga. 1904, McCollum v. State, 119 Ga. 308, 46 S. E. 413 (selling liquor to A., a minor; A. allowed to testify to his own age, though he knew it only from his mother, who was living and in the county); Ill. 1901, Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Lewondowski, 190 Ill. 301, 60 N. E. 497; Kan. 1892, State v. McClain, 49 Kan 730, 734, 31 Pac. 790 (seduction; prosecutrix' testimony to her age, admitted, her parents being dead); 1905, State v. Miller, 71 Kan. 200, 80 Pac. 51 (even though parents are available); Mass. 1886, Com. v. Stevenson, 142 Mass. 468, 8 N. E. 341, semble; 1898, Com. v. Hollis, 170 Mass. 433, 49 N. E. 632; 1895, Com. v. Phillips, 162 Mass. 504, 39 N. E. 109 (rape-prosecutrix under age of consent); Mich. 1876, Cheever v. Congdon, 34 Mich. 395; 1905, People v. Colbath, 141 Mich. 189, 104, N. W. 633 (rape under age; the prosecutrix being permitted to testify to her own age, a cross-examination as to what others, not members of the family, had told her, was held properly excluded; three judges diss.); Minn. 1892, Houlton v. Manteuffel, 51 Minn. 185, 187, 53 N. W. 541 (action on a note); Mo. 1896, State v. Marshall, 137 Mo. 463, 36 S. W. 619 (admitting it; but still intimating that where the witness appears on cross-examination to be speaking from mere hearsay the statement will be excluded; yet all testimony as to one's own age is founded on hearsay); 1897, State v. Marshall, 137 Mo. 463, 39 S. W. 63, semble; Mont. 1898, State v. Bowser, 21 Mont. 133, 53 Pac. 179 (rape-prosecutrix under age of consent); 1914, State v. Vinn, 50 Mont. 27, 144 Pac. 773 (statutory rape; that the witness gives, as the source of her knowledge, among other things a baptismal certificate, does not exclude her testimony); N. H. 1915, State v. Tetrault, 78 N. H. 14, 95 Atl. 669 (rape under age; the female allowed to testify to her own age); N. J. 1903, Hancock v. Supreme Council, — N. J. Eq. —, 55 Atl. 346 (a witness allowed to testify to his own and his elder brother's approximate age; good opinion by Dixon, J.); N. M. 1918, State v. Whitener, 25 N. M. 20, 175 Pac. 870 (girl of 14); Okl. 1915, Harris v. Hart, 49 Okl. 143, 151 Pac. 1038 (claimant to land); Tex. 1859, Brown v. Mitchell, 88 Tex. 350, 31 S. W. 621 (knowledge of sonship, based in part upon the mother calling him her son); 1906, Curry v. State, 50 Tex. Cr. 158, 94 S. W. 1058; W. Va. 1876, State v. Cain, 9 W. Va. 569; Wis. 1898, Dodge v. State, 100 Wis. 294, 75 N. W. 954; 1903, Loose v. State, 120 Wis. 115, 97 N. W. 526.

Contra: 1846, Doe v. Ford, 3 U. C. Q. B. 353.

Undecided: 1910, R. v. Farrell, 21 Ont. 540 (liquor-selling to a minor).

Of course, as admissions such statements are receivable: 1910, The King v. Turner, 1 K. B. 346, 362 (accused's statement of his age, as given for entry on the prison record; here the issue was whether he had been convicted three times since the age of 16, so as to be sentenced as an habitual criminal).

[2] 1879, Hill v. Eldredge, 126 Mass. 234 (whether he was 16 or 21 years old at a certain time).

[3] 1870, Folta v. State, 33 Ind. 217 (whether another was over 14).

Even if, from the present point of view, testimony to one's own age is not to be received, yet it may be regarded as asserting the family reputation on the subject, and the latter may thus be received under the exception to the Hearsay rule (post, § 1493).

The parents of an adoptive child, not having been present at its birth, have not personal knowledge, in the strictest sense, of the child's age. But their belief, based on the statements of the natural parents or of the original custodians of the child, together with their observation of the child's behavior during its growth, has for practical purposes a sufficient probability of correctness, — the probative value varying with the age at which the child was adopted and with the other circumstances of their acquisition of the child. To reject their testimony would be pedantic.[4]

(6) A person's name is the title by which habitually he calls himself and others call him. To know a person's name, therefore, is to have heard him so called by himself and by others. In strictness, such an utterance is not hearsay (post, § 1772), except where it is made as an assertion of fact. But, though it may be hearsay, as a source of information, yet it is universally relied upon as a source of knowledge. Courts have commonly accepted the testimony founded upon it.[5]

(7) A person's non-residence or non-existence in a place is in the practical affairs of life constantly ascertained by inquiries made and answers received in the region of alleged residence. Testimony based on such inquiries should be received. But many Courts have perversely applied here the strict rule. The frequent uses of such testimony occur in proof of a witness' non-residence or decease and a document's loss.[6]

[4] 1921, People v. Caldwell, — Cal. App. —, 203 Pac. 441 (rape under age of an adoptive child; the adoptive parents' testimony to her age, based on her appearance when adopted, and the hearsay of the orphans' home officers from whom she was obtained, admitted; sensible opinion by Works, J.); 1915, State v. Tetrault, 78 N. H. 14, 95 Atl. 669 (rape under age; adoptive parents' testimony to the female's age, based on her appearance when adopted and the statement of a deceased aunt, admitted).

So also the testimony of a husband to his wife's age; 1903, U. S. v. Bergantino, 3 P. I. 118 (age of accused).

[5] 1744, Heath's Trial, 18 How. St. Tr. 152 (Mr. Harwood, objecting to a statement that the witness saw Lady Altham at Wexford: "This evidence is founded upon a supposition that the lady he saw at Wexford was the Lady Altham; he says he was only told it was she, and cannot say it was of his own knowledge"; Witness: "I am pretty certain the lady I saw was Lady Altham. I am told, sir, that you are counsellor Harwood; am I not to believe you are? I am told that gentleman is counsellor Daley; I am morally assured of it, and I believe it"); 1857, R. v. Toole, 7 Cox Cr. 266 (one who merely saw X sign his name, admitted to prove the name); 1917, Hornsby v. State, 16 Ala. App. 89, 75 So. 637 (murder; proving the name of deceased as alleged in the indictment; citing the above text with approval).

Compare the cases cited ante, §§ 270, 413, post, § 2156, some of which apply this principle. Compare also the following: 1848, R. v. O'Doherty, 6 State Tr. N. S. 831, 884 (challenge to array; to prove the religion of a qualified juror, one who had not inquired of the juror himself but spoke from unspecified hearsay, excluded).

[6] The cases are found in the following places; §§ 668, 1196, 1313, 1405, 1725, 1789. The following case may serve as the lecturer's "horrible example" of extreme perversity; it shows the possibilities of non-commonsense which to-day can be exhibited by our courts; 1909, Chambers v. Morris, 159 Ala. 606, 48 So. 687; "Dowdell, J.: The witness John W. Chambers, having testified on his direct examination that one Colin S. Varnum, who had been examined as a witness on a former trial of the case, was dead, was then per-

§ 668. (8) Conversations through an Interpreter. When A speaks with B through an interpreter, because of ignorance of B's language, A cannot of his own hearing know what B said; he depends on the interpreter's report. Here no exception has been recognized to the general rule (though it might well have been). The witness A is allowed to testify only to what he heard from the interpreter, and the interpreter must be called to testify to what B said to him.[1] If, however, B is a party, whose admissions can be used, then the interpreter is to be regarded as B's agent, and the agent's statements on B's behalf (being in a language understood by the witness) are usable as B's admissions.[2]

§ 669. (9) Information received by Telephone or Dictagraph. When a witness testifies to a conversation heard by him over the telephone, two kinds of questions arise, in which the present principle is involved.

(a) The question of the identity or personality of the antiphonal speaker may arise. How can A know that the person speaking to him was really B? Here the principle of Authentication, with its related applications to letters and telegrams, is involved, and the precedents can best be considered in comparison (post, § 2155).

(b) The question of the tenor of the utterance may arise. Assuming that B was really the speaker, how can A know that B did utter the words? When A and B converse directly at the instrument, A's knowledge is based directly on his sense of hearing, aided by a scientific instrument of accepted correctness, and hence is receivable (on the principle of § 665, ante).

But if A, instead of speaking directly, converses with a clerk or operator, and the latter reports B's utterances to A, then A is no longer a witness having personal knowledge. Here three solutions present themselves. (1) The strict rule of personal knowledge (ante, § 657) may be applied, and A's testimony be excluded.[1] (2) Or, an exception to that rule may be recognized, on the mitted to testify as to what the said Varnum had sworn on the former trial. On the cross-examination of Chambers he was asked by counsel how he knew that Varnum was dead, in answer to which he said: 'I went to Varnum's former home in Houston County, Ala., and he was not there. His family was there, and they told me he was dead, and that he died at the time named. I saw his family physician, who told me that he attended him in his last sickness, and that he (Varnum) was dead. His former neighbors told me that Varnum was dead. I did not see him myself after death, and know that he is dead only from what these persons told me.' Thereupon the court, on motion of the plaintiff excluded all of the testimony of the witness Chambers as to what Varnum swore on the former trial. In this there was no error. Evidence of the declarations of the physician and the neighbors as to the death of Varnum were hearsay, and by no rule of evidence admissible."

§ 668. [1] The cases are collected under § 1810, post (Hearsay rule). For other principles applicable to interpreters and translators, see post, §§ 811, 1672.

[2] 1773, Fabrigas v. Mostyn, 20 How. St. Tr. 123, Gould, J.; 1903, Meacham v. State, 45 Fla. 71, 33 So. 983 (embezzlement from G.; conversation between G. and defendant, interpreted by W., allowed to be proved against G. by L., a bystander, who heard W., but did not understand Spanish, the language of G.); 1885, Sullivan v. Kuykendall, 82 Ky. 489; 1865, Camerlin v. Palmer Co., 10 All. 541; 1892, Com. v. Vose, 157 Mass. 393, 32 N. E. 355 (abortion; defendant spoke English, deceased French, witness French; testimony to the conversation between defendant and deceased through witness, received).

§ 669. [1] 1888, Wilson v. Coleman, 81 Ga. 299, 6 S. E. 693 (where the plaintiff was informed by his clerk of the answer).

For the question whether a notary's certificate of acknowledgment taken by telephone analogy of the foregoing exceptions, and of the exceptions to the Hearsay rule for regular entries in the course of business (post, § 1517) and of commercial reports (post, § 1702); this is the sound solution. (3) In any case, the doctrine of admissions may be invoked, where one of the speakers is a party to the cause, just as it may be for interpreters (ante, § 668). If B had sent his clerk to A to report orally B's orders or agreements, the clerk's statements would unquestionably be used as B's admissions. In the same way, the clerk's or the operator's report may be used against B, on the theory that the latter has made the former his agent for the purpose of communication. This theory has thus far sufficed for the Courts.[2]

Conversely, a bystander, listening to A's conversation with B at the telephone, is qualified to report A's utterances heard by him, but in strictness is not qualified to report B's utterances as repeated or alluded to by A during the conversation. Nevertheless, the strict application of the requirement of personal knowledge is here out of place, and leads to unpractical quibbles.[3]

(c) The dictagraph is merely a form of telephone, and the same questions are presented in testimony based upon its use.[4]

§ 670. (10) Testimony of Deceased or Absent Persons, under the Hearsay Exceptions. Under the exceptions to the Hearsay rule the testimony of the witness deceased or absent must equally be based on personal observation. The testimony is admitted in spite of its not having been given is effective, see post, § 1635, and whether it is conclusive, see post, § 1347.

[2] 1885, Sullivan v. Kuykendall, 82 Ky. 487 (to show the plaintiff's admissions, the defendant testified to a conversation over the telephone which an operator received and reported at the time to the defendant; the defendant's statements of what he was told were received; the operator was treated as the agent of the plaintiff to communicate, on the analogy of an interpreter); 1892, Oskamp v. Gladsden, 35 Nebr. 7, 52 N. W. 718 (here the witness received the message from an operator at a way station F., who repeated the message of the plaintiff at O., and served as intermediary; admitted).

[3] 1897, German Bank v. Citizens' Bank, 101 Ia. 530, 70 N. W. 769 (the hearer at a telephone, testifying to what he heard, not allowed to tell what he repeated to a bystander as the tenor of the message); 1904, McCarthy v. Peach, 186 Mass. 67, 70 N. E. 1029 (contract; the plaintiff conversed by telephone with the defendant, and a person present with the plaintiff was allowed to testify to the plaintiff's words, as a part of the conversation of the defendant, there being other evidence that the defendant was the person conversing from the other end of the line; this rests on the principle of § 2115, post); 1920, Jamaica Pond Garage v. Woodside M. Livery, 236 Mass. 541, 128 N. E. 881 (plaintiff telephoned defendant as to terms; plaintiff testified that defendant agreed to pay $4, defendant testified that he agreed only to $3.50; bystander's testimony to plaintiff's language at his telephone referring to $4, admitted).

[4] 1920, Schoborg v. U. S., 6th C. C. A., 264 Fed. 1, 9 (listeners to seditious utterances at a club-room meeting); 1915, Brindley v. State, 193 Ala. 43, 69 So. 536 (murder; admissions of defendant, made in jail, proved by witnesses listening through a detectaphone, the method of operation of the machine being fully explained); 1916, Padgett v. State, 125 Ark. 471, 188 S. W. 1158 (assault; defendant's conversation overheard in jail by the dictagraph, admitted); 1921, Miller v. People, 70 Colo. 313, 201 Pac. 41 (confessions of accused made when in jail in conversation with each other, overheard through a dictagraph by stenographers not knowing the accused's voices; "the competency of this evidence was at best very doubtful"); 1918, Com. v. Wakelin, 230 Mass. 567, 120 N. E. 209 (homicide; conversation by defendant in jail, proved by testimony of one using a dictagraph); 1913, State Minneapolis Milk Co., 124 Minn. 34, 144 N. W. 412 (detective's testimony to conversations heard by a dictagraph installed in the room where the conversers were, admitted; point not disputed); 1915, State v. Dougherty, 86 N. J. L. 525, 93 Atl. 98 (testimony to a conversation, based on hearing a dictagraph, admitted); 1914, People v. Eng Hing, 212 N. Y. 373, 106 N. E. 96 (affidavits based on dictagraph listening, received on a motion for a new trial).

on the stand subject to the test of cross-examination; but still it is testimony, and the person making the statements must have the means of knowledge expected normally of every witness. Nevertheless, there as here, exceptions to this requirement are recognized; for example, in statements of Family History, the person's knowledge is usually based on the family-reputation on the subject (post, § 1486); on Official Documents, the entry of an assessor or the certificate of a recorder of deeds is sometimes based on hearsay (post, § 1635). These exceptions, being peculiar to the kind of statement offered, are better dealt with under the respective subjects of the Hearsay rule.

4. Hypothetical Questions

§ 672. General Theory. Suppose the facts of an affray are in issue, and it is disputed whether A or B was the aggressor. A witness is asked, "Did you have an opportunity to observe the situation?" He answers, "I did; I was at the place at the time, and saw the affray." Then, "Is it your belief that A or B struck first?" and he expresses his belief. Suppose, again, the issue is as to the mode of a death, and certain indicia are in question. A physician is asked, "Have you considered the matter of a congestion of the windpipe with reference to the cause of death?" Answer, "I have." Then, "What mode of death, if any, does it here indicate as probable?" Answer, "Death by strangulation." Now in order that this latter answer may be further considered by the tribunal for the case in hand, it is obvious that the circumstance on which it rests, namely, the congestion of the windpipe, must be supplied, as a fact in the case, by testimony. This may be done in one of two ways, — either (1) by the testimony of the physician himself, based on a personal examination of the body, that the windpipe was congested, or (2) by the testimony of some one else who has made such a personal examination. But if the latter method is chosen — and this is the important circumstance — the fact to be considered by the physician must be placed before him as a hypothesis only. It may be assumed for the time being, but must afterwards be supplied by the testimony of another person. If this were not done, and if the single question were asked, "What in your opinion was the mode of this man's death?", it would be impossible for the tribunal to tell whether to accept the witness' conclusion or not; since, if the tribunal were to find that there had been no congestion of the windpipe, it would be unable to know whether the physician's conclusion had been based on a consideration of that circumstance alone or on a consideration of some other circumstance alone or of both. In other words, the hypothetical question to the physician, as to the data for inference, takes the place of the question to the bystander whether he was in a position to observe the affray.

The reasoning may be explained in the following propositions: 1. Testimony in the shape of inferences or conclusions rests always on certain premises of fact. That which has been called Observation, serving as the basis of belief in matters directly cognizable by the senses — as, the facts of an affray, a conversation, a trespass, and the like — is here replaced by what may be called a Consideration of the Premises. If the witness has not considered or had in mind these premises, his inference or opinion is good for nothing. 2. These premises, a consideration of which is essential to the formation of the conclusion or opinion, must somehow be supplied to the jury by testimony. The same witness may supply both premises or conclusion; or one witness may supply the premises and another the conclusion. The two are not necessarily connected. 3. If the latter method is chosen, and a witness is put forward to testify to the conclusion, the premises considered by him must be expressly stated, as the basis of his conclusion; otherwise, since his conclusion rests for its validity upon a consideration of the premises, the tribunal, if those premises are not made to accompany the conclusion, might be accepting a conclusion for which the witness had considered premises found by the tribunal not to be true. 4. Hence, the premises must be stated hypothetically in connection with the conclusion; then, by other testimony, the material for determining the truth of the assumed premises may be furnished to the tribunal.

The key to the situation, in short, is that there may be two distinct subjects of testimony, — premises, and inferences or conclusions; that the latter involves necessarily a consideration of the former; and that the tribunal must be furnished with the means of rejecting the latter if upon consultation they determine to reject the former, i.e. of distinguishing conclusions properly founded from conclusions improperly founded.[1]

That this is the orthodox and accepted theory of the hypothetical question in our law may be gathered from the following passages, in which the principle is indicated in one or another aspect:[2]

1806, ERSKINE, L. C., in Lord Melville's Trial, 29 How. St. Tr. 1065 (admitting the results of a calculation by the witness as to the profit made by the defendant from the sums alleged to have been received by him): "If you take away the foundation upon which it is made, which is matter for the Court afterwards, there is an end to the super-

§ 672. [1] Approved in Kearner v. Tanner Co., 31 R. I. 203, 76 Atl. 833 (1900).

[2] The earliest English and American rulings seem to be the following: 1760, Earl Ferrers. Trial, 19 How. St. Tr. 943 ("Please to inform their Lordships whether any and which of the circumstances which have been proved by the witnesses are symptoms of lunacy." . . . Earl of Hardwicke: "My Lords, this question is too general, tending to ask the doctor's opinion upon the result of the evidence; . . . if the noble Lord at the bar will divide the question and ask whether this or that particular fact is a symptom of lunacy, I daresay they will not object to it"); 1807, Beckwith v. Sydebotham, 1 Camp. 116 (a witness was called to say whether a ship having on Oct. 12 the defects already testified to could have been seaworthy on Sept. 2 preceding; Garrow pointed out the prejudice that might arise from asking the opinion of a witness on a statement which might be false, and was here 'ex parte' (in a deposition); Lord Ellenborough "held that this was like examining a physician or surgeon to say whether upon such and such symptoms a person whose life was insured could at the time of insurance have been in a good state of health. . . . As the truth of the facts stated to them was not certainly known, their opinion might not go for much; but still it was admissible evidence. The prejudice alluded to might be removed by asking them in cross-examination what they should think upon the statement of facts contended for on the other side"); 1824, State v. Powell, 7 N. J. L. 249 (objection overruled that the physician had not made a "personal examination" but was speaking upon a "mere supositious case").

structure. All the witness has done is to establish by calculation that such a stock from such a time will produce so much. He does not himself prove any fact, and the calculations he has made must therefore depend upon the facts which are proved by others." A Lord: "The data and facts stand as they did; it is a mere hypothetical question to the witness: If the fact stands so and so, what is the arithmetical result?"

1843, MAULE, J., in M'Naghten's Case, 10 Cl. & F. 207 (Question for the Judges: "Can a medical man conversant with the disease of insanity, who never saw the prisoner previously to the trial, but who was present during the whole trial and the examination of the witnesses, be asked his opinion as to the state of the prisoner's mind at the time of the commission of the alleged crime, etc.?"): "In principle it is open to this objection, that as the opinion of the witness is founded on those conclusions of fact which he forms from the evidence, and as it does not appear what these conclusions are, it may be that the evidence he gives is on such an assumption of facts as makes it irrelevant to the inquiry."

1851, CURTIS, J., in U. S. v. McGlue, 1 Curtis C. C. 1 (to the jury): "[The expert physicians] were, as you observed, not allowed to give their opinions upon the case; because the case, in point of fact, on which any one might give his opinion, might not be the case which you upon the evidence would find; and there would be no certain means of knowing whether it was so or not."

1854, DEAN, J., in Lake v. People, 1 Park. Cr. C. 557: "A question in physical science will afford an illustration. A motion which is the result of a combination of different forces invariably changes its direction if but one of the moving powers is withdrawn. Take away half of them, it would be reversed in its course. Experts might be called to prove any given motion; they might also be asked what would be the effect of certain combined forces; but in either case it is manifest that to have the opinion correct, all of the motive powers must be given. . . . To allow [medical testimony to be given on merely such part of the evidence as they heard] would be as dangerous a principle as to permit a juror to sit during a part of the trial and then unite with the rest in rendering a verdict."

1859, SHAW, C. J., in Dickenson v. Fitchburg, 13 Gray 556: "This objection [of counsel] assumes that the facts will be taken to be true because the witness has stated that he founds his opinion on them. But this is quite a mistake. . . . The question is put to him hypothetically, whether if certain facts testified to are true, he can form an opinion and what that opinion is. The jury will then be instructed, if the truth of any such fact is contested, first to consider whether the fact on which such opinion rests is proved to their satisfaction; if it is, then to give such weight to the opinion resting on it as it deserves; but if the fact is not proved by the evidence, then to give the opinion no weight."

1870, CHRISTIANCY, J., in Kempsey v. McGinniss, 21 Mich. 139: "As a collection or state of facts assumed, whether few or many, constitute in the aggregate the basis on which the opinion is asked, if it does not appear that the opinion would be the same with any of those facts omitted, it necessarily follows that if the jury should negative or fail to find any one of the assumed facts, the opinion expressed cannot be treated as evidence, but must be rejected by the jury. From these considerations it necessarily follows that the jury should know just what facts are assumed and enter into the collection or state of facts upon which the witnesses' opinions are based. Otherwise they cannot know whether they ought to treat the opinions as evidence at all, since they can form no opinion whether such assumed facts, or the opinions based upon them, are true or false. . . . If the witness be asked his opinion of a case assuming the testimony of certain specified witnesses to be true, and it appears that he did not hear the whole of their testimony, and it does not definitely appear what facts stated by them he has heard, and what he did not hear, the jury cannot know upon what state of facts he forms his opinion, nor whether the facts he has assumed are true, nor whether his opinion would have been the same if he had heard the whole."

1872, KINGMAN, C. J., in State v. Medlicott, 9 Kan. 288: "It does not appear anywhere what part of the medical testimony [the expert] had heard. . . . [Thus] neither the court, nor the jury, nor counsel, knew on what part of the medical testimony the opinion of the witnesses was founded; therefore the answer formed no criterion of the intelligence of the witness or his capacity to form a correct judgment. . . . It would be as sensible to test a person's knowledge of mathematics by asking him the sum of two and an unknown quantity at most known only to himself."

1886, Forsyth v. Doolittle, 120 U. S. 77, 7 Sup. 408 (approving the following charge): "You must readily see that the value of the answers to these questions depends largely, if not wholly, upon the fact whether the statements made in these questions are sustained by the proof. If the statements in these questions are not supported by the proof, then the answers to the questions are entitled to no weight because based upon false assumptions or statements of facts."

1898, MCGILL, Ch., in Malynak v. State, 61 N. J. L. 562, 40 Atl. 572: "It is plain that the method [of not asking hypothetically] would be valueless in a case where the testimony is conflicting, or is of such character as to be susceptible of more than one interpretation, and hence affords room for different deductions of fact, and where the expert does not make known his findings of fact, because it would be impossible for the jury to give weight to the opinion, for they could not know whether or not it would be applicable to the facts as they find them. In such case the juror of thoughtful mind would reject the opinion as valueless."

§ 673. False Theory: "Usurping the Province of the Jury." This being the plain, logical, and necessary reason for the use of the hypothetical question, it will easily be seen that it is not resorted to from any fear that the witness will "usurp the function of the jury."[1] This bugbear, vigorously denounced with sentimental appeals to the value of jury trial, has been made to serve again and again as the dreadful source of those evils which the hypothetical question enables us to avoid. But the expert is not trying to usurp that function, and could not if he would. He is not trying to usurp it, because his error, if any, is merely the common one of witnesses, that of presenting as knowledge what is really not knowledge. And he could not usurp it if he would, because the jury may still reject his testimony and accept his opponent's, and no legal power, not even the judge's order, can compel them to accept the witness' statement against their will. That there is no hidden danger to the jury system, and no need of invoking rhetoric in its aid, will be seen when it is remembered that the logical necessity for hypothetical questions is exactly the same for a judge sitting without a jury. Whatever the tribunal, it must separate premises from conclusions, and it must wait till the end of the trial and all the evidence on both sides is in, before it determines what premises are proved and therefore which opinions have a factual basis.

The "usurpation" theory (which appears in other fields of Evidence also) has done much to befog bench and bar, and to assist in producing some of the confusion which attends the precedents.

§ 673. [1] 1890, Ruger, C. J., in People v. McElvaine, 121 N. Y. 250, 24 N. E. 465: "It cannot be questioned but that the witness was by the question put in the place of the jury, and was allowed to determine upon his own judgment what their verdict ought to be in the case. . . . It substantially allowed him to usurp the functions of the jury in deciding the questions of fact."

§ 674. Actual Observation not necessary; Hypothetical Presentation may be sufficient. The first corollary of the theory of hypothetical questions, then, is that actual personal observation, hitherto (ante, § 657) assumed as in general necessary for a witness, is not needed where the testimony consists in conclusions drawn from premises, but is replaced by the consideration or examination of those premises; and this consideration of the premises may be afforded by presenting them hypothetically to the person who is to draw conclusions from them. In other words, the same person need not testify to both premises and conclusion. This general principle is now universally accepted; but it is worth while to mark it at the outset.

§ 675. Where Personal Observation is had, Hypothetical Presentation is unnecessary. Secondly, since it is the essential nature of conclusions that they are always relative to and dependent upon the premises, is not every offered opinion or conclusion hypothetical in its nature, whether the witness himself supplies the testimony to the premises or whether they are assumed in the question and then supplied by other testimony? This is certainly so. Even though the physician testifies himself to seeing the congestion of the windpipe, and then infers from these premises a death by strangulation, the jury may later decide that there was no congestion, and thus the opinion based on this premise fails also. Thus all opinions or conclusions are in a sense hypothetical. But does it follow that, when the opinion comes from the same witness who has received the basis of it by actual observation, those premises must be stated beforehand, hypothetically or otherwise, by him or to him? For example, the physician is asked, "Did you examine the body?": "Yes"; "State your opinion of the cause of death." Is it here necessary that he should first state in detail the facts of his personal observation, as premises, before he can give his opinion?

In academic nicety, yes; practically, no; and for the simple reason that on cross-examination each and every detail of the appearance he observed will be brought out and thus associated with his general conclusion as the grounds for it, and the tribunal will understand that the rejection of these data will destroy the validity of his opinion.

Through failure to perceive this limitation, Courts have sometimes sanctioned the requirement of an advance hypothetical statement even where the expert witness speaks from personal observation: [1]

§ 675. [1] Accord: 1898, Flannagan v. State, 106 Ga. 109, 32 S. E. 80 (facts observed by a medical man testifying to insanity must be specified); 1885, Louisville N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Falvey, 104 Ind. 418, 3 N. E. 389, 4 Ind. 908, semble; 1887, L. N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Wood, 113 Ind. 553, semble; 1895, McDonald v. McDonald, 142 Ind. 55, 41 N. E. 346, semble; 1879, Van Deusen v. Newcomer, 40 Mich. 119 (excluding "From what you found at the time in examining the patient, from your knowledge of her during the years previous, . . . what produced the condition she was in?"); 1914, Southern Iron & E. Co. v. Smith, 257 Mo. 226, 165 S. W. 804 ("In what condition were the engines?" "They were good", not allowed for the very persons who had overhauled them; this is absurd, and Graves, J., rightly dissents); 1874, Haggerty v. R. Co., 61 N. Y. 624, semble: 1901, State v. Simonis, 39 Or. 111, 65 Pac. 595; 1901, Easler v. R. Co., 59 S. C. 311, 37 S. E. 938 (physician, who had examined the plaintiff, not allowed to testify positively to the cause of her injury); 1898, Foster v. F. & C. Co., 99 Wis. 447, 75 N. W. 69 (attending physician; question as to cause of death "from

1878, MARSTON, J., in Hitchcock v. Burgett, 38 Mich. 507: "Even in cases where experts are called upon to give an opinion based upon their own personal observation or examination, the facts upon which the opinion is founded must all be stated [beforehand]; otherwise the witness might be giving an opinion which would have great weight with the jury, upon a state of facts very different from those found by them in the case on trial."

But this fallacy of being too unpractical in forcing the logic of the theory is generally and properly repudiated:[2]

1860, BRINKERHOFF, J., in Bellefontaine & I. R. Co. v. Bailey, 11 Oh. St. 337 (admitting a question, to an engineer who saw the injury, as to the possibility of avoiding it): "Undoubtedly, if the witness had been a stranger to the actual facts, it would then have been necessary to assume a state of facts as the foundation of any opinion he might give; but no such assumption, it seems to us, is necessary when the witness is or is properly presumed to be himself personally acquainted with the material facts of the case. . . . If an expert may give his opinion on facts testified to by others, we see no reason why he may not do so on facts presumably within his own personal knowledge; and if his knowledge of any material fact be wanting or defective, the parties have ample opportunity to show it by cross-examination and by testimony 'aliunde.'"

1868, DILLON, C. J., in State v. Felter, 25 Ia. 75: "If a physician visits a person and from actual examination or observation becomes acquainted with his mental condition, he may give an opinion respecting such mental condition at that time. . . . There is no more reason why he may not do this than why he might not testify that he saw a certain person at a certain time and that he was then laboring under an epileptic fit or under an attack of typhus fever, or had been stricken down and rendered unconscious by an apoplectic stroke."

§ 676. Where Personal Observation is lacking, Hypothetical Presentation must be used. Thirdly, though hypothetical presentation is thus not universally necessary, it is certainly necessary (for the reason just noted) where the premises are not supplied by the witness himself. The premises must be brought out in some way. If the witness cannot himself supply them by details of his own observation, they must be presented hypothetically.[1] all the evidence you had before you there at that time", excluded); 1898, Green v. Water Co., 101 Wis. 258, 77 N. W. 722 (expert testifying partly from personal examination as to cause of typhoid fever; hypothetical form required).

[2] Accord: 1897, New York El. Eq. Co. v. Blair, 25 C. C. A. 216, 79 Fed. 896; 1855, Bennett v. Fail, 26 Ala. 610 (a trial court was criticised for ignoring this); 1884, Louisville N. A. & C. K. Co. v. Shires, 108 Ill. 631; 1920, Independent Five and Ten Cent Stores v. Heller, 189 Ind. 554, 127 N. E. 439 (architects); 1868, State v. Felter, 25 Ia. 75 (quoted supra); 1871, State v. Reddick, 7 Kan. 149; 1914, George v. Shannon, 92 Kan. 801, 142 Pac. 967 (applying the rule liberally); 1896, McCarthy v. Boston Duck Co., 165 Mass. 165, 42 N. E. 568 (the trial Court's discretion controls); 1879, Brown v. Huffard, 69 Mo. 305 (value of services); 1896, People v. Youngs, 151 N. Y. 210, 45 N. E. 460; 1896, Tullis v. Rankin, 6 N. D. 44, 68 N. W. 187; 1900, State v. Foote, 58 S. C. 218, 36 S. E. 551; 1850, Jones v. White, 11 Humph. Tenn. 268; 1875, Pigg v. State, 43 Tex. 111; 1900, Wells v. Davis, 22 Utah 322, 62 Pac. 3.

§ 676. [1] 1891, Southern Bell Teleph. Co. v. Jordan, 87 Ga. 72, 13 S. E. 202; 1903, Western Union T. Co. v. Morris, 67 Kan. 410, 73 Pac. 108; 1906, Federal B. Co. v. Reeves, 73 Kan. 107, 84 Pac. 560 ("From the history of the case, as you learned it [from others] and from your diagnosis", excluded; Porter, J., diss.); 1876, State v. Pike, 65 Me. 111 (rejecting a question as to how long a post-mortem examination should have taken, no premises being presented: "It does not appear that the witness was present at the post-mortem examination of the deceased, or that he had any knowledge of the case or the kind or extent of the examination needed. . . . [The answer] would have been no more than the opinion of one who, so far as appeared, had no knowledge on which to base it"); 1896, Flaherty v. Powers, 167 Mass. 61, 44 N. E. 1074; 1867, Moore v. State, 17 Oh. St. 525; 1911, Weibert v. Hanan, 202 N. Y. 328, 95 N. E. 688 (opinion as to capacity of heating-apparatus).

