A TREATISE

ON THE

ANGLO-AMERICAN SYSTEM OF

EVIDENCE

IN

TRIALS AT COMMON LAW

INCLUDING

THE STATUTES AND JUDICIAL DECISIONS OF ALL JURISDICTIONS OF
THE UNITED STATES AND CANADA

BY

JOHN HENRY WIGMORE

PROFESSOR OF THE LAW OF EVIDENCE IN THE LAW SCHOOL OF NORTHWESTERN UNIVERSITY

IN FIVE VOLUMES

VOLUME IV

SECOND EDITION

BOSTON
LITTLE, BROWN, AND COMPANY
1923

PRINTED IN THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA

Little Brown Co.
$15.00

CONTENTS

VOLUME FOUR

CONTENTS

CONTENTS

CONTENTS

CONTENTS

CONTENTS

CHAPTER LXXI

SUB-TITLE III. — VERBAL COMPLETENESS

CHAPTER LXXII

SUB-TITLE IV. — AUTHENTICATION OF DOCUMENTS

CONTENTS

CONTENTS

CHAPTER LXXVIII

Sub-Topic III. — Privilege for Self-Criminating Facts

LIST OF LATEST SOURCES EXAMINED

THE following Tables show the dates of latest sources examined, and the editions of legislative sources used.

TABLE I

Table I shows in Col. 2 the code or compilation of legislation used.

Col. 3 shows the latest year-laws (session laws) examined.

Col. 4 shows the latest official report of judicial decisions cited. For England and Ireland, only the official reports were examined. For Canada, only the unofficial reports (Dominion Law Reports) were examined; as no table of parallel citations is available, the official reports are not cited in this book for cases reported since 1912 (the date of beginning of the D. L. R.); hence, the official report here shown in Col. 4 is merely the latest volume that had appeared at the time of going to press; indicating that the citations of cases in this work will include at least the cases down to those official numbers of volumes, as well as a few later ones. For the United States, only the unofficial reports (National Reporter System) were examined; except for Alaska, Hawaii, Philippine Islands, and Porto Rico, and for District of Columbia down to 1919, — these not being included in the National Reporter System. Parallel citations of the official reports are invariably given, so far as these had appeared at the date of going to press. The official report shown in Col. 4 is merely the latest volume cited; the cases examined come down to a later date in the unofficial citations (Table II).

Col. 5 shows, by jurisdictions, the latest unofficial report examined and cited, — for Canada, the Dominion Law Reports; for the United States, the National Reporter System.

The decisions of the Appellate (intermediate) Courts which exist in some States have been cited only on interesting matters for which there is scanty authority; partly because their rulings are not final (except in Texas and in Oklahoma, for criminal cases), and partly because in some jurisdictions they are expressly made not binding as precedents. The rulings of Federal District Courts have also been left unnoticed to a similar extent.

LIST OF LATEST SOURCES EXAMINED

TABLE I. JUDICIAL AND LEGISLATIVE SOURCES USED

Jurisdiction	Statutes		Reported Decisions
	Revision or Code Edition Used	Latest Annual Laws Examined	Latest Official Report Cited	Latest Unofficial Report Examined
England:	Rules of Court, ed. 1922	1921	1922 K. B. 1 1922 Ch. 1 1922 P. to June 1 1922 A. C. to June 1
Ireland:		1921	1921 L. R. Ire.
Canada:
Dominion	Revised Statutes of C. 1906	1921	62 Can. Sup.	65 D. L. R.
Alberta	[see Northwest Territories] Rules of Court 1914	1921	16 Alta.	65 D. L. R.
British Columbia	Revised Statutes 1911 Supreme Court Rules 1912	1921	28 B. C.	65 D. L. R.
Manitoba	Revised Statutes 1913 Rules of Court 1913	1921	30 Man.	65 D. L. R.
New Brunswick	Consolidated Statutes 1903 Rules of Court 1909	1921	47 N. B.	65 D. L. R.
Newfoundland	Consolidated Statutes 1916	1921	9 Newf.
Northwest Terr.[1]	Consolidated Ordinances 1898	1904	7 N. W.Terr.
Nova Scotia	Revised Statutes 1900 Rules of the Supreme Court 1919	1921	53 N. S.	65 D. L. R.
Ontario	Revised Statutes 1914 Rules of Practice and Procedure 1913	1921	49 Ont.	65 D. L. R.
Prince Edward Island[2]		1920	2 P. E. I.	65 D. L. R.
Saskatchewan	Revised Statutes 1920	1921–2	14 Sask.	65 D. L. R.
Yukon	Consolidated Ordinances 1914	1920		65 D. L. R.
United States:
Federal	Revised Statutes 1878 U. S. Code 1919[3]	1922 to June 1	258 U. S.	42 Sup. 279 Fed. 10 Porto Rico Fed. 1 Extra-terr. Cas.
Alabama	Code 1907	1919	206 Ala. 17 Ala. App.	91 So. 91 So.

[1] The legislation and decisions of this region are now continued by those of Alberta, Saskatchewan, and Yukon.

[2] There being no Compilation here, and the Evidence Act of 1889 having codified most of the rules, no search was made for statutes prior to 1889, except that those of 1873 and 1887, dealing with Evidence, were collated.

[3] At the time of going to press, still pending in the Senate; passed in the House of Representatives. May 16, 1921.

LIST OF LATEST SOURCES EXAMINED

TABLE I. JUDICIAL AND LEGISLATIVE SOURCES USED—Continued

Jurisdiction	Statutes		Reported Decisions
	Revision or Code Edition Used	Latest Annual Laws Examined	Latest Official Report Cited	Latest Unofficial Report Examined
Alaska	Compiled Laws 1913	1921	4 Alaska	279 Fed.
Arizona	Revised Statutes 1913	1921	22 Ariz.	206 Pac.
Arkansas	Digest of the Statutes 1919	1921	150 Ark.	240 S. W.
California	Codes 1872		187 Cal.	206 Pac.
	General Laws ed. 1915	1921	45 Cal. App.	206 Pac.
Colorado	Compiled Laws 1921	1921	70 Colo.	206 Pac.
Columbia (Dist.)	Code of Law 1919	1921	50 D. C. App.	279 Fed.
Connecticut	General Statutes, Revision of 1918	1921	96 Conn.	116 Atl.
Delaware	Revised Statutes 1915	1921	11 Del. Ch.	116 Atl.
			7 Boyce	116 Atl.
Florida	Revised General Statutes 1919	1921	82 Fla.	91 So.
Georgia	Code 1910	1921	152 Ga.	111 S. E.
	Park's Annotated Code ed. 1918		27 Ga. App.	111 S. E.
Hawaii	Revised Laws 1915	1921	25 Haw.
Idaho	Compiled Statutes 1919	1921	34 Ida.	206 Pac.
Illinois	Revised Statutes 1874	1921	303 Ill.	135 N. E.
Indiana	Burns' Annotated Statutes 1914	1921	189 Ind.	135 N. E.
			125 Ind. App.	135 N. E.
Iowa	Code 1897	1921	192 Ia.	187 N. W.
	Compiled Code 1919
Kansas	General Statutes 1915	1921	110 Kan.	206 Pac.
Kentucky	Civil and Criminal Codes, Carroll's 3d ed., 1900	1922	194 Ky.	240 S. W.
	Kentucky Statutes, Carroll's 5th ed., 1915, 1918
Louisiana	Revised Civil Code, ed. Marr, 1920	1922	150 La.	91 So.
	Code of Practice, ed. Garland and Wolff, 1900
	Annotated Revision of the Statutes, ed. Marr, 1915
Maine	Revised Statutes 1916	1921	120 Me.	116 Atl.
Maryland	Annotated Code of Public Civil Laws, ed. Bagby, 1911, 1914	1922	139 Md.	116 Atl.
Massachusetts	General Laws 1921	1921	237 Mass.	135 N. E.
Michigan	Compiled Laws 1915	1921	216 Mich.	187 N. W.
Minnesota	General Statutes 1913	1921	150 Minn.	187 N. W.
Mississippi	Annotated Code 1906, ed. Hemingway, 1917	1920	126 Miss.	91 So.
Missouri	Revised Statutes 1919	1921	288 Mo.	240 S. W.
			207 Mo. App.	240 S. W.
Montana	Revised Codes 1921	1921	60 Mont.	206 Pac.
Nebraska	Revised Statutes 1921	1921	106 Nebr.	187 N. W.
Nevada	Revised Laws 1912	1921	44 Nev.	206 Pac.
New Hampshire	Public Statutes 1901	1921	79 N. H.	116 Atl.
New Jersey	Compiled Statutes 1910	1921	95 N. J. L.	116 Atl.
			92 N. J. Eq.	116 Atl.

TABLE I. JUDICIAL AND LEGISLATIVE SOURCES USED—Continued

Jurisdiction	Statutes		Reported Decisions
	Revision or Code Edition Used	Latest Annual Laws Examined	Latest Official Report Cited	Latest Unofficial Report Examined
New Mexico	N. M. Statutes Annotated 1915	1921	26 N. M.	206 Pac.
New York	Consolidated Laws 1909	1922	233 N. Y.	135 N. E.
	Code of Criminal Procedure 1881		196 App. Div.	194 N. Y. Suppl.
	Civil Practice Act 1920
	Surrogate Court Act 1920
	Justice Court Act 1920
	City Court Act 1920
	Court of Claims Act 1920
	N. Y. City Municipal Court Code 1920
North Carolina	Consolidated Statutes 1919	1921	182 N. C.	111 S. E.
North Dakota	Compiled Laws 1913	1921	45 N. D.	187 N. W.
Ohio	General Code Annotated 1921	1921	100 Oh.	135 N. E.
Oklahoma	Compiled Statutes 1921	1921	82 Okl.	206 Pac.
			16 Okl. Cr.	206 Pac.
Oregon	Or. Laws 1920	1921	102 Or.	206 Pac.
Pennsylvania	Digest of Statute Law 1920	1921	272 Pa.	116 Atl.
Philippine Isl.	Code of Civil Procedure, ed. 1920	1920 to Apr. 6 No. 2931 vol. 15	40 P. I.
	Administrative Code 1917
	Civil Code, ed. 1918
	Penal Code, Penal Laws, and General Order 58, ed. 1911
Porto Rico	Revised Statutes and Codes 1911	1921	28 P. R.
Rhode Island	General Laws, Revision of 1909	1921	43 R. I.	116 Atl.
South Carolina	Code of Laws 1922	1921	116 S. C.	111 S. E.
South Dakota	Revised Code 1919	1921	44 S. D.	187 N. W.
Tennessee	Shannon's Code 1917	1921	145 Tenn.	240 S. W.
Texas	Revised Civil Statutes 1911	1921	110 Tex.	240 S. W.
	Revised Criminal Statutes 1911, Vernon ed. 1919		90 Tex. Cr.	240 S. W.
Utah	Compiled Laws 1917	1921	57 Utah	206 Pac.
Vermont	General Laws 1917	1921	93 Vt.	116 Atl.
Virginia	Code 1919	1922	130 Va.	111 S. E.
Washington	Remington & Ballinger's Annotated Codes and Statutes 1909	1921	117 Wash.	206 Pac.
West Virginia	Hogg's W. Va. Code Annotated 1914	1921	89 W. Va.	111 S. E.
Wisconsin	Statutes 1919	1921	174 Wis.	187 N. W.
Wyoming	Compiled Statutes Annotated 1920	1921	27 Wyo.	206 Pac.

LIST OF LATEST SOURCES EXAMINED

TABLE II

The printing of this treatise began in August, 1922, and occupied many months; it was therefore desirable to set a definite point of time for the ending of citations (instead of inserting current late cases in the latter portions of the book only), in order that those who use the book may know where to begin in examining later sources appearing since its publication. The point of stoppage taken was therefore that volume of the several National Reporters which ended nearest to July 1, 1922; this ranged (dating by the weekly issues) between May, 1922, and August, 1922. The latest volumes of Reporters consulted were as follows:

TABLE II. LATEST NATIONAL REPORTERS EXAMINED

	VOLUME
Atlantic Reporter	116
Federal Reporter	279
New York Supplement[1]	194
Northeastern Reporter	135
Northwestern Reporter	187
Pacific Reporter	206
Southern Reporter	91
Southeastern Reporter	111
Southwestern Reporter	240
Supreme Court Reporter	42

[1] This Series was not examined prior to Vol. 178.

LIST OF CHANGED SECTION NUMBERS IN THIS EDITION

(Where the number given for the Second Edition is the same as that for the First, but is followed by others or by italic letters, the material in the original section has been expanded into several sections.)

1st Ed.	2d Ed.	1st Ed.	2d Ed.	1st Ed.	2d Ed.
6	6, 6 a, 6 b	936	937	[illegible]	1856, 1856 a–e
68	68, 68 a	938	939	1859	1859, 1859 a–g
150	150, 150 a	990	989	1862	1862, 1863
164	163	1031	1032	1863	1864
165	164	1032	1033	2090	2091
208	208, 208 a	1056	1057	2091	2093
318	309	1057	1058	2129	2128
321	320	1058	1059	2130	2129
367	367–370	1232	1233	2183	2183, 2184
370	371	1345	1344	2184	2185
371	372	1346	1345	2213	2212
372	373	1347	1346, 1347	2214	2213
414	416	1354	1354, 1355,	2215	2214
415	417		1356	2259	2259, 2259 a–d
416	418	1633	1633, 1633 a	2261 a	2282
464	464, 465	1662	1662, 1663	2282	2283
562	562, 563	1676	1676, 1676 a,	2374	2376
617	618		1676 b	2375	2378
785	785, 767	1768	1766	2373	2379
787	787, 787 a	1795	1767	2461	2466
875	874	1796	1768	2462	2461, 2462
934	934, 938	1797	1769	2511	2511, 2511 a
935	936	1855	1855, 1855 a

TABLE OF CROSS-REFERENCES TO THE POCKET CODE OF EVIDENCE

Treatise §	Code §
1	1
3	2
2	3
4	8–11
5	17–20
6	27–30
6 a	21–22
7	31–34
9	35
10	36
11	37
12	38–41
13	42–44
14	45
15	46–48
16	49–53
17	55–70
18	71–93
19	94
20	97–101
21	102–103
24	105–114
26	115–116
30–36	117
38	118, 119
39	120
40	121
41	122
42	123
43	124
51	125
52–54	126–130
55	130
56	136
57–58	137
59	131–133
60	135
61	134
62	138–140
63	140–145
64	146–147
65	148
66	149
67	150
68	151
68 a	152
70–76	154–158
77	160
78	163–164
79	165
80	161
83	167
84–88	168
89	169
92	170
93–99	171
102–104	177
105–109	178–181
110–111	182
112	184
113	183
117	185–186
118	187
130–132	188–190
133	191
135	192
136	192 a
137	193
139–142	194
143–144	195
148	196
149	197
150–150 a	198
151	199
152–153	200
154–155	201
156	202
157	203
158–160	205
163	207
164	208
165, 168	206
166	209
167	210
172–176	211
177	212
191	215
192–194	218–219
195	224
196–197	216, 222, 223
198	226–227
199	228
200	229
201	230
202	231
203	232
204	233
205	234
206	235
207	236
208	238
208 a	237
209–213	239
215	219
216	220
218	221
219	240
220	241
221	242
222	245
223	246–249

TABLE OF CROSS-REFERENCES TO POCKET CODE

Treatise §	Code §
224	243
225	250
227	251
228	252–253, 256–258
229	254–255
230	259
231	261–262
232	263
233	264
235	265
237	266
238	267
239	268
240	269
241	270
242	271–275
244	276
245	277
246	278
247	279
248	280
249	281
250	282
251	283
252	284
253	285
254	286
255	287
256	285
257	285
258	288
259	286
260	289
265–266	290
267	291–292
268–272	293
273	650
274	651
276	652
277–278	654
280	655–656
281	664
282	647–648, 653
283	649
234	657
285–290	658–661, 664
291	662–663
293	294, 665
300	297
301	298
302–303	299
304	300
305	220
309–317	302
321	303
324–327	304
329–331	305
333–338	306
340–344	307
346–349	308
351–352	309
354	310
357–360	311
363–365	312
367	314
368	313
369–370	314
371–373	315
375–376	316
377	317
378	318
379	319
382	320
383	321
385–387	322
389–391	324
392	326
394	327
395	328
396–397	329
398–402	330
402–406	331
410–417	333–334
418	336
431–432	337
434	338
435–436	339
437	340–341
438–440	342
441–449	344–349
451–456	350–351
457–458	352–353
459–465	354–357
475–480	360–361
483	362
484	363
485	364
486	365
487	366
492–496	367
497	368–369
498–500	367
505–506	370
507	371
508	372
515	373
516–518	374
519–524	375
525–531	376
555–556	378
557–559	379
560	380
561	381
564–566	383
567	386
568–569	384
570	385
571	387
576–577	388
578	390
579–580	389
581	392
583–587	393
600	395
601–620	396
608	397
650–653	400
654	401
655	402
657	405–412
658	403
659–663	404
664	413
665	406–408
666	410
667	411
669	412
672–674	414, 1416
675	1417
677	1418
679	1419

TABLE OF CROSS-REFERENCES TO POCKET CODE

Treatise §	Code §
681	1420
682	1421–1423
687	408
688	409
689	416
690	408
691–692	417
693	418
694–697	419
699–707	420
709	420 bis
711–713	422
714	423
715	424
716	425
725	427
726–729	428
730	429
734	431
738–739	442
744	431, 443
745	432
746	433
747	434
748	435
749	436
750	437
751	438
752	439
753	440
754	441
758	444
759	446
760	447
761	448
762	449
763	450
764	451
766	454
767	461, 475
769–770	462
771–772	463
773	464
774	465
775	465
776	462
777–779	466
780	467
781	468
782	467–472
783	473
784	474
785	475
786–788	455–459
789	479
790–792	480
793	481
794	482
795	483
796–797	484
799	488
800–801	489
802	490
803	491
804	492
805	494–495
811	496–497
815	700
821	701
822	702
824	703
825	704
826	705
827–830	706
832	707
833	708
834	709
835–836	710
837	711
838	712
840	713
841	714, 715
842–852	716–720
853–855	721
856–859	722
860	723
861	724–727
862	728
874–881	500
884–888	501
889–892	502
894	503
896–899	504
900	505
901	506
902–907	507
907–908	508
909–913	509–511
914–915	512
916	513–514
917–918	515
920–921	518
922–926	519–520
927–929	521
930	522
931	523
932	524
933	525
934	526
935	527
936–937	528
939–940	529
943	532
944	533
946	534
948	535
949	536
950–952	537–538
953	539
956	540
957–959	541
960–962	542–543
963	544
964	545
966	546
967	547
968	546
969	548
977–978	549
979	550
980	551, 555
981	552
982	553, 556
983	554
984	554
986–987	550–556
988	557
989	558
990	565
991–996	561–564
1000–1002	567

TABLE OF CROSS-REFERENCES TO POCKET CODE

Treatise §	Code §
1003	568
1004	569
1005	570
1006	572
1007	571
1008–1015	573
1017–1019	574
1020	575
1021	576
1022	577
1023	578
1025–1028	579
1029	581
1030–1034	582
1035	583
1036	584, 591
1037	585
1038	578
1040	586
1041	587
1042	588
1043	589–590
1044–1045	591
1048	630
1049	631–632
1051	633
1053	634
1055	640
1057	636
1058	637
1059	638
1060	641
1061–1062	642–645
1063	680
1064	681
1065	682
1066	683
1067	684
1069–1070	667
1071	666, 668
1072	668, 670
1073	671, 673
1074	675, 676
1075	677
1076	686
1077–1079	687
1080	688
1081	689–691
1082	692–693
1083	694
1084	695
1085	696
1086	697–698
1100	595
1104	596
1105	597
1106	598
1107	599–600
1108	601
1109	602
1111	604–605
1112	606, 607
1116	608
1117	609
1119	611
1122–1124	612
1125	613
1126	615
1127	616
1128	617
1129	618
1130	619
1131	443, 614
1134	622
1135	623–624
1136	623
1137–1138	625
1139	625
1141	626
1142	627
1144	628
1150–1156	730
1157–1158	731
1159	732
1162	734
1163	735–736
1164	737
1165	738
1168	739
1171–1172	745
1173	746
1178	747
1181	748
1182	749
1183	750
1185	751–753
1186	754
1187	757
1189	758
1190	755
1191	757
1192	756
1193	759
1194	760
1195	761
1196–1197	762
1198	763
1199	764
1200	765
1201	766
1202–1203	767
1204	770
1205	768
1206–1207	771
1208	769
1209	772
1210	773
1211	774
1212	775
1213	776
1214	777
1215–1217	778
1218–1221	779
1223	780
1224–1227	781
1230	782
1232	783
1233	784–785
1234	786–789
1235	790
1236–1240	791
1241	792
1242	793
1243	794–795
1244	796–797
1245	798
1246–1247	799
1248	800
1249–1250	801
1252–1254	806
1255–1257	807–810

TABLE OF CROSS-REFERENCES TO POCKET CODE

Treatise §	Code §
1258	811
1259–1263	812–818
1265	820, 825
1267	821, 825
1268	822, 826
1269	827
1270	828
1271	829
1273	831
1274–1275	832–835
1277–1280	823
1281	824
1285	850
1289	851
1290	852
1291	855
1292	853
1293	854
1294	857
1295	858
1296	859
1297	860
1298	861
1299	862–863
1300	864
1301	865
1302	866
1303	866
1304	868
1305	867
1306	884
1308–1310	869
1311	870–871
1312	872
1313	873
1314	874
1315	875–876
1316	877
1317	878
1318	879
1319	880
1320	881
1321	885
1326–1329	890–892
1330	893
1331	894
1335–1338	896
1339	897
1344	900
1345–1346	901
1348	900
1349	902
1350	903
1351	904
1352	905
1353–1355	906
1356	907
1360–1362	910, 912
1365	911
1371	913
1373–1376	914–915
1378–1382	916
1383	917
1384	918
1386–1388	919–920
1389	921
1390	922–923
1391	924
1392	925–926
1393–1394	927
1395	928
1396–1398	929
1402	930, 939
1403	931
1404	932
1405	933–934
1406	935
1407	936–937
1408–1410	938
1414	940
1415	941
1416	942–944
1417	945
1420	950
1424	950
1431–1433	952
1434	953
1435	952
1438–1441	954
1442	956
1443	955
1445	957–959
1446	960
1447	961
1448	962
1450	963
1451	964
1455	966
1456	967
1457	966, 968
1458–1459	969
1460	970
1461	972
1463–1465	973–974
1466	975
1469	977
1471	976
1472	978
1476	971
1480	980
1481	981–982
1482	980
1483–1484	983
1485	984
1486	984–985
1487	987
1488	1069
1489	988
1490	991
1491	989
1492	990
1493	994
1495	992
1496–1497	997
1500–1502	995
1503	996
1505	1000
1511–1512	886
1513	887
1514	1001
1517	1002
1521	1003
1523	1005
1524	1006
1525	1007
1526	1008
1528	1011
1530	1012–1015
1531	1009
1532	1016
1536–1537	1018

TABLE OF CROSS-REFERENCES TO POCKET CODE

Treatise §	Code §
1538	1019
1539	1020
1540–1543	1021
1547	1022
1548	1023
1550	1024
1551	1025
1552	1026
1554	1029–1030
1555	1028
1556	1027
1557	1031
1558	1032
1564	1035
1565	1036
1566–1567	1037
1568	1038
1570	1039
1573	1040–1043
1576	1045–1047
1580	1050
1582	1053
1584	1060
1585	1056
1586–1587	1054
1588	1055, 1058
1591	1059
1592	1060
1597	1062–1063
1598	1064
1599	1065
1602	1066
1603	1067–1068
1605	1069
1610	1071
1612	1072
1614	1073
1615	1074
1616	1075
1617	1076
1618	1077
1620	1078–1080
1621	1081–1083
1623	1085
1624	1086
1625	1087
1631–1632	1090
1633	1092–1096
1633 a	1094
1635	1097
1637	1098
1639	1100
1640	1101
1641	1102
1642–1644	1103–1105
1645	1106
1647	1107
1648–1651	1110
1652	1111
1653	1112–1115
1655	1116
1657	1117
1658	1118
1659	1119
1660	1120
1661	1121–1123
1662	1124–1125
1664	1130–1132
1665	1133
1666	1136
1667	1137
1668	1138
1669	1139
1670	1130
1671	1141–1142
1674	1144–1145
1675	1146
1676	1148
1676 a	1147
1676 b	1149
1677	1152–1154
1678	1155–1156
1679	1158
1680	1145, 1152
1681	1145, 1152, 1160
1682	1161–1162
1683	1163
1684	1164, 1181
1690	1170
1694	1171
1697	1173
1698	1174
1699	1175
1700	1177
1702	1180
1703	1181
1704	1182
1705	1183
1706	1180
1709	1186
1710	1187–1191
1712–1713	1195–1198
1714	1200
1718	1201
1719–1720	1202
1721	1205
1722	1203–1204
1725–1726	1207–1208
1727	1209
1728	1210
1729	1211
1730	1212
1732	1213–1217
1734	1218
1735	1219
1736	1220
1737	1221
1738	1222–1223
1740	1224
1747–1749	1230–1232
1750	1233–1235
1751	1236
1755	1237
1760–1761	1238
1762	1239
1768	1240
1770	1242–1244
1772–1776	1245
1777	1246
1778	1248
1779	1249
1781	1250
1782	1251
1783	1252
1784	1254
1786	1260
1788	1255
1789	1256
1790	1257
1791	1258
1792	1259

TABLE OF CROSS-REFERENCES TO POCKET CODE

Treatise §	Code §
1800	1266
1801	1267
1802	1268
1803	1269
1805	1270
1806	1271–1272
1807	1273–1275
1808	1277–1278
1810	1280–1282
1816	1286
1817	1286–1288
1818	1295–1297
1819	1298–1301
1820	1291–1293
1821	1289, 1294
1822	1290
1824	1285
1827–1828	1302–1307
1831	1310
1832	1311
1834–1836	1312
1837–1838	1314
1839	1315
1840	1316–1317
1841	1318–1320
1842	1321
1845–1847	1325
1849	1326
1850–1851	1227–1329
1852–1853	1330
1854	1328–1330
1855	1330
1856–1856 e	1332–1334
1856 d	1341
1859–1859 e	1335–1336
1859 f	1342
1861	1345
1862	1339
1863	1344
1866	1352
1867	1350–1351
1869–1870	1353–1358
1871	1360
1872	1362–1364
1873	1361
1874–1875	1366
1876–1877	1367
1878–1880	1367
1882	1369–1371
1883	1372, 1375
1884	1373–1374
1885–1890	1376
1892–1894	1378
1896	1379
1897	1380
1898–1900	1381
1904	1383–1384, 1390–1391
1906	1400
1907	1401
1908	1401–1403
1909	1404
1910	1405
1911	1406
1918	1410
1923	1413–1415
1924	1411–1412
1929	1424–1425
1934–1938	1430–1434
1940–1944	1435–1438
1946–1947	1440–1443
1949–1951	1445
1952	1446
1953	1447–1449
1954	1450
1955	1451
1956	1452
1957	1453
1958	1454
1959–1960	1455
1962	1457
1963–1968	1458
1969–1972	1459
1974	1461
1975	1462
1976	1463
1977	1464
1983	1468–1469
1984	1470
1985	1471
1997–2000	1475–1480
2004	1479
2006	1476–1477
2007	1478
2008	1480
2009	1484
2010	1485
2011	1482
2012	1481
2013	1483
2014–2015	1487
2016	1488–1490
2018	1484
2019	1485
2020	1483
2021	1483
2023–2027	1491
2034	1500
2037–2039	1503
2041–2043	1504–1505
2044	1506
2046	1528
2047	1507
2048	1509
2050	1510
2051	1511–1512
2052	1513
2054	1514
2056–2060	1516
2061–2062	1520
2063	1521, 398
2065	1522
2066	1523–1525
2067–2069	1529
2070–2071	1530
2072	1531
2073	1532–1533
2078	1534
2079	1535
2081	1536
2082–2084	1537
2085	1538–1541
2086	1542
2088	1543
2089	1544
2093	1545
2094	1547
2097	1549–1550, 1552
2098	1551
2099–2100	1553–1559
2102	1561–1562
2103	1563

TABLE OF CROSS-REFERENCES TO POCKET CODE

Treatise §	Code §
2104	1565
2105–2107	1566
2108	1568
2109	1569–1570
2110	1571–1573
2113	1575
2115	1576
2116	1578
2117	1579
2118	1581
2119	1580
2120	1582
2121–2123	1583–1586
2124	1587–1588
2125	1589
2128	1591
2129	1592
2130	1595
2131	1596
2132–2133	1597–1603, 1605
2135	1604
2137	1608
2138	1609–1610
2139	1611
2140	1612
2141	1613
2143	1614–1616
2144	1617
2145	1618
2148	1620
2150	1620–1621
2151	1622–1623
2152	1624
2153	1625
2154	1626
2155	1594
2156	1627
2158–2159	1630–1631
2161	1633–1634
2163	1638
2164	1639
2165	1640
2166	1641
2167	1642
2168	1635–1637
2169	1643
2175	1650

Treatise §	Code §
2180	1652
2182	1654
2183–2184	1656
2185	1656
2191	1670
2192	1660
2193–2194	1662
2195	1671
2196	1673–1675
2197	1672
2199	1663–1666
2200	1667–1669
2201	1680
2202	1681
2203	1682
2204	1685
2205	1686
2206	1688–1691
2207	1692
2210	1694
2211	1695
2212	1696–1697
2213	1699
2214	1700
2215	1701
2217–2218	1702
2219	1703
2220	1704
2221	1705
2223	1707
2228	1710
2230–2231	1711
2232–2233	1713–1714
2234	1715
2235	1716
2236	1717
2237	1712
2239	1723
2240	1721–1722
2241	1724
2242	1725
2243	1726
2245	1719–1720
2251	1730
2252	1731
2254–2257	1732
2258	1733

Treatise §	Code §
2259	1734
2259 a	1735
2260–2261	1736
2263	1737
2264	1738
2265	1739
2268	1740–1741
2269	1742
2270	1743–1744
2271	1745
2272	1746–1747
2273	1748
2275	1750
2276–2277	1751–1752
2279–2280	1753
2281	1754
2282	1755
2283	1754
2285	1760
2286	1762
2287	1763
2292	1765
2294	1767
2296	1768–1769
2297	1770
2298	1771
2300	1774
2301	1775
2302	1776
2303	1777
2304	1778
2306	1780
2307	1781
2308	1782, 1784–1785
2309	1783
2310	1786
2311	1787–1789
2312	1790–1792
2313	1793
2314	1794
2315	1795
2317	1796
2318–2319	1785, 1797
2321	1799–1800
2322	1801
2323	1802
2324	1803

TABLE OF CROSS-REFERENCES TO POCKET CODE

Treatise §	Code §
2325	1804–1806
2326	1804
2327	1805, 1808
2328–2329	1807
2334	1812
2336	1813–1815
2337	1816
2338	1817
2339	1819
2340	1822–1823
2341	1820–1821
2346	1825, 1947
2348–2356	1947
2361	1830, 1832
2362–2363	1834–1836
2368–2373	1850
2374	1833
2375	1837–1840
2378–2379	1842–1849
2380	1855
2381	1856
2382	1857
2383	1858
2384	1859
2385	1860
2386	1861–1862
2387	1863
2388	1864–1865
2389–2390	1866
2391	1867
2395	1870
2400–2401	1871–1874
2404	1877
2406	1878–1881
2407	1882
2408–2409	1883–1892
2410	1893
2411	1894
2413	1895
2414	1896
2415	1897–1898
2416	1899–1905
2417–2418	1906
2419	1907
2420	1908–1910
2421	1911–1912
2423	1913
2425	1915
2427	1917
2430	1921
2431	1922–1925
2432	1927–1928
2433	1929
2434	1930
2435	1931
2436	1932
2437	1933
2438	1934
2439	1936
2440	1937
2441	1938
2442	1935
2443–2445	1934 a
2446	1939
2447	1941
2450	1946
2451–2452	1944–1955
2454–2456	1950
2458	1953–1954
2459	1955
2460	1958–1960
2461–2463	1961
2464	1962–1965
2465	1966–1969
2466–2467	1970–1972, 1977
2470	1975
2471	1976
2472	1978
2473	1979–1980
2474	1981
2475	1982
2476–2477	1983–1984
2483–2484	1990–1992
2485–2487	1994–1998
2486	2035
2488–2494	1999–2003
2490	2012–2013
2493	2014
2495	2006–2009
2496	2010, 2015–2019
2497	2022–2026
2498	2027–2031
2500	2041–2043
2501	2045
2502	2046
2503	2047
2504	2048–2054
2505	2055–2058
2506	2059
2507	2060
2508	2061
2509	2062
2510	2063
2511	2064
2512–2513	2066
2514	2065
2515–2516	2067
2517–2518	2068
2519–2525	2069–2079
2527	2080
2528	2081
2529	2082
2530	2083
2531–2532	2084–2086
2533	2087
2534	2088
2535	2089
2536	2081–2092
2537	2093
2538	2094
2539	2095
2549	2100
2550	2101–2103
2552	2104–2106
2553–2554	2107–2109
2556	2110–2112
2557	2113–2114
2558	2115
2559	2116
2565	2120, 2130
2567	2121–2123
2568	2124
2569	2125–2126
2570	2127
2571	2130
2572	2131
2573	2132
2574–2577	2133
2578–2579	2134
2580–2582	2135
2588–2589	2140
2590	2141, 2145
2591	2143
2592	2144
2593	2146
2594	2148–2150
2596	1599

1. TABULAR ANALYSIS OF TOPICS

BOOK I. ADMISSIBILITY OF EVIDENCE.

INTRODUCTORY: THEORY AND PROCEDURE.
I. RULES OF RELEVANCY.
II. RULES OF AUXILIARY PROBATIVE POLICY.
III. RULES OF EXTRINSIC POLICY.
IV. PAROL EVIDENCE RULES.

[See Table 2, for further analysis.]

BOOK II. BY WHOM EVIDENCE IS PRESENTED.

I. BURDEN OF PROOF, AND PRESUMPTIONS.
GENERAL PRINCIPLES.
II. BURDENS AND PRESUMPTIONS IN SPECIFIC ISSUES.

BOOK III. TO WHOM EVIDENCE IS PRESENTED.

I. JUDGE.
II. JURY.

BOOK IV. PROPOSITIONS NEEDING NO EVIDENCE.

I. JUDICIAL NOTICE.
II. JUDICIAL ADMISSIONS.

2. TABULAR ANALYSIS OF BOOK I (ADMISSIBILITY)

PART I. RULES OF RELEVANCY

I. Circumstantial Evidence

I. of Human Act
II. of Human Quality, etc.
III. of Inanimate Fact

[See Table 3]

II. Testimonial Evidence

I. Qualifications
II. Impeachment
III. Rehabilitation
IV. Admissions

[See Table 4]

III. Autoptic Proference

PART II. RULES OF AUXILIARY PROBATIVE POLICY

I. Preferential

I. Documentary Originals
II. Attesting Witness, etc.

II. Analytic

Hearsay

1. Cross-Examination
2. Confrontation

III. Prophylactic

I. Oath
II. Perjury-Penalty
III. Publicity
IV. Sequestration
V. Discovery

IV. Simplificative

I. Order of Evidence
II. Sundries
III. Opinion

V. Synthetic

I. No. of Witnesses
II. Kind of Witness
III. Verbal Completeness
IV. Authentication

PART III. RULES OF EXTRINSIC POLICY

I. Absolute Exclusion

II. Optional Exclusion (Privilege)

I. Testimonial Duty

II. Privileges of Non-Attendance

III. Privileges of Silence

A. Topics

1. Sundry
2. Ante-Marital
3. Self-Criminating

B. Communications

1. Sundries
2. Attorney
3. Marital
4. Jurors
5. Informers; Officials
6. Physician
7. Priest

PART IV. PAROL EVIDENCE RULES

I. Enaction
II. Integration
III. Formalities
IV. Interpretation

6. TABULAR ANALYSIS OF BOOK I, PART II (CONCLUSION) AND PART III (§§ 1864–2396) *

PART II. RULES OF AUXILIARY PROBATIVE POLICY (CONCLUSION) (§§ 1864–2169)

TITLE IV. SIMPLIFICATIVE RULES

- (I) Order of Presenting Evidence
  - A. Stages for the Case
    1. Putting in the Case
    2. Case Closed
  - B. Stages for the Witness
    1. Original Call
       - a. Direct Examination
       - b. Cross-examination
       - c. Re-direct, etc.
    2. Recall
- (II) Sundry Rules excluding Witnesses
  1. Excessive Number
  2. Judge
  3. Juror
  4. Counsel
- (III) Opinion Rule
  1. General Principle
  2. Sanity
  3. Value
  4. Insurance Risk
  5. Care, Safety, etc.
  6. State of Mind
  7. Sundries
  8. Character
  9. Handwriting

TITLE V. SYNTHETIC RULES

- (I) Required Numbers of Witnesses
  1. Treason, Perjury
  2. Wills, Chancery
  3. Divorce
  4. Accomplice
  5. Prosecutrix, etc.
  6. Confessions
  7. Sundries
- (II) Required Kinds of Witnesses
  1. Eye-Witnesses of Crime
  2. Corpus Delicti
  3. Marriage
  4. Medical Experts
- (III) Verbal Completeness
  1. Compulsory
     - a. Oral Utterances
     - b. Writings
  2. Optional
     - a. Sundries
     - b. Chancery Answer
- (IV) Authentication of Documents
  1. By Age
  2. By Contents
  3. By Custody
  4. By Seal

PART III. RULES OF EXTRINSIC POLICY (§§ 2175–2396)

TITLE I. RULES OF ABSOLUTE EXCLUSION

- (I) Indecencies, etc.
- (II) Evidence Illegally Obtained

TITLE II. RULES OF CONDITIONAL EXCLUSION (PRIVILEGE)

- (I) Testimonial Duty in general
  1. Testimony, Premises, Chattels, etc.
  2. Privileged Exceptions
  3. Jurisdictional Powers of Compulsion
- (II) Privilege of Non-attendance
  1. Subpoena
  2. Indemnity
  3. Ability to Attend
- (III) Privileges of Silence
  - A. Topics
    1. Irrelevancies
    2. Title-Deeds
    3. Trade-Secrets
    4. Religious Belief
    5. Votes
    6. Infamy
    7. Party-Opponent
    8. Spouses
    9. Self-Crimination
  - B. Communications
    1. Sundries
    2. Attorney
    3. Spouses
    4. Jurors
    5. Informers
    6. Compulsory Reports
    7. Officials
    8. Physician
    9. Priest

* For Tabular Analysis of Book I, Part II, Titles I–III, see Table 5, prefixed to Vols. II and III.

EVIDENCE

IN

TRIALS AT COMMON LAW

BOOK I: ADMISSIBILITY (continued)

PART II: AUXILIARY PROBATIVE RULES (continued)

TITLE IV: SIMPLIFICATIVE RULES

CHAPTER LXIII.

SUB-TITLE I: ORDER OF EVIDENCE

A. STAGES OF PRESENTATION FOR THE WHOLE CASE

1. Putting in the Case at Large

2. After Case Closed

B. STAGES OF EXAMINATION FOR THE INDIVIDUAL WITNESS

1. Original Call

2. Recall

§ 1864. General Nature of these Rules; Confusion of Issues, and Undue Prejudice, as Grounds for Exclusion. The peculiar mark of the ensuing group of rules is that in their operation they set aside or exclude, either conditionally or absolutely, certain kinds of evidence (otherwise admissible so far as Relevancy is concerned) which are found to have an improper effect by obstructing or confusing rather than aiding or facilitating the process of ascertaining the truth. They may be termed Simplificative rules, with reference to their mode of operation, in contrast to the other rules of Auxiliary Probative Policy (included under this Part II of the evidential rules of Admissibility), in the sense that they work merely by way of elimination (temporary or permanent) of the objectionable evidence.[1]

The distinction between this and the preceding groups of rules (Preferential, Analytic, and Prophylactic) has already been examined (ante, § 1172). These Simplificative rules treat the danger or inconvenience of the evidence as ineradicable by such methods as those of the foregoing rules, and therefore resort to the extreme measure of eliminating entirely the evidence supposed to be tainted with the objectionable disadvantage. It is clear that such a measure could not properly be resorted to unless either the evidential material was necessarily and thoroughly objectionable or else was of minor utility and could be easily sacrificed; nor should the exclusion be an absolute one, unless a conditional or temporary exclusion would not suffice for the purpose. These considerations do in fact appear to have prevailed, their strength in a given instance depending of course upon supposed experience with that class of evidence.

As to the qualities or elements that constitute the objectionable features and furnish the grounds for exclusion, it will be seen that they cannot concern the relevancy, or legitimate probative value, of the evidence itself; it is assumed, as to circumstantial evidence, that it is amply relevant (ante, § 38), and as to testimonial evidence, that the witness is duly qualified (ante, § 475). The qualities, therefore, which give rise to the present rules lie in some indirect and disadvantageous probative effects found in experience to be produced by the use of certain kinds of evidence. No doubt, in framing a code, one might 'a priori' specify various sorts of such evil effects, of more or less importance, requiring rules of the present sort; but we are here concerned only with the standards and the experience of the judges and of the legislators, as embodied in the rules actually laid down by them and found in operation in trial by jury at common law and under statutes.

§ 1864. [1] The term Segregative would possibly be a better one; compare, in the Century Dictionary, s. v. Segregate, the quotation from Dixon's Church History: "According to one account, he [Sir T. More] likened his predecessor [Wolsey] to a rotten sheep, and the King to the good shepherd who had judiciously segregated it."

These disadvantageous effects, then, forming the motives for the ensuing heads, may be broadly summarized under two heads, namely, (a) Confusion of Issues, (b) Undue Prejudice. (a) If the use of certain evidential material tends to produce undue confusion in the minds of the tribunal — i. e. the jurors — by diverting their attention from the real issue and fixing it upon a trivial or minor matter, or by making the controversy so intricate that the disentanglement of it becomes difficult, the evidence tends to the suppression of the truth and not to its discovery; and there is good ground for excluding such evidence, unless it is so intimately connected with the main issue that its consideration is inevitable. (b) So also, if certain evidential material, having a legitimate probative value, tends nevertheless to produce also, over and above its legitimate effect, an unfair prejudice to the opponent, or by virtue of the personality of the witness tends to receive an excessive weight in the minds of the tribunal, there is good ground for excluding such evidence, unless it is indispensable for its legitimate purpose.

The foregoing motives, as might be expected, do not always operate distinctly and precisely in the shape of rules deduced directly and solely from one or the other motive. These broad considerations of policy may be plainly enough seen in the utterances of the judges, and an appreciation of them is indispensable to an understanding of the rules. Yet the resultant concrete rules may be due in part to the one and in part to the other motive, or one of these motives may, though dominant, be attended by subordinate motives of some other kind. Hence we are bound, here as elsewhere in considering these Auxiliary Rules, to deal with them from the point of view of the specific rule itself, as it appears in actual operation, and to refer to the motives of policy merely for the purpose of understanding the object and the true limitations of the rule. The final question always in the law of Evidence is, What do the judges do? and not, What do they say that they do? nor even, Why do they say that they do it?

The rules, then, for which the above-mentioned considerations of sound policy have been either the sole or the dominant motive fall conveniently under three general heads:

I. Rules excluding Evidence in general (testimonial or circumstantial) not Presented in the Proper Order of Time;

II. Rules excluding Specific Kinds of Circumstantial Evidence or of Witnesses because of Confusion of Issues or Undue Prejudice;

III. The Rule excluding Opinion Testimony.

These may now be taken up in order, after first noticing one supposed but fallacious foundation for some of these rules.

§ 1865. Length of Time is in itself no Ground for Exclusion. It is sometimes said in passing, by judges explaining their reasons for enforcing some of the ensuing rules, that the length of time taken up by the presentation of some kinds of evidential material is a reason for excluding it. "The trial," once said the great Chief Justice Doe, for example, "to which parties are entitled is not an endless one, nor one unreasonably protracted and exhausting";[1] and similar expressions, mentioning this consideration along with others as operating reasons, are occasionally found:

1847, ROLFE, B., in Attorney-General v. Hitchcock, 1 Exch. 91, 105: "The laws of evidence on this subject as to what ought and what ought not to be received must be considered as founded on a sort of comparative consideration of the time to be occupied in examinations of this nature and the time which it is practicable to bestow upon them. If we lived for a thousand years, instead of about sixty or seventy, and every case were of sufficient importance, it might be possible and perhaps proper to throw a light on matters in which every possible question might be suggested, for the purpose of seeing by such means whether the whole was unfounded or what portion of it was not, and to raise every possible inquiry as to the truth of the statements made. But I do not see how that could be; in fact, mankind find it to be impossible. Therefore some line must be drawn."[2]

These expressions are not incorrect, in the sense meant by their judicial authors; but they are apt to mislead. They signify that a trial's length of time, regarded as permitting a multiplicity of witnesses and a cumulation of minor circumstances, may lead to an utter confusion of the issues and thus bring about the suppression and not the discovery of the truth, and that this confusion of the issues is thus a sound reason for exclusion. They do not signify that the length of time taken up in presenting relevant evidence is in itself a sufficient reason for excluding any sources of information. Time becomes important only as affording an opportunity for that confusion of issues which may justly furnish a real and intrinsic cause of the failure of justice.

No doubt, there was an age when this was not so. Up to the end of the 1700s the spirit of the administration of trials (in criminal cases at least) sanctioned the most summary procedure. Quick despatch was expected, even at the cost of truth; or, perhaps, more truly, it was not supposed that the truth needed anything but a summary investigation. The arrest, the trial, and the execution, succeeded one another with a celerity which left little time for raising and settling doubts.[3] The proceedings in a criminal trial were expected to reach a close before the tribunal separated for the day; to that end an important trial was occasionally carried on into candle-light,[4] but the jury were allowed no food or drink until their verdict was returned. "The rule," says Sir James Stephen,[5] "which prevailed then [in 1699, at

§ 1865. [1] 1879, Amoskeag Mfg. Co. v. Head, 59 N. H. 332.

[2] Various similar expressions are found in the citations ante, §§ 27, 443, 1002, post, § 1907.

[3] The trial of Colonel Turner, in 1664, is an example; for a robbery committed on the night of Jan. 7, he was arraigned on the 15th, tried and convicted on the 16th, sentenced on the 19th, and executed on the 21st.

[4] Colledge's trial, in 1681 (8 How. St. Tr. 332, 549, 603), lasted a dozen hours.

[5] History of the Criminal Law, I, 422, 403.

Spencer Cowper's trial] and long afterwards, of finishing all criminal trials in one day must often have produced cruel injustice. Many of the cases I have referred to were tried in a superficial, perfunctory way. . . . The right of the Court to adjourn in cases of treason or felony was not fully established till the treason trials of 1794." The first trial for treason that lasted over one calendar day, by adjournment to another, is said to have been that of Hardy, in 1794.[6]

Gradually the spirit of the proceedings changed. Ample time to investigate every material topic came to be allowed. To-day we are going too far towards the other extreme; by showing an almost total disregard for the value of time, we invite and overlook the abuse of this liberty by unnecessary and obstructive protraction of testimony on the part of unskilful prosecutors and unscrupulous defenders. It is clear enough, however, to any one who observes the conduct of our trials, that nowhere is there an appearance in practice of a doctrine that length of time consumed is in itself an objection to the reception of relevant evidence. The harsh and rough-shod methods of earlier times have wholly disappeared. Time, as essential to the discovery of truth, is judicially regarded as a commodity of unlimited supply. If this is apparent enough in the practice at trials, it has also not lacked plain enunciation in authoritative places. Modern judges have more than once taken the opportunity to repudiate the fallacy that any party in a court of justice should be denied the liberty of demonstrating the truth of his cause, because forsooth the Court has not time enough to investigate it. Indeed, for a most eloquent and the earliest utterance, we may hark back to a period when this principle was as yet (in criminal cases at least) a mere ideal unrepresented in the practice of the day:

1670, VAUGHAN, C. J., in Bushel's Case, 6 How. St. Tr. 999, 1003, Vaughan 135, 3 Keb. 322, 1 Mod. 119 (replying to the argument against new trials that to report all the evidence for the Judges "would be too long"): "A strange reason! For if the law allows me remedy for wrong imprisonment (and that must be by judging whether the cause of it were good or not) to say the cause is too long to be made known is to say the law gives a remedy which it will not let me have, or I must be wrongly imprisoned still because it is too long to know that I ought to be free. What is necessary to an end the law allows, is never too long. 'Non sunt longa quibus nihil est quod demere possis' is as true as any axiom in Euclid."

1870, BLACKBURN, J., in Godard v. Gray, L. R. 6 Q. B. 139, 152: "In no case that we know of is it ever said that a defense shall be admitted if it is easily proved and rejected if it would give the Court great trouble to investigate it."

1863, DAVIES, J., in People v. Pease, 27 N. Y. 45, 61 (repudiating the argument that to investigate the correctness of an election-return would consume too much time): "It is the first time I have ever heard it urged that a party who had a conceded right should not have a remedy to enforce it, because a large consumption of time would take place before his right could be established. If a party has a legal title to an office, it surely can be no legal reason for denying him the opportunity to establish it, that such process will require the examination of a large number of witnesses and consume much time in the proceeding. Rights of parties cannot be determined on such a basis."

[6] Campbell's Lives of the Chancellors, 5th ed., VIII, 307. Compare the instances cited ante, § 1364, note 65. Elizabeth Canning's celebrated trial for perjury, in 1753 (19 How. St. Tr. 252), lasted seven days; and this served to break ground for future cases.

Sub-title I: ORDER OF EVIDENCE

§ 1866. General Subdivision of Topics. There are conceivably three general types of arrangement that a system of procedure might adopt, in prescribing the order of presentation of the evidence. The first may be termed the paternal method; the second, the topical, or logical, method; the third, the antiphonal, or partisan, method.

The paternal, or primitive method, is indeed the absence of method. Presumably it marks all primitive stages of any system.[1] The parties present their evidence as they please, or as the judge pleases, without discrimination as to witnesses or sides, and without any general rule from case to case.

The topical method requires the evidence on each topic to be presented at the same time. Logically this would be the clearest. Practically it is impossible. But it may be supposed that the Continental procedure assumes this as a theoretical ideal:[2] for it is most suited to a system where the judge, and not (as with us) the parties (post, § 2483), has the duty and control of presentation.

The antiphonal method is most suitable, and alone practicable, in a system of procedure which relies upon the parties' own initiative for the production of the evidence; and this is of course (post, § 2483) the vital tradition of Anglo-American procedure. This method is marked by the allotment of the mass of the evidence, and of the individual witness, to each party in turn, —'suum cuique.' The result is an antiphonal drama, in which the first grand lines of division are drawn for the entire mass of evidence, and then, within these, secondary lines of division are drawn for the examination of each individual witness.[3]

This traditional Anglo-American method has been embodied, more or less imperfectly, by express provision in many Codes.[4]

§ 1866. [1] Illustrations will be found in the customs of modern African tribes quoted in Kocourek & Wigmore's Sources of Ancient and Primitive Law, pp. 303, 314 (Evolution of Law Series, vol. I, 1915).

[2] Illustrations will be found in Albert Bataille's Causes Criminelles et Mondaines, 1896 (and prior years); Stephen's History of the Criminal Law, vol. III, Appendix.

[3] It would seem that the rules for the order of evidence began first to be formulated about the second half of the 1700s: Burke's Report on Warren Hastings' Trial (1794), 31 Parl. Hist. 343–353. In this speech of Burke's, protesting against the rulings of the House of Lords excluding certain evidence in Warren Hastings' trial, will be found an interesting contrast of the practice, as to order of evidence, in jury trials and in chancery.

[4] Alaska: Comp. L. 1913, § 1019 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 607); § 1491 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 2042); § 2246 (like Cal. P. C. § 1093) Arizona: Rev. St. 1913, Civ. C. §§ 512–514; P. C. 1033; Arkansas: Dig. 1919, § 1292 (similar to Cal. C. C. P. § 607); §§ 3173–3175 (similar; criminal cases); § 4182 ("The party who begins the case must ordinarily exhaust his evidence before the other begins; but the order of proof shall be regulated by the Court, so as to expedite the trial and enable the tribunal to obtain a clear view of the whole evidence"); California: C. C. P. 1872, § 607, P. C. 1093 ("When the jury has been sworn, the trial must proceed in the following

In the Anglo-American trial, the first general line of division in the presentation of evidence will have reference to the whole mass of evidence as shared between the opposing parties. Each must have his turn. It is immaterial under what system of pleading the trial is conducted; it is assumed that the order, unless the judge, for special reasons, otherwise directs: 1. The plaintiff, after stating the issue and his case, must produce the evidence on his part; 2. The defendant may then open his defense, and offer his evidence in support thereof; 3. The parties may then respectively offer rebutting evidence only, unless the court, for good reason, in furtherance of justice, permit them to offer evidence upon their original case; 4. When the evidence is concluded, unless the case is submitted to the jury on either side or on both sides without argument, the plaintiff must commence and may conclude the argument; 5. If several defendants, having separate defenses, appear by different counsel, the Court must determine their relative order in the evidence and argument; 6. The Court may then charge the jury"); § 2042 ("The order of proof must be regulated by the sound discretion of the Court. Ordinarily, the party beginning the case must exhaust his evidence before the other party begins"); § 2045 ("The direct examination must be completed before the cross-examination begins, unless the Court otherwise direct"); § 2050 ("A witness once examined cannot be re-examined as to the same matter without leave of the Court, but he may be re-examined as to any new matter upon which he has been examined by the adverse party. And after the examinations on both sides are once concluded, the witness cannot be recalled without leave of the Court. Leave is granted or withheld, in the exercise of a sound discretion"); Colorado: Comp. L. 1921, C. C. P. § 205 (civil cases; like Cal. C. C. P. § 607); Georgia: Rev. C. 1910, § 6318 ("The regular mode of conducting the examination of a witness shall be as follows: First, the witness shall be examined by the party introducing him, and then cross-examined by the other party; after which the original party may further interrogate the witness to explain the direct or rebut the cross-examination; and if any new matter be thus elicited, the opposite party may further examine the witness as to such new matter. In all cases in which more than one attorney is retained on either side, the examination and cross-examination shall be conducted by one of the counsel only; and at the opening of the case both parties shall state to the court to which attorney the examination and cross-examination of witnesses is confined"); Hawaii: Rev. L. 1915, § 2403 (substantially like Cal. C. C. P. § 607); Idaho: Comp. St. 1919, § 6847 (similar to Cal. C. C. P. § 607); § 8941 (criminal cases; like Cal. P. C. § 1093); § 9168 (trial of insanity plea; like Cal. P. C. § 1369); Indiana: Burns' Ann. St. 1914, § 558 (similar to Cal. C. C. P. § 607); § 2136 (similar to Cal. P. C. § 1073); Iowa: Code 1919, § 7495 (civil cases), § 9434 (criminal cases); Kansas: Gen. St. 1915, § 7185 (substantially like Cal. C. C. P. § 607); § 8148 (criminal cases); Kentucky: C. C. P. §§ 317, 592, 594, 600 C. Cr. P. §§ 220–224 (substantially like Cal. C. C. P. § 607, P. C. § 1093); Louisiana: C. Pract. § 477 ("When the plaintiff has closed his evidence, the defendant shall bring his witnesses, and produce the proof in support of his defence; the plaintiff may then bring additional witnesses, or his former witnesses, to rebut the testimony adduced by the defendant, or to lessen the weight of such testimony"); § 484 ("After all incidental questions shall have been decided, and both parties have produced their respective evidence, the argument commences; no witness then can be heard, nor proof introduced except with the consent of all the parties"); Minnesota: Gen. St. 1913, § 7799 (similar to Cal. C. C. P. 607); Missouri: Rev. St. 1919, § 4025; Montana: Rev. C. 1921, § 9349 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 607); §§ 10659, 10662 (like Cal. C. C. P. §§ 2042, 2045); § 10667 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 2050); § 11969 (like Cal. P. C. § 1093); Nebraska: Rev. St. 1922, § 10144 (criminal trials; like Cal. P. C. § 1093); Nevada: Rev. L. 1912, § 5210 (civil cases); § 7159 (criminal cases); North Dakota: Comp. L. 1913, § 7619 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 607); § 10821 (substantially like Cal. P. C. § 1093); § 11065 (trial of plea of insanity; like Cal. P. C. § 1369); Ohio: Gen. Code Ann. 1921, § 11447 (substantially like Cal. C. C. P. 607); § 13675 (substantially like Cal. P. C. § 1093); Oklahoma: Comp. St. 1921, §§ 541, 2687, 2869; Oregon: Laws 1920, § 132 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 607, in substance); §§ 853, 857 (like Cal. C. C. P. §§ 2042, 2045); P. I. C. C. P. 1901, § 132 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 607); Philippine Islands: P. C. 1911, Gen. Order 58 of 1900, § 31 (criminal trials; like Cal. P. C. § 1093); Porto Rico: Rev. St. & C. 1911, § 6265 (like Cal. P. C. § 1093); §§ 1517–1529 (civil cases); South Dakota: Rev. C. 1919, § 2505 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 607); Texas: Rev. Civ. St. 1911, §§ 1951, 1952, Rev. C. Cr. Pr. 1911, §§ 717, 718; Utah: Comp. L. 1917, § 6802 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 607); § 8975 (substantially like Cal. P. C. § 1093); § 9330 (insanity plea; substantially like Cal. P. C. § 1369); Washington: R. & B. Code, 1909, § 339 (similar to Cal. C. C. P. § 607, for civil cases); Wyoming: Comp. St. 1920, § 5769 (civil cases; similar to Cal. C. C. P. § 607); § 7532 (criminal cases).

law of Pleading has prescribed whether one or more than one plea may be at issue, and that the law of Procedure has prescribed whether one or more than one issue may be investigated at the same trial. In any case, the party sustaining the burden of affirmation (here termed the proponent) will first come forward with his evidence in support, the party sustaining the opposite (here termed the opponent) will then come forward in denial, and each in turn may need to present further evidence. The apportionment of the whole evidential material between the parties is thus the first problem.

Next arises a further line of division in the examination for each witness; since almost all evidential material, of whatever sort, comes before the tribunal through the assertions of witnesses (ante, §§ 22-25), since every witness is subject to examination by the opposing as well as by the calling party, in order to extract the whole of his knowledge and ascertain its detailed significance (ante, §§ 1368–1369). He may need to be examined first by the calling party, then by the opposite party, and so again by each in turn. The apportionment of the order and topics of examination for each witness, as between the parties, thus presents the second problem.

Since the party calling a witness may be the opponent in the case at large, it is evident that this second line of division is a distinct one from the preceding, and exists along with and independently of it. On the other hand, the two groupings will sometimes coincide and involve the same problem; as, for example, where the opponent seeks to put in by cross-examination the evidential material supporting his own case, or where a witness is desired to be recalled after both parties have closed their cases. In general, therefore, the two lines of division can be followed separately in considering the appropriate rules; but in particular situations it becomes sufficient to treat the problem as a single one, under one or the other head according as it is more natural. The due apportionment and separation of these various topics is not an easy task, but it is an inevitable one; nevertheless, the lack of an accepted scientific nomenclature makes succinct and clear exposition almost impossible in this department of rules.

The arrangement of topics will therefore be made as follows, taking each division as representing a stage in which evidence is desired to be offered:

A. STAGES OF PRESENTATION, FOR THE WHOLE CASE

1. Putting in the Case at Large.
   - a. Proponent's Case in Chief.
   - b. Opponent's Case in Reply.
   - c. Case in Rebuttal.
   - d. Case in Rejoinder.
2. Case Closed.
   - a. By Proponent.
   - b. By Opponent.
3. Argument begun.
4. Charge given.
5. Jury retired.

B. Stages of Examination, for the Individual Witness

1. Original Call.
   a. Direct examination. b. Cross-examination.
   c. Re-direct examination. d. Re-cross-examination; and so forth.
2. Recall.
   a. For direct examination. b. For cross-examination.
3. Re-recall; and later calls.

§ 1867. Trial Court's Discretion as the Ultimate Standard for each Case. It is obvious that, while a usual order for introducing topics of evidence and witnesses is a desirable thing, a variation from that order, which is often equally desirable, will not necessarily cause direct harm; it can do so only where it tends to confuse the jury, or where it misleads the opponent or finds him unprepared to meet it. Moreover, the necessity for such a variation and the likelihood that it will confuse or mislead must depend almost entirely upon the particular circumstances of each case.

Accordingly, it is a cardinal doctrine, applicable generally to all of the ensuing rules, that they are not invariable, that they are directory rather than mandatory, and that an alteration of the prescribed customary order is always allowable in the discretion of the trial Court; [1]

1840, Story, J., in Philadelphia & T. R. Co. v. Stimpson, 14 Pet. 448, 463: "The question, then, is whether it was at that time [after the close of the offeror's case] admissible on the part of the defendants as a matter of right, or whether its admission was a matter resting in the sound discretion of the Court; if the latter, then it is manifest that the rejection of it cannot be assigned as error. The mode of conducting trials, the order of introducing evidence, and the times when it is to be introduced, are properly matters belonging to the practice of the circuit Courts, with which this Court ought not to interfere; unless it shall choose to prescribe some fixed general rules on the subject, under the authority of the act of Congress. Probably the practice in no two States of the Union is exactly the same; and therefore, in each State, the circuit Courts must necessarily be vested with a large discretion in the regulation of their practice. If every party had a right to introduce evidence at any time at his own election, without reference to the stage of the trial in which it is offered, it is obvious that the proceedings of the Court would often be greatly embarrassed, the purposes of justice be obstructed, and the parties themselves be surprised by evidence destructive of their rights which they could not have foreseen or in any manner guarded against. It seems to us, therefore, that all Courts ought to be, as indeed they generally are, invested with a large discretion on this subject, to prevent the most mischievous consequences in the administration of justice to suitors; and we think that the circuit Courts possess this discretion in as ample a manner as other judicial tribunals. We do not feel at liberty, therefore, to interfere with the exercise of this discretion."

§ 1867. [1] The following cases and statutes declare this general principle, but almost every case cited for a specific rule in the following sections contains also such utterances: Ala. 1887, Drum v. Harrison, 83 Ala. 384, 386, 3 So. 715; Alaska: Comp. L. 1913, § 1491 (like Or. Laws 1920, § 853); Ark. Dig. 1919, § 4182 ("The order of proof shall be regulated by the Court so as to expedite the trial and enable the tribunal to obtain a clear view of the whole evidence"); Cal. 1857, Gordon v. Searing, 8 Cal. 49; Cal. C. C. P. 1872, § 2042 ("The order of proof must be regulated by the sound discretion of the Court"); Haw. 1901, Mist v. Kawelo, 13 Haw. 302, 303; Ill. 1898, Board v. Harlev, 174 Ill. 412, 51 N. E. 754; Ind. 1836, Throgmorton v. Davis, 4 Blackf. 174, 175; Iowa: 1860, Rutledge v. Evans, 11 Ia. 288; 1896, Kassing v. Walter, — Ia. —, 65 N. W. 832; Kan. 1881. Blake v. Powell, 26 Kan. 320, 327; Md. 1912, Baltimore C. & A. R. Co. v. Moon, 118 Md. 380, 84 Atl. 536; Mass. 1856, Robinson v. R. Co., 7 Gray 92, 96; Mich. 1898, Smith v. Bye, 116 Mich. 84, 74 N. W. 302; 1906, People v. Tollefson, 145 Mich. 449, 108 N. W. 751 (forgery); Mo. 1877, State v. Jones, 64 Mo. 391, 397; 1907, State v. Taylor, 202 Mo. 1, 100 S. W. 41; Nebr. 1892, McCleneghan v. Reid, 34 Nebr. 472, 478, 51 N. W. 1037; 1892, Consaul v. Sheldon, 35 Nebr. 247, 251, 52 N. W. 1104; 1895, Basye v. State, 45 Nebr. 261, 63 N. W. 811; N. D. 1907, State v. Werner, 16 N. D. 83, 112 N. W. 60. Oh. 1891, Shahan v. Swan, 48 Oh. 25, 26 N. E. 222; Or. Laws 1920, § 853 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 2042); Or. 1909, Crosby v. Portland R. Co., 53 Or. 496, 101 Pac. 204; Pa. 1895, Com. v. Weber, 167 Pa. 153, 31 Atl. 481; 1896, Dosch v. Diem, 176 Pa. 603, 35 Atl. 207; P. R. Rev. St. & C. 1911, § 1517 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 2042).

1841, SCOTT, J., in Rucker v. Eddings, 7 Mo. 115, 118: "The law has entrusted Courts with a discretion in allowing the parties to a cause to obviate the effects of inadvertence by the introduction of testimony out of its order. This discretion is to be exercised in furtherance of justice, and in a manner so as not to encourage the tampering with witnesses to induce them to prop up a cause whose weakness has been exposed. Where mere formal proof has been omitted, Courts have allowed witnesses to be called or documents to be produced at any time before the jury retire, in order to supply it. So, material testimony ought not to be rejected because offered after the evidence is closed on both sides, unless it has been kept back by trick and the opposite party would be deceived or injuriously affected by it. So, after a witness has been examined and cross-examined the Court may at its discretion permit either party to examine him again, even as to new matter, at any time during the trial. So, where by an accidental omission plaintiff's attorney does not call and examine a witness who was present in Court, and a non-suit is moved for after he has rested his case, the Court will permit the witness to be examined in furtherance of justice. This Court is sensible of the disadvantages under which it labors in revising the discretion of the circuit Courts in matters of this kind, and a strong case must be presented for its interference before it can be induced to disturb the judgment of inferior Courts by revising the exercise of the discretion with which they are entrusted in regard to the relaxation of the rules of evidence. It must be manifest to any one conversant with the trial of causes that the Court before which a trial is had, from having an opportunity of seeing the conduct of parties, of witnessing the difference in the experience of the opposite counsel, and many incidents which cannot be set out in a bill of exceptions and which influence the exercise of its discretion (and properly too), has superior means for a wise and judicious exercise of this power than is possessed by this Court, which is confined entirely to the facts spread upon the record."

1849, POLAND, J., in Goss v. Turner, 21 Vt. 437, 439: "Although there are certain established rules which have obtained in the process of trying causes before a jury and in the order of introducing the evidence of witnesses, yet these rules for the most part are but rules of practice, and are considered as under the control of the Court and subject to be varied in the exercise of a sound judicial discretion; so that a departure from the ordinary rules in the course of a trial, or a refusal to grant such an indulgence to a party on request, cannot properly be made a ground of error. Of this class are the rules as to the order of introducing the evidence, and also as to the mode of examining witnesses. Indeed, the constantly varying circumstances under which cases arise, and the haste and confusion which must frequently be expected in jury trials, without permitting the exercise of the discretion of the Court would often lead to most unjust results and disastrous consequences."

1873, MCCAY, J., in Eberhart v. State, 47 Ga. 598, 607 (referring to the admission of evidence after argument begun): "It seems to us that, in the breaking down of the old unbending forms of the common law by our Code, the necessity for a specific order of proceedings goes with it; that one shall be held to his announcement is the main right. But to make such a rule rigid as to separate it from the other rules as to order, and say that, whilst the judge may modify them as justice and the public convenience may require, he must be held to this with an iron grip, seems to us absurd. If injustice has come from a deviation from the rule, we would interfere; but there is no pretence here of that. . . . The order of business ought as a general rule to be pursued by both parties; and the Court ought to have the power, when a proper case presents itself, to modify the rule where no injustice will occur and the public interests be subserved."

1921, BRICKEN, P. J., in Sansom v. Corington Co. Bank, 17 Ala. App. 556, 87 So. 406: "Rules of practice looking to the orderly introduction of evidence by the respective parties are essential in order to prevent injurious surprises, and annoying delays in the trial of cases and the administration of justice. The trial has its regular stage of process, and the evidence should be introduced with reference thereto; and the general rule is that the plaintiff having the burden of proof must in the first instance produce all the evidence he has in support of his case, then the defendant must offer all his evidence in defense, plaintiff then replies, and should confine his evidence to a direct answer to defendant's case. And ordinarily the rebutting evidence offered by him upon whom the burden of proof rests concludes the introduction of evidence; but not always, for it is within the discretion of the Court, for good reasons and in the furtherance of justice, to permit the other party to introduce evidence in response to that called forth by the rebuttal testimony, but the rule is that nothing further in chief can be offered, except by permission of the Court. These may be stated as the general rules of practice, and are under the control of the Court, subject to be varied in the exercise of a sound judicial discretion. And almost without exception it is held that it is discretionary with the Court whether it shall admit or reject evidence which is not offered in accordance with the rules prescribing the stage of the trial at which it must be offered, and that the exercise of this discretion in permitting or refusing to allow evidence to be introduced out of the order prescribed by the rules is not assignable as error, except in a clear case of abuse of such discretion. The action of the Court, as in the case at bar, in refusing to permit a party to introduce evidence in support of his case during the examination of his adversary or his adversary's witnesses, is not error, as it was a matter that rested entirely within the discretion of the Court."

It follows that an error in the allowance of such a variation should rarely be treated as sufficient ground for a new trial.[2] There may occur instances where an opponent has been unfairly deprived of showing the truth by reason of such a variation of the customary order of evidence; but the trial Court can better be trusted to understand the situation. The doctrine of new trials is not within the present purview; but no opportunity should be lost to rebuke the abuse by which these rules of customary order are sought to be turned into inflexible dictates of absolute justice, and new trials are asked merely because an unusual sequence of evidence was adopted (ante, § 21). Courts often lend ear to such appeals, and thereby partake in the abuse of such a practice. To purport to preside over the investigation of truth, and then, at an inordinate expense of time, labor, and money, to insist on reopening the entire investigation because a minor witness has been asked a minor question some half-hour before he should have been asked, is to furnish a spectacle fit to make Olympus merry over the serious follies of mortals. And yet such decisions are not uncommonly rendered by the professed ministers of truth and justice. Therein they do violence to the spirit of the rules which are now to be examined.

[2] 1843, Scott, J., in Brown v. Burrus, 8 Mo. 26, 30 ("Even did we interfere and reverse the judgment for this cause, how would the party complaining be benefited by a new trial? Would not the evidence, of the introduction of which he complains, come out in an unexceptionable manner on another trial?"); 1871, Day, C. J., in Crane v. Ellis, 31 Ia. 510, 512 ("No good end is to be accomplished by reversing this case and sending it back for a new trial and for the admission of the same evidence at a different stage of the trial").

A. STAGES OF PRESENTATION FOR THE WHOLE CASE

1. Putting in the Case at Large

§ 1869. Case in Chief; Order of Topics and Witnesses in general; Party testifying First. (1) For the order of topics within the proponent's case in chief, the general principle leaves the arrangement to the trial Court to determine. No specific rules exist as to the customary order (except those noted in the next two sections); nor, in the nature of things, can a regular order be prescribed for that which must depend so much on the varying complications and exigencies of each case. The matter therefore remains practically in the unhampered control of counsel, who employs, subject to the judge's prohibition, such an order as the dictates of intelligent tactics require.[1] He may even, in certain circumstances, advance rebuttal evidence by anticipation, during the case in chief.[2]

Whether the opponent's case may be put in during cross-examination of the proponent's witnesses is more conveniently dealt with later (post, § 1885).

(2) For the order of witnesses also, there are no specific rules as to the customary sequence.

The sole exception is that, at common law, where a party claims the right not to go out when his witnesses are sequestrated, he may be required, as a condition of remaining, to take the stand first of his own witnesses;[3] and that, by statute in a few jurisdictions, for analogous reasons, the party, if he is to be a witness for himself, must always take the stand before his other witnesses.[4] The reason for this rule is the occasional readiness of the interested

§ 1869. [1] 1836, Chitty, General Practice, 2d ed., III, 896; 1892, McDaneld v. Logi, 143 Ill. 487, 32 N. E. 423.

[2] 1899, Mayer v. Brensinger, 180 Ill. 110, 54 N. E. 159; 1908, Decatur v. Vaughan, 233 Ill. 50, 84 N. E. 50; 1912, Knight v. State, 64 Tex. Cr. 541, 144 S. W. 967 (the woman's chastity, in seduction); and cases cited post, § 1873.

[3] Ante, § 1841.

[4] CANADA: Alta. Rules of Court 1914, No. 190 (like Ont. Rule 254); Ont. Rules of Court 1914, § 254 (quoted ante, § 1837); UNITED STATES: Ky. C. C. P. 1900, § 606 (3) (civil cases); Stats. 1915, § 1646 (accused); Tenn. Code 1916, § 5601 (accused); see these statutes quoted in full ante, § 488, and referred to ante, § 579.

The Kentucky and Tennessee rules had their origin in the statutes making civil or criminal parties competent, which stipulated originally as a condition that the party should testify first of the witnesses on his side; they have been applied as follows: Kentucky: 1896, Barkley v. Bradford, 100 Ky. 304, 38 S. W. 432 (held to be merely a "rule of practice, not of right"); 1903, Savage v. Bulger, — Ky. —, 77 S. W. 717 (party admitted in rebuttal); 1906, Burkhardt v. Loughridge, 124 Ky. 48, 98 S. W. 291 (rule applied to depositions); 1910, Continental Ins. Co. v. Ford, 140 Ky. 406, 131 S. W. 189 (rule held not to prohibit the party's testimony where already his counsel had on cross-examination entered upon new matter); 1915, Cowan v. Dillon, 163 Ky. 496, 173 S. W. 1160 (devisee testifying to execution of a will); 1920, Neely v. Strong, 186 Ky. 540, 217 S. W. 898 (Code § 606, subd. 3, applied to an infant plaintiff); 1920, Davis v. Kimberlain, 188 Ky. 147, 221 S. W. 226 ("a rule of practice, not of right"); Tennessee: 1892, Clemons v. State, 92 Tenn. 284, 286, 21 S. W. 525.

In England, the same rule is now applied, person to adapt his testimony, when offered later, to victory rather than to veracity, so as to meet the necessities as laid open by prior witnesses, — a tendency illustrated in the following anecdote:

1904, Sir Henry Hawkins, Baron BRAMPTON, Reminiscences, I, 134: "I was retained at Hertford Assizes with Peter Ryland, a practising barrister on that circuit, as my leader, to prosecute a man for perjury, which was alleged to have been committed in an action in which a cantankerous man, who had once filled the office of High Sheriff for the county, was the prosecutor. Wealthy and disagreeable, he was nevertheless a hen-pecked tyrant. Mrs. Brown, his wife, was a witness for the prosecution in the alleged perjury, which was unfortunate for her husband, because she had the greatest knowledge of the circumstances surrounding the case; while Mr. Brown had the best knowledge of the probable quality of his wife's evidence. When we were in consultation and considering the nature of this evidence, and arranging the best mode of presenting our case to the jury, Brown interposed, and begged that Mr. Ryland should call Mrs. Brown as the last witness. He said it was all-important she should come last. 'It is Mrs. Brown's wish,' he pleaded. 'But,' says Ryland, 'Mrs. Brown ought to be called first. It is all-important in my view that she should be called in that order, which you must see is the natural order — Mrs. Brown first, the rest anywhere' (or, perhaps better nowhere, thought Brown, if Mrs. Brown is to be believed). 'You'll find the other way best,' says Brown. But Ryland positively refused to proceed in any other than the proper course, which was to call the lady first instead of last. As I left Ryland, Brown came up to me, thinking me, probably, more amenable to reason, and in the most beseeching manner begged me to press upon Ryland the course he, Brown, had suggested. I assured him that Mr. Ryland would do what was best and most prudent; at the same time saying that, if he could give me any good reason for calling Mrs. Brown last, I was sure he would do so if he agreed with it. Whereupon said Brown: 'Well, Mr. Hawkins, Mr. Ryland did not seem to think very well of my case on the evidence, so I have come to the conclusion that Mrs. Brown ought to be the last witness, because, if anything goes wrong during the trial or anything is wanting, Mrs. Brown will be quite ready to mop it all up.' This in a prosecution for perjury was one of the boldest propositions I had ever heard. I need not say good Mrs. Brown was called, as she ought to have been, first. The lady's mop was not in requisition at that stage of the trial, and the jury decided against her."

§ 1870. Same: Treason; Corpus Delicti; Conspiracy; Document's Loss and Execution; Reading Documents. The special rules in regard to the quantity of evidence sufficient for proof of acts of treason, and of the corpus delicti of any crime, give rise to questions about the order of this required evidence; these are better considered under the respective rules (post, § 2038, and § 2073).

So, too, in using a conspirator's admissions, the proof of the conspiracy may be required to be made before the one party's admissions can be usable against the other (ante, § 1079).

Whether a document may be proved lost before evidence of execution is offered, so as to allow the use of a copy, has been already considered in under St. 1898 (quoted ante, § 488) to the accused: 1911, Morrison's Case, 6 Cr. App. 159, 165 (L. C. J. Alverstone: "In all cases I consider it most important for the prisoner to be called before any of his witnesses").

There may be other jurisdictions having such a rule of court: 1917, Garrabrandt v. Boston Molasses Co., 10 P. R. Fed. 71 (Rule of Court 51; Hamilton, J.: "I do not know the date of this rule, but it was here in 1913").

dealing with the subject of lost documents (ante, § 1189). Whether a document produced may be read before any evidence of execution raises the general question treated in the next section. Whether a document proved by a witness must be read before his cross-examination is a question of the order of examination of witnesses (post, § 1883).

§ 1871. Same: Conditional Relevancy; Facts offered before their Relevancy appears; Stating the Purpose of a Question. (1) It constantly happens that an evidential fact is relevant, not with direct reference to an allegation in the pleadings, but only through its connection with other subordinate facts (ante, § 2). Without them, it is irrelevant, or immaterial, and therefore inadmissible. So far, then, as concerns the time of its introduction in evidence, one might expect a rule requiring such a fact not to be given in evidence until the connecting facts, by reason of which it becomes relevant, have first been put in evidence.

No such rule, however, would be practicable; for those same connecting facts would themselves often be irrelevant apart from the fact in question; in other words, the relevancy appears only when all are considered together. Now it is obviously impossible to present all the facts at precisely the same moment or in the testimony of a single witness. Hence, some of the connected facts must be allowed to be presented before the others, even though the former, standing alone, are irrelevant.

Thus the fundamental rule, universally accepted, is that, with reference to facts whose relevancy depends upon others, the order of presentation is left to the discretion of the party himself, subject of course to the general discretion of the trial Court (ante, § 1867) in controlling the order of evidence. In other words, if an evidential fact offered has an apparent connection with the case on the assumption that other facts shall also be proved, it may be admitted. No objection, therefore, can be made merely on the ground that the other facts have not yet been evidenced.[1] The possibility that the other facts may not be made good is a necessary risk to be taken; and in case of a failure to make them good, the subsequent striking out of the evidence now offered is regarded as an adequate remedy:

1849, CATON, J., in Rogers v. Brent, 10 Ill. 573, 587 (holding improper the exclusion of a certain land-certificate, assignment, and judgment and execution-deed): "Most cases have to be proved by a succession of distinct facts, neither of which standing alone would amount to anything, while all taken together form a connected chain and establish the issue; and from necessity a party must be allowed to present his case in such detached parts as the nature of his evidence requires. It would be no less absurd than inconvenient, when proof is offered in its proper order, of one necessary fact, to require the party to go on and offer to prove at the same time all the other necessary facts to make out the case. Such a practice would embarrass the administration of justice and prove detrimental to the rights of parties. It may be that Rogers was bound to connect himself with Southwick's title before he could insist that the patent was void because obtained in fraud of such title; but he must first prove such title to exist before he could connect himself with it; and this he was not allowed to do. If he was bound to connect himself with Bowman's creditors, to avail himself of the fraud practiced upon them, he must first show that there were such creditors; and the judgment which proved this was ruled out by the Court. It is the right of the party, when he offers evidence in its proper order which proves or tends to prove any necessary fact in the case, to have it go to the jury; for the reasonable presumption is that it will be followed by such other proof as is necessary for its proper connection, and if it is not, it then becomes irrelevant, and as such, if desired, may be withdrawn from the jury. If there is anything to induce the suspicion that the time of the Court is being trifled with, it may be proper to call upon counsel to state the connection which they expect to give the proposed evidence; but this should ordinarily be avoided, as it is often embarrassing for counsel to anticipate their case in the presence of the opposite party. It may sometimes happen that evidence is offered so out of its proper place as to authorize the Court to exclude it for want of a proper foundation; as, in this case, had the sheriff's deed been offered without the previous proceedings, it might have been properly excluded till the proper foundation for it was shown. No such objection, however, existed in this case. The party commenced at the foundation of his case, and offered to establish the first necessary fact; and, when that was ruled out, he still persisted in offering to prove subsequent parts of his case dependent upon those previously offered and rejected, till his repeated offers had almost the appearance of wrestling with the opinion of the Court. He proceeded as far as duty or propriety required."

§ 1871. [1] Accord: 1833, Davis v. Calvert, 5 G. & J. 269; 1921, Sloat-Darragh Co. v. General Coal Co., 6th C. C. A., 276 Fed. 502 (correspondence introduced at separate times); 1905, Com. v. Tucker, 189 Mass. 457, 76 N. E. 127; 1880, Hoffman v. Harrington, 44 Mich. 183, 184, 6 N. W. 225; 1824, Stewart v. Bank, 11 S. & R. Pa. 267; 1880, Zell v. Com., 94 Pa. 258, 274; 1878, Marshall v. State, 5 Tex. App. 273, 291.

For the specific rule in using a copy of a lost document, as between the loss of the original and its execution, see ante, § 1189.

1860, Baldwin, J., in Palmer v. McCafferty, 15 Cal. 334, 335: "The counsel offering the deposition and the agreement [excluded by the trial Court] explained that it was the intention of the plaintiff to show in connection with it that the defendant claimed the premises under one Wooster who was a party to the agreement. It seems that Wooster executed a mortgage of these premises to the defendant, and that the latter foreclosed the mortgage and went into possession under the decree of foreclosure. The object of the plaintiff was to show that he had succeeded to the estate of Scoggs and Co. who made this executory agreement, and that Wooster and his assigns having failed to comply with the contract on their part forfeited all their rights under the same, and that by force of this Scoggs and Co. became reunited to their original title, of which plaintiff was the assignee. . . . 'Prima facie' the plaintiff's proof thus offered was relevant to the issue, and that was enough to entitle him to introduce it. The plaintiff was entitled to introduce his proofs in his own order. He was not bound to make his whole case complete by any one item of proof. A case consists frequently of various facts, neither one of which makes it out; and to hold that a party is not entitled to introduce any part until he establishes the whole is to require an impossibility. All that the Court can ask is that the particular evidence offered conduces to establish any one proposition involved in the issue. It is time enough to pass upon the sufficiency of the proofs after they are all in the cause. There must be a starting-place somewhere; and the Court should never reject evidence merely because unaided by other testimony it is insufficient, if it tend legally to prove any part of the case."

1900, Loring, J., in O'Brien v. Keefe, 175 Mass. 274, 56 N. E. 588: "The possibility of testimony admitted 'de bene' not being subsequently made competent is one of the considerations to be passed upon by the presiding magistrate in determining whether to admit such evidence at the time it is offered or not, and it is necessary, in the conduct of trials, that such discretion should be exercised. If evidence admitted 'de bene' is not subsequently made good, the only remedy that can be given is, on the proper application being subsequently made, to rule out the testimony. Whether, in such a case, the party who produces the witness whose testimony has been confused, or the party who has undertaken to assert that the witness is not to be believed because he is a criminal, and it turns out that that assertion is unfounded, is the greater sufferer, is open to question. If he has suffered an injury, it is one inherent in the trial of causes; and it is well settled, when such evidence is admitted in a jury trial, that the objecting party cannot be heard to complain, if the evidence is ruled out and the jury are instructed to disregard it."

(2) But if the evidential fact thus put forward has on its face no apparent connection with the case, an accompanying statement of the connecting facts must be made by counsel, and a promise to introduce them at a later time if they have not already been introduced.[2] This much is indispensable as a safeguard against the indiscriminate use of irrelevant evidence and as a measure to enable the adversary to discover any objection that might be appropriate. How specific the counsel's statement must be will depend on the circumstances:

1836, COLERIDGE, J., in Haigh v. Belcher, 7 C. & P. 389, 390: "I think I must receive evidence of it, and trust to the statement of the counsel in the cause that by some further evidence it will be shown to be relevant; . . . and the discernment of the jury must be trusted so far, in case it should turn out to be immaterial."

1888, Parnell Commission's Proceedings, 33d day, Times' Rep. pt. 9, p. 104; the Irish Land League and its leaders being charged with complicity in crime, the doings and admissions of various known criminals were offered, with the purpose of connecting with them the League leaders. Sir Richard Webster, Attorney-General, having asked a witness what one Carey said about Egan, one of the leaders, Sir Charles Russell objected. Sir R. Webster: "I think, if your lordships trust me for a moment, you will see that it is in the interests of justice that this man should make his statement. I will undertake to connect it with Egan." Sir C. Russell: "I do not think that is a reason." President HANNEN: "Well, if the Attorney-General does not fulfil his pledge, I shall strike out what is said." Sir C. Russell: "We have had so many of these pledges which have been broken." Sir R. Webster: "I beg your pardon; no pledges that I have given have been broken." Sir C. Russell: "Well, — left unfulfilled." Sir R. Webster: "Or left unfulfilled!" President HANNEN: "Counsel can only say what they anticipate will be the case; if this is not made evidence, I will strike it out."

[2] Accord: Eng. 1888, Parnell Commission's Proceedings, 54th day, Times' Rep. pt. 14, p. 149; Can. 1869, Key v. Thomson, 1 Han. N. Br. 295, 302; U. S. 1842, Mardis v. Shackelford, 4 Ala. 493, 501; 1846, Sorrelle v. Craig, 9 Ala. 538; 1846, Abney v. Kingsland, 10 Ala. 360; 1897, Bischof v. Mikels, 147 Ind. 115, 46 N. E. 348; 1854, Warner v. Hardy, 6 Md. 525, 538 ("the testimony, as proposed, must appear to be pertinent to the matter in controversy, or be accompanied by an offer to show its relevancy in the progress of the cause"); 1897, Lane v. Agric. Soc., 67 Minn. 65, 69 N. W. 463; 1875, Tilton v. Beecher, N. Y., Abbott's Rep. II, 35; 1869, State v. Cherry, 63 N. C. 493, 494; 1877, State v. Hopkins, 50 Vt. 316, 330.

Examples of an offer properly so made are the following: 1874, McCoy v. Watson, 51 Ala. 466, 467 (deeds; evidence of the grantor's title at time of execution was not yet offered; deeds admitted, subject to later proof of the title); 1875, Cramer v. Burlington, 42 Ia. 315, 319; 1876, Ober v. Carson, 62 Mo. 209, 213; 1851, Garrigues v. Harris, 16 Pa. St. 344, 350 (a deed may be read before proof of execution).

Compare the rule for counsel making offers which they know will not be sustained, and stating in argument matters of which no evidence has been introduced (ante, § 1810).

Even where the evidence is properly rejected for irrelevancy at the time it is offered, it may be admitted if afterwards offered when its relevancy appears: 1844, Lyford v. Thurston 16 N. H. 399, 405 (even where it becomes relevant through the introduction of evidence by the opponent).

For the order of proof, for a copy of a lost document, as between the loss of the original and its execution, see ante, § 1189.

1824, GIBSON, J., in Weidler v. Farmer's Bank, 11 S. & R. 134, 139: "The plaintiff contends that this may have been only a part of the chain of his evidence, and that what was deficient might afterwards have been supplied. If this were admitted, no Court could without error ever reject for irrelevancy, as there is no fact so entirely irrelevant as to be incapable of being connected with the question, however remotely, by a chain of possible circumstances. But the question is, How did the matter stand as it was proposed to the Court? If it was altogether irrelevant, the Court might reject it (although it might not perhaps be error to admit it). If it would be relevant when taken in connection with other facts, it ought to be proposed in connection with those facts, on an offer to follow the evidence proposed with proof of those facts at the proper times. But the Court is not bound to spend its time in an inquiry which from the showing of the party can produce no results. . . . The proposal of evidence must contain in itself, by reference to something that has preceded it or that is to follow, information of the manner in which the evidence is to be legitimately operative."

1842, COLLIER, C. J. in Mardis v. Shackelford, 4 Ala. 493, 501: "If evidence be irrelevant at the time it is offered, it is not error to reject it because other evidence may afterwards be given in connection with which it would become competent. If it would be relevant in conjunction with other facts, it should be proposed in connection with those facts and an offer to follow the evidence proposed with proof of those facts at a proper time."

Yet it is often difficult to apply this principle. The statement of intention to prove the other facts, or of reference to the preceding facts, will usually be expressly made, when objection is raised; but the circumstances may have been such that a statement of the necessary kind may be sufficiently implied, without formal words. Much depends on the issues in controversy, the stage of the trial, the terms of the offer, and the point of the objection. The trial Court's discretion ought to have free play.[3] It is clear that a Court of appeal will sometimes treat the evidence as properly admitted where it finds by implication some understanding in fact as to the later proof of the connecting circumstances;[4] and it is also clear that it will sometimes treat it as properly excluded because it refuses to see such an understanding or promise at the time of the offer.[5]

[3] Cases cited ante, § 1867, and the following: Can. 1876, Davidson v. King, 16 N. Br. 396; U. S. 1908, Putnal v. State, 56 Fla. 86, 47 So. 864; 1909, Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Partridge, 58 Fla. 153, 50 So. 634; 1903, Ellis v. Thayer, 183 Mass. 309, 67 N. E. 325 (good opinion, by Knowlton, C. J.); 1880, Hoffman v. Harrington, 44 Mich. 183, 184; 1903, Bradley v. Dinneen, 88 Minn. 334, 93 N. W. 116; 1905, Campbell v. Railway Transfer Co., 95 Minn. 375, 104 N. W. 547; 1907, State v. Arnold, 206 Mo. 589, 105 S. W. 641; 1904, Earnhardt v. Clement, 137 N. C. 91, 49 S. E. 49.

It was the strict enforcement of the rule that evoked one of Burke's chief complaints in his criticisms of the management of Warren Hastings' Trial (Report of the Commons Committee, 1794, 31 Parl. Hist. 344–347); his contention was that, according to the prior practice, the judges had been content to rely upon a subsequent direction to the jury for curing the effect of admitted evidence which had not been afterwards properly connected with the case. It was about this same rule, in 1794, at Tooke's Trial (24 How. St. Tr. 367) that John Horne Tooke had his well-known passage with C. B. Eyre about the "links of a chain."

[4] Examples: 1836, Reed v. Brashers, 3 Port. Ala. 375; 1842, Lynch v. Benton, 3 Rob. La. 105; 1906, State v. Green, 115 La. 1041, 40 So. 451 (identifying a pistol); 1844, State v. McAllister, 24 Me. 139, 143.

[5] Examples: Ala. 1830, Jinkins v. Noel, 3 Stew. 60, 82, 84; 1833, Clendenning v. Ross, 3 Stew. & P. 267; 1837, Wiswall v. Ross, 4 Port. 321, 330; 1838, Innerarity v. Byrne, 8 Port. 176, 179; Ind. 1876, Cones v. Binford, 54 Ind. 516, 517; 1907, Ross v. State, 169 Ind. 388, 82 N. E. 781; Md. 1838, Caton v. Carter, 9 G. & J. 476; 1854, Stewart v. Spedden, 5 Md. 433, 444.

The principle that governs is, however, clear enough; and the following may serve as an illustration of one variety of such cases:[6]

1843, ORMOND, J., in Branch Bank v. Kinsey, 5 Ala. 9, 12: "It is certainly the privilege of a party to present his testimony in the mode his judgment or fancy may dictate; and, if relevant, it cannot be objected to, although it may be of no avail without further proof. So, in this case, the defendant could have proved the execution of his conveyance, and read it to the jury and afterwards have proved its consideration; and indeed this would seem to be the natural order in which to present it. But we do not understand this to be the point raised on the bill of exceptions. The statement is that . . . '[the Court] admitted the same to be read to the jury as 'prima facie' evidence of the consideration therein specified, without further proof thereof.' It would be doing great violence to the language here employed and to the ordinary rules of interpretation to understand the objection here raised to be to the time merely when the instrument was offered to be read as evidence. . . . [The Court in fact ruled that] it was read to the jury for that purpose [of presuming a consideration] without further proof."

(3) Nevertheless, a cross-examination is generally conceded to be exempt from the foregoing rule. In other words, the cross-examiner need not state beforehand the connection of a question which appears to be irrelevant, unless exceptionally, under the trial Court's determination.[7] The chief reason is that the advantages of brevity and relevancy, which might otherwise be insisted on, are in experience found to be far overbalanced by the danger of

[6] For the doctrine that the construction of the terms of the offer is for this purpose to be made most strongly against the offeror, see the following opposed opinions: 1877, Graves, J., in Reynolds v. Ins. Co., 36 Mich. 131, 144; 1842, Collier, C. J., in Mardis v. Shackelford, 4 Ala. 493, 501.

Compare also the doctrine of multiple admissibility, ante, § 13, and the general rules as to mode of offering and objecting to evidence (ante, §§ 17, 18).

It has been held that on the subsequent failure of the promised evidence, the opponent must take advantage by a motion to strike out: 1920, Holmes v. U. S., 5th C. C. A., 269 Fed. 97; 1903, Stone v. State, 118 Ga. 705, 45 S. E. 630; 1906, Hix v. Gulley, 124 Ga. 547, 52 S. E. 890; 1907, Sasser v. State, 129 Ga. 541, 59 S. E. 255; 1906, Tinkle v. Wallace, 167 Ind. 382, 79 N. E. 355 (bribery); 1908, Dorn & McGinty v. Cooper, 139 Ia. 742, 117 N. W. 1; 1906, Putnam v. Harris, 193 Mass. 58, 78 N. E. 747 ("It is more correct to say that the exception will not be sustained unless the fact that the evidence admitted 'de bene' had not been properly connected afterwards was brought to the attention of the Court and a further ruling on that ground asked for"); 1908, Com. v. Johnson, 199 Mass. 55, 85 N. E. 188 (narrative of conversations held proper on the facts; 1921, State v. Douthitt, 26 N. M. 532, 194 Pac. 879 (unlawful shooting); 1903, Jones v. Peterson, 44 Or. 161, 74 Pac. 661.

Contra: 1906, Root v. Kansas C. S. R. Co., 195 Mo. 348, 92 S. W. 621.

Not clear: 1906, Pittman v. State, 51 Fla. 94, 41 So. 385 (opinion reading both ways).

Examples of the striking out of evidence where the promise to connect has not been fulfilled: 1912, People v. Smith, 254 Ill. 167, 98 N. E. 281 (purchase of a pistol not connected with the one in issue).

The Court's direction to the jury to disregard evidence as to which the condition has not been fulfilled is of course sufficient to cure the temporary effect of admitting it; this assumption underlies the whole principle; 1917, Fuller v. Maine Central R. Co., 78 N. H. 366, 100 Atl. 546; and cases cited ante, § 19.

[7] Accord: 1876, City Bank v. Kent, 57 Ga. 283, 285, 299 ("even when a party is under cross-examination, the Court may exercise a sound discretion in requiring counsel to make the relevancy of his questions apparent") 1877, Harness v. State, 57 Ind. 1, 7 (good opinion by Worden, J.); 1883, Wood v. State, 92 Ind. 269, 273; 1884, Hyland v. Miller, 99 Ind. 308, 310; 1872, O'Donnell v. Segar, 25 Mich. 367, 371 (good opinion by Christiancy, J.); 1906, Brown v. State, 88 Miss. 166, 40 So. 737; 1872, Burt v. State, 23 Oh. St. 394, 402 ("I know of no case where the rule requiring such a disclosure has been applied to a cross-examination; whether such a case might arise need not now be decided"); 1877, Martin v. Elden, 32 Oh. St. 282, 289; 1900, Knapp v. Wing, 72 Vt. 334, 47 Atl. 1075.

destroying the effectiveness of the great weapon of cross-examination; for it would often be made useless by requiring in advance a betrayal of its purpose to the wary witness whose falsities are desired to be exposed: [8]

1806, Mr. W. D. Evans, Notes to Pothier, II, 230: "The benefits of cross-examination are sometimes defeated by the interposition of the Court to require an explanation of the motive and object of the questions proposed, or to pronounce a judgment upon their immateriality; whereas experience frequently shows that it is only by an indirect and apparently irrelevant inquiry that a witness can be brought to divulge the truth which he prepared himself to conceal. The explanation of the motives and tendency of the question furnishes the witness with a caution that may wholly defeat the object of it, which might have been successfully attained if the gradual progress from immateriality to materiality was withheld from his observation."

1861, CHRISTIANCY, J., in Campau v. Dewey, 9 Mich. 381, 422: "On the direct examination, it is true, if the relevancy of a proposed inquiry does not appear, the Court have a right to call on the counsel to state the object of the proposed testimony and the manner in which it is to be made relevant; and the Court may in the exercise of its discretion require a particular statement of the substance of the evidence in connection with which the proposed inquiry is to be rendered pertinent, and, if refused, may reject the evidence. . . But on a cross-examination the rule as to relevancy is not so strict; and it would be a very unsafe rule which should allow the Court to reject evidence which may in any manner be rendered material, because the party proposing it has not volunteered to precede it with a statement of its precise object and of the other facts in connection with which it is to be rendered material. The Court may doubtless, in its discretion, when a question is asked on cross-examination which he thinks cannot be rendered pertinent, require an intimation of its object, and reject the evidence if not given. But this is a discretion which should be very sparingly exercised, and nothing further than a bare intimation should generally be required; for, in many cases, to state the precise object of a cross-examination would be to defeat it." [8]

§ 1872. Opponent's Case in Reply; Order of Topics and Witnesses in general. The opponent's presentation of his case in reply is no more subject to detailed rules than was the proponent's in chief. The special practices as to conditional relevancy, lost documents, and party witnesses, as noted in the preceding sections, apply equally to the opponent's case where those topics present themselves.[1]

The questions peculiar to the opponent's case alone are few. Whether he may, on cross-examination of the proponent's witnesses, introduce his own case in advance is here the great problem, but it also involves a consideration of the function of cross-examination and can be examined under that head (post, § 1885).[2] The opponent may, however, in the trial Court's discretion,

[8] "An experienced equity judge once said to me in relation to a question I had asked, 'Really, this is a long way from the point.' 'I am aware of that, my lord,' was my answer; 'if I were to begin any nearer, the witness would discover my object'" (Serjeant Ballantine's Experiences of a Barrister's Life, 127).

§ 1872. [1] For the order of evidence as between co-defendants see the following: 1824, R. v. Cooke, 1 C. & P. 322; 1893, Grundy v. Janesville, 84 Wis. 574, 54 N. W. 1085.

[2] When the admissibility of the proponent's evidence depends on a question of fact, to be decided by the judge (post, § 2550), the opponent is entitled to put in his counter-evidence then and there: 1843, Bartlett v. Smith, 11 M. & W. 483 (whether a bill was inadmissible for lack of stamp; leading case); 1855, Boyle v. Wiseman 24 L. J. Exch. 284 (whether a letter offered was the original; repudiating Jones v. Fort, Moo. & M. 196); 1859, Cooper v. Dawson, 1 F. & F. 550 (whether a contradicting letter was genuine).

For this rule as applied to confessions and dying declarations, see ante, §§ 861, 1451.

put in his case in advance, by calling a witness during the proponent's case in chief, if the exigency requires it.[3] So too, being entitled under the principle of Completeness (post, § 2115) to read the whole of a deposition of which the proponent reads a part only, the opponent may do this, if allowed by the trial Court, during the proponent's case in chief.[4] Whether he may at that time read a document proved by cross-examination of the proponent's witness involves the rule for cross-examination (post, § 1884).

On the other hand, the proponent himself, in connection with his cross-examination of a witness of the opponent, and before the latter has rested his case in reply, may be allowed in advance to put in a part of his case in rebuttal.[5] Conversely, he may be compelled, in the trial Court's discretion, to open his evidence in reply, before the close of the proponent's case in chief, when (for example) the latter is obliged to await the arrival of a tardy witness.[6]

§ 1873. Proponent's Case in Rebuttal; Limited to Evidence made Necessary by Opponent's Reply. It is perfectly clear that the orderly presentation of each party's case would leave the proponent nothing to do, in his case in rebuttal, except to meet the new facts put in by the opponent in his case in reply. Everything relevant as a part of the case in chief would naturally have been already put in; and a rebuttal is necessary only because, on a plea in denial, new subordinate evidential facts have been offered, or because, on an affirmative plea, its substantive facts have been put forward, or because, on any issue whatever, facts discrediting the proponent's witnesses have been offered. To discriminate between the first of these classes and the opponent's testimony merely denying the same facts that the proponent's witness had originally affirmed, is no doubt often difficult, and it is then not easy to say whether the proponent's testimony in rebuttal might or might not as well have been put in originally; yet the principle involved is clear. Moreover, practical disadvantages that would result from abandoning the natural order of evidence are, first, the possible unfairness to an opponent who has justly supposed that the case in chief was the entire case which he had to meet, and, secondly, the interminable confusion that would be created by an unending alternation of successive fragments of each case which could have been put in at once in the beginning.

Accordingly, it is well settled that, while the occasional difficulty of discrimination, and the frequency of inadvertent omissions and unexpected contests, add emphasis to the general principle of the trial Court's discretion (ante, § 1867), yet the usual rule will exclude all evidence which has not been made necessary by the opponent's case in reply:[1]

[3] 1877, Huston v. Plato, 3 Colo. 402, 407; 1904, Conant v. Jones, 120 Ga. 568, 48 S. E. 234.

[4] 1882, Herring v. Skaggs, 73 Ala. 446, 453.

[5] 1895, Ranney v. R. Co., 67 Vt. 594, 32 Atl. 810.

[6] 1888, Townsend's Succession, 40 La. An. 67, 73, 3 So. 488.

§ 1873. [1] Accord (compare with these citations the cases under Re-direct examination, post, § 1896, and Recall, post, § 1898):

ENGLAND: 1794, Warren Hastings' Trial,

1848, SHAW, C. J., in Cushing v. Billings, 2 Cush. 158, 159: "We take it to be well settled that the order in which witnesses shall be called is a matter of discretion with the Court. . . . The orderly course of proceeding requires that the party whose business it is to go forward should bring out the strength of his proof in the first instance; but it is competent for Debrett's History of the Trial, Pt. V, pp. 85–88, 97; 1826, R. v. Stimpson, 2 C. & P. 415; 1828, Rowe v. Brenton, 3 M. & Ryl. 133, 139, 304; 1831, Knapp v. Haskall, 4 C. & P. 590; 1831, Whittingham v. Bloxham, 4 C. & P. 597; 1832, R. v. Hilditch, 5 C. & P. 299; 1834, R. v. Nicholson, 2 Lew. Cr. C. 151; 1911, R. v. Crippen, 1 K. B. 149 (careful statement; but unfortunately not discriminating between this situation and that of § 1877, post).

CANADA: 1904, R. v. Wong On, 10 Br. C. 555 (alibi); 1885, Harvey v. R. Co., 3 Man. 266 (negligence); 1858, Adams v. Ferguson, 4 All. N. Br. 102; 1863, Heavy v. Odell, 5 All. N. Br. 524; 1902, R. v. Higgins, 35 N. Br. 18, 30; 1850, Devlin v. Crocker, 7 U. C. Q. B. 398.

UNITED STATES: Federal: 1813, Gilpins v. Consequa, 1 Pet. C. C. 85, 89; 1861, Johnston v. Jones, 1 Black 209, 226; 1895, Goldsby v. U. S., 160 U. S. 70, 74, 16 Sup. 216; 1901, Throckmorton v. Holt, 180 U. S. 552, 21 Sup. 474; 1903, Atchison T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Phipps, 60 C. C. A. 314, 125 Fed. 478; 1904, Wilmoth v. Hamilton, 127 Fed. 48, 61 C. C. A. 584; Alabama: 1907, Nicholson v. State, 149 Ala. 61, 42 So. 1015; Alaska: Comp. L. 1913, §§ 2246; 1019; Arizona: Rev. St. 1913, § 1033; Civ. C. § 512; Arkansas: Dig. 1919, §§ 1292, 3175, 4182; 1901, Blair v. State, 69 Ark. 558, 64 S. W. 948; 1921, Wells v. State, — Ark. —, 235 S. W. 798 (murder); California: C. C. P. 1872, § 607, P. C. 1872, § 1093; 1854, Mowry v. Starbuck, 4 Cal. 274; 1865, Priest v. Union Canal Co., 6 Cal. 170; 1860, Lisman v. Early, 15 Cal. 199; 1863, Brooks v. Crosby, 22 Cal. 42, 46, 50; 1864, Union Water Co. v. Crary, 25 Cal. 504, 509; 1864, Kohler v. Wells Fargo & Co., 26 Cal. 606, 613; 1889, Cousins v. Partridge, 79 Cal. 224, 228, 21 Pac. 745; 1892, Young v. Brady, 94 Cal. 128, 130, 29 Pac. 489; 1897, People v. Hill, 116 Cal. 562, 48 Pac. 711 (expert evidence as to a defendant's insanity, not allowed in rebuttal for the defendant); Colorado: Comp. St 1921, C. C. P. § 205; 1873, Browne v. Steck, 2 Colo. 70; 1874, Kansas P. R. Co. v. Miller, 2 Colo. 442, 469; 1877, Smith v. Mayer, 3 Colo. 207, 210; 1882, Nutter v. O'Donnell, 6 Colo. 253, 259; 1887, Buckingham v. Harris, 10 Colo. 455, 463, 15 Pac. 817; 1893, DeRemer v. Parker, 19 Colo. 242, 245, 34 Pac. 980; Columbia (Dist.): 1894, Olmstead v. Webb, 5 D. C. App. 38, 57, semble; 1898, Throckmorton v. Holt, 12 D. C. App. 552, 582, 584; Connecticut: 1904, Vincent v. Mutual R. F. L. Ass'n, 77 Conn. 281, 58 Atl. 963 (age, in an insurance policy); 1904, McAllin v. McAllin, 77 Conn. 398, 59 Atl. 413; 1916, State v. Williams, 90 Conn. 126, 96 A. R. 370 (murder); Delaware: 1921, Ajax Rubber Co. v. Rothacker, Inc., — Del. —, 114 Atl. 610 (promissory notes); Florida: 1891, Jacksonville T. & K. W. R. Co. v. Peninsular L. T. & M. Co., 27 Fla. 1, 157, 9 So. 661; 1909, Jenkins v. State, 58 Fla. 62, 50 So. 582; 1911, Johnson v. Rhodes, 62 Fla. 220, 56 So. 439; Georgia: 1856, Bryan v. Walton, 20 Ga. 480, 498, 510; 1860, Choice v. State, 31 Ga. 424, 465; 1897, White v. State, 100 Ga. 659, 28 S. E. 423; 1899, Milam v. State, 108 Ga. 29, 33 S. E. 818; 1903, Green v. State, 119 Ga. 120, 45 S. E. 990; Hawaii: Rev. L. 1915, § 2403; 1904, Lo Toon v. Terr., 16 Haw. 351, 357 (alibi); Idaho: Comp. St. 1919, §§ 6847, 8941; 1905, State v. Waln, 14 Ida. 1, 80 Pac. 221; 1919, State v. Mushrow, 32 Ida. 562, 185 Pac. 1075 (illegal sale of liquor); Illinois: 1879, Mueller v. Rebhan, 94 Ill. 142, 150 (quoted supra); 1896, Chytraus v. Chicago, 160 Ill. 18, 43 N. E. 335 (liberal range in rebuttal is a policy specially sanctioned in assessment cases, where the municipality cannot clearly know beforehand what parts of its case will be disputed); 1898, Washington Ice Co. v. Bradley, 171 Ill. 255, 49 N. E. 519; 1903, Hartrich v. Hawes, 202 Ill. 334, 67 N. E. 13; 1908, Floto v. Floto, 233 Ill. 605, 84 N. E. 712; 1910, Albrecht v. Hittle, 248 Ill. 72, 93 N. E. 351 (the proponent of a will must offer his expert witnesses on the case in chief, but in rebuttal he may offer expert opinion on the contestant's evidence); 1921, People v. Cunningham, 300 Ill. 376, 133 N. E. 270 (robbery); 1922, People v. Byrnes, 302 Ill. 407, 134 N. E. 730 (robbery); Indiana: Burns' Ann. St. 1914, § 2136 (criminal cases); 1870, State v. Parker, 33 Ind. 285; 1878, Holmes v. Hinkle, 63 Ind. 518, 523; 1881, Pittsburg C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Noel, 77 Ind. 110, 122; 1883, Perrill v. Nichols, 89 Ind. 444, 447; 1888, Kahlenbeck v. State, 119 Ind. 118, 122, 21 N. E. 460; 1889, Brown v. Marshall, 120 Ind. 323, 325, 22 N. E. 312; 1896, Ransbottom v. State, 144 Ind. 250, 43 N. E. 218; 1899, Ellison v. Branstrator, 153 Ind. 146, 54 N. E. 433; 1906, Tinkle v. Wallace, 167 Ind. 382, 79 N. E. 355; Iowa: Code 1897, §§ 3700, 5372, Comp. Code 1919, §§ 7495, 9434; 1862, Samuels v. Griffith, 13 Ia. 103; 1865, Donaldson v. R. Co., 18 Ia. 280, 290; 1871, Hubbell v. Ream, 31 Ia. 289, 295; Crane v. Ellis, 31 Ia. 510; 1872, Bouls v. Shields, 35 Ia. 231; 1876, McNichols v. Wilson, 42 Ia. 385, 392; 1882, Hess v. Wilcox, 58 Ia. 380, 383, 10 N. W. 847; 1905, State v. Seligman, 127 Ia. 415, 103 N. W. 357; 1906, State v. Thomas, 135 Ia. 177, 109 N. W. 900; Kansas: Gen. St. 1915, § 7185; 1875, Rheinhart v. State, 14 Kan. 318, 323; 1919, Eames v. Clark, 104 Kan. 65, 177 Pac. 540 (speed of an automobile); Kentucky: C. C. P. 1895, §§ 317, the judge, according to the nature of the case, to allow a party who has closed his case to introduce further evidence. This depends upon the circumstances of each particular case, and falls within the absolute discretion of the judge, to be exercised or not, as he may think proper."

592, C. Cr. P. § 224; 1900, Oldham v. Com., — Ky. —, 58 S. W. 418; 1900, Wilson v. Hays' Ex'r, 109 Ky. 321, 58 S. W. 773; 1890, Williams v. Com., 90 Ky. 596, 14 S. W. 595 (here the Court disparages too easily the trial Court's ruling, on the theory that no discretion was actually exercised); 1904, Fletcher v. Com., — Ky. —, 83 S. W. 588 (Williams v. Com. approved); 1905, Tetterton v. Com., — Ky. —, 89 S. W. 8; 1912, Bennett v. Com., 150 Ky. 604, 150 S. W. 806; 1913, Smith v. Com., 154 Ky. 613, 157 S. W. 1089; Louisiana: 1897, State v. Pruett, 49 La. An. 283, 21 So. 843; 1903, Southern R. Co. v. Wilson, 111 La. —, 35 So. 561; 1905, State v. Boice, 114 La. 856, 38 So. 584; 1906, State v. Johnson, 116 La. 30, 40 So. 521; 1906, State v. Douglas, 116 La. 524, 40 So. 860; 1907, State v. Heidelberg, 120 La. 300, 45 So. 256; 1913, State v. Bellard, 132 La. 491, 61 So. 537; 1919, Snowden v. State, 133 Md. 624, 106 Atl. 5 (murder); Massachusetts: 1848, Cushing v. Billings, 2 Cush. 158; 1855, Com. v. Moulton, 4 Gray 39 (alibi); 1871, Com. v. Dam, 107 Mass. 210; 1878, Com. v. Blair, 126 Mass. 40; 1890, Com. v. Meaney, 151 Mass. 55, 23 N. E. 730; 1897, Com. v. Kennedy, 170 Mass. 18, 48 N. E. 770; 1899, Lansky v. R. Co., 173 Mass. 20, 53 N. E. 128; 1904, Burnside v. Everett, 186 Mass. 4, 71 N. E. 82; 1920, Bilodeau v. Fitchburg & L. R. Co., 236 Mass. 526, 128 N. E. 872; 1921, Vallen v. Cullin, — Mass. —, 130 N. E. 204 (personal injuries); Michigan: 1872, Danielson v. Dyckman, 26 Mich. 169, 170; 1877, Somerville v. Richards, 37 Mich. 299, 303; 1882, Brown v. Marshall, 47 Mich. 576, 578, 11 N. W. 392; 1885, People v. Wilson, 55 Mich. 506, 515, 21 N. W. 905; 1895, Maier v. Benefit Ass'n, 107 Mich. 687, 65 N. W. 552; 1906, People v. Harper, 145 Mich. 402, 108 N. W. 688 ('corpus delicti' and eye witnesses; here, in a technical and ill-advised opinion, citing no authority, the Supreme Court interferes with the trial Court's discretion); 1921, People v. Utter, — Mich. —, 185 N. W. 830 (murder); Minnesota: Gen. St. 1913, § 7799; Mississippi: 1896, Winterton v. R. Co., 73 Miss. 831, 20 So. 157; 1897, King v. State, 74 Miss. 576, 21 So. 235; 1904, Flowers v. State, 85 Miss. 591, 37 So. 814; Missouri: Rev. St. 1919, § 4025; 1870, Babcock v. Babcock, 46 Mo. 243, 246; 1873, State v. Linney, 52 Mo. 40; 1898, Fullerton v. Fordyce, 144 Mo. 519, 44 S. W. 1053; 1900, State v. Weber, 156 Mo. 249, 56 S. W. 729; 1903, Beyer v. Hermann, 173 Mo. 295, 73 S. W. 164; 1906, State v. Miles, 199 Mo. 530, 98 S. W. 25; 1910, Seibel-Suessdorf C. & I. M. Co. v. Manufacturers' R. Co., 230 Mo. 59, 130 S. W. 288; Montana: Rev. C. 1921, §§ 9349, 10667, 11969; 1904, Maloney v. King, 30 Mont. 158, 76 Pac. 4; Nebraska: Rev. St. 1922, § 10144; 1897, Davis v. State, 51 Nebr. 301, 70 N. W. 984; 1897, Ream v. State, 52 Nebr. 727, 73 N. W. 227; 1900, Baer v. State, 59 Nebr. 655, 81 N. W. 856; 1917, O'Connor's Estate, 101 Nebr. 617, 164 N. W. 570 (handwriting witnesses, on an issue of forgery of a will); Nevada: Rev. L. 1912, § 7159 (criminal causes); § 5210 (civil cases); 1882, McLeod v. Lee, 17 Nev. 103, 118, 28 Pac. 124; Lamance v. Byrnes, 17 Nev. 197, 202, 30 Pac. 700; New Mexico: Annot. St. 1915, § 4464; 1920, State v. Hunt, 26 N. M. 160, 189 Pac. 1111 (murder); New Jersey: 1905, Willett v. Morse, — N. J. L. —, 60 Atl. 362; 1919, State v. Unger, 93 N. J. L. 50, 107 Atl. 270; New York: C. Cr. P. 1881, § 388; 1838, Hastings v. Palmer, 20 Wend. 225; 1859, Stephens v. People, 19 N. Y. 549, 573; 1882, Leighton v. People, 88 N. Y. 117, 119; 1897, People v. Strait, 154 N. Y. 165, 47 N. E. 1090 (sanity); 1897, People v. Koerner, 154 N. Y. 355, 48 N. E. 730; North Carolina: 1874, State v. Haynes, 71 N. C. 79, 83; 1881, State v. King, 84 N. C. 737, 741; North Dakota: Comp. L. 1913, §§ 7619, 10821; 1905, Petersburg School Dist. v. Peterson, 14 N. D. 344, 103 N. W. 756; Ohio: Gen. Code Ann. 1921, §§11477, 13675; 1876, Webb v. State, 29 Oh. St. 351, 356; Oklahoma: Comp. St. 1921, §§ 541, 2687, 2869; 1904, Cochran v. U. S., 14 Okl. 108, 76 Pac. 672; 1919, Tingley v. State, 16 Okl. Cr. App. 639, 184 Pac. 599 (manslaughter; trial Court's discretion sanctioned); 1921, Beason v. State, — Okl. Cr. —, 195 Pac. 792 (murder); 1921, Waller v. State, — Okl. Cr. —, 199 Pac. 224; Oregon: Laws 1920, § 132; 1888, State v. Hunsaker, 16 Or. 497, 499, 19 Pac. 605; Pennsylvania: 1865, Gaines v. Com., 50 Pa. 319, 329; 1897, Campbell v. Brown, 183 Pa. 112, 38 Atl. 516; 1902, Acklin v. McCalmont Oil Co., 201 Pa. 257, 50 Atl. 955; 1920, Com. v. Morrison, 266 Pa. 223, 109 Atl. 878 (sanity); Philippine Islands: P. C. 1911, Gen. Order 58 of 1900, § 31; Porto Rico: Rev. St. & C. 1911, § 6265; Rhode Island: 1898, State v. Ballou, 20 R. I. 607, 40 Atl. 861; South Carolina: 1881, State v. Clyburn, 16 S. C. 378; 1887, State v. Jacobs, 28 S. C. 30, 37; 1896, Ludden & Bates S. M. H. v. Sumter, 47 S. C. 335, 25 S. E. 150; South Dakota: Rev. C. 1919, § 2505; § 4868 (substantially like Cal. P. C. § 1093, omitting the clause about previous convictions in par. 1); Tennessee: 1843, Smith v. Britton, 4 Humph. 201; 1848, Story v. Saunders, 8 Humph. 667; 1900, Jones v. Galbraith, — Tenn. —, 59 S. W. 350; 1905, Union R. Co. v. Hunton, 114 Tenn. 609, 88 S. W. 182; Texas: Rev. Civ. St. 1911,

1850, FROST, J., in Clinton v. McKenzie, 5 Strobh. 36, 42: "The rule is most salutary in its fitness to prevent trickery, and is necessary in many cases to prevent surprise and injustice. Witnesses can with difficulty be kept in attendance on the Court after they have given their testimony, and the defendant might be taken at great disadvantage if the plaintiff were permitted to return to his evidence in chief and renew the attack after the defendant had closed his case and his witnesses had left the court. This rule, like many others for the conduct of a trial, cannot however be rigorously and uniformly enforced; much must of necessity be left to the discretion of the judge. Whenever evidence has been inadvertently omitted, the uniform practice of our Courts is to permit the party to supply the omission, unless it is apparent that it will operate injustice to his adversary."

1850, WAITE, J., in Hathaway v. Hemingway, 20 Conn. 191, 195: "The rule upon this subject is a familiar one. When, by the pleadings, the burden of proof of any matter in issue is thrown upon the plaintiff, he must in the first instance introduce all the evidence upon which he relies to establish his case. He cannot, as said by Lord Ellenborough, go into half his case and reserve the remainder. The same rule applies to the defence. After the plaintiff has closed his testimony, the defendant must then bring forward all the evidence upon which he relies to meet the claim on the part of the plaintiff. He cannot introduce a part and reserve the residue for some future occasion. After he has rested, neither party can as a matter of right introduce any farther testimony which may properly be considered testimony in chief. . . . But this rule is not in all cases an inflexible one. There is and of necessity must be a discretionary power, vested in the Court before which a trial is had, to relax the operation of the rule, when great injustice will be done by a strict adherence to it. If a party, by a mere mistake or inadvertence, omit to introduce a piece of testimony constituting an essential link in his chain of evidence, and does not discover the mistake until after he has closed his testimony, the Court in its discretion will, rather than that his cause should be sacrificed, permit him to supply the omission; taking care, however, to see that the adverse party is not prejudiced by the relaxation of the rule. This discretionary power, however, is to be exercised with great caution. While the rule may be departed from for the sake of preventing great and manifest injustice, it ought not to be so frequently disregarded as to render it a rule in name and not in reality."

1859, DUNLOP, C. J., in Spear v. Abbott, C. C. D. C., Fed. Cas. 13,222: "The rule of practice in the courts of England and this country in the trial of common law causes before a jury requires a party to examine all his witnesses in chief before he closes his opening examination, and forbids afterwards the introduction of any other than rebutting proof. This rule in jury trials produces order and method and expedition in the transaction of business, and promotes fairness and prevents fraud in the conduct of common-law causes. It makes a party show his hand to his adversary, prevents his splitting up his proof and retaining part for reply, and defeats the fraudulent purpose, if such exists, to make evidence to overcome and fit the defense."

§ 1951; Rev. C. Cr. P. 1911, § 717; 1897, Burt v. State, 38 Tex. Cr. 397, 420, 40 S. W. 1000, 43 S. W. 344; Utah: Comp. L. 1917, §§ 6802, 8975; 1899, State v. Webb, 18 Utah 441, 56 Pac. 159 (unless the opponent clearly appears to have been put at a disadvantage); 1915, State v. Benson, 46 Utah 74, 148 Pac. 445 (admissions of a defendant are proper for the first time in rebuttal); Vermont: 1826, Pingry v. Washburn, 1 Aik. 264, 267; 1838, Clayes v. Ferris, 10 Vt. 112; 1849, Goss v. Turner, 21 Vt. 437, 439; 1860, Kent v. Lincoln, 32 Vt. 591, 598; 1883, Stevens v. Dudley, 56 Vt. 158, 164 (in this State the original practice, subject always to the trial Court's discretion, was to allow the plaintiff "to rest on making a 'prima facie' case, and afterwards to adduce additional as well as rebutting testimony"; but under later rules this practice was abandoned, though the principle as to discretion remains the same; see Clayes v. Ferris, Kent v. Lincoln, Stevens v. Dudley); 1877, State v. Magoon, 50 Vt. 333, 338 (applicable equally to the prosecution in a criminal case); 1883, Stevens v. Dudley, 56 Vt. 158, 164; 1896, Watkins v. Rist, 68 Vt. 486, 35 Atl. 431; 1898, State v. Lawrence, 70 Vt. 524, 41 Atl. 1027 (even in a criminal case, provided the defendant has had a fair opportunity to meet the evidence); Virginia: 1854, Brooks v. Wilcox, 11 Gratt. 411, 413, 417 (even after express notice by the opponent during the case in chief); 1900, Reed v. Com., 98 Va. 817, 36 S. E. 399; 1918, Rust v. Reid, 124 Va. 1, 97 S. E. 324 (testamentary capacity); Washington: R. & B. Code 1909, § 339; West Virginia: 1897, McManus v. Mason, 43 W.Va. 196, 27 S. E. 293; 1901, State v. Williams, 49 W. Va. 220, 38 S. E. 495; Wisconsin: 1895, McGowan v. R. Co., 91 Wis. 147, 64 N. W. 891; 1897, Stanhilber v. Graves, 97 Wis. 515, 73 N. W. 48; 1904, Schiesler v. State, 122 Wis. 365, 99 N. W. 593 (sanity); 1905, Steward v. State, 124 Wis. 623, 102 N. W. 1079 (sanity); Wyoming: Comp. St. 1920, §§ 5769, 7532; 1911, Russell v. State, 19 Wyo. 272, 116 Pac. 451.

1879, DICKEY, J., in Mueller v. Rebhan, 94 Ill. 142, 150 (testamentary sanity; the proponent of the will had been refused a further opportunity for evidence of sanity): "As a matter or practice, the rulings of Courts are not uniform upon this question. In some Courts it is held that neither party is called upon to produce all his testimony in support of any allegation in issue until it has been developed on the trial that an issue in the evidence is made upon that question. . . . That rule has not prevailed in the Courts of this State; but the more usual rule is, that the party upon whom the burden of proof rests must, in the first instance, produce all the proof he proposes to offer in support of his allegation; and after his adversary has closed his proof, he may only be heard in adducing proof directly rebutting the proofs given by his adversary. This question of practice must, to a greater or less degree, be left to the discretion of the Court trying the case. This discretion should be exercised in such a manner that neither party shall be taken by surprise and deprived, without notice, of an opportunity of producing any material proof."

In applying this customary rule of order, however, certain distinctions must be noted:

(1) In the first place, it is not always easy to determine, in a given instance, whether the situation before the Court was one of the present sort, or involved evidence offered after the whole case is closed (post, § 1876), or evidence offered on a re-direct examination but during the case in chief (post, § 1896), or evidence offered on a recall, but still during the case in chief (post, § 1898); the lack of a uniform and clear nomenclature leading to frequent ambiguity in judicial language. But, as the principle of the trial Court's discretion applies in all these situations, the obscurity does no serious practical harm.

(2) In the next place, the evidence offered thus tardily may consist in new facts which ought to have been put in before, or in a repetition (either by a new witness or by the same former witness [2]) of former facts already once evidenced. The customary rule will equally forbid both. But, on the other hand, the principle of the trial Court's discretion will equally sanction either; though the reasons in a given instance for thus permitting a departure would differ in the two cases, since for the former an inadvertent omission might be a sufficient excuse, while for the latter a just cause would be found in the need of clearing up an obscurity or emphasizing a disputed point upon which substantial contest had not been anticipated; moreover, the danger of unfair surprise might be present in the former case, but could hardly exist in the latter case.

(3) The nature of the issues in each case will usually vary so that no more detailed rules can be laid down for determining whether a particular fact belongs in the case in chief or in the case in rebuttal. But the distribution of the burden of proof and the bearing of the rule as to a 'prima facie' case (post, § 2494) will often specially aid in determining. For example, where, in contesting a will, the proponent of the will is by those rules not required to introduce evidence of sanity, and the contestant has the duty of producing evidence of insanity, it is clear that the proponent's evidence of sanity is no part of his case in chief, and that it is therefore properly reserved until it becomes necessary in his case in rebuttal. But in a jurisdiction where the proponent is required to raise the presumption of sanity by producing some evidence of it in his case in chief, then it may conceivably (though not wisely, it would seem) be held that he must introduce it all at that time, and that he may not properly reserve it for his case in rebuttal.[3]

[2] The latter situation may coincide with those of § 1896 (re-direct examination) and § 1898 (recall), post.

(4) For matters properly not evidential until the rebuttal, the proponent has a right to put them in at that time, and they are therefore not subject to the discretionary exclusion of the trial Court.[4] Matters that should have been put in at first may by that discretion be refused later, because this is but the denial of a second opportunity. But matters of true rebuttal could not have been put in before, and to exclude them now would be to deny them their sole opportunity for admission. Hence, while the trial Court's determination of what is properly rebutting evidence should be respected, yet, if its nature as such is clear, the proponent does not need the trial Court's express consent to admit it as involving a departure from the customary rule.[5]

This will always be the case for evidence offered to impeach the opponent's witnesses by way of moral character, bias, self-contradiction, or the like.[6] This doctrine is justly applied also where the proponent has found it necessary or desirable, by reason of the opponent's cross-examination, partly to anticipate his case in rebuttal by going into it during his case in chief, — for example, on a re-direct examination; here he may take up the same subject again during the rebuttal.[7] It has also sometimes, by discretion, been extended even to the case where this partial anticipation of the rebuttal during the case in chief has been voluntary and irregular on the proponent's part, i. e. where he has not had the excuse of necessity.[8] In general, such

[3] See examples in note 1, supra, and post, § 2500.

[4] Whether an error in this respect should be adequate ground for a new trial is a different question, and of course a rational liberality would seldom find here such a ground: ante, § 1867, note 3.

[5] 1871, Wade v. Thayer, 40 Cal. 578, 584; 1872, Farmers & M. Bank v. Young, 36 Ia. 45, 46, semble; 1917, State ex rel. Betts v. Stout, 101 Kan. 600, 168 Pac. 853; 1902, Glenn v. Stewart, 167 Mo. 584, 67 S. W. 237; 1902, Anaconda C. M. Co. v. Heinze, 27 Mont. 161, 69 Pac. 909.

[6] For example, a self-contradiction: 1911, Roberts v. State, 25 Del. Boyce 385, 79 Atl. 396; 1886, Winchell v. Winchell, 100 N. Y. 163, 2 N. E. 897; 1889, Ankersmit v. Tuch, 114 N. Y. 54, 20 N. E. 819.

For the general principles as to evidence in supporting an impeached witness, see ante, §§ 1104–1144.

For the doctrine that one irrelevant fact may justify another irrelevancy in rebuttal, see ante, § 15.

For the doctrine as to impeaching an impeaching witness, see ante, § 894.

[7] 1838, Briggs v. Ainsworth, 2 Mo. & Rob. 168.

[8] 1854, York v. Pease, 2 Gray Mass. 282 (here the plaintiff had anticipated a defence of privileged communication); 1820, Harrison v. Rowan, 3 Wash. C. C. 582 (questions as to testator's sanity, improperly asked in chief by discretionary variations should be liberally dealt with; for nothing can be more irrational or more unjust than to apply the judicial lash of a new trial to errors of trivial importance.

§ 1874. Opponent's Case in Rejoinder. For the opponent's case in rejoinder there remain properly only two sorts of evidence, namely, evidence explaining away the effect of new facts brought forward by the proponent in rebuttal, and evidence impeaching the witnesses testifying in rebuttal. All other evidence could and should have been put in during the case in reply. Accordingly, evidence of the latter sort is ordinarily not to be received in the case in rejoinder; though, here as elsewhere, the trial Court in discretion may allow it to be brought forward at this time;[1] and it is here immaterial, subject to limits above noted (ante, § 1873, par. 2), whether the evidence consists in new facts or in a repetition of facts already once put in.

On the other hand, for evidence legitimately receivable in rejoinder — in particular, evidence impeaching rebuttal witnesses — there has been no prior opportunity to adduce it, and hence it is here entitled to be received, without depending on the Court's discretion to relax the usual order;[2] for this class of evidence, what has been said in the foregoing section (§ 1873, par. 4) is equally applicable.

§ 1875. Stages after Rejoinder. It is not conceivable that, after a rejoinder, there can be any evidence for which there has not already been an opportunity of admission, except evidence impeaching witnesses in the preceding stage; and even for this excepted class it can hardly be worth while to confuse the issues by new evidence of such relatively minor importance.

---

the propounder of the will, allowed again in re-examination).

It would seem that rebutting facts which could have been obtained from the opponent's witness on cross-examination, but are postponed and are sought by calling the same witness in rebuttal, do come within the present allowance; there was a fair opportunity to bring them out and it was not availed of; hence, any later power of inquiry should be within the trial Court's discretion. Contra: 1901, Hamilton v. Smith, 74 Conn. 374, 50 Atl. 884.

§ 1874. [1] In the following cases it is sometimes impossible to learn whether the Court is dealing with the present case, or with the situation involved in §§ 1897, 1899, post (re-cross-examination), or with that of the next note: 1895, Wilkinson v. State, 106 Ala. 23, 17 So. 457; 1887, Barkly v. Copeland, 74 Cal. 1, 8, 15 Pac. 307; 1889, First National Bank v. Wolff, 79 Cal. 69, 73, 21 Pac. 551, 748; 1850, Hathaway v. Hemingway, 20 Conn. 191, 195; 1891, Belden v. Allen, 61 Conn. 173, 23 Atl. 963; 1853, Walker v. Walker, 14 Ga. 242, 250; 1895, Willard v. Pettitt, 153 Ill. 663, 39 N. E. 991; 1865, Donaldson v. R. Co., 18 Ia. 280, 290; 1872, Cannon v. Iowa City, 34 Ia. 203; 1879, State v. Woods, 31 La. An. 267; 1886, State v. Gonsoulin, 38 La. An. 459, 462; 1892, State v. Lyons, 44 La. An. 106, 10 So. 409; 1893, State v. Spencer, 45 La. An. 1, 9, 12 So. 135; 1895, Devonshire v. Peters, 104 Mich. 501, 63 N. W. 973; 1905, State v. Forsha, 190 Mo. 296, 88 S. W. 746 (the rule applies equally to a defendant who did not testify in chief for the defence but offers himself in rejoinder); 1898, Argabright v. State, 56 Nebr. 363, 76 N. W. 876; 1859, Stephens v. People, 19 N. Y. 573; 1887, State v. Dilley, 15 Or. 75, 13 Pac. 648; 1868, Koenig v. Bauer, 57 Pa. 168, 172; 1850, Clinton v. McKenzie, 5 Strobh. S. C. 36, 41; 1874, Bittick v. State, 40 Tex. 117, 120; 1868, Pratt v. Rawson, 40 Vt. 183, 188.

For the doctrine as to impeaching an impeaching witness, see ante, § 894.

[2] 1882, Nutter v. O'Donnell, 6 Colo. 253, 259, semble; 1859, Thomas v. State, 27 Ga. 287, 298, semble; 1899, State v. Summer, 55 S. C. 32, 32 S. E. 771 (after new witnesses called in rebuttal, the rejoinder is entitled to impeach their character; three judges dissenting); 1860, Kent v. Lincoln, 32 Vt. 591, 599; 1899, State v. Staley, 45 W. Va. 792, 32 S. E. 198 (the rejoinder is entitled to impeach character of witness first called on rebuttal). Contra: 1903, Keffer v. State, 12 Wyo. 49, 73 Pac. 556.

Accordingly, it would seem that the trial Court's discretion should determine whether there may be any case at all in re-rebuttal or re-rejoinder. There is, however, little authority upon these rare stages of the cause.[1]

2. After Case Closed

§ 1876. Case Closed: (1) Offeror's Case alone Closed. After a party has declared his presentation of evidence to be completed, there is thenceforth no proper occasion for the introduction of evidence by him. Nevertheless, inadvertences of counsel and inevitable delay of witnesses occur constantly in trials, and it would be unnecessary and unjust to hold that from the moment of the announcement of the closing there is to be an invariable rule of exclusion. Courts are therefore agreed that, in the trial Court's discretion, evidence may none the less be subsequently admitted:[1]

§ 1875. [1] 1862, State v. Alford, 31 Conn. 40, 46 (re-rebuttal allowable in discretion).

Compare the rule as to impeaching an impeaching witness, ante, § 894.

§ 1876. [1] In the following rulings, it is often impossible to learn whether the Court is dealing with the situation here involved, or with that of the next section (both cases closed), or with that of § 1873, ante (case in chief ended); but the same general principle of the trial Court's discretion applies to all. Furthermore, the rulings and statutes under the next four sections (§§ 1877–1880), admitting evidence in discretion, would of course apply the same rule for the present situation.

ENGLAND: 1823, Brown v. Giles, 1 C. & P. 118 (Park, J., allowed it; but intimated a stricter rule for criminal cases); 1826, Giles v. Powell, 2 C. & P. 259, 261 (quoted supra); 1841, Johnson v. Clinton, A. M. & O. 123, 124 (Brady, C. B.: "It is very objectionable to be recalling witnesses to patch up a case, and if I thought there were the slightest danger of perjury I should not think of it"); 1841, Murray v. Dublin, A. M. & O. 130, 132 ("There may be cases where such a course would be expedient"); Kelly v. Smith, A. M. & O. 150; 1842, Bell v. Stewart, A. M. & O. 401; 1849, Middleton v. Barned, 4 Exch. 241, 243; 1911, Foster's Case, 6 Cr. App. 196.

UNITED STATES: Federal: 1840, Philadelphia & T. R. Co. v. Stimpson, 14 Pet. 448, 463; 1892, Omaha Bridge Cases, 10 U. S. App. 98, 191, 2 C. C. A. 174, 51 Fed. 309; Arkansas: Dig. 1919, § 4190; 1915, Nutt v. Fry, 119 Ark. 450, 177 S. W. 1137 (money due); California: 1859, Fairchild v. Stage Co., 13 Cal. 599, 605; 1872, Barry v. Bennett, 45 Cal. 80, 85 (refused); 1874, Abbey H. Ass'n v. Willard, 48 Cal. 614, 618; Columbia (Dist.): 1908, Central National Bank v. National Metropolitan Bank, 31 D. C. App. 391; Georgia: 1905, Brooke v. Lowe, 122 Ga. 358, 50 S. E. 146; 1908, Ellenberg v. Southern R. Co., 5 Ga. App. 389, 63 S. E. 240; 1911, Wickham v. Torley, 136 Ga. 594, 71 S. E. 881; Illinois: 1904, Hauser v. People, 210 Ill. 253, 71 N. E. 416; Indiana: 1872, Williams v. Allen, 40 Ind. 295, 297; Iowa: 1868, Huey v. Huey, 26 Ia. 525; 1885, Meadows v. Ins. Co., 67 Ia. 57, 59; 1889, Randolf v. Bloomfield, 77 Ia. 50, 53; 1901, Cathcart v. Rogers, 115 Ia. 30, 87 N. W. 738 (after motion for a verdict); 1904, Hill v. Glenwood, 124 Ia. 479, 100 N. W. 522; Kansas: 1893, Hill v. Miller, 50 Kan. 659, 662; Louisiana: 1826, Richardson v. Debuys, 4 Mart. N. S. 127; 1833, Stone v. Carter, 5 La. 448, 450; 1855, Labarre v. Hopkins, 10 La. An. 466; 1875, State v. Coleman, 27 La. An. 691, 694; 1881, State v. Rose, 33 La. An. 932; 1901, State v. Sims, 106 La. 453, 31 So. 71; 1906, State v. Rodriguez, 115 La. 1004, 40 So. 438; 1906, State v. Goodson, 116 La. 388, 40 So. 771; Massachusetts: 1848, Com. v. Eastman, 1 Cush. 189, 197, 217; 1901, Cushing v. Cushing, 180 Mass. 150, 61 N. E. 814; Missouri: 1837, Mary v. State, 5 Mo. 71, 80 (here on the facts, involving an agreement of counsel, the allowance was held improper); Minnesota: 1920, State v. Jouppis, 147 Minn. 87, 179 N. W. 678; Montana: 1904, Schilling v. Curran, 30 Mont. 370, 76 Pac. 998; Nevada: 1874, State v. Murphy, 9 Nev. 394, 397; New Hampshire: 1902, Stone v. Boscawen Mills, 71 N. H. 288, 52 Atl. 119 (after argument for a motion for a non-suit); New York: 1842, Shepard v. Potter, 4 Hill 202 ("No case gives a discretion to cut off further testimony, if it be pertinent, unless the party be left to the evidence as it stood when he declared his case closed"; here the Court, by calling again one of the plaintiff's witnesses, had virtually changed for the opponent the situation); North Carolina: 1886, Olive v. Olive, 95 N. C. 485, 486; Oregon: 1898, State v. Isenhart, 32 Or. 569, 52 Pac. 170; Pennsylvania: 1901, Com. v. Biddle, 200 Pa. 640, 50 Atl. 262; Porto Rico: 1912, People v. Julián, 18 P. R. 905; Rhode Island: 1860, Hopkinton v. Waite, 6 R. I. 374, 380; South Carolina: 1895, State v. Derrick, 1826, ABBOTT, C. J., in Giles v. Powell, 2 C. & P. 259, 261, said: "that he would never allow a witness to be called back to get rid of any difficulty on the merits or on anything that went to the justice of the case, but that he always allowed it to be done to get rid of objections which were beside the justice of the case and little more than matter of form."

1831, O'NEAL, J., in Browning v. Huff, 2 Bail. 174, 179: "It has been a long and well settled practice to allow a plaintiff, when evidence essential to support the issue had been omitted accidentally or from supposing that before the Court sufficient, to adduce it even after the evidence had been closed, a motion for nonsuit made and argued, and even the opinion of the presiding judge pronounced in favor of the motion. The application of this rule of practice must always be left to the discretion of the presiding judge; though it ought never to be allowed to surprise or work any delay or loss to the defendant. I am, however, unable to see that the discretion allowed to the presiding judge was improperly exercised here. For if the plaintiff could, without delaying the Court or the party, make out a fact on which the proceedings themselves informed the defendant the plaintiff did rely, and which she had omitted to prove from supposing that in point of law it could not be questioned, surely she ought to have been permitted to do so. The attainment of speedy justice is one great object of a suit at law; and it would be a bad way of attaining this end to say to a party situated as the plaintiff was in the court below, 'Your case must fail, and you must begin 'de novo,' because you did not offer evidence before you closed which you can now obtain in a few moments.'"

§ 1877. Same: (2) Case of Both Parties Closed. Where both parties have finally closed their cases, the possibility of unfair disadvantage to the opponent by the admission of further evidence is no doubt greater; yet the same exigency, for honest purposes and with no unfair consequences, may equally exist; and therefore all Courts agree that the trial Court may in discretion sanction its admission:[1]

44 S. C. 344, 22 S. E. 338; 1904, Davis v. Collins, 69 S. C. 460, 48 S. E. 469; Vermont: 1883, State v. Hopkins, 56 Vt. 250, 262; Virginia: 1906, Pocahontas C. Co. v. Williams, 105 Va. 708, 54 S. E. 868; Wisconsin: 1891, Humphrey v. State, 78 Wis. 570, 572, 74 N. W. 836.

Distinguish the rule (post, § 2496) that after a motion for a verdict the party, if overruled, loses the benefit of the motion by putting in evidence.

§ 1877. [1] The remarks preceding note 1, § 1876, ante, apply equally to the following rulings:

ENGLAND: 1725, L. C. Macclesfield's Trial, 16 How. St. Tr. 767, 1261; 1828, George v. Radford, 3 C. & P. 464, 466; 1859, Wilkes v. Heaton, 17 U. C. Q. B. 95.

UNITED STATES: Federal: 1898, Hart v. U. S., 28 C. C. A. 612, 84 Fed. 799; Alabama: 1841, Towns v. Riddle, 2 Ala. 694; 1848, Gayle v. Bishop, 14 Ala. 552; Alaska: Comp. L. 1913, § 1500 (like Or. Laws 1920, § 862); California: C. C. P. 1872, § 2050, semble (quoted post, § 1896); 1871, Foote v. Richmond, 42 Cal. 439, 442; Colorado: 1875, Sellar v. Cleveland, 2 Colo. 532, 551; 1896, Plummer v. Mercantile Co., 23 Colo. 190, 47 Pac. 294; 1897, Brooke v. People, 23 Colo. 375, 48 Pac. 502; Connecticut: 1904, Alling v. Weissman, 77 Conn. 394, 59 Atl. 419; Florida: 1902, Anthony v. State, 44 Fla. 1, 32 So. 818; 1903, Ferrell v. State, 45 Fla. 26, 34 So. 220; Georgia: 1898, Huff v. State, 104 Ga. 521, 30 S. E. 808; 1898, Hunley v. State, 104 Ga. 755, 30 S. E. 958; 1900, Ward v. State, 112 Ga. 75, 37 S. E. 111; 1906, Bridger v. Exchange Bank, 126 Ga. 821, 56 S. E. 97 (during argument on a motion to direct a verdict); Hawaii: 1883, R. v. Heleliilii, 5 Haw. 16, 19; Idaho: Comp. St. 1919, § 8037 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 2050); Illinois: 1842, Young v. Bennett, 5 Ill. 47; 1903, Chicago City R. Co. v. Carroll, 206 Ill. 318, 68 N. E. 1087; 1887, Tucker v. People, 122 Ill. 583, 593, 13 N. E. 809; 1906, People v. Wiemers, 225 Ill. 17, 80 N. E. 45 (trial without a jury); Indiana: 1888, McNutt v. McNutt, 116 Ind. 545, 565, 19 N. E. 115; Iowa: 1869, Tisdale v. Ins. Co., 28 Ia. 12, 17; 1887, Cowan v. Musgrave, 73 Ia. 384, 387, 35 N. W. 496; 1889, Gorman v. R. Co., 78 Ia. 509, 513, 43 N. W. 303; 1892, Kimball v. Saguin, 86 Ia. 186, 192, 53 N. W. 116; 1893, Des Moines S. Bank v. Colfax H. Co., 88 Ia. 4, 55 N. W. 67; 1894, Hartley S. Bank v. McCorkell, 91 Ia. 660, 665, 60 N. W. 197; Kansas: 1875, Rheinhart v. State, 14 Kan. 318, 323; Kentucky: C. C. P. 1895, § 600; 1893, Mutual L. Ins. Co. v. Thomson, 94 Ky. 253, 22 S. W. 87; 1897, Froman v. Com., —

1801, KENT, J., in Alexander v. Byron, 2 John. Cas. 318, 319: "It can never be claimed by either party at trial as a matter of strict right, to open the cause to proof after full opportunity has been given to each side to be heard, and the testimony has been regularly and by mutual consent closed. It was therefore properly admitted, upon the argument of this motion, that the subsequent admission of testimony must rest upon the discretion of the Court, duly exercised according to the circumstances of the case. The parties must come to trial prepared, at their peril; and if either party has any good excuse for not being prepared, he is entitled of right to a postponement of the trial. . . . [Here the witness desired arrived during the argument of the defendant, who then offered him.] After the counsel for the defendant had declared that they had done with the examination of witnesses, and the plaintiff and his witnesses had in consequence of it left the court, it would then have been unreasonable to have received the witness, unless the plaintiff with his witnesses had been recalled. I do not think that witnesses are bound to stay, after the parties have declared they have done with the proofs; for this is equivalent to a discharge of the parties. If the witness had been received and had testified what he was offered to prove, it might have made a decisive change in the weight of the proofs; it would in fact have been a fresh trial of the cause; and unless the plaintiff had full opportunity to have been present with his witnesses, to have repelled the testimony if in his power, he would have had just cause to complain on the ground of surprise. . . . I cannot therefore say that in the present case the judge has not exercised a due discretion."

1811, TILGHMAN, C. J., in Richardson v. Stewart, 4 Binn. 198, 200: "I should be very tender in rejecting material testimony because offered at the last hour, unless it had been kept back by trick and the adverse party had been deceived and injured by it."

1818, CHEVES, J., in Price v. Jenkins, 1 Nott & McC. 153: "[To allow such tardy introduction of evidence] would frequently be a surprise on the opposite party which would be highly unjust. He probably would regulate his testimony by that of his opponent. He would dismiss his witnesses, when the testimony was closed in the usual manner; and, if allowed to reply, would be unable by reason of their absence. If allowed to reply and

Ky. —, 42 S. W. 728; Louisiana: 1841, Buel v. New York Steamer, 17 La. 541, 544; 1847, Le Blanc v. Nolan, 2 La. An. 223; 1877, State v. Colbert, 29 La. An. 715; 1897, State v. Gaubert, 49 La. An. 1692, 22 So. 930; 1898, State v. Jones, 51 La. An. 103, 24 So. 594; 1903, State v. Robertson, 111 La. 35, 35 So. 375; 1917, State v. Johnson, 141 La. 775, 75 So. 678 (confession); Michigan: 1921, People v. Bauer, 216 Mich. 659, 185 N. W. 694 (attempt at larceny; after "conclusion of the proofs," the case was allowed to be reopened to give evidence of venue); Missouri: 1841, Rucker v. Eddings, 7 Mo. 115, 117 (here, the trial Court's refusal to allow the other party also to put in new evidence, after one had been so allowed, was held improper on the facts); 1873, St. Louis v. Foster, 52 Mo. 513, 517; 1873, German Sav. Bank v. Kerlin, 53 Mo. 382, 384; 1883, State v. Smith, 80 Mo. 516, 520; 1888, Taylor v. Cayce, 97 Mo. 242, 251, 10 S. W. 832; 1894, State v. Pennington, 124 Mo. 388, 391, 27 S. W. 1106; 1896, State v. Eisenhour, 132 Mo. 140, 33 S. W. 785; 1897, State v. Laycock, 141 Mo. 274, 42 S. W. 723; 1903, Joplin Waterworks Co. v. Joplin, 177 Mo. 496, 76 S. W. 960; 1916 Buck v. St. Louis Union Trust Co., 267 Mo. 644, 185 S. W. 208 (undue testamentary influence); Montana: Rev. C. 1921, § 10667 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 2050); Nevada: 1897, Sweeney v. Hjul, 23 Nev. 409, 48 Pac. 1036; New York: 1801, Alexander v. Byron, 2 Johns. Cas. 318 (quoted supra); 1810, Mercer v. Sayre, 7 Johns. 306; 1825, Jackson v. Tallmadge, 4 Cow. 450; 1859, Williams v. Hayes, 20 N. Y. 58, 60; 1890, Carradine v. Hotchkiss, 120 N. Y. 608, 613, 24 N. E. 1020; North Carolina: 1892, Gregg v. Mallett, 111 N. C. 74, 79, 15 S. E. 936; 1896, Sutton v. Walters, 118 N. C. 495, 24 S. E. 357; Oklahoma: 1920, Felice v. State, — Okl. Cr. —, 190 Pac. 898 (shooting with intent to kill); 1920, Winfield v. State, — Okl. Cr. —, 191 Pac. 609; Oregon: Laws 1920, § 862 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 2050); Pennsylvania: 1811, Richardson v. Stewart, 4 Binn. 198, 200 (quoted supra); Philippine Islands: 1915, Castillo v. Sebullina, 31 P. I. 518, 522 (after a two years' continuance); Porto Rico: Rev. St. & C. 1911, § 1525 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 2050); 1908, Arruza v. Langier, 14 P. R. 24, 28 (breach of contract); Virginia: 1895, Bertha Zinc Co. v. Martin's Adm'r, 93 Va. 791, 22 S. E. 869; Washington: 1905, State v. Sexton, 37 Wash. 110, 79 Pac. 634; West Virginia: 1895, Perdue v. C. C. C. Co., 40 W. Va. 372, 21 S. E. 870; 1921, Jones v. Hebdo, 88 W. Va. 386, 106 S. E. 898 (assault); Wisconsin: 1890, Blewett v. Gaynor, 77 Wis. 378, 393, 46 N. W. 547.

he should be prepared, it would open the cause again fully as to him, to adduce any testimony in his power. The irregularity and confusion in the trial, and danger of frequent perjury, under such a practice, would be intolerable."

The practice in Chancery, as to enlarging publication by taking testimony after publication had passed (publication being supposed to mark the closing of the testimony on both sides) recognized also the same broad principle of discretion as controlling; but its examination is without the present purview.[2]

§ 1878. After Argument Begun. The presentation of evidence has naturally no place after argument on either side has begun. Moreover, a special danger of abuse for such a situation lies in the opportunity which it would afford for the deliberate coloring or manufacture of testimony to suit some specific need which may be apparent only after the opposing counsel's argument has revealed where the emphasis of his claim is placed and what conclusions he founds upon the evidence as already presented.

Nevertheless, situations may easily arise in which an honest purpose may justly be served, without unfair disadvantage, by admitting evidence at this stage; and it has always been conceded that the trial Court's discretion should not be hampered by an inflexible rule: [1]

[2] See a full and clear exposition of principle and authorities by Chancellor Kent, in Hamersly v. Lambert (1817), 2 John. Ch. 432.

In Edmund Burke's speech, protesting against those rulings of the House of Lords which excluded certain evidence in the trial of Warren Hastings, will be found a powerful plea for flexibility of rule in admitting evidence tardily (1794; Cobbett's Parliamentary Hist., XXXI, 347–358).

§ 1878. [1] To the following cases, add those of the next two sections, which would of course recognize the same principle of discretion for the present situation:

England: 1826, Walls v. Atcheson, 2 C. & P. 268, 269 ("It is better not to lay down any particular rule, but to leave it to the discretion of the judge who tries a cause, under the particular circumstances").

Canada: 1849, Scribner v. McLaughlin, 1 All. 379, 384; 1856, Doe v. Connoly, 3 All. 337.

UNITED STATES: Federal: 1906, Cincinnati N. O. & T. R. Co. v. Cox, 143 Fed. 110, C. C. A.; Alabama: 1883, Hobbs v. State, 75 Ala. 1, 6; 1889, Dyer v. State, 88 Ala. 225, 229, 7 So. 267 (here, after charge given); Arizona: Rev. St. Civ. C. § 513 ("at any time before the conclusion of the argument," the trial Court may, "where it appears to be necessary to the due administration of justice," allow omissions to be supplied, and prescribe terms); Connecticut: 1916, State v. Ricker, 90 Conn. 147, 96 Atl. 941 (reopening to correct testimony); Florida: 1905, Robinson v. State, 50 Fla. 115, 39 So. 465; 1909, Charles v. State, 58 Fla. 17, 50 So. 419; Georgia: 1860, Bigelow v. Young, 30 Ga. 121, 125; 1873, Eberhart v. State, 47 Ga. 598, 604, 607; 1888, Blackman v. State, 80 Ga. 785, 791, 7 S. E. 626; 1902, Duggan v. State, 116 Ga. 846, 43 S. E. 253; 1903, Jackson v. State, 118 Ga. 780, 45 S. E. 604; 1905, Roberts v. State, 123 Ga. 146, 51 S. E. 374; 1906, Bundrick v. State, 125 Ga. 753, 54 S. E. 683; Hawaii: 1892, Herblay v. Norris, 8 Haw. 335, 336; Illinois: 1887, Tucker v. People, 122 Ill. 583, 593, 13 N. E. 809; 1900, Bolen v. People, 184 Ill. 338, 56 N. E. 408; Indiana: 1857, Trees v. Eakin, 9 Ind. 554, 557; 1858, Coats v. Gregory, 10 Ind. 345, 346; 1889, Stipp v. Claman, 123 Ind. 532, 538, 24 N. E. 131; 1900, Roush v. Roush, 154 Ind. 562, 55 N. E. 1017; Iowa: 1856, McManus v. Finan, 4 Ia. 283, 287; 1862, Wheeler v. Smith, 13 Ia. 564; 1867, McCormick v. Holbrook, 22 Ia. 487, 491; 1871, State v. Shean, 32 Ia. 88, 93; 1880, Kemerer v. Bournes, 53 Ia. 172, 175, 4 N. W. 921; 1881, Darland v. Rosencrans, 56 Ia. 122, 124, 8 N. W. 776; 1882, Smith v. Ins. Co., 58 Ia. 487, 12 N. W. 542; 1884, McDonald v. Moore, 65 Ia. 171, 175, 21 N. W. 504; 1891, McComb v. Ins. Co., 83 Ia. 247, 48 N. W. 1038; 1892, Kimball v. Saguin, 86 Ia. 186, 53 N. W. 116; 1893, Hamilton Buggy Co. v. Iowa B. Co., 88 Ia. 364, 373, 55 N. W. 496; 1893, State v. Burke, 88 Ia. 661, 665, 56 N. W. 180; 1900, State v. Wright, 112 Ia. 436, 84 N. W. 541; Kentucky: 1837, Vicaro v. Com., 5 Dana 504, 509; 1849, Hendron v. Robinson, 9 B. Monr. 503, 505 (if it is granted to one party, the other party should be allowed to impeach); Louisiana:

1811, LOCKE, J., in Parish v. Fite, 2 N. C. Law Repos. 238: "It must be admitted that the regular and proper practice would be never to suffer witnesses to be introduced after the first examination, but especially after the arguments of counsel are closed; yet we are of opinion that the discretion of the judge must govern this rule of practice. The reason of the rule is grounded on the temptation it holds out for committing the crime of perjury; that when the cause has been argued and the party discovers the points on which it is to rest, the Court will not permit a party to support the weak parts of his case by a re-examination of the case. And we think it is right in every case to adhere to such a practice, unless the Court discovered the necessity of a re-examination and that it will not be productive of the evil on which the rule is founded."

1818, TILGHMAN, C. J., in Duncan v. McCullough, 4 S. & R. 480, 482: "To make a general practice of introducing new evidence when, from the argument of the adversary, it is found where the shoe pinches, might lead to perjury, and at all events it would be productive of confusion in trials."

§ 1879. After Judge's Charge Given. It is equally true, on the one hand, that the production of evidence after the judge has given his instructions, either in part or in whole, is untimely and should in general be refused; and on the other hand, that the trial Court may in its discretion properly allow an exception to be made; and this is the conceded principle: [1]

C. Pr. 1900, § 484 (after argument begun, no evidence admissible except by consent); 1834, Psyche v. Paradol, 6 La. 366, 378 (discretion intimated to exist); 1845, Thomas v. Kean, 10 Rob. 80, 85 (Code rule enforced); 1852, Hill v. Miller, 7 La. An. 621 (allowed on the facts); 1855, New Orleans v. Locke, 10 La. An. 730 (same); Maine: 1836, McDonald v. Smith, 2 Shepl. 99; 1880, Ruggles v. Coffin, 70 Me. 468, 472; 1896, State v. Martin, 89 Me. 117; Michigan: 1909, People v. Blake, 157 Mich. 533, 122 N. W. 113; Missouri: 1844, Freleigh v. State, 8 Mo. 606, 612 (here allowing it to the prosecution); 1921, State v. Stokes, 288 Mo. 539, 232 S. W. 107 (seduction); Nebraska: 1879, Tomer v. Densmore, 8 Nebr. 384, 388; 1904, Blair v. State, 72 Nebr. 501, 101 N. W. 17; 1820, Tucker's Trial, N. Y., 3 Amer. St. Tr. 520, 522 (larceny; ownership evidenced after argument begun); North Carolina: 1816, Kelly v. Goodbread, 2 Taylor 28; 1824, Williams v. Averitt, 3 Hawks 308 (disapproving Kelly v. Goodbread, because there the Supreme Court interfered with the trial Court's discretion); 1851, State v. Rash, 12 Ired. 382, 385; Oklahoma: 1901, Harvey v. Terr., 11 Okl. 156, 65 Pac. 837; Pennsylvania: 1818, Duncan v. McCullough, 4 S. & R. 480 (quoted supra); South Carolina: 1845, Colclough v. Rhodus, 2 Rich. 76, 78; Texas: Rev. Civ. St. 1911, § 1952, Rev. C. Cr. P. § 718 ("allowable, where it appears to be necessary to the due administration of justice"); 1872, Cotton v. Jones, 37 Tex. 34; 1906, Jones v. State, 50 Tex. Cr. 194, 95 S. W. 1044; 1920, Mandosa v. State, 88 Tex. Cr. 84, 225 S. W. 169. Vermont: 1897, Buchanan v. Cook, 70 Vt. 168, 40 Atl. 102.

§ 1879. [1] Add the rulings in the following section, whose principle would apply equally to the present situations: Alabama: 1889, Dyer v. State, 88 Ala. 229, 7 So. 267; California: 1872, Keys v. Warner, 42 Cal. 60, 62 (cause submitted on stipulations); Indiana: 1906, Todd v. Crail, 167 Ind. 48, 77 N. E. 402 (judge sitting without a jury); Iowa: Code 1897, § 3719, Comp. C. § 7515 ("At any time before the cause is finally submitted to the Court or jury, either party may be permitted by the Court to give further testimony to correct an evident oversight or mistake," but terms may be imposed); 1862, Samuels v. Griffith, 13 Ia. 103, 104 (here, after bill of exceptions prepared); 1882, Eggspieller v. Nockles, 58 Ia. 649, 652, 12 N. W. 708 (here, after cause decided by the Court on depositions); 1887, Baker v. Jamison, 73 Ia. 698, 702, 36 N. W. 647 (after chancery cause submitted); 1889, Seekel v. Norman, 78 Ia. 254, 262, 43 N. W. 190; 1890, Sickles v. Dallas C. Bank, 81 Ia. 408, 411, 46 N. W. 1089 (after chancery cause submitted and taken under advisement; under the Code, after actual final submission, no evidence can be received, but the trial Court determines what is a final submission, and where its action is equivalent to setting aside the submission, this will be sanctioned); 1891, Dunn v. Wolf, 81 Ia. 688, 691, 47 N. W. 887 (rule of preceding case applied); 1893, Thatcher v. Stickney, 88 Ia. 454, 457, 55 N. W. 488 (same); Kentucky: 1824, Braydon v. Goulman, 1 T. B. Monr. 115; Louisiana: 1905, Parker v. Ricks, 114 La. 942, 38 So. 687 (after cause submitted to judge); New York: 1830, Law v. Merrills, 6 Wend. 268, 276 (quoted supra; but per Walworth, C., a recall to allow a witness to re-state his alleged testimony in terms denied by the bill of exceptions is

1824, MILLS, J., in Braydon v. Goulman, 1 T. B. Monr. 115, 118: "Neither side ought to be permitted to give evidence by piecemeal, then to apply for instructions, and again to mend and add to his proof until by repeated experiments he shall make it come up to the opinion of the Court. An adherence to these rules, generally, will be found necessary in all Courts of original jurisdiction; and without them confusion, loss of time, and captious and irritable conduct will follow. We say generally; for it will often be found necessary and proper for the presiding Court for good reasons to depart from them to attain complete justice; and where they ought or ought not to be varied must in a great measure be left to the sound discretion and prudence of the inferior Court, and this Court for such departure ought never to interfere, except injustice is done by that departure."

1830, BEARDSLEY, Sen., in Law v. Merrills, 6 Wend. 268, 281 (dealing with a trial Court's refusal to recall a witness to re-state or to amend his testimony): "It seems to be conceded by the Supreme Court, and the law undoubtedly is so, that it is matter of discretion with the Court whether to admit a re-examination or not; and as a general rule it will be conceded that such re-examinations should be discouraged. If such discretion exists, it can most properly be exercised by the Court trying the cause. The judges decided that they considered it improper to call him. They might have discovered a readiness on the part of the witness to testify for one side only, and very properly might have refused a re-examination on that ground; they might have refused it from the manner of testifying on the part of the witness; they might also have refused it on the ground that they were satisfied that the witness did not testify as he pretended he did. Now what tribunal is so competent to decide on these questions as the Court trying the cause? It appears to me that the propriety of a re-examination must depend in a great measure upon facts and appearances discoverable only to the tribunal before whom the witness is examined, and that no other is so competent to exercise this discretion. . . . It cannot be tolerated as a legal right that parties, after they have examined and cross-examined a witness and discharged him, shall be allowed as a matter of right to call him again after the cause is submitted and he has discovered from the charge of the Court what new testimony is required, or what part must be qualified to serve the interest of the party he wishes to favor. I can readily imagine cases where it would be proper to call a new witness or adduce new testimony, after the cause had been summed up, and yet that it would be very improper to allow a witness to be re-examined for the purpose of re-stating what he had previously said. . . . If it is matter of right, it destroys all discretion; and if it may be claimed as a legal right in one case, it may be in all cases similarly situated. . . . This cannot be tolerated as matter of right."

§ 1880. After Jury Retired. It is clear that the reception of evidence after the jury has retired to consider a verdict reaches the extreme of irregularity. The normal time for finally closing all evidence is the time when the tribunal proceeds to deliberate upon its effect:

1642, Lord Strafford's Trial, Lords' Journals, April 10: "The Lords . . . propounded this question to the Judges. 'Whether it be according to the course of practice and common justice, before the Judges in their several Courts, for the prosecutors in behalf of the King, during the time of trial to produce witnesses to discover the truth, and whether the prisoner may not do likewise?' The Lord Chief Justice delivered this as the unaniimproper, the bill being conclusive); Philippine Islands: 1907, U. S. v. Cinco, 8 P. I. 389 (judge without a jury); 1907, U. S. v. Base, 9 P. I. 48 (same); West Virginia: 1889, Lewis v. Alkire, 32 W. Va. 504, 9 S. E. 890 (after cause taken for decision by Court sitting without jury).

Where a cause is submitted to a Court sitting without a jury (either under Chancery practice or in a special case at common law), it is not easy to say whether the situation is to be regarded as of the present sort or of that dealt with in the next section; but the principle would probably not differ in the two cases; the authorities are placed above.

mous opinion of himself and all the rest of the Judges: 'That according to the course of practice and common justice, before them in their several Courts, upon trial by jury, as long as the prisoner is at the bar and the jury not sent away, either side may give their evidence and examine witnesses to discover truth.'"

1794, Mr. Edmund Burke, Report of Committee of House of Commons, Debrett's History of Hastings' Trial, 1796, Part VII, Suppl. xxxvii: "Your Committee observes that if the rules which respect the substance of the evidence are (as the great lawyers on whose authority we stand assert they are) no more than rules of convenience, much more are those subordinate rules which regulate the order, the manner, and the time of the arrangement. These are purely arbitrary, without the least reference to any fixed principle in the nature of things or to any settled maxim of jurisprudence; and consequently are variable at every instant, as the conveniences of the cause may require. We admit that, in the order of mere arrangement, there is a difference between examination of witnesses in chief and cross-examination; and that in general these several parts are properly cast according to the situation of the parties in the cause. But there neither is nor can be any precise rule to discriminate the exact bounds between examination and cross-examination. So as to time, there is necessarily some limit, but a limit hard to fix; the only one which can be fixed with any tolerable degree of precision is when the judge, after fully hearing all parties, is to consider of his verdict or his sentence."

Nevertheless, here too it may occur that evidence excusably omitted at an earlier stage may be honestly offered and justly received without unfair disadvantage to the opponent. In respect to the danger of such an exception, there is no radical difference between the preceding situation and the present one; for the chief danger lies only in the opponent's dismissal of his witnesses and in the unfair use of hints derived from the argument of counsel and the judge's charge. If an exception may be allowed after those stages have been reached, it requires no stretch of principle or of policy to allow it in the present stage. Accordingly, it is generally agreed that the trial Court, in its discretion determining the exigency, may exceptionally admit evidence at this stage.[1]

§ 1881. After Verdict Rendered. It has never been supposed that after the rendering of a jury's verdict at common law the admission of further evidence would be justified by any exigency.[1] In Chancery, however, where § 1880. [1] 1680, Hale, Pl. Cr., II, 307 (at the jury's request); 1767, Buller, Trials at Nisi Prius, 308 (same); 1910, Garner v. State, 97 Ark. 63, 132 S. W. 1010; 1906, Watson v. Barnes, 125 Ga. 733, 54 S. E. 723; 1917, People ex rel. Boos v. St. Louis I. M. & S. R. Co., 278 Ill. 25, 115 N. E. 854 (tried before a judge only); 1885, Meadows v. Ins. Co., 67 Ia. 57, 59, 24 N. W. 951 ("at any time before verdict"); 1891, McComb v. Ins. Co., 83 Ia. 247, 48 N. W. 1038, semble; 1912, People v. Ferrone, 204 N. Y. 551, 98 N. E. 8; 1811, Parish v. Fite, 2 N. C. Law Repos. 238; 1865, Van Huss v. Rainbolt, 2 Coldw. Tenn. 139, 141 (re-stating his testimony); 1915, Galan v. State, 76 Tex. Cr. 619, 177 S. W. 124 (murder; sheriff's testimony admitted, to answer a question propounded by the jury after retirement; Davidson, J., diss.); 1889, Meserve v. Folsom, 62 Vt. 504, 505, 511, 20 Atl. 926; 1851, Livingston v. Com., 7 Gratt. Va. 658; 1916, State v. Littleton, 77 W. Va. 804, 88 S. E. 458; Contra: Conn. Gen. St. 1918, § 5785 ("After the cause is committed to the jury," no evidence shall be received).