§ 677. Personal Observation is not necessary, when Hypothetical Presentation is used. Fourthly, though the premises must be supplied in one form or the other, it is not necessary that both be available. If the witness is skilled enough (post, § 679), his opinion may be adequately obtained upon hypothetical data alone; and it is immaterial whether he has ever seen the person, place, or thing in question: [1]

1873, GRAY, C. J., in Miller v. Smith, 112 Mass. 475: "A witness having the requisite knowledge and experience may always be examined by hypothetical questions, even if he has not seen the particular subject to which the trial relates and has not heard all the other evidence given in the case."

§ 678. The same Skilled Witness may testify from both Personal Observation and Hypothetical Presentation. On the other hand, no harm is done if the skilled witness has had personal observation. His testimony may be based upon both forms of data.[1] It will not always happen that persons having special skill will be totally devoid of actual observation of the matter in hand; they may have partially observed it, and their opinion may be desired upon premises partly furnished by personal observation, partly remaining to be supplied by hypothesis.

§ 679. Only Skilled Witnesses may be asked Hypothetical Questions. Fifthly, since hypothetical presentation is proper and necessary only where § 677. [1] 1894, Missouri Pac. R. Co. v. Hail, 14 C. C. A. 153, 66 Fed. 868 (shrinkage of cattle); 1888, Central City Ins. Co. v. Oates, 86 Ala. 558, 6 So. 83 (value of a burned house); 1904, Parrish v. State, 139 Ala. 16, 36 So. 1012; 1879, Cook v. Fuson, 66 Ind. 530 (the issue arose on a warranty as to a cellar's dryness, and the witness had never been in the cellar or had any personal knowledge of it, but had lived in a house near by where the cellar had been wet; his testimony that the cellar in question could not be kept dry was rejected); 1875, Lawrence v. Boston, 119 Mass. 130, 132 (land value); 1895, Pierce v. Boston, 164 Mass. 92, 41 N. E. 229 (land value); 1888, Slocovich v. Ins. Co., 108 N. Y. 64, 14 N. E. 802 (value of a ship); 1859, Mish v. Wood, 34 Pa. 452 (value testimony, based on a description of goods lost).

Contra: 1896, Schneider Br. Co. v. A. I. M. Co., 23 C. C. A. 89, 77 Fed. 138, semble (opinion on the net value of a machine, the price being fixed and the only material question being the value of the defects, excluded); 1892, State v. Maier, 36 W. Va. 757, 761, 15 S. E. 991 ("Are not love and jealousy causes of insanity?", excluded; erroneous).

It has been said that an object that can be produced must be produced, and not described hypothetically; but this seems unnecessary: 1859, Beecher v. Denniston, 13 Gray Mass. 355, semble.

Compare § 1181, post (production of chattels).

§ 678. [1] 1915, Biddle v. Riley, — Ark. —, 176 S. W. 134 (personal injury); 1895, Mullin's Estate, 110 Cal. 252, 42 Pac. 646 (a physician as to his patient's sanity); 1909, Washington A. & M. V. R. Co. v. Lukens, 32 D. C. App. 442 (physician's answer based on a hypothetical question plus the facts as examined by him, admitted, because he had already stated the facts as examined by him); 1885, Louisville N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Flavey, 104 Ind. 418, 3 N. E. 389, 4 id. 908; 1887, L. N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Wood, 113 Ind. 553, 14 N. E. 572, 16 N. E. 197; 1903, Skelton v. R. Co., 88 Minn. 192, 92 N. W. 960; 1896, State v. Wright, 134 Mo. 404, 35 S. W. 1145 (a case hypothetically stated, together with the data of a personal examination, held proper for a physician giving an opinion on sanity); 1878, Pannell v. Com., 86 Pa. 269; 1881, State v. Clark, 15 S. C. 407 (a physician testified partly upon his own post-mortem examination and partly on other testimony); 1865, Wetherbee's Ex'rs v. Wetherbee's Heirs, 38 Vt. 454; 1895, Tebo v. Augusta, 90 Wis. 405, 63 N. W. 1045; 1898, Selleck v. Janesville, 100 Wis. 157, 75 N. W. 975.

Contra: 1893, State v. Welsor, 117 Mo. 570, 581, 21 S. W. 443 (physician's statement, based in part on personal examination and in part on hypothetical data, excluded); 1908, Cobb v. United E. & C. Co., 191 N. Y. 475, 34 N. E. 395, semble.

the witness has not had actual observation, does it follow that to any one whatever, who has not had actual observation, the premises may be presented hypothetically and his conclusion asked upon them? They might, so far as the present principle is concerned, which requires only that the premises must be supplied in at least one form or the other. But by the Opinion rule (post, § 1918) the tribunal will not listen to conclusions or opinions from persons who possess no more skill than the tribunal itself in drawing inferences from the premises, i.e. persons of only ordinary skill. The hypothetical form of presentation is therefore proper for those witnesses only who bring to the consideration of the particular premises in hand a more than ordinary skill.[1] The detailed tests which define an expert witness are a part of the Opinion rule (post, §§ 1923, 1924). It is sufficient to note here the effect of that rule on the use of hypothetical questions.

§ 680. If the Premises fail, the Conclusion must be disregarded. Sixthly, It follows as a necessary part of the theory, that if the premises are ultimately rejected by the jury as untrue, the testimonial conclusion based on them must also be disregarded. This is plain enough where a witness has claimed to have personal observation and is disbelieved. It is only where his testimony is based on hypothetical data that the same result needs to be emphasized.[1] But the failure which justifies rejection must be a failure in some one or more important data, not merely in a trifling respect.[2]

§ 681. Form and Scope of Question; (1) Particularization of the Premises to be used. The question of greatest practical difficulty and of most frequent occurrence concerns the form and the scope of the hypothetical question. The detailed rules rest on simple considerations, partly of principle, partly of practical expediency. The difficulty lies in securing the best results in their § 679. [1] 1900, Ragland v. State, 125 Ala. 12, 27 So. 983; 1858, Dunham's Appeal, 27 Conn. 197; 1906, Dolbeer's Estate, 149 Cal. 227, 86 Pac. 695; 1912, Chicago & W. I. R. Co. v. Heidenreich, 254 Ill. 231, 98 N. E. 567 (hypothetical opinion of value, based on lists of sales of other property, submitted to the witness, held improper, on the singular ground that value testimony is not expert testimony).

Even on cross-examination to test the opinion already expressed: 1912, Lang v. Lang, 157 Ia. 300, 135 N. W. 604.

§ 680. [1] 1895, Delaware L. & W. R. Co. v. Roalefs, 16 C. C. A. 607, 70 Fed. 23 ("the opinion of the doctor is indivisible; it must be accepted or rejected as a whole; there is nothing to indicate how much it rests on the declaration [of the patient] and how much on personal observation"); 1903, Kirsher v. Kirsher, 120 Ia. 337, 94 N. W. 846; 1904, Stutsman v. Sharpless, 125 Ia. 335, 101 N. W. 105; 1861, Com. v. Mullins, 2 All. Mass. 296; 1886, People v. Sessions, 58 Mich. 599, 26 N. W. 291; 1884, Loucks v. R. Co., 31 Minn. 534, 18 N. W. 651.

[2] Compare the foregoing cases and the following: 1886, Forsyth v. Doolittle, 120 U. S. 76, 7 Sup. 408; 1877, Eggers v. Eggers, 57 Ind. 461; 1885, Epp v. State, 102 Ind. 554, 1 N. E. 491; 1909, Peterson v. Brackey, 143 Ia. 75, 119 N. W. 967 (phrasing of the instruction, discussed); 1917, Ingwersen v. Carr, 180 Ia. 988, 164 N. W. 217; 1863, Hovey v. Chase, 52 Me. 313; 1866, Boardman v. Woodman, 47 N. H. 135 ("so proved as to resemble as near as may be the case under consideration; the jury can judge whether the case supposed is so far like the one they are considering as that the opinion of the expert on the supposed case is any guide to them"); 1916, Haas v. Kundtz, 94 Oh. 238, 113 N. E. 826 (an instruction requiring the jury to discard the opinion if "any material fact" used as its basis was not proven, held not prejudicial in this case).

Contra: 1909, Burk v. Reese, — Nebr. —, 121 N. W. 1016 (here the Court lays down the unpractical and logic-beridden rule that if any one assumption, however unimportant, is not established, the opinion must be rejected).

application. The fundamental purpose of hypothetical presentation — furnishing the tribunal with the means of knowing just what premises the conclusion is based upon — requires that the data to serve as premises should be particularized. Various situations raise questions under this head:

(a) May the witness be asked, "Upon all the testimony in the case, what is your opinion on a given point?" The objection to this form of question is stated in the following passage:

1890, RUGER, C. J., in People v McElvaine, 121 N. Y. 250, 24 N. E. 465: "It would then be impossible for the jury to determine the facts upon which the witness bases his opinion whether such facts were proved or not. . . . When specific facts either proved or assumed to have been proved, are embraced in the question, the jury are enabled to determine whether the answer to such question is based upon facts which have been proved in the case or not."

Accordingly, it is generally accepted that such a question is improper.[1] Yet many Courts, having regard to the reason of the rule, are willing to permit such a question where that reason does not exist, i.e. where the testimony is not conflicting and hence the witness may assume it all as true and is not obliged to choose (unknown to the jury) between conflicting witnesses.[2] The § 681. [1] Eng. 1760, Earl Ferrers' Trial, 19 How. St. Tr. 943; 1821, R. v. Wright, R. & R. 456 (uncertain); 1827, R. v. Wright, R. & R. 457; 1831, R. v. Searle, 1 Moo. & Rob. 75 (uncertain); 1840, Sills v. Brown, 9 C. & P. 604; 1840, R. v. Oxford, 4 State Tr. N. S. 497, 532; Can. 1870, Key v. Thomson, 13 N. Br. 227; 1882, Diffin v. Dow, 22 N. Br. 108; Federal: 1855, The Clement, 2 Curt. C. C. 369; Ala. 1903, Porter v. State, 135 Ala. 51, 33 So. 694; Cal. 1880, People v. Goldenson, 76 Cal. 350, 19 Pac. 161; Ind. 1871, Rush v. Magee, 36 Ind. 73; Bishop v. Spining, 38 Ind. 144; Iowa, 1868, State v. Felter, 25 Ia. 74; 1876, Butler v. Ins. Co., 45 Ia. 98; 1882, Smith v. Hickenbotton, 57 Ia. 738, 11 N. W. 664; Mass. 1856, Woodbury v. Obear, 7 Gray 471; Miss. 1913, Prewitt v. State, 106 Miss. 82, 63 So. 330 (question based partly on unspecified personal knowledge, partly on unspecified testimony, and partly on specified data, held improper on the facts); N. H. 1858, Spear v. Richardson, 37 N. H. 34, semble; N. Y. 1855, People v. Lake, 12 N. Y. 362; 1890, People v. McElvaine, 121 N. Y. 250, 24 N. E. 465; S. Dak. 1896, Aultman Co. v. Ferguson, 8 S. D. 458, 66 N. W. 1801; Wis. 1883, Bennett v. State, 57 Wis. 86, 14 N. W. 912, semble; 1885, Quinn v. Higgins, 63 Wis. 669, 24 N. W. 482, semble. Contra: 1918, Mayor etc. of Baltimore v. State, 132 Md. 113, 103 Atl. 426 (opinion given "after reading all the testimony", admitted).

[2] The Courts put this rule in different ways. Some declare admissible a question based on all the testimony, unless it is conflicting; others declare such a question inadmissible, unless the facts testified to are undisputed by the opposite witnesses. There seems to be no practical difference, except that it would be easier to justify the question in the former case: Ala. 1878, Page v. State, 61 Ala. 18; Ill. 1895, Pyle v. Pyle, 158 Ill. 289, 41 N. E. 999; Kan. 1870, Tefft v. Wilcox, 6 Kan. 58; Md. 1856, Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Thompson, 10 Md. 84; 1865, Walker v. Rogers, 24 Md. 243; Mass. 1895, Chalmers v. Mfg. Co., 164 Mass. 532, 42 N. E. 98; 1898, Oliver v. R. Co., 170 Mass. 222, 49 N. E. 117; 1919, Com. v. Russ, 232 Mass. 58, 122 N. E. 176; Mich. 1870, Kempsey v. McGinness, 21 Mich. 138; Minn. 1875, Getchell v. Hill, 19 Minn. 472; 1876, State v. Lautenschlager, 22 Minn. 521; 1881, Storer's Will, 28 Minn. 11; N. Dak. 1913, State v. Reilly, 25 N. D. 339, 141 N. W. 720, 734; Oh. 1851, Cincinnati Mut. Ins. Co. v. May, 20 Oh. 211, 223; Pa. 1882, Olmsted v. Gere, 100 Pa. 131, semble; 1922, Wissinger v. Valley Smokeless Coal Co., 271 Pa. 566, 115 Atl. 880 (damage to land); Tex. 1887, Armendaiz v. Stillman, 67 Tex. 462, 3 S. W. 678; Vt. 1862, Fairchild v. Bascomb, 35 Vt. 398, semble; 1878, Gilman v. Strafford, 50 Vt. 725; State v. Hayden, 51 id. 304; Wis. 1849, Luning v. State, 1 Chand. 184; 1883, Bennett v. State, 57 Wis. 81, 14 N. W. 912 (modifying Luning v. State; advising hypothetical questions as a rule; and if the testimony of one or all the witnesses is allowed to be taken, in case of conflict or doubt, the witness should state beforehand his understanding of the testimony he is speaking of); 1886, Gates v. Fleischer, 67 Wis. 508, 30 N. W. 674 (applying this liberally); 1888, Kreuziger v. R. Co., 73 Wis. 163, 40 N. W. 657.

matter should be left to the discretion of the trial Court.[3] It may be noted, that whenever this form of question is to be allowed, it must appear that the witness has in fact heard all the testimony.

(b) The same objections apply to the question, "On what you have heard of the testimony in this case, what is your opinion?"; with the additional objection that it is here still more difficult to understand the premises actually in the witness' mind, since no one else knows exactly how much he has heard.[4]

(c) The question, "Assuming the truth of the testimony for the plaintiff (or for the defendant), what is your opinion?" is not seriously affected by the reason of the uncertainty of the data; although the witnesses on the same side do not always agree entirely. But the further reason remains, that it is difficult to fix in the mind (whether of witness or of jury) all the facts testified to by a number of witnesses and to associate them with this particular opinion as its premises. There are opposing rulings upon this form of question.[5] The only proper solution is to leave it to the discretion of the trial judge to accept the question when it does fair justice.[6] In any case, the witness must have heard all the testimony he is asked about.

(d) A question assuming the truth of the testimony of several specified witnesses may very well suffice, if the facts they testify to are likely to be definitely in the minds of the witness and the jury. This must depend on the circumstances of the case. There should be no fixed rule excluding such a question; and in the precedents it can hardly be said that a fixed rule is intended to be laid down.[7]

[3] 1875, Getchell v. Hill, 19 Minn. 472; 1876, State v. Lautenschlager, 21 Minn. 521; 1881, Storer's Will, 28 Minn. 11, 8 N. W. 827; 1907, Decker v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 102 Minn. 69, 112 N. W. 901.

[4] 1859, Champ v. Com., 2 Metc. Ky. 27; 1896, Connell v. McNett, 109 Mich. 329, 67 N. W. 344; 1898, Malynak v. State, 61 N. J. L. 562, 40 Atl. 572; 1854, Lake v. People, 1 Park. Cr. C. N. Y. 557; 1860, Sanchez v. People, 22 N. Y. 154.

Contra: 1907, Chicago Union Traction Co. v. Roberts, 229 Ill. 481, 82 N. E. 401 (here allowed, only because proper objection was not made); 1897, Swanson v. Mellen, 66 Minn. 486, 69 N. W. 620 (a part of the testimony only was heard, but as it related to services of a common and uniform kind, an opinion of value based on it was admitted); 1903, State v. Privitt, 175 Mo. 207, 75 S. W. 457 (opinion based on the testimony as he heard it, with a recital of the testimony of the only witness he had not heard, allowed); 1878, State v. Hayden, 51 Vt. 299, 306.

[5] Admitted: 1880, Polk v. State, 36 Ark. 123; 1887, Schneider v. Manning, 121 Ill. 387, 12 N. E. 267; 1895, Pyle v. Pyle, 158 id. 289, 41 N. E. 999; 1921, People v. Lowhone, 296 Ill. 391, 129 N. E. 781 ("Taking the testimony offered and your observations, etc., in your opinion was the defendant sane or insane?" held not improper on the facts); 1905, Com. v. Johnson, 188 Mass. 382, 74 N. E. 939 ("From all you have observed of this man, and from all you have heard in court", allowed, where the only evidence as to insanity consisted of the defendant's own witnesses and admissions, accepted as true, and the expert's personal observation; the trial Court's discretion to control).

Excluded: 1882, Diffin v. Dow, 22 N. Br. 107 ("Is the statement of the medical case, as given by the defendant in evidence, reconcilable with the facts, assuming them to be true, as given by the other witnesses?" excluded); 1890, People v. McElvaine, 121 N. Y. 250, 24 N. E. 465.

[6] For instance, where the opinion, when expressed, favors the opponent, and could not more favor him upon any supposition, there is no reason for him to object to the scope of the question: 1872, Dexter v. Hall, 15 Wall. 26.

[7] CANADA: 1870, Key v. Thomson, 2 Han. N. Br. 224, 228 (testimony based on the evidence of other witnesses, excluded).

UNITED STATES: Ala. 1857, Wilkinson v. Moseley, 30 Ala. 573 (two witnesses; excluded); Cal. 1909, People v. LeDoux, 155 Cal. 535, 102 Pac. 517 (question based on testimony

(e) A question assuming the truth of a single witness' testimony will usually be proper. Yet here, too, the scope of the testimony may be so extended or so confused that the assumed premises are not clear, and an express rehearsal of the assumed facts should be made.[8] As before, it should rest in the discretion of the trial judge.

(f) Questions in any other way covering a scope which is not clear may always be excluded; much depending on the discretion of the trial judge.[9] of "certain other witnesses", excluded); Md. 1900, Baltimore City P. R. Co. v. Tanner, 90 Md. 315, 45 Atl. 188 (several witnesses' testimony to undisputed facts, allowed); 1916, Damm v. State 128 Md. 665, 97 Atl. 645 (abortion: "assuming that the testimony that you have heard from these various doctors is true", allowed, in the trial Court's discretion; approving the text above); 1916, Rickards v. State, 129 Md. 184, 98 Atl. 525 (Damm v. State followed); Mass. 1904, Burnside v. Everett, 186 Mass. 4, 71 N. E. 82 (question based on the testimony of several witnesses not conflicting, held proper); N. Y. 1876, Reynolds v. Robinson, 64 N. Y. 595 (the value of services in nursing a cancer patient was in issue, and the witness' opinion was based on hearing the testimony of three witnesses of the plaintiff as to the nature of the services; excluded); 1880, Guiterman v. Steamship Co., 83 N. Y. 366 (several witnesses to a collision; excluded); 1893, Snelling's Will, 136 N. Y. 515, 518, 32 N. E. 1006 (two witnesses; excluded); N. Dak. 1908, Walters v. Rock, 18 N. D. 45, 115 N. W. 511 (allowed, but disapproved); Wis. 1899, Cornell v. State, 104 Wis. 527, 80 N. W. 745 (allowable, for the testimony of a few conflicting witnesses, but not for voluminous and conflicting testimony; the matter to be in the trial Court's discretion).

W. Va. A question involving reference to former testimony was excluded in McMechen v. McMechen, 17 W. Va. 692 (1881), where the testimony of two witnesses was named; it does not appear whether the Court intended to prohibit all reference to even one witness' testimony; but in Kerr v. Lunsford, 31 W. Va. 672, 8 S. E. 493 (1888), it was said that "the opinion of medical experts founded on testimony already in the case can be given only on a hypothetical case"; in 1891, however, it was expressly held, ignoring Kerr v. Lunsford, in Bowen v. Huntington, 35 W. Va. 694, 14 S. E. 217, for a question based on a reference to three witnesses' testimony, that this form was proper.

[8] Admitted: Federal: 1912, M'Intyre v. Modern Woodmen, 6th C. C. A., 200 Fed. 1 (distinguishing Manuf. A. I. Co. v. Dorgan, infra; the two cases illustrate the degree of weird logic and dream-reasoning which some Courts have developed on this topic); La. 1874, State v. Baptiste, 26 La. An. 137; Mass. 1853, Twombly v. Leach, 11 Cush. 402, 405; 1864, Hunt v. Lowell Gaslight Co., 8 All. 170; N. Y. 1875, McCollum v. Seward, 62 N. Y. 318; 1879, Seymour v. Fellows, 77 N. Y. 180; Or. 1913, Latourette v. Miller, 67 Or. 141, 135 Pac. 327 (but here excluded, because the witness had heard only a part); R. I. 1920, Henderson v. Dimond, 43 R. I. 60, 110 Atl. 388 (allowable in discretion; but disparaged); Vt. 1878, Gilman v. Strafford, 50 Vt. 725; State v. Hayden, 51 Vt. 305; Wis. 1867, Wright v. Hardy, 22 Wis. 353; 1883, Bennett v. State, 57 Wis. 81, 14 N. W. 912; 1897, McKeon v. R. Co., 94 Wis. 477, 69 N. W. 175 (part being heard, the rest read from a stenographic report); 1899, Cornell v. State, 104 Wis. 527, 80 N. W. 745.

Excluded: Federal: 1893, Manuf. A. I. Co. v. Dorgan, 16 U. S. App. 290, 299, 7 C. C. A. 581, 58 Fed. 945; Conn. 1893, Barber's Estate, 63 Conn. 393, 408, 27 Atl. 973 (testimony of another witness, with additional data; improper on the facts); Ill. 1898, Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Glenny, 175 Ill. 238, 51 N. E. 896; 1905, Elgin A. & S. Traction Co. v. Wilson, 217 Ill. 47, 75 N. E. 436 (opinion based in part on the testimony of the plaintiff, excluded); Ind. 1883, Elliott v. Russell, 92 Ind. 530 (an opinion as to the results of a hanging "for the time and in the manner plaintiff said he was hung"); 1884, Craig v. R. Co., 98 Ind. 112; 1911, Ditton v. Hart, 175 Ind. 181, 93 N. E. 961 (opinion based on a clause in the will and a letter from the draughtsman, excluded; opinion obscure); Mass. 1893, Stoddard v. Winchester, 157 Mass. 567, 575, 32 N. E. 948; Mich. 1899, Detzur v. Brewing Co., 119 Mich. 282, 77 N. W. 948; Minn. 1906, State v. Cowing, 99 Minn. 123, 108 N. W. 851, semble; Mo. 1903, State v. Dunn, 179 Mo. 95, 77 S. W. 848 (testimony of defendant himself); N. J. 1904, Shoemaker v. Elmer, 70 N. J. L. 710, 58 Alt. 940; N. Y. 1892, Link v. Sheldon, 136 N. Y. 1, 9, 32 N. E. 696.

[9] 1884, Louisville N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Shires, 108 Ill. 630 (excluding an opinion based on the testimony of witness T. and also a private conversation with him); 1904, Smith v. Minneapolis St. R. Co., 91 Minn. 239, 97 N. W. 881 (excluded where it did not appear that the witness had heard the testimony referred to in the question); 1891, Wallace v. Oil Co., 128 N. Y. 580, 27 N. E. 956 ("judging from the whole history of his case and what you have learned of it in all other ways", excluded).

From this point of view it may sometimes be necessary to state hypothetically the data gained from the witness' personal observation; although in the ordinary case of that sort (ante, § 675) hypothetical presentation is not necessary.

§ 682. Same: (2) Kind of Data that may be assumed in the Question; not All the Facts, but Any Facts of which there is Evidence. (a) Since the data to be assumed are those which it is expected or claimed by the party the jury will subsequently adopt as true, it is obvious that it is both wasteful and misleading to ask a witness to consider data which there is not a fair possibility of the jury accepting.[1] It is wasteful, because the process takes up

§ 682. [1] For cross-examination, see post, § 648; in the cases not specially so noted, no particular rule is laid down: Federal: 1895, North American Acc. Ass'n v. Woodson, 12 C. C. A. 392, 64 Fed. 689 (facts of which some evidence has been offered); 1900, Denver & R. G. R. Co. v. Roller, 41 C. C. A. 22, 100 Fed. 738 ("any state of facts which the evidence directly, fairly, and reasonably tends to establish or justify"); Colorado: 1876, Gottlieb v. Hartman, 3 Colo. 62 ("evidence tending to prove"); 1895, Jackson v. Burnham, 20 Colo. 532, 39 Pac. 577 ("within the possible or probable range of the evidence"); 1896, Courvoisier v. Raymond, 23 Colo. 113, 47 Pac. 284 (same); Connecticut: 1893, Barber's Estate, 63 Conn. 393, 409, 27 Atl. 973 ("such only as counsel may fairly claim that the evidence tends to justify"); 1898, Porter v. Ritch, 70 Conn. 235, 39 Atl. 169; Florida: 1922, Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Shouse, — Fla. —, 91 So. 90 (personal injury); Idaho: 1897, Kelly v. Perrault, 5 Ida. 221, 48 Pac. 45 (founded on facts which the evidence "tends to prove", not on "conjecture"); Illinois: 1872, Decatur v. Fisher, 63 Ill. 241; 1897, Grand Lodge v. Wieting, 168 Ill. 408, 48 N. E. 59 (may range "within reasonable limits"; here held not to violate this rule); 1900, Howard v. People, 185 Ill. 552, 57 N. E. 441 ("evidence tending to prove"); 1902, Economy L. & P. Co. v. Sheridan, 200 Ill. 439, 65 N. E. 1070 (facts "within the scope or range of the evidence"); 1904, Chicago City R. Co. v. Bundy, 210 Ill. 39, 71 N. E. 28; Indiana: 1879, Guetig v. State, 66 Ind. 104 ("must be supported by some evidence"); 1880, Nave v. Tucker, 70 Ind. 18 ("evidence tending to prove"); 1885, Louisville N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Falvey, 104 Ind. 420, 3 N. E. 389, 4 N. E. 908 (excluding "where there is no evidence at all in support of the facts assumed, or where the question is strictly irrelevant, or where it is merely speculative"); 1888, Conway v. State, 118 Ind. 490, 21 N. E. 285 (must be "within the range of the evidence"); Iowa: 1878, Hurst v. R. Co., 49 Ia. 78 ("evidence tending to establish"); 1879, Re Ames' Will, 51 Ia. 603, 2 N. W. 408 (same); 1881, Bomgardner v. Andrews, 55 Ia. 638, 8 N. W. 48 (same); 1888, Meeker v. Meeker, 74 Ia. 355, 37 N. W. 973 ("based on evidence"); 1898, Manatt v. Scott, 106 Ia. 203, 76 N. W. 717; 1901, Pierson v. R. Co., 116 Ia. 601, 88 N. W. 363; 1921, Morrison v. McLaughlin, 191 Ia. 474, 182 N. W. 671 (mode of framing the question, expounded); Kansas: 1898, Davis v. Ins. Co., 59 Kan. 74, 52 Pac. 67; 1899, Medill v. Snyder, 61 Kan. 15, 58 Pac. 962 ("some evidence"); 1900, Roark v. Greeno, 61 Kan. 299, 59 Pac. 655; Kentucky: 1898, Baxter v. Knox, 19 Ky. 1973, 44 S. W. 972 (question held proper on the testimony); 1918, Barrett's Admir. v. Brand, 179 Ky. 740, 201 S. W. 331; Maryland: 1901, Safe Deposit & T. Co. v. Berry, 93 Md. 560, 49 Atl. 401 (certain questions held improper on the facts); Maine: 1885, Powers v. Mitchell, 77 Me. 369 ("evidence tending to prove"); 1914, Reid v. Eastern S. S. Co., 112 Me. 34, 90 Atl. 609, 617 (trial Court's discretion); Massachusetts: 1898, Oliver v. R. Co., 170 Mass. 222, 49 N. E. 117 ("something must be left to the presiding judge"); 1900, Anderson v. Albertstamm, 176 Mass. 87, 57 N. E. 215 (trial judge "in many cases must rely to a great extent upon the good faith of counsel in their statements as to what they expect the evidence will be"); 1905, Com. v. Tucker, 189 Mass. 457, 76 N. E. 127 (Anderson v. Albertstamm, approved); 1909, Carroll v. Boston Elev. R. Co., 200 Mass. 527, 86 N. E. 793; Michigan: 1882, People v. Hall, 48 Mich. 489, 12 N. W. 665 (must not be "contrary to positive and uncontradicted facts"); 1886, People v. Sessions, 58 Mich. 598, 26 N. W. 291 ("evidence tending to establish"); 1886, Mayo v. Wright, 63 Mich. 43, 29 N. W. 832 (some testimony must have been offered); 1887, People v. Foley, 64 Mich. 153, 31 N. W. 94; 1896, Rivard v. Rivard, 109 Mich. 98, 66 N. W. 681; 1897, Holman v. R. Co., 114 Mich. 208, 72 N. W. 202; 1898, People v. Foglesong, 116 Mich. 556, 74 N. W. 730 ("any evidence tending to prove"); 1920, Rose's Estate, Newnham v. Newell, 210 Mich. 628, 178 N. W. 23 (will contest); Minnesota: 1886, State v. Hanley, 34 Minn. 433, 26 N. W. 397 (excluded if it covers a single material fact not evidenced); 1888, Peterson v. R. Co., 38 Minn. 515, 39 N. W. 485 ("any evidence tending to prove"); 1899, Wittenberg v. Onsgard, 78 Minn. 342, 81 N. W. 14 (facts which "might legitimately be found by the valuable time without being of any service. It is misleading, because the jury may often, ignoring the precise data of an opinion, accept the opinion itself when in fact its data are not accepted, and the opinion is therefore really irrelevant. Various practical tests have been proposed for indicating the minimum quality of possibility which the data must possess in order to be taken as the premises of an opinion. No one of them seems preëminently the best; they express the various predilections and experience of different judges as to the safe limits to be set. Sometimes different tests occur in the same opinion; occasionally an extreme strictness or looseness is found, palpably in excess of the general practice.

(b) The question, on principle, need not include any particular number of facts; i.e. it may assume any one or more facts whatever, and need not cover all the facts which the questioner alleges in his case. The questioner is entitled to the witness' opinion on any combination of facts that he may choose. It is often convenient and even necessary to obtain that opinion upon a state of facts falling short of what he or his opponent expects to prove, because the questioner cannot tell how much of the testimony the jury will accept; and if proof of the whole should fail, still proof of some essential part might be made and an opinion based on that part is entitled to be provided for the jury. For reasons of principle, then, and to some extent of policy, the natural jury from the evidence"); Mississippi: 1887, Woolner v. Spalding, 65 Miss. 211, 3 So. 583; 1890, Kearney v. State, 58 Miss. 238; Missouri: 1871, Tingley v. Cowgill, 48 Mo. 297; 1889, State v. Meyers, 99 Mo. 121; 1892, Russ v. R. Co., 112 Mo. 45, 48, 20 S. W. 472 (there must be evidence for all the facts assumed); 1898, Fullerton v. Fordyce, 144 Mo. 519, 44 S. W. 1053 ("tends to prove"); 1904, State v. Brown, 181 Mo. 192, 79 S. W. 1111; Montana: 1899, State v. Peel, 23 Mont. 358, 59 Pac. 169 ("evidence tending to support"); Nebraska: 1883, O'Hara v. Wells, 14 Nebr. 408, 15 N. W. 722; 1886, Morrill v. Tegarden, 19 Nebr. 536, 26 N. W. 202 ("so framed as to fairly reflect facts either admitted or proved by other witnesses"); 1886, Ballard v. State, 19 Nebr. 613, 28 N. W. 271; New Hampshire: 1858, Spear v. Richardson, 37 N. H. 34; 1862, Perkins v. Railroad, 44 N. H. 225; New Jersey: 1898, Lindenthal v. Hatch, 61 N. J. 29, 39 Atl. 662 (question on data involving "mere guesswork", excluded); New York: 1876, Harnett v. Garvey, 66 N. Y. 641 ("within the possible or probable range of the evidence"); 1882, Stearns v. Field, 90 N. Y. 641 ("any state of facts which the evidence fairly tends to justify"); 1884, People v. Angsbury, 97 N. Y. 504 ("facts admitted or established by the evidence, or which, if controverted, the jury might legitimately find on weighing the evidence"); 1891, People v. Smiler, 125 N. Y. 717, 26 N. E. 312; 1899, Cole v. Fall Brook C. Co., 159 N. Y. 59, 53 N. E. 670 (excluded if "there is proof sustaining" the data); North Carolina: 1897, Burnett v. R. Co., 120 N. C. 517, 26 S. E. 819 (excluded, because no evidence on the point was offered); Ohio: 1876, Williams v. Brown, 28 Oh. St. 552; Oregon: 1882, State v. Anderson, 10 Or. 455; Pennsylvania: 1884, First Nat'l Bank v. Wirebach's Ex'r, 106 Pa. 44; 1887, Reber v. Herring, 115 Pa. 608, 8 Atl. 830 (fluctuates, in excluding, between "facts not supported" and "facts not proved" by the testimony); 1916, Albert v. Philadelphia R. T. Co., 252 Pa. 527, 97 Atl. 680; Porto Rico: 1913, Camacho v. Balasquide, 19 P. R. 564, 578; Rhode Island: 1904, McDonald v. Rhode Island Co., 26 R. I. 467, 59 Atl. 391 (the evidence must be offered before stating the question; unless in the discretion of the trial Court); South Dakota: 1894, Vermillion Co. v. Vermillion, 6 S. D. 466, 61 N. W. 802; 1910, State v. Swanson, 26 S. D. 589, 129 N. W. 119; Utah: 1902, Nichols v. R. Co., 25 Utah 240, 70 Pac. 996 (a question assuming facts which "indisputably had neither been proven nor in truth existed", held improper); Vermont: 1875, Hathaway's Adm'r v. Ins. Co., 48 Vt. 351 ("evidence tending to prove"); West Virginia: 1888, Kerr v. Lunsford, 31 W. Va. 672, 8 S. E. 493 ("evidence tending to prove"); Wisconsin: 1885, Quinn v. Higgins, 63 Wis. 670, 24 N. W. 482 ("evidence tending to prove"); 1895, Tebo v. Augusta, 90 Wis. 405, 63 N. W. 1045 ("sufficient evidence on which to base an assumption"); 1900, Werner v. R. Co., 105 Wis. 300, 81 N. W. 416 ("tended to prove").

conclusion would be that the questioner need not cover in his hypothesis the entire body of testimony put forward on that point by him or by the opponent, but may take as limited a selection as he pleases and obtain an opinion on that basis. Such is the orthodox doctrine as applied by most Courts.[2]

But there are opposing considerations of policy. The jury are apt, especially where there are many expert witnesses and the evidence is voluminous, to remember and accept merely the net opinion of a witness, with little or no reference to the special premises on which it was based. Thus, if a counsel were to select from the testimony the evidential circumstances most favorable to his party, or those least favorable to the opponent, and obtain an opinion thereon, it is obvious that if the jury forgets the partial nature of the opinion's premises, the opinion may count with them, when perhaps it ought not to count at all. Now the law and the judge cannot, of course, be expected to reject legitimate offers of evidence simply because the jury may occasionally fail to perform its duty intelligently. But the Court may well interfere to prevent questions which are under the circumstances practically valueless, and are either intended or fairly likely to mislead the jury. Some Courts, looking at the not uncommon abuse of the hypothetical question, have properly attempted to forbid the putting of questions whenever the abuse of this sort is probable.

There are two slightly different forms of the abuse. (1) One consists in asking an opinion as to the effect of facts testified to by a given

[2] Federal: 1902, Swenson v. Bender, 51 C. C. A. 627, 114 Fed. 1; 1919, Napier v. Greenzweig, 2d C. C. A., 256 Fed. 196 (malpractice); Alabama: 1916, Pullman Co. v. Meyer, 195 Ala. 397, 70 So. 763 (lack of train, causing illness); 1918, Hamilton v. Cranford Mercantile Co., 201 Ala. 403, 78 So. 401 (fire destruction); 1918, Miller v. Whittington, 202 Ala. 406, 80 So. 499 (sanity); Arkansas: 1906, Ince v. State, 77 Ark. 426, 93 S. W. 65 (approving the above passage); 1911, Missouri & N. A. R. Co. v. Daniels, 98 Ark. 352, 136 S. W. 651 (subject to the trial Court's discretion); 1915, Bell v. State, — Ark. —, 180 S. W. 186; California: 1897, People v. Durrant, 116 Cal. 179, 48 Pac. 75; 1897, People v. Hill, 116 Cal. 562, 48 Pac. 711; 1909, Perkins v. Sunset Tel. & T. Co., 155 Cal. 712, 103 Pac. 190; Columbia (Dist.): 1899, Horton v. U. S., 15 D. C. App. 310, 324; Florida: 1903, Williams v. State, 45 Fla. 128, 34 So. 279; Illinois: 1903, Chicago & E. I. R. Co. v. Wallace, 202 Ill. 129, 66 N. E. 1096; 1921, People v. Geary, 297 Ill. 608, 131 N. E. 97; Indiana: 1871, Davis v. State, 35 Ind. 497; 1879, Guetig v. State, 66 Ind. 104; 1884, Goodwin v. State, 95 Ind. 554; 1887, Louisville N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Wood, 113 Ind. 554, 14 N. E. 572, 16 N. E. 197; Iowa: 1917, Ranne v. Hodges, 181 Ia. 162, 162 N. W. 803; Michigan: 1888, Turnbull v. Richardson, 69 Mich. 413, 37 N. W. 499; Montana: 1897, Morrill v. Hershfield, 19 Mont. 245, 47 Pac. 997; 1909, State v. Crowe, 39 Mont. 174, 102 Pac. 579; Nebraska: 1909, Landis & Schick v. Watts, 84 Nebr. 671, 121 N. W. 980 (but here a special and not very clear rule of restriction is laid down); New Jersey: 1921, Ollert v. Ziebell, — N. J. L. —, 114 Atl. 356; New York: 1882, Stearns v. Field, 90 N. Y. 640; Oregon: 1909, Crosby v. Portland R. Co., 53 Or. 496, 100 Pac. 300 (enough for "forming an intelligent opinion on the subject considered"); Pennsylvania: 1884, First Nat'l Bank v. Wirebach's Ex'r, 106 Pa. 44 (this opinion contains a good exposition); 1909, Gillman v. Media M. A. & C. E. R. Co., 224 Pa. 267, 73 Atl. 342 (but here stating too narrow a limitation); Texas: 1890, Gulf C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Compton, 75 Tex. 673, 13 S. W. 667; 1902, Fretwell v. State, 43 Tex. Cr. 501, 67 S. W. 1021 (unless it appears that an opportunity on cross-examination to add the remaining material facts was denied); Vermont: 1900, State v. Doherty, 72 Vt. 381, 48 Atl. 658; 1902, McKinstry v. Collins, 74 Vt. 147, 52 Atl. 438; Virginia: 1917, Bowen's Ex'r v. Bowen, 122 Va. 1, 94 S. E. 166; Washington: 1904, State v. Underwood, 35 Wash. 558, 77 Pac. 863; West Virginia: 1916, Keenan v. Scott, 78 W. Va. 729, 90 S. E. 331; (value of legal services); 1921, State v. Long, 88 W. Va. 669, 108 S. E. 279 (reflex action in shooting); Wisconsin: 1904, Schissler v. State, 122 Wis. 365, 99 N. W. 593.

witness, whose testimony is culled and partially stated, so that while in form the opinion deals with a part only, in effect the whole of that witness' testimony is either discredited or approved, as the case may be. The remedy for this is to require a statement of all the material facts testified to by the witness.[3] (2) The other method does not specially mention particular witnesses, but culls certain facts having a bearing particularly favorable for the questioner's side or particularly unfavorable to the opponent's, and then the opinion obtained will, it is hoped, be remembered as absolutely (not conditionally) favorable or unfavorable respectively:[4]

1888, MORSE, J., in People v. Vanderhoof, 71 Mich. 176, 39 N. W. 28: "I believe that even in a civil case all the undisputed facts of a case must be included in a hypothetical question, both as a matter of sound principle, and of reason and justice. . . . To permit, as was done in this case, a culling of facts to suit the purposes of conviction, to be propounded in hypothesis to the experts, and then to instruct the jury that the only way to contradict the opinion of the experts is by the opinion of other experts, is to deny a fair trial."

But though any efforts to repress the abuses of the hypothetical question at the hands of unscrupulous tricksters should meet with approval, it is improper and unnecessary to lay down any general rule. The trial judge should be given discretion to determine how far the counsel can and must properly limit his questions, and how far the jury may be trusted, with the aid of argument, to discover the conditional nature of the opinion.

(c) There could be no reason in confining the hypothetical question to the undisputed facts, or to the facts "proved." The former expedient is at least conceivably possible; though the latter is not. Both are without the slightest ground of logic or policy. It is singular that Courts have consented to discuss such propositions; but they have often thought it necessary to negative them.[5]

[3] 1912, Williams v. Fulkes, 103 Ark. 196, 146 S. W. 480; 1873, Davis v. State, 38 Md. 40, 44; 1910, Grill v. O'Dell, 113 Md. 625, 77 Atl. 984; 1879, Hand v. Brookline, 126 Mass. 326; 1906, Pyke v. Jamestown, 15 N. D. 157, 107 N. W. 310.

The same situation is also presented where a written contract is to be interpreted; the question must assume terms similar to the contract, and no less or different: 1883, Jewett v. Brooks, 134 Mass. 505.

[4] Accord: 1908, Taylor v. McClintock, 87 Ark. 243, 112 S. W. 405 (question held here improper); 1876, Gottlieb v. Hartmann, 3 Colo. 61 (must cover all the evidence; this goes too far); 1893, Barber's Estate, 63 Conn. 393, 409, 27 Atl. 973 (the omitted data must not leave the others in a false relation); 1904, Aledo v. Honeyman, 208 Ill. 415, 70 N. E. 338; 1920, Opp. v. Pryor, 294 Ill. 538, 128 N. E. 580 (question held to omit material facts as to physical symptoms); 1909, Miller v. Leib, 109 Md. 414, 72 Atl. 466; 1888, Peterson v. R. Co., 38 Minn. 515, 39 N. W. 485 (must cover all the material parts); 1920, Harju v. Allen, 146 Minn. 23, 177 N. W. 1015 (question omitting material facts, held unfair); 1901, Schulz v. Modisett, — Nebr. —, 96 N. W. 338 ("All the undisputed pertinent facts"); 1902, Nichols v. R. Co., 25 Utah 240, 70 Pac. 996 (a question omitting material undisputed facts is unfair); 1865, Thayer v. Davis, 38 Vt. 163 (based on notes of counsel; excluded); 1899, Schaidler v. R. Co., 102 Wis. 564, 78 N. W. 732 (a material fact must be included).

[5] 1895, Jackson v. Burnham, 20 Colo. 532, 39 Pac. 577 (not confined to undisputed facts); 1880, Nave v. Tucker, 70 Ind. 18 (objection that "the hypothesis was not proved", overruled); 1880, Cowley v. People, 83 N. Y. 470 (question need not state "facts as they exist"); 1882, Sterns v. Field, 90 N. Y. 640 (objection that it "assumed what was not proved", overruled); 1891, Bowen v. Huntington, 35 W. Va. 686, 14 S. E. 217 (basis need not be facts exactly as they are).

(d) It is sometimes said[6] that "an opinion of an expert cannot be based upon opinions expressed by other experts"; but this is quite unsound. Keeping in mind that the ordinary distinction between "fact" and "opinion" has here no value (ante, § 672, post, § 1919), it will be seen that the basis for a hypothetical opinion may be either data observed or data inferred, and that inferred data presented by expert testimony may equally well become a part of the basis for a hypothetical question; e.g. (as in the case cited) a fireman may testify to coal in the furnace, and a chemist may testify that the gas generated would be carbon monoxide, and then another expert may be asked what would be the effect of an explosion of carbon monoxide on starch dust in the oven room. There is no mysterious logical fatality in basing "one expert opinion upon another"; it is done every day in business and in applied science.

§ 683. Same: (3) Form of Question must be expressly Hypothetical. Policy, as well as principle, require that the form of the question be expressly hypothetical;[1] because otherwise the jury, and perhaps the witness, may be misled by the statement, as a proved or admitted fact, of that which is as yet only an assertion of counsel or of witnesses.[2] But this requirement is capable of being insisted upon with finical and injurious exactness. The harm from its violation can seldom be serious, and Courts should not find fault with omissions to use a formal hypothetical statement where the jury could not have been misled. The question need be only substantially, not in exact form, hypothetical.[3]

For the mode of stating the assumed premises, there is no fixed rule. Where the facts have not yet been testified to at all, there is only one way, — the oral statement of the premises by counsel. But where testimony already offered is taken as the basis, either the testimony of a given witness may be read aloud, an assumption of its truth being then made, or an oral statement by counsel, in impersonal form, of such assumed premises may be used; the judge's discretion determining the choice.[4] Whether a uniform question asked of all the experts need be repeated for each witness, if the witness has already heard it read, will also rest in the discretion of the judge.[5]

[6] 1910, Kearner v. Tanner Co., 31 R. I. 203, 76 Atl. 833.

§ 683. [1] A classical form is this: 1856, Shaw, C. J., in Woodbury v. Obear, 7 Gray 471: "If certain facts, assumed by the question to be established by the evidence, should be found true by the jury, what would be his opinion, upon the facts thus found true, on the question at issue?"

[2] 1895, Chalmers v. Mfg. Co., 164 Mass. 532, 42 N. E. 98; 1890, Jones v. R. Co., 43 Minn. 281, 45 N. W. 444; 1884, Reed v. State, 62 Miss. 409, semble; 1878, State v. Bowman, 78 N. C. 511, semble; 1886, State v. Cole, 94 N. C. 964; 1888, State v. Keene, 100 N. C. 511, 6 S. E. 91; 1907, Parrish v. High Point R. A. & S. R. Co., 146 N. C. 125, 59 S. E. 348 (cause of an injury); 1878, Gilman v. Strafford, 50 Vt. 725.

[3] 1870, Christiancy, J., in Kempsey v. McGinniss, 21 Mich. 139: 1910, Nolan v. Newton St. R. Co., 206 Mass. 384, 92 N. E. 505 (an electrical expert's testimony, referring to a car jumping "in the way that has been described" by the plaintiff when testifying, held proper); 1875, McCollum v. Seward, 62 N. Y. 318.

[4] 1860, Choice v. State, 31 Ga. 468; 1920, Aronovitz v. Arky. Mo., 219 S. W. 620 (but the hypothesized facts should be recited as facts, and not merely as the subject of former testimony).

[5] 1886, Gates v. Fleischer, 67 Wis. 509, 30 N. W. 674.

§ 684. Hypothetical Questions on Cross-examination. Just as the cross-examination of an ordinary witness may involve questions which test his memory, observation, and bias, so in cross-examining one who takes the stand as a skilled witness, his judgment upon germane matters may be tested by assuming premises and asking his conclusions.[1] The modes and purposes are substantially the same as in testing ordinary witnesses (post, §§ 994, 1000, 1018, 1362).

§ 685. Length of Hypothetical Question. On principle, the questioner is entitled (as already noted) to obtain an opinion upon any combination of facts, however few or however numerous. Hence, the mere length of a question of itself is no objection.[1] But, for the same reasons of policy as before, the Court may exclude a question which by its length tends to confuse or mislead the jury without being of appreciable service.[2] This discretion of the trial judge ought to be absolute, and should have been exercised much more frequently than it is in excluding tedious and useless questions.

§ 686. Abolition of the Question as a Requirement. What is to be the future of the hypothetical question?

The Hypothetical Question must go, as a requirement. Its abuses have become so obstructive and nauseous that no remedy short of extirpation will suffice. It is a logical necessity, but a practical incubus; and logic must here be sacrificed. After all, Law (in Mr. Justice Holmes' phrase) is much more than Logic. It is a strange irony that the hypothetical question, which is one of the few truly scientific features of the rules of Evidence, should have become that feature which does most to disgust men of science with the law of Evidence.

The hypothetical question, misused by the clumsy and abused by the clever, has in practice led to intolerable obstruction of truth.[1] In the first place,

§ 684. [1] 1916, Wilson v. State, 195 Ala. 675, 71 So. 115; 1887, People v. Sutton, 73 Cal. 246, 15 Pac. 86; 1910, Pensacola Electric Co. v. Bissett, 59 Fla. 360, 52 So. 367; 1897, West Chicago St. R. Co. v. Fishman, 169 Ill. 196, 48 N. E. 447 (on cross-examination, "any fact which, in the sound discretion of the Court, is pertinent to the inquiry, whether testified to or not", is usable in testing the expert); 1871, Davis v. State, 35 Ind. 498; 1885, Louisville N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Falvey, 104 Ind. 415, 3 N. E. 389, 4 N. E. 908; 1885, Geisendorff v. Eagles, 106 Ind. 41, 5 N. E. 743; 1888, Grubb v. State, 117 Ind. 284, 20 N. E. 257, 725; 1899, Taylor v. Star Coal Co., 110 Ia. 40, 81 N. W. 249 ("almost any state of facts" may be assumed); 1921, Bonderson v. Hovde, 150 Minn. 175, 184 N. W. 853 (discretion of trial Court); 1921, Levine v. Barry, 114 Wash. 623, 195 Pac. 1003 (questions assuming facts not yet in evidence; trial Court's discretion controls);

§ 685. [1] 1865, Mary Harris' Trial, (D. C.) Clephane's Rep. 100 (question of some 3800 words, allowed to be put); 1881, Guiteau's Trial, (D. C.) II, 1251, 1322, 1720 (question of more than 3400 words, allowed to be asked); 1886, Mayo v. Wright, 63 Mich. 43, 29 N. W. 832 (mere length is no objection). But these records of length have since been far surpassed.

[2] 1886, Forsyth v. Doolittle, 120 U. S. 78, 7 Sup. 408 (trial Court in discretion may exclude); 1898, Davis v. Ins. Co., 59 Kan. 74, 52 Pac. 67 (lengthy question held perhaps improper); 1896, Howes v. Colburn, 165 Mass. 385, 43 N. E. 125 ("It might be wiser to exclude such questions altogether, when they are very complicated or involve much detail"); 1909, Burk v. Reese, — Nebr. —, 121 N. W. 1016 (question of 8000 words held improper, because introducing the opponent's case on cross-examination).

§ 686. [1] Many of the articles cited ante, § 563 (securing unbiassed experts), on the defects of present practice with expert testimony, set forth the grounds for this statement.

it has artificially clamped the mouth of the expert witness, so that his answer to a complex question may not express his actual opinion on the actual case. This is because the question may be so built up and contrived by counsel as to represent only a partisan conclusion. In the second place, it has tended to mislead the jury as to the purport of actual expert opinion. This is due to the same reason. In the third place, it has tended to confuse the jury, so that its employment becomes a mere waste of time and a futile obstruction.

No partial limitation of its use seems feasible, by specific rules. Logically, there is no place to stop short; practically, any specific limitations would be more or less arbitrary, and would thus tend to become mere quibbles.

How can the extirpating operation be performed? By exempting the offering party from the requirement of using the hypothetical form; by according him the option of using it, — both of these to be left to the trial Court's discretion; and by permitting the opposing party, on cross-examination, to call for a hypothetical specification of the data which the witness has used as the basis of the opinion. The last rule will give sufficient protection against a misunderstanding of the opinion, when any actual doubt exists.

The foregoing proposals, be it understood, represent a mere practical rule of thumb. They do violence to theoretical logic. But in practice they would produce less actual misleading of the jury than the present complex preciosities. After all, the only theoretical object of the hypothetical question (ante, § 672) is to avoid misunderstanding; and "if the salt have lost its savor, wherewith shall it be salted? It is thenceforth good for nothing but to be cast out and trodden under foot of men." The present proposal does not trod under foot the hypothetical question, but merely transfers its function to the hands of the cross-examiner.

The proposed rules can be stated in legislative form as follows:

1. Where an expert witness has not had personal observation of matters of fact in the case in hand, but has listened to or read any or all of the testimony or depositions to such matter of fact, he may be asked, by the party calling him, to state his conclusion, without specifying in the question the data forming the basis of the conclusion; unless the trial Court otherwise directs or permits.

2. Where an expert witness has considered data presented him otherwise than through the testimony or deposition of a witness in the case, he may not be asked to state his conclusions thereon, by hypothetical question or otherwise; except so far as he is qualified by personal observation or by general reading, on the principle of § 687, post, in which case the question need not be in hypothetical form; and except also that the trial Court may permit or direct otherwise.

3. In either of the foregoing classes of cases, the opposite party on cross-examination may require the witness to specify the data on the hypothesis of which his conclusion was based.

B. Knowledge required for Special Subjects

1. Medical Matters

§ 687. Physician's General Knowledge based on the Study of Books. The general principle has already been considered (ante, § 657) that a witness' knowledge must be based upon personal observations of his own senses. It has also been noted that exceptions to this rule are conceded, — in particular, for professional men testifying to a matter of general scientific truth (ante, § 665). It remains to consider the application of the principle to the testimony of physicians concerning truths of medical science.

Here it is necessary to distinguish two considerations. Are we objecting to the bookish source of their knowledge (1) because it implies a lack of skill and experience as affecting their expert capacity for judgment, or (2) because it involves accepting, as a knower of a given fact, one who has not really observed for himself but is trusting to others? In other words, is the objection directed against the quality of the witness' Experience or the quality of his Knowledge?

(1) From the former point of view, if, as is usual, the objection is directed against a professional man, because he has merely graduated from an acceptable medical school and has not practised extensively, the objection is unpractical. According to the old methods by which a medical training was gained mainly from actual service in an apprenticeship, an active and prolonged experience in practice for a considerable period might be essential. But the modern training of a medical school does not involve merely the perusal of books; it embraces a personal observation of disease and its remedies. The cultivation of judgment which may be attained in such a school ought to qualify without any requirement of a term of subsequent practice. — There is little definite authority on the subject; but the matter should rest in the trial judge's discretion.[1]

(2) The objection from the second point of view is equally vain. To deny the competency of a physician who does not know his facts from personal observation alone is to reject medical testimony almost in its entirety. To allow any physician to testify who claims to know solely by personal experience is to appropriate the witness-stand to impostors. Medical science is a mass of transmitted and collated data from numerous quarters; the generalizations which are the result of one man's personal observation ex-

§ 687. [1] 1850, Pollock, C. B., in Bristow v. Sequeville, 5 Exch. 277 ("In a case depending on medical testimony, would the evidence of a person be admissible who had studied medicine at one of the universities but had never practised it?", intimating the negative); 1847, Tullis v. Kidd, 12 Ala. 650 (actual practice is not necessary); 1895, State v. Dixon, 47 La. An. 1, 16 So. 589 (admitting a medical student who had treated similar diseases).

The retirement from active practice involves no disqualification: 1874, Roberts v. Johnson, 58 N. Y. 617.

A similar question arises sometimes under another principle, i.e. whether a physician of general practice, whose knowledge on a special topic (such as poisoning) is gained by reading only, is of sufficient experience or judgment to testify on that topic (ante, § 569). The rulings do not always distinguish the two points of view, but the result in both classes should be substantially the same.

clusively are the least acceptable of all. The law must recognize the methods of medical science. It cannot stultify itself by establishing, for judicial inquiries, a rule never considered necessary by the medical profession itself. It is enough for a physician, testifying to a medical fact, that he is by training and occupation a physician; whether his source of information for that particular fact is in part or entirely the hearsay of his fellow-practitioners and investigators, is immaterial: [2]

1893, HOLMES, J., in Finnegan v. Gas Works Co., 159 Mass. 312, 34 N. E. 523 (receiving testimony that after asphyxiation there is a period of conscious suffering before death, the physician having had no cases of the kind): "Although it might not be admissible merely to repeat what a witness had read in a book not itself admissible, still, when one who is competent on the general subject accepts from his reading as probably true a matter of detail which he has not verified, the fact receives an authority which it would not have had from the printed page alone, and, subject perhaps to the exercise of some discretion, may be admitted."

The great dramatist knew this well enough:

Pericles, III, 2 (Cerimon explains his skill in physic):

"... I ever
Have studied physic, through which secret art
By turning o'er authorities, I have —
Together with my practice — made familiar
To me and to my aid the blest infusions."

§ 688. Physician's Knowledge of Symptoms based on Hearsay of Patients and Others. Here, again, the law cannot afford to stultify itself by refusing to recognize, in testimonial rules, the safe and accepted practices of medical science. When a physician examines a patient to ascertain his ailment and to prescribe for it, a portion of his reasons for action must be the patient's

[2] Admitted: 1888, Preeper v. R., 15 Can. Sup. 401, 404, 408, 410, 416 (medical witness to the 'indicia' of distance in shot-marks on a body, speaking "not from personal experience, but from books", admitted; two judges diss.); 1894, Jackson v. Boone, 93 Ga. 662, 20 S. E. 46; 1901, Boswell v. State, 114 Ga. 40, 39 S. E. 897 (physicians allowed to testify to the poisonous nature of bluestone, though deriving their knowledge solely from books); 1851, Carter v. State, 2 Ind. 619 (poison; knowledge based on reading); 1901, Isenhour v. State, 157 Ind. 517, 62 N. E. 40 (chemist's knowledge, acquired "wholly from reading, study, and conversations with other physicians"); 1905, State v. Donovan, 128 Ia. 44, 102 N. W. 791 (possibility of a surgical operation under hypnotism); 1886, State v. Baldwin, 36 Kan. 16, 12 Pac. 318 (a knowledge partly founded on books); 1909, United R. & E. Co. v. Corbin, 109 Md. 442, 72 Atl. 606 (approving the above passage); 1894, Hardiman v. Brown, 162 Mass. 585, 39 N. E. 192 (reading is sufficient, at least for specialties); 1883, Marshall v. Brown, 50 Mich. 148, 15 N. W. 55 (the effect of a substance on the human system; knowledge based chiefly on books); 1869, Taylor v. Railway, 48 N. H. 306 (founded on study alone); 1873, State v. Wood, 53 N. H. 495 (same); 1859, State v. Terrell, 12 Rich. L. S. C. 327 (strychnia-poisoning; knowledge acquired from "books, lectures, and oral instruction").

Excluded: 1898, Erb v. Popritz, 59 Kan. 264, 52 Pac. 871 (statements as to probable duration of life, by one speaking solely from acquaintance with mortality tables); 1870, Dole v. Johnson, 50 N. H. 452, 459 (one who proposed to testify as to the contagiousness of foot-rot in sheep, after having "as editor of a stock-journal read extensively on the subject"); 1888, Soquet v. State, 72 Wis. 666, 40 N. W. 391 (arsenic; testimony based solely on books); 1904, Kath v. Wisconsin C. R. Co., 121 Wis. 503, 99 N. W. 217 ("what he learns entirely from medical works, unsupported by practical experience of his own", is inadmissible).

For the right to cross-examine a medical man upon the scope of his reading, see post, § 1700.

For analogous cases, under a slightly different principle, see ante, § 569.

own statements. To exclude testimony not wholly independent of this foundation for opinion is, in strictness, to exclude almost always medical testimony based on a personal examination.[1]

Yet there are distinctions to be taken. The hearsay source of information may be that of the patient as to (1) present symptoms, (2) past symptoms, (3) cause of the injury or illness, (4) or that of a nurse or other third person.

(1) A diagnosis based in part on hearsay from the patient himself stating present symptoms is generally and properly considered receivable.[2] To ex-

§ 688. [1] It is said that Prince von Bismarck was once ruffled by the number of questions put to him by his medical attendant, an eminent physician of no less individuality and self-possession than the Chancellor. The latter intimated that the physician could do his duty without putting so many intrusive questions. "Very well, Highness," said the other; "but if you wish to be cured without questions asked, you had better send for a veterinary surgeon." Those who object to testimony of the sort here considered must expect to surrender the medical witness-stand to veterinary surgeons exclusively.

[2] Accord, except as otherwise noted: Federal: 1894, Union P. R. Co. v. Novak, 15 U. S. App. 400, 414, 9 C. C. A. 629, 61 Fed. 573; 1915, Kansas City So. R. Co. v. Clinton, 8th C. C. A., 224 Fed. 896, 900 (attending physician's opinion of the patient's suffering, based in part on the patient's statements, receivable; distinguishing U. S. v. McMican, infra); Alabama: 1855, Eckles v. Bates, 26 Ala. 659; Arkansas: 1915, Biddle v. Riley, 118 Ark. 206, 176 S. W. 134 (medical witness giving a clinical history may include the patient's statement of symptoms); 1920, Subiaco Coal Co. v. Krallman, 143 Ark. 469, 220 S. W. 664 (following Biddle v. Riley); Columbia (Dist.): 1913, Washington A. & M. U. R. Co. v. Fincham, 40 D. C. App. 412 (examination for vision, by using a perimeter and the patient's statements as to its effect on him, admitted); Georgia: 1896, Western & A. R. Co. v. Stafford, 99 Ga. 187, 25 S. E. 656, semble, Illinois: 1867, Illinois C. R. Co. v. Sutton, 42 Ill. 440; 1884, Chicago B. & Q. R. Co. v. Martin, 112 Ill. 17; 1907, Chicago v. McNally, 227 Ill. 14, 81 N. E. 23 (testimony admitted on the facts); Indiana: 1885, Louisville N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Falvey, 104 Ind. 419, 3 N. E. 389, 4 N. E. 908; 1887, Louisville N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Wood, 113 Ind. 548, 14 N. E. 572, 16 N. E. 197; 1888, Louisville N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Snyder, 117 Ind. 436, 20 N. E. 284; 1892, Chicago, St. L. & P. R. Co. v. Spilker, 134 Ind. 380, 392, 33 N. E. 280, 34 N. E. 218; 1893, Ohio & M. R. Co. v. Heaton, 137 Ind. 1, 35 N. E. 687; Massachusetts: 1865, Barber v. Merriam, 11 All. 324 (perhaps overruling Rowell v. Lowell, 11 Gray 420, 1858); Minnesota: 1891, Johnson v. R. Co., 47 Minn. 430, 50 N. W. 473 ("an opinion based in part upon statements" by the patient as to his present condition, admissible); New Jersey: 1896, Consolidated Traction Co. v. Lambertson, 59 N. J. L. 297, 36 Atl. 100; 1897, Traction Co. v. Lambertson, 60 N. J. L. 452, 38 Atl. 683 (physician's opinion, founded "wholly or in part" on inadmissible declarations of patient, admissible where there was other evidence of facts so declared); New York: 1866, Matteson v. R. Co., 35 N. Y. 491; North Dakota: 1908, Walters v. Rock, 18 N. D. 45, 115 N. W. 511; Oklahoma: 1917, Chicago R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Jackson, 63 Okl. 32, 162 Pac. 823; South Dakota: 1895, State v. Chiles, 44 S. C. 338, 22 S. E. 340; Washington: 1911, Myhra v. Chicago M. & P. S. R. Co., 62 Wash. 1, 112 Pac. 939; Wisconsin: 1879, Quaife v. R. Co., 48 Wis. 521, 4 N. W. 658; 1895, Block v. R. Co., 89 Wis. 371, 61 N. W. 1102; 1919, Bell v. Milwaukee E. R. & L. Co., 169 Wis. 408, 172 N. W. 791 (allowable where the patient consulted the physician for treatment; but not, as here, where he consulted him merely to qualify him as a witness).

Contra: Federal: 1895, Delaware, L. & W. R. Co. v. Roalefs, 70 Fed. 23, 16 C. C. A. 601, semble (where possibly the Court would have admitted the opinion on the hypothesis of the truth of the statements); Arkansas: 1913, Lee v. Kansas C. S. R. Co., D. C. W. D. Ark. 206 Fed. 765 (physician called in to qualify as a witness may testify to an opinion based on objective symptoms only, not on the patient's statements in part or entirely; it is regrettable to see a Federal Court giving in to this modern heresy, which commits the exploded fallacy of totally prohibiting weak evidence instead of merely ensuring the exhibition of its weaknesses); Illinois: 1905, Stevens v. People, 215 Ill. 593, 74 N. E. 786 (abortion; physician's opinion based in part on "information derived from the patient", excluded; unsound); 1905, Chicago City R. Co. v. McCaughna, 216 id. 202, 74 N. E. 818 (personal injury; similar ruling); 1907, Chicago U. Traction Co. v. Giese, 229 Ill. 260, 82 N. E. 232 (ignoring the above Illinois cases); 1908, Greinke v. Chicago City R. Co., 234 Ill. 564, 85 N. E. 327 (this opinion, while carefully avoiding mention of physician's diagnosis as ordinarily obtained, confines itself to excluding testimony of a physician who (a) has not treated the injured party, but (b) has clude it when this was the exclusive source may sometimes be proper, though such a case can rarely be presented, and the distinction would result in vain quibbles.[3]

(2) As to hearsay from the patient detailing past symptoms, no line can be drawn between this and the preceding source; the policy of the case is the same for both.[4] Courts seem usually not to take any distinction; but occasionally the principle is expressly spoken of as covering the present case.[5] examined him solely to qualify as a witness in a personal injury trial, and (c) bases his opinion upon the statements of the injured party; and applies this rule to exclude an opinion based on voluntary acts such as walking, hand-pressing, etc.); 1908, Shaughnessy v. Holt, 236 Ill. 485, 86 N. E. 256 (personal injury; physician's opinion based on tests involving the patient's sensations and answers, at an examination solely to qualify as witness, excluded); Iowa: 1895, Van Winkle v. R. Co., 93 Ia. 509, 61 N. W. 929; Kansas: 1906, Federal B. Co. v. Reeves, 73 Kan. 107, 84 Pac. 560 (Porter, J., diss.); 1915, Smith v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co., 95 Kan. 451, 148 Pac. 759 (physician's opinion, "based partly upon the history of the case as it was related to him", held inadmissible); 1916, Switzer v. Baker, 178 Ia. 1063, 160 N. W. 372 (personal injury; physician consulted to qualify him to testify, excluded where his opinion is based wholly or in part on the statements of the party and of third persons); Kentucky: 1909, Chesapeake & O. R. Co. v. Wiley, 134 Ky. 461, 121 S. W. 402 (applied to testimony of physicians called solely to qualify as witnesses, and not for treatment; yet this should make no difference to exclude the testimony; how unpractical Courts continue to be, in thinking that the way to get at the truth is to exclude all testimony which may often be based upon a lie; that is the old-fashioned notion, applied in the disqualification of a witness for interest, but now exploded; it is a helpless, mechanical rule, which is suited for a solemn game, but not to a practical virile determination to get at the facts); Missouri: 1904, Holloway v. Kansas City, 184 Mo. 19, 82 S. W. 89 (not appreciating the precise nature of the question); 1910, Dean v. Wabash R. Co., 229 Mo. 425, 129 S. W. 953 (objective and subjective symptoms may be distinguished; though of course not when the physician is testifying on a hypothetical question); New York: 1886, People v. Murphy, 101 N. Y. 130, 4 N. E. 326, semble; 1892, Davidson v. Cornell, 132 N. Y. 236, 30 N. E. 573, semble; 1909, People v. Hill, 194 N. Y. 16, 87 N. E. 813 ("an expert witness cannot be permitted to give an opinion as to the mental condition of a person at the time of the commission of a criminal act, based upon a statement not in evidence, made by a party in his own behalf after the commission of the act, which pertains to his past conduct"; this may be not in itself logically unreasonable, but the judicial tendency to lay down unpractical rules which are preposterously opposed to ordinary medical practice ought to be checked if justice is to maintain the respect of the other learned professions); Wisconsin: 1893, Abbot v. Heath, 84 Wis. 318, 54 N. W. 574 (distinguishing Quaife v. R. Co., supra, partly because there physicians from both parties attended, and partly because here the proportion of hearsay was so large).