Compare the cases cited in the preceding section, of evidence offered after submission to a Court sitting without a jury.

§ 1881. [1] A radical and perhaps useful expedient, helping to flexibility, has been inserted into some Canadian codes: Alta. Rules of Court 1914, No. 192 (like Ont. Rule 257, for trials without a jury); B. C. Rules of Court 1912, No. 457A (like Ont. Rule 257); Man. Rev. St. 1913, c. 46, Rule 585 (like Ont. Rule 257); Ont. Rules of Court 1914, R. 257 (rule for allowing a verdict to be rendered conditionally on subsequent proof of a fact the jury are merely an advisory body whose report on questions of fact does not form a part of the judgment nor bind the Chancellor in his action, the cause may of course in his discretion be further investigated by him, either by rejecting the verdict entirely or by supplementing it, and the admission of other evidence after receiving the jury's verdict is therefore allowable if he considers it necessary.[2]

B. STAGES OF EXAMINATION FOR THE INDIVIDUAL WITNESS

§ 1882. Order of Examination in General. Where there are opposing parties, it is obvious that both cannot examine a witness at the same moment. There are therefore three conceivable ways of arranging the order of questions as between the parties. (a) The calling party and the opposing party might put questions, one after the other, on each topic as it came up, with no regularity or restriction, until each had asked as many questions as he chose; this plan would secure the minimum of restriction and would tend to the maximum of confusion. (b) Or, going to the other extreme, it might be required that the calling party examine all his witnesses before the other party asks any questions of any of them, the other party then examining all the original witnesses, together with his own additional ones, without interruption; this plan would avoid all confusion due to the opposing party's interruption of the order of questions, but it would increase the confusion which arises from the separation of topics naturally connected in each witness' testimony. (c) Or, taking a medium course, the calling party might be required to examine each witness originally without interruption, and then the other party, at the close of each single examination, be required and allowed to put such questions as he desired, so as to dispose entirely of each witness, by a double examination, before another witness was called; this plan avoids the extreme of confusion due to either of the above causes.

It is this third plan that the common law fixed upon long ago, as embodying practically the greatest advantages and the fewest disadvantages:[1]

1726, C. B. GILBERT, Evidence, 146: "The witness produced must first be examined on the part of the producer, and then the other side may examine him; and this is a regulation that naturally follows the true order of things; for it is proper first to enquire what a witness can prove, before you are to examine what hath not fallen under his knowledge."

1746, L. C. HARDWICKE, in Lord Lovat's Trial, 18 How. St. Tr. 658: "My lords, the rule for the examination of witnesses in this Court, in either House of Parliament, and everywhere else, is that . . . all questions that are asked, whether touching the matter of fact to be tried or the credibility of the witness, are to be asked at the proper time.

omitted); Yukon: Consol. Ord. 1914, c. 48, Rule 268.

But the jury may be recalled, before separation, to reconsider a verdict founded on a palpable but inadvertent failure to observe instructions (post, § 2350).

[2] 1891, Clavey v. Lord, 87 Cal. 413, 416, 419, 25 Pac. 493.

§ 1882. [1] Many codes explicitly confirm this common-law rule; the provisions are quoted ante, § 1866.

The party who produces a witness has a right to go through the examination first, and then the other side cross-examines him; and after that is over, the judge asks him such questions as he thinks proper; unless, as I said before, there be any objections to the questions, or any doubtful matter arises that wants immediately to be cleared up. The same method is to be observed here; and the reason of it, my lords, is that unless your lordships observe this method, you will be in perpetual confusion."

The peculiar effects of the common-law arrangement, as contrasted with the other two modes, is on the one hand, that it secures to each party the untrammelled pursuance of his own line of proof in the handling of each witness; and, on the other hand, that it provides for the exhaustion of the entire knowledge of each witness at a single occasion by the successive examination of both parties before he leaves the stand, and thus secures the concentrated attention of the tribunal to the significance of his testimony as a whole and the bearing of his general credit on his specific statements. This general purpose and spirit of the common-law method will be of importance in assisting to solve the much-mooted problem of the scope of cross-examination.

Thus the questions that arise for consideration involve mainly the propriety of exceptionally allowing a second examination by either party while the witness is still on the stand, and of allowing his recall after he has left the stand when the parties have once declared their examinations ended, as well as of determining the allotment of topics to these various stages of examination. The stages may therefore be grouped under the following heads: 1. Original Call: a. Direct examination; b. Cross-examination; c. Re-direct examination; d. Re-cross-examination; e. Subsequent examinations; 2. Recall: a. for Direct examination; b. for Cross-examination; 3. Re-recall, for either party.

1. Original Call

§ 1883. Direct Examination, in general; Putting in Documents. There are in general no detailed rules limiting the topics appropriate for the direct examination. The party at that time puts in the evidence constituting his own case; but the rules that affect him therein have reference to the stage of the case at large, and not to the stage of examination of the individual witness; accordingly, all the rules already dealt with (ante, §§ 1869–1872), though they find usual application during a direct examination, have no essential connection with it.

Furthermore, it is of course expected that the first or direct examination will be utilized for obtaining all that the witness knows in the party's favor, so that no further examination will be needed for the same party; and this assumption is the foundation of the rules that apply when a re-direct examination (post, § 1896) or a recall (post, § 1898) is desired. And finally, the direct examiner is entitled to complete his examination on all the desired topics before the opponent's cross-examination begins,— a fundamental rule of the Anglo-American system, protecting the examiner from distracting interruptions.[1]

There seems to be but one rule distinctively affecting the direct examination as such, namely, that in proving a document's execution, the document must be formally put in evidence and read to the jury before the close of the direct examination of the proving witness; otherwise, a party might unfairly postpone putting in the document until the witness had left the stand, and the opponent would thus be deprived of the opportunity of cross-examining the witness as to its contents.[2] This rule is in spirit akin to that already noted (ante, § 1838) requiring the document's exhibition to the opponent; and it may profitably be compared with the rule for documents proved on cross-examination (post, § 1884), the rule in The Queen's Case for documents used in contradiction of a witness (ante, § 1259), and the rule for documents lost and the like (ante, §§ 1870–1872).

§ 1884. Cross-Examination, in General; Postponement and Waiver; Putting in Documents. The cross-examination, or examination by the party not calling the witness, follows immediately the direct examination, in customary order prescribed by the common law (ante, § 1882).

Since the purpose of this immediate sequence is to furnish the tribunal with the means of fixing the net significance of the witness' testimony while the tenor of his direct testimony is fresh in their minds, it seems proper enough to hold that the opponent is entitled to this immediate sequence, in order to expose without delay the weak points of the testimony against him.[1] Yet it can hardly be doubted that, upon the general principle of the trial Court's discretion (ante, § 1867), a postponement may be granted where fairness seems to require it.[2] Conversely, the calling party is entitled ordinarily to insist that the cross-examination be had immediately; though here also the trial Court's discretion may postpone it, in part or in whole, at the opponent's request;[3] especially since the full significance of the cross-

§ 1883. [1] Cal. C. C. P. § 2045 ("The direct examination must be completed before the cross-examination begins, unless the Court otherwise direct"); repeated in the other Codes founded on the California Code.

[2] This rule has been laid down in only a few jurisdictions, but it deserves wider acceptance: Ark. Dig. 1919, § 4194 (if a writing is "proved by the witness and allowed by the Court, it must be read to the jury before his testimony is closed; otherwise, it cannot be read unless the witness is recalled"); Ida. Comp. St. 1919, § 8041 (writing proved by a witness "must be read to the jury before his testimony is closed, or it cannot be read except on recalling the witness"); Or. Laws 1920, § 866 (like Ida. Comp. St. 1919, § 8041).

§ 1884. [1] 1856, Fralick v. Presley, 29 Ala. 457, 461; 1905, Miller v. Carnes, 95 Minn. 179, 103 N. W. 877; 1879, State v. McNinch, 12 S. C. 89, 95 (the Court allowed the prosecution to withdraw a witness at the close of his direct testimony, because of his intoxication, intimating that he could be later recalled for cross-examination; held improper).

But where the party opponent is called, under the statutes (ante, § 916) permitting him to be treated as if on cross-examination, this is perhaps to be regarded as a stage in itself, so that the opponent cannot thereupon as of right testify further for himself, as if on redirect examination; the trial Court may therefore require him to wait till his own case is put in: 1900, Jones v. Bradford, 79 Minn. 396, 82 N. W. 651; 1904, Olson v. Aubolee, 92 Minn. 312, 99 N. W. 1128.

The statutes quoted ante, § 1866, lay down the orthodox rule for the sequence of cross-examination; but their provisions should not be deemed to prevent the above flexibility.

[2] 1888, Parnell Commission's Proceedings, 7th day, Times' Rep. pt. 2, pp. 46, 66.

[3] 1820, Queen Caroline's Trial, Linn's ed., I, 207; s. c., 2 B. & B. 287; 1874, Rush v.

examination can often not be brought out until other witnesses of the calling party have testified. But where the opponent has once entirely waived cross-examination, he may not later claim the privilege without the Court's consent given in discretion.[4]

When there are two or more opponents, the order of their respective cross-examinations must rest with the trial Court to determine.[5]

Where the cross-examiner proves a document by the witness, under the orthodox rule allowing him to put in his own case on cross-examination (post, § 1885), it would seem that he ought to be obliged to put it in formally as evidence before closing his cross-examination, so as to enable the calling party to reëxamine the witness as to the document,[6] for reasons much the same as in the case (ante, § 1883) of a document proved on direct examination; the only conceivable (but hardly sufficient) ground for distinction is that in the present case the witness is under the calling party's control and may therefore be kept in court for a prospective reëxamination when the cross-examiner shall have later put in the document. Where the document is one containing a self-contradictory statement used to impeach the witness, it seems that this result is indeed reached by the rule in The Queen's Case (ante, §§ 1259).[7]

§ 1885. Putting in One's Own Case on Cross-Examination: (1) Orthodox Rule; (2) Federal Rule. The great question that arises as to the scope of the cross-examination is whether the opponent may upon the cross-examination elicit the witness' knowledge as to facts that constitute part of the opponent's own case, or whether he is confined to the matters already dealt with in the direct examination or at least to the topics connected therewith.

French, 1 Ariz. 99, 140, 25 Pac. 816 ("The party entitled to cross-examine may waive his rights to do so at the time, and recall the witness and cross-examine him after he opens the case").

[4] 1895, Chapman v. James, 96 Ia. 233, 64 N. W. 795.

For the consequences of a loss of the opportunity to cross-examine, through postponement or through the witness' illness or death, with reference to the inadmissibility of the direct testimony, see ante, §§ 1391, 1392.

[5] 1892, State v. Howard, 35 S. C. 197, 14 S. E. 481.

For the rule against using more than one counsel to cross-examine for the same party, see ante, § 783.

For the restriction of the length of time of a cross-examination, see ante, § 783.

[6] Accord: the statutes cited ante, § 1883. Contra: 1835, Holland v. Reeves, 7 C. & P. 36, 39; 1905, Armour Packing Co. v. V. Y. Produce Co., — Ala —, 39 So. 680, semble (the document cannot be put in until the cross-examiner's own case is opened).

Conversely, the cross-examiner is entitled to put it in then: 1833, Stephens v. Foster, 6 C. & P. 289 (paper referred to in cross-examination of a deponent; cross-examiner is entitled to read it as a part of the cross-examination). Contra: 1816, Graham v. Dyster, 2 Stark 21, 23 (the plaintiff having failed to produce letters on notice from the defendant, the latter was not allowed to cross-examine the plaintiff's witnesses to the contents; such proof being properly reserved till the time when the originals would have been produced); 1817, Sideways v. Dyson, 2 Stark. 49 (the plaintiff having refused to produce his books during cross-examination of his own witnesses, the defendant was not allowed to give evidence of their contents at that stage, although the rule was conceded to be "rigorous"); both of these rulings were by L. C. J. Ellenborough.

Otherwise, naturally, in Courts which do not accept the orthodox rule (post, § 1890) for cross-examination: 1903, Kroetch v. Empire M. Co., 9 Ida. 277, 74 Pac. 868 ("The practice of allowing a party to identify and introduce exhibits on cross-examination of his adversary's witness . . . should seldom be permitted").

[7] Compare also the other rules as to documents (ante, §§ 1878, 1883), and the rule for showing the document to the opponent (ante, § 1861).

(1) In England, and in the United States down through the first quarter of the 1800s, there was apparently but one view upon this subject. There seems, indeed, to have been no question at all; so that in English judicial opinions an express statement of the rule is scarcely to be found.[1] That rule — which may be termed the orthodox one — adopted the former of the above alternatives:

1829, SUTHERLAND, J., in Fulton Bank v. Stafford, 2 Wend. 483, 485: "When a witness has been sworn in chief, the opposite party may not only cross-examine him in relation to the point which he was called to prove, but he may examine him as to any matter embraced in the issue. He may establish his defence by him without calling any other witnesses. If he is a competent witness to the jury for any purpose, he is so for all purposes."

(2) But in the year 1827, Chief Justice Gibson, of Pennsylvania, in dealing with a related point, chanced to remark (without citing an authority), that, as the ordinary rule, the cross-examining party should not "prove his case by evidence extracted on cross-examination," and also that a witness may not be cross-examined to facts which are "wholly foreign to what he has already testified":

1827, GIBSON, C. J., in Ellmaker v. Buckley, 16 S. & R. 72, 77: "A witness may not be cross-examined to facts which are wholly foreign to the points in issue (and I would add, to what he has already testified) for the purpose of contradicting him by other evidence. . . . In ordinary cases, the witness may be cross-examined by the party adverse to him whose witness he is at the time, and even then only to discredit him or to bring out something supposed to be withheld; . . . [but this is subject to enlargement in the Court's discretion in special cases], and for myself, I would not without further consideration pronounce the exercise of the discretion, depending as it does on circumstances which cannot be fully made to appear in a court of error, to be a legitimate subject of a bill of exceptions. If, then, a party may not prove his case by evidence extracted on a cross-examination after he has proposed his case to the jury, 'a fortiori' he may not do so before."

The remarks put forth in this opinion (which were by no means consistent with themselves, and contained the germs of a practice that would have been repudiated by the great Chief Justice) seem to have received no further attention at the time in other Courts. But in 1840, Mr. Justice Story (also speaking obiter, and also without citing a single authority) was found to lay down in the Federal Supreme Court a rule of similar purport, though of slightly different phraseology — a difference, nevertheless, which has served more than anything else to introduce the extreme rule (equally unanticipated by the learned Federal judge) which now prevails in many jurisdictions.

This rule — which may be termed the Federal rule, because through Mr. Justice Story's sponsorship it lost its local character and obtained wide currency — was as follows:

1840, STORY, J., in Philadelphia & T. R. Co. v. Stimpson, 14 Pet. 448, 461: "[The answers in controversy were inadmissible] upon the broader principle (now well established, although sometimes lost sight of in our loose practice at trials) that a party has no right to cross-examine any witness except as to facts and circumstances connected with the matters stated in his direct examination. If he wishes to examine him to other matters, he must do so by making the witness his own, and calling him as such in the subsequent progesss of the cause."

§ 1885. [1] See the English cases applying it, post, §§ 1891–1893.

Where the great Federal judge — the most versatile and encyclopedic mind among American jurists — obtained the "established" rule thus first introduced into circulation, it is difficult to say.[2] He did not find it in the orthodox and accepted common-law practice either of England or of the United States; for there appear to have been up to that time (except in Pennsylvania) no other rulings to that effect. It is clear that the earlier practice, as ascertainable from prior rulings in half a dozen jurisdictions,[3] had been in harmony with the orthodox English practice. It is possible that Mr. Justice Story was merely expounding the Pennsylvania rule, as he was bound to do (ante, § 6) for a Federal trial Court sitting in Pennsylvania.[4] It is also possible, and even probable, that he had in mind a passage, uttered just a hundred years before, in which Lord Hardwicke's recollection, when sitting as Chancellor, of the practice at the common-law bar, is made to serve as authority:

1740, L. C. HARDWICKE, in Dean of Ely v. Stewart, 2 Atk. 44, "laid down the following rules in this cause: . . . Where at law a witness is produced to a single point by the plaintiff or defendant, the adverse party may cross-examine as to the same individual point, but not to any new matter; so in equity, if a great variety of facts and points arise, and a plaintiff examines only as to one, the defendant may cross-examine to the same point, but cannot make use of such witness to prove a different fact." [5]

The practice at common law at the time when the Chancellor spoke does not bear him out in his assertion;[6] nor can his authority to speak of the common-law rule be regarded as weighty, for his experience at that bar had been comparatively scanty.[7] So far as the practice in chancery may have seemed to Justice Story to have a bearing, it was hardly fitted to come into competition with the common-law rule as a claimant for favor. The rule

[2] 1874, Dunne, C. J., in Rush v. French, 1 Ariz. 99, 133, 25 Pac. 816: "We cannot know what the Court meant by saying that the principle involved in the second declaration was 'well settled.' They could not have meant well settled in England, for such had never been the rule there; nor in Massachusetts, Vermont, New York, Ohio, Wisconsin, or Missouri. The case they had in hand was from Pennsylvania, and the rule in that State was, it is true, settled, as the Supreme Court says; but whether they meant that, or that it was settled in the United States circuit court for Pennsylvania, or what they meant, we cannot tell."

[3] See the rulings cited post, § 1890, in Maryland, Louisiana, Massachusetts, Missouri, New Jersey, New York, North Carolina, South Carolina, and the Federal Court.

[4] Compare the remark of C. J. Dunne, in note 2, supra.

[5] The same judge is elsewhere reported as follows: 1743, L. C. Hardwicke, in Vaillant v. Dodemead, 2 Atk. 524 (said that "wherever at law the party calls upon his own attorney for a witness, the other side may cross-examine him, but that must be only relative to the same matter, and not as to other points of the cause"; but this is explained easily enough as stating the limited effect of the waiver of the privilege, post, § 2324).

[6] Of the later practice there can be no doubt whatever; see §§ 1891–1893, post.

[7] He was only three years at the common-law bar, then fifteen years at the chancery bar, then Chief Justice of the King's Bench (mainly in criminal cases) for three years; and had been four years Lord Chancellor in 1740.

in chancery was indeed apparently what Lord Hardwicke declared it to be (though, oddly enough, there appears to have been no other ruling than his own during the course of a century).[8] But the system of cross-examination in chancery had long been notoriously a failure, and was already practically abandoned as a weapon of defence.[9] It was therefore singular that Justice Story (if indeed he was thinking of the chancery rule) not merely should have deviated without precedent into a practice having in this respect conditions peculiar to itself and differing radically from the common law, but should have gone for guidance to a system of cross-examination which had for a generation or more been stunted and devitalized.

In any event, the rule thus presented by him to the country at large must be regarded as a sudden innovation upon the hitherto general and accepted practice of the common law, both in England and in the United States. Whatever its later currency, it came before the profession at that time as an interloper, with all the weight of experience against it. It was bound to justify itself, in reason and in policy. Whether it has done so may now be considered.

§ 1886. Same: Original Form of the Federal Rule; Trial Court's Discretion; Cross-Examiner's own Affirmative Case excluded. Before considering the respective policies of these opposing rules, it is necessary to keep in mind that in their original form they were never put forward by their eminent sponsors as anything but rules of customary and normal practice, subject always to the general principle (ante, § 1867) that the trial Court may in its discretion allow exceptions. Chief Justice Gibson, the very progenitor of the Federal rule, declared radically that he "would not without further consideration pronounce the exercise of the discretion, depending as it does upon circumstances which cannot be fully made to appear in a court of error, to be a legitimate subject of a bill of exceptions." In the Pennsylvania and the Federal Supreme Courts — the two most notably associated with this rule — this controlling principle of discretion has from time to time been expressly emphasized (post, § 1890). In this pure form of these rules, then, the supposed disadvantages, which have been by the champions of either put forward as marking the enforcement of the other rule in extreme cases, are reduced to a minimum, and may often be practically inconsiderable. The [8] Gresley, Evidence in Equity, 50, and Daniell, Chancery Pleading and Practice, I, 922, cite only this case of Ely v. Stewart.

[9] 1837, Gresley, Evidence in Equity, 50, note ("Cross-examination, except on this point [to credit], has fallen very much into disuse"); Plumer, V. C., quoted in Gresley, ubi supra, 75 ("The glaring defect in the system of taking evidence in chancery, and that which renders it insufficient for the elucidation of truth, is the total exclusion of anything like an effective cross-examination. Each party is ignorant, not only of what the witnesses on the other side have said, but of what they have been asked. In such total darkness, a cross-examination is seldom attempted; the most experienced practitioners, I believe, recommend it only in cases where the witness is one whom it would be necessary or prudent to have examined in chief; . . . [this] leaves the examination in Chancery a mere 'ex parte' proceeding, and little better than evidence by affidavit"). Compare the authorities cited ante, § 1367.

trial Court's discretion is intended to give a flexibility that will obviate these occasional disadvantages.

Thus the only question of controversy that would properly have remained would be whether the one or the other is better suited to be the foundation for the usual (not the necessary or invariable) order of evidence. But unfortunately this same qualification, always assumed by the inventors of the rule as an inseparable part of it, has usually been lost sight of by their followers — at least among the adherents of the Federal rule. While seldom expressly denying the principle of discretion, they have come practically to ignore it. By ignoring it, they have reduced the rule itself to a fixed and deadened formula; and they have thus emphasized and made actual and frequent the possibilities of practical harm which were otherwise only latent in it. In considering, therefore, the policy of the Federal rule as actually administered by most of the Courts adhering to it, account must be taken of the drawbacks which attend its actual workings in this extreme form, even though they were not inherent in the rule as originally advanced and correctly applied.

Furthermore, the rule has suffered degeneration in another respect, in the hands of most of its modern adherents. For it would seem that both of the eminent judges, Gibson and Story, who promulgated it, understood it to exclude only the putting in of the opponent's own case, i. e. the new facts constituting his affirmative defence (whether strictly appropriate to an affirmative plea or not); yet their language made it possible for their followers to forbid an examination to anything but the precise matters testified by the witness on the direct examination, even to matters which properly concerned the calling party's own case under the allegations of his pleading. This extreme interpretation of the rule has also led to the emphasizing of special disadvantages, which must be reckoned with in weighing the respective policies of the two rules as actually administered. The arguments against the Federal rule (set forth post, § 1888) are both entitled and obliged to deal with it in the degenerate form in which to-day it is practised in most of its jurisdictions.

§ 1887. Same: Policy of the Federal Rule. The Federal rule has labored under one notable disadvantage, namely, it has never found, among judges of accepted eminence, a single defender other than its progenitor, Chief Justice Gibson. In searching for the reasons upon which the rule is supposed to be founded, attention is attracted by the circumstance that the greatest names are found as expositors of the reasons against the rule. The best that can be said on behalf of the rule seems to be contained in the following passages:

1843, GIBSON, C. J., in Floyd v. Boward, 6 W. & S. 75, 76: "The difficulty is to find a reason for those English decisions which hold the party to a different course, and allow the witness to be cross-examined to every transaction within his knowledge in the hands of the party who is first compelled to call him. This would seem to be foreign to the end of a cross-examination, which is not to give the party an advantage in the manner of introducing the facts of his case, but to test the credibility of the witness as to what he has testified; . . . and I may add that to reward a party with the privilege of putting leading questions for bringing forward a branch of his case out of order would reward him for throwing the cause into confusion. Where the testimony of a witness is required to establish a fact which is part of the defence, it is a dictate of justice that no advantage be given to either party in the manner of eliciting it. But an advantage is in truth given, and for no adequate reason, when a party is allowed to bring out his part of the case by cross-examination, merely because the opposite party had been compelled to call the witness in the first instance. . . . It would be better to say that each party should call the witness to serve his turn, and make him his own for the time being, than to entangle the justice of the case in those distinctions with which the English judges have surrounded it. A plaintiff may be compelled to call the defendant's principal witness to some matter of formal proof, and it is easy to see that the justice of the case would not be promoted by allowing the defendant for that reason to break in on the plaintiff's order of proof by introducing his defence and eliciting the testimony in support of it by leading questions."

1856, BACON, J., in People v. Horton, 4 Mich. 67, 82: "It is certainly desirable not to mingle up and thus confuse the testimony of the opposing parties. If the plaintiff first presents all his testimony which he considers necessary to support his case, without allowing the defendant at the same time to offer a part or all of the testimony upon which he relies, and then the defendant presents the evidence which properly pertains to his defence, the line of separation is well kept up. No confusion is likely to follow; and the jury, if there be one, will be less likely to fall into mistakes or to overlook material facts. Nor do we see any objection whatever to this rule. It certainly tends to promote method and order, — two cardinal points in presenting evidence to a judge. The rule merely regulates the manner of the examination. The party loses no rights; he only postpones the time of introducing his witnesses."

1856, HANDY, J., in Mask v. State, 32 Miss. 405, 430: "I consider this latter [or Federal] rule as founded on the sounder reason and as establishing the better practice. Cross-examination, 'ex vi termini,' must relate to what has been stated by the witness on his examination in chief, and it could not properly be denominated cross-examination when it extended to new matter, about which the witness had given no testimony. Suppose the first witness introduced by the plaintiff testifies only to an isolated fact, as, for example, the execution of a document relied on by the plaintiff as evidence; would it be competent for the defendant to anticipate the merits of the case to be developed by the plaintiff, and, by way of cross-examination, to examine the witness as to matters which he supposed to be involved in establishing the plaintiff's case, and go into the merits of the whole case? Such a course would scarcely be sanctioned or tolerated by any court. And why? Because it would tend to subvert the regular order of presenting the case, and lead to confusion. . . . The same principle which governs the pleadings between the parties should regulate the exhibition of the proof upon the trial; and as each pleading should be strictly in answer to that to which it applies, so the cross-examination of each witness should be confined to the matter testified to in his examination in chief, in order to produce certainty and distinctness in ascertaining the facts to be proved. This course, while it is sanctioned by the rules of logical proceeding, can be productive of no prejudice to a party desiring to prove by the witness other matters than such as are embraced in the examination in chief; for it is well settled that he may, afterwards, introduce him as his own witness, to prove any matters pertinent to the merits of the cause, and that the adverse party having called him, is thereby precluded from objecting to his competency, or from impeaching his credibility. It is no just objection to this view of the subject, that the party against whom the witness is originally called should not be compelled to introduce him as his own witness to the new matter, and thereby preclude himself from impeaching his credit. For if he would rely upon the new matter proved by the witness, it would be against his interest to impeach him; and it is to be presumed that if he wished to impeach him, he would not introduce him to prove material facts in his case."

1864, WALKER, C. J., in Stafford v. Fargo, 35 Ill. 481, 486: "[The opponent] has only the right to cross-examine upon the facts to which he [the witness] testified in chief. If he can give evidence beneficial to the other party, he should call him at the proper time and make him his own witness and examine him in chief, thereby giving the other party the benefit of a cross-examination on such evidence in chief. Otherwise the party calling the witness would be deprived of a cross-examination as to evidence called out by the other side, and the party against whom the witness was first called would obtain the advantage of getting evidence under the latitude allowed in cross-examination."

These reasons suggest the following comments:

(a) A reason advanced by Chief Justice Gibson is that it is "foreign to the end of cross-examination . . . to allow the witness to be cross-examined to every transaction within his knowledge." This, however, is a mere begging of the very question at issue. Furthermore, the general nature of the common-law arrangement of examinations (ante, § 1882) suggests precisely the contrary, namely, that the function of cross-examination is to exhaust the witness' knowledge on all points on which he has any that is relevant to the trial. A much more natural assumption is the one made by the judges later quoted (post, § 1887),[1] namely, that the "primary obligation of the oath is to elicit the whole truth."

(b) Another reason put forward is that this rule "tends to promote order and method." If by this be meant that the rule is in theory more orderly, in that it aims to keep the facts of the opponent's case from confusing the jury and complicating the proceedings until the proponent has fully set forth his own case, this much may be conceded for the rule in its pure form,[2] although in its usual form there is not even the semblance of such a scientific demarcation, since the rule turns on whatever line of facts the proponent may have chosen to take up in the direct examination. But if it be meant that simplicity is actually attained and that confusion is in fact avoided, the precise contrary has been shown by experience.

(c) Another suggested reason is that the calling party otherwise loses the benefit of cross-examination on the facts forming part of the opponent's case. But why should he not lose the benefit of cross-examination? He has called the witness, and the sole purpose of cross-examination (ante, § 1368) is to enable the non-calling party to bring out facts ignored or suppressed by the calling party's examination. By direct examination and by re-direct examination the calling party may bring out any fact whatever that assists his case. The notion that he has any need for a cross-examination is unfounded. The re-direct examination is for him a cross-examination to all intents and purposes.

§ 1887. [1] For example, Mr. J. McIver and Mr. J. Campbell.

[2] Even this reason would substantially disappear if sanction were given (by law) to the sensible proposal of an experienced judge of the New York Supreme Court, Mr. Justice Leventritt (The Brief, vol. II, p. 330, June, 1900), namely, that the defendant be allowed a concise opening statement of his case in opposition, immediately after the plaintiff's opening. Moreover, this reason hardly applies at all to a plaintiff's cross-examination of a defendant's witness.

(d) A fourth reason, and the one most frequently reiterated, is the apprehension that "if a defendant could make out his case on cross-examination, he might employ leading questions for the purpose." This is indeed a lamentable bugbear; for it is purely the creature of imagination. The adoption of the Federal rule will not of itself muzzle the opponent and stifle his obnoxious leading questions; for it is clear (ante, § 773) that he may ask them in any event. The prohibition of leading questions is designed to prevent a willing witness from accepting the suggestions put into his mouth by counsel; it applies, therefore, 'prima facie,' to the counsel of the calling party, and it does not apply, 'prima facie,' to the cross-examining party (ante, § 769). The rule as to asking about one's own case on cross-examination is purely a matter of the order of presenting facts. But the rule as to leading questions concerns the partisan disposition of the individual witness, and depends on the supposed willingness of a partisan witness to assist his party. Thus the rule exceptionally may be relaxed if the witness appears hostile to the calling party, and exceptionally may be enforced if he appears eager to befriend the cross-examining party (ante, §§ 773, 774). Its criterion is solely the individual witness' state of mind, — not the kind of fact that is to be asked, nor the stage of asking. The very same fact may be asked of witness Doe on cross-examination by a question leading in form, but may not be asked of witness Roe in that form. It is therefore a complete misconception of the principle of leading questions to suppose that the use of leading questions on cross-examination furnishes any objection to the opponent's asking at that stage about the facts of his own case, or that it supplies any reason for favoring the calling party by forcing the cross-examiner to call the witness again so that the former may ask leading questions. If the witness is hostile to the opponent, he should be and would be allowed to put his questions in leading form whether he asked them on cross-examination or whether he called the witness anew at a later stage; and conversely, if the witness is hostile to the original calling party, the opponent should not and could not ask leading questions any the more on this cross-examination than on a direct examination at a later stage. This objection, then, may be dismissed as founded on a fallacy.[3]

(e) Another objection, analogous to the preceding one, but less often mentioned, is that, but for this Federal rule, the cross-examining party could, on cross-examination or otherwise, impeach the witness through whom the facts of his own case are thus proved, though he could not do so if he had been compelled to call him for the purpose at a later stage. But, again, the question occurs, Why should he not? The cross-examiner has not called the witness, nor, by calling, represented him as worthy of credit (ante, § 896). Why should he not expose his lack of credit, while at the same time utilizing the testimony in his favor for what it may be worth? Furthermore, the opponent, even after calling the witness himself, may still show his specific falsities

[3] See its appearance in a practical form, ante, § 915 (impeaching one's own witness).

(ante, § 907) and probably his self-contradictions (ante, § 905); and thus but little of real service has been accomplished. The appearance in this connection of the unreasoning and ill-deserving rule against impeaching one's own witness is merely another illustration (ante, § 899) of its power to make disturbance and confusion without profit to any one.

§ 1888. Same; Policy of the Orthodox Rule. The Federal rule was introduced by two great judges into a system of practice which had apparently up to that time known it not. On the names of those judges, however, it speedily was carried into favor in many Courts.[1] Its original attraction to its propounders lay probably in its apparently logical allotment of 'suum cuique' in the presentation of the respective cases. But it remained to be tested by experience and to be compared in operation with the original and orthodox rule. Within a generation it had ample opportunity for this test; and its practical weaknesses soon became apparent enough.

In the following passages will be found the expositions of these defects as noted in experience by some of the most eminent names in the law of Evidence, as well as some 'a priori' suggestions, shrewd in their prophetic tenor, by judges who wrote before the Federal rule had been promulgated or had obtained any footing. The names of Shaw, Bigelow, Martin, Campbell, Christiancy, and Cooley form a brilliant list; and the weight of their opinions counts heavily against an unfortunate rule which has threatened to dominate our entire system of practice:

1806. Per CURIAM, in Sawrey v. Murrell, 2 Hayw. 397: "It would be a very dangerous consequence if when produced by the plaintiff the defendant could not interrogate the witness except as to the facts which she had deposed for the plaintiff; for then all distinct facts within her knowledge, however much they would operate for the benefit of the defendant if brought out, must remain undrawn from the witness, for fear of the defendant's being precluded from the advantage of proving her want of credit."

1811, MARTIN, J., in Durnford v. Clark, 1 Mart. La. 202 (on Lord Hardwicke's opinion, supra, being cited): "I have never known this practice to prevail, and I cannot on this dictum set the verdict of the jury aside. It must be understood as a rule of discipline, introduced for the purpose of preserving regularity in the admission of testimony. Every witness must be sworn to tell the whole truth; and if the defendant is not allowed to examine the plaintiff's witness at first to any point material to the defence, he has certainly a right to call back the witness and examine him while introducing his own testimony. If therefore the defendant's counsel in the present case might at any [i. e. some] stage of the trial have compelled the witness to disclose the fact which has been drawn during the cross-examination, no injury has been done to the plaintiff by obtaining this part of the evidence a little earlier than in the regular way."

1835, SHAW, C. J., in Moody v. Rowell, 17 Pick. 490, 499: "Where a witness is called to a particular fact, he is a witness to all purposes, and may be fully cross-examined to the whole case. . . . It is most desirable that rules of general practice, of so much importance and of such frequent recurrence, should be as few, simple, and practical as possible, and that distinctions should not be multiplied without good cause. It would be often difficult, in a long and complicated examination, to decide whether a question applies wholly to new matter or to matter already examined to in chief."

§ 1888. [1] Professor Greenleaf's treatise appeared in 1842, two years after Mr. J. Story's opinion was rendered; and no doubt the former's treatise served as an efficient medium for propagating the latter's rule. "The rule is now considered by the Supreme Court of the United States to be well established," is its language (§ 445); and yet the author was unable to cite a single other authority than the rulings of Floyd v. Bovard and Phila. & T. R. Co. v. Stimpson. Thus the great judge's name and the author's reverence for his opinion (the treatise was dedicated to him) combined to manufacture the rule almost out of whole cloth.

1854, BIGELOW, J., in Beal v. Nichols, 2 Gray, 262, 264: "A party calling a witness, even for formal proof of a written instrument or other preliminary matter, thereby makes him his witness. . . . It follows that the adverse party has the right to cross-examine upon all matters material to the issue. Experience has shown that this rule is convenient and easy of application in practice, and works no disadvantage to the party who produces a witness. On the other hand, a different rule, by making it necessary for the Court during the examination of a witness constantly to determine what is or is not new matter upon which the opposite party has the right to put leading questions, leads to confusion and delay in the progress of trials."

1861, Messrs. Douglass, Fenton, Sutherland, and Avery, arguing in Campau v. Dewey, 9 Mich. 381: "In our judgment it [the English rule] is the only rule which leaves the course of cross-examination sufficiently free and unobstructed to make it effective for the attainment of truth in respect to the matters in controversy. The rule laid down in People v. Horton [quoted supra, § 1887], however plausible in theory, is exceedingly mischievous in practice. It is altogether too nice and refined for practical application. Under it, in most litigated cases, questions of relevancy, often of the most difficult and perplexing nature, are perpetually springing up during the progress of the trial, occupying the time of the Court, and distracting the jury with their discussion; and each of these questions must be decided by the presiding judge upon the spot, at the peril of a reversal of the judgment, to the great injury of the party if, from misrecollection of the witness' testimony in chief, misapprehension of the nature of the issue, or any other cause, he commits an error, although the error, if in the way of overruling an objection, in most instances works no practical injustice. But this is not all. The worst effect of the rule is that it greatly impairs the efficiency of cross-examination. If there are any evils in the practical working of the English rule of sufficient magnitude to call for its modification or abandonment, they are all avoided, as well as the evils of the rule laid down in People r. Horton, by adopting the rule that whether a party shall be allowed to cross-examine his adversary's witness as to the whole case, or by leading questions, rests in the sound discretion of the Court."

1861, CHRISTIANCY, J., in Campau v. Dewey, 9 Mich. 381, 417: "[1] When a witness is called and examined by a party, the law and the oath impose the obligation to state the whole truth, — all the facts within the knowledge of the witness bearing upon the question in controversy upon which his testimony is sought. The witness may be cognizant of some facts which, considered without reference to others equally within his knowledge, would tend strongly to prove the issue in favor of the party calling him; while at the same time there may be other facts equally within his knowledge, which, considered without reference to the former, would have an opposite tendency, or which, considered in connection with them, would explain away or modify the former and give a very different effect to the whole. Should a witness in such a case disclose only that class of facts which operated in favor of the party calling him, his testimony, though true in the detail, would be false in the aggregate, and have all the effect of intentional falsehood; and, if aware of the nature of the controversy in which he is called to testify, he would be guilty of perjury as much as if he had wilfully falsified the facts stated by him; and this whether he were cross-examined or not. It is the disclosure of the facts known to the witness (bearing on the issue) as a whole which the law seeks; and a direct examination which should be perfectly fair would in such a case disclose both classes of facts and present the witness' knowledge as a whole. But the party calling the witness may so adroitly direct the examination in chief as to disclose only that class of facts which tend to establish the issue in his favor and to conceal those which would destroy or modify their effect. And as Courts, from their ignorance of the extent of the witness' knowledge and of the plan arranged by the party calling him, have no means of enforcing the perfect fairness of a direct examination, the law has given to the opposite party the right to cross-examine the witness, for the purpose, among others, of bringing out the facts thus concealed, which tend to explain away or modify the effect of those stated on the direct examination or to rebut the inference which would otherwise result from them. . . . Such I think are the purely logical principles of cross-examination. . . . But there are many objections to the rule as applied in People v. Horton. [2] It impairs the efficiency of cross-examination as a means of detecting error and exposing falsehood, and renders it comparatively easy for a corrupt party, by the aid of corrupt witnesses, to fabricate fictitious cases without the risk of impeachment, compelling the opposite party to make the witness his own as to facts which might tend to modify the effect of his evidence; thus precluding the power of impeachment. [3] It tends to break up into detached and widely separated fragments the state of facts within the knowledge of the witness bearing upon the same main point, and which would be much better understood if stated as one connected whole. The testimony of other (and perhaps many other) witnesses intervening between the parts of the witness' testimony, the jury are more likely to confound the testimony of one witness with that of another. The bearing of the different parts of the witness' testimony upon each other, and any discrepancies which may exist, are not so easily discovered, and consequently the credit of the witness is not so correctly estimated. [4] But there is a practical difficulty in the application of this rule (as understood in People v. Horton), inherent in the rule itself, and which can only be avoided by getting rid of the rule as there applied. It adopts, as the test of the relevancy of a cross-examination, the bearing of the particular facts sought to be elicited by it upon the particular facts brought out on the direct examination; instead of the main fact or facts which these particular facts tend to prove; and as these particular facts are often very numerous, and their number and character incapable of restriction, and the question of relevancy may arise upon any two of them, and as the degrees of relation between them may be as numerous and varied as the facts themselves, it is easy to see that questions of this kind must be constantly arising, till the case bristles with points of relevancy. The rule therefore leads to almost infinite embarrassment; and it must and often does require more time to dispose of these questions of relevancy (under this rule thus understood) than would otherwise be required for the trial of the cause."

1862, CAMPBELL, J., in Chandler v. Allison, 10 Mich. 477: "The only object of this process is to elicit the whole truth concerning transactions which may be supposed to have been only partially explained, and where the whole truth would represent them in a different light. Whenever an entire transaction is in issue, evidence which conceals a part of it is defective, and does not comply with the primary obligation of the oath, which is designed to elicit the whole truth. If the witness were (as he always may be) requested to state what he knows about it, he would not do his duty by designedly stopping short of it. Any question which fills up his omissions, whether designed or accidental, is legitimate and proper on cross-examination. . . . A party cannot glean out certain parts, which alone would make out a false account, and save his own witness from the sifting process by which only those omissions can be detected. There could be no such thing as cross-examination if such a course were allowed. . . . No one can be compelled to make his adversary's witness his own to explain or fill up a transaction he has partially explained already."

1878, COOLEY, J., in New York Iron Mine v. Negaunee Bank, 39 Mich. 644, 659 (after quoting Mr. J. Campbell's words supra): "One might suppose, after reading this language, that it was written in anticipation of the proceedings in this very case. . . . Here the matter in issue was confined to the single point of Wetmore's authority to make and indorse the paper sued upon.[2] . . . But although he was the first witness called, and the case involved nothing but paper made or indorsed by himself, he was not asked respecting his signatures, and the notes were not offered in evidence while he was upon the stand. The reason for this was apparent as soon as the cross-examination commenced; for when the witness was asked any questions concerning the notes, the purpose of which was to show that he had signed or indorsed them without authority and in fraud of defendant, and that he had admitted that such was the fact, objection was at once interposed on behalf of the plaintiff; and the circuit judge, remarking that the witness had given no testimony in reference to the notes nor had any testimony been introduced by any other party in reference to them nor had the notes been put in evidence, sustained the objection. The questions on behalf of the plaintiff had been carefully restricted to that part of the facts which it was supposed would tend in its favor, and in respect to which a cross-examination could not be damaging, and were intended, instead of eliciting the whole truth, to conceal whatever would favor the defense. The witness, instead of being required, according to the obligation of his oath, to tell the whole truth, had been carefully limited to something less than the whole; and when questions were asked calculated to supply his omissions, they were ruled out because they did not relate to the precise circumstances which the plaintiff had thought it for his interest to call out. It would be difficult to present a more striking illustration of the error in the rule in People v. Horton than is afforded by this case. For here was the principal actor in the transaction under investigation brought forward as a witness to support his own acts, but carefully examined in such a manner as to avoid having him utter a single word regarding the main fact — though it was peculiarly within his own knowledge, — and even his handwriting was left to be proved by another. In that manner he was made to conceal not merely a part of the transaction but a principal part, and made to tell, not the whole truth according to the obligation of his oath, but a small fraction only, — a fraction, too, that was important only as it bore upon the main fact which was so carefully kept out of sight while this witness was giving his evidence. It is true, the defense was at liberty to call the witness subsequently; but this is no answer; the defense was not compellable to give credit to the plaintiff's witness as its own for the purpose of an explanation of facts constituting the plaintiff's case and a part of which the plaintiff had put before the jury when examining him. One of the mischiefs of the rule in People v. Horton was that it encouraged a practice not favorable to justice, whereby a party was compelled to make an unfriendly witness his own, after the party calling him had managed to present a one-sided and essentially false account of the facts, by artfully aiding the witness to give such glimpses of the truth only as would favor his own side of the issue. What has been said on this point has in substance been said many times before. The necessity of repeating it is a singular illustration of the difficulty with which a mischievous but plausible precedent is sometimes got rid of." [3]

[2] The next two sentences are for clearness' sake transferred here from the preceding page of the opinion.

The chief objections to the Federal rule may be summarized as three in number; and although these apply in aggravated degree to its degenerate form only, and not to its original and pure form, nevertheless, as already suggested (ante, § 1886), the rule must be reckoned with as it usually is applied and not as it might be:

(1) The necessity of determining, for each question on cross-examination, whether the fact inquired for is properly a part of the case of one or the other party produces delay, propagates confusion, and increases the opportunities for securing a re-trial on trifling errors of ruling which do not affect the merits of the cause or the truth of the facts. Even under a strict system of pleading, this possibility is great; but under the prevailing loose system of pleading they are legion. Moreover, under the degenerate form of the rule (ante, § 1886), not even the rules of pleading can furnish a guide; the line of distinction changes with every witness, it is both variable and uncertain; and it requires either an impossible feat of memory or a constant perusal of a stenographic report to ascertain the standard of decision. Thus are caused additional labor in preparation for trial, delay and confusion in its progress, and an increased contingency that the work must be done over again at a new trial. (2) The opportunities for successful unfair tactics are increased, by enabling the calling party to suppress part of the facts, so as to oblige the cross-examiner to call the witness later as his own.[4] The latter's right to do this is for him usually no just equivalent; first, because the proper time to extract the desired facts effectively is the time immediately after the direct examination; and, secondly, because with a hostile witness it is often dangerous, if not impossible, to attempt to obtain the facts fully at the later stage. The result is (as the calling party hopes) often to prevent the cross-examiner from obtaining the desired facts at all, because he does not feel justified in risking the exercise of his right to call the witness subsequently. This evil is the more emphasized where the witness is himself the party opposed to the cross-examiner; especially in a criminal case, where the prosecution could not call the accused as its own witness, except under the restrictions of the privilege against self-crimination (post, § 2276). (3) It hampers the cross-examiner subjectively in exercising the fundamental right of cross-examination; because, in many jurisdictions following this rule, the erratic corollary is enforced that, by asking about his own case on cross-examination, the opposing party makes the witness his own and therefore becomes unable to discredit him (ante, § 914); the consequence being that the cross-examiner feels himself in a constant danger of overstepping the line and losing his right to expose a false witness, and thus is obliged to leave a large margin for safety. That this produces an unnecessary labor and responsibility, and has inevitably a dulling effect upon what should be the sharp weapon of cross-examination, must be apparent. In this respect the rule has a vicious indirect effect in helping to disarm the opponent of his greatest protection against fraud and perjury. A perusal of some of the modern rulings enforcing this pedantic application discloses better than anything else the degenerate and pettifogging influence of the rule in question.

[3] In Detroit & M. R. Co. v. van Steinburg, 17 Mich. 99, 109, the same judge had forcibly expounded the evils of the rule here repudiated.

These objections, together with other minor ones noted by the various judges, ought to be enough to stem the progress of this rule. In its two generations of existence it has gone into many Courts; but in most of these it is not too late to turn — if not to repudiate the rule, at least to revise and restore it to its original and pure form. It was accepted in almost every instance merely upon authority, and under the belief that it was, in the eminent jurist's language, "well established." Since the test of experience has passed, few have been found to defend it; nor can it be successfully defended. It has sometimes been called the American rule. It is not yet entitled to that name, and it must never be.

[4] Particularly in the case of an accused offering himself as a witness; see the citations post, § 1890.

§ 1889. Same: (3) Michigan Rule; Cross-Examination to Facts Modifying the Direct Examination. It has already been noted (ante, § 1886) that, so far as the Federal rule has any claim to scientific orderliness, it rests on the assumption that to each party is apportioned a stage of the trial for the presentation of the facts supporting his own case, and that it is proper for him to present the evidence of those facts in that stage only. Hence, the extent of the prohibition, as it affects the cross-examiner, is limited to those facts which would have formed a part of his own affirmative case at a later stage. In this, the pure and only plausible form of the rule, the cross-examiner may still inquire as to all facts which modify or explain away the effect of the facts of the proponent's case as brought out on the direct examination; and the prohibition applies only to his own affirmative case, since the former class of facts would not in themselves be a part of the cross-examiner's own case. This form of the rule is still open to the first and perhaps other objections already noted (ante, § 1880). But unfortunately the originating words of Justice Storey and of Chief Justice Gibson (quoted ante, § 1885), prohibiting all except "facts connected with the matters stated in his direct examination," gave to the rule a much broader and a wholly unscientific form. In the result (contrary, perhaps, to their real expectations) the latter form, based upon their literal expressions, came to be accepted in most of the Courts following their rule, producing in its application the most serious of the disadvantages latent in it. Against this degenerate form and its practical results, a number of Courts have earnestly protested. These have striven, while accepting the rule, to enforce it in its pure and only defensible form, and to diminish its rigor by a generous interpretation. There is a difficulty in defining the line of distinction, especially under a loose system of pleading; but the general purpose and theory is plain enough.

This form of the rule may be termed the Michigan rule, since the Court of Michigan has not only most fully expounded it but has by its sound exposition done particular service in arresting the progress of the inferior form:

1861, CHRISTIANCY, J., in Campau v. Dewey, 9 Mich. 381, 419: "It is further essential to the development of the true logical idea of cross-examination to observe that it is the tendency of the direct examination which determines the subject of it of a test of cross-examination. For example, it is that essential or ultimate fact in the plaintiff's case which determines the logical limits of the cross-examination, and not merely the particular minor facts and circumstances tending to the proof of that fact. As the plaintiff is at liberty to adduce any number of these particular or secondary facts, however disconnected with each other, so that they tend to the proof of the essential resultant fact which he is bound to establish; so must the defendant be equally entitled on cross-examination to elicit any number of such particular facts as may tend to disprove that resultant fact or to weaken the tendency in its favor of the particular facts stated on the direct examination.[1] . . . But these remarks must be confined to such facts on cross-examination as go to controvert so much of the plaintiff's case as the direct testimony tended to prove. The party against whom the witness is called has no right (and, I think, should not have, under any rule) on cross-examination to go into an independent or affirmative case on his own part, which does not controvert the 'prima facie' case which the direct testimony tended to prove, but seeks to meet it by matter substantially in the nature of confession and avoidance; as to the facts constituting such a defense, the onus of proof is on the defendants. And where two or more main facts are essential to the plaintiff's 'prima facie' case, such as the title of the plaintiff and conversion by the defendant in trover, and the direct examination has been confined to matters tending only to the proof of one of these main facts, the defendant should not be allowed to cross-examine as to the other;[2] as this would have no relation to the evidence in chief, and could not therefore in any logical sense be denominated a cross-examination. Such, I think, are the purely logical principles of a cross-examination. To apply these principles to the case before us. The main question in controversy was the identity of the person under whom the plaintiffs claimed with the person described in the treaty by the name of Taucumegoqua. The burden of proving this identity rested with the plaintiffs throughout the case. This fact was necessary to constitute a 'prima facie' case for the plaintiffs, and without it the defendants needed no defense. It was a fact, then, which belonged to the plaintiffs', not the defendants' case. . . . From the peculiar nature of the question, anything which tended to show that some other person was the reservee intended by the treaty would also tend to show that the person under whom the plaintiffs claimed was not. It is therefore a mistake to suppose that this could only be shown for the purpose of proving title in the defendants; it would defeat the title of the plaintiffs, and this was all that the defendants were required to do; [and questions as to the presence at the treaty-making of another person of the same name were proper on cross-examination]."

1862, CAMPBELL, J., in Chandler v. Allison, 10 Mich. 460, 477: "The principal point in controversy was whether Allison had an unqualified present interest as a tenant of Chandler. That he was a tenant was conceded, and the only point in issue on that subject was whether, under the terms of his holding, Chandler had a right to require him to leave, in order to rebuild upon the premises. The questions put to the witness [Allison, the plaintiff, testifying for himself in an action of trespass against Chandler for expelling him,] were aimed at ascertaining the precise terms of the letting. . . . It is difficult to perceive any principle upon which such questions can be held improper on cross-examination. The only object of this process is to elicit the whole truth concerning transactions which may be supposed to have been only partially explained, and where the whole truth would present them in a different light. Whenever an entire transaction is in issue, evidence which conceals a part of it is defective, and does not comply with the primary obligation of the oath, which is designed to elicit the whole transaction. . . . When the answers are given, the nature and extent of the transaction becomes known from a comparison of the whole, and each fact material to a comprehension of the rest is equally important and pertinent."

1874, Rush v. French, 1 Ariz. 99, 134, 138, 139, 25 Pac. 816. The following rule was laid down by the majority, per GARBER, J.: "1. When an adverse witness has testified to any point material to the party calling him, he may then and there be fully cross-examined and led by the adverse party upon all matters pertinent to the case of the party calling him, except exclusively new matter; and nothing shall be deemed new matter except it be such as could not be given under a general denial; 2. The fact that evidence called forth by a legitimate cross-examination happens also to sustain a cross-action or counter-claim affords no reason why it should be excluded." Upon this the following comments were made by DUNNE, C. J.: "[The rule as stated by Justice Story] is very broad; it covers an inquiry into 'all the facts and circumstances connected with the matter stated in the direct examination.' But while it is broad, it is also uncertain, and uncertainty is almost the greatest defect a rule can have. Whatever may be urged against the English rule, it cannot be charged with uncertainty. It possesses certainty even to my lord Coke's celebrated third degree. There is little danger of trenching upon its limitations; for it is practically without any. We do not wonder that it is popular with judges; for it relieves them of all anxiety upon one of the most intricate and delicate branches of their duty. But it seems very hard that a party may be allowed to set up new matter in defense and draw the proof to support it out of the plaintiff's witnesses by cross-examination; doubtless it is the apprehended hardship of this part of the rule which has te[illegible]ourts to depart from it. But whenever they have done so, and have failed to [illegible]e other definite rule, great trouble and difficulty have followed. . . . We have [illegible]bjection to the [Federal] rule as stated by Judge Garber [being in substance the r[illegible]oted supra], and that is the difficulty of applying it with certainty in the hurry of nisi prius trials. The test as to whether matter is or is not new matter of defense is, Can it be given in evidence under a general denial? and very often it is not easy to say at a moment's notice whether the matter is new or not in this sense. The rule would hardly forward business on the trial; there would be the same objection by counsel as to admissibility, the same consumption of time in argument, and the same hesitation on the part of the Court to decide. But there is this advantage [over the looser form of the Federal rule]: after the trial is over, all parties know just what is necessary to determine whether an appeal will lie or not; they know where the line is drawn; they can look for it, and when they find it they know that they have struck 'wall rock,' and that it is useless to go further; this is a great deal better than trusting to some other man's idea of the general equities of the case. Still, it is a very poor substitute for the plain, simple, English rule, which avoids all possibility of dispute, saves all contention at the trial, dispatches the business at once, and yet, according to the testimony of our oldest and busiest State, hurts nobody."

§ 1889. [1] The next two sentences are here inserted from the preceding page of the opinion.

[2] Notice that this sentence represents a qualification or sub-variety of the foregoing proposition; and is lacking in some statements of the rule, e. g. in Rush v. French, post. It embodies the really vicious feature of the inferior practice, namely, making the rule depend not on the nature of the issues under the pleadings, but on the topics which the direct examiner has pleased to mention in his questions.

1881, BREWER, J., in Blake v. Powell, 26 Kan. 320, 326: "A cross-examination is not limited to the very day and exact fact named in the direct examination. It may extend to other matters which limit, qualify, or explain the facts stated on the direct examination, or modify the inferences deducible therefrom, providing only that such matters are directly connected with the facts testified to in chief."

§ 1890. Same: State of the Law in the Various Jurisdictions. 1. With reference to the discretionary power of the trial Court to allow variations from the customary order, it is clear (ante, §§ 1867, 1885, 1886) that this is an inherent assumption in each rule as properly understood. The Courts following the orthodox rule seldom forget this; and the Courts in which the Federal rule originated (Pennsylvania and the Federal Court) are still found recognizing it fully, and declining ordinarily to consider as an error any variation sanctioned by the trial Court. But in many of the Courts following the latter rule the qualification as to discretion is usually ignored, and the rule is enforced in its most bigoted form.

2. With reference to the customary scope of the facts that may be sought on cross-examination, the inferior form of the Federal rule is found now applied in the majority of jurisdictions. In a large minority the orthodox rule prevails. In a small minority (notably Michigan and California) the better form of the Federal rule (termed above the Michigan rule) is carefully enforced. As between the two forms of the Federal rule it is sometimes difficult to ascertain which has been adopted, and there are sub-varieties of it.

3. As applied to the party-opponent testifying in a civil case, the extreme rule is apt to be modified.[1] As applied to an accused taking the stand in his own favor, the rule is often attempted to be juggled with,[2] and is also subject to confusion with other principles, to be later discriminated (post, § 1895).[3]

§ 1890. [1] Compare the cases cited ante, § 916.

[2] Compare the rulings in California and Missouri, intended to prevent this. As applied to an accused the rule is particularly absurd, because the prosecution cannot call him as its own witness.

[3] The rulings in the various jurisdictions are as follows; but for an accused or a civil opponent as witness the rulings are sometimes affected by the statutes quoted ante, § 488 (making parties competent), and by the statutes quoted ante, § 916 (impeaching one's own witness); and the rulings as to an accused's waiver of privilege against self-crimination (post, § 2276) are sometimes not to be distinguished from those under the present rule:

England (the cases are cited post, §§ 1891–1893).

Canada: British Columbia: St. 1902, c. 22, § 6 ("in cross-examination questions may be asked with regard to any matter referred to in the evidence of the witness while under examination in chief"); St. 1903–1904, 3 & 4 Edw. VII, c. 18, Evidence Act Amendment Act, § 4 (repeals St. 1902, c. 22, § 6); this part of the repeal is an unfortunate step backwards, and should be reconsidered;
Manitoba: St. 1906, 5 & 6 Edw. VII, c. 17, § 2, Rev. St. 1913, c. 46, Rule 474 (a party, etc., to a civil action "may be examined upon the trial thereof as if under cross-examination at the instance of the adverse party or parties, or any of them, and for that purpose may be compelled in the same manner, and subject to the same rules for examination, as any other witness to testify, but the party calling for such examination shall not be concluded thereby, but may rebut it by counter-testimony");
New Brunswick: 1859, Atkinson v. Smith, 4 All. 309 (defendant not allowed to cross-examine to an affirmative defence; good opinion by Parker, J.); 1870, Fredericton Boom Co. v. McPherson, 2 Han. 9 (defendant allowed to prove payment on cross-examination, but not a set-off; 1870, Gilbert v. Campbell, 13 N. Br. 55, 58 (English rule followed); 1892, Schofield v. Anderson, 31 N. Br. 518;
Ontario: 1859, Lamb v. Ward, 18 U. C. Q. B. 304, 313 (per Burns, J.: "That rule [of England] has always prevailed in this country until questions have been made at Nisi Prius within the last year"; but limiting the examination of an opponent as a witness, under statutory implication); 1861, Dickson v. Pinch, 11 U. C. C. P. 148 (treating the party like other witnesses; good opinions by Draper, C. J., Richards and Hagarty, JJ.; per Richards, J.; "The rule which prevails in England and Ireland, and which I have always understood to be in force here," permits a witness to be called on "to state all he knew about the matters in dispute").

United States: Federal: 1820, Harrison v. Rowan, 3 Wash. C. C. 580 ("Upon the cross-examination of a witness, he may be asked leading questions, to draw from him a further disclosure than was made upon the principal examination and in reference to the matter testified about. But if the cross-examination respects new matter, leading questions cannot be asked"; the ruling thus shows no indication of a practice at this time to forbid questions as to new matter, but rather the contrary: the rule as to leading questions was an independent one, ante, § 915; note here, too, that the Court was trying a will issue directed by itself in Chancery, yet does not refer to a Chancery rule); 1840, Philadelphia & T. R. Co. v. Stimpson, 14 Pet. 448, 461 (Federal rule laid down; quoted ante, § 1885); 1861, Johnston v. Jones, 1 Black 209, 226 (rule of the preceding case "adhered to"); 1863, Houghton v. Jones, 1 Wall. 702, 706 ("the rule has been long settled"); 1873, Rea v. Missouri, 17 Wall. 532, 542 (cross-examination is "usually confined within the scope of the direct examination"; but "a greater latitude is undoubtedly allowable" for a party-opponent as witness; when the range is thus enlarged, the trial Court's discretion controls); 1879, Wills v. Russell, 100 U. S. 621, 625 ("A party has no right" to examine on new matter "without leave of the Court," but no precedent has declared that judgment will be reversed for a relaxation of the rule; "it clearly would not be a ground of error, unless it appeared that it worked serious injury to the opposite party"); 1883, Gilmer v. Higley, 110 U. S. 47, 49, 3 Sup. 471 (cross-examination held improperly restricted); 1899, Montgomery v. Ins. Co., 3 C. C. A. 553, 97 Fed. 913 (rule applied); 1899, Merchants' Life Ass'n v. Yoakum, 39 C. C. A. 56, 98 Fed. 251 (rule applied); 1900, McBride v. U. S., 42 C. C. A. 38, 101 Fed. 821 ("It was within the discretion of the trial judge to confine the cross-examination to matters concerning which the witness had testified on his direct examination"); 1901, Mine & Smelter S. Co. v. Parke & L. Co., 47 C. C. A. 34, 107 Fed. 881, 885 (held properly limited in discretion); 1902, McCrea v. Parsons, 50 C. C. A. 612, 112 Fed. 917 (cross-examination held properly restricted); 1902, Sauntry v. U. S., 55 C. C. A. 148, 117 Fed. 132 (confused statement, mingling both rules); 1903, Fourth Nat'l Bank v. Albaugh, 183 U. S. 734, 23 Sup. 450 (trial Court's discretion); 1903, M'Knight v. U. S., 122 Fed. 926 (Federal rule applied); 1899, Davis v. Coblens, 174 U. S. 719, 726, 19 Sup. 832 (rule of discretion applied); 1904, Resurrection G. M. Co. v. Fortune G. M. Co., 129 Fed. 668, 674, 681, 685, 64 C. C. A. 180 ("In the Courts of the United States, the party on whose behalf a witness is called has the right to restrict his cross-examination to the subjects of his direct examination, and a violation of this right is reversible error," per Sanborn, J.; to speak here of "reversible error" is to bow to the most bigoted fetish-like form of the rule; in view of Wills v. Russell, 100 U. S., supra, such a doctrine in the Federal Circuit Court of Appeals is an anachronism, as well as a reproach to the name of Justice; it is justly dissented from by Hook, J., who declares for the pristine rule leaving this subject "generally a matter within the sound discretion of the trial Court"; and by Thayer, J., who expressed the view that it was "overtechnical, unnecessary, and unwise" to invoke the rule of "reversible error"; it is to be hoped that the opinion of these two judges will prevail in the practice of the Circuit Courts of Appeals); 1904, Balliet v. U. S., 129 Fed. 689, 695, 64 C. C. A. 201 (rule applied to an accused taking the stand); 1904, Garlich v. Northern P. R. Co., 131 Fed. 837, 67 C. C. A. 237 (cross-examination held proper on the facts); 1909, Harrold v. Terr., 8th C. C. A., 169 Fed. 47 ("a violation of the right restricting cross-examination is reversible error," per Sanborn, J.; this utterly reprehensible rule is justly protested against by Adams, J., who points out that it was expressly repudiated by a majority of the judges in this circuit in Resurrection Gold M. Co. v. Fortune Gold M. Co., and in Balliet v. U. S., supra; the persistent attempt to fix this bigoted rule on the circuit should be discountenanced); 1909, St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Cundieff, 8th C. C. A., 170 Fed. 319 (rule applied to a witness to a railroad-crossing accident); 1910, Æolian Co. v. Standard M. R. Co., C. C. N. J., 176 Fed. 811 (rule applied); 1910, Ferry-Hallock Co. v. Orange H. B. Co., C. C. N. J., 185 Fed. 816 (rule applied to patent-infringement cases; its absurdity is here illustrated); 1916, Hendrey v. U. S., 6th C. C. A., 233 Fed. 5, 15 (an example of the absurdity of the Federal rule; on a charge of participating in a fraudulent banking scheme, the receiver of the bank was called, and a question on cross-examination whether the bank was insolvent was held improper because not germane to the direct examination; incidentally, the opinion reveals rank technicality in construing the indictment; that criminal procedure has aspects of degeneracy is plainly illustrated in this case); 1916, DeWitt v. Skinner, 8th C. C. A., 232 Fed. 443 ("The right of cross-examination is not confined to the specific details of the direct examination, but extends to the subject-matter inquired about"); 1917, Coco-Cola Co. v. Moore, 8th C. C. A., 246 Fed. 942 (legal services); 1919, Heard v. U. S., 8th C. C. A., 255 Fed. 829 (robbery).

Alabama: 1854, Kelly v. Brooks, 25 Ala. 523, 527 (may examine as to "all facts material in the case"); 1856, Fralick v. Presley, 29 Ala. 457, 461 (same); 1869, Toole v. Nichol, 43 Ala. 406, 419 (contra; Federal rule 'obiter' approved, without citing the above precedents); 1892, Johnson v. Armstrong, 97 Ala. 731, 735, 12 So. 72 (orthodox rule applied); 1892, Huntsville R. Co. v. Corpening, 97 Ala. 681, 687, 12 So. 295 (in the trial Court's discretion, opponent may cross-examine to his own case); 1915, Carter v. State, 191 Ala. 3, 67 So. 981 (Fralick v. Presley affirmed; the 'obiter' approved of the Federal rule in Toole v. Nichol, repudiated; but "the exercise of the right to cross-examine is subject to the trial Court's sound discretion").

Alaska: Comp. L. 1913, § 2258 (quoted ante, § 488); § 1498 (like Or. Laws 1920, § 860).

Arizona: 1874, Rush v. French, 1 Ariz. 99, 134, 139, 25 Pac. 816 (quoted ante, § 1889).

Arkansas: 1854, Austin v. State, 14 Ark. 555, 563 (confining cross-examination to "those facts and circumstances only connected with the matters actually stated in the direct examination of a witness"); 1909, St. Louis I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Raines, 90 Ark. 398, 119 S. W. 665 (Austin v. State cited; but the trial Court's discretion is conceded).

California: C. C. P. 1872, § 2048 (this dates after the case in 36 Cal., infra; "The opposite party may cross-examine the witness as to any facts stated in his direct examination or connected therewith, and in so doing may put leading questions; but if he examine him as to other matters, such examination is to be subject to the same rules as a direct examination"); for witnesses in general, the rulings are as follows: 1855, Landsberger v. Gorham, 5 Cal. 450, 452 (Mr. J. Story's rule adopted, by two to one); 1857, Thornburgh v. Hand, 7 Cal. 554, 561 ("A witness cannot be cross-examined, except in reference to matters concerning which he has been examined in chief"); 1859, Jackson v. Feather River W. Co., 14

Cal. 18, 23 ("Courts are apt to take too narrow a view of the rights of the examiner in such cases"; the rule goes only to this, that "if the defendant sets up a defense not necessarily involved in the denial of the plaintiff's case, but consisting of new matter, then the defendant must wait until after his opening before he offers proof of this new matter"); 1864, Aitken v. Mendenhall, 25 Cal. 212 (cross-examination held properly limited); 1867, Wetherbee v. Dunn, 32 Cal. 106, 108 (same); 1867, Harper v. Lamping, 33 Cal. 641, 647 (Jackson case followed); 1868, Thornton v. Hook, 36 Cal. 223, 228 ("It frequently happens that both sides of a case stand in part upon common territory, or are founded in part upon the same or cognate facts; . . . where such are the conditions, the course to be pursued must inevitably be left to the discretion of the Court below"); 1879, Steinburg v. Meany, 53 Cal. 425 (cross-examination held improperly restricted); 1882, McFadden v. Mitchell, 61 Cal. 148; 1882, Gridley v. Boggs, 62 Cal. 190, 200 (here held properly restricted); 1888, Braly v. Henry, 77 Cal. 324, 19 Pac. 529 (same); 1890, Graham v. Larimer, 83 Cal. 173, 180, 23 Pac. 286 (here held improperly restricted); 1891, McFadden v. R. Co., 87 Cal. 464, 470 (same); Wixom v. Goodcell, 90 Cal. 622, 626, 27 Pac. 419 (same); 1892, Westerfield's Estate, 96 Cal. 113, 116, 30 Pac. 1104 (here held properly limited); 1893, Townsend v. Briggs, — Cal. —, 32 Pac. 307 (same); 1897, Taggart v. Bosch, — Cal. —, 48 Pac. 1092 (liberal rule applied); 1901, Clarke v. Clarke, 133 Cal. 667, 66 Pac. 10 (same); 1901, People v. Altmeyer, 135 Cal. 80, 66 Pac. 974 (cross-examination held not to relate to the same subject as the direct examination); 1902, People v. Keith, 136 Cal. 19, 68 Pac. 816 (rule applied illiberally).

In the following cases the rule was applied to an accused taking the stand (compare §§ 2276, 2277, post): 1870, People v. Dennis, 39 Cal. 625, 634; 1871, People v. McGungill, 41 Cal. 429; 1873, People v. Russell, 46 Cal. 121; 1887, People v. Sutton, 73 Cal. 243, 15 Pac. 86; 1888, People v. Meyer, 75 Cal. 383, 386, 17 Pac. 431; 1888, People v. Rozelle, 78 Cal. 84, 92, 20 Pac. 36; 1890, People v. Mullings, 83 Cal. 138, 139, 23 Pac. 229 (an accused who merely testifies, "I am not guilty," may be cross-examined on all the facts); 1892, People v. O'Brien, 96 Cal. 171, 180, 31 Pac. 45; 1901, People v. Rodriguez, 134 Cal. 140, 66 Pac. 174; 1901, People v. Bishop, 134 Cal. 682, 66 Pac. 976; 1904, People v. Teshara, 141 Cal. 633, 75 Pac. 338 (like People v. McMullings, with qualifications); 1904, People v. Podilla, 143 Cal. 158, 76 Pac. 889 (rule applied in a bigoted fashion to prevent the impeachment of witnesses of the defendant); 1904, People v. Buckley, 143 Cal. 375, 77 Pac. 169; 1906, People v. Soeder, 150 Cal. 12, 87 Pac. 1016 (similar to People v. Mullings); 1908, People v. Schmitz, 7 Cal. App. 330, 94 Pac. 407 (an example of the senselessness of the Federal rule, and the litigious gambling which it encourages); 1919, People v. Tyren, 179 Cal. 575, 178 Pac. 132 (murder; cross-examination of defendant).

Columbia (Dist.): 1875, Cramer v. Cullinane, 2 MacArth. 197, 201 (Federal rule adopted); 1886, Woodbury v. District, 16 D. C. 127, 137 (same; "an impregnable rule of practice"); 1915, Washington R. & E. Co. v. Dittman, 44 D. C. App. 89 (death by wrongful act; Federal rule of discretion applied).

Connecticut: 1868, State v. Gaylord, 35 Conn. 203, 208 ("in practice, such inquiries are often made on cross-examination without objection, and allowed by the Court as a matter of convenience"); 1881, State v. Smith, 49 Conn. 376, 380 (Philadelphia & T. R. Co. v. Stimpson followed); 1901, Murphy v. Murphy, 74 Conn. 198, 50 Atl. 394 (trial Court's discretion conceded); 1905, Nichols v. Wentz, 78 Com. 429, 62 Atl. 610 (rule applied to testimony to the execution of a will); 1916, Levine v. Marcus, 90 Conn. 682, 98 Atl. 348 (action against indorser of a note).

Florida: 1882, Savage v. State, 18 Fla. 909, 957 (cross-examination is limited to matters dealt with in the direct examination, including the whole of the details of such matters); 1891, Adams v. State, 28 Fla. 511, 531, 10 So. 106 (cross-examination held properly limited); 1892, Tischler v. Apple, 30 Fla. 132, 138, 11 So. 273 (here held improperly limited, under the rule); 1893, Williams v. State, 32 Fla. 315, 317, 13 So. 834 (the rule allows inquiry into "all the facts and circumstances connected with the matters of the direct examination"); 1896, Thalheim v. State, 38 Fla. 169, 20 So. 938 (same); 1903, Peaden v. State, 46 Fla. 124, 35 So. 204 (rule applied); 1903, Fields v. State, 46 Fla. 84, 35 So. 185 (rule applied); 1905, Hampton v. State, 50 Fla. 55, 39 So. 421 (rule applied); 1912, Padgett v. State, 64 Fla. 389, 59 So. 947 (discretion of trial Court emphasized).

Georgia: Rev. C. 1910, § 5871, P. C. § 1044 ("The right of cross-examination, thorough and sifting, belongs to every party as to the witnesses called against him"); 1855, Dawson v. Callaway, 18 Ga. 573, 585 (orthodox rule followed); 1902, Ficken v. Atlanta, 114 Ga. 970, 41 S. E. 58 (same).

Hawaii: 1897, Piipiilani v. Houghtailing, 11 Haw. 100 (cross-examination must "relate to matters brought out on the direct examination"); 1898, Kalaukoa v. Henry, 11 Haw. 430, 431 (similar); Booth v. Beckley, 11 Haw. 518, 521 (the trial Court has discretion); 1904, Ahmi v. Waller, 15 Haw. 497, 501 (Booth v. Buckley, approved); 1904, Flint v. Flint, ib. 313 (similar).

Idaho: Comp. St. 1919, § 8034 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 2048); § 8035 (quoted ante, § 916, n. 2); 1897, State v. Larkins, 5 Ida. 200, 47

Pac. 945 (defendant in a criminal case taking the stand; statute applied).

Illinois: 1864, Stafford v. Fargo, 35 Ill. 481, 486 (cross-examination is confined to "the facts to which he testified in chief"; yet "it may be that unless the Court could see that such an examination had resulted in injury to the opposite party, the judgment would not be reversed for that reason alone; but being calculated to work injury, such a practice should be discouraged"; quoted ante, § 1887); 1864, Chicago & R. I. R. Co. v. Northern Ill. C. & I. Co., 36 Ill. 60 (cross-examination is limited to the subject of the testimony in chief, "except by the exercise of the discretionary power of the Court"); 1872, Bell v. Prewitt, 62 Ill. 361, 367 (cross-examination on new matter, held improperly allowed); 1875, Drohn v. Brewer, 77 Ill. 280, 282 (cross-examination held properly limited); 1887, Bonnet v. Slattfeldt, 120 Ill. 166, 172, 11 N. E. 250 (same); 1887, Erie & Pac. Despatch v. Stanley, 123 Ill. 158, 14 N. E. 212 (same); 1889, Anheuser Busch B. Ass'n v. Hutmacher, 127 Ill. 652, 656, 21 N. E. 626 (same); Hanks v. Rhoads, 128 Ill. 404, 407, 21 N. E. 774 (same); 1892, Hansen v. Miller, 145 Ill. 538, 32 N. E. 548 (rule applies equally to a party-witness); 1898, Wheeler & W. M. Co. v. Barrett, 172 Ill. 610, 50 N. E. 325; 1903, Spohr v. Chicago, 206 Ill. 441, 69 N. E. 515 (but the trial Court has a "large discretion"); 1904, Dick v. Zimmermann, 207 Ill. 636, 69 N. E. 754; 1904, Chicago City R. Co. v. Creech, 207 Ill. 37, 69 N. E. 919 (the cross-examiner may "elicit suppressed facts which weaken or qualify the case of the party introducing the witness or supporting the case of the party cross-examining"; no precedents cited); 1909, Schmidt v. Chicago City R. Co., 239 Ill. 494, 88 N. E. 275 (after direct examination to a custom of intersecting street-railroads to give the right of way to the car which first arrived within 200 feet, a cross-examination as to the length of time required to run 200 feet, etc., would be improper; this illustrates the quibbling unpracticalness of the rule); 1918, People v. Robertson, 284 Ill. 620, 120 N. E. 539 (conspiracy; a peculiar ruling).

Indiana: 1855, Wright v. Gaff, 6 Ind. 416, 420 (Federal rule adopted in this and the following cases); 1859, Patton v. Hamilton, 12 Ind. 256; Dearmond v. Dearmond, 12 Ind. 455, 457; 1863, Aurora v. Cobb, 21 Ind. 492, 511; 1874, Stinehouse v. State, 47 Ind. 17; 1881, Johnson v. Wiley, 74 Ind. 233, 237 ("A cross-examination must be confined to the subject-matter of the original examination"); 1886, Hunsinger v. Hofer, 110 Ind. 390, 394, 11 N. E. 463 (cross-examination held properly limited); 1887, Cincinnati C. I. & St. L. R. Co. v. Lutes, 112 Ind. 276, 284, 11 N. E. 784, 14 N. E. 706; 1888, Britton v. State, 115 Ind. 55, 61, 17 N. E. 254 (same); 1892, Chandler v. Beal, 132 Ind. 596, 598, 32 N. E. 597; 1905, Osburn v. State, 164 Ind. 262, 73 N. E. 601 ("When the direct examination opens on a general subject, the cross-examination may go into any phase of that subject"; said of the accused's conversations); 1905, Westfall v. Wait, 165 Ind. 353, 73 N. E. 1089 (same rule, applied to testimony to a testator's sanity) 1907, Eacock v. State, 169 Ind. 488, 82 N. E. 1039 (the trial Court's discretion controls); 1912, Crawfordsville Trust Co. v. Ramsay, 178 Ind. 258, 98 N. E. 177 (probate of a will; the testator's physician being examined by the plaintiffs on matters not involving sanity, the opponents on cross-examination asked the physician's opinion as to the testator's sanity; the trial Court's discretion in excluding this was held correctly exercised; it was right to leave the matter to the trial Court's discretion; but the ruling of the trial Court shows the absurdity of the present rule in practice).

Indian Terr.: 1905, Miller v. Springfield W. Co., 6 Ind. T. 115, 89 S. W. 1011 (under Annot. St. 1899, § 2012, the trial Court may allow cross-examination on matters not touched on in the direct examination).

Iowa: 1862, Wilhelmi v. Leonard, 13 Ia. 330, 335, semble (Federal rule applied); 1862, Davis v. Simma, 14 Ia. 154 (the "sound discretion" of the trial Court held to control; no cases cited); 1876, Artz v. R. Co., 44 Ia. 284, 286 (Federal rule applied in this and in ensuing cases); 1883, Glenn v. Gleason, 61 Ia. 28, 32, 15 N. W. 659 (but "much must be left to the discretion of the trial Court"); 1885, Citizens' Bank v. Rhutasel, 67 Ia. 316, 320, 25 N. W. 261; 1887, Krager v. Pierce, 73 Ia. 359, 363, 35 N. W. 477; 1888, Riordan v. Guggerty, 74 Ia. 690, 39 N. W. 107 (rule liberally construed where fraud is to be got at); 1888, Bulliss v. R. Co., 76 Ia. 680, 681, 39 N. W. 245; 1894, State v. Farrington, 90 Ia. 673, 57 N. W. 606; 1920, Graves v. Interstate Power Co., 189 Ia. 227, 178 N. W. 376 (death by electric wire; plaintiff's witnesses not allowed to be cross-examined as to notifying deceased of danger; unsound); 1921, State v. Walker 192 Ia. 823, 185 N. W. 619 (burglary; rule applied to defendant's wife, called to prove an alibi; the ruling is pedantically over-strict, of the species that needlessly assists the escape of criminals).

Kansas: 1872, Sumner v. Blair, 9 Kan. 521, 526 (cross-examination held too broad, but apparently on the ground of irrelevancy); 1873, Da Lee v. Blackburn, 11 Kan. 190, 202 (Federal rule applied); 1878, Callison v. Smith, 20 Kan. 28, 37 (same); 1881, Blake v. Powell, 26 Kan. 320, 326 (see quotation supra, § 1889); 1887, Lawder v. Henderson, 36 Kan. 754, 757, 14 Pac. 164 (must be confined "to the facts and circumstances given by the defendant in his evidence in chief").

Kentucky: C. C. P. 1895, § 594 ("the witness' examination, upon the same matter, by the adverse party is the cross-examination"); § 595 (leading questions not allowable on "new matters").

Louisiana: 1811, Durnford v. Clark, 1 Mart. 202 (English rule maintained; quoted supra, § 1888); 1859, Nicholson v. Desobry, 14 La. An. 81, 84 (same); 1878, State v. Swayze, 30 La. An. 1323, 1327, semble (Federal rule applied, but not applicable to the defendant in a criminal case); 1881, King v. Atkins, 33 La. An. 1057, 1064 (orthodox rule applied); 1912, State v. Oden, 130 La. 598, 58 So. 351 (illegal liquor-selling; here the startling result was reached that unless the accused does on direct examination say something about having a Federal revenue liquor license — and would he mention it, unless he went gae daft on the stand? — he cannot be asked about it on cross-examination; this ruling effectually removes from the defendant's mind a really disagreeable dilemma — perjury or discovery — in taking the witness stand); 1913, State v. Bellard, 132 La. 491, 61 So. 537 (opinion not entirely clear).

Maryland: 1815, Shields v. Millet, 4 H. & J. 1, 6, semble (orthodox rule applied); 1878, Griffith v. Diffenderfer, 50 Md. 466, 478 (Phila. & T. R. Co. v. Stimpson followed); 1881, Herrick v. Swomley, 56 Md. 439, 455; 1903, Black v. Bank, 96 Md. 399, 54 Atl. 88 (subject to the trial Court's discretion); 1916, Flaccus Glass Co. v. Gavin, 39 Md. 431, 98 Atl. 213 (contract for bottles).

Massachusetts: 1809, Webster v. Lee, 5 Mass. 334 (the opponent "might very properly cross-examine him as to all matters pertinent to the issue on trial"); 1831, Merrill v. Berkshire, 11 Pick. 269, 273 ("He was sworn generally in the suit, and cannot be restricted in his testimony to facts relating to such individual or such parts of the case as the party calling him may choose to select"); 1835, Moody v. Rowell, 17 Pick. 490, 499 ("Where a witness is called to a particular fact, he is a witness to all purposes"; quoted ante, § 1888); 1848, Com. v. Eastman, 1 Cush. 189, 197, 217 (here, by allowing the prosecution to cross-examine the defendant's witnesses); 1851, Burke v. Miller, 7 Cush. 547, 549 (declares that there has been "some diversity of practice" in the local courts, but intimates that "the strict rule does not permit a party who has not opened his own case to introduce it to the jury by cross-examining the witnesses of the adverse party"; leaving it, however, to the trial Court's discretion; no precedents cited); 1854, Beal v. Nichols, 2 Gray 262 ("The adverse party has the right to cross-examine the witness upon all matters material to the issue"; here applied to an attesting witness; quoted ante, § 1888); 1858, Com. v. Hudson, 11 Gray 64 ("A witness, when called by one party, is liable to be examined and bound to answer as to all facts material to the case, whether examined upon that subject by the party calling him or not"); 1871, Com. v. Morgan, 107 Mass. 199, 205 (cross-examination is "not confined to the matters inquired of in chief"); 1878, Blackington v. Johnson, 126 Mass. 21, 23 (similar; but said to be "within the discretion of the presiding judge"); 1903, O'Connell v. Dow, 182 Mass. 541, 66 N. E. 788 (rule applied even to an attesting witness required to be called); 1916, Conklin v. John Howard Industrial Home, 224 Mass. 222, 112 N. E. 606 (action against a corporation; the plaintiff having called its superintendent to prove incorporation, the defendant was allowed to cross-examine to show that the corporation was a charitable one and therefore not liable).

Michigan: Comp. L. 1915, § 12554 (quoted ante, § 916); 1856, People v. Horton, 4 Mich. 67, 80 (Mr. Justice Story's rule adopted; quoted supra, § 1887); 1861, Campau v. Dewey, 9 Mich. 381, 414, 439 (same, by Martin, C. J., and Manning, J., against Christiancy, J.; quoted ante, § 1888); 1862, White v. Bailey, 10 Mich. 155, 159 (rule applied); 1862, Chandler v. Allison, 10 Mich. 460, 477 (scope of the rule examined as to "facts connected with the matters stated in chief"; quoted ante, § 1889); 1865, Dann v. Cudney, 13 Mich. 239, 243 (cross-examination held improperly restricted under the rule); 1866, Thompson v. Richards, 14 Mich. 172, 183 (same); 1868, Detroit & M. R. Co. v. van Steinburg, 17 Mich. 99, 109 (negligent injury; plaintiff's witnesses allowed to be cross-examined as to his contributory negligence; "the case of People v. Horton, we think, is overruled, so far as it has any bearing upon the present question, by the cases of Chandler v. Allison" and the ensuing ones; quoted ante, § 1888); 1869, Turner v. Grand Rapids, 20 Mich. 390, 394 (testimony concerning matters in chief, held improperly excluded; "see Campau v. Dewey, where the rule of cross-examination, as applied in People v. Horton, was first brought in question in this State, and which has since been overruled by all the other cases above cited"); 1872, O'Donnell v. Segar, 25 Mich. 367, 371 ("The only safe general rule upon cross-examination is to allow the party cross-examining to go over the whole subject or subjects to which the direct examination related"; scope of cross-examination further phrased in terms similar to the next case); 1873, Wilson v. Wagar, 26 Mich. 452, 457 ("The defendant had the right on cross-examination, not only to call out any fact which would contradict or qualify any particular facts stated on the examination in chief, but anything which would tend to rebut or modify any conclusion or inference resulting from the facts so stated"); 1874, Hamilton v. People, 29 Mich. 173, 181 (cross-examination held improperly limited); 1876, Haynes v. Ledyard, 33 Mich. 319 (rule of Chandler v. Allison applied to allow a cross-examination); 1876, Jacobsen v. Metzger, 35 Mich. 103 (cross-examination held properly allowed; "much must be left to the discretion of the trial judge"); 1878, New York Iron Mine v. Negaunee Bank, 39 Mich. 644, 658

(Cooley, J.: "Those cases [of People v. Horton and Campau v. Dewey] have been repeatedly overruled; . . . the necessity of repeating it is a singular illustration of the difficulty with which a mischievous but plausible precedent is sometimes got rid of"; quoted ante, § 1888); 1880, Lichtenberg v. Mair, 43 Mich. 387, 5 N. W. 455 (cross-examination held improperly limited); 1883, Stearns v. Vincent, 50 Mich. 209, 221, 15 N. W. 86 (rule of Chandler v. Allison applied); 1886, People v. Barker, 60 Mich. 277, 302, 27 N. W. 539 (cross-examination broadly allowed: orthodox rule apparently approved); 1890, Ireland v. R. Co. 79 Mich. 163, 164, 44 N. W. 426 ("The rule is well established that a witness may be cross-examined upon all points material to the issue, whether the party has called them out upon direct examination or not"); 1893, Hemminger v. Assur. Co., 95 Mich. 355, 54 N. W. 949 (preceding case approved).

Minnesota: Gen. St. 1913, § 8377 (party called by adversary; quoted ante, § 488); 1920, Wrabek v. Suchomel, 145 Minn. 468, 177 N. W. 764 (battery; "the rule . . . is not absolute; the latitude to be allowed is largely within the discretion of the trial Court").

Mississippi: 1856, Mask v. State, 32 Miss. 405, 426, 429 (orthodox rule followed in a good opinion by Fisher, J.; Handy, J., diss., quoted ante, § 1887); 1905, Walton v. State, 87 Miss. 296, 39 So. 689 (rule applied).

Missouri: The ordinary rule was applied as follows: 1840, Page v. Kankey, 6 Mo. 433 (witness called to prove a signature; allowed to be cross-examined generally); 1843, Brown v. Burrus, 8 Mo. 26, 30 (witness "introduced to prove a single insulated fact," allowed to be cross-examined "to all matters involved in the issue"); 1874, St. Louis & I. M. R. Co. v. Silver, 56 Mo. 264 ("This Court at an early day adopted the English doctrine"); 1875, State v. Sayers, 58 Mo. 585, 586 (same); 1875, State v. Brady, 87 Mo. 142, 145 (same); 1898, State v. Soper, 148 Mo. 217, 235, 49 S. W. 1007 (same); 1905, Ayers v. Wabash R. Co., 190 Mo. 228, 88 S. W. 608 ("What is called the 'orthodox rule' has always been the rule in this State"); in 1905, the following statute intervened, inserting a new § 4655*a* into Rev. St. 1899, being § 5414 of R. S. 1919: "A party to a cause, civil or criminal, against whom a witness has been called and given some evidence, shall be entitled to cross-examine said witness (except where a defendant in a criminal case is testifying in his own behalf) on the entire case; but this shall not be construed to entitle a defendant who has pleaded a counterclaim or set-off in a civil case to cross-examine a plaintiff's witness in respect thereto, but as to said counterclaim or set-off such witness (if examined by defendant in relation thereto) shall be deemed defendant's witness and be so examined in the course of the trial"; of this statute, only the second part has anything that could be construed as a change in the law; and such petty tinkering is impolitic, especially when it is based on the erroneous theory noted ante, § 1887, par. d). For an accused, the following statute (quoted in full, ante, § 488) modified the general rule as before applied: Rev. St. 1881, § 1918, Rev. St. 1899, § 2637, R. S. 1919, § 4036 (the accused taking the stand "shall be liable to cross-examination as to any matter referred to in his examination in chief"); applied in the following cases: 1881, State v. McGraw, 74 Mo. 573; 1881, State v. Porter, 75 Mo. 171, 178; 1882, State v. McLaughlin, 76 Mo. 320; 1882, State v. Turner, 76 Mo. 350; 1883, State v. Douglass, 81 Mo. 231, 235; 1885, State v. Patterson, 88 Mo. 88, 91; 1885, State v. Mills, 88 Mo. 417; 1886, State v. Chamberlain, 89 Mo. 129, 133, 1 S. W. 145; 1886, State v. Bulla, 89 Mo. 595, 598, 1 S. W. 764; 1886, State v. Berning, 91 Mo. 82, 3 S. W. 588; 1887, State v. Beaucleigh, 92 Mo. 490, 495, 4 S. W. 666; 1888, State v. Brannum, 95 Mo. 19, 22, 8 S. W. 218; 1888, State v. West, 95 Mo. 139, 143, 8 S. W. 354; 1888, State v. Graves, 95 Mo. 516, 8 S. W. 739; 1890, State v. McKinzie, 102 Mo. 620, 632, 15 S. W. 149; 1892, State v. Turner, 110 Mo. 196, 201, 19 S. W. 645; 1892, State v. Avery, 113 Mo. 475, 500, 21 S. W. 193 (a single question as to guilt or innocence permits "a wide range of cross-examination"); 1899, State v. Hudspeth, 150 Mo. 31, 51 S. W. 483; 1900, State v. Miller, 156 Mo. 76, 85, 56 S. W. 907 (similar); 1901, State v. Hathorn, 166 Mo. 229, 65 S. W. 756 (repudiating the contrary ruling in State v. Brooks, 92 Mo. 542, 581, 612, 5 S. W. 257); 1905, State v. Wertz, 191 Mo. 569, 90 S. W. 838 (State v. Avery approved); 1906, State v. Feeley, 194 Mo. 300, 92 S. W. 663 (rule applied); 1906, State v. Barrington, 198 Mo. 23, 95 S. W. 235 (rule applied); 1911, State v. McDonough, 232 Mo. 219, 134 S. W. 545 (wife of defendant; choking off cross-examination to character by means of the present rule); 1913, State v. Foley, 247 Mo. 607, 153 S. W. 1010 (accused); 1915, State v. Sherman, 264 Mo. 374, 175 S. W. 73 (murder, during burglary; cross-examination of the accused as to the reason for his being in the neighborhood at the time, allowed under the above statute, now Rev. St. 1909, § 5242; surely no serious consideration should be given to an objection to such evidence on that ground); 1916, State v. Pfeifer, 267 Mo. 23, 183 S. W. 337; 1920, State v. Belknap, — Mo. —, 221 S. W. 39 (statutory rape; cross-examination of the accused); 1920, State v. Gallagher, — Mo. —, 222 S. W. 465 (co-indictee separately tried and convicted); 1920, State v. Wicker, — Mo. —, 222 S. W. 1014 (assault with intent to kill; cross-examination of defendant as to having said that the prosecuting witness' testimony on preliminary hearing was true, held improper, under Rev. St. § 5242); 1921, State v. Stokes, — Mo. —, 232 S. W. 107 (seduction; Rev. St. 1919, § 4036, applied to cross-examination of accused); 1922, State v. Meyer, — Mo. —, 238 S. W. 457 (not limited "to a mere categorical review of subjects covered in direct examination"); 1922, State v. Culpeper, — Mo. —, 238 S. W. 800 (robbery). Compare here the cases cited post, §§ 2376, 2377.

Montana: Rev. C. 1921, § 10665 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 2048); 1887, Terr. v. Rehberg, 6 Mont. 467, 472, 13 Pac. 132 (not clear); 1897, Harrington v. Mining Co., 19 Mont. 411, 48 Pac. 758 (may cross-examine on one's own case in the trial Court's discretion); 1901, Kipp v. Silverman, 25 Mont. 296, 64 Pac. 884 (liberal rule, like that of Michigan); 1902, Cobban v. Hecklen, 27 Mont. 245, 70 Pac. 805 ("Doubt respecting the limits to which cross-examination may go ought usually if not always to be resolved against the objection"); 1904, State v. Howard, 30 Mont. 518, 77 Pac. 50; 1906, Borden v. Lynch, 34 Mont. 503, 87 Pac. 609 (consideration of a note; the rule applies equally to a party-opponent); 1912, State v. Biggs, 45 Mont. 400, 123 Pac. 410 (liberal rule, leaving much to the trial Court's discretion); 1920, State v. Smith, 57 Mont. 349, 188 Pac. 644 (sedition; cross-examination of defendant to other seditious utterances not evidenced in the case for the prosecution, held improper).

Nebraska: 1878, Davis v. Neligh, 7 Nebr. 84, 87 ("must be restricted to the facts and circumstances drawn out on his direct examination"); so in the following: Clough v. State, 7 Nebr. 320, 341; 1879, Schlencker v. State, 9 Nebr. 241, 250, 1 N. W. 857; 1882, Boggs v. Thompson, 13 Nebr. 403, 14 N. W. 393; 1883, Cool v. Roche, 15 Nebr. 24, 26, 17 N. W. 119; 1888, Grimes v. Cannell, 23 Nebr. 191, 36 N. W. 479; 1897, Atwood v. Marshall, 52 Nebr. 173, 71 N. W. 1064 (rule liberally applied in cases of fraud); 1900, Missouri P. R. Co. v. Fox, 60 Nebr. 531, 83 N. W. 744; 1920, Larson v. Hafer, 105 Nebr. 257, 179 N. W. 1013 (assault and battery; cross-examination liberally allowed).

Nevada: 1872, Ferguson v. Rutherford, 7 Nev. 385, 390 (not decided); 1877, Buckley v. Buckley, 12 Nev. 423, 441; 14 Nev. 262 ("Cross-examination ought to be allowed a free range within the subject-matter of the evidence in chief, but if it ranges outside of that, there is error").

New Jersey: 1824, State v. Zellers, 7 N. J. L. 220, 229 ("Even upon a cross-examination, if you examine into a substantive independent matter, you must open it," meaning apparently that a statement by counsel as to his purpose must be made; and upon the counsel making such a statement, the examination proceeded as desired); 1857, Donnelly v. State, 26 N. J. L. 463, 494, semble (cross-examination to new matter, held properly refused); 1887, Disque v. State, 49 N. J. L. 249, 8 Atl. 281 (same rule for an accused); 1907, Crosby v. Wells, 73 N. J. L. 790, 67 Atl. 295 (cross-examination not restricted to matters of the direct examination, in case of a deposition taken out of the State under P. L. 1900, p. 375, formerly § 38 of St. 1874, Mar. 27, on Evidence); 1908, Axel v. Kraemer, 75 N. J. L. 688, 70 Atl. 367 (Crosby v. Wells followed); 1909, Prout v. Bernards L. & S. Co., 77 N. J. L. 719, 73 Atl. 486 ("As to matters directly in issue or directly relevant to the issue, there is no discretionary power"; this goes too far; the preceding cases are not cited, and the distinction between other rules and the present rule is apparently not perceived); 1920, State v. Fisher, 94 N. J. L. 12, 110 Atl. 124 (officer accepting bribes; discretion of the trial Court controls).

New Mexico: 1920, Morrill v. Jones, 26 N. M. 32, 188 Pac. 1108 (cross-examination of a bona fide purchaser of a note); 1921, State v. Taylor, 26 N. M. 429, 194 Pac. 368 (murder; rule applied to a witness for the State).

New York: 1804, Jackson v. Son, 2 Caines 178 (opponent not allowed to cross-examine to a will without notice to produce; by cross-examining "he made the witness as much his own as if he had himself called him"; a correct enough ruling on the facts); 1827, Jackson v. Varick, 7 Cow. 238, 242 ("P. [after examination by the defendant] was properly admitted to his cross-examination as a competent witness for the plaintiff"); affirmed in 2 Wend. 166, 171, 205; 1829, Fulton Bank v. Stafford, 2 Wend. 483, 485 (orthodox rule applied; quoted ante, § 1885); 1834, Bogert v. Bogert, 2 Edw. Ch. 399, 403 (a witness "sworn generally" "may be cross-examined at large in support of the rights of the opposite party"); 1860, Mattice v. Allen, 33 Barb. 543, 546 (the English rule "is the rule in this State"; yet the Court goes on, perplexingly, to approve Mr. J. Story's language, and declares that "a party has no right, before he has opened his case to the jury, to introduce it and prove it on cross-examination of his adversary's witness"); 1868, Blake v. People, 73 N. Y. 586 (to introduce matter of defence on cross-examination is in the trial Court's discretion, being "simply a question as to the order of proof"; no precedents cited); 1882, Neil v. Thorn, 88 N. Y. 270, 275 (refers to "the general rule that a party cannot introduce his case to the jury by cross-examining the witness of his adversary," but leaves the trial Court's discretion to control; ignoring the above leading cases, and citing only two irrelevant cases).

North Carolina: 1807, Sawrey v. Murrell, 2 Hayw. 397 (quoted ante, § 1888); 1899, State v. Allen, 107 N. C. 805, 11 S. E. 1016 ("The rule that the cross-examination is limited to the matters brought on the direct examination has never prevailed in this country").

North Dakota: 1896, State v. Kent, 5 N. D. 516, 67 N. W. 1052 (Federal rule applied; but, in an accused's examination, motive having been touched upon, the subject may be gone into; semble, also, that after a mere general denial of the crime, the same may follow); 1899, Kaeppler v. Red R. V. N. Bank, 8 N. D. 406, 410, 79 N. W. 869 (strict rule applied, though "much discretion should be given"); 1904, Hogen v. Klabo, 13 N. D. 319, 100 N. W. 847 (rule applied to an issue of payment on notes in a suit for a balance due; foregoing case not cited); 1905, Schwoebel v. Fugina, 14 N. D. 375, 104 N. W. 848 (trial Court's discretion controls; moreover, "any fact in issue within the knowledge of the adverse party may be proved by cross-examination of him"); 1909, Leistikow v. Zuelsdorf, 18 N. D. 511, 122 N. W. 340 (the original unamended pleading of the opponent, not admitted on cross-examination as an admission); 1911, Luick v. Arends, 21 N. D. 614, 132 N. W. 353 (on plaintiff's calling an opponent for cross-examination, his own counsel should ordinarily reserve his re-direct examination until his own case is put in).

Ohio: 1853, Legg v. Drake, 1 Oh. St. 286, 290 (orthodox rule said to be adopted, that cross-examination may extend "generally to the merits of the cause or to any matter embraced in the cause," with the qualification that it cannot include "distinct matter of his defence by way of avoidance"; similar to the Michigan rule).

Oklahoma: 1904, Woods v. Faurot, 14 Okl. 171, 77 Pac. 346 (Federal rule illiberally applied); 1919, Smith v. Missouri K. & T. R. Co., 76 Okl. 303, 185 Pac. 70 (medical testimony to personal injuries; rule applied overstrictly); 1919, Dix v. State, 15 Okl. Cr. 559, 179 Pac. 624 (co-defendant called by the prosecution); 1920, McNeill v. State, — Okl. Cr. —, 192 Pac. 256 (murder; plea, insanity; the defendant taking the stand, held that to evidence his insanity he could not "testify 'ad libitum' to anything which came to his mind," free from the ordinary rules of evidence); 1921, Kennedy v. Supnick, 82 Okl. 208, 200 Pac. 151 (contributory negligence).

Oregon: Laws 1920, § 860 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 2048); 1893, Ah Doon v. Smith, 25 Or. 89, 33 Pac. 1093 (citing the Michigan cases); 1894, Sayres v. Allen, Or. 215, 35 Pac. 254 (similar); 1895, Maxwell v. Bolles, 28 Or. 1, 41 Pac. 662 (it "may extend to any other matters connected therewith which tend to limit, explain, qualify, or rebut any inference resulting from the direct examination"); for an accused, the rule is strictly applied: 1885, State v. Lurch, 12 Or. 99, 102, 6 Pac. 408; 1886, State v. Saunders, 14 Or. 300, 309, 313, 12 Pac. 441; 1890, State v. Gallo, 18 Or. 423, 23 Pac. 264; 1902, State v. Deal, 41 Or. 437, 70 Pac. 534; 1904, Goltra v. Pentland, 45 Or. 254, 77 Pac. 129 (a good example of how the rule helps to suppress truth and reduce a trial to a game); 1917, Benson v. Johnson, 85 Or. 677, 165 Pac. 1001 (title to personalty; Lord's Or. L. § 860, applied).

Pennsylvania: 1827, Ellmaker v. Buckley, 16 S. & R. 72, 77 (Federal rule first put forward; quoted ante, § 1885); 1841, Castor v. Bavington, 2 W. & S. 505 (in Ellmaker v. Buckley "it was ruled that a party shall not introduce his case to the jury through a cross-examination of his adversary's witnesses"); 1843, Floyd v. Bovard, 16 W. & S. 75, 76 (similar; quoted ante, § 1887); 1838, Perit v. Cohen, 4 Whart. 81 (rule applied); 1844, Markley v. Swartzlander, 8 W. & S. 172, 177 (cross-examination to new matter, allowed for an attesting witness, on the facts); 1846, Schnable v. Doughty, 3 Pa. St. 392, 395 (the rule being departed from below, "it was so much a matter of discretion in the court below that we cannot reverse on that ground"); 1848, Bank v. Ferdyce, 9 Pa. 275, 276 (cross-examination to new matter, allowed on the facts); 1851, Mitchell v. Welch, 17 Pa. 339, 342 (cross-examination held properly restricted); 1855, Turner v. Reynolds, 23 Pa. 199, 206 (same); 1866, Helser v. McGrath, 52 Pa. 531 ("Cross-examination, as a general thing, is only regular when it is confined to the testimony given by the witness in chief"; but "much must still be left to the discretion of the judge," and in this case "an excess of latitude," not injuring the opponent, was held not ground for reversal); 1869, Jackson v. Litch, 62 Pa. 451, 455 (Sharswood, J.: "I have not been able to find a single case in which this Court has reversed on that ground; it has generally been considered as a matter within the sound discretion of the Court below"); 1875, Hopkinson v. Leeds, 78 Pa. 396, 400 (rule enforced); 1875, Malone v. Dougherty, 79 Pa. 46, 51 (cross-examination held properly restricted); 1879, Fulton v. Central Bank, 92 Pa. 112, 115 (like Mitchell v. Welch); 1880, Monongahela Water Co. v. Stewartson, 96 Pa. 436, 438 (same); 1883, Hughes v. Coal Co., 104 Pa. 207, 213 ("Cross-examination must be confined to matters which have been stated in the examination in chief"; yet "the purpose might often be defeated by a rigid enforcement of these rules in all cases," and "much must be left to the discretion of the Court below"); 1886, Thomas v. Loose, 114 Pa. 35, 47, 6 Atl. 326 (Jackson v. Litch approved; but here the discretion of the Court below was overruled, though unnecessarily; this case markedly illustrates the irrationality and injustice of the extreme form of this rule, the Court here ordering a new trial for a mere irregularity in the order of evidence); 1890, McNeal v. R. Co., 131 Pa. 184, 189, 18 Atl. 1026 (cross-examination held properly allowed) 1893, Bohan v. Avoca, 154 Pa. 404, 26 Atl. 604 (trial Court's discretion must control); 1902, Sutch's Estate, 201 Pa. 305, 50 Atl. 943 (rule treated as absolute); 1902, Smith v. Philadelphia Traction Co., 202 Pa. 54, 51 Atl. 345 (cross-examination tending to elicit facts which ought to have been brought out as a part of the opponent's case, held proper); 1903, Glenn v. Philadelphia & W. C. T. Co., 206 Pa. 135, 55 Atl. 860 ("while this is the rule, yet the range of a cross-examination must to a very great extent be left to the sound discretion of the trial judge"); 1905, Quigley v. Thompson, 211 Pa. 107, 60 Atl. 506 (negligence; rule applied); 1919, Reibstein v. Abbott's Alderney Dairies, 264 Pa. 447, 107 Atl. 776 (cross-examination to circumstances of a collision, here allowed).

Philippine Islands: C. C. P. 1901, § 381 ("each witness may be orally cross-examined by the adverse party or his counsel with sufficient fullness and freedom to test his accuracy and truthfulness and freedom from interest or bias, or the reverse, and to elicit all important facts bearing upon the issue. The courts shall be liberal in allowing cross-examinations, but shall have the power to restrict them so as to confine them to the purposes last above specified and to prevent irrelevant or insulting interrogatories"); § 339 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 2048).

Porto Rico: Rev. St. & C. 1911, § 1523 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 2047, first sentence); 1901, People v. Fernandez, 14 P. R. 611, 617 (Evid. Act, § 155, limiting to the direct examination, etc., held applicable to criminal cases).

South Carolina: 1831, Browning v. Huff, 2 Bail. 174, 178 (orthodox rule applied; distinguishing Price v. Jenkins, 1818, 1 N. & McC. 153, as properly decided on its facts); 1833, Poole v. Mitchell, 1 Hill 404; 1870, Mathews v. Heyward, 2 S. C. 239, 247; 1880, Kairson v. Puckhaber, 14 S. C. 626; 1850, Clinton v. McKenzie, 5 Strobh. 36, 41, semble (the opponent may "lay the foundation of his defence in any new matter in the knowledge of the witness"); 1881, Kibler v. McIlwain, 16 S. C. 550, 556 (see quotation supra, § 1888); 1886, Dillard v. Samuels, 25 S. C. 318, 322; 1888, Owens v. Gentry, 30 S. C. 490, 497, 9 S. E. 525; 1890, Willoughby v. R. Co., 32 S. C. 427, 11 S. E. 339; 1892, State v. Howard, 35 S. C. 197, 14 S. E. 481; 1895, Sims v. Jones, 43 S. C. 91, 20 S. E. 905; 1899, State v. McGee, 55 S. C. 247, 33 S. E. 353; 1918, Carmichael v. Carmichael, 110 S. C. 357, 96 S. E. 526 (general rule stated).

South Dakota: 1893, Wendt v. R. Co., 4 S. D. 476, 483, 57 N. W. 226 (Federal rule applied); so in the following: 1894, Noyes v. Belding, 5 S. D. 603, 59 N. W. 1069; 1895, First Nat'l Bank v. Smith, 8 S. D. 101, 65 N. W. 439; 1896, Novotny v. Danforth, 9 S. D. 301, 68 N. W. 749; 1898, Fisher v. Porter, 11 S. D. 311, 77 N. W. 112; 1900, Connor v. Corson, 13 S. D. 550, 83 N. W. 588 (cross-examination may in discretion be limited to the matter of the direct examination); 1900, Boucher v. Clark Publ. Co., 14 S. D. 72, 84 N. W. 237; 1902, Bedtkey v. Bedtkey, 15 S. D. 310, 89 N. W. 479 (subject to the trial Court's discretion); 1895, State v. Bunker, 7 S. D. 639, 642, 65 N. W. 33 (trial Court's discretion controls; here the complaining witness in bastardy).

Tennessee: 1901, Sands v. R. Co., 108 Tenn. 1, 64 S. W. 478 (orthodox English rule definitely adopted; "We believe this rule the sounder, in that it presents less technical difficulty, is easier of application, and tends in a larger measure to elicit the truth, the chief end of all judicial investigation").

Texas: 1853, Wentworth v. Crawford, 11 Tex. 127, 132 ("It is regular to ask a witness on a cross-examination any question that may be pertinent to the questions to be decided by the jury"); 1873, Bassham v. State, 38 Tex. 622, 625 (not clear); 1884, Evansich v. R. Co., 61 Tex. 24, 27 (Wentworth v. Crawford approved); 1922, Rodgers v. State, — Tex. Cr. —, 236 S. W. 748 (murder; cross-examination of wife to self-contradictions, allowed); 1916, McDougal v. State, 79 Tex. Cr. 254, 185 S. W. 15 (homicide; defendant's wife as witness).

Utah: 1902, Whipple v. Preece, 24 Utah 364, 67 Pac. 1072 (as against one charged with fraud, a wide range is permissible on cross-examination); 1915, State v. Benson, 46 Utah 74, 148 Pac. 445 (party); 1921, Central Bank v. Stephens, — Utah —, 199 Pac. 1019 (note signed conditionally).

Vermont: 1853, Linsley v. Lovely, 26 Vt. 123, 135 (orthodox rule applied); 1877, State v. Hopkins, 50 Vt. 316, 331, semble (same); 1917, Goodwin v. Barre S. B. & T. Co., 91 Vt. 228, 100 Atl. 34 (bank collections); 1919, Clogston's Estate, 93 Vt. 46, 106 Atl. 594 (probate of a will; rule not applicable to an adverse party); 1919, State v. Kelsie, 93 Vt. 450, 108 Atl. 391 (sanity of an accused; liberal rule applied to cross-examination of a medical witness for the accused).

Virginia: 1896, Miller v. Miller's Adm'r, 92 Va. 570, 23 S. E. 891 (Federal rule applied).

Washington: 1897, Bishop v. Averill, 17 Wash. 209, 49 Pac. 237, 50 Pac. 1024 (Federal rule applied); 1901, Coey v. Darknell, 25 Wash. 518, 65 Pac. 760 (cross-examination may cover "all matters directly stated or suggested his testimony"); 1909, Kinnane v. Conroy, 52 Wash. 651, 101 Pac. 223 (trial Court's discretion).

West Virginia: 1900, State v. Hatfield, 48 W. Va. 561, 37 S. E. 626 (trial Court's discretion approved in allowing cross-examination to one's own case); 1919, Ingles v. Stealey, 85 W. Va. 155, 101 S. E. 167 (party-opponent may be cross-examined to matters not covered by direct examination); 1921, State v. Weissengoff, 89 W. Va. 279, 109 S. E. 707 (trial Court's discretion controls).

Wisconsin: 1863, Congar v. R. Co., 17 Wis. 477, 483 (cross-examination to "new matter," excluded); 1869, Knapp v. Schneider, 24 Wis. 70, 71 ("The rule is that cross-examination is to be confined to the matters about which the witness was examined in chief"; but an exception probably exists for

§ 1891. Same: Qualifications of Each Rule. (1) Under the orthodox rule, it is of course assumed that there can be no inquiry on cross-examination as to facts not properly then in issue under the pleadings.[1] But where there are joint opponents, the facts in issue are presumably available on cross-examination by any one of them.[2] Where the witness is himself the party on whose behalf the counsel is cross-examining, and has been called by the first party, there seems to be no reason why the same scope of questioning should not be allowed;[3] although (ante, §§ 773, 774) the questions should not be leading in form.[4] Where the witness is the party-opponent to the cross-examiner, no difference is called for.[4]

(2) Under the Federal rule, it is clear that nothing prohibits cross-examination to one's own case where the calling party has been allowed (ante, § 1883) in his direct examination to bring out facts in rebuttal of a prospective defence,[5] nor where with the trial Court's consent the opponent has postponed the cross-examination until after he has begun his own case in reply.[6] Furthermore, it is certain that the discrediting of the witness by any allowable mode whatever (ante, §§ 920–1046) is not a part of the opponent's own case, within the meaning of the rule, and may therefore be pursued without restraint on cross-examination.[7] Nevertheless, such is the latent power of confusion inherent in the rule, that even this elementary postulate is sometimes lost sight of; so that a Court is found to refuse to let the opponent on cross-a party under cross-examination); 1883, Norris v. Cargill, 57 Wis. 251, 255, 15 N. W. 148 (same exception "probably" recognized, subject to trial Court's discretion); 1885, Youmans v. Carney, 62 Wis. 580, 581, 23 N. W. 20 (cross-examination held properly restricted); 1891, Weadock v. Kennedy, 80 Wis. 449, 453, 50 N. W. 393 ("It has always been the practice to allow a party as a witness to be cross-examined fully on the whole case"); 1894, Lueck v. Heisler, 87 Wis. 644, 58 N. W. 1101 (cross-examination of a plaintiff, held not improperly restricted in the trial Court's discretion); 1900, Sullivan v. Collins, 107 Wis. 291, 83 N. W. 310 (the exception as to a party, suggested in Weadock v. Kennedy, apparently disapproved); 1900, Cuddy v. Foreman, 107 Wis. 519, 83 N. W. 1103 (contrary to the foregoing case); 1901, Stubbings v. Curtis, 109 Wis. 307, 85 N. W. 325 (general rule applied); 1901, Lauterbach v. Netzo, 111 Wis. 322, 87 N. W. 230 (approving Sullivan v. Collins); 1905, Winn v. Itzel, 125 Wis. 19, 103 N. W. 220 ("In case the witness is also a party to the action, a somewhat broader range is allowed"); 1912, Case v. Power M. & M. Co., 151 Wis. 400, 138 N. W. 195 (when an opponent is called for cross-examination as an adverse witness, under Stats. 1898, § 4068, his counsel may then immediately re-examine him, but not as to new matter forming his own case; explaining O'Day v. Meyers, 147 Wis. 549, 133 N. W. 605).

§ 1891. [1] Eng. 1859, Bracegirdle v. Bailey, 1 F. & F. 536 (matter not pleaded at all); U. S. 1830, Hartness v. Boyd, 5 Wend. Mass. 563 (through lack of an affidavit of merits, the cause was conducted on the plaintiff's pleading as an "inquest" only); 1841, Kerker v. Carter, 1 Hill S. C. 101 (similar).

[2] 1842, Fletcher v. Crosbie, 2 Moo. & Rob. 417 (counsel for a defendant who had suffered judgment and was interested only as to the amount of damages was allowed to cross-examine to the whole case with a view to establishing the liability of other defendants, since he would be liable for costs on his plea in abatement if they were not guilty).

[3] Contra: 1863, Bell v. Chambers, 38 Ala. 660, 664 (he does not become "a general witness in the cause," and therefore cannot be examined "on any matter of defense not called out by the plaintiff in his examination"). But the cases cited in the preceding section do not make this exception.

[4] Whether such a party-witness may be impeached by the cross-examiner is of course a different question (ante, § 916).

[5] 1896, Kenny v. Walker, 29 Or. 41, 44 Pac. 501.

[6] See the cases cited ante, § 1884.

[7] 1907, Isaac v. U. S., 7 Ind. Terr. 196, 104 S. W. 588; 1881, State v. Willingham, 33 La. An. 537; 1914, State v. Garner, 135 La. 746, 66 So. 181. Few counsel have been hardy enough to raise the doubt.

examination ask about a prior self-contradiction (ante, § 1019); the result being that, when the opponent recalls him for the purpose, he is met by the rule against impeaching one's own witness (ante, § 902) and the Court is obliged to evade an unendurable ruling by the novel suggestion that if in discretion the question is excluded on the cross-examination, it must then be allowed at the later stage.[8] Under the Federal rule, finally, is sometimes found an exception for a party-opponent as a witness.[9]

§ 1892. Same: What constitutes Calling a Witness, so as to allow the Opponent to Cross-Examine to his Own Case, under the Orthodox Rule in General. Under the orthodox rule (ante, § 1885), the opponent in the stage of cross-examination may inquire about any facts material to the case. But cross-examination is by hypothesis a counter-examination, — the stage subsequent to a direct examination. Hence it is not proper, if there has been no prior stage of examination at all. If the person has not become a witness for the one party, he can testify only by being called by the opponent as his own, which cannot occur until his own general stage of the whole case (i. e. in defence or in rebuttal) has been reached. The question thus is: What constitutes, for the first party, calling a witness, so as to entitle the opponent to cross-examine, instead of later calling the witness under a direct examination?

It is obvious that the question can practically arise under the orthodox rule only. Under that rule, the opponent may ask as to any facts material to his own case, and he thus has a motive for desiring on any pretext to treat the person as already a witness under the first party's call. Under the Federal rule, on the other hand, if the person has been (for example) sworn but not questioned by the first party, the opponent cannot ask as to facts relating to his own case; he can ask only as to facts forming part of the first party's case (which of course he will hardly wish to do, except for facts modifying a former witness' testimony), or, under the inferior form of that rule, for matters about which he has already testified (that is, none at all), or for facts impeaching the witness' character or otherwise discrediting his testimony (that is, again, none at all, because he has made no testimonial assertions). Thus there remains, in effect, no field for cross-examination under the Federal rule, in the class of cases about which a question may arise under the orthodox rule. The law has therefore been developed chiefly in England; though the precedents in the American jurisdictions following the orthodox rule are singularly few.

The question, as usually phrased, is whether the opponent, in certain circumstances, has acquired the right to cross-examine, i. e. to certain topics of testimony. But it may be noted that the same definitions serve equally for determining another problem under an independent rule, namely, the rule against impeaching one's own witness (either on cross-examination or otherwise). Who is one's own witness, depends in part upon which party has first called and made use of the witness; and thus the same tests serve for that purpose. This has already been noted in dealing with that subject (ante, § 909). By some Courts the two principles are improperly associated, in a peculiar doctrine that an unpermitted cross-examination to one's own case (under the Federal rule) makes the witness one's own and thus prohibits his impeachment (ante, § 914).

[8] An example of this is the following case: 1900, Clary v. Hardeeville Brick Co., 100 Fed. 915.

[9] See the cases cited passim, ante, § 1890, and compare those cited ante, § 916 (impeaching one's own witness).

§ 1893. Same: (a) on Ordinary Subpœna, or by Deposition. The object then is to define the point of time at which it may properly be said that the person has become the witness of the party for the purpose of forming the first stage of the examination. It would seem that the proper test is to be found in the question whether he has given admissible testimony. Until then, he may be potentially a witness (as are all persons having relevant knowledge), but is not actually a witness. Until he has made a contribution, by way of testimonial assertion, to the general mass of evidence, and this contribution has been accepted by the party and sanctioned by the Court as a part of the evidence, the person is only prospectively and not 'de facto' a witness. Certain consequences follow from this:

(1) A person who has been sworn by mistake, as sometimes happens under the practice of swearing in a group (ante, § 1819), and has not yet been put on the stand, is not yet the witness of the party for whom he was sworn.[1]

(2) A person sworn but not yet asked any question is not the witness of the party swearing him;[2] moreover, he cannot be cross-examined even to discredit him, for there is as yet no testimonial assertion to be discredited.[3]

(3) A person sworn and asked questions, where he gives no answer or where the facts in his answer are irrelevant to the case, has not yet become the party's witness.[4]

§ 1893. [1] 1827, Clifford v. Hunter, cited in note 4, infra: 1840, Wood v. Mackinson, 2 Moo. & Rob. 273 (Coleridge, J.: "If there really be a mistake, whether on the part of counsel or officer, and that mistake be discovered before the examination in chief has begun, the adverse party ought not to have the right to take advantage of this mistake by examining the witness"; here, the fact that the counsel had been misinstructed as to the witness' knowledge was held to form such a mistake; otherwise, if he had discovered that the witness "knew other matters inconvenient to be disclosed").

[2] 1898, Milton v. State, 40 Fla. 251, 24 So. 60 (summoned only); 1919, Booth v. State, 24 Ga. App. 275, 100 S. E. 723; 1906, Harris v. Quincy O. & K. C. R. Co., 115 Mo. App. 527, 91 S. W. 1010; 1899, State v. Lucas, 124 N. C. 825, 32 S. E. 962. Contra: 1900, Mason v. R. Co., 58 S. C. 70, 36 S. E. 440.

[3] Eng. 1859, Bracegirdle v. Bailey, 1 F. & F. 536 (at the close of the plaintiff's case, the plaintiff himself was tendered for cross-examination, but was not examined in chief; defendant proceeded to ask several questions "as to the past conduct and life of the witness"; Byles, J.: "Inasmuch as he has proved nothing, you cannot cross-examine him to discredit him"); U. S. 1869, Toole v. Nichol, 43 Ala. 406, 419 (witness sworn but not asked; the opponent had also had the witnesses separated; "the purpose of a cross-examination is to sift the testimony of a witness and to try his integrity; when he has not been examined in chief, there can be no necessity for this"); 1827, Ellmaker v. Buckley, 16 S. & R. Pa. 72, 77 (witness sworn, but asked no questions; cross-examination's purpose being to try credibility, "it would be palpably absurd when applied to a person who had given no evidence at all").

Yet a person sworn and asked no questions but tendered voluntarily to the opponent for cross-examination (as in Bracegirdle v. Bailey, supra) may of course be cross-examined upon the latter's own case.

[4] Eng. 1827, Clifford v. Hunter, 3 C. & P. 16, Tenterden, L. C. J. (here the person turned out to be another of the same name); 1835,

(4) A person who is questioned and answers merely to prove a document does become a witness of the party thus using him.[5]

(5) If a deposition is offered, but the answers to the direct interrogatories are for some reason held inadmissible for the offering party, the answers to the cross-interrogatories are equally inadmissible, because otherwise a cross-examination would be allowed with no direct examination preceding.[6] So, too, if the taking party has wholly failed to offer the deposition;[7] and the same principle is assumed in those cases which hold that the non-taking party who uses the entirety of a deposition not used by the taker cannot impeach the deponent,[8] and that the taker may impeach him.[9]

§ 1894. Same: (b) on Subpœna duces tecum. (1) A person summoned by subpœna duces tecum does not by merely attending and producing the document become the summoner's witness.[1] He has himself furnished no

Creevy v. Carr, 7 C. & P. 64 (here an immaterial question and answer); U. S. 1794, Bebee v. Tinker, 2 Root Conn. 160 (sworn and asked, but questions excluded as irrelevant); 1859, Brown v. State, 28 Ga. 199, 212; 1876, Artz v. R. Co., 44 Ia. 284, 286; 1899, State v. Carter, 51 La. An. 385, 25 So. 442 (a witness called, declared she knew nothing of the case, and was withdrawn); 1899, Fall Brook C. Co. v. Hewson, 158 N. Y. 150, 52 N. E. 1095 (asked on immaterial points only); 1897, Watkins v. U. S., 5 Okl. 729, 50 Pac. 88 (after preliminary questions, no knowledge of the subject appeared). Contra: 1795, Phillips v. Eamer, 1 Esp. 355.

Any relevant answer of course permits cross-examination. So, too, at a deposition, after the taking party has once begun his questions, he cannot withdraw the proceeding; the opponent is entitled to cross-examine: 1885, Re Rindskopf, 24 Fed. 542.

[5] Eng. 1818, Morgan v. Brydges, 2 Stark. 314 (compare note 3, § 1894); U. S. 1886, People v. Barker, 60 Mich. 277, 301, 27 N. W. 539 (witness called to testify merely to showing the defendant a section of the statutes, allowed to be cross-examined to another conversation); 1840, Page v. Kankey, 6 Mo. 433; 1874, St. Louis & I. M. R. Co. v. Silver, 56 Mo. 264; 1920, Duncan v. Carson, 127 Va. 306, 103 S. E. 665, 105 S. E. 62 (on subpœna d. t. to a party, the swearing of the party to identify the books produced does not make the party the opponent's witness so as to permit cross-examination by the party's own counsel). Compare the remarks of Christiancy, J., in Campau v. Dewey (1861), 9 Mich. 381, 418.

[6] 1878, Callison v. Smith, 20 Kan. 28, 37 (but pointing out that the rule might be different for a party-witness, whose answers in any event would be admissions, independent of the direct examination; on this point, compare §§ 1075 and 1416, ante); 1891, Achilles v. Achilles, 137 Ill. 589, 594, 28 N. E. 45 (party examined and cross-examined, and the deposition excluded because of interest; the cross-examination was then also held inadmissible for the party); 1904, Bentley v. Bentley's Estate, 72 Nebr. 803, 101 N. W. 976.

[7] Eng. 1832, Smith v. Biggs, 5 Sim. 391; U. S. 1915, Jonas v. South Covington & C. St. R. Co., 162 Ky. 171, 172 S. W. 131 (point not noticed); 1905, McDonald v. Smith, 139 Mich. 211, 102 N. W. 668, semble; 1904, Gussner v. Hawks, 13 N. D. 453, 101 N. W. 898, semble.

Contra, semble (allowing cross-examination of a deponent present in court); 1903, Sherrod v. Hughes, — Tenn. —, 75 S. W. 717. That the direct examiner, after using the direct answers, may put in the cross-answers, if the cross-examiner does not, is noticed post, § 2103, and depends on another principle.

[8] Ante, § 912, note 2.

[9] Ante, § 913, note 3.

But distinguish the right of the opponent to put in the entire deposition taken but not read by the first party (ante, § 1389); it is then not a question of cross-examination only.

For the right to put in the remainder of a deposition when the opponent has put in one part only, see post, § 2103.

Where a deponent has been summoned by the opponent and is present, but his deposition is nevertheless allowed to be read by the taking party (ante, §§ 1411, 1415), he becomes the latter's witness, and the opponent may cross-examine orally in addition: 1850, Ford v. Ford, 11 Humph. Tenn. 89, 92, semble; 1871, Sweat v. Rogers, 11 Heisk. Tenn. 117, 122.

§ 1894. [1] Eng. 1829, R. v. Murlis, cited M. & M. 515, Gaselee and Littledale, JJ.; 1830, Davis v. Dale, 4 C. & P. 335, M. & M. 514, Tindal, C. J.; 1831 (?), Newland v. Reeves, cited 2 Cr. & M. 481, Parke, J.; 1834, Summers v. Moseley, 2 Cr. & M. 477, 2 Dowl. Pr. 364, Exch. (on consultation with the testimony; the document is not receivable in evidence unless proved by some one; it is the person proving it, and not the person bringing it, who furnishes testimony. (2) A person producing a document and being sworn but not being asked any question, does not become the witness of the party swearing him.[2] (3) A person producing a document and answering questions tending to prove it does become the questioner's witness.[3]

§ 1895. Same: Other Principles of Evidence discriminated (Right of Cross-Examination, Character on Cross-Examination, Accused on Cross-Examination, Form of Questions, Impeaching One's Own Witness). The rule under consideration is concerned solely with the order of presenting evidential material; the assumption is that the fact may be proved on direct examination at a later stage, and the only question is whether it may be elicited during the earlier stage.[1] The rule is therefore to be discriminated from certain other independent rules which have a bearing on cross-examination:

(1) A fundamental rule — the Hearsay rule — is that all testimonial evidence, to be admissible, must be subjected to cross-examination. Hence arise problems as to the satisfaction of the test by adequate opportunity for cross-examination in depositions and former testimony (ante, §§ 1373–1389) other judges); 1834, Rush v. Smith, 1 C. M. & R. 94, Exch.; 1834, Perry v. Gibson, 1 A. & E. 48, 3 Nev. & M. 462, K. B. (Park, J.: "I always thought that a subpœna duces tecum had two distinct objects, and that one might be enforced without the other"; Lord Denman, C. J., declared it "fully considered and decided"); U. S. 1919, Cowart v. Strickland, 149 Ga. 397, 100 S. E. 447.

The following argument served to clarify the question: Mr. Serjt. Ludlow, arguing, in Summers v. Moseley, supra: "Any other regulation would be productive of the greatest mischief, as it would continually impose on the party the necessity of calling an adverse witness; and a document may even be given by one party (as happened in this case) to a most hostile individual for the very purpose of compelling the opposite party to call him as their witness. . . . A person who has possession of a document may know nothing about the cause; and it is absurd to compel the party wanting only the document to examine the party producing it about a matter as to which he may be perfectly ignorant. The writ comprises two things, — it orders the attendance of the witness to testify the truth as to the matters he knows, and to bring with him a document; it does not follow that, because he is called on to do the latter, he is supposed to be called on to give evidence under the compulsion of the former branch of the writ."

[2] 1815, Reed v. James, 1 Stark. R. 132, Ellenborough, L. C. J.; 1822, Simpson v. Smith, 1 Stark. Evid., 3d ed., 187, per Holroyd, J.; 1834, Rush v. Smith, 1 C. M. & R. 95 (here a question was put, but no answer made). Contra: 1819, R. v. Brooke, 2 Stark. 472, Abbott, C. J.; but this case, which long served to becloud the whole subject, cannot be regarded as law.

Whether such a witness can be compelled to take the stand, under the form of his subpœna, is a different question (post, § 2200).

[3] Eng. 1818, Morgan v. Brydges, 2 Stark. 314; and other cases cited supra, § 1893, note 5.

From this the following cases are to be distinguished: 1814, R. v. Netherthong, 2 M. & S. 337, Kenyon, L. C. J. (an interested witness summoned merely as custodian of documents; an opponent objecting to the witness as interested may "inquire as to the custody," i. e. merely to satisfy any doubts and to bring out the facts); 1815, Reed v. James, 1 Stark. 132, Ellenborough, L. C. J. (an interested creditor producing a bill of exchange as the debt-instrument, allowed to speak to it only because the opponent had objected to his interest, i. e. only as for the opponent; therefore he did not become the summoner's witness, and could not be cross-examined); Can. 1917, Lyone v. Long, 36 D. L. R. 76, Sask. (malicious prosecution, magistrate called by plaintiff to prove certain documents, held liable to cross-examination, because examined on other matters).

For the practice in Chancery, see Gresley, Evidence in Equity, 126.

§ 1895. [1] 1905, Ayers v. Wabash R. Co., 190 Mo. 228, 88 S. W. 608 (Valliant, J., quoting this sentence, adds, "That is really the only essential difference in effect between the two rules").

and in the trial in hand (ante, §§ 1391–1393), and the existence of exceptions to the requirement (ante, § 1420).[2]

(2) The kinds of facts that may be employed to discredit a witness depend upon a special group of rules. Some of these rules forbid the facts to be proved by other testimony than that of the witness himself, and thus these rules come to be phrased with specific reference to cross-examination (ante, §§ 878, 944, 977), as the exclusive means of discrediting. They deal, however, with the question whether the facts may be proved at all, and not with the question of order of proof, i. e. whether they may be proved on cross-examination rather than at a later stage.[3]

(3) When an accused takes the stand in his own behalf, the question arises whether he may be discredited like any other witness (ante, § 889), and whether he has waived his privilege against self-crimination so that he may be compelled to answer questions involving criminal misconduct (post, § 2276). Here, again, the question is not as to the order of evidence, but the compellability of certain answers; yet the rulings do not always indicate which principle is involved. The same question arises where a husband or wife takes the stand and is claimed by the opponent to have waived thereby the privilege of not testifying against wife or husband (post, § 2242). In cases of that sort the liability to confusion with the present rule is the greater because one view of the proper limitation applicable to the privilege-question is that the waiver extends only to the topics testified to on the direct examination and not to all the issues material to the case.

(4) The form and manner of questions (whether leading, misleading, abusive, cumulative, lengthy, or the like) is governed by certain rules for Testimonial Interrogation, designed to secure the most trustworthy utterances (ante, §§ 766–788). Some of these are specially designed or modified with reference to a cross-examiner's questions; but they concern the mode of interrogation, not the order of topics inquired about.

§ 1896. Re-Direct Examination. The party calling the witness has upon the direct examination had an opportunity to obtain from the witness all his knowledge on all the facts relevant to the party's own case. There is therefore no need of a re-direct examination except to meet what has been brought out in the meantime upon the cross-examination, namely, facts made relevant to overthrow the opponent's facts adduced in support of his own case, under the orthodox rule for cross-examination (ante, § 1885), and facts explaining away discrediting facts or other weakening facts affecting the proponent's own case and brought out on cross-examination.

Nevertheless, the discrimination between these classes must here often be

[2] The difference is that there the question is merely whether there need be any adverse examination at all by the opponent; here that question is assumed to be settled in the affirmative, and the inquiry is at what stage of the case certain topics of that adverse examination shall be placed.

[3] The rule against impeaching one's own witness is invoked frequently as if the question were whether one may cross-examine the witness; the distinctions noticed ante, §§ 916, 1892, will exhibit the real nature of the inquiry.

a matter of nicety. Honest misjudgments and inadvertent omissions often occur during the direct examination, and the repetition of particular parts sometimes becomes desirable; while, on the other hand, the only danger to be guarded against is the unfair misleading of the opponent by the reservation of important testimony until the re-direct examination at a time when he may have dismissed the needed witnesses in opposition. Accordingly, the general principle of the trial Court's discretion (ante, § 1867) is here fully recognized as sanctioning the exceptional allowance, in case of need, of new testimony which could have been put in before, or of a repetition of matters already testified to:[1]

§ 1896. [1] Accord: (compare also the cases under § 1898, post); ENGLAND: 1835, Blewett v. Tregonning, 3 A. & E. 554, 565, 581, 583, 584.

CANADA: 1903, R. v. Noel, 6 Ont. L. R. 385 (Blewett v. Tregonning, followed).

UNITED STATES: Alaska: Comp. L. 1913, § 1500 (like Or. Laws 1920, § 862); Arkansas: Dig. 1919, § 4190 (for re-examination "to the same matter," leave of Court is necessary; but re-examination "as to any new matter upon which he has been examined by the adverse party" is allowable); § 4184 ("The direct examination must be completed before the cross-examination begins, unless the court otherwise directs"); California: C. C. P. 1872, § 2050 ("A witness once examined cannot be re-examined as to the same matter without leave of Court, but he may be re-examined as to any new matter upon which he has been examined by the adverse party. And after the examinations on both sides are once concluded, the witness cannot be recalled without leave of the Court. Leave is granted or withheld in the exercise of a sound discretion"); 1892, People v. McNamara, 94 Cal. 509, 512, 29 Pac. 953; Colorado: 1876, Sloan S. M. & L. Co. v. Gutthsall, 3 Colo. 8, 13 (here held properly rejected, without mentioning discretion); 1876, Schaefer v. Gildea, 3 Colo. 15, 20 (allowable in discretion); Connecticut: 1898, Morehouse v. Morehouse, 70 Conn. 420, 39 Atl. 516; 1899, Hoadley v. Seward & S. Co., 71 Conn. 640, 42 Atl. 997; Georgia: 1856, Jesse v. State, 20 Ga. 156, 164 (to have the report of testimony taken down); 1857, Thomasson v. State, 22 Ga. 499, 504; 1890, Augusta & S. R. Co. v. Randall, 85 Ga. 314, 11 S. E. 706; 1897, Kidd v. State, 101 Ga. 528, 28 S. E. 990; where the defendant in a criminal case merely makes a "statement" not under oath, he may by consent be cross-examined (post, § 2276, n. 5), but he may not then be re-examined by his own counsel, unless the trial Court in discretion so rules: 1877, Brown v. State, 58 Ga. 212; 1902, Walker v. State, 116 Ga. 539, 42 S. E. 787; 1912, Lindsay v. State, 138 Ga. 818, 76 S. E. 369; Idaho: Comp. St. 1919, § 8037; Illinois: 1875, Wickenkamp v. Wickenkamp, 77 Ill. 92, 95; 1891, Springfield v. Dalby, 139 Ill. 38, 29 N. E. 860; Indiana: 1896, Pigg v. State, 145 Ind. 560, 43 N. E. 309; Iowa: 1859, State v. Ruhl, 8 Ia. 450; Kentucky: C. C. P. 1900, § 600 (substantially like Ark. Dig. 1919, § 4190); Louisiana: 1844, State v. Duncan, 8 Rob. 562 (trial Court's discretion controls; no distinction between civil and criminal cases; quoted supra); 1867, State v. Denis, 19 La. An. 119 (but repudiating the discretionary liberty for criminal cases; the Court nevertheless conceding that this was an instance "wherein a relaxation of the rule might serve to advance the course of justice"; such a ruling is in notable contrast to the spirit of the rulings in the palmy days of Chief Justice Martin); 1878, State v. Swayze, 30 La. An. 1323, 1327 (preceding case approved, in an opinion of singular obscurity of language and confusion of thought); Maine: 1904, Caven v. Bodwell G. Co., 99 Me. 278, 59 Atl. 285; Massachusetts: 1875, Wallace v. R. Co., 119 Mass. 93; 1886, Dole v. Wooldredge, 142 Mass. 184, 7 N. E. 832 (the test should be, whether the questions cover "matters not new in themselves or unconnected with the statements elicited on cross-examination, or remote and distinct from that which was the subject of inquiry and investigation on the part of the defendant in cross-examination, but have a natural and close connection with it"); Michigan: 1875, Hemmens v. Bentley, 32 Mich. 89, 91; 1897, Minkley v. Springwells, 113 Mich. 347, 71 N. W. 649; Minnesota: 1899, Backus v. Barber, 75 Minn. 262, 77 N. W. 959; Mississippi: 1880, Dillard v. State, 58 Miss. 389; Missouri: 1843, Brown v. Burrus, 8 Mo. 26, 29; 1889, State v. Pratt, 98 Mo. 482, 492; 1895, State v. Fitzgerald, 130 Mo. 407, 32 S. W. 1113; Montana: Rev. C. 1921, § 10667 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 2050); Nebraska: 1879, Schlencker v. State, 9 Nebr. 241, 249; 1894, Murphey v. State, 43 Nebr. 34, 61 N. W. 491; 1895, Collins v. State, 46 Nebr. 37, 64 N. W. 432; 1901, George v. State, 61 Nebr. 669, 85 N. W. 840; New Jersey: 1911, Brown v. Harriot, 81 N. J. L. 484, 80 Atl. 479; New York: 1827, Winchell v. Latham, 6 Cow. 682 (here the cross-examiner's question did not

1844, KING, J., in State v. Duncan, 8 Rob. La. 562, 563: "It is understood to be now the universal practice of the Courts of this State, in both civil and criminal proceedings, to permit a witness, after having been examined in chief, consigned and cross-examined, to be again examined by the party introducing him, upon points touching which he had not before testified, and subsequently to be recalled and interrogated in regard to facts material to the issue, which had not been previously elicited or referred to, either from inadvertance or ignorance that they were within the knowledge of the witness. In civil cases it has been held that it is discretionary with the Court to permit witnesses to be introduced, even after both parties had announced that the evidence had been closed; the exercise of such a discretion may frequently be as important to the safety of the accused as to the interest of the State."

However, for matters designed to meet the effect of the cross-examination, the first opportunity occurs during re-examination; hence, as for the case at large in rebuttal, after the case in reply (ante, § 1873), to put them in at that stage is not to vary the usual order and needs no express consent of the trial Court. It is therefore sometimes said that the proponent is entitled as of right to a re-examination for this purpose;[2] but this ought not to mean any more narrow a policy in granting new trials for errors in this respect (ante, § 21).

§ 1897. Re-Cross-Examination, and Later Stages. (1) No doubt cases may arise in which a re-direct examination may make relevant certain new evidence for which there was no prior need or opportunity, and for this purpose a re-cross-examination becomes proper; in such cases it is sometimes said to be a matter of right.[1] But for other matters there is ordinarily no such need, and the allowance of a re-cross-examination depends in such cases on the consent of the trial Court.[2] necessarily involve evidence of an admission, and hence a re-examination to negative the admission was unnecessary); 1886, Simmons v. Havens, 101 N. Y. 433, 5 N. E. 73; 1895, People v. Buchanan, 145 N. Y. 1, 39 N. E. 846; Oregon: Laws 1920, § 862 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 2050); Pennsylvania: 1813, Curren v. Connery, 5 Binn. 488; Porto Rico: Rev. St. & C. 1911, § 1525 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 2050); South Carolina: 1899, Sloan v. Courtenay, 54 S. C. 314, 32 S. E. 431; South Dakota: 1895, Baird v. Gleckler, 7 S. D. 384, 64 N. W. 118; Texas: 1895, Cunningham v. R. Co., 88 Tex. 534, 31 S. W. 629; Virginia: 1848, Howel v. Com., 5 Gratt. 664, 669; Wisconsin: 1874, Schaser v. State, 36 Wis. 429, 431; 1891, Humphrey v. State, 78 Wis. 571, 47 N. W. 386.

[2] Compare also with the following citations the cases under § 952, § 1044, ante (re-examination to explain bias or self-contradiction); 1881, Osborne v. O'Reilly, 34 N. J. Eq. 60, 66; 1901, Gray v. R. Co., 165 N. Y. 457, 59 N. E. 262; 1903, Martin's Adm'r v. Richmond F. & P. R. Co., 101 Va. 406, 44 S. E. 695 ("The process of explaining away discrediting evidence belongs naturally in the re-examination"); and the statutes cited supra, note 1. Contra: 1899, McCooe v. R. Co., 173 Mass. 117, 53 N. E. 133 (explanations on re-direct examination are allowable in discretion).

Distinguish in general the rules for admissibility of various facts to support a witness' credit (ante, §§ 1100–1144).

For the repetition of questions on the same topic, see ante, § 782; certain aspects of that problem merge into the present one.

For the allowance of irrelevant facts in explanation of irrelevancies brought out on cross-examination, see ante, § 15. For the admission of the remainder of a conversation on re-examination, see post, § 2115.

§ 1897. [1] 1855, Wood v. McGuire, 17 Ga. 303, 318, semble; 1872, State v. Scott, 24 La. An. 161, semble (for the accused); 1909, Lapointe v. Berlin Mills Co., 75 N. H. 294, 73 Atl. 406 (here applied to plaintiff's offer to exhibit his injured hand).

Compare what is said supra, § 1896.

[2] 1845, State v. Hoppiss, 5 Ired. N. C. 405 ("were it otherwise, and counsel had the arbitrary power of resuming cross-examinations as often as they chose, it is obvious it would lead to great abuses in harassing witnesses and pro-

(2) Situations are conceivable in which still another direct or cross-examination may be needed for new matters; but it seems generally conceded that the protraction of the examination to this length is always in the hands of the trial Court.[3]

2. Recall

§ 1898. Recall for Re-Direct Examination. It can rarely occur that during the putting in of a party's case at large the recall of a witness once dismissed by him becomes necessary in order to obtain facts which could not have been put in during the witness' examinations on the original call. Nevertheless, the cross-examination of an intervening witness may develop such a situation. Moreover, inadvertent omissions constantly and unavoidably occur; and repetitions become desirable sometimes for clearness' sake. The chief danger to be guarded against is the unfair misleading of the opponent, who may have dismissed his own witnesses. Accordingly, while it does not seem to be maintained that there are cases in which a recall may be demanded as of right, it is conceded that the allowance of a recall, upon the general principle (ante, § 1867), rests entirely with the trial Court's discretion:[1] tracting trials"); 1866, Thornton v. Thornton, 39 Vt. 122, 160; 1897, Atlantic & D. R. Co. v. Rieger, 95 Va. 418, 28 S. E. 590.

Compare § 1874, ante (rejoinder), where the rulings are sometimes difficult to distinguish from those on the present point; the governing principle is the same. For re-cross-examination in rejoinder, see also post, § 1899.

[3] 1901, Berger v. Booth, 13 Haw. 291, 296 (re-re-direct); 1890, Brown v. State, 72 Md. 468, 475, 20 Atl. 186 (re-re-direct).

There was a re-re-cross-examination of the plaintiff in Tilton v. Beecher, N. Y., 1875, Abbott's Rep., II, 684.

§ 1898. [1] In the following rulings it is not always possible to learn whether the witness was recalled before the close of the case in chief or in reply, but practically the rule would be the same as for a recall after that stage; compare also the cases under § 1896, ante (re-direct examination on the original call), where some of the rulings may be intended to deal with the present situation; compare also the cases under § 1044, ante (recall to explain a self-contradiction).

ENGLAND: 1839, R. v. Frost, 4 State Tr. N. S. 85, 384 (allowed on a point where they could not have foreseen that the opponent's witness would assert certain facts); 1841, White v. Smith, A. M. & O. 171; 1834, Adams v. Bankart, cited in Chitty's Gen. Pract., III, 901.

CANADA: 1857, St. Denis v. Grenier, 2 Low. Can. Jur. 93; 1860, Joseph v. Morrow, 4 Low. Can. Jur. 238; 1864, Jackson v. Filteau, 15 Low. Can. 60; 1914, R. v. Prentice, 20 D. L. R. 791, Alta. (recall of a witness as to details affecting bias; judge's refusal held improperly exercised).

UNITED STATES: Fed. 1896, Faust v. U. S., 163 U. S. 452, 16 Sup. 1112; Ala. 1884, Phœnix Ins. Co. v. Moog, 78 Ala. 284, 309; 1889, Riley v. State, 88 Ala. 193, 196, 7 So. 149; 1896, Crawford v. State, 112 Ala. 1, 21 So. 214; Alaska: Comp. L. 1913, § 1500 (quoted ante, § 1896); Cal. C. C. P. 1872, § 2050 (quoted ante, § 1896); Colo. 1894, Layton v. Kirkendall, 20 Colo. 236, 283, 38 Pac. 55; Fla. 1878, Coker v. Hayes, 16 Fla. 368, 376; Ga. 1853, Walker v. Walker, 14 Ga. 242, 251 (to make a correction); 1860, Bigelow v. Young, 30 Ga. 121, 125 (to re-state his testimony; but "this is a dangerous practice" not allowable with a witness "whose fairness lies under any ground of suspicion"); 1902, Central of G. R. Co. v. Duffey, 116 Ga. 346, 42 S. E. 510 (allowed for a correction, even after the witness has conferred with counsel); Ill. 1887, Bonnet v. Glattfeldt, 120 Ill. 166, 174, 11 N. E. 250; 1898, Anderson T. Co. v. Fuller, 174 Ill. 221, 51 N. E. 251; Ky. 1896, Louisville Ins. Co. v. Monarch, 99 Ky. 578, 36 S. W. 563; La. 1868, Dunn v. Pipes, 20 La. An. 276 (to re-state his testimony for correcting the report of it); 1879, State v. Woods, 31 La. An. 267; 1898, State v. Walker, 50 La. An. 420, 23 So. 967 (allowable for a correction, where counsel dispute as to the terms of his answer); Md. 1869, Schwartze v. Yearly, 31 Md. 270, 276; 1871, Green v. Ford, 35 Md. 82, 88 (to re-state testimony); 1898, Legore v. State, 87 Md. 735, 41 Atl. 60; Mass. 1895, Robbins v. R. Co., 165 Mass. 30, 42 N. E. 334; 1902, McLean v. Paine, 181 Mass. 287, 63 N. E. 883; Mich. 1892, Erickson v. R. Co., 93 Mich. 414, 418, 53 N. W. 393 (allowed for a correction in the report of testimony); Mo. 1898, State v. Soper, 148 Mo. 217, 235, 49 S. W. 1007; 1915, 1813, TILGHMAN, C. J., in Curren v. Connery, 5 Binn. 488: "The examination of witnesses is to be conducted in such manner as to discover the truth without taking any unfair advantage. The party who calls the witness examines him first; he is then cross-examined by the adverse party; after which, if necessary, the party who produced him may examine him again. The mouth of the witness is not to be closed, because the counsel omitted to ask a material question at first. It may be necessary, in order to come at the truth of the case, to examine him as to new matter, and after that there may be a second cross-examination. The Court at their discretion may permit a witness to be examined by either party over and over again at any time during the trial. But they will take care to exercise this discretion, so as not to suffer any advantage to be gained by trick or artifice. If the plaintiff should declare that he had finished his testimony, in consequence of which the defendant should dismiss some of his witnesses, and then the plaintiff should offer to produce new testimony, which might perhaps have been contradicted by the witnesses who have been dismissed, the Court would not suffer him to avail himself of such disingenuous conduct."

1830, MARCY, J., in People v. Mather, 4 Wend. 229, 249: "When the examination is closed and the witness dismissed from the stand, it is a matter resting in the discretion of the Court which receives the testimony to allow of a further examination. I do not doubt that this discretion is often too indulgently exercised; but it is scarcely possible for this Court to regulate it. Courts which try issues of fact must experience the inconveniences arising from too great indulgences in this respect, and on them devolves the duty of applying the corrective. At all events it is a matter too purely discretionary to warrant the interference of this Court, unless it should be in a very flagrant and oppressive instance."

It will be noticed that when the recall is asked, not (as here assumed) during the original case, but after the close of the proponent's case in chief or the proponent's case in reply, it merges in the larger question of the propriety of putting in evidence at the tardy stage of rebuttal (ante, § 1873) or surrebuttal (ante, § 1874); and when the recall is asked after the close of the case at large, the same question is practically presented as for all evidence offered in that stage (ante, §§ 1876–1881). The decision in such cases depends on the principles already considered under those heads; but the general principle of the trial Court's discretion, as set forth in the passages above quoted, applies in the present as well as in the other classes of cases.

In Chancery the same principle was applied in allowing the submission of new interrogatories to a deponent.[2]

State v. Jones, — Mo. —, 177 S. W. 366 (gambling); N. H. 1851, Severance v. Hilton, 24 N. H. 147; N. Y. 1829, People v. Mather, 2 Wend. 229, 249; N. C. 1879, State v. Lee, 80 N. C. 483, 485; Oregon: Laws 1920, § 862, C. C. P. 1891, § 839 (quoted ante, § 1896); P. I. C. C. P. 1901, § 341; P. R. Rev. St. & C. 1911, § 1525 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 2050); Tex. 1874, Goins v. State, 41 Tex. 334, 335 (to make explanations); Va. 1848, Howel's Case, 5 Gratt. 664, 668; 1895, Burke v. Shaver, 92 Va. 345, 23 S. E. 749.

Nor is there any exception to this principle in the doctrine that, after an order for the sequestration of witnesses, a witness who after dismissal has disobeyed the order may be refused to be admitted on recall; for here also it is conceded by all that the trial Court in its discretion may decline to enforce the penalty (ante, § 1842).

[2] 1837, Gresley, Evidence in Equity, 54, 134; Eng. 1859, Bevan v. M'Mahon, 2 Sw. & Tr. 55 (in a court of common law, "whenever I have suspected that he was being again brought forward to meet the stress of the case, I have invariably refused to accede to it"); U. S. 1826, Phettiplace v. Sayles, 4 Mas. Fed. 312, 320; 1884, Meyer v. Mitchell, 77 Ala. 312, 314; McDonald v. Jacobs, 77 Ala. 524, 527; 1888, Hall v. Pegram, 85 Ala. 522, 534, 5 So. 209, 6 So. 612; 1882, Swartz v. Chickering, 58 Md. 290, 297; 1815, Kingston v. Tappen, 1 Johns. Ch. N. Y. 368 (there being here "no suggestion of any tam-

§ 1899. Recall for Re-Cross-Examination. A recall for re-cross-examination will ordinarily be unnecessary, except in the rare cases where the direct examination of an intervening witness has brought out new facts upon which the prior witness may throw light, and for this purpose the matter can always be left in the hands of the trial Court. The general principle, therefore, of the trial Court's discretion as controlling the grant of a recall for this purpose (ante, § 1898) is conceded to apply here also.[1] The only exception, possibly, is that of a recall to put the warning question essential to lay a foundation for impeaching by proof of a prior self-contradictory assertion; here it is sometimes held that the recall is a matter of right.[2]

But the ordinary case of a recall by the opponent for re-cross-examination is to be distinguished from that of a re-cross-examination of a witness recalled for re-direct examination by the party originally using the witness (ante, § 1898); for there the re-direct examination usually is intended to bring out new matter, and a cross-examination to probe into this or to discredit the witness in respect of it will of course not need the express consent of the Court (on the principle of § 1897), since there has been no prior opportunity for that purpose.[3]

§ 1900. Re-Recall. The general principle of the trial Court's discretion (ante, § 1898) would apparently be held to control all requests for a second recall for any purpose whatever.[1]

pering with the witness"); Denton v. Jackson, 1 Johns. Ch. 526; 1820, Hallock v. Smith, 4 Johns. Ch. 649; 1829, Beach v. Fulton Bank, 3 Johns. Ch. 573, 580, 587; 1867, Fant v. Miller, 17 Gratt. Va. 187, 219.

For the recall of an accused to make a second "statement," in the jurisdiction which still refuses him the right to testify, see ante, § 579.

For a recall to explain an irrelevant fact by other irrelevant evidence, see ante, § 15.

§ 1899. [1] Add to the following cases the rulings collected ante, § 1874 (rejoinder) and § 1899 (re-cross-examination), in which it is sometimes impossible to learn the precise situation to which the ruling was applied, and the statutes cited ante, § 1896; Ala. 1891, Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Barker, 96 Ala. 435, 438, 11 So. 453; 1893, Thompson v. State, 100 Ala. 70, 72, 14 So. 621; 1893, Thomas v. State, 100 Ala. 53; Cal. 1875, People v. Parton, 49 Cal. 632, 636, semble; People v. Keith, 50 Cal. 137, 139; Colo. 1921, Moeller v. People, 70 Colo. 223, 199 Pac. 414; Fla. 1899, McCoggle v. State, 41 Fla. 525, 26 So. 734; Ida. 1899, Anthony v. State, — Ida. —, 55 Pac. 884; Ind. 1887, Nixon v. Beard, 111 Ind. 142, 12 N. E. 131; Ia. 1851, Ross v. Hayne, 3 Ia. 211, 213; 1859, State v. Ruhl, 8 Ia. 447, 450 (to re-state the testimony); 1888, Fowler v. Strawberry Hill, 74 Ia. 648, 38 N. W. 521; Ky. 1904, Howard v. Com., 118 Ky. 1, 80 S. W. 211, 81 S. W. 704; Mich. 1904, People v. Hossler, 135 Mich. 384, 97 N. W. 754; Mo. 1899, State v. Soper, 148 Mo. 217, 49 S. W. 1007; N. C. 1913, State v. Fogleman, 164 N. C. 458, 79 S. E. 879; Or. 1897, State v. Robinson, 32 Or. 43, 48 Pac. 357; Pa. 1853, Com. v. Hart, 21 Pa. 495, 502; Utah: 1895, People v. Thiede, 11 Utah 241, 39 Pac. 837.

[2] The cases are considered ante, § 1036.

[3] Eng. 1834, R. v. Palmer, 6 C. & P. 653; U. S. 1849, Hendron v. Robinson, 9 B. Mon. Ky. 505 (where the witness after argument begun had been allowed to repeat his testimony, and could be shown to have contradicted in so doing); 1896, Titus v. Gage, 70 Vt. 13, 39 Atl. 246 (testing as expert, by cross-examination after rebuttal, of one called first for his knowledge but on rebuttal as an expert, held improperly forbidden).

But this does not entitle the opponent, without permission, to go beyond the scope of the re-direct examination: 1889, Moellering v. Evans, 121 Ind. 196, 22 N. E. 989.

§ 1900. [1] Accord: 1915, Loud v. Solomon, 188 Mich. 7, 154 N. W. 73.

SUB-TITLE II: RULES TO AVOID CONFUSION OF ISSUES OR UNDUE PREJUDICE

CHAPTER LXIV.

Next for consideration comes the second group of rules, i. e. Simplificative Rules, whose general purpose and operation has been already set forth (ante, § 1864), viz. Rules excluding Specific Kinds of Evidence because of Confusion of Issues or Undue Prejudice.

A. CIRCUMSTANTIAL EVIDENCE

§ 1904. General Principle. Circumstantial evidence, concededly relevant, may nevertheless be excluded by reason of the general principle (ante, § 1863) that the probative usefulness of the evidence is more than counterbalanced by its disadvantageous effects in confusing the issues before the jury, or in creating an undue prejudice in excess of its legitimate probative weight. In either case, its net effect is to divert the jury from a clear study of the exact purport and effect of the evidence, and thus to obscure and suppress the truth rather than to reveal it. But the operation of this principle cannot practically be expounded apart from the examination of the rules of Relevancy which affect the same kinds of evidence; because sometimes the operation of the present principle may be obviated by a change in the situation and its ban may thus be removed, and the evidence will then be receivable if relevant. For example, the bad moral character of an accused person, though relevant, is nevertheless excluded by the principle of unfair prejudice, when offered against the accused; yet the accused's good moral character, though no more relevant than before, is admitted in his favor, because the present principle ceases then to operate. Moreover, the exclusion usually results only when other principles combine with the present one.

For these reasons, it becomes necessary to treat the operation of the present principle in connection with the operation of the principles of Relevancy, though those principles themselves form in theory distinct domains in the law of Evidence. In this place, therefore, it is enough to note the bearing of the principle upon various sorts of circumstantial evidence already considered in dealing with the rules of relevancy.

1. Confusion of Issues. This consideration operates potentially throughout the whole realm of circumstantial evidence. It is given positive effect chiefly where the evidence consists of particular facts of human conduct or external events which are of themselves only minor and additional and are not the sole mode of proof for the matter in issue. Moreover, even in these cases, effect is given to it usually only when the other principles of Undue Prejudice (infra) and of Unfair Surprise (ante, §§ 1845, 1849) combine at the same time to accumulate an overweight of disadvantage in using the evidence.

The influence of the present principle may be seen in the rules affecting the use of particular acts of misconduct to prove the character of a party (ante, § 194), of other crimes as evidence of plan or intent (ante, § 300), of other instances proving the defective or dangerous nature of highways, machines, and the like (ante, § 443), of particular acts of misconduct to discredit the character of a witness (ante, § 978), and of error on collateral facts to diminish credibility (ante, § 1000).

2. Undue Prejudice. This consideration, like the preceding one, is found operating potentially throughout the realm of circumstantial evidence; and, like the preceding one, it is found mainly in its positive effects where the other principles of Confusion of Issues (supra) and of Unfair Surprise (ante, §§ 1845, 1849) combine also to oppose the use of the evidence. Nevertheless, it has effect also in some marked instances where neither of the others has any bearing.

Its operation may be seen in the rules affecting the use of a party's general character (ante, § 55), of a party's capacity or habit (ante, §§ 83, 92), of particular acts of misconduct to evidence the character of a party (ante, § 194), of other crimes to prove a plan or intent (ante, § 300), and of a witness' character (ante, §§ 921, 978). It is found also affecting the use of real evidence (or autoptic proference) in one or two aspects (ante, §§ 1157, 1158).

The influence, then, of the present considerations upon the law of Circumstantial Evidence as a whole is large and widespread, although it is not practicable to state it in the form of rules standing distinctly apart from the other rules.

B. TESTIMONIAL EVIDENCE

§ 1906. General Principle. When a witness has once been declared to be qualified, i.e. to have the fundamental qualities essential to render his assertions trustworthy (ante, §§ 483–867), the considerations that can overweigh this and exclude his testimony because on the whole it unduly confuses the issue or prejudices the fair determination of the facts must supposably be rare; and so the rules of exclusion resting on such considerations are but few.

There are indeed no absolute and positive prohibitions having a general recognition.[1] What we find is, first, a rule permitting the exclusion of additional witnesses upon a single topic where their testimony is merely superfluous and only cumbers the issues, — this rule resting on the principle (ante, § 1863) of Confusion of Issues; and, secondly, three suggested (but not established) rules requiring the exclusion of certain kinds of witnesses whose personality might be supposed to carry undue weight with the jury and thus to divert them from an impartial consideration of the evidence; these rules rest upon the principle (ante, § 1863) of Undue Prejudice, although other reasons are sometimes suggested as also serving for a foundation.

§ 1907. Witnesses merely Cumulative, or Excessive in Number; General Principle. Where the array of witnesses called to testify on a given side mounts up in numbers, it is obvious that each additional witness increases, in almost geometrical ratio, the possibilities of confusing the issues and of thus diverting the jury from a clear and concentrated consideration of the precise issue in dispute. Each witness adds new items of detail in his examination and cross-examination; each witness may be impeached by the calling of additional witnesses on the other side; each of these new ones adds his quota of details; and each may in turn lead to the calling of new impeaching witnesses on the first side; and with each of these last the same round of possibilities begins again; until amid the interminable entanglements of scores of witnesses and their statements it might become practically impossible for the jurymen to follow the thread of the substantial issue in controversy and to detect the true effect of the evidence. The result would be the stifling of the truth, not its revelation, and the decision would probably turn upon the chance effect of fragments of evidence making casual impressions, rather than upon an orderly consideration of all the salient facts.

Nevertheless, the possibility of confusion through the exposition of a mass of details is not in itself a sufficient reason for refusing to hear those details, where the complication is inherent in the issue. If the truth is complicated, the complication must none the less be struggled with, at whatever risk of baffled endeavor. It is where the complication and confusion are substantially unnecessary, or the small value of the evidence is overwhelmed by its disadvantages, that a rule of Evidence may properly intervene in prohibition.

This much in general has been conceded on all hands; the effort has been to draw the line fairly between necessary and unnecessary complication. It has never been supposed that a party has an absolute right to force upon an unwilling tribunal an unending and superfluous mass of testimony limited only by his own judgment or whim. But the difficulty is to define the situations in which the testimony may be properly regarded as practically superfluous or relatively unprofitable:

§ 1904. [1] Distinguish the rules of Privilege and the like in Part III, post (§ 2175); there the exclusion rests on extrinsic policy having nothing to do with the probative defects or efficiency of the testimony; here, as noted already (ante, § 1171), in surveying the nature of the rules in Part II, we are concerned with those rules which are based on the desire to secure the highest probative efficiency for the evidence and to eliminate disturbing evidential facts.

1827, Mr. Jeremy Bentham, in his Rationale of Judicial Evidence, b. IX, pt. VI, c. II, § 1 (Bowring's ed., vol. VII, p. 531): "What number of witnesses shall a party be allowed to produce? Put a limitation anywhere upon the number, you lay the party under the necessity of leaving the mass of evidence on his side incomplete; you pave the way to deception and consequent misdecision. Put no limitation anywhere upon the number, you put it in the power of a 'mala fide' suitor (if superior to a certain degree in respect of opulence) to overwhelm his adversary with an indefinite load of testimony and the expense, vexation, and delay attached to it. . . . The greater the mass of evidence in the cause, the heavier the burthen imposed by it on the mental faculties of the judge [i. e. the jury]; the heavier the burthen on the judge's mind, the greater the probability that his force of mind will not be adequate to the sustaining of it, to the acting under it in such a manner as to extract the truth from the mass of matter through which it is diffused, to frame to himself a right judgment respecting the principal facts in dispute and to decide in consequence. . . . [The chances ordinarily in favor of a right decision being assumed as 100 to 1,] suppose the faculties of the judge in a state of complete confusion, and the force of his mind altogether unequal to the task of framing a right decision under the pressure of the burthen thrown upon it by the aggregate mass of evidence; this chance of 100 to 1 will be reduced to an even chance, or chance of 1 to 1; at which point, the party who is in the right will have no greater chance of prevailing than the adversary who is in the wrong. At this point, the advantage possessed by him who is in the right is equal to 0; and to this point every additional quantity, added to the load of evidentiary matter, tends in proportion to its pressure to reduce the cause. . . . The evils, therefore, which arise from excess of evidence are very great; and that they form a proper subject for the legislator's consideration is out of the reach of dispute. But the propriety of allowing them to be productive of actual exclusion, of giving them in practice the effect of a conclusive reason, depends upon proportion, viz., upon the preponderance of the collateral inconvenience in the shape of vexation, expense, and delay, as compared with the probability of direct mischief resulting from deception and consequent misdecision resulting for want of the evidence proposed to be excluded." [1]

In attempting to determine when this overbalance of disadvantages exists, rendering the admission of the testimony relatively unprofitable, it may be assumed in advance that the facts testified to are relevant; more than this the party of course cannot claim, and less than this can certainly not be forbidden him. The question thus reduces itself in effect to that of the number of witnesses allowable upon facts concededly relevant. May any limitation be imposed at all? It is clear that no rule of limitation, if any be made, § 1907. [1] Mr. Bentham's proposal of reform (too lengthy to be set out here) consisted chiefly in subdividing the "burthen" by eliminating before the actual trial all testimony that is practically not needed on the main controversy; this is to be accomplished by the parties' submission beforehand of a brief or sketch of all the proposed evidence, so that the few precise points over which alone there is any real controversy will remain for testimony on the trial, and will then cause little or no complication. His exposition of this proposal deserves perusal.

Bentham's vision seems to have come true in modern English practice under the Rules of Court of 1883; see the exposition by Mr. Samuel Rosenbaum (of the Philadelphia Bar) in his monograph The Rule-Making Authority in the English Supreme Court, and the comments of Chief Justice Taft and of former Justice Loring in the American Bar Association Journal (1922, October, vol. VIII, No. 10).

should in its terms be mandatory and invariable, and that the rule should merely declare the trial Court empowered to enforce a limit when in its discretion the situation justifies this; and such is in fact the form which the rule (so far as accepted) does take.

What are these situations in which the trial Court is empowered in its discretion to limit the number of witnesses? To this question the answer is, in some respects, clear and accepted on all hands; in others, it is as yet the subject of rulings somewhat conflicting and diversified in their details.

§ 1908. Same: (1) Expert Witnesses; (2) Character Witnesses; (3) Witnesses in General. (1) The frequent uncertainties and hopeless contrariety which are well known to beset the use of expert testimony and have led to much speculation over methods of improvement (ante, § 563), tend to reduce its serviceableness as a decisive testimonial element, and hence make it easier to dispense with it when an over-accumulation threatens to complicate and confuse the controversy. A limitation may therefore properly be set upon the number of expert witnesses: [1]

§ 1908. [1] Add to the following citations some of the rulings in note 3, infra, which deal with expert witnesses but do not limit the rule to that class:

CANADA: Dominion: Can. St. 1902, c. 9, Rev. St. 1906, c. 145, Evid. Act, § 7 (of "professional or other experts entitled according to the law of practice to give opinion evidence," not more than five on one side are to be called without leave of Court before examination of any experts); 1906, Dodge v. The King, 38 Can. Sup. 149, 152 (statute noted; but the strange doubt is expressed whether if more are improperly called the Court above may consider their testimony); 1916, Canadian Northern Western R. Co. v. Moore, 31 D. L. R. 456 (Evid. Act, § 10, held applicable to value testimony before arbitrators under the Railway Act); Alberta: 1915, Canadian Northern Western R. Co. v. Moore, 23 D. L. R. 646 (taking of land; Can. Evid. Act, § 10, held to limit the value witnesses to three, in arbitration proceedings under the Railway Act); British Columbia: Rules of Court 1912, No. 467A (the judge may limit; no number named); Manitoba: St. 1908, 7–8 Edw. VII, c. 18, § 1, Rev. St. 1913, c. 65, § 7 (not more than three expert witnesses to be called on either side without leave of the judge; such leave to be applied for before examination of any experts); Ontario: St. 1902, c. 15, Rev. St. 1914, c. 73, § 10 (like Dom. Evid. Act, § 7, making three the limit, instead of five); 1912, Rice v. Sockett, 8 D. L. R. 84 (contract to build a silo; certain persons held experts, under the above statute, though not having a special technical education); 1915, Burrows v. Grand Trunk R. Co., 23 D. L. R. 173 (personal injury; statute applied to medical witnesses); Saskatchewan: Rev. St. 1920, Evidence Act, c. 44, § 42 (like Dom. Evid. Act, § 7).