Not decided: 1913, Cooper v. Seaboard A. L. R. Co., 163 N. C. 150, 79 S. E. 418.

[3] The following rulings are erroneous, for the reasons noted: 1899, State v. Soper, 148 Mo. 217, 49 S. W. 1007 (physician's testimony to defendant's insanity, founded on defendant's own statements, excluded); 1895, People v. Strait, 148 N. Y. 566, 42 N. E. 1045, semble (where the opinion was excluded partly because the statements of the alleged insane person were made too long after the alleged insane act; but the Court confused the present rule, which does not apply to an alleged insane person's conversation (for that is not hearsay, ante, § 227), with the doctrine that insane conduct long after the alleged insane act is not relevant (ante, § 233), which was here the true reason for exclusion).

But the following ruling is sound: 1897, People v. Ebanks, 117 Cal. 652, 49 Pac. 1049 (excluding a hypnotist, who based his testimony solely on the defendant's protestation of innocence).

[4] Though statements of past symptoms may not be independently admissible under the Hearsay exception (post, § 1718).

[5] Accord: Eckles v. Bates, Barber v. Merriam, in note 2, supra; 1918, District v. White, 48 D. C. App. 44 (a diagnosis based in part on an operation and in part on the patient's history of the case, admitted);

Contra, R. Co. v. Frazier, in the following note.

The following ruling seems doubtful: 1825, Gardner Peerage Case, Le Marchant's Rep. 77, 170, 174 (the issue involving the 'ultimum tempus' of gestation, and a physician being called to testify to specific instances of a period exceeding nine calendar months from conception, the physician's statement of the date of conception, based wholly on the woman's statement to him, was excluded; otherwise, of his opinion in general as to the length of the

(3) As to hearsay from the patient as to the cause of the injury or illness, no such necessity exists for accepting the testimony, in so far as the physician, in testifying to the cause of it, merely repeats what the patient said. But if the physician's estimate of the cause is based also on other data independent of these statements, and is not a mere repetition carrying no weight of its own, there is no reason to exclude this testimony.[6] Any attempt to draw the line in rulings, and to exclude a physician's testimony because his diagnosis is based in part on such statements, is unpractical, and defies the usual processes of medical thought. Hence it should be avoided.

(4) As to hearsay symptoms told by third persons, a diagnosis based on sundry information from third persons in general has no claims for admission.[7] But where the information is that of an attending nurse or physician having personal observation and an interest in learning and describing accurately, there seems every reason for admitting testimony based in part on this. Every physician relies upon it, and there are periods of sleep or other unconsciousness or mental incapacity which make it impossible to resort to the patient for information. It should be immaterial whether the informant is a professional person, or is the wife or other member of the household, so long as the information is based on attendance and personal observation.[8] The rulings have thus far seldom accepted this view; yet the language of some of their opinions may well seem to a physician a pedantic enforcement of legal nicety inconsistent with the needs of practical life.

(5) Distinguish here (1) the inquiry as to the grounds of a physician's knowledge and the admissibility of his answers (ante, § 655); (2) the admis-

'ultimum tempus' in general); 1904, Schissler v. State, 122 Wis. 365, 99 N. W. 593 (opinion based on the patient's statement of a past illness, excluded).

[6] Contra: 1912, Union Pacific R. Co. v. M'Mican, C. C. A., 194 Fed. 393 (physician's opinion based in part on the plaintiff's history of the injury as given to the physician and not stated hypothetically, excluded; the opinion confuses this principle and that of § 1918, post); 1867, Illinois C. R. Co. v. Sutton, 42 Ill. 440; 1882, Atchison T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Frazier, 27 Kan. 463; 1908, Federal Betterment Co. v. Reeves, 77 Kan. 111, 93 Pac. 627 (following A. T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Frazier); 1872, Morrissey v. Ingham, 111 Mass. 65; 1913, Hintz v. Wagner, — S. D. —, 140 N. W. 729;

Accord: 1865, Barber v. Merriam, 11 All. 324.

[7] Excluded: 1888, U. S. v. Faulkner, 35 Fed. 732; 1910, Davis v. State, 96 Ark. 7, 130 S. W. 547; 1898, Flannagan v. State, 106 Ga. 109, 32 S. E. 80 (medical man's opinion of insanity, based in part upon what he had heard); 1887, Brown v. Ins. Co., 65 Mich. 315, 32 N. W. 610; 1899, State v. Peel, 23 Mont. 358, 59 Pac. 169 (opinion based in part on hearsay in regard to the crime); 1895, People v. Strait, 148 N. Y. 566, 42 N. E. 1045 (like Flannagan v. State, supra); 1868, Rouch v. Zehring, 59 Pa. 78 (opinion of insanity, founded partly on hearsay); 1890, Vosburg v. Putney, 78 Wis. 87, 47 N. W. 99 (knowledge of the cause of a wound, predicated upon indefinite hearsay).

[8] Accord: 1896, Southern K. R. Co. v. Michaels, 57 Kan. 474, 46 Pac. 938 (history of a case given by other physicians to one who was called in; his testimony, founded on this and on personal examination, not excluded).

Contra: 1882, Atchison T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Frazier, 27 Kan. 463; 1858, Heald v. Thing, 45 Me. 395 ("The declarations of the nurse, wife, and attending physician are all clearly inadmissible", and therefore also "the information obtained from those sources"); 1895, Miller v. R. Co., 62 Minn. 216, 64 N. W. 554 (opinion as to cause of symptoms, based in part on another physician's "history of the case", given at the time of consultation, excluded); 1920, Aronovitz v. Arky, — Mo. —, 219 S. W. 620 (opinion based in part on "the history of the case as given to you" by the patient and members of the family as to prior causes etc., excluded); 1865, Wetherbee's Ex'rs v. Wetherbee's Heirs, 38 Vt. 454.

sion of the patient's statements themselves as testimony under the Hearsay exceptions (post, § 1918); though Courts do not always distinguish the two.

§ 689. Layman's or Physician's Acquaintance with the Person Diseased or Insane. According to the principle already examined (ante, § 659), one element of a sufficient means of knowledge is the adequacy of the extent or scope of observation. In medical matters (speaking broadly) may be considered under this head (1) sundry instances in which health, injury, or disease, are concerned, (2) the condition of sanity or insanity, in which the question may arise as to the extent of the witness' observation, whether a medical man or a layman.

(1) Health, Injuries. Here all that needs to be said is that the witness must appear to have had adequate opportunities of observation of the person, and, if the matter calls for it, to have directed his attention particularly to the particular ailment. The discretion of the trial judge should govern.[1]

(2) Sanity and Insanity. It is here assumed that laymen, as well as others, may, under the Opinion rule, express opinions as to sanity and insanity (post, § 1933). The inquiry will still remain (since each and every witness must fulfil the requirement of Knowledge) whether the particular person put forward to express the opinion has had an opportunity, by observation of the conduct of the one whose mental condition is in issue, to learn something upon the subject and to form a belief worth listening to.

That such an opportunity is necessary, no one has doubted. The doubt comes only as to the exact phrasing of the test to be applied. A precise definition, which shall be at once both flexible enough to meet various situations and exact enough to be a rule at all, is difficult, if not impossible. It has at any rate not been devised to the satisfaction of all the Courts. The truth is that the test should be left in the hands of the trial judge. Neither its exact phrasing, nor its application in a given instance, should be made to occupy the time of the highest Courts. The attempt to invent an all-sufficient form of words is as inexpedient as it is vain:[2]

§ 689. [1] Examples: (1) Health and Illness: 1885, Carthage Turnpike Co. v. Andrews, 102 Ind. 143, 1 N. E. 364; 1874, People v. Olmstead, 30 Mich. 433; (2) Injuries requiring special examination: 1879, Ebos v. State, 34 Ark. 522 (that a head-wound was the cause of death by concussion, though the witness had not opened the skull in his examination, admitted); 1884, Louisville N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Shires, 108 Ill. 627 (personal injuries; physician-witness who had known the plaintiff before the injury and examined him afterwards, admitted); 1878, Grand Rapids & I. R. Co. v. Huntley, 38 Mich. 542 (excluded on the facts).

[2] In spite of the sensible utterances above quoted, the reports are still cumbered with rulings which should have been left to the trial Court. In this note are given the forms of the various tests proposed; where no quotation follows, the ruling merely illustrates the application of the general principle to a particular witness, with or without the enunciation of some general test; for additional minor rulings in some of the jurisdictions, see post, § 1938, where the Opinion rule is discussed with reference to lay testimony to sanity:

ENGLAND: 1865, R. v. Southey, 4 F. & F. 884.

UNITED STATES: Federal: 1815, Lessee of Hoge v. Fisher, 1 Pet. 164; 1903, Queenan v. Oklahoma, 190 U. S. 548, 23 Sup. 762 (a lay witness who had known the accused "for some years", not allowed to say whether "since the killing he had formed an opinion as to the prisoner's mental condition at the time", on the ground that the opinion might, without further specification of its reasons, have been based on improper data); 1909, Turner v. American Security & T. Co., 213 U. S. 257, 29 Sup. 420 ("We are asked to review that discretion [of the 1841, GASTON, J., in Clary v. Clary, 2 Ired. 85: "Unquestionably, before a witness can be received to testify as to the fact of capacity, it must appear that he had an adequate opportunity of observing and judging of capacity. But so different are the powers and habits of observation in different persons that no general rule can be laid down as to what shall be deemed a sufficient opportunity of observation, other than that it has in fact trial Court]. . . . We have no hesitation in declining to do this");

Alabama: 1845, Bowling v. Bowling, 8 Ala. 541; 1849, Norris v. State, 16 Ala. 778 ("such as from long intimacy or familiar and frequent intercourse, with the party alleged to be insane are peculiarly fitted to judge"); 1854, Florey v. Florey, 24 Ala. 247 ("whose acquaintance with the party has been such as to enable him to form a correct opinion as to his mental condition"); 1854, Powell v. State, quoted supra; 1860, Re Carmichael, 36 Ala. 514 ("of an intimate character, such as, etc."; a disposition here to lay down a strict test, limiting the trial Court's discretion, and thus departing from Powell v. State, supra); 1868, Stuckey v. Bellah, 41 Ala. 707; 1882, Ford v. State, 71 Ala. 397 (going back to the rule of Powell v. State); 1895, Murphree v. Sam, 107 Ala. 424, 18 So. 264; 1900, Dominick v. Randolph, 124 Ala. 557, 27 So. 481 (witness here held not to have a sufficiently "long and intimate knowledge"); 1905, Breham v. State, 143 Ala. 28, 38 So. 919 (witness held not qualified by observation); 1911, Odom v. State, 174 Ala. 4, 56 So. 913; 1913, Jones v. State, 181 Ala. 63, 61 So. 434; 1914, Woods v. State, 186 Ala. 29, 65 So. 342 (physician observing in jail); 1915, Woodward Iron Co. v. Spencer, 194 Ala. 285, 69 So. 902;
Arkansas: 1855, Kelly's Heirs v. McGuire, 15 Ark. 600; 1860, Beller v. Jones, 22 Ark. 95 ("those who, from habits of daily or common intercourse with or observation of appellee, could make an intelligent comparison of his mental manifestations with his conduct when he was admitted to enjoy the full use of his natural faculties"); 1895, Shaeffer v. State, 61 Ark. 241, 32 S. W. 679; 1915, Dewein v. State, 120 Ark. 302, 179 S. W. 346 (accused);
California: C. C. P. § 1870, par. 10 (opinion of "an intimate acquaintance", admissible); this is applied in the trial Court's discretion, according to the following cases: 1882, People v. Pico, 62 Cal. 53; 1887, People v. Levy, 71 Cal. 623, 12 Pac. 791; 1888, People v. Fine, 77 Cal. 149, 19 Pac. 269; 1892, Carpenter's Estate, 94 Cal. 414, 29 Pac. 1101; 1893, Wheelock v. Godfrey, 100 Cal. 584, 35 Pac. 317; 1895, People v. Schmitt, 106 Cal. 48, 39 Pac. 204; 1895, Re Wax's Estate, 106 Cal. 343, 39 Pac. 624; 1894, Holland v. Zollner, 102 Cal. 633, 540, 36 Pac. 930 (one who is not an "intimate acquaintance" may testify to rationality of appearance at the time of acts observed, though not to sanity in general); 1896, People v. McCarthy, 115 Cal. 258, 46 Pac. 1073 (Code rule does not apply to "rational" appearance at a given time; discretion of trial Court here applied to admit a jailer having the defendant for months in his charge); 1897, People v. Hill, 116 Cal. 562, 48 Pac. 711; 1898, People v. Barthleman, 120 Cal. 7, 52 Pac. 112; 1901, Keithley's Estate, 134 Cal. 9, 66 Pac. 5; 1904, People v. Manoogian, 141 Cal. 592, 75 Pac. 177 (Holland v. Zollner and People v. McCarthy, supra, followed; this distinction is now a settled and important one in this court); 1904, People v. Suesser, 142 Cal. 354, 75 Pac. 1093 (trial Court's determination controls as to who are "intimate acquaintances"); 1904, McKenna's Estate, 143 id. 580, 77 Pac. 461 (same); 1906, Dolbeer's Estate, 149 Cal. 227, 86 Pac. 695 (question based in part upon "the facts you have learned" by hearsay, excluded); 1907, People v. Clark, 151 Cal. 200, 90 Pac. 549 (trial Court's discretion controlled); 1910, People v. Vaughn, 14 Cal. App. 201, 111 Pac. 620 (the Code requirement of "intimate acquaintance" does not apply where the injury is only as to the appearance at a certain time; apart from this, a jailer who has had an accused in custody for three months is qualified; following People v. McCarthy); 1910, People v. Loper, 159 Cal. 6, 112 Pac. 720;
Columbia (Dist.): 1895, Taylor v. U. S., 7 D. C. App. 27, 34 (witness excluded for lack of "adequate opportunity to observe the conduct and appearance of the party");
Connecticut: 1831, Kinne v. Kinne, 9 Conn. 103;
Idaho: 1895, State v. Hurst, 4 Ida. 345, 39 Pac. 554; 1897, State v. Larkins, 5 Ida. 200, 47 Pac. 945; 1897, Kelly v. Perrault, 5 Ida. 221, 48 Pac. 45 (attesting witness to a deed); 1903, State v. Shuff, 9 Ida. 115, 72 Pac. 664;
Illinois: 1897, Grand Lodge v. Wieting, 168 Ill. 408, 48 N. E. 59 (one who had a "passing acquaintance" only, held properly excluded); 1904, Chicago U. T. Co. v. Lawrence, 211 Ill. 373, 71 N. E. 1024 (certain witnesses held qualified on the facts); 1912, Martin v. Beatty, 254 Ill. 615, 98 N. E. 996 (largely left to trial Court's discretion); 1921, People v. Limberry, 298 Ill. 355, 131 N. E. 69 (murder);
Indiana: 1854, Kenworthy v. Williams, 5 Ind. 379 ("long acquaintance"); 1877, Sutherland v. Williams, 55 Ind. 349; 1881, Colee v. State, 75 Ind. 514 ("some knowledge of the acts and conduct of the person"); 1883, Sage v. State, 91 Ind. 143 ("an acquaintance with the person, or conversations, business dealings, or social intercourse with him"); 1884, Goodwin v. State, 95 Ind. 558 ("if the witness shows an acquaintance with the accused, if he has had conversation with him, or has had business dealings or social intercourse with him"); 1888, Johnson v. Culver, 116 Ind. 289, 19 N. E. 129 enabled the observer to form a belief or judgment thereupon. . . . It is admissible whether the opportunity for observation has been frequent or rare, . . . the weight of which must depend upon a consideration of all the circumstances under which it was formed."

1854, GOLDTHWAITE, J., in Powell v. State, 25 Ala. 27: "In every case where this question arises, the character of the insanity is a matter of no small importance in determining correctly as to the admissibility of the opinions of witnesses. If the evidence tended to es-

(need not be "extensive or intimate"; enough if it be "such as to enable the witnesses to form an opinion"); 1888, Grubb v. State, 117 Ind. 282, 20 N. E. 257, 725 (admitted, where witness talked 10 or 15 minutes with the defendant);
Iowa: 1875, State v. Stickley, 41 Ia. 237 (knowledge long previous; excluded); 1875, State v. Geddis, 42 Ia. 268; 1887, Re Norman's Will, 72 Ia. 86, 33 N. W. 374; 1888, Blake v. Rourke, 74 Ia. 523, 38 N. W. 392 (distinguishing knowledge long before from past knowledge at a past time in issue); 1896, Fenton's Will, 97 Ia. 192, 66 N. W. 99 (a stenographer who had taken the testator's deposition, occupying two hours, admitted); 1902, Hull's Will, 117 Ia. 738, 89 N. W. 979; 1904, Stutsman v. Sharpless, 125 Ia. 335, 101 N. W. 105;
Kansas: 1898, State v. Beuerman, 59 Kan. 586, 53 Pac. 874 ("a fair basis for an opinion"); 1906, Kempf v. Koppa, 74 Kan. 153, 85 Pac. 806; 1909, State v. Rumble, 81 Kan. 16, 105 Pac. 1 (no general rule);
Kentucky: 1904, Irvine v. Gibson, 117 Ky. 306, 77 S. W. 1106; 1922, Feree v. Com., 193 Ky. 347, 236 S. W. 246 (murder);
Louisiana: 1904, State v. Lyons, 113 La. 959, 37 So. 890 (there must be an adequate opportunity of observation);
Maine: 1885, Fayett v. Chesterville, 77 Me. 33 (an expert examining once ex parte, rejected); 1895, Hall v. Perry, 87 Me. 567, 33 Atl. 160;
Maryland: 1848, Brooke v. Townshend, 7 Gill 29; 1852, Steward v. Redditt, 3 Md. 78 ("facts of such a nature as will enable him to form a knowledge of the party's intellect"); 1872, Waters v. Waters, 35 Md. 542 ("an opportunity of forming a rational opinion"); 1895, Crockett v. Davis, 81 Md. 134, 31 Atl. 710; 1910, Grill v. O'Dell, 113 Md. 625, 77 Atl. 984;
Massachusetts: (owing to the exclusion of lay opinions, post, § 1938, the question is rarely presented in this State);
Michigan: 1893, O'Connor v. Madison, 98 Mich. 183, 188, 57 N. W. 105 (must have "the means of observation");
Mississippi: 1876, Russell v. State, 53 Miss. 379; 1881, Wood v. State, 58 Miss. 743 ("such acquaintance or such opportunities of observation as are likely to make his opinion valuable"); 1884, Reed v. State, 62 Miss. 408 ("who has had opportunities of knowing and observing the conversation, conduct, and manners of the person");
Missouri: 1862, Farrell's Adm'r v. Brennan's Adm'x, 32 Mo. 334 ("opportunities for knowing and observing the conversation, conduct, and manners of the person"); 1870, State v. Klinger, 46 Mo. 227; 1877, Moore v. Moore, 67 Mo. 195 ("adequate opportunity of observing and judging of his capacity"); 1882, Appleby v. Brock, 76 Mo. 318 ("adequate opportunity of observing and judging"); 1891, State v. Williamson, 106 Mo. 171, 17 S. W. 172;
Montana: Rev. C. 1921, § 10531, par. 10 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1870); 1888, Terr. v. Hart, 7 Mont. 498 ("acquainted with the defendant and have observed his actions and manner of life"); 1889, Terr. v. Roberts, 9 Mont. 15, 22 Pac. 132; 1899, State v. Peel, 23 Mont. 358, 59 Pac. 169 (opinion must relate to time of witness' observation, not time of trial); 1907, State v. Penna, 35 Mont. 535, 90 Pac. 787 (trial Court's discretion controls; but here two reporters who had interviewed the party for half an hour only were held not qualified); 1911, State v. Leakey, 44 Mont. 354, 120 Pac. 234; 1921, State v. Davis, 60 Mont. 426, 199 Pac. 421 (Rev. C. § 7887 applied);
Nebraska: 1893, Shults v. State, 37 Nebr. 481, 496, 55 N. W. 1080 (must be "of an intimate character and his associations of sufficient duration to justify him in forming a correct judgment"); 1895, Pflueger v. State, 46 Nebr. 493, 64 N. W. 1094; 1902, Clarke v. Irwin, 63 Nebr. 539, 88 N. W. 783; 1912, Larson v. State, 92 Nebr. 24, 137 N. W. 894 (a bizarre opinion; Rose, J., diss., and Letton and Fawcett, JJ., declining to join in the reasoning);
Nevada: 1889, State v. Lewis, 20 Nev. 347, 22 Pac. 241 (largely in discretion of trial judge);
New Hampshire: (see the citations under § 1938, post; they are complicated by the peculiar history of the Opinion rule in this State);
New York: 1901, People v. Krist, 168 N. Y. 19, 60 N. E. 1057 (physician allowed to state his opinion as based on defendant's acts at the very time of the homicide); in this State the question rarely arises, owing to the exclusion of lay opinions (post, § 1938);
North Carolina: 1863, McDougald v. McLean, Winst. 120 ("opportunities of knowing and observing"); 1918, Stock's Will, 175 N. C. 224, 95 S. E. 360 (testator); and other cases under § 1938, post;
Oregon: Laws 1920, § 727, par. 10 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1870); 1897, State v. Feister, 32 Or. 254, 50 Pac. 561 (a deputy sheriff who had the defendant in charge four months, admitted); 1911, State v. Hassing, 60 Or. 81, 118 Pac. 195 (like State v. Feister);
Pennsylvania: 1861, Bricker v. Lightner's Ex'r, 40 Pa. 205 ("opportunities for observing the conduct of the party and the developments of the intellectual faculties"); 1893, tablish that the prisoner, from mental imbecility, was incapable of distinguishing between right and wrong, or that his case was one of general insanity, by which we mean madness on all subjects, it is obvious that it would not require the same degree of observation to discover the existence of the disease under such circumstances as in cases of monomania or partial derangement, where the particular delusion might frequently escape the attention of the most acute observer or the most intimate association. . . . It is impossible to lay down any precise rule as to the length or character of acquaintance which would render the opinion of a witness admissible on this question. All we can say is that the circumstances must be such as to have afforded the opportunity to form an accurate judgment as to the existence or the non-existence of the disease considered with reference to the character or degree in which it is alleged to exist."

1860, LUMPKIN, J., in Choice v. State, 31 Ga. 467: "It has been truly remarked that so different are the powers and habits of observation in different persons that no general rule can be laid down as to what shall be deemed a sufficient opportunity of observation, other than that in fact it has enabled the observer to form a belief or judgment thereon."

1864, CAMPBELL, J., in Beaubien v. Cicotte, 12 Mich. 503: "From the nature of things no rule can be laid down declaring what amount of acquaintance or what opportunities are necessary to enable an observer to become a witness. There are cases of insanity open to the slightest scrutiny, while others defy the keenest search. But no testimony can be of any real value unless it appears the witness had adequate means and opportunities for forming some conclusion."

1892, TEMPLE, C., in Carpenter's Estate, 94 Cal. 414, 29 Pac. 1101 (commenting on the Code restriction to "intimate acquaintances"): "The witnesses are [at common law] only required to have had sufficient opportunity to observe the person whose sanity is in question. Different rulings have been made as to what shall be considered a sufficient showing of opportunity of observation to enable a witness to form an opinion which can be received as evidence; or, expressed in the language of our Code, what degree of intimacy there must be. In general, the idea seems to be that no rule can be prescribed on this subject. . . . Now, when we take into consideration the rule as it exists in most jurisdictions where the common law prevails, we must conclude that our Code has attempted what has been said to be impracticable, — to establish a rule as to what opportunities of observation shall entitle a witness to speak. . . . Since it requires the drawing of a definite line between things which are separated only by degrees of difference, the rule is and must remain more or less indefinite. A very large discretion must be conceded to the trial Court."

There is one class of witnesses who, by long tradition, have been received to testify to mental capacity and may speak without being qualified in the foregoing manner, namely, persons attesting a will as witnesses.[3] Long before

Com. v. Buccieri, 153 Pa. 535, 549, 26 Atl. 228 (one who had seen insane; indications months before, but had not seen the defendant for some time, not allowed to speak as to his condition at the time charged); 1899, Com. v. Brown, 193 Pa. 507, 44 Atl. 497;
Philippine Isl. C. C. P. 1901, § 298, par. 10 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1870);
Tennessee: 1907, Atkins v. State, 119 Tenn. 458, 105 S. W. 353;
Texas: 1874, Thomas v. State, 48 Tex. 65 (acquaintance enabling witness "to form correct opinions of his mental condition") Holcomb v. State, 41 Tex. 125 ("good opportunities of forming an opinion");
Utah: 1917, Hansen's Will, 50 Utah 207, 167 Pac. 256;
Vermont: 1918, Martin's Will, 92 Vt. 362, 104 Atl. 100 (trained nurse, an attendant for a month, admitted); 1921, Re Wood's Will, — Vt. —, 115 Atl. 231 (witnesses who saw testator once only, admitted, in trial Court's discretion);
Washington: 1918, Rust v. Washington T. & H. Co., 101 Wash. 552, 172 Pac. 846;
Wisconsin: 1875, Boorman v. Relief Ass., 90 Wis. 144, 62 N. W. 924 (excluded, where the witness' only grounds were that the person had once become angry with him for supposed misconduct).

[3] 1683, Hudson's Case, Skinner 79; 1884, McCurry v. Hooper, 12 Ala. 827; 1918, Miller v. Whittington, 202 Ala. 406, 80 So. 499. Cal. C. C. P. 1872, § 1870, par. 10 ("the opin-any tests for the general subject were devised, these persons were received, and the tradition seems everywhere to have kept its place, in spite of the change of theory of attestation (post, § 1288) and of the probable incompetency of a will-witness under modern tests:

1794, Heyward v. Hazard, Bay 349; Per Curiam: "The third requisite is the attestation. The true construction of the law under this head has always been that the act called the attention of the witnesses to the situation of the testator himself, and this particularly relates to his sanity. . . . The business, then, of the persons required by statute to be present at executing a will is not barely to attest the corporal act of signing, but to try, judge, and determine whether the testator is 'compos' to sign."

2. Foreign Law

§ 690. Knowledge of Foreign Law as based on Study alone. (1) It ought not to be doubted to-day that, so far as a knowledge of our domestic system of law is concerned, it may be adequately gained from a study of the printed sources alone, without any practice whatever in the conduct of litigation. "Two things are established," says Professor Langdell, in a passage of classical value,[1] "first, that the law is a science; secondly, that all the available materials of that science are contained in printed books." From the point of view, then, either of that skill which is required to make an estimate of the state of the law, or of that observation of data which is the necessary foundation of knowledge, practice at the forum is not indispensable:[2] ion of a subscribing witness to a writing" respecting the signer's "mental sanity", is admissible); 1849, Potts v. House, 6 Ga. 335; 1897, Kelly v. Perrault, 5 Ida. 221, 48 Pac. 45; 1854, Kenworthy v. Williams, 5 Ind. 379, semble; 1843, Hunt's Heirs v. Hunt, 3 B. Monr. Ky. 577, semble; 1831, Ware v. Ware, 8, Me. 55; 1852, Cilley v. Cilley, 34 Me. 163 (when the facts observed are also given); 1890, Williams v. Spencer, 150 Mass. 349, 23 N. E. 105 (but relates to time of attestation only); 1917, Holbrook v. Seagrave, 228 Mass. 26, 116 N. E. 889 (opinion formed subsequent to time of will's execution, excluded); 1864, Beaubien v. Cicotte, 12 Mich. 495, per Campbell, J.; 1859, Carlton v. Carlton, 40 N. H. 17, semble; 1866, Boardman v. Woodman, 47 id. 134; 1853, DeWitt v. Barley, 9 N. Y. 381, per Mason, J.; 1863, McDougald v. McLean, Winst. N. C. 120; 1884, Barker v. Pope, 91 N. C. 168, P. R. Rev. St. & C. 1911, § 1403, par. 8 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1870, par. 10); 1835, Gibson v. Gibson, 9 Yerg. Tenn. 331; 1877, Garrison v. Blanton, 48 Tex 303; 1918, Swan's Estate, 51 Utah 410, 170 Pac. 452; 1877, Jarrett v. Jarrett, 11 W. Va. 584, 626; 1882, Nicholas v. Kershner, 20 W. Va. 255; 1888, Kerr v. Lunsford, 31 W. Va. 680, 8 S. E. 493.

Compare also the cases cited post, § 1511 (attestation as implying a statement of sanity).

See further the citations under § 1936, post, dealing with that detail of the Opinion rule, which in some jurisdictions receives the will-witness' opinion without calling for his reasons.

Note that a witness may not be qualified to express an opinion on general sanity; but may yet have observed particular occasions or transactions, and therefore may of course (if otherwise admitted under the Opinion rule) characterize them as rational or not: 1886, People v. Lavelle, 71 Cal. 352, 12 Pac. 226; 1892, Carpenter's Estate, 94 Cal. 414, 29 Pac. 1101.

§ 690. [1] Proceedings at the 250th Anniversary of the Founding of Harvard University, 1886, p. 85. "To put an end to reports," said Edmund Burke, on a great occasion, "is to put an end to the law of England" (31 Parl. Hist. 311).

[2] Accord: Brailey v. Rhodesia Consolidated [1910], 2 Ch. 95, 102 (lecturer on Roman-Dutch law in London, admitted to testify on the law of Rhodesia, though "he is not actually practising in Rhodesia").

Contra: 1831, Tindal, C. J., in Collier v. Simpson, 5 C. & P. 74, semble; 1845, Lord Langdale, M. R., in Nelson v. Bridport, 8 Beav. 539, semble.

1844, COLERIDGE, J., in Baron de Bode's Case, 8 Q. B. 263: "I take it nobody can doubt that a lawyer who, without ever having held a brief or practiced out of his chambers, had acquired all his knowledge by reading, would be as competent to give evidence respecting the state of the English law as if he had been engaged in the most extensive practice. . . . It is, I think, conceded that though the witness should state that all his knowledge is derived from reading a particular book or a particular decision, he still might give us the result of all his knowledge of the state of the unwritten law."

(2) But the case may be different in testing one's acquaintance with a foreign law. From the point of view of the principle of Knowledge, to be sure, little difficulty arises; for the fact that a consideration of text-writers' hearsay enters in part into a study of legal sources is no objection to a knowledge thus founded, since these very opinions go in part to make up the general consensus of interpretation which constitutes a portion of all law. From the point of view of Expert Capacity, however (ante, § 564), it may well be argued that residence, and perhaps practice, in the foreign country is essential to an ability to discriminate between the values of different sources and the standing of different authorities. It may even be argued that a Knowledge of recent possible changes is not to be expected of those who do not by practice or residence have an interest or an opportunity to keep up regularly with such changes. These considerations would hardly apply to the law of a country where the foreign system was germane in its general features to the domestic one — as that of England is to that of the United States — where skill in the domestic forum would equally equip for an examination of the foreign sources. But for a system foreign in essence as well as in name some such requirements as the above might occasionally be demanded; much being left to the discretion of the trial judge. The decisions reflect, in their conflict, the necessity for some such latitude of rule.[3] On the whole, the English courts have been more strict in this respect than the courts of this country:

[3] England: 1852, R. v. Povey, 6 Cox Cr. 83 (bigamy; to prove a valid first marriage, the woman's sister, who was present at the ceremony in Scotland, was offered to testify that "parties were always married in Scotland" in the form seen by her; excluded; "it may not be necessary in all cases to have a professional person to tell us what the foreign law is"; but "the witness does not profess to know the law"; this ruling well illustrates the distinction between the present principle and that of § 564, ante); 1875, Re Bonelli's Goods, L. R. 1 P. D. 69 (an English lawyer who had studied Italian law in England, rejected); 1878, Cartwright v. Cartwright, 26 W. R. 864, Hannen, P. (an English barrister practising before the Privy Council, held not a competent expert as to the law of those dependencies whence appeals are heard in the Council; this is unsound); 1880, Goods of Dost Aly Khan, L. R. 6 P. D. 6 (Persian minister plenipotentiary, admitted to testify to Persian law, having stated that "all persons in the diplomatic service of Persia are required to be thoroughly versed in the law, and that therefore he had studied and become acquainted with it").