UNITED STATES: Federal: 1858, Winans v. R. Co., 21 How. 100 (quoted supra); Illinois: 1915, Geohegan v. Union Elev. R. Co., 266 Ill. 482, 107 N. E. 786 (eminent domain; the trial Court having limited the opinion evidence to five witnesses on a side, and the defendant having called five witnesses, qualified by knowledge of the vicinity, to testify to the effect of the railroad in damaging the property, three further witnesses for the defendant on that subject were excluded by the trial Court; held, that the trial Court had discretion to limit the number of expert witnesses and the number of witnesses to a collateral fact, and that the rule at any rate included witnesses to property value, even though in one sense these witnesses might not be classed as experts); Massachusetts: 1904, White v. Boston, 186 Mass. 65, 71 N. E. 75 (the limited number having been used, a lay witness of the opponent cannot be used as an expert on cross-examination); Michigan: 1879, Fraser v. Jennison, 42 Mich. 206, 223, 3 N. W. 882 (testator's sanity; refusal to admit a sixth expert witness for the contestants, held proper; quoted supra); St. 1905, No. 175, Comp. L. 1915, § 12558 (limits the number to three on each side; quoted in full ante, § 563); 1910, People v. Dickerson, 164 Mich. 148, 129 N. W. 199 (St. 1905, No. 175, held unconstitutional, but not as to the present point; see the case more fully cited post, § 2484, n. 1); Missouri 1906, St. Louis M. & S. E. R. Co. v. Aubuchon, 199 Mo. 352, 97 S. W. 867 (land damages; a ruling restricting the witnesses to four on each side, held unreasonable on the facts; but the opinion, though citing nine cases from other jurisdictions and two cases from an inferior

1858, GRIER, J., in Winans v. R. Co., 21 How. 100: "A judge may obtain information from experts, if he desire it, on matters which he does not clearly comprehend, but cannot be compelled to receive their opinions as matter of evidence. Experience has shown that opposite opinions of persons professing to be experts may be obtained to any amount, and it often occurs that not only many days, but even weeks, are consumed in cross-examinations to test the skill or knowledge of such witnesses and the correctness of their opinions, wasting the time and wearying the patience of both Court and jury, and perplexing instead of elucidating the questions involved in the issue."

1879, COOLEY, J., in Fraser v. Jennison, 42 Mich. 206, 224, 3 N. W. 882 (approving a limitation to five expert witnesses to insanity): "If testamentary cases are ever to be brought to a conclusion, there must be some limit to the reception of expert evidence; and that which was fixed in this case was quite liberal enough. To obtain such evidence is expensive, since desirable witnesses are not to be found in every community; but an army may be had if the Court will consent to their examination; and if legal controversies are to be determined by the preponderance of voices, wealth in all litigation in which expert evidence is important may prevail almost of course. But one familiar with such litigation cannot but know that, for the purposes of justice, the examination of two conscientious and intelligent experts on a side is better than to call more; and certainly, when five on each side have been examined, the limit of reasonable liberality has in most cases been reached. The jury cannot be aided by going farther. Little discrepancies that must be found in the testimony, of those even who in the main agree, begin to attract attention and occupy the mind, until at last jurors, with their minds on unimportant variances, come to think that expert evidence, from its very uncertainty, is worthless. This is not a desirable state of things; and it can only be avoided by confining the use of expert evidence within reasonable bounds."

This result may be said to be universally accepted; the trial Court in its discretion may limit the number of expert witnesses.

(2) The value of character-evidence, impeaching or sustaining a party or a witness, is commonly much exaggerated (ante, §§ 920, 1611); its comparative futility in the ordinary case, and its tendency to degenerate into a mere exhibition of petty local jealousies and animosities, of no real probative service, have induced the Courts to concede unanimously that the number of character-witnesses may without disadvantage be limited, as the trial Court may prescribe: [2]

court of Missouri, wholly ignores the four rulings in its own court, cited infra, notes 2 and 3; the Court's remark that "we are cited to no case by respondent that sustains such rule" will not properly account for such inattention to its own rulings, even on the part of a Minos so recently enthroned and so brilliant and sensible as the one who writes the opinion); New York: 1847, Sizer v. Burt, 4 Denio 428; New Hampshire: 1879, Hilliard v. Beattie, 59 N. H. 462, 464 (personal injury; number of experts may be limited, but a modification of the order must not be unfair); Ohio: 1895, Wabash R. Co. v. Defiance, 52 Oh. 262, 40 N. E. 89; Tennessee: 1890, Powers v. McKenzie, 90 Tenn. 182, 16 S. W. 559; Washington: 1904, Swope v. Seattle, 36 Wash. 113, 78 Pac. 607 (limitation to three witnesses to real estate value, held proper in discretion).

[2] Accord: Federal: 1921, Hauge v. U. S., 9th C. C. A., 276 Fed. 115 (perjury; defendant's character-witnesses limited to 6); Arkansas: 1919, Kindrix v. State, 138 Ark. 594, 212 S. W. 84 (impeaching witnesses, in discretion, here limited to five); California: 1912, People v. Burke, 18 Cal. App. 72, 122 Pac. 468; Connecticut: 1854, Bunnell v. Butler, 23 Conn. 65, 69 (quoted supra); Illinois: 1911, People v. Arnold, 248 Ill. 169, 93 N. E. 786 (number limited to twenty-five on each side); Indiana: 1887, State v. Thomas, 111 Ind. 575, 578, 13 N. E. 35 ("It may be that in some cases a limit may be put"); Iowa: 1879, Bays v. Herring, 51 Ia. 286, 291, 1 N. W. 558 (in trial Court's discretion); 1882, Bays v. Hunt, 60 Ia. 251, 254, 14 N. W. 785 (same); 1889, Minthon v. Lewis, 78 Ia. 620, 622, 43 N. W. 465 (same); 1896, State v. Beabout, 100 Ia. 155, 69 N. W. 428 (limitation to five on each side, held proper

1840, NELSON, C. J., in Bissell v. Cornell, 24 Wend. 354, 357: "We have heretofore held that the judge at the circuit may exercise a sound discretion as to the number to be sworn of impeaching and supporting witnesses [to character]. There must be some limit. Any one familiar with trials must be aware that, after some dozen of witnesses on a side have been examined, equally supporting and impeaching a party or witness, very little additional benefit is derived by enlarging the number. The relative strength of the testimony will be the same, however extended the examination. A balanced public opinion will appear."

1854, WAITE, J., in Bunnell v. Butler, 23 Conn. 65, 69: "It would be absurd to hold that upon an enquiry of this sort, depending in a great measure upon the opinion of witnesses, a party has the right to examine as many as he pleases, and that the Court and jury are bound to sit and hear them without any power to interfere. There must necessarily be a limit to such inquiries, and it is for the Court to prescribe it. . . . Much, however, will depend upon the circumstances of the case and the importance of the testimony of the principal witness."

(3) For witnesses upon any point whatever a similar rule of limitation may be enforced. It may not be possible to define any other specific classes of witnesses or of facts for which a rule can be laid down; but it is possible to sanction a general rule as applicable, in the circumstances of the case, to any kind of fact or witness whatsoever. The reason of the rule — namely, that the disadvantage of confusion preponderates over the testimonial value, little or none — of the additional witnesses — may come to be applicable at any time:

1878, SHERWOOD, C. J., in State v. Whiton, 68 Mo. 91, 92 (dealing with a limitation on the issue of change of venue): "We regard such ruling clearly within the domain of judicial discretion, with which, unless arbitrarily and abusively exercised, we should refrain from interfering. It would be productive of very serious and hitherto unheard of consequences, should the law be so declared by this Court as to cut off and preclude inferior tribunals from the exercise of one of the most ordinary functions pertaining to the daily administration of justice. . . . Any other theory of the law would permit, nay prompt, a crafty criminal to block the wheels of both punitive and remedial justice, by using the latest census returns of the county as a fecund source of limitless supply for countless subpœnas, thus securing a continuance under the pretence of securing a change of venue."

1894, JENNER, J., in Hupp v. Boring, 8 Oh. C. C. 259, 260: "Has the trial Court the in discretion); Louisiana: 1906, State v. Rodriguez, 115 La. 1004, 40 So. 438 (under St. 1894, No. 67, a limitation of defendant's character-witnesses to six, with liberty to have process for more at his own cost, held proper); Michigan: 1885, Hollywood v. Reed, 57 Mich. 234, 237, 23 N. W. 792 (number of sustaining and impeaching witnesses "is in the discretion of the Court, and is generally limited to an equal number on each side"); 1922, People v. Nemer, — Mich. —, 187 N. W. 315 (arson; limitation of character-witnesses to six, held proper); Missouri: 1899, State v. Rutherford, 152 Mo. 124, 53 S. W. 417 (more than six witnesses to defendant's character, excluded properly on the facts); New Hampshire: 1879, Plummer v. Ossipee, 59 N. H. 55, 58 (limitation to twenty on each side, held proper); New York: 1840, Bissell v. Cornell, 24 Wend. 354, 357 (character of plaintiff in slander to mitigate damages; refusal to hear more than sixteen witnesses on a side, held proper in discretion; quoted supra); Ohio: Gen. Code 1921, § 13662 (no more than ten witnesses on each side allowable "upon the subject of character or reputation" in any criminal case except murder, manslaughter, rape, rape-assault, or selling liquor to habitual drunkard, unless full fees are deposited or paid beforehand); 1905, People v. Dones, 9 P. R. 423, 432 (limitation to five for impeaching veracity, held proper); South Dakota: 1909, State v. Madison, 23 S. D. 584, 122 N. W. 647 (impeaching witnesses here limited to four on a side); Tennessee: 1897, Williams v. McKee, 98 Tenn. 139, 38 S. W. 730 (trial Court may limit in discretion; here disapproving of the fixing of the number before testimony was introduced); Texas: 1879, Johnson v. Brown, 51 Tex. 65, 76 (a reasonable limitation is proper).

power to limit the number of witnesses that may be called in proof of a material fact or of the issue? The question is one of importance in practice. Mere numbers do not necessarily determine the weight of the testimony; and numbers within a reasonable limit are often of great importance. It has long been held that, in eliciting the truth from a witness, the manner and extent of the examination is largely in the discretion of the trial judge. But when it comes to the number to be called to establish a fact or a given issue, must all discretion be denied? A trial sometimes becomes a contest as to which side can overwhelm the other with the larger number of witnesses. And we have repeated what recently occurred in a common pleas court in this circuit, the issue between two neighboring farmers being the identity of three sheep, not worth to exceed three dollars. A hundred witnesses were called, ten days consumed in the trial, the three sheep were soon followed by the loss of the entire flocks of the unfortunate farmers, and also a large part of their farms. In another part of this circuit the issue tried was the alleged warranty of a heifer at an auction sale of stock; all the men present at the sale were called by one or the other of the contending parties, with a result not less disastrous than the sheep case. A Court of justice that has no power to regulate such exhibitions of bad temper, is hardly worthy of the name. . . . We conclude that a reasonable limitation of the number of witnesses who may be called in proof of a fact, or of a single issue, is within the discretion of the trial Court, to be exercised. no doubt, with caution, considering the nature of the case, the character of the witnesses, and the state of the proof."

Some such general principle, as to the limitation of numbers, seems to be conceded on all hands.[3]

[3] Federal: 1905, Carrara P. A. Co. v. Carrara P. Co., 137 Fed. 319, C. C. (depositions of 250 witnesses were allowed, no special reason for limitation of number being shown); 1916, Samuels v. U. S., 8th C. C. A., 232 Fed. 536 (fraudulent use of the mail by sending a pretended cure for disease; after 35 witnesses for the defendant had testified that they were cured by his medicine, the Court announced that 6 more only would be permitted, and refused to admit 20 or 25 others offered by the defendant; held proper, in the trial Court's discretion); Alaska: Comp. L. 1913, § 1494 (like Or. Laws 1920, § 856); Arkansas: Dig. 1919, § 4183 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 2044); 1890, Jones v. Glidewell, 53 Ark. 161, 176, 13 S. W. 723 (election contest; limitation held to be for the trial Court's discretion); 1897, Hall v. State, 64 Ark. 121, 40 S. W. 578 (trial Court's discretion approved, excluding cumulative witnesses to errors in an accomplice's testimony); 1902, Hughes v. State, 70 Ark. 420, 68 S. W. 676 (Court's discretion, under Stats. § 2955, in limiting the further examination of a witness, held improperly exercised); 1922, Henson & S. C. Co. v. Strickland, — Ark. —, 238 S. W. 5 (mining trespass; a limitation to two witnesses on each side, held unreasonable; but the opinion is unsound in further declaring that an order of limitation should not be made until it "becomes obvious to the Court that the parties . . . are merely producing cumulative testimony"; for this tardy announcement might deprive the party of the option to select the most important of his witnesses); California: C. C. P. 1872, § 2044 (Court "may stop the production of further evidence upon any particular point when the evidence upon it is already so full as to preclude reasonable doubt"); Columbia (Dist.): 1909, Trometer v. District, 24 D. C. App. 242, 247 (wife's testimony on a certain point, excluded as cumulative); Delaware: 1901, Pritchard v. Henderson, 3 Pen. 128, 50 Atl. 218 (rule of Court, limiting to six witnesses to one fact, applied); 1901, Giordano v. Brandywine Granite Co., 3 Pen. 423, 52 Atl. 332 (where the number has been limited beforehand, a witness who, being the person supposed by the counsel, nevertheless knows nothing on the subject, counts as one of the limited number; Spruance, J., diss., and properly); 1907, State v. Uzzo, 6 Pen. 212, 65 Atl. 775 (rule of Court limiting to six witnesses on the same fact, held applicable in capital cases); Illinois: 1864, Gray v. St. John, 35 Ill. 222, 238 (fraud in conveyance; deposition excluded on the principle that "when a fact is sufficiently established, and is not controverted, the Court may properly refuse to suffer its time to be occupied in hearing further evidence on that point"); 1869, White v. Hermann, 51 Ill. 243, 246 (refusal to permit more than four witnesses to value of land, held improper); 1879, Mueller v. Rebhan, 94 Ill. 142, 151 (proponent of a will introduced seventeen witnesses to prove that the testator's condition had not changed prior to the will's execution; opponent offered to admit that all other witnesses of proponent would testify to this and certain other facts; ruling that no more witnesses to these facts should be examined for proponent, held proper); 1891, Greene v. Ins. Co., 134 Ill.

There is, however, a lack of harmony and certainty in applying it. (a) In the first place, it is generally agreed that the existence of a need for the 310, 25 N. E. 583 (insanity of a grantor; limitation to nine witnesses on each side, held improper on the facts; partly because the order was not made at the opening of the trial, partly because the issue was the main one in dispute); 1900, Chicago Terminal T. R. Co. v. Bugbee, 184 Ill. 353, 56 N. E. 386 (limitation by parties' stipulation; additional witnesses excluded); 1909, West Skokie Drainage District v. Dawson, 243 Ill. 175, 90 N. E. 377 (obscure and rambling opinion; apparently the rule accepted is that the trial Court's ruling cannot be made before testimony begun and cannot be made to include rebuttal testimony; unsound on both points); 1915, Geohegan v. Union Elev. R. Co., 266 Ill. 482, 107 N. E. 786 (cited more fully supra, n. 1); Indiana: 1853, Gardner v. State, 4 Ind. 632, 634 (beating by a schoolmaster; limitation to two witnesses for the defence, as to the absence of blows with foot and fist, apparently held an abuse of discretion); 1869, Hubbell v. Osborn, 31 Ind. 249 (limitation to one witness on a material point, held improper); 1881, Union R. T. & S. T. Co. v. Moore, 80 Ind. 458 (land-value; limitation to eleven on each side, held proper in discretion); 1884, Butler v. State, 97 Ind. 378, 380, 388 (murder; limitation for depositions out of the State to forty-five for the defence, held proper in discretion); 1886, Mergentheim v. State, 107 Ind. 567, 572, 8 N. E. 568 (condition of a canal said to be a nuisance; limitation to seven on each side, held proper in discretion); Iowa: 1870, Kesse v. R. Co., 30 Ia. 78, 80 (whether a locomotive spark-net could be seen from the belt-frame; limitation held for trial Court's discretion); 1882, Everett v. R. Co., 59 Ia. 243, 244, 13 N. W. 109 (land-value; limitation to five on each side, held proper in discretion); 1890, McConnell v. Osage, 80 Ia. 293, 295, 45 N. W. 550 (condition of sidewalk; limitation to six on each side; objection not sufficiently taken); 1895, Preston v. Cedar Rapids, 95 Ia. 71, 63 N. W. 577 (land-value; limitation to seven on each side, held proper in discretion); Kansas: 1878, Fisher v. Conway, 21 Kan. 18, 24 (limitation to four witnesses, upon a matter of self-defence, held improper; though on "any collateral matter" the trial Court may in discretion limit the number); Kentucky: C. C. P. 1895, § 593 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 2044); Louisiana: St. 1894, No. 67, Wolff's Rev. L., p. 277 (in criminal cases "each side shall not be allowed to summon more than six witnesses," except after the attorney's written application setting forth under oath "what he expects to prove by the additional witness, that an additional number is required to meet the ends of justice and to make a proper prosecution or defence"); 1920, State v. Coll., 146 La. 597, 83 So. 844 (failure to comply with the statute deprives of right of postponement of trial for the absent witnesses, where more than six witnesses summoned are present; collecting the interim rulings on the statute); Maryland: 1861, Calvert v. Carter, 18 Md. 73, 109 (obscure; but semble contra); Massachusetts: 1835, Howe v. Thayer, 17 Pick. 91, 97 (additional witnesses on an undisputed point, excluded); 1848, Cushing v. Billings, 2 Cush. 158 (trial Court has discretion; using the illustrations mentioned in the next case); 1883, Com. v. Ryan, 134 Mass. 223, 224 ("It must be in the power of the Court to limit the amount of testimony where it may be extended indefinitely, as in the case of usage or character or genuineness of handwriting"); Michigan: 1888, Barhyte v. Summers, 68 Mich. 341, 36 N. W. 93 (unsoundness of a mare before sale; limitation to seven witnesses on a side, held improper; no authority cited); 1891, Detroit C. R. Co. v. Mills, 85 Mich. 634, 48 N. W. 1007 (electric railroad as decreasing travel in streets, lowering rents, etc.; limitation to "eight or ten" witnesses, held proper in discretion); Missouri: 1878, State v. Whiton, 68 Mo. 91, 92 (prejudice as ground for change of venue; limitation to six on each side, held proper in discretion; see quotation supra); 1897, State v. Lamb, 141 Mo. 298, 42 S. W. 827 (alibi; number limitable in discretion); 1901, State v. Smith, 164 Mo. 567, 65 S. W. 270 (exclusion of additional witnesses to deceased's threats, after eight had testified, held not improper); Montana: Rev. C. 1921, § 10661 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 2044); New York: 1893, Sixth Ave. R. Co. v. Metrop. El. R. Co., 138 N. Y. 548, 553, 34 N. E. 400 (number limited, in trial Court's discretion, for proving damages by taking of land); 1896, People v. Barberi, 149 N. Y. 256, 43 N. E. 635 (the trial Court held improperly to have refused to admit for the accused the corroborating testimony of others than the accused and yet allowed the jury to question her credibility); Ohio: 1894, Hupp v. Boring, 8 Oh. C. C. 259 (condition of boundary, in claim by adverse possession; limitation to four on each side, held proper in discretion; quoted supra); Oregon: Laws 1920, § 856 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 2044); Porto Rico: Rev. St. & C. 1911, § 1519 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 2044); Rhode Island: 1909, Campbell v. Campbell, 30 R. I. 63, 73 Atl. 354 (limitation of the number of witnesses to those specified by counsel as a condition of getting an adjournment, held unfair on the facts; Blodgett, J., diss.; elaborate opinions, criticizing the various precedents); Texas: 1891, Galveston H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Matula, 79 Tex. 577, 15 S. W. 573 (exclusion of new depositions proving different facts tending limitation should be left to the trial Court's determination.[4] (b) In the next place, it is also generally agreed that the rule may be applied only to exclude additional witnesses to the same issue or controverted fact; though a precise definition of the scope of such an issue is not furnished, nor, perhaps, can it be. Both of these conditions to the rule are fair and sound. (c) A Court occasionally declares the rule applicable only where the fact is not actually controverted.[5] But this limitation is unsound, because the value of merely cumulative witnesses may become trifling even where the point is controverted, and the policy of the rule rests on the proportion between the probative value of the additional witnesses and the disadvantages they bring. (d) Some of the statutory provisions declare the rule applicable whenever the evidence "is already so full as to preclude reasonable doubt." Yet it seems undesirable to require the judge to pass upon this question, even provisionally; and it is unnecessary to do so, because the true reason for the slight value of the additional witnesses is that, if the jury did not believe the foregoing ten, they will hardly believe two more, and if they did believe the ten, then two more are not needed; in other words, the exclusion of the two more as valueless does not by any means rest on the assumption that the preceding ones have proved the fact indubitably (as the codifiers seem to have believed), but on the consideration that two more of the same sort cannot make a bad case better. The statutory phrasing should rather run: "if it is already so full that more witnesses to the same point could not be reasonably expected to be additionally persuasive." (e) Sometimes a Court declares the qualification that the limiting of numbers is proper only upon collateral issues; though there is little authority for this.[6] The term "collateral" is a much-abused one; it is difficult of definition, and should be avoided.[7] Moreover, there is no reason here for such a restriction of the rule; the exigency may equally arise upon any part of the issue, as the reasons above given indicate clearly. (f) It is sometimes required that the trial Court (with or without the parties' motion) announce before any witnesses on the point are offered, that a limitation of the witnesses upon the particular fact will be enforced, and a failure to do this is said to prevent the enforcement of any limitation; on the theory that, unless the party is thus advised of the intended limit, he may be obliged to omit to prove the same ultimate issue, held improper); Washington: 1917, Mogelberg v. Calhoun, 94 Wash. 662, 163 Pac. 29 (personal injury; limitation to six eyewitnesses, not imposed until the sixth was called, held improper); Wisconsin: 1892, Meier v. Morgan, 82 Wis. 289, 294, 52 N. W. 174 (whether ice was properly packed; limitation to eight witnesses, held proper in discretion); 1896, Larson v. Eau Claire, 92 Wis. 86, 65 N. W. 731 (trial Court's discretion approved in excluding a tenth witness as to the condition of a highway).

In France, under the numerical system (post, § 2032), a limitation to ten witnesses to a single fact was introduced in the 1300s (Glasson, Histoire du droit et des institutions de la France, VI, 544; 1895).

[4] See the cases passim in the preceding note. For the argument as to a constitutional right to process, see post, § 2191.

[5] E. g. in Illinois and Massachusetts.

[6] Greene v. Ins. Co., Ill., supra. Contra: Preston v. Cedar Rapids, Ia.; Hupp v. Boring, Oh., and others by implication, supra.

[7] Ante, §§ 38, 1001.

his most valuable witnesses through not having known of the necessity of choosing the best of the lot at his disposal. This requirement has a plausible fairness in it, and is usually proper when feasible. But it is not always feasible, because the judge may not know of the party's intention as to number of witnesses; and it is not always proper for the judge to commit himself to such a fixed limit before hearing any of the witnesses.[8] The trial Court's discretion should be left to determine whether such a prior notice was feasible and desirable under the circumstances. (g) Finally, the rule should be applied with equal effect against both parties, so that neither be unfairly advantaged thereby.[9]

The rules as to limiting the impeachment of an impeaching witness (ante, § 894), as to the length of an examination of a single witness (ante, § 783), the number of counsel that may examine on each side (ante, § 783), and the repetition of the same questions (ante, § 782), which depend perhaps to some extent upon considerations of the present sort, have been already discussed in more appropriate places.

§ 1909. Judge as Witness. That a judge may give testimony as a witness in a trial before a Court of which he is a member seems in the classical English practice not to have been doubted, though the precedents are scanty.[1] It is not clear whether a judge so testifying was regarded as bound to retire from the Bench thereafter during the trial; but the propriety and legality of his taking the stand when needed seem to have been assumed.[2] This is [8] Moreover, the intimation in Greene v. Ins. Co., Ill., that the notice must be given at the opening of the trial, is unjust and impracticable as a general rule.

If one of the prescribed number proves incompetent, he ought not to be reckoned as one of the allotment of that party, because his withdrawal diminshes by so much the time and the complications: Contra: 1895, Preston v. Cedar Rapids, 95 Ia. 71, 63 N. W. 577 ("It was defendant's business to know, before it called the witnesses, that they possessed the requisite knowledge to testify concerning that matter"); 1901, Giordano v. Brandywine Granite Co., Del. (cited supra).

[9] Compare Hilliard v. Beattie, N. H., ante, note 1.

§ 1909. [1] 1660, Regicides' Trials, Kel. 12 ("Secretary Morris and Mr. Annesley, President of the Council, were both in commission for the trial of the prisoners, and sate upon the bench; but there being occasion to make use of their testimony against Hacker, one of the prisoners, they both came off from the bench and were sworn and gave evidence, and did not go up to the bench again during that man's trial; and agreed by the Court that they were good witnesses, tho' in commission, and might be made use of"); 1680, Earl of Stafford's Trial, 7 How. St. Tr. 1293, 1413, 1442, 1487 (some of the lords judges testified); 1685, Oate's Trial, 10 How. St. Tr. 1079, 1142 (L. C. J. Jeffreys, asked to testify what he said at a former trial, replied: "No, there will be no need for that; I will acknowledge anything I said then"); 1716, Hawkins, Pleas of the Crown, b. 2, c. 46, § 80 ("It seems agreed that it is no exception against a person's giving evidence, either for or against a prisoner, that he is one of the judges or jurors who are to try him").

[2] In more modern times, doubts are found: 1872, Duke of Buccleuch v. Metropolitan Board, L. R. 5 E. & I. App. 429, 433 (Cleasby, B.: "With respect to those who fill the office of judge, it has been felt that there are grave objections to their conduct being made the subject of cross-examination and comment (to which hardly any limit could be put) in relation to proceedings before them; and, as everything which they can properly prove can be proved by others, the Courts of law discountenance, and I think I may say prevent, them from being examined"; but this was not said especially of the judge 'coram quo'); 1890, R. v. Petrie, 20 Ont. 317, 323 (held improper, where the judge sits without a jury); 1914, Mitchell v. Justices, K. B. Div., 30 Times L. Rep. 526 (a licensing committee referred a liquor license to the compensation authority; one of the justices sitting in the former sat in the latter also; the latter authority, after first refusing the license, reopened the case and heard further evidence, including that of the observable in the discussion which reappears, at various epochs,[3] over a celebrated problem once put by King Henry IV, concerning the proper conduct for a judge who has been the sole spectator of a murder and comes afterwards to preside on the trial of an innocent person charged with it. The controversy that arose over this problem concerned a different principle, namely, the judge's duty and power to use his private knowledge in his judicial capacity (as by ordering an acquittal); but it seems not to have been doubted by any of those who expressed their views that the judge might lawfully have given testimony; the only doubt was whether it was his moral duty to do so:

1696, Sir John Hawles, Solicitor-General, in Fenwick's Trial, 13 How. St. Tr. 537, 667: "If a judge knows anything whereby the prisoner might be convicted or acquitted (not generally known), then I do say he ought to be called from the place where he sate and go to the bar and give evidence of his knowledge; and so the judge in H. IV's time ought to have done, and not to have suffered the prisoner to have been convicted and then get a pardon for him; for a pardon will not always do the business"; and commenting on Cornish's Trial, 11 id. 459 (1685), as to the failure of the judge to testify to a witness' testimony at a former trial: "Every man knows that a judge in a civil matter tried before him, and a counsel even against his client, has been enforced to give evidence (provided it be not of a secret communicated to him by his client), for in that particular a judge ceases to be a judge, and is a witness; of whose evidence the jury are the judges, though he after re-assume his authority and is afterwards a judge of the jury's verdict. . . . If it be so in civil matters, let any man show me a reason why the law is not so in criminal matters."

In modern times, however, and in this country, the policy of uniting in one person the double capacity of judge and witness in the same trial has been much questioned. It must be premised that the objections are not based upon the general quality of judgeship, so as to oppose the admission of a judge as witness in any trial during his period of office as judge; there could be no conceivable reason for that.[4] Nor is it here a question of the judge's privilege against compulsory process (post, § 2372); or of the judge's privilege to withhold, in a trial not before himself, information received confidentially and officially, from an informer or a party confessing, not in open court (post, § 2376). Nor do the objections question the propriety of a judge's leaving the bench and in the same trial becoming a witness, where he has relevant knowledge; for, by reason of a principle already examined (ante, § 1805), this is the only way in which his personal knowledge can be contributed.

The objections are based rather upon the impolicy of combining at the same time the capacities of judge and witness, i. e. of becoming a witness above justice; thereafter he took no part in the adjudication; the license was finally refused; held that the conduct of the justice was "most unfortunate"; that he should have refrained from sitting at all as judge in that case or should have refrained from giving evidence; but that his evidence was nevertheless "legal evidence").

[3] See the citations collected post, § 2569, under Judicial Notice.

[4] Thus, a judge may always testify, in a cause where he is not sitting, as to proceedings before him in another cause; see, for an illustration (1889), State v. Duffy, 57 Conn. 525, 528, 18 Atl. 791.

without ceasing to be a judge of the cause and of continuing to act as judge in the cause even after finishing his testimony as witness. The various considerations of policy that have been advanced at one time or another are represented in the following passages:

1824, MARTIN, J., in Ross v. Buhler, 2 Mart. N. S. 312: "There may be a different mode of practice which, by taking off the reason of the rule [of incompetency], perhaps destroys it in jury cases. If the judge, when he tries the facts, must weigh the evidence, he must do so impartially; this, perhaps, he cannot be easily supposed to do when he is to weigh his testimony against that of another. When, however, not he but a jury is to try an issue of facts, it would seem the reason in some degree fails. Yet cogent ones present themselves: in a Court composed of one judge only, who is to administer the oath? It cannot be done by any but a member of the Court, and he is the only one. . . . It seems to us some legislative provision is necessary in a case like this. Otherwise, the party cannot attain his right."

1851, PARKER, J., in Morss v. Morss, 11 Barb. 510, 511: "The objection to the competency of a judge rests on an entirely different ground [from that of a juror]. It goes to the power of the Court — the power to administer the oath, to decide on a question of competency, or the admissibility of parts of the evidence, to commit for refusing to answer, and to exercise over the witness all the other powers of the Court, which may be called into requisition for the protection of the rights of the party. . . . In examining this question upon principle, there seems to be the same difficulty, whether the Court consists of one judge or of three, all of them being necessary to constitute the Court. In the latter case, if one of the judges be called as a witness, there are but two judges left to administer the oath, to decide upon his competency if he be objected to, and to decide questions as to the relevancy of his testimony. If he refuses to answer, there are but two judges to commit him for contempt. Two-thirds of a court cannot form a legal tribunal. The party has a right to three judges, the number prescribed by statute. Can it be said that there are three judges when one is under examination as a witness — or in the prisoner's box, on a proceeding for contempt in not answering? When thus proceeded against he becomes a party, and may be heard in his defense either in person or by counsel. Can it be said, that under such circumstances, he still, by his presence, forms part of the Court, and gives validity and jurisdiction to its proceedings? And is it not absurd to say that he still forms part of the Court, when the two judges still on the bench commit him for contempt? The statute has declared the qualifications of judges, and will not allow one to sit in any cause to which he is a party, or in which he is interested (2 R. S. 373, 3d ed.). If one judge, holding a court alone, cannot be both judge and witness, it seems to me to be equally clear upon principle, that a judge cannot, who is one of three judges necessary to constitute a Court. The two characters are inconsistent with each other, and their being united in one person is incompatible with the fair and safe administration of justice. . . . The objection to a juror's being a witness rests mainly on a question of public policy, and the objection to a judge being sworn depends on an additional and different ground, viz., that of want of power to discharge the duties of a court while acting as a witness."

1894, RIDDICK, J., in Rogers v. State, 60 Ark. 76, 86, 29 S. W. 894: "If the judge of such a Court [having but one judge] takes the stand to testify against the defendant, there is no one to control his testimony or keep him within proper bounds. Even if he can control his own testimony, and discharge at the same time what have been called 'the incompatible duties of witness and judge,' yet, however careful and conscientious he may be, the chances are great that by thus testifying he will to some extent detract from the dignity that should surround the functions of his high office. Instead of the impartial judge administering the law with a firm and even hand, he takes on for the time the appearance of a partisan, endeavoring to uphold by his testimony one side against the other. More than likely he provokes unseemly conflicts between himself and counsel, and arouses the distrust of the party against whom he testifies. In addition to this, the higher his character and standing as a judge, the more danger that he thus gives the party in whose favor he testifies an undue advantage over the opposing side."

1896, DUNBAR, J., in Maitland v. Zanga, 14 Wash. 92, 44 Pac. 117: "It seems to us that there are many reasons why the judge should not be allowed to testify that would not weigh in the case of a juror. If the defendant is entitled to the testimony of the judge, the plaintiff is equally entitled to his testimony, and it might eventuate, if this practice were to be tolerated, that the judge, upon a motion for a nonsuit, would be compelled to pass upon the weight of his own testimony; and, considering the inclination of the human mind to attach more importance to its own statements than to those of others, it is easy to see that the rights of the litigants might be prejudiced in such a case. Again, while upon the witness stand he would have a right to all the protection that any other witness has under the law. He could refuse to answer questions which, in his judgment, might tend to criminate him. He might decline to answer questions the admissibility of which it would be necessary for the court to determine, and which would bring him as a witness in conflict with himself as a court. Again, it would to a certain extent lead to the embarrassment of the jury, who are subordinate officers of the court, and under its directions, to have to weigh the testimony of the judge in the same scales with the testimony of other witnesses in the case whose testimony was opposed to that of the judge. And in many ways it seems to us that this practice would lead to embarrassment, and would have a tendency to lower the standard of courts, and bring them into contempt. There is no necessity for this practice, for, under the liberal provisions of our laws, if a party desires to avail himself of the testimony of the judge, another judge may be called in to preside at the trial of the cause."

Regarding the nature of the dilemma thus presented and the apparent ease of obviating these objections, it may be noted at the outset that their effect, if they are to be yielded to, is practically to exclude the judge of the cause from giving testimony at all. The simple expedient of discarding the judicial capacity and not returning to the Bench during the same trial is with us no real solution of the dilemma; because the modern and probably universal practice in this country constitutes the trial Court of a single judge only, or, in the rare instances where two are required (as sometimes in capital cases), renders both essential to the Court's constitution; nor, in the conditions everywhere prevailing, is another judge available on short notice for substitution. The practical result would usually be, then, either that the judge in the cause could not testify at all, or that the trial would be interrupted by postponement — the latter an inconvenient and highly objectionable alternative, because it might necessitate an entire re-trial.

Coming, then, to the reasons set forth in the above quotations, it will be seen that one of them at least — the inability of the judge to administer the witness' oath to himself — is a petty obstacle (if it is one) which should rather be obviated (as it is in many jurisdictions) by a statute empowering the clerk to administer rather than by the clumsy solution of disqualifying the judge. Furthermore, as to some of the other reasons — such as the impropriety of the judge passing upon his own claim of privilege and the unseemliness of the judge being impeached for unveracity by the opponent, — it may be said that these are the merest possibilities, that they may be trusted to be avoided through the combined good sense and discretion of counsel and judge, and that to establish a universal rule for the sake of rare contingencies is unpractical and unnecessary.

The only real and remaining objections to the judge's assuming the place of a witness seem to be, in the first place, that he would be put thereby into a more or less partisan attitude before the jury and would thus as a judge lose something of the essential traits of authority and impartiality; secondly, that his continuing power as judge would embarrass and limit the opposing counsel in his cross-examination of the judge-witness, and would thus unfairly restrict the opponent's opportunity to expose the truth; and, thirdly (though this is itself inconsistent with the first reason), that the judge's official authority would impress his testimony upon the jury with special and therefore unfair weight.

In all these objections there is a modicum of truth. Yet is it necessary on that account to lay down a universal prohibition? The force of the objections would be most seen and would rise to an appreciable degree only when the judge became a principal witness, — as in the case put by King Henry IV, where the judge had been an eye-witness of a murder. In all such instances (which are rare enough), the usefulness of his testimony would be known beforehand, and his own discretion and the parties' could be trusted to send the cause before another judge for trial. But in the ordinary instance the judge's testimony is desired for merely formal or undisputed matters, such as the proof of execution of a certificate or of the administration of an oath or of a deceased witness' former testimony. To suppose here a danger that the inconveniences above noted would occur in any appreciable degree is to be unduly apprehensive. Military commanders do not train cannon on a garden-gate; and the law of Evidence need not employ the cumbrous weapon of an invariable rule of exclusion to destroy an entire class of useful and unobjectionable evidence in order to avoid embarrassments which can easily be dealt with when they arise. Since the trial judge has no interest to subject himself or counsel or jury to these supposed embarrassments, it may properly be left to his discretion to avoid them, when the danger in his opinion arises, by retiring from the Bench before trial begun or by interrupting and postponing the trial and securing another judge.

The precedents in this country are by no means harmonious; but some of them at least, as well as a statutory provision reproduced in several codes, seem to lay down the rule above indicated.[5]

[5] With the following, compare also the citations ante, § 1805 (judge's testimony as hearsay), and post, §§ 2372, 2376 (judge's privilege): Federal: 1798, U. S. v. Lyon, Wharton's State Trials, 333, 335, 6 Amer. St. Tr. 687 (the presiding judge was asked and answered questions by the defendant, who called no other witnesses); 1799, U. S. v. Fries, Wharton's St. Tr. 482, 532 (one of the bench was sworn and testified to matters connected with the sedition charged; he was also cross-examined); 1916, Lepper v. U. S., 4th C. C. A., 233 Fed. 227, 230, per Woods, J. (obiter stating that the trial judge is incompetent); Alabama: 1880, Dabney v. Mitchell, 66 Ala. 495, 503 (probate judge's own affidavit, held properly excluded by him-

§ 1910. Juror as Witness. Some of the objections to the giving of testimony by a judge, as well as other independent ones, have been advanced self); 1897, Estes v. Bridgforth, 114 Ala. 221, 21 So. 512 (excluded, on the ground of giving improper weight to the testimony with the jury); 1902, Randall v. Wadsworth, 130 Ala. 633, 31 So. 555 (probate judge held incompetent to testify to the loss of official files); Arkansas: Dig. 1919, § 4193 (civil cases; quoted post, § 1910); 1894, Rogers v. State, 60 Ark. 76, 84, 29 S. W. 894 (in criminal cases, a sole judge cannot testify for the prosecution); California: C. C. P. 1872, § 1883 ("The judge himself, or any juror, may be called as a witness by either party; but in such case it is in the discretion of the Court or judge to order the trial to be postponed or suspended, and to take place before another judge or jury"); Connecticut: 1889, State v. Duffy, 57 Conn. 525, 18 Atl. 791 (justice of the peace, allowed to testify to the defendant's admissions in testifying below); Georgia: 1892, Baker v. Thompson, 89 Ga. 486, 15 S. E. 644 (trial justice, on appeal to the Court in which he presides; excluded, because he cannot swear himself); 1898, Shockley v. Morgan, 103 Ga. 156, 29 S. E. 694 (a sole judge held incompetent); Idaho: Comp. St. 1919, § 7938 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1883); Illinois: Rev. St. 1874, c. 148, § 5 (where a county or probate judge is an attesting-witness to a will offered before him for probate, he is to make oath to the will before the circuit court, and then the other witnesses make oath to him as in other cases); Iowa: Code 1897, § 4610, Comp. Code § 7317 (a judge may testify, but may in discretion order the trial to be had before another judge); Kentucky: C. C. P. 1895, § 603 (a judge is competent, but the Court may transfer the trial to another judge); Louisiana: 1824, Ross v. Buhler, 2 Mart. N. S. 312 (district judge, held inadmissible in his own court; proceeding upon Spanish law); 1882, Bermudez, C. J., obiter, in State v. Barnes, 34 La. An. 395, 399 ("The law could not disqualify a judge, even if the judge were a material witness"); Rev. L. 1897, § 3192 (a judge is not to be incompetent as such by "being a material witness in the case in favor of either party"); R. S. 1870, § 3945 (where a judge is a material witness, provision is made for swearing him, etc.); Montana: Rev. C. 1921, § 10537 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1883); Nebraska: Rev. St. 1922, § 8839 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1883; a judge is competent as a witness, but, if testifying, he may in discretion order postponement and trial before another judge); Nevada: Rev. L. 1912, § 5429 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1883); 1902, Reno M. & L. Co. v. Westerfield, 26 Nev. 332, 67 Pac. 961, 69 Pac. 899 (whether a judge may refuse to testify opinion obscure); New Hampshire: 1916, Hale v. Wyatt, 78 N. H. 214, 98 Atl. 379 (probate of a will; to show that the proponent had admitted the testator's insanity, the judge of probate was called to testify to the proponent's application for an inquisition on that ground for the testator; on objection by the opponent, held, that the judge's testimony was admissible, no question of his privilege being raised); New Jersey: 1903, State v. De Maio, 69 N. J. L. 590, 55 Atl. 644 (a judge sole cannot be called as a witness); New York: 1806, Perry v. Weyman, 1 John. 520 (justice of the peace held incompetent, when sworn by another justice, because the statute required by the oath to be administered by the justice trying the cause); 1848, Re Heyward, 1 Sandf. Sup. 701 (extradition; the police justice issuing the warrant was admitted to testify upon what papers it issued; "it is in no respect 'infra dignitatem' for the judge to appear as a witness in this mode"; citing two other instances); 1851, Morss v. Morss, 11 Barb. 510, 515 (quoted supra); 1854, People v. Miller, 2 Park Cr. 197, 200 (a judge essential to the Court cannot testify before himself); 1874, People v. Dohring, 59 N. Y. 374, 379 ("The inclination of the Courts has been to hold that when it is necessary for the conduct of the trial that one should act as judge, he may not be called from the bench to be examined as a witness; but when his action as a judge is not required because there is a sufficient court without him, he may become a witness; though it is then decent that he do not return to the bench"; but here the point was not necessary to a decision); North Dakota: Comp. L. 1913, § 7925 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1883); Ohio: 1859, McMillen v. Andrews, 10 Oh. St. 112 (justice of the peace held incompetent in his own court, by implication of statutory procedure); Oklahoma: 1911, State ex rel. Nowakowski v. Lockridge, 6 Okl. Cr. 208, 118 Pac. 152 (that a judge conducted the preliminary examination does not disqualify him from presiding at the trial with the possibility of becoming a witness; the above text approved); Oregon: Laws 1920, § 867 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1883, substituting "former case" for "such case"); 1904, State v. Houghton, 45 Or. 110, 75 Pac. 887 (judge allowed to testify on the question of a witness' self-contradiction on the former trial); 1909, State v. Finch, 54 Or. 482, 103 Pac. 505 (judge's testimony on a trivial matter at the defendant's instance, held not to require substitution of another judge); Porto Rico: Rev. St. & C. 1911, § 1410 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1883); South Dakota: Rev. C. 1919, § 2732 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1883); Tennessee: Shannon's Code 1916, § 5594 (the judge is a competent witness for either party "in any cause tried before him either of a civil or criminal nature"); Texas: Rev. C. Cr. P. 1911, § 798 (a trial judge "is a competent witness for either the State or the defendant"); § 800 (clerk may against the use of a juror's testimony. They are sufficiently set forth in the following passages:

1851, PARKER, J., in Morss v. Morss, 11 Barb. 510, 511: "The competency of a judge rests upon different grounds from that of a juror. A juror is to decide only questions of facts, and is examined before the cause is submitted to him. The objection to his competency rests on public policy. In all cases he has to pass upon his own credibility; and this difficulty would be greatly increased in case of his impeachment. He may refuse to answer, in which case his commitment would delay the trial. The party against whom he is called is subjected to a great disadvantage, for the juror may be expected to maintain unyieldingly in the jury box the opinions he has expressed on the witness-stand. It may plausibly be objected, therefore, that respect for the feeling of the juror and regard for justice to the parties should exclude the juror as a witness and require the objection to be made on the calling of the jury, that the party need not suffer for the want of his testimony."

1865, WOODWARD, C. J., in Howser v. Com., 51 Pa. 332, 337: "Let it be distinctly said that jurors are not incompetent witnesses in either criminal or civil issues. They have no interest that disqualifies, and there is no rule of public policy that excludes them. . . . The learned counsel argue that the practice violates the constitutional rights of the accused, who are entitled to a speedy and public trial by an impartial jury, and to be confronted with the witnesses. Our law takes the utmost care to secure to the accused, in capital cases, an impartial jury — it almost allows prisoners to select their own triers. They may examine jurors as to their knowledge of circumstances, their expressions, opinions or prejudices, and challenge as many as they can show cause for, and may challenge twenty without showing cause, and then if any juror happens to have knowledge of any pertinent fact, he is bound to disclose it in time for the accused to cross-examine him, and to explain or contradict his testimony. If this be not a fulfilling of the constitutional injunction in behalf of impartial juries, it would be difficult to invent a plan that would fulfil it and at the same time be consistent with the demands of public justice. But counsel imagine that the constitutional right to confront witnesses would be abridged in the instances of witnesses taken from the jury-box, because their truth and veracity could not be attacked without damage to the attacking party. As to material witnesses, those, we mean, upon whose testimony the event is essentially dependent, we think they ought not to be admitted into the jury-box, and we believe the general practice is to exclude them where the fact is discovered in time; but we do not think the constitutional provision alluded to, nor any rule of law, is violated by the examination of a juror as a witness. The 'a priori' presumption is that he is a man of truth and veracity or he would not have been summoned as a juror; and confronting witnesses does not mean impeaching their character, but means cross-examination in the presence of the accused. . . . He, like all other witnesses, must 'confront' the accused, that is, be examined in the presence of the accused, and be subject to cross-examination; but he is not disqualified to be a witness."

administer the oath to him); Utah: Comp. L. 1917, § 7125 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1883); Washington: 1896, Maitland v. Zanga (quoted supra); 1905, State v. Bringgold, 40 Wash. 12, 82 Pac. 132 (justice of the peace, allowed to testify to the proceedings on arraignment of the now defendant); Wisconsin: Stats. 1919, § 4079 n (no judge of a court of record may testify "as to any matter of opinion" where an attorney of record is related to him in the first degree).

From this question whether the judge in the cause is disqualified as a witness, distinguish the following matters involving other principles affecting the use of judge's testimony: (1) whether a judge's notes of former testimony are receivable without calling the judge — a question of the Hearsay rule (ante, § 1666); (2) whether a judge, under the same rule, may use his private knowledge without taking the stand as a witness (ante, § 1805); (3) whether a judge is privileged from personal attendance to testify (post, § 2372); and (4) whether a judge is privileged not to testify at all, (post, § 2372), or not to reveal official secrets (post, § 2376).

These objections seem reducible in substance to two: first, that the opposing counsel will be embarrassed by a fear of offending the juror, so that an adequate cross-examination or impeachment would be prevented; and, secondly, that the juror, sitting afterwards as judge of the facts, would be disposed to give excessive weight to his own testimony and in general to treat too favorably the testimony of the side whose partisan he had been made. The first objection is in the hands of the opponent himself to obviate, for if the juror is to be a principal witness and his testimony will be of such consequence as to deserve impeachment on thorough cross-examination, the opponent may ascertain this upon the juror's 'voir dire,' and may then exclude him by challenge. The second objection is of slight consequence, because it may usually be obviated in the same way by challenge, and because the impartiality of the remaining jurymen can be trusted to counteract whatever slight bias may be by possibility created in the testifying juror, and because this bias can ordinarily affect only a minor fact in the whole mass of evidential matter.

Accordingly, it has always been regarded as proper that a juror having any relevant knowledge should be called as a witness, returning to the box after completing his testimony.[1]

Distinguish the principle of the Hearsay rule, which forbids a juror to make use of his private knowledge in any other way (ante, § 1800); the principle of Judicial Notice, which allows a juror to use general information common to all men, without taking the stand (post, § 2570); and the principle of Privilege, which forbids the juror to disclose the secrets of the jury-room (post, § 2346).

§ 1910. [1] To the following authorities add those cited ante, § 1800, which also imply the competency of a juror to testify; by statute certain restrictions are sometimes imposed:

ENGLAND: 1663, Fitzjames v. Moys, 1 Sid. 133 (a juryman testified for the defendant, and then "continued of the jury"); 1679, Reading's Trial, 7 How. St. Tr. 259, 267 (Defendant: "My lord, I am very glad to see Sir John Cutter here; for I did intend to have his evidence"; L. C. J. North: "That you may have, though he be sworn [on the jury]"); 1744, Heath's Trial, 18 How. St. Tr. 1, 123 (a juror was sworn and testified to impeach a witness); 1716, Hawkins, Pl. Cr., b. 2, c. 46, § 80 (quoted ante, § 1909, note 1).

UNITED STATES: Ark. Dig. 1919, § 4193 ("The judge or juror may be called as a witness by either party; but in such cases it is in the discretion of the judge to suspend the trial and order it to take place before another judge or jury"; and if party knows beforehand that juror is to be called by him, he must disclose it and the witness be excluded from jury); Cal. C. C. P. 1872, § 1883 (quoted ante, § 1909); Ga. 1897, Savannah F. & W. R. Co. v. Quo, 103 Ga. 125, 29 S. E. 607; Ida. Comp. St. 1919, § 7938 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1883); Ia. 1896, State v. Cavanaugh, 98 Ia. 688, 691, 68 N. W. 452; Ky. C. C. P. 1895, § 603 (a juror is competent, but the Court may suspend the trial and select another jury; and the witness must be excluded from the jury if known beforehand to the party); Mo. Rev. St. 1919, § 4013 ("If any juror shall know anything relative to the matter in issue, he shall disclose the same in open Court"); Mont. Rev. C. 1921, § 10537 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1883); Nebr. 1903, Chicago R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Collier, — Nebr. —, 95 N. W. 472; Nev. Rev. L. 1912, § 5429 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1883); N. Y. 1874, People v. Dohring, 59 N. Y. 374, 378 ("It is settled that a juror may be a witness on a trial before himself and his fellows"; thus discrediting the obiter dictum in Morss v. Morss, 11 Barb. 510, 515, quoted supra); N. D. Comp. L. 1913, § 7925 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1883); Or. Laws 1920, § 140 ("A juror may be examined by either party as a witness if he be otherwise competent"); § 867 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1883; substituting "the former case" for "such case"); Pa. 1852, Plank-Road Co. v. Thomas, 20 Pa. 91, 95 (one who had been a viewer); 1865, Howser v. Com., 51 Pa. 332, 337; P. R. Rev. St. & C.

§ 1911. Counsel or Attorney as Witness. The competency of a counsel or attorney to testify on behalf of his client, as a problem in Evidence, has occupied a singular place in our law. Occurring in practice with much more frequency than that of a judge's or a juror's competency, it has presented constant opportunity for objection and discussion; the reasons of the most diverse sort, urged against it, are much more cogent than those urged against the testimony of judge or juror; the force of these reasons has been generally conceded; and yet in almost every court the final step has failed to be taken, and the judges have halted half-way between a prohibition and a license; while the legislators, who have eagerly busied themselves with a re-enactment of the common-law truism that a juror may be a witness, have ignored the troublesome problem of a counsel's testimony.

In the days of King Henry VIII and his abuse of the law's methods to tryannical private ends, an instance is recorded of a counsel's testifying against his client;[1] but this misunderstood instance, which has been spread into general knowledge by the anathema of an eminent legal biographer,[2] is in truth beside the point; for it not only concerned the case of a counsel testifying against his client (a matter upon which there has never been doubt), but involved apparently a breach of professional confidence, and was in that respect sufficiently illegal and indefensible. Certain it seems that until the 1800s[3] no doubt was raised as to the propriety of a counsel or attorney testifying for his client. Even then the doubt in England came by indirection only;[4] while in this country it was raised merely by invok-

1911, § 1410 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1883); S. D. Rev. C. 1919, § 2732 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1883); Utah: Comp. L. 1917 § 7125 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1883); 1895, People v. Thiede, 11 Utah 241, 39 Pac. 837; Vt. 1802, Dunbar v. Parks, 5 Vt. 217; Wash. R. & B. Code 1909, § 348 (juror may be examined as witness).

Contra: 1890, R. v. Petric, 20 Ont. 317, 319 (apparently doubted).

A juror may therefore also be an interpreter: 1895, People v. Thiede, 11 Utah, 241 39 Pac. 837; 1895, Thiede v. Utah, 159 U. S. 510, 16 Sup. 62 (here with the accused's consent).

It was once suggested, but without any ground either in predecent or in policy, that the juryman might refuse to testify as witness: 1840, Manley v. Shaw, Car. & M. 361, per Tindal, C. J.

Distinguish the rule of qualification as juror that a prospective witness may be challenged as a juror; e. g.: 1877, Commander v. State, 60 Ala. 1, 6 (persons already summoned as witnesses for prosecution, held incompetent as jurors); Atkins v. State, 60 Ala. 45, 49 (same; as failure to examine them as witnesses is immaterial); Mo. Rev. St. 1899, § 2615 (no witness in criminal case is to be sworn as juror, if challenged before swearing).

Distinguish also the question whether a juror may at a subsequent trial disclose knowledge obtained by him at a view of premises on a former trial (post, § 2348).

§ 1911. [1] 1535, Sir Thomas More's Trial, 1 How. St. Tr. 386, 387, 390 (treason; some twelve months before the trial, Mr. Rich, Solicitor-General, went to the accused in the Tower, to take away his books, and "pretending friendship with him," put a hypothetical case, and got an answer from the accused; on the trial, the proof languished, whereon "Mr. Rich was called to give evidence in open court upon oath, which he immediately did," of this conversation).

[2] 1856, Campbell, Lives of the Chancellors, 4th Ed., II, 61 ("Mr. Solicitor, to his eternal disgrace, and to the eternal disgrace of the Court who permitted such an outrage on decency, left the bar and presented himself as a witness for the Crown"; but these epithets may have been inspired by the fact that he testified to a confidential communication with the accused).

[3] 1654, Waldron v. Ward, Style 449 (a "counsel in the cause" allowed to be examined).

[4] Circa 1810, R. v. Milne, 2 B. & Ald. 606, note (the prosecutor was obliged to waive giving evidence before Lord Ellenborough, C. J., would allow him to address the jury); 1819, R. v. Brice, 2 B. & Ald. 606 (the prosecutor was not allowed to address the jury; per Curiam:

ing for individual cases the general principle of disqualification by interest in the event of the suit,[5] — a principle which of course did not apply to counsel merely as such. But in 1846, in England, a single judge sitting at Nisi Prius and citing no precedents, declared such testimony inadmissible, on broad though indefinite grounds,[6] and this ruling, though repudiated in the same jurisdiction within half a dozen years by a Court in banc,[7] served to bring the question into the arena of general discussion, and to give a larger scope to the problem of policy involved; and the echoes of the debate have not yet died away.

The arguments advanced against admitting counsel or attorney as witness for the client are of three distinct sorts.

(1) First the general principle of disqualification by interest, to be enforced not according to the narrow technical tests now obsolete (ante, § 576), but because of the general emotional relation of partisanship which exists in favor of the client, independently of any specific interest in the event of the cause:

1826, PORTER, J., in Cox v. Williams, 5 Mart. N. S. 139 (referring to an early prohibitory statute): "The motives which induced the Legislature to pass such a law were supposed to be that attorneys could not safely be intrusted to testify for their clients; that under the influence of professional zeal they became in feeling, if not in interest, completely identified with those who employed them."

"Besides, the prosecutor may be and generally is a witness, and it is very unfit that he should be permitted to state, not upon oath, the facts to the jury which he is afterwards to state to them on his oath").

[5] See the American cases before 1846, cited in note 10, infra, which all deal with it in this way.

[6] 1846, Stones v. Byron, 4 Dowl. & L. 393, 11 Jur. 242, 1 Bail Court Rep. 248 (the plaintiff's attorney acted as advocate, and also testified to contradict the defence; Patteson, J., held his testimony inadmissible, as not "consistent with the due administration of justice"); 1847, Deane v. Packwood, ib. 395, note, 1 Bail Court Rep. 312 (preceding case followed by Erle, J.).

[7] The English and Canadian cases are as follows:

ENGLAND: 1852, Cobbett v. Hudson, 1 E. & B. 11, 22 L. J. Q. B. 11 (the plaintiff, conducting his own cause 'in forma pauperis,' was held entitled as of right to address the jury as well as to testify; the foregoing cases were discredited; and the rule was put on the ground that a party's right to testify and his right to be his own advocate were separate and not inconsistent, though the practice was reproved as "contrary to good taste and good feeling" and "revolting to the minds of the jury"; the same rule was apparently held applicable to a counsel and witness not being also a party, but this was not expressly declared; "if the practice does gain ground to a decree seriously injurious" to justice, the judges were said to have power to make a rule against it).

CANADA: New Brunswick: 1847, Shields v. McGrath, 3 Kerr 398 (counsel not allowed to be a witness for his party); 1875, Bank of B. N. A. v. McElroy, 2 Pugs. 462 (counsel allowed to be witness, as a matter of right for the party; but "it is an indecent proceeding and should be discouraged"; repudiating the preceding case, on the authority of Cobbett v. Hudson); 1890, Halifax Banking Co. v. Smith, 29 N. Br. 462, 469, 480 (counsel who had assisted in a business transaction with notes, allowed to give his opinion of handwriting; two judges diss.); Ontario: 1847, Benedict v. Baulton, 4 U. C. Q. B. 96 (counsel not allowed to be witness for his party, following Stones v. Byron and Deane v. Packwood); 1847, Cameron v. Forsyth, 4 U. C. Q. B. 189 (preceding, case treated as representing the rule); 1876, Davis v. Ins. Co., 39 U. C. Q. B. 452, 477, 481 ("It is a misdirection for a judge to reject the testimony of counsel when offered as a witness on behalf of his client"; following Cobbett v. Hudson; though it is "desirable" not to keep the characters separate if possible; preceding two cases in effect repudiated); Saskatchewan: 1914, Robert Bell Engine v. Gagne, 20 D. L. R. 235 (kind of issue, not stated; trial judge held to have erroneously refused to permit counsel to testify; "there is no rule of law or practice" against it, but "such a practice should be discouraged"; citing the above text, par. (2), with approval).

This reason, it may be said once for all, has totally disappeared from the controversy. It was easy to appreciate its force in the epoch when pecuniary interest was a disqualification in general; but with the disappearance of that disqualification has passed away any inclination to see special danger in the even less tangible interest of a counsel. The rulings concerned with this argument [8] have therefore no present significance.

(2) The second reason, though indirectly connected with the preceding thought, is in effect wholly distinct, and is of the nature of those principles of Extrinsic Policy later dealt with (post, § 2175). It is concerned with the dangerous effects of the practice upon the public mind. In short, it does not fear that lawyers may as witnesses distort the truth in favor of the client, but it fears that the public will think that they may, and that the public's respect for the profession and confidence in it will be effectively diminished.[9] This is at once the most potent and most common reason judicially advanced:

1847, LEWIS, P., in Mishler v. Baumgardner, Pa. Com. Pl., 1 American Law Journal N. S. 304, 308: "In the course of twenty-five years' experience, I have seldom known an attorney received as a witness in chief for his client, touching a disputed fact, without some loss of reputation, and without to some extent bringing reproach upon the profession to which he belonged and upon the court of which he was an officer. . . . Existing prejudices and modes of thinking, whether just or not, point to the exclusion of such testimony as indispensable to the usefulness of all who are officially connected with the administration of justice. . . . Liability to suspicion of partiality and falsehood exists, . . . and its consequences to the public, when applied to those who are constantly charged with official trusts, are too alarming to escape observation."

1848, SANDFORD, J., in Little v. Keon, 1 Code Reporter (N. Y. Super.) 4: "When we test the objection to the attorney by any established principle in the law of evidence, we find no good ground for rejecting him. Thus, he is not interested in the event of the suit [unless he is employed on a contingent fee]. . . . There is no reason for excluding the attorney on the ground of privilege or of confidence as between him and the adverse party. . . . As to the effect of this practice upon the character of the bar itself, we think the evil will work its own cure. Attorneys as well as counsellors of standing and character will never, except in extreme cases, present themselves before a jury as witnesses in their own causes on litigated questions, and in such cases only because of some unforeseen necessity. Those gentlemen of the bar who habitually suffer themselves to be used as witnesses for their clients soon become marked, both by their associates and the Courts, and forfeit in their character more than will ever be compensated to them by success in such clients' controversies."

1848, Anon., in 5 Western Law Journal 457: "The attorney's exclusion should rest on peculiar grounds. He should be rejected, not for the protection of the opposite party, but for his own; not because his integrity may be exposed to temptation, but because it will be exposed to suspicion. Let us consider for a moment the relation which he appears to sustain toward the party he represents. . . . He is paid for the knowledge, industry, talent, and zeal he may exert in the cause. Though his compensation depends on no contingency of success or failure, yet he feels entitled to charge, and his client feels disposed to pay a higher fee when the cause terminates successfully. His sympathy for a losing client induces him to abate the amount of his charge, and he feels that a fortunate litigant can compensate him more liberally. There are cases, too, in which, from the inability of his client, he must receive nothing, if the case is determined against him. . . . He is perhaps ardent to prevail for the sake of victory. Reputation is greatly enhanced by success. The vulgar generally applaud the winning lawyer, as the winning horse, and have no better criterion of ability than the event of a suit. The successful termination of a case, especially a doubtful one, often attracts other business. In whatever degree some minds may be influenced by such motives, there is no advocate wholly indifferent to the prestige which attends victory. The lawyer who approaches a jury to sustain a case by his testimony, and to advocate it by his eloquence, places himself in an indecent position. Paid for the ability he may exert in obtaining success, deceived by a partial knowledge of the facts, and ardent to win, his testimony must be viewed with distrust. His statement, though perfectly reliable under other circumstances, is received with suspicion by the jury, generally consisting of men whose limited education and position in life give them no enlarged views of things, and no elevated opinion of human nature. The incompetency of the attorney, therefore, need not be placed on the probability of the falsehood of his testimony. He should not be suffered by the Court to place himself in a position that may lessen his character, or diminish the confidence of men in the purity of the administration of justice."

[8] Infra note 9, passim.

[9] This seems to be the basis of the specific rule that counsel shall not express his own belief as to the facts of the case: 1908, Canons of Ethics, No. 15, American Bar Association ("It is improper for a lawyer to assert in argument his personal belief in his client's innocence or in the justice of his cause"); Costigan's Cases and Other Authorities on Legal Ethics, (1917), p. 309.

1867, LAWRENCE, J., in Ross v. Demoss, 45 Ill. 447, 449: "An attorney occupying the attitude of both witness and attorney for his client subjects his testimony to criticism if not suspicion; but where the half of a valuable farm depends upon his evidence, he places himself in an unprofessional position, and must not be surprised if his evidence is impaired. While the profession is an honorable one, its members should not forget that even they may so act as to lose public confidence and general respect."

(3) The third reason is of the sort otherwise noticed in this Chapter, namely, the fear that the testimony of the counsel and his statements in argument might be so identified in the minds of the jury that they might be too ready to give to the argument a testimonial credit and effect, as if the oath of the counsel as witness were pledged to it, and thus be unduly impressed with its weight. This reason (which is somewhat inconsistent with the preceding one) has rarely been advanced, and derives its only importance from the fact that it was propounded by the successful counsel in the case which threatened for a time to establish the rule of absolute exclusion:

1846, Mr. Udall, arguing, in Stones v. Byron, 4 Dowl. & L. 393: "It would be a practice attended with the most mischievous consequences, if an attorney or any other person, acting as the advocate of a party, could afterwards present himself before the jury as a witness to support those statements he had been making in the course of his speech. The characters of an advocate and a witness should be sedulously kept apart. The one is a person zealously and warmly espousing the interests of his client; the other a person sworn fairly and impartially, without bias or favor to either party, to tell the truth of what he had witnessed or heard. The jury might have considerable difficulty in separating those statements which they had heard from a person as advocate from those which they had heard from the same person as witness."

The result of the controversy has been that, in the Courts dealing with this question since 1846, the force of these objections (mainly of the second) has been fully realized; but that they have nevertheless declined, almost unanimously, to lay down a rule of prohibition.[10] The reasons are, probably,

[10] Compare also with the following authorities the quotations, ante, §§ 1806, 1807, which sometimes hint at the same result:

Federal: 1886, French v. Hall, 119 U. S. 152, 7 Sup. 170 ("There is nothing in the policy of the law, as there is no positive enactment, which hinders the attorney of the party . . . in a civil action from testifying at the call of his client; in some cases it may be unseemly"; here the exclusion was held improper);

Uniform Acts: Canons of Professional Ethics, American Bar Association, 1908, No. 19 ("Except when essential to the ends of justice a lawyer should avoid testifying in court in behalf of his client"); Statement of the General Council of the [English] Bar, 1917, quoted in Costigan's Cases on Legal Ethics, p. 448 ("A barrister should not accept a retainer in a case in which he has reason to believe he will be a witness; and if, being engaged in a case, it becomes apparent that he is a witness on a material question of fact, he ought not to continue to appear as counsel if he can retire without jeopardising his client's interests");

Alabama: 1848, McGehee v. Hansell, 13 Ala. 17, 21 (an attorney in the case is not as such disqualified by interest); 1848, Morrow v. Parkman, 14 Ala. 769, 775 (same); 1852, Quarles v. Waldron, 20 Ala. 217 (same, provided his fee is not contingent on the event of the suit);

Connecticut: 1846, Carrington v. Holabird, 17 Conn. 530, 539 (counsel in a former proceeding, not disqualified in proceedings to procure a new trial and an injunction against the judgment); 1896, Thresher v. Bank, 68 Conn. 201, 36 Atl. 38 (a party held entitled both to try his cause and to be a witness; but otherwise for a party who is an attorney-at-law, to whom applies "the wholesome rule of professional etiquette which holds the position of trial lawyer and material witness to be incompatible"; here a ruling allowing the attorney to try the cause and to testify, and refusing the opponent's request that the testimony be only in answer to questions put, was held not erroneous);

Columbia (Dist.): 1865, Mary Harris' Trial, Clephane's Rep. 61, 177 (murder of Adoniram J. Burroughs; defence of insanity; Mr. Joseph H. Bradley, chief counsel for the accused, testified at length, of his observation of her mental condition after becoming her counsel; here apparently a decided impropriety, which led later to a sneering comment by the prosecuting attorney);

Delaware: 1901, Pritchart v. Henderson, 3 Pen. Del. 128, 50 Atl. 218 (one in the office of the counsel, and taking some part in the case, excluded); 1910, Real Estate Trust Co. v. Wilmington & N. C. E. R. Co., 9 Del. Ch. 99, 77 Atl. 756 (counsel allowed to testify to service of notice on an opponent; Pritchard v. Henderson cited as if discredited; the opinion seems unaware of the radical distinction between the present question and that of § 2312, post);

Georgia: here statutes have hopelessly confused the present rule with that of privileged communications (post, § 2292): St. 1850, p. 46, Feb. 21 (no attorney shall give testimony "either for or against his client, the knowledge of which he may have acquired from his client or during the existence and by reason of the relationship of client and attorney"); 1853, Swift v. Perry, 13 Ga. 138 (St. 1850, disqualifying attorneys, held to apply "only in the case pending to which the client is a party"); 1853, Riley v. Johnston, 13 Ga. 260, 268 (statute applied); 1855, Chappell v. Smith, 17 Ga. 68 (statute applied); 1855, McDougald v. Lane, 18 Ga. 444, 452 (statute applied); 1858, Churchill v. Corker, 25 Ga. 479, 489 (like Swift v. Perry); 1859, Causey v. Wiley, 27 Ga. 444, 450 (statute applied); 1859, Osborn v. Herron, 28 Ga. 313, 316 (statute applied); 1860, Sharman v. Morton, 31 Ga. 34, 45 (statute applied); St. 1859, p. 18 (repealed the statute of 1850, but provided that no attorney should be "allowed" to testify to the client's admissions after employment in the case); St. 1866, p. 138 (declared all persons competent, with certain exceptions, and repealed all conflicting laws; one exception was: "Nor shall any attorney be compellable to give evidence for or against his client"); 1878, Willis v. West, 60 Ga. 613 (St. 1866 is held to signify that attorneys are "competent, though not compellable, to testify" for their clients); St. 1887, p. 30, Rev. C. 1910, § 5860 ("no attorney shall be competent or compellable to testify in any Court in this State for or against his client, to any matter or thing, knowledge of which he may have acquired from his client by virtue of his relations as attorney, or by reason of the anticipated employment of him as attorney"); 1887, Fire Ass'n v. Flemming, 78 Ga. 733, 3 S. E. 420 (attorney admitted for his client); 1888, Skellie v. James, 81 Ga. 419, 8 S. E. 607, semble (statute affects competency for his client); 1893, Lewis v. State, 91 Ga. 169, 16 S. E. 986 (statute makes an attorney incompetent for his client);

Idaho: 1888, Sebree v. Smith, 2 Ida. 327 (Hasb. 359), 16 Pac. 915 (attorneys should not be witnesses for their clients, except in case of extreme necessity; here, testimony to the opponent's negotiations was excluded); 1901, State v. Seymour, 7 Ida. 548, 63 Pac. 1036 (county attorney, held compellable to testify for the accused);

Illinois: 1861, Stratton v. Henderson, 26 Ill. 68, 73, 76 (counsel allowed to testify for his client as to interest-reckoning; "we are not because the expected evil is one that would be caused only by an inveterate practice and not by casual instances, and because the strong recommendaaltogether in favor" of it, but "we have no law or rule of practice" against it); 1865, Morgan v. Roberts, 38 Ill. 65, 85 (issue involving an attorney's claim for fees; attorney allowed to be witness; "all the Court can do is to discountenance the practice, and, when the evidence is indispensable, recommend to the counsel to withdraw from the cause"); 1867, Ross v. Demoss, 45 Ill. 447, 449 ("It is of doubtful professional propriety . . . without first entirely withdrawing" from the cause); 1900, Drach v. Kamberg, 187 Ill. 385, 58 N. E. 370 (attorney allowed to testify as subscribing witness to a will; but "Courts have always discountenanced the practice"); 1907, Wilkinson v. People, 226 Ill. 135, 80 N. E. 699 (prior rulings approved, and "the unenviable attitude of a willing witness and a zealous attorney" commented on); 1907, Bishop v. Hilliard, 227 Ill. 382, 81 N. E. 403; 1908, Onstott v. Edel, 232 Ill. 201, 83 N. E. 806; 1908, McConnell v. Brown, 232 Ill. 336, 83 N. E. 854; 1908, Glanz v. Zinbek, 233 Ill. 22, 84 N. E. 36 (attorney admitted, but practice disparaged); 1909, Reavely v. Harris, 239 Ill. 526, 88 N. E. 238 (allowed on the facts); 1909, Fitzgerald v. Allen, 240 Ill. 80, 88 N. E. 240; 1909, Nix v. Thackaberry, 140 Ill. 352, 88 N. E. 811 ("We have been compelled too frequently of late to comment on counsel testifying in cases which they are themselves conducting"); 1911, Wetzel v. Firebaugh, 251 Ill. 190, 95 N. E. 1085 ("it is not proper" for a solicitor in the case to testify to the testatrix' competency); 1911, Bailey v. Beall, 251 Ill. 577, 96 N. E. 567 (and the fact of a witness having been attorney in the cause may be ascertained for the purpose of affecting his credit); 1913, Mithen v. Jeffery, 259 Ill. 372, 102 N. E. 778 (attorney testifying to conversation with the opponent); 1914, Judy v. Judy, 261 Ill. 470, 104 N. E. 356; 1917, Ravenscroft v. Stull, 280 Ill. 406, 117 N. E. 602 (testator's capacity; reference to the failure to call C., the attorney drafting the will and a member of the firm of counsel representing the executor held improper, inasmuch as C. would have "committed a breach of professional propriety" had he testified); 1918, Flynn v. Flynn, 283 Ill. 206, 119 N. E. 304 (the attorney who drew the will and attested it was a member of the firm whose other partner tried the case; held, not improper, "if he is not to share in the fees that his partner is to be paid for his services in connection with this litigation"); 1919, McKaig v. Appleton, 289 Ill. 301, 124 N. E. 596 (whether an attorney drafting a will should sign as attesting witness); 1919, Barto v. Kellogg, 289 Ill. 528, 124 N. E. 633 (attorney as witness to title proceedings); 1921, Eshelman v. Rawalt, 298 Ill. 192, 131 N. E. 675 (crim. con.; "it is not unlawful, but it is not a proper practice," for the attorney to testify); (Does this series of modern rulings indicate that attorneys in Illinois are more callous in disregard of this rule of ethics, or that trial Courts are more ignorant of it, or that the Supreme Court is more tender of it, than elsewhere? In any event, it is not fitting that the Supreme Court should content itself with empty comment);

Iowa: 1858, Abbott v. Striblen, 6 Ia. 191, 196 (attorney allowed to prove the copy of a document and the original's loss); 1908, Ross v. Ross, 140 Ia. 51, 117 N. W. 1105 (admissible, but open to reflection); 1915, Stickles v. Townsend, 171 Ia. 697, 154 N. W. 307 (delivery of papers; the main witness was the counsel who had acted as attorney; "we much prefer that counsel would not testify as a witness unless it is necessary, and that they should then withdraw from the active management of the case");

Kansas: 1889, Central Branch U. P. R. Co. v. Andrews, 41 Kan. 370, 377, 21 Pac. 276 (attorney competent for his client, even though acting upon a contingent fee); 1901, State v. Herbert, 63 Kan. 516, 66 Pac. 235 (county attorney, allowed to testify to testimony at a former trial; the opinion misconceives the principle);

Kentucky: 1860, Hall v. Renfro, 3 Metc. 51, 53 (attorney held competent for his client; with "the question of professional propriety . . . the Court has no concern");

Louisiana: 1826, Cox v. Williams, 5 Mart. N. S. 139 (early statute forbidding attorney to testify in a case where he has been employed, held not to prevent the opponent calling him); 1852, Madden v. Farmer, 7 La. An. 580 (attorney's testimony not receivable as "full proof" for his client, "particularly in cases where the attorney would be personally responsible if the action was not sustained"); 1833, Sprigg v. Beaman, 6 La. 60, 64 (counsel held not excluded by interest because his practice, without a contract, was to vary his fee according to success); Rev. Civ. C. 1920, § 2283 (a person's "being employed as counsellor or attorney does not disqualify him from being a witness in the cause in which he is employed");

Maine: 1881, Rules of the Supreme Judicial Court, No. 42, in 72 Me. 566, 581 ("No attorney or counsellor shall be permitted to take any part in the conduct of a cause before a jury in which he is a witness for his client, except by special leave of the Court");

Massachusetts: 1848, Potter v. Ware, 1 Cush. 519, 523 ("attorney not disqualified by interest to testify; there may be cases in which they can do it, not only without dishonor, but in which it is their duty to do it; such cases, however, are rare"); 1917, Holbrook v.

tions of the Courts have proved sufficient to prevent the use of such testimony other than in casual, unavoidable, and therefore harmless instances. There is, then, in general, no rule, but only an urgent judicial reprobation, forbidding counsel or attorney to testify in favor of his client.

From this are to be distinguished the prohibition, under the Hearsay rule, of a counsel's stating unevidenced facts in his argument (ante, § 1806), and the privilege of a client against his attorney's or counsel's disclosure of confidential communications (post, § 2290).

Seagrave, 228 Mass. 26, 116 N. E. 889 (discretion of the trial Court controls);
Michigan: 1920, Jacobs v. Weissinger, 211 Mich. 47, 178 N. W. 65 (mental capacity of grantor);
Nebraska: 1922, Cox v. Kee, — Nebr. —, 186 N. W. 974 (payment of a note; the trial attorney having offered himself as a witness, the trial Court ruled that he must in that event withdraw from the case, but the attorney thereupon continued to conduct the case without testifying; the ruling held proper);
New Hampshire: 1833, Rules of Court, 6 N. H. 580 ("No attorney or counsellor shall be permitted to take any part in the conduct of any cause before the jury, after he shall have testified for his client in the same cause");
New Jersey: 1831, Folly v. Smith, 12 N. J. L. 139 (attorney held competent for his client to prove his power of attorney);
New York: 1818, Caniff v. Myers, 15 John. 246 (attorney held competent to prove his power of attorney); 1823, Tullock v. Cunningham, 1 Cow. 256 (same); 1848, Little v. Keon, 1 Code Reporter 4 (attorney held competent; quoted supra); 1875, Tilton v. Beecher, Abbott's Rep. II, 902, Official Report III, 1011, 1016 (Mr. Tracy was allowed to testify for the defendant; quoted ante, § 1807; Mr. Beach afterwards made scathing comments on the propriety of this action);
North Carolina: 1810, Slocum v. Newby, 1 Murph. 423 (counsel allowed to be witness, not being otherwise interested); 1849, State v. Woodside, 9 Ired. 496, 502 (attorney or counsel allowed to be witness; "it is a practice not to be encouraged");
Pennsylvania: 1788, Newman v. Bradley, 1 Dall. 240 (counsel not disqualified by interest in judgment-fee); 1814, Miles v. O'Hara, 1 S. & R. 32, 34 (not disqualified by expecting a larger fee if successful); 1828, Boulden v. Hebel, 17 S. & R. 312 (not disqualified where not legally entitled to a contingent fee); 1847, Mishler v. Baumgardner, Pa. Com. Pl., 1 Amer. L. Journ. N. S. 304 (counsel inadmissible; quoted supra); 1848, Frear v. Drinker, 8 Pa. St. 520 ("It is a highly indecent practice for an attorney to cross-examine witnesses, address the jury, and give evidence himself to contradict the witness," though his testimony is "sometimes indispensable," and no law forbids it); 1849, Bell v. Bell, 12 Pa. 235 (an attorney is competent, though it is "commendable delicacy" to withdraw from argument); 1863, Linton v. Com., 46 Pa. 294 (attorney not disqualified by interest); 1872, Follansbee v. Walker, 72 Pa. 228 (Frear v. Drinker quoted and approved); 1884, Perry v. Dicken, 105 Pa. 83, 89 (an attorney should decline to testify for his client, except so far as absolute necessity makes it his duty); 1921, Com. v. Smith, 270 Pa. 583, 113 Atl. 844 (after testimony by an accused to duress attending a confession to the district attorney, the latter may properly take the stand in denial);
South Carolina: 1819, Reid v. Colcock, 1 N. & McC. 592, 597 (attorney not as such disqualified by interest to testify; "but it is a matter of much delicacy," and should be avoided unless indispensable);
Texas: 1854, Spencer v. Kinnard, 12 Tex. 180, 188 ("The ends of justice sometimes make it necessary that an attorney should give evidence for his client," but Courts should "only tolerate it in cases of pressing necessity");
Utah: 1899, McLaren v. Gillespie, 19 Utah 137, 56 Pac. 680 (an attorney is competent for his client; but he should not be called unless indispensable, and he should then retire from the case, if possible with safety to client's interests); 1911, State v. Greene, 38 Utah 389, 115 Pac. 181 (an attorney participating in a trial is competent, but it is improper for him to testify; McCarty, J., diss. on the ground that the attorney in this case should have been excluded from one or the other capacity; the dissenting judge's condemnation of the practice merits wider acceptance; Courts are too lax in enforcing this rule of moral decency);
Washington: 1903, Voss v. Bender, 32 Wash. 566, 73 Pac. 697 (a rule of court prohibiting an attorney who testifies for his client from making an argument to the jury, held proper);
West Virginia: 1881, Moats v. Rymer, 18 W. Va. 642, 645 ("While there are some cases of extreme character in which such practice is necessary, ordinarily it is much to be regretted");
Wisconsin: 1886, Hardtke v. State, 67 Wis. 552, 557, 30 N. W. 723 (counsel for the prosecution testified to a partial admission by the defendant, made to him during the preliminary examination; the "propriety" of this was said to be "very questionable").

§ 1912. Referee, Arbitrator, Sheriff, as Witness. (1) A referee, sitting in the place of judge and jury, would be affected by a rule of prohibition against a judge's testifying in a trial before himself.[1]

(2) An arbitrator, in respect to testifying before the body of which he is a member, would equally be prohibited by a rule affecting a judge.[2] But the usual question here is as to the subsequent disclosure by the arbitrator of the proceedings before him, which involves a different principle (post, § 2358).

(3) A sheriff, or other court officer charged with the safekeeping of jurors, is not prohibited from testifying to facts relevant to the cause.[3] Whether he, or any one else, may reveal the conduct or utterances of the jurors during their retirement, involves a different principle (post, § 2354).

§ 1913. Documents taken to the Jury-Room. It was formerly said that writings under seal, received in evidence or as part of the issue, could be taken by the jury for further perusal upon retirement into their room for deliberating upon their verdict, but that other writings could not be:

> Ante 1726, Chief Baron GILBERT, Evidence, 17: "These exemplifications [of records], and all other under seal, shall be delivered to the jury to be carried off with them; but sworn copies shall not; . . . [1] the jury are allowed to carry them [the former] away with them as the acts of the most remarkable solemnity, that the most solemn acts may make the last impression. [2] Another reason why matters under seal shall be delivered to the jury is because these things, that are generally of higher or at least of equal credit with matters sworn 'viva voce,' would not be yet understood so well upon the hearing as the evidence 'viva voce' may upon the examination, where the jury have liberty to put what question they please. . . . [3] [Writings not under seal] have no intrinsic credit in themselves, . . . they have no credit but what they derive from something else, viz., from the oath of the person who attests them or from some presumption in their favor, so that they receive their credit from some act in Court, but do not carry it along with them, and therefore cannot be removed out of Court with the jury. But things under seal are supposed to have an intrinsic credit from the impression of the signature, and are supposed to be known by the jury in some measure."

These reasons seem fantastic enough now, and were more or less artificial and 'ex post facto' at the time that they were advanced; although the rule itself had an intimate connection with the history of jury-trial.[1] But with the disappearance of the seal's importance, the rule in its original form has ceased to be maintainable on any pretext.

§ 1912. [1] 1851, Morss v. Morss, 11 Barb. 510, 515 (referee declared incompetent, as being both judge and juror, and being ineligible as the former and probably also as the latter; ante, §§ 1909, 1910).

Otherwise of a commissioner of depositions: 1685, Bright v. Woodward, 1 Vern. 369 ("a commissioner [to take depositions] may be a witness, but then he ought to be examined before any other witness be examined").

[2] The case does not seem to have been ruled upon. It is generally said merely that an arbitrator is admissible if the facts desired from him are provable: 1668, Re Dare Valley R. Co., L. R. 6 Eq. 429, 435; 1872, Duke of Buccleuch v. Metropolitan Board, L. R. 5 E. & I. App. 418, 433, 462.

[3] 1887, People v. Coughlin, 65 Mich. 704, 32 N. W. 905 (sheriff); 1896, People v. Beverly 108 Mich. 509, 513, 66 N. W. 379 (officer in charge); 1900, Reed v. Com., 98 Va. 817, 36 S. E. 399 (deputy sheriff); 1888, State v. Shores, 31 W. Va. 491, 499, 7 S. E. 413 (sheriff).

§ 1913. [1] Thayer, Preliminary Treatise on Evidence, 104–112.

Nevertheless, an effort has been made by some Courts, finding the rule ready made at hand, to preserve and adopt it to changed conditions, by making a distinction between written and oral materials of evidence, or between written depositions and oral testimony; and they have discovered reasons of policy which forbid the jury to have this opportunity of emphasis for the one form of evidential matter, as well as invented expedients for keeping from the jury's perusal whatever irrelevant material is bound up in the same document with material justly admitted. Statutes also have in many States affected the common-law rule. But these are all questions of the proper control of the jury in its deliberations, and not of the rules of Evidence, and are therefore without the present purview.[2]

[2] In the following opinions a clue will be found to the authorities and distinctions: 1897, Burton v. State, 115 Ala. 1, 22 So. 585; 1897, Koch v. State, 115 Ala. 99, 22 So. 471; 1826, Wakeman v. Marquand, 5 Mart. N. S. La. 265, 267; 1874, Sawyer v. Garcelon, 63 Me. 25; 1882, Tabor v. Judd, 62 N. H. 288, 292; 1897, People v. Hughson, 154 N. Y. 153, 47 N. E. 1092; 1920, Chitwood v. Philadelphia & R. R. Co., 266 Pa. 435, 109 Atl. 645 (plan and photographs); 1901, State v. Shaw, 73 Vt. 149, 50 Atl. 863; 1882, Doctor Jack v. Terr., 2 Wash. Terr. 101, 106, 3 Pac. 832; 1897, State v. Moody, 18 Wash. St. 165, 51 Pac. 356; 1883, Welch v. Ins. Co., 23 W. Va. 288, 308; 1895, Starke v. Wolf, 90 Wis. 434, 63 N. W. 755.

Distinguish the refusal to send the jury documents never admitted or formally introduced in evidence: 1897, State Bank v. Brewer, 100 Ia. 576, 69 N. W. 1011; 1897, Gable v. Rauch, 50 S. C. 95, 27 S. E. 555.

SUB-TITLE III: OPINION RULE

TOPIC I. GENERAL PRINCIPLE

CHAPTER LXV.

§ 1917. History. The so-called Opinion Rule is in its scope much narrower than the term "opinion"; it deals with opinion in a special sense only. And it is not the only rule which may serve to raise an objection to opinion-testimony. What is first to be ascertained, then, is the way in which this rule took shape and was differentiated from other rules affecting opinions as testimony. The steps of development are not as simple to trace as in some other instances, but the general conditions at the beginning and at the end seem clear.

1. The judicial utterances of the 1700s must be approached with the recollection that up to that time there was no traditional or received notion that opinion (or the like) was proper or was improper to listen to, and that (as with so many other commonplace notions of to-day's law of evidence) there had been little or no thought on the subject. Chief Baron Gilbert (ante, 1726) has nothing to say about such a rule; Mr. Justice Buller (ante, 1767) has nothing to say; there is nothing to say at that time.

2. Nevertheless, then and shortly later, there is appearing an appreciation of one important and afterwards fully established principle, — the principle of Testimonial Knowledge (ante, § 657), i. e. that the witness must speak as a knower, not merely a guesser; that when the witness, speaking (for example) to a sale of goods, declares that he thinks or believes or is persuaded that the sale was not made, such a witness cannot be heard, so far as he means that he did not see the transaction in question but believes so on rumor alone or has otherwise reached by supposition his conclusion. This principle of personal observation came early into play in emphasizing the impropriety of testimony by one who speaks only from hearsay. This was probably what Coke had in mind in the passage attributed to him in Adams v. Canon,[1] in 1622:

"It is no satisfaction for a witness to say that he 'thinketh' or 'persuadeth himself,' and this for two reasons; first, because the judge is to give an absolute sentence, and for this ought to have a more sure ground than 'thinking'; secondly, the witness cannot be sued for perjury."

It is the phrases resorted to for expressing this principle that are here of interest. Such a witness is told by the Court: "That is mere opinion; we want what you know, not what you think or believe." This is one phrase of contrast which the Court might use, — the contrast between knowing (i. e. personally observing) and opining (i. e. believing without sufficient observation). But there is another phrase; the judge might say, "We want not your opinion; have you any facts? For we can guess and opine as well as you can; tell us facts if you have them." This demand for "facts" means, as before, some real or positive grounds of knowledge in the witness. The principle of objection which the judge has in mind is the same in both cases; he will have knowledge, not opinion, — facts, not opinion. In the following passages this attitude towards opinion-evidence is illustrated:

1644, Archbishop Laud's Trial, 4 How. St. Tr. 315, 399; a witness, testifying to rumors of the bishop's tampering with a jury, said "and thereupon, as he conceives, the petty-jury was changed"; the defendant argues: "[This evidence] is not the knowledge, but the conceit only of the witness; he 'conceives,' which I am confident cannot sway with your lordships for a proof."

1824, Mr. Thomas Starkie, Evidence, 173: "A witness examined as to facts ought to state those only of which he has had personal knowledge. . . . It has been said that a witness must not be examined in chief as to his belief or persuasion, but only as to his knowledge of the fact. . . . As far as regards mere belief or persuasion which does not rest upon a sufficient and legal foundation, this position is correct, — as where a man believes a fact to be true merely because he has heard it said to be so." [2]

At this stage, then, and as the distinct first meaning of the disparaging references to "opinion," the profession has in mind a witness who turns out upon examination to have no facts to contribute, no knowledge, no personal acquaintance with the man or the land or the loan or the affray about which he is speaking. In this requirement, however, there is no new principle, no independent "opinion rule," but merely a recognition of an otherwise established general principle of testimonial qualifications that the witness, to be competent at all, must have personal observation (ante, §§ 657, 658). Had the matter gone no farther, there would have been no separate "opinion rule," but merely a special application of an ordinary principle of testimonial competency.

3. But, at the same time that this principle is becoming recognized, or shortly after, there occurs a general recognition of what seemed at the time as an exception to it, — the use of skilled witnesses. A witness is called to the stand, but appears to have no personal acquaintance with the circumstances in dispute; then how can we listen to his mere opinion? Because he is a skilled witness on these matters, says the counsel. But what difference can that make, we ask, since he knows no facts? The answer to this was not at first easy to phrase; though all saw that there was a good answer and that the witness must be heard. The precedent and custom of using such testimony reached far into the past; but in its original and long-persisting form it was hardly regarded as evidence to the jury, but as an aid sought by the Court, and thus as collateral to and parallel with the jury itself, which in theory at least was no more than a body of triers aiding the Court:

§ 1917. [1] Dyer, 53 b.
[2] See another good example in R. r. Heath, 1744, 18 How. St. Tr. 1, 76.

1900, Professor James Bradley Thayer, Cases on Evidence, 2d ed., 672, note: "The furnishing of such assistance [of skilled persons] to the Court was a very ancient thing. It is probable that for a good while after witnesses were regularly allowed before the jury, experts were thought of in the old way as being helpers of the Court, and the Court instructed the jury upon the points on which such aid was furnished. But at last the modern conception came in, which regards the experts as testifying, like other witnesses, directly to the jury. In 1353, in an appeal of mayhem, the viscount was ordered to summon skilful surgeons from London, to inform the Court whether the wound was mayhem or not. The Court had previously inspected it, and could not tell.[3] In 1493,[4] BRIAN, C. J., alleged a precedent, and the case was such: A man was bound in an obligation upon a condition to pay five pounds of fine gold. . . . The obligation ran 'puri auri.' . . . And the masters of grammar were sent for to advise what the Latin was for 'fine,' and they could not tell. In 1619,[5] in ejectment, upon evidence to the jury the question was whether a child who was born January 5, 1611, was the daughter of a man who died March 23, 1610. Several physicians testified that she might be, and gave their scientific reasons. 'The Court held here that it might well be as the physicians had affirmed; . . . and so the Court delivered to the jury that the said Elizabeth, who was born forty weeks and more after the death of the said Edmund Andrews, might well be the daughter of the said Edmund.'"

1554, Buckley v. Thomas, 1 Plowd. 122. STAUNFORD, J.: "In order to understand it truly, being a Latin word [licet], we ought to follow the steps of our predecessors, judges of the law, who, when they were in doubt about the meaning of any Latin words, enquired how those that were skilled in the study thereof took them, and pursued their construction. SAUNDERS, J.: "I grant that if matters arise in our law which concern other sciences or faculties, we commonly apply for the aid of that science or faculty which it concerns, which is an honorable and commendable thing in our law."

Thus the early status of the expert helper of the Court had naturally prevented any question from being raised as to his information in the aspect of testimony to the jury.[6] But by the latter part of the 1700s he took his place with others as a mere witness to the jury, and so the problem had to [3] Lib. Ass. 145, 5.

[4] Y. B. 9 H. VI, 16, 8.
[5] Alsop v. Bowtrell, Cro. Jac. 541.
[6] For a collection of cases showing early instances of the use of expert testimony and also of special juries from the trades and professions, see an interesting article by Mr. (now Judge) Learned Hand, in 15 Harvard Law Review, 40, "Historical and Practical Considerations regarding Expert Testimony," as well as the note in Thayer's Cases, ubi supra. The canon law at this time knew such a practice: 1552, Reformatio Legum Ecclesiasticorum, tit. De fide, c. 7.

be faced, i. e. of squaring the use of such testimony with the general principle above noted that a witness must have personal knowledge, must state facts, not opinions. The traditional use of such testimony was not to be abandoned; this was clear. But the process of accounting for it in theory was at first troublesome. The general notion was expressed (in one shape or another) that the jury needed such help, always had had it, and must have it now, opinion or no opinion. In the great case of Folkes v. Chadd, the notable feature of Lord Mansfield's opinion is his frequent use of the word "facts"; he is trying to show that this kind of witness' "opinion" really has a sufficient flavor of fact about it to suffice; and this notion is perhaps the key to the common use of the phrase "matter of science" (in this judgment and in later treatises) to sanction and describe the kind of admissible testimony; for "science" was at that time not used in the sense of "knowledge coördinated, arranged, and systematized," but meant simply "knowledge in general." Lord Mansfield in effect answered the objection that the expert had no personal knowledge, no facts, by pointing out that the subject was in truth one of fact, but of a class of facts about which expert persons alone could have knowledge:

1782, Lord MANSFIELD, C. J., in Folkes v. Chadd, 3 Dougl. 158 (it was objected that the evidence of Mr. Smeaton, an eminent engineer, as to the cause of a harbor's filling up, "was matter of opinion, which could be no foundation for the verdict of a jury, which was to be built entirely on facts, not opinions"): "The question is, to what has this decay been owing? The defendant says, to this bank. Why? Because it prevents the backwater. That is matter of opinion; the whole case is a question of opinion, from facts agreed upon. Nobody can swear that it was the cause. . . . It is a matter of judgment, what has hurt the harbor. . . . A confusion now arises from a misapplication of terms. It is objected that Mr. Smeaton is going to speak, not as to facts, but as to opinion. That opinion, however, is deduced from facts which are not disputed, — the situation of banks, the course of tides and of the winds, and the shifting of sands. . . . I cannot believe that where the question is whether a defect arises from a natural or an artificial cause, the opinions of men of science are not to be received. . . . The cause of the decay of the harbor is also a matter of science. . . . Of this, such men as Mr. Smeaton alone can judge. Therefore we are of opinion that his judgment, formed on facts, was very proper evidence."

This, then, is the second notable feature, namely, the general recognition, by the end of the 1700s, that there was a class of persons, i. e. those skilled in matters of science, who, though they personally knew nothing about the circumstances of the particular case, might yet, perhaps by way of exception, give their opinion on the matter. This stage of development may be seen in the following passages (and it must be understood that these earlier treatise-writers simply recorded the state of practice and thought at the bar, and their record is as significant in that aspect as a judge's ruling); the language of Peake and Espinasse especially shows the place of the doctrine as a part of the rule as to personal knowledge:

1801, Mr. T. Peake, Evidence, 142: "Though witnesses can in general speak only as to facts, yet in questions of science persons versed in the subject may deliver their opinion upon oath on the case proved by other witnesses. . . . Thus a physician who has not seen the particular patient, may, after hearing the evidence of others, be called to prove on his oath the general effects of a particular disease and its probable consequences in the particular case; for, though not a particular fact, it is still general information, which the rest of mankind stand in need of to enable them to form an accurate judgment on the subject in dispute."

1811, Mr. Isaac Espinasse, Nisi Prius, 411 (1st Am. ed.): "It is a general rule that a witness must deliver his testimony according to his knowledge; but there are occasions on which the opinion of the witness is legal and proper evidence, as in all matters of science." [7]

The limits of this apparent exception now become the field of controversy; and the point of view was still that of an exception to a rule about the testimonial qualification of personal knowledge.

4. This being so, it is next to be noted that as yet no one thought of questioning the opinions, conclusions, or inferences of the ordinary or lay witness when he came properly equipped with a basis of "facts," of personal observation. In other words, the disparagement of "opinion" had always in mind the testimony of a person who had no "facts" of his own observation to speak from, and the skilled witness was the person who had to be received by way of exception to that notion. Thus, when an ordinary or lay witness took the stand, equipped with a personal acquaintance with the affair and therefore competent in his sources of knowledge, the circumstance that incidentally he drew inferences from his observed data and expressed conclusions upon them did not present itself as in any way improper. It would not occur to any judge that this witness was doing a wrong thing. In short, it was only "opinion" as a mere guess or a belief without observation which they rejected; but "opinion" as an inference or conclusion from personally-observed data they did not think of disparaging. That this was the attitude toward the lay observer will appear from the following passages:

1806, Mr. W. D. Evans, Notes to Pothier, II, 216: "There are also many cases in which witnesses speak from judgment and opinion, without reference to any technical knowledge; such, for instance, is evidence of character, and all other testimony amounting to a general conclusion from particular facts."

1811, Mr. Espinasse, Nisi Prius, 411 (after the passage quoted above): "So also as to the value of goods sold, it must always rest in opinion only; and the like as to the sanity of a party, and all other matters of proof which from their nature can only be given from the opinion which the witness may form."

In the United States, the same tradition and attitude of thought is also clearly apparent:

1803, Forbes v. Caruthers, 3 Yeates, 527; per CURIAM: "Mere abstract opinion is not evidence; but a surveyor, or any other person conversant on the subject, may state facts and his opinion on those facts."

1820, WASHINGTON, J., in Harrison v. Rowan, 3 Wash. C. C. 587 (admitting witnesses to insanity): "The mere opinions of the witnesses are entitled to little or no regard, unless they are supported by good reasons, founded on facts which warrant them in the opinion of the jury. If the reasons are frivolous or inconclusive, the opinions of the witnesses are worth nothing."

[7] So also: 1814, Phillipps, Evidence, 290; 1810, Swift, Evidence, 111.

1821, DUNCAN, J., in Rambler v. Tryon, 7 S. & R. 94: "Opinion is no evidence, without assigning the reason of such opinion."

1840, O'NEALL, J., in Seibles v. Blackhead, 1 McMull. 57: "It is true that the mere opinion of witnesses who have not the aid of science to guide them would not have any weight in such a case, and would be generally inadmissible unless sustained by facts showing the opinion to be true. . . . I find that the witnesses generally said they thought the slave to be unsound, and if they had stopped there such testimony ought to have been rejected; but they go on to fortify their opinions with facts showing some foundations for them, and hence they were admissible and were to be compared with the facts by the jury."

We here see in the language of the American judges that their only objection to "opinion" is that by itself it does not indicate that the witness has the personal acquaintance with the matter which he ought to have; but the moment he exhibits his "facts," i. e. his own observed data, they are ready enough to listen to his inferences or conclusions.

The language of these rulings also illustrates the genesis of the later phrase with which we have since been made familiar. "Mere opinion," said Lord Mansfield, in Carter v. Boehm,[8] is not evidence; "mere abstract opinion," says the Pennsylvania Court in 1803, is not evidence; "opinions not coupled with the facts," "opinion without assigning a reason," say other judges, is no evidence; because, of course, it does not appear that the witness has any personal knowledge. But, in another generation's time, there occurs this mutilation, that "opinion is not evidence," — a very different and vastly broader proposition.

Now this new and heterodox phrase would never have obtained currency and established a separate doctrine (peculiarly developed in America) if a motive had not been furnished for it; and to find how that motive or principle was furnished and what it was, we must return to the case of the skilled witness in "matters of science," whose admissibility was by this time universally conceded as an exception to the doctrine that "mere opinion" (i. e. not founded on fact-knowledge) was inadmissible.

5. When this skilled witness takes the stand and is asked what he thinks, for example (as in Folkes v. Chadd) about the cause of a harbor's becoming filled up, it is obvious that one of the first thoughts to occur to the objector would be that the witness was no different from the members of the jury. Here was a man who had never seen the place, had no "facts" to add, and was going to give just what each juryman would ask of his brethren after they retired, i. e. his opinion upon the general question in doubt, the cause of the harbor's decay. Why should he do this? Why waste time in listening to numbers of such persons when the twelve men in the box have been specially selected for the very purpose of having their opinions serve as decisive? There would be only one reason for listening to such outside opinions, namely, that the witness was such a person that the jury would be really aided by his opinion. And this in truth was the notion which finally came to serve as a test; i. e. whether additional light could be thrown upon the question by a person of skill in the particular subject. The test may be seen in the process of development in the following rulings:

[8] Quoted infra.

1702, Hathaway's Trial, 14 How. St. Tr. 682; cheating by pretending to be bewitched; a witness to the defendant's conduct said: "There appeared to be neither profit nor revenge in the case; and I thought he could not be such a fool to pretend all this for no end, and run the hazard of being whipped." L. C. J. HOLT: "The question is not whether he shall be punished for a fool, but whether he be a knave. Whatever punishment he may suffer, if convicted, does not belong to you to determine."

1766, Carter v. Boehm, 3 Burr. 1905, 1918; the opinion of an insurance-broker that a certain letter ought to have been disclosed. MANSFIELD, L. C. J.: "Great stress was laid upon the opinion of the broker. But we all think the jury ought not to pay the least regard to it. It is mere opinion, which is not evidence. It is opinion after an event. It is opinion without the least foundation from any previous precedent or usage. It is an opinion which, if rightly formed, could only be drawn from the same premises from which the Court and the jury were to determine the cause."

1807, Beckwith v. Sydebotham, 1 Camp. 116; ship-surveyors were called to give an opinion of seaworthiness based on the statements of a certain deposition; Mr. Garrow objected "that this was an inference which it was for the jury to draw, if the facts would warrant it." ELLENBOROUGH, L. C. J., held that "where there was a matter of skill or science to be decided, the jury might be assisted by the opinion of those peculiarly acquainted with it from their professions or pursuits."

1816, Durrell v. Bederley, Holt, N. P. 285; underwriters were asked as to whether a fact would have prevented them from writing a policy. GIBBS, C. J.: "Lord Mansfield and Lord Kenyon discountenanced this evidence of opinion, and I think it ought not to be received. It is the province of the jury, and not of the underwriters, to decide what facts ought to be communicated. It is not a question of science, in which scientific men will mostly think alike, but a question of opinion, liable to be governed by fancy, and in which the diversity might be endless. Such evidence leads to nothing satisfactory, and on that ground ought to be rejected."

It will be noticed that in the two earlier cases, during the 1700s, the testimony was neither objected to nor excluded; even Lord Mansfield merely declared that the jury ought not to regard it. There was up to that time no rule against it, but merely a growing perception of a reason for some kind of a rule. Not until the early 1800s do we find the English judges laying down a distinct rule of a new sort, applicable to opinion-testimony, on the ground, not of lack of personal knowledge, but of its superfluity as an aid to the jury. By 1824 Mr. Starkie is found [9] generalizing that "the general distinction is this, that the jury must judge of the facts for themselves," yet that testimony of witnesses having no personal knowledge will be admitted "wherever the question depends on the exercise of peculiar skill and knowledge that may be made available."

6. This, then, being now looked on as the test for listening to a skilled witness who knew nothing personally of the matter in controversy, it soon served as a reason for the novel and broader doctrine that was being specially worked out in the United States. The English writers and judges and the early American judges, when they disparaged "mere opinion," never had in mind (as above seen) the case of the lay-witness who, having a "fact"-knowledge, included in his testimony an opinion or inference based on those data, — as in the leading instances (used by those writers and judges) of handwriting, character, and sanity. But when, by careless usage, the phrase came to be passed along that "opinion is not evidence," the distinction just before established for skilled witnesses not having a "fact"-knowledge was readily enlarged, and was made to apply to the lay-witness who had a "fact" knowledge, and to support the new and broad idea that "opinion" in general was not evidence. That distinction or test was, as put by Mr. Garrow, in Beckwith v. Sydebotham, "this was an inference which it was for the jury to draw, if the facts would warrant it." Now, if a lay-witness having a "fact"-knowledge had put those facts before the jury and then proposed to add his own inference or conclusion or opinion upon those facts, as made at the time, it is apparent that the same test might be applied to exclude this opinion or inference of his, since the facts had already been laid by him before the jury and they were as competent as he to draw that inference. This language sounds familiar enough to us to-day, but the key to the history of the rule is that it was a novel idea at that time, — say, in the second, third, and fourth decades of the 1800s. The important thing is that at one blow a large portion of the testimony of the lay-witness was hewed off, like the rotten limb of a tree, — a limb whose soundness had until this time scarcely been doubted.

[9] Evidence, 174.

It must be noted, too, that this extension — logical enough, it is true, and correct in theory, but pernicious (as it has proved) in practice — is a peculiarly American doctrine. It has apparently not taken place in England in any important degree.[10] There appear to be no English rulings which indicate that the "opinion" rule has there been thought to exclude the inferences which a "fact"-witness has made from the data he lays before the jury. Certainly no such broad logical extension of the test to lay-witnesses is the familiar possession of the English bar as it is of our own. The great controversies, for example, that have disturbed our Courts over lay opinions upon insanity and upon value have never been dreamed of at the English bar. This conservative attitude is plentifully illustrated in the English cases cited under particular topics in the ensuing sections. The strongest expression looking towards the expansion of the rule for lay-witnesses is found in the following individual utterance, which is not only isolated, but itself also indicates that the actual practice at the time was opposed to the judicial suggestion:

[10] The following passage is hardly prohibitive: 1878, Taylor, Evidence, 7th ed., § 1416: "On some particular subjects, however, positive and direct testimony may often be unattainable; and in such cases a witness is allowed to testify as to his belief or opinion, or even to draw inferences respecting the fact in question from other facts, provided these last facts be within his personal knowledge."

1838, COLERIDGE, J., in Wright v. Tatham, 5 Cl. & F. 690: "I do not, indeed, concede, though it is not, perhaps, necessary now to decide the point, that the mere opinion of a witness even on oath is, as such, admissible evidence upon a question of competency. Where you can bring the decision of that question, as you sometimes may, to depend upon deductions from scientific premises, you may hear those deductions expressed as opinions by scientific men. The necessity of the case justifies this departure from the general rule; but competency, in the main, is a question of fact, and the jury are to draw their conclusions from the evidence of the facts before them, not from the opinions which others may have formed from facts not before the jury. I admit that, in practice, where the witness to facts is present, it is by no means uncommon to ask directly for his opinion; such a question it would be idle to object to, for the objection would only lead to a detailed inquiry into particular facts, which the witness is there ready to go into. Nothing therefore would be gained by it. I am not, however, aware that the question has ever, upon argument, been decided to be correct in form."

It would apparently have been more accurate to say that such a question had never been decided to be incorrect. If there had been any working rule of exclusion of the sort suggested, rulings like the following, in a trial remarkable for the strictness and pertinacity with which objections were pressed and decided, would be unaccountable:

1820, Queen Caroline's Trial, Linn's ed., II, 266; impeachment of the Queen, charging immoral and undignified conduct; the question was put to a witness for the defence: "Did you in other respects ever perceive that her Majesty conducted herself, either in public or in private, in any way to which a just exception could be taken?"; the Attorney-General objected, but did not mention the opinion rule; the Lord Chancellor "saw no legal objection to the question."

It may therefore be said, on the whole, that the extension of the exclusionary doctrine to inferences of lay-witnesses speaking from their own observation, is to be regarded as an innovation that did not occur earlier than the 1800s, and never obtained orthodox standing in the original home of our jurisprudence.[11]

The sum of the history is, then, that the original and orthodox objection to "mere opinion" was that it was the guess of a person who had no personal knowledge, and the "mere opinion" of an expert was admitted as a necessary exception; the later and changed theory is that wherever inferences and conclusions can be drawn by the jury as well as by the witness, the witness is superfluous, and thus an expert's opinion is received because and whenever his skill is greater than the jury's, while a lay opinion is received because and whenever his facts cannot be so told as to make the jury as able as he to draw the inference. The old objection is a matter of testimonial qualifications, requiring personal observation; the modern one rests on considerations of policy as to the superfluity of the testimony. In the old sense, "opinion" — more correctly, "mere opinion" — is a guess, a belief without good grounds; in the modern sense, "opinion" is an inference from observed and communicable data.

[11] It is true that in the broad form of excluding opinion upon the very issue in controversy (post, § 1921) modern English rulings are found. But the extreme liberality of attitude in orthodox English practice may be seen in the rulings upon conduct (post, § 1949); for a good instance, see the Parnell Commission's Proceedings, 1888, 76th day, Times' Rep. pt. 21, pp. 157, 158.

§ 1918. Theory of the Opinion Rule. The true theory, then, of the Opinion rule, in the sense we are here to use, is simply that of the exclusion of supererogatory evidence. It is not that there is any fault to find with the witness himself or the sufficiency of his sources of knowledge or the positiveness of his impression; but simply that his testimony, otherwise unobjectionable, is not needed, is superfluous. Thus the principle of exclusion is in no sense one of Testimonial Qualifications, but one of Auxiliary Policy (ante, § 1863). The delay and waste avoided might be in a single instance trifling; but its seriousness and its unbearableness can be appreciated if we suppose that there were no evidential limits whatever of the above nature. The time taken in the rehearsal of an interminable multitude of opinions, the confusion of the main issues by an additional mass of testimonial differences and impeachments, and the tendency for the jury now and then to decide simply according to the preponderance of numbers and of influential names, — all these are possibilities, in the absence of some limit of the present nature. Whether these possibilities are so imminent that the rule needs, as a matter of policy, to be enforced as strictly as it is now in this country, is another question (post, § 1930); but of the general propriety of the principle in some form there can be no doubt.

What we have to notice, in inquiring as to the scope and the effect of the principle, is that it does not employ any mere shibboleth; it does not rest on a simple caprice, prejudice, or tradition; and, most of all, it does not exclude any specific class of witnesses or all testimony on a specific subject. It simply endeavors to save time and avoid confusing testimony by telling the witness: "The tribunal is on this subject in possession of the same materials of information as yourself; thus, as you can add nothing to our materials for judgment, your further testimony is unnecessary, and merely cumbers the proceedings." It is this living principle which is (or ought to be) applied in each instance; nothing more definite than this is the test involved by the principle. In some instances, one witness may be able to give real help to the tribunal, while another may not, — as where we should listen to the estimate of a certain bullet's calibre by a gunmaker, but not to that of the ordinary witness who found it and produces it. In other instances, no witness at all may be capable of giving real help, — as where clothes of the deceased are brought into court, and the question is whether they were what is commonly described as black.[1] In still other instances, § 1918. [1] Yet even here the past conditions may allow of opinion answers: 1905, State v. Miller, 71 N. J. L. 527, 60 Atl. 202 (accused's clothing; comparison between spots on it now any witness whatever could give the tribunal real help, as in all cases of past events which have to be described by the observers. There is, thus, no special department of knowledge and no fixed formula involved. We are dealing merely with a broad principle that, whenever the point is reached at which the tribunal is being told that which it is itself entirely equipped to determine without the witness' aid on this point, his testimony is superfluous and is to be dispensed with.

The following passages amply illustrate in a variety of phrasings the judicial recognition of this principle; the clearest expressions being those of Mr. Justice Campbell, in Michigan, Mr. Justice Foster, in New Hampshire, and Mr. Justice Bell, in Texas:

1766, MANSFIELD, L. C. J., in Carter v. Boehm, 3 Burr. 1905, 1918: "It is an opinion which, if rightly formed, could only be drawn from the same premises from which the Court and the jury were to determine the cause; and therefore it is improper and irrelevant in the mouth of a witness."

1823, GIBSON, J., in Cornell v. Green, 10 S. & R. 16: "It is a good general rule that a witness is not to give his impressions, but to state the facts from which he received them, and thus leave the jury to draw their own conclusion; and wherever the facts can be stated, it is not to be departed from. But every man must judge of external objects according to the impressions they make on his senses; and after all, when we come to speak of the most simple fact which we have witnessed, we are necessarily guided by our impressions. There are cases where a single impression is made by induction from a number of others, as, where we judge whether a man is actuated by passion, we are determined by the expression of his countenance, the tone of his voice, his gestures, and a variety of other matters; yet a witness speaking of such a subject of inquiry would be permitted directly to say whether the man was angry or not. . . . I take it that wherever the facts from which a witness received an impression are too evanescent in their nature to be recollected, or are too complicated to be separately and distinctly narrated, his impressions from these facts become evidence."

1840, VERPLANCK, Sen., in Mayor v. Pentz, 24 Wend. 675: "Opinion is admitted when a jury is incompetent to infer, without the aid of greater skill than their own, as to the probable existence of the facts to be ascertained or the likelihood of their occurring from the facts actually proved before them. . . . All these [scientific opinions] are testimonies to general facts which the jury can ascertain in no other way. . . . The same reason of absolute necessity has compelled the admission of opinion in certain cases where the poverty of human language makes it absolutely impossible to separate in words the minute and transient facts observed by the witnesses from the inference as to some other fact irresistibly connected with the former in his own mind. Testimony as to handwriting, I think, resolves itself into this, as no words can fully convey to others the minute particularities on which such judgment is founded. So, too, in questions of identity as to men, to goods, horses, etc., though facts on which such judgment is founded may be partially stated, still the judgment or opinion is admitted."

1858, CAMPBELL, J., in Evans v. People, 12 Mich. 35: "It is an elementary rule that, where the Court or jury can make their own deductions, they shall not be made by those testifying. In all cases, therefore, where it is possible to inform the jury fully enough to enable them to dispense with the opinions or deductions of witnesses from things noticed and spots on portions cut off and destroyed, allowed); 1902, State v. Henry, 51 W. Va. 283, 41 S. E. 439 (one who had seen a spotted coat eight months before, allowed to state that he thought the spots to be of blood, although the coat was before the jury).

by themselves or described by others, such opinions or deductions should not usually be received."

1859, BELL, J., in Cooper v. State, 23 Tex. 331, 337, 339: "There are many things which the mind may clearly apprehend, and yet the mental process cannot be so explained as to be understood by others. A witness may state with much certainty that one with whom he has associated daily for years has become insane, and yet he cannot clearly explain to others how it is that he knows the individual in question to be insane. . . . In all these cases the opinion of the witness is received because the facts, which constitute the cause from which the opinion proceeds as an effect, cannot themselves be presented or communicated to the jury, so as to impart to them the knowledge which the witness actually possesses. . . . The true reason why the opinions of witnesses may be given to the jury, upon questions not involving skill or science, . . . is, because witnesses have a knowledge of the thing about which they speak and have acquired that knowledge in a manner which cannot be communicated, or from facts incapable in their very nature of being explained to others, [so] that they may state what they know in the best way they can. This best way is by giving in the form of an opinion that which cannot be put in the form of explanation or narration."

1875, LOOMIS, J., in Sydleman v. Beckwith, 43 Conn. 12: "These exceptions to the general rule are allowed on the ground of necessity, where the subject of the inquiry is so indefinite and general as not to be susceptible of direct proof, or where the facts on which the witness bases his opinion are so numerous and so evanescent that they cannot be held in the memory and detailed to the jury precisely as they appeared to the witness at the time. . . . The very basis upon which, as we have seen, this exception to the general rule rests, is that the nature of the subject-matter is such that it cannot be reproduced or detailed to the jury precisely as it appeared to the witness at the time."

1875, FOSTER, C. J., in Hardy v. Merrill, 56 N. H. 241: "Opinions concerning matters of daily occurrence, and open to common observation, are received from necessity; and any rule which excludes testimony of such a character, and fails to recognize and submit to that necessity, tends to the suppression of truth and the denial of justice. The ground upon which opinions are admitted in such cases is, that, from the very nature of the subject in issue, it cannot be stated or described in such language as will enable persons, not eye-witnesses, to form an accurate judgment in regard to it. How can a witness describe the weight of a horse? or his strength? or his value? Will any description of the wrinkles of the face, the color of the hair, the tones of the voice, or the elasticity of step, convey to a jury any very accurate impression as to the age of the person described? And so, also, in the investigation of mental and psychological conditions, — because it is impossible to convey to the mind of another any adequate conception of the truth by a recital of visible and tangible appearances, — because you cannot, from the nature of the case, describe emotions, sentiments, and affections, which are really too plain to admit of concealment, but, at the same time, incapable of description, — the opinion of the observer is admissible from the necessity of the case; and witnesses are permitted to say of a person, 'He seemed to be frightened'; 'he was greatly excited'; 'he was much confused'; 'he was agitated'; 'he was pleased'; 'he was angry.'" [2]

It will be seen, from these passages, that the instances in which the witness' opinion is excluded by this principle are roughly classed into two groups. First, all witnesses, whether testifying on observed data of their own or on data furnished by others, may state their inferences so far only as they have some special skill which can be applied to interpret or draw inferences from these data. Secondly, witnesses having no special skill, who have had personal observation of the matter in hand, may, as a result of their personal observation, have drawn inferences or made interpretations which the tribunal could equally well make from the same data of personal observation, if laid before them; and thus if it is possible to detail these data fully for the tribunal, the witness' own inferences are superfluous. But there is also a third group in which exclusion must take place, though Courts seldom find it necessary to point it out, namely, where the witness would detail the data of personal observation (and not only mere inferences), but the tribunal has an equal opportunity of personal observation, — as where the question is whether the accused in court has dark or light hair, or whether a house which has been viewed by the tribunal has three or six stories.[3] Now it is apparent that in the first two groups — by far the commonest — the kind of testimony excluded happens to consist in inferences from other data; the witness is giving his judgment, estimate, inference, opinion. This circumstance it is that has led to the common use of "opinion" as the epithet for that which is to be excluded, and the rule of exclusion has thus been briefly termed the Opinion Rule.

[2] Compare also the following opinions: 1826, Green, J., Rochester v. Chester, 3 N. H. 365; 1844, Shaw, C. J., in Com. v. Rogers, 7 Metc. Mass. 504; 1873, Ewing, J., in Eyerman v. Sheehan, 52 Mo. 223; 1890, Brown, J., in Van Wyckden v. Brooklyn, 118 N. Y. 429, 24 N. E. 179; 1890, Mitchell, J., in Graham v. Pennsylvania Co., 139 Pa. 159, 21 Atl. 151.

§ 1919. Erroneous Theories: (1) Logical Opposition between "Opinion" and "Fact." If the above principle is the true one, it is obvious (leaving history out of the question and considering only principle) that there is no virtue in any test based on the mere verbal or logical distinction between "opinion" and "fact." There is perhaps, in all the law of Evidence, no instance in which the use of a mere catch-word has caused so much of error of principle and vice of policy; — error of principle, because the distinction between "opinion" and "fact" has constantly and wrongly been treated as an aim in itself and a self-justifying dogma; vice of policy, because if this specious catch-word had not been so handily provided for ignorant objectors, the principle involved would not have received at the hands of the Bar and the Bench the extensive and vicious development which it has had in this country. It is necessary now to notice why, so far as the principle or the reason of the thing is concerned, the law takes no more special account of a logical difference between "opinion"-testimony and "fact"-testimony than between testimony by a short witness and testimony by a tall witness.

(a) In the first place, no such distinction is scientifically possible. We may in ordinary conversation roughly group off distinct domains for "opinion" on the one hand and "fact" or "knowledge" on the other; but as soon as we come to analyze and define these terms for the purpose of that accuracy which is necessary in legal rulings, we find that the distinction vanishes, that a flux ensues, and that nearly everything which we choose to call "fact" either is or may be only "opinion" or inference. This false verbal antithesis is frequently met with in judicial opinions;[1] but perhaps the most careful attempt to justify the distinction is the following:

[3] For example: 1898, Irving v. Shethar, 71 Conn. 434, 42 Atl. 258 (two accounts before the jury; whether they were kept in the same way, excluded).

1849, Sir George Cornewall Lewis, Influence of Authority in Matters of Opinion, 1: "It is true that even the simplest sensations involve some judgment; when a witness reports that he saw an object of a certain shape and size, or at a certain distance, he describes something more than a mere impression on his sense of sight, and his statement implies a theory and explanation of the bare phenomenon. When, however, the judgment is of so simple a kind as to become wholly unconscious, and the interpretation of the appearances is a matter of general agreement, the object of sensation may, for our present purpose, be considered a fact. . . . The essential idea of opinion seems to be that it is a matter about which doubt can reasonably exist, as to which two persons can without absurdity think differently. The existence of an object before the eyes of two persons would not be a matter of opinion, nor would it be a matter of opinion that twice two are four. But when testimony is divided, or uncertain, the existence of a fact may become doubtful, and, therefore, a matter of opinion."

This doctrine is not sustained by sound psychological or metaphysical analysis. A sufficient illustration of the fallacy of this supposed inherent distinction between Fact and Opinion may be found in the following passages:

1828, Dr. Richard Whately, Elements of Rhetoric, pt. I, c. II, § 4: "[As to matter of fact and matter of opinion,] decidedly it is not meant, at least by those who use language with any precision, that there is any greater certainty, or more general and ready agreement, in the one case than in the other; e. g., that one of Alexander's friends did or did not administer poison to him, every one would allow to be a question of fact, though it may be involved in inextricable doubt; while the question, what sort of an act that was, supposing it to have taken place, all would allow to be a question of opinion, though probably all would agree in their opinion thereupon."

1887, Mr. James Sully, Illusions, 328: "It must have been plain to an attentive reader throughout our exposition that, in spite of our provisional distinction, no sharp line can be drawn between much of what on the surface looks like immediate knowledge, and consciously derived or inferred knowledge. On its objective side, reasoning may be roughly defined as a conscious transition of mind from certain facts or relations of facts to other facts or relations of facts recognized as similar. According to this definition, a fallacy would be a hasty, unwarranted transition to new cases not identical with the old. And a good part of immediate knowledge is fundamentally the same, only that here through the exceptional force of association and habit the transition is too rapid to be consciously recognized. Consequently, illusion becomes identified at bottom with fallacious inference; it may be briefly described as collapsed inference. . . . I simply wish to show that, by a kind of fiction, illusion [of the senses] may be described as the result of a series of steps which, if separately unfolded to consciousness (as they no longer are), would correspond to those of a process of inference."[2]

§ 1919. [1] 1841, Gaston, J., in Clary v. Clary, 2 Ired. 83 ("But judgment founded on actual observation . . . is more than mere opinion. It approaches to knowledge, and is knowledge, so far as the imperfection of human nature will permit knowledge of these things to be acquired"); 1840, Wilcox, J., in Batchelder v. Taylor, 10 N. H. 131; 1839, Parker, C. J., in Hale v. Glidden, 11 N. H. 401; 1840, Verplanck, Sen., in Mayor v. Pentz, 24 Wend. N. Y. 676; 1884, Harlan, J., in Connecticut Life Ins. Co. v. Lathrop, 111 U. S. 612, 4 Sup. 533.

[2] From the point of view applicable to argument before the jury (not the rules of Admissibility), see the passages collected in the present author's "Principles of Judicial Proof, as given by Logic, Psychology, and General Experience, and illustrated in Judicial Trials" (1913), especially §§ 235, 236.

If then our notion of the supposed firm distinction between "opinion" and "fact," is that the one is certain and sure, the other not, surely a just view of their psychological relations serves to demonstrate that in strict truth nothing is certain. Or if we prefer the suggestion of Sir G. C. Lewis that the test is whether "doubt can reasonably exist," then certainly it must be perceived that the multiple doubts which ought to exist would exclude vast masses of indubitably admissible testimony. Or if we prefer the idea that "opinion" is inference and fact is "original perception," then it may be understood that no such distinction can scientifically be made, since the processes of knowledge and the sources of illusion are the same for both. It is impossible, then (supposing it were desirable), to confine witnesses to some fancied realm of "knowledge" or "fact" and to forbid them to enter the domain of "opinions" or inferences. There are no such contrasted groups of certain and uncertain testimony, and there never can be.

(b) Furthermore, an examination of the so-called Opinion rule, as applied in its various instances, shows that the opinion-element is in the very law itself, a merely superficial and casual mark, and not the essential feature. On the one hand, that which is excluded is not always "opinion" (in the sense of "inference from observed data" or in any other sense), but may be "fact." For example, where the question is whether the hair of the accused is black or yellow, or whether a house which the jury has viewed is three or six stories high, no witness will be listened to, and yet the testimony excluded deals with "facts," not "opinions," whatever may be the sense taken for those terms. On the other hand, that which is admitted is not always "fact," but often "opinion." For example, all hypothetical estimates of skilled witnesses are to be so described. Furthermore, for lay witnesses, all matters of measure, identity, quality, and the like must be considered as no better than "opinions"; and after all, the question whether Doe struck Roe first, or vice versa, may become a mere matter of "opinion." In short, the element of inference from observed data is one which plays a great or less part in every witness' testimony, and yet the rule does not exclude it as such.

It may as well be recognized, then, that there is no virtue in any distinction resting on a contrast between "opinion" and "fact"; and that, while the traditional term "Opinion rule" may be retained for convenience' sake, the essential principle is to-day independent of any such catch-word. This truth has already been plainly emphasized in various judicial utterances:

1888, CAMPBELL, J., in Kelley v. Richardson, 69 Mich. 436, 37 N. W. 514: "These cases are so common that few persons ever think that what are rightly called facts are at the same time no more nor less than conclusions. Thus, impressions of cold or heat, light and darkness, size, shape, distance, speed, and many personal qualities, physical and mental, are constantly acted on as facts, although not uniformly judged by all observers, for the simple reason that the facts cannot be otherwise communicated."

1875, FOSTER, C. J., in Hardy v. Merrill, 56 N. H. 241: "All evidence is opinion merely, unless you choose to call it fact and knowledge, as discovered by and manifested to the observation of the witness. . . . And it seems to me quite unnecessary and irrelevant to crave an apology or excuse for the admission of such evidence, by referring it to any exceptions (whether classified, or isolated and arbitrary) to any supposed general rule, according to the language of some books and the custom of some judges. There is, in truth, no general rule requiring the rejection of opinions as evidence. A general rule can hardly be said to exist, which is lost to sight in an enveloping mass of arbitrary exceptions. . . . Suppose, the day before or a week before the death, a lawyer, farmer, and blacksmith saw the deceased, and had an opportunity to see whether he appeared to be well or sick: suppose the lawyer is asked, 'Did you observe any indications of his being well or sick?' and the answer to be, 'I observed no indication of his being sick; he appeared as well as usual, as well as I ever saw him'; suppose the farmer is asked, 'Did you notice anything unusual in his appearance or conduct?' and the answer is, 'No, I did not'; suppose the blacksmith is asked, 'In your opinion was he well or sick?' and the answer is, 'In my opinion he was perfectly well; his spirits, looks, and behavior, all showed, in my opinion, freedom from weakness and pain'; what legal distinction can be drawn between these questions and answers, to make one competent, and either of the others incompetent? It is all opinion, and nothing but opinion, of the man's physical condition in relation to health or disease. The use or the omission of the word 'opinion,' in either of those questions or answers, does not affect the character of the testimony in the slightest degree. Calling such testimony 'opinion' does not make it 'opinion'; and calling it something else does not make it something else." [3]

§ 1920. Same: (2) "Usurping the Function of the Jury." A phrase, often put forward as explaining why the testimony we are concerned with is excluded, declares that the witness, if he were allowed to express his "opinion," would be "usurping the functions of the jury." A milder form of statement is found in a few earlier passages:

1816, GIBBS, C. J., in Durrell v. Bederley, Holt N. P. 285: "It is the province of the jury, and not of the underwriters, to decide what facts ought to be communicated."

In the United States, the stronger and vituperative charge of "usurpation" came later to be made:

1840, NELSON, C. J., in Lincoln v. R. Co., 23 Wend. 432: "Opinions, belief, deductions from facts, and such like, are matters which belong to the jury and by which they arrive at their verdict. When the examination extends to these, and the judgment, belief, and inferences of a witness are inquired into as matters proper for the consideration of a jury, their province is in a measure usurped; the judgment of witnesses is substituted for that of the jury." [1]

This phrase is made to imply a moral impropriety or a tactical unfairness in the witness' expression of opinion.

In this aspect the phrase is so misleading, as well as so unsound, that it should be entirely repudiated.[2] It is a mere bit of empty rhetoric. There is no

[3] Accord: Atwood v. Atwood, 84 Conn. 169, 79 Atl. 59 (opinion by Wheeler, J.).

§ 1920. [1] 1841, Phillips v. Kingfield, 19 Me. 379 ("the witness is not to substitute his opinion for that of the jury").

These seem to be the earliest instances. Other illustrations now abound.

[2] We are of course not here concerned with those rulings, proper enough, which in dealing with the weight of evidence already admitted, forbid the jury to take expert testimony as decisive; that is an entirely different subject; thus, in Head v. Hargrave, 105 U. S. 45 (1881), Field, J., says: "To direct them to find the value of the services from the testimony of the experts alone was to say to them that the issue should be determined by the opinions of the attorneys and not by the exercise of their own judgment of the facts on which those opinions were given."

such reason for the rule, because the witness, in expressing his opinion, is not attempting to "usurp" the jury's function, nor could if he desired. He is not attempting it, because his error (if it were one) consists merely in trying to get before the jury a piece of testimony which ought not to go there; and he could not usurp it if he would, because the jury may still reject his opinion and accept some other view, and no legal power, not even the judge's order, can compel them to accept the witness' opinion against their own.[3] That there is no hidden danger of "usurpation" lurking here, and no need of invoking sentiment to repel it, will be clearly seen if we remember that the improper evidence is equally inadmissible before a judge sitting without a jury. Whatever the organization of the tribunal, it is not to waste its time in listening to superfluous and cumbersome testimony.

§ 1921. Same: (3) Opinions on the Very Issue before the Jury. Another erroneous test, prevalent in some regions, and nearly allied to the preceding one, if not merely another form of it, is that an opinion can never be received when it touches "the very issue before the jury":

1883, ELLIOTT, J., in Yost v. Conroy, 92 Ind. 471: "It is a general rule that a witness cannot be allowed to express an opinion upon the exact question which the jury are required to decide." [1]

The fallacy of this doctrine is, of course, that it is both too narrow and too broad, measured by the principle. It is too broad, because, even when the very point in issue is to be spoken to, the jury should have help if it is needed. It is too narrow, because opinion may be inadmissible even when it deals with something other than the point in issue. Furthermore, the rule if carried out strictly and invariably would exclude the most necessary testimony. When all is said, it remains simply one of those impossible and misconceived utterances which lack any justification in principle:

[3] 1864, Campbell, J., in Beaubien v. Cicotte, 12 Mich. 507: "Juries are not bound to accept opinions unless they consider them well founded and we do not find in practice that they are often misled by the opinions of eye-witnesses who approve themselves sensible and candid." So also: 1907, Dunn, J., in Chicago Union Traction Co. v. Roberts, 229 Ill. 481, 82 N. E. 401 (allowing a question whether a certain injury was the cause of the plaintiff's present condition): "It is not the province of the expert to act as judge or jury. He cannot be called upon to decide a question of fact. . . . It was a question for the jury to determine. But it was impossible for them to answer without hearing the opinions of physicians. These opinions did not invade the province of the jury. . . . In any event the testimony was merely the opinion of the witness given as such, upon a state of facts assumed to be true. It still remained for the jury to determine the facts; and the opinion was nevertheless an opinion only."

§ 1921. [1] Other examples: Eng. 1899, L. C. Halsbury, in North Cheshire & M. B. Co. v. Manchester B. Co., App. Cas. 83, 85; U. S. 1876, Brickell, C. J., in Smith v. State, 55 Ala. 11; 1873, Chicago & A. R. Co. v. R. Co., 67 Ill. 145 ("it amounts to nothing more nor less than permitting the witnesses to usurp the province of the jury"); 1874, Chicago R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Moffit, 75 Ill. 529; 1905, Sun Ins. Office v. Western W. M. Co., 72 Kan. 41, 82 Pac. 513 (whether there was a "fire"; the issue being as to the spontaneous combustion of wool).

Probably the notion took rise from the following imperfectly reported ruling: 1821, R. v. Wright, R. & R. 456 (a physician and asylum-keeper gave an opinion as to symptoms of insanity, etc., and ended: "My firm conviction is that it was an act of insanity"; on consulting, "several of the judges doubted whether the witness could be asked his opinion on the very point which the jury were to decide," namely, whether the act charged was an act of insanity). But here the point was whether the witness was dealing with a matter of law (post, § 1958).

1845, Messrs. Carrington and Kirwan, note in 1 C. & K. 313: "It seems to be a mistake to say that, in putting such a question to the witness as was put in the above case of Fenwick v. Bell [whether a collision could have been avoided by proper care] you submit to his decision a point which the jury alone can try. On the contrary, it is submitted that the object of putting the question is not at all to decide upon the fact itself, but to prove an entirely new fact, namely, the opinion of a person of competent skill as to what might or might not have been done by the parties under a given state of circumstances. The jury are of course to decide upon the value of this opinion, as well as upon the value of the evidence on which it is founded; and thus it is plain that in the end the whole matter is submitted to their consideration, and that the only effect of the opinion will be to assist them in judging of a question of which the witness may reasonably be supposed, on account of his professional knowledge, to have been more competent to judge than themselves."

1875, DANFORTH, J., in Snow v. R. Co., 65 Me. 231: "The reason for its exclusion given by counsel, that it would instruct the jury as to the amount of the verdict to be rendered, would seem to be a very good reason for its admission. Instruction is what the jury want. They would not be bound by it any more than by other testimony, but it would be more or less valuable in enabling them to come to a correct conclusion." [2]

§ 1922. Same: (4) Opinion inadmissible unless preceded or accompanied by Facts or Grounds. It has already been seen, in reviewing the history of the doctrine (ante, § 1917), that in the beginning the disparagement of opinion rested on grounds totally different from those now received. It was objected to because as a mere guess, the belief of one having no good grounds, it lacked the testimonial qualification of Observation; hence, a mere opinion, as soon as it appeared to be such, must be rejected. In a few jurisdictions the modern doctrine has been confused with the earlier one, and it is laid down as a general rule that opinions must be preceded by a recital of the facts on which they are based, — usually with the exception that expert witnesses are exempted from this rule.[1]

Now in no aspect is this rule sound. In the first place, then, there is no principle and no orthodox practice which requires a witness having personal observation to state in advance his observed data before he states his infer-

[2] Accord, that the coincidence of the question with the very issue in the case is 'per se' no ground of exclusion: Eng. 1844, Fenwick v. Bell, 1 C. & P.. 312, Coltman, J.; 1874, Mansell v. Clements, L. R. 9 C. P. 139, semble; U. S. Fed. 1897, New York El. Eq. Co. v. Blair, 25 C. C. A. 216, 79 Fed. 896; 1898, Fireman's Ins. Co. v. Mohlmann Co., 33 C. C. A. 347, 91 Fed. 85; 1899, Western Coal & M. Co. v. Berberich, 36 C. C. A. 364, 94 Fed. 329; Ga. 1897, Ryder v. State, 100 Ga. 528, 28 S. E. 246; Ill. 1906, Goddard v. Enzler, 222 Ill. 462, 78 N. E. 805 (citing Chicago & A. R. Co. v. R. Co., supra, n. 1, and qualifying it by saying that "it is not always a good objection to such a question that it calls for an opinion upon a question to be decided by the jury," provided it is not "the ultimate question to be found by the jury"); Kan. 1911, State v. Lindsay, 85 Kan. 192, 116 Pac. 209, semble; Mass. 1891, Poole v. Dean, 152 Mass. 589, 591, 26 N. E. 406; Minn. 1897, Donnelly v. R. Co., 70 Minn. 278, 73 N. W. 157; N. H. 1895, Nebonne v. R. Co., 68 N. H. 296, 44 Atl. 521; N. Y. 1890, Van Wycklen v. Brooklyn, 118 N. Y. 429, 24 N. E. 179; 1899, Littlejohn v. Shaw, 159 N. Y. 188, 53 N. E. 810; Tex. 1891, Scalf v. Collin Co., 80 Tex. 517, 16 S. W. 314.

§ 1922. [1] 1856, Bryan v. Walton, 20 Ga. 480; Goodwyn v. Goodwyn, 20 Ga. 600; 1860, Choice v. State, 31 Ga. 466; 1904, Morrow v. National Mas. Acc. Ass'n, 125 Ia. 633, 101 N. W. 468 (experts excepted); 1895, Crockett v. Davis, 81 Md. 134, 31 Atl. 710; 1885, Owen, J., in Railroad Co. v. Schultz, 43 Oh. St. 270, 282, 1 N. E. 324; 1840, Seibles v. Blackhead, 1 McMull. S. C. 56; and many of the cases cited post, § 1938.

In Jones v. Fuller, 19 S. C. 70 (1882), the form is slightly different; the witness must state the facts supporting his opinion, if they are capable of being stated.

ences from them; all that needs to appear in advance is that he had an opportunity to observe and did observe, whereupon it is proper for him to state his conclusions, leaving the detailed grounds to be drawn out on cross-examination (ante, § 655). Any other rule cumbers seriously the examination, and amounts in effect to changing substantially the whole examination into a 'voir dire,' — an innovation on established methods which is unwarranted by policy. Secondly, if the rule were good, it would be as necessary for the expert witness as for the lay witness. Thirdly, no justification for it seems ever to have been attempted; it is simply an instance of traditions misunderstood. Its lack of principle has been more than once judicially exposed:

1878, HINES, J., in Brown v. Com., 14 Bush 407: "Exactly what is meant by the expression in some cases, when such evidence has been admitted, that 'the witnesses must detail the facts upon which the opinion is based,' we do not find explained. If the admissibility of the opinion as evidence must depend upon the facts from which it is formed, it is manifest that there is a question for the Court antecedent to its introduction, and that to promulgate a general rule as to the amount and quality of the evidence that should satisfy the Court in every case would be impossible. . . . It is not intended that the admissibility of the evidence shall be made to depend upon the ability of the witness to state specific facts from which the jury may, independent of the opinion of the witness, draw a conclusion of sanity or insanity; for it is the competency of the opinion of the witness that is the subject of inquiry. The ability of the witness to detail certain facts of the mind may add very greatly to the weight of the opinion given in evidence; but they will not of necessity affect the question of competency."

1881, CHALMERS, C. J., in Wood v. State, 58 Miss. 743: "The qualification that the opinion of the non-expert must be accompanied by a statement of the facts on which it is based is not very important; since, whether the witness be an expert or a non-expert, the grounds of his belief and his opportunities of observation may always be elicited; and, whether the witness be of the one class or the other, his testimony should be rejected by the Court where it consists of a mere naked declaration of opinion with neither learning, observation, nor acquaintance to support it." [2]

§ 1923. Practical Test for receiving Opinions: (1) Skilled Witnesses. It has already been seen (ante, § 1918) that the instances in which inferences are excluded are divisible into three groups, the first two being the commonest and affording the only source of difficulty. What specific tests, by way of reducing the general principle to specific rules, have been afforded by the Courts?

The first group includes witnesses who are sought for their special skill in drawing inferences or making interpretations upon data either observed by themselves or furnished by others. For this class, the unsound rule has sometimes been laid down that the witness must be one who employs his skill professionally or commercially:

1884, EARL, J., in Ferguson v. Hubbell, 97 N. Y. 513: "It is not sufficient to warrant the introduction of expert evidence that the witness may know more of the subject of inquiry and may better comprehend and appreciate it than the jury; but to warrant its introduction the subject of the inquiry must be one relating to some trade, profession, science, or art in which persons instructed therein by study or experience may be supposed to have more skill and knowledge than jurors of average intelligence may be presumed generally to have." [1]

[2] Compare also: 1828, Pollard v. Wybourn, 1 Hagg. 727, Dr. Lushington; 1881, Colee v. State, 75 Ind. 511, 513.

But the only true criterion is: On this subject can a jury from this person receive appreciable help? In other words, the test is a relative one, depending on the particular subject and the particular witness with reference to that subject, and is not fixed or limited to any class of persons acting professionally:[2]

1867, PIGOT, C. B., in M'Fadden v. Murdock, 1 Ir. Rep. C. L. 211, 218: "The subjects to which this kind of evidence is applicable are not confined to classed and specified professions. It is applicable wherever peculiar skill and judgment, applied to a particular subject, are required to explain results or to trace them to their causes."

1875, LOOMIS, J., in Taylor v. Monroe, 43 Conn. 44: "The true test of the admissibility of such testimony is not whether the subject matter is common or uncommon, or whether many persons or few have some knowledge of the matter, but it is whether the witnesses offered as experts have any peculiar knowledge or experience, not common to the world, which renders their opinions founded on such knowledge or experience any aid to the Court or jury in determining the questions at issue."

1919, YOUNG, J., in State v. Killeen, 79 N. H. 201, 107 Atl. 601: "No test to determine the qualifications a witness must possess in order to be permitted to testify as an expert, which will reconcile anything like all the cases in which that question has been considered, can be found either in the nature of things or in the decided cases. But an examination of the cases decided since 1860 will show a gradual turning on the part of the Court toward the view that the test is to inquire whether the witness' knowledge of the matter in relation to which his opinion is asked is such, or so great, that it will probably aid the trier in his search for the truth."

No more specific test can be supplied, defining the kind of subject which certainly or usually will need no aid at all from any witness. A few of the most careful attempts are the following:

1851, SHAW, C. J., in New England Glass Co. v. Lovell, 7 Cush. 321: "[The] experience [must not be] of such a nature that it may be presumed to be within the common experience of all men of common education moving in the ordinary walks of life."

1872, BECK, C. J., in Hamilton v. R. Co., 36 Ia. 37: "When the consequences of actions or of combinations of circumstances may only be known by those familiar with the subject, and cannot be understood by those not possessing skill or peculiar knowledge thereof, opinions of experts are competent evidence."

1872, FOSTER, J., in Ellingwood v. Bragg, 52 N. H. 489: "The subject must be one peculiar and exceptional, concerning which some explanation, such as peculiar knowledge alone can afford, is required in order to render it intelligible to the comprehension and understanding of ordinary men."

§ 1923. [1] Accord: 1872, Beck, C. J., in Hamilton v. R. Co., 36 Ia. 36.

[2] Accord: Eng. 1873, Rowley v. R. Co., L. R. 8 Ex. 221 (an insurance accountant; the counsel's argument in objection that "knowledge of a subject, however ample, unless it is professional, does not entitle a witness to speak to matters of opinion," was apparently repudiated); U. S. 1855, Woodward, J., in Hyde v. Woolfolk, 1 Ia. 166; 1858, Ames, C. J., in Buffum v. Harris, 5 R. I. 251; 1846, Royce, J., in Clifford v. Richardson, 18 Vt. 627; 1872, Wheeler, J., in Masons v. Fuller, 45 Vt. 32.

§ 1924. Same: (2) Lay Witnesses. The second group of persons to whom the Opinion rule has to be applied (ante, § 1918) includes those who concededly have no greater skill than the jury in drawing inferences from the kind of data in question. Such a witness' inferences are inadmissible when the jury can be put into a position of equal vantage for drawing them, — in other words, when by the mere words and gestures of the witness the data he has observed can be so reproduced that the jurors have those data as fully and exactly as the witness had them at the time he formed his opinion. This test has been variously phrased in judicial language:

1823, GIBSON, J., in Cornell v. Green, 10 S. & R. 16: "I take it that whenever the facts from which a witness received an impression are too evanescent in their nature to be recollected, or are too complicated to be separated and distinctly narrated, his impressions from these facts become evidence."

1853, JOHNSON, J., in Clark v. Baird, 9 N. Y. 185: "Evidence of opinion is also recognized as proper, on the same ground of necessity, in cases where language is not adapted to convey those circumstances on which the judgment must be formed."

1858, CAMPBELL, J., in Evans v. People, 12 Mich. 35: "Many cases exist in which it is impossible by any description, however graphic, to explain things so as to enable any one but the witness himself to see or comprehend them as they would have been seen or comprehended could the jury have occupied his position of observation."

1875, ENDICOTT, J., in Com. v. Sturtivant, 117 Mass. 122: "[The condition is that] the subject matter to which the testimony relates cannot be reproduced or described to the jury precisely as it appeared to the witness at the time."

1873, PECK, J., in Bates v. Sharon, 45 Vt. 481: "[Opinion is admitted] where the facts are of such a character as to be incapable of being presented with their proper force to any one but the observer himself, so as to enable the triers to draw a correct or intelligent conclusion from them without the aid of the judgment or opinion of the witness who has had the benefit of personal observation."

It is in the application of this test that the Opinion rule really breaks down, as an aid in the investigation of truth. In the vast majority of rulings of exclusion, the data observed by the witness could not, in any liberal and accurate view, be really reproduced to the jury by the witness' words and gestures. The error of the judges consists in giving too much credit to the possibility of such reproduction. What is chiefly wrong is by no means the test itself, but the illiberal and quibbling application of it.

In one State, at least, the test has been so broadly phrased as to eliminate much risk of technical use:

1920, YOUNG, J., in Paquette v. Connecticut V. L. Co., 79 N. H. 288, 109 Atl. 836: "The test usually applied in this State to determine the admissibility of opinion evidence is not to inquire whether the issue to which it relates is for the jury; nor whether it is a matter of daily occurrence and open to common observation; but, whether the witness' knowledge of the matter in question will probably aid the triers in their search for the truth."

§ 1925. Distinction between the Opinion Rule and the Rule of Experiential Qualifications. In practice, therefore, when an inference is offered, two principles have to be applied. We first ask (from the point of view of Testimonial Qualifications), Is it a matter as to which the witness as such needs a special experience above the ordinary, and if so, has he this? When this question has been settled in favor of the witness, we ask (from the point of view of the Opinion rule), Does the jury need any inference from the witness, either because of his skill or because his observed data cannot be adequately reproduced by him? The practical distinctions in the working of the two rules have already been examined in detail (ante, § 557) and need not be here repeated.

§ 1926. Flexibility of the Test. That the test of the Opinion rule is a flexible, a living one; that there is no fixed form of words, no mere shibboleth — such as the word "opinion" conveys — this is the important aspect of the principle never to be lost sight of. The question must be asked on each occasion, Can the jury be fully equipped, by the mere recital of the data, to draw inferences? — in other words, Can all the data be exactly reproduced by mere testimonial words and gestures? [1]

1885, OWEN, J., in Railroad Co. v. Schulz, 43 Oh. St. 270, 283, 1 N. E. 324: "It must not be supposed that there is any rule of evidence concerning the opinions of witnesses which is peculiar to fences, highways, bridges, or steamboats, or to any other special subjects of investigation. Where the facts concerning their condition cannot be made palpable to the jurors so that their means of forming opinions are practically equal to those of the witnesses, opinions of such witnesses may be received, accompanied by such facts supporting them as they may be able to place intelligently before the jury."

1890, MITCHELL, J., in Graham v. Pennsylvania Co., 139 Pa. 161, 21 Atl. 131: "There is extreme difficulty in laying down any rule precise enough for practical application, and the only proper course is to keep the principle steadily in view, and apply it according to the circumstances of each case."

§ 1927. Discriminations as to (1) Hypothetical Questions, and (2) Impressions. (1) When an expert witness, testifying from personal observation, gives his opinion as testimony, it is usually necessary to predicate in express terms, hypothetically, the data upon which the opinion is based. The reason is that otherwise the jury would be unable to tell whether his opinion was meant by him to be applied to the facts ultimately found by the jury. This reason, however, is not a deduction from the Opinion rule, but rests on the principle of Testimonial Qualifications that a witness' grounds of knowledge must be made to appear. It has therefore been dealt with under that head (ante, §§ 672–684).

(2) A lay-witness speaking of facts from personal observation, and not offering any opinion, may nevertheless qualify the force of his belief or knowledge by describing it as merely an "impression." This may mean that his original observation was not accurate enough to give certainty in his mind, or that his recollection of his original observation has since become dimmed. The propriety of such testimony may thus involve the principles applicable to the Testimonial Qualifications of Observation and of Recollection; from that point of view it has already been considered elsewhere (ante, §§ 658, 726, 727).

§ 1926. [1] 1917, Shackleford, J., in Kersey v. State, 73 Fla. 832, 74 So. 983 (the above text cited with approval).

§ 1928. Form of the Opinion Rule as Negative or Affirmative. Shall we say that a witness may state his inferences unless it appears that the jury can be equally equipped? Or shall we say that a witness may not state his inferences unless it appears that the jury cannot be equally equipped?

If we are dealing with the first sort of witness — the witness alleged to be specially skilled — it seems clear that his possession of special skill — i. e. skill beyond that of the jury — should first be made to appear; that is, the second form of the test, as above, is the proper one. But if we are dealing with the other sort of witness — the one not claiming greater skill but simply drawing inferences from his own observation which any one in his place could draw — the answer may be different. The answer here virtually depends on our attitude — whether of favor or disfavor — toward the principle involved. If we believe that the drawing of inferences by an observer of the data is a hateful, dangerous, and reprehensible thing, — if we prefer to put obstacles of technical and not real force in the way of the most common sort of testimony, — if we believe that this modern and minor rule about Opinion is a fundamental canon in the investigation of truth, if we are opposed to Baron Parke's wish to employ "a compendious mode of ascertaining the result of the actual observation of the witness," [1] — then, of course, we shall look upon every witness as a possible "usurper" of the jury's function; we shall watch each phase of his testimony anxiously, and stop his mouth as soon as he approaches the insidious heresy of an "opinion" or inference. On the other hand, if we believe that the rule in question, as applied to the unskilled witness who has personally observed the data, is a mere minor rule of convenience not in any way concerned with the value of the testimony, if we hold that it is inconsistent to aim in theory at convenience and simplicity by a rule which in thorough application causes ten times the inconvenience and complication which in theory it was to avoid, if we prefer to make the rules of Evidence our tools rather than to become ourselves their helpless slaves, — then we shall conclude to adopt the first form of the test as above; that is, we shall allow the witness to state freely all the results which he is qualified to reach, and only now and then, when he comes to matters as to which it is instantly clear that the jurors are or can be as fully equipped with the data, we shall exclude his inferences.[2]

The attitude of the Courts, however, has been usually the former, and not the latter. Against this usual attitude the following notable protest is judicially recorded:

1870, DOE, J., in State v. Pike, 49 N. H. 423: "Opinions, like other testimony, are competent in the class of cases in which they are the best evidence, as when a mere description without opinion would generally convey a very imperfect idea of the force, meaning, and inherent evidence of the things described. Like other testimony, opinions are incompetent in the class of cases in which they are not the best evidence, as when they are founded on hearsay or on evidence from which the jury can form an opinion as well as the witness. A rule that opinions are or are not evidence must necessarily be in conflict with the rule which admits the best evidence. A constant observer of the trial of cases, examining the testimony for the purpose of ascertaining how many opinions are received and how many rejected, will find ten of the former as often as he finds one of the latter; and if he is very critical, he will find the ratio much greater than that. Opinions are constantly given. A case can hardly be tried without them. Their number is so vast and their use so habitual that they are not noticed as opinions distinguished from other evidence. . . . The cases of identity of persons and things and of handwriting having been named in the English books as illustrations of the competency of opinions, those cases were supposed to be peculiar exceptions to the general rule, whereas they are mere instances of the application of the general rule which admits the best evidence. This general, natural, fundamental, comprehensive, and chief rule of evidence was gradually ignored, and special and artificial rules were substituted; or, if there was not an absolute substitution, there was such a removal of emphasis from the general rule to the special rule that the former lost the overshadowing influence and control which belong to it. Entire systems of law, theology, medicine, and philosophy are easily changed by a transfer of emphasis from one point to another. To say the least, the emphasis which belongs to the general rule admitting the best evidence was gradually taken from it and placed upon the fact that there are some opinions which, not being the best evidence, are not evidence; and this fact was gradually transformed into a so-called general rule that opinions are not evidence, and this artificial rule was treated as a rule of law. The objection to this supposed rule against opinions is that it has usurped the place of the supreme rule admitting the best evidence; that it is a mere statement of the supposed fact that opinions are not admitted under the rule of the best evidence; and that, as a statement of that kind, it is not true. . . . When the fact that some opinions are not the best evidence had been magnified and turned into the so-called general rule of law that opinions are not evidence, and the rule admitting the best evidence was supplanted by it, it was thought necessary to find a special precedent for every opinion before it could be admitted. The judgments of Westminster Hall were searched to find a decision that an opinion as to the value of property was competent, and to find another decision that an opinion as to sanity was competent. No such decisions could be found. None had ever been made; because such opinions had always been received as unquestionably competent. The reason of the failure to find the decisions was not understood here. The failure was taken as conclusive proof that in England the opinions were not admitted. When an American mistake of this magnitude is discovered, it is fit to be corrected at once. To return to the true principle is not to change the law, but to cease violating the law; or, putting it in a milder form, to allow that which is the law 'de facto' to yield to that which is the law 'de jure.''

§ 1928. [1] 5 Cl. & F. 670.
[2] Approved by Keith, P., in Hot Springs L. & M. Co. v. Revercomb, 110 Va. 240, 65 S. E. 557 (1909).

§ 1929. Future of the Opinion Rule. If one were asked to name the rules most peculiar to the Anglo-American evidence-law, he ought perhaps to name the Character rule, the Hearsay rule, and the Opinion rule. Neither rule is found on the Continent. All three are indigenous judicial developments. All are the product of the jury-system. All are founded on a peculiar cautiousness in our law, and all have been developed with an equally peculiar rigidity and stolid disregard of practical consequences. All three are complex and far-reaching in application, as well as voluminous in detailed development. But a radically different future may be predicted for them. The Hearsay rule and the Character rule will always remain in our law, in a more or less relaxed form; while the Opinion rule will in substance disappear. An important difference between them is that the first two are the solid growth of experience; while the last rule, in its American development, is merely the logically technical development of a misunderstood term.

The Opinion rule day by day exhibits its unpractical subtlety and its useless refinement of logic. Under this rule we accomplish little by enforcing it and we should do no harm if we dispensed with it. We accomplish little, because, from the side on which the witness appears and from the form of the question, his answer, i. e. his opinion, may often be inferred We should do no harm, because, even when the final opinion or inference is admitted, the inference amounts in force usually to nothing unless it appears to be solidly based on satisfactory data, the existence and quality of which we can always bring out, if desirable, on cross-examination. Add to this that, under the present illiberal application of the rule, and the practice as to new trials, a single erroneous ruling upon the single trifling answer of one witness out of a dozen or more in a trial occupying a day may overturn the whole result and cause a double expense of time, money, and effort; and we perceive the absurdly unjust effects of the rule. And, finally, the utter impossibility of a consistent application of the rule, and the consequent uncertainty of the law, and we understand how much more it makes for injustice rather than justice. It has done more than any one rule of procedure to reduce our litigation towards a state of legalized gambling.[1]

The remedy (whenever one shall be undertaken) ought to be radical. The only purpose for which we need any weapon of the sort is the potential need of saving the time that in some cases might be otherwise taken by marshalling an interminable multitude of opinions, and of preventing the consequent confusion of issues and the possibility of forcing a verdict by mere preponderance of numbers and influential names.[2] But all this is mere possibility; it would not even be feasible in the ordinary case; and, whenever it was feasible, and if it should then be attempted, the ordinary judicial discretion to limit the number of witnesses (ante, § 1907), and the rule requiring personal knowledge (ante, §§ 664, 1364, 1917), would quite answer all practical purposes. For this reason there seems to be no objection against taking a radical step, — the entire abolition of the rule as such, leaving only in its place some specific discretion in the judge to meet the possibilities above mentioned.

For this purpose, some such statute as the following would seem to be adequate: "An inference or opinion may always be stated to the tribunal by a witness experientially qualified to form it, provided either that he has had adequate personal observation of the matter in question, or if not, and if an expert, that he states on cross-examination the data from which the § 1929. [1] Approved in Pope v. State, 174 Ala. 63, 57 So. 245.

[2] An example of this possibility for evil appears in the French trials of Captain Dreyfus and M. Zola, where the opinions of eminent generals were invoked to overwhelm the tribunal.

inference is drawn. It is immaterial whether or not the data are capable of being so stated by him or by others that the tribunal is equally capable of drawing the inference, and whether or not the data are stated by him before stating his inference, and whether or not the inference involves the very subject of the issue, or one of the issues, before the tribunal; provided that the trial judge may in any case in his discretion exclude testimony involving an inference from data observed, or any other superfluous testimony, whenever in his judgment such testimony is undesirable because merely cumulative or of undue personal weight."

Or the following text would equally answer the purpose:

"An inference or opinion may always be stated by a witness; irrespective of whether

"(a) the data upon which the opinion is based are or are not capable of being so stated by him in words that the tribunal is equally capable of drawing the inference; or whether

"(b) the data are or are not stated by him before stating his inference; or whether

"(c) the inference involves the very subject of the issue, or one of the issues, before the tribunal.

"The trial judge may in his discretion exclude testimony involving an opinion or inference,

" (1) Whenever the topic is one which requires special experience for drawing the inference, and the witness is in the judge's estimation not so qualified; or

" (2) Whenever the witness has not had adequate personal observation of any data from which such inference might be drawn; but

" (3) Except that in the latter case the judge may permit the inference to be stated if the witness is specially qualified by experience to draw inferences on the subject; the opponent in that case being entitled to ask on cross-examination for a statement of the data from which the inference was drawn."

TOPIC II: OPINION RULE, APPLIED TO SUNDRY TOPICS

CHAPTER LXVI.

1. Sanity

§ 1933. History of the Rule as to Laymen's Opinions. At common law in England there never had been any question that the opinions of lay-witnesses as to sanity or insanity could be received. Wherever a person presented himself as having had acquaintance with and therefore observation of a testator or an accused person whose sanity was in question, i. e. wherever the witness had the fundamental testimonial qualification of personal observation (ante, §§ 657, 689) no one thought of objecting on the score of the Opinion rule. This plainly appears in the long list of trials in which such testimony was received.[1] Moreover, when the Opinion rule began to be discussed and formulated, in the last part of the 1700s and the early part of the 1800s, the judges and the treatise-writers constantly named this subject as one upon which lay opinions were always and unquestionably received.[2]

In the United States, however, when the phrase "mere opinion" (i. e. opinion not resting on observed data) "is not evidence," came to be distorted into the phrase "opinion is not evidence" (ante, § 1917), one of the first subjects to come up for consideration was that of sanity. The ruling which lent most aid to the doubters (and probably the earliest excluding ruling) was that of Poole v. Richardson, in 1807.[3] This, however, was entirely misunderstood by those who relied on its authority.[4] As in so many of the early rulings, the notion at the base of it was not the modern notion of opinion as "inference," but the old one of opinion as "belief having no observed data to support it "(ante, § 1917). However, it served, whether rightly or wrongly understood, to raise the doubt. Speedily the controversy spread; and sooner or later every Court had to face the objection based on the Opinion rule. Generally, the view favoring admission prevailed; the great law-making and argument-furnishing precedent for the earlier § 1933. [1] The following list could doubtless be added to: 1724, Arnold's Trial, 16 How. St. Tr. 706–766, passim; 1741, Goodere's Trial, 17 How. St. Tr. 1057, passim; 1746, Evans v. Blood, 3 Bro. P. C. 632, 636; 1746, Bradshaw's Trial, 18 How. St. Tr. 418; 1760, Earl Ferrers' Trial, 19 How. St. Tr. 923–953, passim; 1762, Lowe v. Jolliffe, 1 W. Bl. 364 (Lord Mansfield); 1790, Frith's Trial, 22 How. St. Tr. 313–317, passim; 1792, Attorney-General v. Parnther, 3 Bro. Ch. C. 444 (Lord Thurlow); 1800, Hadfield's Trial, 27 How. St. Tr. 1330; 1802, Wall's Trial, 28 How. St. Tr. 113; 1803, Wood v. Hammerton, 9 Ves. Jr. 145; 1812, Bellingham's Case, Annual Register 305; 1812, Bowler's Case, Ann. Reg. 309; 1822, Marquis of Londonderry's Case, Ann. Reg. 435; 1828, Ley's Case, 1 Lew. Cr. C. 239; 1831, Offord's Case, Annual Register 109; 1837, R. v. Goode, 7 A. & E. 535, 538; 1837, Wright v. Tatham, 7 A. & E. 314, 359, 365, 373, 384, 396, 401; on appeal in 5 Cl. & F. 698, 713, 719, 720, 724, 728, 735, 738, 746, 754, 759 (in this case, the hesitation of Mr. J. Coleridge, at p. 690, upon the present point is apparently the first and only instance in England where any questioning of such evidence occurred; see the quotation ante, § 1917); 1840, R. v. Oxford, 1 Towns. St. Tr. 125–134, 4 St. Tr. N. S. 497, 528, 9 C. & P. 538, 547 (Denman, L. C. J.); "There may be cases where medical testimony may be essential; but I cannot agree with the notion that moral insanity can better be judged of by medical men than by others"); 1843, R. v. M'Naughton, 4 St. Tr. N. S. 847, 909 ff., 1 Towns. St. Tr. 354; 1843, Bowman v. Bowman, 2 M. & Rob. 501; 1843, R. v. Higginson, 1 C. & K. 130; 1895, Aitken v. McMeckan, App. Cas. 310.

[2] Some examples will be found ante, § 1917.

[3] 3 Mass. 330. There was an earlier one in the same year, Chase v. Lincoln, 3 Mass. 237; but it is little cited.

[4] As noted post, § 1938, under Massachusetts.

rulings being the opinion of Mr. J. Gaston, in Clary v. Clary, in North Carolina, in 1841,[5] and for the more recent rulings, the opinions of Mr. J. Doe, dissenting, in Boardman v. Woodman, in New Hampshire, in 1866,[6] and of Mr. J. Foster, in Hardy v. Merrill, in the same court, in 1875.[7] The opinion of Mr. J. Doe succeeded in bringing about a change of heart in his own Court, and is the arsenal of arguments to whose supplies it is chiefly due that the Courts of the country are to-day so nearly unanimous in accepting the common-sense view of the subject.[8] A judicial revolution also occurred in the decisions of the New York Court; and later years saw an effort in the Court of Massachusetts, the original home of the error, to retreat so far as might be from their early position. The scars of the controversy, however, in spite of the general victory for correct reasoning and good sense, are seen in some technical and fantastic distinctions which still disfigure the rule as now applied in some jurisdictions, notably in New York, — distinctions which serve only to confuse, and would never have been imagined but for the supposed necessity of conceding something to the demands of the Opinion rule.

It should be added that the controversy has throughout centered almost entirely on the Opinion rule; and the exclusion has never entirely, and only once or twice partially, proceeded on the doctrine of Experiential Qualifications (ante, § 568), i. e. that lay observers were not fitted to judge of sanity or insanity. That question has almost unanimously by the excluding judges been either ignored or answered affirmatively.[9]

§ 1934. Principle and Policy of the Rule. The argument for exclusion was usually based upon precedent and the shibboleth of "opinion evidence," rather than upon principle or deliberate reasoning; the following passage represents perhaps the clearest argument:

1853, MASON, J., in DeWitt v. Barley, 9 N. Y. 387: "There is no such insuperable difficulty in describing the mental manifestations which are relied upon in any case to prove insanity as there is in the cases of personal identity and handwriting. Those manifestations which usually attend a sound mind are made familiar to all by the intercourse of all classes of men, and the evidences or mental manifestations which characterize insanity, so far as they fall under the observation of men generally, are of that character which witnesses can describe or relate. They generally consist in acts or words and frequently in both combined; and there is no more difficulty in describing and relating them to a jury than there is in many other cases where the witness is required to state the facts and circumstances and is not permitted to give his opinion upon the conclusion to which they lead."

The argument for admission is of two sorts; the first is directed to show that the principle of the Opinion rule does not exclude the kind of testimony

[5] 2 Iredell 80.
[6] 47 N. H. 144.
[7] 59 N. H. 250.
[8] One may be pardoned for noting here the singular coincidence that on the morning of the very day when the above words of justice and respect to this great jurist were being penned, a thousand miles away, he had died suddenly, under a stroke of paralysis.
[9] The authorities on that point have been collected ante, § 568; but wherever that reason has affected a Court excluding lay witnesses' opinions, it will here be noted.

in question; the second points out the practical inconvenience involved in excluding it, and also urges that in any case the rule accomplishes nothing. (1) The argument from principle is thus stated:

1841, GASTON, J., in Clary v. Clary, 2 Ired. 80: "In the first place, it seems to us that the restriction of the evidence to a simple narration of facts, having or supposed to have a bearing on the question of capacity, would if practicable shut out the ordinary means of truth; and, if freed from this objection, cannot in practice be effectually enforced. The sanity or insanity of an individual may be a matter notorious and without doubt in a neighborhood, and yet few, if any, of the neighbors may be able to lay before the jury distinct facts that would enable them to pronounce a decision thereon with reasonable assurance of its truth. If the witness may be permitted to state that he has known the individual for many years, has repeatedly conversed with him and heard others converse with him; that the witness has noticed that in these conversations he was incoherent and silly; that in his habits he was occasionally highly pleased and greatly vexed without a cause; and that in his conduct he was wild, irrational, extravagant, and crazy, — what would this be but to declare the judgment or opinion of the witness of what is incoherent or foolish in conversation, what reasonable cause of pleasure or resentment, and what the indicia of sound or disordered intellect? If he may not testify, but must give the supposed silly or incoherent language, state the degrees, and all the accompanying circumstances of highly excited emotion, and specifically set forth the freaks or acts regarded as irrational, and this without the least intimation of any opinion which he has formed of their character, where are such witnesses to be found? Can it be supposed that those not having a special interest in the subject shall have so charged their memories with those matters, as distinct independent facts, as to be able to present them in their entirety and simplicity to the jury? Or if such a witness be found, can he conceal from the jury the impression which has been made upon his own mind; and when this is collected, can it be doubted but that his judgment has been influenced by many, very many circumstances which he has not communicated, which he cannot communicate, and of which he himself is not aware?"

1849, CHILTON, J., in Norris v. State, 16 Ala. 779: "Does not even a casual observer of mental phenomena fully recognize the impossibility of communicating to another the facts and almost numberless minute circumstances indicating a morbid action of the brain and consequent mental aberration, the main force of which may consist in some peculiar characteristic which none but the observer can fully appreciate? The jury, unlike the witnesses, have no knowledge of the condition of the accused from personal observation. How then shall they be placed in possession of those mysterious and indescribable phases which insanity wears, which, though they make a correct and vivid impression upon the mind of the observer, yet lose much of their force by attempted description? Must the prisoner lose the benefit of such testimony altogether; or shall the witness be required to furnish as well as he may a pantomimic delineation of the wild look, the vacant stare, the unnatural gait, the distorted countenance, the idiotic laugh, as well as the numberless caprices and sudden and apparently causeless exhibitions of joy and sorrow? Were such the law, the force of the testimony would be made to depend upon the powers of the witness for imitation."