Canada: 1916, Re Goodman, 28 D. L. R. 197, 29 id. 725, Man. (extradition for defrauding creditors; attorney admitted to practice in Massachusetts and in the U. S. District Court for Massachusetts, received);

United States: 1901, Barber v. International Co., 73 Conn. 587, 48 Atl. 758 (American lawyer who had spent six months in England, held qualified on the facts); 1903, De Sonora v. Bankers' M. C. Co., — Ia. —, 95 N. W. 232 (an attorney held on the facts not qualified to testify to the law of Mexico); 1874, Consolidated Ins. Co. v. Cashow, 41 Md. 79 (a lawyer residing, but not shown to be practising, in the foreign State, held qualified); 1891, People v. McQuaid, 85 Mich. 123, 125, 48 N. W. 161 (to prove that a certain edition of Pennsylvania statutes was there commonly used as correct, a clergyman was admitted who had consulted the statutes of that State in performing his duty for marriage ceremonies and had observed the use of that edition in the courts); 1868, Hall v. Costello, 48 N. H. 179

1850, Bristow v. Sequeville, 5 Exch. 275; the witness to the law of Cologne, in Prussia, had studied law at the University of Leipsic, in Saxony. Counsel: "Whether that knowledge was acquired by study or practice is only a ground for observation on the value of his evidence." ALDERSON, B: "If a man who has studied law in Saxony, and never practised in Prussia, is a competent witness to prove the law of Prussia, why may not a Frenchman, who has read books relating to Chinese law, prove what the law of China is? Would a person who had never been in England, but had studied the law of England at a foreign university, be competent to prove what the law of England is?"

Distinguish here certain other questions concerning foreign law: (1) Whether the witness is sufficiently skilled as a lawyer (ante, § 564); (2) where a foreign statute must be proved by copy (post, § 1271); (3) whether printed copies of a statute (post, § 1684), or legal treatises (post, § 1697), or reports of decisions (post, § 1703), may be used; and (4) whether the Opinion rule interposes any obstacle (post, § 1953).

3. Reputation (of Character)

§ 691. Witness must expressly appear Qualified. When the character of a party or of a witness is to be evidenced by reputation (post, § 1608), the reputation must itself be proved by a witness qualified by an opportunity to obtain knowledge of it. The first rule here consists in an application of the general principle (ante, § 654) that a witness must expressly appear to have had the means of knowledge, before his testimony can proceed:[1]

(New Hampshire lawyers, who as counsel had had special interest and opportunity, admitted with reference to a topic of Canadian law); 1905, Massucco v. Tomassi, 78 Vt. 188, 62 Atl. 57 (an Italian priest, allowed to testify that a religious ceremony alone was not valid in Italy).

§ 691. [1] Accord: Federal: 1859, Teese v. Huntington, 23 How. 2, 13; Ala. 1898, McClellan v. State, 117 Ala. 140, 23 So. 653 ("ordinarily" the witness' means of knowledge will not be inquired into, if he says that he knows); Ga. 1907, Moore v. Dozier, 128 Ga. 90, 57 S. E. 110 (testimony based merely on hearing witnesses at a former trial, excluded); Ill. 1859, Crabtree v. Kile, 21 Ill. 183; 1861, Crabtree v. Hagenbaugh, 25 Ill. 233, 238; 1887, Spies v. People, 122 Ill. 1, 208, 12 N. E. 865; La. 1906, State v. Rester, 116 La. 985, 41 So. 231; Md. 1919, Sappington v. Fairfax, 135 Md. 186, 108 Atl. 575; Mass. 1883, Com. v. Rogers, 136 Mass. 158 (the judge may inquire whether the witness has any knowledge, but not into its means or extent); Miss. 1884, Pickens v. State, 61 Miss. 563, 566; 1885, French v. Sale, 63 Miss. 386, 393 (in effect disposing of the contrary dictum in Powers v. Presgroves, 38 id. 227, 242); N. Y. 1895, Carlson v. Winterson, 147 N. Y. 652, 42 N. E. 347; N. Car. 1829, State v. Boswell, 2 Dev. 210; 1843, State v. O'Neale, 4 Ired. 88 ("the regular mode is to inquire whether they have the means of knowing the general character"); 1843, State v. Parks, 3 Ired. 296 (the witness must profess to know the general reputation before testifying); 1873, State v. Speight, 69 N. C. 72, 75 ("whether he knew the general character of the witness, and the means by which he had acquired that knowledge", must be asked); 1894, State v. Coley, 114 N. C. 879, 883, 19 S. E. 705.

The following case is apparently no longer law: 1849, Bates v. Barber, 4 Cush. Mass. 107 (making the strange statement that "there is no question of competency for the Court to settle, in regard to the knowledge of witnesses . . . to reputation for truth and veracity").

On this subject compare the principle admitting good reputation when it consists in not having heard anything against the person (post, § 1614). It is sometimes sought to strike out the testimony of such a witness when on cross-examination he states that he has heard nothing against the person. Such an objection is erroneous, both on the present principle and on that of § 1614, post. Therefore the following case is without support in principle or policy: 1922, People v. Willy, 301 Ill. 307, 133 N. E. 859 (murder; the prosecution's witnesses in rebuttal testified to defendant's bad character, but on cross-examination admitted that they had heard nothing about him for 20 years past; held, that since the testimony was not properly qualified, it should have been struck out on motion; unsound; the time for the defendant's objection to the witness' qualification was at the opening of the direct examination). Con-

1870, MORTON, J., in Wetherbee v. Norris, 103 Mass. 566: "The ruling of the presiding judge that each of the witnesses called to impeach the plaintiff should be first asked the question, 'Do you know the reputation of the plaintiff for truth and veracity?' is not the subject of exceptions. The practice upon this subject differs in different courts. In this State no practice is established as a rule of law; but it is within the discretion of the presiding judge to require the preliminary question above stated to be asked of each witness, if he shall deem that the interests of justice require it. The same principle is applicable to the examination of witnesses upon other subjects. . . . If the presiding judge sees that there is danger that the witness, in answer to the usual question, 'What is his general reputation for truth and veracity?', may give incompetent testimony", he may require the preliminary question; but this rests in his discretion.

§ 692. Knowledge must be based on Residence in the Place of Repute, not on mere Inquiry. The admissible reputation is that which is built up in the neighborhood of a man's domicile or in the circle where his livelihood is followed (post, § 1615); and it is of slow formation. It is the sum of all that is said or not said for or against him. Consequently, its tenor can be adequately learned only by a residence in the place, not by a mere visit of inquiry, or by a casual sojourn, or by a conversation with a resident who reports the reputation:[1]

1802, KENYON, L. C. J., in Mawsom v. Hartsink, 4 Esp. 102 (rejecting the question, "Whether the witness in consequence of a trial had made particular inquiries as to the witness' general character?"): "That cannot be evidence. . . . If this was allowed, when it was known that a witness was likely to be called, it would be possible for the opposite party to send round to persons who had prejudices against him and from thence to form an opinion, which was afterwards to be told in court to destroy his credit."

1829, MARCY, J., in Douglass v. Tousey, 2 Wend. 354: "As a general rule, there is much reason to fear that this method [of ascertaining reputation] would prove a very unsafe one. The general character is the estimation in which a person is held in the community where he has resided, and ordinarily the members of that community are the only proper witnesses to testify as to such character. It would be unsafe to depend upon the testimony of the defendant's agent sent into that community, an entire stranger, it may be, to collect information to subserve the defendant's views in the suit. Such witness would not speak of his knowledge of the plaintiff's character, or give his own opinion in relation thereto, but barely state his conclusion upon the information received from others."

How long this residence must have been, or how near to the place of domicile or occupation, cannot be defined by fixed rule. The qualification has varied according to circumstances;[2] and it should be left entirely to the trial Court.

Contra to the foregoing: 1918, State v. Hooker, 99 Wash. 661, 170 Pac. 374 ("any lack of knowledge of the reputation assailed shown on cross-examination went to the credibility . . . rather than to its competency").

§ 692. [1] Accord: 1907, Tingley v. Time M. Co., 151 Cal. 1, 89 Pac. 1097 (a witness from Arkansas who went to Newburyport, Mass., and stayed a few days to make the inquiries, excluded); 1920, People v. Burch, — Cal. App. —, 189 Pac. 716 (injunction under the red-light abatement law; testimony to bad repute of a house must come from residents of the community, not visiting agents of a law enforcement league); 1864, Reid v. Reid, 17 N. J. Eq. 101 (like the above cases); 1817, Kimmel v. Kimmel, 3 S. & R. Pa. 336 ("the witness shall not be permitted to say 'he was told' that the person had either a good or bad character in his own neighborhood; but that is a very different thing from knowledge of common report acquired, as in this case, from common report itself");

Contra: 181, Foulkes v. Sellway, 2 Esp. 236 (where the witness went to the place where the person in question lived, to inquire into her reputation).

[2] Federal: 1912, Young v. Corrigan, D. C.

4. Handwriting

§ 693. General Question defined; Identifying an Illiterate's Mark. The identification of handwriting as genuine involves the double testimonial knowledge already spoken of (ante, § 653), — an acquaintance by the witness with the type of handwriting in question, and an observation of the disputed specimen, the witness comparing the two in his mind and stating whether the latter is to be regarded as genuinely an instance of the type in question. How to evidence the type of handwriting circumstantially — i.e. by individual specimens — is a different matter, dealt with elsewhere (ante, § 383, post, §§ 2001, 2016). The inquiry here concerns the mode of proving it by testimonial evidence, i.e. by a witness who declares that he is acquainted with the type of handwriting in question.

To satisfy this situation the witness (1) must observe the specimen in dispute; this we may assume he will do;[1] and (2) must bring to this examination a knowledge of the type of writing with which it is desired to affirm or deny a connection. It is the adequacy of this knowledge which is here to be examined.

N. D. Ohio, 208 Fed. 43 (detective employed to inquire into reputation, excluded, citing the text above); Alabama: 1846, Sorrelle v. Craig, 9 Ala. 536, 540 (one who lived 20 miles away, and was ignorant of the other witness' neighborhood-reputation, excluded); 1848, Hadjo v. Gooden, 13 Ala. 720, 722 (one who lived 12 miles away, but claimed to know the opinion in the witness' neighborhood, admitted); 1853, Dove v. State, 22 Ala. 23, 39 (excluded, because knowledge not shown); 1854, Elam v. State, 25 Ala. 53 (knowledge may appear on examination, as well as beforehand); 1859, Dupree v. State, 33 Ala. 388 (persons living more than 20 miles away, admitted); 1889, Holmes v. State, 88 Ala. 29, 7 So. 193 (excluded, on the facts); 1896, Buchanan v. State, 109 Ala. 7, 19 So. 410 (witness living 25 miles away, excluded); Indiana: 1904, South Bend v. Turner, 163 Ind. 194, 71 N. E. 657 (a witness who has heard only one person speak to the repute of another, and does not know the latter personally, is not qualified); Louisiana: 1896, State v. Fontenot, 48 La. An. 305, 19 So. 111 (witnesses not residing in the neighborhood for 11 and for 7 years, rejected); Massachusetts: 1866, Com. v. Lawler, 12 All. 585 (after the impeaching witness had admitted that he had not, as to the other witness' reputation, "heard it talked of a great deal", further questions as to the reputation were excluded); Michigan: 1883, Bathrick v. Post & Tribune Co., 50 Mich. 642, 16 N. W. 172; Missouri: 1899, State v. McLaughlin, 149 Mo. 19, 50 S. W. 315 (resident of town 5 miles distant, admitted); 1900, State v. Hudspeth, 159 Mo. 178, 60 S. W. 136 (one not living in the neighborhood, nor having an opportunity to learn of the reputation there, excluded); 1901, State v. Haines, 161 Mo. 555, 61 S. W. 621 (witness from another State, excluded on the facts); New Hampshire: 1860, Kelley v. Proctor, 41 N. H. 139 ("whether he is acquainted with the reputation of the former witness for truth or has the means of knowing the former witness' general character for truth"); New Jersey: 1916, State v. Bloom, 89 N. J. 418, 99 Atl. 125 (residence in the same neighborhood suffices); South Carolina: 1892, State v. Turner, 36 S. C. 539, 15 S. E. 602; Texas: 1879, Johnson v. Brown, 51 Tex. 65, 77; Wisconsin: 1879, Dufresne v. Weise, 46 Wis. 290, 297, 1 N. W. 59 (not clear); 1883, Wallis v. White, 58 Wis. 26, 29, 15 N. W. 767 (one residing in the same city, but not the same ward, admitted).

But personal acquaintance with the one bearing the reputation is not necessary; 1817, Kimmel v. Kimmel, 3 S. & R. Pa. 336; 1918, Com. v. Principatti, 260 Pa. 587, 104 Atl. 53. Contra: South Bend v. Turner, Ind., supra, semble. Compare (1898) Peeples v. State, 103 Ga. 629, 29 S. E. 691 (inquiries as to the length of acquaintance with the person, etc. held proper).

The question where the reputation itself must prevail is a different one (post, § 1615).

§ 693. [1] For the authorities on the question whether a witness to handwriting may testify to a lost disputed document or whether a deponent must have the document shown to him at the time of taking the deposition, see post, § 1185.

Invaluable observations on all aspects of this subject will be found in the works of Albert S. Osborn: Questioned Documents: a Study of Questioned Documents, with an Outline of Methods by which the Facts may be Discovered and Shown (Rochester, N. Y., 1910); The Problem of Proof (N. Y., 1922).

When may the witness properly claim that his opportunities of observation have been such as to give him a fair knowledge of the general type or character of the person's hand? That this is the question has always been clearly recognized by the Courts:[2]

1816, DALLAS, J., in Holt N. P. 421: "What are the materials of judgment to which a witness has recourse when he says that he believes a particular signature to be the handwriting of a particular person? He has seen the person write, and he is presumed to have formed a standard in his mind, and with that standard to compare the writing in question. This standard will be more or less perfect according as the instances have been more or less frequent."

1839, BRONSON, J., in Cunningham v. Bank, 21 Wend. 558: "A witness must in some way have acquired a knowledge of the general character of the party's handwriting before he can be qualified to testify on that subject."

1840, GASTON, J., in Pope v. Askew, 1 Ired. 16, 20: "The testimony now received is that of the belief of a witness as to the identity of character between the writing in question and the exemplar of the party's handwriting in the mind of the witness, which exemplar has been formed upon previous sufficient means of observation. The enquiry is, What does the law hold to be those adequate and sufficient means of observation?"

What, then, are the various recognized modes of obtaining knowledge? It must be understood that this does not involve the testimony of one who saw the very disputed document being written. Such a witness makes no comparison; he saw the act of writing, as he might have seen the act of ploughing a field; and he needs no knowledge of the general character of the writer's hand. Excluding this kind of testimony, then, the various possible modes are three: (A) Knowledge obtained by seeing the person write some other documents or signatures, — indicated by the phrase 'ex visu scriptionis'; (B) Knowledge obtained by seeing documents otherwise known to have been written by the person in question, — indicated by the phrase 'ex scriptis olim visis'; (C) Knowledge obtained by an examination, in or out of court, for the express purpose of obtaining such knowledge, of documents said to have been written by the person in question, — indicated by the phrase 'ex comparatione scriptorum' or 'ex scripto nunc viso.' Within one or the other of these modes must fall any source of knowledge.

In each of these modes two elements are involved, giving rise to different difficulties and different rules. The witness who says that he has, in one way or another, learned the character of the person's writing by the observation of specimens of it necessarily predicates two things, — (1) first, that certain specimens of handwriting were considered by him, and (2) secondly, that they were genuinely written by the person in question. The second of these circumstances is as essential as the first; and, under each mode of knowledge, it is to be considered whether both are present.

Before taking up in order the three modes of acquiring knowledge, it may be noted that (on the principle of § 654, ante), the witness must, before proceeding with his testimony, expressly appear to have had the means of knowledge;[3] for the possession of it is not presumed beforehand.

[2] The following opinions also expound the principle: 1852, Brayton, J., in Kinney v. Flynn, 2 R. I. 319, 326; 1872, Boyden, J., in State v. Woodruff, 67 N. C. 90.

It may also be noted that the question has occasionally been raised whether one can testify at all from the present basis to the genuineness of a marksman's mark — i.e. whether there is any constancy of peculiarity in the mark of an illiterate which can serve as a type or standard. There should be no hard-and-fast rule; the discretion of the trial Court should control.[4]

A. Ex Visu Scriptionis (Seeing the Person Write)

§ 694. Number of Times. Whether one could obtain a sufficient notion of the general character of a person's hand by seeing him write once only might well have been doubted. Tradition, however, has handed down a fixed rule that seeing the person write once only is as a matter of law sufficient:[1]

[3] 1893, Richardson v. Stringfellow, 100 Ala. 416, 419, 14 So. 283 (omission of preliminary question later cured); 1892, Riggs v. Powell, 142 Ill. 453, 456, 32 N. E. 482 (he need not say "in so many words" that he knows it, if he shows knowledge); 1893, State v. Minton, 116 Mo. 605, 614, 22 S. W. 808 (that he is acquainted with the hand is sufficient); 1895, State v. Harvey, 131 Mo. 339, 32 S. W. 1110; 1916, McGilora v. Minneapolis St. P. S. S. M. R. Co., 35 N. D. 275, 159 N. W. 854 (that he knows the signature, may suffice).

In Georgia, however, it would seem that the statute, literally construed, dispenses with any prior inquiry into the witness' means of knowledge: Ga. Code 1910, § 5835, P. C. 1910, § 1042 ("any witness is competent to testify as to his belief who will swear that he knows or would recognize the handwriting. The source of his knowledge is a question for investigation, and goes entirely to the credit and weight of his evidence").

[4] Such testimony seems generally to have been treated as allowable: Eng. 1830, George v. Surrey, M. & M. 516 (here the mark was an habitual one, and had a certain peculiarity); 1848, Sayer v. Glossop, 12 Jur. 464; 1849, Pearey v. Dicker, 13 id. 997; U. S. 1850, Strong v. Brewer, 17 Ala. 706, 710 (good opinion by Dargan, C. J.); 1904, Ballow v. Collins, 139 Ala. 543, 36 So. 712 (an illiterate mortgagor may identify his own mark, but perhaps not the attestation of the witness thereto; but here the execution was held not sufficiently proved, because it appeared that the illiterate mortgagor was not actually testifying from a knowledge of the peculiarity of his mark, but from having been told by C. that this was the mortgage he signed); 1910, Ausmus v. People, 47 Colo. 167, 107 Pac. 204; 1895, Little v. Rogers, 99 Ga. 95, 24 S. E. 856; 1809, Jackson v. Van Dusen, 5 Johns. N. Y. 155 (here there were two initials as a mark); 1897, State v. Tice, 30 Or. 457, 48 Pac. 367; 1868, Carson's Appeal, 59 Pa. 493, 498, 503 (will); 1842, Fogg v. Dennis, 3 Humph. Tenn. 47 semble.

Contra: 1850, Carrier v. Hampton, 11 Ired. N. C. 307, 311 ("Generally, a mark, a mere cross, cannot be identified"); 1807, Engles v. Bruington, 4 Yeates Pa. 345, 346, obiter; 1851, Shinkle v. Crock, 17 Pa. 159, 161 (inadmissible, where the mark has no peculiarity; yet here a witness who said that it had was excluded).

§ 694. [1] Accord: England: 1801, Garrells v. Alexander, 4 Esp. 37, Kenyon, L. C. J.; 1817, Powell v. Ford, 2 Stark. 164; 1838, Willman v. Worrall, 8 C. & P. 381; 1836, Williams, J., and Patteson, J., in Doe v. Suckermore, 5 A. & E. 719, 730; 1839, Warren v. Anderson, 8 Scott 384 (with other circumstances); 1806, Evans' Pothier, ii, 160 ("I have known the admission of this evidence carried so far as for an attorney, after the failure of other attempts, to stand up and swear to a knowledge of the writing of the opposite party from having once looked over his shoulder when writing a letter at an alehouse"); 1910, Derrick's Case, 5 Cr. App. 162.

Canada: 1899, Marcy v. Pierce, 4 N. W. Terr. 246.

United States: 1906, State v. Bond, 12 Ida. 424, 86 Pac. 43 (general principle approved); 1847, Woodford v. McClenahan, 9 Ill. 89, semble; 1873, Burdick v. Hunt, 43 Ind. 386, semble; 1905, Frank v. Berry, 128 Ia. 223, 103 N. W. 358, semble; 1910, Murphy v. Murphy, 146 Ia. 255, 125 N. W. 191 (a blind girl who before blindness had once seen an autograph 19 years before and then the disputed letter a year later when 13 years of age; the testimony held to be of little value); 1885, State v. Goodwin, 37 La. An. 713, 715; 1849, Smith v. Walton, 8 Gill Md. 82; Edelen v. Gough, 8 Gill Md. 91; 1850, Hoitt v. Moulton, 21 N. H. 590; 1852, Bowman v. Sanborn, 25 N. H. 110, semble; 1858, Burnham v. Ayer, 36 N. H. 184, semble; 1873, Hammond v.

1803, ELDON, L. C., in Eagleton v. Kingston, 8 Ves. 473: "You called a witness, and asked whether he had ever seen the party write. If he said he had, whether more or less frequently, if ever, that was enough. . . . You might call one who had not seen him write for twenty years, and if he said he believed it was the writing of the person, that evidence might go to the jury."

It is true that one may even now be deemed incompetent if, though he saw the act of writing done, he in fact formed no idea of its character;[2] that a tendency is perhaps growing to leave the matter to the discretion of the trial court;[3] and that judges have sometimes expressed dissatisfaction with a rule of such blind and unquestioning dogmatism. Nevertheless, the rule is a settled one.

§ 695. Length of Time beforehand. The accepted tradition is also that it makes no difference how long it was beforehand that the act of writing was observed:[1]

1836, WILLIAMS, J., in Doe d. Mudd v. Suckermore, 5 A. & E. 720: "Subject to the qualification of Lord Eldon [that there must have been formed some belief about the writing], which seems to be the criterion and to decide the question in each case, I am aware of no rule attempting to prescribe the quantity of knowledge which is requisite to enable a witness to speak to his belief; what degree of freshness and recency in the correspondence to admit, or what antiquity to exclude, may (as the reason of the thing would induce one to expect) in vain be looked for. To the jury it must go, in the language of Lord Eldon, from the highest to the lowest."

Here again, modern policy is ignored in the rigidity of a rule which makes no allowance for dimness of recollection; but it cannot be said that the judicial discretion is given, as it ought to be, any limits.

§ 696. Quantity of Writing seen. The quantity of writing that was seen is wholly immaterial.[1] It has even been conceded that one who testifies to Varian, 54 N. Y. 400; 1906, State v. Freshwater, 30 Utah 442, 85 Pac. 447; 1896, Diggins' Estate, 68 Vt. 198, 34 Atl. 696; 1909, State v. Kent, 83 Vt. 28, 74 Atl. 389; 1872, Pepper v. Barnett, 22 Gratt. Va. 406.

The statement that seeing writing once is sufficient has been repeated 'obiter' again and again, and it would be unprofitable to record here each time.

[2] 1781, De la Motte's Trial, 21 How. St. Tr. 810, Buller, J., semble; 1849, Hopper v. Ashley, 15 Ala. 462; 1856, McNair v. Com., 26 Pa. 390 (seeing once only suffices, if an impression of the character of the writing was gained). The following ruling goes rather on the principle of § 570, ante, that an illiterate is not expert enough to testify to handwriting at all: 1895, People v. Corey, 148 N. Y. 476, 42 N. E. 1066, by a divided court (an illiterate person who had seen the defendant write once and could practically neither read nor write: the testimony rejected, on the principle that "before a witness should be permitted to testify to the handwriting of another, . . . he should have an intelligent acquaintance with the handwriting of the party, so that he can determine with a reasonable degree of certainty whether the writing offered is his genuine handwriting").

[3] 1889, Wilson v. Van Leer, 127 Pa. 377, 17 Atl. 1097.

§ 695. [1] Accord: 1803, Eagleton v. Kingston, 8 Ves. 475, Eldon, L. C. (quoted ante, § 694); 1910, Murphy v. Murphy, 146 Ia. 255, 125 N. W. 191 (cited supra, § 694, n.); 1917, O'Connor's Estate, 101 Nebr. 617, 164 N. W. 570 (one who had seen the person's signature "only twice, and this was 20 years or more before the trial", not improperly excluded in the trial Court's discretion); 1889, Wilson v. Van Leer, 127 Pa. 377, 17 Atl. 1097 (three times, very long before); 1901, Renshaw v. First National Bank, — Tenn. —, 63 S. W. 194 (one who saw the handwriting in 1857–60, admitted); 1896, Diggins' Estate, 68 Vt. 198, 34 Atl. 696 (once, 20 years before, admitted).

§ 696. [1] 1907, Rinker v. U. S., 151 Fed. 755, 760, C. C. A. (witness of "limited acquaintance" admitted); 1891, Gibson v. Trowbridge, 96 Ala. 357, 361, 11 So. 365 (one the genuineness of a signature need only have seen the surname written.[2] But it ought to be remembered, by those Courts which have not ruled on the foregoing topics, that the unwise liberality of these rules is explainable by the history of the law (post, § 1991). It was the product of a time when this mode of knowledge was the only orthodox one, when even the second mode ('ex scriptis olim visis') was just obtaining acceptance, and when the third mode ('ex scripto nunc viso') was not recognized at all; so that the paucity of recognized modes of proof upon a subject so common and so important forced the judges to concede a looseness in applying the primary and orthodox mode. This laxity the Courts of to-day would do well to abandon, now that the stress of necessity does not exist.

§ 697. Writing post litem motam; After-acquired Knowledge. It is obvious that one who denies the genuineness of a writing which an opponent affirms, or 'vice versa', will be tempted to form his writing to suit his claim if he writes after controversy for the purpose of showing the type of his writing. It is true that one cannot vary his handwriting entirely at his pleasure; but it is safe, as a rule, to accept no testimony founded on such specimens;[1] though the matter should be left to the trial Court's discretion.[2] But no such objection attaches to specimens thus written at the opponent's request, for here the opponent in effect takes the risk of the hand being feigned, and waives the objection.[3] There is, moreover, no objection to testimony based on an act of writing subsequent to the date of the disputed writing (if no controversy had arisen);[4] the type of writing is always assumed to have been substantially the same, — an assumption forced, but practically necessary. So, too, the knowledge may be acquired after the witness saw the disputed writing, — a question which becomes important when the original is lost.[5] who "saw considerable writing of E.", excluded); 1899, Marchall's Est., 126 Cal. 95. 58 Pac. 449 (knowledge of signature alone, sufficient); 1893, Salazar v. Taylor, 18 Colo. 538, 545, 33 Pac. 369 (bank clerk and attorney, who had often seen the party write his name, admitted); 1895, Kendall's Ex'r v. Collier, 97 Ky. 446, 30 S. W. 1002 (sufficient on the facts); 1895, Com. v. Hall, 164 Mass. 152, 41 N. E. 133 (sufficient on the facts); 1885, State v. Stair, 87 Mo. 273 (sufficient on the facts); 1902, State v. Hall, 16 S. D. 6, 91 N. W. 235 (sufficient on the facts); 1896, Poncin v. Furth, 15 Wash. 201, 46 Pac. 241 (sufficient on the facts).

[2] 1827, Lewis v. Sapio, Moo. & M. 39, Abbott, C. J.; 1849, Smith v. Walton, 8 Gill. Md. 83. Contra, 1817, Powell v. Ford, 2 Stark. 164, C. C. J. Ellenborough; 1917, Burden v. State, 147 Ga. 412, 94 S. E. 232 (murder; witness who had seen defendant "write one word sometime before the trial", not admitted to prove a signature).

§ 697. [1] 1890, Dakota v. O'Hare, 1 N. D. 44, 44 N. W. 1003 (since trial begun); 1879, Reese v. Reese, 90 Pa. 93 (during trial).

[2] 1872, Thompson v. Bennett, 22 U. C. C. P. 393, 401 (testimony based on signatures written by the alleged makers in the witness' presence expressly to illustrate their handwriting, received, per Gwynne, J.); 1895, Tucker v. Hyatt, 148 Ind. 471, 42 N. E. 1047 (the mere fact not enough to exclude, if no abuse of Court's discretion appears).

[3] Compare the analogies of § 2009 and § 2018, post.

[4] 1852, Keith v. Lothrop, 10 Cush. Mass. 457; 1902, Ratliff v. Ratliff, 131 N. C. 425, 42 S. E. 887 (one who knew the hand after 1873, allowed to testify to the genuineness of a document of 1869).

[5] Accord: Canada: 1888, Vye v. Alexander, 28 N. Br. 89, 95, 117 (witness to the writing of a lost document may speak from knowledge of the type of handwriting acquired afterwards; "if he can carry down the mental impression . . . and apply it to the paper that is in question and then produced in court, why may he not reverse the process and apply his knowledge of a paper produced in court to the mental impression formed in his mind with regard to the first

§ 698. Quality of Witness' Opinion. The witness' belief as to the genuineness or non-genuineness of the disputed writing need not be a positive or unqualified one; it is enough if he "believes" or "thinks" it to be one or the other.[1] But his belief must be founded solely on the type of handwriting as known to him, — not on the person's moral character or other circumstances.[2]

B. Ex Scriptis olim Visis (Seeing known Genuine Documents)

§ 699. General Principle. The difficulties that arise for this mode of testimony are precisely the opposite of those arising under the preceding mode. There the second element of knowledge (ante, § 693) — namely, that the specimen seen was genuinely written by the person in question — gives no difficulty, because the very act of writing it was seen, and therefore the witness must necessarily know who wrote the specimen from which his knowledge of the type was gained. Here, on the other hand, the document has come to the observation of the witness without his seeing any person in the act of writing it. Hence the main source of controversy is the sufficiency of his grounds for believing that the person in question was genuinely the writer.

Taking up first, then, this element, of his grounds of knowledge of the type, the simple question is: Has the witness adequate grounds for believing that the writing he observed was that of the person in question? That this is the real inquiry, and that in this mode of testimony, as distinguished from the preceding one, it is the peculiarly necessary one, has been clearly expounded in an early Virginia decision:

1829, COALTER, J., in Rowt's Adm'x v. Kile's Adm'r, 1 Leigh 225: "The reason why a witness must see another write in order to form an opinion of the character of his handwriting is not, I apprehend, because seeing the party write gives you a knowledge of the paper?"); 1889, Alexander v. Vye, 16 Can. Sup. 501 (foregoing case affirmed);

United States: 1912, Cochran v. Stein, 118 Minn. 323, 136 N. W. 1037; 1850, Porter v. Wilson, 13 Pa. 646.

Contra: 1910, Murphy v. Murphy, 146 Ia. 255, 125 N. W. 191 (here the witnesses had seen, 15 years before, a letter purporting to be from M., and material as an admission, but now lost; they were shown three signatures proved to be M.'s, and testified that the writing was the same; this was held improper, on the ground of § 2004, post, that lay testimony based on comparison is inadmissible; but the opinion misses the point that the real reason for that rule is that comparison may equally well be made by the jury and hence lay testimony is not needed, and that here the disputed letter was lost, hence the jury would not compare it; the unsoundness of the decision may be seen by its result, viz. that all testimony to the lost letter's handwriting was virtually shut out, at least, if it be assumed that the witnesses were not qualified by the mere perusal of the lost letter to state that it was in M.'s hand).

That the genuineness of a lost document, not produced, may be proved by testimony to the handwriting, see post, § 1185.

§ 698. [1] Ante, § 658, post, §§ 726, 727.

Of course, on the principle of § 655, ante, the witness may point out the peculiarities that affect his opinion: 1909, Nagle v. Schnadt, 239 Ill. 595, 88 N. E. 178.

[2] 1797, Dacosta v. Pym, Peake N. P. 144 (the witness said the writing "was like to but he did not think it was the plaintiff's handwriting, because he knew the plaintiff to be a man too well acquainted with the world to sign such an account"; Lord Kenyon ruled that the witness must consider "the character of the handwriting only").

But this is a different thing from testing them as to the strength of their belief: 1893, Holmes v. Goldsmith, 147 U. S. 150, 163, 13 Sup. 288 (question to qualified witnesses to handwriting, whether they would act on a note as genuine, allowed).

character of his hand; he must see the handwriting itself, after the act of writing is performed, in order to acquire that knowledge. But when he sees the manual operation himself, he knows that the handwriting which he at the same time or afterwards inspects is the handwriting of the party. He thus acquires a knowledge . . . of a handwriting which he knows to be that of a certain individual. . . . Being accustomed to see the operation is only full evidence that the writing, which you have thus seen and the character of which is more or less distinctly impressed on your mind according to circumstances, is the character of the manual writing of that individual. [On the other hand] in the course of business and correspondence you acquire an equally perfect knowledge of the handwriting of the individual. . . . But this writing may have been performed by the clerk of the person in whose name it is; and if so, you have no knowledge of the handwriting of that person, though you have of that of his clerk, . . . [and the relevancy of such knowledge] would be entirely defeated by proof that the letters were written by the clerk, and is weakened in proportion to any doubts that may exist whether the party whose handwriting is to be proved wrote the letters or not."

This being the reason for the inquiry, there is no special virtue in any particular rule as to the nature of the correspondence — whether business or otherwise —, or as to the consequences of the correspondence — whether it was "acted upon" or not. Nor is it 'a priori' essential that there should be mutual correspondence at all. The inquiry concerns the sufficiency of the witness' grounds of belief that A was the writer of what the witness received under A's name; and this, that, or the other rule must ultimately be tested by this general nature of the inquiry:

1839, BRONSON, J., in Cunningham v. Bank, 21 Wend. 559: "The authenticity of the specimens may be established by presumptive as well as by direct evidence. . . . [After giving illustrations], other cases might be mentioned where the circumstances will well warrant the inference of authenticity, although there may be no direct evidence to that effect. But in some way the fact that the specimens are genuine must be satisfactorily proved. . . . Standing alone, the fact that the witness has acted on the letters has no tendency to prove them genuine. It only proves, and that merely by inference, that the witness believed the letters authentic. His belief is of no importance unless it is founded upon some good reason, — such a reason as will satisfy the Court and jury as well as the witness. Although the fact that the witness has acted on the letters is, when standing alone, of no importance, it may be of great value in a chain of circumstantial evidence."