1866, DOE, J., in Boardman v. Woodman, 47 N. H. 144: "From the nature of the subject, it cannot generally be so described by witnesses as to enable others to form an accurate judgment in regard to it. . . . The opinion of an unprofessional witness is competent, not because he can give no description of the appearances which indicate sanity or insanity, but because ordinarily he cannot give an adequate description of them." [1]

§ 1934. [1] The following are also leading opinions: 1855, Hempstead, J., in Kelly's Heirs v. McGuire, 15 Ark. 601; 1864, Campbell, J., in Beaubien v. Cicotte, 12 Mich. 489;

(2) The argument from practical policy is thus stated:

1866, DOE, J., in Boardman v. Woodman, 47 N. H. 144: "To ask a witness on such a trial whether Miss B. appeared peculiarly or strangely, was substantially to ask whether in the witness' opinion she was insane. The appellant's witnesses were allowed to testify that she appeared excited. It is some consolation to reflect that, where the refinements of the law attempt to enforce a rule not based upon reason or principle or the common experience of mankind, it is usually found impracticable in its application to the detail of a trial.[2] But this consolation is diminished by the fact that swift witnesses, however instructed, checked, and reprimanded, generally succeed in giving their opinions, while the cautious and impartial, whose opinions are much more valuable, are often limited to very meagre and unsatisfactory testimony."

1875, FOSTER, C. J., in Hardy v. Merrill, 56 N. H. 250: "Now let us imagine a scene that might very probably be exhibited in any court where the Massachusetts rule prevails. One witness says: 'He did not appear as usual; he did not appear natural.' 'Very well,' says a learned barrister, 'very well, Mr. Witness. You may say that, — that is quite regular, — that is your opinion. Now tell us in what respect he did not appear "as usual" or "natural."' 'Well, I can't describe it, but I should call it wandering, delirious; he was incoherent in his talk.' 'Very well, Mr. Witness, you acquit yourself like a sensible man. Now tell the jury whether in your opinion he was then of sound mind.' 'I object,' thunders the learned barrister on the other side. 'I object,' thunders the opposing junior. 'Counsel know better; it is an insult and an outrage to put such a question.' . . . The witness is confounded. The jury are confounded. Everybody is confounded, — except those who understand that 'incoherence of thought' and 'delirium,' vulgarly called 'wandering,' is not a state of mental unsoundness, is not mental disease; and that 'as usual' or 'natural' is not a condition of mental health. Whether it is such condition or not is a question then solemnly debated. . . . At the close of the scene which I have described, not a man of the laity goes out of the room without being disgusted with this exhibition of the law as a system of arbitrary rules, that ignoring all legal ideas decides upon a distinction purely verbal. And why should not the laymen be disgusted with the senseless subtlety which permits one party to show by his witness that a testator 'appeared perfectly natural,' and forbids the adverse party to offer the testimony of another witness that 'he did n't appear to be in his right mind'? . . . The selection of the phraseology in which such an opinion may be expressed, and that in which it cannot be uttered, depends on no legal principle, but on the mere whim of the Court. Such an arbitrary and senseless choice or rejection of terms in which to express an admissible opinion is mere, sheer logomachy, a waste of precious time given us for better purposes, a verbal quibble unworthy of the law and calculated to bring it into contempt."[3]

Before noting the state of the law in the different jurisdictions, three distinctions, occasionally made in the rulings, must be mentioned:

§ 1935. Facts Observed need not Precede Statement of Opinion. It has been already noticed (ante, §§ 1917, 1922) that the general rule, in a few 1870, Doe, J., in State v. Pike, 49 N. H. 414; 1852, Parker, P. J., in DeWitt v. Barley, 13 Barb. N. Y. 554; 1853, Denio, J., in De Witt v. Barley, 9 N. Y. 389.

[2] As was conceded by Colt, J., in 127 Mass. 423: "It is impossible to prevent witnesses from having opinions or to frame questions and restrain answers so as to leave no inference as to what such opinions are. Whatever facts a witness states, under any form of interrogatory, are stated because he has formed an opinion in advance that they support one side or the other and prove sanity or insanity. The difficulty is inherent."

[3] For an example of the kind of examination satirized by the learned judge, see Matter of Ross, 87 N. Y. 519 (1882); but a more glaring instance of the degradation of the general principle to a mere rule for legal guessing is found in Holcomb v. Holcomb, Paine v. Aldrich, N. Y., cited post, § 1938.

Courts, requires that a statement of the facts (or observed data) must precede the witness' statement of his opinion or conclusion; and that this on principle is an unsound limitation. Now the chief field for the application of this misconceived requirement has been the present topic; and in a number of jurisdictions the Courts are found requiring that "the facts," i. e. observed data, "must accompany (or precede) the opinion." This requirement in some of the remaining jurisdictions has been expressly negatived;[1] in the others it does not exist in practice, but has not been expressly passed upon.

§ 1936. Attesting Witnesses to Wills; their Opinions always Received. Whatever the result of the controversy as to lay-witnesses in general, all Courts have preserved the traditional practice of receiving the opinions of attesting witnesses to wills. The theory that the law had provided this preappointed testimony for the express purpose of securing witnesses to the testator's capacity as well as to his signature, as well as the unquestioned practice, prevailed over any theory that the judges might have as to the bearing of the Opinion rule.[1]

§ 1937. Opinion as to Sanity, distinguished from Opinion as to Testamentary or Criminal Capacity. Opinion as to sanity and opinion as to general testamentary or criminal capacity are entirely distinct. The latter sort of opinion is inadmissible (when it is) because a question of law may be involved, and witnesses' conclusions are not needed on such points. Rulings excluding such opinions (post, § 1958) may well coexist with rulings receiving opinions as to sanity.

§ 1938. State of the Law in the Various Jurisdictions. Of the state of the law in the various jurisdictions, it is enough to note in general that laymen's opinions are to-day everywhere conceded to be admissible, subject to local qualifications and quibbles.[1]

§ 1935. [1] 1909, State v. Rumble, 81 Kan. 16, 105 Pac. 1; 1881, Wood v. State, 58 Miss. 743; 1889, State v. Lewis, 20 Nev. 345, 22 Pac. 241; 1877, Garrison v. Blanton, 48 Tex. 303.

For the general doctrine that an expert need not state beforehand the facts observed by him, see ante, § 675.

§ 1936. [1] The fact is that the attesting-witness exception obtained even under the old sense of "opinion"; i. e. those whose names were subscribed were called and asked as to (1) the execution of the will, and (2) the testator's soundness of mind; and it was not necessary to show beforehand that they had intimately observed him or even known him at all; thus, their judgment might be "mere opinion," i. e. belief not founded on any observed data; yet it would be received by way of exception; the authorities are collected ante, § 689.

§ 1938. [1] Under each jurisdiction compare the cases cited ante, § 689, and post, §§ 1958, 1974:

Federal: Lay opinion is receivable: (1) Supreme Court: 1877, Insurance Co. v. Rodel, 95 U. S. 238; 1884, Connecticut Life Ins. Co. v. Lathrop, 111 U. S. 612, 4 Sup. 533; 1902, Raub v. Carpenter, 187 U. S. 159, 23 Sup. 72 (an opinion based on the person's general condition of health and "all you know about him yourself," excluded; "the opinion of the witness from facts he did not disclose was inadmissible"); 1903, Queenan v. Oklahoma, 190 U. S. 548, 23 Sup. 762 (cited ante, § 689); (2) Lower Courts: 1820, Harrison v. Rowan, 3 Wash. C. C. 582, 587; 1880, Kilgore v. Cross, 1 Fed. 582 (if accompanied by the facts); 1884, Parkhurst v. Hosford, 21 Fed. 833; 1896, Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Leubrie, 18 C. C. A. 332, 71 Fed. 843; 1909, Turner v. American Security & T. Co., 213 U. S. 257, 29 Sup. 420; 1910, Waller v. U. S., 8th C. C. A., 179 Fed. 810.

Alabama: A few early rulings excluded lay opinions, except those of attesting witnesses: 1843, State v. Brinyea, 5 Ala. 243, semble; 1848, McCurry v. Hooper, 12 Ala. 827; 1848, Watson v. Anderson, 13 Ala. 202 (lay witnesses were by agreement allowed to testify); 1850, McAllister v. State, 17 Ala. 437, semble; but the later and now established doctrine admits them, with the proviso that the facts (or observed data) must be stated in connection with the opinion: 1845, Bowling v. Bowling, 8 Ala. 541; 1848, Roberts v. Trawick, 13 Ala. 84; 1848, Rembert v. Brown, 14 Ala. 367 (which seems to be contra, but really only requires that the witness shall not express his conclusions without the grounds for them; the opinion does not refer to Bowling v. Bowling); 1849, Norris v. State, 16 Ala. 777; 1854, Florey's Ex'rs v. Florey, 24 Ala. 247; 1854, Powell v. State, 25 Ala. 27; 1859, Stubbs v. Houston, 33 Ala. 564; 1860, Re Carmichael, 36 Ala. 617; Fountain v. Brown, 38 Ala. 75; 1882, Ford v. State, 71 Ala. 397; 1895, Yarbrough v. State, 105 Ala. 43, 16 So. 758; 1900, Dominick v. Randolph, 124 Ala. 557, 27 So. 481; 1901, Caddell v. State, 129 Ala. 57, 30 So. 76 ("opinions affirming sanity may be based on a mere negation of unnatural or peculiar conduct, without a specification of facts"); 1904, Parrish v. State, 139 Ala. 16, 36 So. 1012 (an opinion to insanity must be preceded by a statement of observed facts; but an opinion to sanity need only negative generally any data of insanity); 1904, Porter v. State, 140 Ala. 87, 37 So. 81; 1905, Braham v. State, 143 Ala. 28, 38 So. 919 (rule followed; but the addition of "State any other peculiarities about him" will make the question objectionable; this sort of quiddity may seem to our Courts to be worth enunciating; but they may be assured that from the standpoint of clear-minded and efficient justice it is a senseless mumbling; here its absurdity of quibbling is further shown by the allowance in the same case of a question to another witness, "Did you observe anything unusual, peculiar, or unnatural?"); 1915, James v. State, 193 Ala. 55, 69 So. 569; 1915, Woodward Iron Co. v. Spencer, 194 Ala. 285, 69 So. 902.

Arkansas: Lay opinions are received: 1855, Kelly's Heirs v. McGuire, 15 Ark. 600; 1860, Beller v. Jones, 22 Ark. 95; 1895, Shaeffer v. State, 61 Ark. 245, 32 S. W. 679 ("not admissible until it first be shown by his own testimony that he has information on which it can reasonably be based"); 1898, Green v. State, 64 Ark. 523, 43 S. W. 973 (after stating the grounds); 1905, Byrd v. State, 76 Ark. 286, 88 S. W. 956; 1919, Walker v. State, 138 Ark. 517, 212 S. W. 319 (mental condition of a dying declarant, allowed).

California: Lay opinions were for a long time treated as admissible without qualification: C. C. P. § 1870, par. 10 ("the opinion of a subscribing witness to a writing, the validity of which is in dispute, respecting the mental sanity of the signer; and the opinion of an intimate acquaintance respecting the mental sanity of a person, the reason for the opinion being given," are admissible); 1880, Estate of Brooks, 54 Cal. 474 (yet, in Estate of Toomes, 54 Cal. 513, the point was treated as unsettled); 1881, People v. Wreden, 59 Cal. 393; and the rulings collected ante, § 689; but later rulings ignored this, and appear to have veered over to the Massachusetts distinction (infra), admitting only an opinion as to the rationality of specific acts: 1895, Wax's Estate, 106 Cal. 343, 39 Pac. 624; 1898, People v. Arrighini, 122 Cal. 123, 54 Pac. 591 (whether they saw "anything strange or peculiar" in the accused's manner, allowed); 1901, Keithley's Estate, 124 Cal. 9, 66 Pac. 5 (whether a person appeared rational, allowed); the prior decisions are now harmonized by the rule that a person who is an "intimate acquaintance," under C. C. P. § 1870, supra (cited and construed ante, § 689), may testify to the condition of sanity or insanity in general, while a person who is not an "intimate acquaintance," but has still observed the party's conduct, may state whether his conduct or appearance as observed was rational or irrational: 1904, People v. Manoogian, 141 Cal. 592, 75 Pac. 177.

Columbia (District): 1895, Taylor v. U. S., 7 D. C. App. 27, 34 (admissible, following Ins. Co. v. Lathrop U. S.); 1899, Horton v. U. S., 15 D. C. App. 310, 324 (the grounds of the opinion must first be stated); 1901, Raub v. Carpenter, 17 D. C. App. 505, 512 (similar).

Connecticut: Lay opinions are received, when accompanied by the facts observed: 1822, Grant v. Thompson, 4 Conn. 208; 1858, Dunham's Appeal, 27 Conn. 198; 1896, Kimberley's Appeal, 68 Conn. 428, 36 Atl. 847 (following Shanley's Appeal); 1900, State v. Cross, 72 Conn. 722, 46 Atl. 148; 1905, Nichols v. Wentz, 78 Conn. 429, 62 Atl. 610.

Delaware: Lay opinions have always been admitted: 1838, Duffield v. Morris, 2 Harringt. 375, 385 (but not without stating the facts; except for attesting witnesses); 1899, Steele v. Helm, 2 Marv. 237, 43 Atl. 153 (admissible after first stating the facts); 1901, Pritchard v. Henderson, 3 Pen. Del. 128, 50 Atl. 218, semble (the facts need not be stated beforehand).

Florida: Lay opinions are admissible: 1892, Armstrong v. State, 30 Fla. 170, 201, 11 So. 618 (admissible, after stating the data); 1906, Leaptrot v. State, 51 Fla. 57, 40 So. 616 (specific facts must be stated); 1919, Hall v. State, 78 Fla. 420, 83 So. 513 (rule of Armstrong v. State followed).

Georgia: Lay opinions are received when accompanied by the facts observed: 1849, Potts v. House, 6 Ga. 336; Foster v. Brooks, ib. 293; Dicken v. Johnson, 7 Ga. 486; 1853, Walker v. Walker, 14 Ga. 251; 1860, Choice v. State, 31 Ga. 466; 1886, Frizzell v. Reed, 77 Ga. 722, 731; 1895, Bowden v. Achor, 95 Ga. 243, 22 S. E. 271; 1898, Scott v. McKee, 105 Ga. 256, 31 S. E. 183 (subscribing witness need not state the data for his opinion); 1900, Herndon v. State, 111 Ga. 178, 36 S. E. 634; but an intervening decision has served to introduce an element of confusion and uncertainty: 1895, Welch v. Stipe, 95 Ga. 762, 22 S. E. 670

(this latest form of the test is: "Before the opinion of a non-expert witness can be considered it must appear not only that the witness has the opportunity of learning the facts upon which the opinion is predicated, but it must appear that the opinion was in fact based upon the facts and circumstances so ascertained, and not upon bare conjecture; and, in addition to this, it must appear that the witness, in the expression of the opinion, speaks with reference to the facts upon which it is predicated. . . . But where [as here] she neither states the facts coming under her observation nor states that the opinion expressed is the result of such observation, there is no possible theory upon which it can be received in evidence"); 1911, Strickland v. State, 137 Ga. 115, 72 S. E. 922 (lay opinion admitted; virtually repudiating the doctrine that the observed data must be stated by the witness beforehand, as laid down in Welch v. Stipe).

Hawaii: 1914, Sumner v. Jones, 22 Haw. 23 (data should be stated beforehand).

Idaho: 1921, Fritcher v. Kelly, — Ida. —, 201 Pac. 1037 (whether data need be stated beforehand, not decided).

Illinois: Lay opinions have always been admissible: 1867, Reed v. Taylor, 45 Ill. 489; 1875, Rutherford v. Morris, 77 Ill. 397; 1876, Carpenter v. Calvert, 83 Ill. 70; 1883, Upstone v. People, 109 Ill. 175; 1886, American Bible Soc. v. Price, 115 Ill. 642, 5 N. E. 126; 1893, Jamison v. People, 145 Ill. 357, 377, 34 N. E. 486 (admissible when stating the data); 1897, Grand Lodge v. Wieting, 168 Ill. 408, 48 N. E. 59; 1903, Wallace v. Whitman, 201 Ill. 59, 66 N. E. 311 (that a testator "acted foolish," excluded); 1904, Chicago U. T. Co. v. Lawrence, 211 Ill. 373, 71 N. E. 1024 ("If a non-expert witness gives an opinion without sufficient knowledge of facts to support it, opposing counsel may upon cross-examination show that it is of little value"); 1906, Compher v. Browning, 219 Ill. 429, 76 N. E. 678 (whether a testatrix was "easily influenced or susceptible to flattery," excluded); 1909, Snell v. Wilson, 239 Ill. 279, 87 N. E. 1022 (importance of latitude on cross-examination, emphasized); 1910, Graham v. Deuterman, 244 Ill. 124, 91 N. E. 61; 1913, Brainard v. Brainard, 259 Ill. 613, 103 N. E. 45 ("It is only after he has detailed the facts and circumstances . . . that the opinion becomes of any value"); 1916, Walker v. Struthers, 273 Ill. 387, 112 N. E. 961 (now said, citing only Graham v. Deuterman, that "before they may give their opinions," the data must be stated and the trial judge must pass upon their efficiency); 1915, Scott v. Couch, 271 Ill. 395, 111 N. E. 272; 1917, Hettick v. Searcy, 278 Ill. 116, 115 N. E. 842 (rule of Brainard v. Brainard followed).

Indiana: Lay opinions are received, whether with the requirement that the facts observed must accompany them, cannot be told: 1839, Doe v. Reagan, 5 Blackf. 217 (accompanied by the reasons); 1854, Kenworthy v. Williams, 5 Ind. 379; 1871, Rush v. Magee, 36 Ind. 78; 1872, Leach v. Prebster, 39 Ind. 494; 1879, State v. Newlin, 69 Ind. 112; 1881, Colee v. State, 75 Ind. 514 (if the facts are stated); 1882, Ryman v. Crawford, 86 Ind. 268; 1883, Sage v. State, 91 Ind. 143; 1884, Goodwin v. State, 95 Ind. 558; 1887, Cline v. Lindsay, 110 Ind. 337, 11 N. E. 441; 1888, Johnson v. Culver, 116 Ind. 289, 19 N. E. 129; 1892, Hamrick v. Hamrick, 134 Ind. 324, 34 N. E. 3; 1895, Jenney Electric Co. v. Branham, 145 Ind. 314, 41 N. E. 448; 1895, Bower v. Bower, 142 Ind. 194, 41 N. E. 523; 1900, Blume v. State, 154 Ind. 343, 56 N. E. 771 (if the facts are stated); 1906, Heaston v. Krieg, 167 Ind. 101, 77 N. E. 805; 1906, Swygart v. Willard, 166 Ind. 25, 76 N. E. 755 (rule applied); 1908, Lawson v. State, 171 Ind. 431, 84 N. E. 974 (the facts must be stated); 1915, Barr v. Sumner, 183 Ind. 402, 107 N. E. 675, 109 N. E. 193 (the opinion need not be rejected because the facts detailed as its basis do not of themselves fully support it); 1915, Eckman v. Funderburg, 183 Ind. 208, 108 N. E. 577 (whether the party's conversation was "intelligent," allowed).

Iowa: Lay opinions are to be received, with the requirement that the facts must accompany them: 1859, Pelamourges v. Clark, 9 Ia. 11 (here the Court professed to follow DeWitt v. Barley, N. Y., and permitted opinions to be given, provided the reasons are described as fully as possible); 1871, State v. Porter, 34 Ia. 137; 1876, Butler v. Ins. Co., 45 Ia. 97; 1880, Severin v. Zack, 55 Ia. 30, 7 N. W. 404 (accompanied by the facts); 1882, Smith v. Hickenbottom, 57 Ia. 736, 11 N. W. 664; 1887, Norman's Will, 72 Ia. 86, 33 N. W. 374 (same); State v. Winter, 72 Ia. 635, 34 N. W. 475 (same); 1888, Meeker v. Meeker, 74 Ia. 354, 37 N. W. 773; 1894, Denning v. Butcher, 91 Ia. 425, 430, 59 N. W. 69 (admissible, if the facts detailed satisfy the Court as a sufficient basis for the opinion; but this apparently means merely facts affecting the extent of his observation, under § 689, ante); 1896, Kostelecky v. Scherhart, 99 Ia. 120, 68 N. W. 591; 1897, Furlong v. Carraher, 102 Ia. 358, 71 N. W. 210 (applying the requirement strictly); 1897, State v. McDonough, 104 Ia. 6, 73 N. W. 357 (feeble-minded person); 1898, Manatt v. Scott, 106 Ia. 203, 76 N. W. 717; 1898, Goldthorp v. Goldthorp, 106 Ia. 722, 77 N. W. 471; 1899, Furlong v. Carraher, 108 Ia. 492, 79 N. W. 277 (the data must first be stated, except for a subscribing witness); 1899, Alvord v. Alvord, 109 Ia. 113, 80 N. W. 306 (the data stated must tend to support the witness' opinion); 1899, State v. Robbins, 10 Ia. 650, 80 N. W. 1061 (the question must be based not upon "your acquaintance" with him, but "the actions that you have seen"); 1900, State v. Wright, 112 Ia. 436, 84 N. W. 541; 1901, Hertrich v. Hertrich, 114 Ia. 643, 87 N. W. 689; 1904, Stutsman v. Sharpless, 125 Ia.

335, 101 N. W. 105; 1905, Lucas v. McDonald, 126 Ia. 678, 102 N. W. 532 (precedent statement of data not required for witness to sanity); 1906, State v. Hayden, 131 Ia. 1, 107 N. W. 929 (a witness to sanity need not limit his opinion to data expressly detailed by him); 1909, McBride v. McBride, 142 Ia. 169, 120 N. W. 709 (witness to mental unsoundness must speak only as to the period of observation; in this State, there is much petty and futile learning about the details of the present rule); 1909, Spiers v. Hendershott, 142 Ia. 446, 120 N. W. 1058 (non-expert must first detail all circumstances observed); 1920, Dolan v. Henry, 189 Ia. 104, 177 N. W. 712 (expert may testify to probable duration of a condition of mind at other times than those of observation; distinguishing the rule of McBride v. McBride, but not citing that case; see comment supra); 1921, Armstrong's Est., 191 Ia. 1210, 183 N. W. 386 (witness must first detail facts observed); 1918, Hanrahan's Estate, 182 Ia. 1242, 166 N. W. 529.

Kansas: Lay opinions may be received, when accompanied by the facts: 1884, Baughman v. Baughman, 32 Kan. 538, 4 Pac. 1003; 1898, State v. Beuerman, 59 Kan. 586, 53 Pac. 874; 1900, Zirkle v. Leonard, 61 Kan. 636, 60 Pac. 318; 1903, Grimshaw v. Kent, 67 Kan. 463, 73 Pac. 92; 1905, Howard v. Carter, 71 Kan. 85, 80 Pac. 61; 1909, State v. Rumble, 81 Kan. 16, 105 Pac. 1 (the witness may first state the observed data, or he need not if opportunity to cross-examine is given; prior rulings examined); 1918, Stafford v. Sutcliffe, 103 Kan. 592, 175 Pac. 981 (whether the witness must first state the data, not decided); 1920, Cunningham v. Cunningham, 107 Kan. 318, 191 Pac. 294 (that a testator was "not in his right mind").

Kentucky: Lay opinions have always been receivable, and at first without any qualification: 1829, M'Daniel's Will, 2 J. J. Marsh. 337; then the qualification was laid down (under the erroneous impression that the Court was thus following the practice of Massachusetts and Pennsylvania) that the facts must accompany the opinion: 1843, Hunt's Heirs v. Hunt, 3 B. Monr. 577; 1844, in Jones' Adm'r v. Perkins, 5 B. Monr. 223, semble: but this qualification seems since to have been dropped: 1878, Brown v. Com., 14 Bush 404; 1883, Wise v. Foote, 81 Ky. 12; 1894, Newcomb's Ex'rs v. Newcomb, 96 Ky. 120, 27 S. W. 997; 1895, Phelps v. Com., — Ky. —, 32 S. W. 470; 1896, American Accident Co. v. Fiddler, — Ky. —, 36 S. W. 528; 1900, Abbott v. Com., 107 Ky. 624, 55 S. W. 196; but the qualification referred to was once more dallied with: 1906, Stafford v. Tarter, — Ky. —, 96 S. W. 1127; 1911, Banks v. Com., 145 Ky. 800, 141 S. W. 380; 1921, Baker v. Lemon, 192 Ky. 473, 233 S. W. 1050 (will).

Louisiana: 1875, State v. Coleman, 27 La. An. 691, 692 (opinion inadmissible "without detailing the facts"); 1901, State v. Smith, 106 La. 33, 30 So. 248 (opinion admissible when the data for it are stated); 1904, State v. Lyons, 113 La. 959, 37 So. 890 (an opinion to sanity need not be preceded by a recital of the facts and reasons; as to insanity, the question is left open).

Maine: Here, following the Massachusetts doctrine, lay opinions (except those of attesting witnesses) were excluded: 1831, Ware v. Ware, 8 Me. 55 (excluding even medical testimony); 1859, Wyman v. Gould, 47 Me. 159; 1870, Robinson v. Adams, 62 Me. 410 (negative opinion, that "he observed nothing peculiar," held not to be excluded by the rule); 1885, Fayette v. Chesterville, 77 Me. 33.

Maryland: Lay opinion was originally admitted without qualification: 1844, Brooke v. Berry, 2 Gill 98; and this apparently still obtains for attesting witnesses: 1877, Williams v. Williams, 47 Md. 325; but, as to other lay witnesses, the requirement applies that the facts observed must accompany the opinion: 1848, Brooke v. Townshend, 7 Md. 27; 1852, Stewart v. Redditt, 3 Md. 78; 1854, Dorsey v. Warfield, 7 Md. 73; 1862, Weems v. Weems, 19 Md. 344; 1867, Higgins v. Carlton, 28 Md. 137; 1872, Waters v. Waters, 35 Md. 542; 1877, Williams v. Williams, 47 id. 326; 1882, Chase v. Winans, 59 Md. 482, semble; 1901, Safe Deposit & T. Co. v. Berry, 93 Md. 560, 49 Atl. 401 (opinion inadmissible unless the witness first so states facts that it may be seen whether his conclusion "has any relation to or can fairly be said to be dependent on them"); 1901, Brashears v. Orme, 93 Md. 442, 49 Atl. 620 (similar); 1902, Jones v. Collins, 94 Md. 403, 51 Atl. 398 (whether the witness "had observed anything that indicated a lack of mind or of understanding on his part," allowed; a subscribing witness and a physician may express an opinion without first reciting the facts observed; Pearce, J., diss. on the latter point); 1904, Watts v. State, 99 Md. 30, 57 Atl. 542 (rule applied to exclude and admit certain opinions); 1905, Struth v. Decker, 100 Md. 368, 59 Atl. 727 (some opinions admitted and some excluded on the facts; opinion obscure); 1914, Whisner v. Whisner, 122 Md. 195, 89 Atl. 393 (the witness must first state the data for his opinion).

Massachusetts: In this jurisdiction, the 'fons et origo mali', and for long the main support of the error, there appear three distinct stages in the progress of doctrine. (1) First, a group of early rulings, extending down to the second quarter of the 1800s, and dominated by the older sense of "opinion" (ante § 1917) as "belief not resting on personal observation," excluded "mere opinion" (unless from attesting witnesses); but did not exclude the opinions of those lay witnesses who spoke from personal observation and were ready to show that they had sufficiently observed: 1807, Chase v. Lincoln, 3 Mass. 237; 1807, Poole v. Richardson, 3 Mass. 330

("other [than subscribing] witnesses were allowed to testify to the appearance of the testator, and to any particular facts from which the state of his mind might be inferred, but not to testify merely their opinion or judgment"); 1808, Buckminster v. Perry, 4 Mass. 594 ("Two or three witnesses [not subscribing ones] were of opinion that the testator was much broken and very forgetful about the time the will was made; and they testified particularly to several slight instances of a want of recollection"); 1811, Hathorn v. King, 8 Mass. 371 (physicians present at a deathbed were allowed to give their opinions, after stating the facts supporting them); 1812, Dickinson v. Barber, 9 Mass. 225 (physicians who gave mere opinions, stating no facts observed by themselves and predicating no hypothesis of others' testimony, were excluded); 1827, Needham v. Ide, 5 Pick. 511 ("mere opinions of other [than subscribing] witnesses were not competent evidence, and were not entitled to any weight, further than they were supported by the facts, and circumstances proved at the trial"). (2) Next, the true meaning of Poole v. Richardson was misunderstood, and in a series of rulings the doctrine was established that lay opinion (in the sense of an inference from personally observed data) as to a person's sanity was inadmissible: 1854, Com. Wilson, 1 Gray 339; 1856, Baxter v. Abbott, 7 Gray 79; 1861, Hubbell v. Bissell, 2 All. 200; 1861, Com. v. Fairbanks, 2 All. 511; 1868, Townsend v. Pepperell, 99 Mass. 42, 46; 1868, Hastings v. Rider, 99 Mass. 625. (3) By this time the New Hampshire decisions had become familiar to the profession, and the unsoundness of the Massachusetts doctrine had been frequently pointed out; and in the last quarter of the 1800s comes a third stage, in which an effort is made to confine the orthodox rule within narrowest limits, and while acknowledging its sway, to avoid some of its unfortunate effects; in the following rulings all the questions named were held proper, except as otherwise noted: 1872, Barker v. Comins, 110 Mass. 480, 487 ("Did you notice any change in his intelligence or understanding, any want of coherence in his remarks?"); 1874, Nash v. Hunt, 116 Mass. 251 ("observed no incoherence of thought, nor anything unusual or singular in respect to his mental condition"); 1875, May v. Bradlee, 127 Mass. 418, 422 ("any fact which led you to infer that there was any derangement of intellect"); 1884, Com. v. Brayman, 136 Mass. 439, 440 (whether a person had failed, mentally or physically, at a certain time); 1886, Cowles v. Merchants, 140 Mass. 381, 5 N. E. 288 (going back to the old strictness); 1891, Poole v. Dean, 152 Mass. 590, 26 N. E. 406 ("ordinary business capacity" but this was an expert opinion, and perhaps was considered from the will-capacity standpoint); 1891, McConnell v. Wildes, 153 Mass. 490, 26 N. E. 1114 (following May v. Bradlee); 1892, Smith v. Smith, 157 Mass. 389, 32 N. E. 348 ("whether from the general appearance of the testator he considered him capable of making a contract or of transacting important business," excluded; following "the rule early adopted and uniformly adhered to [!] by this Court"); 1896, Laplante v. Warren Cotton Mills, 165 Mass. 487, 43 N. E. 294 (that "he was not a bright boy," allowed; note that other cases involving, as here, injuries to an employee seem to be concerned with the relevancy of the fact, and not with the opinion rule); 1897, Clark v. Clark, 168 Mass. 523, 47 N. E. 510 ("whether your sister has failed or has not failed in her mental capacity during the past five years"); 1901, Hogan v. Roche's Heirs, 179 Mass. 510, 61 N. E. 57 (whether a testatrix "knew what she was talking about" in a certain utterance); 1902, Ratigan v. Judge, 181 Mass. 572, 64 N. E. 204 ("Was he subject to delusions or hallucinations?" held improper); this modified result is accompanied by a decided qualification of theory, closely approaching that of the New York Court, but less liberal in form; this modification (as put forward in Nash v. Hunt, supra) admits such evidence as does not involve "as opinion as to the condition of the mind itself, but only of its manifestations in conversation with the witness"; 1904, McCoy v. Jordan, 184 Mass. 575, 69 N. E. 358 ("From these facts . . . what do you infer in your mind as to Mr. J's mental capacity?" excluded; but "Did you ever notice anything to indicate that he was not of sound mind?" admitted; this local rule of logomachy, unworthy though it is of the dignity of justice, seems to be consistently and skilfully applied by bench and bar); 1908, Gorham v. Moor, 197 Mass. 522, 84 N. E. 436 (whether they ever saw or heard anything that indicated anything singular or unusual respecting her mental condition, allowed); 1909, Jenkins v. Weston, 200 Mass. 488, 86 N. E. 955; 1911, Leary v. Webber Co., 210 Mass. 68, 96 N. E. 136 (rule applied to testimony about a half-witted employee); 1912, Com. v. Spencer, 212 Mass. 438, 99 N. E. 266 (noting that physician's opinion is an exception to the general rule); 1917, Raymond v. Flint, 225 Mass. 521, 114 N. E. 811 ("Did you observe any facts . . . by your sister's conversation, or notice anything that indicated a failing of her mind?" allowed); 1919, Old Colony Trust Co. v. Di Cola, 233 Mass. 119, 123 N. E. 454 ("only the witnesses to the will, the testator's family physician, and experts . . . are competent to give their opinions of the testator's mental condition"); 1922, Neill v. Brackett, — Mass. —, 135 N. E. 690 (family physician may testify to testator's mental condition; layman may testify to "appearance of marked mental decline").

Michigan: Lay opinions have always been admissible, but the modern rulings show the influence of the qualification that "facts" must accompany the inference: 1864, Beaubien v. Cicotte, 12 Mich. 489 (opinion by Campbell, J.); 1870, Kempsey v. McGinniss, 21 Mich. 128; 1873, Johnson v. McKee, 27 Mich. 473; 1878, People v. Finlay, 38 Mich. 484; 1879, Fraser v. Jennison, 42 Mich. 215, 3 N. W. 882 (whether deceased was eccentric, allowed); 1883, Rice v. Rice, 50 Mich. 448, 15 N. W. 545; 1892, Prentis v. Bates, 93 Mich. 234, 242, 53 N. W. 153 ("Before the witness is permitted to express an opinion, he must testify to something in the appearance of the party which is sufficient at least to justify the inference of incompetency"), 1893, Lynch v. Doran, 95 Mich. 395, 407, 54 N. W. 882 (similar); 1893, O'Connor v. Madison, 98 Mich. 183, 187, 57 N. W. 105 (the witness must first state some facts "that legitimately tends to show incompetency"); 1894, People v. Borgetto, 99 Mich. 336, 58 N. W. 328 (similar); 1896, Sagar v. Hogmire, 108 Mich. 410, 66 N. W. 327 (after stating the facts); 1897, Sullivan v. Foley, 112 Mich. 1, 70 N. W. 322 (following Prentis v. Bates); 1898, Lamb v. Lippincott, 115 Mich. 611, 73 N. W. 887 (witness to insanity must first state some conduct tending to show it; but witness to sanity need not state conduct tending to show it); 1900, People v. Casey, 124 Mich. 279, 82 N. W. 883 (on this point, long settled locally, the opinion cites four of the above decisions in its own Court, and eleven of other Courts); 1904, Roberts v. Bidwell, 136 Mich. 191, 98 N. W. 1000 (rule of O'Connor v. Madison applied); 1905, Hibbard v. Baker, 141 Mich; 124, 104 N. W. 399 (rule of Prentis v. Bates applied, in an instance which glaringly exhibits the fallacy of that rule); 1917, Walsh's Estate, 196 Mich. 42, 163 N. W. 70 (testator).

Minnesota: Lay opinions are admissible, when preceded by the facts observed: 1880, Pinney's Will, 27 Minn. 281, 6 N. W. 791, 7 N. W. 144; 1886, Woodcock v. Johnson, 36 Minn. 218, 30 N. W. 894; 1903, Scott v. Hay, 90 Minn. 304, 97 N. W. 106 (and even experts must first detail the facts observed).

Mississippi: Lay opinions are admissible: 1881, Wood v. State, 58 Miss. 742; 1884, Reed v. State, 62 Miss. 408; 1896, Sheehan v. Kearney, 82 Miss. 688, 21 So. 46; 1921, Ward v. Ward, 124 Miss. 697, 87 So. 153 (but the data observed must first be stated).

Missouri: Lay opinions are admissible, but the original rule has been marred by the modern qualification that the "facts" must first be stated: 1848, Baldwin v. State, 12 Mo. 234; 1862, Farrell's Adm'r v. Brennan's Adm'x, 32 Mo. 334; 1870, State v. Klinger, 46 Mo. 228; 1876, Crowe v. Peters, 63 Mo. 435; 1877, Moore v. Moore, 67 Mo. 195; 1881, State v. Erb, 74 Mo. 204; 1882, Appleby v. Brock, 76 Mo. 317; 1887, State v. Bryant, 93 Mo. 299, 6 S. W. 102; 1891, State v. Williamson, 106 Mo. 170, 17 S. W. 172; 1899, State v. Bronstine, 147 Mo. 520, 49 S. W. 512; 1899, State v. Soper, 148 Mo. 235, 49 S. W. 1007 (but witnesses to sanity need not state the data beforehand); 1900, State v. Holloway, 156 Mo. 222, 56 S. W. 734; 1906, State v. Speyer, 194 Mo. 459, 91 S. W. 1075 (exclusion of the reasons for the opinion of insanity, held erroneous); 1915, State v. Ross, — Mo. —, 178 S. W. 475 (data need not be stated beforehand); 1921, Mayes v. Mayes, — Mo. —, 234 S. W. 100 (whether a testator was of sound mind, allowed); 1921, Rayl v. Golfinopulos, — Mo. —, 233 S. W. [illegible] (will). 1969

Montana: Lay opinions are admissible: Rev. C. 1921, § 10531, par. 10 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1870); 1889, Terr. v. Roberts, 9 Mont. 15, 22 Pac. 132.

Nebraska: Lay opinion is admissible, after the "facts" are first stated: 1879, Schlencker v. State, 9 Nebr. 241, 1 N. W. 857; 1893, Shults v. State, 37 Nebr. 481, 496, 55 N. W. 1080; 1895, Pflueger v. State, 46 Nebr. 493, 64 N. W. 1094; 1896, Hay v. Miller, 48 Nebr. 156, 66 N. W. 1115; Hoover v. State, 48 Nebr. 184, 66 N. W. 1117; 1898, Lamb v. Lynch, 56 Nebr. 135, 76 N. W. 428 (admissible, if the main facts are first detailed to the jury); 1898, Snider v. State, 56 Nebr. 309, 76 N. W. 574; 1904, Bothwell v. State, 70 Nebr. 747, 99 N. W. 669; 1906, Isaac v. Halderman, 76 Nebr. 823, 107 N. W. 1013; 1907, Wilson's Estate, 78 Nebr. 758, 111 N. W. 788 (where the witnesses testify to sanity, the particular data need not first be stated; prior cases reviewed).

Nevada: Lay opinion is admissible: 1889, State v. Lewis, 20 Nev. 345, 22 Pac. 241.

New Hampshire: The early practice here was probably like the English practice (as Mr. J. Doe points out in 49 N. H. 417). But in 1866, after the supposed doctrine of Poole v. Richardson, Mass., had raised the widespread controversy, the New Hampshire Court laid down the following rule, in effect the same as the modern Massachusetts rule: 1866, Boardman v. Woodman, 47 N. H. 134 (Sargent, J.: "[The witness] may state the acts and sayings of the person whose sanity is questioned, and may describe his appearance, but may not give his present opinion as to his sanity or insanity, nor state the impression made upon witness' mind at the time of the acts, sayings, or appearances testified to, in regard to the sanity or insanity of such person at such times"); but from this result (the Court is composed of three members) Mr. J. Doe dissented in a vigorous opinion (quoted ante, § 1934). Then in 1870, the majority view was re-declared in State v. Pike, 49 N. H. 407, Mr. J. Doe again dissenting, in an opinion based on a renewed and careful study of the subject; in 1871, in State v. Jones, 50 N. H. 381, and in 1874, in State v. Archer, 54 N. H. 465, the same result was repeated. In 1874, the Democratic majority in the Legislature, for political reasons, abolished the existing Supreme Court (whose members were Republicans) and created a new one; and in the new appointments two of the Republican ex-judges, not including Judge Doe, were given positions; in 1876, by another political convulsion, there was another "remodelling" of the Court, and Mr. Doe was now appointed Chief Justice. But in the meantime, and during his absence from the Bench, the Court as reconstituted by his political opponents repudiated the former precedents, and adopted in Hardy v. Merrill, 56 N. H. 227 (1875), the policy for which Mr. J. Doe had so long contended, — that of the unrestricted admission of lay opinion; the result being in an unusual way a tribute to his sagacity and learning; that policy has since remained the law of the State: 1888, Carpenter v. Hatch, 64 N. H. 576, 15 Atl. 219; 1903, Pattee v. Whitcomb, 72 N. H. 249, 56 Atl. 459 (discretion of the trial Court controls as to the witness' qualification).

New Jersey: Lay opinion is admissible: 1854, Matter of Vanauken, 10 N. J. Eq. 186 (but the witness must give the "facts"); 1854, Stackhouse v. Horton, 15 N. J. Eq. 208; 1896, Genz v. State, 58 N. J. L. 482, 34 Atl. 816; 1916, Re McCraven, 87 N. J. Eq. 28, 99 Atl. 619 (the witness may "state facts as to the actions of the alleged lunatic, and then tell what, in his or her opinion, they indicate as to soundness or unsoundness of mind").

New Mexico: 1896, Territory v. Padilla, 8 N. M. 510, 46 Pac. 346 (only the details are admissible, not the opinion; purporting to follow the Massachusetts rule); 1911, Terr. v. McNab, 16 N. M. 625, 120 Pac. 907 (admitting lay opinion; following Com. M. L. Ins. Co. v. Lathrop, U. S., but ignoring Terr. v. Padilla).

New York: Here the profession has been vouchsafed what seem to be five distinct stages of doctrine. (1) First is found, as in other early rulings in this country, the traditional English practice of receiving lay opinions without question: 1828, Fisher v. Clark, 1 Paige Ch. 173, Walworth, C. (question not raised); 1847, Arnot v. People, 4 Denio 9. (2) Next is found the opposite doctrine — of entire exclusion — adopted by a divided Court; the dissenting opinion of Mr. J. Denio, and the majority opinion of Mr. J. Mason, and that of the eminent Mr. P. J. Parker, are leading opinions: 1853, DeWitt v. Barley, 9 N. Y. 387 (by Ruggles, C. J., Johnson, Taggart, Gardiner, and Mason, JJ.; against Denio, Willard, and Morse, JJ.). (3) Next after five years, in the course of the same litigation, the original doctrine obtained the upper hand; the membership of the Court having been almost entirely changed, the dissenting opinion of Denio, J., in the former decision, now being adopted: 1858, DeWitt v. Barley, 17 N. Y. 340 (opinion by Selden, J., adopting the dissenting opinion of Denio, J., in 9 N. Y.; concurred in by Johnson, C. J., Comstock, Denio, Roosevelt, Harris, Pratt, and Strong, JJ.); 1862, Delafield v. Parish, 25 N. Y. 9, 37, 82, 165. (4) It chanced, however, that Mr. J. Selden, in his opinion, employed the following passage: "It is required that the jury should be furnished with every practicable means of testing the accuracy of the opinion. The witness must state, as far as he is able, the facts and reasons upon which he bases his conclusions; and if the jury are able to see from this statement that such conclusion is unfounded, they are of course to disregard it"; this requirement, perfectly proper for all testimony whatsoever, and not constituting in any way a modification of the rule adopted, served to create a misunderstanding, and led within a decade to the fourth form of doctrine, practically the same as the third stage of the Massachusetts rule, as soon afterward promulgated: 1866, Clapp v. Fullerton, 34 N. Y. 194; Porter, J.: "[The layman] may characterize as rational or irrational the acts or declarations to which he testifies. . . . But to render his opinion admissible even to this extent, it must be limited to his conclusions from the specific facts he discloses. . . . He may testify to the impression produced by what he witnessed; but he is not legally competent to express an opinion on the general question whether the mind of the testator was sound or unsound"; this form of doctrine prevailed for a quarter of a century: 1867, O'Brien v. People, 36 N. Y. 282; 1881, Rider v. Miller, 86 N. Y. 511; 1882, Matter of Ross, 87 N. Y. 519; 1884, Holcomb v. Holcomb, 95 N. Y. 320; People v. Conroy, 97 N. Y. 67. (5) As between this form, and a rule admitting a general opinion absolutely, it would hardly be supposed that a crevice could be found in which a new species of legal flora could find nourishment; but there was, and it was soon filled as follows: The layman may speak, it was said, as to the person's general rationality with reference to a particular appearance or act of conduct, but not as to that general rationality independent of such appearances or acts; thus, in 1889, People v. Packenham, 115 N. Y. 202, 21 N. E. 1035, the question "from what you saw and heard him say at that time, was he rational or irrational?" was held admissible; and a further example of the verbalistic acuteness necessarily cultivated by this logomachy was the ruling in Paine v. Aldrich (1892), 133 N. Y. 546, 30 N. E. 725, declaring this question reprehensible: "Taking into consideration these facts that you have stated here in your testimony to-day, which you learned from your contact with Mr. Paine and from his conversations with you, what impression did he give you as to whether or not he was rational or irrational?" while this one was pronounced unexceptionable: "From the conversations you had with him and from his actions, his acts in your presence, were those conversations or those acts those of a rational or an irrational man?"; the rulings since Paine v. Aldrich consist of attempts to effectuate the above distinctions of tweedledum and tweedledee: 1893, People v. Taylor, 138 N. Y. 398, 409, 34 N. E. 275 (acts stated may be spoken of as rational or the reverse); 1895,

People v. Strait, 148 N. Y. 566, 42 N. E. 1045 (lay witnesses may say "whether the acts and declarations testified to impressed them as rational or irrational," but cannot give an opinion as to "general soundness or unsoundness"); 1896, People v. Youngs, 151 N. Y. 210, 45 N. E. 460 (a question whether the person's acts and conversations were rational or irrational, held improper in form, because it did not call merely for the impression made upon the observer, but for a statement as to the absolute rationality, etc.; yet in this instance the testimony was held practically to answer the rule); 1897, People v. Burgess, 153 N. Y. 561, 47 N. E. 889 ("acts impressing the witness as rational," allowed); 1897, People v. Koerner, 154 N. Y. 355, 48 N. E. 730 ("whether such acts or conduct impressed them as rational or irrational," allowed); 1898, Wyse v. Wyse, 155 N. Y. 367, 49 N. E. 942; "What impression did Mr. W.'s language and conduct make upon your mind as to the condition of his mind? Was it rational or irrational?" held improper); 1902, People v. Truck, 170 N. Y. 203, 63 N. E. 281 ("A witness may state whether the actions of a person impressed him as rational or irrational, but can go no further"); of these rulings all that can be said is that they belong rather to some system which decides controversies by mumbling magic formulas before a fetish; 1904, People v. Spencer, 179 N. Y. 408, 72 N. E. 461 (rule applied); 1906, Myer's Will, 184 N. Y. 54, 76 N. E. 920 ("What was the impression these acts and conversations made on you as to whether they were rational or irrational?" "She was irrational"; the answer held improper); 1906, People v. Pekarz, 185 N. Y. 470, 78 N. E. 294 (a sweetened morsel of quibbling; the Court also complacently declares that the modern tweedledee rule has "run through the cases from an early day"!); 1909, People v. Hill, 195 N. Y. 16 87 N. E. 813 (quibbles applied); 1921, Eno's Will, Sup. App. Div., 187 N. Y. Suppl. 757, 775 (a good example of the futile nonsensicality of the New York rule).

North Carolina: Lay opinion has always been admissible: 1832, Griffin v. Ing, 3 Dev. 356; 1839, Norwood v. Marrow, 4 Dev. & B. 442; 1841, Clary v. Clary, 2 Ired. 70 (quoted ante, § 1934); 1863, McDougald v. McLean, Winst. 120; 1874, State v. Ketchey, 70 N. C. 624; 1881, McLeary v. Norment, 84 N. C. 236; 1882, Horah v. Knox, 87 N. C. 483; 1884, Barker v. Pope, 91 N. C. 168; 1885, McRae v. Malloy, 93 N. C. 159; 1888, State v. Potts, 100 N. C. 462, 6 S. E. 657; 1900, Whitaker v. Hamilton, 126 N. C. 465, 35 S. E. 815; 1921, White v. Hines, 182 N. C. 275, 109 S. E. 31 (that the party was "crazy" and "not normal," allowed); 1915, Rawling's Will, 170 N. C. 58, 86 S. E. 794.

North Dakota: 1902, State v. Barry, 11 N. D. 428, 92 N. W. 809 (admissible, after stating the observed data).

Ohio: Lay opinion is admissible: 1833, State v. Gardiner, Wright 398 (no question raised); 1843, Clark v. State, 12 Oh. 487.

Oklahoma: 1901, Queenan v. Terr., 11 Okl. 261, 71 Pac. 218 (New York rulings followed, without citing any others; in apparent ignorance of their heterodox status and their inconsistencies); 1915, Farmers' & Merchants' Bank v. Haile, 46 Okl. 636, 149 Pac. 214; 1920, Almerigi v. State, — Okl. Cr. App. —, 188 Pac. 1094 (admissible); 1921, Payton v. Shipley, 80 Okl. 145, 195 Pac. 125 (testamentary competency; lay witnesses must state the facts on which their opinion is based).

Oregon: Laws 1920, § 727, par. 10 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1870); 1906 Lassas v. McCarty, 47 Or. 474, 84 Pac. 76 (statute applied).

Pennsylvania: the condition of the rulings in this State is a singular one; the following congeries of cases speaks for itself; certainly no one outside the Court should venture to define the exact state of the doctrine; 1821, Rambler v. Tryon, 7 S. & R. 92 (attesting will-witness' opinion receivable absolutely, as in all subsequent rulings; ordinary lay-witness' opinion receivable when accompanied by the grounds for it); 1822, Irish v. Smith, 8 S. & R. 576 (lay-witness' opinion receivable, with an implication only that the facts observed must accompany it); 1849, Logan v. McGinnis, 12 Pa. St. 31 (the novel distinction was taken that attesting witnesses to the will could give their opinion without facts, while other persons could give facts but not opinions; none of the preceding rulings in this State being examined); 1854, Wilkinson v. Pearson, 23 Pa. 119 (returning to the ruling of Irish v. Smith); 1861, Bricker v. Lightner's Ex'r, 40 Pa. 205 (admitting opinions of laymen with the facts of their observation); 1861, Dean v. Fuller, 40 Pa. 478 (requiring of subscribing witnesses to a will the opinion only, but of deed-witnesses, and all others, the facts as well as the opinion, — though as to the opinion of the latter group the Court hesitates); 1867, Titlow v. Titlow, 54 Pa. 223 (the still different statement is made that subscribing witnesses may give opinions without the facts, but others may not; yet in the next sentence the former alternative is contradicted, and the effect of the opinion becomes unintelligible; Bricker v. Lightner's Ex'r is the only local authority cited); 1868, Rouch v. Zehring, 59 Pa. 78 (requiring the facts to accompany the opinion); 1869, Dickinson v. Dickinson, 61 Pa. 405 (here a new form appears; the ordinary witness may give facts and then his opinion, but the facts must "tend to show want of testamentary capacity," and the witness was here declared incompetent because the facts detailed by her did not seem to the judge to indicate insanity); 1871, Pidcock v. Potter, 68 Pa. 351 (here we learn that "it has always been the rule, after a non-professional witness has stated the facts upon which his opinion is founded," to admit his opinion; and that "from Rambler v. Tryon . . . to Dickinson v. Dickinson, our decisions have been uniform on this point"); 1884, First Nat'l Bank v. Wireback's Ex'r, 106 Pa. 45, Clark, J. (here Pidcock v. Potter is ignored, and Dickinson v. Dickinson's peculiar form is reverted to; in this case "the particular facts, stated by each of these several witnesses must be taken alone, as the basis of the proposed opinion of that witness; thus considered, they are found to be in themselves inconclusive in their nature; . . . such facts could not reasonably be assumed as the basis of an opinion," and it was excluded); 1885, March 9, Taylor v. Com., 109 Pa. 270, Mercur, C. J. (here the form in Pidcock v. Potter is now reinstated, no authorities being mentioned; "the jury could decide whether those acts and conversations justified the conclusion the witnesses drew therefrom"); 1885, May 29, Shaver v. McCarthy, 110 Pa. 348, 5 Atl. 614, Clark, J. (here the Dickinson v. Dickinson peculiarity — "facts and circumstances must furnish the ground of the opinion expressed; whether they are relevant and pertinent for the purpose is a question for the determination of the Court" — is once more resorted to, Pidcock v. Potter not being mentioned); 1891, Elcessor v. Elcessor, 146 Pa. 363, 23 Atl. 230, Mitchell, J. (to the same effect, — "facts that afford a fair foundation for an opinion"); 1892, Doran v. McConlogue, 150 Pa. 98, 24 Atl. 357 ("Without such facts, as we have often held, opinions are of no value"); since 1892, the following rulings seem to exclude opinion more rigidly, under the distinctions peculiar to New York, local precedents being temporarily laid aside: 1899, Com. v. Wireback, 190 Pa. 138, 42 Atl. 542 ("From what you saw of him, do you think he was of sound or unsound mind?", excluded; "from the conversation you had . . . and from your observation . . ., did you or did you not discover anything that would lead you to believe he was of unsound mind?", admitted); 1899, Com. v. Cressinger, 193 Pa. 326, 44 Atl. 433 (Com. v. Wireback approved); 1901, Hepler v. Hosack, 197 Pa. 631, 47 Atl. 847 (approved); 1903, Com. v. Gerhardt, 205 Pa. 387, 54 Atl. 1029 (Com. v. Wireback approved).

Philippine Isl. C. C. P. 1901, § 298, par. 10 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1870).

South Carolina: Lay opinion is receivable: 1794, Heyward v. Hazard, Bay 335; 1903, Scarborough v. Baskin, 65 S. C. 558, 44 S. E. 63 (after stating the facts).

South Dakota: Lay opinion is admitted: 1903, Halde v. Schultz, 17 S. D. 465, 97 N. W. 369.

Tennessee: Lay opinion is receivable; attesting witnesses stating merely the opinion without any grounds, and others preceding their opinion by the facts observed: 1835, Gibson v. Gibson, 9 Yerg. 332; 1859, Norton v. Moore, 3 Head 480; 1865, Van Huss v. Rainbolt, 2 Coldw. 141 (that a subscribing witness need not state his grounds); 1868, Puryear v. Reese, 6 Coldw. 23; 1872, Dove v. State, 3 Heisk. 365; 1900, Jones v. Galbraith, — Tenn. —, 59 S. W. 350 (in chancery, it is not improper if the data are given by answers subsequent to the opinion expressed); 1907, Atkins v. State, 119 Tenn. 458, 105 S. W. 353.

Texas: In 1855, Gehrke v. State, 13 Tex. 572, lay testimony was rejected, on grounds somewhat confused; in 1859, Cooper v. State, 23 Tex. 337, the propriety of such testimony was assumed as beyond dispute; while in 1873, Hickman v. State, 38 Tex. 191, the matter was left undecided; in subsequent rulings the testimony is admitted, when accompanied with the facts on which it is based: 1874, Thomas v. State, 40 Tex. 63 (no local precedents cited); Holcomb v. State, 41 Tex. 125 (no local precedents cited); 1877, Garrison v. Blanton, 48 Tex. 303; 1885, Haney v. Clark, 75 Tex. 93, 96; 1891, Scalf v. Collin Co., 80 Tex. 517, 16 S. W. 314; 1895, Brown v. Mitchell, 87 Tex. 140, 26 S. W. 1059; 1911, Turner v. State, 61 Tex. Cr. 97, 133 S. W. 1052 (the witness must first state the conduct which he has observed; but if his opinion is that the person is sane, it is sufficient to state that he has never noticed conduct indicating insanity; prior cases reviewed); 1921, Barton v. State, 89 Tex. Cr. 387, 230 S. W. 989 (rule held not applicable to testimony that witness "did not notice anything peculiar or unusual about his mental condition," because this was not an "opinion as to the sanity or insanity of the appellant"; we mortals do delight to fool ourselves with words!).

Utah: 1898, Christensen's Estate, 17 Utah 412, 53 Pac. 1003 (lay opinion admissible).

Vermont: In 1835, Lester v. Pittsford, 7 Vt. 159, lay opinion was admitted; in 1845, Morse v. Crawford, 17 Vt. 502, the qualification was appended that the facts supporting the opinion must accompany it; and this the subsequent cases follow; 1861, Crane v. Crane, 33 Vt. 15; 1875, Hathaway's Adm'r v. Ins. Co., 48 Vt. 350; 1878, State v. Hayden, 51 Vt. 303; 1883, Westmore v. Sheffield, 56 Vt. 247; 1892, Fairchild v. Bascomb, 64 Vt. 243, 24 Atl. 255; 1896, Frary v. Gusha, 66 Vt. 264; 1898 Re McCabe, 70 Vt. 155, 40 Atl. 52 (by a layman, that the person charged as insane was suffering from paresis, the witness having observed the same symptoms as in his own father similarly afflicted, excluded); 1901, Sargent v. Burton, 74 Vt. 24, 52 Atl. 72; 1919, Clogston's Estate, 93 Vt. 46, 106 Atl. 594 (certain testimony held inadmissible, as based on improper data).

Virginia: Lay opinion is receivable: 1825, Burton v. Scott, 3 Rand. 404; 1847, Mercer v. Kelso's Adm'r, 4 Gratt. 118 (no question raised); 1870, Beverley v. Walden, 20 Gratt. 158 (same); 1878, Cheatham v. Hatcher, 30 Gratt. 63 (same); 1887, Fishburne v. Ferguson's Heirs, 84 Va. 106, 4 S. E. 575; 1894, Whitelaws v. Sims, 90 Va. 588, 19 S. E. 113; 1920, McComb v. Farrow, 128 Va. 455, 104

2. Value

§ 1940. History. Our orthodox common law was not troubled with any doubts concerning value-testimony as tainted by the vice of opinion.[1] It recognized fully that value-testimony necessarily involved "opinion," by which was meant a mere estimate, as distinguished from a knowing through the senses. But it also recognized that value-testimony had to be employed, and it was precisely one of the typical accepted instances (ante, § 1917) in which "opinion" was received. When the new sense of "opinion" (as "inference") came in (ante, § 1917), and received its peculiar American development, it was then seen that the fundamentals of faith were brought thereby into the dark shadow of doubt, and that the question of the propriety of value-testimony had to be faced.

But here are to be noted several stages of thought. (1) In a New York ruling of 1840 the question is first found raised, under the old sense of "opinion"; i. e. such testimony was objected to and excluded because it involved mere speculation or guessing over what no witness could pretend to have sensible knowledge of.[2] The argument, as accepted in New York, did not exclude value-testimony absolutely; for the same judge admitted testimony as to the value of a dog while excluding it as to the value of business profits. Moreover, though there are still traces of it in New York rulings,[3] it never obtained acceptance elsewhere. Still, it served to throw doubt on value-testimony. (2) Meanwhile, the principle of the Opinion rule had already been invoked in New Hampshire to exclude value-testimony, and had effected the exclusion in that State; and the question, thus presented in two jurisdictions, was thenceforth raised all along the line. Why should a witness testify that the value of a piece of land was so much, when he could state its features sufficiently in detail and leave the jury to make their own inference? Fortunately, the futility of this argument was everywhere else seen; and, though the question was brought up and had to be settled in almost every other jurisdiction, it was settled in favor of receiving such testimony. This view was also afterward taken in New Hampshire (by legislation) and in New York. (3) But the unrest and doubt created in arguing

S. E. 812 (opinion to testator's sanity, admitted).

Washington: 1902, Higgins v. Nethery, 30 Wash. 239, 70 Pac. 489 (lay opinion receivable).

West Virginia: Lay opinion is receivable: 1877, Jarrett v. Jarrett, 11 W. Va. 584, 626; 1882, Nicholas v. Kershner, 20 W. Va. 255; 1888, Kerr v. Lunsford, 31 W. Va. 659, 680, 8 S. E. 493; 1892, State v. Maier, 36 W. Va. 757, 762, 15 S. E. 991, semble; 1912, Freeman v. Freeman, 71 W. Va. 303, 76 S. E. 657.

Wisconsin: In 1874, Burnham v. Mitchell, 34 Wis. 132, the opinion of a non-expert was admitted, with an implication that the witness' facts and reasons should accompany it; this subsequently became the rule; 1881, Yanke v. State, 51 Wis. 468, 8 N. W. 276; 1899, Crawford v. Christian, 102 Wis. 51, 78 N. W. 406 (excluded because not shown to have knowledge of facts); 1907, Duthey v. State, 131 Wis. 178, 111 N. W. 222 (proper form of question stated).

Wyoming: 1916, Flanders v. State, 24 Wyo. 81, 156 Pac. 39 (that the accused was "crazy," excluded).

§ 1940. [1] The question seems to have been once raised in England: 1849, Gauntlett v. Whitworth, 2 C. & K. 720 (whether certain nuisances depreciated house-values in a locality; admitted).

[2] In this aspect the objection has been dealt with elsewhere (ante, § 663).

[3] Noted post, § 1943, under New York.

the question has left its traces. All that can be said to have been conceded by universal assent is that the simple question of market value or of value in its ordinary form is not affected by the Opinion rule. For many forms of value-testimony (such as the amount of damage by tort or breach of contract) most Courts still have some doubt and disfavor, — the result of the general inclination to consider strictly and admit grudgingly every sort of inference of which the data can possibly be substituted for the jury. It is enough here to note that historically we should probably not be troubled with these doubts to-day if it had not been for the widespread doubt (now at rest) prevailing during an earlier generation over value-testimony pure and simple.

§ 1941. Theory and Policy; in general. The theory on which the Opinion rule is made to exclude value-testimony is, of course, that the witness can sufficiently detail to the jury the various data affecting the value, and the jury can then draw from his data their inference as to the value. As this theory has nowhere been defended except in New Hampshire, and even there with little attempt to expound the principle, no judicial exposition of it is available. The answer to it, namely, that the witness can not be expected to reproduce the data sufficiently and exactly to the jury, has been many times clearly expounded:

1857, SKINNER, J., in Illinois C. R. Co. v. Van Horn, 18 Ill. 259: "To describe to a jury a piece of ground, however minutely, with its supposed adaptations to use, its advantages and disadvantages, and demand of them, upon this information alone, a verdict as to its value would be merely farcical."

1870, DOE, J., in State v. Pike, 49 N. H. 422: "The exception introduced by Judge Green and Judge Harris in Rochester v. Chester was peculiar to this State; it seems never to have prevailed anywhere else in the whole world. Not only was it a local peculiarity; it was a troublesome and mischievous one. . . . It was unjust; it often resulted in excessive, often in insufficient damages. It was expensive and annoying; the parties were compelled to summon a greater number of witnesses than would have been necessary if their opinions could have been taken; and the process of obtaining from them such testimony as they were allowed to give, and excluding their opinions, was difficult and tedious. It was inconsistent with itself; for . . . the witness who was not permitted to say that he thought a certain horse was worth more or less than a thousand dollars was permitted to give his opinion of the age, size, weight, form, speed, strength, endurance, health, appetite, docility, timidity, and general disposition of the horse."

1897, CALDWELL, J., in St. Louis I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Edwards, 24 C. C. A. 300, 78 Fed. 745 (admitting testimony as to the damage to cattle): "Nor is it any answer to say that the witness can tell the jury how long the cattle were in the cars, or how they looked and acted, and that from that imperfect information the jury may arrive at a correct conclusion as to the damage. The poverty of the English language makes it absolutely impossible for a witness to present to the minds of the jurors the appearance of cattle, and what that appearance denotes, as it is presented to his practised and experienced eyes. The experience of the witness and the appearance of the cattle cannot be photographed on the minds of the jurors. The knowledge of the condition of these cattle, and how that condition affected their value, must of necessity have existed in the mind of the witness who had had such a large and extended experience in shipping cattle with far greater clearness and certainty than it could have been communicated to the minds of the jurors by any statement he might have made of what he saw merely, however clear and lucid such statement might have been. It is obvious that, if witnesses were to be permitted to state to a jury those facts only of which they have absolute knowledge, not only the range of inquiry, but the province of remedial justice, would be very materially contracted."

§ 1942. Same: Land taken by Eminent Domain. So far as principle is concerned, the only other question that needs examination is that raised by the rulings of various Courts admitting testimony to the value of a given piece of land — e. g. where it has been sold or taken by eminent domain — but rejecting it when it deals with the total amount of the loss or benefit to the estate of which a part has been taken by eminent domain. Here three observations may be made. (1) Where, as in some jurisdictions, it has been a disputed point whether the right to compensation excludes or includes a set-off or diminution to the extent of benefit received, then of course we are not dealing with a question of Evidence, but a question of substantive law. It is assumed here that the law of the State allows the benefit to be deducted. (2) The Courts have probably been moved by the circumstance that the question asked of the witness is in substance the final issue for the jury, i. e. What was the total amount of damage received? or, Was there on the whole a benefit or a loss? This is not in form a value-inquiry; [illegible] effect it is simply an inquiry as to the value by which the compla[illegible] estate has been diminished. Moreover, though it is usually the exact [illegible] mate issue on which the jury must return a finding, that is no objection on principle to the testimony (ante, § 1921). (3) A few Courts have noticed the inconsistency of allowing the witness to speak of land-values generally while rejecting his statement as to the total damage done by a forcible taking.[1] That inconsistency comes prominently to view where (as in some jurisdictions) the witness is allowed to state the value of the piece of land taken and then the value of the whole estate before the taking and after the taking, but it is not allowed to state the net value of loss or benefit. That there is any inconsistency is denied in the following way:

1883, ELLIOTT, J., in Yost v. Conroy, 92 Ind. 465: "There is, however, not the slightest conflict between the two propositions stated. . . . Many things enter into the estimate of benefits and damages besides the value of the land taken and the value of the residue with and without the improvement; so that, in expressing an opinion as to the value, a witness does not give an opinion as to the amount of the benefit or damages; he does no more than furnish evidence upon one of the elements of the estimate."

It seems impossible, however, to escape the argument that there is in truth an inconsistency:

1869, GRAY, J., in Swan v. Middlesex, 101 Mass. 178: "The witnesses, being competent to testify to the value of the land affected before and after the alteration of the highway, might testify to the simple question of arithmetic which of those two values was the greater, — in other words, whether the petitioners' estate was benefited or injured."

1875, DANFORTH, J., in Snow v. R. Co., 65 Me. 231: "The value of the amount of damage to property must necessarily be a matter of opinion, and the judgment of one well acquainted with its situation and character, its surroundings and facility of market, must be more satisfactory than any description without such judgment. It is true, this, like all oral testimony, may at times prove unreliable; but its value can be readily and satisfactorily tested by cross-examination. . . . The difference in value before and after the location would be a valid test of that damage, and it would seem to be immaterial whether the testimony was admitted in this form or in answer to a direct question as to the amount of the damage. In either case it must come as an opinion, and in either case it is a question of value."

§ 1942. [1] The rulings are placed with the others in the next section.

§ 1943. State of the Law in the Various Jurisdictions: (1) Property-Value. In all jurisdictions testimony to the value of a specific piece of property is now received, as not obnoxious to the Opinion rule. In a few jurisdictions the testimony has been received without raising the question.[1] Nevertheless, it may be said that no Court would reject value-testimony absolutely and in the ordinary form. It is for the variations from simple value-testimony that doubt and exclusion is found.[2]

§ 1943. [1] Compare the rulings cited ante, §§ 711–720 (testimonial qualifications for value-witnesses).

[2] Federal: 1813, Den v. Wright, 1 Pet. 73 (value of land; admitted); 1843, Alfonso v. U. S., 2 Story 426 (value in general; admitted); 1886, Lehigh V. C. Co. v. Chicago, 26 Fed. 419 (damage by taking; admitted); 1887, Laflin v. R. Co., 33 Fed. 422 (same); 1890, Montana R. Co. v. Warren, 137 U. S. 352, 11 Sup. 96 (damage by taking; admitted); 1896, The Conqueror, 166 U. S. 110, 131, 17 Sup. 510 (use of a yacht; admitted); 1897, St. Louis I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Edwards, 24 C. C. A. 300, 78 Fed. 745 (damage to cattle in shipment, admitted; quoted supra, § 1941);
Alabama: 1851, Montgomery & W. P. R. Co. v. Varner, 19 Ala. 186 (damage under eminent-domain taking; excluded); 1868, Alabama & F. R. Co. v. Burkett, 42 Ala. 87 (same); 1878 Haralson v. Campbell, 63 Ala. 277 (same); 1905, Alabama C. C. & I. Co. v. Turner, 145 Ala. 639, 39 So. 603 (mill site); 1906, Central of Ga. R. Co. v. Keyton, 148 Ala. 675, 41 So. 918 ("State if your property was damaged by the overflow," held improper, but "State the effect of the overflow on your houses and lot," held proper; if Justice is to be regarded as a machine for splitting hairs, then the machine works very delicately in this State); 1921, Burnett & Bean v. Miller, 205 Ala. 606, 88 So. 871 (breach of contract to alter a house; difference between value as it is and value as it would have been, allowed);
Arkansas: 1884, Texas & St. L. R. Co. v. Kirby, 44 Ark. 106 (damage under eminent domain; admitted); 1900, St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Ayres, 67 Ark. 371, 55 S. W. 159, semble (witness may state value before and after, and then total damages); 1902, St. Louis I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Jacobs, 70 Ark. 401, 68 S. W. 248 (damage to cattle, excluded); 1903, St. Louis I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Hall, 71 Ark. 302, 74 S. W. 293 (total damage to land by fire, admitted);
Florida: 1887, Sullivan v. Lear, 23 Fla. 473, 2 So. 846 (property-value; admitted);
Georgia: Rev. C. 1910, § 5875 (testimony to "market value," admissible); 1873, Brunswick & A. R. Co. v. McLaren, 47 Ga. 548 (damage under eminent domain; excluded); 1883, Cincinnati & G. R. Co. v. Mims, 71 Ga. 244 (same; admitted); 1909, Miller v. Luckey, 132 Ga. 581, 64 S. E. 658 (land-trespass; value before and value after must be stated);
Idaho: 1919, Kirk v. Madareita, 32 Ida. 403, 184 Pac. 225 (lump-sum estimates of damage to pasturage, excluded);
Illinois: the value of land may be stated: 1864, Ottawa Gaslight Co. v. Graham, 35 Ill. 349; 1870, Hayes v. R. Co., 54 Ill. 376; 1871 Cooper v. Randall, 59 Ill. 320; 1875, Keithsburg & E. R. Co. v. Henry, 79 Ill. 294; so also of damage under eminent-domain taking: 1864, Ottawa Gaslight Co. v. Graham, 35 Ill. 349; 1870, Hayes v. R. Co., 54 Ill. 376; 1871, Cooper v. Randall, 59 Ill. 320; 1872, Lafayette B. & M. R. Co. v. Winslow, 66 Ill. 219; 1874 Galena & S. W. R. Co. v. Haslam, 73 Ill. 497; 1877, Hyde Park v. Dunham, 85 Ill. 578; 1881 Green v. Chicago, 97 Ill. 372; 1885, Spear v. Drainage Com'rs, 113 Ill. 634; 1896, Chicago P. & M. R. Co. v. Mitchell, 159 Ill. 406; 42 N. E. 973 (contra: 1873, Chicago & A. R. Co. v. R. Co., 67 Ill. 145); and the value of land before taking and after taking: 1895, Pike v. Chicago, 155 Ill. 656, 40 N. E. 567; whether a certain fact would affect the value is admissible: 1870, Hayes v. R. Co., 54 Ill. 375; 1911, Springfield & N. E. Traction Co. v. Warrick, 249 Ill. 470, 94 N. E. 933 (railroad fence; opinion that the amount of damage to plaintiff by reason of stock trespass would be $10 a year, etc., held improper);

Indiana: value-testimony in general is admissible: 1883, Yost v. Conroy, 92 Ind. 464; in particular, the value of property: 1858, Evansville R. Co. v. Fitzpatrick, 10 Ind. 122; 1860, Sinclair v. Roush, 14 Ind. 451; 1862, Crouse v. Holman, 19 Ind. 38; the value of personal property: 1870, Kirkpatrick v. Snyder, 33 Ind. 171; including that of land: 1875, Logansport v. McMillen, 49 Ind. 494; 1876, Holten v. Board, 55 Ind. 199; 1888, Johnson v. Culver, 116 Ind. 289, 19 N. E. 129; but not of damage under eminent-domain taking: 1858, Evansville R. Co. v. Fitzpatrick, 10 Ind. 122; 1860, Sinclair v. Rush, 14 Ind.451; 1862, New Albany & S. R. Co. v. Huff, 19 Ind. 318; 1875, Logansport v. McMillen, 49 Ind. 494; 1877, Baltimore R. Co. v. Johnson, 59 Ind. 247, 480; 1877, Baltimore P. & C. R. Co. v. Stoner, 59 Ind. 579; 1878, Noah v. Angle, 63 Ind. 425; 1882, Hagaman v. Moore, 84 Ind. 501 (benefit only); 1883, Yost v. Conroy, 92 Ind. 465 (examining the preceding rulings; quoted supra, § 1942); yet the value before the taking and after the taking may be stated: 1870, Ferguson v. Stafford, 33 Ind. 164; 1875, Frankfort & K. R. Co. v. Windsor, 51 Ind. 239 (value of two halves as cut by railroad); 1882, Indianapolis D. & S. R. Co. v. Pugh, 85 Ind. 281; 1906, Schmoe v. Cotton, 167 Ind. 364, 79 N. E. 184 (moreover "a judgment should not be reversed merely because a part or all of the witnesses have stated the damages, instead of the value, where the damages depend wholly on the value before and after the injury"); furthermore, while damage to personalty may be estimated, if the data also are given: 1870, Kirkpatrick v. Snyder, supra; yet land damage caused by unskilful sowing may not be: 1871, Bissell v. Wert, 35 Ind. 54;

Iowa: the value of personal property may be stated: 1865, Anson v. Dwight, 18 Ia. 244; 1885, Tubbs v. Garrison, 68 Ia. 48, 25 N. W. 921; as well as the value of land; but the damage done to personalty may not be stated: 1853, Whitmore v. Bowman, 4 G. Greene 149; 1865, Anson v. Dwight, 18 Ia. 244, semble; nor the damage to land under eminent-domain taking: 1861, Dalzell v. Davenport, 12 Ia. 441; 1865, Prosser v. Wapello Co., 18 Ia. 330; 1872, Cannon v. Iowa City, 34 Ia. 204; 1870, Russell v. Burlington, 30 Ia. 265; 1873, Harrison v. R. Co., 36 Ia. 325; 1887, Lewis v. Ins. Co., 71 Ia. 97, 32 N. W. 190; though the value before the taking and after the taking may be stated: 1855, Sater v. R. Co., 1 Ia. (Cole's ed.) 394; 1885, Henry v. R. Co., 2 Ia. 308; 1861, Dalzell v. Davenport, 12 Ia. 440; 1905, Parrott v. Chicago G. W. R. Co., 127 Ia. 419, 103 N. W. 352 (damage under eminent-domain taking, excluded); 1907, Iowa-Minn. Land Co. v. Conner, 136 Ia. 674, 112 N. W. 820 (contract for sale of land);

Kansas: the value of land in general may be stated: 1888, St. Louis K. & A. R. Co. v. Chapman, 38 Kan. 310, 16 Pac. 695; but not the damage by eminent-domain taking: 1878, Roberts v. Brown Co., 21 Kan. 253; 1885, Parsons Water Co. v. Knapp, 33 Kan. 756, 7 Pac. 568; 1888, Wichita & W. R. Co. v. Kuhn, 38 Kan. 676, 17 Pac. 322: 1889, Leroy & W. R. Co. v. Ross, 40 Kan. 605, 20 Pac. 197; 1889, Ottawa O. C. & C. G. R. Co. v. Adolph, 41 Kan. 602, 21 Pac. 643; nor even the diminution of value after the taking: 1888, Wichita & W. R. Co. v. Kuhn, 38 Kan. 676, 17 Pac. 322; 1889, Leroy & W. R. Co. v. Ross, 40 Kan. 605, 20 Pac. 197; yet the value before the taking and after the taking may be stated: 1880, Kansas Cent. R. Co. v. Allen, 24 Kan. 34; 1882, Leavenworth T. & S. W. R. Co. v. Paul, 28 Kan. 820;

Kentucky: 1901, Illinois C. R. Co. v. Smith, 110 Ky. 203, 61 S. W. 2 (value of damage by eminent domain; excluded);

Maine: the value of personalty may be stated: 1866, Haskell v. Mitchell, 53 Me. 470; 1870, Whiteley v. China, 61 Me. 202; 1878, Washington Ice Co. v. Webster, 68 Me. 466; as well as the value of realty: 1875, Snow v. R. Co., 65 Me. 230 (land); 1839, Tebbetts v. Haskins, 16 Me. 285 (cost of a house); in the following case the value of mills was not allowed to be stated, as being on the facts a matter of common knowledge: 1860, Clark v. Walter Power Co., 52 Me. 77;

Maryland: 1905, Baltimore B. R. Co. v. Sattler, 100 Md. 306, 59 Atl. 654 (smoke-nuisance; expert testimony to the amount of damage and the diminution of land value, excluded); 1906, Western Union T. Co. v. Ring, 102 Md. 677, 62 Atl. 801 (value of trees cut, excluded); 1917, Western Union Tel. Co. v. Rasche, 130 Md 126, 99 Atl. 991 (value before and after a trespass, allowed);

Massachusetts: value may be stated, of realty as well as of personalty; that certain circumstances would or would not affect value may of course also be stated: 1873, Miller v. Smith, 112 Mass. 476 (whether cribbing, etc., affects the value of horses); 1878, Chandler v. J. P. Aqueduct, 125 Mass. 551 (for what purpose land was suited); moreover, the damage done by eminent-domain taking or otherwise may be stated: 1847, Vandine v. Burpee, 13 Metc. 288 (damage to garden and nursery); 1847, Wyman v. R. Co., 13 Metc. 326; 1851, Walker v. Boston, 8 Cush. 279; 1853, Dwight v. Co. Com'rs, 11 Cush. 203; 1854, Shaw v. Charlestown, 2 Gray 109; 1863, Shattuck v. Stoneham R. Co., 6 All. 117; 1869, Swan v. Middlesex, 101 Mass. 177; 1874, Tucker v. R. Co., 118 Mass. 547; 1893, Taft v. Com., 158 Mass. 526, 529, 546, 33 N. E. 1046; 1896, Beale v. Boston, 166 Mass. 53, 43 N. E. 1029; on this point compare the cases cited ante, § 714, under Massachusetts, many of which involved eminent-domain taking; it has been ruled that the value of a reversion subject to the public easement could not be stated: 1861, Boston & W. R. Co. v. O. C. & F. R. R. Co., 3 All. 142;

Michigan: the amount of damage in eminent-domain taking may be stated: 1886, Grand Rapids v. R. Co., 58 Mich. 647, 26 N. W. 159; 1905, Withey v. Pere Marquette R. Co., 141 Mich. 412, 104 N. W. 773 (personalty injured in a railroad collision; testimony to the damage, allowed); and cases cited ante, § 716;

Minnesota: not only may the value before the taking and after the taking be stated: 1872, Simmons v. R. Co., 18 Minn. 189 (explaining Winona & S. P. R. Co. v. Denman, 10 Minn. 267); 1872, Colvill v. R. Co., 19 Minn. 285; 1873, St. Paul & S. C. R. Co. v. Murphy, 19 Minn. 510; 1889, Emmons v. R. Co., 41 Minn. 133, 42 N. W. 789; but the total damage by the taking may be stated: cases supra, and these: 1873, Lehmicke v. R. Co., 19 Minn. 481; 1882, Leber v. R. Co., 29 Minn. 261, 13 N. W. 31; 1883, Sherman v. R. Co., 30 Minn. 228, 15 N. W. 239; 1908, Mandery v. Mississippi & R. R. B. Co., 105 Minn. 3, 116 N. W. 1027 ("What was the damage, or how much less was the land worth, etc.?" allowed); so, for personalty, the diminution of value after being repaired may be stated: 1883, Johnston Harvester Co. v. Clark, 31 Minn. 167, 17 N. W. 111; in an earlier case, which would hardly be followed to-day, the damage to crops was not allowed to be stated: 1862, Sowers v. Dukes, 8 Minn. 25; the following case probably supersedes this: 1898, Robbins v. Willmar, 71 Minn. 493, 73 N. W. 1097 (amount of damage to property by water, admitted);

Mississippi: 1866, Whitfield v. Whitfield, 40 Miss. 357 (value of personalty, admitted); 1900, Board v. Hendricks, 77 Miss. 483, 27 So. 613 (land value, excluded, for reasons obscurely stated);

Missouri: the value may be stated of personalty: 1873, Cantling v. R. Co., 54 Mo. 391; as well as of realty: 1868, Thomas v. Mallinckrodt, 43 Mo. 65; and the damage by eminent-domain taking may be stated: 1876, Tate v. R. Co., 64 Mo. 153; 1886, Springfield & S. R. Co. v. Calkins, 90 Mo. 543, 3 S. W. 82; 1888, St. Louis v. Ranken, 95 Mo. 192, 8 S. W. 249; 1896, Union Elev. Co. v. R. Co., 135 Mo. 353, 36 S. W. 1071; but apparently not of damage done to personalty: 1899, Sallee v. St. Louis, 152 Mo. 615, 54 S. W. 463 ("amount of damage done to the wagon and harness," excluded); 1906, Southern Mo. & A. R. Co. v. Woodard, 193 Mo. 656, 92 S. W. 470;

Montana: 1905, Watson v. Colusa P. M. & S. Co., 31 Mont. 513, 79 Pac. 14 (land injured by smelting works; value before and after, admitted; opinion obscure);

Nebraska: the value of personalty may be stated: 1882, Keith v. Tilford, 12 Nebr. 275, 11 N. W. 315; 1894, Western H. I. Co. v. Richardson, 40 Nebr. 1, 9, 58 N. W. 597 (the lump value of a stock of goods); as well as that of realty: cases cited infra; it was originally held that, in eminent-domain taking, not even the value after taking could be stated: 1881, Fremont E. & M. V. R. Co. v. Whalen, 11 Nebr. 591, 10 N. W. 491; but this was overruled, and now the value before the taking and after the taking may be stated: 1882, Republican V. R. Co. v. Arnold, 13 Nebr. 487, 14 N. W. 478; 1883, Burlington & M. R. Co. v. Schluntz, 14 Nebr. 422, 16 N. W. 439; 1888, Northeastern N. R. Co. v. Frazier, 25 Nebr. 55, 40 N. W. 609; though the total damage may not be stated, and this is applied also to damage caused by a trespass: 1883, Burlington & M. R. Co. v. Schluntz, 14 Nebr. 423, 16 N. W. 439; Burlington & M. R. Co. v. Beebe, 14 Nebr. 472, 16 N. W. 747; 1888, Fremont E. & M. V. R. Co. v. Marley, 25 Nebr. 145, 40 N. W. 948; 1902, Read v. Valley L. & C. Co., 66 Nebr. 423, 92 N. W. 622 (the amount of damage that would have been suffered if the defendant had not acted as charged, excluded); 1906, McCook v. McAdams, 76 Nebr. 1, 106 N. W. 988 (damage by flooding);

Nevada: 1915, McLeod v. Miller & Lux, 40 Nev. 447, 153 Pac. 566, 167 Pac. 27 (flowage; value before and after allowed, but not value of damage);

New Hampshire: in this State the radical position was early taken of refusing to allow the value of anything to be directly stated: 1826, Rochester v. Chester, 3 N. H. 365 (Green, J., "there is perhaps no species of property in the community, of the value of which the jury are better acquainted, than houses and lands"); 1833, Peterboro v. Jeffrey, 6 N. H. 463, Upham, J.; 1844, Robertson v. Stark, 15 N. H. 113, Parker, C. J.; then came two decisions limiting this doctrine: 1839, Whipple v. Whipple, 10 N. H. 131 (horses); 1840, Beard v. Kirk, 11 N. H. 401 (sleds); but the former position was again resumed: 1850, Hoitt v. Moulton, 21 N. H. 591; 1851, Concord Railroad v. Greely, 23 N. H. 243; 1853, Marshall v. Fire Ins. Co., 27 N. H. 162; 1864, Low v. Railroad, 45 N. H. 381; finally, this unfortunate heterodoxy was abolished by statute: Pub. St. 1891, c. 224, § 22 (opinions as to "value of any real estate, goods, or chattels," are admissible from qualified witnesses);

New Jersey: 1873, Haulenbeck v. Cronkright, 23 N. J. Eq. 413 (value of realty; admissible);

New York: in this State there came first a line of rulings favorable on the whole to the reception of value-testimony; 1840, Brill v. Flagler, 23 Wend. 356 (dogs; admitted); 1840, Mayor v. Pentz, 24 Wend. 675, semble (in general; admitted); 1842, Dunham v. Simmons, 3 Hill 609 (damage to a horse; excluded); 1843 Paige v. Kelley, 5 Hill 604 (cost of raising a sunken boat; excluded); 1847, Lamoure v. Caryl, 4 Denio 373 (services admitted); 1847, Howard v. Ins. Co., 4 Denio 507 (value of stock of goods; admitted, distinguishing, but not satisfactorily, Phenix Fire Ins. Co. v. Phillip, 13 Wend. 81); 1847, Joy v. Hopkins, 5 Wend. 84 (personalty; admitted); 1849, Morehouse v. Mathews, 2 N. Y. 514

(damage to animals; excluded); during the same period, however, there were rulings (Norman v. Wells being the leading one) excluding value-statements, as already mentioned (ante, § 1940), on the theory that they involved mere speculation or guessing; these rulings are noted ante, § 663; the law being in this state of uncertainty, the decision in Clark v. Baird, 1853, 9 N. Y. 185, set the question at rest, from the point of view of both theories, by holding value-statements in general proper; and this has been subsequently adhered to: 1866, Robertson v. Knapp, 35 N. Y. 92; 1891, Roberts v. R. Co., 128 N. Y. 465, 28 N. E. 486; disposing of the apparent contrary ruling in Avery v. R. Co., 1890, 121 N. Y. 31, 24 N. E. 20; but it may be supposed that the rulings of Dunham v. Simmons and Morehouse v. Mathews, supra, as to damage to personalty, would still be followed; moreover, the doctrine of Indiana and a few other jurisdictions, noticed above, that in taking of land by eminent domain statements as to the whole amount of damage are not receivable, though statements of the value before the taking and after the taking are receivable, has been adopted in New York; 1891, Roberts v. R. Co., 128 N. Y. 455, 28 N. E. 486; 1893, Sixth Av. R. Co. v. El. R. Co., 138 N. Y. 548, 552, 34 N. E. 400; however in Solomon v. R. Co., 1886, 103 N. Y. 436, 9 N. E. 430, there had been an effort to hark back to the doctrine of Norman v. Wells, supra, by saying that a speculative estimate of value would not always be admissible; and a little later this is found taking definite shape in rulings that an estimate of what the value of an estate would now have been had the right of taking not been exercised would be improper; here, however, the Opinion rule seems to be the subordinate one, and the main consideration is that the statement is a mere speculation or guess, i. e. an employment of the old doctrine above alluded to; the dissenting opinion of Gray, J., in the Roberts case sufficiently shows the fallacy of this view; it seems, however, to be still the law: 1889, McGean v. R. Co., 117 N. Y. 219, 22 N. E. 957; 1891, Roberts v. R. Co. 128 N. Y. 465, 28 N. E. 486; 1892, Becker v. R. Co., 131 N. Y. 513, 30 N. E. 499; 1907, Shaw v. N. Y. Elev. R. Co., 187 N. Y. 186, 79 N. E. 984 (rule of Roberts v. R. Co. held not to exclude certain opinions of value);

North Carolina: 1908, Wade v. Carolina T. & T. Co., 147 N. C. 219, 60 S. E. 987 (decrease in land-value by telegraph structure, allowed);

North Dakota: 1897, Anderson v. Bank, 6 N. D. 497, 72 N. W. 916 (value of a promissory note; expert testimony excluded);

Ohio: a statement as to the damage by eminent-domain taking is not receivable: 1855, Atlantic & G. W. R. Co. v. Campbell, 4 Oh. St. 585; 1856, Cleveland & P. R. Co. v. Ball, 5 Oh. St. 573; yet the value before the taking and after the taking may be stated: Atlantic & G. W. R. Co. v. Campbell, supra, semble; C. & P. R. Co. v. Ball, supra;

Oklahoma: 1895, Coyle v. Baum, 3 Okl. 695, 41 Pac. 389 (personalty; value before and after injury may be stated); 1903, Tootle v. Kent, 12 Okl. 674, 73 Pac. 310 (total damage to a stock of goods converted, excluded);

Oregon: 1882, Portland v. Kamm, 10 Or. 381 (damage by eminent-domain taking; admitted); 1904, Pacific L. S. Co. v. Murray, 45 Or. 103, 76 Pac. 1079 (trespass by sheep; amount of damages, excluded; citing prior cases in this jurisdiction); 1913, Portland v. Tigard, 64 Or. 404, 129 Pac. 755 (street benefits; expert testimony to the amount of benefit and damage allowed); 1918, Boyd v. Grove, 89 Or. 80, 173 Pac. 310 (trespass by sheep; value of land before and after the trespass, admitted, but not "categorically the quantum of damages");

Pennsylvania: the value of personalty may be stated: 1840, Clark v. Spence, 10 Watts 336; 1843, Bingham v. Rogers, 6 W. & S. 501; 1845, Whitesell v. Crane, 8 Pa. 371; 1846, McGill v. Rowland, 2 Pa. St. 452; 1859, Mish v. Wood, 34 Pa. 452; 1875, Adams Expr. Co. v. Schlessinger, 75 Pa. 248, 256; as well as the value of realty: 1826, Kellogg v. Krauser, 14 S. & R. 141; 1834, Ley v. Huber, 3 Watts 368; 1859, Searle v. R. Co., 33 Pa. 63; 1861, East Pa. R. Co. v. Hiester, 40 Pa. 55; 1862, Brown v. Corey, 43 Pa. 495, 506; 1864, East Pa. R. Co. v. Hottenstine, 47 Pa. 30; 1865, Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Henderson, 51 Pa. 321; 1869, Delaware L. & W. R. Co. v. Burson, 61 Pa. 369; 1873, Pittsburgh V. & C. R. Co. v. Rose, 74 Pa. 369; 1876, Pennsylvania & N. Y. R. Co. v. Bunnell, 81 Pa. 426; 1886, Pittsburgh V. & C. R. Co. v. Vance, 115 Pa. 332, 8 Atl. 764; furthermore, in eminent-domain taking, the value before and after the taking may be stated: 1862, Brown v. Corey, 43 Pa. 495, 506; 1864, East Pa. R. Co. v. Hottenstine, 47 Pa. 30; 1876, Pennsylvania & N. Y. R. Co. v. Bunnell, 81 Pa. 426; as well as the total damage: 1867, Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Bruner, 55 Pa. 319, 321, semble; 1871, White Deer Creek Impr. Co. v. Sassaman, 67 Pa. 420; 1896, Lee v. Water Co., 176 Pa. 223, 35 Atl. 184; as to eminent-domain taking: Contra, semble: 1908, Byrne v. Cambria & C. R. Co., 219 Pa. 217, 68 Atl. 672; but the statute of 1915, April 21, Dig. 1920, § 2186, restored the original rule;

Rhode Island: at first the damage by eminent-domain taking was allowed to be stated, though by experts only: 1856, Buffum v. R. Co., 4 R. I. 223; 1860, Howard v. Providence, 6 R. I. 514; but in Tingley v. Providence, 1867, 8 R. I. 499, this practice was abandoned; and while the witness was allowed to state market values before and after, he was prohibited from stating the fact or the amount of total damage exceeding benefit; followed in Brown v. R. Co., 1878, 12 R. I. 238;

South Carolina: 1901, Dent v. R. Co., 61 S. C. 329, 39 S. E. 527 (damage under eminent domain; admitted);

South Dakota: 1900, Schuler v. Board, 12 S. D.

§ 1944. State of the Law in the Various Jurisdictions: (2) Other Values (Services, Personal Injuries, Breaches of Contract, etc.). In dealing with other values, the Courts are apt too often to see some violation of the Opinion rule in the most straightforward and practical questions.[1] Of the remaining 460, 81 N. W. 890 (total damage by eminent domain; allowed);

Tennessee: 1904, Wray v. Knoxville L. F. & J. R. Co., 113 Tenn. 544, 82 S. W. 471 (damage by taking land, allowed; settling a prior conflict of rulings);
Texas: statements as to land-value are receivable: 1856, Haas v. Choussard, 17 Tex. 592 (mill-site);
Vermont: 1858, Laurent v. Vaughn, 30 Vt. 94 (personalty; admitted); 1860, Crane v. Northfield, 32 Vt. 126 (same);
Washington: 1892, Seattle & M. R. Co. v. Gilchrist, 4 Wash. 509, 513, 30 Pac. 738 (damage to land by taking; allowable); 1894, Ingram v. Wishkah Boom Co., 35 Wash. 191, 77 Pac. 34 (value of realty before and after injury, and value of personalty destroyed; allowed); 1905, Johnson v. Tacoma, 41 Wash. 51, 82 Pac. 1092 (value of benefits to realty; S. & M. R. Co. v. Gilchrist, followed); 1917, King County v. Joyce, 96 Wash. 520, 165 Pac. 399 (condemnation of land; that benefits would out-weigh damage, allowed);
West Virginia: 1884, Railroad Co. v. Foreman, 24 W. Va. 673 (damage by eminent-domain taking; admitted); 1896, Blair v. Charleston, 43 W. Va. 62, 26 S. E. 341 (value after taking; admitted); 1900, Kay v. R. Co., 47 W. Va. 467, 35 S. E. 973 (value before and after is alone allowable);
Wisconsin: the value of property may be stated: 1867, Noonan v. Ilsley, 22 Wis. 35; but as to damage or benefit done to land, there has been some fluctuation; there first occur the following favorable rulings: 1851, Milwaukee & M. R. Co. v. Eble, 3 Pinney 334 (whether and how a railroad would increase or diminish land value); 1854, Cole v. Clarke, 3 Wis. 327 (on a 'quantum meruit,' whether plaintiff's work had on the whole benefited defendant's premises); but, as regard to damage by land-taking or highway-improvements, a statement of the whole amount is now excluded: 1867, Farrand v. R. Co., 21 Wis. 435; 1872, Church v. Milwaukee, 31 Wis. 520; but the value before the taking and after the taking may be stated: 1869, Snyder v. R. Co., 25 Wis. 65; 1875, Hutchinson v. R. Co., 37 Wis. 610; 1883, Neilson v. R. Co., 58 Wis. 520, 17 N. W. 310; there is also the following ruling: 1883, Watson v. R. Co., 57 Wis. 351, 15 N. W. 468 (probable cost of land-improvements; excluded).

§ 1944. [1] On all these topics, compare also the rulings cited ante, §§ 715, 716, which sometimes imply a rule on the present subject:

SERVICES: the testimony is admitted in the following cases, except as otherwise noted: 1886, Dushane v. Benedict, 120 U. S. 647, 7 Sup. 696 (damage by loss of services; excluded because not accompanied by facts); 1858, Butler v. King, 10 Cal. 341 (excluded); 1908, Ferry v. Henderson, 32 D. C. App. 41 (building superintendent's services); 1875, Covey v. Campbell, 52 Ind. 158; 1880, Johnson v. Thompson, 72 Ind. 170; 1898, Clark v. Elsworth, 104 Ia. 442, 73 N. W. 1023 (attorney's services); 1903, Croft v. Chicago R. I. & P. R. Co., 134 Ia. 411, 109 N. W. 723 (wife's services); 1907, Morehead's Trustee v. Anderson, 125 Ky. 77, 100 S. W. 340 (attorney's services); 1897, Fowler v. Fowler, 111 Mich. 676, 70 N. W. 336 (services on a farm); 1870, Allis v. Day, 14 Minn. 518 (attorney's services); 1901, Calhoun v. Akeley, 82 Minn. 354, 85 N. W. 170 (legal services); 1887, Hurt v. R. Co., 94 Mo. 260, 7 S. W. 1 (damage by loss of service, excluded); 1899, Sprague v. Sea, 152 Mo. 327, 53 S. W. 1074 (value of housekeeping services); 1885, Alt v. Fig Syrup Co., 19 Nev. 119, 7 Pac. 174; 1902, Harris v. Smith, 71 N. H. 330, 52 Atl. 854 (hauling wood); 1876, Williams v. Brown, 28 Oh. St. 551 (attorney's services); 1898, Ward v. R. Co., 53 S. C. 10, 30 S. E. 594 (services of a physician); 1898, Camp v. Ristine, 101 Tenn. 534, 47 S. W. 1098 (same); 1901, Watriss v. Trendall, 74 Vt. 54, 52 Atl. 118 (value of boarding-services); 1896, Turner v. R. Co., 15 Wash. 213, 46 Pac. 243, semble (attorney's time, excluded).

PERSONAL INJURIES: in the following cases, an estimate of the damage done by a personal injury is excluded, though sometimes the ruling is applied only to the plaintiff's own estimate: 1886, Little Rock M. R. & T. R. Co. v. Haynes, 47 Ark. 500, 1 S. W. 774 (plaintiff himself); 1877, Central R. & B. Co. v. Kelly, 58 Ga. 110; 1880, Thomas v. Hamilton, 71 Ind. 277; 1870, Tefft v. Wilcox, 6 Kan. 55; 1856, Wilcox v. Leake, 11 La. An. 179; 1908, Cincinnati Traction Co. v. Stephens, 75 Oh. St. 171, 79 N. E. 235 (father's opinion of value of child's services, excluded); 1903, Tenney v. Rapid City, 17 S. D. 283, 96 N. W. 96; 1888, Bain v. Cushman, 60 Vt. 343, 15 Atl. 171 (plaintiff himself); 1903, DeWald v. Ingle, 31 Wash. 616, 72 Pac. 469. Contra: 1905, Roundtree v. Charleston & W. C. R. Co., 72 S. C. 474, 52 S. E. 231 (plaintiff allowed to testify to the money amount of injury to her health).

CONTRACT'S NON-PERFORMANCE: 1914, Troy L. & C. Co. v. Boswell, 186 Ala. 409, 65 So. 141 (damage to house by non-performance of contract to supply gutters, excluded); 1847, Pierson v. Wallace, 7 Ark. 291 (damage by non-payment, excluded); 1902, Foote & D.

classes of values, nothing special need be said; except that in personal-injury cases the exclusion of opinions of value is perhaps reasonable, not because of the Opinion rule (which would insist on the grounds being substituted for the inference), but because there are no precise grounds, i. e. the injury is one not capable of being stated in terms of money, except so far as it involves the loss of income or support. Nevertheless, so long as the law gives compensation in the shape of money, there is an inconsistency in excluding estimates in money.

3. Insurance Risk (Increase or Materiality)

§ 1946. Principle. Whether expert testimony by professional insurance men is receivable to throw light upon the effect of a given circumstance in forming a "material risk" or in causing an "increase of risk," has been the subject of a controversy more than a hundred years old, — a controversy mainly due to the failure to distinguish the different issues which may in this or that case be involved, and impossible to settle until a clear appreciation of this difference of issues is gained.

The general question, whether a given circumstance has increased a risk, either represents or is closely connected with at least four distinct issues,

Co. v. Maloney, 115 Ga. 985, 42 S. E. 413 (damage to business by breach of contract, excluded); 1873, Linn v. Sigsbee, 67 Ill. 75 (trade lost by breach of contract restraining trade, excluded); 1867, Mitchell v. Allison, 29 Ind. 44 (damage by failure to perform, excluded); 1870, Ferguson v. Stafford, 33 Ind. 164 (amount gained if contract had been performed, allowed); 1882, Ætna L. Ins. Co. v. Nexsen, 84 Ind. 347 (value of life insurance policy, allowed); 1898, Ironton Land Co. v. Butchart, 73 Minn. 39, 75 N. W. 749 (value of land with a contract performed and unperformed allowed); 1872, Fitzgerald v. Hayward, 50 Mo. 521 (damage by non-performance, allowed); 1901, U. S. v. McCann, 40 Or. 13, 66 Pac. 274 (amount of damage from breach of contract, excluded); 1882, Jones v. Fuller, 19 S. C. 66, 70 (marriage-promise; estimate by persons knowing the circumstances of the parties, allowed); 1876, Waco Tap R. Co. v. Shirley, 45 Tex. 375 (probable cost of completing a contract allowed).

SUNDRIES: 1915, Dowagiac Mfg. Co., v. Minnesota M. Plow Co., 235 U. S. 641, 35 Sup. 221 (reasonable royalty, as measure of damages for infringement of patent); 1897, Arkansas M. R. Co. v. Griffith, 63 Ark. 491, 39 S. W. 550 (by a farmer, as to the cost of his living, admitted); 1904, McCrary v. Pritchard, 119 Ga. 876, 47 S. E. 341 (amount of damages by false representations, excluded); 1911, Jenkins v. Commercial Nat'l Bank, 19 Ida. 290, 113 Pac. 463 (wrongful foreclosure of a mortgage, excluded); 1909, Foster-Milburn Co. v. Chinn, 134 Ky. 424, 120 S. W. 364 (libel on the plaintiff by publishing a forged testimonial for pills; physicians' testimony that a testimonial of this sort was damaging to the person's repute, held improper; on the record, one of the most unjust of quibbles); 1898, Burton v. B. S. C. Co., 171 Mass. 437, 50 N. E. 1028 (value of the use of inventions, allowed); 1913, Nelson Theatre Co. v. Nelson, 216 Mass. 30, 102 N. E. 926 (value of a theatre leasehold, based on gross receipts and net profits, held not improperly admitted in discretion); 1899, Graves v. Kennedy, 119 Mich. 621, 78 N. W. 667 (value of insurance business bought, allowed); 1912, Eesley Light & P. Co. v. Commonwealth P. Co., 172 Mich. 78, 137 N. W. 663 (estimate of proportion of cost of coal used, due to obstruction of water-power, admitted; liberal opinion by Stone, J.); 1907, Crosby v. Wells, 73 N. J. L. 790, 67 Atl. 295 (whether oil lands were profitable territory, or not, allowed).

The following crudely phrased statute aims to liberalize the practice in patent causes: U. S. Rev. St. 1878, § 4921, as amended by St. 1897, Mar. 3, c. 391, § 6, and St. 1922, Feb. 18, c. —, § 8 (patent infringement; if damages or profits "are not susceptible of calculation and determination with reasonable certainty, the Court may, on evidence tending to establish the same, in its discretion, receive opinion on expert testimony, which is hereby declared to be competent and admissible, subject to the general rules of evidence applicable to this character of testimony").

for each of which the problem of the Opinion rule's application must receive an independent solution. (1) The question may be whether an insurance broker has fulfilled his duty to his principal (the insured) which requires him to provide by new policies or new clauses against any change of "risk" (i. e. of circumstances possibly affecting the property's status with reference to existing policies) brought to his notice. (2) The question may be, in an action for the value of property confiscated, whether the owner of property near to a new public servitude, e. g. a railroad, has been injured by it with reference to (a) an actual increased danger from fire, or (b) an increased expense necessarily imposed upon him for insurance, whether or not the danger has in fact increased. (3) The question may be, in an action by an insured against the insurers, whether there existed at the making of the contract an undisclosed or misrepresented circumstance "material to the risk," or whether there has since been an "increase of risk," which circumstance or increase, by not having been communicated according to the terms of the policy, has forfeited the policy. These different issues may be examined in order:

(1) Insurance broker's duty. The solution here can best be illustrated by the following case:

1833, Chapman v. Walton, 10 Bing. 57; an insurance broker received a letter from the insured, announcing the alteration of the voyage in certain respects, and was told to "do the needful" with it; he procured certain alterations in the policies, but the ship was lost at a place not covered by the altered policies, and the broker was sued for breach of duty. TINDAL, C. J.: "The point to be determined is, not whether the defendant arrived at a correct conclusion upon reading the letter, but whether, upon the occasion in question, he did or did not exercise a reasonable and proper care, skill, and judgment. This is a question of fact, the decision of which appears to us to rest upon this further inquiry, viz., whether other persons exercising the same profession or calling, and being men of experience therein, would or would not have come to the same conclusion as the defendant. . . . It is not a simple abstract question, as is supposed by the plaintiff, what the words of the letter mean. It is what others conversant with the business of a policy broker would have understood it to mean, and how they would have acted upon it under the same circumstances. . . . This conclusion, it appears to us, neither judge nor jury could arrive at from the simple perusal of the letter, unassisted by evidence; because they would not have the experience upon which a judgment could be formed."

This result is not to be questioned. The case is the ordinary one of the propriety of professional conduct, and it is obvious that skilled aid must be employed to explain to the tribunal the situation as it would be understood and dealt with by a person of ordinary skill in the profession. Thus, incidentally, the question may arise whether a particular circumstance, e. g. the stopping at a specific port not mentioned in the original policy, would by possibility so affect the attitude of the insurer that the broker as a prudent agent ought to cover it by a new clause.

(2) Injury to property by eminent-domain process. Here we assume that by the substantive law the owner may include in his bill of damages (a) an actual increased danger from fire, or (b) an increased expense necessarily imposed for insurance, irrespective of actual increase of danger. As to the employment of expert testimony on the first point, the question is the same as one to be taken up under the next head (3) (a), and it is enough to refer to what is said there. As to its employment on the second point, there can be no doubt of its propriety. The issue is, Can the owner get insurance at the same rates as before? and insurance experts are certainly capable of helping the jury to determine whether he can or cannot.

(3) Uncommunicated "increase of risk" or "misrepresentation of material facts," as forfeiting a policy. (a) Here let us first assume that the issue is whether there has been an actual (or objectively real) increase of danger by the subsequent circumstance, or whether the preëxisting and concealed circumstance was actually (or, in objective reality) "material," i. e. made the fire-danger greater than it would have been. On this assumption, it is a fairly disputable question whether any expert testimony is needed to aid the jury. Certainly, on some points they clearly do not need it:

1853, Hills v. Ins. Co., 2 Mich. 479; the fact of pending litigation was not disclosed, and the opinion of underwriters was offered to show it to be material, inasmuch as "the insured might be tempted to fire his property, or in case of accidental fire, be less disposed to make exertions to put it out, or less vigilant to insure against fire." WING, P. J.: "This is not a question of science or skill; . . . it is a mere deduction of reason from a fact, founded upon the common experience of mankind that a man may be tempted to do wrong when placed in circumstances where his cupidity may be excited. A jury does not need evidence to convince them that this may be the effect."

It seems clear, from this point of view, that the use of expert testimony may or may not be necessary according to the nature of the circumstance at issue in each case. There should be a liberal leaning towards the use of such aid whenever it is by possibility useful; but at any rate, there can be no hard-and-fast rule against it. This doctrine is well set forth in the following opinion:

1853, RANNEY, J., in Protection Ins. Co. v. Harmer, 2 Oh. St. 457: "The application of the doctrine to cases of insurance is as obvious and easy as to any other. A fact concealed or not communicated is claimed to have been material to the risk assumed; because from its probable or necessary results, it increased the chances of loss. The question is, did it so increase them? If the answer can be given from ordinary experience and knowledge, the jury must respond to it unaided. . . . In cases of life and marine insurance, such [expert] testimony may often become indispensable. . . . In cases of fire insurance, it is more difficult to see when a necessity for such evidence could ever arise. But I am not prepared to say that it might not, and if it did, no doubt it should be governed by the same principles. It is therefore impossible to say that the opinions of witnesses are never to be received in determining the materiality of facts not disclosed; much less can it be said that they are to be received in all cases. In each case it must depend on the nature of the inquiry. . . . There was nothing in the question raised here [whether the fact of a suspected incendiary fire, shortly before, was material] requiring either science or skill to determine. The effect that a previous fire might have upon the safety of the building thereafter could be as well understood by one man as another. Every man of sense would know that it would depend entirely upon the cause of the fire."

1896, TAFT, J., in Penn M. L. Ins. Co. v. M. S. B. & T. Co., 19 C. C. A. 286, 72 Fed. 428, 430: "If it requires scientific knowledge or peculiar skill to trace the possible causal or evidential connection between the fact claimed to be material and the loss or death insured against, then, of course, the testimony of those learned in the necessary science, or trained in the particular craft, should be furnished to the jury, to enable them properly to estimate the weight which a reasonably prudent insurer would naturally give to the fact, in his calculation of chances. But where the calculation of the chances involves a consideration only of facts of everyday life, of the motives of men living in the same community with members of the jury, and of those ordinary physical and natural causes of which every man is presumed to have an understanding, it is difficult to see why an insurance examiner should be permitted to influence the jury by giving his sworn opinion on the very issue which they are assembled to try, and of which they are presumed to have the same opportunities upon which to found a reliable judgment as he. It is true, he may have had occasion, in his business, to consider and weigh facts of this character, for this purpose, much more frequently than the jury, but that does not render his opinions on the facts competent evidence. . . . Certainly, there is the same ground for excluding the individual opinions of insurance men [in life insurance] upon the materiality of particular facts as in marine and fire insurance. Of course, the evidence of physicians as to the tendency of diseases and bodily conditions or habits to shorten life is competent, but insurance men are not experts upon these subjects. Facts other than those relating to the health and habits of the applicant usually either relate to the motive of the applicant to destroy himself, or increase the probability of death by exposure to bodily injury. Of the materiality of this class of facts the jury can judge quite as well as one experienced in passing on insurance risks. They are within the common knowledge of mankind."

(b) But is the above assumption of (a) correct? Is it true, in the words of the judge first quoted, that "the question is, Did the fact concealed or not communicated, from its probable or necessary results, increase the chances of loss?" Are we investigating the objective reality of an increase of danger, or is our true purpose of inquiry something quite different? The latter, it seems clear. The inquiry before the Court in such a case is, in truth, Is the circumstance in question one which would have influenced the insurer (or promiser) to fix a higher rate of premium? In other words, not the objective reality of an increase of danger is involved, but the relation which the circumstance in question subjectively bears to the insurer's settled classified terms of charge. When the policy is agreed to be void "if any material fact or circumstance has not been fairly represented . . . or if, without the assent of the Company, the situation or circumstances affecting the risk shall be so altered as to cause an increase of such risks," the proviso is inserted with reference to the course which the insurer would have taken, had he in view of those facts been entering anew upon the contract, i. e. with reference to his either increasing the premium or refusing the insurance altogether, as induced by the circumstance in question. Thus the word "risk" does not mean "actual danger," but "danger as determined by the insurer's classification of the various circumstances affecting the rate of premium." Our main inquiry, then, is as to the insurer's schedule of classified "risks" (i. e. combinations of circumstances); and as we may desire further evidence than his own word for it, we may examine, secondarily, the usage of insurers in the same community, because their custom will tend to show what the individual insurer's practice is, as conforming presumably to the local methods (ante, §§ 376, 379). We do not look at the usage as simply incorporated into the contract,[1] but merely as throwing light on the probable practice of an individual of the class.

Thus we are in no way concerned with the question of an actual increase of danger. Perhaps it might be clear that the circumstance in the case in hand did not really increase the danger; but if nevertheless it fell within a class of circumstances scheduled by the insurer (for whatever reason seems best to him) as increasing the danger, it would "increase the risk" under the terms of the contract. A proper mode of obtaining aid, then, as to the insurer's practice in the matter, is to call in persons skilled in the insurance business, who may appropriately add to the jury's information on this subject.[2] The form of question proper to be put would be: "Would you as a professional insurer, and according to local practice, regard this concealed or misrepresented circumstance as material?" or, "With reference to local practice, would this circumstance be regarded as increasing the risk?" or, "as calling for a higher rate?" or, "as bound to be communicated?" or, to the promisor himself or his agents, "Would you according to your practice or rules have charged a higher rate of premium in view of this circumstance?"

This is the view accepted by a few Courts only. The following passages illustrate it:

1839, Joy, C. B., in Quin v. Assurance Co., Jones & Car. (Ir.) 331: "Now what is the test of materiality? It is this: whether the misrepresentation was such as to induce the insurers, either to insure when they would not have done so if they had known that the premises were so circumstanced as they actually were, or to have required a higher premium. If either were the consequence of misdescription, it was necessarily material."

1853, Black, C. J., in Hartman v. Ins. Co., 21 Pa. 477: "I think none of the cases go so far as to say that one who knows the practice, not only of the particular office, but of insurance offices generally, may not give his opinion of the influence which a given fact would have had as an element in the contract."

1854, Curtis, J., in Hawes v. Ins. Co., 2 Curt. 230: "True, it is but an opinion; and so is nearly all evidence of value. If you inquire of a sugar broker, whether the existence of a certain quality in sugar — as, for instance, dryness — affects the value of the article in the market, you do but get his opinion or judgment that the existence of that fact has an influence with purchasers generally in determining the price. . . . Yet such and similar evidence is constantly admitted. Here the inquiry is in substance whether the market price of insurance is affected by particular facts."

§ 1946. [1] And whether the insured knew of the usage is thus immaterial.

[2] The truth is that the above principle is necessarily implied in the theory of "material representation" now accepted for the substantive law in construing insurance contracts, "materiality" means that which would subjectively affect the insurer's attitude towards the proposed contract; thus the point of view is always subjectively the insurer's state of mind. Compare the following exposition of "materiality" by Tindal, C. J., in Elton v. Larkins (1832), post: "A material concealment is a concealment of facts which if communicated to the party who underwrites would induce him either to refuse the insurance altogether or not to effect it, except at a larger premium than the ordinary premium"; which only needs to be qualified by the statement of Blackburn, J., in Ionides v. Pender, post, that the insurer's attitude must be "the judgment of a rational underwriter governing himself by the principles and calculations on which underwriters do in practice act."

1896, TAFT, J., in Penn M. L. Ins. Co. v. M. S. B. & T. Co., 19 C. C. A. 286, 72 Fed. 428: "Materiality of a fact, in insurance law, is subjective. It concerns rather the impression which the fact claimed to be material would reasonably and naturally convey to the insurer's mind before the event, and at the time the insurance is effected, than the subsequent actual causal connection between the fact, or the probable cause it evidences, and the event. Thus, it is by no means conclusive upon the question of the materiality of a fact that it was actually one link in a chain of causes leading to the event. And, on the other hand, it does not disprove that a fact may have been material to the risk because it had no actual subsequent relation to the manner in which the event insured against did occur. A fair test of the materiality of a fact is found, therefore, in the answer to the question whether reasonably careful and intelligent men would have regarded the fact, communicated at the time of effecting the insurance, as substantially increasing the chances of the loss insured against. The best evidence of this is to be found in the usage and practice of insurance companies in regard to raising the rates or in rejecting the risk on becoming aware of the fact."

(c) A qualification of this result may sometimes be necessary. It may be asked, since the sense of words used in a contract must be the ordinary and natural one (as being presumably the one common to both), and not a peculiar sense put forward by one party alone, why can the insurer claim that his own standard of classification shall be adopted, as above? Because the whole transaction presupposes that he has his various charges appropriate to various "risks," and the liberty to raise his premium or decline the insurance entirely must be naturally understood by the insured as dependent on the insurer's established classes of circumstances and "risks"; so that the insurer's sense of the phrase is adopted into the contract. But (and here the qualification comes) it may clearly appear in a given case that the phrase was not used with reference to the insurer's sense or classification, and that it is to be interpreted according to the sense used by the insured, i. e. the ordinary sense of "increase of risk," which therefore is to be applied by the jury acting on the standards and knowledge of the average layman. If the case is of this sort, it would seem that expert testimony might, on occasion only, be resorted to (as in (a) supra), where the nature of the matter called for it.[3] But how shall we determine whether the case is of this sort? Is it necessary that the policy should expressly speak of an increase of risk "to the knowledge of the insured"? Or is it enough that the insured did not know of the insurer's classification? or that it was not set out in the policy? And when the proviso "to the knowledge of the insured" is expressed, does this mean a knowledge of what he considers a risk, or a knowledge of the risks as classified by the insurer? For,

[3] The argument might be made, to be sure, that the test would be purely subjective as to the insured; i. e. "Was the risk, as the insured supposed, increased?", and hence expert testimony would never be appropriate. This, however, would only be sound where the policy speaks (as it sometimes does) of an "increase of risk with the knowledge of the insured." When it does not, "increase of risk" would be an objective fact, as to which expert testimony might be needed. Where the "knowledge of the insured" is expressly taken as the standard, it would seem that a foolish owner might ignorantly endanger his property with impunity; or that one who, for example, allowed his workman to thaw out dynamite over a stove might show that he had never known that this was a dangerous proceeding.

if the latter is meant, then if the schedule is shown to the insurer or accepted by him, expert testimony could be resorted to, and if not shown nor accepted, expert testimony could not be resorted to. These are queries which have seldom been answered by the Courts, but they may well arise; and the following case illustrates one method of solution:

1882, Franklin Fire Ins. Co. v. Gruver, 100 Pa. 273: the Court properly distinguished (as in (b) supra), between expert testimony as to the increase of actual danger, and expert testimony of the customary higher rates, accepting the latter only; but the clause read "or if the risk shall be increased . . . within the knowledge of the assured," and the Court pointed out that "the knowledge of the plaintiff was thus made a material factor in this condition; therefore, proof by experts that, from a technical point of view, the risk [or rate of insurance [4]] was increased, came to nothing unless accompanied by proof that the assured knew that the erections complained of created hazards for which by the rules of insurance an additional rate would be charged. But of this he knew nothing. He did not even know the class in which he was insured. . . . It does, therefore, seem to me that without some proof by the company that the plaintiff had some notice or knowledge of the rules of insurance, its expert evidence would come to nothing."

§ 1947. State of the Law in the Various Jurisdictions. As the Courts have not always borne in mind the various possible distinctions above discussed, it is not easy to determine the exact state of the law. The rulings may now be examined in the order of the above topics.

(1) Insurance broker's duty. There seems to be little authority on the specific point. The view above set forth would probably prevail;[1] it harmonizes with the general doctrine as to expert testimony of professional skill.

(2) Injury to property by eminent-domain process. Here, also, there is little authority; the rulings should be considered in the light of the distinctions noted above.[2]

(3) Forfeiture of policy for "material" misrepresentation or uncommunicated "increase of risk." Here a difficulty in stating the law arises from the failure of many Courts to exhibit the principle on which they have decided. They have either admitted or rejected the expert testimony; but that has in itself no significance; everything depends, or ought to depend, upon the principle applied. With reference, then, to the exposition under (3) in the preceding section, we find the greater number of Courts proceeding without any notice of theory (b) and therefore apparently upon the assumption of theory (a). When the question is asked whether a representation was "material" to the risk or whether there was an "increase of risk," one group of judges has [4] As appears from a previous sentence.

§ 1947. [1] 1833, Chapman v. Walton, 10 Bing. 57, quoted ante, § 1946; 1903, Trenton P. Co. v. Title G. & T. Co., N. Y., cited post, §1951. The following case seems distinguishable: 1900, Hill v. Amer. Surety Co., 107 Wis. 19, 81 N. W. 1024 (whether the witness company would have insured property in the hands of an assignee, excluded, on the issue whether the assignee was derelict in not procuring insurance).

[2] 1889, Pingery v. R. Co., 78 Ia. 442, 43 N. W. 285 (whether the proximity of a railroad depreciated the value by increasing the risk of fire; expert testimony held receivable as to increase of risk, but not as to increase of insurance rates); 1840, Webber v. Eastern R. Co., 2 Metc. Mass. 149 (whether proximity of a railroad would increase a fire risk; admitted).

believed in admitting expert testimony as a rule,[3] another group has believed in excluding it as a rule,[4] and a third group has chosen the preferable and proper course of letting the result depend upon the case in hand.[5] Moreover, when the question is in the form, "whether the usage of underwriters or of the insurer was to charge higher rates for such risks," it would on this theory equally be excluded,[6] certainly by Courts excluding the former question (as to the individual expert's opinion); [7] and equally (one would suppose) by Courts allowing the former question, because here the usage is offered merely as hearsay opinion evidence.[8]

[3] The question being here whether the misrepresentation was material: 1828, Lindeman v. Desborough, 8 B. & C. 587, semble (life); 1830, Rickards v. Murdock, 10 B. & C. 527, semble (marine); and the other English cases cited in n. 8, infra; U. S. 1876, Leitch v. Ins. Co., 66 N. Y. 107 (marine); 1806, Moses v. Ins. Co., 1 Wash. C. C. 388 (marine); 1809, Marshall v. Ins. Co., 2 Wash. C. C. 358 (marine).

The question being here whether the risk was increased: 1866, Schmidt v. Ins. Co., 41 Ill. 299, semble (fire; 1884, German-Amer. Ins. Co. v. Steiger, 109 Ill. 254, 258, 259 (fire); 1896, Traders' Ins. Co. v. Catlin, 163 Ill. 256, 45 N. E. 255; 1864, Mitchell v. Ins. Co., 32 Ia. 424, semble (fire); but in Stennett v. Ins. Co. (1886), 68 Ia. 675, 28 N. W. 12, the question is regarded as open); 1886, Planters' Mut. Ins. Co. v. Rowland, 66 Md. 244, 7 Atl. 257, semble (fire); 1833, Lapham v. Atlas Ins. Co., 24 Pick. Mass. 3, 7 (marine); 1853, Daniels v. Ins. Co., 12 Cush. Mass. 420, 430 (fire); 1903, Taylor v. Security M. F. I. Co., 88 Minn. 231, 92 N. W. 952, semble (fire); 1867, Kern v. Ins. Co., 40 Mo. 21, 26 (fire); 1904, Hanna v. Orient Ins. Co., 109 Mo. App. 152, 82 S. W. 152, 82 S. W. 115, semble (fire); 1854, Schneck v. Ins. Co., 24 N. J. L. 451 (fire).

[4] The question here being whether the misrepresentation was material: Eng. 1766, Carter v. Boehm, 3 Burr. 1914, 1918, Lord Mansfield (marine); 1816, Durrell v. Bederley, Holt N. P. 284, Gibbs, C. J. (marine); 1918, Yorke v. Yorkshire Ins. Co., 1 K. B. 662 (false representations of health; the insured "was addicted to the veronal habit"; medical testimony as to the veronal habit being material, admitted; Carter v. Boehm, supra, treated as overruled); Can. 1913, Anglo-American Fire Ins. Co. v. Hendry, 15 D. L. R. 832, Can. Sup. (materiality of non-disclosure of a previous fire; opinion of underwriters and insurance brokers, held admissible); U. S. 1920, Bohen v. North Amer. Life Ins. Co., 188 Ia. 1349, 177 N. W. 706 (life); 1863, Rawls v. Ins. Co., 27 N. Y. 293 (life); 1873, Higbie v. Ins. Co., 53 N. Y. 604 (life); 1885, Schwarzbach v. Protective Union, 25 W. Va. 622, 651 (fire).

The question here being whether the risk was increased: 1902, Southern M. I. Co. v. Hudson, 115 Ga. 638, 42 S. E. 60 (fire); 1858, Joyce v. Ins. Co., 45 Me. 168 (fire); 1871, Cannel v. Ins. Co., 59 Me. 591; 1880, Thayer v. Ins. Co., 70 Me. 539; 1903, New Era Ass'n v. Mactavish, 133 Mich. 68, 94 N. W. 599 (life); 1882, Kirby v. Ins. Co., 9 Lea Tenn. 142 (fire); 1905, Prudential F. Ins. Co. v. Alley, 104 Va. 356, 51 S. E. 812 (fire; erection of adjoining building).

[5] Not all of the following cases lay down so broad a rule; most of them exclude expert testimony as to whether leaving a building vacant increases the risk; but they also imply or declare that upon other matters such testimony would be receivable: 1876, Milwaukee R. Co. v. Kellogg, 94 U. S. 472, semble (fire); 1896, Penn M. L. Ins. Co. v. M. S. B. & T. Co. 19 C. C. A. 286, 72 Fed. 413 (cited infra, note 10); 1856, Mulry v. Ins. Co., 5 Gray Mass. 545 (whether failure to occupy a building increased the fire risk, a matter said in this instance to be one of common knowledge); 1867, Lyman v. Ins. Co., 14 All. 335 (similar); 1853, Hills v. Ins. Co., 2 Mich. 479 (fire); 1831, Jefferson Ins. Co. v. Cotheal, 7 Wend. N. Y. 77 (fire); 1878, Cornish v. Ins. Co., 74 N. Y. 297 (fire); 1853, Protection Ins. Co. v. Harmer, 2 Ohio St. 457 (fire).

[6] 1884, German American Ins. Co. v. Steiger, 109 Ill. 254, 258, 259 (custom of insurers, excluded); 1876, Insurance Co. v. Eshelman, 30 Oh. St. 655 (whether the company would have insured if the disease had been disclosed, excluded); 1903, Murphy v. Prudential Ins. Co., 205 Pa. 444, 55 Atl. 19 (to a medical examiner, whether if certain ailments had existed he would have considered the plaintiff a first-class risk, excluded, because the only issue was as to the truth of the facts stated in the application; unsound, because one of the issues was whether the facts were material to the risk); 1885, Schwarzbach v. Protective Union, 25 W. Va. 622, 651; 1894, Commercial Bank v. Ins. Co., 87 Wis. 297, 303, 58 N. W. 391 (action on an adjustment-promise; insurer not allowed to testify that he would not have made the adjustment if he had known of the alteration of account-books).

[7] Durrell v. Bederley, Schwarzbach v. Protection Union, Joyce v. Ins. Co., Connell v. Ins. Co., Rawls v. Ins. Co., supra.

[8] And yet we find some of these Courts admitting it; this seems an inconsistency; if the

A few Courts, however, adopt the correct theory (supra (b)); the result of which is that the question, "Was there in your opinion an increase of risk?" should properly not be asked,[9] because the actual state of danger is immaterial, and therefore the witness' own estimate of it is immaterial; while insurance experts may of course be called to speak as to the usage of the trade or of the insurer in charging higher rates for such circumstances.[10]

Finally, of the Courts accepting this view, we occasionally find one paying attention to the modification (c) above pointed out; [11] and the sort of clause thus dealt with is so common in such policies that there is here ample room for a further development and systematization of the principle.[12] usage, etc., is to be admitted, it can only be on theory (b); yet in the following decisions both sorts of testimony are admitted: 1791, Chauraud v. Angerstein, Peake N. P. 44, Lord Kenyon, C. J. (marine); 1804, Haywood v. Rogers, 4 East 592 (marine); 1817, Berthon v. Loughman, 2 Stark. 258, Holroyd, J. (marine) (but in these English cases it does not appear clearly that the Courts were proceeding on this theory; and if they did not, then the rulings belong under note 10, infra); and the following American cases cited supra, note 3; Mitchell v. Ins. Co., Planters' Mut. Ins. Co. v. Rowland, Kern v. Ins. Co., Moses v. Ins. Co., Marshall v. Ins. Co., Taylor v. Security M. F. I. Co., New Era Ass'n v. Mactavish. The following early case does not indicate its principle: 1672, Pickering v. Barkley, Vin. Abr., "Evidence," P. b. 11, vol. XII, 175 (to prove that pirates were within the excepted risk of "perils of the sea," "the master of the Trinity-house and other sufficient merchants" were called in).

[9] 1817, Berthon v. Loughman, 2 Stark. 258 (marine); 1839, Quin v. Ins. Co., infra, loc. cit. 336 (fire); 1870, Luce v. Ins. Co., infra (apparently settling the prior conflict in Massachusetts rulings); 1893, First Congreg. Church v. Ins. Co., infra; 1854, Hawes v. Ins. Co., infra (marine); 1896, Penn M. L. Ins. Co. v. M. S. B. & T. Co., infra (life).

[10] England: 1832, Elton v. Larkins, 5 C. & P. 385; 1839, Quin v. Ass. Co., Jones & Car. 332 (fire; this case, decided by a majority, is an arsenal of arguments, and its opinions, too long for quotation, will repay special study; it should be regarded as the leading case on the subject); 1874, Ionides v. Pender, L. R. 9 Q. B. 535, 539 (marine).

United States: 1828, M'Lanahan v. Ins. Co., 1 Pet. 188, Story, J. (marine); 1854, Hawes v. Ins. Co., 2 Curt. 230 (marine); 1896, Penn M. L. Ins. Co. v. M. S. B. & T. Co., 19 C. C. A. 286, 72 Fed. 413 (life insurance; whether the existence of other insurance and the commission of embezzlements were material; expert opinion excluded as to the actual increase of risk involved in the fact, unless it is a matter of "scientific knowledge or peculiar skill," but admitted to show the usage of life insurance companies generally in rejecting an application based upon such a fact, since the interpretation depends on what the usage is; in the case of other kinds of insurance, usage as to charging a higher rate may also be asked for; the opinion contains the fullest citation of authorities); 1906, Provident S. L. Assur. Soc'y v. Whayne's Adm'r, 131 Ky. 84, 93 S. W. 1049, semble (life; following Penn M. L. Ins. Co. v. M. S. B. & T. Co., Fed., infra); 1834, Fiske v. Ins. Co., 15 Pick. Mass. 312, 319 (marine), semble; 1838, Merriam v. Ins. Co., 21 Pick. Mass. 163 (semble, in its logical consequence); 1872, Luce v. Ins. Co., 105 Mass. 302 (fire); s. c. 110 Mass. 363; 1893, First Congreg. Church v. Ins. Co., 158 Mass. 475, 481, 33 N. E. 572 (fire); 1853, Hartman v. Ins. Co., 21 Pa. 477 (life); 1882, Franklin Fire Ins. Co. v. Gruver, 100 Pa. 273 (fire); 1892, Pelzer Mfg. Co. v. Sun Fire Office, 36 S. C. 263, 15 S. E. 562, semble (fire).

[11] 1882, Franklin Fire Ins. Co. v. Gruver, 100 Pa. 273 (fire; see quotation supra); probably also: 1853, Hobby v. Dana, 17 Barb. N. Y. 111 (fire); 1892, Loomis v. Ins. Co., 81 Wis. 366, 51 N. W. 564 (fire).

The distinction made by Mr. Justice Gray in Luce v. Ins. Co., supra, must here be adverted to. He confines the testimony to the usage of underwriters, and rightly enough, so far as this excludes the opinion of individual underwriter-witnesses, because we may infer from the general usage the insurer's usage, though not from an individual's practice. But he also excludes the practice of the insurer himself, because it is a practice not known to the insured. This seems incorrect. In the first place the trade-usage is no better known to the insured, who is an outsider, and thus the learned judge's principle is inconsistently applied. In the next place, the insured's actual knowledge is immaterial, as explained supra, unless it is a special proviso of the contract, in which case it may be shown without resorting to trade usage.

[12] The following cases do not affect the points above dealt with: The ruling in Astor v. Ins. Co. (1827) 7 Cow. N. Y. 217, as to the rates of insurance in other offices, has other bearings. In Brink v. Ins. Co. (1877), 49 Vt. 445, 459, it was properly ruled that one who has seen

4. Conduct (including Care, Reasonableness, Safety, and the like)

§ 1949. History and General Principle. This topic is one of the few upon which there has ever existed in the English precedents any foundation for doubt. The subject of the testimony in question is manifold; sometimes it is whether proper care was taken, sometimes whether action was reasonable, sometimes whether sufficient skill was shown, sometimes whether a place or a machine was safe; but all the forms seem reducible to a general one, namely, whether a certain standard of conduct was observed.

Looking first at the orthodox practice in England,[1] it is clear that there is not and never has been any real question as to the propriety of such testimony. In all but a few of the rulings the testimony was even received without objection, — as may be easily understood from the history of the general rule in that country (ante, § 1917). The morbid and doctrinaire theory of cautiousness which is the foundation of the American rulings has never been known at the English bar. Into no English judge's mind did the idea enter to exclude the opinion of an observer who proposed to state whether a party had used due care or acted reasonably or managed skilfully.

We may start, then, with the understanding that the rulings on this point in the United States are purely a modern excrescence upon the body of the common law, due to the unhealthy influence of a form of principle with which our Courts have drugged themselves for two generations past.

§ 1950. Discriminations as to Other Principles; (1) Other Persons' Conduct as evidencing Danger, Reasonableness, or the like; (2) Moral Character, Professional Skill, and other General Traits. (1) It is necessary to discriminate a sort of evidence sometimes confused with that in question, namely, the premises may speak as to the nature of the danger. In Liverpool Ins. Co. v. McGuire (1876), 52 Miss. 232, the evidence as to increase of risk was rejected because immaterial under the circumstances. In the following case testimony as to the defendant's custom was wrongly rejected as varying the terms of the policy (a reason not applicable); Summers v. Ins. Co. (1848), 13 La. An. 505 (life of a slave). For a case turning on a peculiar state of facts, see Martin v. Ins. Co. (1880), 42 N. J. L. 47.

§ 1949. [1] 1816, Jones v. Boyce, 1 Stark. 493 (that the coachman had been compelled to take a certain course, and that a passenger's conduct in jumping was proper, allowed); 1817, Jackson v. Tollett, 2 Stark. 38 (that a coachman had adopted the most prudent course, allowed); 1824, Walton v. Nesbit, 1 C. & P. 72, Abbott, C. J. (of an experienced mariner, whether an officer of competent skill would have omitted to make soundings, etc., allowed; the issue being negligence); 1824, Fenwick v. Bell, 1 C. & P. 312, Coltman, J. (an expert was allowed to be asked whether a collision could have been avoided); 1826, Jameson v. Drinkald, 12 Moore 148, 157 (admitting testimony as to the blamable conduct causing the accident, and excluding testimony as to the general fault of either side or the merits of the case; with some doubt and obscurity of language); 1834, Drew v. New River Co., 6 C. & P. 755 (that the condition of a sidewalk was such as to make it unsafe for persons to pass; allowed); 1835, Wilkes v. Market Co., 2 Bing. N. C. 281 (that an obstruction in the street was unreasonable and unnecessary, allowed); 1840, Sills v. Brown, 9 C. & P. 604, Coleridge, J. (allowing the question, "What was the duty of a captain under certain specified circumstances?", but excluding the question, "Was the conduct of the captain here right or not?"; here his objection, as the case shows, was merely that the hypothetical form should be employed).

In marine affairs, there is found in Canada a rule excluding experts where a nautical assessor sits with the Court: 1921, Fraser v. S. S. Aztec, 56 D. L. R. 440, Can. Exch. (collision in a lock; expert evidence not admissible, "as the Court had the assistance of a Nautical Assessor").

testimony not of the witness' own judgment as to the quality of conduct as observed by him, but of the fact of other persons' conduct offered as evidence of the conduct properly to be expected in the case in hand. For example, testimony that the person in issue, as seen by the witness to jump from a train after a collision, was not prudent in so doing, raises the present question of the Opinion rule; but testimony that other persons at the same time jumped also is of the second sort, and raises a different question. The legal danger is that the conduct of the other persons, instead of being taken by the jury merely as evidence of the condition or quality of the external object, may be used by them as furnishing a fixed legal standard for the case in hand. The evidential question, however, is merely of the relevancy of other persons' conduct under similar circumstances, and does not involve the opinion of the testifying person nor the Opinion rule; it is accordingly elsewhere dealt with (ante, §§ 459–461).

(2) The opinion of a witness, as here desired, upon the prudence, reasonableness, or care, of a specific act of conduct by a person in issue must be distinguished from his opinion as to the other person's general traits of moral character or professional skill. It is quite possible for the Opinion rule to exclude the former while admitting the latter. For example, the witness' opinion whether an engineer, as observed by him on a given occasion, acted carefully, is distinct from the witness' opinion whether the engineer, with whom he has had a long and intimate acquaintance, possesses the general trait of carefulness and prudence. The application of the Opinion rule to the latter sort of inquiry rests on different considerations and has a peculiar history of its own (post, §§ 1980–1988).

§ 1951. Application of the Principle: Testimony as to the Safety, Care, Prudence, Duty, Skill, Propriety, of Specific Conduct. In the application of the rule to testimony on the present topics will be found no questions of principle having any consequence or difficulty.[1] The decision is apt to depend § 1951. [1] In the following citations, it must be remembered that an excluding decision means usually that the jury are not to be aided by any one's inference on the point in question, i. e. no question of the competency of the witness is raised, though the Court, in a given case, may say that on this or that point the opinion of a certain expert, but not of a layman, will be received; the witness thus admitted must of course be qualified by experience on that subject, according to the rules already examined under Testimonial Qualifications, ante, §§ 559–571; on this point the distinction between the effect of the Opinion rule and the rules for Experiential Qualifications (as noticed ante, §§ 557, 1925) is to be observed. In the following citations, where the testimony is excluded, it is to be understood, unless otherwise noted, that the Court under the Opinion rule excludes all testimony, even that of experts; and, where the testimony is admitted, that the Court assumes the particular witness offered to be competent on that point; for example, in one ruling, testimony that a steamboat did or did not have a sufficient number of hands was held proper; the note does not record, but it is to be understood, in all such cases, that the Court would of course listen only to a witness skilled in that matter; again, another ruling excludes testimony as to whether a railroad trackwalker was a necessary precaution; the note does not record, but it is to be understood, in all such cases, that even an expert in such matters is to be excluded.

CANADA: Dom. 1920, Fraser v. S. S. Aztec, 56 D. L. R. 440 (cited more fully ante, § 1949); N. Br. 1883, Courser v. Kirkbride, 23 N. Br. 404 (whether "anything more could have been done than was done to prevent the collision" of wagons, excluded); 1885, Morrow v. Waterous, 24 N. Br. 442, 449, 456 (that a mill's chiefly on the Court's general attitude — of favor or disfavor — towards the extension of the exclusionary rule. That the exclusionary rulings are a foundation was insufficient, excluded, by a majority); 1885, McNair v. Stewart, N. Br. 471 (loss of a scow; whether it was "good or bad management" to tow three scows at once, excluded); 1914, Guelph Worsted Spinning Co. v. Guelph, 18 D. L. R. Ont. (that the mode of construction of a bridge was safe for a certain purpose, allowed without question); Que. 1879, The Attila, 5 Que. 342 (expert evidence as to nautical men's conduct was not rejected as matter of law, but merely declared of no value).

UNITED STATES: Federal: 1854, Weston v. Foster, 2 Curt. 121 (whether a ship was fully loaded, allowed); 1869, Chicago v. Greer, 9 Wall. 733 (whether a test of material was fair, allowed); 1875, The City of Washington, 92 U. S. 39 (whether certain conduct was good seamanship, allowed, for an expert); 1877, Transportation Line v. Hope, 95 U. S. 298 (whether it was safe to tug in a certain way, allowed); 1886, Chandler v. Thompson, 30 Fed. 40 (skill in management of machinery, allowed); 1887, Union Ins. Co. v. Smith, 124 U. S. 421, 8 Sup. 534 (like City of Washington's case); 1893, Pullman P. C. Co. v. Harkins, 5 C. C. A. 326, 55 Fed. 932 (whether machinery was dangerous, allowed); 1894, Union P. R. Co. v. Novak, 9 C. C. A. 629, 61 Fed. 573, 15 U. S. App. 400, 413 (whether two brakemen were necessary, allowed); 1894, Flynt B. & C. Co. v. Brown, 14 C. C. A. 308, 67 Fed. 68 (usual and ordinary way of construction, allowed); 1894, Northern P. R. Co. v. Urlin, 158 U. S. 273, 15 Sup. 840 (whether a medical examination was made in a careful manner, allowed); 1896, Atlantic Ave. R. Co. v. Van Dyke, 18 C. C. A. 632, 72 Fed. 458 (whether an electrical motor could be safely operated without a sandbox, excluded; but whether it could be stopped quickly without a sandbox, allowed); 1896, Crane Co. v. Columbus Const. Co., 20 C. C. A. 233, 73 Fed. 984 (whether a gas-pipe was laid with proper skill and care, excluded; but whether the workmen were men of experience or skill, and whether specific carelessness or unskilfulness was shown, admitted); 1896, Blanchard v. Bank, 21 C. C. A. 319, 75 Fed. 249 (whether books were properly kept, excluded); 1896, Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Davidson, 22 C. C. A. 306, 76 Fed. 517 (the safe method of constructing railroad platforms, etc., admitted); 1897, New York El. Eq. Co. v. Blair, 25 C. C. A. 216, 79 Fed. 896 (whether it was necessary to hoist pipe in a certain way, in properly performing a duty, excluded); 1897, Blumenthal v. Craig, 26 C. C. A. 427, 81 Fed. 320 (whether a witness would have known a machine to be more dangerous, allowed); 1897, Campbell v. Mayor, 81 Fed. 182 (firemen allowed to state their estimates as to the saving to be made by the use of certain apparatus); 1899, Western Coal & M. Co. v. Berberich, 36 C. C. A. 304, 94 Fed. 329 (whether a room was safe to work in, allowed); 1899, Hunt v. Kile, 38 C. C. A. 641, 98 Fed. 49 (whether an apparatus was "ordinarily safe and proper," excluded); 1901, Hutchinson Cooperage Co. v. Snider, 46 C. C. A. 517, 107 Fed. 633 (whether a machine was properly constructed or safe, allowed for experts); 1901, Southern Pacific Co. v. Arnett, 50 C. C. A. 17, 111 Fed. 849 (certain questions as to the proper method of providing for cattle in transit, variously disposed of; Caldwell, J., diss. on one point, on the ground of the witnesses' lack of qualifications); 1902, Texas & P. R. Co. v. Watson, 190 U. S. 287, 23 Sup. 681 (whether certain behavior of an engine indicated wrong operation or construction, etc., allowed); 1903, Crane v. Fry, 126 Fed. 278, 61 C. C. A. 260 (proper handling of a tie-boom, allowed); 1903, Wabash S. D. Co. v. Black, 126 Fed. 721, 727, 126 C. C. A. 639 (whether a pulley was safe, allowed); 1906, Gila Valley G. & N. R. Co. v. Lyon, 203 U. S. 465, 27 Sup. 145 (whether a certain kind of buffer was a safe and proper one, allowed, in the trial Court's discretion); 1908, United States Smelting Co. v. Parry, 8th C. C. A., 166 Fed. 407 (that a scaffold was dangerous, allowed); 1915, Walsh v. Rend Collieries Co., 7th C. C. A., 228 Fed. 311 (whether a certain way of supporting a mine roof was proper or safe, allowed); 1919, Thompson v. U. S., 8th C. C. A., 258 Fed. 196 (unlawfully dispensing narcotic drugs under U. S. St. Dec. 17, 1914, Anti-Narcotic Act; physicians allowed to testify to "well-recognized methods among the medical fraternity of treating persons addicted to the use of narcotic drugs for the purpose of curing them"); Alabama: 1848, Jones v. Hatchett, 14 Ala. 744 (that a fire could have been stopped, excluded); 1854, Gibson v. Hatchett, 24 Ala. 207 (same); 1856, McCreary v. Turk, 29 Ala. 245 (whether a steamer had enough hands, excluded); 1858, Hall v. Goodson, 32 Ala. 287 (whether a slave's whipping appeared unreasonable, excluded); 1877, Wood v. Brewer, 57 Ala. 517 (whether work was well done, allowed); 1893, McCarthy v. R. Co., 102 Ala. 193, 203, 14 So. 370 (whether cars were well and carefully loaded, allowed); 1895, Alabama G. S. R. Co. v. Hall, 105 Ala. 599, 17 So. 176 (whether a train's speed was dangerous, excluded); 1895, Pate v. McConnell, 106 Ala. 449, 18 So. 98 (whether an inexperienced person could have coupled cars, excluded); 1895, Culver v. R. Co., 108 Ala. 330, 18 So. 827 (whether a place near a track was safe for standing, admitted); 1897, Alabama M. R. Co. v. Jones, 114 Ala. 519, 21 So. 507 (whether a place was dangerous for a train to stop, admitted); 1898, Orr v.

modern heterodoxy may easily be seen by noting that out of the many hundred rulings the dates of two or three only fall before 1850 and of less than

State, 117 Ala. 69, 23 So. 696 (that rock was likely to do injury, excluded); 1900, Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Tegnor, 125 Ala. 593, 28 So. 510 (whether a track's condition made it dangerous allowed on cross-examination of one who had testified on the same subject); 1902, Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Banks, 132 Ala. 471, 31 So. 573 (certain questions as to the proper handling of a locomotive to avoid collision, ruled upon); 1903, Birmingham R. & E. Co. v. Jackson, 136 Ala. 279, 34 So. 994 (that a person had to get on one track in order to cross another, excluded); 1903, Western R. Co. v. Arnett, 137 Ala. 414, 34 So. 997 (that a place on the car was usual and customary allowed; but that it was possible to fail, if he had been behind the lever, excluded); 1904, Sloss-Sheffield S. & I. Co. v. Mobley, 139 Ala. 425, 36 So. 181 (whether a mode of coupling was safe, allowed); 1904, Davis v. Kornman, 141 Ala. 479, 37 So. 789 (the proper precaution to guard a dangerous machine, allowed); 1904, Northern Ala. R. Co. v. Shea, 142 Ala. 119, 37 So. 796 (that a certain speed was dangerous, allowed); 1905, Western U. Tel. Co. v. Merrill, 144 Ala. 618, 39 So. 121 (that everything was done to send a message, etc., excluded); 1905, Wallace v. North Ala. T. Co., 145 Ala. 682, 40 So. 89 (whether it was impossible to stop a car, allowed); 1906, Williamson I. Co. v. McQueen, 144 Ala. 265, 40 So. 306 (whether a furnace was in good condition, etc., allowed); 1906, Birmingham R. L. & P. Co. v. Martin, 148 Ala. 8, 42 So. 618 (to an engineer, whether he handled the engine carefully, not allowed); 1907, Southern Coal & C. Co. v. Swinney, 149 Ala. 405, 42 So. 808 (whether a latch was safe, allowed); 1912, Alabama C. G. & A. R. Co. v. Heald, 178 Ala. 636, 59 So. 461 ("The motorman had not time to stop the car," excluded); 1915, Burnwell Coal Co. v. Setzer, 191 Ala. 398, 66 So. 604 (safety of or danger of a place, allowed); 1915, Knowlton v. Central of Ga. R. Co., 192 Ala. 456, 68 So. 281 (fire set by engine; expert testimony that the engineer was careful in handling the engine when passing this spot, allowed, if the data are first stated); 1921, Taylor v. Lewis, 206 Ala. 338, 89 So. 581 (injury by automobile; "could you have stopped the car any earlier than you did?", held not allowable);

Arizona: 1904, Huachuca W. Co. v. Swain, 4 Ariz. 113, 77 Pac. 619 (whether a person could "fail to perceive" a ditch, excluded; with a disquisition on the tweedledum and tweedledee of this subject);

Arkansas: 1896, Fordyce v. Lowman, 62 Ark. 70, 34 S. W. 255 (whether a brakeman ought to have understood a risk, excluded); 1899, Little Rock T. & E. Co. v. Nelson, 66 Ark. 494, 52 So. W. 7 (whether a person could easily have got on a car, excluded); 1910, Dardanelle P. B. & T. Co. v. Croom, 95 Ark. 284, 129 S. W. 280 (that a guard rail was built "in an improper manner" and was not "safe," allowed);

California: 1867, Enright v. R. Co., 33 Cal. 236 (whether a fence was sufficient to turn cattle, excluded); 1878, Shafter v. Evans, 53 Cal. 33 (whether a cattle-corral was safe, excluded); 1895, Fogel v. R. Co., — Cal. —, 42 Pac. 565 (whether the accident could have been avoided, excluded); 1895, Howland v. R. Co., 110 Cal. 513, 42 Pac. 983 (whether a car could have been stopped, allowed); 1896, Redfield v. R. Co., 112 Cal. 220, 43 Pac. 1117 (whether an electric car could be safely operated by one man, excluded); 1900, Limburg v. Glenwood L. Co., 127 Cal. 598, 60 Pac. 176 (safety of a mode of driving, not allowed); 1901, Snyder v. Holt Mfg. Co., 134 Cal. 324, 66 Pac. 311 (whether a bolt and nut were sufficient, allowed for an expert); 1903, Dyas v. Southern P. Co., 140 Cal. 296, 73 Pac. 972 (sufficiency of a derrick, etc., allowed); 1903, Luman v. Golden A. C. M. Co., 140 Cal. 700, 74 Pac. 307 (whether a hoisting-machine was safe, excluded); 1906, Bundy v. Sierra L. Co., 149 Cal. 772, 87 Pac. 622 (safe mode of constructing a trestle, not decided);

Colorado: 1888, Denver S. P. & P. R. Co. v. Wilson, 12 Colo. 24, 20 Pac. 340 (whether a track-walker was necessary on a railroad, excluded); 1894, McGonigle v. Kane, 20 Colo. 292, 38 Pac. 367 (safety of an elevator, allowed); 1895, Grant v. Varney, 21 Colo. 329, 40 Pac. 773 (proper method of timbering a mine, allowed); 1898, Smuggler U. M. C. Co. v. Broderick, 25 Colo. 16, 53 Pac. 169 (whether a place in a mine was a safe place to work in, excluded); 1900, Holy Cross G. M. & M. Co. v. O'Sullivan, 27 Colo. 237, 60 Pac. 570 (whether "missed shots" in a mine-blast could with ordinary care be detected, not allowed); 1904, Wilson v. Harnette, 32 Colo. 172, 75 Pac. 395 (whether an ore lead would justify expense in following, allowed); 1913, Meeker v. Fairfield, — Colo. —, 136 Pac. 471 (whether a crosswalk was safe, excluded); 1919, National Fuel Co. v. McNulty, 65 Colo. 176, 177 Pac. 979 (mine-accident; whether an entry was a "reasonably safe place to work," allowed; Teller, J., diss.);

Columbia (Dist.): 1887, Tolson v. Coasting Co., 17 D. C. 44 (whether a place was safe for standing, excluded); 1894, District of Col. v. Haller, 4 D. C. App. 405, 413 (whether a sidewalk was in a dangerous condition, not allowed);

Connecticut: 1845, Porter v. Mfg. Co., 17 Conn. 255 (sufficiency of a dam, allowed); 1858, Dunham's Appeal, 27 Conn, 198, semble (whether a road was safe, admissible); 1875, Taylor v. Monroe, 43 Conn. 43 (whether road needed a railing, allowable for experts);

a score before 1860. Though many Courts still refuse to be led aside into these quibbles, a great body of unfavorable rulings exists to tempt the Bar to 1893, Ryan v. Bristol, 63 Conn. 26, 37, 27 Atl. 309 (whether a place was dangerous, allowed); 1900, Barber v. Manchester, 72 Conn. 675, 45 Atl. 1014 (whether a machine was likely to frighten horses, allowed); 1900, Dean v. Sharon, 72 Conn. 367, 45 Atl. 963 (whether a highway was "reasonably safe," allowed); 1905, Campbell v. New Haven, 78 Conn. 394, 62 Atl. 665 (whether a sidewalk was in safe condition for travel, allowed); 1912, Schafer, Jr. & Co. v. Ely, 84 Conn. 501, 80 Atl. 775 (whether a building had been constructed in a workmanlike manner and according to plans, allowed; liberal opinion, by Wheeler, J.);

Florida: 1897, Camp v. Hall, 39 Fla. 535, 22 So. 792 (whether an injury was received by the person's own carelessness, excluded); 1906, Jacksonville El. Co. v. Sloan, 52 Fla. 257, 42 So. 516 (whether "all precautions possible" were taken, allowed);

Georgia: Rev. C. 1910, §§ 5285, 5287 (quoted post, § 1978); 1881, Augusta & S. R. Co. v. Dorsey, 68 Ga. 236 (whether a railroad employee's conduct was prudent, allowed); 1886, East Tennessee V. & G. R. v. Wright, 76 Ga. 536 (whether the defendant was negligent, excluded); 1900, Lowman v. State, 109 Ga. 501, 34 S. E. 1019 (that the time had come for the accused to either run or fight, excluded); 1901, Mayor v. Wood, 114 Ga. 370, 40 S. E. 239 (whether a street was wide enough, and whether a place was dangerous, excluded); 1905, Southern R. Co. v. Cunningham, 123 Ga. 90, 50 S. E. 979 (whether cars were managed in a way "unusual or unnecessary," allowed); 1905, Evans v. The Josephine Mills, 124 Ga. 318, 52 S. E. 538 (whether a machine was dangerous, not allowed, for non-experts); 1921, Fincher v. Davis, 27 Ga. App. 494, 108 S. E. 905 (malpractice; to a physician, "Was this operation done in a skilful manner?" allowed);

Hawaii: 1898, Laupahoehoe Sugar Co. v. Wilder S. S. Co., 11 Haw. 261 (whether certain things were "perils of the sea"; whether certain circumstances might have misled experienced mariners; whether a prudent captain ought to have taken a certain precaution; allowed); 1906, Terr. v. Cotton, 17 Haw. 618, 635 (whether it was safe or prudent to moor a dredger, etc., allowed);

Idaho: 1911, Knauf v. Dover L. Co., 20 Ida. 773, 120 Pac. 157 (proper method of constructing a slasher, allowed);

Illinois: 1851, Ward v. Salisbury, 12 Ill. 369 (whether a ship was managed skilfully or not, allowed); 1872, Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Ingersoll, 65 Ill. 402 (whether grain could have been delivered, excluded); 1873, Kendall v. Limberg, 69 Ill. 358 (whether conduct was brutal, excluded); 1875, Hopkins v. R. Co., 78 Ill. 33 (whether cars were carefully coupled, excluded); 1875, Chicago v. McGiven, 78 Ill. 348 (whether a sidewalk cellar-light was safe, excluded); 1877, Hoener v. Koch, 84 Ill. 409 (whether a physician's work was unskilful, excluded); 1884, Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Moranda, 108 Ill. 583 (safety of standing a distance from the cars, excluded); 1895, St. Louis A. & T. H. R. Co., v. Bauer, 156 Ill. 106, 40 N. E. 448 (duty of a brakeman, admitted); 1895, Springfield R. Co. v. Welsh, 155 Ill. 511, 40 N. E. 1034 (whether all means were used to stop a car, excluded); 1897, Springfield v. Coe, 166 Ill. 22, 46 N. E. 709 (by the plaintiff, "We walked carefully," inadmissible; should not the Court also have ruled that, instead of alleging "we walked," the witness should have said, "We placed the feet alternately upon the ground, touching with the heel, and producing forward motion," leaving it to the jury to say whether it was a "walk" or a "run?"); 1901, Gundlach v. Schott, 192 Ill. 509, 61 N. E. 332 (whether a pulley-belt construction was "reasonably safe," admitted); 1902, Springfield C. R. Co. v. Puntenney, 200 Ill. 9, 65 N. E. 442 (by a motorman, whether he knew of anything more he could have done to avoid injury, excluded); 1902, Slack v. Harris, 200 Ill. 96, 65 N. E. 669 (effect of alterations upon the operation of an elevator car, admitted); 1902, Donk Bros. C. & C. Co. v. Stroff, 200 Ill. 483, 66 N. E. 29 (number of timbers necessary to prevent a roof from falling, allowed); 1903, Beardstown v. Clark, 204 Ill. 524, 68 N. E. semble (whether with ordinary care a hole could have been seen and avoided, excluded); 1904, Henrietta Coal Co. v. Campbell, 211 Ill. 216, 71 N. E. 863 (whether certain conditions of a roadway made it safe, for experts); 1905, Kellyville Coal Co. v. Strine, 217 Ill. 516, 75 N. E. 375 (practicability of using crossbar props in a mine, allowed); 1905, Siegel, Cooper & Co. v. Troka, 218 Ill. 559, 75 N. E. 1053 (whether the construction of an elevator door was safe, excluded); 1906, Schillinger Bros. Co. v. Smith, 225 Ill. 74, 80 N. E. 65 (whether boards were fit for scaffolding, not decided); 1908, Yarber v. Chicago & A. R. Co., 235 Ill. 589, 85 N. E. 928 (whether a mode of raising a car was "reasonably safe," excluded); 1913, Keefe v. Armour & Co., 258 Ill. 28, 101 N. E. 252 (whether a method of generating gas in a tank was reasonably safe, excluded); 1916, Bell v. Toluca Coal Co., 272 Ill. 576, 112 N. E. 311 (whether the condition of a mine as observed by an inspector was such as he would deem necessary to report as unsafe, not allowed, erroneous); 1913, Keefe v. Armour & Co., 258 Ill. 28, 101 N. E. 252 (whether a mode of testing tank-cars was reasonably safe, excluded); 1918, Thompson v. Hughes, 286 Ill. 128, 121 N. E. 387 (whether land was sufficiently titled, not allowed); 1920, Loftus v. Chicago raise the question at every opportunity. Even the experienced casuist would be puzzled to demonstrate a consistency between these rulings in the same

Railway Co., 293 Ill. 475, 127 N. E. 654 (contributory negligence in crossing the track; "he took large steps when he saw there was not a chance for him to get away," excluded as or "conclusion"; such nonsense in the law does the Opinion rule produce);
Indiana: 1878, Louisville N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Spain, 61 Ind. 462 (whether a fence was sufficient to turn stock, allowed); 1881, Niagara F. Ins. Co. . Greene, 77 Ind. 595 (reasonable time, in an agent's contract, allowed, for an expert); 1883, Albion v. Herrick, 90 Ind. 549 (whether a street was so dangerous that a prudent man would not cross, excluded); 1888, Grand Rapids & I. R. Co. v. Ellison, 117 Ind. 241, 20 N. E. 135 (whether an engineer did his duty, excluded); 1895, Bonebrake v. Board, 141 Ind. 62, 40 N. E. 141 (whether a bridge sufficed to sustain a load, allowed); 1898, Siever v. P. B. & L. Co., 151 Ind. 642, 50 N. E. 877 (that an elevator gearing was a safe appliance, allowed); 1900, Chicago & E. I. R. Co. v. Grimm, 25 Ind. App. 494, 57 N. E. 641 (safety of mode of running train, allowed); 1921, Pittsburgh C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Edwards, — Ind. —, 129 N. E. 310 (injury at a derrick; how many men were required to do the work, held allowable);
Iowa: 1868, Phillips v. Starr, 26 Ia. 350 (whether an item in a contract's performance was material, excluded); 1872, Bills v. Ottumwa, 35 Ia. 111 (whether a mode of loading a wagon was safe, excluded); 1875, Gilruth v. Gilruth, 40 Ia. 346 (safety of a car for coupling, excluded); 1872, Hamilton v. R. Co., 36 Ia. 36 (proper way to couple cars, excluded); 1873, Muldowney v. R. Co., 36 Ia. 472 (same); 1876, Belair v. R. Co., 43 Ia. 667 (same); 1876, Cooper v. Central R. Co., 44 Ia. 140 (safety of speed, excluded); 1877, Locke v. R. Co., 46 Ia. 110 (reason for not leaving a flagman, excluded); 1877, Hollowell v. Dickerson, 46 Ia. 569 (safety of street, excluded); 1878, Taylor v. Lumbering Co., 47 Ia. 664 (whether repairs were necessary, allowed); 1882, Allen v. R. Co., 57 Ia. 626, 11 N. W. 614 (duty of brakeman, excluded); 1882, Jasper Co. v. Osborn, 59 Ia. 213, 13 N. W. 104 (ability to live peacefully, excluded); 1882, Brant v. Lyons, 60 Ia. 174, 14 N. W. 227 (negligence as the cause of an injury, excluded); 1883, Funston v. R. Co., 61 Ia. 455, 16 N. W. 518 (whether a team could be turned in a certain space, allowed); 1883, Kitteringham v. R. Co., 62 Ia. 286, 17 N. W. 585 (time required to make repairs, allowed); 1885, Baldwin v. R. Co., 68 Ia. 38, 25 N. W. 918 (safe mode of piling lumber, excluded); 1886, Kuhns v. R. Co., 70 Ia. 564, 31 N. W. 868 (safety of running an engine backwards, allowed); 1887, Grinnell v. R. Co., 73 Ia. 95, 34 N. W. 758 (time required to stop a train, allowed); 1888, Gadbois v. R. Co., 75 Ia. 533, 39 N. W. 871 (that a train was started in an unusual way, excluded); 1894, Betts v. R. Co., 92 Ia. 343, 60 N. W. 623 (sufficiency of cattle cars, allowed); 1894, Reifsnider v. R. Co., 90 Ia. 76, 81, 57 N. W. 692 (the proper position of a brakeman under certain conditions, allowed); 1895, Duer v. Allen, 96 Ia. 36, 64 N. W. 682 (prudent mode of conducting a creamery, excluded); 1897, Kelly v. West Bend, 101 Ia. 669, 70 N. W. 726 (what part of a lawyer's work was unnecessary, excluded); 1897, Ridler v. Ridler, 103 Ia. 470, 72 N. W. 671 (child's suit for services; whether she worked at home as a hired girl, excluded); 1899, McKay v. Johnson, 108 Ia. 610, 79 N. W. 390 (that an engine worked well, admitted; whether it was an engineer's duty to keep the screws tight, etc., admitted); 1899, Anderson v. R. Co., 109 Ia. 524, 80 N. W. 561 (usual implements for certain work, allowed); 1899, Taylor v. Star Coal Co., 110 Ia. 40, 81 N. W. 249 (whether a mine-roof was likely to fall, allowed); 1901, Quinlan v. R. Co., 113 Ia. 89, 84 N. W. 960 (what were the duties of a brakeman, allowed); 1901, Cahow v. R. Co., 113 Ia. 224, 84 N. W. 1056 (how many men would be needed to move safely a railroad tender, excluded); 1901, Wimber v. R. Co., 114 Ia. 551, 87 N. W. 505 (who had authority to start an engine, allowed); 1901, Brooks v. Sioux City, 114 Ia. 641, 87 N. W. 682 (that a walk was "in bad condition," held improper; that it was "a good and sound walk," held proper); 1902, Fitch v. Mason C. & C. L. T. Co., 116 Ia. 716, 89 N. W. 33 (whether with care a car could be run without lurching, excluded); 1904, Collins v. Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co., 122 Ia. 231, 97 N. W. 1103 (whether a cattle-gate was sufficient, excluded); 1905, Schroeder v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 127 Ia. 365, 103 N. W. 985 (whether an unblocked switch-frog is dangerous, allowed, for experts); 1905, Hofacre v. Monticello, 128 Ia. 239, 103 N. W. 488 (whether ice elsewhere was as bad, etc., allowed on cross-examination); 1905, German Ins. Co. v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 128 Ia. 386, 104 N. W. 361 (whether sparks could pass a netting, whether an engine could be operated without emitting cinders, etc., allowed); 1906, Hamner v. Janowitz, 131 Ia. 20, 108 N. W. 109 (the proper and safe method of structure for a crane-track, allowed); 1909, Bruggeman v. Illinois C. R. Co., 147 Ia. 187, 123 N. W. 1007 (whether a train could have been stopped more quickly, excluded); 1913, Escher v. Carroll Co., 159 Ia. 627, 141 N. W. 38 (whether a bridge was reasonably safe, excluded; on this point, this Court does not seem to be able to free itself from the shackles of the Opinion rule as courageously as its repute demands); 1917, Ingwersen v. Carr, 180 Ia. 988, 164 N. W. 217 (malpractice; jurisdiction. On the whole, the general impression produced, on an unprejudiced reading of these rulings, is that an enormous mass of the most useful whether the defendant exercised his best skill and knowledge, etc., allowed);

Kansas: 1868, Northern Mo. R. Co. v. Akers, 4 Kan. 471 (number of men necessary in driving mules, allowed); 1870, Tefft v. Wilcox, 6 Kan. 58 (duty of a physician as to treatment of a case, allowed); 1881, Monroe v. Lattin, 25 Kan. 353 (negligence of a driver, excluded); 1881, Parsons City v. Lindsay, 26 Kan. 431 (whether a street was dangerous, excluded); 1883, Kansas P. R. Co. v. Peavey, 29 Kan. 177 (proper mode of coupling, allowed); 1884, Dow v. Julien, 32 Kan. 578, 4 Pac. 1000 (whether care was exercised, excluded); 1885, Missouri Pac. R. Co. v. Mackey, 33 Kan. 303, 6 Pac. 291 (duty of fireman; obscure distinction); 1885, St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Ritz, 33 Kan. 405, 6 Pac. 533 (proper construction of cattle-guards, excluded); 1888, Topeka v. Sherwood, 39 Kan. 692, 18 Pac. 933 (whether a sidewalk was dangerous, excluded); 1895, Insley v. Shire, 54 Kan. 793, 39 Pac. 713 (whether there was negligent management, excluded); 1897, Murray v. Board, 58 Kan. 1, 48 Pac. 554 (safety of a bridge, excluded); 1900, Missouri K. & T. R. Co. v. Merrill, 61 Kan. 671, 60 Pac. 819 (what would be the proper mode of mounting a car under certain conditions, allowed); 1903, Missouri & K. Tel. Co. v. Vandevort, 67 Kan. 269, 72 Pac. 771 (whether poles were likely to frighten horses, excluded); 1911, Duncan v. Atchison T. & S. F. R. Co., 86 Kan. 112, 119 Pac. 356 (whether a bridge was a safe place for coupling cars, not allowed); 1913, Root v. Cudahy P. Co., 88 Kan. 413, 129 Pac. 147 (whether an elevator was safe, not allowed);
Kentucky: 1878, Claxton's Adm'r v. R. Co., 13 Bush 643 (safety of machinery, allowed); 1897, Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Bowen, — Ky. —, 39 S. W. 31 (that a signal ought to have been given at a crossing, excluded); 1899, Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Milliken, — Ky. —, 51 S. W. 796 (whether a mode of sitting on a freight car was careless or improper, excluded); 1913, Newport R. M. Co. v. Mason, 152 Ky. 224, 153 S. W. 220 (safety of a floor covering, allowed); 1918, Barrett's Adm'r v. Brand, 179 Ky. 740, 201 S. W. 331 (malpractice; whether the approved professional methods were followed, allowed);
Louisiana: 1900, State v. Austin, 104 La. 409, 29 So. 23 (by an accused, whether his belief in the deceased's designs was negligently formed, excluded);
Maine: 1868, Hill v. R. Co., 55 Me. 444 (whether the blowing of a whistle was safe, excluded; 1875, State v. Watson, 65 Me. 76 (spreading of fire, excluded), 1884, Mayhew v. Mining Co., 76 Me. 111 (whether an apparatus was proper, excluded); 1896, Marston v. Dingley, 88 Me. 546, 34 Atl. 414 (whether a photograph was skilfully reproduced in a newspaper, admitted);
Maryland: 1856, Scaggs v. R. Co., 10 Md. 270, 281 (whether a collision could have been avoided, excluded); 1872, Waters v. Waters, 35 Md. 538 (propriety of a testator's disposition of his property, admitted); 1886, Baltimore Elev. Co. v. Neal, 65 Md. 452, 5 Atl. 338 (whether a marine collision could have been avoided by care, admitted); 1886, Baltimore & Y. T. R. Co. v. Leonhardt, 66 Md. 77, 5 Atl. 346 (whether it was safe to descend from a certain car, inadmissible; but whether a road was dangerous, admissible); 1886, Baltimore & L. T. Co. v. Cassell, 66 Md. 430, 7 Atl. 805 (safety of a road, allowed); 1887, Stumore v. Shaw, 68 Md. 18, 11 Atl. 360 (prudence of a shipping-broker, allowed); 1898, Baltimore & S. P. Co. v. Hackett, 87 Md. 224, 39 Atl. 510 (whether a water-outlet was adequately constructed, admissible); 1899, Tall v. Baltimore S. P. Co., 90 Md. 248, 44 Atl. 1007 (whether a captain interfered to prevent an affray with sufficient promptness, excluded); 1908, Commissioners v. State, 107 Md. 210, 68 Atl. 602 (what was necessary to safeguard a bridge, excluded; the deplorable extreme of this ruling may be gathered from the circumstance that though the witness was "a former keeper of this bridge," the opinion states that he "was not shown to possess any special skill or knowledge derived from or relating to any trade, profession, or technical pursuit which would qualify him to instruct the jury"; if there is no presumption that a bridge-keeper knows something special about safeguards for bridges, then there ought to be none that a judge knows something special about the law of Evidence); 1908, Fletcher v. Dixon, 107 Md. 420, 68 Atl. 875 ("Please state whether or not in your opinion that horse was fit for a lady to drive," excluded; thus is Common Sense shut out of court and Scholasticism enshrined on an altar); 1913, Capital Traction Co. v. Contner, 120 Md. 78, 87 Atl. 904 (whether a motorman could have stopped the car in time, excluded); 1919, County Commissioners v. Pel Air S. I. Ass'n, 134 Md. 548, 107 Atl. 348 (whether a drain pipe was "sufficient to drain the surface water," not allowed);
Massachusetts: 1850, Raymond v. Lowell, 6 Cush. 531 (proper condition of a street, excluded); 1851, Lund v. Tyngsborough, 9 Cush. 37, 39 (safety of a place in a road, allowed); 1853, Twombly v. Leach, 11 Cush. 402, 405 (whether certain treatment was proper according to the medical profession, admitted); 1861, Nowell v. Wright, 3 All. 170 (proper condition of a street, excluded); 1864, White v. Ballou, 8 All. 408 (cooper trade; whether certain conduct was prudent, ex-testimony is daily excluded under their influence. The apparent purpose of the rule might have been supposed to be (by one unacquainted with our juriscluded); 1864, Bliss v. Wareham, 8 All. 564 (general condition, as to safety, of a bridge, excluded); 1867, Simmons v. Steamboat Co., 97 Mass. 371 (whether a place was not manifestly improper for passengers, excluded); 1869, Ryerson v. Abington, 102 Mass. 530 (safety of a highway, excluded); 1871, Higgins v. Dewey, 107 Mass. 495 (whether a fire would probably spread, excluded); 1877, Buxton v. S. P. Works, 121 Mass. 448 (whether an injury could have occurred with care by the plaintiff, excluded); 1883, Amstein v. Gardner, 134 Mass. 9 (whether a cattle-guard was necessary, excluded); 1884, Donnelly v. Fitch, 136 Mass. 558 (whether a horse of certain qualities called for certain care, allowed); 1887, Freeman v. Ins. Co., 144 Mass. 579, 12 N. E. 372 (time required to stop a train, allowed); 1887, Gilbert v. Guild, 144 Mass. 605, 12 N. E. 368 (whether a machine's danger was obvious, excluded); 1894, McGuerty v. Hale, 161 Mass. 51, 36 N. E. 682 (whether a boy was a proper person to put at certain work, excluded); 1895, Lang v. Terry, 163 Mass. 138, 38 N. E. 802 (proper way of managing a machine, allowed); 1895, Twomey v. Swift, 163 Mass. 273, 39 N. E. 1018 (whether a person was negligent, excluded); 1896, McCarthy v. Boston Duck Co., 165 Mass. 165, 42 N. E. 568 (whether a pulley was a proper one, admitted); 1898, O'Brien v. Look, 171 Mass. 36, 50 N. E. 458 (whether a mode of using machinery was proper, allowed); 1898, Edwards c. Worcester, 172 Mass. 104, 51 N. E. 447 (whether a road was safe and convenient, excluded); 1899, Leslie v. R. Co., 172 Mass. 468, 52 N. E. 542 (what was the proper way of turning a stone in a derrick, allowed); 1902, Whitman v. R. Co., 181 Mass. 138, 63 N. E. 334 (whether the plaintiff thought he could cross a track safely, excluded); 1904, Meehan v. Holyoke St. R. Co., 186 Mass. 511, 72 N. E. 61 (proper way of stringing telegraph wires, excluded); 1906, Erickson v. American S. & W. Co., 193 Mass. 119, 78 N. E. 761 (that cast-iron was unsuitable for a steam-pipe, allowed); 1912, Robinson v. Springfield St. R. Co., 211 Mass. 483, 98 N. E. 576 ("Was there anything you could have done to avoid the collision?" held proper on the facts); 1916, Lynch v. Larivee Lumber Co., 223 Mass. 335, 111 N. E. 861 (the proper way of piling lumber, excluded); 1917, Mark v. Stuart-Howland Co., 226 Mass. 35, 115 N. E. 42 (repudiation of a contract; whether a party's order under a contract was reasonable, not allowed); 1919, Eldredge v. Barton, 232 Mass. 183, 122 N. E. 272 (admission by a decedent, "it is my fault," possibly allowable);

Michigan: 1851, Daniels v. Mosher, 2 Mich. 183 (an opinion by an eye-witness that certain farm work was well done, received; but a similar opinion by others, based on the facts testified to at the trial, rejected); 1875, Clark v. Locomotive Works, 32 Mich. 257 (what ought to have been done with a vessel, excluded; whether an engine worked in the ordinary way, admitted); 1882, Marcott v. R. Co., 49 Mich. 101, 13 N. W. 374 (whether certain conduct interfered with an employee's work, admitted); 1883, Huizega v. Lumber Co., 51 Mich. 275, 16 N. W. 643 (machinery's safety, admitted); 1886, Laughlin v. R. Co., 62 Mich. 226, 28 N. W. 873 (Campbell, C. J.: "No amount of description can enable a jury to see the place as the witnesses saw it, and, while witnesses must describe the place as well as they can, it is always competent, for those who are familiar with the highways and their use, to give their impressions received at the time concerning safety or convenience of passage and other conditions of an analogous nature"); 1887, Harris v. Clinton, 64 Mich. 457, 31 N. W. 425 (contra to the preceding case, which is not cited); 1887, Zube v. Webber, 67 Mich. 58, 34 N. W. 264 (whether more force than necessary was used in an ejectment, excluded); 1888, Merkle v. Bennington, 68 Mich. 143, 35 N. W. 846 (whether a bridge was in good repair, admitted); 1888, Cross v. R. Co., 69 Mich. 369, 37 N. W. 361 (like Laughlin v. R. Co., supra); 1895, Lau v. Fletcher, 104 Mich. 295, 62 N. W. 357 (whether machinery was safe, allowed); 1898, Van Worden v. Winslow, 117 Mich. 564, 76 N. W. 87 (propriety of opening celery trenches, allowed); 1898, Detzur v. Brewing Co., 119 Mich. 282, 77 N. W. 948 (whether a broken window was safe, excluded); 1900, People v. Detroit & S. P. R. Co., 125 Mich. 366, 84 N. W. 290 (whether a roadbed was safe, excluded); 1903, Storrie v. Grand Trunk El. Co., — Mich. —, 96 N. W. 569 (the "necessity or expediency of entering in front of the drums," etc. allowed); 1904, Johnson v. Detroit & M. R. Co., 135 Mich. 353, 97 N. W. 760 (efficiency of a cattle-guard, allowed); 1915, Loose v. Deerfield Tp., 187 Mich. 206, 153 N. W. 913 (whether a highway was reasonably safe for automobiles, excluded); 1920, Luttenton v. Detroit J. & C. R. Co., 209 Mich. 20, 176 N. W. 558 (whether the crossing was "more dangerous than any other place," allowed);

Minnesota: 1862, Sowers v. Dukes, 8 Minn. 24 (sufficiency of a fence to turn stock, excluded); 1875, Getchell v. Hill, 21 Minn. 465 (propriety of certain medical treatment, allowed); 1877, Hayward v. Knapp, 23 Minn. 434 (safety of a mooring-place, allowed, for an expert); 1878, Shriver v. R. Co., 24 Minn. 509 (whether marbles were properly packed for carriage, allowed); 1881, Krippner v. Biebl, 28 Minn. 141, 9 N. W. 671 (propriety of measures taken to stop a fire, allowed); 1884, Kolsti v. R.

prudence) to exclude testimony in proportion to its significance and directness; and the wonder often is how a jury can under the circumstances come to an intelligent conclusion without the aid of the banished testimony.

Co., 32 Minn. 134, 19 N. W. 655 (practicability of locking or fencing turntables, allowed); 1885, Mantel v. R. Co., 33 Minn. 62, 21 N. W. 853 (whether due care required certain conduct, excluded); 1887, Lindsley v. R. Co., 36 Minn. 544, 33 N. W. 7 (proper mode of caring for cattle in transit, admitted); 1889, Goodsell v. Taylor, 41 Minn. 209, 42 N. W. 873 (same); 1890, Armstrong v. R. Co., 45 Minn. 87, 47 N. W. 459 (suitability of a stable for keeping horses, allowed); 1896, Morris v. Ins. Co., 63 Minn. 420, 65 N. W. 655 (whether it was dangerous to thresh with steam in a high wind, excluded); 1897, Peterson v. Johnson-Wentworth Co., 70 Minn. 538, 73 N. W. 510 (whether a guard could have been placed around a gearing, allowed); 1899, Moore v. Townsend, 76 Minn. 64, 78 N. W. 880 (that a ladder was dangerous, excluded); 1899, Sieber v. R. Co., 76 Minn. 269, 79 N. W. 95 (whether an engineer's methods in "bucking" snow were proper and prudent, allowed); 1904, McDonald v. Duluth, 93 Minn. 206, 100 N. W. 1102 (whether a railing was safe, excluded); 1905, Scarlotta v. Ash, 95 Minn. 240, 103 N. W. 1025 (that a machine "operated all right," allowed); 1906, Carlin v. Kennedy, 97 Minn. 141, 106 N. W. 340 (whether a machine could be guarded, etc., allowed);

Mississippi: 1895, Kansas City M. & B. R. Co. v. Spencer, 72 Miss. 491, 17 So. 168 (how cattle-guards should be built, excluded); 1899, Grace v. R. Co., — Miss. —, 25 So. 875 (whether cattle-guards were properly constructed, excluded);

Missouri: 1859, Hill v. Sturgeon, 28 Mo. 329 (prudence of certain nautical conduct, admitted); 1872, Gavisk v. R. Co., 49 Mo. 276 (whether due care was taken, excluded); 1876, Rickey v. Zeppenfeldt, 64 Mo. 276 (whether a train could have been stopped, allowed); 1877, Koons v. R. Co., 65 Mo. 597 (dangerousness of a turntable, excluded); 1881, Greenwell v. Crow, 73 Mo. 639 (safety of a place of deposit, admitted); 1886, Brown v. Road Co., 89 Mo. 155, 1 S. W. 129 (safety of a road, admitted); 1887, Gutridge v. R. Co., 94 Mo. 472, 7 S. W. 476 (whether with due care an injury would have occurred, excluded); 1893, Czezewzka v. R. Co., 121 Mo. 201, 212, 25 S. W. 911 (the proper position of a street-car driver, allowed); 1896, Benjamin v. R. Co., 133 Mo. 274, 34 S. W. 590 (safety of a coal-hole cover, excluded); 1901, Hurst v. R. Co., 163 Mo. 309, 63 S. W. 695 (whether a switch-yard was in reasonably safe condition, not allowed); 1908, Meily v. St. Louis & S. F. R. Co., 215 Mo. 567, 114 S. W. 1013 (how many men required to load a car, allowed); 1921, Laycock v. United R. Co., — Mo. —, 234 S. W. 90 (personal injury; whether a car lurched "enough to throw a man," allowed);

Montana: 1897, State v. Giroux, 19 Mont. 149, 47 Pac. 798 (whether a parent was a fit person to have the custody of a child, excluded); 1903, Metz v. Butte, 27 Mont. 506, 71 Pac. 761 (whether a sidewalk was reasonably safe, excluded); 1903, Coleman v. Perry, 28 Mont. 1, 72 Pac. 42 (whether a mangle was out of repair, allowed);

Nebraska: 1900, Missouri P. R. Co. v. Fox, 60 Nebr. 531, 83 N. W. 744 (duties of a car-inspector, allowed; whether a track was properly constructed, allowed); 1903, Chicago R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Holmes, 68 Nebr. 826, 94 N. W. 1007 (whether an injured switchman did what was "necessary for him to do," excluded); 1908, Maxson v. Case Threshing M. Co., 81 Nebr. 546, 116 N. W. 281 (that a mode of putting on a belt was dangerous, allowed);

New Hampshire: 1881, Wells v. Eastman, 61 N. H. 507 (proper time for firing brush, admitted); 1898, Nourie v. Theobald, 68 N. H. 564, 41 Atl. 182 (that it was dangerous to take down a building, excluded); 1901, Challis v. Lake, 71 N. H. 90, 51 Atl. 260 (what treatment a physician of reasonable skill ought to have given, allowed); 1920, Gardner v. Commercial Machine Co., — N. H. —, 111 Atl. 317 (injury while handling wheelbarrows; testimony that an employee "ought to have waited his turn," held allowable, as probably helpful to the jury); 1920, Paquette v. Connecticut V. L. Co., 79 N. H. 288, 109 Atl. 836 (whether a certain kind of blow in timber-felling was dangerous, allowed);

New York: 1850, Price v. Powell, 3 N. Y. 323 (whether a cargo was properly stowed, admitted); 1863, Curtis v. Gano, 26 N. Y. 427 (whether a construction was workmanlike, allowed); 1863, Moore v. Westervelt, 27 N. Y. 238 (whether a ship was safely moored, allowed); 1865, Walsh v. Ins. Co., 32 N. Y. 442 (effect of a mode of loading a ship, allowed); 1874, Haggerty v. R. Co., 61 N. Y. 624 (whether anything could have been done to prevent the injury, excluded); 1877, Baird v. Daly, 68 N. Y. 551 (whether a ship was unseaworthy, allowed); 1877, Carpenter v. Transp. Co., 71 N. Y. 579 ("whether acts are seamanlike and proper," admitted; whether anything which might have avoided the harm was done or omitted, excluded); 1879, Scattergood v. Wood, 79 N. Y. 265 (whether a machine was inferior in working, allowed); 1880, Ginterman v. Steamship Co., 83 N. Y. 365 (how a vessel should have been handled, allowed); 1881, Hart v. Bridge Co., 84 N. Y. 60 (whether certain gates were customary and safe; obscure

5. Law

§ 1952. In general. The exclusion of testimonial opinion here rests on a ground slightly different from that of all the other instances. The general principle (ante, § 1918) is exemplified, to be sure, that the tribunal does not ruling); 1881, Ward v. Kilpatrick, 85 N. Y. 415 (whether work was "well done," allowed); 1884, Ferguson v. Hubbell, 97 N. Y. 512 (whether it was dry enough to fire fallow land, excluded); 1891, O'Neil v. R. Co., 129 N. Y. 125, 29 N. E. 84 (distance in which a truck could be stopped, admitted); 1899, Kumberger v. Congress S. Co., 158 N. Y. 339, 53 N. E. 3 (whether a place was proper for an engine, admitted); 1899, Littlejohn v. Shaw, 159 N. Y. 188, 53 N. E. 810 (whether a substance "gambier" was merchantable, allowed); 1900, Dougherty v. Milliken, 163 N. Y. 527, 57 N. E. 757 (whether a mode of anchoring derricks was sufficient, not allowed; the opinion employs an unsound analysis of the Opinion rule; two judges dissenting); 1901, Finn v. Cassidy, 165 N. Y. 584, 59 N. E. 311 (how an excavation ought to have been made, allowed; Gray, J., and Parker, C. J., diss.); 1903, New York C. I. Co. v. U. S. Radiator Co., 174 N. Y. 331, 66 N. E. 967 (whether goods were "needed" under a contract, allowed); 1903, Trenton Potteries Co. v. Title G. & T. Co., 176 N. Y. 65, 68 N. E. 132 (what ought to have been done in framing a policy of title-insurance, excluded); 1919, Noah v. Bowery Savings Bank, 225 N. Y. 284, 122 N. E. 235 (forgery of depositor's name; whether a signature of a certain sort would "tend to excite suspicion in the mind of the ordinarily competent signature-clerk," not allowed; another instance of the wearisome unpracticality of the Opinion rule);

North Carolina: 1849, Sikes v. Paine, 10 Ired. 280 (whether there was a deficiency in performing a contract to repair, allowed); 1896, Tillett v. R. Co., 118 N. C. 1031, 24 S. E. 111 (whether a car was coupled negligently, excluded); 1898, Phifer v. R. Co., 122 N. C. 940, 29 S. E. 578 ("Were you careful?" excluded); 1901, Raynor v. R. Co., 129 N. C. 195, 39 S. E. 821 (whether more than necessary force was used in expelling a passenger, excluded); 1901, Jeffries v. R. Co., 129 N. C. 236, 39 S. E. 836 (whether anything was omitted that could have been done to save life, excluded); 1902, Cogdell v. R. Co., 130 N. C. 313, 41 S. E. 541 (whether a man could safely stand on a plank, etc., not allowed); 1904, Marks v. Harriet Cotton Mills, 135 N. C. 287, 47 S. E. 432 (whether cog-wheels should have been covered, etc., not allowed); 1919, Brewer v. Ring, 177 N. C. 476, 99 S. E. 358 (malpractice; whether a diagnosis was made according to the approved practice and principles of the medical profession; allowed); 1919, Barnes v. Seaboard Airline R. Co., 178 N. C. 264, 100 S. E. 519 (whether a mode of stopping a train made loading it more unsafe, allowed); 1921, Marshall v. Interstate T. & T. Co., 181 N. C. 292, 106 S. E. 818 (whether a place was "safe" for workmen, excluded; Hoke, J. and Clark, C. J., diss., quoting with approval the text above); 1921, Marshall v. Interstate T. & T. Co., 181 N. C. 410, 107 S. E. 498 (that conditions of an electric plant were not safe, not allowed);

North Dakota: 1896, Ouverson v. Grafton, 5 N. D. 281, 65 N. W. 677 (whether a threshing-machine was calculated to frighten ordinary horses, excluded);

Ohio: 1850, Stewart v. State, 19 Oh. 307 (whether there was time to avoid an attack, allowed); 1851, Cincinnati & F. M. Ins. Co. v. May, 20 Oh. 223 (whether an act was careful or skilful, excluded; but other principles mainly controlled the ruling); 1860, Bellefontaine & I. R. Co. v. Bailey, 11 Oh. St. 335 (whether an injury at a railroad-crossing could have been avoided, allowed); 1871, Cincinnati & Z. R. Co. v. Smith, 22 Oh. St. 246 (proper place for a brakeman, allowed); 1875, Soldwater Turnpike Co. v. Coover, 26 Oh. St. 59 (danger of a place in the road, excluded); 1877, Insurance Co. v. Tobin, 32 Oh. St. [illegible] (whether a vessel was seaworthy, allowed; whether it was prudent to run a steamboat under the circumstances, excluded); 1895, Railroad Co. v. Schultz, 43 Oh. St. 275, 1 N. E. 324 (from witnesses not expert, whether a fence was sufficient to turn stock, excluded); 1900, Ohio & I. T. Co. v. Fishburn, 61 Oh. 608, 56 N. E. 457 (proper time for "shooting" an oil-well, allowed);

Oklahoma: 1912, Hicks v. Davis, 32 Okl. 195, 120 Pac. 260 (whether a gang plank was constructed in a prudent mode, excluded); 1919, Federal Oil & Gas Co. v. Campbell, —Okl.—, 183 Pac. 894 (whether employer's premises and instrumentalities were safe for working, not allowed);

Oregon: 1869, Heath v. Glisan, 3 Or. 67 (propriety of certain surgical treatment, allowable); 1869, Williams v. Poppleton, 3 Or. 143, 151; 1900, State v. Mims, 36 Or. 31[illegible] 61 Pac. 888 (which party in an affray had the advantage, excluded); 1900, Chan Sing v. Portland, 37 Or. 68, 60 Pac. 718 (whether the injury would have happened, if defendant had done certain things, not allowed); 1911, Weiss v. Kohlhagen 58 Or. 144, 113 Pac. 46 (whether an excavation was necessary, allowed); 1921, Lehman v. Knott, 100 Or. 59, 196 Pac. 476 (whether a surgical treatment was "proper and usual," held allowable, but whether it was "unskilful need the witness' judgment and hence will insist on dispensing with it. But here it is not that the jury can of themselves determine equally well; it is and negligent," held not allowable; here are Tweedle-dum and Tweedle-dee in the saddle again); 1921, Patterson v. Howe, — Or. —, 202 Pac. 225 (malpractice; to an expert, whether the operation performed "was a skilful dental operation," held reversible error; this ruling would mark our law of Evidence as a system of rules devised to obstruct ascertainment of the truth);

Pennsylvania: 1851, Beatty v. Gilmore, 16 Pa. 468 (safety or danger of a place, allowed); 1871, Delaware & C. Towboat Co. v. Starrs, 69 Pa. 38, 41 (prudence of a towboat captain, allowed); 1876, Sinnott v. Mullin, 82 Pa. 337, 342 (proper mode of building a retaining wall, allowed); 1882, Olmsted v. Gere, 100 Pa. 131 (skilfulness of a surgical operation, allowed); 1883, American Steamship Co. v. Landreth, 102 Pa. 135, semble (opposed to Beatty v. Gilmore); 1889, Long v. R. Co., 126 Pa. 143, 19 Atl. 39 (propriety of a safety-device at a switch, excluded); 1890, Graham v. Penna. Co., 139 Pa. 149, 160, 21 Atl. 151 (danger of a place, excluded; distinguishing Beatty v. Gilmore on the ground that an adequate description was in that case impossible); 1892, McNerney v. Reading, 150 Pa. 611, 616, 25 Atl. 57 (whether a place was dangerous, allowed); 1893, Elder v. Coal Co., 157 Pa. 490, 499, 27 Atl. 545 (whether certain precautions were sufficient, allowed; but not whether the conduct was negligent); 1895, Kitchen v. Union Tp., 171 Pa. 145, 33 Atl. 76 (whether a place was dangerous, admitted); 1897, Platz v. McKean, 178 Pa. 601, 36 Atl. 136 (safety of a sluice, excluded); 1897, Cookson v. R. Co., 179 Pa. 184, 36 Atl. 194 (whether a place was the proper one to stop, look, and listen, admitted); Auberle v. McKeesport, 179 Pa. 321, 36 Atl. 212 (whether the absence of a guard-rail made a bridge dangerous, excluded); 1898, Woeckner v. Motor Co., 187 Pa. 206, 41 Atl. 28 (that a motorman exercised good judgment, excluded on the facts); 1898, Whitaker v. Campbell, 187 Pa. 113, 41 Atl. 38 (whether it was dangerous to clean a machine, admitted); 1898, Beardslee v. Columbia Tp., 188 Pa. 496, 41 Atl. 618 (contributory negligence; opinions of non-experts, excluded); 1902, Siegler v. Mellinger, 203 Pa. 256, 52 Atl. 175 (that a place was dangerous, excluded); 1903, Seifred v. Pa. R. Co., 206 Pa. 399, 55 Atl. 1061 (that a railroad crossing was dangerous, excluded; no authority cited); 1917, Campbell v. Well Bros. Co., 256 Pa. 446, 100 Atl. 1050 (whether a method of raising a derrick was more dangerous than the usual one, allowed); 1917, Kuhn v. Ligonier V. R. Co., 255 Pa. 445, 100 Atl. 142 (railroad collision; whether "the verbal order was as safe as a written order under the circumstances," not allowed);

Rhode Island: 1858, Buffum v. Harris, 5 R. I. 250 (sufficiency and expediency of a drain, etc., allowed); 1894, Wilson v. R. Co., 18 R. I. 598, 601, 29 Atl. 300 (whether a person seemed to drive carefully, allowed); 1903, Ennis v. Little, 25 R. I. 342, 55 Atl. 884 (whether a certain condition of an eyebolt was defective, excluded);

South Carolina: 1883, Ward v. R. Co., 19 S. C. 522, 526 (whether there was time to avoid injury, allowed); 1884, Couch v. R. Co., 22 S. C. 561 (whether a place was dangerous, excluded); purporting to follow the preceding case); 1885, Bridger v. R. Co., 25 S. C. 26 (similar); 1901, Easler v. R. Co., 59 S. C. 311, 37 S. E. 938 (whether passengers had sufficient time to leave a railroad car, allowed); 1903, Gosa v. Southern R. Co., 67 S. C. 347, 45 S. E. 810 (whether it "takes a woman of health to run seven looms," not allowed); 1904, Koon v. Southern Ry., 69 S. C. 101, 48 S. E. 86 (whether a pile-driver was safe, allowed);

South Dakota: 1909, Reeves v. Chicago M. & St. Paul R. Co., 24 S. D. 84, 123 N. W. 498 (proper place for a brakeman, allowed);

Tennessee: 1874, Lawrence v. Hudson, 12 Heisk, 672 (negligence of a stage-driver in leaving his seat, excluded); 1896, Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Reagan, 96 Tenn. 128, 33 S. W. 1050 (proper way to uncouple cars, admitted); 1897, Bruce v. Beall, 99 Tenn. 303, 41 S. W. 445 (probable life of an elevator-cable, admitted; but, whether a prudent person would have discontinued its use, excluded);

Texas: 1879, Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Smith, 52 Tex. 186 (whether there was time to get out of the way, excluded); 1885, International & G. N. R. Co. v. Klaus, 64 Tex. 294 (whether a bridge span was large enough, allowed); 1888, Telegraph Co. v. Cooper, 71 Tex. 512, 9 S. W. 598 (effect of timely assistance at childbirth, allowed); 1890, Gulf Colo. & S. F. R. Co. v. Compton, 75 Tex. 673, 13 S. W. 667 (safety of a train-hand equipment, allowed); 1896, McCray v. R. Co., 89 Tex. 168, 34 S. W. 95 (whether a rail would have fallen if the car was properly loaded, admitted); 1901, Lipscomb v. R. Co. 95 Tex. 5, 64 S. W. 923 (whether it was a station agent's duty to hire guards, excluded); 1903, Lentz v. Dallas, 96 Tex. 258, 72 S. W. 59 (whether an iron grating was too light for the purpose, not allowed);

Utah: 1897, Wright v. S. P. Co., 15 Utah 421, 49 Pac. 309 (whether it was necessary to have certain employees on an engine, admitted) 1897, State v. McCoy, 15 Utah 136, 49 Pac. 420 (whether an abortion was necessary to save life, admitted); 1898, Hayes v. R. Co., 17 Utah 99, 53 Pac. 1001 (whether sheds were "carefully and properly built," allowed); 1903, Fritz v. Tel. Co., 25 Utah 263, 71 Pac. 209 (how many linemen should help in stringing wires, etc., allowed); 1903, Black v. R. M.

that the judge (or the jury as instructed by the judge) can determine equally well. The principle is the same; but the peculiarity is that a different member

B. Tel. Co., 26 Utah 451, 73 Pac. 514 (whether it would be the "proper thing" for a lineman to do a certain thing, excluded); 1904, Johnson v. Union P. C. Co., 28 Utah 46, 76 Pac. 1089 (safer way of letting rails down a mine, excluded); 1904, Meyers v. Highland B. G. M. Co., 28 Utah 96, 77 Pac. 347 (whether a light in a mine was necessary, sufficient, etc., not allowed; McCarty, J., diss.); 1905, Lee v. Salt Lake, 30 Utah 35, 83 Pac. 562 (difficulty of riding a bicycle over a depression, not allowed); 1907, Smith v. Ogden & N. W. R. Co., 33 Utah 129, 93 Pac. 185 (whether a fire could have been put out, not allowed);

Vermont: 1835, Lester v. Pittsford, 7 Vt. 158 (safety of a road, excluded); 1857, Fraser v. Tupper, 29 Vt. 410 (whether fires were properly set, excluded); 1860, Crane v. Northfield, 32 Vt. 124 (safety of a road, excluded); 1873, Oakes v. Weston, 45 id. 430 (reasonableness of a wagon-load, excluded); 1875, Dean v. McLean, 48 Vt. 413, 421 (proper manner of floating logs, admitted); 1876, Bixby v. R. Co., 49 Vt. 126 (whether an accident would have happened if certain precautions had been taken, excluded); 1881, Evarts v. Middlebury, 53 Vt. 628 (whether certain horse-shoes were proper for winter use, allowed); 1881, Weeks v. Lyndon, 54 Vt. 640, 645 (safety of a road, excluded); 1886, Stowe v. Bishop, 58 Vt. 499, 3 Atl. 494 (prudence of a mode of leaving a horse, excluded); 1886, Bemis v. R. Co., 58 Vt. 637, 3 Atl. 531 (prudence of a mode of using a crane, excluded); 1894, Houston v. Brush, 66 Vt. 331, 339, 29 Atl. 380 (whether a tackle-block was suitable, excluded); 1896, Brown v. Swanton, 69 Vt. 53, 37 Atl. 280 (whether a sluice was sufficient to carry off water, allowed); 1897, Sawyer v. Shoe Co., ib. 486, 38 Atl. 311 (safe manner of fastening a machine, allowed); 1919, Clogston's Estate, 93 Vt. 46, 106 Atl. 594 (undue influence; that witness "never saw E. misuse or abuse his father," allowed); 1919, State v. Gile, 93 Vt. 142, 106 Atl. 829 (statutory rape; whether the mother had seen defendant "do things I thought he ought not to do," allowed);

Virginia: 1895, Bertha Zinc Co. v. Martin's Adm'r, 93 Va. 791, 22 S. E. 869 (whether thawing dynamite before an open fire was a safe proceeding, allowed); 1896, Norfolk & C. R. Co. v. Lumber Co., 92 Va. 413, 23 S. E. 737 (whether an accident would have happened had certain precautions been taken, excluded); 1897, Childress v. R. Co., 94 Va. 186, 26 S. E. 424 (whether the place of a railroad accident was dangerous, excluded); 1899, Roanoke v. Shull, 97 Va. 419, 34 S. E. 34 (whether a person with ordinary care could have seen a hole, excluded); 1900, Southern R. Co. v. Mauzy, 98 Va. 692, 37 S. E. 285 (testimony to the best and safest mode of loading car wheels, excluded); 1905, Virginia I. C. & C. Co. v. Tomlinson, 104 Va. 249, 51 S. E. 362 (whether a mode of starting a belt was dangerous, not allowed); 1907, Virginia-Carolina C. Co. v. Knight, 106 Va. 674, 56 S. E. 725 (whether a snatch-block was a safe appliance, excluded); 1909, Hot Springs L. & M. Co. v. Revercomb, 110 Va. 240, 65 S. E. 557 (whether a river was floatable for logs, allowed; good opinion by Keith, P.); 1916, Reid v. Medley's Adm'r, 118 Va. 462, 87 S. E. 616 (propriety of a method of raising a house, allowed);

Washington: 1905, Lambert v. La Conner T. & T. Co., 37 Wash. 113, 79 Pac. 608 (whether a captain could have prevented a collision, allowed); 1906, Smith v. Dow, 43 Wash. 407, 86 Pac. 555 (the proper way to tie packages, allowed); 1918, Holt v. School Dist. No. 71, 102 Wash. 442, 173 Pac. 335 (injury on playground apparatus; "why this particular ladder was dangerous for small children to play upon," inadmissible "by strict rules");

West Virginia: 1899, State v. Hull, 45 W. Va. 767, 32 S. E. 240 (rape; by a physician, whether a woman would have voluntarily submitted to certain injuries, excluded); 1905, Wheeling M. & F. Co. v. Wheeling, S. & I. Co., 58 W. Va. 62, 51 S. E. 129 (certain testimony as to good faith, diligence, etc., in performing a contract, excluded under the issues); 1915, Colebank v. Standard Garage Co., 75 W. Va. 389, 84 S. E. 1051 (whether an automobile's speed was unreasonable, excluded);

Wisconsin: 1867, Wright v. Hardy, 22 Wis. 351 (propriety of a mode of amputation, allowed); 1868, Reynolds v. Shanks, 23 Wis. 307 (proper mode of construction of a wall, excluded); 1872, Leopold v. Van Kirk, 29 Wis. 553 (whether due care would have prevented the harm, allowed); 1872, Kelley v. Fond du Lac, 31 Wis. 185 (safety of a road, excluded); 1874, Montgomery v. Scott, 34 Wis. 345 (similar); 1875, Oleson v. Tolford, 37 Wis. 331 (whether a stage was overloaded, excluded); 1874, Montgomery v. Scott, 34 Wis. 345 (like Kelley v. Fond du Lac); 1878, Griffin v. Willow, 43 Wis. 511 (same); Benedict v. Fond du Lac, 44 Wis. 496 (same); 1879, Mellor v. Utica, 48 Wis. 459, 4 N. W. 655 (same); 1882, Veerhusen v. R. Co., 53 Wis. 694, 11 N. W. 433 (sufficiency of a fence, excluded); 1884, Fitts v. R. Co., 59 Wis. 330, 18 N. W. 186 (proper construction of a turntable, admitted); 1885, Baker v. Madison, 62 Wis. 143, 22 N. W. 141, 583 (like Kelley v. Fond du Lac); 1885, Quinn v. Higgins, 63 Wis. 666, 24 N. W. 482 (propriety of a surgeon's mode of treatment, allowed); 1885, Lawson v. R. Co., 64 Wis. 459, 24 N. W. 618 (safety of a position occupied in riding in a car, excluded); 1886, Seliger v. Bastian, 66 Wis. 522, 29 N. W. 244 of the tribunal is relied upon as equipped with the data. It is not the common knowledge of the jury which renders the witness' opinion unnecessary, but the special legal knowledge of the judge. This peculiarity of the principle's application comes specially into prominence in one of the topics presenting themselves under this head, — evidence of foreign law; for just there even the judge's special competence will usually cease, and the aid of testimony will be needed.

§ 1953. Foreign Law. No doubt has ever been made that properly skilled testimony may be sought in proving the existence of a foreign rule of law in general.[1] The question that involves the present principle is: When the text of a foreign statute is before the Court, may any aid be received in construing or interpreting it? No one doubts that the aid of a mere translator is proper. But when a translation, if necessary, has been made, is anything further needed in the way of comment on the text?[2]

The answer has always and properly been that such aid may at any time be needed and may always be offered.[3] The effect of this conclusion, however, (prudent way of performing work, excluded); 1886, Mulcairns v. Janesville, 67 Wis. 24, 29 N. W. 565 (propriety of a mode of construction, allowed); 1886, Gates v. Fleischer, 67 Wis. 509, 30 N. W. 674 (like Quinn v. Higgins); 1891, Trapp v. Druecker, 79 Wis. 640, 48 N. W. 664 (propriety of an inventor's lengthy methods in pursuance of a contract, excluded); 1899, Daly v. Milwaukee, 103 Wis. 588, 79 N. W. 752 (whether a cast-iron elbow was obviously safe, allowed); Innes v. Milwaukee, 103 Wis. 582, 79 N. W. 783 (same); 1904, Northern Supply Co. v. Wangard, 123 Wis. 1, 100 N. W. 1066 (whether potatoes were of good stock, etc., allowed); 1906, Hamann v. Milwaukee Bridge Co., 127 Wis. 550, 106 N. W. 1081 (whether work was done in a dangerous way, excluded; the opinion makes a well-meaning but vain effort to infuse into the rule some savor of rationality); 1906, Anderson v. Chicago Brass Co., 127 Wis. 273, 106 N. W. 1077 (whether a machine was dangerous, excluded); 1907, Zarnik v. Reiss C. Co., 133 Wis. 290, 113 N. W. 752 (whether a door was safely locked, allowed); 1911, Benson v. Superior Mfg. Co., 147 Wis. 20, 132 N. W. 633 (whether a hooking device was safe, suitable, etc., excluded); 1911, Cook v. Doud Sons & Co., 147 Wis. 271, 133 N. W. 40 (whether an engine "threw more sparks than it should," allowed).

§ 1953. [1] Questions depending on other principles are: Whether the witness is sufficiently qualified in his subject (ante, §§ 564, 690); whether the rule of producing the original requires the production of the text of a foreign statute (ante, § 1271); whether a Hearsay exception exists for printed copies of foreign decisions or foreign statutes presented (ante, §§ 1684, 1697, 1703) or for a certificate obtained from the foreign court (ante, § 1674); whether the fact of foreign law is to be proved to the judge or to the jury (post, § 2558).

[2] The principle that the construction and interpretation of documents is for the judge, not the jury (post, § 2556), has nothing to do here. It simply differentiates the functions of judge and jury. Having given a specific duty to the judge, it says nothing about what aid he shall seek in performing it. The present question arises equally where a judge is sitting without a jury.

[3] Eng. 1844, Sussex Peerage Case, 11 Cl. & F. 115; 1851, Bruce, V. C., in Guepratte v. Young, 4 De G. & S. 221, 227; 1863, Lord Chelmsford, in Di Sora v. Phillipps, 10 H. L. C. 640; U. S. Fed. 1904, Slater v. Mexican Nat'l R. Co., 194 U. S. 120, 24 Sup. 581 (deposition of a Mexican lawyer to the construction of Mexican statutes, received, additionally to the agreed translation of them); 1906, Re International Mahogany Co., 147 Fed. 147, C. C. A. (copy of the text of a Cuban statute, held not to override the testimony of a Cuban lawyer); N. H. 1917, Hansen v. Grand Trunk R. Co., 78 N. H. 518, 102 Atl. 625; Pa. 1894, Bollinger v. Gallagher, 163 Pa. 245, 252, 29 Atl. 751; P. R. 1915, Fernandez v. Calaf. 8 P. R. 363, 376 (French civil code in San Domingo; expert opinions of its interpretation, considered); Wash. 1905, Clark v. Eltinge, 38 Wash. 376, 80 Pac. 556 (construction of a Montana statute; the testimony of a Montana attorney as to the "consensus of opinion of the bench and bar of Montana," excluded; otherwise if he had testified that the Montana courts "had construed the statute in a certain manner" or "had never passed upon said statute"); Contra: 1922, Public Service R. Co. v. Wursthorn, 3d C. C. A., 278 must be distinguished from the effect of the rule of producing the verbatim text (ante, § 1271); that is, assuming the production of the complete text, the present question remains, whether an expert's interpretation of that text is admissible:

1844, DENMAN, L. C. J., in Baron de Bode's Case, 8 Q. B. 265: "There is another general rule, that opinions of persons of science must be received as to the facts of their science. That rule applies to legal men. . . . Properly speaking, the nature of such evidence is, not to set forth the contents of the written law, but its effect and the state of law resulting from it. The mere contents, indeed, might often mislead persons not familiar with the particular system of law; the witness is called upon to state what law does result from the instrument."

1844, Lord BROUGHAM, in Sussex Peerage Case, 11 Cl. & F. 115: "It is perfectly clear that the proper mode of proving a foreign law is not by showing to the House the book of the law; for the House has not organs to know and to deal with the text of that law, and therefore requires the assistance of a lawyer who knows how to interpret it."

§ 1954. Trade Usage, as involving (1) an Opinion of Law or (2) an Opinion without stating Instances. (1) When a trade usage is material to the issue, usually by implied incorporation into a contract (post, §§ 2440, 2464), the witness to prove it is apt to state it by declaring that usage attributes a certain right or liability in certain circumstances. This is of course a violation of the Opinion rule; the witness should state the tenor of the usage or practice, omitting any reference to the legal effect.[1]

(2) It has sometimes been said that a witness to trade usage may state only specific instances, or must at least mention one or more in support of his statement of the general practice. This notion is traceable to some remarks

Fed. 408 (personal injury; a witness learned in the common law of New Jersey, excluded; unsound; the opinion is misled by some notion of judicial notice).

But the Court may of course also consult the text, and not merely listen to the opinion; 1857, Bremer v. Freeman, 10 Moo. P. C. 306, 363, semble; 1889, Concha v. Murieta, L. R. 40 Ch. D. 543, 549, 554; 1919, Martin v. Otis, 233 Mass. 491, 124 N. E. 294, (and the expert's opinion may of course not be accepted as conclusive).

§ 1954. [1] 1896, Conner v. R. Co., 146 Ind. 430, 45 N. E. 662 (the mere assertion of a "custom" does not involve opinion); 1874, Haskins v. Warren, 115 Mass. 514, 535 ("Usage is matter of fact, not of opinion; . . . [witnesses'] conclusions or inferences as to its effect, either upon the contract or the legal title or rights of the parties, are not competent to show the character or force of the usage; . . . the effect is to be determined by the Court, or the jury under its direction"); 1836, Allen v. Merchants' Bank, 15 Wend. N. Y. 482, 488 ("The inquiry . . . is not after the opinion of traders and merchants in respect to the law upon a given question, but after the evidence of a fact, to wit, the usage or practice in the course of mercantile business"); 1809, Dean v. Swoop, 2 Binn. Pa. 72 ("the general understanding and belief of the country as to the liability of carriers by water"; not decided); 1804, Ruan v. Gardner, 1 Wash. C. C. 145, 149 (insurance; a witness was offered to prove that goods with a particular mark "must be on board, in order to recover"; Per Curiam: "You may examine witnesses to prove a particular course of trade, or other matters in the nature of facts, but not to show what the law is; nothing could be more dangerous than to fix the law upon the opinions of particular men").

In Louisiana it seems to have been at one time the law that, where the value of legal services was in issue, the judge would not accept testimony from lawyers as experts as to the value of the services, but would rely upon his own professional knowledge. But no such rule now exists; 1916, Hunt v. Hill, 138 La. 583, 70 So. 522 (examining the precedents).

In Canada there is a rule that in maritime cases, the assessors being nautical men, no mariners will be called expert as witnesses to the propriety of navigation conduct in collisions: ante, § 563.

of Lord Mansfield and later judges, which do not justify it.[2] There have indeed been judges who have refused, on all the facts of a case, to credit testimony to usage, which could not adduce instances in verification.[3] But there is no rule of exclusion.[4] The usage is itself a fact, and the Opinion rule does not treat such testimony as an inference from data which can be adequately stated without the inference.

(3) Distinguish here (a) the experiental qualifications of a witness to usage (ante, § 565); (b) the numerous questions of substantive law as to the binding effect of a usage upon a contract, and as to the materiality of usage under the Parol Evidence rule (post, §§ 2440, 2464); (c) the question whether one witness to usage suffices (post, § 2053); and (d) whether, when instances are given, one instance suffices (ante, § 379).

§ 1955. Interpretation of Documents; (1) Expert Interpretation of Technical Words or Phrases. When a document is to be construed or interpreted, the judge usually has this function; sometimes the jury has it, and either may need testimonial aid in fulfilling it. There are thus to be kept apart three entirely distinct principles, all of which may call for application at the same time:

(a) The principle determining the respective functions of judge and jury (post, § 2556); this question being, whose function it is to determine the effect of the words, written or oral. (b) The principle of the Parol Evidence rule, or Integration (post, §§ 2440, 2464), determining whether the ordinary sense of the words in the document is alone to control, or whether other negotiations or general usage, as fixing the special sense of the words, may be regarded; for example, we ask whether "free on board" in a document is to

[2] 1761, Edie v. East India Co., 1 W. Bl. 295, 297, 2 Burr. 1216, 1222 (L. C. J. Mansfield: "Many witnesses were examined by defendants to prove this usage; but it did not appear that in any one fact the indorsee of such special indorsement ever lost the money by such omission [of the words 'or order']; the evidence was only matter of opinion"; in the report in Burrow the point is similar); 1833, Cunningham v. Fonblanque, 6 C. & P. 43 (Park, J., to the jury: "Now, there is not a single witness who has proved the reciprocity of the practice; that is, by instances; two witnesses stated it, but did not produce any instances"; this is headnoted by the reporter: "An usage of trade must be proved by instances, and cannot be supported by evidence of opinion merely"; the verdict was set aside "on the counts relating to usage," but that doubt was as to the admissibility of usage at all), 1836, Hall v. Benson, 7 C. & P. 711, 714 (Tindal, C. J.: "Is there any general course of business? Let your mind revolve over instances. I am not asking you whether it is just and proper, but whether there is any prevailing course of business").

[3] 1903, Ames M. Co. v. Kimball S. S. Co., 125 Fed. 333; 1878, Bishop v. Clay Ins. Co., 45 Conn. 430, 355; 1871, Chenery v. Goodrich, 106 Mass. 566, 571; 1836, Mills v. Hallock, 2 Edw. Ch. 652, 656.

[4] Eng. 1761, Camden v. Cowley, 1 W. Bl. 417 (L. C. J. Mansfield "ruled that insurance-brokers and others might be examined as to the general opinion and understanding of the persons concerned in the trade; though they knew no particular instance in fact, upon which such opinion was founded"); U. S. 1866, Hamilton v. Nickerson, 13 All. Mass. 351 (a well qualified witness, who "could not state individual cases," admitted; "the 'factum probandum' was not a single isolated act or occurrence, but the result or conclusion derived from a series of similar acts or circumstances, creating and establishing in the mind of the witness a conviction of belief of the complex whole or comprehensive fact"); 1919, Jarecki Mfg. Co. v. Merriam, 104 Kan. 646, 180 Pac. 224 (custom for vendor to make good any cables sold; citing the above text with approval).

The following case is obscure: 1859, Shackelford v. R. Co., 37 Miss. 202, 208.

be construed with any reference at all to trade usage, — not how the trade usage is to be got at. The vast majority of the rulings upon the interpretation of phrases involve a dispute over this principle only. (c) Finally, the Opinion rule, — the one in hand. Here we assume that, by the preceding principle, resort may be had to usage or the like, and we ask how it is to be evidenced, and whether we need any testimonial aid. It is obvious that, by the principle of the Opinion rule (ante, § 1918), the judge (or the jury) will not resort to outside aid if the question is merely one of ordinary usage which will be as familiar to him (or to them) as to any one; while if it is one of the usage in special trade or locality, or if for another reason aid is necessary, it will be sought.

Three classes of cases, in this application of the Opinion rule, are to be distinguished: (1) expert interpretation of the meaning of technical words or phrases; (2) the application of a description of premises to marks on boundaries of a particular piece of land; and (3) a statement of the contents of a lost document.

(1) Expert interpretation of technical words or phrases. Here it is obvious that the interpretation of the meaning of the document in respect to ordinary words, being a part of the function of the Court (post, § 2550), is not for a witness to speak to. But so far as the words are technical, and the witness speaks to technical usage or meaning, there is no prohibition; the Court must determine anew in each instance whether it needs any testimonial aid to interpret the word or phrase in dispute.[1]

§ 1955. [1] So much depends upon the circumstances of each case, and so trifling in value is any one ruling as an illustration of the principle, that no attempt is made to set out the words or passages in dispute:

ENGLAND: 1856, Kirkland v. Nisbet, 3 Macq. Sc. App. C. 766 (excluding a question on cross-examination, "what would the employer be entitled to expect?" to a witness to trade usage, when shown the terms of a specific letter; "Evidence as to mercantile usage may be received; . . . but you cannot ask a witness what is the meaning of a written document").

UNITED STATES: Fed. 1807, Winthrop v. Ins. Co., 2 Wash. C. C. 7, 10; 1859, Ogden v. Parsons, 23 How. 169 (what is a "full cargo"); Conn. 1898, Fuller v. Ins. Co., 70 Conn. 647, 41 Atl. 4 (insurance policy); Ga. 1882, Wylly v. Gazan, 69 Ga. 510 (auction-sale document); Ill. 1856, Sigsworth v. McIntyre 18 Ill. 126 (contract); 1889, Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Connell, 127 Ill. 424, 20 N. E. 89 (telegram); 1898, Louisville & N. R. Co., v. R. Co., 174 Ill. 448, 51 N. E. 824 ("necessary signals and switchmen," interpreted by an expert); Ind. 1861, Howe v. McBride, 17 Ind. 499 (technical usage in general); Ia. 1859, Campbell v. Rusch, 9 Ia. 341 (contract); 1872, Haver v. Tenney, 36 Ia. 81; 1906, Tubbs v. Mechanics' Ins. Co., 131 Ia. 217, 108 N. W. 324 (expert opinion as to the meaning of "machinery" in a fire insurance policy, excluded); Md. 1899, Schwartz v. Wilmer, 90 Md. 136, 44 Atl. 1059 (effect of the words "protest waived"; excluded); Mass. 1898, Burton v. B. S. C. Co., 171 Mass. 439, 50 N. E. 1029 (explanation of patent specifications allowed); Mich. 1875, Clark v. Locomotive Works, 32 Mich. 257 (contract); Minn. 1879, Wilder v. De Cou, 26 Minn. 18, 1 N. W. 48; 1894, Cargill v. Thompson, 57 Minn. 534, 59 N. W. 638 (hydraulic contract; experts may explain meanings of technical phrases but are not to construe the clauses); N. Y. 1857, Silverthorn v. Fowle, 4 Jones L. 362; 1905, Kitchings v. Brown, 180 N. Y. 414, 73 N. E. 241 (meaning of "tenement house" in a deed; expert testimony admitted); N. Car. 1888, Long v. Davidson, 101 N. C. 175, 7 N. E. 758; N. Dak. 1915, Gudmundson v. Thingvalla Lutheran Church, 29 N. D. 291, 150 N. W. 750, 760, 763, 770 (whether a certain theological creed as framed in a church constitution was departed from by the terms of a church resolution); Pa. 1897, Clayton Co. v. R. Co., 179 Pa. 350, 36 Atl. 287 (meaning of "excavated and prepared" as applied to a roadbed, admitted; P. I. 1919, Cruz v. Alberto, 39 P. I. 991 (contract with a Spanish clause as to renewing for six years; expert testimony to the meaning of the Spanish words, excluded; "the question

§ 1956. Same: (2) Location of Descriptions in Deeds, Maps, and Surveys. When a description of premises is to be interpreted, the distinction seems sound and simple that if a witness (usually a surveyor) is attempting merely to construe the untechnical terms of a deed, map, or the like, his testimony is unnecessary and improper; but if he is offering his judgment, being that of an experienced observer familiar with the ground, as to the specific actual place signified by a mark or line named in the description, his testimony is admissible; for in the latter case he has what the Court cannot possibly have, namely, an acquaintance with the features of the land and the other data which were probably associated in the mind of the map-maker or deed-maker with the phrases used and are therefore essential to be considered in interpreting these. In accordance with this view, most Courts have declared testimony of the latter sort admissible;[1] a few, however, have excluded it, misled by other analogies.[2] Testimony merely attempting to for decision is after all merely a question of law"); Tenn. 1871, Nashville & C. R. Co. v. Carroll, 6 Heisk. 368; Tex. 1920, Ochoa v. State, 87 Tex. Cr. 318, 221 S. W. 973 (murder of his own son; letters written by defendant to a woman, his accomplice, stated that "everything has been a complete failure"; held error for the accomplice to testify to her interpretation of it, viz. "the time had passed and I had not poisoned the boy"; the ruling makes law absurd).

It was common enough for the masters in Chancery to consult Scotch advocates upon the effect of a Scotch marriage-settlement or the like: 1841, Williams v. Williams, 3 Beav. 547; 1850, Hitchcock v. Clendinen, 12 id. 534; 1854, Re Todd, 19 id. 582.

Compare the cases cited post, § 2464.

§ 1956. [1] Ala. 1901, Barrett v. Kelly, 131 Ala. 378, 30 So. 824 (by a surveyor familiar with the property, that the lines as shown upon a map were correct, allowed); 1904, Dorlan v. Westervitch, 140 Ala. 283, 37 So. 382 (that the land described in a deed and in a declaration is the same, allowed); 1915, Smith v. Bachus, 195 Ala. 8, 70 So. 261 (location of description of lands in a deed; "do you know where the C. C. survey that was made in 1897 or 1898 ran with reference to these lands?" allowed); Ind. 1881, Grusenmeyer v. Logansport, 76 Ind. 549, 552 (whether a place is within the limits of a city); 1882, Indianapolis v. McAvoy, 86 Ind. 587, 589 (same); 1884, Strosser v. Ft. Wayne, 130 Ind. 443, 447 (same); 1897, Shea v. Muncie, 148 Ind. 14, 46 N. E. 138 (same); Pa. 1803, Forbes v. Caruthers, 3 Yeates 527 (source of an evident error in distances named) 1845, Farr v. Swan, 2 Pa. St. 247 (location of a deed); 1880, Northumberland Coal Co. v. Clement, 95 Ind. 138 (same); 1888, Jackson v. Lambert, 121 Pa. 191, 15 Atl. 502 (same); 1905, Brundred v. McLaughlin, 213 Pa. 115, 62 Atl. 565 ("Where in your opinion is the line between Nos. 83 and 84?" allowed); Tex. 1904, Baker v. State, 47 Tex. Cr. 482, 83 S. W. 1122 (limits of Federal land); Utah: 1909, Tate v. Rose, 35 Utah 229, 99 Pac. 1003 (identity of description in patent with land in issue); Va. 1895, Holleran v. Meisel, 91 Va. 143, 21 S. E. 658 (location of a patent); 1910, Richmond v. Jones, 111 Va. 214, 68 S. E. 181 (Holleran v. Meisel approved, but drawing an obscure distinction between knowledge and opinion); W. Va. 1868, Randolph v. Adams, 2 W. Va. 524 (accuracy of a survey); 1913, Winding Gulf C. Co. v. Campbell, 72 W. Va. 449, 78 S. E. 384 (location of a survey); Wis. 1885, Toomey v. Kay, 62 Wis. 107, 22 N. W. 286 (that a line was run correctly).

[2] 1901, Ii Estate v. Judd, 13 Haw. 319, 323 (to a surveyor, what land was signified by the description in a will); 1888, Hockmoth v. Des Grands Champs, 71 Mich. 523, 39 N. W. 737 (whether corner of survey corresponded with government map); 1908, Keefe v. Sullivan Co. R. Co., 75 N. H. 116, 71 Atl. 379 (civil engineers not admitted to testify where a point of curve on the survey began, and whether a fence was upon the true line; this ruling almost makes one despair of the final victory of Common Sense in the law; if a Court with the high traditions of the New Hampshire Court backslides in this manner, little can be hoped for elsewhere; moreover the opinion has failed to fortify itself respectably on the subject, for it cites no rulings on the specific point, and ignores the precedents cited in this and the preceding note); N. Y. 1858, Stevens v. West, 6 Jones L. 53; 1859, Clegg v. Fields, 7 Jones L. 39 (identity of boundaries with those named in a deed, etc.); Pa. 1859, Ormsby v. Ihmsen, 34 Pa. 472 (application of a deed to premises); Va. 1896, Sulphur Mines Co. v. Thompson, 93 Va. 293, 25 S. E. 232 (identity of land surveyed); 1910, Richmond v. Jones, 111 Va. 214, 68 S. E. 181 (opinion as to identity of land included in certain deeds, excluded).

construe the untechnical passages of the description is of course usually inadmissible.[3]

§ 1957. Same: (3) Contents of a Lost Document. By the principle of Completeness (post, § 2105) it is regarded as unsafe to listen to any testimony of the contents of a lost writing unless that testimony purports to reproduce at least the substance of the contents; and some Courts even require the fairly complete details of its contents. In most of these instances, in spite of the occasional invocation by the Courts of the Opinion rule, we are not dealing with that rule at all, but with the entirely distinct principle of Completeness. In a rare case only, the Opinion rule may properly be invoked to exclude testimony on this subject, — as when the witness, without reciting the substance of the contents, merely expresses his opinion as to the meaning or the legal sufficiency of it.[1] The theoretical difference between the Opinion rule and the Completeness rule here lies in this, that under the latter we require at least the substance to be given (instead of a mere fragment), while under the former we reject the opinion or inference from the substance, and require the latter alone.

§ 1958. Testator's or Grantor's Capacity; Accused's Capacity. (1) It is easy to see that on principle the opinion of no witness whatever is needed to tell the Court whether testamentary capacity existed, because that is a matter of applying a legal definition to the data of the testator's mental condition, and the judge (in theory) needs no assistance on that point, even from a legal witness. The data of the mental condition are to be presented, and the jury, under the judge's instructions, are to apply the definition to them:

1862, ALDIS, J., in Fairchild v. Bascomb, 35 Vt. 416: "What is sufficient capacity to transact business or to make a will is a matter of law, depending somewhat upon the nature of the business. A witness may not correctly apprehend the rule of law, and if he uses such expressions may be misled himself or may mislead the jury. Hence the question should be framed so as to require him to state the measure of the testator's capacity in his own language, and by such ordinary terms or forms of expression as will best convey his own ideas of the matter."

[3] 1856, Blumenthal v. Ralls, 24 Mo. 113; 1859, Whittelsey v. Kellogg, 28 Mo. 405; 1860, Schultz v. Lindell, 30 Mo. 321.

The question whether testimony may be received that a certain stone, post, mark, etc., was intended as a boundary, is a different one (post, § 1963).

§ 1957. [1] 1892, Alexander v. Handley, 96 Ala. 220, 223, 11 So. 390 (whether a lost document made X a partner, excluded); 1898, Murphy v. State, 118 Ala. 137, 23 So. 719 (that a document was a copy, allowed); 1850, Massure v. Noble, 11 Ill. 531 (testimony that the contents of a lost petition for partition were all that was necessary, excluded); 1897, Ryder v. Jacobs, 182 Pa. 624, 38 Atl. 471 (bookkeeping; whether accounts were in partnership form; excluded on the facts. This principle probably explains the following ruling: 1895, Edwards v. Rives, 35 Fla. 89, 17 So. 416 (admitting the "substance of the contents," but not "the effect of the substance of the contents"; but of course this is after all mere quibbling).

For the rulings, superficially like these, under the Completeness rule, see post, § 2105.

Compare the application of the rule requiring the production of the original, where the witness is desired to testify summarily to the effect of a document or to the state of accounts therein (ante, §§ 1230, 1244).

Compare also the rule that a party may explain his meaning in a document offered against him as an admission (ante, §§ 1044, 1059, post, § 1972).

But a difficulty arises. It is desirable to obtain from witness a compact statement of the general mental condition of the testator. It is, for instance, a better index of the witness' results of observation to say, "I would or would not trust him to buy property intelligently," than merely to say, "He once did this or that wise or foolish act." The general statement often conveys a more accurate understanding of his condition than a rehearsal of many single acts, — acts which indeed are in detail largely forgotten, cannot be reproduced in statement, and have left only the general impression. Such a general statement is perfectly legitimate; but the difficulty lies in distinguishing it from a statement involving the use of some legal definition of testamentary capacity. The ordinary witness, though using a compendious statement, may really have no desire to attempt a legal definition and may be thinking only of the deceased's general capacity to take care of himself and his property. Nevertheless, in distinguishing between the proper and improper forms of statement, an easy opportunity is offered for judicial quibbling. In the dilemma thus presented, the solution seems often to depend merely on whether the Court is disposed to stick at trifles and the forms of things, or to follow practical good sense:

1861, WOODWARD, J., in Daniel v. Daniel, 39 Pa. 191, 211: "The Court would not allow Paul Schlegel to be asked whether the testator had capacity 'to understand a will.' The witness was allowed to answer, and did answer, that he was 'fit to make a will.' We think that throughout this cause there was too much refinement of distinctions in raising and ruling questions of evidence on the part both of counsel and of Court; and here is a remarkable instance of excessive nicety. What is the distinction between that mental condition which is competent to understand a will, and that which is fit to make a will? If a microscopic vision could detect a distinction, who has scales nice enough to tell how much it would weigh in the jury-box? The plaintiffs in error undertake to convince us that their cause was damaged by the witness testifying that the testator was fit to make a will, instead of testifying that he was competent to understand a will. We do not think the error, if error there was, did them any damage. We do not suppose the jury would have been swayed a hair's breadth by one form of answer, more than by the other."

By all Courts a mere abstract statement that the person was or was not "capable" of making a will or a contract or a deed seems to be held improper; but there is great contrariety of ruling upon other forms of statement.[1]

§ 1958. [1] Compare with the following cases those collected ante, § 1938 (insanity); in the following citation, where nothing is specially noted, the Court excluded a general question as to capacity to make a will:

CANADA: 1883, Doe v. Gilbert, 22 N. Br. 576, 582 ("Was he of sound disposing mind, memory, and understanding?" excluded).

UNITED STATES: Alabama: 1859, Walker v. Walker's Ex'r, 34 Ala. 472; 1868, Stuckey v. Bellah, 41 Ala. 707 (capacity to dispose of property at the time of a gift, admitted); 1873, Hewlett v. Wood, 55 Ala. 635 ("capacity for business" excluded); 1897, Torrey v. Burney, 113 Ala. 496, 21 So. 348 ("capable of transacting ordinery business," excluded); 1900, Dominick v. Randolph, 124 Ala. 557, 27 So. 481 ("capable of making a deed," allowed on cross-examination); 1911, Council v. Mayhew, 172 Ala. 295, 554 So. 314; 1917, Wear v. Wear, 200 Ala. 345, 76 So. 111 (whether testator was "mentally capable of transacting ordinary business," allowable).

California: 1909, In re Coburn, 11 Cal. App. 604, 105 Pac. 924;

Colorado: 1900, Shapter v. Pillar, 28 Colo. 209, 63 Pac. 302 (adjudication as lunatic; opinion as to "degree of incapacity," inadmissible); 1905, Denver & R. G. R. Co. v. Scott, 34 Colo. 99, 81 Pac. 763 (to a physician, "Whether S.

(2) The capacity of an accused person to be legally responsible for the crime charged depends also upon a legal definition; and it would therefore was able to transact business, including such business as the settlement of the claim . . . for injuries from which he was suffering?" excluded; this is an over-strict application of the rule; if Courts cannot handle it any more practically than this, the whole rule should go by the board);

Columbia (Dist.): 1908, Macafee v. Higgins, 31 D. C. App. 355 (whether a testator "was capable and was of sufficient mental capacity to understand and execute a valid deed or contract," held not reversible error; a most enlightened ruling, worthy of notice by all other Courts);

Connecticut: 1899, Turner's Appeal, 72 Conn. 305, 44 Atl. 310; 1902, Hayes v. Candee, 75 Conn. 131, 52 Atl. 826 (whether the grantor was capable of transacting business, and whether she was capable of making a deed of real estate; the former held clearly allowable, and the latter also on the facts, good opinion); 1911, Atwood v. Atwood, 84 Conn. 169, 79 Atl. 59 (whether a grantor was capable of making any contract, allowed, but not whether she was capable of making a particular contract or will; this tweedledum and tweedledee still satisfies a court which in the same opinion takes an advanced liberal stand on other aspects of this benighted Opinion rule);

Georgia: 1896, Jones v. Grogan, 98 Ga. 552, 25 S. E. 590 (whether there was undue influence allowed, if the data were stated);

Illinois: 1887, Schneider v. Manning, 121 Ill. 386, 12 N. E. 267 (excluding "capacity to dispose by will or deed," but admitting "capacity to transact business"); 1888, Keithley v. Stafford, 126 Ill. 520, 18 N. E. 740 ("Was he capable of transacting ordinary business?", left undecided with a reference to the Schneider ruling); 1901, Ring v. Lawless, 190 Ill. 520, 60 N. E. 881 (opinions as to "capacity to transact the ordinary business affairs of life," admitted); 1901, Neely v. Shepard, 190 Ill. 637, 60 N. E. 922 (similar); 1903, Baker v. Baker, 202 Ill. 595, 67 N. E. 410 ("whether he had sufficient mind and memory to understand the will in question," "whether or not he was able to understandingly execute a will," not allowed); 1908, Garrus v. Davis, 234 Ill. 326, 84 N. E. 924 ("capable of executing a valid will," not allowed); 1911, Wetzel v. Firebaugh, 251 Ill. 190, 95 N. E. 1085 (whether the testatrix "had sufficient mental capacity to understand the business she was engaged in, of making a will," held improper); 1911, Adams v. First Methodist Episcopal Church, 251 Ill. 268, 96 N. E. 253 ("Was there any fraud, duress, or undue influence used to induce A. S. A. to sign her name?" held improper); 1911, Bailey v. Beall, 251 Ill. 577, 96 N. E. 567 ("sufficient mental capacity to make a will," excluded); 1916, Lyman v. Kaul, 275 Ill. 11, 113 N. E. 944 (that a testator "was a man of strong character and will and not easily influenced," held improper; another ruling of the sort which chokes off practical attempts to get at the truth); 1917, Teter v. Spooner, 279 Ill. 39, 116 N. E. 673 (that the testator was a "man of decided opinions," i. e. not easily influenced, held improper; this is one of the most clean-cut instances of the irrationality and childishness of the Opinion rule as it cumbers our law today); 1920, Baddeley v. Watkins, 293 Ill. 394, 127 N. E. 725 (testamentary capacity; "whether she had sufficient mind and memory to recall to her mind her property and to make disposition of it understandingly according to some plan she had formed in her mind," held improper, with two other questions; these tweedledum and tweedledee discriminations raise the corresponding inquiry whether supreme courts have sufficient mind and memory of the objects of the administration of justice to employ the system of rules of evidence as a means to an end);

Indiana: 1892, Hamrick v. Hamrick, 134 Ind. 324, 34 N. E. 3 (opinion as to sanity, admissible; but not as to capacity to manage an estate);

Iowa: 1859, Pelamourges v. Clark, 9 Ia. 16; 1876, Ashcraft v. De Armond, 44 Ia. 233 (contract); 1899, Furlong v. Carraher, 109 Ia. 492, 79 N. W. 277; 1901, Betts v. Betts, 113 Ia. 111, 84 N. W. 975 (whether the testator was "capable of transacting business intelligently," excluded; such a ruling seems to render witnesses incapable of giving testimony intelligently); 1903, McGibbons v. McGibbons, 119 Ia. 140, 93 N. W. 55 ("ability to understand in a reasonable manner the nature and effect of her acts in business transactions"; excluded); 1905, Glass' Estate, 127 Ia. 646, 103 N. W. 1013 (whether the testator was capable of making the will, excluded; whether he was "capable of transacting ordinary business and of intelligently disposing of property," allowed; Betts v. Betts, supra, said to have been "practically overruled"); 1904, State v. McGruder, 125 Ia. 741, 746, 101 N. W. 646 (whether a boy was "capable of knowing or appreciating the distinction between right and wrong," allowed); 1909, State v. Bennett, 143 Ia. 214 121 N. W. 1021 (whether an accused was "irresponsible mentally for her acts," not allowed; Betts v. Betts, supra, cited); 1909, Overpeck's Will, 144 Ia. 401, 120 N. W. 1044, 122 N. W. 928 (whether a testatrix was "in the condition to comprehend the value of her property," etc., allowed; Glass v. Glass affirmed); 1910, Searles v. Insurance Co., 148 Ia. 65, 126 N. W. 801 (whether an insured be equally improper to ask for the witness' testimony without first eliminating the element of law from the question. But an inquiry whether he knew was "capable of transacting business," allowed; Glass v. Glass affirmed; Betts v. Betts apparently discarded); 1909, Overpeck's Will, 144 Ia. 400, 120 N. W. 1044 (Glass' Estate followed); 1912, Erwin v. Fillenwarth, 160 Ia. 210, 137 N. W. 502 (the unworkability of this complicated quiddity as exhibited in this State is shown by the continuous grist of decisions needed to correct errors; it is wearisome to chronicle the particular divagations; indeed, the Court itself in the present opinion remarks, whether complacently or exhaustedly cannot be told, "Nothing need be added to what has been said in these decisions"); 1916, Eveleth's Will, 177 Ia. 716, 157 N. W. 257 (whether a testator was capable of understanding the amount of his property, approving Overpeck's Will, supra); 1918, John's Will, 184 Ia. 416, 165 N. W. 1021 (whether a testator "lacked ability to comprehend transactions," etc., not allowed);

Kansas: 1921, Cole v. Drum, 109 Kan. 148, 197 Pac. 1105 (whether testator had sufficient capacity to make a valid will);
Maine: 1895, Hall v. Perry, 87 Me. 569, 33 Atl. 160; 1896, Hewett v. Hurley, 88 Me. 431, 34 Atl. 274 (by a doctor, that the person was "not capable of transacting business," excluded);
Maryland: 1902, Jones v. Collins, 94 Md. 403, 51 Atl. 398 (whether the testator was "capable of executing a valid deed or contract," allowed); 1902, Berry v. Safe D. & T. Co., 96 Md. 45, 53 Atl. 720 (medical experts not admitted upon the question of capacity to make a will; the opinion is unsound and lengthily obscures the subject with technical refinements quite as objectionable as the theories of the medical experts denounced in the opinion); 1905, Struth v. Decker, 100 Md. 368, 59 Atl. 727 (excluded; opinion obscure); 1906, Baugher v. Gesell, 103 Md. 450, 63 Atl. 1078 (Berry v. Safe D. & T. Co., supra, followed; whether the testator "was of sound and disposing mind and capable of making a valid deed or contract," excluded); 1906, Kelly v. Kelly, 103 Md. 548, 63 Atl. 1082 (similar; but decided on another ground, by another judge, without noticing the preceding opinion, dated the same day);
Massachusetts: 1879, May v. Bradlee, 127 Mass. 419; 1891, Poole v. Dean, 152 Mass. 590, 26 N. E. 406 ("usual and ordinary capacity for doing business," allowed); 1892, Smith v. Smith, 157 Mass. 389, 32 N. E. 348 (whether he was capable of making a contract or transacting important business, excluded);
Michigan: 1862, White v. Bailey, 10 Mich. 158; 1870, Kempsey v. McGuiness, 21 Mich. 141 (various forms distinguished and discussed); 1903, Page v. Beach, 134 Mich. 51, 95 N. W. 981 ("What was his capacity?", held improper; form of question discussed in detail);
Minnesota: 1880, Pinney's Will, 27 Minn. 282, 6 N. W. 791, 7 N. W. 144 ("capacity to understand any disposition he might in a will make of his property," allowed);
Missouri: 1862, Farrell's Adm'r v. Brennan's Adm'x, 32 Mo. 334 ("sound enough to make a will," excluded); 1918, Heinbach v. Heinbach, 274 Mo. 301, 202 S. W. 1123 (whether testator "had sufficient mind to comprehend who his children were," allowed);
Nebraska: 1907, Cheney's Estate, 78 Nebr. 274, 110 N. W. 731 ("able to make" a will, not allowed); 1918, Gunderman's Estate, 102 Nebr. 590, 168 N. W. 359 (testator; obscure);
New Hampshire: 1903, Pattee v. Whitcomb, 72 N. H. 249, 56 Atl. 459 ("influence of the testator's wife over him," allowed);
North Carolina: 1832, Griffin v. Ing, 3 Dev. 356; 1882, Bost v. Bost, 87 N. C. 478; Horah v. Knox, 87 N. C. 485 ("mind and intelligence sufficient to enable him to have a reasonable judgment of the kind and value of the property he proposed to will, and to whom he was willing it"; "competent or of sufficient capacity to transact business involving a disposition of her property"; allowed); 1896, Smith v. Smith, 117 N. C. 326, 348, 23 S. E. 270 (that the testator's mental capacity was "good," admissible; but that he "was a man of great will power," "could not be influenced by any power on earth," inadmissible; a puerile splitting of hairs, which in the name of justice caused a new trial); 1904, Re Peterson, 136 N. C. 13, 48 S. E. 561 (question discussed);
North Dakota: 1920, Prescott v. Merrick, — N. D. —, 179 N. W. 693 (whether testator "was of sufficient mind and memory to execute a will," etc., allowed);
Ohio: 1864, Runyan v. Price, 15 Oh. St. 14; 1914, Bahl v. Byal, 90 Oh. 129, 106 N. E. 766 (distinguishing Runyan v. Price); 1917, Niemes v. Niemes, 97 Oh. 145, 119 N. E. 503 (whether the testator could "understand and decide large and complicated business transactions," held not improper);
Oklahoma: 1918, Campbell v. Dick, — Okl. —, 176 Pac. 520 (whether a grantor, an Indian woman, knew and understood the effect of her deed, allowed);
Pennsylvania: 1824, Wogan v. Small, 11 S. & R. 143 (fit to make a will, allowed); 1854, Wilkinson v. Pearson, 23 Pa. 120 ("capable of making a contract or transacting important business" allowed); 1861, Daniel v. Daniel, 39 Pa. 191, 211 (whether the testator was "fit to make a will," held not error; quoted supra); Tennessee: 1835, Gibson v. Gibson, 9 Yerg. 331; 1905, Nashville C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Brundige, 114 Tenn. 31, 84 S. W. 805 (opinion as to the difference between right and wrong, or whether his will could control his actions, would be proper.[2]

(3) The peculiar practical difference, it may be noted, between the present application of the Opinion rule and its application to the topic of sanity (ante, § 1938) is of course that here even an expert, medical or legal, may not speak so as to employ a legal definition, while there it is conceded that a medical expert may always give an opinion on sanity.

§ 1959. Solvency. In testimony to solvency, the opportunity for quibbling arises anew, and for the same reason, namely, that in strictness solvency is a matter of legal definition, and yet it is also a term commonly employed without any thought of legal definition to designate briefly a certain mercantile condition as understood by all. There is here less plausibility and less judicial support for the technical attitude than in the preceding subject.[1] being "in a condition to transact business or make a contract," excluded; unsound);

Texas: 1895, Brown v. Mitchell, 88 Tex. 351, 31 S. W. 623 (capacity to make a will, excluded; distinguishing preceding rulings in which the testimony had been treated as involving the question of sanity only, not the question of the legal capacity of the person);
Vermont: 1881, Melendy v. Spaulding, 54 Vt. 517 ("capacity to dispose," allowed, subject to the trial Court's discretion); 1890, Blood's Estate, 62 Vt. 359, 19 Atl. 770.

[2] Accord: 1904, State v. McGruder, 125 Ia. 741, 101 N. W. 646; 1911, Banks v. Com., 145 Ky. 800, 141 S. W. 380 (whether the accused could know right from wrong, allowed); 1893, Shults v. State, 37 Nebr. 481, 497, 55 N. W. 1080 (whether he knew the difference between right and wrong, excluded); 1895, Pflueger v. State, 46 Nebr. 493, 64 N. W. 1094 (allowed; overruling Shults v. State on this point); 1910, State v. Roselair, 57 Or. 8, 109 Pac. 865 (whether he knew right from wrong, allowed); 1919, State v. Kelsie, 93 Vt. 450, 108 Atl. 391 (murder; a medical expert allowed to testify that the accused, aged 34, had only the mentality of an 8-year-old, and would be classed as an imbecile).

Contra: 1904, State v. Brown, 181 Mo. 192, 79 S. W. 1111; 1906, Reed v. State, 75 Nebr. 509, 106 N. W. 649 (Shults v. State, supra, followed; ignoring Pflueger v. State, supra); 1901, State v. Palmer, 161 Mo. 152, 61 S. W. 651 (whether an accused could distinguish between right and wrong, not allowed).

A similar question arises for a child's capacity: 1906, Neville v. State, 148 Ala. 681, 41 So. 1011 (larceny by a boy of ten; testimony that "he was a bright boy mentally," etc., admitted).

For expert testimony to mental defects of a witness, see ante, § 934.

§ 1959. [1] Ala. 1845, Lawson v. Orear, 7 Ala. 786, semble (not allowed for insolvency, but allowed for pecuniary worth or for embarrassment by debts); 1846, Massey v. Walker, 10 Ala. 290 (same); 1848, Chenault v. Walker, 14 Ala. 154 (same); Ga. 1910, Cabaniss v. State, 8 Ga. App. 129, 68 S. E. 849 (allowed for insolvency, under Civil Code, § 5285); Ill. 1898, Swan v. Gilbert, 175 Ill. 204, 51 N. E. 604 (allowed); 1919, People v. Paisley, 288 Ill. 310, 123 N. E. 573 (receiving bank deposits when insolvent; expert accountant's opinion as to solvency, excluded); Ia. 1897, State v. Boomer, 103 Ia. 106, 72 N. W. 424 (allowed); 1912, Moore v. Fryman, 154 Ia. 534, 134 N. W. 534 (insolvency, allowed); Kan. 1894, State v. Myers, 54 Kan. 206, 38 Pac. 296 (excluded); Ky. 1835, Com. v. Thompson, 3 Dana 301 (that he "considered them good," allowed); Md. 1871, Hayes v. Wells, 34 Md. 518 (excluded); N. J. 1843, Brundred v. Paterson M. Co., 4 N. J. Eq. 294, 305 (admitted; though declaring a mere opinion insufficient); Pa. 1920, William Schuette & Co. v. Swank, 265 Pa. 576, 109 Atl. 531 (solvency; excluded); S. D. 1902, State v. Stevens, 16 S. D. 309, 92 N. W. 420 (whether a bank was "insolvent," not allowed, on a prosecution for receiving money when insolvent); Vt. 1846, Hard v. Brown, 18 Vt. 97 (allowed); 1855, Sherman v. Blodgett, 28 Vt. 149 (same); 1856, Richardson v. Hitchcock, 28 Vt. 762 (same); 1860, Noyes v. Brown, 32 Vt. 431 (excluded in discretion of the Court, when all the facts have been shown).

Distinguish the question whether reputation is admissible under the Hearsay rule to prove solvency (ante, § 1623) or as a circumstance to prove another person's knowledge of solvency (ante, § 273), whether a witness to solvency is qualified as to opportunity for observation (ante, § 660), and whether the rule for documentary originals applies (ante, §§ 1244, 1250).

§ 1960. Miscellaneous Instances (Possession, Ownership, Necessity, Authority, etc.). In most of the remaining instances in which this application of the Opinion rule is concerned, the difficulty arises from the employment in statutory or common-law phraseology of terms having also an untechnical use. When the issue then arises on the application of the law to the facts, and it is desired to prove that the conditions or qualities named in the law do or do not exist, a direct question upon the point in issue is often forbidden by a strict application of the Opinion rule. Yet it seems unfortunate that a term existing in common use among laymen should be tabooed because the law also has been obliged to use it. Among Pacific Islanders, upon the death of a chieftain, certain words associated with his name were put under "taboo"; they passed out of the language, and could thenceforth be used by no other member of the community. Are we to exemplify in our law of Evidence this custom of the primitive Polynesians? If a witness, in the course of his testimony, comes to mention that A "possessed" or B "owned" or C was "agent," let him not be made dumb under the law, and be compelled by evasions and circumlocutions to attain the simple object of expressing his natural thought. If there is a real dispute as to the net effect of the facts, these may be brought out in detail on cross-examination.

The phrases of this class of chief occurrence are the following: whether a person was in possession;[1] whether a person was owner;[2] whether there § 1960. [1] With the following, compare the cases cited ante, § 1246: 1903, Wright v. State, 136 Ala. 139, 34 So. 233 (admitted; "possession is a collective fact"); 1906, Driver v. King, 145 Ala. 585, 40 So. 315 (in possession, allowed, but not "in open and notorious possession of land"); 1918, Paterson Lumber Co. v. Patrick, 202 Ala. 363, 80 So. 445 (admitted); 1910, Cabaniss v. State, 8 Ga. App. 129, 68 S. E. 849 (admitted); 1899, Knight v. Knight, 178 Ill. 553, 53 N. E. 306 (allowed); 1902, Chicago v. Peck, 196 Ill. 260, 63 N. E. 711 (whether possession was surrendered by a lessee, allowed); 1902, State v. Brundige, 118 Ia. 92, 91 N. W. 920 ("Who occupied the upstairs of that house?", allowed); 1898, Jacob Tome Inst. v. Davis, 87 Md. 591, 41 Atl. 166 (from whom possession was obtained, allowed); 1910, Jacobs v. Disharoon, 113 Md. 92, 77 Atl. 258 (not clear); 1863, Knapp v. Smith, 27 N. Y. 281 (allowed); 1877, Miller v. R. Co., 71 N. Y. 385 (who possessed land; allowed for "uninclosed, unoccupied woodland"); 1898, Arents v. R. Co., 156 N. Y. 1, 50 N. E. 422 (excluded); 1918, State v. Johnson, 176 N. C. 722, 97 S. E. 14 (murder, "did you take possession of the property?", allowed); 1898, Tetrault v. O'Connor, 8 N. D. 15, 76 N. W. 225 (fraud of creditors; that a person was "in possession," excluded); 1914, Fadden v. McKinney, 87 Vt. 316, 89 Atl. 351 (wife's possession and control, excluded).

[2] With the following, compare the cases cited ante, § 1246: Can. 1915, Tucker v. Jones, 25 D. L. R. 279, Sask. (proof of title to land in Iowa; testimony of an Iowa attorney, who had examined and checked the abstract of title, that T. was the owner of the land, held improper; "it was for the Court here to construe what the effect of those documents was"); U. S. Fed. 1919, Thompson v. U. S., 2d C. C. A., 256 Fed. 616 (larceny of sugar belonging to the U. S.; testimony by the custodian that the sugar was the property of the U. S., giving details as to the basis for that statement, held erroneous, though not reversible error; ruling unsound, in holding the statement inadmissible); Ala. 1892, Steiner v. Tranum, 98 Ala. 315, 318, 13 So. 365 (personalty; allowed); 1903, Hunnicutt v. Higinbotham, 138 Ala. 472, 35 So. 469 (money; allowed); 1905, Rosco v. Jefferson, 142 Ala. 705, 38 So. 246 (title to personalty under a levy; testimony to ownership, allowed); Ark. 1902, Benson v. Files, 70 Ark. 423, 68 S. W. 493 (that the witness was "owner" of land, excluded); Cal. 1909, Perkins v. Sunset Tel. & T. Co., 155 Cal. 712, 103 Pac. 190 (that a claim was the witness' property, allowed); Conn. 1922, Potts v. Buckley, — Conn. —, 115 Atl. 727 (personal services; "this business of making the butter, etc. . . . whose business was that?" "Mine," allowed); Ia. 1899, Murphy v. Olberding, 107 Ia. 547, 78 N. W. 205 (personalty; allowed); Kan.

was a sale, or passing of title;[3] whether a person had authority as agent;[4] whether there was a "necessity" for a road, for infant's supplies, or the like,[5] or a "public utility" for a ditch or highway.[6]

No more detailed classification of the miscellaneous instances seems useful or practicable.[7]

1903, Sparks v. Galena Nat'l Bank, 68 Kan. 148, 74 Pac. 619 (mining property, allowed); Miss. 1859, Dunlap v. Hearn, 37 Miss. 475 (excluded); N. Y. 1877, Wolf v. Williams, 69 N. Y. 621 (who owned a house; allowed); 1877, Miller v. R. Co., 71 N. Y. 385 (who owned land; excluded); 1902, Pichler v. Reese, 171 N. Y. 577, 64 N. E. 441 (claimant's testimony to ownership of personalty; admitted); Okl. 1913, Fort Smith & W. R. Co. v. Winston, 40 Okl. 173, 136 Pac. 1075 (personalty, allowed); S. D. 1905, Hawley v. Bond, 20 S. D. 215, 105 N. W. 464 ("Who was then the owner of that cow?" allowed); 1918, Knittle v. Ernst, 40 S. D. 594, 168 N. W. 754 ("Who was the owner of this cow?" "I was," allowed; Smith, J., diss.; the layman will always rightly wonder why the Law is so queer and un-human a concoction that a person cannot be allowed, without an expensive and solemn judicial dubitation, to say that he owns a cow; especially as this precise question had already been determined in the same court); Tex. 1888, Gilbert v. Odum, 69 Tex. 673, 7 S. W. 510 (land; excluded); 1913, Webb v. Reynolds, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 160 S. W. 152 (that a person was "owner" of a note, allowed); 1920, Magee v. Paul, 110 Tex. 470, 221 S. W. 254 (that a person "owned" a land-certificate, excluded, but not that he "sold" it; a notable triumph of quibbling).

[3] 1902, Ward v. Shirley, 131 Ala. 568, 32 So. 489 (that a sale was absolute and unconditional excluded); 1896, Bleckley v. White, 98 Ga. 594, 25 S. E. 592 (that "title passed from B. to R.," excluded); 1894, Burnap v. Sharpsteen, 149 Ill. 225, 235, 36 N. E. 1008 (that a deed was delivered, excluded); 1898, Evans v. Gerry, 174 Ill. 595, 51 N. E. 615 (title-examiners not admitted, in a bill for conveyance, to show title to be defective); 1896, Ward v. Dickson, 96 Ia. 708, 65 N. W. 998 (by an alleged vendor, whether he had sold the articles; excluded); 1905, Renshaw v. Dignan, 128 Ia. 722, 105 N. W. 209 (that no deed had been received or accepted, allowed on the facts); 1897, Wright v. Wright, 58 Kan. 525, 50 Pac. 444 (by one who merely heard testimony, as to the title to a certificate, excluded); 1915, Spaeth v. Kouns, 95 Kan. 320, 148 Pac. 651 (breach of contract to give a merchantable title; experts admitted to say whether the abstract offered showed a merchantable title free from incumbrances; a sane opinion); 1880, Nicolay v. Unger, 80 N. Y. 57 (the issue being whether bonds were pledged or were sold, a statement that they were sold was excluded).

For the application of the rule about producing the original document, see ante, § 1247.

[4] 1901, Farrell v. U. S., 49 C. C. A. 183, 110 Fed. 942 (whether the witness as Indian agent had authority over a certain Indian, excluded; but whether he exercised control in fact, admitted); 1909, Mobile, J. & K. C. R. Co. v. Hawkins, 163 Ala. 565, 51 So. 37 (whether an authority was withdrawn, allowed); 1916, Colby v. Atlanta Brewing & Ice Co., 196 Ala. 374, 72 So. 45 (excluded); 1884, Hoadley v. Hammond, 63 Ia. 603, 19 N. W. 794 (allowed); 1907, Fritz v. Chicago G. & E. Co., 136 Ia. 699, 114 N. W. 193 (whether a person was agent, (allowed); 1873, Short Mountain Coal Co. v. Hardy, 114 Mass. 197 (excluded); 1876, Providence Tool Co. v. Mfg. Co., 120 Mass. 37 (same); 1863, Knapp v. Smith, 27 N. Y. 281 (whether a person had acted as agent or for himself, allowed); 1907, People v. Mingey, 190 N. Y. 61, 82 N. E. 728 (whether the witness' firm authorized an indorsement of its name, allowed on the facts); 1847, Steamboat Albatross v. Wayne, 16 Oh. 513, 514 (whether "he considered himself authorized," excluded); 1911, Hutchings v. Cobble, 30 Okl. 158, 120 Pac. 1013 (excluded).

[5] 1899, Miller v. Mayer, 124 Ala. 434, 26 So. 892 (whether the sale of an intestate's property to pay debts was necessary, excluded); 1919, Polk Co. v. Owen, 187 Ia. 220, 174 N. W. 99 (pauper maintenance; whether the parent had so refused support as to make application to the county necessary, whether the dwelling-space was sufficient, etc., excluded); 1892, Detroit v. Brennan, 93 Mich. 338, 53 N. W. 525 (whether the opening of a street was necessary, excluded); 1895, Grand Rapids v. Bennett, 106 Mich. 528, 64 N. W. 585; 1852, Merritt v. Seaman, 6 N. Y. 175 (whether articles for an infant were necessaries, excluded); 1889, Burwell v. Sneed, 104 N. C. 120, 10 S. E. 152 (whether a road was necessary, excluded); 1909, Fowler v. Delaplain, 79 Oh. 279, 87 N. E. 260 (whether a building was "necessary," under a leasing clause, excluded).

[6] 1883, Losbbaugh v. Birdsell, 90 Ind. 466 (excluded); 1883, Yost v. Conroy, 92 Ind. 470 (same); 1896, Johnson v. Anderson, 143 Ind. 493, 42 N. E. 815 (same).

[7] Federal: 1899, National Cash-Register Co. v. Leland, 37 C. C. A. 372, 94 Fed. 502 (patent-infringement; whether certain machine-parts were "mechanical equivalents" allowed; whether a certain omission was a "fatal fault," not allowed); Alabama: 1873, Avary v. Searcy, 50 Ala. 55 (whether a fence was a "partition fence," allowed); 1906, Owen v. McDermott, 148 Ala. 669, 41 So. 730 (owing money; allowed); 1909, Mobile J. & K. R. Co. v. Hawkins, 163 Ala. 565, 51 So. 37 (whether a person had performed his duties under a contract, etc.; not decided); 1920, Wilson v. State, — Ala. —, 84 So. 783 (keeping a house of prostitution; whether the house was a house of prostitution, excluded); Arkansas: 1853, Lindauer v. Ins. Co., 13 Ark. 470 (whether a defendant was bound by contract, excluded); California: 1892, Kreuzberger v. Wingfield, 96 Cal. 251, 256, 31 Pac. 109 (whether work had been done according to the terms of a contract, allowed); 1900, Union Sheet M. W. v. Dodge, 129 Cal. 390, 62 Pac. 41 (whether a bond was a statutory one, excluded); 1898, People v. Reed — Cal. —, 52 Pac. 835 (whether a killing was done in self-defence, inadmissible); 1905, Sampson v. Hughes, 147 Cal. 62, 81 Pac. 292 ("Did you wilfully, negligently, etc., omit to watch the fire, etc?" excluded); Georgia: 1873 Mobley v. Breed, 48 Ga. 44, 47 (whether certain proceedings were according to law, excluded); 1895, Cunneen v. State, 95 Ga. 330, 22 S. E. 538 (on a charge of "carrying on" an illegal business, whether the accused did not carry it on, excluded); 1905, Allison v. Wall, 121 Ga. 822, 49 S. E. 831 (what would be a reasonable time for removing timber; not allowed); 1920, Rudulph v. Brown, 150 Ga. 147 103 S. E. 251 (living as man and wife; allowed); 1922, Payne v. Allen, — Ga. App. — 110 S. E. 345 (that a person was "dependent" for support, allowed); Illinois: 1873, Chicago & A. R. Co. v. R. Co., 67 Ill. 145 (whether there was duty to keep in repair, excluded); 1902, People v. Lehr, 196 Ill. 361, 63 N. E. 725 (whether certain conduct was "practising medicine" under a statute, excluded); 1902, Treat v. Merchants' Life Ass'n, 198 Ill. 431, 64 N. E. 992 (on an issue of suicide, expert testimony that the deceased's wound was self-inflicted was held inadmissible); 1904, Sokel v. People, 212 Ill. 238, 72 N. E. 382 (that the witness saw the defendant married by a rabbi, excluded, the validity of the marriage being in issue; why did not the Court also hold that it was matter of opinion whether the celebrant was a rabbi and the place was a synagogue?); 1905 National Fire Ins. Co. v. Hanberg, 215 Ill. 378, 74 N. E. 377 ("net receipts" of an insurance company, in a statute, not allowed to be interpreted by the opinion of insurance experts); 1915, People v. Krittenbrink, 269 Ill. 244, 109 N. E. 1005 (larceny of morphine from P. D. & Co. a corporation; witness' statement that P. D. & Co. "did business as a corporation," held incompetent); 1917, Interstate Finance Co. v. Commercial Jewelry Co., 280 Ill. 116, 117 N. E. 440 (whether notes, etc., were collectible, not allowed; unsound); 1919, Peobody Coal Co. v. Industrial Commission, 289 Ill. 449, 124 N. E. 566 (whether a disability impaired earning capacity to the extent of 25 per cent, not allowed); 1922, Central Illinois Public Service Co. v. Ind. Com., 302 Ill. 27, 134 N. E. 124 (workman's injury; the plaintiff not allowed to testify to the percentage of his loss of use of arm and leg); Indiana: 1883, Hilton v. Mason, 92 Ind. 168 (whether a railroad was finished, allowed); 1907, Chicago & E. R. Co. v. Lawrence, 169 Ind. 319, 82 N. E. 768 (whether a specific act was the duty of the switchman, not allowed on the facts). Iowa: 1901, Hicks v. Williams, 112 Ia. 691, 84 N. W. 935 (whether the witness had paid the amount due on a note, excluded); Kentucky: 1835, Gentry v. McMinnis, 3 Dana Ky. 383 (whether a person was free, not slave, allowed); 1915, Hume v. Grant, 165 Ky. 723, 178 S. W. 1028 (whether a person was a voter, not allowed); Louisiana: 1898, Studebaker B. M. Co. v. Endom, 50 La. An. 674, 23 So. 872 (whether a note was owed, allowable); Maine: 1898, Carter v. Clark, 92 Me. 225, 42 Atl. 398 (whether a fence was near the line of a certain estate, allowed); 1916, Gray v. Maine Central R. Co., 114 Me. 530, 96 Atl. 1067 (personal injury; whether employees were in the performance of their duty at the time, allowed); Maryland: 1898, Metropolitan Sav. Bank v. Manion, 87 Md. 68, 39 Atl. 90 (whether a number of windows in a stable would create a nuisance, excluded); Massachusetts: 1898, O'Donnell v. Pollock, 170 Mass. 441, 49 N. E. 745 ("who kept the dog" whose bite was sued for, excluded); 1898, McIsaac v. Lighting Co., 172 Mass. 89, 51 N. E. 524 (whether inspection was part of a lineman's work, excluded); 1900, Mulhall v. Fallon, 176 Mass. 266, 57 N. E. 386 (whether the mother of a deceased, in a statutory action for death, was "dependent" upon him, allowed); Michigan: 1912, Crane v. Ross, 168 Mich. 623, 135 N. W. 83 (whether an agreement was reached, the agreement being in writing, excluded); Mississippi: 1904, Majors v. State, — Miss. —, 35 So. 824 (whether a certain stick was a deadly weapon, excluded, the stick having been exhibited to the jury); Nebraska: 1897, Peck v. Tingley, 52 Nebr. 171, 73 N. W. 450 (to whom the consideration moved, excluded); Nevada: 1905, State v. Nevada C. R. Co., 28 Nev. 186, 81 Pac. 99 (expert accountant's statement of the "net earnings" of a railroad company as shown by their books, etc., excluded, partly on this principle and partly on that of § 1230, ante); New York: 1856, Sweet v. Tuttle, 14 N. Y. 471 (on whose behalf services were rendered, this being a main issue, allowed); Ohio: 1902, State v. Ehinger, 67 Oh. 51, 65 N. E. 148 (under a statute forbidding the sale of a substance in the form of butter and made as a substitute for and in imitation of butter, an expert was allowed to testify that a particular substance "looked like and was a substitute for or imitation of butter"); Oregon: 1915, Porges v. Jacobs, 75 Or. 488, 147 Pac. 396 (that a stable was a nuisance, held highly improper; the trial Court had made a valiant effort to cast off the rusty shackles of the

6. State of Mind (Intention, Feelings, Knowledge, Meaning, Understanding, and the like)

§ 1962. General Principle. The application of the Opinion rule to these topics is involved in special difficulty. The difficulty lies in the necessity of distinguishing a number of principles potentially applicable, with varying results, to the same evidence, and in the plausibility of certain erroneous applications. The clearest understanding will perhaps be reached by taking up first the cases in which the Opinion rule is genuinely concerned, and afterwards those in which some other doctrine is involved. Among the former, moreover, we may distinguish conveniently between those in which the testimony is (1) as to another person's state of mind in general, as inferred from his conduct alone and (2) those in which the special state of mind in question is the meaning or sense in which he used words.

Now the theory on which the Opinion rule is invoked (ante, § 1918) is that the conduct and other circumstances, from which the eye-witness drew the inference as to the person's state of mind, may be detailed to the jury so as to equip them equally well to draw the inference. For instance, the witness (as in one ruling) may not be allowed to state whether in his opinion the person heard what was said to him; the witness must, that is, detail where the persons were, their distance apart, the previous incidents of their meeting, their subsequent conduct, and anything else he can remember as bearing upon the matter; then the jury will be equally well fitted to draw the inference. Can anything be said in answer to this? One might argue that the witness could hardly be expected to recall on the stand every salient circumstance of the occasion; and that, so far as he could recall them, he would be unable to express or reproduce each subtle suggestion in its full significance; and that, so far as he did, there would thus be introduced by him new inferences, which must either call for a sacrifice of consistency or else must in turn be reanalyzed into a labyrinth of data which no human witness could cope with; and, finally, that this multifarious reproduction of data would in the end so confuse the jury that their own inference would be much less trustworthy than that of the witness. But after all, argument is of little service in such a matter. No reasoning can avail against the perverse and morbid attitude which will invoke the Opinion fetish to exclude such testimony.

Opinion rule; thus: Counsel: "We object to his conclusion;" Court: "We are here to get at the facts, and if you can get at them according to the Rules of Evidence, all right, but if not, and only by setting aside the Rules of Evidence, let us do that. I will overrule the objection"; then the witness further added copious details about the alleged nuisance; but the Supreme Court was shocked at the intrusion of so illegal a thing as the witness' opinion, and warned the trial Court, so that "the error may be evaded [!] hereafter"); Pennsylvania: 1845, Mertz v. Detweiler, 8 W. & S. 376 (physician's responsibility in case of a patient's disregard of advice, excluded); 1855, McCandless v. McWha, 25 Pac. 95 (contra to preceding case); 1895, Owens v. Lancaster, 193 Pa. 436, 44 Atl. 559 (whether a sewer was a nuisance, excluded); South Dakota: 1897, Erickson v. Sophy, 10 S. D. 71, 71 N. W. 758 (whether a thing was done according to contract, excluded); 1903, Henry v. Taylor, 16 S. D. 424, 93 N. W. 641 (whether a person was adopted, and whether two persons were married, inadmissible); 1916, State ex rel. Kiihl v. Chambers, 37 S. D. 555, 159 N. W. 113 (bastardy; to the complainant, "who is the father of that child?", allowed); Texas: 1919, Walker v. State, 85 Tex. Cr. 482, 214 S. W. 331 ("Were the questions asked of a dying declarant such as would lead him to make any particular answer?", held to call for a conclusion only; this is unpractical pedantry).

§ 1963. (1) Testimony to a State of Mind, in general (Intention, Motive, Purpose, Feelings, etc.).[1] There are found numerous rulings excluding, under the Opinion rule, statements by observers involving sundry inferences as to another person's state of mind,[2] and even as to his own state of mind.[3] In other § 1963. [1] Testimony to external appearance of an emotion, or the like, is dealt with post, § 1974.

[2] Cal. 1886, Hartman v. Rogers, 69 Cal. 646, 11 Pac. 581 (nature of intention not specified); Conn. 1896, Lovell v. Hammond Co., 66 Conn. 500, 34 Atl. 511 (whether another witness had any grounds for his assertion); Ga. 1892, Gardner v. State, 90 Ga. 310, 315, 17 S. E. 86 (by a bystander, as to the deceased's object in struggling for a pistol); Ill. 1876, Carpenter v. Calvert, 83 Ill. 70 (whether a devisee's influence was due to the testator's fear or affection); Ind. 1882, Dyer v. Dyer, 87 Ind. 19 (whether another person heard what was said); Ia. 1875, State v. Maxwell, 42 Ia. 209 (by an inmate of a house entered by defendant, that he did not intend to steal); 1883, Sweet v. Wright, 62 Ia. 217, 17 N. W. 468 (good faith of a sale); 1917, Roddy v. Gazette Co., 179 Ia. 50, 161 N. W. 94 (libel; the plaintiff's belief that others believed the statement, excluded); Ky. 1884, Crittenden v. Com., 82 Ky. 168 (whether defendant was impatient; whether he was looking for the deceased, was "mad," and would hurt him); Md. 1899, Tucker v. State, 89 Md. 471, 43 Atl. 778 (as to the impression produced on R.'s mind by J.'s attack on R., defendant excusing the killing of J. as done in defence of R.; excluded); Minn. 1875, Hathaway v. Brown, 22 Minn. 214 (whether the witness-vendee knew that M. the vendor had a purpose to defraud creditors; not decided); Mich. 1893, Cole v. R. Co., 95 Mich. 77, 80, 54 N. W. 638 (whether a person was shamming); N. Y. 1881, Abbott v. People, 86 N. Y. 461, 471 (murder; a witness' opinion as to how he understood the deceased to mean in reaching for a wrench just before the fatal blow); 1896, People v. McLaughlin, 150 N. Y. 365, 44 N. E. 1017 (bribery; one who has paid money to B. for a police-captain cannot say that he paid it to B. for the defendant, because it involves the "conclusions of the witness, his purpose, or the object of another person"; a ruling sufficiently ridiculous); 1911, Bogart v. New York, 200 N. Y. 379, 93 N. E. 937 (death of B. at an automobile race; question to his wife, whether she "knew when he went out that he was going to see the automobile races," held improper, because it did not call for B.'s "acts or statements" but only the witness' "conjecture or conclusion"; no authority cited; this is a scholastic ruling; the husband does not have to say formally and solemnly, "Mary, I am going to the races," in order to express a clear intention; does not a learned judge's wife have a clear knowledge whether he expects to have two or four lumps of sugar put into his coffee without his telling her in a fixed formula every morning of his life? It is time that human nature off the Bench was recognized on the Bench; such rulings are to the laity absurd); N. Car. 1885, State v. Vines, 93 N. C. 497 (whether the shooting of a pistol was accidental); Pa. 1876, Sinnott v. Mullin, 82 Pa. 337, 342 (purpose in building a wall); Utah: 1893, Hamer v. Bank, 9 Utah 215, 33 Pac. 941 (what motive P.'s words and conduct showed); 1901, Watson v. Mining Co., 24 Utah 222, 66 Pac. 1067 (expert opinion as to defendant's intention to running a mine-incline); Vt. 1915, McCarthy's Adm'r v. Northfield, 89 Vt. 99, 94 Atl. 298 (employee's death at a switchboard; whether the deceased knew of the high voltage current not allowed; the opinion ignores the contrary view, and the decision is unsound in any view); Wash. 1897, Martin v. S. T. & T. Co., 18 Wash. 260, 51 Pac. 376 (action for damages by loss of suit through defendant's failure to transmit a message to a material witness; question to one present at the trial, whether the testimony of the absent witness would have changed the verdict, excluded); W. Va. 1917, State v. Dushman, 79 W. Va. 747, 91 S. E. 809 (receiving stolen brass; issue whether defendant knew the brass was stolen; "he couldn't help from knowing it, judge, because it was branded there," held fatal error; the mumbling futility of the Opinion rule is here illustrated; to reverse a verdict on account of such a piece of testimony in the whole mass is just as rational, could Courts only stop to reflect, as to us seem the pitiful fetish-formulas of an African tribe).

[3] 1885, Brant v. Gallup, 111 Ill. 487, 492 (opponent's explanation of his motives in writing certain letters introduced as admissions excluded); 1890, Flower v. Brumbach, 131 Ill. 646, 652, 23 N. E. 335 (fraudulent representations; defendant's testimony as to his intent not to mislead therein, excluded); 1912, Robinson v. Western Union T. Co., 169 Mich. 503, 135 N. W. 292 (sender's intent to act, on an issue whether a telegram had been properly transmitted, admitted).

jurisdictions, the testimony has been expressly sanctioned.[4] In particular, a surveyor may state whether certain monuments or marks were intended as boundaries;[5] and a witness may state whether he has any bias or ill-feeling.[6]

How baseless are the exclusionary rulings in the orthodox practice of the common law may be seen in the following extracts from the annals of two generations of English trials:[7]

1793, Frost's Trial, 22 How. St. Tr. 484; the witness had testified to the defendant's utterance of seditious words at a coffee-house; "I said he ought to be turned out of the coffee-room; upon which he walked up the room and placed his back to the fire, and wished, I believe, rather to retract, if he could have retracted, what he had said." Cross-examined: "What do you mean by saying, he wished to retract?" "I rather thought he was sorry for what he had said; that is what I mean by it."

1799, Earl of Thanet's Trial, 27 How. St. Tr. 927; charge that the defendant obstructed the officers and aided O'Connor, a prisoner, to escape during his trial; Richard Brinsley Sheridan on the stand for the defence. Mr. Law (afterwards L. C. J. Ellenborough) cross-examining for the prosecution: "My question is whether, from what you saw of [4] Cal. 1872, People v. Sanford, 43 Cal. 32 (whether a dying man's mind was clear or not); 1887, People v. Ching Hing Chang, 74 Cal. 394, 16 Pac. 201 (by a person robbed, as to defendant's intention to rob him); Colo. 1895, Taylor v. People, 21 Colo. 426, 42 Pac. 653 (the accused, testifying that he thought the deceased was going to shoot); Ga. 1851, Berry v. State, 10 Ga. 514, 529 (that another person apparently knew of a certain fact); 1906, Fitzgerald v. Benner, 219 Ill. 485, 76 N. E. 709 (delay in performing a contract; "He kept putting me off," allowed, on the facts); Ia. 1859, Pelamourges v. Clark, 9 Ia. 16 (feelings of another person toward the speaker); 1896, Kuen v. Upmier, 98 Ia. 393, 67 N. W. 374 (whether another person understood English); 1907, State v. Bennett, 137 Ia. 427, 110 N. W. 150 (seduction; by the prosecutrix, that she yielded because of the defendant's promises, allowed); 1908, Kinner v. Boyd, 139 Ia. 14, 116 N. W. 1044 ("terribly excited," allowed, for a plaintiff speaking of himself); Kan. 1886, State v. Baldwin, 36 Kan. 10, 12 Pac. 318 (in good spirits; in fear; nervous; apathetic, etc.); Me. 1858, Tobin v. Shaw, 45 Me. 348 (depression, after breach of promise of marriage); Md. 1903, Sellman v. Wheeler, 95 Md. 751, 54 Atl. 512 (that an injury "made me nervous"); Mass. 1905, McCrohan v. Davison, 187 Mass. 466, 73 N. E. 553 (injury by a wagon while crossing a street; the plaintiff's testimony "I thought I would have plenty of time to pass," admitted); Mont. 1920, Beadle v. Harrison, 58 Mont. 606, 194 Pac. 134 (good faith of defendant sued for malicious prosecution); 1922, Walker v. Russell, — Mass. —, 134 N. E. 388 (broker's commission; customer's testimony that he was willing to buy; admitted); N. Y. 1825, M'Kee v. Nelson, 4 Cow. 355 (that another person was sincerely attached); Okl. 1908, Price v. State, 1 Okl. Cr. 358, 98 Pac. 447 (intention of an assailant); Or. 1915, Macchi v. Portland R. L & P. Co., 76 Or. 215, 148 Pac. 72 (by an injured plaintiff, "I thought I had time enough to get out of the way," allowed); S. D. 1912, State v. Holter, 30 S. D. 353, 138 N. W. 953 (whether the woman in seduction, would have consented without a marriage-promise); Tenn. 1916, Pennington v. State, 136 Tenn. 533, 190 S. W. 546 (that the deceased "realized he was going to die," allowed); Tex. 1888, Schmick v. Noel, 72 Tex. 3, 8 S. W. 83 (good faith of a sale, the seller being the witness); 1915, Latham v. State, 75 Tex. Cr. 575, 172 S. W. 797 (to a bystander, as to deceased's conduct, "what did you think he was doing with his right hand?", i. e. drawing a pistol, allowed; one judge diss.; prior cases collected).

[5] 1826, Davis v. Mason, 4 Pick. Mass. 157; 1877, Knox v. Clark, 123 Mass. 217; 1858 Stevens v. West, 6 Jones L. N. C. 53; 1859 Clegg v. Fields, 7 Jones L. N. C. 39. Distinguish the rule about construction of documents (ante, § 1956).

[6] 1879, Butler v. State, 34 Ark. 484 (ignoring the contrary obiter dictum in Cornelius v. State, 1852, 12 Ark. 801); 1901, Blanchard v. Blanchard, 191 Ill. 450, 61 N. E. 481; 1859, State v. Adams, 14 La. An. 630 ("Are you not anxious that the defendant should be convicted?"; admitted); 1881, State v. Willingham, 33 La. An. 537 (where the objection was a different and unconnected one); 1881, State v. Gregory, 33 La. An. 743; 1884, State v. Kane, 36 La. An. 154 (like State v. Adams, with special features); 1885, State v. Melton, 37 La. An. 77, 78; 1880, State v. Miller, 71 Mo. 591.

For a question "whether A. is telling the truth, if he says so-and-so," see ante, § 787.

[7] The Answer of the Judges (quoted ante, § 661), given in 1791, is explicit.

the conduct of Lord Thanet and Mr. Fergusson, they did not mean to favour the escape of O'Connor?" "I will say that I saw nothing that could be auxiliary to that escape." "I ask you again whether you believe [as above]?" "I have no doubt that they wished he might escape; but from anything I saw them do, I have no right to conclude that they did." "I will have an answer. I ask you again [as above]?" "If the learned gentleman thinks he can entrap me, he will find himself mistaken." Mr. Erskine, for the defence: "It is hardly a legal question." KENYON, L. C. J.: "I think it is not an illegal question."

1820, R. v. Hunt, 1 State Tr. N. S. 171, 370, 377; seditious utterances. Witness: "My impression was [from the words and conduct] that you [the defendant] merely wished the people to stand, and to prevent danger from their running away." Mr. Scarlett, for the prosecution, objected to any questions respecting the witness' impressions of what was said. BAYLEY, J., "said the witness had a right to give his impressions of what he had seen and heard"; . . . "From what you observed and knew, had you reason to think that their spirits were somewhat exasperated?" "Yes; I think many of the working class were very much discontented." [8]

§ 1964. Same: Rule of Testimonial Knowledge (of Another's Intention), distinguished. It has sometimes been argued that one person's testimony to another's intention (or other state of mind) is always and radically inadmissible because one person cannot possibly know what another's state of mind is. This argument invokes a rule of Testimonial Qualifications, requiring Knowledge (ante, § 661), and has sometimes received judicial sanction.[1]

§ 1965. Same: Rule of Testimonial Interest (One's Own Intention), distinguished. Testimony to one's own intention, or other state of mind, has often been attacked on the ground of what is really a disqualification by Interest (ante, § 581); i. e. the argument is that, since a person's own intention can be known only to himself, his statement of what it is or was cannot be safeguarded by the possibility of exposing its falsity, through the aid either of conflicting circumstances or of opposing eye-witnesses; and that thus the influence of self-interest in falsifying is too dangerous, and that such testimony should consequently be forbidden. This argument has been generally repudiated.[1]

§ 1966. Same: Alabama Doctrines. The foregoing supposed principles, i. e. disqualification by interest to speak of one's own intention, disqualification by lack of knowledge to speak of another's intention, and the Opinion rule proper (ante, §§ 1963–1965), have made hopeless confusion in the rulings of the Court of Alabama. By accepting in full the two former undesirable

[8] Other instances are as follows: 1794, Horne Tooke's Trial, 25 How. St. Tr. 420 ("From what you knew of the professed objects of this Convention, . . . have you any reason to believe anything criminal was intended?" this question being put to many witnesses); 1800, Tandy's Trial, 25 How. St. Tr. 1215 (on the issue whether a person, who could have avoided attainder by surrender before a certain date, was able and intended at a certain time to surrender, the question to a competent person was allowed: "Can you form any belief of the object or intention with which he sought at any time to be set at liberty?"); 1817, Watson's Trial, 32 How. St. Tr. 67 (that a person must have heard a thing which was read, allowed); 1820, Queen Caroline's Trial, Linn's ed., I, 150 (whether the witness knew what a certain person's motions, said to be lewd, were intended to represent, allowed).

§ 1964. [1] The cases on both sides are collected ante, § 661. Whether a Court is ruling upon that ground or the present one is sometimes difficult to learn.

§ 1965. [1] The cases are collected ante, § 581 principles, by confusing them and the Opinion rule, and by occasionally ignoring some precedents and misusing others, the law there has for long been in such a state that not only is it difficult to say what the rule is, not only is heterodoxy disseminated by the citation of such precedents in other Courts, but it is hard to see, in view of the apparently comprehensive rules of exclusion, how any intelligent legal inquiry at all can there be conducted upon these points.[1]

§ 1966. [1] The various rulings may be classed roughly into four series:

(1) In Barnett v. Stanton, 2 Ala. 187 (1841), it was said that a mere assertion of value by a seller is not a warranty, being "mere matter of opinion, not knowledge"; this case and its successors, Williams v. Cannon, 9 Ala. 350 (1846), and Bradford v. Bush, 10 Ala. 390 (1846), which had required the jury to determine the question whether the language was a mere assertion or something more, were then taken, in Sledge v. Scott, 56 Ala. 207 (1876), as involving this consequence, that on such a matter of opinion no witness, even the purchaser, could speak; this was, of course, a mere juggle on the word "opinion," and the absurd and unheard-of consequence was reached that a buyer could not testify that "he relied on the seller's representations as to soundness, and would not have made the purchase but for the representations"; on the same theory similar evidence was rejected in Baker v. Trotter, 73 Ala. 281 (1892).

(2) At the same time a parallel line of decisions, dealing with cases of illegal transfers and other acts, took the course of excluding evidence by one person, however familiar with the transaction, of the intention of any other person, on the ground that "a witness can only depose to such facts as are within his own knowledge," and the intention of another person, "however strongly he might be justified in believing to be as stated, he could not know," i. e. the requirement of a Knowledge-Qualification is wanting: 1843, Planters', etc., Bank v. Borland, 5 Ala. 546 (testimony of an alleged fraudulent grantor as to the grantee's fraudulent intention); 1845, Peake v. Stout, 8 Ala. 647 (same); 1846, Whetstone v. Bank, 9 Ala. 886 (testimony of one party to an alleged illegal contract as to the other's intention); 1860, Clement v. Cureton, 36 Ala. 121, 124 (the motive of another person in selling a slave to a third person); 1877, Sternan v. Marx, 58 Ala. 609 (that another person would not have paid for goods taken); 1886, Adams v. Thornton, 82 Ala. 263, 3 So. 20 (the reason why an assignment was made); 1895, Bailey v. State, 107 Ala. 151, 18 So. 234 (by A, that the defendant knew of a fact); 1896, Gunter v. State, 111 Ala. 23, 20 So. 652 (by an eyewitness, whether a shooting was accidental); 1904, Bell v. State, 140 Ala. 57, 37 So. 281 (P.'s opinion of defendant's state of mind, excluded); 1906, Delaney v. State, 148 Ala. 586, 42 So. 815 (by a witness, that the deceased declarant "knew he was going to die," excluded); 1906, Richardson v. State, 145 Ala. 46, 41 So. 82 (tracing a manslayer by hounds; on re-direct examination, "Why did the dogs leave the trail?" was not allowed, on the present ground; this is an edifying example of the dogged consistency with which this rule of superfine wisdom is here applied; presumably the dogs should have been X-rayed to ascertain their motives; inasmuch as the dogs here were named respectively "Rock" and "Rye," it might well have been inferred that they left the trail on a still hunt); 1910, Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Perkins, 165 Ala. 471, 51 So. 870 (whether a third person knew the suit was pending, excluded); 1911, Councill v. Mayhew, 172 Ala. 295, 55 So. 314 (whether a supposed insane person knew what he was doing when he signed checks, allowed on cross-examination; prior cases not cited); 1919, Spurlock v. State, 17 Ala. App. 109, 82 So. 557 ("He appeared to know about the silver," excluded); 1921, Cooper v. State, 206 Ala. 294, 89 So. 494 (murder; that the wife "turned to help her sister," allowed); Contra: 1873, Ray v. State, 50 Ala. 107 (where the defendant admitted having the stolen article, and the witness was allowed to answer whether he "supposed" the defendant was jesting when he made the admission).

(3) It will be observed that in par. (1) the cases deal with the statement of a witness, usually a party to a warranty-contract, as to his own reliance or similar mental attitude, while in par. (2) they deal with one person's statement about another person's mental attitude in general; there come next a line of cases to which the decisions in par. (2) are applied as precedents to the class of situations of par. (1) (representations, warranties, etc.), while a reason is given which differs totally from that in either of the above groups; i. e. there is laid down a general principle that no person may testify to his own mental attitude (motive, design, emotion), on the ground that "secret, uncommunicated motives of their own conduct" are "insusceptible of contradiction"; this is really on principle a disqualification on account of Interest; and indeed most of the decisions confine the rule to the parties to a case; that this principle was a new one appears from the fact that in Peake v. Stout, 1845, supra, par. (2), the witness' statement of his own intention was admitted; the subsequent rulings are: 1875, Oxford Co. v. Spradley, 51 Ala. 176 (a note given for alleged illegal purposes; the defendant's testimony as to his intention or purpose was ruled out in the following language which is so curious that it deserves recording: "It would embarrass the jury to do so [find as to the intention], if he simply told them what was his intention"); 1878, Herring v. Skaggs, 62 Ala. 187 (whether the buyer would have taken a safe, had he known the truth); 1881, Wheless v. Rhodes, 70 Ala. 420 (to which claim the witness intended to apply a payment); 1882, Burns v. Campbell, 71 Ala. 291 (whether a mortgagee approved a seizure); Alexander v. Alexander, 71 Ala. 299 (whether the grantor intended to deliver a deed); Burke v. State, 71 Ala. 382 ("a prisoner cannot state his own uncommunicated belief, motive, or intention"; here an assault case); Whizenant v. State, 71 Ala. 384 (same principle); 1883, Wilson v. State, 73 Ala. 527, 532 (whether a complainant in seduction yielded in reliance upon a promise of marriage); 1884, McCormick v. Joseph, 77 Ala. 240 (testimony by a seller that he would not have sold had he known of the insolvency of the buyer); 1885, Alabama F. Co. v. Reynolds, 79 Ala. 506 (warranty-representations; Sledge v. Scott, Baker v. Trotter, McCormick v. Joseph, followed); 1888, Sharpe v. Hall, 86 Ala. 115, 5 So. 497 (the intention of a draughtsman as to making the document a will or a deed); 1893, Hinds v. Keith, 13 U. S. App. 222, 226, 6 C. C. A. 231, 57 Fed. 10 (creditor's good faith in purchasing from debtor); 1895, Dean v. State, 105 Ala. 21, 17 So. 28; Ellis v. State, 105 Ala. 72, 17 So. 119; Dent v. State, 105 Ala. 14, 17 So. 94; 1898, Manchester F. A. Co. v. Feibelman, 118 Ala. 308, 23 So. 759 (by one giving consent for a transfer, as to who he thought the assignee was); 1901, Fitzpatrick v. Brigman, 130 Ala. 450, 30 So. 500 (grantor's testimony to his intent in delivering a deed); 1903, Holmes v. State, 136 Ala. 80, 34 So. 180 (by a defendant, what he was going to do with a pistol); 1904, Gregory v. State, 140 Ala. 16, 37 So. 259 (like Holmes v. State); 1905, Barnewell v. Stephens, 142 Ala. 609, 38 So. 662 (excluding a witness' testimony to his "wish"); 1905, Sprouse v. Story, 144 Ala. 542, 42 So. 23 (forcible entry; to the defendant, "How came you to go into the house on the premises in dispute?" excluded; this is a farcical game); 1906, Smith v. State 145 Ala. 17, 40 So. 957 (homicide; to the defendant, by his counsel: "For what purpose did you have the pistol, etc.?" excluded; no authority cited); 1908, Patterson v. State, 156 Ala. 62, 47 So. 52 (like Holmes v. State); 1913, 'ex parte' Woodward, 181 Ala. 97, 61 So. 295 (rule considered, in connection with the statute for 'prima facie' evidence of intent to sell liquor); 1914, Brooks v. State, 185 Ala. 1, 64 So. 295 (assault with intent to rape; prosecutrix' motive in delaying to prosecute, not admissible); 1915, Moton v. State, 13 Ala. App. 43, 69 So. 235 (to a defendant witness, "Why did you leave home?"); 1916, Patton v. State, 197 Ala. 180, 72 So. 401 (murder; defendant's reason for taking a path, etc., excluded); 1921, Nickerson v. State, 205 Ala. 684, 88 So. 905 (murder; defendant testified that he went to the place of the homicide to do business with a third person V.; the question, "What was it [the business]?" held improper; such muzzling is too absurd for any rational tribunal to sanction); 1921, Lakey v. State, 206 Ala. 180, 89 So. 605 (a murder; to the sheriff, "your feeling isn't such as would cause you to bias your testimony"). In some of the above excluding cases, e. g. Sharpe v. Hall (par. 3), the testimony was of course improper under the Parol Evidence rule, according to which the whole question of intention is irrelevant, without regard to mode or proof; but the above doctrine expressly treats it as relevant and merely excludes a particular mode of proof.

(4) In later years, the practical disadvantages of these exclusions have apparently led to some sort of a conceded exception for testimony to one's own state of mind, resting on no particular principle and not precisely defined: 1894, Johnson v. State, 102 Ala. 1, 16 So. 99 (explanation of a witness' assertion of ignorance of a matter, "I did not want to talk about it," admitted); Anderson v. State, 104 Ala. 83, 16 So. 108 (similar); 1899, Linehan v. State, 120 Ala. 293, 25 So. 6 (manslaughter; defendant may be cross-examined as to his purpose and motive); 1899, Williams v. State, 123 Ala. 39, 26 So. 521 (admissible on rebuttal to explain a witness' self-contradiction or an accused's relevant act); 1904, Dimmick P. Co. v. Wood, 139 Ala. 282, 35 So. 885 (loss of service of the plaintiff's son, hired without the plaintiff's consent by the defendant; "state whether you consented," to the plaintiff, held allowable); 1904, Dorlan v. Westervitch, 140 Ala. 283, 37 So. 382 (a claimant resting on adverse possession; "whether you have been claiming to own," allowed); 1905, Carwile v. State, 148 Ala. 576, 39 So. 220 (an impeached witness may explain why he made certain statements); 1906, Reeder v. Huffman, 148 Ala. 472, 41 So. 177 (constable's failure to execute a writ; to a witness, "Would you have told the constable, etc., if he had inquired?" excluded; no authority cited); 1906, Lawrence v. Doe, 144 Ala. 524, 41 So. 612 (adverse possession by defendant; to the defendant, "Why did you not pay the taxes?" excluded; this rule is certainly a successful device for suppressing the truth); 1906, Western Union T. Co. v. Long, 148 Ala. 202, 41 So. 965 ("Why did you not give the telegram to your brother?" excluded); 1908, Patterson v. State, 156 Ala. 62, 47 So. 52 (like Linehan v. State); 1920, Kinsey v. State, 204 Ala. 180, 85 So. 519 (to an accused, objecting to a confession as not voluntary, "Were you afraid of S?", held admissible).

§ 1967. Same: Rules of Substantive Law, distinguished (Dedication, Fraudulent Transfer, Will, Ballot, Crime, and the like). The substantive law may declare the intent of a person to be immaterial; in that case, testimony to his intent, from himself or from any one else, will be excluded, but not by virtue of the Opinion rule or of any other rule of evidence. For example, in considering whether land has become a highway by dedication of the owner, his intention to dedicate may be proper to regard; while, on the other hand, if his outward conduct has amounted to a dedication, a secret intention to the contrary may not be allowed to affect the result.[1]

The fraudulent intent of an insolvent debtor transferring his property is usually material, under the law of the subject; but the fraudulent intent of the assignee is usually not material, because the transfer will under the usual statute be set aside if only the assignee had notice of the insolvency, and whether or not he intended to defraud creditors.[2] Whether it is an essential element of a crime that a guilty intent or some other specific intent should exist, or whether the doing of a given act is alone sufficient, depends on the law of crimes; for in many statutory offences no specific intent is essential.[3] There are many other situations in which under the substantive law a state of mind may or may not be a part of the issue, — the mental state of a testator with reference to insanity or undue influence; in an action for deceit, the plaintiff's reliance upon the defendant's representations; in an action for a broker's commission, the purchaser's persuasion by the plaintiff's efforts as broker.[4] Whether or not the motive, reason, or other state of mind, may be proved, is in all these not a question of Evidence-law (ante, § 2).

§ 1967. [1] 1884, Indianapolis v. Kingsbury, 101 Ind. 213 (secret intention not to dedicate a way is immaterial, where the conduct amounts to a dedication).

So too for an act of adverse possession: 1905, Murphy v. Com., 187 Mass. 361, 73 N. E. 524 (a claimant going upon the land claimed; "the secret and undisclosed intention of the witness was immaterial").

Compare here the 'res gestæ' rules (ante, § 1778).

[2] 1871–72, Hathaway v. Brown, 18 Minn. 423 (fraudulent transfer; the assignee's notice, but not his intention, being held alone material, the question was held irrelevant).

[3] 1910, Magon v. U. S., 9th C. C. A., 248 Fed. 201 (placing in the mails matter tending to incite to murder; questions as to defendant's intent, excluded, the intent being immaterial); 1879, Halsted v. State, 41 N. J. L. 553; 1907, State v. Simmons, 143 N. C. 613, 56 S. E. 701 (carrying a concealed weapon).

[4] Eng. 1874, Mansell v. Clements, L. R. 9 C. P. 139 (the question being whether an agent had been the cause of a sale and thus earned his commission, the inquiry put to the purchaser was held proper: "Would you, if you had not gone to the plaintiff's office and got the card, have purchased the house?"); U. S. 1918, Flowers v. Bush & Witherspoon Co., 5th C. C. A., 254 Fed. 519 (contract for sale of cotton for future delivery; question as to individual intent of one party only, excluded); 1921, Minneapolis S. & M. Co. v. Yeggy, 69 Colo. 313, 194 Pac. 362 (agent's commission; whether the buyer was influenced by plaintiff to decide to buy, allowed); 1920, Fisher v. Skidmore Land Co., 189 Ia. 833, 179 N. W. 152 (broker's commission on land-sale; purchaser's testimony that he was "ready, able, and willing to buy," admitted); 1920, Sapulpa R. Co. v. Cedar Rapids Oil Co., 190 Ia. 892, 179 N. W. 168 (breach of contract; defendant's testimony to his intent in waiving rights when sending a check, excluded, with much futile learning); 1920, Boyle v. Rider, 136 Md. 286, 110 Atl. 524 (liability of trustee on a contract; promisee's expression of his intention to hold trustee personally, not admitted; his undisclosed intention being immaterial); 1906, Anderson v. Metrop. Stock Exchange, 191 Mass. 117 77 N. E. 706 (statutory recovery for stock gambling; the defendant's manager's private intent, held immaterial); 1911, Aldrich v. Island E. T. & T. Co., 62 Wash. 173, 113 Pac. 264 (malicious prosecution; magistrate's reasons for discharging the plaintiff, excluded).

The Parol Evidence rule (post, § 2400), which is in truth a doctrine of substantive law and involves the constitution of legal acts, sometimes raises questions of this sort. Whether a testator intended to place a certain clause in his will (post, § 2471), whether a voter intended to vote for the person whose name is on his ballot (post, § 2421), and the like, depends upon whether the actor's intention is to be allowed in substantive law to control the legal effect of his act. If it is, then testimony to that intent is receivable; if not, then inadmissible; but the exclusion has nothing to do with the Opinion rule or any other rule of evidence.

§ 1968. Same: Declarations of Intent, distinguished (as involving a Verbal Act or a Hearsay Exception). Supposing one's intent or other state of mind to be material under the substantive law, the question arises whether the person's extrajudicial declarations are receivable under an Exception to the Hearsay Rule (Statements of a Mental Condition), already dealt with (ante, § 1714). So, also, such declarations of intent may sometimes be receivable, apart from any exception to the Hearsay rule, so far as they are offered not as assertions, but as conduct qualifying or explaining other equivocal conduct which has to be interpreted; such utterances are receivable as Verbal Acts (ante, §§ 1772–1786).[1]

§ 1969. (2) Testimony to the Meaning of a Conversation or Other Utterance ("Impression" or "Understanding" conveyed by Language). The Opinion rule is sometimes argued to exclude a witness' statement as to the effect of a conversation or the meaning intended to be conveyed, because that meaning or impression or effect is merely an inference from the observed data of the occasion, i. e. the words used, and these he should reproduce to the jury without his inferences.[1]

§ 1968. [1] The following case will illustrate the frequent superficial resemblance between such a case and some of the preceding ones, as regards the mere form of the question or answer: 1895, Swerdferger v. Hopkins, 67 Vt. 136, 31 Atl. 153 (a former possessor said that he "understood" his line to run in a certain place; here his belief was treated as amounting to a claim).

§ 1969. [1] Excluded: Ala. 1899, Fields v. Copeland, 121 Ala. 644, 26 So. 491 (whether the parties disputed or agreed in a conversation); 1899, Baker v. State, 122 Ala. 1, 26 So. 194 (that a person had "made arrangements" for his crop); Ark. 1910, Bercher v. Gunter, 95 Ark. 155, 128 S. W. 1036 (understanding as to the effect of a sub-contract, excluded); Cal. 1894, Whitmore v. Ainsworth, — Cal. —, 38 Pac. 196 (that A had a paper which he wanted the witness to sign); D. C. 1892, U. S. v. Cross, 20 D. C. 376 (whether defendant's threats "amounted to anything," i. e. were seriously meant); Ga. 1873, Peterson v. State, 47 Ga. 524, 528 (the impression, made by the defendant's confession, that deceased was attacking him); Ill. 1879, Hewitt v. Clark, 91 Ill. 608 (effect of a conversation); 1911, Harrison v. Thackaberry, 248 Ill. 512, 94 N. E. 172 (whether a letter from a creditor to a debtor was a consent to an extension of time on the note: the creditor not allowed to testify to his intent in writing it); Ind. 1859, Williams v. Dewitt, 12 Ind. 309, 311 (one who had given the facts as to an arbitration, not allowed to state his understanding whether the parties made a settlement); 1901, Diehl v. State, 157 Ind. 549, 62 N. E. 51 (witness' "understanding" as to defendant's representations of his relation to a woman, excluded); Ia. 1892, State v. Brown, 86 Ia. 121, 124, 53 N. W. 92 (the witness' understanding of what A said); 1903, Plano Mfg. Co. v. Kautenberger, 121 Ia. 213, 96 N. W. 743 (that defendant "fully understood" the terms of a settlement); Kan. 1876, Shepard v. Pratt, 16 Kan. 211 (effect of a conversation); 1872, Atchison v. King, 9 Kan. 556 (same); 1873, Da Lee v. Blackburn, 11 Kan. 202 (same); Me. 1843, Whitman v. Freese, 23 Me. 187, semble ("what place he supposed the defendant meant" by words used in forming a contract alleged to be illegal); Md. 1819, Burt v.

The answer to this argument is that already set forth (ante, § 1962). It ought not to be necessary to point out that what is unsaid in words may yet be conveyed with equal clearness and positiveness. "You cram these words into mine ears, against the stomach of my sense." The Opinion rule cannot avail to eliminate irony and innuendo from human language. Common experience forbids us to assume that at every time and from every person mere words are a complete index of the meaning which the hearer knew to accompany them: [2]

1881, SMITH, J., in Fiske v. Gowing, 61 N. H. 432 (effect of a conversation): "It rarely happens that two persons are able to give precisely the same account of a conversation. Their narration will differ more or less according to their intelligence, their interest in the subject-matter, their opportunities for hearing, their prejudices for or against the parties, the lapse of time since the conversation occurred, and a variety of other circumstances. Emphasis thrown upon the wrong word might convey a meaning different from that originally intended. Often the manner in which a remark is made, and the conduct and appearance of the party, may have much to do in producing the understanding that was received, much of which it is difficult and sometimes impossible for a witness to describe."

§ 1970. Same: Rule of Testimonial Knowledge (excluding "Impression" or "Belief") distinguished.

(1) If a witness' "impression" or "belief" of what

Gwinn, 4 H. & J. 509, 517, semble (where the witness "understood and presumed" that certain money was retained by a co-transactor for a certain purpose); Mass. 1850, Ives v. Hamlin, 5 Cush. 535 (effect of conversation); Minn. 1895, Peerless Mfg. Co. v. Gates, 61 Minn. 124, 63 N. W. 260 (whether the defendant agreed to do a thing and did do it, was excluded; but, whether a witness had authority to sell, was admitted); Miss. 1905, State v. Wertz, 191 Mo. 569, 90 S. W. 838 (rape; whether the witness "understood" from what the prosecutrix said and did, that she had been raped, excluded); N. H. 1844, Braley v. Braley, 16 N. H. 431 (when the words have been given, the witness cannot state what meaning was intended); 1844, Hibbard v. Russell, 16 N. H. 417 (same); 1850, Hoitt v. Moulton, 21 N. H. 588 (same); 1859, State v. Flanders, 38 N. H. 333 (same); N. Y. 1823, Cutler v. Carpenter, 1 Cow. 82 (belief as to the unexpressed meaning in a conversation); 1887, People v. Sharp, 107 N. Y. 461, 14 N. E. 319 (the witness, an alderman, was given a roll of bills, said by the donor to be for election expenses, but the witness "supposed it was for the Broadway road," i. e. the franchise alleged to have been procured by bribery; excluded; an indefensible ruling); Oh. 1854, Crowell v. Bank, 3 Oh. St. 412 (understanding of what was meant; this opinion, often cited, is particularly full of fallacies); Vt. 1895, Norton v. Parsons, 67 Vt. 526, 32 Atl. 481, semble (the meaning of defendant in a conversation involving an admission).

In Goodman v. Kennedy, 10 Nebr. 274, 4 N. W. 987 (1880), an "understanding" as to when title passed was declared improper, apparently as involving opinion upon matter of law.

The truth is that in some of the above rulings, while the Opinion rule is the ostensible weapon of exclusion, the real objection in the mind of the Court is the Completeness rule (post, § 2102), i. e. the principle that the evidence must furnish the substance or the entirety of the words used.

[2] Accord: 1903, Shafer v. Hausman, 139 Ala. 237, 35 So. 691 (whether "the agreement" was as specified); 1894, Garrett v. Tel. Co., 92 Ia. 449, 452, 58 N. W. 1064, 60 N. W. 644 (whether there was an understanding that a thing should be done; a contract being in issue); 1909, Blossi v. Chicago & N. W. R. Co., 144 Ia. 697, 123 N. W. 360 (fraudulent release by an alien; the releasee's testimony that he believed the releasor to understand the provisions, admitted); 1895, State v. Earnest, 56 Kan. 31, 42 Pac. 359 (who was referred to in a conversation); 1873, Atwood v. Cornwall, 28 Mich. 336, 339 (a statement "that he understood C. to admit the fact is not given as an expression of opinion but as a fact, and is the only way in which conversations can often be proven"); 1895, Walker v. R. Co., 104 Mich. 606, 62 N. W. 1032 (that a person had "instructed" another to act); 1895, Woodworth v. Thompson, 44 Nebr. 311, 62 N. W. 450 (that the opponent "agreed" to a contract); 1905, Union Hosiery Co. v. Hodgson, 72 N. H. 427, 57 Atl. 384 (joint purchase of coal; the "understanding" of one of the purchasers as to the ownership, admitted).

Of course an opponent's admissions, on cross-examination, as to his "understanding" ought to be received: 1897, De Graw v. Emory, 113 Mich. 672, 72 N. W. 4.

he speaks of appears to have been based, not on personal observation, but on a mere guess or upon rumor, he may be excluded, as not qualified by knowledge (ante, § 658). (2) If a witness, though speaking from personal observation, has only an indistinct recollection, so that he can venture no more than an "impression" or "belief," this is on principle no objection to his testifying to the best of his memory or impression; though some Courts do not concede it (ante, § 728). But it is clear that the propriety of excluding an "impression" on either of these grounds above-named is no excuse for excluding it because of the Opinion rule.

§ 1971. Same: Rules of Substantive Law, distinguished; (a) Understanding of a Party to a Contract; (b) Intention in Libel or Slander; (c) Parol Evidence Rule. One source of confusion which may have caused some of the exclusionary rulings in the preceding sections has been that facts of a similar sort are often immaterial with reference to the issues of the case, as determined by principles of substantive law. Here the 'factum probandum' has no place in the case, and hence no testimony, however good, on that point is desired (ante, § 2).[1]

(a) Contract: "Understanding" of a Party or the Parties. By the modern law of contract, the mere state of mind of the parties — with reference to a "meeting of minds" — is not the essential object of inquiry.[2] The terms of the promise-act, then, are to be determined by an external, not an internal standard, i. e. by the sense or significance of its words as reasonably understood by the promisee. Hence neither the particular "understanding" of the promisor, nor the particular "understanding" of the promisee, is necessarily the test of the sense to be accepted and enforced by the law; the promisee's "understanding," if not a reasonable one, may equally be rejected. Nevertheless, for two reasons it is usually necessary to inquire what the "understanding" of each party was; first, because it may appear that both gave the same sense to the words, and thus no conflict will exist and the common sense may be accepted and enforced; and, secondly, because, if there is a conflict, the different senses must be examined. It thus appears that we must discriminate between enforcing the private "understanding" of one party, and receiving evidence of such a private "understanding." Rulings of exclusion will usually or often mean in reality, not that the evidence should not be listened to, but that the private "understanding" will not be enforced; and practically this may in a given instance be a correct enough result.[3]

§ 1971 [1] The following citations are merely illustrative.

[2] Harriman, Contracts, 2d ed., § 2466:

[3] Compare here the cases cited post, § 2466: Eng. 1844, Bonfield v. Smith, 12 M. & W. 403 (debt for goods sold; plea, that the defendant's firm was the real buyer; a question to plaintiff "With whom did you 'deal?" was rejected, because it amounted to asking "With whom did you believe you dealt?", and the fact that would make the persons liable as partners would not be the customer's belief, but the general holding themselves out by the parties as partners); U. S.: Ga. 1895, Slater v. D. S. & H. Co., 94 Ga. 687, 21 S. E. 715 (letter written by a debtor, alleged to involve a new promise; the writer's testimony as to his meaning, excluded) Ia. 1897, First Nat'l Bank v. Booth, 102 Ia. 333, 71 N. W. 238 (whether the promisee understood the promisor's language, excluded); 1902, Sheldon v. Bigelow, 118 Ia. 586, 92 N. W. 701 (whether R. was going to assume firm

(b) Intention of one Charged with Libel or Slander. When utterances are alleged to have been defamatory, the fundamental notion of defamation — a spreading of false information among the community — requires us to take the standpoint of the community, or of the particular hearers or readers, in determining whether such a charge was published, i. e. made known to them. A number of corollaries result from this; and, in particular, it follows (1) that the intention or secret meaning of the defendant in using the words is not to be considered; since the question is what his hearers or readers were reasonably caused to understand, and not what he intended;[4] and (2) that the private understanding of an individual hearer (as distinguished from the ordinary sense of the words) cannot in theory be offered, until it is first shown that some circumstance was known to him which reasonably gave the words a special meaning.[5] debts, excluded); Mass. 1878, Paine v. Boston, 124 Mass. 486, 490 (interpretation of a city council's vote as a settlement of a disputed claim; the motives and reasons of the members, semble, immaterial); 1905, Farnum v. Whitman, 187 Mass. 381, 73 N. E. 473 (wagering contract for wheat; the intent of one party only, held immaterial); Mich. 1904, Downing v. Buck, 135 Mich. 636, 98 N. W. 388 (brokerage); N. H. 1868, Delano v. Goodwin, 48 N. H. 206 (showing that even in matters of contract the understanding of one party may be evidential towards the main issue of the effect which his conduct produced upon the mind of the other party); N. Y. 1828, Murray v. Bethune, 1 Wend. 196 (the mere private understanding of one party to a contract is immaterial and cannot be testified to); 1872, Waugh v. Fielding, 48 N. Y. 681 (opinion by a vendor as to his intention with reference to representations made to the vendee, excluded); 1874, Tracy v. McManus, 58 N. Y. 257 (by one charged as a copartner, explaining his motive and purpose in doing acts which were capable of construction as acts of partnership, admitted); 1907, Trombly v. Seligman, 191 N. Y. 400, 84 N. E. 280 (sale of materials for a house; plaintiff's understanding as to who was the buyer, held immaterial); Vt. 1895, Wheeler v. Campbell, 68 Vt. 98, 34, Atl. 35 (understanding admissible, when it siginifies the the agreement as accepted by both parties).

Of course the "understanding" of one not a party to the contract would usually be immaterial: 1874, Nichols v. Ore Co., 56 N. Y. 618 (by one doing work for plaintiff, as to whether he supposed the work was to be paid for by defendant or by X; excluded).

[4] Can. 1916, Clarke v. Stewart, 32 D. L. R. 366, Alta. (slander; "Did you mean the plaintiff when you used those words?" asked on discovery, held not proper, defendant's actual intent being immaterial). U. S. 1866, Bullard v. Lambert, 40 Ala. 205, 209; 1888, Republican Publ. Co. v. Miner, 12 Colo. 85, 20 Pac. 345; 1907, Ladwig v. Heyer, 136 Ia. 196, 113 N. W. 767; 1837, Allensworth v. Coleman, 5 Dana Ky. 315; 1896 Provost v. Brueck, 110 Mich. 136, 67 N. W. 1114; 1902, Davis v. Hamilton, 88 Mich. 64, 92 N. W. 512; 1908, Harms v. Proehl, 104 Minn. 303, 116 N. W. 587.

[5] Eng. 1848, Daines v. Hartley, 3 Exch. 200; Can. 1903, Green v. Miller, 33 Can. Sup. 193; 1908. Moran v. O'Regan, 38 N. Br. 399 (hearer's opinion what "thief" meant, excluded; Landry, J., diss., correctly on the facts); U. S. 1898, Hearne v. De Young, 119 Cal. 670, 52 Pac. 150; 1855, Hawks v. Patton, 18 Ga. 52; 1906, Goldborough v. Orem, 103 Md. 671, 64 Atl. 36; Callahan v. Ingram, 122 Mo. 355, 375, 26 S. W. 1020; 1907, Julian v. Kansas City S. Co., 209 Mo. 35, 107 S. W. 496 (most sensible opinion on the subject, per Valliant, J.; Graves and Lamm, JJ., diss.); 1913, Peak v. Taubman, 251 Mo. 390, 158 S. W. 656 (approving Julian v. Kansas City S. Co., Graves, J., diss.); 1910 U. S. v. Ocampo, 18 P. I. 1, 45; 1912, Worcester v. Ocampo, 22 P. I. 42, 63, 86 (Johnson, J., admitting opinion as to the identity of the person meant: "The issue in a libel case concerns not only the sense of the publication, but in a measure its effect upon a reader acquainted with the person referred to"); 1846, Morgan v. Livingston, 2 Rich. S. C. 573, 582.

Some confusion, however, has been caused by the citation (Best on Evidence, § 512) of Daines v. Hartley, supra, as "a good illustration of the real nature" of the Opinion rule; yet this is precisely what it is not; it has nothing to do with the Opinion rule, and the judges' language does not so treat it; the same confusion is found in the following cases: 1887, Gribble v. Pioneer-Press Co., 37 Minn. 277; 1900, Soloman v. American Merc. Exch., 93 Me. 436, 45 Atl. 510.

The following ruling should be noted: 1908, Brinsfield v. Howeth, 107 Md. 278, 68 Atl. 566 (slander; the defendant had said that he had had a chance to "strap" the plaintiff;

(c) The Parol Evidence (Integration) Rule, which is a rule of substantive law, constantly excludes various facts affecting the meaning, intention, usage, sense, or understanding of parties engaged in consummating a legal act (post, §§ 2400–2478). For this exclusion the Opinion rule is not responsible.

§ 1972. Same: Rule of Explaining the Meaning of an Admission or Contradiction, distinguished. It has already been seen (ante, §§ 1044, 1058) that the impeaching force of a party's apparent admission, or of a witness' apparently inconsistent statement, lies in the self-contradictory states of mind which it discloses, and that thus his credit may be restored by an explanation which shows that there was no inconsistency. This explanation may often be made by showing that words were used in a sense different from that claimed by the opponent, or that a different state of facts was in mind at the time of the utterance; and the Opinion rule should not interpose any bar.[1]

7. Sundry Topics

§ 1974. Corporal Appearances of Persons and Things ("looking" Sad, Ill, and the like; Intoxication, Age, etc.). The Opinion rule is often sought to be applied to forbid compendious descriptions of the appearances externally indicating internal states, — for example, whether a person "looked" sick or sad or angry. There is no more reason in this class of cases than in the preceding one for the Opinion rule to exclude the testimony.[1] The exclusionary a witness was asked if he knew the meaning of "strap" in the neighborhood when used of a female, and answered that he did, and that it meant "to have intercourse"; the local meaning was held a proper thing to prove, but this mode of proving it was held improper; the quiddities of the Court's reasoning are not worth setting out here; it is a good example of the anachronistic Cokianism which has now become nauseous, and naturally excites popular distrust of Courts).

§ 1972. [1] E. g. 1872, Mickey v. Ins. Co., 35 Ia. 181 (explaining the understanding and intention of a party in using language offered against him as an admission; here an affidavit of loss by an insured); and cases cited ante, §§ 1044, 1059.

§ 1974. [1] From the ensuing cases, distinguish those involving the question of Testimonial Qualifications, whether a layman is experientially or otherwise qualified to speak of the existence or appearances of an illness (ante, §§ 568, 689); in the following citations the testimony was admitted, except as otherwise noted:

Alabama: 1859, Barker v. Coleman, 35 Ala. 225 (looked sick); 1859, Blackman v. Johnson, 35 Ala. 255 (same); 1861, Fountain v. Brown, 38 Ala. 75 (same); 1863, Raisler v. Springer, 38 Ala. 705 (insulting manner); 1875, Gassenheimer v. State, 52 Ala. 317 ("looked excited," excluded); 1878, South & N. Ala. R. Co. v. McLendon, 63 Ala. 275 ("looked bad," "was not able to use her arm"); 1885, State v. Houston, 78 Ala. 578, 585 ("he looked" so-and-so, admitted; "he impressed me with the belief of" so-and-so, excluded); 1885, Carney v. State, 79 Ala. 17 (acted towards a woman "as a suitor" and "as a lover," excluded); 1886, Jenkins v. State, 82 Ala. 28, 2 So. 150 ("appeared like he was mad," i. e. angry); 1895, Miller v. State, 107 Ala. 40, 19 So. 37 (same); 1894, White v. State, 103 Ala. 72, 16 So. 63 ("talked with his usual intelligence"); 1895, Burton v. State, 107 Ala. 108, 18 So. 285 ("looked paler than common"); 1897, Thornton v. State, 113 Ala. 43, 21 So. 356 ("looked frightened"); 1898, Fuller v. State, 117 Ala. 36, 23 So. 688 (appearance of wound); 1898, Orr v. State, 117 Ala. 69, 23 So. 696 (appearance of cartridge); 1899, Evans v. State, 120 Ala. 269, 25 So. 175 (appearance of wounds); 1899, Terry v. State, 120 Ala. 286, 25 So. 176 (same); 1899, Hollis v. State, 123 Ala. 74, 26 So. 231 (by one searching for property, that he did not find it concealed, excluded); 1900, Birmingham R. & E. Co. v. Franscomb, 124 Ala. 621, 27 So. 508 ("seemed to be very weak"); 1900, Higginbotham v. State, — Ala. —, 29 So. 410 (sundry statements passed upon); 1903, Hainsworth v. State, 136 Ala. 13, 34 So. 203 (facial appearance of defendant, as indicating malice against deceased, admitted; repudiating Gassenheimer v. State); 1903, Smith v. State, 137 Ala. 22, 34 So. 396, (that tracks looked like those of a person runrulings perhaps here abound particularly in absurdities and quibbles, — highly fit for cynical amusement, were not the names of Justice and Truth ning and walking); 1903, Stevens v. State, 138 Ala. 71, 35 So. 122 (position of an assailant, as shown by the wound); 1905, Tagert v. State, 143 Ala. 88, 39 So. 293 (that a person appeared angry or surprised, allowable); 1905, Dillard v. State, — Ala. —, 39 So. 584 ("looked like a bottle of wine," allowed); 1906, Sims v. State, 146 Ala. 109, 41 So. 413 ("seemed excited and looked like she had been crying," allowed).

Arkansas: 1848, Beebe v. DeBaun, 8 Ark. 520, 571 (whether a response was in a jocular or serious manner, excluded); 1921, Prewitt v. State, 150 Ark. 279, 234 S. W. 35 (homicide; by a doctor, as to defendant's appearance at the time of the killing, allowed, citing the above text with approval).

California: 1897, People v. Vehorn, 116 Cal. 503, 48 Pac. 495 (intoxicated); 1911, People v. Wong Loung, 159 Cal. 520, 114 Pac. 829 (that the accused was pale, nervous, etc., allowed).

Columbia (Dist.): 1892, U. S. v. Cross, 20 D. C. 376 (threats in an angry or a playful manner).

Connecticut: 1905, Spencer's Appeal, 77 Conn. 638, 60 Atl. 289 (whether a testator spoke affectionately or otherwise); 1905, Nichols v. Wentz, 78 Conn. 429, 62 Atl. 610 (whether E. did or said anything indicating an attempt at coercion of a testator, allowed); 1911, Atwood v. Atwood, 84 Conn. 169, 79 Atl. 59 (that a grantor was "in a condition to know nothing really," etc., allowed; liberal opinion by Wheeler, J.).

Florida: 1903, Fields v. State, 46 Fla. 84, 35 So. 185 (whether the deceased appeared angry).

Georgia: 1860, Choice v. State, 31 Ga. 467 (Lumpkin, J., receiving testimony that a person seemed to be drunk: "Really, no other rule is practical. If the witness must be confined to a simple narration of facts, how the person leered or grinned, how he winked his eyes or squinted, how he wagged his head, etc., all of which drunken men do, you shut out not only the ordinary but the best mode of obtaining truth"); 1874, Ross v. R. Co., 53 Ga. 369 (same); 1905, Roberts v. State, 123 Ga. 146, 51 S. E. 374 ("appeared to be excited," etc., allowed); 1909, Georgia R. & E. Co. v. Gilleland, 133 Ga. 621, 66 S. E. 944 (that the plaintiff appeared "more stupid after the injury than before" [!], allowed); 1913, Lanier v. State, 141 Ga. 17, 80 S. E. 5 (that by the marks on a child's body the cause of death appeared to be smothering, allowed).

Illinois: 1897, West Chicago St. R. Co. v. Fishman, 169 Ill. 196, 48 N. E. 447 (whether a person was ill, whether he "answered right"); 1902, Chicago & E. I .R. Co. v. Randolph, 199 Ill. 126, 65 N. E. 142 (by a lay witness, that a person appeared to be "suffering," "weak," "sore," "in pain," etc.); 1904, Illinois C. R. Co. v. Prickett, 210 Ill. 140, 71 N. E. 435 (whether cracks in boiler-bolts appeared old, allowed); 1909, People v. Davidson, 240 Ill. 191, 88 N. E. 565 (a witness to appearance as evidence of age must first "describe the appearance," etc.; this is needless); 1910, Louth v. Chicago U. T. Co., 244 Ill. 244, 91 N. E. 341 (see citation ante, § 1721, n. 1).

Indiana: 1887, Louisville N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Wood, 113 Ind. 551, 14 N. E. 572, 16 N. E. 197 ("looked worse").

Iowa: 1877, State v. Huxford, 47 Ia. 17 (intoxicated); 1884, State v. Shelton, 64 Ia. 338, 20 N. W. 459 (angry); 1885, Parsons v. Parsons, 66 Ia. 757, 21 N. W. 570, 24 N. W. 564 ("acted childishly"); 1892, State v. Brown, 86 Ia. 121, 123, 53 N. W. 92 (that the defendant "kept company" with the prosecutrix, allowed; but that he treated her "very affectionately," excluded; this marks the lowest depths of quibbling); 1895, Bever v. Spangler, 93 Ia. 576, 61 N. W. 1080 (personal appearance); 1897, McDonald v. Franchere, 102 Ia. 496, 71 N. W. 427 ("appeared to be worried"); 1898, Childs v. Muckler, 105 Ia. 279, 75 N. W. 100 (that a woman was nice-looking); 1899, Bailey v. Centreville, 108 Ia. 20, 78 N. W. 831 (that a person "looked bad" and could scarcely walk); 1899, State v. Reinheimer, 109 Ia. 624, 80 N. W. 669 (that a woman was pregnant, excluded, from a non-expert); 1900, Bizer v. Bizer, 110 Ia. 248, 81 N. W. 465 (that parties seen on a bed seemed to be having sexual intercourse); 1900, Stewart v. Anderson, 111 Ia. 329, 82 N. W. 770 (that a babe appeared to be newborn); 1902, Reininghaus v. Merchants' L. Ass'n, 116 Ia. 364, 89 N. W. 1113 (whether a person was "sick," "stronger," etc.); 1903, State v. McKnight, 119 Ia. 79, 93 N. W. 63 (testimony to such appearances of health, etc., other than sanity, need not state beforehand the data); 1903, State v. Cather, 121 Ia. 106, 96 N. W. 722 (that he was intoxicated, and how far he was affected by the intoxication); 1903, Plano Mfg. Co. v. Kautenberger, 121 Ia. 213, 96 N. W. 743 (that defendant "appeared to be satisfied" with a settlement); 1905, Rothrock v. Cedar Rapids, 128 Ia. 252, 103 N. W. 475 (whether snow appeared as if a person had fallen, allowed); 1905, Kuhlman v. Wieben, 129 Ia. 188, 105 N. W. 445 (intoxicated; allowed); 1906, Kesselring v. Hummer, 130 Ia. 145, 106 N. W. 401 (seduction; one who had seen the parties often in company was asked how they acted, and answered, "They acted like lovers"; held properly excluded; here again a peddling-out of machine-made law, not fit for even the bargain-counter of Justice; this ruling rivals that of State v. Brown supra, and shows no improvement of involved in their consideration. One may wonder how long these solemn farces will be perpetuated in our law.

attitude in the fourteen years' interval); 1909, Greenway v. Taylor Co., 144 Ia. 332, 122 N. W. 943 (by a physician, whether the plaintiff had suffered pain, or was so injured as probably to cause pain, allowed); 1915, Weber v. Chicago R. I. & P. R. Co., 175 Ia. 358, 151 N. W. 852 (whether railway spikes appeared to have been pulled, allowed); 1916, Eveleth's Will, 177 Ia. 716, 157 N. W. 257 (whether a testator appeared to be under constraint, allowed).

Kansas: 1886, State v. Baldwin, 36 Kan. 9, 12 Pac. 318 ("in good spirits"; "showed a good deal of fear"); 1899, Handley v. R. Co., 61 Kan. 237, 59 Pac. 271 (that another person was "watching the boy," excluded).

Kentucky: 1901, Campbell v. Fidelity & C. Co., 109 Ky. 661, 60 S. W. 492 (intoxicated).

Louisiana: 1898, State v. Marceaux, 50 La. An. 1137, 24 So. 611 (that a person looked as though he had not slept); 1905, State v. Hopper, 114 La. 557, 38 So. 452 (whether the accused looked scared, etc., allowed); 1920, State v. Coll, 146 La. 597, 83 So. 844 (whether defendant was "angry").

Maine: 1878, Stacy v. Publishing Co., 68 Me. 289 (intoxicated): 1872, Parker v. Steamboat Co., 109 Me. 451 (that a person is "worse," "not able to do so much work").

Maryland: 1910, Fletcher v. Dixon, 113 Md. 101, 77 Atl. 326 (how a person's nervousness showed itself, allowed).

Massachusetts: 1897, Burt v. Burt, 168 Mass. 204, 46 N. E. 622 (that a person is intoxicated; also, by one who is skilled, that a person is under the influence of morphine); 1898, Edwards v. Worcester, 172 Mass. 104, 51 N. E. 447 (intoxicated); 1900, O'Neil v. Hanscom, 175 Mass. 313, 56 N. E. 587 (that a person looked "sick," "invalid," etc.); 1905, Wolfe v. N. B. Cordage Co., 189 Mass. 591, 76 N. E. 222 (visual difference between iron and steel; not allowed).

Michigan: 1878, Brownell v. People, 38 Mich. 735 (personal qualities); 1890, Cook v. Ins. Co., 84 Mich. 20, 47 N. W. 568 (intoxicated); 1896, Will v. Mendon, 108 Mich. 251, 66 N. W. 58 (unable to move a limb); 1901, People v. Dowd, 127 Mich. 140, 86 N. W. 546 (that a person was "envious," excluded); 1904, Comstock v. Georgetown, 137 Mich. 541, 100 N. W. 788 (whether a patient "flinched," etc., at the touch, excluded); 1905, McCormick v. Detroit G. H. & M. R. Co., 141 Mich. 17, 104 N. W. 390 (whether a patient appeared to be feigning illness, excluded); 1911, Merrill v. Leisenring, 166 Mich. 219, 131 N. W. 538 (whether "he was devoted to his wife and children," allowed); 1912, Marshall v. Wabash R. Co., 171 Mich. 180, 137 N. W. 89 (whether the plaintiff was able to simulate, or was simulating, the injury alleged; rule not easily to be gathered; the obstructive effect of the Opinion rule, and the delicate anxiety of some Courts to preserve each form of its puerilities, are notable in this opinion).

Minnesota: 1893, McKillop v. R. Co., 53 Minn. 532, 534, 55 N. W. 739 (intoxicated); 1897, Manahan v. Halloran, 66 Minn. 483, 69 N. W. 619 (that a person appeared to be afraid of some one, admissible, but that he appeared to be afraid of a particular person, inadmissible; as to which it might have been added that tweedledum differs from tweedledee); 1898, Hall v. Austin, 73 Minn. 134, 75 N. W. 1121 (that a person appeared pale, in suffering); 1902, Isherwood v. Lumber Co., 87 Minn. 388, 92 N. W. 230 (that a person appeared to be in pain); 1904, Clarke v. Phila. & R. C. & I. Co., 92 Minn. 418, 100 N. W. 231 (intoxication, excluded on the facts).

Mississippi: 1901, Magouirk v. Tel. Co., 79 Miss. 632, 31 So. 206 (habits of an employee as to intoxication; witness' personal knowledge allowed).

Missouri: 1877, State v. Dearing 65 Mo. 533 (intoxicated); 1884, State v. Ramsey, 82 Mo. 137 (intoxicated; "looked scared"); 1886, State v. Parker, 89 Mo. 393 (that weeds looked as though a person had kneeled on them); 1888, State v. Parker, 96 Mo. 393, 9 S. W. 728 (in general); 1890, State v. Buchler, 103 Mo. 206, 15 S. W. 331 (expressions of face); 1895, State v. David, 131 Mo. 380, 33 S. W. 28 (that a person had cramps and seemed in agony); 1916, State v. Evans, 267 Mo. 163, 183 S. W. 1059 (seduction; that defendant "treated her like a sweetheart," not allowed).

Montana: 1900, State v. Lucey, 24 Mont. 295, 61 Pac. 994 (that a defendant when arrested "turned right away, as though he was about to be devoured"); 1903, State v. Tighe, 27 Mont. 327, 71 Pac. 3 (that a person "seemed to be scared"); 1906, State v. Trueman, 34 Mont. 249, 85 Pac. 1024 (intoxication; allowed); 1910, State v. Vanella, 40 Mont. 326, 106 Pac. 364 ("nervous," allowed).

New Hampshire: 1857, Spear v. Richardson, 34 N. H. 428 (diseased appearance of a horse); 1864, Low v. Railroad, 46 N. H. 24 (sulky and frightened appearance of a horse); 1869, Taylor v. Railway, 48 N. H. 309 (appearance of lameness).

New Jersey: 1868, Castner v. Sliker, 33 N. J. L. 97 (intoxication).

New Mexico: 1914, State v. Cooley, 19 N. M. 91, 140 Pac. 1111 (murder; whether deceased and defendant appeared friendly or otherwise, allowed).

New York: 1829, King v. Root, 4 Wend. 129 (intoxicated); 1856, People v. Eastwood, 14 N. Y. 563 (same); 1897, Felska v. R. Co., 152 N. Y. 339, 46 N. E. 613 (same); 1902, People v. Smith, 172 N. Y. 210, 64 N. E. 814 (whether

In rulings upon testimony as to age or race, the distinction must be kept in mind between the question of Relevancy whether appearances are a sound basis (for a witness or for the jury) for inferring to age or race (ante, §§ 167, 222, 660), and the genuine Opinion-rule question, i. e. whether the witness should merely state the data of appearances, instead of giving his inference.[2] a person's conduct "seemed to be natural and genuine," not allowed).

North Carolina: 1893, State v. Edwards, 112 N. C. 901, 910, 17 S. E. 521 (appeared "mad or in fun"); 1896, Sherrill v. Tel. Co. 117 N. C. 352, 23 S. E. 277 (mental anguish through failure to deliver a telegram announcing a child's illness; plaintiff's sister, living with him, was allowed to testify to his seeming "melancholy" and "severe mental anguish"); 1921, State v. Skeen, 182 N. C. 844, 109 S. E. 71 (that a shoe looked as if left unlaced for several days, allowed).

Oklahoma: 1912, Cole v. District Board, 32 Okl. 692, 123 Pac. 426 (opinion as to negro race, admitted); 1918, Collins v. State, 15 Okl. Cr. 96, 175 Pac. 124 (intoxication).

Oregon: 1895, State v. Brown, 28 Or. 147, 41 Pac. 1042 (intoxication); 1898, First Nat'l Bank v. Fire Ass'n, 33 Or. 172, 53 Pac. 8 (whether a fire burned in a natural way or appeared to be assisted by some peculiarly inflammable matter; whether it would have spread, etc., as it did, without such assistance).

Pennsylvania: 1855, Leckey v. Bloser, 24 Pa. 404 ("whether the conduct of the parties evinced a mutual attachment," excluded); 1907, Com. v. Eyler, 217 Pa. 512, 66 Atl. 746 (intoxication; allowed).

South Carolina: 1889, State v. James, 31 S. C. 233, 9 S. E. 844 (whether the relations of persons were "friendly"); 1899, State v. Davis, 55 S. C. 339, 33 S. E. 449 (whether a gun seemed to have been recently fired); 1900, State v. Taylor, 57 S. C. 483, 35 S. E. 729 (whether a call was like that of one in distress); 1911, Miller v. Hamilton B. S. Co., 89 S. C. 530, 72 S. E. 397 (whether a person was under the influence of a drug, admitted).

South Dakota: 1908, Palmer v. Schurz, 22 S. D. 283, 117 N. W. 150 (intoxication).

Texas: 1859, Reynolds v. Dechaums, 24 Tex. 175 (intoxicated); 1920, Hewey v. State, — Tex. Cr. App. —, 220 S. W. 1106 ("was angry"); 1920, Haag v. State, 87 Tex. Cr. 604, 223 S. W. 472 (extent of intoxication).

Utah: Fritz v. Tel. Co., 25 Utah 263, 71 Pac. 209 (that a person appeared "disgusted," etc. allowed); 1909, Miller's Estate, 36 Utah 228, 102 Pac. 996 (that the testator's wife was "bitter," "agitated," etc., allowed; a perusal of this opinion will convince almost any one that the Opinion rule has gone to seed).

Vermont: 1885, Knight v. Smythe, 57 Vt. 530 (whether a person seemed in pain); 1888, State v. Ward, 61 Vt. 153, 17 Atl. 483 (a horse's tired appearance); 1896, Bagley v. Mason, 69 Vt. 175, 37 Atl. 285 (whether a plaintiff appeared to be feigning, admissible, semble); 1898, State v. Marsh, 70 Vt. 288, 40 Atl. 836 (that a man and a woman were intimate); 1898, Wilkins v. Metcalf, 71 Vt. 103, 41 Atl. 1035 (bastardy; whether there was "something not right" between plaintiff and defendant; held not improperly excluded on the facts); 1913, State v. Pierce, 87 Vt. 144, 88 Atl. 740 (physician's misdemeanor in failing to report known or suspected cases of communicable disease, here, diptheria; the membrane having been shown to an expert witness, he was allowed to answer whether the diphtheritic symptom "would be apparent to an ordinary practicing physician"); 1918, State v. Felch, 92 Vt. 477, 105 Atl. 23 (murder of husband; wife's "expression of face and eyes" when looking at paramour, admitted).

Washington: 1897, State v. Dolan, 17 Wash. 499, 50 Pac. 472 (intoxicated); 1910, State v. George, 58 Wash. 681, 109 Pac. 114 (whether two persons appeared to care for each other, allowed).

West Virginia: 1897, State v. Musgrave, 43 W. Va. 672, 28 S. E. 813 (whether marks on the deceased looked like finger-marks, etc., excluded; Brannon, J., diss.)

Wisconsin: 1896, Keller v. Gilman, 93 Wis. 9, 66 N. W. 800 (health appearances); 1900, Werner v. R. Co., 105 Wis. 300, 81 N. W. 416 (that a person appeared to be suffering pain).

Wyoming: 1903, Horn v. State, 12 Wyo. 80, 73 Pac. 705 (defendant's sincerity of manner in making a confession); 1916, Mortimore v. State, 24 Wyo. 452, 161 Pac. 766 (homicide; that the accused "seemed to be happy," allowed).

[2] 1873, Marshall v. State, 49 Ala. 21 (liquor selling to a minor; whether the witness would not have taken the person for over 21; excluded); 1825, Morse v. State, 6 Conn. 13 (opinion of age; admitted); 1864, Nave's Adm'r v. Williams, 22 Ind. 371, semble (opinion of race from color; admitted, for expert); 1885, Louisville N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Falvey, 104 Ind. 423, 3 N. E. 389, 4 N. E. 908 (age; admitted); 1895, State v. Grubb, 55 Kan. 678, 41 Pac. 951 (age; admissible, after describing the person, and, semble, only when the person is not present; but the latter limitation is unsound for experts or for those who have had personal acquaintances with the person); 1883, Com. v. O'Brien, 134 Mass. 200 (age; admitted); 1889, Elsner v. Supreme Lodge, 98 Mo. 645, 11 S. W. 991 (age; admitted); 1867, State v. Smith, Phillips N. C. 303 (age; ad-

So, also, whether a child's resemblance to a man is evidence of the latter's paternity (ante, § 166), is distinct from the question of the Opinion rule, whether an opinion as to that resemblance is receivable (post, § 1977).

§ 1975. Medical and Surgical Matters; Health and Disease. Testimony to the actual condition of health (for example, the existence of a disease or wound) differs from testimony to the preceding class of topics in that it concerns the internal actuality and not the external appearance. This difference is important with reference to the experiential qualifications of the witness, in that for the former a medical expert will usually be required (ante, § 568). But, assuming the witness qualified, there can seldom be any difference between the two classes of topics as regards the application of the Opinion rule; the exclusion of an opinion can rarely be justified. Nevertheless there often appears a special perversity in requiring the minutest analysis of the observer's data, instead of accepting his net conclusions.[1] mitted, for an expert); 1897, State v. Robinson 32 Or. 43, 48 Pac. 357 (age of a person in court; excluded, the witness having no special knowledge).