The use of this class of testimony is comparatively new; its orthodoxy was not established until the last century (post, § 1993). But in the early leading case, Lord Ferrers v. Shirley, decided before the doctrine had become entirely orthodox, the principle now to be examined — the necessity for adequate ground to believe the genuineness of the letters — were clearly brought out:

1731, Lord Ferrers v. Shirley, Fitzgibbon 195: "Amongst other witnesses was called one J. J., who would have swore to the hand-writing of one J. Cottington, whose name was to the deed [of Robert Earl Ferrers] as a witness, because he had seen several letters wrote by J. Cottington. Thereupon he was asked, whether he had ever seen the said Cottington write; to which he answered, that he never did, nor never saw the person that wrote the said letters; but that his master, to whom the said letters were wrote for the rent of a part of the estate of the late Earl Robert Ferrers, which his said master held, informed him, they were the letters of J. Cottington, the Lord Ferrers' steward, who was the person pretended to have attested the deed in question. Hereupon it was objected to his testimony, because he could not say with any certainty, whether or no the writer of the letters was the same person that attested the deed; for that the J. Cottington, that was supposed to write the letters, might get some other person to write those very letters for him; and the counsel insisted, that in all cases, where a witness would swear to the hand-writing, he must be able to say, that he saw such person write. The Court rejected the said J. J. because he could not ascertain the identity of the person. But my Lord RAYMOND said, that it is not necessary in all cases that the witness have seen the person write, to whose hand he swears; for where there has been a fixed correspondence by letters, and that it can be made out that the party writing such letters is the same man that attested a deed, that will entitle a witness to swear to that person's hand, tho' he never saw him write. PAGE, Justice, said, If a subscribing witness to a deed lives in the West-Indies, whose hand-writing is to be proved in England, a witness here may swear to his hand, by having seen the letters of such person wrote by him to his correspondent in England, because under the special circumstances of that case, there is no other way, or at least, the difficulty will be great, to prove the hand-writing of such subscribing witness. But my Lord RAYMOND differed, and said, that those special circumstances could not vary the reason of the thing."

The various circumstances that may be regarded as affording adequate ground for such a belief may be grouped under three heads:

(1) Admissions expressly made to the witness by the person in question; (2) implied admissions; (3) other circumstances.

§ 700. (1) Express Admissions as the source of belief. There can be no question that an express acknowledgment by the purporting writer affords an adequate ground of belief in the authenticity of the writing received, and this is generally accepted.[1]

§ 701. (2) Implied Admissions as the source of belief. An implied admission is universally considered as equally satisfactory, — i.e. any conduct which amounts to a recognition by the person in question of the genuineness of the writing received. There is no fixed test;[1] perhaps the most accurate and most flexible is given in the following passage:

§ 700. [1] Examples: 1898, Redd v. State, 65 Ark. 475, 47 S. W. 119; 1838, State v. Spence, 2 Harringt. Del. 348; 1822, Hammond's Case, 2 Me. 33; 1860, Woodman v. Dana, 52 Me. 9; 1873, Hammond v. Varian, 54 N. Y. 400.

Unnecessary discriminations have sometimes been made: 1880, Hynes v. McDermott, 82 N. Y. 52 (possible exclusion because the witness gets the admission expressly for the trial); 1840, Pope v. Askew, 1 Ired. N. C. 16 (exclusion because the admission was made to another than the witness).

§ 701. [1] Examples of testimony admitted: England: 1832, Smith v. Sainsbury, 5 C. & P. 196 (where the witness had merely as counsel seen an affidavit used by the opponent); Canada: 1913, Langley v. Joudrey, N. Sc. 13 D. L. R. 563 (forgery of two notes; bank manager admitted, through whose bank had been negotiated paper given by the parties); United States: Fed. 1917, Murray v. U. S., 4th C. C. A., 247 Fed. 874 (placing poison in the mail; persons "familiar with" the party's hand, admitted); D. C. 1904, Shaffer v. U. S., 24 D. C. App. 417, 430 (various persons held qualified on the facts); N. H. 1873, State v. Hastings, 53 N. H. 452 (a jailer who had read letters handed to him by the prisoner as hers and forwarded by him as such); N. Y. 1821, Johnson v. Daverne, 19 Johns. 136 (where the witness had received payment of notes purporting to be those of the signer of the disputed document); 1839, Cunningham v. Bank, 21 Wend. 559, semble (same); N. Car. 1839, 1849, Gordon v. Price, 10 Ired. 387 ("[notes] established in the mind of the witness to be genuine by the fact that they were so treated by the party from time to time, by paying them"); Pa. 1819, Com. v. Smith, 6 S. & R. 571 (where a cashier had habitually made payments and received receipts from another cashier purporting to be the person in question); Ut. 1906, State v. McBride, 30 Utah 422, 85 Pac. 440 (here the

1839, BRONSON, J., in Cunningham v. Bank, 21 Wend. 560: "The acts done in pursuance of the letters may be followed by such acts of approval or acknowledgment on the part of the supposed author as can only be accounted for on the supposition that he was in truth the writer of the letters; and there can be no doubt that in this way, as well as by a direct admission, the fact of authenticity may be satisfactorily established."

§ 702. (3) Exchange of Correspondence: is this sufficient or must it be "acted upon"? As soon as those sources of belief are reached which do not consist in implied admissions, debatable ground appears. The first matter to be noticed is that source of belief which rests on the certainty of the course of the mails. If A receives a letter purporting to come from B, he cannot be allowed to presume, for testimonial purposes, that it was in fact written by B; this all concede.[1] But if he writes to B and receives a purporting answer from B, intelligently treating the matter and showing an acquaintance with facts such as only B could know, is not this sufficient? Here the controversy begins:

(a) A number of judges have been unwilling to accept this source of belief; they require something more, and that something is that A's belief shall have been further confirmed by sundry events ensuing upon the letter or by offer was treated as being in effect a comparison of specimens; Straup, J., correctly dissents); Va. 1876, Cody v. Conly, 27 Gratt. 323 (where the party had drawn orders on the witness which the latter paid and the former honored).

Examples of testimony excluded: England: 1826, Greaves v. Hunter, 2 C. & P. 477 (witness to the defendant's hand excluded, who had seen "other papers in the master's office, which were admitted to be of his handwriting by the defendant's attorney", and had acted on them); 1850, R. v. Crouch, 4 Cox Cr. 163 (policeman, who had paid money to the defendant and obtained a receipt, for the express purpose of informing himself, excluded; unsound); U. S. Ill. 1866, Putnam v. Wadley, 40 Ill. 346, 348 (witness excluded who had seen other documents purporting to be signed by defendant, but not shown to have been "recognized as signed" by the defendant); 1875, Board v. Misenheimer, 78 Ill. 22, 24 (witness to a surety's signature, who had merely "examined his signature to his reports as guardian" filed in the county clerk's office, and had done so for the express purpose of informing himself, excluded); Kan. 1888, Arthur v. Arthur, 38 Kan. 691, 17 Pac. 187 (witness to a wife's signature, who had seen it only on one document bearing a notary's certificate of acknowledgment, excluded on the facts).

The following statutes aim to cover this general principle: Cal. C. C. P. 1872, § 1943 (any one who has "seen writings purporting to be his [the author's], upon which he has acted or been charged, and who has thus acquired a knowledge of his handwriting" is qualified); Mont. Rev. C. 1921, § 10591 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1943); Or. Laws 1920, § 787 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1943); P. I. C. C. P. 1901, § 327 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1943); P. R. Rev. St. & C. 1911, § 1458 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1943, adding after "charged" the clause "or which consists of letters received by the witness in due course of mail in response to letters duly addressed and mailed by him to the supposed writer"); 1914, People v. Marti, 20 P. R. 112 (Evid. Act § 90 applied); 1914, Houston Packing Co. v. Pagán, López & Co., 20 P. R. 233 (People v. Marti affirmed).

In Louisiana, the Code provision for proof of hand-writing has been held to exclude testimony founded on knowledge of the present sort: La. C. C. P. § 325 ("If the defendant deny his signature [to a document in the pleading] in his answer, or contend that the same has been counterfeited, the plaintiff must prove the genuineness of such signature either by witnesses who have seen the defendant sign the act, or who declare that they know it to be his signature because they have frequently seen him write or sign his name"); 1812, Sauvé v. Dawson, 2 Mart. 202 (under the old Civil Code, testimony was receivable only from one who saw the writing executed, or from experts appointed by the Court); 1869, Huddleston v. Coyle, 21 La. An. 148 (under C. C. P. § 325, witness speaking from knowledge acquired by paying drafts not disputed by the party, excluded); 1869, Leonard's Succession, 21 La. An. 523, semble (same).

§ 702. [1] Although that circumstance may be sufficient circumstantial evidence that the letter was at least sent by B's authority: post, § 2153.

A's finding that B has acted upon it. The language of the judges is not uniform nor definite; but they require at least something more than a mere exchange of intelligent correspondence:[2]

1799, KENYON, L. C. J., in Batchelor v. Honeywood, 2 Esp. 715: "If persons are in the habit of corresponding, and letters are received from one to the other, upon which any transaction takes place, that may enable the party to swear to his correspondent's handwriting."

1836, Doe d. Mudd v. Suckermore, 5 A. & E. 705; COLERIDGE, J: "[The requirement is that] transactions have taken place between them upon the faith that letters purporting to have been written or signed by him have been so written or signed." DENMAN, L. C. J.: "The letters forming one side of a correspondence do not prove the handwriting because addressed to a particular person; that person's evidence may be requisite to show that A had in some way recognized the letters bearing A's signature, and was therefore probably the individual who wrote them; but this is quite different from a knowledge of the handwriting, [i.e. the matter of knowing] whether they proceeded from A or any other."

1889, CAMPBELL, J., in Pinkham v. Cockell, 77 Mich. 272, 43 N. W. 921: "The mere receipt of letters purporting to be from a person never seen, and with whom no subsequent relations existed which were based on them as genuine, has no vaue as means of knowledge. Where there is no direct knowledge of handwriting, there must be something which assures the recipient of the letters in a responsible way of their genuineness."

Two things must be noted about this form of the rule. (1) In the first place, it is not clear whether the judges mean that the required transaction or act must involve an implied admission known to be B's or merely an implied admission inferred to be his. Thus, if a letter purporting to be B's orders a ton of coal and it is delivered and then B comes in person and pays for it, the implied admission is known to be B's. But suppose, instead, that a check purporting to be B's comes by mail; or suppose that A receives an offer and orders a box of soap from B, and a box of soap then comes in a wagon purporting to be B's; these are admissions or recognitions which only purport to be B's, and personal observation by A is still lacking. Or suppose that A writes to a theatre-clerk inclosing the money for a ticket; the ticket is sent, with a letter of receipt, and A goes to the theatre and is given a seat on the ticket;

[2] Accord, with minor variations: 1825, Thorpe v. Gisburne, 2 C. & P. 22 (witness to the defendant's hand who had "received letters from him, upon which he had acted", received); 1897, Hightower v. Ogletree, 114 Ala. 94, 21 So. 934 (one who merely received letters purporting to come from one who could not write, not competent to authenticate them); 1846, Pate v. People, 8 Ill. 664; 1847, Woodford v. McClenham, 9 Ill. 89; 1856, McClain v. Esham, 17 B. Monr. Ky. 146, 155 (one who had received a letter and answered but received no further letter, not competent); 1860, Chaffee v. Taylor, 3 All. Mass. 601, semble; 1873, Nunes v. Perry, 113 Mass. 275 (merely receiving a letter in care, excluded); 1894, Violet v. Rose, 39 Nebr. 660, 672, 58 N. W. 216 (one who had sent and received and acted upon letters, admitted); 1852, Bowman v. Sanborn, 25 N. H. 110, Eastman, J. ("having seen genuine signatures or writings of the person, either in transacting business with him so that the papers have been acted upon and recognized by him as genuine, or by an intimate acquaintance with signatures which have been adopted into the ordinary business transactions of life"); 1858, Burnham v. Ayer, 36 N. H. 185 (following the preceding case); 1854, Power v. Frick, 2 Grant Pa. 307 (not sufficient under the circumstances); 1900, State v. Hall, 14 S. D. 161, 84 N. W. 766 (one receiving a letter "in due course of mail", excluded); 1894, Flowers v. Fletcher, 40 W. Va. 103, 20 S. E. 871 (a correspondence of mere friendship, not involving business transactions acted upon, insufficient).

Compare the cases cited post, § 2153 (reply-letter received by mail).

here is an act done by somebody which indicates the genuineness of the letter, but the admission was not necessarily made by the ticket-clerk. Looking at the judges' language, we find some prescribing merely "any transaction that takes place", or "something which assures the recipient"; while others go further and require that B's letter should be "acted upon and recognized by him", or the transactions should have "taken place between them", meaning apparently acts by the person known to A to be B, and not merely acts by a person probably B. It is impossible to say what are the judicial requirements of this doctrine in that respect.

(2) It has sometimes been supposed (and the language of some judicial opinions has naturally induced the error) that the "acting upon" which is necessary may be or must be on the part of the witness A. This, however, it will be seen, is impossible as a test; the "acting upon" which induces the faith must always ultimately be that of B, the person in question. Thus, if a letter purporting to be B's invites an investment, A may "act upon" this by investing a thousand dollars in the offered enterprise; but the extent of A's action, however great a faith it shows on A's part, affords no further reason to us for sanctioning the sources of his belief. If, however, interest on the investment is regularly received from B's office — in other words, if B himself appears to have "acted on" A's answer — then, but only then, we have that sort of action which tends to show the genuineness of the original letter purporting to be B's. It must be remembered, then, that the force of subsequent transactions as a ground for belief lies not in A's part in them but in B's part in them.

(b) But the majority of Courts (and this is the orthodox doctrine) prefer to be satisfied with something short of this test, and accept an exchange of correspondence alone as sufficient to justify belief in genuineness.[3] That is,

[3] Accord, with variations: ENGLAND: 1645, Lord Macguire's Trial, 4 How. St. Tr. 653, 685 ("he hath written to me many letters"); 1767, Buller, Nisi Prius, 236; 1763, Gould v. Jones, 1 W. Bl. 384, Lord Mansfield; 1797, Barnes v. Trompowsky, 7 T. R. 265, Kenyon, L. C. J., semble; 1845, Ovenston v. Wilson, 2 C. & K. 1, Pollock, C. B.; 1849, Murieta v. Wolfhazen, 2 C. & K. 744, semble; 1909, Turner's Case, 3 Cr. App. 103, 155 [1910], 1 K. B. 346 (document of consent signed by Director of Public Prosecutions: "it is sufficient if somebody, for instance, who has been in correspondence with the Director of Public Prosecutions says 'I received this in ordinary course, and I believe it to be signed by the Director of Public Prosecutions.' . . . All that the Court say is, that there must be some kind of proof of it, but it must not necessarily be proof of somebody who says, 'I have seen the gentleman write', which, in the old-fashioned days, at any rate, was the technical way of proving the signature").

UNITED STATES: Ala. 1887, Campbell v. Woodstock Iron Co., 83 Ala. 359, 3 So. 369 (witness admitted who had mailed one or more letters to C., directed to his known place of residence, and received replies purporting to come from that place and to be signed by him); Colo. 1874, Kansas Pac. R. Co. v. Miller, 2 Colo. 442, 452, 460 (one who had corresponded for 18 years with a person purporting to be a friend of his youth in Germany, admitted); Ga. 1878, Pearson v. McDaniel, 62 Ga. 100 (business correspondence, sufficient); 1869, Bruce v. Crews, 39 Ga. 544, 547 (a clerk in a commercial house who had seen letters purporting to come from C., but not in reply to others, held not qualified to C.'s handwriting); Ind. 1860, Clark v. Wyatt, 15 Ind. 272 ("from authentic papers derived in the course of business"); 1885, Thomas v. State, 103 Ind. 429, 2 N. E. 808; Ia. 1895, Bullis v. Easton, 96 Ia. 513, 65 N. W. 395; 1907, Nichols & Shepard Co. v. Ringler, 135 Ia. 181, 112 N. W. 543 (testimony based on "correspondence", admitted); Mich. 1881, Empire Mfg. Co. v. Stuart, 46 Mich. 484, 9 N. W. 527 (where the

when A writes to B and receives in due course an answer purporting to be B's, intelligently dealing with the original letter, the composite data of the course of the mails, the accuracy of the directory, the likely conduct of the receiver of a letter, and the improbability of a forger being able to send an intelligent answer or series of answers, avail for practical purposes as an adequate source of belief. It is of course B's answer to A's letter, and not merely a first letter of B (however intelligent), nor an answer by A to it, that can have this effect, — though this discrimination is not always made:

1797, KENYON, L. C. J., in Carey v. Pitt, Peake Add. Cas. 130: "That evidence was admitted on sound principles; for if, when letters are sent directed to a particular person on particular business, an answer is received in due course, it is a fair presumption that the answer was written by the person whose handwriting it purported to be."

1814, ELDON, L. C., in Wade v. Broughton, 3 Ves. & B. 172: "Where there has been correspondence by letters the contents of which are such as to render it probable that they were received [by the genuine person], perhaps impossible to suppose the contrary that course of correspondence will do; and that has grown up in modern times."

1836, Doe v. Suckermore, 5 A. & E. 727; WILLIAMS, J.: "I averted to an expression in frequent use, and which indeed has almost grown into the currency of a proverb upon this subject, that the letter or letters 'must have been acted upon.' If, however, by this expression, it be meant to imply that any business must be transacted, or, in any sense of the word, act done, the observation is without foundation, for nothing of the sort is necessary. . . . Anything, I presume, from which the identity of the writer is established may suffice." PATTESON, J.: "The knowledge may have been acquired by the witness having seen letters or other documents professing to be the handwriting of the party, and having afterwards communicated personally with the party upon the contents of those letters or documents, or having otherwise acted upon them by written answers producing further correspondence or acquiescence by the party in some matter to which they relate, or by the witness transacting with the party some business to which they relate, or by any other mode of communication between the party and the witness which is the ordinary course of the transactions of life induces a reasonable presumption that the letters or documents were the handwriting of the party."

1820, TAYLOR, C. J., in State v. Allen, 1 Hawks 8: "Thirdly, by a witness who has received letters from the supposed writer of such a nature as renders it probable that they were written by the person from whom they purport to come. Such evidence is only admissible where there is good reason to believe that the letters from which the witness has derived his knowledge were really written by the supposed writer of the paper in question."

answer "I have seen letters that came from their office: I have had correspondence with them so that I could know their signature", was held to show sufficient certainty); Miss. 1866, Southern Exp. Co. v. Thornton, 41 Miss. 221; N. J. 1906, State v. Goldstein, 72 N. J. L. 336, 62 Atl. 1006 (business correspondence with a tenant for three years, held to qualify); 1903, Hoisting Machinery Co. v. Goeller I. Works, 84 N. J. L. 504, 87 Atl. 331 (one who had received letters from J. G. and had been paid for contracts based on them, admitted); N. Y. 1839, Cunningham v. Bank, 21 Wend. 559, semble; N. C. 1820, State v. Allen, 1 Hawks 9 ("in the course of correspondence in which pertinent answers have been received"); 1917, Universal Oil & F. Co. v. Burney, 174 N. C. 382, 93 S. E. 912 (cottonseed contract; one who had "received letters from him in the course of business", admitted); Pa. 1854, Shitler v. Bremer, 23 Pa. 413, semble (a school teacher receiving and acting on written orders from a director); 1855, Clark v. Freeman, 25 Pa. 133; P. R. Rev. St. & C. 1911, § 1458 (quoted ante, § 701); Texas: 1885, Ullman v. Babcock, 63 Tex. 71; Vt. 1897, Redding v. Redding's Est., 69 Vt. 500, 38 Atl. 230; Va. 1829, Coalter, J., in Rowt's Adm'x v. Kile's Adm'r, 1 Leigh 226.

The truth is that this course of correspondence may vary in probative value according to circumstances, and hence probably the disinclination of the Courts first mentioned to be satisfied with that alone. The true solution is to leave the matter to the trial judge's determination. The necessity for this flexibility has been recognized by the Courts in the additional classes of cases which are now to be considered.

§ 703. Clerks familiar with Accounts, Letters, etc. In part involving the foregoing doctrine, and yet not made to depend upon it, is a line of precedents admitting as qualified a clerk through whose hands his employer's business correspondence or other documents have passed and who has thus become familiar with what purports to be the hand of a customer or of his employer.[1] There seems to be no requirement that an "acting upon" shall be expressly shown; but the doctrine really rests on the quite proper assumption that there must have been numerous and convincing acts of the customer or employer which have verified the genuineness of the documents. On this probability a rule of thumb is based, without requiring special inquiry in each instance. The rule is satisfactory enough; it goes to show that the discretion of the trial judge should be given great latitude.

§ 704. Official Custodians of Predecessor's Records, Family Records. Another class of persons seem properly to possess safe sources for estimating authenticity, though they have not received implied admissions from the supposed makers, namely, persons who, having the custody of official records, have thus become familiar with the official signature of a predecessor in the office, whether of superior or the same grade, or, having the custody of family records, thus obtain familiarity with the handwriting.[1] The propriety of the § 703. [1] 1832, R. v. Slaney, 5 C. & P. 218, Tenterden, L. C. J. (putting the case of a merchant's clerk who has become acquainted with the handwriting of the merchant's correspondents); 1884, Re Stambro, 1 Manit. 263, 267 (one who had examined, as part of his duty, accounts sent in by an agent, held qualified); 1900, Tyler v. Mutual D. M. Co., 17 D. C. App. 85, 93 (the manager of a messenger office, who had seen telegrams and receipt tickets purporting to be signed by Mr. & Mrs. T. and had had correspondence with them, allowed to testify to their signatures); 1850, Com. v. Webster, 5 Cush. Mass. 300, Bemis' Rep. 197, 208 (a writing-master who as such had written diplomas was admitted to speak of the handwriting of the defendant, whose signature he had seen appended to the diplomas of the college in which the defendant was an instructor; Shaw, C. J., "papers have passed under his notice, in a business or official capacity which have given him a long and familiar acquaintance with the defendant's handwriting"); 1847, Reyburn v. Belotti, 10 Mo. 598 (a clerk through whose hands letters came); 1801, Titford v. Knott, 2 Johns. Cas. N. Y. 214 (a clerk who had become familiar with the person's business correspondence with his employer); 1831, Hess v. State, 5 Oh. 7 (a teller in a bank, who had seen correspondence of the president and the cashier).

§ 704. [1] The witness was admitted, except as otherwise noted:

England: 1767, Buller, Nisi Prius, 236; 1762, Gould v. Jones, 1 W. Bl. 384; 1818, Randolph v. Gordon, 5 Price 317 (where the witness was rejected because his right to assume the genuineness of the probated will, which he had taken as a standard, did not sufficiently appear); 1820, Taylor v. Cook, 8 id. 652 (where the old registers taken as the standard were presumably genuine); 1824, Doe v. Tarver, R. & Moo. 143, semble; 1843, Fitzwalter Peerage Case, 10 Cl. & F. 193 (a family solicitor who had gained his knowledge by repeated perusals of the family title-deeds, etc., kept by him and examined in the course of the business); 1844, R. v. Barber, 1 C. & K. 436 (possessor of old documents); 1847, Doe v. Davies, 10 Q. B. 324 (where a parish-clerk testified to a clergyman's marriage-certificate signature through having seen the same signature at various places in the marriage-register; it was assumed that a necessity must place of custody and the general reliance upon the documents for legal, mercantile, and family purposes, are a sufficient ground for belief in authenticity:

1836, DENMAN, L. C. J., in Doe d. Mudd v. Suckermore, 5 A. & E. 740: "In ancient documents, knowledge of an officer's handwriting is frequently obtained by an observation of his signature to papers which he would be called upon officially to sign; and a witness speak-exist, such as the probable death of the curate).

UNITED STATES: Federal: 1870, Rogers v. Ritter, 12 Wall. 320 (a keeper of records); 1899, U. S. v. Ortiz, 176 U. S. 422, 20 Sup. 466 (one employed for many years as clerk, translator, and custodian of Spanish and Mexican archives, held sufficiently acquainted with the signatures of a Mexican Governor and Secretary of 1846 as occurring in those archives); Alabama: 1896, White v. Tolliver, 110 Ala. 300, 20 So. 97 (one who had merely seen writing "purporting" to be A.'s, excluded); Connecticut: 1901, Hamilton v. Smith, 74 Conn. 374, 50 Atl. 884 (surveyor, familiar by experience with all the maps in a town-clerk's office and with their premises, allowed to testify to the handwriting of one H., whose signature was on many of the maps); Florida: 1905, Wooldridge v. State, 49 Fla. 137, 38 So. 3 (a member of a school board who had often seen the superintendent's handwriting on warrants, held qualified); Georgia: 1904, Gress Lumber Co. v. Georgia P. S. Co., 120 Ga. 751, 48 S. E. 115 (clerk of a city council, who had many times seen the signature of O. in the minutes of the city council, in former years, held not qualified to O.'s signature; wholly erroneous; none of the cases on this part of the doctrine are considered); Maryland: 1849, Smith v. Walton, 8 Gill 86; New York: 1832, Jackson v. Brooks, 8 Wend. 431, 15 Wend. 112 (old deeds kept in the witness' custody); 1847, Willson v. Betts, 4 Denio 205, 214 (signature to court documents by judge and clerk deceased, the witness not being the custodian); North Carolina: 1820, State v. Allen, 1 Hawks 9, semble ("ancient authentic documents"); 1887, Tuttle v. Rainey, 98 N. C. 514, 4 S. E. 475 (where the witness had seen many letters from the writer, his uncle, to his father, dealing with private family matters and a photograph of the uncle, subscribed by him, had been publicly kept in the family; admitted); 1895, Jarvis v. Vanderford, 116 N. C. 147, 21 S. E. 302 (seeing old documents in one's possession, apparently forgotten; excluded); Pennsylvania: 1826, Vickroy v. Skelley, 14 S. & R. 373 (a deputy county-surveyor, who had seen the writing of a former surveyor; this mode of knowledge was declared not admissible without corroboration, "except in case of public officers, who have been so long dead that better proof could not be expected", and here it was not shown that witnesses who had seen him write were not still alive); 1836, Goddard v. Groninger, 5 Watts 209, 218 (admitting a witness who as surveyor-general had often acted upon documents purporting to be signed by the person in question as clerk in the receiver-general's office; but the transactions were ancient); 1848, Sweigart v. Richards, 8 Pa. 439 (accepting testimony of an official of the land-office, who had there seen surveys, etc., of a deceased official surveyor; also accepting a son who had seen his father's writing in the family Bible and in letters possessed by his mother; here the Court seems to make it a condition that living witnesses who have seen the person write cannot be had; and also applies to this sort of testimony the Pennsylvania rule of comparison of documents (post, § 2013) that the testimony must be of those who have seen the person write, or else evidence of equal authority); South Carolina: 1822, Cantey v. Platt, McCord 26 (instruments purporting to be signed by a deceased surveyor-general; the antiquity of the writing, and consequent lack of witnesses who had seen the person write, being the special condition of admission); 1911, Nicholson v. Eureka L. Co., 156 S. C. 59, 72 S. E. 86 (grandson having custody of grandfather's documents, admitted); Texas: 1905, Whitaker v. Thayer, 38 Tex. Civ. App. 537, 86 S. W. 364 (deceased deputy-clerk's writing in a land-office, proved by the officer); Utah: 1892, Tucker v. Kellogg, 8 Utah 11, 12, 28 Pac. 870 (administrator held qualified by seeing signatures on paid checks by the intestate found among his papers after death); West Virginia: 1919, Johnson v. Bee, 84 W. Va. 532, 100 S. E. 486 (letters written by a party to her daughter, in childhood, preserved by her for sentimental reasons, and frequently perused by the grandchildren; the latter held qualified; clerk of a county court, familiar with recorded deeds purporting to be by the party, and dating back some 30 years, held qualified).

Compare the cases cited post, § 2158 (official custody as circumstantial evidence of genuineness).

The following rulings on signatures formerly used to frank letters must be considered from the point of view of the present principle: 1797, Carey v. Pitt, Peake Add. Cas. 130, Kenyon, L. C. J. (excluding a post-office inspector who had merely seen in his business franks purporting, but not proved, to be the defendant's); 1799, Batchelor v. Honeywood, 2 Esp. 715 (excluding a post-office inspector who had passed Lord T.'s franks but had never seen Lord T. write nor ever received any acknowledgment of their genuineness).

ing from that knowledge may give an opinion whether any particular writing was made by the same person."

1820, TAYLOR, C. J., in State v. Allen, 1 Hawks 9: "The only methods of proving the handwriting of a person, sanctioned by law, are: . . . Fourthly, When a witness has become acquainted with his manner of signing his name by inspecting other ancient writings bearing the same signature and which have been regarded and preserved as authentic documents. This mode of proof is confined to ancient writings, and is admitted as being the best the nature of the case will allow."

1874, MCKINSTRY, J., in Sill v. Reese, 47 Cal. 344 (the witness was custodian of the Mexican archives in California and had consulted several hundred documents bearing the signature of the person in question): "If it can be assumed that the Mexican archives in the Surveyor General's office are genuine, the man who has read these archives and familiarized himself with the official signatures, several hundred in number, of the person whose signature is the subject of inquiry, has certainly as much knowledge of that person's handwriting as one who has received letters or bills purporting to be in the handwriting of a party whom he has never seen. . . . These documents and records have remained continuously in official custody, and although it is not impossible that in some instances forged papers have been surreptitiously or corruptly placed among them, the presumption that officers have done their duty in preventing such frauds applies. . . . There can be little danger in assuming the genuineness of the signatures from which the witness acquired his knowledge for a collateral purpose like that under consideration."

Upon two points under this principle the law can hardly be said to be settled: (1) whether the witness must be the custodian of the standard-document; (2) whether the documents must be ancient. The rulings of the 1700s answered the former question usually in the negative, the latter in the affirmative. But there is reason to-day to lay down precisely the opposite rule. (1) The witness has usually no good ground for believing in the authenticity of the documents unless he has in some way had charge of them and found them genuine by testing them — as, a surveyor in charge of his predecessor's surveys, or a family-solicitor in charge of the family's title-deeds. In general, some kind of familiar use would at least be necessary for the witness. (2) The traditional phrase is usually "ancient documents"; but it does not seem essential on principle that the documents should have been of a past generation or their author be deceased. A successor in public office or a member of a family may have the requisite knowledge of genuineness without either of these facts appearing. They should be no more essential here than they are in the case of knowledge resting on correspondence (ante, § 702), for which it is no longer (though it was at first) considered necessary that the correspondent should be abroad or deceased. The truth is that the limitation to ancient documents is a perpetuation of an historical anomaly.[2] It was an extension, based on necessity, of the original class 'ex visu scriptionis'; and it is to this that we owe the phrases in the judicial opinions allowing the testimony only from ancient documents. Today, when testimony 'ex scriptis

[2] 1767, Buller, Nisi Prius, 236: "In general Cases, the Witness should have gained his knowledge from having seen the Party write; but under some Circumstances that is not necessary, . . . so where the Antiquity of the Writing makes it impossible for any living Witness to swear he ever saw the Party write"; so also in 1785, Willis v. Singer, Suppl. Viner's Abr. "Evidence" T, b, 48. The history is examined post, § 1993.

olim visis' stands on an equal footing with testimony 'ex visu scriptionis', there is no propriety in keeping up the old limitation to ancient writings or to writings of a deceased official or family-member.

§ 705. Bank Notes and other Paper Money. The present principle involves peculiar considerations when the issue concerns the genuineness of a bank-note or other paper money. To qualify under the general principle (ante, § 693), the witness must be familiar with the genuine notes of the same type, so as to be able to judge of the one in issue. This familiarity he claims because he has seen many of the genuine notes of that class. But how can he know that the notes he has seen were in fact genuine ones? There are several possible grounds on which he may base his confidence.

(1) Some Courts have thought it sufficient if he has merely received and passed away the notes from time to time.[1] These Courts, however, seem to be thinking only of his having seen enough specimens to gain a clear impression of the general style, and to be forgetting the necessity of his having had some indication of their genuineness.

(2) Other Courts have been satisfied when it appeared further that the notes so dealt with had passed current and been reputed as genuine. This is a step towards recognizing that necessity, but it rests on no definite theory.[2]

(3) The strictest requirement, and the only one which is justifiable in theory, is that none of the notes thus received and passed should have been returned to the witness as counterfeit. This does not necessarily imply an admission of genuineness by the alleged issuers (ante, § 701). It rests on the fact that until the note has gone back to its alleged issuer there can be no fair certainty of its genuineness, since other persons receiving it may be equally deceived with the witness. If, then, sufficient time has elapsed for a fair number of the notes to be re-presented at the alleged issuer's, and none have been returned to the witness, the great probability is that the alleged issuer has treated them as genuine; and anything short of this is insufficient:

1824, TAYLOR, C. J., in State v. Candler, 3 Hawks 393, 400: "It appears to me that the witness' knowledge of the handwriting, acquired in the way he describes, is as much to be relied upon as if derived from a correspondence, and approaches nearly to that obtained from having seen the party write. It is scarcely possible, in the nature of things, that if any of the notes received by the witness throughout so long a period had been counterfeit, they should not have been returned. Their not returning shows their genuineness."[3]

§ 705. [1] 1823, Com. v. Carey, 2 Pick. Mass. 48 (officers of a bank who had received and paid out bank notes, to testify to signatures of president and cashier on the notes of another bank); 1851, State v. Check, 13 Ired. N. C. 120 (persons "who habitually receive and pass the notes of a bank for a long course of time, so as to become thoroughly acquainted with them"); 1830, Martin v. Com., 2 Leigh Va. 745 (bank-notes provable by "persons well acquainted with the notes of the bank", not necessarily by an officer of the bank).