§ 1975. [1] It is sometimes difficult to distinguish between rulings in the preceding section, the present one, and the next one: see also the rulings as to safety, care, prudence, and the like (ante, § 1951); Federal: 1918, McLean Medicine Co. v. U. S., 8th C. C. A., 253 Fed. 694 (violation of U. S. St. 1906, June 30, Food and Drugs Act; whether "a drug composed according to the formula used by defendant . . . would be effective," allowed if signifying "a general agreement of medical opinion," but not the witness' individual opinion); Alabama: 1900, Littleton v. State, 128 Ala. 31, 29 So. 390 (that a woman was in a family way, allowed); 1914, Central of Georgia R. Co. v. Stephenson, 189 Ala. 553, 66 So. 495 ("My hand gets stiff yet," allowed; some day what merry laughter there will be among our brethren of posterity at the thought that such a question could ever have been soberly discussed by men of great parts!); Florida: 1905, Hampton v. State, 50 Fla. 55, 39 So. 421 (how recently a wound had been made, allowed); Georgia: 1874, Southern Life Ins. Co. v. Wilkinson, 53 Ga. 546 (disease; admissible when data are stated); Idaho: 1921, State v. Ramirez, 33 Ida. 803, 199 Pac. 376 (a physician allowed to testify that stains were of blood and dirt mixed); Indiana: 1885, Carthage Turnpike Co. v. Andrews, 102 Ind. 142, 1 N. E. 364 (health in general, admissible); 1906, Swygart v. Willard, 166 Ind. 25, 76 N. E. 755 (the effect of increase of drinking upon the testator, allowed); Iowa: 1868, State v. Vincent, 24 Ia. 576 (change of features after death, as making identification impossible, excluded); 1881, Ferguson v. Davis Co., 57 Ia. 605, 10 N. W. 906 (whether ribs were fractured, allowed); 1901, Long v. Ins. Co., 113 Ia. 259, 85 N. W. 24 (significance of powder stains, etc., allowed); 1904, Boyer v. Chicago, R. I. & R. P. Co., 123 Ia. 248, 98 N. W. 764 (whether a mare was with foal, allowed); 1919, State v. Vaughn, 187 Ia. 146, 173 N. W. 917 (rape; by a doctor, whether the intercourse was willing, not allowed); 1920, Dolan v. Henry, 189 Ia. 104, 177 N. W. 712 (delirious; allowed); 1921, Young v. Mandis, 191 Ia. 1328, 184 N. W. 302 (whether an injury "is liable to be permanent," not allowed, from the plaintiff himself); Kansas: 1887, Broquet v. Tripp, 36 Kan. 704, 14 Pac. 227 (disease, admissible); 1896, State v. Asbell, 57 Kan. 398, 46 Pac. 770 (characteristics of a near wound as to powder-marks, etc., admitted); Kentucky: 1898, Franklin v. Com., 105 Ky. 237, 48 S. W. 986 (whether a wound was made by a certain kind of shot and gun, admitted); Michigan: 1885, People v. Hare, 57 Mich. 513, 24 N. W. 843 (qualities of injuries, etc., admitted); 1906, McDonald v. City El. R. Co., 144 Mich. 379, 108 N. W. 85 (how much a man's ability to labor was reduced, allowed, for a physician); 1921, Norris v. Elmdale Elev. Co., 216 Mich. 548, 185 N. W. 696 (injured employee; plaintiff's testimony to "decrease of ability to do carpenter work," allowed); Missouri: 1874, Reid v. Ins. Co., 58 Mo. 425 (by a doctor, whether person was in good health, excluded); Nebraska; 1921, Fellers v. Howe, — Nebr. —, 184 N. W. 122 (to physicians, what would be the effect on the physical and nervous health of a maiden of 40, after a 20 years' courtship, of a breach of promise of marriage, held proper, on certain conditions; why not let some expert be called to estimate the effect on delays of justice by wasting a Supreme Court's time on such barren law points); New York: 1868, Kennedy v. People, 39 N. Y. 257 (the force necessary to break a skull, admitted); 1875, Linsday v. People, 63 N. Y. 152 (whether a wound was recent, allowed); 1891, People v. Fish, 125 N. Y. 136, 26 N. E. 319 (the force necessary to drive an iron instrument into the § 1976. Probability and Possibility; Capacity and Tendency; Cause and Effect. A large class of cases, embracing statements as to the probability or the possibility of an event, the capacity or tendency of an act or a machine, the cause or the effect of a fact, may fairly be grouped together, because the reason why the Opinion rule is urged against them is in general that the thing to which the witness testifies is not anything which he has observed, but is a quantity which lies in estimate only and is the result of a balancing of concrete data. This is no sufficient reason for excluding such statements; because it must almost always be impossible for a witness to reproduce in words absolutely all the detailed data which enter into his estimate, and there can be no danger in receiving such an estimate from a competent witness.[1] All that can be said of the rulings is that probably some of them, in bone, allowed); North Carolina: 1868, State v. Harris, 63 N. C. 3 (that a burn was received after death, allowed); 1870, Horton v. Green, 64 N. C. 66 (that the disease of an animal was of long standing, allowed); Oregon: 1917, State v. Morris, 83 Or. 429, 163 Pac. 567 (murder; whether a death was self inflicted, not allowed); 1921, Yarborough v. Carlson, 102 Or. 422, 202 Pac. 739 (whether an injury would be permanent, allowed); Pennsylvania: 1874, O'Mara v. Com., 75 Pa. 428 (quantity of blood that probably would flow, allowed); South Carolina: 1840, Seibles v. Blackhead, 1 McMull. 56 (unsoundness of slave, allowed); Tennessee: 1859, Norton v. Moore, 3 Head 480 (disease, allowed); 1877, Garrison v. Blanton, 48 Tex. 301 (existence of a stupor, allowed).

For other rulings on medical topics, see also the citations in the next section.

§ 1976. [1] Compare the cases cited under § 1951, ante, and § 1978, post; and also those cited ante, § 664 (negative knowledge); in the following citations the testimony was admitted, unless otherwise expressly noted:

ENGLAND: 1912, Mason's Case, 7 Cr. App. 67 (whether death was caused by wounds not self-inflicted, allowed).

IRELAND: 1867, M'Fadden v. Murdock, 1 Ir. C. L. 211 (probable general loss in handling goods in retail quantities; particular loss as explainable by the nature of the trade).

UNITED STATES: Federal: 1895, Chicago St. P. & K. C. R. Co. v. Chambers, 15 C. C. A. 327, 68 Fed. 148 (whether a headlight was visible); 1897, Bram v. U. S., 168 U. S. 532, 18 Sup. 182 (of a medical man, whether a person striking another in a certain relative position with an axe, would necessarily be spattered with blood); 1898, Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Hellenthal, 13 C. C. A. 414, 88 Fed. 116 (that a crossing was in plain unobstructed view); 1898, Andersen v. U. S., 170 U. S. 481, 18 Sup. 689 (whether a certain view could be had from a ship's deck); 1899, Chicago Great W. R. Co. v. Price, 38 C. C. A. 239, 97 Fed. 423 (whether a rough track was liable to throw out a link-pin); 1900, Denver & R. G. R. Co. v. Roller, 41 C. C. A. 22, 100 Fed. 738 (whether a present physical condition was caused by an injury); 1900, Southern Pacific Co. v. Hall, 41 C. C. A. 50, 100 Fed. 760 (effect of use of artificial limb on capacity to labor); 1912, M'Intyre v. Modern Woodmen, C. C. A., 200 Fed. 1 (a physician's opinion as to the cause of death, founded on facts testified to by other physicians, must be based on their supposed facts only, and not on their inferences from facts; a piece of quibbling of the sort which accounts for the medical profession's attitude towards the legal profession — a sorrowful and amazed disgust); 1916, Chicago Railways Co. v. Kramer, 7th C. C. A., 234 Fed. 245 (Chicago v. Didier followed, where there was "no conflict as to the manner of the injury"); 1921, U. S. v. Boston C. C. & N. Y. Canal Co., 1st C. C. A., 271 Fed. 877, 886 (probable future business of a canal, excluded; this ruling touches the top-notch as an exhibit of the practical nonsense of the Opinion rule).

Alabama: 1854, Gibson v. Hatchett, 24 Ala. 206 (possibility of seeing a thing from a given point); 1858, Montgomery v. Taylor, 33 Ala. 133 (capacity of a wall to withstand flow of water); 1875, Bennett v. State, 52 Ala. 370 (whether a co-lodger could have left the room without witness' knowledge, excluded); 1877, Mobile Life Ins. Co. v. Walker, 58 Ala. 294 (cause of death); 1880, Blackman v. Collier, 65 Ala. 312 (capacity of machinery); 1882, Seals v. Edmondson, 71 Ala. 515 (combustibility of cotton); 1888, Sharp v. Hall, 86 Ala. 110, 5 So. 497 (tendency of an overflow to cause illness); 1893, McVay v. State, 100 Ala. 110, 113, 14 So. 862 (whether a person could have heard certain words); 1893, Alabama G. S. R. Co. v. Linn, 103 Ala. 134, 139, 15 So. 508 (whether a train could have been stopped after a certain time); 1895, Simon v. State, 108 Ala. 27, 18 So. 731 (a blow as the cause of death); 1900, Littleton v. State, 128 Ala. 31, 29 So. 390 (what kind of instrument caused a wound); 1903, Kansas C. M. & B. R. Co. v. Weeks, 135 Ala. 614, 34 So. 16 (whether a train could be seen); 1904, Kroell v. State, the final result of the litigation in hand, have done less actual harm to justice than others have done.

139 Ala. 1, 36 So. 1025 (whether a quick succession of shots could have been fired by the same person, allowed); 1904, Sims v. State, 139 Ala. 74, 36 So. 138 (that a wound was fatal, allowed); 1904, Dixon v. State, 139 Ala. 104, 36 So. 784 (whether defendant's physical condition was such that he could have travelled, killed G., etc., allowed); 1904, Nickles v. State, — Ala. —, 37 So. 312 (whether there was time to return from a place, not allowed); 1904, Southern R. Co. v. Bonner, 141 Ala. 517, 37 So. 702 (how far a headlight could have been seen, allowed); 1906, Foley v. Pioneer M. & M. Co., 144 Ala. 178, 40 So. 273 (cause of death, allowed); 1907, Dupree v. State, 148 Ala. 620, 42 So. 1004 (whether it was possible to break a lock in a certain way, not allowed). 1913, Republic Iron & S. Co. v. Passafume, 181 Ala. 463, 61 So. 327 (whether a man could have been seen from a certain point, not allowed); 1914, Birmingham E. & B. R. Co. v. Williams, 190 Ala. 53, 66 So. 653 (cutting a fire hose; whether the building would otherwise have been saved, allowed; this is indeed a Daniel come to judgment, in comparison with other rulings; let us hope that more and more this common sense will be given sway); 1916, Lusk v. Britton, 198 Ala. 245, 73 So. 492 (cause of pain after a fall, allowed); 1918, Supreme Lodge v. Gustin, 202 Ala. 246, 80 So. 84 (whether an electrical apparatus was the proximate cause of a death, allowed); 1920, Standard Cooperage Co. v. Dearborn, 204 Ala. 553, 86 So. 537 ("Was the narrowness of that plank what caused you to slip?", not allowed; this might serve as a standing example of the artificial silliness of the Opinion rule); 1920, Lundy v. State, 17 Ala. App. 454, 85 So. 819 (cause of death, allowed); 1922, Central of Ga. R. Co. v. Robertson — Ala. —, 91 So. 459 ("what in your judgment caused that rail to break?" not allowed).

Arkansas: 1908, Kansas C. S. R. Co. v. Henrie, 87 Ark. 443, 112 S. W. 967 (whether a coupling if in good repair would have operated properly, allowed).

California: 1870, Grigsby v. Water Co., 40 Cal. 405 (whether backwater would be caused by a dam); 1884, Bland v. R. Co., 65 Cal. 627, 4 Pac. 672 (physical injury as the effect of an accident); 1896, Tate v. Fratt, 112 Cal. 613, 44 Pac. 1061 (which of two buildings was apparently first constructed); 1896, People v. Worden, 113 Cal. 569, 45 Pac. 844 (whether a track obstruction would have been seen, excluded); 1897, People v. Hill, 116 Cal. 562, 48 Pac. 711 (probable position of an assailant, as indicated by the wound's location, excluded); 1897, People v. Baldwin, 117 Cal. 244, 49 Pac. 186 (whether the appearances of a rape could have resulted from a conceded situation of the defendant); 1898, People v. Milner, 122 Cal. 171, 54 Pac. 833 (probable position of a gun, excluded); 1899, People v. Valliere, 123 Cal. 576, 56 Pac. 433 (whether a weapon could kill a man); 1899, People v. Farley, 124 Cal. 594, 57 Pac. 571 (by a surgeon, that the deceased's arm must have been by his side, and that he could not have been standing up, excluded); 1903, Kahn v. Triest-Rosenberg Co., 139 Cal. 340, 73 Pac. 164 (whether a danger could have been detected; exclusion held proper on the facts); 1909, Perkins v. Sunset Tel. & T. Co., 155 Cal. 712, 103 Pac. 190 (whether a fall or a blow could have caused certain injuries, allowed); 1913, Foley v. Northern Cal. P. Co., 165 Cal. 103, 130 Pac. 1183 ("What was the cause of his death?" allowed); 1918, Lernley v. Doak Gas Engine Co., 40 Cal. App. 146, 180 Pac. 671 (cause of a fly-wheel breaking, allowed).

Colorado: 1895, Colorado M. & I. Co. v. Rees, 21 Colo. 435, 42 Pac. 42 (whether the light sufficed for showing whether an elevator was in place); 1915, Bulger v. People, 60 Colo. 165, 151 Pac. 937 (effect of a bullet in the head, to produce insanity; not decided).

Columbia (District): 1881, Guiteau's Trial, I, 265 ("Was that wound a mortal wound, and was it the cause of the death of President Garfield?" "In my judgment it was a mortal wound, and was the cause of the death of President Garfield").

Connecticut: 1875, Clinton v. Howard, 42 Conn. 294 (tendency of a pile of stones to frighten horses).

Florida: 1902, Jones v. State, 44 Fla. 74, 32 So. 793 (necessary position of the person shooting, excluded); 1904, Clemons v. State, 48 Fla. 9, 37 So. 647 (whether a wound could have been caused by a fist, allowed).

Georgia: 1878, Everett v. State, 62 Ga. 71 (whether a wound was the cause of death; whether it could have been self-inflicted); 1895, Georgia R. & B. Co. v. Hicks, 95 Ga. 301, 22 S. E. 613 (the probable effect of the fall of a piece of iron pipe in injuring a person holding it); 1900, Perry v. State, 110 Ga. 234, 36 S. E. 781 (that a weapon was likely to produce death); 1904, Central of Ga. R. Co. v. Goodwin, 120 Ga. 83, 47 S. E. 641 (whether a man could work at a place without seeing a certain thing, excluded); 1904, Moran v. State, 120 Ga. 846, 48 S. E. 324 (whether a weapon was one likely to produce death, the weapon being in court, excluded); 1909, Pride v. State, 133 Ga. 438, 66 S. E. 259 (whether the witness could have seen a person in a certain position, allowed).

Illinois: 1892, Chicago M. & S. P. R. Co. v. O'Sullivan, 143 Ill. 48, 57, 32 N. E. 398 (whether the deceased could have seen the

It should be added that Courts sometimes misapply the Opinion rule to enforce the doctrine of Torts that a recovery for future personal injuries engine, allowable in discretion); 1897, Chatsworth v. Rowe, 166 Ill. 114, 46 N. E. 763 (cause of a corporal injury); 1897, Brink's Express Co. v. Kinnare, 168 Ill. 643, 48 N. E. 446 (whether a driver could have stopped in time to avoid injury, excluded); 1900, Hellyer v. People, 186 Ill. 550, 58 N. E. 245 (whether death by blow from railroad train could be caused without producing other injuries, not allowed); 1901, Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Lewondowski, 190 Ill. 301, 60 N. E. 497 (whether a person could live after being struck by a locomotive at a certain speed, not allowed); 1904, Illinois C. R. Co. v. Smith, 208 Ill. 608, 70 N. E. 628 (to a physician, whether the twisting of the plaintiff's foot had been caused by an even or an uneven surface, held improper, chiefly on the ground that it asked what "did cause," not what "might have caused"; this is a good example of that legal quibbling which creates for the law of trials a disrespect in the minds of competent physicians); 1907, Chicago v. Didier, 227 Ill. 571, 81 N. E. 698 (whether the injury was produced by the alleged cause, and not merely could or might have been, allowed; cases reviewed); 1907, Chicago Union T. Co. v. Ertrachter, 228 Ill. 114, 81 N. E. 816 (Chicago v. Didier followed); 1907, Chicago Union Traction Co. v. Roberts, 229 Ill. 481, 82 N. E. 401 (a question, on hypothetical data, whether the medical expert would believe the plaintiff's "present condition was due to traumatism or other causes," allowed; Dunn, J.: "It is entirely immaterial whether the witness testified that the injury was the cause of the condition, or that the injury was sufficient to cause the condition or might have caused it. . . . The question may be asked in either form"; Chicago v. Didier, supra, followed; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Smith, supra, distinguished; this seemed to mark a definite and wholesome abandonment of the quibbling rule emphasized in Ill. C. R. Co. v. Smith and in the decisions of certain other States); 1908, Shaughnessy v. Holt, 236 Ill. 485, 86 N. E. 256 (personal injury; Didier and Roberts cases followed); 1908, People v. Hagenow, 236 Ill. 514, 86 N. E. 370 (abortion; similar ruling); 1912, Schlauder v. Chicago & S. T. Co., 253 Ill. 154, 97 N. E. 233 (whether the plaintiff was permanently injured "as a result of that accident," held improper, there being a dispute as to the fact of injury by the defendant and as to the cause of her present condition; purporting to follow Chicago v. Didier); 1913, Lyons v. Chicago City R. Co., 258 Ill. 75, 101 N. E. 211 (a physician's opinion, as to the cause of a bloodshot eye, etc., that "he might have a fracture of the anterior fossa," held inadmissible; this is a strange reaction to over-strictness; such cautious statements are unavoidable for honest medical witnesses); 1913, People v. Schultz, 260 Ill. 35, 102 N. E. 1045 (opinion that specific inflamed condition resulted from a rape, excluded; another of those rulings which make the medical profession jeer at the law; what had become of the Roberts Case, supra?); 1916, Fellows-Kimbrough v. Chicago City R. Co., 272 Ill. 71, 111 N. E. 499 (hypothetical state of facts, with the question "What was the cause of the neurasthenia and the tumor?" and the answer, "The tumor resulted from the bruise," held improper; citing Ill. C. R. Co. v. Smith, Keefe v. Armour & Co., and People v. Schultz; distinguishing Schlauder v. Chicago & S. T. Co. and Chicago v. Didier on the ground that they apply only where "there is no dispute as to the manner and cause of the injury, and no dispute that there was an injury sustained by reason of the acts"; unsound; if there is no dispute as to the cause, why take testimony on the point; Chicago U. T. Co. v. Ertrachter not cited; the error arises from a misquotation of Chicago v. Didier, beginning in Schlauder v. T. Co.: the Didier opinion allowed such a question "where there is no dispute as to the manner of the injury," which makes a tenable distinction); 1917, Heineke v. Chicago R. Co., 279 Ill. 210, 116 N. E. 761 (personal injury; whether "that might have been caused by an accident or otherwise," to a physician, held allowable; there being "no dispute as to the manner of the injury or the cause thereof"; following Fellows-Kimbrough v. Chicago C. R. Co.); 1919, Hanrahan v. Chicago, 289 Ill. 400, 124 N. E. 547 (whether a later malady "was caused by" the original injury, allowed where the fact, manner and cause of the original injury are undisputed; following the language and the distinction of Fellows-Kimbrough v. R. Co., which now becomes the new starting-point); 1920, International Coal & Mining Co. v. Industrial Commission, 293 Ill. 524, 127 N. E. 703 (that an injury would be permanent, excluded); 1920, Davis v. Michigan Central R. Co., 294 Ill. 355, 128 N. E. 539 (the couplers would not have coupled if plaintiff had not kicked, etc., allowed); 1922, Walsh v. Chicago R. Co., 303 Ill. 339, 135 N. E. 709 (whether "the hernia was caused by an injury to the abdomen," allowed because the answer "did not in any way specify whether the hernia was caused by this accident or by some other accident"; this delectable addition to the menu of quiddities on this subject in this State is novel and deserves patronage).

Indiana: 1868, Indianapolis v. Huffer, 30 Ind. 237 (capacity of a sewer); 1882, Bennett v. Needham, 83 Ind. 568 (whether a ditch would injure public health); 1893, Davidson v. State, 135 Ind. 254, 261, 34 N. E. 972 (whether a wound would produce death); must include only the certain or fairly probable, but not the merely possible, consequences; so that the judge instead of covering the subject by an in-1899, Rains v. State, 152 Ind. 69, 52 N. E. 450 (whether a pistol could injure at a certain distance, excluded).

Iowa: 1868, State v. Vincent, 24 Ia. 570, 576 (impossibility of identifying a severed human head on account of physical changes, excluded); 1871, State v. Morphy, 33 Ia. 272 (blow as the cause of death); 1871, State v. Porter, 34 Ia. 133 (same); 1875, Moreland v. Mitchell Co., 40 Ia. 401 (likelihood of horses being frightened); 1876, Cooper v. Central R. Co., 44 Ia. 141 (effect of a locomotive in striking a cow); 1876, Hughes v. Muscatine Co., 44 Ia. 676 (cause of a bridge falling, excluded); 1879, Kline v. R. Co., 50 Ia. 569 (effect of an injury as to disability to work, excluded; but actual ability to work, allowed); 1882, Allen v. R. Co., 57 Ia. 623, 11 N. W. 614 (probable life of timber); 1883, Yahn v. Ottumwa, 60 Ia. 432, 15 N. W. 257 (cause of horse's fright); 1885, Moore v. R. Co., 65 Ia. 508, 22 N. W. 650 (ability to perform work, excluded); 1885, Whitsett v. R. Co., 67 Ia. 154, 25 N. W. 104 (effect of a sudden increase of speed); 1885, State v. Cross, 68 Ia. 192, 26 N. W. 62 (effect of a shot on flesh); 1886, State v. Hackett, 70 Ia. 451, 30 N. W. 742 (effect of fits, excluded); 1887, Forcheimer v. Stewart, 73 Ia. 218, 32 N. W. 665, 35 N. W. 148 (whether hams would endure transportation); 1887, State v. Rainsbarger, 74 Ia. 204, 37 N. W. 153 (cause of wounds, excluded); 1895, State v. Seymore, 94 Ia. 699, 63 N. W. 661 (cause of a wound); 1899, Brownfield v. R. Co., 107 Ia. 254, 77 N. W. 1038 (whether a broken axle might have derailed a train); 1900, State v. Peterson, 111 Ia. 647, 82 N. W. 329 (whether intercourse against a woman's consent was possible, excluded); 1901, Trott v. R. Co., 115 Ia. 80, 86 N. W. 33 (whether an injury could have been received with blocked switches); 1903, Sachra v. Manilla, 120 Ia. 562, 95 N. W. 198 (probable or possible cause of a corporal injury); 1905, Rietveld v. Wabash R. Co., 129 Ia. 249, 105 N. W. 515 (whether a railroad track could be seen, allowed); 1906, Martin v. Des Moines E. L. Co., 131 Ia. 724, 106 N. W. 359 (death of an employee in an electric light plant; the defendant claimed that heart disease caused death; a question to an expert, whether the deceased "received an electrical shock before he fell," was held improper; this ruling reaches an extreme of artificial aridity of law; such decisions show the need of a spiritual irrigation-law, for re-distributing the fountains of Justice); 1906, Kesselring v. Hummer, 130 Ia. 145, 106 N. W. 501 (State v. Peterson, supra, followed; whether conception would be probable upon first intercourse, excluded); 1909, Gray v. Chicago R. I. & P. R. Co., 143 Ia. 268, 121 N. W. 1097 (whether a person could be seen, allowed); 1912, Sever v. Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co., 156 Ia. 664, 137 N. W. 937 (physician's opinion as to the probable cause of an injury, excluded; the opinion shows an inclination to admit, but feels bound by many precedents to exclude; it states: "Having so many times announced the rule for this State, . . . we do not feel like changing it at this time, thus introducing confusion in the cases"; for rules of evidence, the celebrated sentiment of Erskine should rather be accepted: "No precedents can sanction injustice; if they could, every human right would long ago have been extinct upon the earth"; the precise kind of ruling above, common enough in other States also, is one of the most frequent obstructions to truth that the Opinion rule has ever produced; the "confusion in the cases," which the Court fears, is nothing like as fearsome as the obfuscation and unreason which such a rule fixes into the law); 1913, Estes v. Chicago B. & Q. R. Co., 159 Ia. 666, 141 N. W. 49 (cause of a river-bar, allowed); 1913, State v. Wilson, 157 Ia. 698, 146 N. W. 337 (whether a wounded person could have walked, etc., allowed); 1914, State v. Hessenius 165 Ia. 415, 146 N. W. 58 ("What in your opinion caused the death?" allowed); 1915, State v. Gindice, 170 Ia. 731, 153 N. W. 336 (whether a wound might have been inflicted by a razor, etc., allowed, there being no eye witnesses); 1918, Brier v. Chicago R. I. & P. R. Co., 183 Ia. 1212, 168 N. W. 539 (whether a wound caused pain, allowed).

Kansas: 1888, Ball v. Hardesty, 38 Kan. 542 16 Pac. 808 (whether backwater was caused by the defendant's act); 1889, State v. Jones, 41 Kan. 309, 21 Pac. 265 (indications of a gunshot wound as to the probable distance of the assailant); 1898, Erb v. Popritz, 59 Kan. 264, 52 Pac. 871 (whether a derailment was the result of a defective track; excluded); 1905, Sun. Ins Office v. Western W. M. Co., 72 Kan. 41, 82 Pac. 513 (whether wet wool was capable of spontaneous combustion, allowed); 1912, State v. Buck, 88 Kan. 114, 127 Pac. 631 ("an opinion upon the cause of death . . . is admissible").

Kentucky: 1920, Midkiff v. Carter, 188 Ky. 339, 222 S. W. 92 (that a ditch was not "practicable," from non-experts, excluded).

Louisiana: 1898, State v. Fontenot, 50 La. An. 537, 23 So. 634 (whether cuts in clothing showed deceased's position, excluded); 1901, State v. Breaux, 104 La. 540, 29 So. 222 (how a wound could have been inflicted); 1919, State v. Sharp, 145 La. 891, 83 So. 181 (that location etc., of wound showed suicide to have been impossible, allowed).

Maine: 1835, Cottrill v. Myrick, 12 Me. 230 (whether fish would ascend a stream); 1851, State v. Smith, 32 Me. 370 (cause of death); 1857, State v. Knight, 43 Me. 130 (kind of weapon causing a wound; whether a wound struction to the jury as to the measure of recovery, excludes from evidence a physician's opinion expressed in terms of possibility only. This attempt could have been self-inflicted with the right hand); 1876, Holden v. Mfg. Co., 65 Me. 216 (whether certain logging operations were possible, excluded); 1885, Powers v. Mitchell, 77 Me. 369 (effect of blows).

Maryland: 1873, Davis v. State, 38 Md. 38 (whether an accidental fall might have caused the injury); 1885, Williams v. State, 64 Md. 392, 1 Atl. 887 (effect of a wound); 1889, Baltimore Turnpike v. State, 71 Md. 584, 18 Atl. 884 (whether a wagon would frighten horses, excluded; here the witness had not seen the wagon and was asked hypothetically); 1898, Baltimore C. P. R. Co. v. Cooney, 87 Md. 261, 39 Atl. 859 (whether a person could ride in a certain way on a car); 1900, Baltimore City P. R. Co. v. Tanner, 90 Md. 315, 45 Atl. 188 (whether the plaintiff's deafness was the natural and probable result of the accident); 1909, Consolidated G. E. L. & P. Co. v. State, 109 Md. 186, 72 Atl. 651 (whether a lineman could know of danger in wires, excluded; another backward turn given to the Wheel of the Law).

Massachusetts: 1851, New England Glass Co. v. Lovell, 7 Cush. 321 (whether goods could have been lost out of a vessel's hold, if stowed there, excluded); 1852, Cook v. Castner, 9 Cush. 274 (whether a timber could have been taken off without seeing the decay beneath); 1856, Com. v. Cooley, 6 Gray 352, 354 (by a bystander, who heard nothing, whether he was likely to hear anything if said, excluded); 1856, Robinson v. R. Co., 7 Gray 93, 96 (as to the only feasible approach to a place, excluded); 1860, Seaver v. R. Co., 14 Gray 471 (derailment accident); 1861, Parsons v. Ins. Co., 16 Gray 467 (cause of a leak); 1876, Com. v. Piper, 120 Mass. 190 (effect of blows on the body); 1896, Com. v. Flynn, 165 Mass. 153, 42 N. E. 562 (whether a person could have been seen); 1897, Tremblay v. M. R. C. Co., 169 Mass. 284, 47 N. E. 1010 (whether an arch would have fallen under certain conditions); 1899, Knight v. Overman W. Co., 174 Mass. 455, 54 N. E. 890 (whether a strain was produced on a pulley); 1900, Welch v. R. Co., 176 Mass. 393, 57 N. E. 668 (how far a voice could be heard in a storm, excluded); 1902, Lawlor v. Wolff, 180 Mass. 448, 62 N. E. 973 (possibility of rape against consent, excluded); 1904, Baxter v. Gormley, 186 Mass. 168, 71 N. E. 575 (by a complainant in bastardy, that the defendant was the father of her child, allowed); 1905, Gones v. New Bedford Co., 187 Mass. 124, 72 N. E. 840 (whether one's hand could be caught in a gear, if covered, allowed); 1906, Erickson v. American S. & W. Co., 193 Mass. 119, 78 N. E. 761 (cause of bursting of a steam-pipe, allowed); 1918, Duggan v. Bay State St. R. Co., 230 Mass. 370, 119 N. E. 757 (personal injury; "what would you say was the cause of the accident," excluded); 1919, Morrissey v. Connecticut Valley St. R. Co., 233 Mass. 554, 124 N. E. 435 (how far the sound of a street-car could be heard on a particular night, held "not necessarily incompetent").

Michigan: 1871, Gilbert v. Kennedy, 22 Mich. 136 (cattle-feeding; estimated growth in weight of cattle); 1874, People v. Morrigan, 29 Mich. 7 (whether a theft could have been committed in a certain way, excluded); 1875, People v. Clark, 33 Mich. 119 (physical possibility of sexual intercourse); 1876, Underwood v. Waldron, 33 Mich. 233 (action of water upon mortar in a wall, under certain circumstances); 1878, Brownell v. People, 38 Mich. 735 (effect of a pistol shot at certain distances, excluded); 1885, People v. Hare, 57 Mich. 512, 24 N. W. 843 ("What caused the wound," disallowed, but "What might have caused it" was declared proper; because "what did cause it was the real question for the jury"; in other words, the more useful, the less admissible); 1886, People v. Sessions, 58 Mich. 597, 26 N. W. 291 (cause of death or injury); 1897, Bettys v. Denver Tp., 115 Mich. 228, 73 N. W. 138 (effect of loosening brace-timbers); 1902, Furbush v. Maryland C. Co., 131 Mich. 234, 91 N. W. 135 (whether a body could have fallen, etc., not allowed); 1885, Geveke v. G. R. & I. R. Co., 57 Mich. 277, 24 N. W. 675 (what caused a horse's fright, allowed); 1894, McCullough v. R. Co., 101 Mich. 234, 59 N. W. 618 (same); 1905, Foster v. East Jordan L. Co., 141 Mich. 316, 104 N. W. 617 (what caused a horse's fright, allowed); 1909, Potter v. Grand Trunk W. R. Co., 157 Mich. 216, 121 N. W. 808 (possibility of emission of sparks, allowed); 1914, People v. Macgregor, 178 Mich. 436, 144 N. W. 869 (whether arsenic was the cause of a death, allowed); 1917, Tonn v. Michigan C. R. Co., 195 Mich. 645, 162 N. W. 272 (that a properly equipped engine would not throw sparks, etc., allowed).

Minnesota: 1875, Hathaway v. Brown, 22 Minn. 214 (whether a conversation could have been had between two other persons in the same room, without the witness knowing it, excluded); 1881, Krippner v. Bieble, 28 Minn. 139, 9 N. W. 671 (probable spread of a stubble fire); 1885, Davidson v. R. Co., 34 Minn. 55, 24 N. W. 324 (probable size and effect of locomotive sparks); 1893, Watson v. R. Co., 53 Minn. 551, 554, 55 N. W. 742 (within what distance a car could be stopped); 1897, Hamberg v. Ins. Co., 68 Minn. 335, 71 N. W. 388 (whether a fire could have occurred without certain results, excluded); 1897, Donnelly v. R. Co., 70 Minn. 278, 73 N. W. 157 (cause of certain ailments, or their possible cause); 1897, Joyce v. R. Co., 70 Minn. 339, 73 N. W.

to control the course of expert testimony is of course unreasonable in itself. But its unsoundness becomes the more notable when the same Court is 158 (same); 1899, Fonda v. R. Co., 77 Minn. 336, 79 N. W. 1043 (whether a team would have been seen from a certain point, admitted; "Hathaway v. Brown . . . seems to have become generally ignored by the Bar"); 1902, Akin v. St. Croix L. Co., 88 Minn. 119, 92 N. W. 537 (cause of an overflow of water, excluded).

Missouri: 1895, State v. Gates, 130 Mo. 351, 32 S. W. 971 (whether the defendant could have put an article in the room during witness' absence, excluded); 1899, State v. McLaughlin, 149 Mo. 19, 50 S. W. 315 (how far one could walk with a bullet through his heart); 1899, Olsen v. R. Co., 152 Mo. 426, 54 S. W. 470 (how far a gong could be heard); 1904, Wood v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 181 Mo. 433, 81 S. W. 152 (whether an injury was the cause of a disease, allowed; good opinion by Gantt, P. J.); 1904, Redmon v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 185 Mo. 1, 84 S. W. 26 (similar); 1905, Taylor v. Grand Ave. R. Co., 185 Mo. 239, 84 S. W. 873 (whether certain injuries "might, could, or would result in paralysis," allowed, but not whether, in the particular patient as examined by the physician, the injuries were the cause of paralysis; this quibble is justified by the following refined distinction: "To the trained legal mind there is a very essential difference between permitting an expert to give an opinion and permitting him to draw a conclusion"; to which it may be said that if the "trained legal mind" signifies one which has been infected by the rabies of such quibbling, then the community now urgently needs a Pasteur process which shall stay the ravages of such an affliction in the profession); 1905, Glasgow v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., 191 Mo. 347, 89 S. W. 915 (corporal injury; "it was competent for the learned witnesses to state what cause or causes might produce such a result, . . . but it was incompetent for them to say that in this case the plaintiff's condition was in their opinion the result of the alleged fall," and then a long critique on the tweedledum and tweedledee of this distinction; it is singular that learned judges become so absorbed in the wild fancies of the Opinion rule that their common sense is buried for the purposes of justice); 1907, Smart v. Kansas City, 208 Mo. 162, 105 S. W. 709 (whether a fall did cause a necessity for amputation, and not merely was a sufficient cause, therefore, improper); 1911, State v. Hyde, 234 Mo. 200, 136 S. W. 316 (murder by poison; "what that man died from," excluded; another of these absurd and unpractical muzzlings of experts); 1911, McAnany v. Henrici, 238 Mo. 103, 141 S. W. 633 (whether a crack in a molding must have existed, not allowed; an old-fashioned opinion, typical of hundreds, which resemble a stern practical judicial determination to get at the actual facts as much as a child's game of "muggins" resembles the destiny-directing diplomacy of Bismarck); 1915, Thorp v. Metropolitan St. R. Co., — Mo. —, 177 S. W. 851 (whether a fall might have produced the injury, allowed); 1915, Deiner v. Sutermeister, 266 Mo. 505, 178 S. W. 757 (whether a blow could have caused insanity, allowed); 1921, Mahany v. Kansas C. R. Co., 286 Mo. 601, 228 S. W. 821 (whether a limp would be permanent; "possible" result, excluded); 1922, Maloney v. United Railways Co., — Mo. —, 237 S. W. 509 (by a physician, whether certain acts could have produced certain physical conditions, allowed, but not whether they did produce them).

Montana: 1899, Bramlett v. Flick, 23 Mont. 95, 57 Pac. 869 (whether a skilled surveyor could locate a claim by a certain description, excluded); 1919, Kelley v. John R. Daily Co., 56 Mont. 63, 181 Pac. 326 (medical expert, as to cause of illness allowed).

Nebraska: 1877, Curry v. State, 5 Nebr. 417 (probable result of personal injuries); 1895, Gran v. Houston, 45 Nebr. 813, 64 N. W. 245 (cause of death); 1898, Missouri P. R. Co. v. Fox, 56 Nebr. 746, 77 N. W. 130 (how a wound could have been inflicted, excluded); 1903, Fruit Dispatch Co. v. Murray, — Nebr. —, 96 N. W. 83 (effect of shipping decayed with sound fruit); 1905, Horst v. Lewis, 71 Nebr. 365, 103 N. W. 460 (whether wounds were sufficient to cause death, allowed); 1914, Clawson v. State, 96 Nebr. 499, 148 N. W. 524 (by a doctor, whether a wound could have been made as described by the defendant, allowed; three judges diss.); 1915, Neal v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 98 Nebr. 460, 153 N. W. 492 (where a fire started, excluded).

Nevada: 1882, McLeod v. Lee, 17 Nev. 122, 28 N. W. 124 (a dam as the cause of an overflow); 1903, State v. Buralli, 27 Nev. 41, 71 Pac. 532 (probable position of assailant from appearance of wound); 1915, McLeod v. Miller & Lux, 40 Nev. 447, 153 Pac. 566, 167 Pac. 27 (cause of damage to land, excluded).

New Hampshire: 1854, Patterson v. Colebrook, 29 N. H. 101 (cause of an accident, excluded); 1896, Folsom v. R. Co., 68 N. H. 454, 38 Atl. 209 (likelihood of a train frightening a horse in a certain position); 1900, Parent v. Nashua Mfg. Co., 70 N. H. 199, 47 Atl. 261 (cause of a loom accident; excluded, the data not having been proved); 1902, State v. Greenleaf, 71 N. H. 606, 54 Atl. 38 (probable force and number of blows as inferred from bodily appearance).

New Jersey: 1855, Cook v. State, 24 N. J. L. 852 (feasibility of a rape under certain circumstances, excluded); 1863, Read v. Barker, 30 N. J. 379 (capacity of a mill); 1868, Castner v. Sliker, 33 N. J. 97 (cause of an found ruling, in another line of precedents, that the physician may express an opinion as to what might have caused an injury, but not as to what did injury); 1895, New Jersey Traction Co. v. Brabban, 57 N. J. 691, 32 Atl. 217 (possibility of standing by the aid of an artificial leg, excluded; yet expert evidence of the feasibility of working at a trade was declared proper).

New Mexico: 1905, Miera v. Terr., 13 N. M. 192, 81 Pac. 586 (that a wound was not self-inflicted, allowed).

New York: 1840, Mayor v. Pentz, 24 Wend. 673 (whether a fire would have destroyed a building if it had not been blown up, excluded); 1854, Woodin v. People, 1 Park, Cr. C. 466 (whether a rape could in certain conditions be committed, excluded); 1865, Walsh v. Ins. Co., 32 N. Y. 443 (cause of a ship's loss); 1873, Van Zandt v. Ins. Co., 55 N. Y. 179 (whether a suicide should be attributed to melancholia); 1874, Eggler v. People, 56 N. Y. 642 (whether a particular wound was the cause of death); 1890, Young v. Johnson, 123 N. Y. 232, 25 N. E. 363 (first intercourse and possibilities of pregnancy); 1899, Cole v. Fall Brook, C. Co., 159 N. Y. 59, 53 N. E. 670 (what symptoms would ordinarily and necessarily accompany an injury); 1899, Parish v. Baird, 160 N. Y. 302, 54 N. E. 724 (whether flagstones could be broken in a certain way, excluded); 1901, Peck v. R. Co., 165 N. Y. 347, 59 N. E. 206 (whether sparks capable of setting fire could be thrown a certain distance, etc.); 1901, People v. Schmidt, 168 N. Y. 568, 61 N. E. 907 (whether a blow could have caused an injury); 1905, Schutz v. Union R. Co., 181 N. Y. 33, 73 N. E. 491 (cause of a derailment, excluded; whether a car could leave the track if properly laid, etc., not allowed); 1910, People v. Fiorentino, 197 N. Y. 560, 91 N. E. 195 (to a defendant, on an issue of self-defence; "Why is your coat cut and there are no cuts on your body?" allowed; sensible opinion); 1911, McRorie v. Monroe, 203 N. Y. 426, 96 N. E. 724 (capacity of a vehicle to make a turn in a certain space, allowed); 1914, Marx v. Ontario B. H. & A. Co., 211 N. Y. 33, 105 N. E. 97 ("Did this blow cause the injuries?" not allowed).

North Carolina: 1851, State v. Clark, 12 Ired. 152 (how a wound had been made); 1886, State v. Morgan, 95 N. C. 642 (possibility of other modes of killing, as indicated by certain appearances); 1900, Burney v. Allen, 127 N. C. 476, 37 S. E. 501 (whether the testator could have seen the witnesses signing); 1901, State v. McDowell, 129 N. C. 523, 39 S. E. 840 (whether it was light enough to recognize deceased); 1903, Cogdell v. R. Co., 132 N. C. 852, 44 S. E. 618 (whether a plank could have borne a man, excluded); 1903, State v. Wilcox, 132 N. C. 1120, 44 S. E. 625 (cause of a wound); 1903, Summerlin v. R. Co., 133 N. C. 550, 45 S. E. 898 (where an injury could have been caused by a certain fall, excluded on the facts); 1911, Deppe v. Atlantic C. L. R. Co. 154 N. C. 523, 70 S. E. 622 (whether steam pipes were the cause of a fire, not allowed).

North Dakota: 1896, Tullis v. Rankin, 6 N. D. 44, 68 N. W. 187 (malpractice; cause of the condition of the limb); 1903, Balding v. Andrews, 12 N. D. 267, 96 N. W. 305 ("the fire must have come that way," excluded); 1904, Meehan v. Great Northern R. Co., 13 N. D. 432, 101 N. W. 183 (cause of a coupling's breaking, not allowed); 1920, Larson v. Russell, — N. D. —, 176, N. W. 998 (personal injury in the nature of spinal neurosis; to a medical expert, "Has it been your experience in many of these cases that if there was a verdict for the plaintiff the party recovered and would walk?", allowed).

Ohio: 1850, Stewart v. State, 19 Oh. 302, 307 (whether there was time enough for an assailed person to get out of the way); 1877, Insurance Co. v. Tobin, 32 Oh. St. 91 (possibility of loss of vessel in a certain way); 1897, Pittsburg C. C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Sheppard, 56 Oh. St. 68, 46 N. E. 61 (effectiveness of the hammer-test as a means of detecting breaks in car-wheels).

Oklahoma: 1899, Boston v. Hewitt, 8 Okl. 401, 58 Pac. 619 (effect of filling a well with stone); 1913, Miller v. State, 9 Okl. Cr. 255 131 Pac. 717 (that death was caused by strangulation, allowed).

Oregon: 1873, State v. Glass, 5 Or. 79 (cause of death); 1882, State v. Anderson, 10 Or. 455 (probability of an accidental shooting in a company of hunters, excluded); 1898, State v. Barrett, 33 Or. 194, 54, Pac. 807 (probable position of a body, excluded); 1906, State v. White, 48 Or. 416, 87 Pac. 137 (what caused an injured man's condition, allowed).

Pennsylvania: 1839, Wilt v. Vickers, 8 Watts, 228 (whether an injury would probably heal); 1849, Detweiler v. Groff, 10 Pa. St. 376 (possibility of working a mill with a certain height of water); 1865, Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Henderson, 51 Pa. 321 (length of probable useful survival of deceased father); 1869, Sorg v. Congregation, 63 Pa. 161 (cause of the fall of a wall); 1876, Continental Ins. Co. v. Delpeuch, 82 Pa. 236 (action of water currents); 1893, Com. v. Crossmire, 156 Pa. 304, 309, 27 Atl. 40 (cause of death).

Rhode Island: 1898, McGeary v. R. Co., 21 R. I. 76, 41 Atl. 1007 (whether a witness was in a position to be able to hear signals, excluded).

South Carolina: 1900, State v. Taylor, 57 S. C. 483, 35 S. E. 729 (whether a cry of distress could have been heard, excluded); 1903, Stembridge v. Southern R. Co., 65 S. C. 440, 43 S. E. 968 (whether an injury would probably affect other parts of the body); 1903, State v. Johnson, 66 S. C. 23, 44 S. E.

cause it. In other words, possibility, as affecting consequences, is tabooed, and only actuality is to be accepted; but possibility, as affecting causes, is sanctioned, while actuality is tabooed.

58 (whether wounds could have been caused in a certain way); 1903, Riser v. Southern R. Co., 67 S. C. 419, 46 S. E. 47 (whether a certain shock produced a certain injury, excluded); 1905, Biggers v. Catawba P. Co., 72 S. C. 264, 51 S. E. 882 (whether the danger could have been avoided, etc., allowed); 1906, Nickles v. Seaboard A. L. R. Co., 74 S. C. 102, 54 S. E. 254, 255 (cause of a derailment, excluded); 1906, Fitzgerald v. Langley Mfg. Co., 74 S. C. 232, 54 S. E. 373 (cause of the shifting of a pulley-belt, excluded); 1911, Hand v. Catawba Power Co., 90 S. C. 281, 73 S. E. 186 (that a dam caused destruction of water-power, allowed).

South Dakota: 1900, Olson v. R. Co., 12 S. D. 326, 81 N. W. 634 (whether a pin could have been pulled without injury, excluded); 1905, Klingaman v. Fish & H. Co., 19 S. D. 139, 102 N. W. 601 (how long an injured condition would continue, allowed).

Tennessee: 1835, Burns v. Welch, 8 Yerg. 119 (capacity of saw-mill); 1903, Cumberland T. & T. Co. v. Dooley, 110 Tenn. 104, 72 S. W. 457 (whether a fire could have been controlled but for an explosion, not allowed); 1914, Cumberland Tel. & Tel. Co. v. Peacher Mill Co., 129 Tenn. 374, 164 S. W. 1145 (whether a fire was "probably due to the lightning," etc., not allowed for an electrical expert; whether a certain cause "could or might produce the condition" is allowable, but not whether it "probably did"; and so the Law again slams the door in the face of Science).

Texas: 1870, Shelton v. State, 34 Tex. 666 (cause of death); 1889, Fort Worth & D. C. R. Co. v. Thompson, 75 Tex. 503, 12 S. W. 742 (cause of a derailment); 1908, Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. v. Wagner, 50 Tex. Civ. App. 233, 109 S. W. 1120 (whether a wound was self-inflicted, excluded, but whether it was made with a pen-knife, admitted; another case of tweedledum and tweedledee); 1912, Freeman v. Grashel, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 145 S. W. 695 (whether a floor depression was due to uneven rolling of wheels, allowed).

Vermont: 1846, Clifford v. Richardson, 18 Vt. 626 (probable amount of work done by a mill); 1862, Fairchild v. Bascomb, 35 Vt. 407 (effect of disease); 1868, Cavendish v. Troy, 41 Vt. 107 (possibility of a fact having occurred without coming to the witness' knowledge); 1885, Carpenter v. Corinth, 58 Vt. 216 (mode in which a bit could have broken, excluded); 1886, Bemis v. Bishop, 58 Vt. 640 (sufficiency of a machine for work); 1884, Johnson v. R. Co., 56 Vt. 708 (capacity to labor); 1898, State v. Nookes, 70 Vt. 247, 40 Atl. 249 (whether an infant's skull could be fractured by hand-pressure); 1899, Baker v. Sherman, 71 Vt. 439, 46 Atl. 57 (whether it was feasible to make a road to get certain timber); 1917, Baldwin v. Gaines, 92 Vt. 61, 102 Atl. 338 (whether a leg-injury would be produced in a certain way, allowed).

Virginia: 1902, Norfolk R. & L. Co. v. Corletto, 100 Va. 355, 41 S. E. 740 (within what distance a street car could be stopped); 1904, Norfolk R. & L. Co. v. Spratley, 103 Va. 379, 49 S. E. 502 (probable effect of a corporal injury, allowed); 1911, Johnson v. Com., 111 Va. 877, 69 S. E. 1104 (what force caused an abrasion, allowed); 1916, Virginian R. Co. v. Bell, 118 Va. 492, 87 S. E. 570 (whether a blow would suffice to cause a fracture, not allowed).

Washington: 1892, Robinson v. Marino, 3 Wash. 435, 28 Pac. 752 (cause of a wound); 1913, Patrick v. Smith, 75 Wash. 407, 134 Pac. 1076 (cause of depletion of well-water).

West Virginia: 1891, Bowen v. Huntington, 35 W. Va. 693, 14 S. E. 217 (cause of an injury); 1914, State v. Wilson, 74 W. Va. 772, 83 S. E. 44 (what would be the physical effect of a nervous shock, allowed).

Wisconsin: 1849, Luning v. State, 1 Chand. 183 (effect of floods on health of neighborhood, excluded); 1864, Curtis v. R. Co., 18 Wis. 315 (effect of weather on fruit, etc.); 1866, Blair v. R. Co., 20 Wis. 262 (probable falling off of business patronage); 1870, Whitney v. R. Co., 27 Wis. 344 (liability of wool waste to spontaneous combustion); 1872, Leopold v. Van Kirk, 29 Wis. 555 (cause of goods deteriorating); 1874, Montgomery v. Scott, 34 Wis. 344 (effect of a wound upon health); 1875, Oleson v. Tolford, 37 Wis. 331 (probability of a stage-coach tipping over, excluded); 1875, Brabbits v. R. Co., 38 Wis. 293 (effect of a leaky throttle-valve); 1879, Wylie v. Wausau, 48 Wis. 507, 4 N. W. 682 (like Blair v. R. Co.); 1880, Salvo v. Duncan, 49 Wis. 157, 4 N. W. 1074 (possibility of performing a contract); 1882, Bierbach v. Rubber Co., 54 Wis. 212, 11 N. W. 514 (like Blair v. R. Co.); 1882, Noonan v. State, 55 Wis. 260, 12 N. W. 379 (rape as the cause of certain symptoms, excluded); 1884, Boyle v. State, 61 Wis. 447, 21 N. W. 289 (cause of death, as gathered from an examination of body); 1885, Rhinehart v. Whitehead, 64 Wis. 44, 24 N. W. 401 (effect of a wound); 1893, Vosbury v. Putney, 86 Wis. 278, 280, 26 N. W. 480 (cause of a corporal injury, in action for battery); 1897, Maitland v. Paper Co., 97 Wis. 476, 72 N. W. 1124 (cause of explosion of glass, excluded); 1904, Lyon v. Grand Rapids, 121 Wis. 609, 99 N. W. 311 (cause of a disease, allowed); 1904, Hallum v. Omro, 122 Wis. 337, 99 N. W. 1051

This is only one of the many instances in which the subtle mental twistings produced by the Opinion rule have reduced this part of the law to a congeries of non-sense which is comparable to the incantations of medieval sorcerers and sullies the name of Reason.

§ 1977. Measure of Distance, Time, Speed, Size, Weight, Direction, Form, Identity, and the Like. The Opinion rule has been used as a bludgeon against every conceivable sort of testimony, even against such simple statements as estimates of distance, time, size, identity, and the like. Fortunately, however, such attempts have been usually unsuccessful in that class of cases. The categories of the concededly unimpeachable subjects are variously stated by various judges; merely a more liberal tendency appears in some Courts than in others:[1]

1865, BELLOWS, J., in Whittier v. Franklin, 46 N. H. 24: "[The opinions admitted] are formed from minute peculiarities of form, shape, color, sound, etc., that cannot be described in human language, so as to convey any accurate impression of the object, and, therefore, unless opinions are received there must be a failure of evidence. When the facts and peculiarities upon which the opinion is formed can be stated and described, they must be, and it is then for the jury and not the witness to form an opinion."

1875, FOSTER, C. J., in Hardy v. Merrill, 56 N. H. 241: "All concede the admissibility of the opinions of non-professional men upon a great variety of unscientific questions arising every day and in every judicial inquiry. These are questions of identity, handwriting, quantity, value, weight, measure, time, distance, velocity, form, size, age, strength, heat, cold, sickness, and health; questions, also, concerning various mental and moral aspects of humanity, such as disposition and temper, anger, fear, excitement, intoxication, veracity, general character, and particular phases of character, and other conditions and things, both moral and physical, too numerous to mention."

1886, JOHNSTON, J., in State v. Baldwin, 36 Kan. 10, 12 Pac. 318: "Facts which are made up of a great variety of circumstances and a combination of appearances which from the infirmity of language cannot properly be described; . . . in this category may be placed matters involving magnitude or quantities, portions of time, space, motion, gravitation, value, and such as relate to the condition or appearance of persons or things."

The principal categories may be thus roughly classified:

Distance or Size, of a person, place, or thing;[2]

(that injuries "were liable to be permanent," allowed).

Wyoming: 1899, Ross v. State, 8 Wyo. 351, 57 Pac. 924 (whether a weapon would have been seen, had there been one).

§ 1977. [1] Other less comprehensive but often-quoted summaries are these: 1864, Bellows, J., in Low v. Railroad, 45 N. H. 383 ("size, weight, distance, speed, identity, sound, and the like"); 1875, Endicott, J., in Com. v. Sturtivant, 117 Mass. 122: ("Any one's opinion is receivable on a question of identity as applied to persons, things, animals, or handwriting, and in regard to size, color, weight of objects, and in estimating time and distances").

[2] In all the following citations of this and other cases in this Section the testimony was admitted, unless it is otherwise expressly noted:

Distance and Size: Ala. 1903, Rollings v. State, 136 Ala. 126, 34 So. 348 (that persons were near enough to hear abusive language); Cal. 1907, People v. Helm, 152 Cal. 532, 93 Pac. 99 (width of a bicycle track, allowed); Ga. 1900, Central of G. R. Co. v. Bond, 111 Ga. 13, 36 S. E. 299 (to what distance a railroad train would throw a person struck while on the track, not allowed for non-experts); La. 1905, State v. Voorhies, 115 La. 200, 38 So. 964 (how far the gun was from the deceased, allowed); Mass. 1863, Hovey v. Sawyer, 5 All. 554 (highest part of a hill, excluded); Mich. 1895, Walker v. R. Co., 104 Mich. 606, 62 N. W. 1032 (height); Mont. 1922, Jenkins v. Kitsen, — Mont. —, 205 Pac. 243 (cattle; opinion excluded, because not based on personal knowledge); Nebr. 1905, Turley v. State, 74 Nebr. 471, 104 N. W. 934 (com-

Time or Temperature of an occurrence or place;[3]
Direction of a sound, blow, or movement;[4]
Speed of an animal or vehicle;[5]
Identity of a person or thing.[6] parative size of boot-tracks, allowed); R. I. 1917, State v. Deslovers, 40 R. I. 89, 100 Atl. 64 (murder; height and weight of deceased); Vt. 1873, Fulsome v. Concord, 46 Vt. 140 (whether a road was wide enough for two vehicles to pass).

[3] Time and Temperature: Ala. 1853, Campbell v. State, 23 Ala. 68 (time of day); Ia. 1895, Brown v. R. Co., 94 Ia. 309, 62 N. W. 737 (dark); Wis. 1864, Curtis v. R. Co., 18 Wis. 315 (temperature); 1872, Leopold v. Van Kirk, 29 Wis. 554 (same).

[4] Direction (compare the cases cited ante, § 660): Fed. 1886, Hopt v. Utah, 120 U. S. 436, 7 Sup. 614 (direction of a blow delivered upon the body); Ala. 1886, McKee v. State, 82 Ala. 38, 2 So. 451 (direction of the blow causing a wound, excluded); Cal. 1895, People v. Chin Hane, 108 Cal. 597, 41 Pac. 697 (that a pistol-shot sounded as though fired inside a building; the direction of a bullet); 1900, People v. Clarke, 130 Cal. 642, 63 Pac. 138 (whether shots sounded from in or out of a house); Dak. 1882, Territory v. Egan, 3 Dak. 127, 13 N. W. 568 (direction of the blow causing a wound, excluded); Fla. 1917, Kersey v. State, 73 Fla. 832, 74 So. 983 (direction of a gunshot, allowed; distinguishing prior cases); Ind. Terr. 1904, Wilson v. U. S., 5 Ind. Terr. 610, 82 S. W. 924 (position of an arm when wounded; excluded); Mass. 1875, Com. v. Sturtivant, 117 Mass. 122 (direction of blood causing a stain, excluded); Miss. 1880, Dillard v. State, 58 Miss. 387 (indications in blood-marks on clothes as to position of assailant, excluded); N. H. 1866, State v. Shinborn, 46 N. H. 497 502 (direction of a sound); N. M. 1905, Miera v. Terr., 13 N. M. 192, 81 Pac. 586 (that the victim shot must have been sitting down, allowed); N. Y. 1868, Kennedy v. People, 39 N. Y. 257 (direction of a blow delivered upon the body, admitted; position of the body when struck, excluded); N. C. 1873, State v. Jones, 68 N. C. 443, semble (direction of a shot); Oh. 1849, Steamboat Clipper v. Logan, 18 Oh. 394 (direction of a blow by a colliding vessel); S. C. 1895, State v. Sullivan, 43 S. C. 205, 21 S. E. 4 (place of an assailant as shown by the wound); Tex. 1859, Cooper v. State, 23 Tex. 335 (that the assailant was not on a level with the deceased, excluded).

[5] Speed (compare the citations ante, § 571): Ala. 1895, Alabama G. S. R. Co. v. Hall, 105 Ala. 599, 17 So. 176 (train); 1903, Montgomery St. R. Co. v. Shanks, 139 Ala. 489, 37 So. 166 ("it looked very fast," allowed); Conn. 1902, Nesbit v. Crosby, 74 Conn. 554, 51 Atl. 550 (question as to the speed of a horse, judged by the sound, allowed); Ill. 1898, Illinois C. R. Co. v. Ashline, 171 Ill. 313, 49 N. E. 521 (that a train was running fast); 1899, Overtoom v. R. Co. 181 Ill. 323, 54 N. E. 898 (same); 1904, Chicago City R. Co. v. Bundy, 210 Ill. 39, 71 N. E. 28 (of a street car, allowed); 1904, Chicago City R. Co. v. Matthieson, 212 Ill. 292, 72 N. E. 443 (that a horse "ran fast and was wild," allowed); 1906, Chicago City R. Co. v. McDonough, 221 Ill. 69, 77 N. E. 577 (that a car was going "at full speed," allowed); Ind. 1886, Louisville N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Jones, 108 Ind. 565, 9 N. E. 476 (train); 1888, Evansville & T. H. R. Co. v. Crist, 116 Ind. 457, 19 N. E. 310 (train); Mich. 1920, Luttenton v. Detroit J. & C. R. Co., 209 Mich. 20, 176 N. W. 558 (street car); Or. 1915, Macchi v. Portland R. L. & P. Co., 76 Or 215, 148 Pac. 72 (that cars were going "faster than cars ordinarily ran in P.," allowed; two pages of an opinion wasted on this topic); Ut. 1895, Chipman v. R. Co., 12 Utah 68, 41 Pac. 562 (train); Wash. 1906, Cook v. Stimson M. Co., 41 Wash. 314, 83 Pac. 419 (speed of a train, excluded); Wis. 1884, Hoppe v. R. Co., 61 Wis. 369, 21 N. W. 227 (train).

[6] Identity (compare also the cases involving identity in other aspects, ante, §§ 149, 413, 571, 660):

ENGLAND: 1874, R. v. Castro (Tichborne Case), charge of Cockburn, C. J. II, 124 (a question as to whether the defendant was Tichborne, excluded, so far as the witness proposed, not merely to speak of the apparent sameness of appearance with the person he knew, but of the general fact of individual identity on the whole of the case).

UNITED STATES: Federal: 1896, Templeton v. Luckett, 21 C. C. A. 325, 75 Fed. 254 (one who knew the person in question and had examined a deed and the rolls of a military company where the name appeared in different spellings, not allowed to declare his belief of the identity of name); Alabama: 1877, Walker v. State, 58 Ala. 395 (of parcels of wheat); 1882, Whizenant v. State, 71 Ala. 383, 384 (that a description of stolen oxen corresponded with oxen seen, excluded); 1882, Beale v. Posey, 72 Ala. 332 (of a person, by a mode of walking); 1895, Chilton v. State, 105 Ala. 98, 16 So. 797 (that a person's description tallied, excluded); 1897, Newell v. State, 115 Ala. 54, 22 So. 572 (of buttons); 1898, Terry v. State, 118 Ala. 79, 23 So. 776 (of foot-tracks, excluded); 1900, Morris v. State, 124 Ala. 44, 27 So. 336 (of shoe-tracks); 1906, DuBose v. State, 148 Ala. 560, 42 So. 862 (that certain tracks were the defendant's, excluded); 1911, Pope v. State, 174 Ala. 63, 57 So. 245 (whether a mule would have made track similar to another track observed, allowed; three judges diss.); California 1897, : People v. Lovren, 119 Cal. 88, 51 Pac. 22 (of the texture and quality of cloth); 1906, People v. Gray, 148 Cal. 507, 83 Pac. 707 (that a person's description tallied, excluded on the facts); Colorado: 1897, Askew v. People, 23 Colo. 446, 48 Pac. 524 (of a brand or a part of one); Florida: 1898, Roberson v. State, 40 Fla. 509, 24 So. 474 (of a person); 1904, Alford v. State, 47 Fla. 1, 36 So. 436 (buggy-tracks); 1905, Jordan v. State, 50 Fla. 94, 39 So. 155 (person); 1908, Johnson v. State, 55 Fla. 46, 46 So. 155 (mark in sand and made by spur-leather); Georgia: 1882, Wiggins v. Henson, 68 Ga. 819; Illinois: 1888, Watt v. People, 126 Ill. 29, 18 N. E. 340 (of hairs); 1890, Ogden v. Illinois, 134 Ill. 599, 25 N. E. 755 (of a voice); 1911, People v. Jenning's, 252 Ill. 534, 96 N. E. 1077 (experts admitted to interpret fingerprints by the science of dactylos copy); Indiana: 1901, Keith v. State, 157 Ind. 376, 61 N. E. 716 (of a corpse); 1908, Craig v. State, 171 Ind. 317, 86 N. E. 397 (identity of an assailant); Iowa: 1880, State v. Moelchen, 53 Ia. 310, 312, 5 N. W. 186 (of shoe-tracks); 1897, State v. Millmeier, 102 Ia. 692, 72 N. W. 275 (of footprints); 1909, State v. Whitbeck, 145 Ia. 29, 123 N. W. 982 (similarity of hair, by a non-expert, allowed, one of the kinds of hair not being at hand); Kansas: 1874, State v. Folwell, 14 Kan. 110 (wagon); 1915, State v. Cole, 93 Kan. 819, 150 Pac. 233 (shoeprints and hoofprints); Kentucky: 1835, Gentry v. McMinnis, 3 Dana 383; 1895, Shorten v. Judd, 56 Kan. 43, 42 Pac. 337 (personal resemblance, excluded); Louisiana: 1905, State v. Hopper, 114 La. 557, 38 So. 452 (shoes); 1906, State v. Graham, 116 La. 779, 41 So. 90 (of shoe-tracks); Massachusetts: 1862 Eddy v. Gray, 4 All. 438 (personal resemblance, excluded; though it does not appear that the persons compared were both in court); 1869, Com. v. Pope, 103 Mass. 440 (of footprints); 1897, Com. v. Crowley, 167 Mass. 434, 45 N. E. 766 ("How do you know it was C. that struck you?", allowed); 1897, Com. v. Kennedy 170 Mass. 18, 48 N. E. 770 (of a person buying poison); Michigan: 1900, People v. Gotshall, 123 Mich. 474, 82 N. W. 274 (that a person was "about the same size and height "as defendant inadmissible); Mississippi: 1920, Herring v. State, 122 Miss. 647, 84 So. 699 (murder; opinion to identity of foot-tracks, admissible, if the witnesses have made a comparison and can specify any peculiarity; cases collected); Missouri: 1895, State v. Powers, 130 Mo. 475, 32 S. W. 984 (of persons); Nebraska: 1901, Russell v State, 62 Nebr. 512, 87 N. W. 344 (of horse-tracks; excluded); 1902, Russell v. State, 66 Nebr. 497, 92 N. W. 751 (of horse-tracks, admitted); New Hampshire: 1866, State v. Shinborn, 46 N. H. 502, semble (of a voice); New Jersey: 1905, State v. Miller, 71 N. J. L. 527, 60 Atl. 202 (spots on clothing); New Mexico: 1915, State v. Ancheta, 20 N. M. 19, 145 Pac. 1086 (of footprints); New York: 1878, King v. R. Co., 72 N. Y. 608 (of a piece of iron); North Carolina: 1839, Beverly v. Williams, 4 Dev. & B. 237; 1880, State v. Reitz, 83 N. C. 636 (of footprints); 1918, State v. Spencer, 176 N. C. 709, 97 S. E. 155 (shoe-tracks); Pennsylvania; 1874, Udderzook v. Com., 76 Pa. 342, 353 (of a person); 1898, Com. v. Farrell, 187 Pa. 408, 41 Atl. 382 (whether two pocketbooks were mended by the same person, excluded); South Carolina: 1899, State v. Davis, 55 S. C. 339, 33 S. E. 449 (that of shoe-marks as corresponding with certain shoes); Tennessee: 1874, Woodward v. State, 4 Baxt. 324 (of a person); Texas: here there is a pretty body of law about testimony identifying by foot-tracks; it is as curious and as interesting as some of the quaint rituals of the Aztec priesthood; they can perhaps be better appreciated in the light of the comments ante, § 415; the following opinions collect some of the cases: 1904, Parker v. State, 46 Tex. Cr. 461, 80 S. W. 1008 (similarity of boot-tracks, excluded, but here because the witness had not sufficiently observed, on the principle of § 660, ante); 1906, Porch v. State, 50 Tex. Cr. 335, 99 S. W. 102; 1916, Hampton v. State, 78 Tex. Cr. 639, 183 S. W. 887 (murder 23 years previously; testimony to identity of foot-tracks seen and measured 23 years before, admitted); 1919, Mueller v. State, 85 Tex. Cr. App. 346, 215 S. W. 93 (identity of tracks made by cattle-thieves; opinion of observers, admitted; prior rulings explained); 1921, McClain v. State, 89 Tex. Cr. 48, 229 S. W. 550 (larceny of cattle; as to identity of horse-tracks "something more must appear than a casual observation or comparison"); Washington: 1897, State v. Cushing, 17 Wash. 544, 50 Pac. 512 (correspondence of holes in the deceased's body and clothing); 1905, State v. Rutledge, 37 Wash. 523, 79 Pac. 1123 (police officer's identification of defendants from a description by the person robbed, excluded); Wisconsin: Knoll v. State, 55 Wis. 252, 12 N. W. 369 (of two specimens of hair as coming from the same person, excluded); 1905, Roszczyniala v. State, 125 Wis. 414, 104 N. W. 113 (accused).

As to Identity, attention is called to the analysis of this type of inference (ante, §§ 410–416); in the particular subject of foot marks (ante, § 413 b) some of the exclusionary rulings here noted will thus be better understood.

For other principles affecting testimony to identify a person, see ante, §§ 167, 413, 660.

For the presumption from identity of name, see post, § 2529.

For the use of personal resemblances as evidence of paternity, see ante, §§ 166, 1154.

§ 1978. Miscellaneous Topics of Testimony. Further classification of the cases arising under the Opinion rule would be unpractical.[1] It may be sug-

§ 1978. [1] In the following citations the testimony was admitted, unless it is otherwise expressly noted:

ENGLAND: 1821, Redford v. Birley, 1 State Tr. N. S. 1071, 1134, 1171 (battery in dispersing a seditious assembly; whether the mob in the witness' judgment endangered the public tranquillity).

UNITED STATES: Federal: 1898, Kiesel v. Ins. Office, 31 C. C. A. 515, 88 Fed. 243 (whether a burning roof was standing, not improperly excluded in discretion); 1898, Fireman's Ins. Co. v. Mohlmann, 33 C. C. A. 347, 91 Fed. 85 (whether a building overloaded fell before it was burned, excluded); 1899, Golden Reward M. Co. v. Buxton M. Co., 38 C. C. A. 228, 97 Fed. 413 (character of ore mined); 1918, Erie R. Co. v. Linnekogel, 20 C. C. A., 248 Fed. 389 (that two cars met with a "violent crash," allowed); Alabama: 1848, Rembert v. Brown, 14 Ala. 360 (how much corn per month was needed for a plantation); 1876, Smith v. State, 55 Ala. 11 (the charge was of selling to a person of "known intemperate habits," and the witness was allowed to testify only to "intemperate habits"); 1877, Campbell v. Gilbert, 57 Ala. 568 (whether a guano benefited a crop); 1895, Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Binion, 107 Ala. 645, 18 So. 75 (whether a stuck brake goes off violently); 1895, Miller v. State, 107 Ala. 40, 19 So. 37 (that a pistol must be "very close" for the powder to scorch); 1896, Shrimpton Co. v. Brice, 109 Ala. 640, 20 So. 10 (debt on account; "Is that account correct?", held proper); 1898, Wager L. Co. v. Sullivan L. Co., 120 Ala. 558, 24 So. 949 (whether timber was "merchantable," allowed, but not whether it was "fit to go on the market"); 1905, Baker v. Cotney, 142 Ala. 566, 38 So. 130 (how much cotton a tract produced, allowed); Arkansas: 1910, Miller v. State, 94 Ark. 538, 128 S. W. 353 (whether hairs were human, allowed); California: 1896, Callan v. Bull, 113 Cal. 593, 45 Pac. 1017 (strength of resistance of timber); Connecticut: 1898, Irving v. Shethar, 71 Conn. 434, 42 Atl. 258 (cited ante, § 1918); Florida: 1918, Hicks v. State, 75 Fla. 311, 78 So. 270 (when a person is wounded by a pistol, "just describe . . . the sound that you heard." objected to as calling for opinion; allowed; is it not a piece of lamentable incredible futility in a system of Evidence that such an objection should be seriously considered?); Georgia: Code 1895, § 5285, Rev. C. 1910, § 5874, P. C. § 1047 ("Where the question under examination and to be decided by the jury is one of opinion, any witness may swear to his opinion or belief, giving his reasons therefor; but if the issue is as to the existence of a fact, the opinions of witnesses, generally, are inadmissible"); Code 1895, § 5287, Rev. C. 1910, § 5876, P. C. § 1048 ("The opinions of experts on any question of science, skill, trade, or like questions, are always admissible; and such opinions may be given on the facts as produced by other witnesses"); 1881, Augusta & L. R. Co. v. Dorsey, 68 Ga. 237 (Code section construed generally); 1876, Wynne v. State, 56 Ga. 113, 118 (whether cartridges had been punctured before firing); 1915, Shiver v. Tift, 143 Ga. 791, 85 S. E. 1031 (whether a horse was nervous or roadworthy, allowed); Illinois: 1915, Mahlstedt v. Ideal Lighting Co., 271 Ill. 154, 110 N. E. 795 (death by an explosion of a gasoline machine; how gasoline might have got into the cellar, allowed); Indiana: 1882, Bennett v. Needham, 83 Ind. 568 (area to be benefited by a ditch); 1883, Mills v. Winter, 94 Ind. 332 (whether a person was of fickle temper); 1900, Green v. State, 154 Ind. 655, 57 N. E. 637 (quantity and quality of moon's light); Iowa: 1848, Thomas v. Isett, 1 G. Greene 472 (injury to credit by seizure of goods, excluded); 1870, Crawford v. Wolf, 29 Ia. 567, 573 (profits on a contract, allowed); 1881, Parkhurst v. Masteller, 57 Ia. 476, 10 N. W. 864 (whether hay was burning, excluded); 1897, Gould v. Schermer, 101 Ia. 582, 70 N. W. 697 (whether a horse blind in one eye was likely to shy, excluded); 1898, McMahon v. Dubuque, 107 Ia. 62, 77 N. W. 517 (that a house was in good repair, excluded); 1902, Hollenbeck v. Marion, 116 Ia. 69, 89 N. W. 210 (that water was foul and nasty) Kansas: 1889, State v. Jones, 41 Kan. 312 (distance at which shot scatters); 1905, Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Watson, 71 Kan. 696, 81 Pac. 499 (usual shrinkage of cattle-weight in transit, allowed); Kentucky: 1869, St. Louis M. Life Ins. Co. v. Graves, 6 Bush 290 (that no sane man in a Christian country would commit suicide, excluded); 1878, Claxton's Adm'r v. R. Co., 13 Ky. 643 (quality of iron); 1895, Com. v. Tate, — Ky. —, 33 S. W. 405 (net result of accounts); Louisiana: 1903, State v. Williams, 111 La. 205, 35 So. 521 (that a place was a "gambling-house," etc.); Maine: 1876, State v. Watson, 65 Me. 74 (whether a fire would probably spread in certain ways, excluded); 1900, Boothby v. Lacasse, 94 Me. 392, 47 Atl. 916 (course of a fire: expert testimony excluded); 1903, Caven v. Bodwell G. Co., 97 Me. 381, 54 Atl. 851 (tensile strength of wire cables; a non-expert excluded on the facts); Maryland: 1912, Cecil Paper Co. v. Nesbitt, 117 Md. 59, 83 Atl. 254 (usual conduct of mules, excluded); Massachusetts: 1870, Com. v. Choate, 105 Mass. 457 (that two broken pieces of stick formed originally one piece); 1872, Jordan v. Osgood, 109 Mass. 459, 464 (net amount of stock on hand as gathered from account-books); 1873, Com. v. Dowdican, 114 Mass.

gested that the use of these rulings as definite and inflexible precedents would indicate a misunderstanding of their effect. They merely illustrate the application of the general principle to the facts of a given case, and their employment as permanent, unvarying rules ignores the true significance of the general principle. The following passage will sufficiently illustrate the orthodox mode of applying the principle to a new instance:

1875, PARDEE, J., in Clinton v. Howard, 42 Conn. 294 (admitting the testimony of a skilled witness as to whether a certain pile of stones would make horses shy): "It would be difficult, if not impossible, to embody in words, so as to be fully understood by the triers, a description of all the appearances which make a particular pile of stones a source of terror to gentle horses, unaccustomed to the sight of such an object. The fright is the result of a combination of form, color, and relative position, which would elude the effort of any witness clearly and fully to describe. Knowledge of the reasons why one object arouses the instinct of fear in a horse and another does not, and why the pile of stones should be put in one class or the other, is not presumptively within the knowledge of all jurors."

257 (that the contents of a tumbler looked like whiskey); 1895, Connelly v. Woolen Co., 163 Mass. 156, 39 N. E. 787 (machinery); 1898, Flynn v. B. E. L. Co., 171 Mass. 395, 50 N. E. 937 (mode of stringing electric wires from poles across trees; expert not needed); Michigan: 1886, Passmore v. Passmore Estate, 60 Mich. 468, 27 N. W. 601 (whether detached and pasted leaves in a note-book belonged there originally, excluded); 1900, People v. Jones, 124 Mich. 177, 82 N. W. 806 (that tools produced in court were burglars' tools); Minnesota: 1886, Peck v. Small, 35 Minn. 466 (influence of a person in the community, excluded); 1897, Lane v. Agric. Soc., 67 Minn. 65, 69 N. W. 463 (effect of "track-bolting" in a running horse; purpose of using blinkers); 1905, State v. Olson, 95 Minn. 104, 103 N. W. 727 (whether a liquor was intoxicating, allowed); Missouri: 1873, Eyerman v. Sheehan, 52 Mo. 223 (depth of a quantity of stone); Mississippi: 1905, Earp v. State, — Miss. —, 38 So. 288 (that the insane do not kill for money, not allowed); Nebraska: 1900, Bee Pub. Co. v. World Pub. Co., 59 Nebr. 713, 82 N. W. 28 (importance to a newspaper of reputation for solvency, stability, etc.); New Hampshire: 1899, Little v. Head & D. Co., 69 N. H. 494, 43 Atl. 619 (sufficiency of a hook to sustain a weight); New Jersey: 1898, Bergen Co. T. Co. v. Bliss, 62 N. J. L. 410, 41 Atl. 837 (how an accident occurred, excluded); New York: 1878, King v. R. Co., 72 N. Y. 608 (whether a piece of iron was cracked; allowed for experts, refused for others); 1879, People v. Manke, 78 N. Y. 611 (whether a paper looked like wadding shot from a gun; undecided); 1884, People v. Muller, 96 N. Y. 411 (whether a picture was obscene, excluded); 1888, Collins v. R. Co., 109 N. Y. 243, 247, 16 N. E. 50 (which of two engines emitted the more sparks): 1890, Van Wycklen v. Brooklyn, 118 N. Y. 428, 24 N. E. 179 (tapping of a creek by pipes, excluded); 1896, Witmark v. R. Co., 149 N. Y. 393, 44 N. E. 78 (stating the results of an arithmetical calculation that could have been made by the Court, held not improper); 1897, Flandreau v. Ellsworth, 151 N. Y. 473, 45 N. E. 853 (tonnage of the hull of a barge); North Carolina: 1859, State v. Jacobs, 6 Jones L. 286 (African descent); 1904, Willis v. W. U. Tel. Co., — N. C. —, 48 S. E. 538 (how much anguish, etc., he suffered from non-receipt of a telegram, not allowed); Ohio: 1873, Stambaugh v. Smith, 23 Oh. St. 594 (existence of coal seams); Oregon: 1907, State v. Remington, 50 Or. 99, 91 Pac. 473 (size of a hole which a rifle would make, allowed); Pennsylvania: 1839, Reed v. Dick, 8 Watts 481 (whether a cable was sound); 1898, Fifth Mut. B. Soc. v. Holt, 184 Pa. 572, 39 Atl. 293 (by a secretary of a society whether it had not always recognized a person as owner of stock, excluded); South Dakota: 1904, Brady v. Shirley, 18 S. D. 608, 101 N. W. 886 (whether a colt was sired by a particular horse, allowed); Texas: 1891, Radam v. Microbe Destroyer Co., 81 Tex. 131 (whether a trademark-imitation was calculated to deceive, excluded); 1906, Leatherman v. State, 49 Tex. Cr. 485, 95 S. W. 504 (indictment for vagrancy as a professional gambler; whether he was a professional gambler, excluded); Vermont: 1873, Bates v. Sharon, 45 Vt. 481 (indications of a road, as to being washed out); 1889, Brown v. Doubleday, 61 Vt. 524, 17 Atl. 135 (shrinkage of bark; excluded on the facts); 1895, State v. Bradley, 61 Vt. 465, 32 Atl. 240 (whether a stain was of blood); 1898, Morse v. Bruce's Est., 70 Vt. 378, 40 Atl. 1034 (certain arithmetical reckonings, excluded as superfluous); 1899, Baker v. Sherman, 71 Vt. 439, 46 Atl. 57 (counting rings in a tree-trunk before the jury, allowed for an expert); West Virginia: 1883, Welch v. Ins. Co., 23 W. Va. 305 (combustible peculiarities of wool, excluded); Wisconsin, 1876, Wood v. R. Co., 40 Wis. 582 (whereabouts in a building a fire began, excluded).

Topic III: OPINION RULE AS APPLIED TO TESTIMONY TO MORAL CHARACTER AND PROFESSIONAL SKILL

CHAPTER LXVII.

§ 1980. Introductory. In 1798, at the trial of the ardent young Irish gentleman, O'Connor, on the charge of breach of parole, a galaxy of personages famous in history were called to testify to the honor and uprightness of the accused. One after another, Erskine, Fox, Sheridan, and Grattan were admitted to the box, to express their personal belief in the integrity of their friend.[1] In 1803, at the trial of Captain Despard, one of the witnesses to character was the battle-scarred veteran of the seas, Lord Nelson, who, on behalf of an old messmate, testified, not to any reputation, but to his own belief founded on long personal intimacy.[2]

To-day this is changed. By a rule which is almost universal (in American courts, at least), the personal knowledge and belief of the witness to character is rigorously excluded, and the community-reputation is all that will be listened to. The policy of the change is highly questionable, but its consideration may be deferred for a moment. It is necessary first to examine the history of this change and the effects it has left upon the law of to-day.

Looking at the cases first in England and then in the United States, it will be convenient to take up separately the cases of a defendant's character and a witness' character.

§ 1980. [1] 1798, O'Connor's Trial, 27 How. St. Tr. 39 (Thomas Erskine: "I feel myself not only entitled but bound upon my oath to say, in the face of God and my country, as a British gentleman, which is the best thing any man can be, that he is incapable in my judgment, of acting with treachery or duplicity to any man, but most of all to those for whom he professes friendship and regard"), 42 (Charles James Fox), 45 (Richard Brinsley Sheridan), 50 (Henry Grattan), 50 (Lord John Russell).

[2] 1803, Despard's Trial, 28 How. St. Tr. 460 (Vice-Admiral Lord Viscount Nelson: "We went on the Spanish Main together, we slept many nights together in our clothes upon the ground, we have measured the height of the enemy's wall together; . . . I formed the highest opinion of Colonel Despard"), 461 (testimony of Sir Evan Nepean: "You will state your opinion of him from your own knowledge of him; that opinion I understand to be a good one, so far as you have known him?" "Yes").

1. History and Present State of the Law

a. ENGLAND

§ 1981. Accused's Moral Character. a. That the original and unquestioned practice called for and allowed the witness' own belief, founded merely on personal intimacy, as to the trait of character in question, and did not insist on or necessarily ask for the community's reputation, is clear from the following passages:

1699, Trial of Cowper, Marson, Stephens, and Rogers, 13 How. St. Tr. 1180 ff.; murder. Sir T. Lane: "I never knew him [Cowper] discover any ill-nature in his temper; I think he cannot be suspected of this or any other act of barbarity." Mr. Cox: "I have lived by him eight or nine years; . . . of all men that I know, he would be the last man that I should suspect of such a fact as this is; I believe nothing in the world could move him to entertain the least thought of so foul an act. . . . I have known Mr. Marson a long time, and had always a good opinion of him; I do not believe 5000*l.* would tempt him to do such a fact." Major Lane: "My Lord, I have known Mr. Marson ever since he was two years old, and never saw him but a civilized man in my life; he was well bred up among us, and I never saw him given to debauchery in all my life."

1794, Thomas Hardy's Trial, 24 How. St. Tr. 999; John Stevenson sworn: "How long have you known Mr. Hardy?" "About eight or nine years, as near as I can recollect." "What character has Mr. Hardy borne during the eight or nine years you have known him?" "I have always esteemed him as a man of a mild, peaceable disposition." "Have you known him well during that time?" "Yes; . . . he always behaved with great uprightness as far as I had occasion to observe him, and I always esteemed him a man of a peaceable, mild disposition; and as to moral character, I know no man that goes beyond him." "Has that been his general character?" "It has been as far as I ever knew; I never heard anything to the contrary." Alexander Gredd sworn; he knew Mr. H. intimately: "Has he been a peaceable, orderly man?" "As far as ever I saw." "Have you known him well during this time?" "Yes, as a neighbor constantly." "Is this his general character?" "It is, as far as I ever heard."

1808, Alexander Davison's Trial, 31 How. St. Tr. 186; fraud in public accounts; Lord Moira sworn: "Had your lordship [as general-in-command, Mr. D. being commissary-general] an opportunity of observing his public conduct?" "His conduct was clear and punctual, answering every expectation I had formed, strictly delicate in refusing emoluments which he might well have claimed." "From your lordship's general knowledge of his conduct, is he a person whom your lordship would think capable of committing a fraud?" "Certainly not." [After an interruption on another point.] Lord ELLENBOROUGH: "The correct inquiry is as to the general character of the accused, and whether the witness thinks him likely to be guilty of the offense charged in the indictment." Sir Andrew Hammond sworn; Lord ELLENBOROUGH: "From your knowledge of Mr. Davison's character and conduct, do you think him capable of committing a fraud?" "I should have thought him the last man in the world that would have attempted anything of the kind, or even to have been a cause of it." Mr. James Davidson sworn: "From all that you have observed of him [Mr. D.] and all that you have known and heard of him, what is your opinion of his general character?" "You say 'known and heard;' all that I have known of him is that he has been an honest man, an honest dealer with me as a merchant." "From what you have heard in the world at large, what is your opinion of him?" "There are a variety of reports concerning Mr. Davison; those I know only as the world knows; but as to his dealings with me, I always found him an honorable and honest man."

1831, Lord TENTERDEN, C. J., in R. v. Cobbett, 2 State Tr. N. S. 789, 873: "The proper inquiry for a gentleman who has known Mr. C. many years is as to his general character, not as to any individual or particular acts. . . . You may ask persons who have been acquainted with you what their opinion is of your character and your views on subjects connected with this publication;" then witnesses testify, e. g., "I have known him personally for five years, and I think him quite the reverse of a man likely to incite the laborers to outrage."

The constant practice in the State Trials illustrates this, in the earlier centuries [1] as well as in the 1800s.[2]

A few features of this orthodox practice may now be noticed.

b. The only doubt was as to whether the witness must stop with the specification of abstract qualities, or could go on to speak specifically as to the defendant's likelihood to commit the crime in question; i. e. whether, instead of merely asking, "Is he to your knowledge a man of peaceable disposition?" the further inquiry was allowable, "Is he in your judgment a man likely to have raised a disturbance or committed an act of violence?" The latter form of question, as involving an opinion on the merits, was excluded in 1794, in these words:

1794, EYRE, L. C. J., in Hardy's Trial, supra: "I have often heard it put, and often heard it objected to. It is certainly not a strictly regular question. You are to ask his general character, and from thence the jury are to conclude whether a man of such a character would commit such an offense. At the same time, in justice to the question, I must say I have known it asked a hundred times; I have very often objected to it myself."

On the other hand, in 1808, throughout Davison's Trial (supra), Lord Ellenborough sanctioned that form of question, under the following ruling: "The § 1981. [1] 1685, Fernley's Trial, 11 How. St. Tr. 406, 435; 1696, Sir John Freind's Trial, 13 How. St. Tr. 40, 41, 42, 43; 1696, Lowick's Trial, 13 How. St. Tr. 291, 299; 1696, Butler's Trial, 13 How. St. Tr. 1260, 1261; 1702, Swendsen's Trial, 14 How. St. Tr. 589, 590; 1704, Denew's Trial, 14 How. St. Tr. 931, 932; 1710, Willis' Trial, 15 How. St. Tr. 630, 638; 1729, Huggins' Trial, 17 How. St. Tr. 349–354; Acton's Trial, 17 How. St. Tr. 500; 1741, Captain Goodere's Trial, 17 How. St. Tr. 1061–1063; White's Trial, 17 How. St. Tr. 1088; 1753, Murphy's Trial, 19 How. St. Tr. 725; 1758, Barnard's Trial, 19 How. St. Tr. 833, 834, 835, 837, 838, 840, 841; 1754, Canning's Trial, 19 How. St. Tr. 467, 504, 591; 1773, Fabrigas v. Mostyn, 20 How. St. Tr. 94; 1775, Fowke's Trial, 20 How. St. Tr. 1184; 1780, Anon., McNally's Evidence, 323; 1783, Dean of St. Asaph's Trial, 21 How. St. Tr. 932, 933; 1783, Bembridge's Trial, 22 How. St. Tr. 66, 67; 1798, Sheares' Trial, 27 How. St. Tr. 323, 362; Byrne's Trial, 27 How. St. Tr. 504.

[2] 1802, Wall's Trial, 28 How. St. Tr. 137; 1802, Macfarlane's Trial, 28 How. St. Tr. 305; 1803, Hedge's Trial, 28 How. St. Tr. 1402, 1403; Kearney's Trial, 28 How. St. Tr. 745; Byrne's Trial, 28 How. St. Tr. 830; Killen's Trial, 28 How. St. Tr. 1037, 1038; Doran's Trial, 28 How. St. Tr. 1067; Donnelly's Trial, 28 How. St. Tr. 1091; McIntosh's Trial, 28 How. St. Tr. 1236, 1237; Keenan's Trial, 28 How. St. Tr. 1264; Redmond's Trial, 28 How. St. Tr. 1306, 1307; 1804, Cobbett's Trial, 29 How. St. Tr. 45, 46; 1805, Picton's Trial, 30 How. St. Tr. 259; 1807, Draper's Trial, 30 How. St. Tr. 1017–1022; 1817, Turner's Trial, 32 How. St. Tr. 1058; Weightman's Trial, 32 How. St. Tr. 1382; 1839, R. v. Collins, 3 State Tr. N. S. 1149, 1170, 1174; R. v. Lovett, 3 State Tr. 1177, 1185; 1839, R. v. Frost, 4 State Tr. 85, 214, 370; 1843, R. v. O'Connor, 4 State Tr. 935, 1161 ("From your knowledge of me for eight years, do you think I would do anything calculated to lead to a breach of the peace through any pecuniary motive?"); 1848, R. v. Fussell, 6 State Tr. 723, 759; 1848, R. v. Duffy, 7 State Tr. 795, 928; 1848, R. v. Dowling, 7 State Tr. 382, 454; 1848, R. v. O'Donnell, 7 State Tr. 637, 698 ("What in your opinion is his character for peacefulness and good behavior?" "I have always believed him to be a peaceful and well-behaved man").

correct inquiry is as to the general character of the accused, and whether the witness thinks him likely to be guilty of the offense charged in the information." The truth is that Lord Ellenborough's form of question had always been an orthodox one, and it was only towards the end of the century that the unfounded doubt arose.[3]

c. The doctrine that particular acts could not be spoken of had very early been enunciated for testimony to a witness' character,[4] but was not then fully established for testimony to a defendant's character,[5] especially for testimony detailing his good deeds (as the above quotations show),[6] and it is the judicial endeavor to enforce this prohibition that has sometimes been misunderstood as directed to the present subject, — with which, of course, it has nothing to do.[7]

d. The hesitation, if any, was as to receiving reputation, and not as to personal knowledge, — as is seen clearly in the quotation from O'Connor's Trial,[8] and is discernible also in Hardy's and Hedge's Trials.[9] The witness constantly spoke from personal knowledge alone, and often (though less frequently) from personal knowledge plus reputation; but to speak from reputation alone is regarded in the 1700s as improper.[10] On this point the law afterwards changed and allowed reputation alone; [11] but the earlier practice thus shows that it was only reputation, and not personal acquaintance, that could be attended by any suspicion of its orthodoxy.

e. The term "character" was normally applied to the actual qualities, and not to the community's estimate of these qualities,[12] as the preceding quotations show. Moreover, the term "general character" while it was sometimes applied to the latter, to distinguish it from the former when spoken of at the same time (as in Hardy's Trial, quoted supra), was also and commonly applied to the former alone, — especially either to make the second distinction (in b, supra), or to distinguish (as in c, supra) the "general" traits themselves from the "particular" acts instancing them. This latter meaning (i. e. general disposition as opposed to the inadmissible particular acts showing it)

[3] As the following cases show: 1683, Ward's Trial, 9 How. St. Tr. 299, 330 (perjury; "Do you think he would forswear himself?"); 1696. Butler's Trial, 13 How. St. Tr. 1260, 1261 ("Whether you think she would be guilty of such a forgery?" "I cannot believe she would"); 1704, Denew's Trial, 14 How. St. Tr. 931, 932 (murder; to defendant's witness: "Do you think he would have been guilty of an assassination?" "No, indeed I do not"); 1723, Bishop Atterbury's Trial, 16 How. St. Tr. 323, 572 (Alexander Pope, then engaged on his Odyssey translation, was called to give the accused a good character and was asked "whether he suspected the Bishop was engaged in such matters as were laid to his charge"); 1783, Dean of St. Asaph's Trial, 21 How. St. Tr. 932 ("Do you think him likely to be a man to stir up sedition?" "Far from it; I think him one of the first that would quell it"); 1798, O'Connor's Trial, 28 How. St. Tr. 39, 42 (quoted supra); 1831, R. v. Cobbett, 2 State Tr. N. S. 789, 876 (testimony that the defendant was not "likely to incite the laborers to outrage").

[4] Ante, §§ 979, 987.

[5] Ante, § 194.

[6] Ante, § 195.

[7] Compare the quotations next ensuing, supra.

[8] Quoted post, § 1982.

[9] Quoted ante, this section.

[10] On this point, compare also the quotation post, § 1982, for witness' character.

[11] Ante, § 1610.

[12] This should be clearly realized. Whatever ambiguities the phrase "general character" had, "character" meant just what it seems to mean. Compare what is said as to this distinction, ante, § 1608.

seems to have been the original and natural source of the phrase and the orthodox application of it. This point, important in clearing up obscurities, is made evident by the following passage: [13]

1722, Layer's Trial, 16 How. St. Tr. 246; various discreditable facts being offered to discredit a witness, he was stopped, on objection. L. C. J. PRATT (to counsel): "Mr. Hungerford, you know what the rule of practice and evidence is, when objections are made to credit and reputation of the witness; you cannot charge him with particular offenses. For if that were to be allowed, it would be impossible for a man to defend himself. You are not to examine to the particular facts to charge the reputation of any witness, but only in general you are to ask what his character and reputation is. . . . You know, if there be any objection to him, to his general character, he can answer them; but if objections are grounded on particular charges of his being a base, an infamous, and an ill man, not having any notice of this, it is impossible for him to defend himself." [14]

When it is remembered that up to this time nobody questioned the propriety of calling for personal knowledge as to actual character, it will easily be seen that "general character" could usually mean only one thing, viz.: the general or abstract trait as distinguished from particular instances of it.

We are now in a position to understand the remark of Lord Ellenborough, C. J., in Jones' Trial: [15] "It is reputation; it is not what a person knows." This was called forth by the persistent attempt of counsel to bring out particular facts showing honesty, in violation of the above rule. The remark is easily interpreted in that sense in the light of the same judge's clear opinion and practice in Davison's Trial,[16] in the preceding year, when he freely allowed the witnesses to speak from personal knowledge only, and distinctly sanctioned the question "whether he thinks him likely to be guilty of the offence charged," and there used the term "general character" simply as distinguished from particular acts. But the isolated phrase above in Jones' Trial somehow caught the attention of later treatise-writers, and, being misunderstood, has proved a great stumbling-block; for example, in the argument of counsel in R. v. Rowton,[17] where Mr. Taylor truly said: "There is only one judicial authority to exclude individual opinion, and that is what Lord Ellenborough said in R. v. Jones"; and that, he might have added, was really no authority if rightly understood.

f. The practice and the rule in England to the middle of the 1800s are thus plain. The statements of the early and classical writers (all writing from experience at the bar) are equally clear when we understand the usage of the term "character" in this connection.[18] That personal belief, estimate, opinion, or knowledge — under whatever name — was proper and unques-

[13] Italics are used to elucidate the emphasis.

[14] So also: 1780, Maskall's Trial, 21 How. St. Tr. 667; 1817, R. v. Watson, 2 Stark. 149; 1831, R. v. Cobbett, 2 State Tr. N. S. 789, 875.

[15] 31 How. St. Tr. 310 (1809).

[16] Quoted supra, in this section.

[17] Post, § 1982.

[18] 1801, Peake, Evidence, 2d ed., 8; 1802, McNally, Evidence, 324; 1814, Phillipps, Evidence, 1st ed., 72, 108; 1824, Starkie, Evidence, 1st ed., II, 366.

tionable testimony to character seems clear enough as the law and the practice throughout this whole period.

g. In 1865 came the decision in R. v. Rowton,[19] surprising the profession,[20] and ignoring the long record of precedents.[21] The effect of R. v. Rowton is to exclude testimony founded exclusively on personal knowledge, and to require the question in form to be directed to reputation alone. The ruling, it seems, has been seldom acted on in practice.[20]

§ 1982. Witness' Character. There was in thought and in legal rule, under the original and orthodox practice, no different attitude towards proof of a witness' character. The witness to such character, as the following quotations illustrate, constantly, if not usually, spoke from a personal acquaintance; reputation was often, if not commonly, ignored:

1692, Duke of Norfolk's Divorce Suit, 12 How. St. Tr. 899, 919: "Witnesses produced to the credit of Rowland Owen [witness]; Edward Sylvester saith: He hath known Rowland Owen three or four years, and he hath trusted him in business, and he hath ever been very faithful; he hath trusted him in stores to the king, and he might have embezzled, but ever found him honest, and he hath had three or four thousand pounds' worth of goods that he might have embezzled, and hath had opportunities of doing ill things, but he never did; he hath trusted him with everything he hath; he hath had more than twenty pounds embezzled by others, but he never embezzled a halfpenny." [1]

1722, Layer's Trial, 16 How. St. Tr. 253; Counsel: "Is he a man as may be believed, even upon his oath, or not?" Witness: "I must tell you that I found him in so many mistakes about his own wife that, by God, I would not take his word for a halfpenny." Counsel: "Go on, but don't swear 'by God' any more."

[19] Leigh & C. 520, 10 Cox Cr. 25, with two judges dissenting.

[20] See the remarks of Mr. J. Stephen, in his Digest of Evidence, 3d ed., Note XXV.

[21] The opinion of Cockburn, C. J., for the majority, does not cite a single precedent in its favor or discuss the question of policy, and even admits that "the strict rule is often exceeded in practice," and the conclusion seems to have been reached in a doctrinaire fashion, by attributing a supposed meaning to "character," which, as above shown, it does not have. The completeness of the historical misunderstanding in the mind of the learned but dogmatic Chief Justice may be judged from his following statement, which should be compared with the preceding list of citations: "No one has ever heard the question, 'What is the tendency and disposition of the prisoner's mind?' put directly." The Chief Justice's citation of Phillipps on Evidence seems to show that he reached his conclusion solely on that authority, the frailty of which may be seen in a few words. In the first edition, of 1814, at p. 72, was the following passage, quite consistent with the law as explained above: "In trials for felony the prisoner is always permitted to call witnesses to his general character"; repeated in substance up to the 3d edition; then, in the 4th, in 1820, comes the following insertion: "What, then, is evidence of general character? One medium of proof is by showing how the person stands in general estimation; proof that he is reputed to be honest is evidence of his character for honesty, and the species of evidence most commonly resorted to in such inquiries. It frequently occurs that witnesses, after speaking to the general opinion of the prisoner's character, state their personal experience of his honesty; and this statement is admitted, rather from favor to the prisoner, than strictly as evidence of general character." This passage is made more emphatic in later editions, ending with the 10th (I, 507) in 1852. But not a single authority was vouchsafed for the above passage until in 1824, in the 6th edition, R. v. Jones, the single misleading utterance, above explained, was referred to; and, in spite of the score of instances in the 1800s alone, no other citation was made, nor could be, indeed, to justify that passage. Thus, curiously and unfortunately enough, the law of England as repeatedly declared for two centuries was overturned by a passage invented and inserted by a text-writer without the citation of a single precedent.

§ 1982. [1] Earlier precedents in the same century are: 1664, Turner's Trial, 6 How. St. Tr. 565, 607; 1680, Earl of Stafford's Trial, 7 How. St. Tr. 1293, 1457.

1725, Lord Chancellor Macclesfield's Trial, 16 How. St. Tr. 1239; Common Serjeant: "We desire that Mr. Price may give your Lordships an account of what he knows of the character of Mr. Cothingham and how long he hath known him." Mr. Price: "My lords, I have known him upwards of twenty years; I never knew anybody say anything amiss of him. . . . I know no man in his place behaved himself better than he hath done." Common Serjeant: "We desire to ask not only to what Mr. Price's opinion is, but to what is the opinion of others, as to his general character." Mr. Price: "I believe, if you ask his character of an hundred people, ninety of them will give him rather a greater character."

1798, O'Connor's Trial, 27 How. St. Tr. 32; Mr. Dallas: "Does your lordship [the witness, Earl of Moira] know a person of the name of Dutton, a quartermaster in the artillery?" "I have heard of him, I do not know him." "Does your lordship know what is his general character?" "Mr. Garrow: "His lorsdhip says that all he knows of Dutton's character is from hearing. . . . The constant practice, where character has been inquired into, has been to put the question thus: Are you acquainted with such a person? From your acquaintance with him, what is his general character? But I never heard that when a witness says, 'I do not know the person, but have heard of him,' that then it was asked, 'What have you heard of his reputation?'" Mr. Dallas: "I admit that hearsay would not be evidence of any particular fact. But . . . I take it to be perfectly clear that it is no objection in this case, to an account of character, to say that it amounts only to hearsay; because when one man gives the character of another, it must be that which he has heard from others, for it extends beyond his own knowledge, and the question is generally put to an extent beyond his own knowledge." Mr. Justice BULLER: "Did you ever hear that asked when the witness said he knew nothing about the person?" Mr. Justice HEATH: "It must be founded in personal knowledge." Mr. Justice LAWRENCE: "'The question is always put in this way: 'Do you know the witness? Yes. Then, what do you know of him?'" Mr. Dallas: "It is my duty to acquiesce."

This was the established practice of the 1700s[2] as well as of the 180[illegible] Some things are clear from these precedents:

a. The terms "character" and "general character" are used more or les[illegible] flexibly, but do not have an orthodox meaning of "reputation." What ha[illegible]

[2] 1742, Annesley's Trial, 17 How. St. Tr. 1132; 1744, Earl of Anglesea's Trial, 18 How. St. Tr. 273; 1754, Canning's Trial, 19 How. St. Tr. 589, 595; 1797, Carty's Trial, 26 How. St. Tr. 900; 1798, Bond's Trial, 27 How. St. Tr. 580, 584, 586, 588.

[3] 1802, Wall's Trial, 28 How. St. Tr. 142; 1802, R. v. Taylor, cited in McNally, Evidence, 261, per Buller, J. ("swearing that from what they had observed in his conversation and manners they would not believe him on oath"); 1802, Mawson v. Hartsink, 4 Esp. 102, Lord Kenyon, C. J. ("He was asked as to his knowledge of L., and whether he would believe him on oath"); 1804, Carlos v. Brook, 10 Ves. Jr. 49, Lord Eldon, L. C. ("whether he would believe that man upon his oath"); 1805, R. v. Rudge, Peake Add. Cas. 232, Lawrence, J. ("by general evidence of persons who were acquainted with him as to their belief of his credibility on oath"); 1806, McDonough's Trial, 30 How. St. Tr. 20; The Threshers' Trials, 30 How. St. Tr. 214; 1805, Picton's Trial, 30 How. St. Tr. 259; 1813, Plumer, V. C., in Watmore v. Dickinson, 2 Ves. & B. 265 ("The only proper question as Mr. Cooke ha[illegible] observed, is whether the witness is worthy of belief upon his oath"); 1814, Anon., 8 Ves. & B. 93 (an affidavit discrediting by particul[illegible] facts was taken off the file; Eldon, L. C[illegible] "You may ask, whether the witness is to b[illegible] believed upon his oath; which is the course at law, not going to particular facts"); 1817, R. v. Watson, 2 Stark. 154, 32 How. St. Tr. 495 (Abbott, J.: "The usual question put for the purpose of discrediting the testimony of a witness is, 'Would you believe that witness upon his oath?'" Bayley, J.: "The witnesses may state that he is not a man to be believed upon his oath"); 1817, R. v. Clark, 2 Stark. 241, Holroyd, J. (after discrediting evidence of imprisonment, the superintendent of the House of Refuge was allowed to speak to the witness' good character while there); 1817, Sharp v. Scoging, Holt N. P. 541, Gibbs, C. J. ("When you endeavor to destroy the credit of a witness, you are permitted to call other witnesses who know him, and to ask them this general question, Would you believe such a man upon his oath? . . . As no man is to been said (ante, § 1981, c), applies equally to the terms as here used. Moreover, reputation alone, as O'Connor's Trial shows, was not regarded as sufficient; personal knowledge was the fundamental requirement.[4]

b. The only doubt was whether, since credibility was the important thing in a witness, the attack could be made upon his "general character" — i. e. his qualities as a man generally — or only upon the specific trait of credibility. Towards the end of the 1700s, the opinion grew up that this "general character" (i. e. as a whole) had nothing to do with his credibility, and that the testimony must be specifically directed to the latter quality only.[5] But a compromise was finally reached, and the witness was allowed to employ his knowledge of this "general" character, and to lay it before the Court with reference specifically to credibility, i. e. to say whether he would believe the other upon oath.[6] The important thing here is that it was assumed that the witness spoke from personal knowledge, and the controversy was simply whether the statement of his experience should deal with the man's good or bad qualities as a whole, or with only the specific quality of credibility upon oath.

We are now in a position to understand the language of the classical treati writers of the early 1800s. In Phillipps' passage, for instance,[7] so often cited in this country, he used "general character," not in the sense of "repu tion," but of general traits or qualities as distinguished from par-be permitted destroy a witness' character without having grounds to state why he thinks him unworthy of credit, you may ask him his means of knowledge and his reasons of disbelief"); 1820, Thistlewood's Trial, 33 How. St. Tr. 812; Davidson's Trial, 33 How. St. Tr. 1440, 1441; 1824, May v. Brown, 3 B. & C. 126, Bayley, J. ("When the credit of a witness is objected to, general evidence that he is not to be believed on oath is admissible; but specific evidence of that at some period he had committed a particular crime is not admissible"); 1830, R. v. Bispham, 4 C. & P. 392, Garrow, B. (repudiating the suggestion that a character-witness must have heard the impeached witness examined on oath at least once: "You have known him three years; have you such a knowledge of his general character and conduct that you can conscientiously say that, from what you know of him, it is impossible to place the least reliance on the truth of any statement that he may make?" "Yes"); 1833, R. v. Hemp, 5 C. & P. 468, Denman, L. C. J. (the question "whether from having heard Mr. J. give false evidence on the trial of a former cause, he considered that his testimony could be relied on," was excluded, and the question allowed: "From what you know of the general character of Mr. J., would you believe him on oath?"); 1833, R. v. Nicholls, 5 C. & P. 606, Parke, J. (whether the witnesses in question were "of very bad character" and whether "he would believe those persons on their oaths"; allowed); 1843, R. v. Tissington, 1 Cox Cr. 48, Abinger, C. B., semble; 1848, R. v. Duffy, 7 State Tr. N. S. 795, 897.

[4] The following passages show this as the historical starting-point: 1684, Rosewell's Trial, 10 How. St. Tr. 147, 230 ("Do you know this of your own knowledge? For we must not hear evidence to take away people's reputation by hearsay"); 1686, Lord Delamere's Trial, 11 How. St. Tr. 509, 570 ("It is not what the town says, but what can be proved, that we must take for evidence").

[5] 1794, Rowan's Trial, 22 How. St. Tr. 1065 (objected to and withdrawn); see particularly the language in Carlos v. Brook, Watmore v. Dickinson, ante, and the cases immediately thereafter, in which the quality of credibility is made the essential requirement of the testimony. This subject has been already more particularly examined ante, § 922.

[6] This form appears as early as 1794, per Buller, J., in De la Motte's Trial, 21 How. St. Tr. 811; and later in Mawson v. Hartsink, Watson's Trial, R. v. Bispham, and R. v. Hemp. It does not seem to have become usual till after 1830.

[7] 1814, Phillipps, Evidence, 1st ed., 109: "The regular mode is to inquire whether they have the means of knowing the former witness' general character, and whether from such knowledge they would believe him on his oath [citing Rookwood's Trial and Mawson v. Hartsink]."

ticular acts and from the specific quality of credibility. This is shown by a collation of the statements of other writers of the time.[8] They had two important rules in mind: (1) that you cannot give evidence of particular acts, and (2) that (as just pointed out) you cannot against a witness speak of his general qualities unless you follow it up with the specific quality of credibility; and it was in trying to make this plain that they employed the term "general character"; any meaning of "reputation," as distinguished from personal knowledge, was far from their minds, and would have been repudiated.

d. In modern practice, the ruling in R. v. Rowton [9] seems not to have been regarded as affecting testimony to a witness' character, and the orthodox and traditional use of personal knowledge still obtains, both in practice [10] and in law.[11]

b. United States

In the United States the orthodox rule has been widely departed from, in both branches; though the tendency is just the opposite of that in England, i. e. the departure is more marked in the case of a witness' character.

§ 1983. Moral Character of Accused, of Complainant in Rape, of Deceased in Homicide, and the like. In the application of the rule to a party (or quasi-party) in a criminal case, the matter has not received adjudication as generally as might be supposed; but so far as decisions have dealt with it, reputation is in the majority of jurisdictions made the exclusive mode of proof.[1] Apparently the result has been reached by accepting the analogy of [8] 1806, Evans, Notes to Pothier, 1st ed., II, 260 ("It is an established rule that witnesses examined with a view to discredit the testimony of others cannot be admitted to depose to particular facts of criminality, but can only express their general opinion whether the party is or is not entitled to be believed upon his oath"); 1824, Starkie, Evidence, 1st ed., I, 145, 146 ("The credit of a witness may be impeached . . . by general evidence that he is not worthy to be believed upon oath, but no evidence can be given of particular collateral facts. . . . The proper question to be put to a witness for the purpose of impeaching the general character of another witness is, whether he could believe him upon his oath?"). If Starkie's passage had been used rather than Phillipps', American Courts would hardly have been led into the maze of varying rulings which they now have.

[9] Cited ante, § 1981.

[10] 1883, Stephen, Hist. Crim. Law, I, 437: "[The witness] may, however, be impeached by witnesses who will swear in general terms that he is not worthy of credit on oath."

[11] 1867, R. v. Brown, 10 Cox Cr. 453, before five judges; the question whether the witnesses "would believe the witnesses for the prosecution upon their oaths," was held proper, R. v. Rowton not being held to exclude it; Kelly, C. B.: "The practice now called in question has existed for centuries, and all of us have knowledge of it so far as our experience goes. The question reserved as to it ought not therefore to be argued at all." The argument, based on R. v. Rowton and Phillips v. Kingfield, post, was specifically directed against any use of the witness' personal opinion. Martin, B., however, while rejecting the argument emphatically, quoted as accurate a passage from Taylor on Evidence, § 1324, declaring the regular mode of question to be, "Whether he knows his general reputation, what that reputation is, and whether from such knowledge he would believe him on his oath." This was not the form used in the case in hand; and yet the failure of Martin, B., to perceive any distinction detracts greatly from the force of the ruling.

§ 1983. [1] In the following list are also included cases dealing with the moral character of a complainant in rape and a deceased in homicide; the distinction being practicable between moral traits of all such persons, on the one hand, and the moral trait of veracity in a witness, on the other hand: there should of course be no distinction in principle. Where not otherwise noted, the character involved in the settled notion as to witness' character; and the reasons are therefore to be sought under the latter head the following rulings is that of an accused: Alabama: 1885, Jackson v. State, 78 Ala 472 (personal knowledge excluded); 1888, Hussey v. State, 87 Ala. 133, 6 So. 400 (same); 1889, Holmes v. State, 88 Ala. 26, 29, 7 So. 193 (excluded where the witness had known the defendant for only two years and not intimately); 1889, Moulton v. State, 88 Ala. 116, 118, 6 So. 758 (only reputation admissible); 1921, Latikos v. State, 17 Ala. App. 592, 88 So. 45 (defendant's character not provable by witness' personal opinion); 1921, Lambert v. State, 205 Ala. 547, 88 So. 847 (murder; witness' personal knowledge of deceased's character for violence, not admissible); Arkansas: 1921, Trotter v. State, 148 Ark. 466, 231 S. W. 177 (manslaughter; witness' opinion, based on reputation of deceased's character for violence, excluded, because only reputation was relevant to show defendant's state of mind); California: 1879, People v. Casey, 53 Cal. 361 (testimony of long personal acquaintance; "during that time his character has always been that of a quiet, peaceable citizen; I never knew of his having any other difficulty"; this was referred to by the Court as "not the most satisfactory method of proving a previous good reputation"); 1893, People v. Samonset, 97 Cal. 448, 450, 32 Pac. 520 ("chaste character" of prosecutrix in seduction proved by one who had "never known of any improper conduct on her part"); 1897, People v. Wade, 118 Cal. 672, 50 Pac. 842 (chaste character of seduction-prosecutrix; personal opinion of the head of a family in which she lived, received); 1904, People v. Tibbs, 143 Cal. 100, 76 Pac. 904 (People v. Wade approved); Connecticut: 1820, Hosmer, C. J., in Stowe v. Converse, 3 Conn. 343 (to rebut a charge of infidelity, admitting a "uniform profession, conduct, and conversation from his youth up"); 1866, State v. Jerome, 33 Conn. 265, 269 (the defendant's character for chastity being in issue, questions were allowed as to the extent of the witness' personal acquaintance with the defendant, inasmuch as "there must be a great difference between the opinion of a next-door neighbor and that of a distant acquaintance"); Delaware: 1900, State v. Briscoe, 3 Penn. Del. 7 50 Atl. 271 (larceny; personal knowledge of defendant's character, based on business dealings, excluded); Georgia: 1853, Stamper v. Griffin, 12 Ga. 453, 456 (personal knowledge used; no question raised); Illinois: 1882, Hirschman v. People, 101 Ill. 568, 574 (personal knowledge excluded); 1905, People v. Sullivan, 218 Ill. 419, 75 N. E. 1005 (disbarment; a statement signed by numerous judges that the respondent "was never fined, rebuked, or censured" by any of them, and that his "professional character was never assailed to their knowledge," held to relate only to the "personal knowledge or personal belief of the signers," and to be therefore inadmissible); Indiana: 1891, Bowlus v. State, 130 Ind. 227, 230, 28 N. E. 1115 (in showing the deceased's character, as affecting the issue of self-defence, personal knowledge of the defendant is a proper source); Iowa: 1885, State v. Sterrett, 68 Ia. 76, 78, 25 N. W. 936 (personal knowledge allowed); 1885, State v. Cross, 68 Ia. 180, 185, 26 N. W. 62 (same); 1905, State v. Richards, 126 Ia. 497, 102 N. W. 439 (State v. Sterrett, followed); 1915, State v. Rowell, 172 Ia. 208, 154 N. W. 488 (opinion of immoral quality of supposed acts of accused, excluded); Kansas: 1906, State v. Simmons, 74 Kan. 799, 88 Pac. 57 (personal opinion inadmissible; certain forms of expression passed upon); 1908, State v. Tawney, 78 Kan. 855, 99 Pac. 268 ("Do you know his character, etc.?" held proper, the term being presumably used for "reputation"); 1909, Spain v. Rakestraw, 79 Kan. 758, 101 Pac. 466 (self-defence to a battery; witness to plaintiff's character as a quarrelsome man; rule of State v. Johnson, post, § 1985, applied, but with liberality); Kentucky: 1916, McLain v. Com., 171 Ky. 373, 188 S. W. 377 (deceased's violent character in homicide; defendant may show "by persons intimately acquainted with him to the effect that that was his nature"); Massachusetts: 1850, Com. v. Webster, Mass., Bemis' Rep. 241 ("individual and personal opinion," inadmissible); 1876, Com. v. O'Brien, 118 Mass. 345 (quoting R. v. Rowton, Eng., but expressing no choice between the two rules); 1891, Day v. Ross, 154 Mass. 13, 27 N. E. 676, semble (personal knowledge excluded); Michigan: 1900, People v. Turney, 124 Mich. 542, 83 N. W. 273 (personal knowledge excluded); 1904, People v. Albers, 137 Mich. 678, 100 N. W. 908 (personal knowledge, excluded; People v. Turney not cited); Minnesota: 1876, State v. Lee, 22 Minn. 407, 409 (personal knowledge admitted; quoted post, § 1987); Nebraska: 1894, Berneker v. State, 40 Nebr. 810, 815, 59 N. W. 372 (defendant's honest character, not provable by personal knowledge); 1897, Golder v. Lund, 50 Nebr. 867, 70 N. W. 397 (plaintiff's character for peaceableness, excluded); Nevada: 1880, State v. Pearce, 15 Nev. 188, 190 (personal knowledge of the defendant's good character, excluded); New Mexico: 1918, State v. Sedillo, 24 N. M. 549, 174 Pac. 985 (murder; personal opinion, as a sole basis for testimony to reputation of deceased, rejected); New York: 1830, People v. Mather, 4 Wend. 258 (obscure); 1880, Mayer v. People, 80 N. Y. 377 (testimony to actual good conduct admitted; no question raised); 1888, People v.

§ 1984. Character for Care, Competence, or Professional Skill, as Party or Witness. In civil cases, orthodox principle has seldom been abandoned in rulings upon the character qualities usually in issue, — the competence of an employee as to carefulness, the professional competence of a physician as to skill, the mental capacity of a testator as to sanity, and the like, — in short, the non-moral traits of character, as distinguished from the moral traits of peaceableness, honesty, chastity, and general goodness, which usually come into question for a defendant in a criminal case. As to the former class of traits, the orthodox rule in England was there followed, and personal knowledge and opinion was admitted.[1] In the United Greenwall, 108 N. Y. 302, 15 N. E. 404 (same); 1907, People v. Van Gaasbeck, 189 N. Y. 408, 82 N. E. 718 (defendant in homicide; "the personal knowledge and belief of the witness must be excluded"); North Carolina: 1827, Pierce v. Myrick, 1 Dev. 345, 346 (evidence held receivable of the "general good character, and orderly deportment" of a slave); 1855, Bottoms v. Kent, 3 Jones L. 160 (Pearson, J.: "Proof by the individual opinion of witnesses, formed from an observation of particular acts, which necessarily lets in the history of a person's whole life-time," is therefore objectionable; but, semble, is admissible on testamentary issues concerning undue influence, etc.); Ohio: 1860, Gandolfo v. State, 11 Oh. St. 114 (Question: "From your knowledge of the defendant, what is his character for peace and quietness? By 'character,' I mean what the man is, not what people say about him"; held proper; except that the witness could not be asked for an opinion not found on cources "common to those acquainted with" the person; quoted post, § 1987,; 1875, Marts v. State, 26 Oh. St. 162, 168 (character of the murdered person; admitted); 1907, State v. Dickerson, 77 Oh. 34, 82 N. E. 969 (Gandolfo v. State approved; "the accused is not confined to his reputation for a certain trait . . . but may by those most intimate with him during a course of years spread before the jury his real self"); Pennsylvania: 1855, Zitzer v. Merkel, 24 Pa. 408 (of the daughter, in an action for seduction; personal knowledge excluded); Washington: 1909, State v. Hosey, 54 Wash. 309, 103 Pac. 12 (rape under age; defendant's character proved by opinion based on personal knowledge, expressly declared admissible; Dunbar, J.: "reputation such as was proved under the old rule was only what a certain given number of people thought about a man, and was but an enlargement in numbers of what one man thought or knew about him; and there seems to be no good reason why the opinion and knowledge of the one man should be excluded because he is not able to duplicate that opinion by giving the names of others who have expressed their opinion as to his reputation"; but the Court's opinion is open to criticism in that it reaches this result by deduction from the rule that reputation may consist in not having heard anything against the man; personal opinion is distinct from that (ante, § 1614), and the decision should have recognized the distinction); Wisconsin: 1879, Dufresne v. Weise, 46 Wis. 290, 297, 1 N. W. 59 (in showing character as affecting damages for defamation, personal knowledge is admissible).

As to a deceased's character, in a homicide charge, it is to be noted that his actual character as evidence of his probable aggression, offered under § 63, ante, ought to be provable by personal knowledge, as in Bowlus v. State, Ind., supra; but his reputed character, as evidence of the defendant's reasonable apprehension, under § 266, ante, could be proved only by reputation: 1899, State v. Shadwell, 22 Mont. 559, 57 Pac. 281.

The question, "Do you believe that the defendant (or, a man of his character) would be likely to commit an act of the kind here charged?" which was usual in the early orthodox English practice (as seen ante, § 1981, par. b, n. 3, and § 59, n. 2), would be equally forbidden by the American Opinion rule as above accepted; a few cases showing this are cited ante, § 59, n. 3.

§ 1984. [1] 1807, R. v. Williamson, 8 C. & P. 635, Ellenborough, L. C. J. (women, to the skill of a midwife who had attended them); 1831, R. v. Long, Old Bailey, before Bayley, B., Pelham's Chronicles of Crime, ed. 1891, II, 217, 227 (quoted ante, § 221); 1844, Greville v. Chapman, 5 Q. B. 738 (here the action was for libel in charging the plaintiff with dishonorable conduct in betting against his own horse and then withdrawing him; the witness, who had testified that no rule of the Jockey Club forbade this conduct, was allowed to explain that a person doing this would still be regarded as lacking in honor and would probably be expelled from the Club); 1848, R. v. Whitehead, 3 C. & K. 202, Maule, J. (a patient who had been treated for cancer, to his physician's competence). In Ramadge v. Ryan, 9 Bing. 333 (1832) where the defendant had praised T., a physician who refused to consult with the plaintiff, a quack

States there has been comparatively little departure from the orthodox rule. Personal knowledge, as the foundation of testimony to sanity, has everywhere been held admissible, though (for lay witnesses) only after a long controversy and with certain local qualifications of rule.[2] Testimony of the same sort to carefulness or negligence of disposition (when in issue or evidential as to an employee or a party) has also usually been received.[3] physician, a physician-witness B. was not allowed to state whether T. had "honorably and faithfully discharged his duty to the medical profession" as alleged by the defendant; the Court's reason was that such an answer would depend entirely on the temper of each witness; but the real reason seems to be that it was not the witness' individual standard, but the general professional standard which alone was of consequence. In Bremer v. Freeman (1857), 10 Moo. P. C. 306, 362, Lord Wensleydale, referring to the difficulty of weighing the conflicting testimony of certain experts to foreign law, remarked that "a proper sense of professional delicacy precludes them from giving evidence as to the merits of each other."

[2] This has already been examined ante, §§ 1933-1938.

[3] Compare with the following the cases cited ante, §§ 199, 208 (particular acts), and § 1621 (reputation): U. S. 1896, Crane Co. v. Columbus C. Co., 20 C. C. A. 233, 73 Fed. 984 (whether workmen were men of experience or skill, allowed); 1905, Southern Pac. Co. v. Hetzer, 135 Fed. 272, 277, 68 C. C. A. 26, semble (fellow-servant's character, admissible); Ala. 1905, First Nat'l Bank v. Chandler, 144 Ala. 286, 39 So. 822 (whether an employee was "a wide-awake, attentive boy," allowed); 1920, Jackson v. Vaughn, 204 Ala. 543, 86 So. 469; Conn. 1921, Kelly v. Waterbury, 96 Conn. 494, 114 Atl. 530 (death by automobile; whether the driver "gave evidence of being an inexperienced driver," not allowed); 1921, Richmond v. Norwich, 96 Conn. 582, 115 Atl. 11 (injury by rifle shot from a guard stationed by defendant in war-time at the reservoir; personal opinion as to the guard's traits, held admissible; quotation supra, § 1986); Ga. 1896, Columbus & R. R. Co. v. Christian, 97 Ga. 56, 25 S. E. 411 ("such general character [of an incompetent employee knowingly employed] must rest largely upon the opinions of witnesses, based upon their observation of the conduct of the individual, and upon the impressions formed upon their minds by reports of other persons"); 1907, Moore v. Dozier, 128 Ga. 90, S. E. 110 (custody of child; that the mother was "an unfit person to rear the children," not allowed); Ia. 1893, Butler v. R. Co., 87 Ia. 206, 210, 54 N. W. 208 (whether an engineer was skilled, excluded); Kan. 1895, Cherokee P. C. & M. Co. v. Dickson, 55 Kan. 62, 39 Pac. 691 (inadmissible; yet it was held admissible to speak of "the general manner in which he did his work" and "wherein his work differed from that of a skilful miner"); 1911, Saunders v. Atchison T. & S. F. R. Co., 86 Kan. 56, 119 Pac. 552 (competence and skilfulness of an engineer, allowed); Ky. 1911, Mayfield Lumber Co. v. Lewis Adm'r, 142 Ky. 727, 135 S. W. 420 (driver's incompetence; excluded; no authority cited); Mass. 1855, Baldwin v. R. Co., 4 Gray 333 (negligent character of the plaintiff's driver; provable by one having personal knowledge); 1861, Gahagan v. R. Co., 1 All. 190 (a flagman shown to be "careful, attentive, and temperate," by "witnesses who had seen his conduct and could testify to the facts which they had observed"); 1894, McGuerty v. Hale, 161 Mass. 51, 36 N. E. 682 (that an employee was careful, able, etc., allowed); Mich. 1896, Lewis v. Emery, 108 Mich. 641, 66 N. W. 569 (whether a person was a competent workman, admitted); Minn. 1900, Nutzmann v. Ins. Co., 78 Minn. 504, 81 N. W. 518 (the skill and experience needed to operate a hydraulic elevator; allowed); Mo. 1896, Boettger v. Iron Co., 136 Mo. 531, 38 S. W. 298 (whether an employee was competent; excluded); 1898, Langston v. R. Co., 147 Mo. 457, 48 S. W. 835 (manager's opinion of employee's competency, excluded); Okla. 1919, Federal Oil & Gas Co. v. Campbell, 65 Okl. 49, 183 Pac. 894 (whether a fellow-servant was competent for the work assigned, not allowed; the opinion does not discriminate between this question and that of § 1951 ante; the authorities quoted deal with the question of § 1951 and not with the present one); Pa. 1860, Frazier v. R. Co., 38 Pa. 104, 111 (negligence of the defendant in knowingly employing a careless servant; defendant's officer's personal estimation of the servant as a careful man, admitted); 1874, Hays v. Millar, 77 Pa. 239, semble (where a carrier's selection of competent servants is material to the issue, their competency and skill may be shown by persons well acquainted with them, and cannot be shown by reputation); S. Car. 1902, Hicks v. R. Co., 63 S. C. 559, 41 S. E. 753 (competency of an engineer; witness' opinion excluded); Tex. 1888, Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Patton, — Tex. —, 9 S. W. 175 (fellow-servant's testimony to an engineer's careless character, admitted); 1898, Galveston H. & S. A. R. Co. v. Davis, 92 Tex. 372, 48 S. W. 570 (engineer's incompetence; opinion of railroad man knowing him, admitted); Utah: 1899, Stoll v. Daly Min. Co., 19 Utah 271, 57 Pac. 295 (fellow-servant's incompe-

Testimony to professional skill, concerning either party or witness, when furnished by professional persons qualified to know, is also generally regarded as receivable.[4]

Distinguish (1) testimony to the quality or significance of a particular act (ante, § 1949); for example, to the propriety or due care of a specific act of a surgeon or employee under certain circumstances, as contrasted with the general competence of the surgeon or employee performing it; both sorts of testimony should be received; but the objection of the Opinion rule has a different force in the two cases; (2) conduct of other persons as circumstantial evidence of skill, reasonableness, etc. (ante, § 461).

§ 1985. Witness' Moral Character. Here the departure from the orthodox rule has been almost complete; in nearly all of the jurisdictions, reputatence; personal opinion excluded); W. Va. 1905, Purkey v. Southern C. & T. Co., 57 W. Va. 595, 50 S. E. 755 (opinion as to the competency of a mine-boss, excluded).

[4] Compare with the following the cases in the sections cited in note 3, supra; Ala. 1847, Tullis v. Kidd, 12 Ala. 650 (competency of a physician, allowed); 1903, Birmingham R. & E. Co. v. Ellard, 135 Ala. 433, 33 So. 276 (opinion of one expert as to another's skill, excluded; the ruling gives confused reasons); Col. (Dist.): 1881, Guiteau's Trial, D. C., II, 1421 (Mr. Reed, for the defendant: "I submit that one expert cannot go upon the stand and swear that another expert is a fool"; the Court: "There is no legal objection, but as a matter of expediency it is not generally to be encouraged, I think"; compare Lord Wensleydale's remark, quoted ante, § 1984); Conn. 1917, Gray v. Mossman, 91 Conn. 430, 99 Atl. 1062 (defamation; plea, privilege of a military report; character desirable in a military officer, testified to by military experts); Ill. 1905, Cleveland v. Martin, 218 Ill. 73, 75 N. E. 772 (injunction by medical author to restrain the publication of a book as not equal to contract and as likely to damage the plaintiff's repute; the opinions of medical men as to the probable or actual injury to repute by the publication were admitted); Ia. 1883, State v. Maynes, 61 Ia. 120, 15 N. W. 864 (qualifications of another expert witness, allowed); 1896, Kuen v. Upmier, 98 Ia. 393, 67 N. W. 374 (whether another person was able to speak English, admitted); 1898, Lacy v. Kossuth Co., 106 Ia. 16, 75 N. W. 689 (incompetency of a physician, under statute "mere individual opinion," excluded); Ky. 1901, Clark v. Com., 111 Ky. 443, 63 S. W. 740 (abortion; the operation being bunglingly done, and the issue being whether it had been done by the deceased herself, or by the defendant, testimony as to the defendant's skill, by those who had personal knowledge of his conduct of cases, was held admissible); La. 1832, Brabo v. Martin, 5 La. 177 (qualifications of another expert, excluded, as confusing the issues); Mich. 1882, Mason v. Phelps, 48 Mich. 131, 11 N. W. 413 (qualifications of another expert witness, allowed); 1897, People v. Holmes, 111 Mich. 364, 69 N. W. 501 (similar); 1908, Alexander v. Mud Lake L. Co., 153 Mich. 70, 116 N. W. 539 (wages; testimony to plaintiff's competency, admitted); 1921, Wood v. Vroman, 215 Mich. 449, 184 N. W. 520 (malpractice; testimony "whether the treatment prescribed evidenced the exercise of such skill and knowledge" as is required, allowed); Minn. 1899, Martin v. Courtney, 75 Minn. 255, 77 N. W. 813 (malpractice; testimony to a medical witness' competency on doctrines of a certain school of treatment, admissible); Mo. 1889, Thompson v. Ish, 99 Mo. 106, 12 S. W. 510 (expert witness' qualifications as a physician, allowed to be proved by another physician who knew him personally); N. H. 1855, Leighton v. Sargent, 31 N. H. 119, 132 (malpractice; whether the defendant had more than ordinary skill, excluded); Pa. 1876, Laros v. Com. 84 Pa. 208 (the qualifications of another expert witness, allowed; "If I have seen a workman doing his work frequently, and know his skill myself surely, if I myself am a judge of such work, I can testify to his skill"); Wash. 1909, Johnson v. Coughren, 55 Wash. 125, 104 Pac. 170 (injury by a blast; opinions as to the "competency and fitness of F. to perform his duties as a powder-man," excluded; Chadwick, J., diss.; the entire foregoing list of authorities is ignored).

Of course, this might not justify asking one expert as to the value of another expert witness' opinion: 1862, Haverhill L. & F. Ass'n v. Cronin, 4 All. Mass. 163; nor asking one witness as to the truth of another's testimony: 1869, Holliman v. Cabanne, 43 Mo. 569; and cases cited ante, § 787.

Testimony based on personal knowledge of an animal's disposition is receivable: 1875, Sydleman v. Beckwith, 43 Conn. 11 (horse). Contra: 1900, Hayes v. Smith, 62 Oh. 161, 56 N. E. 879, semble (keeping a dangerous dog; witness' opinion to his peaceableness, held inadmissible).

tion appears as the sole source of proof. It has already been seen (ante, §§ 1981, 1982) that in England the use of reputation was at first heterodox, and only late in time became established as permissible. But in the United States we find the Courts starting very early with the opposite assumption, i. e. that reputation is not only a permissible, but the orthodox and exclusive, mode of proof. Thus, historically, in our Courts, the anomalous and variant forms of the rule as to witness' character are due to an effort to reconcile the traditional and orthodox question as to personal belief with this supposed principle that reputation alone was the proper source of proof.

(1) But, first, how did they come to accept this supposed principle? With the long series of English precedents, calling for personal belief directly and clearly, how did the notion of reputation as the exclusive source find its way into our practice? The exact course of the change is obscure; but the influences were chiefly two. (a) The first American treatise on Evidence, appearing in 1810, by Chief Justice Swift of Connecticut, explicitly laid down the unqualified rule that reputation alone is the admissible source, and that the witness' "private opinion" was inadmissible.[1] There is some reason for believing that his language does not mean all it appears to;[2] but at any rate it served as authority for many early American Courts. (b) In the phrase of Phillipps ("whether he knows the general character of the witness, and from such knowledge would believe him on oath"), already quoted and explained (ante, § 1983), the word "character" came to be understood, by some obscure process, as meaning exclusively "reputation," and not the person's actual qualities; and thus the foundation was laid for the notion that reputation was the essential and fundamental thing.[3] By these influences a great body of precedents was early created, the effect of which was to establish the notion that reputation was the fundamental source of proof. Of the two influences (Swift's book and the misunderstood English passage), the difference was in time rather than in degree. The early Courts (before the appearance and vogue of Phillipps' treatise, say, before 1820) that did not know of Swift's book seem to have allowed personal knowledge freely, as in England; [4] but the Phillipps passage in due time brought around many, and the Greenleaf utterance,[5] together with the then existing body of precedents, account for the more modern Courts.

§ 1985. [1] 1810, Swift, Evidence, 143: "A witness called to impeach or support the general character of another [witness] is not to speak of his private opinion or of particular facts in his own knowledge; but he must speak of the common reputation among his neighbors and acquaintances. The only proper questions to be put to him are, whether he knows the general character of the witness intended to be impeached, in point of truth, among his neighbors; and what that character is, whether good or bad? The witness may be inquired of as to the means and opportunity he has of knowing the character of the witness impeached, — as, how long he has known him, how near he lives to him, and whether his character has been a subject of general conversation; but his testimony must be founded on the common repute and understanding of his acquaintance as to his truth, and not as to honesty or punctuality. In England, [citing 4 Esp. 162], the first question is, whether the witness impeaching has the means of knowing the general character of the other witness? and from such knowledge of his general character, whether he would believe him on oath?"

[2] (1) The witness' personal knowledge of the other is evidently assumed to exist; (2) On p. 141, personal belief as to a defendant's character is evidently allowed; (3) The real point of difference, in Swift's mind, between English practice and that of his own country, was as to the kind of character, i. e. general qualities, or veracity only.

[3] Thus, Greenleaf (§ 461), in a passage almost identical with this, substitutes "reputation" for "character." But it is worth noting that Mr. J. Story, in Gass v. Stinson, 2 Sumn. 610, infra, n. 14, did not make this mistake.

(2) But the matter has been complicated by the traditional use of the question, "Would you believe the person on oath?" This, as our Courts could not help seeing in all the precedents and text-books, was the perfectly accepted form of the English common law; and the problem which they had to face was, to reconcile this with the notion, otherwise established in their minds, that reputation was the essential and sole source of proof. This problem was solved in various ways. There are at least five different types of solutions, — more than one of them, indeed, being often found in the rulings of the same Court.

(a) One solution squarely excludes any such question as inconsistent with the principle that reputation is the sole source. A minority of the Courts take this radical step.[6]

(b) Another takes the opposite extreme, i. e. preserves the common-law tradition, and distinctly allows the personal belief of the witness to be used. This is early and rare.[7]

(c) Still another solution is to require the witness to say whether he knows the "character" or "reputation" of the other witness, and then to allow the question, "Knowing that character (or, reputation), would you believe him on oath?" This preliminary clause was supposed to be a traditional part of the question as used in the original English practice, the authority of Professor Greenleaf [8] serving as the basis of this notion. Yet it is entirely erroneous, as the already quoted English precedents show; for the traditional English question asked directly for the witness' personal belief; and the preliminary clause (historically later in time), when there was one, asked for "character" and not "reputation." [9] This form of solution, however simple, evades the issue; for it does not require the witness to say whether his personal experience, or his knowledge of the reputation, is to be the ground of his belief; the preliminary clause is formally necessary, but the real issue of principle is left unsettled.[10] A hybrid form, more nearly [4] E. g. the opinion of Mr. J. Wright, in Ohio (Seely v. Blair, post).

[5] In 1842.

[6] E. g. Connecticut, Iowa, Maine, Massachusetts, the later North Carolina rulings.

[7] E. g. the early Ohio cases, some early South Carolina cases, early Illinois cases.

[8] § 461.

[9] As late as 1836 and 1837, Mr. J. Story, in Wood v. Mann and Gass v. Stinson, 2 Sumn. 32, 610, cited infra, states the English practice as asking directly for belief on oath, without the preliminary clause; he understood the English practice better than Professor Greenleaf; for it must be remembered, as explained ante, § 1982, that the fundamental notion of the English rule after 1800 was to get at the specific quality of credibility by asking for belief on oath; and thus the preliminary clause, used after 1830, was not required, but merely permitted to those who wished to bring to bear the impeached person's character as a whole; moreover, its presence, as above explained, was not due to any importance of getting at reputation, but to the supposed irrelevancy of general disposition unassociated with a reference to the trait of credibility.

[10] E. g. Georgia, Virginia, several Federal rulings.

approaching the next one as an expression of principle, is "From such knowledge [of reputation], would you believe him on oath?" thus more or less explicitly basing the belief on the reputation alone; no theory, however, being vouchsafed.[11]

(d) A peculiar and original solution is to insist upon one of these preliminary clauses, "Knowing his reputation [or, From such knowledge], would you believe him on oath?" and to harmonize this with the reputation-principle by distinctly excluding any element of personal knowledge, and by treating this expression of personal belief as a mere mode of measuring the quality of the reputation and of better expressing to the jury the exact degree of the community's positiveness of opinion on the subject.[12] This solution, though it is forced and fantastic, and though historically it is due merely to the necessity of reconciling fixed precedent with an invented principle, has at least the merit of facing the question and solving it rationally; and it is probably the real basis of most of the rulings adopting the form just described, under (c), as hybrid.

(e) There are sub-varieties of (c) and (d) in jurisdictions where character for veracity only (not general good or bad character) is usable for or against a witness; i. e. the preliminary clause in such jurisdictions calls for a knowledge of the reputation for veracity specially, not of reputation for general character.[13]

Just which of these solutions is the accepted law of a given jurisdiction to-day is not always easy to say;[14] a careful collation of the precedents, [11] E. g. the later Illinois cases, the later New York cases, New Hampshire, Pennsylvania; this is perhaps the most frequent form of all.

[12] 1875, Per Curiam, in Hillis v. Wylie, 26 Oh. St. 576: "To say that the reputation of the witness is 'bad' gives but imperfect information; 'bad' is a relative term, and the inquiry at once arises in the mind, 'How bad is it?' Is his reputation so bad that he ought not to be believed under oath? The mode of inquiry allowed is only a means of ascertaining what the reputation of the witness for truth really is. The object of the testimony is not to introduce as evidence the opinion of the impeaching witness as to the truthfulness of the witness against whom he testifies, but to enable the jury to ascertain the true character of his reputation for truth as the impeaching witness understands it, and thereby enable them to determine the extent to which it ought to discredit the witness. The question would be the same in effect if the witness were asked if the reputation of the witness in question were such as to go to his discredit when under oath." This reasoning seems to have been first advanced by Ruffin, C. J., in 1834, Downey v. Murphy, 1 Dev. & B. 85; other clear phrasings of it are found in opinions by Cowen, J., in People v. Rector, 19 Wend. 579 (1838), and Campbell, J., in Hamilton v. People, 29 Mich. 185 (1874).

[13] In number these jurisdictions far exceed the others; yet the form in (c) and (d), calling for general character only, must be treated as the original, from which these are variations, because the clause, when used in English practice, called for general character only, as already noticed (ante, § 1982).

[14] The precedents are as follows:
Federal: 1836, U. S. v. White, 5 Cr. C. C. 38, 42 (belief on oath, founded on reputation); 1836, Story, J., in Wood v. Mann, 2 Sumner 32 ("The general interrogatory only, whether he [the proposed witness] would believe the other on his oath (which is the usual form of putting the interrogatory in England, and differs widely from that in which it is usually put in America)" is alone usually allowed, i. e. no examination to particular facts); 1837, Story, J., in Gass v. Stinson, 2 Sumner 610 ("When the examination is to general credit, the course in England is to ask the question of the witnesses whether they would believe the party, sought to be discredited, upon his oath. With us the more usual course is to discredit the party by an inquiry what his general reputation for truth is, whether it is good or whether it is bad"); 1840, McLean, J., in U. S. v. Vansickle, 2 McLean 221 ("the even in the light of the principles and tendencies above mentioned, often leaves us in doubt, — an unfortunate result, in a matter so easily capable of an exact and uniform rule.

witness cannot advert to particular facts, or to his personal knowledge, of the character of the individual impeached"; but he may say, from knowing the reputation, whether he would believe on oath); 1851, Wayne, J. (the others not touching the point), in Gaines v. Relf, 12 How. 554 (he is to state the reputation, and "whether from that reputation he would believe him upon his oath"); 1859, Teese v. Huntington, 23 id. 2, 13 ("he is not required to speak from his own knowledge of the acts and transactions from which the character of the witness has been derived, nor indeed is he allowed to do so"); 1919, Held v. U. S., 5th C. C. A., 260 Fed. 932 ("From your knowledge of his general reputation for truth and veracity, would you believe him on oath?" allowed);

Alabama: 1839, McCutchen v. McCutchen, 9 Port. 655 ("he must know the general estimation in which he is held by his neighbors"); 1846, Sorrelle v. Craig, 9 Ala. 539 (general reputation, followed by personal belief, from the reputation, upon oath); 1848, Hadjo v. Gooden, 13 Ala. 721 (same); 1853, Dave v. State, 22 Ala. 23, 38 ("individual opinions" in general excluded; but "an exception to this rule sometimes obtains" in impeaching other witnesses); 1854, Martin v. Martin, 25 Ala. 211 ("personal knowledge of the witness' unworthiness," held improper); 1856, Ward v. State, 28 Ala. 63 (like Hadjo v. Gooden); 1860, Mose v. State, 36 Ala. 211, 220, 230 (personal opinion of the witness, based on personal acquaintance, excluded); 1866, Bullard v. Lambert, 40 Ala. 210, semble (like Sorrelle v. Craig); 1874, Artope v. Goodall, 53 Ala. 318, 325 (the "general character," what it is, and then the belief on oath founded upon it; and the second element may be fulfilled by saying that he has not a bad reputation; here the evidence was in rebuttal); 1889, Smith v. State, 88 Ala. 76, 7 So. 52 (he cannot even consider facts personally known to him); 1896, Crawford v. State, 112 Ala. 1, 21 So. 214 (belief on oath, founded on reputation); 1898, McAlpine v. State, 117 Ala. 93, 23 So. 130 (estimate based partly on reputation, partly on personal knowledge, excluded); 1907, Mitchell v. State, 148 Ala. 618, 42 So. 1014 (like Crawford v. State);

Arkansas: 1855, Pleasant v. State, 15 Ark. 624, 650, 653 ("his own opinion . . . founded on general reputation," admissible); 1874, Snow v. Grace, 29 Ark. 131, 136 (belief on oath, based on reputation, admitted, with some hesitation); Majors v. State, 29 Ark. 112 (similar evidence received); 1888, Hudspeth v. State, 50 Ark. 534, 543, 9 S. W. 1 (same);

California: 1859, Stevens v. Irwin, 12 Cal. 306, 308 (belief on oath, admissible, as justified by long practice; here the witness had already spoken as to reputation, but this was not referred to as essential); 1868, People v. Tyler, 35 Cal. 553 (belief on oath must be founded on reputation, but need not exclude the element of personal knowledge); C. C. P. 1872, § 2051 (quoted ante, § 987); 1878, People v. Methvin, 53 Cal. 68 (belief on oath must exclude the element of personal knowledge); 1880, People v. Ramirez, 56 Cal. 533, 538 (approving People v. Methvin); 1897, Wise v. Wakefield, 118 Cal. 107, 50 Pac. 310 (belief based on reputation, admissible; not affected by C. C. P. § 2051);

Connecticut: 1856, State v. Randolph, 24 Conn. 363, 367 (Ellsworth, J., stating the customary question in that court to be, 'Is the character of the witness for truth on a par with that of mankind in general?', as distinguished from the English form, 'What is his general character?', 'Would you believe him under oath?': "Our rule . . . does not leave anything to the mere inference of the impeaching witness whether he would or would not believe the witness under oath");

Delaware: 1851, Robinson v. Burton, 5 Harringt. 335, 339 ("general report," "followed by the witness' own judgment as to the effect of such general reputation");

Florida: 1866, Long v. State, 11 Fla. 295, 297 (personal knowledge, received); 1878, Robinson v. State, 16 Fla. 835, 840 (belief founded upon reputation, admitted); 1906, Maloy v. State, 52 Fla. 101, 41 So. 791 (personal opinion, excluded);

Georgia: 1855, Stokes v. State, 18 Ga. 17, 37 (general character, followed by opinion as to belief on oath); 1858, Smithwick v. Evans, 24 Ga. 463 (same); 1888, Flemister v. State, 81 Ga. 768, 771, 8 S. E. 443, semble (personal knowledge, admissible); 1896, Savannah F. & W. R. Co. v. Wideman, 99 Ga. 245, 25 S. E. 400 ("individual opinion," excluded); Code, 1895, § 5293, Rev. C. 1910, § 5882, P. C. § 1053 (the question is to seek knowledge of general character, what it is, and "if, from that character, he would believe him on oath"; otherwise, "the opinions of single individuals" are excluded); 1904, Taylor v. State, 121 Ga. 348, 49 S. E. 303 (belief on oath, not founded on a knowledge of general character, excluded);

Illinois: 1849, Frye v. Bank, 11 Ill. 367, 378 (reputation, followed by opinion as to belief on oath); 1858, Eason v. Chapman, 21 Ill. 33 (same ruling; the personal opinion of the witness declared admissible, and apparently supposed to be founded on personal knowledge; Breese, J., diss.); 1859, Crabtree v. Kile, 21

2. Policy of the Rule

§ 1986. Policy of the Exclusionary Rule, repudiated. Looking back now at the orthodox practice of the common law, and contrasting it with the Ill. 183 (personal belief stated to be — evidently relying on Greenleaf — the English peculiarity; no notice taken of the preceding cases, the opinion being by another judge); 1860, Cook v. Hunt, 24 Ill. 535, 545, 550 (knowledge of reputation is essential); 1861, Crabtree v. Hagenbaugh, 25 Ill. 238 (the form stated as in Frye v. Bank; by the same judge as in the preceding case); 1871, Foulk v. Eckert, 61 Ill. 318, 320 (personal opinion, improper); 1882, Massey v. Bank, 104 Ill. 327, 334 (the form in Frye v. Bank sanctioned, but the opinion required to be based solely on the reputation, and the question "Would you believe, etc., in a case where he was personally interested?", held improper, by a petty quibble); 1884, Bank v. Keeler, 109 Ill. 385, 390 (preceding doctrine affirmed; personal belief held not an essential part of the testimony); 1887, Spies v. People, 122 Ill. 1, 208, 12 N. E. 865 ("The unwillingness to believe under oath must follow from and be based upon two facts; first, the fact that the witness knows the reputation for truth and veracity among the man's neighbors; second, the fact that such reputation is bad"); 1893, Gifford v. People, 148 Ill. 173, 176, 35 N. E. 754 (personal knowledge, excluded; reputation is the only proper inquiry);

Indiana: 1873, Indianapolis P. & C. R. Co. v. Anthony, 43 Ind. 183, 193 (reputation, followed by belief on oath; obscure);

Iowa: 1848, Carter v. Cavenaugh, 1 Greene 171, 177 (reputation only; following Swift's Treatise and Phillips v. Kingfield, Me., in reasoning); 1882, State v. Egan, 59 Ia. 636, 13 N. W. 730 (same; interpreting "character," in C. C. § 3649, as meaning "reputation"); 1907, State v. Blackburn, — Ia. —, 110 N. W. 275 (rape under age; "Do you know her general moral character in the neighborhood?" referring to the prosecuting witness, held an improper form of question);

Kansas: 1888, State v. Johnson, 40 Kan. 266, 269 (belief, founded on reputation, not on personal knowledge, admissible);

Kentucky: 1819, Mobley v. Hamit, 1 A. K. Marsh. 591 (general character to be used as the basis of the witness' inference to credibility); 1857, Thurman v. Virgin, 18 B. Monr. 792, semble (same); 1859, Henderson v. Haynes, 2 Metc. 342, 348 (reputation alone mentioned); 1869, Young v. Com., 6 Bush 316 (same);

Louisiana: 1843, Stanton v. Parker, 5 Rob. 108 (belief on oath admissible, provided it is based on knowledge of "character," "standing," "reputation"); 1851, Paradise v. Ins. Co., 6 La. An. 596, 598 (reputation, followed by belief on oath, admissible); 1852, State v. Parker, 7 La. An. 83, 85 (belief on oath, based on "vices and general bad character," received); 1892, State v. Christian, 44 La. An. 950, 952, 11 So. 589 (belief on oath, based on reputation, admitted; following Paradise v. Ins. Co.);

Maine: 1841, Phillips v. Kingfield, 19 Me. 375 (reputation only);

Maryland: 1868, Knight v. House, 29 Md. 198 ("the practise in Maryland, we believe, has always been in conformity with the ancient English rule," which is approved; but the form thus approved is the personal belief founded on reputation, and the belief is said to "test the extent or degree of badness of the general reputation"; so that the rule is really of the fourth sort, supra);

Massachusetts: 1819, Bates v. Barber, 4 Cush. 110 ("What was the reputation for truth and veracity of the person impeached, — that is, what was his character in this respect by report; what was said in regard to it; this was the proper inquiry, and the only proper inquiry"); 1866, Com. v. Lawler, 12 All. 586, semble (personal belief excluded); 1908, Hunneman v. Phelps, 199 Mass. 15, 85 N. E. 169 (excluded); 1909, Eastman v. Boston Elev. R. Co., 200 Mass. 412, 86 N. E. 793 ("Would you believe her on oath?" excluded, even after a statement as to knowing the reputation);

Michigan: 1856, Webber v. Hanke, 4 Mich. 198 (reputation only; following Phillips v. Kingfield, Me.); 1874, Hamilton v. People, 29 Mich. 173, 185 (repudiating the former opinion as obiter, and allowing the witness to be asked whether he would believe the other on oath, this opinion "not left to depend on any basis but the reputation for truth and veracity"); 1875, Keator v. People, 32 Mich. 486 (same; here held proper on the direct as well as on the cross-examination);

Minnesota: 1872, Rudsdill v. Slingerland, 18 Minn. 380, 383 (belief on oath, admitted, following a statement of reputation);

Mississippi: 1885, French v. Sale, 63 Miss. 386, 393 (belief on oath, founded on knowledge of reputation, admitted); 1901, Benson v. State, 79 Minn. 538, 31 So. 200 (witness' personal belief excluded; the opinion, a net of fine-spun logical cobwebs, is an example of the judicial tendency to award new trials for the sake of irrelevant trifles);

Missouri: 1850, Day v. State, 13 Mo. 425 (belief on oath, founded on "general character," admitted, without objection); 1883, State v. King, 83 id. 555 (personal opinion excluded); 1903, State v. Boyd, 178 Mo. 2, 76 S. W. 979 (same); modern change of rule, effected in so many jurisdictions by such a curious misunderstanding of precedents, what is to be said of the reason and policy of the rule? Was the earlier practice sounder and better?

New Hampshire: 1838, State v. Howard, 9

N. H. 486 (the proper inquiries are, first, as to general reputation for truth, and, next, "from what you know of that reputation, etc., would you believe him under oath as quick as you would men in general?"); 1850, Hoitt v. Moulton, 21 N. H. 592 (same); 1860, Kelley v. Proctor, 41 N. H. 139, 145 (same);

New Jersey: 1869, King v. Ruckman, 20 N. J. Eq. 316, 357 (reputation only; "saying that the witness, from what he knew of his reputation, would not believe him on oath, is not sufficient"); 1900, State v. Polhemus, 65 N. J. L. 387, 47 Atl. 470 (personal belief, allowable only when based on reputation);

New York: 1818, Troup v. Sherwood, 3 John. Ch. 558, Kent. Ch. (personal knowledge excluded); 1829, Fulton Bank v. Benedict, 1 Hall Sup. 493, 499, 505, 533, 558, per Oakley, J. (personal knowledge alone, improper; but if preceded by inquiry as to "general character," the impeaching witness' belief on oath may be used "to fix the extent and nature of the general bad character imputed"); 1837, Marcy Sen., in Bakeman v. Rose, 18 Wend. 151 (says that "in this State the form prescribed by Swift is, I believe, most commonly adopted," but that there had been no judicial decision of the question, and prefers himself Lord Ellenborough's form in Mawson v. Hartsink; apparently using "character" as distinct from reputation); 1838, Cowen, J., in People v. Abbot, 19 Wend. 199 (approves the form used in R. v. Bispham, but upon the theory of (d) supra); 1838, Cowen, J., in People v. Rector, 19 Wend. 579 (cited supra, note 12); 1839, People v. Davis, 21 Wend. 309, 315, semble (the witness knew the other witness and his associates but had never heard his veracity-character spoken of; he was allowed nevertheless to say whether he would believe him on oath; following the form given by Phillipps and Starkie); 1842, Johnson v. People, 3 Hill 178 (belief on oath admitted, founded on knowledge of "general-character" or of veracity-character); 1856, Stacy v. Graham, 14 N. Y. 492, 501 (in supporting a witness, character, admissions by the opponent "that he held the witness in estimation as an honest and worthy man" were received; no authorities cited; Wright, J., diss.); 1864, Wehrkamp v. Willet, 4 Abb. App. 548 (Wright, J.: "The only proper inquiry . . . was as to her general moral character and her public reputation as a truthful or untruthful woman"); 1874, Foster v. Newbrough, 58 N. Y. 482 (whether from the plaintiff's general reputation for truth and veracity they would believe him on oath, held, improperly rejected); 1877, Adams v. Ins. Co., 70 N. Y. 166, 170 (a witness held competent to speak as to his belief on oath of one whom he had known for 10 years, whose associates he had known, and whose character he had heard questioned, though he did not know "from the speech of the people" what that character was); 1895, Carlson v. Winterson, 147 N. Y. 652, 723, 42 N. E. 347, semble (belief, founded on reputation, admissible, on the theory (d), supra);

North Carolina: 1829, State v. Boswell, 2 Dev. 211 (the question, "whether he would believe the other upon his oath," is proper; but it must first be learned whether his opinion is founded on "the general moral character of the witness as known among his neighbors and acquaintances," and if it rests on "particular facts," it cannot be received); 1834, Downey v. Murphy, 1 Dev. & B. 84 (belief on oath allowed, on theory (d), supra); 1843, State v. O'Neale, 3 Ired. 88 ("an estimation by the witness himself "of the other's character, improper); State v. Parks, 3 Ired. 297, semble (the witness must first show a knowledge of the general reputation, and may then say whether he personally would believe on oath); 1856, Hooper v. Moore, 3 Jones L. 428 (the additional question, whether he would believe the other upon oath, excluded; "the great objection to the [English] rule is that the impeaching witness is called upon to do that which belongs exclusively to the jury," since his statement is "an opinion or conclusion"; repudiating State v. Boswell, and approving Phillips v. Kingfield, Me.); 1878, State v. Caveness, 78 N. C. 486 (following Hooper v. Moore);

Ohio: 1834, Seely v. Blair, Wright 685 (personal knowledge sufficient, and mere knowledge of reputation alone not sufficient); 1834, Wilson v. Runyon, Wright 652 (same); 1851, Bucklin v. State, 20 Oh. 18 (overruling the prior cases and excluding personal knowledge; chiefly on the authority of Starkie and Greenleaf); 1853, French v. Millard, 2 Oh. St. 44, 50 (same); 1854, Craig v. State, 5 Oh. St. 607 (same); 1875, Hillis v. Wylie, 26 Oh. St. 576 (reputation, followed by opinion as to belief on oath, admitted, on theory (d); quoted supra, note 12);

Oregon: Laws 1920, § 863 (the opponent may show "that his moral character is such as to render him unworthy of belief");

Pennsylvania: 1817, Kimmel v. Kimmel, 3 S. & R. 336 (personal knowledge excluded); 1824, Wike v. Lightner, 11 S. & R. 199 (personal belief "not objectionable, provided the belief was founded on the witness' knowledge of his general character [reputation]," since personal belief alone might be founded on "knowledge of a particular fact"); 1864, Bogle v. Kreitzer, 46 Pa. 465, 470 (knowledge of the other witness, and of his reputation for truth; then personal belief on oath,

(a) So far as concerns abstract principle, the Opinion rule has of course been usually invoked as the theoretical support of the modern practice:

1841, SHEPLEY, J., in Phillips v. Kingfield, 19 Me. 378: "The opinions of a witness are not legal testimony except in special cases, — such, for example, as experts in some profession or art, those of the witnesses to a will, and, in our practice, opinions on the value of property."

And yet the principle of that rule is amply satisfied by the orthodox type of testimony; i. e. the test (ante, § 1918) whether the witness can adequately detail to the jury the data on which his summary estimate rests and from which his inference is drawn. The fact is, of course, that here he is doubly unable by any possibility to do so; for even if he could in memory recall and in language rehearse every incident and act indicative of character, the law founded on reputation); 1867, Lyman v. City, 56 Pa. 488, 502, semble (belief on oath, founded on knowledge of reputation);

Philippine Isl.: C. C. P. 1901, § 342 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 2051);
Porto Rico: Rev. St. & C. 1911, §§ 1526, 6276 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 2051);
South Carolina: 1819, Kitchen v. Tyson, 3 Murph. 314 (the plaintiff was allowed "to introduce witnesses to prove that the defendant was a man not of credit, and unworthy of belief when upon oath"); 1833, Anon., 1 Hill 256 ("he merely answers as to general reputation, and upon that gives his own opinion"); 1839, State v. Ford, 3 Strobh. 521 ("Dill's character was attacked by the prisoner; but ten out of fourteen witnesses swore that they would believe him"); 1860, Wardlaw, J., in Chapman v. Cooley, 12 Rich. 661 ("the belief of the community, and not of the individual testifying," is the testimony desired); 1892, State v. Turner, 36 S. C. 539, 15 S. E. 602 (belief on oath, founded on knowledge of reputation); 1896, State v. Murphy, 48 S. C. 1, 7, 25 S. E. 43 ("from his general reputation he would not believe him on his oath," allowed); 1898, Sweet v. Gilmore, 52 S. C. 530, 30 S. E. 395 ("general character," followed by belief on oath);
Tennessee: 1820, Gardenhire v. Parks, 2 Yerg. 23 ("men of bad character, and could not be believed upon oath," allowed); 1846, Ford v. Ford, 7 Humph. 92, 100 (the trial judge laid down the traditional English rule; but the Supreme Court, after citing Greenleaf, declared the opinion of the witness, as to believing the other on oath, admissible only so far as founded on reputation); 1858, Gilliam v. State, 1 Head 38 (admitting belief on oath, founded on reputation); 1879, Merriman v. State, 3 Lea 393, 394 (belief on oath, founded on reputation);
Texas: 1859, Roon v. Weathered, 23 Tex. 675, 686 (belief founded on reputation, admitted, on theory (d), supra); 1864, Ayres v. Duprey, 27 Tex. 593, 599 (same); 1879, Johnson v. Brown, 51 Tex. 65, 77 (same);
Utah: 1898, State v. Marks, 16 Utah 204, 51 Pac. 1089 (belief on oath, from reputation);
Vermont: 1854, Powers v. Leach, 26 Vt. 279 (personal belief excluded; no authority or reason given); 1858, Willard v. Goodenough, 30 Vt. 396 (same; "if we were now called on to institute a rule on the subject, instead of administering and applying an old one, we might not have much difficulty in copying the rule of the English and some of the American Courts"; but the long-settled usage was held to be conclusive);
Virginia: 1849, Uhl v. Com., 6 Gr[illegible] 708 (the general reputation for tru[illegible] he witness' opinion whether he [illegible]eve on oath, but this may be founded [illegible]neral moral reputation as well as on reputation for truth); 1882, Langhorne v. Com., 76 Va. 1022, semble (the witness' own knowledge of the other, excluded);
Washington: 1896, State v. Miles, 15 Wash. 534, 46 Pac. 1047 (reputation only, not belief on oath); 1900, State v. Coates, 22 Wash. 601, 61 Pac. 726 (belief on oath, excluded); 1918, State v. Hooker, 99 Wash. 661, 170 Pac. 374 (testimony that "from their knowledge of that reputation they would not believe him on oath," held admissible; citing the above text with approval and repudiating State v. Coates and State v. Miles, supra);
Wisconsin: 1854, Wilson v. State, 3 Wis. 798 (belief founded "upon general reputation, and upon that only," admissible, as "the conviction produced upon him by the common reputation").

So far is the notion carried that one of its logical but unpractical consequences has occasionally been laid down, namely, that the speaker to reputation need not be acquainted personally with the other witness: 1892, State v. Turner, 36 S. C. 540, 15 S. E. 602; a conclusion which even Cockburn, C. J., in R. v. Rowton, supra, § 1981, would not accept.

Distinguish the propriety of testing a reputation-witness on cross-examination by asking him what misconduct he knows or has heard of (ante, § 1111).

explicitly forbids him (ante, § 979) to detail particular acts; so that there is nothing left but to state summarily the general trait. Never was the Opinion rule more misapplied than to exclude the present class of testimony:

1858, CATON, C. J., in Eason v. Chapman, 21 Ill. 35 (after pointing out that persons may have a bad name for truthfulness, and yet "from their daily walk and conversation in other respects, none would doubt their truthfulness when solemnly called to testify in a court of justice"): "Yet it would be impossible to detail all the minutiæ of the circumstances which would inspire that confidence so as to impart their full and just impression to the jury. . . . Hence witnesses, who must be always impressed with these indescribable circumstances if they exist, have always been allowed to express the opinion whether they would or not believe the impeached witness under oath."

1876, BERRY, J., in State v. Lee, 22 Minn. 410: "But evidence of the disposition of a person, by one who knows such disposition from personal observation, is not evidence of opinion in any objectionable sense. It is evidence of a fact, — just as much evidence of a fact as is evidence of the disposition of a horse." [1]

(b) So far as practical policy and utility is concerned, there ought to be no hesitation between reputation and personal knowledge and belief. A perusal of the records of State trials will show how natural, straightforward, and useful was this method of asking after belief founded on personal experience and intimacy. Put any one of us on trial for a false charge, and ask him whether he would not rather invoke in his vindication, as Lord Kenyon said, "the warm, affectionate testimony" [2] of those few whose long intimacy and trust has made them ready to demonstrate their faith to the jury, than any amount of colorless assertions about reputation. Take the place of a jury-man, and speculate whether he is helped more by the witnesses whose personal intimacy gives to their belief a first and highest value, or by those who merely repeat a form of words in which the term "reputation" occurs.[3] Look at it from the point of view of the prosecution, and apply the principle in such a case as R. v. Rowton,[4] and then decide whether the witness who was there excluded was not, if believed, worth more than forty opposing witnesses testifying to that intangible, untestable creation called "reputation." The Anglo-American rules of evidence have occasionally taken some curious twistings in § 1986. [1] So also Campbell, J., in Hamilton v. People, 29 Mich. 186 (1874), calls this "a fallacious objection."

[2] 1794, Lord Kenyon, C. J., in R. v. Thelwall, McNally, Evidence, 323 ("An affectionate and warm evidence of character, when collected together, should make a strong impression in favor of a prisoner").

[3] Take for example the following kind of testimony: 1860, Gandolfo v. State, 11 Oh. St. 116 (an apprentice was tried for murder; and his master testified: "He is the most quiet, peaceable boy I ever saw or had; . . . none ever knew him to give an uncivil answer to any one in the shop, in the 8 years he worked there, either to those above or below him; if I spoke roughly to him, it would bring tears to his eyes, but no retort; . . . he was the pet of the shop from his uniform kindness of disposition").

The opinion in People v. Van Gaasbeck, 189 N. Y. 408, 82 N. E. 718 (1907) attempts to answer the above argument.

[4] 1865, Leigh & C. 520, 10 Cox Cr. 25 (indecent assault upon a boy; the witness for the prosecution was asked, "What is the defendant's general character for decency and morality of conduct?", and answered: "I know nothing of the neighborhood's opinion, because I was only a boy at school when I knew him; but my own opinion and the opinion of my brothers who were also pupils of his is that his character is that of a man capable of the grossest indecency and the most flagrant immorality").

the course of their development; but they have never done anything so curious in the way of shutting out evidential light as when they decided to exclude the person who knows as much as humanly can be known about the character of another, and have still admitted the secondhand, irresponsible product of multiplied guesses and gossip which we term "reputation." [5]

Many judges have come to the rescue of the traditional and orthodox class of testimony in passages of force and clearness which ought to avail for persuasion:

1865, R. v. Rowton, Leigh & C. 520, 532, 539. ERLE, C. J.: "Disposition cannot be ascertained directly; it is only to be ascertained by the opinion formed concerning the man; which must be founded either on personal experience or on the expression of opinion by others, whose opinion again ought to be founded on their personal experience. . . . I think that each source of evidence is admissible. You may give in evidence the general rumor prevalent in the prisoner's neighborhood, and, according to my experience, you may have also the personal judgment of those who are capable of forming a more real, substantial, guiding opinion than that which is to be gathered from general rumor. I never saw a witness examined to character without an inquiry being made into his personal means of knowledge of that character. The evidence goes to the jury depending entirely upon the personal experience of the witness who has offered his testimony. Suppose a witness to character were to say: 'This man has been in my employ for twenty years; I have had experience of his conduct; but I have never heard a human being express an opinion of him in my life; for my own part, I have always regarded him with the highest esteem and respect, and have had abundant experience that he is one of the worthiest men in the world.' The principle the Lord Chief Justice has laid down would exclude this evidence, and that is the point where I differ from him. To my mind, personal experience gives cogency to the evidence; whereas such a statement as 'I have heard some persons speak well of him,' or 'I have heard general report in favor of the prisoner,' has a very slight effect in comparison." WILLES, J.: "I apprehend that the man's disposition is the principal matter to be inquired into, and that his reputation is merely accessory, and admissible only as evidence of disposition. . . . The judgment of the particular witness is superior in quality and value to mere rumor. Numerous cases may be put in which a man may have no general character — in the sense of any reputation or rumor about him — at all, and yet may have a good disposition. For instance, he may be of a shy, retiring disposition, and known only to a few; or again, he may be a person of the vilest character and disposition, and yet only his intimates may be able to testify that this is the case. One man may deserve that character [reputation] without having acquired it, which another man may have acquired without deserving it. In such cases the value of the judgment of a man's intimates upon his character becomes manifest. In ordinary life, when we want to know the character of a servant, we apply to his master. A servant may be known to none but members of his master's family; so the character of a child is known only to its parents and teachers, and the character of a man of business to those with whom he deals. . . . According to the experience of mankind, one would ordinarily rely rather on the information and judgment of a man's intimates than on general report; and why not in a court of law? . . . The evidence in this particular case was of a very peculiar character, because the prisoner was charged with an offence which would not only be committed in secret if it were committed at all, but would be likely to be kept secret by the persons who were subjected to it. Such being the case, in order to ascertain the prisoner's character for morality and decency, the persons of whom you would inquire would be those who had been within reach of his influence, — persons who would not be likely to communicate his conduct to the neighborhood or to one another."

[5] This is well put by Mr. Taylor, arguing in R. v. Rowton, at p. 525: "Reputation is only the repetition of the judgment of others. There is no rule of law that, to make evidence of reputation admissible, it must be founded on the judgment of a definite number. If, then, the judgment of ten or a less number of men is admissible under the name of reputation, how can the judgment of one only, that is, how can the estimate of disposition formed by one man only — or, in other words, individual opinion — be excluded?"

1876, 1883, Sir James Stephen, Digest of Evidence, note XXV, History of the Criminal Law, I, 450: "One consequence of the view of the subject taken in that case [of R. v. Rowton] is that a witness may with perfect truth swear that a man, who to his knowledge has been a receiver of stolen goods for years, has an excellent character for honesty, if he has had the good luck to conceal his crimes from his neighbors. It is the essence of successful hypocrisy to combine a good reputation with a bad disposition, and according to R. v. Rowton the reputation is the important matter. The case is seldom if ever acted on in practice. The question always put to a witness to character is, What is the prisoner's character for honesty, morality, or humanity?, as the case may be; nor is the witness ever warned that he is to confine his evidence to the prisoner's reputation. It would be no easy matter to make the common run of witnesses understand the distinction.[6] . . . The case expressly decides that if a man gains a reputation for honesty or morality by the grossest hypocrisy, he is entitled to give evidence of it, which evidence cannot be contradicted by people who know the truth."

1876, BERRY, J., in State v. Lee, 22 Minn. 409: "As it is the fact of disposition which is important and material, there can be no reason why this fact may not be proved by any witness who knows what it is. There is certainly no reason why general repute is any better or more satisfactory evidence of disposition than the testimony of one who knows what the disposition is from his own personal observation. . . . Whether the witness knows what he pretends to know in regard to the disposition of a person in question, whether his opportunities for acquiring such knowledge have been sufficient, or his ability to acquire it has been competent, are matters which there is no practical difficulty in testing, either upon a preliminary or cross-examination, or both."

1921, WHEELER, C. J., in Richmond v. Norwich, 96 Conn. 582, 115 Atl. 11: Character . . . might be proved in three possible ways: (1) The estimate in which the individual is held in the community; that is, his general reputation as to the trait in question. (2) The opinion as to this trait of those who have known the individual and had the opportunity to know whether he possessed this trait or not. (3) The acts of the individual under somewhat similar circumstances from which his character as to this trait may be inferred. The evidence of general repute affords the basis for an inference as to the actual character; whether it be the entire character or a single trait of character. Method 1 is generally recognized as an established method of proving character. Method 2 is permitted in some jurisdictions, but in most it is denied. Whether or not one was of quick temper will require proof of a mental characteristic, and this is the proof of a fact. No one knows so well about this fact as he who has known the person and had the opportunity to determine it. How much more convincing is such evidence than that of a witness who testifies to the general repute of this person as to this mental characteristic? His testimony is based upon hearsay, and quite likely rumor and gossip. If mental characteristic is a fact, there is no valid reason why this fact may not be proved by any witness who knows what it is. Personal observation and personal knowledge are a more trustworthy reliance than general reputation. We think the decisions to which we have referred, and others to which we need not refer, require the admission of evidence of character from those who know."[7]

[6] For a good illustration of this futility of trying to make the straightforward lay mind comprehend the limits of this perverse artificial rule of law, see the testimony in Kehoe's Trial (Molly Maguires), Pa., 1876, West's Rep. 145–165.

[7] A powerful argument against the rule may be found in Mr. William Johnston's Arguments (Cincinnati, Clarke & Co., 1887), p. 104.

TOPIC IV: OPINION RULE AS APPLIED TO HANDWRITING-EVIDENCE

CHAPTER LXVIII.

A. HISTORY OF HANDWRITING-EVIDENCE

§ 1991. Original Meaning and Rule for "Comparison of Handwriting." (1) In proving a document or a signature to have been written, two distinct kinds of evidence offer themselves: first, testimony by a person who saw the act of writing, or some circumstance leading up or pointing back to that act; secondly, evidence of the kind of handwriting. The difference is that in any and all ways of the second mode there is involved the establishment of a personal type or character of writing, and an estimate, based on comparison, that the disputed writing belongs to the type; and this is so whether we employ witnesses who know that type and examine the disputed writing, or whether the jury is given the means of knowing the type and making the examination. By the first mode we are not in any way concerned with the character of the person's writing; the witness testifies directly to seeing the act done, just as he would testify to seeing a blow struck. By the second mode, there is always an inference from the type to the genuineness of the disputed instance.[1] It is obvious how wide the difference is.

Now the first and most important point of legal history here is that, at a certain stage of our law, all of the ways of proving handwriting by its type, while not entirely repudiated, were greatly discountenanced and strictly limited in their use. For instance, a paper being offered as written by X, A's testimony that he saw X actually write it would be always received; but A's testimony that he had often seen X write and that this was X's writing would not be received.

The next point of importance is that the term "comparison of hands" (or, in the older phrase, "similitude of hands") was indiscriminately applied to all of the modes of proving by type, i. e. to any way of proving except by one who had seen the very document in the act of being written. What we find is the gradual admission, one after another, of various modes of this sort. But they were all at first known by the general phrase "similitude" or "comparison of hands;" and when that phrase was used, it covered even the testimony of one who had seen X write and thus knew his hand.

Thirdly, with reference to the limited use of these modes, we find (a) that the only kind of witness who could be heard was one who had seen X write; no other sort of knowledge was orthodox; (b) that such testimony was conceded to be proper in civil causes only (and perhaps in petty causes alone, i. e. causes under forty shillings in amount); and that though (at the stage when these questions arise, the era of the Restoration and the Revolution), the Crown was endeavoring to extend its use, this extension was strenuously opposed and was evidently against orthodox practice.

These features are sufficiently illustrated by the following passages from the trials of the late 1600s:

1683, Algernon Sidney's Trial, 9 How. St. Tr. 851, 864: "Mr. Sheppard sworn. Att'y-Gen.: Pray, will you look upon these writings [shewing the libel]. Are you acquainted with Colonel Sidney's hand? Sheppard: Yes, my lord. Att'y-Gen.: Is that his handwriting? Sheppard: Yes, sir; I believe so. I believe all these sheets to be his hand. Att'y-Gen.: How come you to be acquainted with his hand? Sheppard: I have seen him write the indorsement upon several bills of exchange. Col. Sidney: My lord, I desire you would please to consider this, that similitude of hands can be no evidence. L. C. J. JEFFERIES: Reserve yourself until anon, and make all the advantageous remarks you can. . . . Sidney: Now, my lord, I am not to give an account of these papers; I do not think they are before you, for there is nothing but the similitude of hands offered for proof. The similitude of hands is nothing; we know that bonds will be counterfeited, so that no man shall know his own hand." Remarks [2] by Sir John Hawles, Solicitor-General under William III: "The evidence was, proving the book produced to be Col. Sidney's writing, because the hand was like what some of the witnesses had seen him write; an evidence never permitted in a criminal case before. The case of the Lady Carre [3] was well cited by Col. Sidney, against whom there was an indictment information of perjury, in which it was resolved that comparison of hands was no evidence in any criminal prosecution."

§ 1991. [1] This distinction has already been examined under Relevancy (ante, § 383).

1688, Trial of the Seven Bishops, 12 How. St. Tr. 466; several witnesses were offered, most of whom had not seen the Bishops write, but had only had correspondence; after their testimony, which was very hesitating, Serj. Levinz: "My lord, before this paper is read, we hope you will let us be heard to it. For what is all the proof that they have given of this paper? They have a proof by comparison of hands, which in a criminal case ought not to be received. . . . For them to come to prove hands only by those that saw letters, but never saw the persons write, this I hope will not amount to so much as comparison of hands. . . . It is an easy matter for any man's hand to be counterfeited; that they sure will agree, for frequent daily experience shows how easily it may be done; is it not easy then to cut any man down in the world by proving it like his hand? And proving that likeness by comparing it with something that he hath formerly seen? This strikes mighty deep. The honestest man in the world, and the most innocent, may be destroyed, and yet no fault to be found in the jury or in the judges." . . . Sol.-Gen. (opposing): "It is a wonderful thing, they say, that such evidence should be offered, but truly, my lord, it is a much stranger thing to hear Mr. Serjeant Pemberton say it was never done before. . . . [In Sidney's case] there was no person that swore he saw him write it; there was nothing proved but similitude of hands to make the jury believe it his handwriting." . . . Mr. J. HOLLOWAY: "In civil matters we do go upon slight proof, such as the comparison of hands, for proving a deed, or a witness' name; but in criminal matters we ought to be more strict and require positive and substantial proof." The judges being divided (Powell and Holloway, JJ., against, and Allybone, J., and Wright, L. C. J., in favor, the difference turning on the fact that the case was a criminal one), the evidence was not considered.

1691, Trial of Sir R. Grahme (Lord Preston), 12 How. St. Tr. 736: L. C. J. HOLT (to jury): "Mr. Townesend says he has seen my lord write several times and does believe the writing to be in his hand; and to the same purpose says Bland." Lord Preston: "I hope your lordship will please to observe to the jury that this is only a proof of similitude of hands; nobody see me write them."

1695, R. v. Crosby, 12 Mod. 72: "At this trial several treasonable papers were produced, which they swore they believed to be the handwriting of the prisoner; and on this a question arose whether comparison of hands were sufficient; and per CURIAM [L. C. J. Holt], it is not sufficient for the original foundation of an attainder, but may be well used as a circumstantial and confirming evidence, if the fact be otherwise fully proved; as in my lord Preston's case, his attempting to go with them into France, and principally where they were found on his person. But here, since they were found elsewhere, to convict on a similitude of hands was to run into the error of Colonel Sidney's case." [4]

[2] Ib. 1003.

[3] 1 Sid. 418.

[4] See also: 1684, Hayes' Trial, 10 How. St. Tr. 312–314; 1723, Bishop Atterbury's Trial, 16 How. St. Tr. 546. For other illustrations, from the general literature of the time, of the then meaning of the phrase, see the note of the learned compilers of Adolphus and Ellis' Reports, vol. 5, p. 752.

These passages illustrate, then, (1) that the term "similitude" or "comparison of hands" covered all modes of proving handwriting (in the strict sense, i. e. every way in which the type of writing was the source of belief); (2) that the orthodox use of such proof was confined at least to civil causes;[5] (3) that the only accepted mode of such proof was by those who had seen the person write. We have now to notice a gradual expansion of the limits of the doctrines under (2) and (3); and first of (2):

(2) We first find the doctrine that in criminal cases proof by "similitude of hands" is admissible if the disputed paper was found in the accused's possession; in such a case of 'prima facie' authorship, this doubtful kind of evidence was acceptable as "circumstantial and confirming evidence," in Lord Holt's language.[6] This form of the rule begins before 1700,[7] and becomes common in the trials of the next century, and even as late as 1802 we find Mr. McNally writing:

> 1802, Mr. T. McNally, Evidence, 403: "But though mere comparison of handwriting be not evidence on an indictment or information, yet papers found in the custody of the defendant and the writing thereof proved to be in his hand by persons who have seen him write, is sufficient preliminary evidence to entitle the counsel for the Crown to have them read."[8]

This modification in its broad form (confining this kind of proof in criminal cases to corroborative purposes only) was embodied in the treatises of the 1700s.[9] But by the end of the century the limitation had disappeared

[5] There can be little doubt that the use was not limited to petty causes, but was common in civil causes generally, particularly in the proof of witnesses' signatures to wills, deeds, etc.; for example: 1693, Bath and Mountague's Case, 3 Ch. Cas. 55, 58, 80; 1695, Blurton v. Toon, Skinner 639.

[6] 1695, Crosby's Case, supra. It is perfectly clear, however, that this admission of it as "confirmatory" only was not genuinely an innovation upon the practice in criminal cases; but merely settled within the above limits the hitherto doubtful orthodoxy of such evidence in criminal cases. It had been used all through the 1600's: 1645, Lord Macguire's Trial, 4 How. St. Tr. 653, 685; 1660, Harrison's Trial, 5 How. St. Tr. 1010, 1021; Scroop's Trial, 5 How. St. Tr. 1034, 1042; Carew's Trial, 5 How. St. Tr. 1048, 1051; Scot's Trial, 5 How. St. Tr. 1058, 1062; Jones' Trial, 5 How. St. Tr. 1072, 1073; 1662, Sir Henry Vane's Trial, 6 How. St. Tr. 119, 149; 1663, Twyn's Trial, 6 How. St. Tr. 513, 524; 1678, Coleman's Trial, 7 How. St. Tr. 1, 22, 34; Ireland's Trial, 7 How. St. Tr. 79, 118; 1679, Whitebread's Trial, 7 How. St. Tr. 311, 335.

[7] The settlement of it with these limits was probably due to the belief that the act of 1689 (quoted post, § 1992), reversing Sidney's attainder, was intended as a legislative disparagement of this use in criminal cases.

[8] 1688, Serj. Pemberton, in Seven Bishops' Trial, supra, for the defence, distinguishing Sidney's Case: "My lord, that case differs from this 'toto coelo'; the writing was found in his possession, in his study; there was the proof that nailed him," a distinction not at the former time put forward. Compare also: 1684, Hayes' Trial, 10 How. St. Tr. 312–313; 1696, Sir John Fenwick's Trial, 13 How St.. Tr. 625–627; 1719, Mathews' Trial, 15 How. St. Tr. 1323, 1375; 1722, Layer's Trial, 16 How. St. Tr. 199, 205; 1758, R. v. Hensey, 1 Burr. 644.

[9] 1726, Gilbert, Evidence, 53 ("The proof of false swearing to an affidavit or answer may be further illustrated by the comparison of hands, which possibly may be evidence in concurrence with other proof that out of the answer itself evince the identity of the person. But that the comparison of hands only should be a proof in a criminal prosecution was never law but only in the time of King James, and the distinction has ever been taken that the comparison of hands is evidence in civil and not in criminal cases. The reason why the comparison of hands is allowed to be evidence in civil matters is because men are distinguished by their handwriting as well as by their faces, for it is very seldom that the shape of their letters agree any more than the shapes of their bodies; therefore, a comparison of hands serves entirely, and we find Mr. McNally able to say, in 1802, as the result of the latest rulings: [10]

"In proving the handwriting of a defendant, there is no legal distinction between that which is legal evidence in a civil action and that which is legal evidence in a criminal prosecution." [11]

(3) Taking up now the other limiting doctrine already mentioned, we find that here, too, an expansion was taking place. The orthodox witness had been one who had seen the person write. This was the only clear and accepted foundation for the witness' knowledge of the hand. In the Bishops' Trial, Serj. Levinz, in defence, had argued: "For them to come to prove hands only by those that saw letters, but never saw the persons write, this I hope will not amount to so much as a comparison of hands." Nevertheless, the Crown lawyers had already begun and incessantly kept up the practice of offering witnesses who had an inferior knowledge, based on specimens seen by them and somehow known to them as genuine otherwise than by seeing them written; for example, one who had bought a bill indorsed by the person and had afterwards demanded and received payment of it from him, — a kind of witness perfectly acceptable to-day (ante, § 699). In the Seven Bishops' Trial, for example, all but one of the witnesses had apparently this sort of knowledge only, and this circumstance probably weighed much with the judges who were for rejection. Although in Crown cases of the 1700s the judges were able to force in this sort of testimony (especially where the papers were found in the accused's custody),[12] yet the acceptance of such a witness was distinctly a new thing, a loose practice, and an expansion of the orthodox requirements:

1696, R. v. Culpepper, Skinner 673: "Then they produced a witness to swear to the contents of another letter [of Sir Francis Wythens]; which was denied, he never having seen Sir Francis write, but deposed that it was the same hand with the letter produced. 'Non allocatur'; for, per HOLT, C. J., . . . here the witness cannot prove a letter written, for he never had seen Sir Francis write, wherefore it was disallowed."

The great case of Lord Ferrers v. Shirley, in 1731,[13] stamped this new doctrine as orthodox. For the rest of the century, however, it seems to keep a secondary place; it is usable only in case of "necessity," i. e. when witnesses for a distinction in civil commerce, for the likeness does induce a presumption that they are the same. But in criminal prosecutions the presumption is in favor of the defendant, therefore, when comparison of hands is the only evidence in a criminal prosecution, there is no more than one presumption against another, which weighs nothing"); 1767, Buller, Trials at Nisi Prius, 236.

[10] Evidence, 417.

[11] The first cases accepting this, the conceded rule of to-day, seem to have been: 1781, De La Motte's Trial, 21 How. St. Tr. 810; 1792, R. v. Tandy, K. B. Ire., McNally's Evidence, 409.

[12] E. g. Layer's Trial, supra; Grahme's Trial, supra.

[13] Fitzgibbon, 195, a clerk of Earl Ferrers had received or seen several letters, which one C. (whose signature was in question) had purported to write; "The counsel insisted that in all cases where a witness would swear to the handwriting, he must be able to say that he saw such person write"; the witness was rejected, but only because he could not show that the letters were really C.'s; Page, J., wanted to confine the use of such witnesses to cases of necessity, as where the person in question was abroad; but Raymond, C. J., would not concede any such limitation. The case is quoted in full, ante, § 699.

who have seen the person write cannot be had.[14] By the beginning of the 1800s this class of testimony takes its place on an equal footing with the older kind,[15] but its distinctly modern and parvenu character may be perceived from the following well-known passage of Lord Eldon's:

1803, ELDON, L. C., in Eagleton v. Kingston, 8 Ves. 473: "When I first came into the profession, the rule as to handwriting in Westminster Hall in all the Courts was this. You called a witness, and asked whether he had ever seen the party write. If he said he had, whether more or less frequently, that was enough to introduce the further question, whether he believed the paper to be his handwriting. . . . Or you might ask a witness who had not seen him write for a length of time, if you could not get a witness of a subsequent date. . . . This rule was laid down with so much clearness that till very lately I never heard of evidence in Westminster Hall of comparison of handwriting by those who had never seen the party write." [16]

§ 1992. Enlargement of the Rule; Modern Change of Meaning. The result at this point was that the opposition to proof by "comparison of hands" had been forced to give way, and that the use of such proof had been enlarged with reference to the kind of case — civil and criminal — in which it could be used, and the sources of the witness' knowledge which would be recognized as sufficient. But the old stigma remained, and the old literature discountenancing it was still perused. Thus, when now still other varieties of it were attempted to be availed of, it came about that the argument against them was that they involved "comparison of hands" and were thus unlawful. The attitude of mind was: "Yes, to be sure, you may bring a witness who saw X write, or even received letters which X treated as genuine, or had old records in his possession purporting to be signed by X; that is well enough; that is not comparison of hands, but this that you are offering is comparison of hands, which has from of old been unlawful."

In other words, we now come to a stage in which "comparison of hands" received a new and restricted sense, and was in this sense used to cut off the introduction of new varieties of testimony. It was now applied to all wit-

[14] 1767, Buller, Trials at Nisi Prius, 236: "The reason why the comparison of hands is allowed to be evidence is because men are distinguished by their handwriting as well as by their faces. In general cases the witness should have gained his knowledge from having seen the party write; but under some circumstances that is not necessary, as where the handwriting to be proved is of a person residing abroad, one who has frequently received letters from him in a course of correspondence would be admitted to prove it, though he had never seen him write. So where the antiquity of the writing makes it impossible for any living witness to swear he ever saw the party write." As late as 1798, Sheares' Trial, 27 How. St. Tr. 323, the old notion is found.

[15] In early American cases we find instances of failure to recognize the new sort; the judge regards testimony as inadmissible when based on anything less than seeing the person write: Huger, J., in Cantey v. Platt, 2 McCord 260 (1822); Tilghman, C. J., in Vickroy v. Skelley, 14 S. & R. 373 (1826). Yet as early as 1819 Mr. J. Duncan accepted the newer mode, in Com. v. Smith, 6 S. & R. 571. In Louisiana the old restriction, receiving only a witness who had seen the very document signed, persisted as late as 1812, under the first Civil Code: Sauve v. Dawson, 2 Mart. 202, yet experts were by the same Code received. The past of the law in this respect is often ignored, as where it is said, in Bennett v. Mathewes, 5 S. C. 482 (1874), that this sort of testimony "has never been questioned."

The rules for this class of testimony have been already examined in detail, ante, §§ 699–708.

[16] So also in Wade v. Broughton, 3 Ves. & B. 172 (1814).

nesses who had no previous knowledge of the hand, but were shown specimens in court and asked to compare them with the disputed writing. This change of meaning in the phrase is the key to the confusing sources of the early 1800s.[1] The following passages will illustrate it; the second one, of Mr. J. Buller, is the most striking, because in his own book of fifteen years before [2] he had used the phrase in the old sense:

1770, YATES, J., in Brookbard v. Woodley, Peake N. P. 20; rejecting old register-entries offered as standards: "I do not know any case where comparison of hands has been allowed to be evidence at all. . . . Where a witness has seen the party write, . . . that is evidence. But where it is merely opinion on similitude of the writing collected from barely comparing them, the jury may compare them as well as anybody else."

1781, BULLER, J., to the jury, in De la Motte's Trial, 21 How. St. Tr. 810: "The counsel on the part of the prisoner have first objected that similitude of handwriting is no evidence. They certainly are right in that argument; but the objection does not apply to this case. Similitude of handwriting is where a paper is produced not sworn to by anybody that has ever seen him write or has any knowledge of his hand, but the inference is made that it is his handwriting because it is like some other which is so. But that is not the evidence which has been offered to you respecting any one of the papers which you have heard read; they have all been proved by persons who were acquainted with his handwriting. They speak not from the similitude of the writing only, but from their knowledge of his handwriting, having seen the prisoner write before. That, gentlemen, is the only evidence which can be given of handwriting, except it happens that there be a person who saw the prisoner actually write the papers."

1792, R. v. Tandy, Ire., McNally's Evidence, 409; prosecution for sending a challenge to Mr. Toler. Mr. Toler testified: "I have seen him write, and received letters from him." Counsel for defendant argued that "as the evidence offered was merely upon comparison of hands, without any previous ground to show that it was sent by Mr. Tandy to Mr. Toler, it could not be read. . . . From the reversal of Algernon Sidney's attainder to the present case, in criminal prosecutions comparison of handwriting is not evidence." BOYD, J.: "This is not comparison of hands. Mr. Toler says he knows the handwriting." [3]

To understand the new meaning of the phrase, it is necessary to look back at the scope of the early use of "similitude of hands" and see how far it included juxtaposition by the witness 'coram judicio.'

The first thing to note is that it was not the process of juxtaposition by the witness that was reprobated, but the use of such testimony at all. Remembering that the early restricted practice in civil cases was confined to witnesses who had seen the person write, we here find that no discrimination was made between the different ways in which he might give his testimony, i. e. he could either merely look at the disputed writing and give his opinion upon it, or better still (they thought) bring in the other writing he had seen made and juxtapose it, and even show it to the Court and jury, — which last, indeed, had been the practice from time immemorial for authenticating § 1992. [1] In an anonymous treatise on High Treason, dated 1793, and published with the edition of 1873 of Kelyng's Crown Cases, is one of the latest instances of the old sense of the words (p. 149).

[2] Quoted ante, § 1991, note 14.

[3] This change of meaning was observed by Mr. Starkie, with his usual acumen and accuracy: 1824, Starkie, Evidence, II, 515; so also (1849) Mr. Best, Evidence, § 248.

seals.[4] In other words, when they did allow proof by "similitude of hands" at all, they made no special discrimination against juxtaposition in court; it was all "similitude of hands," equally good or equally bad. Thus, Serjeant Levinz said, arguing for the Seven Bishops, in 1688, and conceding what he felt obliged to:[5]

"Your lordship knows that in every petty cause where it depends upon comparison of hands, they used to bring some of the party's handwriting which may be sworn to to be the party's own hand, and then it is to be compared in court with what is endeavored to be proved; and upon comparing them together in court the jury may look upon it and see if it be right. In such manner of proofs by comparison of hands the usage is that the witness is first asked, concerning the writing he produces, Did you see this writ by the defendant whose hand they would prove? If he answers, Yes, I did, then should the jury, upon comparison of what the witness swears to with the paper that is to be proved, judge whether those hands be so like as to induce them to believe that the same person writ both."

1729, Hales' Trial, 17 How. St. Tr. 273; forgery of a promissory note. Counsel: "Mr. Lincoln, those receipts which you produced, did Mr. Kinnersley actually write them?" Mr. Lincoln: "I saw him write them all." Counsel: "Shew them to the jury." REYNOLDS, J.: "Gentlemen of the jury, in that book you will find some receipts wrote by Mr. Kinnersley, which Mr. Lincoln swears are his hand."[6]

In short, the struggle that was then going on was against "similitude of hands" in general, and, later, against witnesses who had merely received correspondence; and where there were witnesses who had seen the person write, they were either competent or incompetent, and no objection was founded merely on their bringing the specimens into court.[7]

[4] 1889, Bresslau, Handbuch der Urkundenlehre, I, 489, 547; 1898, Déclareuil, Les preuves judiciaires dans le droit français du V^e^ au VIII^e^ siècle, Nouv. revue hist. de droit fr. et étr., vol. 22, p. 759; 1900, Thayer, Cases on Evidence, 2d ed., note, p. 710; 1895, Pollock and Maitland, Hist. of English Law, II, 222.

[5] 12 How. St. Tr. 297.

[6] 1684, Hayes' Trial, 10 How. St. Tr. 312, 313; 1693, Bath and Mountague's Case, 3 Ch. Cas. 55, 58, 80 (validity of a deed; the judges refer in their opinions to the "multitudes of instruments that were produced in Court" to prove genuineness by comparison); 1700, Feilding's Trial, 13 How. St. Tr. 1353, 1359, 1367; 1714, Carbone v. Cotton, Viner's Abr., "Evidence," T, b, 48, 11; 1723, Atterbury's Trial, 16 How. St. Tr. 547; 1731, Ferrers v. Shirley, cited ante, § 1991; 1781, De la Motte's Trial, 21 How. St. Tr. 675, 782.

[7] This seems to be the explanation of the much discussed and much misunderstood act reversing Algernon Sidney's attainder, which ran as follows: 1 W. & M. 24 (1689), printed in 9 How. St. Tr. 996; Act for annulling and making void the attainder of Algernon Sidney, Esq.: "Whereas . . . there being at that time produced a paper found in the closet of said Algernon, supposed to be his handwriting, which was not proved by the testimony of any one witness to be written by him, but the jury was directed to believe it by comparing with it other writings of the said Algernon," the attainder is reversed. This recital is apparently incorrect, according to the printed report of the trial, since no writings appear to have been brought in and juxtaposed as standards. But the fact is that, according to the law at the time of the Act, any use of "similitude of hands," as already explained, was unlawful in criminal cases; and, when the legislature wished to repudiate the proceedings at that trial, it was perfectly natural for them, whether by inadvertence or otherwise, to use the phrase "comparing it with other writings," because either and any mode of proof by "similitude" was bad. Conversely, if it had been good, it would have been equally good whether the witnesses brought in or did not bring in the specimens he had seen written. Perhaps the phrase of the Act "not proved by the testimony of any one witness to be written by him" is the best proof, for those who are familiar with the language of the State Trials. That phrase, as often there used, means only one thing, namely, the lack of any witness who saw the actual writing of the disputed document; and the Act contrasts that kind of a witness with a witness who judges merely by the style of writing. Finally, the Legislature could hardly have used the phrase by inadvertence, because in the testimony set forth, ib. p. 989, it appears that the Legislature had received freshly and accurately an account of just what evidence was offered, and it did not include the juxtaposition of specimens.

§ 1993. State of the Law by the 1800s; (I) Classes of Witnesses. What we have, then, as the 1800s came in (the time when reasons and principles for the rules of Evidence began much to be thought about) is (1) the acceptance of witnesses who had seen the person write; (2) the acceptance of witnesses who had received writings subsequently treated by him as genuine or who had had the custody of ancient documents of the same persons; (3) the permission, for such persons, equally of merely examining the disputed writing and of bringing into court the specimens they knew and juxtaposing them; (4) the exclusion of any other mode of testimony under the condemnatory phrase "comparison of hands." The other kinds of witnesses that were thus excluded would be (a) an ordinary witness who knew nothing about the handwriting but merely juxtaposed specimens and compared; (b) the same testimony by one skilled in handwriting generally.

(a) Now the former was of course barred absolutely by the Opinion rule, well expounded in this connection in the following passage:

> 1770, YATES, J., in Brookbard v. Woodley, Peake N. P. 21, note: "Where it is merely opinion on similitude of the writing collected from barely comparing them, the jury may compare them as well as anybody else, and any two people may think differently."

It was because, when the judges stopped to think, this Opinion rule clearly excluded the ordinary witness who spoke only from juxtaposition, that they began to see that logically it also effected the exclusion of the opinion of any lay witness whatever, so far as based on a comparison in court. Hence we find that even witnesses of the sort (2) above, who had seen the person write or had received letters or possessed old records, were now for the first time denied the old orthodox process (ante, § 1992), of juxtaposing documents in court. But this came about slowly. For witnesses who had seen the person write, it was enforced in 1801 in Garrells v. Alexander,[1] though in some American jurisdictions the old practice survived.[2] For witnesses who testified through having long had the custody of ancient documents, the prohibition was longer in being applied. Doe v. Tarver, in 1824,[3] maintained the old practice; and it does not seem ever to have been expressly outlawed.[4] Whether it would be regarded as lawful to-day cannot be told; though it is certainly anomalous, because obnoxious to the Opinion rule.

(b) The other kind of testimony thus excluded was that of experts speaking from juxtaposition. This it was now strenuously sought to introduce. It is no matter of surprise that the judges instinctively hesitated; for the idea of expertism in handwriting was then a novel one.[5] But the significant circum-

§ 1993. [1] 4 Esp. 37, Kenyon, L. C. J.

[2] The authorities are collected post, § 2005.

Of course so far as the inspection of the standard, known to the witness to be genuine, is necessary by way of refreshing recollection, its use is legitimate. To this extent, but to this only, its propriety is still recognized: 1816, Burr v. Harper, Holt N. P. 420. But the opinion in Burr v. Harper reads like an afterthought intended to justify existing practice. The authorities are collected post, § 2007.

[3] Ry. & Moo. 143, Abbott, C. J.

[4] The authorities are collected post, § 2006.

[5] It seemed objectionable even to the most progressive thinkers: Life of Sir S. Romilly, 3d ed., II, 105 (1809; debate on the conduct of the Duke of York; "they agreed to receive this most dangerous species of evidence, . . .

stance is that those who tried to use this kind of testimony were obliged to strive to remove from it the stigma of being "comparison of hands." Thus:

1802, Mr. Garrow, in R. v. Cator, 4 Esp. 117, contending for the admission of expert testimony: "I come now, then, to see what comparison of handwriting is. I call somebody out of the crowd; I show him a paper of Mr. Cator's handwriting, and say 'that is a paper of Mr. Cator's handwriting,' he not being a man of skill; then I show him the libel, and do the same by the jury. Half of them may think it is Mr. Cator's handwriting, and half may think it is not. . . . [Thus, in the present case] I am not contending for a comparison of handwriting; I am referring to the skill and judgment of a person with respect to whom the jury are to judge."

They failed for a long time to introduce the new kind of testimony, and the Legislature had finally to step in with its aid.[6] But the result of the discussion was that the stigmatized "comparison of hands" now obtained definitely the narrow meaning just illustrated; it covered the testimony of all witnesses whose knowledge was acquired solely by examination of specimens for the purpose of the trial; it no longer applied to witnesses who had gained a knowledge by seeing the person write or by receiving correspondence or the like. When a judge now refused to accept a witness because "comparison of hands is not evidence," he meant to exclude any person, either skilled or unskilled, who was not of the last two classes and who was shown, either in court or before trial, specimens as a standard of whose genuineness he had no personal knowledge;[7] and he also meant (by the end a comparison of hands"); this hesitation is found at a much later time, in Murphy v. Hagermann, Wright 297 (1833).

The earliest introduction of expert testimony in this country seems to have been under the first Civil Code of Louisiana: 1812, Sauve v. Dawson, 2 Mart. 202.

In the Ecclesiastical Courts the practice had been well known: 1809, Beaumont v. Perkins, 1 Phill. Eccl. 78, Sir J. Nicholl; 1822, Saph v. Atkinson, 1 Add. 214 (the same judge); though in 1824, in Robson v. Rocke, 2 Add. 86, he made a singular 'volte-face,' and uttered nearly opposite declarations as to the common law, the Prerogative Court practice, and his own opinion of the value of such evidence.

[6] In 1792, Lord Kenyon, C. J., in Goodtitle d. Revett v. Braham, 4 T. R. 497, had refused to recognize the objection of "comparison of hands" when made against an expert who had studied specimens of the handwriting. Lord Kenyon's supposed recantation in Carey v. Pitt, Peake Add. Cas. 131 (1797), apparently refers to testimony that a writing appears to be feigned (on mere inspection of it and nothing else), and not to comparison of hands by an expert, as claimed in R. v. Cator by counsel and assented to by Hotham, B.; and this is the construction put on this ruling by his contemporary, Peake (Evidence, 74). Nevertheless Lord Kenyon seems to have been in the meantime of an opposite opinion, for in 1793, Stanger v. Searle, 1 Esp. 14, he excluded an expert's testimony on this ground. For the next generation a series of rulings availed to exclude such testimony: 1802, R. v. Cator, 4 Esp. 117, Hotham, B.; 1803, Lord Eldon, L. C., in Eagleton v. Coventry, 8 Ves. 474 ("That evidence was admitted by Lord Kenyon in one case. It was first introduced by Mr. Justice Buller. . . . [But] these latter cases appear to have brought the law back to the state in which it stood twenty-five years ago"); 1814, the same judge, in Wade v. Broughton, 3 Ves. & B. 172; 1829, Clermont v. Tullidge, 4 C. & P. 1, Lord Tenterden, C. J.; 1830, Griffith v. Williams, 1 C. & J. 47 (Exchequer). In 1836, in Doe dem. Mudd v. Suckermore, 5 A. & E. 710, where the whole subject was reasoned out, a division of opinion prevented a settlement of the law, Coleridge and Patteson being for absolute exclusion, and Lord Denman, C. J., and Williams, J., being for admission under restrictions. In 1843, Fitzwalter Peerage Case 10 Cl. & F. 193, expert comparison was excluded. In 1845, in R. v. Shepherd, 1 Cox Cr. 237, Erle, J., declared such testimony admissible to prove, but not to disprove genuineness. Finally in 1854, came the Common Law Procedure Act, 17 & 18 Vict. c. 125, § 27, which admitted it with the proper restrictions.

[7] This is the modern sense, of course. Thus, 1819, Duncan, J., in Com. v. Smith, 6 S. & R. 571: "Comparison of handwriting is when of the half century) the process of juxtaposition in court even by one who had a personal knowledge of the hand. In other words, the "comparison" in the old sense was the mental process of comparing the remembered type with the disputed instance; the "comparison" in the new sense is the manual juxtaposition of specimens to form a notion of the type, or to see if the type tallies with the disputed writing.

It was not, however, until Doe dem. Mudd v. Suckermore, in 1836,[8] that any real threshing-out of reasons came. At the first part of the century the explanation rests largely on instinct; the judges had already, almost within a generation, allowed great additions in this mode of proof, by enlarging the class of those who could testify at all, and by removing the limitation to civil cases; and they set themselves against any further enlargement of the class.

§ 1994. State of the Law by the 1800s: (II) Submission of Specimens to the Jury. There is, of course, a sole remaining way of attempting to prove the genuineness of handwriting, namely, without asking the opinion of any witness, to lay before the jury some specimens of the writing of the person in question.

It has already been seen (ante, § 1992) that in the early practice there was no objection to the jury's examination purely as such. The witness who had seen the person write (or, later, had received papers or possessed old documents learned to be genuine) might bring the writing in, if he had it, and the jury would incidentally look at it. Thus the stigma of "comparison of hands" was not applicable to the fact of the jury's examination as such; the struggle was against the use of a certain kind of witness, not against what he did if admitted. There were towards the end of the 1700s only two kinds of witnesses — those who had seen the person write, and those who had held correspondence or possessed ancient documents — and it seems entirely clear[1] that not only could these witnesses bring in and compare the specimens they had, but the specimens could be laid before the jury for their inspection.

But now the controversy over expert testimony by juxtaposition was in full array; the new and narrow sense of the stigmatized "comparison of hands" naturally associated itself with any and every process of "comparison" or manual juxtaposition; and doubts about the propriety of the time-honored inspection by the jury thus arose. They had never arisen before, simply because the only witnesses who could be used at all were persons who had already a personal knowledge of the hand and were thus otherwise competent, and to whom juxtaposition in court was not essential, while for the new kind of witness, the expert, it was the essential source of other witnesses prove a paper to be the handwriting of a party, and the witness is desired to take the two papers in his hand, compare them, and say whether they are or are not the same writing. There the witness collects all his knowledge from comparison only; he knows nothing of himself, he has not seen the party write, nor held any correspondence with him."

[8] 5 A. & E. 710, cited supra, note 6.

§ 1994. [1] As illustrated in the passages ante, § 1992.

knowledge; and thus the stigma began to be attached to the process itself as well as to the witness who had to depend upon it. And now, as often happens in our law, the doubts which owed their source to a mere confusion of precedents began to have reasons supplied 'ex post facto.' It was suggested that inspection ("comparison") by juries who could not read was absurd; and other and real objections, with which we need not at this moment concern ourselves, were later searched out.[2] But the old tradition, hitherto unquestioned, that the jury could always have specimens for comparison, was for a long time too strong. Lord Kenyon's remarks in Allesbrook v. Roach,[3] in 1795, illustrate the judicial state of mind:

"Some judges have doubted the policy of that rule of evidence respecting the allowing of the jury to judge by comparison of hands, because often at a distance from the metropolis the jury are composed of illiterate men, incapable of drawing proper conclusions from such evidence. For my part, I have always been inclined to admit it, and shall do so in this case."[4]

It is possible that the old practice of handing to the jury all specimens brought in by witnesses who had seen the person write persisted for some time into the 1800s;[5] in 1836 the counsel in Waddington v. Cousins[6] argues as if it had continued; and in 1830, in Allport v. Meek,[7] Lord Tenterden would apparently have allowed it if the specimens had been properly authenticated.[8] But the Court of Exchequer, in 1830,[9] and the King's Bench, in 1836,[10] after canvassing the whole subject from the point of view of policy, put a limitation upon the practice (confining it to documents already in the case), which remained the law,[11] until the Common Law Procedure Act of

[2] They are considered post, § 2001.

[3] 1 Esp. 352.

[4] Singularly enough, Lord Kenyon had already himself once excluded jury-comparison on this very ground of illiteracy: 1791, Macferson v. Thoytes, Peake 20. In 1797 he seems still wavering; for in Da Costa v. Pym, Peake N. P. 144, he disapproved of comparison by the jury, yet "the jury, nevertheless, compared the different signatures"; i. e., the old tradition was too much for his scruples.

[5] Certainly into the first decade: 1805, Mr. Justice Johnson's Trial, 29 How. St. Tr. 487; 1806, Roe v. Rawlings, 7 East 279, 282, note.

[6] 7 C. & P. 595.

[7] 4 id. 267.

[8] Compare Lord Denman, C. J. (1836), in 5 A. & E. 751, who says: "My brother Parke has informed me that at Nisi Prius he has felt himself bound to permit them [the jury] to see the documents on which the witness judged" when they were in court.

The tradition of allowing jury-comparison was in some places perpetuated in this country, as appears in the following passages, the first of which also illustrates the old sense of the phrase as well as the custody-limitation mentioned ante: 1792, Addison, P. J., in Pennsylvania v. McKee, Add. 35 ("Comparison of hands, or proof by witnesses acquainted with the handwriting, is proper proof to be left to a jury, especially where, as in the present case, the writing is found in the possession of the party"); 1814, Parker, C. J., in Homer v. Wallis, 11 Mass. 312 ("Whatever doubts there may now be in England as to this species of evidence — for in former times it was holden admissible and has never yet to our knowledge been absolutely settled otherwise — we have no doubt that it has become by long and invariable usage in this State competent evidence here"); so also in Connecticut (post, § 2016).

[9] Griffith v. Williams, 1 C. & J. 47.

[10] Doe v. Newton, 1 Nev. & P. 1. There were also individual rulings: 1831, Solita v. Yarrow, 1 Moo. & Rob. 133, Lord Tenterden C. J.; 1831, R. v. Morgan, 1 Moo. & Rob. 134 Bolland, B.; 1836, Bromage v. Price, 7 C. & P. 548, Littledale, J.; 1836, Waddington v. Cousins, 7 C. & P. 595, Lord Denman, C. J. (after Doe v. Newton).

[11] 1836, Lord Denman, C. J., in Doe dem. Mudd. v. Suckermore, 5 A. & E. 750; 1841, Hughes v. Rogers, 8 M. & W. 123 (apparently treating the matter as not settled); 1845, Ovenston v. Wilson, 2 C. & K. 1; R. v. Shepherd, 1 Cox Cr. 237, Erle, J.; 1852, R. v. Taylor, 6 Cox Cr. 58, Wightman, J.; 1855, Doe v. Wilson, 10 Moore P. C. 529 (trial held before the Act of 1854).

1854 speedily reverted to the early tradition, and substituted its more satisfactory rule.

Thus the phrase "comparison of hands," by the first half of the century might mean either juxtaposition by a witness or juxtaposition for the perusal of the jury; the former being not allowed at all, even for experts, and the latter after a time suffering a marked limitation of use. But what seems certain is that, so far as juxtaposition for the jury was discountenanced, not because of the real difficulties involved in it (confusion of issues, and the like), but by the stigma of the phrase "comparison of hands," this was due to its modern association by confusion with that modern sense of "comparison of hands" (juxtaposition) as applied to expert witnesses. The stigma of that phrase attached properly to a kind of witness — in the beginning to a large class, at the end to a small class — but it had originally no reference to the mere process of juxtaposition.

If the foregoing exposition has been clear, we may understand (1) that the classes of witnesses who may testify to handwriting have increased in number by successive enlargements; (2) that the whole meaning of "comparison of hands" has changed; (3) that the mere process of juxtaposition 'coram judicio,' whether for witness or for jury, was historically orthodox and unquestionable; and (4) that the opposite fates at common law of juxtaposition by experts and juxtaposition by jury — exclusion for the former, but limited sanction for the latter — were due simply to the fact that the former had never been attempted till the 1800s and was merely prevented from coming into existence, while the latter had always existed and was thus able to survive the attempts on its life.

B. GENERAL THEORY

§ 1996. Classes of Handwriting-Evidence, discriminated. In order to have precisely in mind the scope of the ensuing rulings, and their relation to those already examined elsewhere, a brief re-survey of the various modes of evidencing handwriting is necessary.

At the outset, testimony directly to the act of inscribing the disputed writing may be disposed of as not concerning the present subject; it does not differ from direct testimony to the doing of any other act. So also circumstantial evidence appropriate to proving any other act is without the present purview, — for example, the fact that the person had expressed an intention to sign the writing, or that he left a room and the signed writing was found in the room (post, § 2131). These involve no special principle peculiar to handwriting-evidence.

What is peculiar to that subject is the use of a type or general style or standard of handwriting, as indicating that a particular disputed writing was or was not made by the person possessing the general style of handwriting. This use may be made by two general kinds of evidence, one testimonial, the other circumstantial. (1) We resort to testimonial evidence when we ask a witness, who possesses a knowledge of a certain type of handwriting, to say whether the disputed document is in that type of handwriting. (2) We resort to circumstantial evidence when we furnish the jury directly with a knowledge of the type, so that they may apply it for themselves, and, in order to prove that type to the jury, produce sundry specimens as a basis for learning the character of the type or standard.

(1) When testimonial evidence is used, then, the only preliminary requirement is that the witness shall appear qualified, i. e. sufficiently acquainted by personal observation with the type of handwriting which he is to apply to the disputed writing. The natural requirements for this purpose, broadly speaking, would be two, namely, he must have seen specimens which were genuinely those of the person whose handwriting he claims to know, and those specimens must have been numerous and representative enough to furnish an adequate basis of judgment; and these requirements show their effect from time to time in the rules of law.

The actual grouping of the kinds of witnesses thus available has been made on the lines of the first requirement, namely, according to the mode in which the witness knows the genuineness of the specimens seen by him. (a) He may know this 'ex visu scriptionis,' i.e. by having seen the person in the act of writing something; this leads to rules of qualification already examined (ante, §§ 694–698). (b) Or he may know this 'ex scriptis olim visis,' i. e. by having had before him writings known to him in some other way (e. g. through receiving payment from the purporting writer) to be genuinely those of the person in question; this also leads to rules of qualification, already examined (ante, §§ 699–707). (c) Or, finally, he may not know their genuineness at all, but may offer his opinion hypothetically on specimens now shown to him ('ex scriptis nunc visis'), and their genuineness will be otherwise proved by the party offering him; the common case of this sort is that of the expert who is shown alleged specimens in court.

Now, for this last class of witness, it is obvious that by studying the specimens he may become as well qualified as the other classes of witnesses who had seen specimens elsewhere; so that no further obstacle arises as regards the principle of Testimonial Qualifications. But a difficulty arises in another field. In the first place, the Opinion rule would ordinarily forbid such testimony (ante, § 1918), because the specimens are in court and the jury can obtain no special assistance from the opinion of a layman no better skilled than themselves. In the next place, the specimens have still to be proved genuine, and this proof (on the principle of § 1904, ante) may be objectionable because of multiplicity and confusion of issues. Thus, this third class of witness ('ex scriptis nunc visis') cannot properly be received until these objections are somehow disposed of.

The consideration of this sort of testimony falls therefore under the present part of the subject; the simpler cases of the other two classes ('ex visu scrip-tionis,' 'ex scriptis nunc visis') having been already dealt with in the appropriate place (ante, §§ 694–707). The theory of the present class of testimony — the witness being either a layman or an expert in handwriting — is dealt with in the ensuing sections (§§ 1997–2000); the state of the rulings in the various jurisdictions, with the detailed questions that arise, is then examined (§§ 2003–2015).

(2) When circumstantial evidence is used, the process is to furnish the jury directly with the type or standard of handwriting, by offering specimens exhibiting the person's style. Here, first of all, questions of Relevancy arise. The specimens, to afford a fairly trustworthy inference, must of course be genuine, and they must also be numerous and representative enough to serve as an adequate basis for inference to the general style.[1] But, furthermore, the process of proving their genuineness may result (as in the case of the expert's use of them) in a multiplicity and confusion of issues and may thus be objectionable on that score (ante, § 1904). Finally, the jury's inability to read, or some other characteristic peculiar to juries, may furnish a special objection. Thus the use of specimens submitted directly to the jury does not involve the Opinion rule, and might in theory be disposed of under the doctrines of Relevancy (ante, § 383). But the coincidence of some of the objections with those urged (as noted above) against expert testimony, and the importance of discriminating the state of the law applicable to the two kinds of evidence, render it necessary to consider under one head the rulings on both subjects. The theory of submitting specimens directly to the jury is therefore here examined (post, §§ 2001, 2002), together with the state of the rulings in the various jurisdictions (§§ 2016–2021).

Theory of (1) Lay and (2) Expert Testimony based on Specimens Nunc Visis

§ 1997. Opinion Rule: Lay Witnesses excluded, Experts alone admitted. The effect of the application of the Opinion rule (ante, § 1918) is at once to exclude the testimony of lay witnesses. Where specimens are brought into court, there is no need of any opinion based on them except from persons skilled in handwriting; for the jury can judge as well as any other laymen; moreover, they would always have to be brought into court, where the witness does not have personal knowledge of their genuineness, because their genuineness would have there to be proved by other witnesses:[1]

1836, DENMAN, L. C. J., in Doe dem. Mudd v. Suckermore, 5 A. & E. 749: "If the proved document and the controverted are both in court, and the witness speaks to their resemblance or difference from immediate observation, he seems to perform a task for the jury which every one of them, even though illiterate, might as well perform for himself. But if he is a person of some skill (however low in degree and however generally shared with him), he does what possibly the jury may be incompetent to do."

§ 1996. [1] This principle of Relevancy has already been briefly noticed, without citing the authorities, ante, § 383.

§ 1997. [1] 1917, O'Connor's Estate, 101 Nebr. 617, 164 N. W. 570 (approving the text above).

1837, WESTON, C. J., in Page v. Homans, 14 Me. 482: "In the case under consideration the witness had no previous knowledge. He was called upon to exercise his judgment upon a comparison then to be made. What light could he afford upon the point in controversy? He possessed no peculiar skill. It must have been more satisfactory to the jury to see with their own eyes than to ask the aid of his. He could only state how the evidence impressed his mind; the same evidence was before the jury; and it was their duty to determine its force and effect."

§ 1998. Testimonial Knowledge Rule: (a) Objection based on the supposed Inferiority of an Expert's Opinion. Though the Opinion rule, then, would admit expert testimony, yet there is further urged an objection resting mainly on the instinctive aversion of the earlier judges to a novel method of testimony — an objection which, the more explicitly it is framed, the weaker its legitimate influence appears; namely, the objection that the opinion of a handwriting-expert is in general inferior to that of an ordinary person who has seen the party write or has corresponded with him.[1] There was a time when the scientific aspects of such testimony did not commend themselves even to great judges, who were at first found to distrust it in all its novel forms:

1836, COLERIDGE, J., in Doe dem. Mudd v. Suckermore, 5 A. & E. 705: "The test of genuineness ought to be the resemblance, not to the formation of the letters in some other specimen or specimens, but to the general character of the writing, which is impressed on it as the involuntary and unconscious result of constitution, habit, or other permanent cause, and is therefore itself permanent. And we best acquire a knowledge of this character by seeing the individual write at times when his manner of writing is not in question, or by engaging with him in correspondence; either supposition giving reason to believe that he writes at the time not constrainedly, but in his natural manner. . . . Assuming that no dispute exists as to the genuineness of the standard or the fairness with which it has been selected, [still] such a comparison leads to no inference as to the general character of the handwriting."

This objection has often been answered:

1806, Mr. W. D. Evans, Notes to Pothier, II, 159 (No. 16, § VI): "But where, in point of reason, is the objection to a proof by comparison of hands, as founded upon an inspection at the trial? It will surely be admitted that the real object is the investigation of truth, and by the indiscriminate rejection of a means of establishing the truth, which in many instances must be more convincing than the evidence actually received, there is a frequent risk of the failure of justice. Every danger which may result from the case of forgery must operate at least with equal force when the deception is aided by the comparison being made, not with the immediate object of the senses, where the erroneous impressions of one person may be corrected by the more accurate inspection of another, but with the traces in the memory, the errors and imperfections of which are beyond the reach of scrutiny. What is the common evidence of knowledge but an act of comparison, — a comparison of the object presented to the sight with the object imprinted by memory in the mind, with the image and copy of the supposed reality? And when the comparison

§ 1998. [1] How advanced a degree of scientific study has been reached in dealing with handwriting may be seen from the following treatises: 1910, Albert S. Osborn, "Questioned Documents" (Rochester, N. Y.); the same, 1922, "The Problem of Proof, especially as exemplified in Disputed Document Cases."

Full recognition of this scientific aspect is given in the following modern opinions: 1919, Boyd v. Gosser, 78 Fla. 64, 70, 82 So. 758 (contract for sale of realty); 1918, Baird v. Shaffer, 101 Kan. 585, 168 Pac. 836 (will); 1914, People v. Storrs, 207 N. Y. 147, 100 N. E. 730.

is made, not with this imperfect and fallacious copy, but with an undisputed original, applied with the skill and experience of persons habitually devoted to similar inquiries, it is deemed not only a matter of technical caution, but an essential point of constitutional liberty, to reject the assistance which it may naturally be expected to afford. An expert of the most accurate talents, comparing the characters of the admitted writing of an individual through a continued series of years with the character of a disputed piece, cannot be heard to offer his opinion; whilst the knowledge and familiarity that the mind may be supposed to have acquired from the previous perusal of those very writings or even from the casual inspection of a single act is received and acted upon without objection."

1886, DICKINSON, J., in Morrison v. Porter, 35 Minn. 426, 29 N. W. 54: "In such cases [of acquaintance by seeing the person write or by correspondence] the conception of the handwriting retained in the mind of the witness becomes a standard for comparison, by reference to which his opinion is formed and given in evidence. It would seem that a standard generally not less satisfactory, and very often much more satisfactory, is afforded by the opportunity for examining side by side the writing in dispute and other writings of unquestioned authenticity."

§ 1999. Same: (b) Objection based on Unfair Selection of Specimens. Still further, in determining whether the witness' sources of knowledge or opinion are adequate, it has to be considered, whether the specimens taken as indicating the type of writing are fair ones. An objection based on this ground was one of the principal ones urged against the employment of expert testimony 'ex scriptis nunc visis,' as distinguished from ordinary testimony 'ex visu scriptionis' or 'ex scriptis olim visis.' Thus:

1816, DALLAS, J., in Burr v. Harper, Holt N. P. 421: "Comparison of handwriting has been rejected upon two grounds: . . . 2. That the specimens may be unfairly selected, calculated to serve the party producing them, and therefore not exhibiting a fair example of the general character of the handwriting."

1836, COLERIDGE, J., in Doe dem. Mudd v. Suckermore, 5 A. & E. 708: "A conviction of forgery might pass on the opinion which a single witness might form, founded solely on the examination of signatures or a single signature presented to him the night before by a prosecutor, who need not be called as a witness on the trial to explain when and where such specimen had been procured or from how many selected, the prisoner on the other hand being wholly unprepared to enter into this explanation. It is no answer to this to say that a similar result might follow upon the evidence of a witness who had seen the prisoner write but once. That is an extreme case upon a principle unobjectionable in itself; . . . here the danger is in the principle itself."

This argument has been one of the two leading arguments mentioned in almost every judicial discussion of the subject. How is it to be disposed of?

(1) First, it is pointed out that the possibility is exactly the same in the case of other handwriting-testimony and indeed of all testimony whatever, i.e. the party offering a witness may, if there was a choice, have avoided those whom he knew would speak unfavorably and have taken the one who would help his cause; yet this possibility has never been considered a ground for excluding testimony:

1831, DAGGETT, J., in Lyon v. Lyman, 9 Conn. 61: "It is said by Starkie that an unfair selection of specimens may be made for the purpose of comparison. It is not suggested, however, that any advantage would thereby be given to one party over the other. . . . The same objection lies against the introduction of witnesses who are to testify to their knowledge of the handwriting. In both cases proof may be expected favorable to the party introducing it; and it will always be selected with that view."

(2) This argument is sometimes further disposed of by establishing a limitation to avoid it, namely, by allowing the expert to use only documents conceded to be genuine and thus making unfair selection impossible:

1836, WILLIAMS, J., in Doe dem. Mudd v. Suckermore, 5 A. & E. 726: "Supposing, however, for the present purpose that it is [the objection is applicable], I cannot perceive how it can be affirmed that this was a partial selection by those who wished to use the papers. The selection was not depending upon their power merely. The whole was subject to the answer of the witness. The papers produced might all have been admitted to be of his handwriting, or one half, or any other portion of them, or all, might have been denied."[1]

(3) Another method of disposing of this argument is to limit the documents usable by the expert to those which are already otherwise in the case as a part of the pleadings or the other evidence. The effect of this is to determine the selection usually by the chance requirements of the litigation and not to leave it to a prejudiced choice from all sources.[2]

As between these three solutions, the first is the sensible and practical one. It is the part of prudence to avoid adding to the complicated rules of evidence, especially for the mere sake of avoiding a possible danger.

§ 2000. Principle of Confusion of Issues. The qualification of every handwriting-witness, testifying from a type or standard already fixed in his mind, rests on the assumption that the specimens taken by him as forming the type were genuine (ante, § 1996). Now the sort of witness, the expert in handwriting ('ex scriptis nunc visis'), with whom we are here concerned, has himself no knowledge of the specimens' genuineness; his testimony will be based hypothetically on the assumption of their genuineness; their genuineness must therefore be otherwise established (for example, by other witnesses), in order that his testimony may be receivable. It is just here that the second great and common objection has arisen, invoking the principle of confusion of issues (ante, §§ 1904, 1906), namely, that this additional proof of genuineness would so complicate and confuse the issues as to be undesirable, and that therefore the expert's testimony, to which it is the essential foundation, must fall with it:

1836, COLERIDGE, J., in Doe dem. Mudd v. Suckermore, 5 A. & E. 706: "If the points which I have just supposed to be conceded [genuineness of specimens and fairness of selection] be brought into question, other and most serious objections arise to this mode of proof. If the genuineness be disputed, a collateral issue is raised, and that upon every paper used as a standard, — an issue, too, in which the proof may be exactly of the same nature as that used in the principal cause, namely, mere comparison; with the additional disadvantages that the former standard is not produced, and that the opposing party can avail himself of no counter-proof. . . . If the fairness with which the standard has been selected § 1999. [1] See also, as instances of this answer: 1863, Wilder, J., in Calkins v. State, 14 Oh. St. 227; 1836, Denman, L. C. J., in Doe v. Suckermore, 5 A. & E. 726.

[2] Illustrated in the following opinions: 1831, Bolland, B., in R. v. Morgan, 1 Moo. & R. 134; 1878, Hand, J., in Miles v. Loomis, 75 N. Y. 296.

is disputed, this again must lead to a collateral inquiry, in which the parties meet on unequal terms if no notice has been given (and none is required by our law), and which must tend to distract the jury, if notice be given, and the discussion on the circumstances under which each specimen was written be fully gone into. It must always be borne in mind, in considering the rule of the English law on this subject, that it has reference to a trial by jury, and that we have no provisions for limiting the standard of comparison or regulating the manner of conducting the inquiry; both of which, it seems, have been found necessary where such a mode of proof has been admitted." [1]

In observing how this argument is to be disposed of, it must be remembered that there are three conceivable ways of supplying the fact of genuineness, on the hypothesis of which the expert forms his opinion: (1) By testimony directed to the jury's consideration, like all ordinary evidence, — the jury, on retiring, to consider the witness' opinion if the hypothesis of genuineness is proved and to ignore it, like other hypothetical testimony (ante, § 672), if the hypothesis is not proved; (2) By testimony directed to the judge, in the nature of proof preliminary to the admission of any piece of evidence (post, § 1550) and calling for the judge's decision only; (3) By an admission of the opponent in the pleadings or for the purpose of the trial.

(1) It will be observed, then, that the objections of Mr. Justice Coleridge assume that the first of these modes is the only one either possible or proper, and upon that assumption the objection is a strong one. It is not a conclusive one, because it proceeds on the old fallacy, so common in our law of evidence, that for the sake of avoiding a possible danger, or a harm likely to appear on one occasion in ten, a real and present good is to be rejected in every instance whatever.[2] It is, nevertheless, this argument which has chiefly availed with those Courts which reject entirely the expert comparison of hands. On the other hand, no Court has found it necessary to go so far as to deny the objection entirely; for by resorting to one of the other two above modes of evidencing genuineness, the objection is avoided and yet the benefit of the expert testimony retained. To these we may now turn:

(2) The only solution at once judicious and practical lies in choosing the second mode of evidencing genuineness, i. e. proving it to the judge. Here the evidence in question takes its true scientific place, namely, as evidence bearing on the admissibility of testimony, and is thus addressed to the judge (post, § 2550). By this mode the jury are not confused by a multiplicity of collateral issues, because the issues are not submitted to them. Thus at once the objection is obviated and the benefit of expert testimony is retained. The argument of Mr. Justice Coleridge that "the English law has no provisions for regulating the manner of conducting the inquiry" illustrates that perverse disposition of the Anglo-American judge — the despair of the jurist — to tie his own hands in the administration of justice, — to deny himself, by a submission to self-created bonds, that power of helping the good and preventing the bad which an untechnical common sense would never hesitate to exercise. The enlightened procedure on this subject is that which had subsequently to be introduced in England by the statute of 1854, that which the Court of Massachusetts had already adopted from the beginning, and that which now prevails by statute in many of our jurisdictions, namely, the method of addressing all evidence of genuineness to the judge and of leaving the control of its length, its quality, and its effect to the trial judge's discretion:

§ 2000. [1] So also Patteson, J., ib. 732; 1828, Jackson v. Phillips, 9 Cow. 112.

[2] See the answers to this objection in these opinions: Daggett, J., in Lyon v. Lyman, 9 Conn. 62 (1831); Wilder, J., in Calkins v. State, 14 Oh. St. 227 (1863).

1902, REMICK, J., in University of Illinois v. Spalding, 71 N. H. 163, 51 Atl. 731: "The third objection — that to permit comparison with specimens not otherwise in evidence, and admitted for the mere purpose of comparison, would introduce collateral issues, and confuse and distract the jury — is, when applied to specimens neither admitted by the parties nor found by the Court to be genuine, firmly grounded in reason and authority. The whole doctrine of comparison presupposes the existence of genuine standards. Comparison of a disputed signature in issue with disputed specimens would not be comparison, in any proper sense. When the identity of anything is fully and certainly established, you may compare other things with it which are doubtful, to ascertain whether they belong to the same class or not; but, when both are doubtful and uncertain, comparison is not only useless as to any certain result, but clearly dangerous, and more likely to bewilder than to instruct a jury. If disputed signatures were admissible for the purpose of comparison, a collateral inquiry would be raised as to each standard; and the proof upon this inquiry would be comparison again, which would only lead to an endless series of issues, each more unsatisfactory than the first, and the case would thus be filled with issues aside from the real question before the jury. . . . The true rule is that, when a writing in issue is claimed on the one hand and denied on the other to be the writing of a particular person, any other writing may be admitted in evidence for the mere purpose of comparison with the writing in dispute, whether the latter is susceptible of or supported by direct proof or not; but, before any such writing shall be admissible for such purpose, its genuineness must be found as a preliminary fact by the presiding judge, upon clear and undoubted evidence. This involves, indeed, a marked departure from the common law. It does away with the common-law limitation of comparison to standards otherwise in the case, and hence with its exceptions, and the controversy and confusion which have grown out of them. . . . In some States, as already shown, legislation has been deemed essential to bring about such changes; but in others, as we have also shown, the same result has been accomplished by judicial action. As the common-law rule was based primarily upon the assumed incapacity of jurors to make intelligent comparison, such judicial action would seem warranted under the power to adapt the common law to new conditions. The value of comparison as a method of proof being now generally conceded, juries being no longer too ignorant to derive benefit from that source, and the danger of spurious specimens and the objections to collateral issues being fully met by requiring the genuineness of the standard to be determined as a preliminary fact by the trial judge, there remains, it would seem, no satisfactory reason for the odd limitations and exceptions. And it is fair to assume that, had no statute been enacted, the common law of England, adjusting itself to changed conditions, would now accord with the rule we have announced. Such a tendency was indicated by the discussion and decision in [Doe d.] Mudd v. Suckermore, which was so soon followed by the act of Parliament referred to. In any event, the essential principle of the common law is preserved, and the dangers and objections against which it was aimed met, by requiring the genuineness of the standard to be found by the Court as a preliminary fact, upon clear and positive testimony."

(3) The third mode of establishing genuineness is also effective in obviating the objection in question, i. e. that of using only documents conceded by the opponent to be genuine; for thus there is no necessity for further evidence of genuineness.

1886, DICKINSON, J., in Morrison v. Porter, 35 Minn. 425, 29 N. W. 54: "When the writings presented are admitted to be genuine, so that collateral issues are not likely to arise, nor the adverse party to be surprised by evidence which he is unable to meet, these objections seem to us to be insufficient as reasons for excluding the evidence."

It is obvious that this solution is not as desirable a solution as the one just considered, for it limits seriously the documents to be used, and may sometimes leave none at all available. But this limitation coincides with one of those proposed (ante, § 1999, par. 2) for obviating the argument from the possibility of unfair selection; and this result — the disposition of the two great objections by a single expedient — has given a specious plausibility to the claims of this limitation.

(4) There is still another limitation (preferred by some Courts) which equally obviates the general objection of confusion of issues; though, like the one just mentioned, it does so only at the expense of unnecessarily shutting out good sources of testimony; namely, the limitation of the standard-specimens to documents already otherwise in the case under the pleadings or evidence.[3] It is here assumed that the jury is to determine the genuineness (i.e. it is not given to the judge for preliminary decision); and the reason for fixing this particular limitation is that, as the question of the documents' genuineness would in any event call for the production of evidence on that point, their use as the basis of expert testimony does not introduce any issues (and therefore any confusion or delay) which are not otherwise incident to the case. This limitation also possesses, equally with the preceding, the advantage of coinciding with one of the methods of overcoming the argument from unfair selection (ante, § 1999, par. 3), and thus, by a single expedient or rule, disposes of the two leading objections.

The foregoing expedients comprise all that are possible in principle or recognized in rulings; and it is obvious that each one has its own reasons, more or less satisfactory in themselves.[4] But the same rules have in some Courts been adopted and applied without a due appreciation of their reasons. Hence, while we ought to find the various judicial attitudes comprised in four sorts, depending on the above four solutions (namely, (a) total exclusion, (b) no limitation except the judge's discretion, (c) limitation to documents admitted genuine, (d) limitation to documents otherwise in the case), there are also found, in some Courts, rules involving a combination, more or less arbitrary and irrational, of the third and fourth of the above rules; thus, in one jurisdiction the limitation is (e) to documents otherwise in the case and admitted to be genuine; in another, (f) to documents either otherwise in the case, or admitted to be genuine; and in another, (g) to documents otherwise in the case, if admitted genuine, and to documents not in the case, if admitted genuine, i. e. the same rule in effect as (c) above. The additional varieties, however, so far as any reason can be found or imagined for them, all hark back to the objections above examined and the expedients noted as meeting those objections.

[3] 1878, Hand, J., in Miles v. Loomis, 75 N. Y. 296 "This limitation, it must be conceded, is not very philosophical or logically satisfactory, but is justified by the necessity of the case, and at all events answers the objection of collateral issues."

[4] In the Second Report of the Common Law Practice Commission for 1853, p. 25, the various reasons are fully stated and answered.

(3) Theory of Jury's Perusal of Specimens

§ 2001. Foregoing Principles Applied. When specimens are offered to the jury to form a standard for the character of the person's handwriting, we are dealing not with testimonial evidence, but with circumstantial evidence, and the first question to be considered is that of Relevancy. It has already been seen (ante, § 1996) that the objection of unfairness of selection may be raised from this point of view. It has also been seen (§ 1996), that from the point of view of Relevancy, the specimens must be genuine, and thus, proof of genuineness becoming essential, the objection of confusion by Confusion of Issues again arises here. In short, the two leading objections which have just been examined for expert comparison (§§ 1999, 2000), are again available as against jury-comparison. It follows that the same expedients may be resorted to, in avoiding these objections.

There is, however, a difference of attractiveness as between the second and the third expedients (ante, § 2000, pars. 3, 4). The first expedient — putting the matter in the hands of the judge — is of course, here as before, the best, and is the one introduced by the English statute of 1854. But, as between the second and the third — the limitation to documents admitted genuine and the limitation to documents otherwise in the case — the third is the more natural one, since it is obviously impossible to keep the jury from considering all documents otherwise in the case and incidentally using them for light upon the handwriting issue. This consideration, indeed, was so strong with the judges in the decisive case of Doe v. Newton that they sanctioned jury-comparison to that extent, in spite of a belief that such comparison was against good policy.[1]

The important thing to note, however, is that there may conceivably be one rule for jury-comparison of specimens and a different rule for expert-testimony based on specimens. This result may be reached, as it was in England, on the score of controlling precedents; and it may also be reached, though not so easily, on the ground of expediency. In fact, such a divergence of rules, however undesirable and unnecessary, does exist in many jurisdictions,

§ 2001. [1] 1836, Doe v. Newton, 1 Nev. & P. 1; Denman, L. C. J., accounted for the exception in favor of documents otherwise in the case by suggesting (for the first time) that "the real ground is that comparison in such a case is unavoidable. . . . No human power can prevent the jury from forming some opinion, . . . and consequently when the mind of the jury must be so employed, it is better for the Court to enter into the consideration."

and hence the precedents on the two questions have to be considered separately.[2]

§ 2002. Jury's Inability to Read. When in the history of jury-comparison (ante, § 1994) the propriety of it began to be argued about, the first opposing reason that came up for consideration was that the jury frequently could not read writing and hence it was useless to submit writings to them:[1]

1791, Lord KENYON, C. J., in MacFerson v. Thoytes, Peake N. P. 20: "Comparison of hands is no evidence. If it were so, the situation of a jury who could neither read nor write would be a strange one; for it is impossible for such a jury to compare the handwriting."

This reason, by the time of Doe v. Newton,[2] was no longer considered sufficient to exclude such comparison; and in this country it was almost unanimously repudiated,[3] — not on the sensible reason that it was unsound, but for the reason, more satisfying to national pride, that juries here could seldom be reproached with it. So far as its soundness on precedent is concerned, the circumstance is certainly suspicious that the reason did not come to be mentioned (ante, § 1994) until a modern period when juries were even more likely than ever before to be able to read, and that so powerful a reason did not avail in all departments of proof to keep written evidence from the jury. So far as soundness of principle is concerned, it was not creditable to eminent judges to argue that, because some juries could not read and thus could not compare, therefore juries that could read and could compare should not be allowed to compare. There is a solemn absurdity in such a 'non sequitur.'

C. PRESENT STATE OF THE LAW UPON THE ABOVE KINDS OF EVIDENCE

§ 2003. In general. After thus examining the history of handwriting-testimony, and the theory and policy applicable from the point of view of principle, we are in a position to consider the present state of the law in the various jurisdictions, on the general question and upon the minor details that arise. The attempt is here made to keep separate the two questions of an expert's testimony as based on handwriting-specimens and of the jury's examination of such specimens. Yet the broad and loose phrase "comparison of hands" has sometimes done service for both, in the utterances of

[2] 1870, Nott, J., in Medway v. U. S., 6 Ct. of Cl. 428: "The admission of this letter in evidence [to the jury for comparison] is not to be confounded with that practice . . . of allowing witnesses to testify as to handwriting whose knowledge is but opinion, resting on comparison alone. It comes in under a different rule, resting upon a distinct principle . . . [that] comparison of handwriting may be made by Courts and juries without the intervention of witnesses, if," etc.

§ 2002. [1] Accord: 1770, Brookbard v. Woodley, Peake N. P. 21, note, Yates, J.; 1803, Eagleton v. Kingston, 8 Ves. 475, Eldon, L. C.; 1821, Burr v. Harper, Holt N. P. 421, Dallas, C. J. It was, however, disapproved on other occasions: 1795, Allesbrook v. Roach, 1 Esp. 352, Kenyon, L. C. J.; 1836, Williams, J., in Doe v. Suckermore, 5 A. & E. 723.

[2] 1836.

[3] E. g.: 1812, Tilghman, C. J., in McCorkle v. Binns, 5 Binney Pa. 348; 1828, Savage, C. J., in Jackson v. Phillips, 9 Cow. N. Y. 112; 1831, Daggett, J., in Lyon v. Lyman, 9 Conn. 62; 1836, Shaw, C. J., in Moody v. Rowell, 17 Pick. Mass. 490; 1863, Wilder, J., in Calkins v. State, 14 Oh. St. 227. But it was treated as a valid reason in an early Virginia case: 1829, Rowt v. Kile, 1 Leigh 216.

Courts, and it is thus not always easy to say whether the rule of a given Court is intended for the former only or for the latter only or for both.

(1) Lay Testimony based on Specimens Nunc Visis

§ 2004. Excluded in general by the Opinion Rule. The effect of the Opinion rule, as already noted (ante, § 1997), is of course to exclude comparison of specimens before the Court by a lay-witness in general.[1]

An exception which "proves the rule" is the case of a layman who has seen a disputed document, now lost, but did not then know the author of it, and is now asked to compare a specimen of proved authorship and say whether the lost document was in the same hand. Here the reason of the Opinion rule falls away; for the jury cannot examine for themselves the lost document, and hence the lay witness can add some information not otherwise accessible; hence, his opinion, based on comparison, should be allowed.[2]

§ 2005. Old Exception for Witnesses ex visu scriptionis or ex scriptis olim visis. It has been already noted (ante, § 1993) that the traditional practice, down to the 1800s, made no discrimination against the use of the specimens in court; and that thus, wherever a lay-witness was to speak from having already seen the person write or from correspondence, he could originally (and it was sometimes urged, he must) bring the documents into court, and he might then use them in testifying. The perception in England that the Opinion rule prevented this [1] did not always avail with American Courts to destroy the old tradition. Accordingly there occur a number of rulings perpetuating it, either as a direct local survival of the tradition, or by the improper application of early precedents elsewhere. These rulings must be regarded as anomalous.[2]

§ 2004. [1] 1864, R. v. Wilbain, 9 Cox Cr. 448 (police-inspector's testimony of comparison between an anonymous letter and writings found in defendant's possession, excluded); 1886, Mixer v. Bennett, 70 Ia. 331, 30 N. W. 587 (under Code § 3655); 1910, Murphy v. Murphy, 146 Ia. 255, 125 N. W. 191 (but this ruling is erroneous on the facts, for the reason stated ante, § 697, n. 4); 1849, Smith v. Walton, 8 Gill Md. 86; 1867, Niller v. Johnson, 27 Md. 13; 1837, Page v. Homans, 14 Me. 478; 1860, Woodman v. Dana, 52 Me. 13; 1899, Lowe v. Dorsett, 125 N. C. 301, 34 S. E. 442; 1904, Groff v. Groff, 209 Pa. 603, 59 Atl. 65; 1852, Kinney v. Flynn, 2 R. I. 319, 327.

This is also implied in most of the statutes noted post, § 2008.

[2] Accord: 1889, Hammond v. Wolf, 78 Ia. 227 (attorney testifying to a note, now lost, and formerly placed in his hands for collection); 1891, Sankey v. Cook, 82 Ia. 125 (an expert who had once seen a contract now lost; here excluded, solely because the specimen used as a standard was not properly proved genuine); 1910, Murphy v. Murphy, 146 Ia. 255, 125 N. W. 191 (cited more fully ante, § 697, n. 4).

Whether a lost disputed document may be proved by handwriting-testimony is considered ante, §§ 697, 1185.

§ 2005. [1] In England, Garrells v. Alexander (1801, Kenyon, L. C. J., 4 Esp. 37) probably effected ultimately the change; though for some time afterwards the Bar seems to have clung to the tradition.

[2] 1886, Vinton v. Peck, 14 Mich. 292; 1860, Woodman v. Dana, 52 Me. 11; 1880, Worth v. McConnell, 42 Mich. 475, 4 N. W. 198; 1878, State v. Clinton, 67 Mo. 385.

In Pennsylvania, in Bank v. Jacobs, 1 Pa. 180 (1829), comparison was allowed, according to the old doctrine, for those already knowing the writing; but this was repudiated in Travis v. Brown, 43 Pa. 9 (1862), which represents the accepted rule.

In South Carolina the decisions all allowed non-experts to compare until Weaver v. Whilden, in 1890 (cited post, § 2008), which, in § 2006. Same: Old Exception for Ancient Documents. Another part of this exception due to the survival of the tradition of the 1800s (ante, § 1993) prevails for comparison made in court by the possessor of ancient documents. Such a person is qualified to speak as to that handwriting (ante, § 704), and, by the traditional practice, might bring them into court and compare them with the disputed writing. The Opinion rule should exclude this kind of comparison as well as the preceding one; but the tradition persisted in this respect, and may be said to be still the law.[1]

§ 2007. Refreshing Memory by Perusing Specimens. There seems no reason why, on principle, one who comes to court with a knowledge of handwriting (by having seen the act of writing or by having had correspondence or by having possessed old documents) should not be allowed to refresh his memory (ante, § 758) by a perusal in court of the specimens forming the foundation of his knowledge. The doctrine seems, so far as its original promulgation is concerned, to have arisen in consequence of the attempt of the Bar to perpetuate the old tradition (overthrown by Garrells v. Alexander), allowing comparison in court by a layman knowing the handwriting (ante, § 2005).[1] On principle, if this perusal was desired, not as in itself the foundation for the opinion, but as a means of refreshing the memory of an opinion already formed, it could be permitted so far as it served that end:

apparently intending to maintain the rule, left the matter doubtful.

In Tennessee such comparison was perhaps allowable: post, § 2008.

In the Federal Courts, in Smith v. Fenner, 1 Gall. 175 (1812), Mr. J. Story allowed this; so also are the following: 1805, Hopkins v. Simmons, 1 Cr. C. C. 250; 1833, U. S. v. Larned, 4 Cr. C. C. 312. But Strother v. Lucas, 6 Pet. 766 (1832), finally placed the Court against it.

In West Virginia apparently this comparison is allowed for one who has personal knowledge of the writing: 1874, Clay v. Robinson, 7 W. Va. 359, 10 W. Va. 53; and later rulings in § 2008, post.

§ 2006. [1] England: 1824, Doe v. Tarver, R. & Moo. 143, Abbott, C. J. (allowed). In R. v. Barber, 1 C. & K. 436 (1884), it does not appear why the testimony was rejected. In 1836, Doe v. Suckermore, 5 A. & E. 717, passim, all the judges seemed to concede the exception; and in 1847, Doe v. Davies, 10 Q. B. 314, a witness produced an old register and compared it. In 1806, Roe v. Rawlings, 7 East 282, and 1811, Morewood v. Wood, 14 East 328, ancient documents were used, but whether by witnesses or not does not appear. From rulings, not elsewhere reported, mentioned by Mr. Phillipps (I, 492, note) and Mr. Starkie (II, 517, note), the usage prior to the above later cases seems to have been without uniformity.

United States: The exception was recognized in the following cases: 1849, Smith v. Walton, 8 Gill Md. 86; 1820, State v. Allen, 1 Hawks N. C. 9, semble; 1911, Nicholson v. Eureka L. Co., 156 N. C. 59, 72 S. E. 86 (not confining the rule to experts); 1874, Clay v. Robinson, 7 W. Va. 359, 10 id. 53.

Judges constantly mention 'obiter' an exception in favor of "ancient documents," but it is impossible to be certain whether they are referring solely to the laying of such documents before the jury (a use undoubtedly established; post, § 2017), or also to their use by the witness who brings them as the foundation of his knowledge. Moreover, it is impossible to tell whether they mean also, by this broad phrase, to sanction the examination of ancient documents by experts, in jurisdictions where expert comparison is otherwise limited or rejected; in Doe v. Suckermore, however, expert use is evidently sanctioned.

It should be added that in some jurisdictions the old tradition is misunderstood, and is expressly said to mean that ancient documents may be compared in court by experts; this is right enough on principle, but it is not, as represented, the old doctrine, for the old doctrine made no limitation to experts; 1887, Williams v. Conger, 125 U. S. 413, 8 Sup. 933; 1878, State v. Clinton, 67 Mo. 384; 1849, West v. State, 22 N. J. L. 241.

§ 2007. [1] In England this practice was allowed in the following cases: 1816, Burr v. Harper, Holt N. P. 420; 1845, R. v. Shepherd, 1 Cox Cr. 237. In Doe v. Suckermore, A. & E. 724, 752 (1836), contrary opinions were expressed by the judges as to the propriety of the ruling in Burr v. Harper; Williams, J., and Patteson, J., respectively approving and disapproving it.

1828, COALTER, J., in Redford's Adm'r v. Peggy, 6 Rand. 326, 345: "There can be no doubt, I presume, that if a witness knows he is about to be examined as to handwriting, and has frequently seen the party write, and has in his possession papers that he saw him write, and looks at them so as to refresh his memory as to the character and manner of writing, and then deposes, that this would not destroy his testimony. A witness is called on to identify a man he had before known, but, before he sees him, he looks at a picture which he recognizes to be a likeness, which recalls the features and expression of countenance, and notwithstanding alterations by age, etc., he testifies to his identity; [this is allowable]."

That by way of refreshing memory such inspection is allowable seems clearly the law to-day in the United States.[2]

(2) Expert Testimony based on Specimens Nunc Visis

§ 2008. Whether admissible at all; and, if so, for what Classes of Writings. The decisions and the statutes in the various jurisdictions exhibit a great variety of rules; even within the same jurisdiction there is often obscurity and inconsistency.[1] The types of possible rules have already been summarized

[2] United States: The practice was approved in the following cases: 1860, Clark v. Wyatt, 15 Ind. 272, semble; 1885, Thomas v. State, 103 Ind. 419, 431, 2 N. E. 803; 1849, Smith v. Walton, 8 Gill Md. 85; 1886, National Bank v. Armstrong, 66 Md. 115, 6 Atl. 584 (here the signature was used on cross-examination, and was one not in the case but already admitted by the party to be genuine); 1856, McNair v. Com., 26 Pa. 390 (provided there is a genuine refreshment of memory, otherwise not; so far as this case allows a mere comparison irrespective of memory refreshment, it is overruled by Travis v. Brown, post, § 2008; but on the present point the decision seems still to be law). In Redford v. Peggy, quoted supra, two of the three judges held the testimony still admissible though the witness declared that without such refreshment he could not have identified the writing; but these two would apparently have excluded the witness had his comparison produced no actual refreshment but formed in itself the sole basis of his testimony.

§ 2008. [1] To avoid repetition, the statutes are placed post, § 2016, where the jury's use of specimens is dealt with; the statutes usually regulate the two modes in the same enactment; the decisions in § 2016 should also be compared:

ENGLAND and CANADA: The rulings at common law have been placed ante, §§ 1993, 1994, in considering the history; the statutes and rulings thereunder are placed post, § 2016, in dealing with the jury's use of specimens.

UNITED STATES: Federal: It was not easy to learn the exact rule before the statute of 1913, even if we assume that the modern Supreme Court decisions on jury-comparison (post, § 2016) are to be taken as applicable to expert comparison: 1832, Strother v. Lucas, 6 Pet. 766 (excluding comparison by a non-expert); 1851, Gaines v. Relf, 12 How. 472, 530, semble (comparison of hands held properly made, under the Louisiana statute); 1870, Rogers v. Ritter, 12 Wall. 321 (question left undecided); 1855, U. S. v. Darnaud, 3 Wall. Jr. 181 (allowed for documents admitted or proved genuine and, semble, otherwise in the case); 1870, Medway v. U. S., 6 Ct. of Cl. 428 (comparison by experts not allowed); 1886, U. S. v. McMillan, 29 Fed. 247 (documents at least must be admitted genuine); 1888, U. S. v. Mathias, 36 Fed. 893 (documents must be otherwise in the case and admitted genuine); 1893, Hickory v. U. S., 151 U. S. 303, 305, 14 Sup. 334 (Moore v. U. S. cited, but no rule laid down); 1894, Richardson v. Green, 9 C. C. A. 565, 61 Fed. 423, 15 U. S. App. 488, 507 (applying the Oregon statute); 1897, National Accid. Soc. v. Spiro, 24 C. C. A. 334, 78 Fed. 775 ("probably" expert testimony is inadmissible); 1904, Withaup v. U. S., 127 Fed. 530, 535, 62 C. C. A. 328 (comparison allowable "if a paper is in evidence in the case for some other purpose, and is admitted or satisfactorily proven to be" genuine, or if a paper is filed by a party and is part of the record of which the Court takes judicial notice; this is said to be "clearly established" (?) as the "common-law rule"; here, four papers in a former case were excluded, and two recognizances in the case at bar were admitted); St. 1913 (quoted post, § 2016);

Alabama: In an early case it was said that testimony by "comparison of hands" was not allowable at all, though the witness here offered was not an expert: 1843, State v. Givens, 5 Ala. 754; but whether expert comparison is now recognized is uncertain: 1882, Moon's Adm'r v. Crowder, 72 Ala. 88 (apparently confining expert comparison to "writings of unquestioned genuineness" in the case); 1891, Gibson v.

(ante, § 2000); and the rule in each jurisdiction is either one of those stated or else some qualified variety of one of the chief forms.

Trowbridge, 96 Ala. 357, 361, 11 So. 365 (excluded entirely); 1898, Curtis v. State, 118 Ala. 125, 24 So. 111 (excluded on the facts); 1905, Campbell v. Bates, 143 Ala. 338, 39 So. 144 (Gibson v. Trowbridge F. Co. followed); 1907, Griffin v. Working Woman's H. Ass'n, 151 Ala. 597, 44 So. 605 (papers otherwise in the case and conceded or proved genuine may be used);

California: Expert comparison is allowed by the statute cited post, § 2016; 1880, Cartery's Estate, 56 Cal. 470, 474 (doubted whether expert comparison could be made with specimens on which the testator had not "acted or been charged" and which had not "been admitted or treated as genuine" by the opponents; this ignores the last clause of C. C. P. § 1944);

Colorado: Expert comparison is allowed by the statute cited post, § 2016;

Columbia (Dist): 1894, Keyser v. Pickrell, 4 D. C. App. 198, 206 (expert testimony allowed; no limitations named);

Florida: Expert comparison is allowed by the statute cited post, § 2016;

Georgia: Expert comparison seems not to be sanctioned by the statute cited post, § 2016: 1886, Smith v. State, 77 Ga. 705, 711, semble (expert testimony to other letters proved genuine, admissible); 1906, Patton v. Bank, 124 Ga. 965, 53 S. E. 664 (note; comparison with other signatures admitted genuine and in evidence, allowed);

Idaho: 1900, Bane v. Gwinn, 7 Ida. 439, 63 Pac. 634 (allowable for only such papers as are "in the cases for other purposes, and such as are admitted to be genuine," "except in very exceptional cases"; no authority cited); 1914, State v. Bogris, 26 Ida. 587, 144 Pac. 789 (larceny of a pay-check; Bane v. Gwinn followed; but the opinion intimates that documents proven genuine may also be admissible);

Illinois: The use of expert comparison was at first rejected altogether: 1846, Pate v. People, 8 Ill. 664, semble: but the rulings about submitting specimens to the jury (post, § 2016) seem to have been taken as authorities in the present connection, and expert comparison became allowable, though under what conditions no one could say exactly, until the statute of 1915; 1892, Riggs v. Powell, 142 Ill. 453, 456, 32 N. E. 482 ("comparing an alleged signature with a genuine one," excluded; citing Putnam v. Wadley, Board v. Misenheimer, Ill.); 1892, Rogers v. Tyley, 144 Ill. 652, 665, 32 N. E. 393 (admissible if "properly in evidence in the case for other purposes"; yet, in the next sentence, if "admitted to be genuine, already in the case"; citing Brobston v. Cahill; ignoring Riggs v. Powell; perhaps to be distinguished from it because the one was filed at Springfield, Nov. 2, 1892, the other at Ottawa, Oct. 31, 1892); 1893, Himrod v. Gilman, 147 Ill. 293, 295, 300, 35 N. E. 373 (genuineness of notes secured by a trust deed; "it seems to be well settled in this State" that comparison cannot be made "with an admitted genuine signature to papers or documents not in evidence in the cause and which are collateral to the issue"; an expert's comparison with a trust-deed signature was here held proper; the preceding two cases are not cited in either briefs or opinion); 1897, Greenbaum v. Bornhofen, 167 Ill. 640, 645, 47 N. E. 857 (expert's testimony, founded on "papers offered in evidence," admitted; no question raised); St. 1915 (quoted post, § 2016);

Indiana: Here the use of documents seems to have been at first confined to those which are admitted to be genuine, whether they are otherwise in the case or not: 1870, Chance v. Gravel Road Co., 32 Ind. 474; 1873, Burdick v. Hunt, 43 Ind. 386; at this stage came: 1877, Jones v. State, 60 Ind. 241 (requiring also that the documents be otherwise in the case); but it is not followed on that point: 1879, Forgey v. Bank, 66 Ind. 124; 1881, Hazzard v. Vickery, 78 Ind. 64; 1881, Shorb v. Kinzie, 80 Ind. 502; 1889, Walker v. Steele, 121 Ind. 440, 22 N. E. 142, 23 N. E. 271; but at this stage the rule was enlarged by allowing the use of papers either already in the case or admitted genuine; the line of cases beginning some distance back: 1874, Huston v. Schindler, 46 Ind. 38, 43, semble (papers admitted genuine or in the case, usable); 1884, Shorb v. Kinzie, 100 Ind. 429; 1890, White S. M. Co. v. Gordon, 104 Ind. 495, 496, 24 N. E. 1053; 1895, McDonald v. McDonald, 142 Ind. 55, 41 N. E. 340; 1895, Tucker v. Hyatt, 144 Ind. 635, 41 N. E. 1047, 43 N. E. 872 (an affidavit for change of venue, and a verified plea); then in 1913 came a statute, cited post, § 2016;

Iowa: Expert comparison is allowed by the statute cited post, § 2016; documents admitted to be genuine may be used, though the Code does not say so: 1888, Riordan v. Guggerty, 74 Ia. 691, 39 N. W. 107;

Kansas: Expert comparison was at first permitted when the standard-documents were otherwise in the case, and when, though not otherwise in the case, they were admitted to be genuine: 1872, Macomber v. Scott, 10 Kan. 339; but the rule is now uncertain: 1898, Gilmore v. Swisher, 59 Kan. 172, 52 Pac. 426 (conveyance in fraud of creditors; to prove the genuineness of a material admission of the debtor's, proof by comparison of specimens was limited to specimens conceded to be genuine, the disputed document being only incidentally material; the Court disclaims any "attempt to declare a definite rule on the subject"(!));

§ 2009. Unfair Selection of Specimens. In jurisdictions where any documents proved genuine may be used, the question often arises whether the Kentucky: Expert comparison was at first entirely excluded, so far as it involved an opinion of the writing based on speciments studied: 1852, Hawkins v. Grimes, 13 B. Monr. 261; 1885, Fee v. Taylor, 83 Ky. 263; but the statute, cited post, § 2016, now permits it: 1903, Storey v. Bank, — Ky. —, 72 S. W. 318 (comparison by expert of specimens not otherwise in the case, allowed, under C. C. P. § 604 as amended; Fee v. Taylor repudiated as obsolete); 1907, Pulliam v. Sells, 124 Ky. 310, 99 S. W. 289 (comparison allowed with signatures admitted by opponent on the stand to be genuine);

Louisiana: Expert comparison is allowed by the statute cited post, § 2016: 1812, Sauve v. Dawson, 2 Mart. 202 (allowable, under the old Civil Code); 1835, Plicque v. La Branche, 9 La. 560, 562 (allowable under C. C. P. § 325); 1853, Whitney v. Bunnell, 8 La. An. 429 (same); 1866, McDonogh's Succession, 18 La. An. 419, 445 (same); 1869, Huddleston v. Coyle, 21 La. An. 148 (same); 1869, Leonard's Succession, 21 La. An. 523 (same).

For olographic wills, a special line of authorities exists: Civ. C. § 1655 (must be proved by two witnesses "who must attest that they recognize the testament as being entirely written, dated, and signed in the testator's handwriting, and as having often seen him write and sign during his lifetime"; for the last clause, Act 119, p. 168, 1896, substituted this: "The judge shall interrogate the witnesses under oath touching their knowledge of the testator's handwriting and signature, and shall satisfy himself that they are familiar therewith"); 1871, Roth's Succession, 31 La. Ann. 320 (expert testimony admissible in corroboration of the two witnesses speaking from personal knowledge); 1913, White's Succession, 132 La. 890, 61 So. 860 (rule of Roth's Case followed);

Maine: The expert may use any documents admitted or proved to be genuine: 1860, Woodman v. Dana, 52 Me. 13; 1888, State v. Thompson, 80 Me. 201, 13 Atl. 892;

Maryland: Expert comparison was at first excluded entirely: 1873, Tome v. R. Co., 39 Md. 89 (Alvey, J., diss.); 1881, Herrick v. Swomley, 56 Md. 459 (as bound by the preceding case); but it is now permitted by the statute cited post, § 2016;

Massachusetts: Expert comparison is allowed for any documents admitted or clearly proved to be genuine; the authorities for jury-comparison in § 2016, post, are also to be taken as applying here: 1836, Moody v. Rowell, 17 Pick. 490; 1874, Demerritt v. Randall, 116 Mass. 331;

Michigan: Experts may compare documents already in the case: 1866, Vinton v. Peck, 14 Mich. 287;

Minnesota: Experts may compare documents otherwise in the case, and documents not otherwise in the case but admitted to be genuine: 1886, Morrison v. Porter, 35 Minn. 425, 29 N. W. 54; 1912, Cochran v. Stein, 118 Minn. 323, 136 N. W. 1037 (Morrison v. Porter approved);

Mississippi: Experts may compare documents otherwise in the case, and documents not otherwise in the case but admitted to be genuine: 1874, Wilson v. Beauchamp, 50 Miss. 32;

Missouri: Experts may compare documents otherwise in the case, if admitted genuine, and documents not otherwise in the case but admitted genuine, — in short, any documents admitted to be genuine: 1870, State v. Scott, 45 Mo. 304 (adding to the first class supra, "or clearly proved genuine"); 1878, State v. Clinton, 67 Mo. 385; 1880, State v. Tompkins, 71 Mo. 616; 1884, Springer v. Hall, 83 Mo. 697; but in Rose v. First Nat'l Bank, 91 Mo. 401, 3 S. W. 876 (1886), documents not in the case, yet "conceded to be genuine," were rejected by a misunderstanding of State v. Clinton and the succeeding cases; finally came the statutory rule cited post, § 2016; 1917, Weber v. Strobel, — Mo. —, 194 S. W. 272 (will statute applied to admit experts);

Montana: Experts might compare documents otherwise in the case and admitted or clearly proved to be genuine: 1878, Davis v. Fredericks, 3 Mont. 262, semble; but the statute cited post, § 2016, now regulates the use;

Nebraska: Expert comparison is permitted by the statute cited post, § 2016;

New Hampshire: Experts may compare any documents proved to be genuine: 1873, State v. Hastings, 53 N. H. 460; 1877, Carter v. Jackson, 58 N. H. 157; which apparently displace the old limitations of Bowman v. Sanborn, 25 N. H. 110 (1852); 1902, University of Illinois v. Spalding, 71 N. H. 163, 51 Atl. 731 (quoted ante, § 2000);

New Jersey: Experts at first could not testify at all from a study of specimens: 1849, West v. State, 22 N. J. L. 241 (except for ancient documents; ante, § 2006); until the enactment of the statute cited post, § 2016; applied in Mutual Ben. Life Ins. Co. v. Brown, 30 N. J. Eq. 201 (1878);

New York: Here, at first, testimony by the study of specimens was unconditionally excluded: 1809, Jackson v. Van Dusen, 5 John. 155, semble; 1828, Jackson v. Phillips, 9 Cow. 112; 1843, Wilson v. Kirkland, 5 Hill 182; but later it was allowed for experts when based upon documents otherwise in the case: 1878, Miles v. Loomis, 75 N. Y. 292; 1880, Hynes v. McDermott, 82 N. Y. 49; the enlarging statutes of 1880 and 1888, and their peculiar interpretation, are dealt with post, § 2016;

North Carolina: The state of the law was not specimen is a fair one, for example, when it was written in court by the party offering it, and whether it is material that it is an opponent or a hostile easy to determine, until the statute of 1913, cited post, § 2016: 1840, Pope v. Askew, 1 Ired. 16, 19 ("Testimony as to handwriting, founded on what is properly termed comparison in hands, seems to be now generally exploded"; citing Doe v. Suckermore; but the witness here was not an expert); 1856, Otey v. Hoyt, 3 Jones L. 409, semble (comparison not allowed for any one); 1877, Yates v. Yates, 76 N. C. 149, semble (allowed for documents otherwise in the case and admitted genuine); 1881, McLeod v. Bullard, 84 N. C. 529 (a deed was claimed to have been signed while drunk, and a comparison was allowed, with documents otherwise in the case, to show the difference between that and the normal signature); 1891, Tunstall v. Cobb, 109 N. C. 320, 14 S. E. 28 (allowed for documents otherwise in the case and admitted genuine, and for documents not otherwise in the case if admitted genuine); 1892, Croom v. Sugg, 110 N. C. 259, 14 S. E. 748 (action on defendant's testatrix's bond; defendant allowed to use the will's signature, as one admitted genuine); 1893, State v. De Graff, 113 N. C. 688, 693, 18 S. E. 507 (Tunstall v. Cobb approved); 1896, State v. Noe, 119 N. C. 849, 25 S. E. 812 (allowed where genuineness "is not denied or cannot be denied"; here allowed for a bond for appearance of the defendant); 1914, Boyd v. Leatherwood, 165 N. C. 614, 81 S. E. 1025 (Tunstall v. Cobb followed);

Ohio: Here expert comparison was first allowed for documents otherwise in the case and admitted genuine, any broader limits being left for future settlement: 1850, Hicks v. Person, 19 Oh. 441; later, it was allowed also for all documents otherwise in the case, and also for those not in the case if admitted to be genuine or if clearly proved genuine by witnesses speaking "directly and positively": 1863, Calkins v. State, 14 Oh. St. 222; 1869, Bragg v. Colwell, 19 Oh. 407; 1876, Pavey v. Pavey, 30 Oh. 602; 1880, Koons v. State, 36 Oh. 199; 1887, Bell v. Brewster, 44 Oh. 696, 10 N. E. 679;

Oklahoma: 1900, Archer v. U. S., 9 Okl. 569, 60 Pac. 268 (expert may testify upon specimens "admitted or proven to be genuine"; but the proof of genuineness cannot itself be made by comparison with other standards);

Oregon: Expert comparison is allowed by the statute cited post, § 2016; applied in these cases: 1896, Osmun v. Winters, 30 Or. 177, 46 Pac. 780; Munkers v. Ins. Co., 30 Or. 211, 46 Pac. 850; 1897, State v. Tice, 30 Or. 457, 48 Pac. 367 (allowing the comparison of no other documents than those admitted or treated as genuine).

Pennsylvania: The following decisions exhibit the checkered history of the rule: 1824, Lodge v. Phipher, 11 S. & R. 335 (partly because the witness was not an expert, the proposal to compare writings, here of S. with a paper purporting to be written by P., to show S. to be the real writer, was declared to be valueless); 1829, Bank v. Jacobs, 1 Pa. 180 (here comparison was allowed by one who already knew the handwriting, but not by an expert who had no previous knowledge of it; following Lodge v. Phipher, but proceeding upon rather impalpable grounds; note that at this time and in this case comparison by the jury was accepted as proper); 1856, McNair v. Com., 26 Pa. St. 390, semble (mentions expert comparison as proper; no reference to the preceding rulings); 1862, Travis v. Brown, 43 Pa. 9 (follows Bank v. Jacobs as to experts, but also repudiates comparison even by those familiar with the writing; the McNair case is not mentioned, but probably would be regarded as overruled on these points); 1868, Haycock v. Greup, 57 Pa. 441 (excludes all comparison by witnesses); 1876, Aumick v. Mitchell, 82 Pa. 211 (same); 1880, Berryhill v. Kirchner, 96 Pa. 492 (same); 1884, Foster v. Collner, 107 Pa. 313 (same); 1893, Rockey's Estate, 155 Pa. 453, 456, 26 Atl. 656 ("mere experts" are not to compare); since these decisions the statute of 1895, cited post, § 2016, controls the matter;

Rhode Island: The judicial rule excluded expert comparison: 1833, Avery's Trial, Newport, R. I., Hildreth's Rep. 41 (before Eddy, C. J., Brayton and Durfee, JJ.; comparison of hands by a writing-master, not allowed, to prove a letter written by the defendant); 1852, Kinney v. Flynn, 2 R. I. 319, 326, semble (comparison by experts inadmissible); but it is now allowed by the statute cited post, § 2016; 1907, Taber v. New York P. & B. R. Co., 28 R. I. 287, 67 Atl. 8 (statute applied);

South Carolina: Here the rule is a mixture; for the qualification as to "corroboration," see the note under Pennsylvania, post, § 2016); 1841, Bird v. Miller, 1 McMull, 124 (admitting comparison by any one, as confirmatory proof; yet here the witness had knowledge of the handwriting); 1874, Bennett v. Mathewes, 5 S. C. 478 (permitting comparison, as confirmatory proof, in doubtful cases, of specimens admitted genuine; the witnesses were put forward as experts, but nothing was said as to this); 1882, Benedict v. Flanagan, 18 S. C. 506 (following Bennett v. Mathewes, and further settling that the witness need not be an expert, and the trial judge is to determine, subject to review, what is a "doubtful case"); 1890, Weaver v. Whilden, 33 S. C. 190, 11 S. E. 686 (same; yet certain non-experts were here excluded "because not familiar with handwriting"; this would have been a proper enough limitation; but the trial judge, whose ruling was affirmed, had, in sustaining an objection that they were not experts, excluded them as not "having any familiarity with handwritings" apparently an expression synonymous with "experts"; query, what does the case decide?);

witness who writes it. But the rulings of this sort have almost all been made for documents offered under jury-comparison, and the principle and the policy are the same in both instances (post, § 2018).

§ 2010. Photographic Copies as Specimens. Here the question is, again, in effect, whether the photographic copies afford a fair ground of inference as to the peculiarities of the handwriting in question. That they are sufficient for this seems to be conceded (and properly) by the weight of authority. However, inasmuch as they are only copies, the documentary rule requires the production of the originals, if they are available; when they are not available, the use of photographic copies should usually be permissible.

The various questions that here arise have been, for convenience of distinction from other questions as to photographs, dealt with together (ante, § 797). The use of press-copies is noticed post, § 2019.

§ 2011. Studying the Specimens In or Out of Court. Must the specimens be used in court only? The answer to this question depends on the principle involved:

(1) First, since a cross-examination to the grounds of the expert's conclusions (post, § 2015) will usually be desired, the specimens must be in court

South Dakota: 1906, McClellan's Estate, 20 S. D. 498, 107 N. W. 681 (expert comparison of photographic reproductions of certain papers with "proved signatures," held not improper on the facts);

Tennessee: The state of the law was for some time uncertain: in 1870, Clark v. Rhodes, 2 Heisk. 207, documents not in the case, laid before witnesses not said to be experts, were rejected; in 1872, Kannon v. Galloway, 2 Baxt. 232, witnesses, not said to be experts, were allowed to compare documents in the case; in 1889 a statute was passed, cited post, § 2016, similar to that of 1884 in New York; its interpretation is dealt with under New York and under Tennessee, in § 2016, post;

Texas: The state of the law is uncertain: in 1866, Hanley v. Gandy, 28 Tex. 211, comparison by witnesses was entirely excluded; but in 1885, Kennedy v. Upshaw, 64 Tex. 420, a rule was adopted permitting it, apparently, where the specimens were otherwise in the case and admitted to be genuine; in 1887, Smyth v. Caswell, 67 Tex. 572, 4 S. W. 848, the first of these limitations was relaxed for a specimen introduced by the opponent and admitted genuine; Wagoner v. Ruply, 69 Tex. 703, 7 S. W. 80 (1888), is a confused opinion, apparently to the same effect; in 1894, Jester v. Steiner, 86 Tex. 415, 420, 25 S. W. 411, a specimen not sufficiently shown genuine was excluded; 1915, Cowboy State Bank & T. Co. v. Roy, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 174 S. W. 647;

Utah: 1887, Durnell v. Sowden, 5 Utah 216, 222, 14 Pac. 334 (the opinion is obscure, but seems to allow comparison by experts of all documents admitted or proved genuine); 1892, Tucker v. Kellogg, 8 Utah 11, 13 (expert may use specimens admitted genuine if otherwise in the case; the opinion, however, in other places omits the proviso);

Vermont: Expert use seems to have been conceded with the jury's use; finally, it was settled by State v. La Vigne, 39 Vt. 236 (1867), that it is proper for documents either admitted genuine or proved genuine by evidence "clear, positive, and direct"; compare the later rulings for jury-comparison, post, § 2016;

Virginia: The rule seems not yet settled: 1829, Rowt's Adm'x v. Kile's Adm'r, 1 Leigh 216 (referred to by one judge as a question not yet settled);

Washington: 1896, Moore v. Palmer, 14 Wash. 134, 44 Pac. 142 (allowed; no limits fixed);

West Virginia: 1874, Clay v. Robinson, 7 W. Va. 359, new trial, s. v. Clay v. Alderson's Adm'r, 10 W. Va. 53 (the rule adopted seems to be that (1) admitted writings may be employed for comparison, certainly if in the case, and apparently also if not; (2) ancient writings may be so used; (3) writings which are the source of a witness' handwriting-knowledge may be used by him in confirmation); 1888, State v. Koontz, 31 W. Va. 129, 5 S. E. 328 (the above decisions were approved; yet an expert was apparently allowed to testify that certain letters in a signature were feigned); 1903, Tower v. Whip, 53 W. Va. 158, 44 S. E. 179 (opinion based on comparison with four pleas filed in the case by the defendant, and purporting to be signed by him, admitted); for that purpose at that time; as also, at the proper time, for the purpose of proving genuineness, if that is necessary. No one can doubt this much.[1]

Wisconsin: Expert use is allowed by the statute cited post, § 2016.

(2) Next, if the purpose of the expert's study and formation of opinion be considered, it is preposterous to expect him invariably to obtain by a brief inspection on the stand the necessary data for an opinion. Close measurements, detailed enlargement, and other expedients of the expert, may often require not only a length of time but a quantity of apparatus and a certain degree of seclusion. For this reason the opportunity of extrajudicial study is often indispensable.[2] Nevertheless, to prevent alteration or other fraud, it would be entirely proper to allow stated times for inspection in the presence of the opponent. But this latter restriction is needed only for the disputed writing and would be wholly impracticable for the standard specimens.[3]

(3) Where the expert has made a comparative study before the trial and the disputed writing is lost when the trial occurs, the opponent is deprived of the fullest opportunity of cross-examination; but this should not in itself exclude the testimony, unless there is clear fault, in the party offering the expert, as to the loss.[4]

§ 2012. Qualifications of the Expert as to Skill. Here we are not dealing with the ordinary doctrine of Experiential Qualifications (ante, § 570), for any one whatever (provided only he can read writing) is competent to form an opinion as to character of handwriting; the main question there is whether he is qualified by his grounds of knowledge of the handwriting in question (ante, § 693). But the Opinion rule declares it useless to listen to the views of an ordinary or lay witness when based merely on the inspection of specimens which the jury, having them at hand, can judge as well as he (ante, § 1997); hence, an "expert" under the Opinion rule, signifies one who by a study of or experience with writings is able to afford the tribunal a special assistance.

The determination of this skill must of course depend on the discretion of the trial Court as applied to the circumstances of each case.[1] Various forms of test have been offered; no test should be regarded as absolute.[2] Instances § 2011. [1] 1869, Tyler v. Todd, 36 Conn. 222; 1880, Hynes v. McDermott, 82 N. Y. 49.

[2] Compare the suggestions in Hagan, Disputed Handwriting (1894), p. 34, and in Osborn, Questioned Documents (1910), passim.

[3] 1878, Miles v. Loomis, 75 N. Y. 292, apparently not to be regarded as overruled by Hynes v. McDermott, supra; but if so, then erroneously. In Doe v. Suckermore, 5 A. & E. 748, Denman, L. C. J., discussed the relative value of inspection before and inspection at the trial; his statement, at p. 751, that the fact of inspection 'post litem motam' does not exclude the testimony, is of course unquestioned law; but the partisanship of experts hired 'ad litem' has long been a subject of grave concern to judges (ante, § 563).

[4] In the few rulings on this point, it has been held, without taking the above distinction, merely that the loss of the disputed writing does not 'ipso facto' exclude the testimony of the expert; 1879, Abbott v. Coleman, 22 Kan. 252; 1866, State v. Shinborn, 46 N. H. 502. Compare § 1185, ante (testifying to a lost original), and Arbon v. Fussell, Eng., post, § 2016.

§ 2012. [1] 1879, Forgey v. Bank, 66 Ind. 125.

[2] 1836, Denman, L. C. J., in Doe v. Suckermore, 5 A. & E. 749 ("The witness must be conversant with handwriting, — a banker, a printer, the officer of a court of justice, . . . to be entitled to any degree of authority"); 1882, Moon's Adm'r v. Crowder, 72 Ala. 88 ("accustomed to and skilled in the matter of handwritings, genuine and spurious"); 1878, Hand, J., in Miles v. Loomis, 75 N. Y. 298 ("engaged in occupations in which it was their duty to scrutinize handwritings and detect forgeries, and had acquired more or less skill by practice"). Compare the suggestions in Hagan, Disputed Handwriting (1894), p. 30; of the exclusion or admission of such witnesses are of no proper service as precedents.[3]

Special considerations arise where the detection of counterfeit bank-notes is in question,[4] and also in other cases not purely concerning handwriting.[5] Under the principle of Preferred Testimony it has long been the law (ante, § 1339) that the officers of an issuing bank are not required to be called to testify as to the genuineness of notes purporting to be those of that bank.

§ 2013. "Admitted or Proved Genuine." Where documents are admitted to use by an expert under the statutory limitation that they must be "admitted or proved genuine," questions arise as to the mode in which the admission must be made, or the sufficiency of the proof, or the proper part of the tribunal — judge or jury — to whom the evidence must be addressed. These questions are the same for both expert-use and jury-use (post, § 2016).

§ 2014. Rules applicable to both Experts and Lay-Witnesses; (a) Giving the Grounds of Belief. On direct examination, the witness may[1] and, if required, must point out his grounds for belief in the identity of the Osborn, Questioned Documents (1910), The Problem of Proof (1922).

[3] The following cases involve such rulings: Eng. 1894, R. v. Silverlock, 2 Q. B. 766, 768, 771 (the expert need not be a professional one nor a person who has obtained the experience in his ordinary business); U. S. Ala. 1896, Birmingham Nat'l Bank v. Bradley, 108 Ala. 205, 19 So. 791 (cashier of a bank, admitted on the facts); Cal. 1875, Goldstein v. Black, 50 Cal. 464; Colo. 1896, Bradford v. People, 22 Colo. 157, 43 Pac. 1013 (a bank-bookkeeper accustomed to examine checks as to their genuineness, admitted); 1916, Hee Fat v. Wong Kwai, 23 Haw. 328 (a Chinese clerk and a Chinese butcher, held not qualified as experts in Chinese handwriting); 1919, Kamahalo v. Coelho, 24 Haw. 689, 695 (a lawyer specializing in the study of signatures, admitted); Ia. 1884, Winch v. Norman, 65 Ia. 187, 21 N. W. 511; 1887, Eisfield v. Dill, 71 Ia. 445, 32 N. W. 420; 1897, Christman v. Pearson, 100 Ia. 634, 69 N. W. 1055 (the witness need not make a living by judging handwriting); Kan. 1884, Ort v. Fowler, 31 Kan. 485, 2 Pac. 580; Me. 1851, Sweetser v. Lowell, 33 Me. 450; Mo. 1895, State v. David, 131 Mo. 380, 33 S. W. 28 (one skilled in clerical pursuits, admitted); Nev. 1904, State v. Burns, 27 Nev. 289, 74 Pac. 983 (bank teller); N. H. 1919, State v. Killeen, 79 N. H. 201, 107 Atl. 601 (written orders for liquor; a witness admitted whose work it had been to examine delivery orders each day); N. J. 1897, Wheeler & W. M. Co. v. Buckhout, 60 N. J. L. 102, 36 Atl. 772 (a county clerk, admitted; scientific study of chirography not necessary); N. C. 1877, Yates v. Yates, 76 N. C. 145, 149; 1893, State v. De Graff, 113 N. C. 688, 693, 18 S. E. 507; 1896, Kornegay v. Kornegay, 117 N. C. 242, 23 S. E. 257 (registrar of deeds, admitted); 1905, Abernethy v. Yount, 138 N. C. 337, 50 S. E. 696 (clerk of court); P. I. 1912, Dirilo v. Roperes, 22 P. I. 246; 1913, U. S. v. Kosel, 24 P. I. 594, 604; W. Va. 1919, Johnston v. Bee, 84 W. Va. 532, 100 S. E. 486 (bank officials, admitted).

[4] It must be remembered that the following rulings deal with the question whether a person can add to the jury's knowledge about papers before them; whether a witness is competent to form an opinion about papers, etc., not in court, is the ordinary question of Experiential Qualifications, and is treated ante, § 570; rulings on the present point are as follows: 1860, May v. Dorsett, 30 Ga. 118 (bank-officer admitted as to counterfeit money); 1873, Atwood v. Cornwall, 28 Mich. 339 (bankers generally admissible as to treasury-notes); 1867, Payson v. Everett, 12 Minn. 219 (counterfeit bank notes, witness excluded on the facts); 1864, Dubois v. Baker, 30 N. Y. 361 (erasures in notes, etc.; bank-officer admitted).

[5] 1866, Vinton v. Peck, 14 Mich. 287 (kind of ink; a writing-master and bookkeeper held competent); and cases cited ante, § 570.

§ 2014. [1] 1852, Keith v. Lothrop, 10 Cush. Mass. 457 (on direct examination); 1917, O'Connor's Estate, 101 Nebr. 617, 164 N. W. 570 (forged will; approving the text above); 1885, Langley v. Wadsworth, 99 N. Y. 63, 1 N. E. 106 (an expert's reasons for his opinions on different specimens of handwriting; excluded in the trial Court's discretion). Compare the suggestions in Hagan, Disputed Handwriting (1894), p. 127; Osborn, Questioned Documents (1910) passim, The Problem of Proof (1922).

That a mere "belief," or testimony that one writing "looks like" the other, is admissible and need not be more positive, is noticed ante, § 658.

handwriting, on the principle already considered (ante, § 655). Without such a reënforcement of testimony the opinions of experts would usually involve little more than a counting of the numbers on either side. The progress of modern chirographic science makes it all the more possible, as well as desirable, to discriminate between witnesses according to the convincingness of the reasons that may be given by them for their conclusions.

§ 2015. Same: (b) Modes of Testing the Opinion on Cross-Examination. With reference to the principle involved, there are two distinct modes of testing by showing specimens on cross-examination: (1) where it can be done without special proof of the genuineness of the testing specimens; (2) where it can be done only with special proof of that.

(1) The first sort of testing has of course a limited range in the choice of specimens. There are several feasible methods. For instance, the counsel denying the genuineness of the main writing in issue may in court imitate the signature in dispute and ask the opposing witness whether it does not look equally like the alleged signer's writing; or he may take a signature admitted genuine or already in the case, and endeavor to have the opposing witness deny its genuineness. Or, as in Griffits v. Ivery, infra, the counsel may put before several witnesses successively, who have all sworn positively against his contention, another signature (without regard to its genuineness), and by exhibiting their hopeless disagreement about it, show an apparent bias or corruption as the source of their former unanimity. Or, as in Murphy's Case and Caldwell's Case, the counsel may put any signature (without regard to its genuineness) before the witness and test his judgment by obtaining successive different opinions from him within a few moments. Or the counsel may substitute, after an interval, one signature for another already testified to and thus get the witness to express the same opinion, with the same reasons, upon concededly different specimens. Where any of these expedients is available and useful, there is no objection of any kind on principle.

1915, John Adye Curran, K. C., Reminiscences, p. 17: "A schoolmaster was tried before a jury in Maryborough, on a charge of writing a threatening letter. The evidence as to the handwriting was very conclusive. An expert from Dublin, the late Mr. Power, then manager of the National Bank, Mountmellick, and afterwards in College Green, and the District Inspector, all three, swore positively as to the identity of the writing in the threatening letter with a writing admittedly in the handwriting of the prisoner. The case for the defence seemed very hopeless. I need not say that my father in his address to the jury referred to the observation of Judge Keogh to the effect that 'he would not hang a dog on the evidence of an expert.' While he was speaking, knowing that our handwriting was very similar, I wrote my full name, 'John Adye Curran,' three times on a sheet of note paper, and when he had concluded, asked him to write his name alternately after mine. This was done in the presence of Molloy. Mr. Power was then recalled, and having admitted that he was principally expert in signatures, having regard to his position in the Bank, he was asked if he could distinguish the handwriting in the six names on the sheet of paper. He requested some time to consider and consult with the other experts, and the Chief Baron agreed, and adjourned the Court for an hour. At the end of that time each of the three experts was recalled. Each differed one with the other, but not one was correct. Molloy was sworn as to the order in which the names had been written, and the prisoner was triumphantly acquitted."

(2) But when the testing-signature is one whose genuineness is not admitted or (because it is not otherwise in the case) must be specially proved or disproved, a new element is introduced. The various expedients here available are the same (except that the choice of specimens is broader) as those above noted; with this difference, that where the object of the counsel (whether alleging or denying genuineness for the main writing in issue) is to induce the opposing witness to affirm the genuineness of a false specimen (e. g. one just written by the counsel himself), or to deny the genuineness of an authentic specimen, this expedient is not possible in any form, unless the counsel is allowed specially to disprove or prove its genuineness. Now this necessity of specially producing testimony as to the specimens' genuineness brings into play the whole argument of multiplicity of issues as otherwise applicable against the ordinary use of specimens (ante, § 2000). There is perhaps also a certain possibility of surprise and of unfairness of selection (ante, § 1999).[1]

There are thus two solutions possible.[2] The first is to accept as valid these § 2015. [1] The following opinion states the arguments: 1861, Dixon, C. J., in Pierce v. Northey, 14 Wis. 12.

[2] The rulings are as follows: ENGLAND and IRELAND: In two Irish cases it was held that the witness could not be impeached by showing to her other documents, not in the case, and getting her to make contrary admissions, the reason being that by allowing it there would result indirectly a comparison of specimens by the jury: 1841, R. v. Murphy, A. M. & O. (Ir.) 207, Pennefather, C. J.; 1842, R. v. Caldwell, A. M. & O. 324, Perrin, J., and Richards, B.; in the latter case the Court went slightly farther in allowing the discrediting questions; Mr. Keatinge showed the prosecutrix, after she had denied the genuineness of four letters alleged to have been written to her by the defendant, two other letters (not in the case), which she admitted to be in her own writing; he then asked her, Was not the handwriting in the letters she had admitted like the handwriting in the four letters she had denied; and in particular, Was there not a similarity between the words "my dearest"? The witness first said there was "no similarity," then that there was "a similarity," and in fact "a great similarity"; this course of examination was objected to; Mr. Keatinge argued, "I have a right to do this. Her manner of denying them is very important for the jury. She said first there was no similarity, — now a great similarity; she may be obliged to go on to admit the four letters to be her handwriting"; the Court ended by allowing the questions as to different passages, provided they were pointed at, not read aloud, and thus the indirect effect of a comparison of the documents before the jury was prevented. In England, in Griffits v. Ivery, 11 A. & E. 322 (Q. B., 1840), the Court declined to allow the testing of the opposing witnesses by asking their opinions about another signature, not in the case, so as to show their disagreement and hence untrustworthiness; the reason for rejection being that in effect such testing introduces the general inconveniences of proof of specimens prohibited by Doe v. Newton (ante, § 2000); but a contrary position had already been taken in 1839 by Parke, B. (as cited in 11 A. & E. 124); and in 1840, in Young v. Honner, 2 Moo. & Rob. 536, the Court of Exchequer refused to follow Griffits v. Ivery, and when a witness, who testified that the defendant's signature was always written "R. W. Honner," was shown a document signed "Robert Honner" and admitted it to be genuine, they allowed him to be asked whether he would then stand by his original statement; the Court thought that as here the genuineness was admitted, the collateral-issue difficulty did not arise; yet in Griffits v. Ivery no issue of genuineness was raised; the specimen was used merely to show that the witnesses could not agree.

UNITED STATES: Alabama: 1868, Kirksey v. Kirksey, 41 Ala. 636 (cannot test by specimens); 1893, First Nat'l Bank, v. Allen, 100 Ala. 476, 489, 14 So. 335 (plaintiff suing for money paid out by his bank on forged checks, allowed to be asked, as a test, to point out the forged from the genuine); 1907, Griffin v. Working Women's H. Ass'n, 151 Ala. 597, 44 So. 605 (witness speaking from knowledge of former writings, allowed to be cross-examined to identity of features between the document in arguments of surprise, of danger of unfair selection, and of confusion of issues, and to follow, in obviating them, the limitations already adopted, in the issue and the former writing; the opinion need not have noticed this point, for the objection was baseless; Dowdell, J., diss., only as to the former writing being introduced in evidence, but that was a mere formal matter);

California: 1881, Neal v. Neal, 58 Cal. 287 (a defendant denying his signature to a document, allowed to be questioned as to the genuineness of his signature to another document, already in the case for comparison);
Connecticut: 1869, Tyler v. Todd, 36 Conn. 222 (cannot test by asking an opinion as to a signature not proved genuine); 1902, Brown v. Woodward, 75 Conn. 254, 53 Atl. 112 (testing a witness, who denies his signature to a note, by submitting to him other specimens, held not improper on the facts);
Florida: 1905, Wooldridge v. State, 49 Fla. 137, 38 So. 3 (a witness to handwriting, not an expert, not allowed to be tested by other specimens; apparently an over-strict ruling; no authority cited);
Illinois: 1874, Melvin v. Hodges, 71 Ill. 424 (obscure; allows testing by asking an opinion as to other signatures); 1882, Massey v. Farmers' Bank, 104 Ill. 332 (cannot test by asking the witness to pick out genuine signatures from others);
Indiana: 1885, Thomas v. State, 103 Ind. 439, 2 N. E. 808, semble (may test by asking for an opinion on other specimens already in the case); 1890, White S. M. Co. v. Gordon, 104 Ind. 495, 24 N. E. 1053 (testing on cross-examination may be made with the same documents as are provable in chief); 1895, McDonald v. McDonald, 142 Ind. 55, 41, N. E. 340 (same); 1895, Tucker v. Hyatt, 144 Ind. 635, 42 N. E. 1047 (same);
Iowa: 1892, Bruner v. Wade, 84 Ia. 698, 51 N. W. 251 (an expert was tested with other signatures; the exclusion of a question as to their nearer resemblance than the disputed signature, held not harmful where it was never evidenced that they were genuine); 1894, Browning v. Gosnell, 91 Ia. 448, 456, 59 N. W. 340 (testing an expert by offering genuine mingled with spurious signatures, allowed on cross-examination);
Kansas: 1894, Gaunt v. Harkness, 53 Kan. 405, 409, 36 Pac. 739 (testing an expert by fabricated signatures not otherwise in the case, improper);
Kentucky: 1889, Andrews v. Hayden's Adm'r, 88 Ky. 455, 459, 11 S. W. 428 (testing by spurious signatures mingled with genuine ones, excluded, as "deceiving the minds of honest men"; this is absurd, for the result showed that perhaps the disputed signature was also a forgery "deceiving the minds of honest men");
Maine: 1837, Page v. Holmans, 14 Me. 482, semble (allowing the contradiction of handwriting-witnesses by calling a person whose name had been submitted to the former in several specimens, and denying or affirming the genuineness of those of which the witness had affirmed or denied the genuineness);
Massachusetts: 1905, Jacobs v. Boston El. R.Co., 188 Mass. 245, 74 N. E. 349 (a witness allowed to be asked on cross-examination to make a sample signature; the precise point of the ruling is however not ascertainable from the opinion);
Michigan: 1880, Howard v. Patrick, 43 Mich. 128, 5 N. W. 84 (testing by asking as to genuine and false documents not in the case; excluded); 1888, Harvester Co. v. Miller, 72 Mich. 272, 40 N. W. 429 (testing by showing a third person's writing, if already in the case, and asking whether it is that of the person in question; allowed); 1904, Taylor v. Taylor's Estate, 138 Mich. 658, 101 N. W. 832 (showing a signature only; the witness' insistence on seeing the whole of the document, held proper);
Missouri: 1886, Rose v. First Nat'l Bank, 91 Mo. 401, 3 S. W. 876 (testing by documents not already in the case; excluded);
New York: 1856, Van Wyck v. McIntosh, 14 N. Y. 439, 443 (testing by submitting other notes, not in the case, to experts denying the disputed writing's genuineness and also that of the specimens submitted, and then offering to prove the specimens to have been admitted genuine; excluded, as involving collateral issues and therefore improper for contradiction, under the principle of § 1002, ante); 1892, People v. Murphy, 135 N. Y. 455, 32 N. E. 138 (testing as in Griffits v. Ivery, Eng., was allowed; but a demonstration of error by showing that opinions as to genuineness or spuriousness of the test-specimens were wrong was excluded); 1903, Hoag v. Wright, 174 N. Y. 36, 66 N. E. 579 (quoted supra; testing an expert witness to genuineness, by showing him other signatures, and then by their obvious condition or by other testimony proving these to be spurious, allowed; here the expert was on a second trial allowed to be asked whether he had not on a former trial committed such an error); 1905, People v. Patrick, 182 N. Y. 131, 74 N. E. 843 (testing an expert by proof of his mistakes as to selected signatures; Hoag v. Wright approved; but the trial Court's refusal here to allow the tests was held distinguishable, and in any event harmless error);
North Carolina: 1915, Fourth National Bank v. McArthur, 168 N. C. 48, 84 S. E. 39 (forged indorsements by M.; false imitations of M.'s signature were shown to witnesses to genuineness, to test the value of their opinion on cross-examination, known as the "cat-hole test," held improper, except for experts; the Opinion strangely misconceives the language of the present treatise, in citing it in favor of the ruling; enough here to note that further reflection has emphasized the writer's view that jurisdiction in hand, for the ordinary use of specimens (ante, § 2008), i. e. to limit the use to specimens admitted genuine, to specimens already in the case, or the like. The second is to deny that these arguments, whatever their force as applied to the ordinary use of specimens, can here avail to cut off this method of testing opinions on cross-examination. That the latter is the better course seems clear. The reason is that the deprivation of this weapon for the cross-examiner is a loss so serious as to outweigh the inconveniences of its sanction. When, for example, the witness has sworn positively that the disputed signature is genuine, and then, on examining a new signature submitted to him, he declares with equal positiveness that it is a forgery and perhaps points out the (to him) unmistakable marks of difference, the testimony of a single unimpeachable witness that he saw the supposed forgery written by the person bearing that name disposes at once of the trustworthiness of the first witness and the certainty of his conclusion. In many other similar ways a single test of this sort will serve to demolish the most solid fabric of handwriting-testimony. There should be no limitations whatever on the power of employing these tests.

The following passages illustrate both the orthodoxy and the efficacy of such a practice:

1723, Bishop Atterbury's Trial, 16 How. St. Tr. 571; treasonable letters imputed to the defendant were claimed by him to be forgeries; experts were asked as to the genuineness of the seals on the letters, especially whether certain impressions were from the same seal; for one of them, "several impressions of a seal or seals were put into his hand, to try his skill; but a doubt arising as to the method of putting the matter to a proper trial," the House voted that it should be done only under proper conditions; and accordingly it was ordered that "two of the clerks do forthwith withdraw, and that a person to be appointed by the Bishop do in their presence, from one or more seal or seals, such as he shall think fit, take impressions in wax of one or more sorts, to be provided by the clerks; that the impressions be numbered; and that the clerks write down in paper from what seal and in what manner every impression was taken, and deliver such paper in at the table, sealed up, making oath that the same is true; and that the seal or seals from which such impressions shall be made shall be detained by one of the clerks till called for by the House; and that the clerks and the person so to be appointed by the prisoner be sworn to secrecy and not to exclude this method of testing is to repudiate practical sense; the Opinion in the case in hand misapplies N. C. St. 1913, c. 52, to this use of tests);

Pennsylvania: 1904, Groff v. Groff, 209 Pa. 603, 59 Atl. 65 (alleged forgery of a note; non-expert witnesses testifying from knowledge of the handwriting, allowed to be tested by signatures shown through slits in envelopes and the witnesses' mistakes allowed to be proved; on the facts, the showing of the signature alone was held proper);

Tennessee: 1842, Fogg v. Dennis, 3 Humph. 48 (testing by showing other signatures; forbidden);

Texas: 1879, Brown v. Chenoweth, 51 Tex. 477 (testing by showing other signatures; allowed; here they were upon documents already in the case);

Vermont: 1904, Wilmington S. Bank v. Waste, 76 Vt. 331, 57 Atl. 241 (cross-examination by testing with specimens "conceded or proved to be genuine," allowable);

West Virginia: 1914, First National Bank v. Barker, 75 W. Va. 244, S. E. 898 (testing a non-expert witness, on cross-examination, by false specimens mixed with genuine ones, not allowed; a pity that this Court could not take the sensible side in this issue).

Compare the general principle for testing a witness' skill (ante, § 991).

Compare also the various methods illustrated in Questioned Documents, by Albert H. Osborn (Rochester, 1910) and The Problem of Proof (1922). All methods having scientific value ought to be freely allowed by law.

to disclose to any person whatsoever anything which shall pass in that transaction, till after the paper so delivered in shall be opened"; which being done, "Mr. Rollins [the expert] was called in, and the said impressions were put into his hands, to make the best judgment thereupon he could"; he retired for awhile; "then Mr. Rollins was called in and acquainted the House 'that he had viewed the impressions of seals before delivered to him in the House, and conceived they were taken from two cast seals from one original.' And the papers delivered in sealed up being read, it appeared that he had formed a right judgment thereon."

1903, Per CURIAM, in Hoag v. Wright, 174 N. Y. 36, 66 N. E. 579 (permitting the witness to be shown spurious signatures as a test): "It tended to cast doubt upon the credibility of the witness and his skill as an expert. It suggested the question whether, if the witness was at fault as to the spurious signatures, he was not at fault as to the signatures in question. It made a direct attack upon the value of his opinion. . . . Owing to the dangerous nature of expert evidence, and the necessity of testing it in the most thorough manner in order to prevent injustice, we are disposed to go farther, and to hold that, where a witness makes a mistake in his effort to distinguish spurious from genuine signatures, and he does not acknowledge his error, it may be shown by other testimony. The test sought to be applied in this case was one of the most practical and conclusive that can be employed to determine whether the witness is really an expert or not. It bears not only upon his competency to express an opinion, but upon the value of his opinion when expressed. . . . The good sense of the trial judge will confine it within proper bounds, and prevent an unnecessary consumption of time. It is better to take a little time to see whether the opinion of the witness is worth anything, rather than to hazard life, liberty, or property upon an opinion that is worth nothing. The evils and injustice arising from the use and abuse of opinion evidence in relation to handwriting are so grave that we feel compelled to depart from our own precedents to some extent, and to establish further safeguards for the protection of the public. As the hostility of witnesses to a party may be shown as an independent fact, although it protracts the trial by introducing a new issue, so, as we think, the incompetency of a professed expert may be shown in the same way and for the same reason; that is, because it demonstrates that testimony, otherwise persuasive, cannot be relied upon."

The decisions are in a hopeless state of confusion, and represent every variety of rule, from complete prohibition to entire freedom of use; nor is there usually any attempt to reason out the result on principle.

3. Jury's Perusal of Specimens

§ 2016. Whether allowable at all; and, if so, for what Classes of Writings. The decisions and the statutes represent a great variety of rules; and even within the same jurisdiction there is often obscurity and inconsistency. The types of possible rules have already been summarized (ante, § 2000); the rule in each jurisdiction is either one of those there stated or else some qualified variety of one of the chief forms.[1]

§ 2016. [1] The rulings cited ante, § 2008, for expert use of specimens, should also be compared, as sometimes implying something upon the present subject; the statutes covering both subjects have been placed here, to avoid repetition:

ENGLAND: The English rule is now settled by statute (the common-law rule has been examined ante, § 1994): 1854, Common Law Procedure Act, 17 & 18 Vict. c. 125, § 27 ("Comparison of a disputed writing with any writing proved to the satisfaction of the judge to be genuine shall be permitted to be made by witnesses; and such writings, and the evidence of witnesses respecting the same, may be submitted to the Court and jury as evidence of the genuineness, or otherwise, of the writing in dispute"; this was confined by ib. § 104, to courts of civil jurisdiction in England; but extended by St. 1865, 28 & 29 Vict. c. 18, §§ 1, 8, to criminal courts); it follows under this statute that it is immaterial whether the documents are already in the case or not: 1858, Birch v. Ridgway, 1 F. & F. 270, Pollock, C. B., consulting the other judges; 1860, Cresswell v. Jackson, 2 id. 24, Pollock, C. B.; 1864, Cresswell v. Jackson, 4 id. 1, 5 (as bearing on the authenticity of disputed codicils, documents in the handwriting of the supposed forger were received); 1865, Corbett v. Kilminster, ib. 490, Martin, B. (where the witness wrote the evidential writing while in the box). The following is perhaps erroneous; compare § 2011 par. (3), ante; 1862, Arbon v. Fussell, 3 F. & F. 152 (where the disputed document is lost, comparison of specimens cannot be resorted to).

CANADA: Dom. R. S. 1906, c. 145, Evid. Act. § 8 (like Eng. St. 1854, c. 125, § 27); Alta. St. 1910, 2d sess., Evidence Act, c. 3, § 54 (like Eng. St. 1854, c. 125, § 27); Br. C. Rev. St. 1911, c. 78, § 48 (like Eng. St. 1854, 125, § 27); N. Br. Consol. St. 1903, c. 127, § 20 (like Eng. St. 1854, c. 125, § 27); 1880, R. v. Tower, 20 N. Br. 168, 205, 219 (R.'s signature of an invoice, held provable by a comparison with his signature on a bill of exchange as prior indorser to the defendant, the defendant's indorsement being an admission of genuineness; Weldon, J., diss.); 1888, Vye v. Alexander, 28 N. Br. 89, 94 (jury entitled to see signatures of the defendant written since litigation begun, the defendant having testified, when shown them, that he had not changed his signature); 1889, Alexander v. Vye, 16 Can. Sup. 501 (foregoing case affirmed); 1890, Halifax Bkg. Co. v. Smith, 29 N. Br. 462, 473, 475, 481, 485 (comparison by a layman with a genuine document not produced, held not improper, the witness being otherwise qualified through business transactions; opinions obscure); Newf. Consol. St. 1916, c. 91, § 21 (like Eng. St. 1854, c. 125, § 27); N. Sc. Rev. St. 1900, c. 163, § 33 (like Eng. St. 1854, c. 125, § 27); 1897, R. v. Dixon, 29 N. Sc. 462 (threatening letter; another letter, conceded genuine, allowed to be used by the jury, under the statute; two judges diss. on various grounds); Ont. Rev. St. 1914, c. 76, § 52 (like Eng. St. 1854, c. 125, § 27); 1902, Thompson v. Thompson, 4 Ont. L. R. 442 (under the statute, judge or jury may make comparison even though no expert has done so); P. E. I. St. 1889, c. 9, § 20 (like Eng. St. 1854, c. 125 § 27); Que. 1918, Pratte v. Voisard, 44 D. L. R. 157, Can. S. C. (forged will specimens admitted to be genuine, allowed to be used, and opinions of experts in handwriting received, under Que. Civ. C. §§ 1204, 1205, 1224 prior rulings explained); Sask. R. S. 1920, c. 44, Evidence Act. § 41 (like Eng. St. 1854, c. 125, § 27); Yukon: Consol. Ord. 1914, c. 30, § 33 (like Eng. St. 1854, c. 125, § 27).

UNITED STATES: Federal: It was not easy to state the exact limits of the Federal rule before the 1913 statute: 1804, Macubbin v. Lovell, 1 Cr. C. C. 184 (comparison not allowed with a note in another case on which the opponent had confessed judgment); 1812, Smith v. Fenner, 1 Gall. 175 (deeds not in evidence were allowed to be shown by a witness; Story, J., said that this was not "comparison of hands"; yet of course it was, even in the modern sense); 1832, Strother v. Lucas, 6 Pet. 766 (comparison excluded, semble); 1870, Rogers v. Ritter, 12 Wall. 321 (question left undecided); 1870, Medway v. U. S., 6 Ct. of Cl. 428 (allowed for documents otherwise in the case and proved or admitted genuine, and, semble, also where the disputed document has so recently come to the party's notice that he cannot obtain testimonial evidence of the handwriting); 1881, U. S. v. Jones, 10 Fed. 470 (allowed for documents otherwise in the case and, semble, admitted or proved genuine); 1875, Moore v. U. S., 91 U. S. 270 (allowed for documents otherwise in the case and admitted genuine); 1887, Williams v. Conger, 125 U. S. 413, 8 Sup. 933 (allowed for documents otherwise in the case and admitted or proved genuine); 1893, Holmes v. Goldsmith, 147 U. S. 150, 163, 13 Sup. 288 (comparison allowed according to the Oregon statute); 1893, Hickory v. U. S., 151 U. S. 303, 305, 14 Sup. 334 (Moore v. U. S. cited, but no rule laid down); 1897, National Acc. Soc. v. Spiro, 24 C. C. A. 334, 78 Fed. 775 ("admittedly genuine signatures already in evidence for other purposes" may be used); 1899, Smith v. New Orleans C. & B. Co., 35 C. C. A. 646, 93 Fed. 899 (to prove the signature of a Spanish colonial-secretary of Louisiana, other signatures of his, to documents unconnected with the case, were admitted); 1899, U. S. v. Ortiz, 176 U. S. 422, 20 Sup. 466 (signatures on ancient Mexican official documents, never before questioned as genuine, but not otherwise in the case, admitted; no authorities cited); 1904, Withaup v. U. S., 127 Fed. 530, 535, 62 C. C. A. 328 ("where a comparison is permissible, it may be made by the Court and jury, with or without the aid of expert witnesses"; cited more fully ante, § 2008); 1908, Barnes v. U. S., 5th C. C. A., 166 Fed. 113 (Williams v. Conger followed); 1911, U. S. v. North, D. C. Or., 184 Fed. 151 (rule of Williams v. Conger applied, to exclude a document not otherwise in the case); St. 1913, 62d Cong. 3d sess., c. 79, Feb. 26, Code § 1363. ("In any proceeding before a court or judicial officer of the United States where the genuineness of the handwriting of any person may be involved, any admitted or proved handwriting of such person shall be competent evidence as a basis for comparison by witnesses, or by the jury, court, or officer conducting such proceeding, to prove or disprove such genuineness"); 1915, Short v. U. S. 8th C. C. A., 221 Fed. 248 (white slave traffic Act; an envelope not otherwise in the case admitted for comparison under St. Feb. 26, 1913); 1917, Bowers v. U. S. 9th C. C. A. 244 Fed. 641 (using the mails to defraud; sundry documents, proved genuine, received as specimens for comparison under St. 1913, Feb. 26); 1920, Smythe v. New Providence, 3d C. C. A, 263 Fed. 481 (ancient bonds, signed by commissioners; the signatures of the commissioners to their oaths of office, admitted under St. Feb. 26, 1913, c. 79).

Alabama: A long line of precedents adopted the rule that documents otherwise in the case, and those only, may be used; afterwards a statute enlarged the rule liberally: 1841, Little v. Beazley, 2 Ala. 703; 1843, State v. Givens, 5 Ala. 754; 1852, Crist v. State, 21 Ala. 145; 1857, Bishop v. State, 30 Ala. 41; 1867, Kirksey v. Kirksey, 41 Ala. 636; 1877, Bestor v. Roberts, 58 Ala. 333; 1878, Williams v. State, 61 Ala. 39; 1887, Snider v. Burks, 84 Ala. 56, 4 So. 225, nevertheless the following occurred: 1882, Moon's Adm'r v. Crowder, 72 Ala. 88 (apparently confining the use of writings in the case to those "of unquestioned genuineness"); 1905, Washington v. State, 143 Ala. 62, 39 So. 388; 1906, Bolton v. State, 146 Ala. 691, 40 So. 409 (forgery of a check; other specimens, not otherwise in the case and not shown genuine, excluded); 1907, Griffin v. Working Women's H. Ass'n, 151 Ala. 597, 44 So. 605 (papers otherwise in the case and admitted or proved genuine may be used); St. 1915, Mar. 6, No. 90, p. 134 ("comparison of a disputed writing with any writing admitted to be genuine or proven to the reasonable satisfaction of the Court to be genuine shall in civil and criminal cases be permitted to be made by witnesses who are qualified as experts or being familiar with the handwriting of the person whose handwriting is in question and such writings, and the evidence of witnesses respecting the same may be submitted to the Court or jury trying the case as evidence of the genuineness or otherwise of the writings in dispute"); 1916, King v. State, 15 Ala. App. 67, 72 So. 552 (larceny; specimens not compared by witnesses may not be submitted to the jury, under St. 1915, Mar. 6); 1920, Chisolm v. State, 204 Ala. 69, 85 So. 462 (certain specimens excluded, for lack of preliminary evidence of genuineness, under St. 1915, Mar. 6).

Arizona: Rev. St. 1913, Civ. C. § 1741 (like the English statute; applicable to civil and criminal cases).

Arkansas: The rule of documents otherwise in the case is adopted: 1877, Miller v. Jones, 32 Ark. 343.

California: C. C. P. 1872, § 1870, par. 9 (evidence may be given of "the opinion of a witness respecting the identity or handwriting of a person, when he has knowledge of the person or handwriting; his opinion on a question of science, art, or trade, when he is skilled therein"); § 1944 ("Evidence respecting the handwriting may also be given by a comparison made by the witness or by the jury, with writings admitted or treated as genuine by the party against whom the evidence is offered, or proved to be genuine to the satisfaction of the judge"); 1900, People v. Storke, 128 Cal. 486, 70 Pac. 1090 (libel; letters admitted to be G.'s, shown to an expert for the defendant as evidence that G. and not the defendant wrote the libel, were required to be shown also to the jury); 1906, Castor v. Bernstein, 2 Cal. App. 703, 84 Pac. 244 (breach of contract assigned to plaintiff; plea, release; the assignment offered by the plaintiff was allowed to be used by the defendant for the jury's inspection in determining the genuineness of the release, without any further evidence; Cooper, J., diss.).

Colorado: St. 1893, p. 264, § 1 Comp. L. 1921, § 6538 ("Comparison of a disputed writing, with any writing proved to the satisfaction of the Court to be genuine, shall be permitted to be made by witnesses in all trials and proceedings, and the evidence of witnesses respecting the same may be submitted to the Court and jury as evidence of the genuineness or otherwise of the writing in dispute"); 1880, Wilber v. Eicholtz, 5 Colo. 140, 243 (comparison allowed for a plea verified by affidavit and for an affidavit of merits, these papers being "in the cause"); 1896, Bradford v. People, 22 Colo. 157, 43 Pac. 1013 (a defendant denying a signature, required to write; admitted as an exception to the ordinary limitation to documents already in the case or proved genuine).

Columbia (District): 1894, Keyser v. Pickrell, 4 D. C. App. 198, 204, 210 (papers already otherwise in the cause and papers conceded to be genuine, admitted).

Connecticut: Any documents may be used which are first either proved or admitted to be genuine: 1831, Lyon v. Lyman, 9 Conn. 60 (establishing the rule after contradictory precedents on the circuits, and approving State v. Brunson, 1791, 1 Root 307, which probably deals with a different point: but State v. Nettleton, 1791, 1 Root 308, decides what the former case is said to decide); 1869, Tyler v. Todd, 36 Conn. 222.

Delaware: Rev. St. 1915, § 4230 (like the English statute).

Florida: Rev. G. S. 1919, § 2739 ("Comparison of a disputed writing with any writing proved to the satisfaction of the judge to be genuine shall be permitted to be made by witnesses; and such writings, and the evidence of witnesses respecting the same, may be submitted to the jury, or to the Court in case of a trial by the Court, as evidence of the genuineness, or otherwise, of the writing in dispute"); 1905, Wooldridge v. State, 49 Fla. 137, 38 So. 3 (forging of school warrants; Rev. St. 1892, § 1121, held applicable to criminal cases; under this statute, specimens of the forger's writing, and not merely of that of the person whose name is forged, are admissible; repudiating the doctrine of Peck v. Callaghan, N. Y.).

Georgia: The rule of documents otherwise in the case was at first adopted: 1854, Doe v.

Roe, 16 Ga. 525; 1866, Boggus v. State, 34 id. 278, semble; but the Code has since then established different limits: Rev. C. 1910, § 5836 ("Other writings, proved or acknowledged to be genuine, may be admitted in evidence for the purposes of comparison by the jury. Such other new papers, when intended to be introduced, shall be submitted to the opposite party before he announces himself ready for trial"); 1877, Thomas v. State, 59 Ga. 784 (statute applied to receive a specimen extrajudicially acknowledged genuine); 1895, McVicker v. Conkle, 96 Ga. 595, 24 S. E. 23 (specimen's genuineness must be proved); 1898, Axson v. Belt, 103 Ga. 578, 30 S. E. 262 (plea filed by defendant in another case and bearing a signature; not admitted, because not shown to have been submitted to defendant before trial); 1904, Vizard v. Moody, 119 Ga. 918, 47 S. E. 348 (other specimens, including that of an affidavit to the plea, admitted).

Hawaii: Rev. L. 1915, § 2623 (like Eng. St. 1854).

Idaho: 1900, Bane v. Gwinn, 7 Ida. 439, 63 Pac. 634 (cited ante, § 2008); 1905, State v. Seymour, 10 Ida. 699, 79 Pac. 825 (Bane v. Gwinn followed).

Illinois: The use of specimens by the jury was for some time forbidden altogether: 1846, Pate v. People, 8 Ill. 664, semble: 1859, Jumpertz v. People, 21 Ill. 407; 1865, Kernin v. Hill 37 Ill. 209; 1866, Putnam v. Wadley, 40 Ill. 346, 349 (an instruction that proof "cannot be made by comparison with other signatures," held correct; no authority cited); then the rule of using "documents otherwise in the case" was adopted: 1872, Brobston v. Cahill, 64 Ill. 358: but thereafter ensued uncertainty: 1892, Rogers v. Tyler, 144 Ill. 652, 665, 32 N. E. 393 (admissible if admitted genuine and otherwise in the case); 1897, Greenbaum v. Bornhofen, 167 Ill. 640, 645, 47 N. E. 857 (papers "properly in evidence in the case," allowed to be considered by the chancellor; citing Brobston v. Cahill; compare the citations under Illinois, ante, § 2008, for an expert's use); 1911, Stitzel v. Miller, 250 Ill. 72, 95 N. E. 53 (the plaintiff bank was indorsee of a note payable to H. M. and signed by D. C. M. deceased; in an action of assumpsit, D. C. M.'s administrator denied the genuineness of the maker's signature; and offered to show that the signature was a traced facsimile of the signatures on two other notes purporting to be by D. C. M., neither of which was otherwise in the case; held that the usual limitations did not apply, this not being similarity of a specific person's type of hand, but identity of writing irrespective of the writer); then came a statute: St. 1915, June 23, p. 440 ("1. In all courts of the State it shall be lawful to prove handwriting by comparison made by the witness or jury with writings properly in the files or records of the case, admitted in evidence or treated as genuine or admitted to be genuine by the party against whom the evidence is offered, or proved to be genuine to the satisfaction of the court. 2. Before a standard of writing shall be admitted in evidence by the court for comparison such notice thereof as under all the circumstances of the case is reasonable shall first be given to the opposite party or his attorney. 3. A reasonable opportunity to examine such proposed standard shall on motion duly made be accorded the opposite party, his attorney and witnesses, prior to the introduction in evidence of such standards and the court may, in its discretion, impound the same with the clerk of the court for that purpose"); 1920, Waggoner v. Clark, 293 Ill. 256, 127 N. E. 436 (title through an ancient deed containing an alteration in account-book of the grantor, admitted to evidence handwriting, under St. June 23, 1915); 1922, People v. Clark, 301 Ill. 428, 134 N. E. 95 (receiving stolen property; St. 1915, p. 440, applies to criminal cases, but specimens so exhibited cannot be taken to the jury room).

Indiana: The documents used, it was at first said, must be not only otherwise in the case, but also admitted to be genuine: 1870, Chance v. Gravel Road Co., 32 Ind. 474; 1874, Huston v. Schindler, 46 Ind. 38, 41 (papers admitted genuine, but not in the case, excluded); 1877, Jones v. State, 60 Ind. 241; 1884, Shorb v. Kinzie, 100 Ind. 429; but later rulings seem to be satisfied if the writings are either already in the case or admitted genuine: 1895, Tucker v. Hyatt, 144 Ind. 635, 41 N. E. 1047; 1895, Bowen v. Jones, 13 Ind. App. 193, 41 N. E. 400 (where, however, the language of the Court applies to writings admitted genuine only if already in the case); 1911, Williams v. State, 175, Ind. 93, 93 N. E. 448 (forgery; Tucker v. Hyatt followed); Burns' Ann. St. 1914, § 528*a* (wherever "the genuineness of the handwriting of any person may be involved, any admitted or proved handwriting of such person shall be competent evidence as a basis for comparison by witnesses or by the jury, court, or officer conducting such proceedings, to prove or disprove such genuineness"); 1914, Kahn v. State, 182 Ind. 1, 105 N. E. 385 (documents "in the case, which the party is estopped to deny, and such others as are admitted to be genuine," are alone admissible); 1919, Plymouth Sav. & L. Ass'n v. Kassing, — Ind. App. —, 125 N. E. 488 (the statute applied to sundry specimens).

Iowa: Code 1897, § 4620, Comp. Code § 7327 ("Evidence respecting handwriting may be given by experts, by comparison, or by comparison by the jury, with writings of the same person which are proved to be genuine"); the following rulings apply the statute: 1864, Morris v. Sargent, 18 Ia. 97; 1871, Borland v. Walrath, 33 Ia. 132; 1883, Wilson v. Irish, 62 Ia. 263, 17 N. W. 511; 1887, State v. Calkins, 73 Ia. 128, 34 N. W. 777 (signature in a hotel-register, allowed to be compared with signature to a note); 1888, Riordan v. Guggerty, 74 Ia. 691, 39 N. W. 107; 1894, State v. Farrington, 90 Ia. 673, 679, 57 N. W. 606 (genuine specimens, "wherever found," are admissible: here, a hotel-register and a check); 1901, Coppock v. Lampkin, 114 Ia. 664, 87 N. W. 665, semble (writings of A. not otherwise in the cause, not receivable under Code § 4620, to prove that A. wrote a disputed document claimed by the opponent to be written by B.; citing Peck v. Callaghan, N. Y., and ignoring the later rulings); rulings interpreting the word "proved," and specifying the improper modes of proof, are dealt with post, § 2020.

Kansas: The use of documents is permitted when they are otherwise in the case, and when, though not otherwise in the case, they are admitted to be genuine; but the later cases also admit proved documents: 1872, Macomber v. Scott, 10 Kan. 339; 1876, Joseph v. National Bank, 17 Kan. 260; 1879, Abbott v. Coleman, 22 Kan. 252; 1884, Ort v. Fowler, 31 Kan. 485, 2 Pac. 580; 1891, Holmberg v. Johnson, 45 Kan. 197, 25 Pac. 575 (papers "admitted or proved to be genuine," receivable); 1901, State v. Stegman, 62 Kan. 476, 63 Pac. 746 (specimens "must either be admitted to be genuine" or "at least clearly proved to be genuine"); 1904, State v. Ryno, 68 Kan. 348, 74 Pac. 1114 (State v. Stegman followed).

Kentucky: At first, comparison by the jury was forbidden: 1833, Woodward v. Spiller, 1 Dana 180; but it was then allowed, for documents otherwise in the case and clearly proved genuine: 1847, McAllister v. McAllister, 7 B. Monr. 270; 1885, Fee v. Taylor, 83 Ky. 262; then a lengthy statute entered to make improvements: Stats. 1915, § 1649, C. C. P. 1895, § 604 (in any proceeding whatever, "upon a dispute as to the genuineness of the handwriting of a person, other handwritings of such person, though not in the case for any other purpose, may be introduced for the purpose of comparison by witnesses with the writing in dispute; and such writings, and the testimony of witnesses respecting them, may be submitted to the Court or jury as evidence concerning the genuineness of the writing in dispute; provided that (1) the genuineness of such writings shall be proved, to the satisfaction of the judge, by other than opinion evidence; (2) it must be proved, to the satisfaction of the judge, that they were written before any controversy arose as to the genuineness of the writing in dispute, and that no fraud was practised in their selection; (3) a party proposing to introduce such writings must give reasonable notice of his intention to the opposite party or his attorney, with reasonable opportunity to examine them before the commencement of the trial; (4) the judge may limit the number of such writings; (5) an error of the judge shall be subject to revision and correction in the same manner as if the error had been committed by the Court"); 1897, Froman v. Com., — Ky. —, 42 S. W. 728 (an affidavit certified by a lawful officer, held properly used); 1899, Bogard v. Johnstone, — Ky. —, 53 S. W. 651 (specimens excluded because of no notice under the statute); 1902, Birchett v. Bank, 113 Ky. 135, 67 S. W. 371 (notice held sufficient, on the facts); 1907, Howard v. Creech, — Ky. —, 101 S. W. 974 (statute applied).

Louisiana: Comparison was allowed by the first Code: 1812, Sauve v. Dawson, 2 Mart. 202, semble; 1835, Plicque v. La Branche, 9 La. 560, 562, semble; the modern statutes are as follows: Rev. Civ. C. 1920, § 2245 ("If the party [to a private act] disavow the signature, or the heirs or other representatives declare that they do not know it, it must be proved by witnesses or comparison, as in other cases"); C. Pr. 1900, § 325 (signature of private act denied must be proved "either by witnesses who have seen the defendant sign the act, or who declare that they know it to be his signature because they have frequently seen him write and sign his name. But the proof by witnesses shall not exclude the proof by experts or by a comparison of the writing, as established by the Civil Code"); see the statutes quoted ante, § 2008; applied in the following: 1866, McDonogh's Succession, 18 La. An. 419, 445, 448; 1869, Huddleston v. Coyle, 21 La. An. 148; 1869, Leonard's Succession, 21 La. An. 523; 1871, State v. Fritz, 23 La. An. 56 (the jury may be given documents otherwise in the case and proved genuine); 1902, State v. Batson, 108 La. 479, 32 So. 478 (documents "otherwise irrelevant and which have not been admitted in evidence," held not receivable; in criminal cases C. P. § 325, and C. C. § 2245, do not apply); 1916, Lefort's Succession, 139 La. 51, 71 So. 215 (expert testimony to the handwriting of an olographic will is receivable under Civ. C. § 1655 as amended by St. 1896, No. 119, providing for two witnesses, etc., quoted post, § 2051); St. 1918, July 9, No. 166 (criminal cases; like the English statute).

Maine: The jury may use any documents admitted or proved to be genuine: 1858, Chandler v. LeBarron, 45 Me. 534; 1860, Woodman v. Dana, 52 Me. 13; 1888, State v. Thompson, 80 Me. 194.

Maryland: Comparison by the jury was at first excluded entirely: 1873, Tome v. R. Co., 39 Md. 93 (here the standard-signatures were presented in photographic enlargement; but the decision was put on the general principle); but it is now allowed by statute: Ann. Code 1914, Art. 35, § 7 (like the English statute); 1916, Murdock v. Taylor, 128 Md. 633, 98 Atl. 149 (promissory note; letter signed by payor admitted for comparison).

Massachusetts: The jury may obtain a standard from any documents either proved or admitted to be genuine; it may be added that the rule in this jurisdiction best represents the early tradition continuing the English usage of the last century; the arguments and doubts raised in Doe v. Suckermore, which left so noticeable an impression on the decisions in most other jurisdictions, never affected the result thus early reached in this State: 1813, Hall v. Huse, 10 Mass. 39; 1814, Homer v. Wallis, 11 Mass. 312; 1820, Salem Bank v. Gloucester Bank, 17 Mass. 526; 1836, Moody v. Rowell, 17 Pick. 490 (Shaw, C. J.); 1838, Richardson v. Newcomb, 21 Pick. 317; 1848, Com. v. Eastman, 1 Cush. 217; the further decisions, dealing with the proper mode of proving genuineness, are noted post, § 2020.

Michigan: The jury could examine only documents otherwise in the case: 1866, Vinton v. Peck, 14 Mich. 287; 1874, Van Sickle v. People, 29 Mich. 64; 1876, Foster's Will, 34 Mich. 26; 1879, First Nat'l Bank v. Robert, 41 Mich. 711, 3 N. W. 199; 1887, People v. Parker, 67 Mich. 222, 224, 34 N. W. 720; and it would also seem that their genuineness must clearly appear before comparison can be allowed: 1874, Van Sickle v. People, 29 Mich. 65, where mere possession and ownership of a diary was held not sufficient to establish the defendant's authorship; 1906, People v. Tollefson, 145 Mich. 449, 108 N. W. 751 (forgery; hotel register, admitted for comparing accused's signature, no proper objection being made); 1907, Brown v. Evans, 149 Mich. 429, 112 N. W. 1079 (comparison with an affidavit on file in the case, allowed); then a statute introduced a liberal rule: Comp. L. 1915, § 12359 ("Whenever in any suit or proceeding in any of the courts of this state, it shall be necessary or proper to prove the signature or the handwriting of any person, it shall be competent to introduce in evidence for the purpose of comparison, any specimen or specimens of the handwriting or signature of such person, admitted or proved to the satisfaction of the court to be genuine, whether or not the paper on which such handwriting or signature appears is one admissible in evidence or connected with the case or not: Provided: That if such paper is not one admissible in evidence for some other purpose, or connected with the case, it shall not be admissible in evidence for the purpose of comparison unless it was made before the controversy arose concerning which such suit or proceeding was brought"); 1920, People v. Sturman, 209 Mich. 284, 176 N. W. 397 (whether under Comp. L. 1915, § 12539, the defendant's signature written at the trial, in the name of his alleged alias, was admissible for submission to an expert's opinion as to identity of handwriting not decided).

Minnesota: The jury may examine documents already in the case, and documents not otherwise in the case but admitted genuine: 1886, Morrison v. Porter, 35 Minn. 425, 29 N. W. 54; 1915, State v. Lurken, 129 Minn. 402, 152 N. W. 769 (forgery of a bank check; the defendant offered three other checks bearing his signature identified by his wife; held not admissible because not "clearly proved to be genuine"; purporting to follow Morrison v. Porter and to admit documents not in the case and not conceded to be genuine, provided they are clearly proved genuine; but this is not the rule of Morrison v. Porter, and the opinion apparently confuses the doctrine of § 2000, par. (2) ante, with that of § 2020, post).

Mississippi: The jury may examine documents otherwise in the case, and documents not otherwise in the case but admitted genuine: 1874, Wilson v. Beauchamp, 50 Miss. 32; 1876, Garvin v. State, 52 Miss. 209 (adding "or proved genuine").

Missouri: Here the jury, as at first held, might compare documents otherwise in the case, if admitted genuine, and documents not otherwise in the case, but admitted genuine, — in short, any documents admitted genuine: 1870, State v. Scott, 45 Mo. 304, semble (adding to the first class "or clearly proved genuine"); 1878, State v. Clinton, 67 Mo. 385 (following Greenleaf, Evidence, § 581); 1884, Springer v. Hall, 83 Mo. 697; 1880, State v. Tompkins, 71 Mo. 616; but the effect appeared, in the ensuing rulings, of the misunderstanding of State v. Clinton shown in Rose v. Bank, mentioned ante, § 2008, under Missouri, and new and uncertain limits were for a while declared: 1893, State v. Minton, 116 Mo. 605, 614, 22 S. W. 808 (only when conceded genuine or otherwise in the case); 1896, State v. Thompson, 132 Mo. 301, 34 S. W. 31 (same); 1896, Geer v. M. L. & M. Co., 134 Mo. 85, 34 S. W. 1099 (only documents admitted genuine and in the case); finally a statute came to enlarge and settle the rule: St. 1895, R. S. 1919, § 5438 (like Eng. St. 1854, c. 125, § 7); 1898, State v. Goddard, 146 Mo. 177, 48 S. W. 82 (under the statute; checks said to be payable by deceased's wife to defendant; defendant allowed to offer, in proving them forgeries, other writings of deceased); 1907, State v. Stark, 202 Mo. 210, 100 S. W. 642 (Rev. St. 1899, § 4679 applied, on an issue of a forged deed).

Montana: Rev. C. 1921, § 10531, par. 9 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1870); § 10592 (like id. § 1944); 1897, Baxter v. Hamilton, 20 Mont. 327, 51 Pac. 265 (statute applied to evidence offered after its enactment on the trial of a suit begun before).

Nebraska: The jury might examine any documents admitted or proved to be genuine: 1881, Huff v. Nims, 11 Nebr. 365, 9 N. W. 548; but by statute the following provision is made: Rev. St. 1922, § 8854 ("Evidence respecting handwriting may be given by comparisons made, by experts or by the jury, with writings of the same person which are proved to be genuine"); under the statute the writings need not be otherwise in the case: 1891, Grand Island Banking Co. v. Shoemaker, 31 Nebr. 134, 47 N. W. 696, semble (approving Huff v. Nims); 1892, Capital National Bank v. Williams, 35 Nebr. 410, 53 N. W. 202, semble; 1896, First Nat'l Bank v. Carson, 48 Nebr. 763, 67 N. W. 779.

New Hampshire: Here the peculiar rule first obtained that where the specimens were already in the case admitted genuine, comparison was unconditionally allowed; but where the specimens were offered for the special purpose, there must first be testimony from some one knowing the hand: 1852, Bowman v. Sanborn. 25 N. H. 110, interpreting Myers v. Toscan, 3 N. H. 47 (in which it was not clear whether specimens might be proved or were usable only when admitted by the opponent); 1860, Reed v. Spaulding, 42 N. H. 121; 1866, State v. Shinborn, 46 N. H. 503; but later the English statutory rule was judicially substituted for that above, the proof of the genuineness being for the jury: 1873, State v. Hastings, 53 N. H. 460; 1877, Carter v. Jackson, 58 N. H. 157; 1902, University of Illinois v. Spalding, 71 N. H. 163, 51 Atl. 731 (rule laid down in the English statute, adopted as a result of common-law principles and in consequence of the conflict of prior rulings in this State; quoted ante, § 2000).

New Jersey: The jury might not compare any specimens: 1849, West v. State, 22 N. J. L. 241; until the enactment of the statute: Comp. St. 1910, Evid. § 20 (English form; with the added proviso that specimens offered by a party to disprove the genuineness of his hand must be shown "to have been written before any dispute arose as to the genuineness of the signature or writing in controversy"); applied: 1878, Mutual Ben. Life Ins. Co. v. Brown, 30 N. J. Eq. 201; 1908, State v. Skillman, 76 N. J. L. 474, 70 Atl. 83 (writings otherwise in the case admitted).

New Mexico: St. 1917, Mar. 12, c. 64 (in any proceeding where genuineness of handwriting is involved, "any admitted or proved handwriting of such person shall be competent evidence as a basis for comparison by witnesses or by the jury, court, or officer conducting such proceedings, to prove or disprove such genuineness"; provided that the Court exclude writings tending to "degrade, humiliate, or incriminate" the person, in respect to matters not material, etc., etc.; and provided that specimens of the defendant "must have been written before any controversy arose as to the genuineness of the writing in dispute");

New York: Comparison of specimens was at first unconditionally excluded: 1809, Jackson v. Van Dusen, 5 John. 155, semble; 1828, Jackson v. Phillips, 9 Cow. 112; it had been in some cases left undecided: 1801, Titford v. Knott, Kent, J., 2 John. Cas. 214; 1816 Osgood v. Dewey, 13 John. 239; but in later rulings comparison was allowed to be employed by the jury for documents otherwise in the case: 1856, Van Wyck v. McIntosh, 14 N. Y. 439; 1864, Dubois v. Baker, 30 N. Y. 361; 1872, Randolph v. Loughlin, 48 N. Y. 459; 1878, Miles v. Loomis, 75 N. Y. 292; then came an enlarging statute: Laws 1880, c. 36, § 1, Laws 1888, c. 555 ("Comparison of a disputed writing, with any writing proved to the satisfaction of the Court to be genuine, shall be permitted to be made by witnesses in all trials and proceedings, and such writings and the evidence of witnesses respecting the same may be submitted to the Court and jury as evidence of the genuineness, or otherwise, of the writing in dispute"); § 2, but by St. 1909, c. 65, inserted as C. C. P. § 961*d*, now C. P. A. 1920, § 332 (amendment of 1888; same for the first eighteen words; then "handwriting of any person claimed on the trial to have made or executed the disputed instrument or writing, shall be permitted and submitted to the Court and jury in like manner"); the first statute, authorizing a comparison of "a disputed writing with any writing proved . . . to be genuine" received an astounding construction in 1884 (Peck v. Callaghan, 95 N. Y. 73) when the Court refused to admit genuine specimens of the alleged forger of a document in order to prove it his forgery; thus (1) the words "any writing" were made meaningless, and (2) the statute was made to help all forgers and to handicap their victims; compare the contrary rulings in England and Missouri; perverse legal thinking could hardly go further; and in 1888 (c. 555) the Legislature was obliged again to correct the Court; whether the authenticity of the "disputed writing" of this statute must be the main issue of the case (as a will, deed, or the like), or the statute applies to every writing in the case whose authenticity is material, could hardly cause any doubt, especially to persons not ignorant of the history of the subject; yet the invitation was issued to litigants to raise the point, as the Court declared itself unwilling to settle it lightly and unaided by the Bar: 1892, People v. Murphy, 135 N. Y. 453, 32 N. E. 138; this doubt it then settled: 1901, People v. Molineux, 168 N. Y. 264, 61 N. E. 286 (the disputed writing, to be proved by specimens, need not be a main document in issue, either at common law or under the statute, but may be merely an evidential one; repudiating the contrary 'obiter dictum' in Peck v. Callaghan); 1902, People v. Tuck, 170 N. Y. 203, 63 N. E. 281 (papers proved to be genuine, allowed to be used as standards for a letter in B.'s name alleged to have been forged by defendant); under this statute, it must appear that the writing was admitted below as deemed genuine by the Court, not merely as alleged to be genuine: 1895, People v. Corey, 148 N. Y. 476, 42 N. E. 1066.