[2] 1822, Furber v. Hilliard, 2 N. H. 483 semble (but here the witnesses were also experts in paper money); 1831, State v. Carr, 5 id. 373.

[3] Approved: 1844, State v. Harris, 5 Ired. N. C. 291; 1851, State v. Cheek, 13 id. 120 (which also laid down, without distinction, the less strict rule just preceding; see note 1, supra).

The Candler case (quoted supra) practically overruled U. S. v. Holtsclaw, 2 Haywood N. C. 379 (1805), where the fact of frequent dealings with bank-bills was held sufficient for testifying to the genuineness of the signatures, and

(4) The witness' source of knowledge may also be (but need not be) an admission, express or implied (ante, §§ 700, 701), by the alleged issuer of the notes.[4] Moreover, one may acquire a knowledge of the type of note from the material, color, design, and the like, apart from the signature; hence testimony to genuineness may be founded on a knowledge of these indicia without reference to the character of the signature.[5] Such witnesses will, however, usually be experts in the narrow sense, i.e. persons testifying 'ex scripto nunc viso.' The requirement of expertness, as applied to the present subject, has already been considered (ante, § 570).

§ 706. Relative Value of foregoing Kinds of Knowledge. Since the enactment of modern statutes permitting testimony by experts 'ex scripto nunc viso' ("comparison of hands", in the narrow sense), all the established common-law kinds of knowledge are of course still proper, when they are available.[1] It has been suggested that where a lost instrument is to be authenticated, knowledge of one of the weaker sorts is not admissible;[2] but this seems a consideration which should affect only the weight of evidence required for final decision.[3]

§ 707. Number of Specimens; Writings Post Litem Motam. Little or no question ever arises as to the sufficiency of the specimens in themselves to furnish an adequate knowledge of the type of writing, i.e. the number of specimens received, the distance of time when they were received, or the quantity of the person's writing contained in them. The liberal rules applied on these points under the foregoing mode of knowledge (ante, §§ 694–697) seem to have been accepted here without question.[1]

also practically overruled the Allen case (infra) so far as the latter intimated that nothing short of correspondence with the signers would suffice.

A singular decision is the following: 1895, Kendall's Ex'r v. Collier, 97 Ky. 446, 30 S. W. 1002 (a bank officer, who had already examined and discounted as genuine a note whose genuineness was disputed, was not allowed to state these facts as bearing on the strength of his belief that the note was genuine; there is no good reason for this ruling; compare § 698, ante).

[4] 1859, Johnson v. State, 35 Ala. 378 (bank-bill credited by bank; here the witness was also somewhat expert as to detecting counterfeits); 1820, State v. Allen, 1 Hawks N. C. 6 (here it did not expressly appear, as in State v. Candler, that the notes had been passed and not returned); 1842, Allen v. State, 3 Humph. Tenn. 367 (receiving from and paying to a bank its notes).

[5] 1851, Johnson v. State, 2 Ind. 654; 1859, Jones v. Finch, 137 Miss. 468; 1805, U. S. v. Holtsclaw, 2 Haywood N. C. 379, semble (on this point, this case is not to be regarded as having been overruled by State v. Candler, supra); 1842, Allen v. State, 3 Humph. Tenn. 368.

§ 706. [1] 1890, McKay v. Lasher, 121 N. Y. 482, 24 N. E. 711. As to their relative weight, consult the treatises of Mr. Osborn (cited ante, § 693).

[2] In Porter v. Wilson, 13 Pa. 646 (1850), the Court declined to hold that a knowledge acquired after seeing the lost instrument would be insufficient (ante, § 697); but did rule that the knowledge must be positive, "nothing short of seeing the party write or an acknowledgment distinctly and clearly made by the party himself"; but it is not clear how far the Court regarded this as limiting the ordinary qualification gained by correspondence.

[3] It was also at one time thought that the person whose hand was alleged to be forged must if available be first called, or may alone be called, and in particular, that the officer of a bank, if available, is alone competent to testify to the genuineness of his signature on its notes. But this notion soon disappeared, sometimes by express statute: persons having the knowledge required in other cases are of course equally competent; 1830, State v. Hooper, Bailey S. C. 39, and cases and statutes collected post, § 1339 (preferred witnesses).

§ 707. [1] A few casual rulings are to be found: 1853, McKonkey v. Gaylord, 1 Jones L. 94 (knowledge of signature only, acquired § 708. Other Principles affecting Handwriting, distinguished. In theory any person able to read and write is sufficiently qualified, as to expert capacity, to form an opinion of handwriting (ante, § 570), though perhaps special considerations apply to the proof of bank-notes and other paper-money (ante, § 570). The testimony of "experts" in the narrow sense is affected by the Opinion rule; and the question is a different one according as their testimony goes to the comparison of handwriting (post, §§ 2008–2015) or merely to the appearance of ink, paper, or other materials, with regard to dates, erasures, alteration, and the like (post, §§ 2023–2027). The use of specimens exhibited to the jury involves also the Opinion rule (post, §§ 2016–2021).

The expert, however, like other witnesses, must base his knowledge of the particular hand upon specimens observed by him; and the application of the present principle to that situation remains now to be noticed.

C. Ex Scripto nunc Viso, or Ex Comparatione Scriptorum (Expert's Comparison of Specimens)

§ 709. General Principle. 1. Where the witness does not testify from sight of the person writing (ante, § 694) or from writings received or possessed before the litigation and independently of it (ante, § 699), he may still acquire knowledge of the type of writing by a special examination of specimens expressly laid before him by others. Now the essence of the difference (so far as the present principle of Knowledge is concerned) between this and the other modes is simply a difference in the grounds of belief in the genuineness of the specimens. The witness who saw the act of writing has a sufficient ground of belief in his sight of the person in the act. The witness who received letters, or was custodian of records, had a sufficient ground in other circumstances, often consisting in admissions made to him by the person in question. But in this third mode, both of these grounds of belief are lacking.

Yet they must be supplied in some way. An opinion of the type of writing cannot be worth listening to unless the specimens examined appear to have been, with fair probability at least, genuinely those of the person in question. How this may be done, and what difficulties thus arise, can be examined presently. The important truth is that, apart from this, the theory of all three modes is identical; i.e. the witness must have knowledge of the type of handwriting, this knowledge must come from an adequate consideration of specimens, and these specimens must appear to be genuinely those of the person to whom they are attributed.

That the process is always the same, and that the theory of the witness' by correspondence, is sufficient for identifying a signature; this would seem to be a proper rule to follow to-day for correspondence done in typewriting with the autograph signature only); 1850, Porter v. Wilson, 13 Pa. 646 (a correspondence after the date of the disputed document is sufficient).

As to correspondence 'post litem motam', it may well be not an unfair specimen; this should be entirely in the trial Court's discretion.

Compare §§ 2009, 2018, post.

knowledge of handwriting is identical for all modes, has often and clearly been pointed out by the Courts:

1822, Sir J. NICHOLL, in Saph v. Atkinson, 1 Add. 122, 216: "All evidence as to the handwriting of any party is the mere statement of an opinion formed by the witness, on comparing a writing said to be his [the author's], with some standard."

1836, Doe d. Mudd v. Suckermore, 5 A. & E. 705; COLERIDGE, J.: "On either supposition [lay or expert], the witness is supposed to have received into his mind an impression, not so much of the manner in which the writer has formed the letters in the particular instances, as of the general character of his handwriting; and he is called on to speak as to the writing in question by reference to a standard so formed in his mind." DENMAN, L. C. J.: "I must fairly say that I think the syllogism complete. Opinion is evidence of handwriting, where it is founded on knowledge obtained from inspection of documents proved to be written by the same party. The [expert] opinion tendered here was founded on such knowledge."

1842, GREEN, J., in Allen v. State, 3 Humph. 368: "All that the rule of law contended for requires is that a witness who is called to prove handwriting shall be able to show that he has had such means of knowledge as to furnish a reasonable presumption that he is qualified to form an opinion on the subject. And the opportunity of acquiring such knowledge, mentioned in the books on evidence — such as having seen the party write, having corresponded with him, or seen writings acknowledged by him to be genuine — are only illustrations of the principle, and are not to be understood as the only means whereby such knowledge can be acquired. If other means of knowledge, in the view of reason and common sense, will equally afford it, there can be no reason why the statement of such means of information shall not be held to be sufficient."

1860, RICE, J., in Woodman v. Dana, 52 Me. 13: "It is contended that all opinion based upon previous knowledge of or acquaintance with handwriting is in reality only the result of comparison, and of comparison made under much more unfavorable circumstances than when the admitted or proved specimens are brought in juxtaposition with that which is controverted; that in one case [of lay testimony] the image of the standard specimen, as it exists in the mind, is compared with the controverted specimen in the hand of the witness; while in the other [of expert testimony] the standard is before the eye of the witness and placed side by side with that which is contested; that in the former the characteristics of the standard are necessarily indistinct, shadowy, and uncertain, while in the latter they show out in all the distinctness of visible character. . . . In a certain sense the position of the counsel for the plaintiff is undoubtedly correct. 'All evidence of handwriting', says Mr. Greenleaf, in his work on Evidence, 'except where the witness saw the [disputed] document written, is in the nature of comparison. It is the belief which the witness entertains upon comparing the writing in question with its exemplar in the mind derived from some previous knowledge.'"

1874, MOSES, C. J., in Bennett v. Mathewes, 5 S. C. 484: "They both depend on the same faculty, — that of bringing into actual application impressions made on the mind, in the one case weakened by time, and in the other more vivid and lively because of more recent existence. One [the lay witness] recollects because he has seen the admitted writing before and can therefore now speak of its similarity with the one in question; the other [the expert witness] because by examining the admitted writing he has a present impression which he at once makes the standard of his comparison."[1]

2. So far, then, as concerns the theory of the testimonial knowledge, the only difference, for expert testimony, consists in the mode of supplying that certainty of genuineness of specimens which in the other two cases rests on the personal knowledge of the witness himself. How may this be done and what difficulties and rules arise in doing it?

§ 709. [1] So also the following opinions: 1850, Hitchcock, C. J., in Hicks v. Person, 19 Oh. 441; 1830, State v. Hooper, Bailey S. C. 42.

(a) It is obvious, first, that as the expert witness does not and cannot offer his own knowledge of the genuineness of the specimens, this element must be made to appear by other persons' evidence. There are three conceivable ways: (1) By an admission in the pleadings or before the court; (2) By testimony directed to the judge, in the nature of ordinary proof preliminary to the admission of any piece of evidence and calling for the judge's decision only; (3) By testimony directed to the jury, like all ordinary evidence, — the jury, on retiring, to use the witness' opinion if the hypothesis of genuineness is proved, and to discard it, like other hypothetical testimony (ante, §§ 672, 680), if the hypothesis is not proved. Now under the second and the third modes, but particularly the third, the objection of Confusion of Issues immediately arises; and it is from that point of view mainly that the argument has been made against this kind of testimony to handwriting.

(b) There is, however, another consideration, also based on the present principle, i.e. that of the adequacy of the witness' sources of knowledge. The witness to the type of handwriting must have formed in his mind a standard based on the observation of specimens; and the inquiry must naturally be made (ante, §§ 694–698) whether the specimens he has seen have been sufficient in number and in quality. It has been seen that the first sort of witness —'ex visu scriptionis' — is liberally treated as to the number of specimens seen, while specimens written after litigation begun are in general not acceptable as sources of his belief. It has been seen also (ante, § 707) that for the second sort of witness — 'ex scriptis olim visis' — there is still no objection raised on the score of the number of specimens, while specimens written after litigation begun may equally be open to objection. Now the same questions must come for settlement in dealing with the third kind of witness, the expert. His sources of belief may be objected to (1) because the specimens laid before him are not sufficient in number, or (2) because they have been selected unfairly, for the purpose of aiding a particular view.

Thus the rules for expert testimony based on specimens are largely governed by the present principle of Knowledge. But the Opinion rule, excluding lay testimony under certain circumstances, also has a bearing; and the direct submission of specimens to the jury involves still other principles. The precedents and rules are thus so intertwined that it is impracticable to deal with them in this place; and they are most conveniently examined in detail under the Opinion rule (post, §§ 1991–2021).

5. Value

§ 711. General Principle. The judicial rulings upon a witness' qualifications to testify to Value are difficult to classify, — because the Court is often called upon to decide at the same time three distinct questions, namely, (1) the experiential capacity of the witness, (2) his knowledge of the standard of value, and (3) his knowledge of the object to be valued. The theory of the first of these has already been examined (ante, §§ 558, 567). The theory of the second and the third (explained ante, § 653) rests upon the peculiar nature of the idea of Value, which calls for two acquirements in every witness, namely, knowledge of the class or standard of values, and acquaintance with the object which is to be put into the class or tested by the standard. In a great many rulings no means is given us of knowing whether the Court, in accepting or rejecting the witness, is doing so on the principle of Experiential Qualifications or on the principle of Knowledge. To some extent, then, mere rules of thumb must suffice; but some effort must be made to examine the decisions according to the principles involved. They may be arranged in four groups:

1. Whether special experience is necessary in estimating values, or whether merely ordinary experience suffices;

2. What tests are proper for deciding whether an adequate knowledge of the value-standard exists;

3. How far acquaintance with the object to be valued is necessary;

4. Miscellaneous topics.

§ 712. (1) Experiential Qualifications. The question here is whether (on the principle of § 556, ante) the cultivation of the judgment by special experience is necessary before one can be permitted to form and express an opinion upon values. It is here assumed provisionally that the witness possesses adequate knowledge or opportunity for knowledge of the facts; the doubt is whether in addition a special cultivation of the judgment is necessary before attempting to interpret those facts. For example, a merchant has had constant occasion during many years to employ lawyers; may he, on that basis alone, attempt to draw conclusions as to the value of legal services? A lawyer has for two years lived in a metropolitan suburb; may he, merely from knowing what he paid and what others have paid for land in the neighborhood, attempt to form estimates of land values in the suburb?

Two things are obvious: first, that the answer may be different for different things to be valued; and, next, that the answer may depend largely on the conditions by which the value is determined in commercial usage. Where the exchange of articles has reached such a degree of organization and control that at a particular place the rate is clearly settled by the processes of trade and clearly communicated by an accepted mode — as in a stock or produce exchange — it is easy to see that any person, by going to the proper source and possessing himself of the facts, may acquire a fairly satisfactory estimate of value, without having had previous special training. Where, on the other hand, circumstances of casual occurrence, of uncertain influence, and of wide range, may importantly affect that economic attitude of the community which we call value — as in medical and legal services —, it may be out of the question for any one to form an opinion who is not qualified by special experience to interpret the facts he has observed.

The general tendency of the Courts, however, is towards a broad principle that no special training or occupation is necessary to enable one to estimate values. Perhaps no Court has attempted to enforce such a rule as unvarying; certainly no Court could wisely do so. Nevertheless, there are frequent utterances pointing to the broad principle that, in general, knowledge alone is necessary.[1] The practical effect may be said to be that Courts will prefer to require no special training, except where it seems to be clearly essential.

Even where concrete rules are laid down for various kinds of values, there is little or no distinction taken between the doctrine of Experiential Qualifications and the doctrine of Knowledge; i.e. when a Court rules that a witness to land values must be a dealer in real estate, the Court does not necessarily mean that a dealer's experience is necessary to give experiential qualifications; it may be required merely to give adequate knowledge of the facts of value. All that is given us is a rule of thumb only. Hence, it is practically useless to attempt to distinguish the principles; and the rulings may best be placed together (in the following sections).

§ 713. (2) Knowledge of Value-standard; what tests are proper? A knowledge of the general value-standard of the class of things in question is of course essential (ante, § 653). The difficult question is to determine tests for the various grades and modes of knowledge. The most practical arrangement of the rulings is to consider them first as applied to the various kinds of things to be valued, and then to notice certain general questions arising for all kinds of values alike. It must be repeated that in any case we are here dealing mainly with mere rules of thumb.

§ 714. Same: Land-value. (1) Must the witness be by occupation a dealer in land? The Courts unanimously and sensibly answer this in the negative.[1]

§ 712. [1] 1890, Montana R. Co. v. Warren, 137 U. S. 353, 11 Sup. 96; Ala. § 3960 ("Direct testimony as to the market value is in the nature of opinion evidence. One need not be an expert or dealer in the article, but may testify as to value, if he has had an opportunity for forming a correct opinion"); Ga. Code 1910, § 5875 (need not be "an expert or dealer in the article"); 1885, Central R. Co. v. Wolff, 74 Ga. 666 (it suffices "if they have any knowledge of such values"); 1890, Central R. Co. v. Skellie, 86 Ga. 693, 12 S. E. 1017 ("any one possessing sufficient knowledge or information may express his opinion"); 1881, Bowen v. Bowen, 74 Ind. 474 (one who "shows himself acquainted with values"); 1877, Thompson v. Boyle, 85 Pa. 481 ("the safest course is to permit the examination of all having experience in the thing valued, leaving their authority to be tested on their cross-examination").

§ 714. [1] Cal. 1888, San Diego Land Co. v. Neale, 78 Cal. 76, 20 Pac. 372; Ill. 1884, Johnson v. R. Co., 111 Ill. 418; 1894, Snodgrass v. Chicago, 152 Ill. 600, 38 N. E. 790; 1895, Pike v. Chicago, 155 Ill. 656, 40 N. E. 567; (but compare the following: 1881, Green v. Chicago, 97 Ill. 372, "whose business in life has afforded them opportunities of acquiring information and of judging accurately upon the question"); Kan. 1888, Lawrence & W. R. Co. v. Hawk, 39 Kan. 640, 18 Pac. 943; 1889, Kansas City & S. W. R. Co. v. Ehret, 41 Kan. 26, 20 Pac. 538; Kansas City & S. W. R. Co. v. Baird, 41 Kan. 69, 21 Pac. 227; Mich. 1885, Huff v. Hall, 56 Mich. 458, 23 N. W. 88; Miss. 1903, Board v. Nelms, 82 Miss. 416, 34 So. 149; Nebr. 1875, Lincoln & B. H. R. Co. v. Sutherland, 44 Nebr. 526, 62 N. W. 859; 1902, Greeley Co. v. Gebhardt, — Nebr. —, 89 N. W. 753; N. J. 1909, Morrell v. Preiskel, — N. J. L. —, 74 Atl. 994 (pedantically strict); N. Dak. 1909, Schmidt v. Beiseker, 19 N. D. 35, 120 N. W. 1096; N. Y. 1866, Robertson v. Knapp, 35 N. Y. 92; Okl. 1913, Fire Ass'n of Phila. v. Farmers' Gin Co., 39 Okl. 162, 134 Pac. 443 (cotton gin); Pa. 1876, Philadelphia & N. Y. R. Co. v. Bunnell, 81 Pa. 426; 1877, Hanover Water Co. v. Iron Co., 84 Pa. 281, 285; 1905, Hope v. Phila. & W. R. Co., 211 Pa. 401, 60 Atl. 996; W. Va.

(2) Must the witness himself have made a purchase or a sale of land, or a number of them? This is generally answered in the negative.[2] Yet certainly such a personal participation in sales would be a sufficient qualification.[3]

(3) Must the witness at least have had knowledge, not merely of general value-rumor or the like, but of specific sales made? This, too, is generally regarded as not essential.[4] But certainly such knowledge of specific sales in the neighborhood is a sufficient qualification.[5]

(4) Occasionally all specific limitations or tests are abandoned, and the broad test adopted that " any person having knowledge of " or " acquainted with " the values may testify; the determination of the qualification thus being left open for each case.[6] This is perhaps the most satisfactory and sensible test, provided the application of it is left entirely to the discretion of the trial judge.[7] But it is doubtful if any Court, in spite of its proclamation of this broad principle, would consistently enforce it by refusing to multiply rulings based on particular circumstances.

(5) A sufficient qualification is usually declared to exist where the witness is a resident, land-owner, or farmer, in the neighborhood. The phrase differs in different jurisdictions and in different rulings of the same Court; the notion is that of a person who has both an interest and an opportunity to make himself acquainted with land values around him.[8]

1916, Monongahela V. T. Co. v. Windom, 78 W. Va. 390, 88 S. E. 1092.

In addition to the express decisions above given, the same result is of course reached by implication in those rulings in the next notes which accept anything less in the way of a requirement.

[2] 1851, Walker v. Boston, 8 Cush. Mass. 279; 1855, Russell v. R. Co., 4 Gray Mass. 607; 1869, Swan v. Middlesex, 101 Mass. 177; 1922, Johnson v. Lowell, — Mass. —, 134 N. E. 627; 1888, Northeastern Nebr. R. Co. v. Frazier, 25 Nebr. 54, 40 N. W. 609. The rulings in the ensuing notes imply the same result.

[3] 1855, West Newbury v. Chase, 5 Gray Mass. 421; 1859, Brainard v. R. Co., 12 Mass. 409; 1869, Swan v. Middlesex, 101 Mass. 177.

[4] 1886, Chicago & E. R. Co. v. Blake, 116 Ill. 166, 4 N. E. 488; 1888, Lawrence & W. R. Co. v. Hawk, 39 Kan. 640, 18 Pac. 943; 1889, Kansas City & S. W. R. Co. v. Ehret, 41 Kan. 26, 20 Pac. 538; Kansas City & S. W. R. Co. v. Baird, 41 Kan. 69, 21 Pac. 227; 1906, Lally v. Central V. R. Co., 215 Pa. 436, 64 Atl. 633.

The rulings in the ensuing notes imply also the same result.

[5] 1879, Cherokee v. R. Co., 52 Ia. 281, 3 N. W. 42; 1872, Wallace v. Finch, 24 Mich. 255; 1880 Pittsburg & L. E. R. Co. v. Robinson, 95 Pa. 428, 432; and the Massachusetts cases in note 3, supra.

[6] E.g.: San Diego Land Co. v. Neale, supra, note 1; Pike v. Chicago, supra, note 1; 1870, Ferguson v. Stafford, 33 Ind. 165 ("the necessary knowledge and information to enable them to form a proper estimate of his value"); 1908, Ex parte Sanchez, 14 P. R. 393, 396.

[7] The following Courts have professed to do this: 1920, Hoover v. Shott, 68 Colo. 385, 189 Pac. 848 (vineyard); 1899, Howland v. Westport, 172 Mass. 373, 52 N. E. 522; 1922, Johnson v. Lowell, — Mass. —, 134 N. E. 627 (land value); 1900, Fossum v. R. Co., 80 Minn. 9, 82 N. W. 979; 1917, Springfield F. & M. Ins. Co. v. Griffin, 64 Okl. 131, 166 Pac. 431 (mercantile stock); 1917, Portland & Or. C. R. Co. v. Sanders, 86 Or. 62, 167 Pac. 564; 1920, Salt Lake & U. R. Co. v. Schramm, — Utah —, 189 Pac. 90; 1897, Willett v. St. Albans, 69 Vt. 330, Atl. 72.

[8] 1921, Pacific Live Stock Co. v. Warm Springs I. D., 9th C. C. A., 270 Fed. 555; 1882, Hunnicutt v. Kirkpatrick, 39 Ark. 172 (farmers of the vicinity); 1893, Orange Belt R. Co. v. Craver, 32 Fla. 28, 42, 13 So. 444 (resident); 1884, Bradshaw v. Atkins, 110 Ill. 332 (farmers of the same sort in the vicinity); 1916, Kirkwood v. Perry T. L. & I. Co., 178 Ia. 248, 159 N. W. 774 (owner); 1895, Lincoln v. Com., 164 Mass. 368, 41 N. E. 489 (land-owner); 1874, Stone v. Covell, 29 Mich. 362 (farmers and land-owners); 1873, Lehmicke v. R. Co., 19 Minn. 481 (resident); 1868, Thomas v. Mallinckrodt, 43 Mo. 65 ("property-holders and residents of the neighborhood"); 1896, Union Elev. Co. v. R. Co., 135 Mo. 353, 36 S. W. 1071 (residents of the city and acquainted with the property); 1888, Northeastern Nebr. R. Co. v. Frazier, 25 Nebr. 54, 40 N. W. 609 (residents); 1898,

(6) The knowledge and experience of a public office — a county commissioner, or an assessor — in which it is a part of the duties to become familiar with land values, may also qualify the witness.[9]

(7) In numerous rulings the particular witness' qualifications are passed upon, without enunciating any general rule.[10] These should not be used as precedents.

§ 715. Same: Services-value. The general test, to be gathered from the Chicago R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Buel, 56 Nebr. 205, 76 N. W. 571 (farmer familiar with realty-values in vicinity); 1876, Philadelphia & N. Y. R. Co. v. Bunnell, 81 Pa. 426 ("persons living in the neighborhood"); 1877, Hanover Water Co. v. Iron Co., 84 Pa. 281, 285 ("owned land in the neighborhood and was acquainted with its market value"); 1893, McElheny v. Bridge Co., 153 Pa. 108, 116, 25 Atl. 1021 (any one who knows); 1878, Brown v. R. Co., 12 R. I. 240 (a farmer may testify to farming value of land, but not to general value); 1898, Stolze v. Term. Co., 100 Wis. 208, 75 N. W. 987 (old resident, etc.).

[9] 1863, Fowler v. Middlesex, 6 All. Mass. 97; 1869, Swan v. Middlesex, 101 Mass. 177; 1878, Chandler v. J. P. Aqueduct, 125 Mass. 551; 1904, Muskeget Island Club v. Nantucket, 185 Mass. 303, 70 N. E. 61 (assessor).

[10] Alabama: 1878, Hudson v. State, 61 Ala. 339 (mill); California: 1901, Norris v. Crandall, 133 Cal. 19, 65 Pac. 571 (land); Florida: 1891, Jacksonville T. K. & W. R. Co. v. P. L. T. & M. Co., 27 Fla. 157, 9 So. 661 (cost of a building); Illinois: 1898, Sewell v. R. Co., 177 Ill. 93, 52 N. E. 302 (land); 1906, Lewis v. Englewood Elev. R. Co., 223 Ill. 223, 79 N. E. 44 (eminent domain); 1916, Alton & S. R. Co. v. Vandalia R. Co., 271 Ill. 558, 111 N. E. 531 (grade-crossing damage); 1921, Mauvaisterre drainage & L. Dist. v. Wabash L. Co., 299 Ill. 299, 132 N. E. 559 (land); 1922, Chicago v. Chicago City R. Co., 302 Ill. 57, 134 N. E. 44 (special assessment); Indiana: 1899, German-Amer. Ins. Co. v. Paul, 2 Ind. T. 625, 53 S. W. 442 (building); Kansas: 1895, Atchison T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Huitt, 1 Kan. App. 788, 41 Pac. 1051 (barn); Louisiana: 1897, Baillie v. Assur. Co., 49 La. An. 658, 21 So. 736 (land); 1906, Louisiana R. & N. Co. v. Morere, 116 La. 997, 41 So. 236 (land); Maryland: 1916, Park Land Co. v. Mayor etc. of Baltimore, 128 Md. 611, 98 Atl. 153; 1917, Western Union Tel. Co. v. Rasche, 130 Md. 126, 99 Atl. 991 (damage to ornamental trees); Massachusetts: 1861, Boston & W. R. Co. v. O. C. & F. R. R. Co., 3 All. 14 (land); 1867, Whitney v. Boston, 98 Mass. 315 (land); 1880, Bristol Co. Bank v. Keavy, 128 Mass. 303 (land); 1894, Amory v. Melrose, 162 Mass. 556, 39 N. E. 276 (land); 1895, Lyman v. Boston, 164 Mass. 99, 41 N. E. 128 (land); 1895, Teele v. Boston, 165 Mass. 88, 42 N. E. 506 (land); 1899, Manning v. Lowell, 173 Mass. 100, 53 N. E. 160; 1900, Cochrane v. Com., 175 Mass. 299, 56 N. E. 610 (one experienced in business of a bleaching-mill, etc., allowed to testify to value of land as a site for such a mill); Missouri: 1896, Union Elev. Co. v. R. Co., 135 Mo. 353, 36 S. W. 1071 (land); 1900, Steam S. C. Co. v. Scott, 157 Mo. 520, 57 S. W. 1076 (stone-quarry); 1906, St. Louis M. & S. E. R. Co. v. Continental B. Co., 198 Mo. 698, 96 S. W. 1011 (right of way through a brickmaking plant); Nebraska: 1896, Chicago B. & Q. R. Co. v. Shafer, 49 Nebr. 25, 68 N. W. 342 (land); New Jersey: 1899, Elvins v. Delaware & A. T. & T. Co., 63 N. J. L. 243, 43 Atl. 903 (shade-trees); 1904, Riley v. Camden & T. R. Co., 70 N. J. L. 289, 57 Atl. 444 (shade-trees); 1909, Van Ness v. New York & N. J. T. Co., 78 N. J. L. 511, 74 Atl. 456 (a witness who had bought and sold land in the town, held not qualified to testify to the damage to the land done by cutting a shade tree, because "none of the land dealt in by the witness had a single shade tree on it"; this is amusing quibbling; did any one ever hear of a real estate dealer specializing in shade-tree lots or cedar-of-lebanon back yards?); 1920, Burrough v. New Jersey Gas Co., 94 N. J. L. 536, 110 Atl. 915 (land with or without shade-trees; a large amount of judicial acumen was here misspent on a testimonial trifle); New York: 1880, Woodruff v. Ins. Co., 83 N. Y. 138 (construction of houses); Oklahoma: 1916, Sallisaw v. Priest, 61 Okl. 9, 159 Pac. 1093 (farmland); Pennsylvania: 1895, Spring City G. Co. v. R. Co., 167 Pa. 6, 31 Atl. 368 (land); 1895, Mewes v. Pipe-Line Co., 170 Pa. 364, 32 Atl. 1082 (land); 1896, Struthers v. R. Co., 174 Pa. 291, 34 Atl. 443 (land); 1905, Reed v. Pittsburg C. & W. R. Co., 210 Pa. 211, 59 Atl. 1067 (land); 1920, Hoffman v. Berwind-White C. M. Co., 265 Pa. 476, 109 Atl. 234 (damage to land); 1918, Tiffany v. Delaware L. & W. R. Co., 262 Pa. 388, 105 Atl. 101; Rhode Island: 1860, Howard v. Providence, 6 R. I. 514 (land); 1900, Williams v. Hathaway, 21 R. I. 566, 45 Atl. 578 (trees); Tennessee: 1905, Union R. Co. v. Hunton, 114 Tenn. 609, 88 S. W. 182 (land); Texas: 1905, Watkins L. M. Co. v. Campbell, 98 Tex. 372, 84 S. W. 424 (land); Vermont: 1916, Brown v. Aitken, 90 Vt. 569, 99 Atl. 265; Washington: 1902, Seattle & M. R. Co. v. Roeder, 30 Wash. 244, 70 Pac. 498 (stone quarry); 1905, Johnson v. Tacoma, 41 Wash. 51, 82 Pac. 1092 (realty benefits); West Virginia: 1922, Virginia Power Co. v. Brotherton, — W. Va. —, 110 S. E. 546 (land).

rulings, is that any one sufficiently familiar with the commercial value of such services may testify. Yet, when the services are of the sort generally termed professional, it is probable that a member of the same profession would invariably be insisted upon;[1] the practice in this respect is so settled that the question has seldom been raised. For other kinds of services, there seem to be no specific tests; a familiarity with their kind and value is the standard to be applied.[2]

Where the testimony is directed not so much to a class of services as to those of a particular person in view of his individual qualities, the testimony of a person who had employed that individual might be receivable, even though he had no general knowledge of such services as a class.[3] It would be a hard rule which would prevent a plaintiff from informing the jury of his own estimate of the value of his services; and the Courts seem inclined to impose no terms as to his general familiarity with the class of services; that he has rendered them justifies listening to his opinion.[4]

There are, in addition, numerous rulings passing upon the qualifications of particular witnesses and declaring no general rules.[5]

§ 715. [1] 1842, Mock v. Kelly, 3 Ala. 387 (medical services); 1905, Fuller v. Stevens, — Ala.—, 39 So. 623 (one testifying to the value of attorneys' services need not know the special value of the plaintiff's attorney's services); 1888, Turnbull v. Richardson, 69 Mich. 406, 411, 37 N. W. 499 (legal services); Kelley v. Richardson, 69 Mich. 432, 437, 37 N. W. 514 (how far an attorney is qualified to value the services of a legal adviser in managing an estate); 1896, Howell v. Smith, 108 Mich. 350, 66 N. W. 218 (a witness to the value of legal services must be an attorney; here a person who had employed many lawyers was excluded).

[2] 1896, Chamness v. Chamness, 53 Ind. 304 (value of board; receiving one not a boarding-house keeper); 1895, Jenney Electric Co. v. Branham, 145 Ind. 314, 41 N. E. 448 (value of services in negotiating a sale; familiarity with the "extent and character of the particular service", required); 1885, Alt v. Fig Syrup Co., 19 Nev. 118, 7 Pac. 174 (non-expert received, where the services were rendered in a secret manufacturing process).

[3] 1858, Doster v. Brown, 25 Ga. 25 (a mill-owner who had such work done); 1877, Eagle & P. Mfg. Co. v. Browne, 58 Ga. 110 (employer or co-employee, upon the facts of the cases); 1889, Kennett v. Fickel, 41 Kan. 213, 21 Pac. 93 (one who had hired such work); 1865, Kendall v. May, 10 All. Mass. 61, 67 (one who had furnished board to the same person); 1864, Cornell v. Dean, 105 Mass. 435 (pasturing cattle; one who has paid for or rendered such services); 1882, Ritter v. Daniels, 47 Mich. 618, 11 N. W. 409 (previous hiring of the same person); 1881, McPeters v. Ray, 85 N. C. 464 (previous employer of the same person).

[4] 1880, Richardson v. McGoldrick, 43 Mich. 476, 5 N. W. 672; 1895, Foley v. Platt, 105 Mich. 635, 63 N. W. 520; 1918, Matoole v. Sullivan, 55 Mont. 363, 177 Pac. 254 (housekeeping); 1922, Doane v. Marquisee, — Mont. —, 206 Pac. 426 (services as tailor; citing the above text with approval); 1898, Missouri P. R. Co. v. Palmer, 55 Nebr. 559, 76 N. W. 169 (services in nursing); 1901, McCormick H. M. Co. v. Davis, 61 Nebr. 406, 85 N. W. 390 (boarding horses); 1876, Mercer v. Bose, 67 N. Y. 58.

Contra, semble, that he must be otherwise expert: 1917, Washington B. & A. El. R. Co. v. Moss, 130 Md. 198, 100 Atl. 86 (services as agent, etc.); 1884, Loucks v. R. Co., 31 Minn. 534, 18 N. W. 651 (farm services).

Of course, an objection assuming his expertness and directed against a plaintiff's testifying in his own cause, is merely an attempt to argue that interest as a party disqualifies; such an objection has to-day no standing (ante, § 577).

[5] Federal: 1919, Coca-Cola Co. v. Moore, 8th C. C. A., 256 Fed. 640 (value of attorney's services rendered in Little Rock, Ark., in trade-mark litigation; testimony by attorneys not having experience in such litigation, held admissible; testimony of attorneys having such experience, but in other States, held admissible); Ala. 1896, American Oak Extr. Co. v. Ryan, 112 Ala. 337, 20 So. 644 (cost of cording wood); Cal. 1899, Cowdery v. McChesney, 125 Cal. 19, 58 Pac. 62 (services in personal attendance); Ill. 1892, Chicago & E. I. R. Co. v. Bivans, 142 Ill. 401 (services); 1895, Heffron v. Brown, 155 Ill. 322, 40 N. E. 583 (services); Ind. 1881, Board v. Chambers, 75 Ind. 410 (services); 1895, Jenney Electric Co. v. Branham, 145 Ind. 314, 41 N. E. 448 (services in negotiating a sale of machinery); Ia. 1898, Clark v. Ellsworth, 104 Ia. 442, 73 N. W. 1023 (customary charges of an attorney); 1899, Allison v. Parkinson, 108 Ia. 154, 78 N. W. 845 (services of a nurse); Kan. 1875, Ottawa Univ. v. Parkinson, 14 Kan. 163 (attorney's services); 1880, Central B. U. P. R. Co. v. Nichols, 24 Kan. 243 (services); Mass. 1905, Lawrence v. Methuen, 187 Mass. 592, 73 N. E. 860 (physician's services); Mich. 1914, Tolsma v. Tolsma's Estate, 183 Mich. 314, 149 N. W. 1050 (farm services); Minn. 1870, Allis v. Day, 14 Minn. 518 (legal services); 1897, Towle v. Sherer, 70 Minn. 312, 73 N. W. 180 (cost of a house); N. H. 1900, Chapman v. Tiffany, 70 N. H. 249, 47 Atl. 603 (storage); N. J. 1918, Ziegener v. Daeche, 91 N. J. L. 634, 103 Atl. 82 (legal services); N. C. 1898, McLamb v. R. Co., 122 N. C. 862, 29 S. E. 894 (services of a farmer); Vt. 1886, Stone v. Tupper, 58 Vt. 411, 5 Atl. 387 (services in a stable).

§ 716. Same: Personal-property value. Here the general test, that any one familiar with the values in question may testify, is liberally applied, and with few attempts to lay down detailed minor tests.[1] The owner of an article, whether he is generally familiar with such values or not, ought certainly to be allowed to estimate its worth; the weight of his testimony (which often would be trifling) may be left to the jury; and Courts have usually made no objections to this policy.[2]

The following case seems contrary to the principle of § 654, ante: 1901, Birkel v. Chandler, 26 Wash. 241, 66 Pac. 406 (sources of knowledge of the value of services need not be stated beforehand).

§ 716. [1] Ala. 1858, Ward v. Reynolds, 32 Ala. 389 (value of a slave; any person may testify); 1906, Moss v. State, 146 Ala. 686, 40 So. 340 (shoes); 1904, Southern R. Co. v. Morris, 143 Ala. 628, 42 So. 17 (mare); Conn. 1915, Coffin v. Laskan, 89 Com. 325, 94 Atl. 370 (automobile); Ia. 1886, State v. Finch, 70 Ia. 317, 30 N. W. 578 (one who had never bought or sold a seal-skin overcoat, nor seen one bought or sold, was allowed to testify to the value of such a coat); 1902, Houghtaling v. R. Co., 117 Ia. 540, 91 N. W. 811 (clothing and furniture: "any one familiar with its nature and use" is qualified); Mass. 1864, Brady v. Brady, 8 All. 101 (one who had bought and sold horses and wagons was received); 1900, Munro v. Stowe, 175 Mass. 169, 55 N. E. 992 (witness allowed to testify to the value of a lot of household goods, though unable to state the value of each article); Mich. 1873, Continental Ins. Co. v. Horton, 28 Mich. 175 (one who buys or is present at buying, received); 1879, Printz v. People, 42 Mich. 145, 3 N. W. 306 (one who had worn furs and had priced others, received); 1905, Withey v. Pere Marquette R. Co., 141 Mich. 412, 104 N. W. 773 (value of clothing, etc., damaged in a railroad collision); Nebr. 1899, Langdon v. Wintersteen, 58 Nebr. 278, 78 N. W. 501 (millinery goods; dealer not required); Pa. 1920, Wilhelm v. Uttenweiler, — Pa. —, 112 Atl. 94 (brewery machinery); W. Va. 1899, Hood v. Maxwell, 1 W. Va. 221, 238 (relation of flour-price to wheat-price; one not in the business was received).

[2] Federal: 1900, Gorman v. Park, 40 U. S. App. 537, 100 Fed. 553 (restaurant-keeper allowed to testify to value of tables, etc., used in his occupation); 1905, Union Pacific R. Co. v. Lucas, 136 Fed. 374, 69 C. C. A. 218 (land and buildings); 1922, Alaska Juneau G. M. Co. v. Larson, 9th C. C. A., 279 Fed. 420 (owner of a destroyed house); Alabama: 1906, Echols v. State, 147 Ala. 700, 41 So. 298 (sundry goods stolen); Iowa: 1885, Tubbs v. Garrison, 68 Ia. 48, 25 N. W. 921 (plaintiff and his wife, owners of household goods); 1895, Thomason v. Insurance Co., 92 Ia. 72, 61 N. W. 843 (owner of household furniture); 1897, State v. Hathaway, 100 Ia. 225, 69 N. W. 449; 1906, Tubbs v. Mechanics' Ins. Co., 131 Ia. 217, 108 N. W. 324 (owner of a building, etc.); 1918, State v. Strum, 184 Ia. 1165, 169 N. W. 373 (manager of a plant); 1920, Gay v. Shadle, —Ia.—, 176 N. W. 635 (automobile); 1920, Daugherty v. Advance-Rumely T. Co., —Ia.—, 180 N. W. 277 (tractor); Massachusetts: 1895, Shea v. Hudson, 165 Mass. 43, 42 N. E. 114 (owner of a horse and buggy); Minnesota: 1916, Fairmont G. E. & R. M. C. Co. v. Crouch, 133 Minn. 167, 157 N. W. 1090 (gasoline-engine); 1916, McGilora v. Minneapolis St. P. & S. S. M. R. Co., 135 Minn. 275, 159 N. W. 854 (hay); Nebraska: 1908, Jensen v. Palatine Ins. Co., 81 Nebr. 523, 116 N. W. 286 (stock of goods); 1909, Anderson v. Chicago B. & O. R. Co., 84 Nebr. 311, 120 N. W. 1114 (crops and land); North Dakota: 1912, Needham v. Halverson, 22 N. D. 594, 135 N. W. 203 (horses); Pennsylvania: 1840, Clark v. Spence, 10 Watts 336 (owner of a trunk and contents); 1843, Bingham v. Rogers, 6 W. & S. 501; 1845, Whitesell v. Crane, 8 id. 371 (owner of clothes); 1846, McGill v. Rowland, 3 Pa. St. 452 (same); 1859, Mish v. Wood, 34 Pa. 452; 1874, Adams Express Co. v. Schlessinger, 75 Pa. 248, 256; Utah: 1907, Smith v. Mine & S. S. Co., 32 Utah 21, 88 Pac. 683 (household goods); Wisconsin: 1906, Palmer v. Goldberg, 128 Wis. 103, 107 N. W. 478 (a farmer, held qualified as to the value of his own horses).

In sundry rulings, the qualifications of particular witnesses are passed upon, without affording precedents for general rules.[3]

§ 717. Same: Witness must know the Market Value, if there is one. Value is, of course, the rate at which an exchange would in fact be made at this moment by the purchasing and selling community; hence, a knowledge of what an article ought to exchange for is not a knowledge of value, — at least, in the sense in which Courts regard it. Nor is a knowledge of the various qualities and uses of an article sufficient, if it stops short of including the exchangeable rate which these qualities actually give it. In short, where there is a market value, the knowledge of the witness must be of this market value:[1]

1877, BERRY, J., in Berg v. Spink, 24 Minn. 138: "Where the thing whose value is in question is of a nature to possess a current price or market value, such current price or market value is in law the true value. To entitle a witness to testify to the value of such a thing, he must therefore be acquainted with the current or market value of things of the Contra: 1905, Motton v. Smith, 27 R. I. 57, 62, 60 Atl. 681 (owner of jewelry, not shown to have knowledge, excluded; but on rehearing the Court conceded that "an owner is doubtless qualified to state the cost price of articles of personal property, and from that, with information as to age and wear, the jury may estimate value. . . . We did not attempt to lay down a general rule upon the subject").

Some uncertainty may have been created in the modern rulings, by a misapprehension of certain earlier ones, rendered while a party was still disqualified by interest, and dealing with the question, then a living one (post, § 612, n. 4), whether a husband or wife of a party, or a party generally, should be granted a special exception of necessity for testifying to the contents and value of a package lost by a carrier; e.g. 1860, Illinois C. R. Co. v. Taylor, 24 Ill. 323.

[3] Ala. 1857, Winter v. Burt, 31 Ala. 37 (machinery); 1885, Winter v. Montgomery, 79 Ala. 490 (personalty); 1896, Louisville J. C. Co. v. Lischkoff, 109 Ala. 136, 19 So. 436 (stock of dry goods, etc.); Cal. 1858, Polk v. Coffin, 9 Cal. 58 (cattle); Conn. 1919, Burn v. Metropolitan Lumber Co., 94 Conn. 1, 107 Atl. 609 (value of lumber not delivered); Ga. 1859, Walker v. Fields, 28 Ga. 237, semble (mill-machinery); Haw. 1904, Pacific Mill Co. v. Enterprise Mill Co., 16 Haw. 282, 288 (mouldings, etc.); Ill. 1901, Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Calumet Stock Farm, 194 Ill. 9, 61 N. E. 1095 (horses); Ind. 1881, Foster v. Ward, 75 Ind. 594 (hogs, feed); Ia. 1879, Haight v. Kimbark, 51 Ia. 14, 50 N. W. 577 (mules); 1885, Gere v. Ins. Co., 67 Ia. 275, 23 N. W. 137 (stallion); 1896, Leek v. Chesley, 98 Ia. 593, 67 N. W. 580 (horses); 1901, Cathcart v. Rogers, 115 Ia. 30, 87 N. W. 738 (cattle); Kan. 1886, Reed v. New, 35 Kan. 730, 12 Pac. 139 (horses); Md. 1905, Gossage v. Phila. B. & W. R. Co., 101 Md. 698, 61 Atl. 692 (ship); Mass. 1855, Haskins v. Ins. Co., 5 Gray 432 (machinery); 1871, Lawton v. Chase, 108 Mass. 241 (timber); 1899, Knight v. Rothschild, 172 Mass. 546, 52 N. E. 1062 (fur garments); 1899, Vandercook v. O'Connor, 172 Mass. 301, 52 N. E. 444 (bottlers' supplies); Mich. 1875, Browne v. Moore, 32 Mich. 257 (horses); Minn. 1876, Burger v. R. Co., 22 Minn. 343 (hay); 1900, Linde v. Gaffke, 81 Minn. 304, 84 N. W. 41 (wheat); Mo. 1878, Simmons v. Carrier, 68 Mo. 421 (lumber); 1896, Moffit v. Hereford, 132 Mo. 513, 34 S. W. 252 (shares of stock); Mont. 1898, Emerson v. Bigler, 21 Mont. 200, 53 Pac. 621 (cattle); 1903, Porter v. Hawkins, 27 Mont. 486, 71 Pac. 664 (hay and barn); 1909, Sullivan v. Girson, 39 Mont. 274, 102 Pac. 320 (diamond ring); Nebr. 1895, Smith v. Bank, 45 Nebr. 444, 63 N. W. 796 (dry goods); N. H. 1839, Whipple v. Walpole, 10 N. H. 131 (horses); N. D. 1901, Minneapolis Threshing M. Co. v. McDonald, 10 N. D. 408, 87 N. W. 993 (threshing machinery); Okl. 1896, Diebold S. & L. Co. v. Holt, 4 Okl. 479, 46 Pac. 512 (safes); 1903, Choctaw O. & G. R. Co. v. Deperade, 12 Okl. 367, 71 Pac. 629 (cattle); Or. 1897, Oregon Pottery Co. v. Kern, 30 Or. 328, 47 Pac. 917 (scow); R. I. 1856, Forbes v. Howard, 4 R. I. 367 (cost of fitting up a theatre); Wash. 1902, Lines v. Alaska C. Co., 29 Wash. 133, 69 Pac. 642 (piano); W. Va. 1905, Tucker v. Colonial F. Ins. Co., 58 W. Va. 30, 51 S. E. 86 (merchandise insured); Wis. 1867, Noonan v. Ilsley, 22 Wis. 35 (shares of stock).

§ 717. [1] 1871, Cooper v. Randall, 59 Ill. 320; 1885, Daly v. Kimball Co., 67 Ia. 135, 24 N. W. 756; 1904, Sylvester v. Ammons, 126 Ia. 140, 101 N. W. 782 (stock of goods); 1854, Elfelt v. Smith, 1 Minn. 126; 1869, Brackett v. Edgerton, 14 id. 174; 1889, Russell v. Hayden, 40 id. 90, 41 N. W. 456; 1877, Berg. v. Spink, 24 Minn. 138 (horses); 1840, Beard v. Kirk, 11 N. H. 400.

class to which it belongs. This is a general rule, in the application of which much must be left to the sound discretion of the trial judge."

But not always is there a market value for an article. In such a case the value is the probable exchangeable rate so far as one can estimate it from the various attendant circumstances and conditions which would affect the disposal of the article; and it is with these that a witness must in such a case be familiar.[2]

§ 718. Same: Knowledge must be of Value in the Vicinity. Since value is the exchangeable rate accepted by the community, it is obvious that the rate may differ, in passing from one region to another, where different conditions prevail and a different judgment would be formed by the local community. Hence the question arises how far an acquaintance with value-standards in one place will suffice when the value in question is of a thing in another place.

The witness' competency must here depend upon whether the conditions of value in the two places are sufficiently similar to render his knowledge of values in one place adequate for estimating them in the other. The application of this principle must depend on the circumstances of each case, and no further detailed rules can be laid down.[1] This question, however, must be distinguished from that of the competency of a witness who, though having his business-quarters in one place, is by reason of his occupation familiar with values of goods in another, — for example, an importer, who is also necessarily acquainted with the values of goods at the foreign port of export; in such a case, his knowledge is sufficient.[2]

§ 719. Same: Knowledge of Value-standards must generally be acquired by Personal Observation, not by mere Hearsay. Knowledge of value does not necessarily rest on hearsay. It might be supposed that to know value is merely to know what other people say the thing is worth, — merely to have heard them offering and accepting prices. But the answer is that these vari-

[2] 1876, Burger v. R. Co., 22 Minn. 343.

§ 718. [1] Iowa: 1886, Raridan v. R. Co., 69 Ia. 531, 29 N. W. 599 ("the fact that the witness knew the value of stalks in his neighborhood, from six to nine miles from plaintiff's place, did not qualify him to testify to the value of stalks in plaintiff's neighborhood"; a narrow ruling); 1895, Stevens v. Ellsworth, 95 Ia. 231, 63 N. W. 683 (rejecting a witness not acquainted with attorney's services in that region); Massachusetts: 1863, Najac v. R. Co., 7 All. 328 (admitting one familiar with the use and value of an easement, though not of adjacent land); 1895, Amory v. Melrose, 162 Mass. 556, 39 N. E. 276 (knowledge in a metropolis, held sufficient for suburban values); 1895, Lyman v. Boston, 164 Mass. 99, 41 N. E. 128 (not necessary that knowledge should relate to the same place); Michigan: 1873, Greeley v. Stilson, 27 Mich. 155 (knowledge of value elsewhere rejected); 1874, Stone v. Covell, 29 Mich. 362 (farmer may testify only for land in vicinity); 1881, Kent Co. v. Ransom, 46 Mich. 417, 9 N. W. 454, semble (knowledge of value of services elsewhere, here held inadmissible); New Jersey: 1906, Walsh v. Board, 73 N. J. L. 643, 64 Atl. 1088 (a former owner of the land, not shown to know values in the locality, held properly, excluded); North Carolina: 1882, Fairley v. Smith, 87 N. C. 367 (knowledge of values elsewhere may be sufficient); Pennsylvania: 1903, Lynch v. Troxell, 207 Pa. 162, 56 Atl. 413 (land); Texas: 1922, Hartford Fire Ins. Co. v. Galveston H. & S. A. R. Co., — Tex. —, 239 S. W. 919 (cattle).

[2] 1843, Alfonso v. U. S., 2 Story 426 (Boston merchants testifying to prices at foreign ports); 1891, Cntral R. Co. v. Skellie, 86 Ga. 686, 12 S. E. 1017 (where a dealer residing in Georgia but receiving daily quotations from New York was held competent); 1894, Texas & P. R. Co. v. Donovan, 86 Tex. 378, 25 S. W. 10 (a Texas dealer receiving quotations from Chicago).

Compare the cases in the next section.

ous instances of offers or acceptances of prices, averaged into a mean or probable figure, are what constitute value. The statements of persons declaring their estimates of the prices they would give or receive are not taken, on the credit of those persons, as trustworthy assertions of the fact of value, but merely as items of conduct which themselves make up that total fact of conduct which we call value. Thus, if A sits in a merchant's office and listens to the terms accepted and rejected for a dozen articles, he acquires a first-hand knowledge of value; but if he goes in and asks the merchant to tell him the value of a given article, his knowledge is based on a belief in the truth of the merchant's assertion. In the former case, his knowledge is not based on hearsay.[1] But in the latter case his knowledge is based on the hearsay assertion of another person, and therefore is inadmissible (under the principle of § 657, ante). The distinction depends upon whether the utterances heard represent in themselves a series of individual offers or transactions, or are merely reports of the net result of offers or transactions already made.

The distinction is no doubt often difficult to draw in practice; in a newspaper, for example, some of the price-quotations may purport to represent actual individual transactions, or groups of transactions, while others may represent merely the editor's report or estimate of the net result of value. A witness may be said to be qualified, or not, according as the one or the other of these elements forms the chief source of his knowledge; and no more definite rule can be or ought to be laid down:[2]

§ 719. [1] 1843, Story, J., in Alfonso v. U. S., 2 Story 426; and the general principle of § 1772, post.

[2] The rulings show how much the result depends upon which source was the chief one for the particular witness: Fed. 1865, Cliquot's Champagne, 3 Wall. 141 (admitting knowledge based on "price current" lists); Ark. 1896, Little Rock & F. S. R. Co. v. Alister, 62 Ark. 1, 34 S. W. 82 (cost of excavation; knowledge based on hearsay, excluded); Colo. 1875, Thatcher v. Kautcher, 2 Colo. 700, 702 (admitting knowledge obtained by inquiring in the market); Ga. 1890, Central R. Co. v. Skellie, 86 Ga. 693, 12 S. E. 1017 (a fruit-dealer in Georgia, who in the fruit season received daily quotations from dealers in New York by telegrams and circulars, was allowed to testify to New York market value); 1900, Armour v. Ross, 110 Ga. 403, 35 S. E. 787 (testimony to market value from one who had received the price from dealers in the markets elsewhere, admitted); Ill. 1903, Spohr v. Chicago, 206 Ill. 441, 69 N. E. 515 (here an expert testifying to the price of land solely by having read the deed-recital of consideration was excluded); Ind. Terr. 1898, Walker v. Stilson, 1 Ind. Terr. 688, 43 S. W. 959 (testimony as to a sale, etc., founded on hearsay, excluded); Ia. 1894, Hudson v. R. Co., 92 Ia. 231, 60 N. W. 608 (admitting knowledge based on reading market reports); Md. 1860, Green v. Caulk, 16 Md. by mere inquiry); Mass. 1858, Lewis v. Ins. Co., 10 Gray 511 (excluding a knowledge of prices obtained by mere inquiry, not by dealing); Mich. 1866, Sisson v. Cleveland & T. R. Co., 14 Mich. 490 (admitting knowledge based on newspaper market reports, telegraphic reports, etc.); 1868, Cleveland & T. R. Co. v. Perkins, 17 Mich. 296, 301 (testimony to New York market prices of cattle, "derived from the newspapers", admitted); 1870, Comstock v. Smith, 20 Mich. 342, semble (same); 1872, Kost v. Bender, 25 Mich. 519 (excluding knowledge of price of oil lands learned by inquiry); 1875, Sirrine v. Briggs, 31 Mich. 446 (admitting a clerk in the business, who knew the value of merchandise from price-lists); Minn. 1889, Hoxsie v. Lumber Co., 41 Minn. 548, 43 N. W. 476 (admitting knowledge based on commercial reports received in the course of business); Mo. 1905, Fountain v. Wabash R. Co., 114 Mo. App. 676, 90 S. W. 393 (dealers in cattle, knowing in part from perusal of trade-journals, admitted); N. Y. 1830, Lush v. Druse, 4 Wend. 317 (admitting knowledge gained by inquiring at a merchant's office); 1878, Harrison v. Glover, 72 N. Y. 454 (admitting knowledge based on price-lists, and letters from dealers); N. C. 1882, Fairley v. Smith, 87 N. C. 367 (admitting knowledge based on newspapers; but not where a single newspaper at a remote point was the source);

1814, De Berenger's Trial, Gurney's Rep. 188; in this celebrated trial for swindling, De Berenger, Lord Cochrane, and others were charged with having falsely circulated a report of the death of Napoleon in order temporarily to raise the price of stocks and sell on the risen market; it was proved that on the day of the rise the defendants had sold more than £1,600,000 of stocks, recently bought; to prove the prices on those days, a witness was called who had been "employed by the House to take the prices of the day at the Stock Exchange." Q. "Where do you get those accounts from?" A. "I collect them from the Stock Exchange." Q. "Do you go about all day long taking the prices?" A. "I collect them at different times in the course of the day." Q. "You go about taking an account from all the persons who are there?" A. "I take them from different persons who are in the market." On objection by Mr. Serj. Best, ELLENBOROUGH, L. C. J., replied: "It is all hearsay; but it is the only evidence we can have; it is the only evidence we have of the price of sales of any description. I do not receive it as the precise thing, but as what is in the ordinary transactions of mankind received as proper information; and I suppose there is hardly a gentleman living who would not act on this paper."

1873, RODMAN, J., in Smith v. R. Co., 68 N. C. 115: "The plaintiff in testifying said that he only knew the value in New York by accounts of sales received from his factors informing him of sums placed to his credit, being the proceeds of sales, by telegrams, circulars, and correspondence. . . . The result of all the sales of the day, or of a period shortly before or after, embodied in a reputation among dealers in the article, is the best evidence which the nature of the case admits. The reputation thus formed and circulated by telegrams, commercial circulars, and the prices current in newspapers, is such evidence as is acted on without hesitation by all dealers on their most important transactions."

1875, WELLS, J., in Whitney v. Thacher, 117 Mass. 53 (admitting value-testimony of New York prices from brokers in Boston whose knowledge was chiefly obtained from daily price-current lists and returns of sales daily furnished them in Boston from their New York houses): "It is not necessary, in order to qualify one to give an opinion as to values, that his information should be of such a direct character as would make it competent in itself as primary evidence. It is the experience which he acquires in the ordinary conduct of affairs, and from means of information such as are usually relied on by men engaged in business for the conduct of that business, that qualifies him to testify."

Distinguish the question whether price-lists or trade-journals themselves are admissible under an exception to the Hearsay rule (post, § 1704).

§ 720. (3) Acquaintance with the Specific Object to be valued. It has already been noticed (ante, § 653) that a person making an estimate as to identity, handwriting, or value, must possess a double knowledge, — (1) a knowledge of the classes into one of which the thing is to be put or the standard by which it is to be tested, and (2) a knowledge of the thing itself to be classed or measured or tested. The necessity of this double element of knowledge lies in the very nature of the mental process involved. The former element of knowledge — of the value-standard — has just been considered. The

N. D. 1922, Schnitz Bros. v. Bolles & Rogers Co., —N. D. —, 186 N. W. 96 (excluding witness whose knowledge was based solely on a market report, not admissible under the principle of § 1704, post); Okl. 1912, Midland V. R. Co. v. Adkins, 36 Okl. 15, 127 Pac. 867 (testimony to market value, based on talks with dealers and on newspaper quotations, admitted); Tex. 1894, Texas & P. R. Co. v. Donovan, 86 Tex. 378, 25 S. W. 10 (a person in Texas, receiving daily reports from Chicago, allowed to testify to price of sheep in Chicago); Vt. 1885, Railroad Co. v. Bixby, 57 Vt. 564, semble (admitting knowledge based on inquiry of prices); Va. 1899, Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Reeves, 97 Va. 284, 33 S. E. 606 (testimony to value of cattle, based solely on price-quotations in a newspaper and on one price-list, excluded); 1900, Wadley v. Com., 98 Va. 803, 35 S. E. 452 (value of bonds; witness who had made inquiries for creditors, "a pretty searching investigation", excluded).

latter element — knowledge of the particular thing to be valued — is equally required by the rules of evidence, as Courts have often pointed out:[1]

1871, EARL, V., in Bedell v. R. Co., 44 N. Y. 370: "There is no rule of law, and there can be none, defining how much a witness shall know of property before he can be permitted to give an opinion of its value. He must have some acquaintance with it sufficient to enable him to form some estimate of its value, and then it is for the jury to determine how much weight to attach to such estimate. Here the witnesses were carpenters and had a general acquaintance with the house; they knew its shape, location, external appearance, and, to some extent, its internal condition; and the Court did not err in allowing their opinions of its value to go to the jury for what they were worth."

1886, CLARK, J., in Pittsburg V. & C. R. Co. v. Vance, 115 Pa. 332, 8 Atl. 764: "[A witness to the market value of land] should have some special opportunity for observation — should, in a general way and to a reasonable extent, have in his mind the data from which a proper estimate of value ought to be made. If interrogated, he should be able to disclose sufficient actual knowledge of the subject to indicate that he is in a position to know what he proposes to state and to enable the jury to judge of the probable proximate accuracy of his conclusions. . . . J. B. stated in the most unequivocal manner that he was not much acquainted with the land in question; that he had been on the lower part of it, but that he knew nothing at all about the upper part. . . . It certainly does not require much argument to show that B. was an incompetent witness to testify on this question; he had not sufficient knowledge of the requisite facts upon which to base an opinion."

This general requirement is constantly enforced. The sufficiency of the witness' acquaintance with the thing to be valued should depend upon the discretion of the trial judge.

§ 720. [1] Federal. 1869, Chicago v. Greer, 9 Wall. 734; Ala. 1858, Ward v. Reynolds, 32 Ala. 390; 1861, Spiva v. Stapleton, 38 Ala. 174 (land); Cal. 1868, Central Pacific R. Co. v. Pearson, 35 Cal. 261 (land); Colo. 1920, Hoover v. Shott, 68 Colo. 385, 189 Pac. 848 (vineyard); Ill. 1881, Green v. Chicago, 97 Ill. 372 ("familiar with the subject of inquiry"); 1900, Chicago Terminal T. R. Co. v. Bugbee, 184 Ill. 353, 56 N. E. 386 (land); 1921, Elmhurst v. Rohmeyer, 297 Ill. 430, 130 N. E. 761 (real estate taken by condemnation); Ind. 1862, Crouse v. Holman, 19 Ind. 38 (land); 1870, Ferguson v. Stafford, 33 Ind. 165; Ia. 1879, Cherokee v. R. Co., 52 Ia. 281, 3 N. W. 42 (land); 1888, Pingery v. R. Co., 78 Ia. 440, 43 N. W. 285 (land); Kan. 1888, Lawrence & W. R. Co. v. Hawk, 39 Kan. 640, 18 Pac. 943 (land); 1889, Lawrence & W. R. Co. v. Ross, 40 Kan. 605, 20 Pac. 197 (land); Kansas City & S. W. R. Co. v. Ehret, 41 Kan. 26, 20 Pac. 538 (land); Kansas City & S. W. R. Co. v. Baird, 41 Kan. 69, 21 Pac. 227; Kennett v. Fickel, 41 Kan. 213, 21 Pac. 93; Md. 1895, Wallace v. Schaub, 81 Md. 594, 32 Atl. 324 (a nurse's services); Mass. 1851, Walker v. Boston, 8 Cush. 279 (land); 1854, Shaw v. Charlestown, 2 Gray 109 (land); 1855, Russell v. R. Co., 4 Gray 607 (land); Mich. 1881, Dyer v. Rosenthal, 45 Mich. 590, 8 N. W. 560 (one who had been within a store but had not inspected the goods whose value was in question, excluded); 1895, Metzger v. Assur. Co., 102 Mich. 334, 63 N. W. 647 (insufficient examination of a stock of goods); 1899, Michaud v. Grace H. L. Co., 122 Mich. 305, 81 N. W. 93, semble (ship); Minn. 1873, Lehmicke v. R. Co., 19 Minn. 482 (land; seeing it, without actually going upon it, may suffice); 1876, Burger v. R. Co., 22 Minn. 343 (personalty); 1883, Sherman v. R. Co., 30 Minn. 228, 15 N. W. 239 (land); 1884, Scurer v. Horst, 31 Minn. 480, 18 N. W. 283 (services); 1889, Russell v. Hayden, 40 Minn. 90, 41 N. W. 456 (personalty); Mo. 1860, Newmark v. Ins. Co., 30 Mo. 165 (personalty); 1886, Springfield & S. R. Co. v. Calkins, 90 Mo. 543, 3 S. W. 82 ("acquainted with the premises, location, and surroundings"); N. Y. 1888, Slocovich v. Ins. Co., 108 N. Y. 61, 14 N. E. 802 (excluding one who had not seen the ship for several years); N. D. 1905, Keeney v. Fargo, 14 N. D. 423, 105 N. W. 93 (rental); Oh. 1876, Williams v. Brown, 28 Oh. St. 552 (services); Pa. 1895, Mewes v. Pipe-Line Co., 170 Pa. 364, 32 Atl. 1082 (land); 1903, Shimer v. R. Co., 205 Pa. 648, 55 Atl. 769 (land); 1905, Hope v. Phila. & W. R. Co., 211 Pa. 401, 60 Atl. 996 (land); S. Car. 1903, Wilson v. Southern R. Co., 65 S. C. 421, 43 S. E. 964 (land); Vt. 1858, Laurent v. Vaughn, 30 Vt. 94 (personalty).

As with other kinds of knowledge (ante, § 672), so with knowledge of values, the place of this element may be supplied by a hypothetical question. Thus, where a witness is competent to speak of house-values but has not seen the house in question, the specifications and other particulars may be placed before him hypothetically for an opinion, and then his knowledge of the value-standard may become available; or, in some cases, his attention may be called to a thing assumed to be substantially similar to that in question, and his judgment may be given on the hypothesis of this similarity. This hypothetical basis is legitimately and frequently employed as a substitute for actual observation.[2]

§ 721. Other Principles, distinguished. The subject of value involves the rules of evidence in still other ways not here concerned. (1) Whether the values or sale prices of other things of the same sort are admissible to show the value of the article in question, involves a question of circumstantial relevancy (ante, § 463). (2) What are the general factors of value has already been briefly noticed (ante, § 463). (3) Whether an estimate of value is excluded by the Opinion rule is dealt with under that head (post, § 1940). (4) The old doctrine of Norman v. Wells, that an estimate of value is too speculative and uncertain to be listened to has already been noticed under the present principle (ante, § 663). (5) Whether market reports and trade journals are admissible to prove value involves an exception to the Hearsay rule (post, § 1704).

[2] 1894, State v. Tennebom, 92 Ia. 551, 61 N. W. 193 (the value of a stock of goods); 1873, Miller v. Smith, 112 Mass. 475; 1883, Johnston Harvester Co. v. Clark, 31 Minn. 166, 17 N. W. 111; 1906, Harris v. Quincy O. & K. C. R. Co., 115 Mo. App. 527, 91 S. W. 1010 (cattle); 1909, Sullivan v. Girson, 39 Mont. 274, 102 Pac. 320 (diamond ring converted; a witness who had seen it described its size, etc., and then a jeweler estimated its value); 1877, Thompson v. Boyle, 85 Pa. 481.

END OF VOLUME ONE