North Carolina: The following rulings left the law difficult to determine, before the statute: 1853, Outlaw v. Hurdle, 1 Jones L. 165; 1856, Otey v. Hoyt, 3 Jones L. 410, semble (excluded even for documents otherwise in the case); 1872, State v. Woodruff, 67 N. C. 91 (following Outlaw v. Hurdle); 1877, Yates v. Yates, 76 N. C. 149, semble (allowed for documents otherwise in the case and admitted genuine); 1887, Tuttle v. Rainey, 98 N. C. 514, 4 S. E. 475; 1888, Fuller v. Fox, 101 N. C. 120, 7 S. E. 589; 1891, Tunstall v. Cobb, 109 N. C. 320, 14 S. E. 28 (excluded entirely, following Pope v. Askew, ante, § 2008); 1902, Ratliff v. Ratliff, 131 N. C. 425, 42 S. E. 887 (Tunstall v. Cobb followed); the following singular ruling seems to belong here: 1896, Riley v. Hall, 119 N. C. 406, 26 S. E. 47 (a deed said to contain an erasure or a forgery cannot, if its genuineness is in issue, be submitted to the jury, the question being solely one of expert opinion); 1906, Shelton's Will, 143 N. C. 218, 55 S. E. 705 (Fuller v. Fox followed); 1908, Martin v. Knight, 147 N. C. 564, 61 S. E. 447 (execution of a note and a duebill, the contents being by M. and the signature purporting to be by F.; documents allowed to be shown to the jury, the witnesses explaining the grounds for their opinion as to similarity or difference; able opinion by Connor, J.); then in 1913 came a statute, Con. St. 1919, § 1784 (like Eng. St. 1854, c. 125, § 27); 1914, Boyd v. Leatherwood, 165 N. C. 614, 81 S. E. 1025 (no document not used as a basis of some witness' testimony can be submitted to the jury); 1921, Newton v. Newton, 182 N. C. 54, 108 S. E. 336 (defendant's written admission; her signature being disputed, the trial judge allowed a witness to compare it with one conceded to be genuine, but refused to let the jury compare it; held error on the latter point, under Con. St. 1919, § 1784).

North Dakota: Here the rule has been left undecided: 1890, Dakota v. O'Hare, 1 N. D. 43; 1910, Cochrane v. National Elev. Co., 20 N. D. 169, 127 N. W. 725 (specimen conceded genuine, admitted).

Ohio: Here no distinction is taken between the expert's and the jury's use of specimens, and the same rule is laid down for both: ante, § 2008.

Oregon: Laws 1920, § 727, par. 9 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1870); § 788 (like Cal. § 1944, inserting, after "witness," "skilled in such matters," and omitting "or proved to be genuine, etc."); statute applied: 1896, Osmun v. Winters, 30 Or. 177, 46 Pac. 780; Munkers v. Ins. Co., 30 Or. 211, 46 Pac. 850.

Pennsylvania: Here, as in Massachusetts, the old tradition of free comparison survived; but it was yoked with the rule that there must first be preliminary corroborative evidence,—an old qualification peculiar to the use of all handwriting-evidence in criminal cases (ante, § 1991), and already at this time abandoned in England; 1812, McCorkle v. Binns, 5 Binney 348, Tilghman, C. J. (here it is required that other evidence shall first be given in support; but this is founded on a statement of Peake's, and Peake was not referring specially to this "comparison of hands," but to the general evidence formerly known as such, and in that respect his qualification was already abandoned elsewhere); 1823, Farmers' Bank v. Whitehill, 10 S. & R. 111, Duncan, J. (here many English names of the 1700s are cited for the admission of "similitude of hands," and its rejection is said to be "recent doctrine" at Westminster, — which was true, but the judge is unaware of the different senses employed for that phrase; here, also, it is said that there must first be other corroborative evidence given); 1829, Bank v. Jacobs, 1 Pa. 180 (here other corroborative testimony was regarded as indispensable; and the writings usable are intimated to be such as are admitted genuine or were seen by a witness to be written); 1834, Callan v. Gaylord, 3 Watts 321 (here also other preliminary proof of some sort is required; but nothing is said as to the degree of proof of the standard's genuineness; one witness' testimony was taken as sufficient); 1840, Baker v. Haines, 6 Whart. 291 (here the question is fully discussed and settled; there must be preliminary evidence in support; and the writings used must be thus tested: "Strict proof of the genuine or test paper should first be given; no reasonable doubt should remain on that point; and nothing short of evidence of a person who saw him write the paper, or an admission of being genuine, or evidence of equal certainty, should be received for that purpose"); 1848, Depue v. Place, 7 Pa. St. 428 (here no general rule was stated, but the standards were held not sufficiently proved); 1862, Travis v. Brown, 43 Pa. St. 9 (the whole subject discussed and cleared up; the jury may compare, after other preliminary evidence, other "well authenticated writings," "established by the most satisfactory evidence"); 1868, Haycock v. Greup, 57 Pa. 441 (affirms the rule of Travis v. Brown, and excludes the evidence in hand because no preliminary evidence had been offered for which comparison of hands was to serve as corroborative); 1876, Aumick v. Mitchell, 82 Pa. 211 (same rule, and same reason for rejection); 1880, Berryhill v. Kirchner, 96 Pa. 492 (same rule); 1884, Foster v. Collner, 107 Pa. 313 (same rule); 1893, Rockey's Estate, 155 Pa. 456, 26 Atl. 656 (same rule); at this point a statute intervened, probably on account of the uncertainty of the rule for experts (ante, § 2008), but it cannot be said to improve on the English form of statute: St. 1895, May 15, as amended by St. 1913, June 6, § 1, Dig. 1920, § 10356 ("Where there is a question as to any writing, the opinions of the following persons shall be deemed to be relevant: (a) The opinion of any person acquainted with the handwriting of the supposed writer. (b) The opinion of those who have had special experience with or who have pursued special studies relating to documents, handwriting, and alterations thereof who are herein called experts); ib. § 2, Dig. § 10357 ("It shall be competent for experts in giving their testimony under the provisions of this act, to make comparison of documents and comparison of disputed handwriting with any documents or writing admitted to be genuine, or proven to the satisfaction of the judge to be genuine, and the evidence of such experts respecting the same shall be submitted to the jury as evidence of the genuineness or otherwise of the writing in dispute"); ib. § 3, Dig. § 10358 ("It shall be competent for experts in formulating their opinions to the Court and jury to place the genuine and disputed signatures or writings in juxtaposition and to draw the attention of the jury thereto; and it shall furthermore be competent for counsel to require of an expert a statement of the principles on which he has based his work, the details of his work, and his opinion that the results are important to the point at issue, or the reasoning, analysis, and investigation by which he has arrived at his opinion"); ib. § 4, Dig. § 10359 ("The opinions of the witnesses to handwriting being submitted as competent testimony to the jury, the final determination as to whether any particular handwriting is genuine or simulated shall remain, as heretofore, a question for the jury on all the evidence submitted"); 1904, Groff v. Groff, 209 Pa. 603, 59 Atl. 65 (statute applied, to allow comparisons for jury and experts); 1917, Seaman v. Husband, 256 Pa. 571, 100 Atl. 941 (will; comparison with admittedly genuine writings, allowed).

Philippine Isl.: C. C. P. 1901, § 298, par. 9 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1870); § 327 (like Cal. C. C. P. §§1944, 1945, substituting "made by the Court" for "made by the witness or the jury").

Porto Rico: Rev. St. & C. 1911, § 1403, par. 7 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1870, par. 9); § 1459 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1944).

Rhode Island: Gen. L. 1909, c. 292, § 47 (like Eng. St. 1854).

South Carolina: Here the rule is peculiar, flavoring of the former Pennsylvania doctrine: 1823, Boman v. Plunkett, McCord 518 (receiving documents admitted genuine, in aid of "doubtful proof"); 1841, Bird v. Miller, 1 McMull. 124 (approving Boman v. Plunkett, but not accurate in the understanding of its doctrine); 1874, Bennett v. Mathewes, 5 S. C. 478 (following the limitations of Boman v. Plunkett); 1882, Benedict v. Mathewes, 18 S. C. 506 (same; adding that the trial judge is to determine, subject to review, what is a "doubtful case").

South Dakota: 1904, State v. Coleman, 17 S. D. 594, 98 N. W. 175 (whether writings proved or admitted genuine may be used, though not otherwise evidence in the case; not decided); 1905, Mississippi L. & C. Co. v. Kelly, 19 S. D. 577, 104 N. W. 265 (a writing "admitted or proved" genuine is admissible, though not otherwise in the case).

Tennessee: In 1870, Clark v. Rhodes, 2 Heisk. 207, documents not in the case were rejected; in 1872, Kannon v. Galloway, 2 Baxt. 231, documents not in the case went to the jury by consent; in 1873, Wright v. Hessey, 3 Baxt. 44, Clark v. Rhodes was followed; in 1889, a statute (Act Feb. 26, now Code 1916, § 5560) was passed, similar to that of 1880 in New York (quoted supra); its interpretation, for the case of documents of an alleged forger offered to prove a writing a forgery, was made to conform to that of the New York statute, Peck v. Callaghan, N. Y., supra, being followed; 1890, Franklin v. Franklin, 90 Tenn. 50, 16 S. W. 557; Powers v. McKenzie, 90 Tenn. 179, 16 S. W. 559; but it does not appear that the error has been corrected, as it was in New York, by another statute.

Texas: The state of the law was uncertain, owing to the failure to observe precedents: 1866, Hanley v. Gandy, 28 Tex. 211 (comparison of hands excluded entirely); 1877, Eborn v. Zimpelman, 47 Tex. 518 (without reference to local precedents, comparison was apparently regarded as allowable, with the single limitation that the specimens must be either admitted to be or clearly proved to be genuine); 1885, Kennedy v. Upshaw, 64 Tex. 420 (not citing Eborn v. Zimpelman; comparison allowed, apparently for such specimens only as were already in the case and admitted genuine); 1885, Matlock v. Glover, 63 Tex. 236 (comparison refused, without naming reason or precedent); 1887, Smyth v. Caswell, 67 Tex. 572, 4 S. W. 848 (the first limitation of Kennedy v. Upshaw was relaxed where the specimen was introduced by the opponent and admitted genuine); 1888, Wagoner v. Ruply, 69 Tex. 703, 7 S. W. 80 (a confused opinion apparently to the same effect); the following statute is doubtless supposed to have cleared up the law in criminal cases: Rev. C. Cr. P. 1911, § 814 ("It is competent in every case to give evidence of handwriting by comparison, made by experts or by the jury; but proof by comparison only shall not be sufficient to establish the handwriting of a witness who denies his signature under oath"); 1904, Mahon v. State, 46 Tex. Cr. 234, 79 S. W. 28 (perjury in an affidavit; to identify the defendant as the signer, an application for witness-process, signed by him, was admitted for the jury's inspection, wihout calling experts; loose opinion, citing only two of the above cases); 1908, Wade v. Galveston H. & S. A. R. Co., — Tex. Civ. App. —, 110 S. W. 84 (Kennedy v. Upshaw followed); 1920, Williams v. State, 86 Tex. Cr. App. 640, 218 S. W. 750 (forgery; expert testimony based on comparison, admitted under the above C. Cr. P. § 814, held not sufficient here to establish the forgery, under the second clause of the statute).

Utah: 1887, Durnell v. Sowden, 5 Utah 222, 14 Pac. 334 (opinion obscure); 1892, Tucker v. Kellogg, 8 Utah 11, 13, 28 Pac. 870 semble (comparison allowed for specimens admitted genuine, if otherwise in the case); 1906, State v. McBride, 30 Utah 422, 85 Pac. 440 (rule of Tucker v. Kellogg accepted).

Vermont: Here the rule is of the same type as in Massachusetts and Pennsylvania: 1803, Rich v. Trimble, 2 Tyler 349 (the Court refused to employ "comparison of handwriting" when it did not appear that the signer's deposition was not available; the phrase is probably used in the older sense); 1833, Gifford v. Ford, 5 Vt. 535 (comparison was allowed, the specimen here being admitted genuine); 1849, Adams v. Field, 21 Vt. 264 (settled that comparison is allowable of all documents, provided only that their genuineness is admitted or is proved by "clear, direct, and positive testimony"); 1867, State v. LaVigne, 39 Vt. 234 (same); 1870, State v. Horn, 43 Vt. 20, 23 (allowed for specimens admitted or "directly and very clearly" proved genuine); 1887, Rowell v. Fuller, 59 Vt. 692, 10 Atl. 853 (same); 1909, State v. Kent, 83 Vt. 28, 74 Atl. 389 (writings not otherwise in the case, but "admitted or proved to be genuine," may be used; here, capital letters carved on wood, etc.).

§ 2017. Ancient Documents. It has been noticed, in examining the history of the rule (ante, § 1994), that by the early practice no limitation was imposed against the exhibition of specimens to the jury. When, in the series of rulings culminating in Doe v. Newton (ante, § 1994), the limitation was established that exhibition to the jury was confined to specimens otherwise in the case, an exception was reserved for ancient writings, which, if properly authenticated, could be so used whether otherwise in the case or not. In Doe v. Newton, and later opinions, a reason has been found in "the necessity of the case," — the necessity lying in this, that where the disputed writing is alleged to be that of a person as to whose handwriting living witnesses are or may be assumed to be unavailable, and as to whom there are not therefore other specimens in the case that can be proved by such witnesses, a resort to any available standards whatever must be permitted. This exception is undoubted law to-day, whatever the limitations may be as to the use of ordinary specimens by the jury.[1]

Virginia: 1828, Gardner's Adm'r v. Vidal, 6 Rand. 106 (question expressly reserved); 1829, Rowt's Adm'x v. Kile's Adm'r, 1 Leigh 216 (except where no living witnesses to handwriting can be had, comparison by the jury is entirely excluded); 1904, Johnson v. Com., 102 Va. 927, 46 S. E. 789 (forgery of wife's will; specimens of defendant's and wife's writing, proved to be genuine, admitted).

Washington: 1896, Moore v. Palmer, 14 Wash. 134, 44 Pac. 142 (specimens admitted; no limits fixed).

West Virginia: 1874, Clay v. Robinson, 7 W. Va. 359, new trial s. v. Clay v. Alderson's Adm'r, 10 W. Va. 53 (the opinion is obscure, but seems to allow comparison (1) for all writings admitted genuine, (2) for ancient writings, (3) for writings used in explanation by a witness for whom they have served as the basis of knowledge of handwriting); 1886, State v. Henderson, 29 W. Va. 158, 1 S. E. 225 (witnesses were allowed to show, by writing on papers, how the person in question wrote the letter L in a peculiar manner, distinguishing this from comparison of specimens); 1888, State v. Koontz, 31 W. Va. 129, 5 S. E. 328 (the foregoing cases were approved, and the writing for the jury of a letter M by the prosecuting witness, whose name was alleged to have been forged, was held improper); St.1907, c. 39, p. 224, Code 1914, § 4877 (in any civil or criminal proceeding "any writing proved to the satisfaction of the judge to be genuine may be used with or without the testimony of witnesses for the purpose of making a comparison with a disputed writing as evidence of the genuineness or otherwise of such disputed writing").

Wisconsin: 1861, Pierce v. Northey, 14 Wis. 9, 13 (question was discussed, but expressly reserved); 1873, Hazelton v. Union Bank, 32 Wis. 47 (rule adopted that comparison of specimens should be allowed only where the documents were already in the case and were "clearly proved" genuine, or where they were ancient and living witnesses could not be had); then a statute interposed; Stats. 1919, § 4189 a ("Comparison of a disputed writing with any writing proved to the satisfaction of the Court to be the genuine handwriting of any person claimed on the trial to have made or executed the disputed instrument or writing shall be permitted to be made by witnesses, and such writings and the evidence respecting them may be submitted to the Court or jury").

§ 2017. [1] England: 1806, Roe v. Rawlings, 7 East 282; 1811, Morewood v. Wood, 14 East 328; 1830, Doe v. Newton, 1 Nev. & P. 6, per Coleridge, J.; 1836, Doe v. Suckermore, 5 A. & E. 710, passim; Canada: 1872, Thompson v. Bennett, 22 U. C. C. P. 393, 405, per Gywnne J.; United States: 1899, U. S. v. Ortiz, 176 U. S. 422, 20 Sup. 466 (cited ante, § 2016); Cal. C. C. P. 1872, § 1945 ("Where a writing is more than thirty years old, the comparisons may be made with writings purporting to be genuine, and generally respected and acted upon as such § 2018. Unfair Selection of Specimens. In those jurisdictions where the use of specimens is freely allowed, for expert or for jury, and no artificial and rigid rules are laid down to obviate the supposed danger of unfair selection, the objection based on unfair selection remains open to be decided for each case or class of cases. What canons are there for determining when a specimen is to be rejected on this ground?

(1) To take the commonest case, Is it proper to receive a specimen written at the trial by a party alleging that he is or is not the writer and offering such a specimen on his own behalf as a standard for judgment? This is plainly sufficient where the party does not volunteer it but the judge orders him to write his name.[1] Otherwise, the prevailing rule has been to exclude such specimens absolutely.[2] After all, however, the more sensible plan is to leave it to the judge in each instance to decide whether the specimen is manifestly unfair.[3]

(2) A different case is presented, however, where the opponent chooses to demand and offer such a specimen; he is the one who suffers by any unfairness, and if he chooses to take the risk, certainly the other party cannot object.[4]

by persons having an interest in knowing the fact"; this is a distortion of the principle, borrowing partly from the rules of §§ 701, 1297, ante); 1860, Clark v. Wyatt, 15 Ind. 272; 1847, McAllister v. McAllister, 7 B. Monr. Ky. 270; Mont. Rev. C. 1921, § 10593 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1945); Or. Laws 1920, § 789 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1945, substituting "twenty" for "thirty"); P. I. C. C. P. 1901, § 327 (like Cal. C. C. P. §§ 1944, 1945); P. R. Rev. St. & C. 1911, § 1460 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1945); 1822, Cantey v. Platt, 2 McCord S. C. 260; 1906, McCreary v. Coggeshall, 74 S. C. 42, 53 S. E. 978 (an ancient letter; comparison with ancient official records by the same alleged author, admitted); 1829, Rowt. v. Kile, 1 Leigh Va. 216 (cited ante, § 2016); 1874, Clay v. Robinson 7 W. Va. 359, 10 W. Va. 53; 1873, Hazleton v. Bank, 32 Wis. 47.

§ 2018. [1] Eng. 1705, Osbourne v. Hosier, 6 Mod. 167, Holt. L. C. J.; 1829, Williams' Case, 1 Lew. Cr. C. 137, Bayley, B.; 1865, Corbett v. Kilminster, 4 F. & F. 400, Martin, B.; U. S. 1901, People v. Molineux, 168 N. Y. 264, 61 N. E. 286 (specimens written by a defendant when under suspicion of the crime, but voluntarily, at the request of the prosecuting attorney, held admissible against him).

Whether the witness may refuse, if the writing would tend to criminate him, is noticed post, § 2264).

[2] Eng. 1793, Stanger v. Searle, 1 Esp. 14, Kenyon, L. C. J.; U. S. 1898, Williams v. State, 61 Ala. 39; 1921, People v. Rosenbaum, 299 Ill. 93, 132 N. E. 433 (forgery; defendant's offer to write the forged name in court for comparison with the forged instrument by the court, rejected, as capable of fabrication; unsound, because it might nevertheless have revealed unconcealable evidence of identity, and secondly, because this slight boon could do no harm, the evidence being so obviously open to discredit); 1858, Chandler v. LeBarron, 45 Me. 534, semble; 1879, First Nat'l Bank v. Robert, 41 Mich. 711; 1920, People v. Sturman, 209 Mich. 284, 176 N. W. 397 (defendant's signature written at the trial; cited more fully ante, § 2016); N. J. Comp. St. 1910, Evidence § 20 (quoted ante, § 2016); 1897, McGlasson v. State, 37 Tex. Cr. 628, 40 S. W. 503 (forgery of K.'s name; held improper to let the jury consider a specimen written by K., for the prosecution, during trial and after being shown the disputed signature); 1902, Whittle v. State, 43 Tex. Cr. 468, 66 S. W. 771 (forgery; specimen written at the trial by the person whose name was alleged to be forged, excluded); 1894, Hickory v. U. S., 151 U. S. 303, 307, 14 Sup. 334 (specimen made by the party in court on the same day to disprove genuineness, excluded).

In a decision upon a trial taking place before the Act of 1854 such a specimen was rejected as not a writing already in the case: 1855, Doe v. Wilson, 10 Moore P. C. 529.

[3] 1872, King v. Donahue, 110 Mass. 155; 1879, Com. v. Allen, 128 id. 50.

[4] 1722, Layer's Trial, 16 How. St. Tr. 192 (the witness said she would know certain papers by her private mark; she was required to make it for the Court, to test her knowledge of it); 1887, U. S. v. Mullaney, 32 Fed. 370 (cross-examination of a defendant, testifying in denial of certain signature by requiring him to write the names for exhibition to the jury, held proper); 1896, Bradford v.

(3) Specimens written out of court but after controversy begun may equally be subject to suspicion, and the judge may refuse to let the writer use them on his own behalf.[5]

(4) No other circumstances call for any settled rule.[6]

§ 2019. Photographic Copies as Specimens; Press-Copies. The use of photographic-copies as specimens is subject to certain necessary distinctions already elsewhere considered in connection with photographs in general (ante, § 797).[1] Letter-press copies might under some circumstances be usable as well as the originals, or in default of them.[2]

§ 2020. Specimens "Proved" Genuine; Mode of Proof. In those jurisdictions in which free comparison is permitted of specimens "proved" genuine, the question arises whether the proof of genuineness is to be determined by the Court or by the jury. Having regard to the general principle (post, § 2550) and to the argument from confusion of issues (ante, § 2000), the only proper solution is the former. In this way at once free choice of specimens is obtained and yet all inconvenience from confusion of issues before the jury is avoided. This is the result almost unanimously

People, 22 Colo. 157, 43 Pac. 1013 (defendant required to write; cited ante, § 2016); 1893, Smith v. King, 62 Conn. 515, 521, 26 Atl. 1059 (writing in Court, when demanded by opponent, allowable); 1858, Chandler v. LeBarron, 45 Me. 534; 1881, Huff v. Nims, 11 Nebr. 365, 9 N. W. 548; 1880, Sanderson v. Osgood, 52 Vt. 312.

Whether the witness may refuse, on the ground of self-crimination, is noticed post, § 2264.

Whether a change of signature evidences consciousness of guilt, is noticed ante, § 278.

[5] 1894, Hickory v. E. S., 151 U. S. 303, 14 Sup. 334 (excluding handwriting specially prepared); 1880, Sanderson v. Osgood, 52 Vt. 312 (admitting specimens written either before controversy or afterwards, if in the usual course of business and under unsuspicious circumstances); 1884, Shorb v. Kinzie, 100 In. 429, 433 (signed answer under oath in the same cause, not usable by the signing party as a specimen); 1880, Singer Mfg. Co. v. McFarland, 53 Ia. 541, 5 N. W. 739 (signature in pleadings, admitted); 1898, Weidman v. Symes, 116 Mich. 619, 74 N. W. 1008 (notes written after time of note in dispute, excluded); 1884, Springer v. Hall, 83 Mo. 698 (the party's signature to a pleading, where his own witness uses it, excluded); N. J. Comp. St. 1910, Evidence § 20 (cited ante, § 2016); 1909, State v. Barris, 78 N. J. L. 14, 73 Atl. 248 (under Gen. St. 1896, quoted ante, § 2016, the limitation excluding specimens made after controversy does not apply to specimens not offered by the party in whose hand they are, and in particular not to the State using a forgee's specimens; furthermore, specimens made by the alleged forger after the date of the document in issue are admissible); 1906, Greenwald v. Ford, 21 S. D. 28, 109 N. W. 516 (checks; a signature made since the time of the signature in dispute is not thereby inadmissible, unless "manufactured since the controversy arose, for the purpose of comparison, by one having a motive to fabricate").

[6] 1902, Phœnix Nat'l Bank v. Taylor, 113 Ky. 61, 67 S. W. 27 (specimens signed by mark may not be compared with a script signature); 1902, Gambrill v. Schooley, 95 Md. 260, 52 Atl. 500 (slander; a specimen of the defendant's handwriting, containing political utterances calculated to prejudice his position, held inadmissible where other specimens were available); 1902, University of Illinois, v. Spalding, 71 N. H. 163, 51 Atl. 731 (specimens made after the date of the disputed document, but not after controversy nor otherwise open to suspicion, held admissible); 1892, Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Suiter, 131 N. Y. 557, 29 N. E. 822 (the mere age of the specimens should not exclude them; compare § 695, ante); 1897, Redding v. Redding's Est., 69 Vt. 500, 38 Atl. 230 (same).

§ 2019. [1] For expert illustration by blackboard diagrams and the like, see ante, § 791.

[2] Press-copies of handwriting were rejected as standards in the following cases: 1885, Spottiswood v. Weir, 66 Cal. 525, 528, 6 Pac. 38; 1848, Com. v. Eastman, 1 Cush. 217. In Howard v. Russell, 75 Tex. 171, 12 S. W. 525 (1889), traced copies were considered, but no decision rendered, the exclusion below being immaterial on the facts.

For the use of an early copy to show alterations since made in the original, see ante, § 1226, note 7.

accepted.[1] Several statutory enactments, following that of England, make similar provision.[2]

As to the mode of proving this genuineness, it is usually said that it may not be made by again resorting to expert testimony based on comparison; and thus the usual mode would be by witnesses speaking 'ex visu scriptionis' or 'ex scriptis olim visis' (ante, § 1996, §§ 694, 699). Yet possession of the documents, or any other mode (post, § 2131) appropriate for evidencing their execution (apart from handwriting-evidence), would equally be proper. It is often said that the proof must be "clear" or "positive," and this requirement, left to the discretion of the trial judge to administer, seems all that is desirable.[3]

§ 2020. [1] For the judge: 1874, Com. v. Coe, 115 Mass. 505; 1882, Costello v. Crowell, 133 Mass. 354; 1885, Costelo v. Crowell, 139 Mass. 590, 2 N. E. 698; 1888, State v. Thompson, 80 Me. 194, 197, 13 Atl. 892; 1862, Travis v. Brown, 43 Pa. 9; 1867, State v. La Vigne, 39 Vt. 235; 1887, Rowell v. Fuller, 59 Vt. 692, 10 Atl. 853; for the jury: 1873, State v. Hastings, 53 N. H. 460; 1877, Carter v. Jackson, 58 N. H. 157.

In Massachusetts it is however maintained, in accordance with the heterodox views of that Court in analogous questions (ante, § 861, post, § 2550), that the trial Court's ruling admitting proved specimens is provisional only, and that the jury may in criminal cases further reconsider and may reject the specimens as not genuine: 1905, Com. v. Tucker, 189 Mass. 457, 76 N. E. 127.

[2] Cited ante, § 2016; the following rulings apply them: 1859, Cooper v. Dawson, 1 F. & F. 550 (letter "proved" genuine to the judge's satisfaction); 1867, Reid v. Warner, 17 Low. Can. 489.

[3] The rulings are as follows: Federal: 1917, Dean v. U. S., 5th C. C. A., 246 Fed. 568 (altering a postal money-order; proof of genuineness of specimens may be circumstantial; here the possession of a memorandum book); Georgia: 1895, McVicker v. Conkle, 96 Ga. 584, 595, 24 S. E. 23 (attested writing offered as standard, not sufficiently "proved" by proving the attesting witness' signature; see ante, §§ 1511, 1513); 1896, Little v. Rogers, 99 Ga. 95, 24 S. E. 856 (evidence of genuineness of the standards may be circumstantial as well as testimonial; here the finding of the notes among the deceased's papers was held sufficient); 1900, McCombs v. State, 109 Ga. 496, 34 S. E. 1021 (possession of papers by accused, not sufficient evidence of their genuineness as standards); Indiana: 1919, Plymouth Sav. & L. Ass'n v. Kassing, — Ind. App. —, 125 N. E. 488 (proof of specimen's genuineness may be by the party's admissions, by witness who saw them written or heard them acknowledged, or by the party's recognition in acting on them, but not by expert testimony); Iowa: 1855, Hyde v. Woolfolk, 1 Ia. 159 (proof by persons familiar with handwriting, excluded; the proof must be "positive"); 1884, Winch v. Norman, 65 Ia. 188, 21 N. W. 511 (proof by comparison of hands, excluded); 1891, Sankey v. Cook, 82 Ia. 125, 47 N. W. 1077 (testimony by one who did not see the specimen written, excluded); 1900, Renner v. Thornburg, 111 Ia. 515, 82 N. W. 950, semble (proof by persons familiar with his hand, excluded); New York: 1890, McKay v. Lasher, 121 N. Y. 477, 482, 24 N. E. 711 (mode of proof depends "upon the general rules of evidence applicable," "the only condition" being the satisfaction of the judge); 1901, People v. Molineux, 168 N. Y. 264, 61 N. E. 286 (under the statute, the Court may use any kind of evidence admissible at common law, i. e. any but expert testimony based itself on other specimens; the degree of persuasion must be in criminal cases beyond a reasonable doubt; the jury also must afterwards be satisfied of their genuineness before using them); 1921, Turnure v. Breitung, Sup. App. Div., 186 N. Y. Suppl. 620 (issue whether B. signed a draft as acceptor in favor of H., or B.'s name was forged by H.; specimen B. signatures shown to be genuinely by B., and specimen H. signatures shown to be genuinely by H., and specimen B. signatures shown to be not by B., but believed by an expert after comparison to be by H., were admitted to be used by the expert as the basis of his testimony, under C. C. P. § 961 d; held, that the third class of specimens could not be used, their authorship not having been "proved by common-law evidence, and a collateral issue being raised; unsound, for (1) "common-law evidence" is not inherently the best, for the common-law rules were based on a crude conception of the science of graphology, and (2) the issue was not more collateral for the third than for the first and the second classes of specimens); Oklahoma: 1900, Archer v. U. S., 9 Okl. 569, 60 Pac. 268 (proof by expert comparison of hands, inadmissible); Pennsylvania: 1848, Depue v. Place, 7 Pa. 430 (rejecting twenty specimens some of which the § 2021. Specimens "Admitted" to be Genuine. In those jurisdictions in which the use of specimens is limited, in part or solely, to those "admitted" to be genuine, questions of further detail occasionally arise. It is enough to notice that the admission must of course be the opponent's, not the witness',[1] and that only the true judicial admission — i. e. a concession made in the pleadings, or during the trial, or for the purpose of the trial (post, § 2588) — will suffice,[2] not the quasi-admission, i. e. an inconsistent extrajudicial statement of claim (ante, § 1048).[3]

D. Sundry Expert Testimony to Genuineness other than by Knowledge of Handwriting-Type (Decipherment, Alterations, Ink, Spelling, and the like)

§ 2023. In general. There remains a class of topics which may conveniently be dealt with here together, some involving a question of prin-witness had seen signed and others not, the witness being unable to separate the two sorts); Utah: 1906, State v. McBride, 30 Utah, 422, 85 Pac. 440 (testimony of the prosecutrix based only on the defendant's oral admissions of authorship, without other evidence, held insufficient; Straup, J., diss., and correctly, because the present question was strictly not involved, but that of § 699, ante); Vermont: 1908, State v. Ryder, 80 Vt. 422, 68 Atl. 652 (proof by persons familiar with the handwriting, sufficient); Washington: 1918, State v. McGuff, 104 Wash. 501, 177 Pac. 316 (forgery of a check; the bank's signature-file held not properly proved genuine as a specimen).

In Massachusetts, there have been stages of doctrine; with reference to the principle that the genuineness must be "proved," it was at first said that the testimony of no person who had not seen the document written would suffice: 1836, Shaw, C. J., in Moody v. Rowell, 17 Pick. 490; and it has also been said that testimony by one who merely knew the handwriting and knew it from correspondence only would not suffice: 1871, McKeone v. Barnes, 108 Mass. 346 (the witness had only received the specimens in answer to her letters); but the general tendency has been, while excluding testimony merely from knowledge of handwriting, to lay down no fixed rules but only a general canon as to the quality of the evidence; 1848, Com. v. Eastman, 1 Cush. 217 ("clear and undoubted proof, that is, either by direct evidence of the signature or by some equivalent evidence," excluding specimens proved merely from a knowledge of the handwriting); 1856, Ward v. Fuller, 7 Gray 178; 1859, Bacon v. Williams, 13 Gray 527; 1874, Com. v. Coe, 115 Mass. 503; 1905, Com. v. Tucker, 189 Mass. 457, 76 N. E. 127 (the "equivalent evidence" which may serve instead of "direct evidence" may be circumstantial, and must merely not be opinion testimony resting solely on "comparison with another standard or with an exemplar in his own mind"; here, certain sale-slips were held sufficiently proved); 1909, Newton Centre Trust Co. v. Stuart, 201 Mass. 288, 87 N. E. 630 (under the circumstances, the trial Court's refusal to pass upon certain specimens offered as standards, because their genuineness was disputed, held improper; the specimen need not be evidenced by persons who saw them written, but may be evidenced by extrajudicial admissions).

§ 2021. [1] 1881, Shorb v. Kinzie, 80 Ind. 502; 1906, Stark v. Burke, 131 Ia. 684, 109 N. W. 206 (the witness' "admission" of genuineness is not the party's, so as to entitle the document to be treated as one conceded to be genuine).

[2] 1877, Jones v. State, 60 Ind. 241; 1905, Frank v. Berry, 128 Ia. 223, 103 N. W. 358 (defendant's own signed answer in the cause, admitted, since a statute required every pleading to be signed by himself or his attorney).

Contra: 1906, State v. Branton, 49 Or. 86, 87 Pac. 535 (letters orally admitted by the defendant to be his, in conversation with a witness, were apparently held admissible, under a statute receiving writings "admitted or treated as genuine").

[3] Other points ruled upon are as follows: 1855, Hyde v. Woolfolk, 1 Ia. 161 (rejecting an acknowledgment of a deed recorded, because the grantor does not necessarily acknowledge the handwriting of the signature as his); 1869, Bragg v. Colwell, 19 Oh. St. 407 (admitting the making of a note is not necessarily to admit the genuineness of the signature).

In Hughes v. Rogers, 8 M. & W. 123 (1841), when the witness denied the handwriting to be his, other witnesses to prove its genuineness were rejected, regard being had to the rule against contradicting on an immaterial point.

ciples, others attended by no reason for raising a question other than early rulings creating a doubt. The principles most commonly involved are those of the Opinion rule, permitting expert aid whenever it can add to the tribunal's light upon the subject, and of the Knowledge rule (ante, § 659), that a witness' data of knowledge must be such as to afford sound data for inference and imply something more than a mere guess.

Throughout the various topics, however, so far as expert testimony is involved, we have to reckon with the comparative novelty which certain forms of such testimony possessed before the middle of the 1800s, and the consequent predisposition of judges of the time to reject the pretensions of many such witnesses to throw useful light on the subject, and in particular of witnesses skilled in handwriting and the like.[1] This disinclination, and not any difficulty of pure principle, will account for some of the following questions, which would hardly have been raised for the first time to-day.

§ 2024. Ink, Paper, Spelling, and the Like. The qualities of the ink or paper or type of a document are proper indicia to consider in investigating the genuineness or the age of a document,[1] and expert testimony may be employed to aid in this.[2] Identification by spelling (on the analogies of the rules for handwriting) may be made either by a witness who knows § 2023. [1] On the modern scientific aspects of all the following topics, practical observations of the greatest value will be found in the two works of Albert S. Osborn: Questioned Documents (Rochester, N. Y., 1910); The Problem of Proof (1922).

§ 2024. [1] 1917, Grant v. Jack, 116 Me. 342, 102 Atl. 38 (sending a threatening letter in typewriting; comparison of typewriting specimens, to show authorship by the defendant who had a particular machine, allowed); 1822, Furber v. Hilliard, 2 N. H. 482, semble (type, paper, etc.); 1898, Porell v. Cavanaugh, 69 N. H. 364, 41 Atl. 860 (difference of inks of two signatures to a document, as indicating different times of signing, admitted); 1864, Dubois v. Baker, 30 N. Y. 361; 1812, McCorkle v. Binns, 5 Binney, Pa. 348 (type, paper, etc.); 1909, State v. Kent, 83 Vt. 28, 74 Atl. 389 (peculiar method of using a period in punctuation, admitted).

So also the style of penmanship as being of a different epoch: 1839, Tracy Peerage Case, 10 Cl. & F. 161, 176.

[2] Eng. 1718, Masters v. Masters, 1 P. Wms. 421; 1801, M'Guire's Case, 2 East Pl. Cr. 1002 (ink, paper, etc.).

U. S. Fed. 1893, Owen v. Mining Co., 9 C. C. A. 338, 61 Fed. 6, 13 U. S. App. 248, 270 (expert opinion as to a Mexican printed document, based on paper, ink, and type, admitted); Ind. 1851, Johnson v. State, 2 Ind. 654 (appearance of a bank-bill); 1858, Jones v. State, 11 Ind. 360, (same); Kan. 1905, Huber Mfg. Co. v. Claudel, 71 Kan. 441, 80 Pac. 960 (typewritten and typesigned letters to defendant from plaintiff; agent of defendant allowed to identify them, without specifying reasons; "there might have been" some peculiarity in the typewriting); Mich. 1866, Vinton v. Peck, 14 Mich. 287; Miss. 1859, Jones v. Finch, 37 Miss. 468; N. J. 1893, Levy v. Rust, — N. J. Eq. —, 49 Atl. 1017 (genuineness of seven receipts; typewriting marks considered as evidence of forgery); N. Y. 1912, People v. Storrs, 207 N. Y. 147, 100 N. E. 730 (forgery of a typewritten document; to evidence the defendant's authorship, a specimen, typewritten on the defendant's machine, but otherwise irrelevant, was received; not as coming literally under C. C. P. § 961 d, but as governed by the principle of mechanical traces, ante, § 148); Ut. 1906, State v. Freshwater, 30 Utah 442, 85 Pac. 447 (marks left by a defective typewriter).

The following case suggests one reason why the law lags behind science: 1915, People v. Risley, 214 N. Y. 75, 108 N. E. 200 (forgery in typewriting; to identify the defendant's machine as the writer, evidence was offered and received of the occurrence of thirteen different defects of type appearing in the letters of the alleged forgery and also in the defendant's machine; then testimony of a mathematician to the probability of this precise combination of defects occurring in any other machine was excluded, Seabury, J., diss.; the opinions must be read to be appreciated).

the usage of the person in question or by specimens produced and authenticated.[3]

§ 2025. Deciphering Illegible Writings. One skilled in writings may be called to assist in deciphering a writing illegible or uncertain to the ordinary observation.[1]

§ 2026. Imitations, Forgeries. That any doubt should be raised as to the possibility of an expert forming an opinion, by mere inspection of a disputed signature, as to its being an imitation or forgery — in the old phrase, a "feigned hand" — would perhaps seem incredible to-day to the handwriting expert, with his powerful aids of microscope and photograph.[1] Even before

[3] Eng. 1728, Hales' Trial, 17 How. St. Tr. 173 (the habitual use of a form of promissory note, the use of capitals, etc., admitted to disprove genuineness); 1799, Norman v. Morrell, 4 Ves. 770 (letters used to show a peculiar style of figure made by a testatrix and thus decipher an ambiguous figure in a will); 1850, Brookes v. Tichborne, 5 Exch. 929 (Parke, B.: "It was hardly disputed that if a habit of the plaintiff so to spell the word was proved, it was some evidence against the plaintiff to show that he wrote the libel. Indeed, we think that proposition cannot be disputed, the value of such evidence depending on the degree of peculiarity in the mode of spelling, and the number of occasions in which the plaintiff had used it"); 1864, Cresswell v. Jackson, 4 F. & F. 1, 5 (as bearing on the genuineness of codicils, a habit in the supposed forger of misspelling as in the codicils, admitted); 1888, Parnell Commission's Proceedings, 55th day, Times' Rep., pt. 14, p. 252 (Pigott's fabrication of the criminal letters alleged to have been written by Mr. Parnell was detected in part by his misspelling "hesitency" and by a skilful cross-examination founded on this; quoted ante, § 1368); Can. 1909, R. v. Law, 19 Man. 259 (anonymous libels; comparison with admittedly genuine specimens as to style of expression, etc., held allowable, for experts, but not for the jury alone without experts; this qualification is unsound); 1886, Scott v. Crerar, 11 Ont. 541, 14 Ont. App. 152 (cited more fully ante, § 87); U. S. 1816, Osgood v. Dewey, 13 Johns, N. Y. 239 (habit of spelling, admitted); 1840, Brown v. Kimball, 25 Wend. N. Y. 259, 261, 272 (a deed dated 1770, on a printed form ending "Commonwealth aforesaid," the land being in Massachusetts; evidence that Massachusetts was always described in deeds up to 1780 as a "Province" or "State," but not a "Commonwealth," used to show that the deed was a later forgery).

Compare the cases cited ante, § 87 (skill in composition, etc.), and ante, § 99. On all the above points, compare also the citations ante, § 570.

§ 2025. [1] Eng. 1718, Masters v. Masters, 1 P. Wms. 425 (experts summoned in chancery to decipher a scarcely legible will); 1838, R. v. Williams, 8 C. & P. 434 (expert evidence as to the decipherment of pencil-marks not now visible on the paper); U. S. Cal. C. C. P. 1872, § 1863 ("When the characters in which an instrument is written are difficult to be deciphered, or the language of the instrument is not understood by the Court, the evidence of persons skilled in deciphering the characters or who understand the language, is admissible to declare the characters or the meaning of the language"); 1851, Stone v. Hubbard, 7 Cush. Mass. 597; 1892, Kux v. Bank, 93 Mich. 511, 513, 53 N. W. 828 (whether a bank-book figure was 4 or 1, allowed); 1854, Hardin v. Ho-yo-po nubby, 27 Miss. 568, 583 (meaning of red and black ink-marks, etc., in an official map, not allowed to be explained by an expert, partly because any legal effect of such marks could better appear from other entries, etc.); Mont. Rev. C. 1921, § 10524 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1863); 1843, Sheldon v. Benham, 4 Hill N. Y. 131; 1891, Dresler v. Hard, 127 N. Y. 238, 27 N. E. 823 (whether a word read "Jany" or "July," allowed); Or. Laws 1920, § 720 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1863); P. I. C. C. P. 1901, § 292 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1863); 1910, State v. Sysinger, 25 S. D. 110, 125 N. W. 879; 1878, Beach v. O'Riley, 14 W. Va. 58; 1898, State v. Wetherell, 70 Vt. 274, 40 Atl. 728 (defendant sent to the prosecutrix a magazine with certain words and letters marked; decipherment of the message by an expert, allowed).

Contra: 1903, In re Hopkins, 172 N. Y. 360, 65 N. E. 173 (whether cancellation marks on a testator's signature were made by him; expert testimony not allowed, under Laws 1880, c. 36, § 1, cited ante, § 2016; unsound).

The cases cited ante, § 1955, as to expert interpretation of technical usage or of ciphers, should be compared; there is no difference of principle. The parol-evidence rule (post, § 2461) may also be involved. For testimony to an illiterate's mark, see ante, § 693, n. 2, § 1321.

§ 2026. [1] Compare Hagan, Disputed Handwriting (1894), p. 89; Osborn, Questioned Documents (1910), passim; The Problem of Proof (1922).

these aids became common, the scientific study of the subject had made such trustworthy opinions possible. Nevertheless, there was a time of legal doubt; there were contrary rulings in England in the early part of the 1800s;[2] and the controversy left its mark on our own precedents. To-day, of course, there is no room for difference of opinion, even where the aids of microscope and enlarged photograph are not employed.[3]

§ 2027. Erasures, Alterations, Time of Writing. Probably as an echo of the early controversy just noticed, the question has also seriously been considered whether an expert may testify as to the existence or time of erasures, alterations, or interpolations. Such testimony is often not to be distinguished practically from testimony deciphering illegible writing (ante, § 2025), which has uniformly been held proper. There is, at any rate, no scintilla of reason for doubt.[1]

[2] Admitted: 1723, Bishop Atterbury's Trial, 16 How. St. Tr. 574, 581 (whether a seal could be counterfeited so as not to be detected); 1792, Goodtitle d. Revett v. Braham, 4 T. R. 497, Kenyon, L. C. J. (who apparently recanted in Carey v. Pitt, Peake Add. Cas 131; see note 6, § 1993, ante); 1802, R. v. Cator, 4 Esp. 117; 1845, R. v. Shepherd, 1 Cox Cr. 237, Erle, J.

Excluded: 1822, Gurney v. Langlands, 5 B. & Ald. 330 (a new trial was refused for rejecting such evidence, but its inadmissibility was not affirmed); 1829, Clermont v. Tullidge 4 C. & P. 1, Tenterden, L. C. J., semble.

As late as 1836, Denman, L. C. J., said, in Doe v. Suckermore, 5 A. & E. 751: "I do not indeed understand how such evidence could be rejected, if a witness should swear that his habits gave him the requisite skill; but I do not think that either Court or jury would believe him, or place the least reliance on his opinions; practically, therefore, this chapter may be considered as expunged from the book of evidence." So too the following: 1852, R. v. Coleman, 6 Cox Cr. 163 (whether the names of a drawer, an indorser, and an acceptor were written by the same person, excluded; "it eventually comes to a mere comparison of handwriting").

[3] Admitted: Federal: 1893, Holmes v. Goldsmith, 147 U. S. 150, 163, 13 Sup. 288 (whether a person's handwriting indicated inability to imitate, etc., allowed on the facts); 1907, Rinker v. U. S., 151 Fed. 755, 760, C. C. A. (whether the hand was genuine or disguised); Connecticut: 1831, Lyon v. Lyman, 9 Conn. 60; 1905, McGarry v. Healey, 78 Conn. 365, 62 Atl. 671 (whether a disguised hand would show the original characteristics, etc.); Illinois: 1911, Stitzel v. Miller, 250 Ill. 72, 95 N. E. 53 (identity of traced signatures, allowed; cited more fully ante, § 2016, n. 1); Indiana: Burns Annot. St. 1914, § 2114; ("Persons of skill may be called to testify to the genuineness of a note, bill, draft, or certificate of deposit, or other instrument of writing"); Maine; 1837, Page v. Homans, 14 Me. 478 (whether exact imitation is possible); Massachusetts: 1850, Com. v. Webster, 5 Cush. 301; 1836, Moody v. Rowell, 17 Pick. 490; New Hampshire: 1844, Robertson v. Stark, 15 N. H. 113, semble; New York: 1888, Ludlow v. Warshing, 108 N. Y. 520, 522, 15 N. E. 532; Pennsylvania: 1862, Travis v. Brown, 43 Pa. 9 (cited post, § 2027); Utah: 1899, State v. Webb, 18 Utah 441, 56 Pac. 159 (larceny of cattle; title claimed by the defendant under two bills of sale signed by different persons; expert testimony that the two signatures were made by the same person, admitted); Wisconsin: 1905, Colbert v. State, 125 Wis. 423, 104 N. W. 61 (whether a specimen is in normal handwriting).

The ruling in Neall v. U. S., 56 C. C. A. 31, 118 Fed. 699 (1902), that a person qualified by knowledge of A.'s writing, but not an expert in handwriting, may not testify whether a signature of B.'s name, charged to be a forgery of B.'s name by A., was written by A., is unsound; compare § 693, ante.

Distinguish the following: 1872, Kowing v. Manly, 49 N. Y. 203 (evidence that a writing was not simulated was rejected merely because of irrelevancy); 1902, Hopkins' Will, 172 N. Y. 360, 65 N. E. 173 (expert testimony to identity of authorship of a will-signature and of perpendicular marks of cancellation across the signature, held inadmissible); 1900, State v. Moore, 52 La. An. 603, 605, 26 So. 1001 (whether a forged letter could have been written in 20 minutes, excluded).

Distinguish also the principle of preferred testimony; on an issue of counterfeit banknotes, the officers of the issuing bank are not required to be called (ante, § 1339).

§ 2027. [1] Admitted: Eng. 1799, Norman v. Morrell, 4 Ves. Jr. 770 (alteration); U. S. Ala. 1899, Tally v. Cross, 124 Ala. 567, 26 So. 912 (whether two papers were written at the same time); Ill. 1846, Pate v. People, 8

Ill. 664 (erasure); 1896, Rass v. Sebastian, 160 Ill. 604, 43 N. E. 708 (time of alteration); Ind. 1862, Black v. Dale, 18 Ind. 334 (alteration); Ia. 1913, Putnam v. Hamilton, 159 Ia. 702, 140 N. W. 886 (age of the document); Ky. 1852, Hawkins v. Grimes, 13 B. Monr. 261 (erasure); 1885, Fee v. Taylor, 83 Ky. 263 (erasure); Mass. 1850, Com. v. Webster, 5 Cush. 301 (instrument used in alteration); Mich. 1886, Vinton v. Peck, 14 Mich. 287 (alteration before or after execution); 1883, Ives v. Leonard, 50 Mich. 298, 15 N. W. 463 (alteration); Miss. 1855, Moye v. Herndon, 30 Miss. 118 (alteration); N. Y. 1864, Dubois v. Baker, 30 N. Y. 361 (erasure, before or after execution); Pa. 1859, Fulton v. Hood, 34 Pa. 370 (whether a concluding sentence was written at the same time as the body of the writing; preliminary evidence, as in comparison of specimens, ante, § 2016, Pennsylvania, was assumed necessary; no previous rulings in this State were cited; the following cases in this State keep the same qualification); 1862, Travis v. Brown, 43 Pa. 9 (whether a hand is feigned); 1874, Ballentine v. White, 77 Pa. 26 (whether an alteration was made at the time of execution); 1879, Shaffer v. Clark, 90 Pa. 94 (whether the body and the signature of a writing were in the same hand); Vt. 1892, Stevenson v. Gunning's Estate, 64 Vt. 601, 25 Atl. 697 (whether a figure had been altered, allowable; but here the witness was not qualified); Wash. 1911, State v. Smalls, 63 Wash. 172, 115 Pac. 82 (whether words were written at different times, allowed).

Excluded: 1863, Jewett v. Draper, 6 All. Mass. 36 (that certain words were interpolated).

In Missouri, Swan v. Polk, 7 Mo. 237 (1841), excluded such testimony; but in Wagner v. Jacoby, 26 Mo. 531 (1858), this decision was erroneously taken to exclude only the opinion of non-experts, and the use of expert testimony in such cases was declared permissible; non-expert testimony alone being properly excluded; accord, 1880, State v. Tompkins, 71 Mo. 617; 1881, State v. Owen, 73 Mo. 441.

For a case in which under special circumstances a non-expert was allowed to say whether there had been an erasure, see Yeates v. Waugh, 1 Jones L. N. C. 483.

TITLE V: SYNTHETIC (OR, QUANTITATIVE) RULES

CHAPTER LXIX.

SUB-TITLE I: NUMBER OF WITNESSES REQUIRED; CORROBORATION REQUIRED

A. RULES DEPENDING ON THE KIND OF ISSUE

1. Criminal Cases

2. Civil Cases

B. RULES DEPENDING ON THE KIND OF WITNESS

§ 2030. General Scope of Synthetic or Quantitative Rules. Some of the Auxiliary Probative Rules of Evidence (ante, § 1171) operate by requiring, in specified situations, that a certain quantity of evidential material be provided. This or that piece of evidence, admissible in itself so far as all the foregoing rules are concerned, is declared to be insufficient unless joined sooner or later with other pieces of evidence. It is conditionally admissible; but its admissibility will prove of no avail, because, before the jury is allowed to retire and consider it, all the evidence on that point will be rejected unless the remaining evidential elements have been supplied. Regarded as requiring more than a single piece of admissible evidence, these rules may be termed Quantitative; regarded as requiring various pieces of evidence to be associated in presentation, in order that any one of them may ultimately be of service, these rules may be termed Synthetic.

(1) These rules thus differ in operation essentially from the preceding four groups of Auxiliary Rules. In particular, they differ from the Preferential Rules, in that the latter require that a certain kind of evidence shall be used before any other can be resorted to (ante, §§ 1177, 1285), and are thus both more stringent, in obliging the party first to show that the preferred evidence is unavailable, and more lenient, in not making the preferred evidence indispensable.

(2) The policy leading to these Synthetic rules differs, therefore, from the policy leading to the other groups of rules, in that here the supposed defect or danger lies in the likelihood of too little evidence being presented, in certain situations, and in the desirability of curing the defect by requiring other evidence to be associated with it in those situations. The propriety of a given rule will thus depend upon the course of our experience, in these special situations, as to the kind of evidence usually offered, as to its usual treatment by juries, and as to the expediency and possibility of annulling the danger by requiring additional evidence to be associated.

(3) In one aspect, this type of rule seems not to be truly one of Admissibility (ante, §§ 3, 11), but a rule of the Burden of Producing Evidence (post, § 2487); because it receives evidence which is concededly admissible as to each piece, and merely declares that it shall not alone be sufficient to entitle the party to go to the jury on that point. The truth is that these rules have two distinct aspects, each a genuine one. As between the opposing parties, the question has constantly to be decided which one is bearing the duty of producing evidence, i. e. which one may be dismissed by the Court, as a matter of law, because he has not fulfilled this duty. The determination of this question as between the parties involves a distinct department of the law of Evidence, answering the question, By Whom must the Evidence be Produced? (post, Book II, §§ 2483–2489). But, assuming that this duty has been duly determined, and that it is now upon the plaintiff, the question arises whether there are any specific rules by which he is affected in fulfilling that duty. So far as there are any, they become for him rules of Admissibility, in a broad but real sense. Their effect is to subject his evidence, not only to the ordinary tests of admissibility for each piece of evidence, but also to a synthetic test for a given mass of evidence; so that, although each piece might ordinarily be admissible absolutely, it is here admissible only conditionally, i. e. subject to being rejected if the whole mass of evidence required by the synthetic rule is not ultimately presented. The effect is that in preparation for trial the rule has to be kept in mind that not only must each piece of evidence be in itself admissible, but it must further be associated with other pieces in order not to be ultimately rejected. For example, if by such a rule two witnesses are required to prove a certain act, then not only must a given witness be qualified in general, but his testimony, unless further joined with that of another, will still ultimately be held insufficient. Thus the rule, though in one aspect merely a rule as to the party's duty to produce sufficient evidence, for going to the jury (post, § 2487), is in another aspect a rule of admissibility, in the sense that evidence declared insufficient by a rule of law is in effect rejected and the party's case is left a blank so far as evidence upon that point is concerned.

(4) The rules may be distinguished (though not for purposes of practical arrangement) as either negative or positive in form. Negative rules are those which declare a given quantity to be insufficient. Positive rules are those which declare a given quantity necessary, i. e. declare all other evidence, lacking the specific kind, insufficient. The difference is this: Suppose that evidential elements A, B, C, D, and E are appropriate and admissible for the fact to be proved; a Negative rule declares that A alone or B alone is insufficient; a Positive rule declares that any combination is insufficient unless it contains D. For example, if at cards it should be provided that a hand made up merely of plain cards of spades alone should never win, this would be a negative rule; and if it should be provided that a knave of some suit must be present in any winning hand, this would be a positive rule. Yet though in form the one is negative and the other is positive, both prescribe a quantity of evidence, or, in other words, require one piece of evidence to be synthesized with others in order to suffice. Of the ensuing groups of rules, the first sort (Required Numbers of Witnesses, or, Corroboration) is negative, i. e. one witness alone is not sufficient; the second sort (Required Eye-Witnesses) is positive, i. e. for certain issues a specific kind of witness must always be present; the third sort (Completeness) is positive, i. e. the whole of a document or an oral utterance must be given; and the fourth sort (Authentication) is in some instances negative and in some instances positive; e. g. a rule declaring that the presence of a purporting private signature on a document is alone insufficient to evidence its genuineness, but that the presence of a purporting official seal is sufficient, is a negative rule; while a rule requiring custody, age, and possession, for a document not otherwise authenticated, is a positive rule.

(5) The various Synthetic rules may best be classified for practical purposes under four heads: the first and second concern testimonial evidence only; the third concerns all kinds of evidence whatsoever, as well as all material forming a part of the issue itself; the fourth concerns circumstantial evidence only.

First, there are rules as to the Number of Witnesses required, or, as to required Corroboration of a particular witness; the question throughout being whether a single witness is in certain situations sufficient, and if not, what other evidence will suffice therewith (§§ 2036–2074).

Secondly, there are rules as to the Kind of Witness required; the question here being whether for certain issues a certain kind of witness must always be present among the general mass of evidence; practically, the only kind of necessary witness recognized in our law is the eye-witness (§§ 2077–2091).

Thirdly, there is a rule of Verbal Completeness, i. e. that the whole of a document or of an oral utterance must be offered, in order that any part of it may be received (§§ 2094–2125).

Fourthly, in the Authentication of documents or chattels (i. e. proving their genuineness, or due execution), there are rules which declare certain kinds of circumstantial evidence to be insufficient or necessary (§§ 2129–2169).

Sub-title I: Number of Witnesses Required; Corroboration Required

§ 2032. History of Rules of Number.[1] It is well known that in the civil law of Continental Europe, the great rival of the English common law, its process of proof rested fundamentally on a numerical system, — commonly termed, in its flourishing days, the system of "legal proofs." By that system, a single witness to a fact was in general not sufficient; for the majority of issues or material facts, two witnesses sufficed; specific numbers of witnesses were in certain cases required; and in some regions, and for some purposes, the weight to be given to each witness' testimony was measured and represented in numerical values, even by counting halves and quarters of a witness; and this system continued in force down to the Napoleonic period, — in most countries, into the 1800s.

In the English common-law institution of jury trial, on the other hand, it was completely otherwise. At common law, there was but a single instance, and that a borrowed and modern one, of almost accidental and of anomalous origin (the rule in perjury), in which a numerical rule existed; what little else there is to-day of that sort has come into our system either by express statutes (all but one dating since 1800), or by the filtration of civil-law rules through the court of chancery, or by local judicial invention. The reason of this contrast, and of our successful resistance to the civil-law rules, and the causes of our freedom from a principle of evidence now generally acknowledged to be unsound and futile, form a history worth examining.

§ 2032. [1] The ensuing history was originally printed in the Harvard Law Review, 1901, XV. 83. An interesting contribution to the subject is found in Mr. John Marshall Gest's article on The Responsive Answer in Equity, read before the Pennsylvania Bar Association, June, 1904, and reprinted in the American Law Register, LII, 537.

1. It has been doubted whether the Roman law in its prime (that is, before 300 A. D.) proceeded upon a numerical system in its treatment of witnesses.[2] But it is clear that by the time of the Emperor Constantine, and also in the later codification of the Emperor Justinian, which served as a sufficient foundation for the Continental civil law, the Roman law had adopted the general rule that one witness alone was insufficient upon any material point.[3] This rule later came to be adopted in the Continental civil law, founded in part on the Roman law.[4]

But, long before this, it had become a part of the canon or ecclesiastical law, which for much of its material was accustomed to draw upon the Roman law. The ecclesiastical law developed the numerical principle freely, and elaborated many specific rules as to the number of witnesses necessary in various situations; against a cardinal, for example, twelve or perhaps forty-four witnesses were required. It is enough to note that its general and fundamental rule was that a single witness was in no case sufficient.[5] In the Church's

[2] "The canonists erroneously supposed that the [orthodox] Roman jurists understood the maxim 'testis unus testis nullus' in the sense that a single witness did not suffice for proof. It was Constantine who first laid down the arbitrary rule that one witness did not suffice; and the canon law accepted the principle with the more respect because it was sanctioned in Deuteronomy" (Glasson, Histoire du droit et des institutions de la France, VI, 543; 1895).

[3] Digesta, xxii, 5, 12 (Ulpian; "Ubi numerus testium non adiicitur, etiam duo sufficiunt; pluralis enim elocutio duorum numero contenta est"); Codex, iv, 20, 4 (A. D. 283; "solam testationem prolatam, nec aliis legitimis adminiculis causa approbata, nullius esse momenti certum est"); Codex, iv, 9, § 1 (A. D. 334; "Simili modo sanximus ut unius testimonium nemo judicum in quocunque causa facile patiatur admitti. Et nunc manifeste sancimus ut unius omnino testis responsio non audiatur, etiamsi præclare curiæ honore præfulgeat").

[4] This later Continental law had no direct influence on our own law, and need not be further noticed.

Its tenor in the 1700s and earlier may be seen in Mascardus and other contemporary authors, and in Bonnier, Traité des Preuves, 1888, 5th ed., §§ 293, 432; Pothier, ed. 1821, Procédure Civile, pt. 1, c. iii. A short account of the system in its final form is given in the Edinburgh Review, October, 1845, p. 328.

Its history may be found in the following works: 1882, Esmein, Histoire de la procédure criminelle en France, 260, 266 (transl. Simpson; Continental Legal History Series, Vol. V, 1913, pp. 57, 516, 620); 1900, Pertile, Storia del diritto italiano, 2d ed., vol. VI, pt. 1, p. 386 (b. V, c. VIII, Sect. 1); 1917, S. Messina, La prova per testimoni nel processo penale del medio evo (1912, Lucchini's Rivista Penale, vol. 76, p. 511); G. Salvioli, Le prove legali secondo la dottrina piu antica (1916, Rivista giuridica d'Italia, vol. II); G. Salvioli, Note per la storia del procedimento criminale (1918, Accademia di scienze morale e politiche della Società Reale di Napoli; c. ii, "Moral Certainty of Proof in Early Medieval Law"; c. iii, "'Legal Proofs' in the early Italian Practice"; c. iv, "The Theory of Presumptions"; c. v, "The Theory of Common Repute in Canon Law").

[5] Ante, 1400, Corpus Juris Canonici, Decret. Greg. lib. ii, tit. xx, de testibus, c. 23 ("licet quædam sint causæ, quæ plures quam duos exigant testes, nulla est tamen causa, quæ unius tantum testimonio, quamvis legitimo, rationabiliter terminetur"); see also ib. c. 28, c. 4 (quoting the Bible); Decret. pars ii, causa iv, qu. ii and iii, c. iv, § 26, reproducing Ulpian; 1552, Reformatio Legum [Angliæ] Ecclesiasticarum, tit. de testibus, c. 40 ("Testes system, however, this rule received an additional sanction, over and above the mere precedent of Roman law, from the law of God as revealed in Holy Writ; for passages in the Bible, both in Old and New Testaments, were confidently appealed to as justifying and requiring this rule by Divine command;[6] and this sanction sufficed to give to the numerical system of the ecclesiastical law an overbearing momentum and a sacred orthodoxy which must be considered in order to appreciate the force against which in due time the common-law judges had to struggle. The ecclesiastical Court's procedure, developing rapidly after the 1200s, exercised the dominant influence for several centuries (post, § 2252) in shaping the procedure, both civil and criminal, of the temporal courts in all the kingdoms of western Europe.

The truth was, however, that at this time of the Papal Decretals, and long after the end of the Middle Ages, the rule precisely accorded with the testimonial notions of the time. It was not, in its spirit, an invention of the ecclesiastical lawyers, nor yet a mere continuance of Roman precedent; it was a natural reflection of the fixed popular probative notions of the time, — notions which prevailed as well in the sturdy, self-centred island of England as on the Continent at large. The prevalence and meaning of this underlying notion must now be examined.

2. Civilization, needless to say, almost began over again with the invasion and settlement of southern and western Europe by the Gothic hordes in the 400s and 500s. Primitive notions prevailed once more, and the slow process of development had to be repeated, — repeated for the law as well as for other departments of life. Much Roman law remained in the South, and a large body of it was received in a mass in Germany in the 1500s; but this affected chiefly specific rules; the popular and general instinctive legal notions had to grow once more out of primitive into advanced forms. Now singulares nihil probant"); 1713, Gibson, Codex Jur. Eccl. Angl. 1054 ("In the spiritual court, they admit no proof but by two witnesses at least; in the temporal court, one witness, in many cases, is judged sufficient"); 1726, Ayliffe, Parergon, 541, 544 ("Though regularly single witnesses make no proof according to the civil and canon law, nor yet so much as half proof by these laws," yet there are exceptions; in criminal causes, no exception is named except for a confession); 1738, Oughton, Ordo Judiciorum, tit. 83, p. 127 ("Jura dicunt, quod regulariter duo testes sufficiunt").

For the modern ecclesiastical law, as keeping up these rules, see Hinschius (1897), System d. katholischen Kirchenrechts, pt. vi, pp. 101, 108, § 364; Bishop Onderdonk's Trial (1845), Appleton's ed., 227, 242, 277; Droste, Canonical Procedure, tr. Messmer (1887), p. 106. In the revised Canon law of the Catholic Church they appear in the following canons: Codex Juris Canonici Pii X, 1917, Can. 1791, § 1 ("Unius testis depositio plenam fidem non facit, nisi sit testis qualificatus qui deponat de rebus ex officio gestis"); § 2 ("Si sub juramenti fide duæ vel tres personæ, omni exceptione majores, sibi firmiter cohærentes, de aliqua re vel facto in judicio testificentur de scientia propria, sufficiens probatio habetur; nisi" etc.)

[6] Deut. xvii, 6: ["The murderer shall be put to death]; but at the mouth of one witness [only] he shall not be put to death"; ib. xix, 15: "For any iniquity . . . at the mouth of two witnesses, or at the mouth of three witnesses, shall the matter be established"; Numb. xxxv, 30 (like Deut. xvii, 6); Matt. xviii, 16: ["If thy brother trespass against thee, and reject thy complaint,] then take with thee one or two more, that in the mouth of two or three witnesses every word may be established"; II Cor. xiii, 1 (similar); I Tim. v, 19; Hebr. x, 28 (allusions to the foregoing ideas); John viii, 17: "It is also written in your law that the testimony of two men is true."

one of the universal and marked primitive notions is that of the oath as a formal act, mechanically and 'ipso facto' efficacious (like the ordeal and the trial by battle), and quantitative in its nature. This notion is merely one particular phase of the entire system of formalism inherent in the stage of intellectual development at which our Germanic ancestors were in that epoch. It is a matter of the whole spirit of the times, not of a particular or local belief; and since the history with which we are now concerned is that of the growth and change of a radical and epochal conception, not easy to reproduce in our modern imaginations, it may be worth while (for obtaining a starting point) to remind ourselves of its inherent and pervasive nature by the following passage of acute analysis:

1885, Professor Andreas Heusler, Institutions of Germanic Private Law, I, 45, 49, 52:[7] "From the side of spiritual and moral development, the legal life of every civilized people exhibits itself in a movement through three stages; these may be termed the divinational, the formal, and the intellectual stages. . . . The transition from one stage to the other does not occur abruptly and immediately; thus, for example, the judgments of God, in the form known to history, as well as the oath itself, are institutions which, in their deepest sense, belong to the first stage, but have been adopted in the second stage, that of legal formalism. . . . By 'legal formalism' I mean that condition of legal thought in which the sensibly perceivable is accepted as the only or at least the dominant element producing legal effects, and the inward circumstances of a spiritual sort — dispositions, volitions, purposes, and the like — are excluded or forced into the background. In this larger sense the term 'formalism' is ordinarily not taken; we are apt rather by that term to mean merely the notion that transactions which are to have legal significance must have a prescribed form, i. e. a certain mode of utterance or action which is alien to the speech or doing of ordinary life. This external aspect of 'formalism' is, however, only the half of that which I here include by that name; the other half is what may be called the inward formalism, and it consists in this, that the substantial effect, the intrinsic value of the incidents of legal life, is estimated by (as it were) stencils fixed by law. Thus, for example, we contrast the formal and the rational theory of proof, and under the former we class the rule that for full proof a single witness does not suffice, but that two credible witnesses are necessary. Where lies the formalism here? This rule has nothing to do with 'form' in the narrow sense noted above; the real element of formalism in it is that (by reason of long experience with the untrustworthiness of witnesses) a rule of thumb has been made, which denies to the judge his free discretion in the estimation of testimony and lays down a fixed law, not trusting to the often deceptive valuation of each man's credibility, character, and the like, but finding its security in the external mark of numbers. And so, in general, we may properly use the term 'formalism' of the law to express that tendency which excludes from consideration inward qualities, motives, volitions, and the like, and founds legal rules on external phenomena. . . . The formalism of Germanic procedure lays the fullest stress on the parties' acts, and at the same time confines these to prescribed formalities. The summons is given by the one party to the other; the detailed steps of the proceeding, even to the judgment, are brought forth in formal manner by the demands of the parties; the judgment is itself primarily only a determination as to which party has the privilege of making proof, and the proof itself is effectuated either by the oath, the most formal method conceivable, and eventually by the 'judicium dei'. One may thus perceive how hateful and obnoxious to the Germanic clansman were the innovations which the procedure of the royal courts introduced and sought also to bring into the popular courts, how unwillingly he suffered the mode of proof by inquisition [jury], and how he chose rather to avoid the royal court and obstinately to suffer the consequences of contumacy than to submit himself to a procedure in which the tribunal's discretion had free play in the valuation of proof."

[7] This great thinker, to be compared with Professor Brunner, in the value of his contributions to legal history, later became Chief Justice of the Swiss Court at Basel.

The same formalistic conception of law in general and of proof in particular has been plainly described, in its present application to the oath, by Professor Brunner, that greatest of Germanists: [8]

"[The domination of formalism and the narrow limits of judicial freedom of judgment were the marked features of Germanic procedure.] It was not to the Court, and with the object of persuading the Court, that proof was furnished, but to the opponent, and with regard to the persuasion or belief of the whole body. The general principle [of formalism] included the proof-procedure; here, too, was the judicial discretion replaced by the compulsion of form. Thus the proof was not submitted to the judge's valuation, but was prescribed once for all by rules which must be fulfilled before the proof tested by them could be regarded as efficacious. These rules consisted of forms, in which the proof-result must manifest itself or (so to speak) crystallize itself, while proof-material available informally or in other forms remains disregarded. . . . The formalism of the party's oath exhibits itself above all in the feature that the oath is 'staffed'; for the opponent of the swearer, holding in his hand a staff, pronounces to the latter the oath-formula, which contains the allegation presented for decision. The swearer is obliged to repeat word for word this 'staffed' formula, while touching the staff and calling upon God. A single error of word defaulted him. . . . [So also for proof by witnesses.] There was no questioning of them. The witnesses had to swear, word for word, to the allegation presented for decision. The probative force of the witnesses' doings lay exclusively in the oath-form of their utterance. Only by an error in this form (it would seem) could the witnesses be ineffective. . . . Apart from peculiarities of special tribal laws, the controversy was decided as soon as the witnesses had sworn their oath according to the necessary formalities. If the opponent of their party was unwilling to let it rest here, he had (by some customs) a single means of overthrowing the witnesses, . . . [namely,] a duel with the impeached witnesses settled the result of the controversy."

The oath, then, in the Germanic epoch is but a single product of the pervading formalistic conception of procedure and of proof. All through the Saxon and Norman times, the oath is a verbal formula, which, if successfully performed without immediate disaster, is conceded to be efficacious 'per se,' and irrespective of personal credit.

It follows, too, since the performance of this act is in itself efficacious, that the multiple performance of it, if persons can be obtained who will achieve this, must multiply its probative value proportionately. This numerical conception is inherent in the general formalism of it. Thus, again, all through these times, the oath is for greater causes sworn by greater numbers, sometimes six-handed, or twelve-handed, or twenty-four-handed; that is, a degree of greater certainty is thought to be attained, not by analyzing the significance of each oath in itself and relatively to the person, but by increasing the number of the oaths. An oath was one oath; and though as between persons of inferior and superior rank certain differences were sometimes recognized, yet in general and between persons of the same rank one oath was equal to any other oath, with no distinctions based on their testimonial equipment for the case in hand. In short, whatever varieties of probative situations present themselves, the only expedient that suggests itself seems to be some change in the number of oaths.[9]

[8] Die Entstehung der Schwurgerichte, ed. 1872, 48, 53.

Little by little, to be sure, a newer idea develops. Numerous oaths may be required to overcome certain strong masses of (what we should now call) presumptive evidence. The classes of cases in which oaths are allowed operative force 'per se' are diminished. Most important of all, witnesses may be examined briefly before being allowed to take the oath, and witnesses showing a total lack of knowledge may not be allowed to swear;[10] and of a piece with this comes the separate examination of witnesses swearing on the same side, for a conflict in their stories when separately examined resulted in discrediting their oaths. Even in this latter expedient the feebleness of the new reasoning process is seen, in that the oaths appear (at any rate when taken before the judges and not before a jury) merely to fail as formal acts, and little attempt is made to decide upon the witnesses' relative personal credit. Finally, the spread of jury trial must have helped gradually to develop the more rational spirit of investigation of facts and to outlaw the more marked features of primitive formalism. But these steps of progress in popular conceptions of the nature of proof are only slow and gradual, — much more so than one might suppose. The merely superstitious and extreme notion of a witness' oath dies out; but the mechanical, quantitative, formal conception persists for many centuries.

Its purely quantitative and ponderative nature may be seen in the treatment of opposing witnesses' contradictions:

Professor J. B. Thayer, Preliminary Treatise on Evidence, 23: "We read [in a case of 'cui in vita,' in 1308], that they were at issue 'issint cesti qui mieulx prove mieulx av.' and the tenant proves by sixteen men, etc., and the demandant by twelve; and because the tenant's proof '"fuit greindr" than the demandant's, it was awarded,' etc. If we take Fitzherbert's account to be accurate, it might appear that the twelve men on each side cancelled each other and left a total of four to the credit of the tenant, a result which left his proof the better."[11]

[9] The rules here summarily referred to may be found in Brunner, ubi supra, c. iii; Brunner, Deutsche Rechtsgeschichte, II, 387, 397; Thayer, Preliminary Treatise on Evidence, 17–34; Lea, Superstition and Force, 4th ed., 21–100; Declareuil, Les preuves judiciaires dans le droit franc du 5me au 8me siècle (Nouv. revue hist. de droit fr. et étr., 1899, p. 188); Glasson, ubi supra, III, 462, 485, 487.

[10] Yet even here the innovation made little direct change in the formal effectiveness of the oath: Brunner, Schwurgerichte, 67, 68, 85, 198.

[11] See also Thayer, ubi supra, 22, 98, 99; and the citations ante, § 1837.

The case above cited by Thayer is now to be found in Maitland's edition of the Year Books, Vol. I (Selden Soc. Pub., Vol. XVII), 2 Ed. II, 1308, No. 54, p. 111 ("And because Tibald's proof was better and greater," says one text; but another says, "was proved by more"). An example of 1312 A. D. is seen in Cressy v. Siward, Y. B. 5 Edw. I, Easter, No. 55, p. 121 (Bolland's ed., Selden Soc. Pub. vol. XXXIII, 1916), where in a plea of serfdom the defendant objects to the tender of H. as a witness "because he is alone and the testimony of a single person is as the testimony of no one."

It is surprising to us to-day to note how long this conception of the oath (i. e. of a single testimonial assertion) persisted.[12] What is material to our purpose is that as a popular notion and instinctive mental attitude it was still in almost full force in the 1500s, at the time when the conflict of the common law and the ecclesiastical system came upon the stage. The vital force of this quantitative idea of a witness' testimony is seen pressing to the surface in abundant casual instances down into the 1700s;[13] and it is only here and there that a protest is raised against its fallacy.[14] It is probable, indeed, that the long delay in abolishing the disqualification of witnesses by interest (ante, § 575), and the popularity of those rules till the end of the 1700s, was due to a lurking feeling that an oath-assertion, merely as such, of anybody whatever was (if once admitted) at least good for something, — counted for one as testimony.[15] Only by a slow and comparatively recent development came the rational notion of analyzing and valuing testimony other than by numbers. Even to-day, among juries in some places, there is no doubt a mere counting of oaths or witnesses.[16]

Impossible as it may be to note in any precise epoch the parting of the ways, and to put ourselves back fully into the mental condition of the former days, the living force of the old numerical conception as late as the 1500s and 1600s cannot be doubted. It appears plainly enough even on the dead printed pages of the State Trials; and its nature has been very well phrased by Sir James Stephen, in the following passage:

1883, Sir James Stephen, History of the Criminal Law, I, 400: "The opinion of the time [before 1700] seems to have been that, if a man came and swore to anything whatever, he ought to be believed, unless he was directly contradicted. . . . The juries seem to have thought (as they very often still think) that a direct unqualified oath by an eye-

[12] "All our old collections of customary law emulate each other in reminding us that a single witness cannot suffice, but that proof is made as soon as two at least are found to testify to the same effect. Curiously enough, this bizarre system was accepted by our jurists, down to the Revolution, without the least protest" (Glasson, ubi supra, 543).

[13] 1560, Thorne v. Rolff, Dyer 185 a (in a case where two witnesses of a husband's death were on one side and none on the other side, the old maxim is sanctioned, 'qui melius probat, melius habet'); 1571, Duke of Norfolk's Trial, Jardine's Crim. Tr. I, 178 (Richard Candish was sworn and testified to treasonable words of the accused, "when the Duke gave him reproachful words of discredit"; upon which Serjeant Barham interjected, "He is sworn, there needeth no more proving"); 1633, Massinger, in "A New Way to Pay Old Debts," act 5, sc. 1 (Sir Giles Overreach; "Besides, I know thou art a public notary, and such stand in law for a dozen witnesses"); 1683, L. C. J. Pemberton, in Lord Russell's Trial, 9 How. St. Tr. 577, 618 ("If you cannot contradict them by testimony, it will be taken to be a proof"); 1715, Parker, C. J., in R. v. Muscot, 10 Mod. 192 ("a credible and probable witness shall turn the scale in favor of either party"); 1736, Lord Hardwicke, C. J., in R. v. Nunez, Lee cas. T. Hardwicke, 266 ("One witness is not sufficient to convict a man of perjury, unless there were very strong circumstances; because one man's oath is as good as another's").

On the general fact, see Holdsworth, History of the English Law, vol. I, 3d ed. 1922, p. 302.

[14] See the remarks of Sir John Hawles, Solicitor-General (about 1700), in 8 How. St. Tr. 741.

[15] Ante 1726, Chief Baron Gilbert, Evidence, 139: "Every plain and honest man affirming the truth of any matter under the sanction and solemnity of an oath is entitled to faith and credit."

[16] Compare the measures taken in the French Code d'Instruction Criminelle of 1808 to educate juries out of this attitude: Esmein, ubi supra, 545.

or ear-witness has, so to speak, a mechanical value, and must be believed unless it is distinctly contradicted. . . . If the Court regarded a man as a 'good' (i. e. a competent) 'witness,' the jury seem to have believed him as a matter of course, unless he was contradicted; though there are a few exceptions. . . . The most remarkable illustration of these remarks is to be found in the trial of the five Jesuits. . . . [Chief Justice Scroggs says:] 'Mr. Fenwick says to all this, "Here is nothing against us but talking and swearing." But, for that, he hath been told (if it were possible for him to learn) that all testimony is but talking and swearing; for all things, all men's lives and fortunes, are determined by an oath, and an oath is by talking, by kissing the Book, and calling God to witness to the truth of what is said.' . . . Scroggs was right as to what it [the practice of juries] actually was, and to a certain extent still is. It is true that juries do attach extraordinary importance to the dead weight of an oath."

3. There was, therefore (and this is at once the sum of the foregoing and the key to the ensuing history), in the English common-law courts of the 1500s, nothing at all of repugnance to the numerical system already fully accepted in the ecclesiastical law. The same popular probative notion there prevailed among judges, juries, and counsellors as on the Continent. They were equally prepared and accustomed to weigh testimonies by numbers, and therefore would see nothing fallacious in a rule declaring one witness not enough, and requiring specified numbers of witnesses.

And this was a period when the recognition of such a rule was in fact frequently demanded of the common-law Courts. It was a time when the conflict between the ecclesiastical and the common-law Courts was at its last and perhaps its crucial stage, — a conflict important in other respects to the rules of Evidence.[17] The methods of the ecclesiastical Courts had formed those of the Continental lay Courts during the preceding two centuries. They were now forming those of the Courts of chancery and of admiralty. The ecclesiastical lawyers were a distinguished and powerful body; their influence was notably felt in politics and in political trials. There was no way of yet knowing whether their system and not the common law system might ultimately preponderate in the shaping of English jurisprudence.[18] When their rule declaring one witness insufficient was appealed to, the appeal had behind it the force of presumption due to the prestige of a great system, orthodox on the Continent, and not unequal in its rivalry in England. Add to this, the immense force of the invocation of the law of God, of the Scriptures sanctioning the rule of the Church's law and protecting the innocent against condemnation by single witnesses.

Such was the attempt now repeatedly made to fix upon jury trials at common law the fundamental rule of the ecclesiastical law; and it is apparent, from the utterances recorded as late as the early 1600s, that there was then no certainty that the attempt would not succeed:

[17] Compare the history of the rule against self-crimination (post, § 2250).

[18] See Professor F.W. Maitland's enlightening essay, English Law and the Renaissance (1901).

1637, Bishop of Lincoln's Trial, 3 How. St. Tr. 769, 786; COTTINGTON, L. C.: "It is not always necessary in this Court to have a truth proved by two or three witnesses; men will be wary in bribery; . . . and 'singularis testis' many times shall move and induce me verily to believe an act done, when more proofs are shunned." [19]

The traditional practice of the common-law Courts, at the time of this attempt, is revealed definitely in the controversy over certain prohibitions issued by them forbidding the ecclesiastical Courts to take cognizance of matters temporal (i. e. not matrimonial nor testamentary). It is not clear that the former specifically acted on the ground of the latter's employing an improper rule of Evidence; they apparently disputed the jurisdiction, not the mode of proof. But it seems to be conceded by the ecclesiastics that the common-law judges in practice asked for no more than one witness. These had as yet probably not had the issue forced upon them in their own courts; but their orthodox practice is clear; they never required a number of witnesses before the jury:

1605, Bancroft's Articuli Cleri, and the Judge's Answers, 2 Co. Inst. 599, 608; 2 How. St. Tr. 131, 143. "Objection [by the Clergy]: There is a new devised suggestion in the temporall Courts commonly received and allowed, whereby they may at their will and pleasure draw any cause whatsoever from the ecclesiasticall Court; for example, many prohibitions have lately come forth upon this suggestion, that the laws ecclesiasticall do require two witnesses, where the common law accepteth of one, and [that] therefore it is 'contra legem terræ' for the ecclesiasticall judge to insist upon two witnesses to prove his cause." Answer [by the Judges]: "If the question be upon payment or setting out of tithes, or upon the proofe of a legacy or marriage, or such like incidence [of strictly ecclesiastical jurisdiction], we are to leave it to the tryall of their law, though the party have but one witness; but where the matter is not determinable in the ecclesiastical court, there lyeth a prohibition, either upon or without such a surmise." [20]

It is about this time that the indications occur (in the passages above quoted) of a judicial and legislative inclination to yield to the ecclesiastical principle, and of a general attempt to carry into the common-law courts the fundamental rule that a single witness was not sufficient.[21]

[19] See also: 1620, Lord Bacon's Trial, 2 How. St. Tr. 1087, 1093; 1622, Adams v. Canon, Dyer 53 b (quoted ante, § 1364); 1623, R. v. Newton, Dyer 99 b, note; 1632, Sherfield's Trial, 3 How. St. Tr. 519, 542, 545; 1640, Strafford's Trial, 3 How. St. Tr. 1427, 1445, 1450; many other scattered instances might be found. The statutory rule for treason was said to have been enacted in direct imitation of the ecclesiastical law: post, § 2036. The civil-law rules actually obtained force in Scotland: 1705, Green's Trial, 14 How. St. Tr. 1199, 1235.

[20] The following are instances of prohibitions arising in this controversy: 1607, Chadron v. Harris, Noy 12 (plea, payment of legacy; prohibition not granted); 1611, Robert's Case, 12 Co. 65, Cro. Jac. 269 (mere surmise in advance, not sufficient to secure a prohibition); 1629, Warner v. Barret, Hetley 87 (plea of 'plene administravit'; prohibition apparently granted); 1688, Richardson v. Disbrow, 1 Ventr. 291 (legacy; prohibition issued); 1691, Shotter v. Friend, 3 Mod. 238 (payment of legacy; prohibition issuable); 1698, Breedon v. Gill, 1 Ld. Raym. 219, 221 (issuable for a legacy, but not for revocation of oral will).

[21] During the 1500s and 1600s the statutes also exhibit the pervasiveness of the numerical notions: 1558, St. 1 Eliz. c. 1, § 27 ("two sufficient witnesses" required for offences under this act against heresy and foreign church authority); 1597, St. 39 Eliz. c. 20, § 10 ("two sufficient witnesses" required for offences in cloth-making); § 7 (for certain offences, the pillory is provided, "being lawfully convicted by the verdict of twelve men and two sufficient witnesses"); 1627, 13 Car. I, c. 2 (for violations of the Sunday law, "two

4. But the attempt failed — and failed absolutely. After the middle of the 1600s there never was any doubt that the common law of England in jury trials rejected entirely the numerical system of counting witnesses and of requiring specific numbers.[22] The only exception to this — the case of perjury — "proves the rule," because it was not established until the early 1700s (post, § 2040), when the rejection of the numerical system had been already definitely accomplished.

5. What, then, was the reason why the common-law Court, in their system of evidence for jury trials, declined to number witnesses like the ecclesiastical Court, and to lay down the rule that a single witness was insufficient?

Briefly, the different nature of the tribunal. The situation which would call for such a rule simply did not exist for the common-law judge. The case of having merely one witness could not arise; for the jurymen were already witnesses to themselves, as well as triers. It is unnecessary here to do more than recall that vital circumstance which has in so many ways affected the history of our rules of Evidence, namely, that the jury, until at least the early 1700s, were in legal theory entitled to avail themselves of information contributed personally by themselves and obtained independently of the witnesses produced in court; and that during the 1500s and 1600s this joint quality of witnesses and jurors still obtained practically or more witnesses" or the party's confession, are to suffice before the magistrates); 1688, 1 W. & M. c. 18, §§ 14, 19; 1691, 3 & 4 W. & M. c. 11, § 5. In 1736-37, a statute was enacted to prevent smuggling (Cobbett's Parl. Hist. IX, 1229, Campbell's Lives of the Chancellors, VI, 149) penalizing the bearing of arms in companies of three or more when travelling, "on proof by two witnesses that their intention was to assist" in smuggling.

[22] There is a foreshadowing of it in the previous century: 1551, Reniger v. Fogossa, Plowd. 1, 8, 12 (where the Court's opinion was for the defendant, without reasons given; but the defendant had argued that one witness sufficed in jury trials); Plowden published in 1578, and the case's significance dates from that time. But no positive deliverance seems to come till after the middle of the 1600s: 1662, Tong's Trial, 6 How. St. Tr. 226, Kelyng ("at common law, one witness is sufficient to a jury"); then Sir Matthew Hale and L.C.J. Holt, quoted post, emphasize this before the end of the century. Thereafter the matter is assumed on all hands: 1806, L.C. Erskine, in Clifford v. Brooke, 13 Ves. Jr. 131, 134 (the law of one witness' sufficiency "is uniform in principle and practice, with the single exception of the case of perjury").

In the American colonies the notion is seen surviving somewhat later than in England: Conn. 1672, Conn. Revision, p. 69 ("It is ordered by this Court that no person for any fact committed shall be put to death without the testimony of two or three witnesses, or that which is equivalent thereunto"; this is still the law in Connecticut; post, § 2044, n. 1); Mass. 1641, Mass. Body of Liberties (Whitmore's ed.) § 47 ("No man shall be put to death without the testimony of two or three witnesses or that which is equivalent thereto"; repeated in Revisions of 1660 and 1672, "Witnesses"); 1660, Mass. Revised Laws and Liberties, "Innkeepers," § 13 (offences against the liquor-laws are to be determined by magistrate's view or constable's affirmation "and one sufficient witness, with circumstances concurring, or two witnesses, or confession of the party"; repeated in revision of 1672, "Innkeepers"); Pa. 1664, Duke of York's Laws, Eastman's Courts and Lawyers of Pennsylvania, 1922, I, 40 (like Mass. Body of Liberties); 1682, Great Body of the Laws, c. 36, in Eastman, ubi supra, 76 ("There shall be two credible witnesses in all cases, in order to judgement"); 1692, Proprietor v. Keith, Pa. Col. Cas. 117, 139, 141 (libel; the defendant's printing was evidenced by the finding of the printing-frame in his house; the jury retired, but came back to ask "whether the law did not require two evidences to find a man guilty"; c. 36 of the Body of Laws provided that "there shall be two credible witnesses in all cases in order to judgement"; Counsel Lloyd then read a passage "out of a law book, that they were to find it by evidences, or on their own knowledge, or otherwise; now, says D. Lloyd, this 'otherwise' is the frame which you have, which is evidence sufficient"; but the jury disagreed, some of them thinking the evidence insufficient).

for a more or less considerable part of their evidential material.[23] The situation was, therefore, radically different for the common-law judge and the ecclesiastical judge. The former need not and could not measure the witnesses that appeared before him. He could not declare one insufficient and two or more necessary, for this was not all the evidence. There was always, besides the witnesses produced in court, an indefinite and supplementary quantity of evidence existing in the breasts of the jurors. There were (as Fortescue says) twelve other witnesses besides the one produced before the bar; and, as to the extent of the evidential contribution of these others, the judge did not know and had no right to know what it amounted to. It was therefore impossible and preposterous for him to attempt to declare insufficient and to reject the one or more witnesses produced in court. The jury might still go out and find a verdict upon no witnesses (of the ordinary kind) at all. Judicial rules of number would thus be wholly vain and out of place.

Such was the logical and necessary answer to any attempt to introduce the numerical system in jury trials. This had been Fortescue's reasoning in the 1400s; and this was the answer of the judges in the late 1600s, when the question was forced upon them:

Circa 1460, Sir John FORTESCUE, L. C., in his De Laudibus Legum Angliæ, c. 33: "Prince: 'But, my good chancellor, though the method [of trial by jury] whereby the laws of England sift out the truth in matters which are at issue highly pleases me; yet there rests one doubt with me, whether it be not repugnant to Scripture. . . . Our Saviour, speaking of offences and forgiving one another, among other things delivers himself thus: "If thy brother will not hear thee, then take with thee one or two more, that in the mouth of two or three witnesses every word may be established." Now if in the mouth of two or three witnesses God will establish every word, why do we look for the truth in dubious cases from the evidence of more than two or three witnesses? No one can lay better or other foundation than our Lord hath laid. This is what in some measure makes me hesitate concerning the proceedings according to the laws of England in matters of proof; wherefore I desire your answer to this objection.' Chancellor: 'The laws of England, sir, do not contradict these passages of Scripture for which you seem to be so concerned; though they pursue a method somewhat different in coming at and discovering the truth. . . . If the testimony of two be true, 'a fortiori' the testimony of twelve ought rather to be presumed to be so. The rule of law says "the more always contains in it that which is less."[24] . . . [The law of England] never decides a cause only by witnesses, when it can be decided by a jury of twelve men, the best and most effectual method for the trial of the truth, and in which respect no other laws can compare with it.' . . . Prince: 'I am convinced that the laws of England eminently excel, beyond the laws of all other countries, in the case you have been now endeavoring to explain. And yet I have heard that some of my ancestors, kings of England, have been so far from being pleased with those laws that they have been industrious to introduce and make the civil laws a part of the constitution, in prejudice of the common law. This makes me wonder what they could intend or be at by such behavior.'"

1696, Vaughan's Trial, 13 How. St. Tr. 485, 535, treason upon the high seas;[25] it was [23] This fact has been fully noticed ante, §§1364, 1800; the demonstration has been made in Thayer's Preliminary Treatise on Evidence, 137–170.

[24] Here he names the instances of "trial" by witnesses without jury, in admiralty, etc.

[25] Apparently the statute under which this trial was had, substituting the jury trial for trial by the civil law, was passed chiefly for the very purpose of avoiding the latter's numerical rules; see the preamble to St. 27 H. VIII, c. 4 (1535); St. 28 H. VIII, c. 15; Hawkins, Pl. Cr., b. I, c. 37, § 3; c. 31, § 12.

argued that the admiralty trial under the civil law was the proper one. L. C. J. HOLT: "There needs not two witnesses to prove him a subject [of the King]; . . . Our trials by juries are of such consideration in our law that we allow their determination to be best and most advantageous to the subject; and therefore less evidence is required than by the civil law. So said Fortesque in his commendation of the laws of England." Dr. Oldish: "Because the jury are witnesses in reality, according to the laws of England, being presumed to be 'ex vicineto'; but when it is on the high and open seas, they are not then presumed to be 'ex vicineto', and so must be instructed according to the rules of the civil law by witnesses." [26]

That this was the actual and only reason for rejecting the numerical system is further to be seen in the circumstance that wherever the common law had preserved a "trial by witnesses," i. e. a determination by oaths made directly before the Court without the intervention of a jury, there the numerical system was found in force, — not in an elaborate form, but in its fundamental notion that one witness alone was not sufficient. "The laws of England," said Sir John Fortescue, "likewise affirm," with the civil law, "that a less number than two witnesses shall not be admitted as sufficient" in cases where a jury is not used. This was, indeed, the accepted tradition for "trial by witnesses" made directly to the Court in the manner of the civil and ecclesiastical law. There has been some difference of opinion as to the kinds of issue in which this was the proper mode of trial; [27] but there seems to be no doubt that whenever it was the proper mode, the witnesses must be at least two in number.[28] Moreover, when the classical commentators refer to the rule for this mode of trial, they expressly point out as the reason for the distinction the fact that the jurors are themselves also witnesses.[29]

This reason, then, — the different nature of the jury as a tribunal, — was the reason for the failure of the numerical system to find a place in our common-law rules of Evidence.[30]

[26] See also the arguments of Brook and Atkins, in Reniger v. Fogossa (1551), Plowd. 1, 12; Sir Matthew Hale (ante 1680), History of the Common Law, c. 12.

Burke, with his usual acumen, pointed out this feature of the history in his disquisition on Evidence, in the Report on Warren Hastings' Trial, in 1794 (31 Parl. Hist. 330).

[27] See Thayer, Preliminary Treatise on Evidence, 17–24; Best, Evidence, §§ 612–614.

[28] Ante 1726, Gilbert, Evidence, 151 (stating as an exception the case of a bastard's mother charging the father); Best, ubi supra; 1807, Wambaugh v. Schenck, 1 Penningt. 229, semble (dower; trial by witnesses before the Court without jury).

[29] 1629, Coke upon Littleton, 6 b ("It is to be knowne that when a trial is by witnesses, regularly the affirmative ought to be proved by two or three witnesses, as to prove a summons of the tenant, or the challenge of a juror, and the like. But when the trial is by verdict of twelve men, there the judgment is not given upon witnesses or other kind of evidence, but upon the verdict, and upon such evidence as is given to the jury they give their verdict"); 1726, Gilbert, Evidence, 151 ("for one man's affirming is but equal to another's denying, and where there is no jury to discern of the credibility of the witnesses, there can be no distinction made; . . . that must be left to the determination of the neighborhood").

[30] Remarkable light is thrown on this, the inherent incompatibility of the jury system and the numerical system, by the debates in the French Constitutional Assembly of 1791, on the proposal to introduce trial by jury; the arguments turned on this very point, and in consequence the numerical rules were abolished (Esmein, Hist. de la procédure criminelle, 431, 433, 437, 510). In 1804, when trial by jury arose for reconsideration in the Council of State, the same arguments recurred.

6. It remains only to ask why this question did not come up for practical settlement earlier than the 1600s? Why was not the contrast between the ecclesiastical system and the common-law system forced to an issue before that comparatively late period in the history of jury trial? The jury had been in general use for at least three hundred years, and the ecclesiastical courts had had an even longer career in England. Why had not the attempt been earlier made to introduce the witness-rules of the latter into the procedure of the former?

The answer is, simply, that there had before then been no witnesses to whom the ecclesiastical rules could be claimed to apply. It is perfectly well established that the extensive and habitual use of witnesses, in the modern sense, does not appear until the 1500s;[31] and it may be supposed that all through the 1500s the increase of importance in the witnesses' function, and the relative quantity of the information supplied by them as compared with that supplied by the jurors' own knowledge, was but of slow and gradual growth. In the previous history of the jury, and until this period of 1500–1650, there would be no suggestion of an analogy to the situation in the civil-law courts; or, if the suggestion were made (as by Fortescue in the 1400s), it would be answered that there were in the jurors themselves more than the needed number of witnesses. But as the function of the jurors became more sensibly and markedly that of mere triers, or judges of fact, proceeding chiefly upon the evidence of witnesses in the modern sense, the analogy of the situation to that of the ordinary civil-law judge would be fully perceived, and the propriety of applying the numerical system to the testimony upon which the jury now chiefly depended could fairly be claimed. This situation did not sensibly exist before the 1600s; and it was therefore not until that century that the question came to be pressed for practical solution.

In the matter of time, one more interesting consideration remains to note. If the change of the earlier conditions of jury trial had come about more rapidly, if before the 1500s the jurors had ceased to be also witnesses, and had come to decide chiefly upon the testimony of produced witnesses, the numerical system might after all have been grafted into our body of evidence-rules. The jury would then have been mere judges of fact, obliged to depend upon others' testimony and to weigh accurately its worth, while the popular quantitative conception of testimony would still have been in full force; there would thus have been every reason to expect the enforcement for juries of the general notions of testimony which were still in vogue among the common-law judges and the people at large. This is, to be sure, only one of those contingencies which can easily be reconstructed in imagination;[32] but it illus-

[31] This has been already noted ante, § 1364; it is fully expounded by the jury's historian (Thayer, Preliminary Treatise, 122–132).

[32] That this possibility, however imaginary, is by no means fanciful, may be seen from Professor Brunner's account of the fate that did befall in France, when one of the forms of jury trial — 'the enquête par turbe,' consisting of ten men — came, in the course of its history, into competition, with the ecclesiastical trates at any rate the radical extent to which our common-law rules of Evidence have been fundamentally affected by the nature of the jury tribunal and by the condition in which its steps of historical progress happened to place it at a given period.

7. There did come into our law, however, sooner or later, a few specific rules of the numerical sort, all of them being of the simple type that declares a single witness insufficient and requires additionally either a second witness or corroborating circumstances. Some of these — namely, the Chancery rule requiring two witnesses to overcome a denial on oath, the rule requiring two witnesses to a will of personalty, and the rule requiring two witnesses to a cause for divorce — existed only in the practice of the ecclesiastical courts or that of chancery founded upon it; and wherever they came over into American common-law courts, they were direct borrowings. Others, namely, the rule requiring an accomplice or a complainant in rape, or the like, to be corroborated, are either express statutory inventions or plain judicial creations; in either case modern innovations, as well as local in the United States, and not a part of the inherited common law. There remain two specific rules — the rule in treason and the rule in perjury — which do come down to us as inheritances; and though these also are in strictness not common-law rules, the one being statutory in origin, and the other an indirect grafting from the ecclesiastical law, yet their roots go some distance back in our law, and their history can be understood only in the light of the general survey just made of the history of the numerical system. The growth of these two rules may better be examined later in treating of their present scope.

§ 2033. Policy of the Numerical System. The numerical system of requirements dominated for many ages the law of Continental Europe. Though its domination may be attributed historically to its harmony with merely primitive notions and to a system lacking jury trial, still its wide prevalence, even into modern times, entitles it to respectful consideration, and obliges us to ask whether anything can be said in favor of it as a system, or in favor system: Schwurgerichte, ed. 1872, p. 393: "The 'enquête par turbe' occupied a wholly exceptional position in relation to the principles which dominated French proof methods after the 1300s. The contrast between them lay in this, that in other cases [than trial by 'enquête'] two witnesses sufficed to prove a fact [to the judge]. These two, however, were examined individually, while the 'turbe' gave their verdict with a single utterance. . . . A way was therefore sought to bring this institution, now become alien, into harmony with the prevailing doctrine of proof. The 'turbe' was now treated, for purposes of procedure, as a single person, and the verdict of the 'turbe' was considered as equivalent to the assertion of a single witness. But since proof by witnesses, according to the well-known ecclesiastical rule required at least two concurrent witnesses, it was prescribed, in 1498, by the Ordinance of Blois, art. 3, that for proving a custom [the chief issue for which the 'turbe' was used], two agreeing verdicts of 'turbes' should be necessary. . . . Whereas formerly the saying ran, 'A "turbe" is equivalent to two witnesses,' henceforward it went, 'A "turbe" is equivalent to but one witness.' Each 'turbe' consulted by itself and gave a separate verdict; to effect proof, both 'turbes' must agree. . . . After this change, the 'enquête par turbes' survived some two centuries, though preserving only slight practical importance. . . . By tit. 13, art. 1, of the Civil Ordinance of 1667, the 'enquête par turbes' was abolished; and thus disappeared from French legal life the proof-method in which had been longest preserved the form of French 'enquête' nearest related to the jury."

of specific rules resting on its principle. The circumstance, too, that by modern statutes many such rules have been introduced into our own law, and are still in force in many jurisdictions, makes it for us a living question, and not merely a subject of academic or historical interest.

(1) As for the system in gross — a highly developed body of rules in which for varying situations a varying number of witnesses are required and the value of every witness' testimony is reducible to definite numerical units or halves or quarters, — for such a system nobody at the present day finds anything to be said. The probative value of a witness' assertion is utterly incapable of being measured by arithmetic. All the considerations which operate to discredit testimony (ante, §§ 875–1144) affect it in such varying ways for different witnesses that the net trustworthiness of each one's testimony is not to be estimated, either in itself or in reference to others' testimony, by any uniform numerical standard. Probative effects are too elusive and intangible for that. The personal element behind the assertion is the vital one, and is too multifarious to be measured by rule. "Testimony," as Boyle well said, "is like the shot of a long-bow, which owes its efficacy to the force of the shooter; argument [i. e. circumstantial inference] is like the shot of a cross-bow, equally forcible whether discharged by a giant or a dwarf." [1] The cross-bow notion of testimony — the notion that one man's shot is as forceful as any other man's — can find no defenders to-day.[2]

(2) But there may be, here and there, specific numerical rules which may have something to say for themselves; and the question thus arises whether we are to go to the extreme of repudiation, and lay down the proposition that no such rules can be sound, — that there is no virtue in any rule based on mere numbers or on technical corroboration. Practically, for us, this reduces itself to the question whether a rule declaring a single witness insufficient can in any event be a sound one. Nowhere to-day, in our law, is any other rule, based on the numerical principle, contended for; but this specific rule does find wide acceptance in many instances and jurisdictions. Even though in specific situations a rule of that sort may seem useful, still there must first be settled the larger and general question whether such a rule can ever be a wise one. If the numerical principle as a whole is based on a fallacy, a bygone conception of testimony, then can any rule based on mere numbers be justified?

The argument in favor of the utility of such a rule — declaring a single witness insufficient — has nowhere been better put than in the following passage, from a notable trial:

§ 2033. [1] Quoted in 8 How. St. Tr. 1041.

[2] For a scathing criticism of the system of "half-proofs," as it continued in some Continental countries as late as 1850, see Dr. Francis Lieber's Civil Liberty and Self-Government, App. III.

For the point of view of modern psychology as applicable to argument before the jury (not the rules of Admissibility), see the materials collected in the present author's "Principles of Judicial Proof, as given by Logic, Psychology, and General Experience, and illustrated in Judicial Trials" (1913), passim.

1683, Algernon Sidney's Apologia, 9 How. St. Tr. 916, 927 (arguing against the rule then obtaining that the two treason witnesses might testify to different overt acts): "I must ever insist upon the law of God given by the hand of Moses, confirmed by Christ and his Apostles, whereby two witnesses are necessarily required to every word and every matter. . . . The reason of this is not because two or more evil men may not be found — as appears by the story of Susanna; but because it is hard for two or more so to agree upon all circumstances relating unto a lye as not to thwart one another. And whosoever admits of two testifying several things done or said in several times or places conducing — as is said of late — unto the same ends, destroys the reason of that law, takes away all the defence that the most innocent men can have for their lives, and opens a wide gate for perjury by taking away all possibility of discovering it."

The argument in answer has more than once been set forth by eminent thinkers on the law of Evidence. It is in brief this: Conceding the occasional dangers of trusting a single witness, a curative rule requiring two witnesses, or formal corroboration of a single witness, is not sufficiently efficacious to overcome the new dangers and disadvantages which are thereby introduced:

1827, Mr. Jeremy Bentham, Rationale of Judicial Evidence, b. IX, pt. VI, c. I, § 1 (Bowring's ed., vol. VII, p. 521): "And after all, what is it worth? In the multitude of counsellors, says the proverb, there is safety; in the multitude of witnesses there may be some sort of safety, but nothing more: it is by weight, full as much as by tale, that witnesses are to be judged. 'Pondere, non numero.' From numbers (the particulars of the case out of the question) no just conclusion can be formed. Nothing can be weaker than the best security that can be derived from numbers. In many cases, a single witness, by the simplicity and clearness of his narrative, by the probability and consistency of the incidents he relates, by their agreement with other matters of fact too notorious to stand in need of testimony, — a single witness (especially if situation and character be taken into account) will be enough to stamp conviction on the most reluctant mind. In other instances, a cloud of witnesses, though all were to the same fact, will be found wanting in the balance. There is no man conversant with the business of the bar, whose experience has not presented him with instances of dozens of witnesses opposed to each other in the same cause, line against line, and whose testimony has been of such a nature, that (howsoever it may have been in regard to mendacity) falsehood must have been on one side or the other. . . . I do not mean to insinuate (it would be absurdity to insinuate) that the requisition of a second witness adds nothing to the security against perjury. No doubt but that, the greater the number of witnesses you require, the greater the security against perjury. All I contend for is, that that security (be it greater or less) is not so necessary as that you should pay so great a price for it as you do pay, and must pay, by the licence you thereby grant to commit the crime in the presence and with the aid of any one. 'Reason,' says Montesquieu, 'requires two witnesses: because a witness who affirms, and a party accused who denies, makes assertion against assertion, and it requires a third to turn the scale,' — this, by way of proof of the proposition immediately preceding: — 'The laws which cause a man to perish upon the deposition of a single witness, are fatal to liberty.' This observation, short as it is, teems with errors. . . . 'Fatal to liberty?' What means liberty? What can be concluded from a proposition, one of the terms of which is so vague? What my own meaning is, I know; and I hope the reader knows it too. Security is the political blessing I have in view; security as against malefactors, on one hand, security as against the instruments of government, on the other. Security, in both these branches of it, is the benefit, the making due provision for which, in the case in question, is the object of these inquiries. Where two witnesses have been required, the principle of determination is obvious enough: it has been the fear of giving birth to the conviction and punishment of innocent persons, if in each case the testimony of a single witness were held sufficient. Engrossed by the view of this danger, the attention has overlooked the so much greater danger on the other side. . . . The giving security to the innocent, is the object and final cause of this ill-considered scruple. Of what description of the innocent? Of those, and those alone, to whom, by false testimony, it might happen to be subjected to prosecution in a court of justice. On the other hand, those to whom, in consequence of the licence granted by this same rule, it might happen, and (if the rule were universally known) could not but happen, to suffer the same or worse punishment at the hands of malefactors, are altogether overlooked. The innocent who scarcely present themselves by so much as scores or dozens, engross the whole attention, and pass for the whole world. The innocent who ought to have presented themselves by millions, are overlooked, and left out of the account."

1806, Mr. W. D. Evans, Notes to Pothier, II, 231 (commenting also on the saying that a law allowing one witness alone is "fatal to liberty"): "It might perhaps be said with greater justice that the absolute and indiscriminate exclusion of a single witness in every capital case would, if not fatal, at least be dangerous to security, — as the opportunity of a solitary situation would enable a miscreant to perpetrate a robbery or a rape with impunity, however respectable the character of the person who suffered the violence, and however assured by previous knowledge of the identity of the defendant. The supposed equality between the denial of the accused and the testimony of the witness is merely fanciful, unless it can be asserted that there is an equal inducement to make a false accusation for the purpose of destroying an individual with whom there is no previous animosity, and to deny the commission of a crime for which a party is justly liable to undergo punishment, — between (as I have seen it observed in a publication of Mr. Christian) a person who by his falsehood has everything to lose and nothing to gain, and one who has everything to gain and nothing to lose."

1849, Mr. W. M. Best, Evidence, §§ 597–601: "Those who take the civil-law view contend that it is dangerous to allow a tribunal to act on the testimony of a single witness, since by this means any person, even the most vile, can swear away the liberty, honour, or life of any one else; they insist on the undoubted truth, that the chance of discrepancy between the statements of two false witnesses, when examined apart, is a powerful protection to the party attacked. . . . Now we are by no means prepared to deny that under a system where the decision of all questions of law and fact is intrusted to a single judge, or in a country where the standard of truth among the population is very low, such a rule may be a valuable security against the abuse of power and the risk of perjury; but it is far otherwise where a high standard of truth prevails, and facts are tried by a jury directed and assisted by a judge. Add to this, that the anomaly of acting on the testimony of one person is more apparent than real; for the decision does not proceed solely on the story told by the witness, but on the moral conviction of its truth, based on its intrinsic probability and his manner of giving his evidence. And there are few cases in which the decision rests even on these circumstances alone; they are usually corroborated by the presumption arising from the absence of counter-proof or explanation, and in criminal cases by the demeanour of the accused while on his trial. . . . Still, however, on the trial of certain accusations, which are peculiarly liable to be made the instruments of persecution, oppression, or fraud, and in certain cases of preappointed evidence (where parties about to do a deliberate act may fairly be required to provide themselves with any reasonable number of witnesses, in order to give facility to proof of that act), the law may with advantage relax its general rule, and exact a higher degree of assurance than could be derived from the testimony of a single witness. Cases, too, must now and then, though extremely seldom, occur, in which the grossest injustice is done by giving credence to the story of a single witness. . . . On the other hand, however, as the requiring a plurality of witnesses clearly imposes an obstacle to the administration of justice, especially where the act to be proved is of a casual nature, — above all, where, being in violation of law, as much clandestinity as possible would be observed, — it ought not to be required without strong and just reason.

Its evils are these: 1. It offers a premium to crime and dishonesty: by telling the murderer and felon that they may exercise their trade, and the knave that he may practise his fraud, with impunity, in the presence of any one person; and the unprincipled man that he may safely violate any engagement, however solemn, contracted under similar circumstances. 2. Artificial rules of this kind hold out a temptation to the subornation of perjury, in order to obtain the means of complying with them. 3. They produce a mischievous effect on the tribunal, by their natural tendency to react on the human mind; and they thus create a system of mechanical decision, dependent on the number of proofs, and regardless of their weight. . . . On the whole, we trust our readers will agree with us in thinking that any attempt to lay down a universal rule on this subject which shall be applicable to all countries, ages, and causes, is ridiculous; and that, although so far as this country is concerned, the general rule of the common law — that judicial decisions should proceed on the intelligence and credit, and not on the number of the witnesses examined or documents produced in evidence — is a just one, there are cases where, from motives of public policy, it has been wisely ordained otherwise." [3]

What we must conclude, then, is that our whole presumption should be against any specific rule requiring a number of witnesses, or corroboration of a single witness; that such arbitrary measurements are likely to be of little real efficacy and to introduce disadvantages greater than those which they purport to avoid; and that therefore any such rule, when advanced for a specific issue — for example, treason or perjury — or for a specific witness — for example, an accomplice or a rape-complainant — must justify itself by experience as overwhelmingly useful and efficacious.

The readiness of the modern American professional mind to cling to rules formally requiring corroboration is due mainly to the natural desire to protect the litigants from the unrestrained and inexperienced mental processes of the jury. But the true way to afford this protection is to empower the judge to comment on the testimony. Restore to general practice this time-honored and orthodox function of the judge (post, § 2551), and there will be neither need nor demand for the abstract mechanical rules of number or of corroboration.

§ 2034. General Principle; One Witness may Suffice; An Uncontradicted Witness need not be Believed. The common law, then, in repudiating the numerical system, lays down four general principles:

(1) Credibility does not depend on numbers of witnesses.[1] Therefore:

[3] When Napoleon abolished for the Rhine province the number-rules of the civil law, he stigmatized their weakness in this epigram: "Thus one honorable man by his testimony could not prove a single rascal guilty; though two rascals by their testimony could prove an honorable man guilty" (Bonnier, Traité des Preuves, ed. 1888, § 293). "The Turkish Law rigidly holds every person to prove all the facts of his case by two Turkish witnesses, which makes the dealing (with a view of dispute) extremely difficult. . . . Nay, a merchant [of England] there will directly hire a Turk to swear the fact of which he knows nothing; which the Turk doth out of faith he hath in the merchant's veracity; and the merchant is very safe in it, for, without two Turks to testify, he cannot be accused of the subornation. This is not, as here [in England], accounted [by the English merchants] a villanous subornation, but an ease under an oppression, and a lawful means of coming into a just right" (Roger North's Life of Sir Dudley North, 1744, p. 46).

§ 2034. [1] This is the underlying principle for all the ensuing citations.

It comes to light again in the doctrine about the jury's measure of proof by preponderance of evidence (post, § 2498).

(2) In general, the testimony of a single witness, no matter what the issue or who the person, may legally suffice as evidence upon which the jury may found a verdict.[2]

(3) Conversely, the mere assertion of any witness does not of itself need to be believed, even though he is unimpeached in any manner; because to require such belief would be to give a quantitative and impersonal measure to testimony:[3]

[2] The English authorities have already been given in § 2032, ante; that the principle is rarely mentioned does not affect its actual acceptance. United States: Codes: Cal. C. C. P. 1872, § 1844 ("The direct evidence of one witness who is entitled to full credit is sufficient for proof of any fact except perjury and treason"); Mont. Rev. C. 1921, § 10505; P. R. Rev. St. & C. 1911, § 1386 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1844); Or. Laws 1920, § 702 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1844, adding a third exception for "usage"); Judicial Opinions: 1889, Fengar v. Brown, 57 Conn. 60, 17 Atl. 321 ("If the jury believe the statement of a witness, there is no rule of law forbidding them to found their verdict upon it, though the witness stands alone and his testimony is opposed to that of others"); 1909, Catchings v. State, 6 Ga. App. 790, 65 S. E. 815; 1910, Hudgins v. State, 7 Ga. App. 785, 68 S. E. 336 (two witnesses against one); 1904, St. Louis & O. R. Co. v. Union T. & S. Bank, 209 Ill. 457, 70 N. E. 651; 1904, Indianapolis St. R. Co. v. Johnson, 163 Ind. 518, 72 N. E. 571 ("The preponderance of evidence does not depend upon the number of witnesses"; citing cases); 1915, Vivian Collieries Co. v. Cahall, 184 Ind. 473, 110 N. E. 672 (numerical theory repudiated); 1868, Callanan v. Shaw, 24 Ia. 440, 444 (quoted supra); 1909, State v. Blount, 124 La. 202, 50 So. 12 (murder); 1909, Nutting v. Watson, 84 Nebr. 464, 121 N. W. 582 (horse); 1911, Marzulli v. Metropolitan L. Ins. Co., 81 N. J. L. 166, 78 Atl. 1051; 1866, Gould v. Safford, 39 Vt. 498, 505.

The following codes state the general principle in broader form; Alaska: Comp. L. 1913, § 1505 (like Or. Laws 1920, § 868); Cal. C. C. P. 1872, § 2061, par. 2 (the Court is to instruct the jury "that they are not bound to decide in conformity with the declarations of any number of witnesses, which do not produce conviction in their minds, against a less number or against a presumption or other evidence satisfying their minds"); Ga. Rev. C. 1910, § 5732 (the tribunal "may also consider the number of witnesses, though the preponderance is not necessarily with the greatest number"); Mont. Rev. C. 1921, § 10672, par. 2 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 2061); Or. Laws 1920, § 868 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 2061).

In Quebec, where the French Civil Code is the basis of law, the numerical principle is repudiated; 1921, Montreal Tramways Co. v. Sofio, 62 D. L. R. 454, Que.

In Porto Rico, where the Spanish Civil Code is the basis, the numerical principle is repudiated; P. R. Rev. St. C. 1911, § 1530 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 2061); 1914, Rosado v. Ponce R. & L. Co., 20 P. R. 528, 536 (statute applied).

In the Philippine Islands, the rule requiring two witnesses, if it was ever in force, was abandoned by the time of American jurisdiction: 1902, U. S. v. Cabe, 1 P. I. 265 (murder; the fact that "only one witness testified" to the killing, held not an obstacle to conviction under the circumstances); 1903, U. S. v. Dacotan, 1 P. I. 669 (robbery); 1905, U. S. v. Santiago, 4 P. I. 438 (robbery); 1910, U. S. v. Sy Quingco, 16 P. I. 416 (opium offence); 1911, U. S. v. Mondejar, 19 P. I. 158 (robbery); 1912, Moncada v. Cajuigan, 21 P. I. 184; 1915, U. S. v. Claro, 32 P. I. 413, 421; 1916, U. S. v. Lopez Quim Quinco, 33 P. I. 239; 1917, U. S. v. Olais, 36 P. I. 828 (assault).

In some jurisdictions is found occasionally a statement that one witness suffices if not contradicted; for example, 1897, Southwest Va. M. L. Co. v. Chase, 95 Va. 50, 27 S. E. 826; but this is merely a piece of careless heterodoxy.

There is a peculiar and absurd quibble in Wisconsin, used to clarify the jury's mind in instructing them as to the preponderance of proof (post, § 2498): 1905, Garske v. Ridgeville, 123 Wis. 503, 102 N. W. 22 (the trial Court charged that the preponderance "is not to be determined by the number of witnesses on either side, or by the number of witnesses on any particular material point"; this is held erroneous, by weird logic).

The following dispatch illustrates the possibilities of the numerical principle:

"Fort Worth, Texas, March 22 (Houston Post Special).—'I tells you dem thousand poun's of witness am too much for mah case,' said Jack Bell, charged with aggravated assault, to which he had pleaded not guilty Saturday when he was confronted with three of the State witnesses, whose combined weight was over a thousand pounds. 'I figgured mah case was purty stout, but it sho looks weak ter me, boss. Jes change dat plea to guilty,' Jack said as he viewed the preponderance of the evidence. The three witnesses were three negro women weighing over 300 pounds each. The negro was fined $25 and costs."

[3] 1899, Lee Sing Far v. U. S., 35 C. C. A. 327, 94 Fed. 834, 839 (collecting authorities); 1920, Fire Ass'n of Philadelphia v. Mechlowitz,

1868, BECK, J., in Callahan v. Shaw, 24 Ia. 441, 444 (disapproving an instruction "that no important fact can be proved without at least the testimony of one credible and unimpeached witness"): "It is impossible, from the nature of things, for the law to provide rules which shall determine the quantity or amount of evidence necessary to establish a fact in judicial proceedings. There can be devised no standard — no unit of measurement, whereby we may determine just what measure of evidence shall be required to prove a fact in issue. To say that one credible witness is necessary, is a very unsatisfactory and indefinite rule indeed. As a matter of fact, evidence can usually be brought before a jury only through the medium of human testimony; there must, of necessity, be a witness, or one standing in that position, through whom the fact can be brought to the mind of a court or jury. . . . There must be, then, in most cases, to establish a fact, a witness, whether that fact be important or unimportant. But this rule gives no measure for the quantity of evidence, for knowledge, intelligence, qualities of memory, and all other attributes that make up ability, together with those moral qualities which constitute credibility, are most unequally united in men, so that one possessing all the attributes of ability and credibility in the highest degree, and so known to the tribunal before whom he testifies, would, in his evidence, outweigh an indefinite number of witnesses who possess the same attributes in the lowest degree. It is also true, that a witness, in order to prove a fact by his evidence, must be credible — he must be such a witness as will be entitled to receive the belief, the faith of others. But here again, from the very nature of the case, there are indefinite degrees in this character we call credibility. One may possess it in the highest degree, another in the lowest. It follows, therefore, that when evidence is weighed, to determine whether a fact has been proven thereby, all the qualities going to make up what is termed ability and credibility to a witness must be fully considered in order to arrive at a truth. And who should so weigh and consider these qualities? Most evidently the jury. The Court cannot discharge this duty for them, because the very opinion which they may form upon these questions of ability and credibility in truth determines their finding. . . . If the witness, from want of intelligence, or from any other cause, is incompetent under the rules of law, the Court will not permit him to testify; but when the evidence of the witness is before the jury, all questions of credibility are for them, and for them alone."

1901, MARSHALL, J., in Bourda v. Jones, 110 Wis. 52, 85 N. W. 671: "It is not infrequently supposed that a sworn statement is necessarily proof, and that, if uncontradicted, it establishes the fact involved. Such is by no means the law. Testimony, regardless of the amount of it, which is contrary to all reasonable probabilities or conceded facts — testimony which no sensible man can believe—goes for nothing; while the evidence of a single witness to a fact, there being nothing to throw discredit thereon, cannot be disregarded."

(4) As a corollary of the first proposition, all rules requiring two witnesses, or a corroboration of one witness, are exceptions to the general principle.

2 C. C. A., 266 Fed. 322; 1904, Bradley v. Gorham, 77 Conn. 211, 58 Atl. 689; 1906, Alexander v. Blackman, 26 D. C. App. 541, 544; 1904, Hauser v. People, 210 Ill. 253, 71 N. E. 416; 1905, Chicago Union T. Co. v. O'Brien, 219 Ill. 303, 76 N. E. 341 (there is no presumption "that an unimpeached witness has testified truly, and such instructions infringe upon the province of the jury to determine the credibility of the witnesses"); 1915, People v. Davis, 269 Ill. 256, 110 N. E. 9; 1909, Arnd v. Aylesworth, 145 Ia. 185, 123 N. W. 1000; 1921, McDonald v. Yellow Taxicab Co., 192 Ia. 1183, 184 N. W. 291 (automobile injury); 1908, Lindenbaum v. N. Y. N. H. & H. R. Co., 197 Mass. 314, 84 N. E. 129; 1908, Bearse v. Mabie, 198 Mass. 451, 84 N. E. 1015; 1917, Nydes v. Royal Neighbors, 256 Pa. 381, 100 Atl. 944.

This loose and futile but not uncommon heresy that an unimpeached or uncontradicted witness must be believed is illustrated in the following opinions: 1905, Keene v. Behan, 40 Wash. 505, 82 Pac. 884; 1908, Larson v. Glos, 235 Ill. 584, 85 N. E. 925 (with some variation).

Still less is there any presumption that a contradicted witness speaks truthfully: 1908, State v. Halverson, 103 Minn. 265, 114 N. W. 957 (good opinion by Elliott, J.).

For further notice of the fallacy that an uncontradicted witness must be believed, see ante, § 1012, post, § 2498.

To these exceptions we now come. In classifying them, the main distinction seems to depend upon whether the rule applies to a certain charge or issue (i. e. to any and every witness produced to prove that issue), or to a certain kind of witness (i. e. to that kind of witness only, and to no others, irrespective of the issue, or to no others upon the same issue). Accordingly, under one group (A) fall the rules affecting the charge or issue of treason, perjury, sundry crimes, chancery causes, wills, and sundry civil causes (post, §§ 2036–2054); and under another group (B) fall the rules affecting an accomplice, a complainant in rape, bastardy, seduction, and the like, a defendant in divorce, and sundry other kinds of witnesses (post, §§ 2056–2074).

A. Rules of Number depending on the Kind of Issue

1. Criminal Cases

§ 2036. Treason; (a) History of the Rule. It is clear enough that the rule requiring two witnesses to prove a charge of treason was not a common-law rule, but had its beginning in the statutes of the 1500s.[1] Sir Edward Coke at one time ventured to advance the contrary assertion,[2] but his pretended authorities do not bear him out, and his utterances on this point appear by the circumstances to be of not the slightest weight.[3] There was no instance, before the 1600s, of a rule that the testimony of a single witness called before a jury at common law should be insufficient, — as the history already examined (§ 2032) amply indicates.

The rule begins, then, with the statutes of the 1500s; and the chief interest of its history lies in the controversy over the supposed repeal of the first statute, and in the true apportionment between the political parties of the blame of maintaining this repeal.

§ 2036. [1] 1535, Bishop Fisher's Trial, 1 How. St. Tr. 395, 401; 1762, Foster, Crown Law, 233 ("It hath been generally agreed, and I think upon just grounds (though Lord Coke hath advanced a contrary doctrine), that at common law one witness was sufficient in the case of treason as well as in every other capital case").

[2] 1629, Coke, 3 Inst. 26 ("It seemeth by the ancient common law one accuser or witnesse was not sufficient to convict any person of high treason; . . . and that two witnesses be required appeareth by our books, and I remember no authority in our books to the contrary").

[3] Coke's vacillation in legal tenets, when the interests of partisanship pressed, has often been observed upon other points (an instance is noted post, § 2550), and the present is merely one more instance of his untrustworthiness. In 1603, in Raleigh's Trial (2 How. St. Tr. 15, 16; quoted ante, § 1364), Coke as the King's Attorney-General, and on his way to be Chief Justice, had maintained that two witnesses in treason were unnecessary; his violent insistence upon Cobham's testimony, during his colloquy with Raleigh, supplied a notorious instance of unbridled forensic brutality and coarseness. But some years later, in 1629, when Coke had fallen from the favor of his royal master and was in opposition, as a champion of popular liberties, he printed his Third Institute, and inserted in it a directly contrary assertion (above quoted); making no allusion to his own former doctrine nor to the repeated judicial decisions since 1555, and citing palpably irrelevant passages in support of his novel proposition. "I have great respect," said Lord Redesdale (Banbury Peerage Case, 1810, App. to LeMarchant's Gardner Peerage Case, 437), "for the memory of Lord Coke, but he was too fond . . . of telling untruths to support his own opinions." Professor W. S. Holdsworth has some comments on these charges against Coke of intentional misrepresentation of history, in the essay, "The Influence of Coke on the Development of English Law" (International Congress of Historical Studies, London, 1913, ed. Vinogradoff, p. 297).

(1) The first statutory provision was that of Edward VI (1547 and 1552), by which two witnesses were declared necessary.[4] The immediate circumstances leading to this step were probably the extreme methods used in some of the political trials with which the reign of Henry VIII had just closed.[5] The law of treason had been by this monarch, as never before, wrested to his own personal and despotic ends; and (as Sir James Stephen has acutely remarked in another connection [6]) the dominant legislator class, who might not have cared how many a humble subject was unfairly convicted of petty thievery, were well alive to the possibilities of treason law, if the rapid turn of the political wheel should chance to bring them underneath; and they probably were moved by the thought of self-protection against the future.[7] As an expedient for this purpose, it was natural that they should seek aid in a rule of numbers. The numerical conception of testimony was then still an instinctive one among all; the ecclesiastical rules of that sort lay plainly in sight, in the spiritual practice; and a rule of numbers was perhaps not only the natural, but to them the only conceivable expedient for providing this protection. That this was in fact the source of the rule was at any rate the tradition as handed down a century later:

1680, Lord Stafford's Case, T. Raym. 408: "Upon this occasion my lord Chancellor in the Lords' House was pleased to communicate a notion concerning the reason of two witnesses in treason, which [reason] he said was not very familiar, he believed, and it was this: Anciently, all or most of the judges were churchmen or ecclesiastical persons, and by the canon law now and then in use all over the Christian world, none can be condemned of heresy but by two lawful and credible witnesses, . . . and anciently heresy was treason; and from thence the parliament thought fit to appoint that two witnesses ought to be for proof of high treason."

(2) But the reactionary times of Mary's reign arrived shortly; and the following statute, the foundation of two hundred years' controversy, was immediately passed:

1554, St. 1 & 2 P. & M. c. 10, § 7; all trials for treason hereafter had "shall be had and used only according to the due order and course of the common laws of this realm and not otherwise."

[4] 1547, St. 1 Edw. VI, c. 12, § 22 (no person is to be indicted or arraigned for treason, petty treason, or misprision, "unless the same offender or offenders be accused by two sufficient and lawful witnesses, or shall willingly without violence confess the same"); 1552, St. 5 & 6 Edw. VI, c. 11, § 12 (no person is to be indicted or arraigned for treason, "unless the same offender or offenders be thereof accused by two lawful accusers, which said accusers at the time of the arraignment of the party so accused, if they be then living, shall be brought in person before the party so accused and avow and maintain what they have to say against the said party . . . unless the said party arraigned shall willingly without violence confess the same").

[5] Professor Willis-Bund (State Trials for Treason, 1879, vol. I, Introd. xxxix) thinks that this statute "was probably the result of such cases as the Marquis of Exeter's and the Earl of Surrey's." For another explanation, not essentially different, see Rastel's Statutes, 102, as quoted in 1 How. St. Tr. 520, and Bishop Burnet, arguing in the House of Lords, in 13 How. St. Tr. 537, 752 (quoted ante, § 1364).

[6] History of the Criminal Law, I, 226 (quoted ante, § 1845).

[7] Notice that they did not extend the provision to Ireland, where these considerations did not apply: 1795, Jackson's Trial, 25 How. St. Tr. 783, 851, 872; 1798, Sheare's Trial, 26 How. St. Tr. 255, 377.

What was the effect of this statute? It did not expressly repeal the statutes of Edward; but if the due order and course of trials included the modes of proof at a trial, then the new rule of proof introduced by the former statute now fell away, and the common-law practice, which made no requirement of number, was restored. Such was the judicial construction now put upon the new act. Whether it was the correct one need not here be considered in detail. Arguments of various sorts have been advanced; [8] the most significant one to the contrary, perhaps, is that the very next statute, Chapter 11, in the same session,[9] expressly restored the old evidence-rule (of one witness) for petty treason committed by forging the coin of the realm, and that the Legislature would have used similar express words in Chapter 10, had they intended the same thing.

On the whole, it may be supposed that the Legislature did intend in Chapter 10 to strike hard at treason, and to annul the recent innovation by which two witnesses were required. But the important thing is that this was the judicial construction of the statute of Mary from the very first, — beginning within a year after its enactment, and continuing for a century.[10] This was afterwards forgotten, during the political ascendency of the Whigs, after the Revolution of 1688 and during the early 1700s, when every reminiscence of the Stuarts was a dark one and all the doings of their times were anathematized. The trials of Sir Walter Raleigh in 1603, and of other noted victims of that time, were after the Revolution regarded by many as instances of unfair and corrupt political oppression by the Stuart judges. But time has vindicated the judges from such charges.[11] Whatever they were or did, they were not in this respect either unscrupulous or corrupt, and they did not distort the law for the pleasure of James or Charles. They merely applied, as in duty bound, the traditional and long-established construction of the statute

[8] The arguments may be found in the following places: 1716, Hawkins, Pl. Cr. II, c. 46, § 2; 1762, Foster, Crown Law, 237 (arguing forcibly for the view that there was no repeal); 1803, East, Pleas of the Crown, I, 128.

[9] 1554, St. 1 & 2 P. & M. c. 11, § 3 (all trials for offences connected with the coin of the realm may be tried "by such like evidence and in such manner and form as has been used and accustomed within the realm at any time before the first year of Edward the Sixth"); c. 10, § 12 (similar); 1697, St. 8 & 9 W. III, c. 26, § 7 (similar); these were applied, as needing only one witness, in the following cases: 1725, R. v. Anstruther, T. Jones 233 (impairing the coin); 1748, R. v. Gahagan, 1 Leach Cr. L., 4th ed. 42 (similar).

[10] 1555, Anon., Dyer, 132 a, 134 a ("The intent of the Statute 1 & 2 P. & M. c. 10, was to remove the two accusers and two witnesses"; approved by the judges; perhaps the same case as the following): 1556, Anon., Brooke's Abridgment, "Corone," 219 (at a conference of all the justices, it was agreed that "for no treason under St. 25 Edw. III, was there need of accusers at the trial, because it is enacted by the statute of 2 M. c. 10, that all trials for treason shall be held according to the common law only and not otherwise, and the common trial of the common law is by jury and by witnesses and by no accusers"; otherwise for treason charged under the same act of 2 M., "according to an article contained in the said statute at the end thereof"); 1586, Abington's Trial, 1 How. St. Tr. 1141, 1148; 1651, Love's Trial, 5 How. St. Tr. 43. Some additional cases reaching the same result, but bearing only on the history of the Hearsay rule, have been cited ante, § 1364; the same statute of Edward had provided for confronting the accused with the two witnesses, and thus its repeal came into question also in that connection. So also in the history of confession law (ante, § 818) the same construction is found.

[11] Professor Willis-Bund, in his State Trials for Treason, cited supra, has demonstrated this for procedure in general and the substantive law of treason.

of Mary, — a construction plainly laid down by the entire body of justices from the earliest moment after its enactment. Moreover, this construction was not even a mark of the Tudor and Stuart régimes as a whole. It continued under the Commonwealth, in the very heat of the passion of overthrow and reform. In the meanwhile, a single statute requiring two witnesses for a specific kind of treason had been passed, under a Tudor monarch;[12] but during the whole of the century, from 1554 to 1659, under Tudor, Stuart, and Cromwell alike, the construction of the statute of Mary was uniform. The hostile judgment of the dominant party of the Revolution was merely a political dogma.

(3) Before the end of the first half of the 1600s, however, had come Coke's Third Institute, in which he now advanced the view that the statute of Mary had not repealed the statutes of Edward.[13] His reasoning is apparently that the word "trial" in the statute meant merely the mode of decision, i. e. by a jury, as contrasted with a decision by judges hearing witnesses without a jury. To be sure, the word "trial" bore then that distinction;[14] but it is a forced meaning to put upon it in the statute, since nobody had ever thought of "trying" treason by witnesses to a judge without a jury (which is what the "otherwise" of the statute would mean, according to Coke). Moreover, Coke's dictum on this particular point was valueless, for the reasons already noticed.[15] Nevertheless, his utterance in the Third Institute, like every other printed utterance of that man of prodigious learning, counted for a great deal. Professional opinion began to change, at any rate, not long after this time.

The change must have been matured before the Restoration of Charles II in 1660; for immediately upon the Restoration, and in the very first year of it, in spite of all the power of the restorers and of their bitter and dominating purpose to punish the death of Charles I, and in spite of the large grist of traitors upon whom to sate their appetite for revenge, the whole aspect of affairs changes. Foremost comes the statute of 1661, the first treason act passed after the Restoration, in which the rule of two witnesses is deliberately established for all treasons defined by that act.[16] Next, but equally significant, came the judicial overthrow of the century-long construction of the statute of Mary. It was now affirmed by the Courts, and assumed and practised when not expressly affirmed, that the statute of Mary had not repealed [12] 1558, St. 1 Eliz. c. 1, § 37 (no person is to be arraigned for treason under this act, "unless there be two sufficient witnesses" produced if living and in the realm). The St. 13 Eliz. c. 1, has sometimes been said to make a similar provision; but this is a misunderstanding of it.

[13] 1629, Coke, 3 Inst. 26 ("for that act of 1 & 2 P. & M. extends only to trials by the verdict of twelve men 'de vicineto' . . . and the evidence of witnesses to the jury is no part of the trial, for by law the trial in that case is not by witnesses, but by the verdict of twelve men, and so a manifest diversity between the evidence to a jury and a tryall by jury").

[14] Ante, § 2032; Thayer, Preliminary Treatise, 17–24.

[15] Supra, note 3.

[16] 1661, St. 13 Car. II, c. 1, § 1 (for treasons under this section, persons must be "legally convicted thereof upon the oaths of two lawful and credible witnesses, upon trial, or otherwise convicted or attainted by due course of law"); § 5 (no persons shall be convicted of the treasons in this act unless accused "by the testimony and deposition of two lawful and credible witnesses upon oath," produced face to face, etc., as in St. 5 & 6 Edw. VI, supra).

the statute of Edward; so that two witnesses were now to be required for treasons at large. The remarkable thing is that this decision was reached, for the first instance, in the very year of Charles' restoration, and in the trial of the regicides themselves, against whom the greatest license of judicial harshness might have been expected;[17] and it was repeated and maintained on all other occasions during the remaining years which fate had allotted to the Stuart family under Charles II and James II.[18]

Here again is laid bare the fallacy of the Whig dogma of the 1700s,[19] that all the evil judicial practices occurred under the Stuarts, while all the reforms came in with the Revolution. The reform in this instance came with the very first moment of the Stuart Restoration. Dangerous and unwholesome as was undoubtedly the reinstatement of this worthless family, the judges of the time must be redeemed from the reproach of an unscrupulous and tyrannous application of the law. On the contrary, it was through them that the change began. It is merely another instance out of several, in which we are to date the improvements of trial procedure from the Restoration, and not from the Revolution.[20] Policy, no doubt, as well as a real growth of sentiment, and a sagacious perception of the wisdom of maintaining the restored power by abandoning the excesses of the earlier Stuarts, [17] May, 1660, Regicides' Case, Kel. 9 (it was assumed that the law for two witnesses was in force).

[18] Dec. 1662, Tong's Case, Kel. 22 (though some of the judges believed that there had been a repeal, yet "they all agreed that if the law for two witnesses be in force," it was to be interpreted in a certain way; but at page 49, Kelyng expresses his own opinion in favor of the repeal; this was not later than 1671, the year of his death); 1679, Whitebread's Trial, 7 How. St. Tr. 405; 1680, Lord Castlemaine's Trial, 7 How. St. Tr. 1111; 1680, Lord Stafford's Trial, T. Raym. 407, 7 How. St. Tr. 1293, 1527. The same result on this point is seen in the interpretation of the statute (already noticed) against treason by false coining: 1673, R. v. Acklandby, 3 Keb. 68 (clipping the coin; two judges apparently differed in opinion); 1684, Anon., T. Jones, 233 (clipping the coin; at a conference of the judges it was resolved that by the statute of 1 & 2 M. "one witness is sufficient, for that restores the trial at common law for such case, which was altered generally for all cases of treason by 1 Edw. VI and 5 & 6 Edw. VI, which required two witnesses where one was sufficient by the common law"). Lord Hale, writing some time before 1680, utters inconsistent views: Hale, Pl. Cr. I, 300 (after examining the pros and cons, he ends: "thus the reasons stand on both sides, and though these [for repeal] seem to be stronger than the former," yet it is safest to err on the side of mercy); II, 286 (the early statute "is not altered by the statute of 1 & 2 P. & M.," citing Coke).

[19] One example, from many, may suffice: "The truth is that up to the period of the Revolution of 1688, our criminal trials are a disgrace to the national annals" (Forsyth, Hortensius the Advocate, 3d ed., 331).

[20] It is indeed fairly presumable that the direct foundation of the reforms which ensued at the Restoration was laid by the destructive work of the Commonwealth lawyers in tearing away the traditions of the earlier régime. Mr. Robinson's learned account (1869; Juridical Society Papers, III, 567; now reprinted in Select Essays in Anglo-American Legal History, vol. I, 1907; Ass'n of American Law Schools) of "Anticipations under the Commonwealth of Changes in the Law" exhibits the materials for this conclusion. "The goodness," he says, "of the laws of Charles II. as contrasted with the badness of his government, has drawn a compliment from Blackstone, epigrams from Burke and Fox, and a paradox from Buckle. An enquiry into the source of these laws may show that the paradox is unreal, the epigrams unfounded, the compliment due to the Republicans; that they, in redressing grievances which from the time of James I and Bacon had been fostering rebellion, forestalled the law-reformers, not of the Restoration only, but of our own age." Similar evidence will be found in the learned essay of Professor Edward Jenks, "The Constitutional Experiments of the Commonwealth" (1890), pp. 54, 82.

Compare the history of the registration system (ante, § 1650), of the allowance of witnesses to an accused (ante, § 575), and of the self-crimination privilege (post, § 2550).

furnished in part the motives. But the fact remains, and deserves to be recorded.

(4) The ensuing legislation of William III, after the Revolution,[21] established the law, by continuing in a general statute that which the Restoration had instituted, partly by statute and partly by judicial action, a generation before. From the beginning of the 1700s there has never been any doubt or vacillation upon the rule that two witnesses at least are required upon a charge of treason.[22]

§ 2037. Same: (b) Policy of the Rule. The object of the rule requiring two witnesses in treason is plain enough. It is, as Sir William Blackstone said, to "secure the subject from being sacrificed to fictitious conspiracies, which have been the engines of profligate and crafty politicians in all ages." [1] But is the rule fitted to accomplish this concededly desirable purpose? On this point Mr. Best's suggestions seem to present the correct view:

1849, Mr. W. M. Best, Evidence, §§ 616–619: "The reason for requiring two witnesses in high treason and misprision of treason — unquestionably that which influenced the framers of the modern statutes on the subject, whatever may have been the motives of those of the earlier ones — is the peculiar nature of these offences, and the facility with which prosecutions for them may be converted into engines of abuse and oppression. For although treason, when clearly proved, is a crime of the deepest dye, and deservedly visited with the severest punishment, yet it is one so difficult to define — the line between treasonable conduct and justifiable resistance to the encroachments of power, or even the abuse of constitutional liberty, is often so indistinct; the position of the accused is so perilous, struggling against the whole power and formidable prerogatives of the Crown — that it is the imperative duty of every free State to guard, with the most scrupulous jealousy, against the possibility of such prosecutions being made the means of ruining political opponents. . . . The principle of 7 & 8 Will. III, c. 3, requiring two witnesses in treason, has, however, been severely attacked. Bishop Burnet, speaking of that statute shortly after it was passed, said the design of it seemed to be to make men as safe in all treasonable conspiracies and practices as possible. . . . [Benthain observes] that after the passing of this statute, 'a minister might correspond (as so many ministers were then actually corresponding) with the exiled king by single emissaries, and be safe.' . . . All this reasoning, however, is more specious than sound. It seems based, in some degree [21] 1696, St. 7 W. III, c. 3, § 2 (no person shall be indicted or tried for high treason working corruption of blood, or misprision, "but by and upon the oaths and testimony of two lawful witnesses, either both of them to the same overt act, or one of them to the one and the other of them to another overt act of the same treason," unless the accused "shall willingly, without violence, in open court confess the same, or stand mute or refuse to plead"); c. 7 (the foregoing provision is not to extend to counterfeiting the coin).

[22] There has, however, been some change as to the scope of the treason to which the rule applied: 1800, St. 40 Geo. III, c. 93 (in trials for treason by killing or doing bodily harm to the King, the trial may be "upon the like evidence as if such person or persons stood charged with murder"); 1821, St. 1 & 2 Geo. IV, c. 24 (extends the St. 7 W. III to Ireland, compare note 7, ante); 1842, St. 5 & 6 Vict. c. 51 (similar to St. 40 Geo. III); 1848, St. 11 & 12 Vict. c. 12, § 4 (in trials for compassing death or bodily harm to the King, etc., no conviction is to be had for this so far as expressed by "open or advised speaking," unless "upon his own confession in open court, or unless the words so spoken shall be proved by two credible witnesses"). Compare, also, the statutes ante, note 9, as to treason by false coining.

A special form obtains in Canada: Crim. Code, R. S. 1906, c. 146, § 1002 (no person shall be convicted "upon the evidence of one witness, unless such witness is corroborated in some material particular by evidence implicating the accused").

§ 2037. [1] Commentaries, III, 358.

at least, on the false principle that has been examined in the Introduction to this work, and which is to be found more or less in every part of Bentham's Treatise on Judicial Evidence, viz., that the indiscreet passiveness of the law is as great an evil as its corrupt or misdirected action; and consequently that the erroneous conviction and punishment of an innocent, a violent, or even a seditious man, for the offence of treason, works the same amount of mischief as the escape of a traitor from justice, and no more. . . . By the law as it stands, persons sometimes escape with a conviction for felony or sedition whose conduct, considered with technical accuracy, amounts to treason. But, on the other hand, those who are innocent of that terrible crime lie under no dread of being falsely accused of it; and when a conviction for treason does take place, it is on such unquestionable proof that the blow descends on the disaffected portion of society with a moral weight, increased a hundred-fold by the moderation of the Executive in less aggravated cases."

The true solution seems to depend on the relative proportion, in experience, of two elements, namely, the likelihood of false accusations, as compared with the harm of a guilty person's escape. When the former (relatively to the specific crime) is large, and the latter (relatively to the specific crime) is small, then the two-witness rule may be justified as being often effective, and seldom harmful when not effective. Now for treason this relation does seem to exist. In times of bitter political division, the dominant political party has the strongest motive and the amplest means of securing false testimony, to rid itself of its opponents; while the harm of a real traitor escaping judicial punishment is relatively small, because treason, when it is confined to a few individuals, can never really endanger the State, and, when it represents a widespread opinion in the community, there will be ample array of witnesses to prove its acts. The rule of two witnesses, then, seems to rest on justifiable grounds of policy.

§ 2038. Same: (c) Details of the Rule. (1) The requirement of an overt act (ante, § 367*b*) is one of substantive law, and is therefore beyond the present purview. But a question arises as to the scope of the rule of Evidence, with reference to the tenor of the required witnesses' testimony. Is it enough if there is one witness to one overt act and another to a different overt act, or must both witnesses speak to the same overt act?

The former view was established as orthodox, in applying the original statute of Edward;[1] and it was expressly confirmed in the enactment of 1696.[2] But, having regard to the virtue and operation of the rule, as maintained by Sidney,[3] this seems an erroneous view; for the opportunity of § 2038.[1] 1649, Lilburne's Trial, 4 How. St. Tr. 1269, 1401; 1660, Regicides' Case, Kel. 9 ("If two witnesses prove two several acts tending to the compassing the King's death, the treason is proved by two witnesses as the law in case of treason requireth"); 1680, Earl of Stafford's Trial, 7 How St. Tr. 1293, 1527; 1681, Colledge's Trial, 8 How. St. Tr. 549, 620; 1696, Sir John Freind's Trial, 13 How. St. Tr. 1, 131; 1696, Vaughan's Trial, 13 How. St. Tr. 485, 535.

[2] St. 7 Wm. III, c. 3, § 2 (quoted ante, § 2036, note 21); § 4 ("If two or more distinct treasons of divers heads or kind shall be alleged in one bill of indictment, one witness produced to prove one of the said treasons and another witness produced to prove another of the said treasons shall not be deemed or taken to be two witnesses to the same treason within the meaning of this act"); 1867, R. v. McCafferty, 10 Cox Cr. 603 (statute applied).

[3] Ante, § 2036.

detecting the falsity of the testimony, by sequestering the two witnesses (ante, § 1838) and exposing their variance in details, is wholly destroyed by permitting them to speak to different acts. It is true that the difficulty of obtaining testimony to genuine treason would be thereby greatly increased; but, as already noted (ante, § 2037) the very object of the rule is to protect those who are innocent of treason; therefore, if the rule is to be maintained at all, regard should chiefly be had to the interests of those for whose protection it is established. Accordingly, the constitutional provisions adopting the rule for this country have everywhere and properly required that the two witnesses shall testify to the same overt act.[4]

(2) The two witnesses are not necessary for any fact to be proved other than the overt act.[5] In particular, two witnesses are not necessary for an extrajudicial confession offered as part of the evidence.[6] The infra-judicial confession ("in open court") is virtually a plea of guilty;[7] and for this no witnesses are needed, not only by the statute's express terms, but because an act done in court, before the judge, in the nature of a pleading, never needs witnesses.

(3) The rule of two witnesses means, by reason of the general principle (ante, § 2030, par. 3), that they must be effective witnesses, i. e. they must both be believed by the jury.[8] A rule requiring a certain quantity of evidence is binding upon the jurors as well as upon the judge; they are not to convict

[4] These are given in the next section; the Federal clause was applied in the following cases: 1795, U. S. v. Mitchell, Wharton's State Trials, 176, 183; 1799, Charge of Iredell, J., to Grand Jury, Wharton's St. Tr. 480 (the rule in England "has always appeared to be contrary to the true intention of the law which made two witnesses necessary"); 1799, U. S. v. Fries, Wharton's St. Tr. 482, 585, 594; 1807, U. S. v. Burr, 4 Cr. 473, 525; 1904, U. S. v. DeLos Reyes, 3 P. I. 349.

[5] 1762, Foster, Crown Law, 240; 1803, East, Pleas of the Crown, I, 130.

[6] 1781, Respublica v. M'Carty, 2 Dall. 86 (undecided); 1799, U. S. v. Fries, Whart. St. Tr. 482, 586, 594 (Peters, J., does not require this; but Iredell, J., does). The above conclusion seems unquestionable. Under the English practice, an extrajudicial confession might serve as one of the overt acts (ante, § 818); but then, by the English rule (supra), a single witness sufficed. In the United States, if an extrajudicial confession had to have two witnesses, it could only be because it was an overt act, but then no other overt act would be needed, which is inconsistent with the United States doctrine that such a confession cannot serve as an overt act. If by the substantive law, the overt act must be independent of such a confession, then by the Constitution the two witnesses are required only for the overt act.

For the sufficiency of an extrajudicial confession, see post, § 2071.

[7] It can hardly be [illegible] t, apart from the express words of t[illegible], the confession which is to dispense with [illegible]wo-witness rule must be practically a plea of guilty; the English cases and the history of the phrase "in open court" have been given ante, § 818; the American authority is scanty: 1781, Respublica v. M'Carty, 2 Dall. 86 (apparently not decided; the words "in open court" not being in the Pennsylvania statute; yet here the confession was in fact so made); 1787, Madison's Journal of the Constitutional Convention, Scott's ed. II, 568 ("Mr. L. Martin moved to insert after 'conviction, etc.,' 'or on confession in open court'; and on the question, the negative States thinking the words superfluous, it was agreed to," by a vote of 7 to 3); 1799, U. S. v. Fries, Whart. St. Tr. 482, 586, 594 (confession before a committing magistrate is not sufficient); 1903, U. S. v. Magtibay, 2 P. I. 703 (treason; defendant's testimony held not a confession under U. S. St. 1902, Mar. 8, § 9).

[8] 1680, Lord Castlemaine's Trial, 7 How. St. Tr. 1067 (L. C. J. Scroggs: "If two witnesses are produced both speaking materially to the thing, the one is believed and the other not, whether upon these two witnesses the jury can find a person guilty, or no? I am of opinion it is but one witness"; Mr. J. Raymond: "I never heard any man question it. If the law says there must be two witnesses produced, it says they must both be believed").

unless in their judgment the required amount exists. If the testimony of one is rejected by the jury upon consideration, there remains but one witness, — less than the rule requires.

(4) Each of the witnesses must testify to the whole of the overt act; [9] or, if it is separable, there must be two witnesses to each part of the overt act. The rule seems not to have suffered any dilution like that which occurred to the perjury rule (post, § 2042).

It was once ruled, before the Hearsay rule had been established (ante, § 1364), that one witness directly to an act and another witness to the hearsay statement of the first, were sufficient; but this was soon repudiated,[10] and would of course never again be proposed.

(5) The order of evidence is in general left to the determination of the trial Court (ante, §§ 1867, 1870). No specific regulation exists for the order of the evidence required by the treason-rule, and the overt act need therefore not be evidenced before the other evidence is offered.[11]

§ 2039. Same: (d) Constitutional Sanctions. The statutory rule of two witnesses in treason appealed to the founders of our government as one of the few doctrines of Evidence entitled to be guaranteed against legislative change.[1] A provision of this sort is found in the Federal Constitution and in most of our State Constitutions, as well as in some of the statutes.[2] This does not mean, however, that the rule is in itself one of the most important, or that its principle is fundamental in our system. It signifies merely that, since treason involves an opposition to the dominant political influences, a rule which could be changed or abolished at pleasure by the dominant political party in the Legislature might be virtually no rule at all for such cases.

[9] 1919, U. S. v. Robinson, D. C. S. D. N. Y., 259 Fed. 685 (Learned Hand, J.: "It is necessary to produce two direct witnesses to the whole overt act. It may be possible to piece bits together of the overt act; but, if so, each bit must have the support of two oaths; on that, I say nothing").

[10] 1572, Lord Lumley's Case, cited Coke, 3 Inst. 25 (repudiating Thomas' Case, 1553); 1680, Hale, Pl. Cr. II, 286; 1716, Hawkins, Pl. Cr. II, c. 25, § 139.

[11] 1807, Burr's Trial, Robertson's Rep. I, 460, 469 (the overt acts need not first be proved, before evidence of intent, etc., is offered; lucid opinion by Marshall, C. J.).

Distinguish the question whether other overt acts than those named in the indictment may be received as evidence of intent; this is entirely proper under the general principle of circumstantial evidence (ante, § 369).

§ 2039. [1] 1787, Madison's Journal of the Federal Convention, Scott's ed., II, 564, 566 ("It was then moved to insert, after 'two witnesses' the words 'to the same overt act.' Dr. Franklin 'wished this amendment to take place. Prosecutions for treason were generally virulent, and perjury too easily made use of against innocence.' Mr. Wilson: 'Much may be said on both sides. Treason may sometimes be practised in such a manner as to render proof extremely difficult, — as in a traitorous correspondence with an enemy.' On the question," the vote was 8 to 3 for the amendment).

[2] The following provisions are substantially identical, except where otherwise noted; the date and clauses are those of the Constitution, unless otherwise noted: U. S. Const. Art. III, § 3 ("No person shall be convicted of treason unless on the testimony of two witnesses to the same overt act, or on confession in open court"); St. 1916, Code § 4137 (rule applied to trials in the Philippine Islands "by any tribunal, civil or military"); Ala. 1901, I, 18; Ariz. Rev. St. 1913, P. C. § 1043; 1910, I, 28; Ark. 1874, II, 14 Dig. 1919, § 2321; Cal. 1879, I, 20; C. C. P. 1872, § 1968 ("two witnesses to the same overt act" are required); P. C. § 1103 (no conviction "unless upon the testimony of two witnesses to the same overt act, or upon confession in open court"); Colo. 1876, II, 9; Conn. 1875, IX, § 2040. Perjury: (a) History of the Rule. By the end of the 1600s it was decisively settled (ante, § 2032) that the ecclesiastical rules about numbers of witnesses were not to be adopted into the common law. It was after that time that there arose the single common-law exception to the doctrine that one witness alone may suffice in every case, namely, the rule that one witness, without corroborating circumstances, does not suffice on a charge of perjury. Yet even this rule was an indirect borrowing from the civil law.

First of all, it is fairly clear that there was no such rule of common law until towards the first half of the 1700s.[1] That the quantitative conception of an oath still prevailed at that time has been already noticed (ante, § 2032), and in this respect the acceptance of the rule is not strange. But why should an exceptional step have been taken at that epoch for perjury trials, which was not taken, either before or after, for any other kind of common-law trials? The causes that answer this question are scarcely to be mistaken, and they were two; one may be called a mechanical, the other a moral cause.

4; Del. Const. 1897, Art. VI, § 3; Fla. 1887, Decl. of Rights, 23; Rev. G. S. 1919, § 6082 (like the Constitution, but requires "two lawful witnesses"); Ga. 1877, I, 1, par. 2; Rev. C. 1910, § 6383; § 5742 (two witnesses, but not one and corroborating circumstances); P. C. 1910, § 1017 (two witnesses); Ida. 1899, I, 5; Comp. St. 1919, § 7972 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1968); Ill. Rev. St. 1874, c. 38, § 264 ("by two or more witnesses, or voluntary confession in open court"); Ind. 1851, I, 29; Burns' Ann. St. 1914, § 2123; Ia. 1857, I, 16; Code 1897, § 4726, Comp. C. 1919, § 8542; Kan. 1859, Bill of R. 13; Ky. 1891, 229; La. 1921, XIX, 3 (inadvertently omitting "or"); Me. 1819, I, 12; Rev. St. 1916, c. 119, § 2 (misprision of treason must be proved by two witnesses or confession in open court; but one witness may prove one act, and another another one of the same species of treason); Mass. Gen. L. 1920, c. 264, § 4 (requires two "witnesses to the same overt act of treason" unless on confession in open court); Mich. C. 1908, II, 21; Minn. 1857, I, 9; Miss. 1890, III, 10; Code 1906, § 1388; Mo. 1875, II, 13; Rev. St. 1919, § 4028; Mont. 1889, III, 9; Rev. C. 1921, § 11978; § 10608 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1968); Nebr. 1875, I, 14; Rev. St. 1921, § 10143 (same; furthermore, for offences of surrendering military posts, etc., or setting on foot a military expedition against any of the U. S., etc., "two credible witnesses," or confession in open court, are necessary); Nev. 1864, I, 19, Rev. L. 1912, § 6308; N. J. 1844, I, 14; N. Mex. 1911, Art. II, § 16; N. D. 1889, I, 19; Comp. L. 1913, § 10839, § 9447; Oh. Gen. Code Ann. 1921, § 13673 (treason provable only by confession in open court or by "the testimony of two credible witnesses to the same overt act laid in the indictment"; "two credible witnesses" also necessary for misprision of treason or unauthorized military expedition); Okl. 1907, II, 16; Or. 1859, I, 24; Laws 1920, §801 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1968); Pa. St. 1860, Mar. 31, § 1, Dig. 1920, §8051, ("on confession in open court or on the testimony of two witnesses to the same overt act"); P. I. U. S. St. 1916, Aug. 29, c. 416, § 3, 39 Stats. 546 (quoted supra, under Fed.); R. I. Gen. L. 1909, c. 341, § 3 (no conviction for treason, except by "testimony of two lawful witnesses to the same overt act for which he shall then be on trial, unless he shall in open court confess the same"); S. C. 1895, I, 22; S. D. 1889, VI, § 25; Tenn. Shannon's Code 1916, § 6628 ("two sufficient witnesses, or by confession in open court"); Tex. 1876, I, 22; Rev. C. Cr. P. 1911, §§ 15, 803; Utah, 1895, I, 19 (omitting the confession clause); Comp. L. 1917, § 8984; Va. Code 1919, § 4389 (punishable if proved by "two witnesses to the same overt act or by confession in court"); Vt. Gen. L. 1917, § 6787 (requires "testimony equivalent to two witnesses to the same overt act," or confession in open court); Wash. 1889, I, 27, R. & B. Code § 2317; W. Va. 1872, II, 6; Wis. 1848, I, 10; Wyo. 1889, I, 26.

§ 2040. [1] The following seem to be the earliest cases: 1693, R. v. Fanshaw, Skinn. 327 ("There being but the oath of the prosecutor, and so oath against oath, the defendant was acquitted"); 1714, Parker, C. J., in R. v. Muscot, 10 Mod. 192): "There is this difference between a prosecution for perjury and a bare contest about property, that in the latter case the matter stands indifferent, and therefore a credible and probable witness shall turn the scale in favor of either party. But in the former, presumption is ever to be made in favor of innocence, and the oath of the party will have a regard paid to it until disproved. Therefore, to convict a man of perjury, a probable, a credible witness is not enough; but it must be a strong and clear evidence, and more numerous than the evidence given for the defendant; for else there is only oath against oath"; this was said in charging a jury, and no precedent was cited); 1736, R. v. Nunez, Lee cas. t. Hardw. 265 (Lord Hardwicke, C. J. ["One witness is not sufficient] unless there were very strong circumstances; because one man's oath is as good as another's"); 1745, R. v. Broughton, 2 Str. 1229.

(1) The first of these lay in the important circumstance that in 1640, towards the end of Charles the First's reign, the Court of Star Chamber had been abolished [2] and its jurisdiction transferred to the King's Bench. Now the proceedings of the Star Chamber Court, being presided over by the Lord Chancellor, had always been conducted according to the ecclesiastical or civil law, by following or adopting its methods, much as did the Court of Chancery; and, in particular, the ecclesiastical rule of two witnesses obtained therein.[3] Furthermore, the crime of perjury, though also cognizable as a statutory crime in the ordinary criminal courts, was practically dealt with almost exclusively in the Star Chamber.[4] Hence, on the one hand, there was little or no occasion for any question to arise before 1640 as to proof of perjury in a common-law court; while, on the other hand, after the transfer of jurisdiction at that date, the canon-law notions of proof peculiar to perjury were likely to pass over and be adopted as a whole in the subsequent common-law practice. There was, therefore, by this change of mechanism, a tradition prepared, by the middle of the 1600s, for an exceptional doctrine to be established for proof of perjury; and by the end of the 1600s (as exhibited in the cases above cited) such a doctrine was making its appearance.

(2) But why did not the corrective consideration, already noted (ante, § 2032) which applied to prevent such a numerical rule in other common-law trials, apply here also, namely, the consideration that the jurors were themselves twelve witnesses, as being capable of and entitled to contribute information of their own? In the first place, the living strength of this consideration had by the beginning of the 1700s substantially disappeared,[5] and in this must probably be sought the real explanation why the perjury rule was able to obtain a firm footing. In other words, the quantitative notion of an oath was still popular enough, while the corrective notion — that of the jury as witnesses — had practically disappeared, and thus the way was open. Furthermore, a charge of perjury was the one case where a plausible inducement for such a rule was presented; because in all other criminal cases the accused could not testify, and thus one oath for the prosecution was in any case something as against nothing; but on a charge of perjury the accused's oath was always in effect in evidence, and thus, if but one witness was offered,

[2] St. 16 Car. I, c. 10.

[3] Ante 1635, Hudson, Treatise of the Star Chamber, 223, in Hargrave's Collectanea Juridica, vol. II ("they always require indifferent witnesses' clear proof, not by relation, and double testimony, or that which amounteth to double testimony").

[4] 1596, Damport v. Sympson, Cro. El. 520 ("Until the statute of 3 H.VII, c. 1, which gives power to examine and punish perjuries in the Star Chamber, there was not any punishment for any false oath of any witness at the common law"); 1883, Sir J. Stephen, History of the Criminal Law, III, 245 ("The present law upon the subject . . . originated entirely, as far as I can judge, in decisions by the Court of Star Chamber"); 1903, Leadam's Select Cases in the Star Chamber, Seld. Soc. Pub., vol. XVI, p. cxxxv, p. 102, note 17. Hudson, ubi supra, p. 71, says that perjury was "usually punished" there.

[5] Ante, § 1800; Thayer, Preliminary Treatise, 174.

there would be merely (as Chief Justice Parker said) oath against oath. Thus, in a perjury case, the quantitative theory of testimony would present itself with the greatest force. Such seems to be the course of thought which made possible the tardy introduction of this rule.

It found a permanent place, however, in the common law; for, in spite of a perception of its incongruity with modern ideas, and of an occasional hesitation, the rule, persisting through the 1700s, was fully confirmed in England in the 1800s.[6]

§ 2041. Same: (b) Policy of the Rule. The rule is in its nature now incongruous in our system. The quantitative theory of testimony, if consistently applied, should enforce a similar rule for every criminal charge, now that the accused is competent to testify. "Oath against oath," as a reason for the rule, is quite indefensible.[1]

But there may be reasons of policy, founded on experience (ante, § 2033, par. 2) sufficient to justify its maintenance:

1849, Mr. W. M. Best, Evidence, §§ 605–606: "The reason usually assigned in our books for requiring two witnesses in perjury — viz., that the evidence of the accused having been given on oath, when nothing beyond the testimony of a single witness is produced to falsify it, there is nothing but oath against oath — is by no means satisfactory. All oaths are not of equal value; for the credibility of the statement of a witness depends quite as much on his deportment when giving it, and the probability of his story, as on the fact of it being deposed to on oath; and, as is justly remarked by Sir W. D. Evans, the motives for falsehood in the original testimony or deposition may be much stronger with reference to the event on the one side than the motives for a false accusation of perjury on the other. . . . The foundations of this rule, we apprehend, lie much deeper. The legislator dealing with the offence of perjury has to determine the relative weight of conflicting duties. Measured merely by its religious or moral enormity, perjury, always a grievous, would in many cases be the greatest of crimes, and as such be deserving of the severest punishment which the law could inflict. But when we consider the very peculiar nature of this offence, and that every person who appears as a witness in a court of justice is liable to be accused of it by those against whom his evidence tells, who are frequently the basest and most unprincipled of mankind; and when we remember how powerless are the best rules of municipal law without the coöperation of society to enforce them,— we shall see that the obligation of protecting witnesses from oppression, or annoyance, by charges, or threats of charges of having borne false testimony, is far paramount to that of giving even perjury its deserts. To repress that crime, prevention is better than cure; and the law of England relies, for this purpose, on the means provided for detecting and exposing the crime at the moment of commission, — such as publicity, cross-examination, the aid of a jury, etc.; and on the infliction of a severe, though not excessive punishment,

[6] 1831, R. v. Mudie, 1 Moo. & Rob. 128 (perjury in swearing to an insolvent schedule by omitting certain debtors; the debtors testified each to the existence of his own debt; Lord Tenterden thought it "difficult to give any other evidence," and said that on conviction a new trial might be moved; but there was an acquittal); 1839, R. v. Gardiner, 8 C. & P. 737 (rule applied); 1840, R. v. Virrier, 12 A. & E. 317, 324 (rule applied); 1842, R. v. Parker, Car. & M. 639, 646, Tindal, C. J. (similar to R. v. Mudie; rule applied); 1913, Gaskell's Case, 8 Cr. App. 103 (rule applied).

§ 2041. [1] The rule was forcefully opposed in the following debate: 1828, Feb. 29, Mr. G. Lamb, Speech on the Courts of Common Law, Hans. Parl. Deb., 2d ser., XVIII, 867 ("The difficulty of convicting in cases of perjury is one of the great blots in the law, both civil and criminal," etc.). Mr. Wm. A. Purrington has pungently commented on "The Frequency of Perjury" (Columbia Law Review, VIII, 67; 1908).

wherever the commission of the crime has been clearly proved. But in order to carry out the great objects above mentioned, our law gives witnesses the privilege of refusing to answer questions which tend to criminate, or to expose them to penalty or forfeiture; it allows no action to be brought against a witness, for words written or spoken in the course of his evidence; and it throws every fence round a person accused of perjury. Besides, great precision is required in the indictment; the strictest proof is exacted of what the accused swore; and, lastly, the testimony of at least two witnesses must be forthcoming to prove its falsity. The result accordingly is that in England little difficulty, comparatively speaking, is found in obtaining voluntary evidence for the purposes of justice; and although many persons may escape the punishment awarded by law to perjury, instances of erroneous convictions for it are unknown, and the threat of an indictment for perjury is treated by honest and upright witnesses as a 'brutum fulmen.'"

This result, if tested by the canon already laid down for the rule in treason (ante, § 2037), may be correct; though in the end all depends upon local experience. If there is a relatively greater likelihood of false accusation of perjury (on the part of defeated litigants seeking to revenge themselves), and if there is, relatively to the interests of litigants in general, less harm in the escape of a guilty perjurer than in that of other criminals, then the rule justifies its existence.

In modern times cogent reasons have been given for believing that the rule has outlived its usefulness:

1921, HALLAM, J., in State v. Storey, 148 Minn. 398, 182 N. W. 613: "The question is a new one in this State, and we are at liberty to choose the rule which appeals to us as being most consonant with reason. Notwithstanding the high authority above cited, we are of the opinion that the rule laid down is out of harmony with our system of jurisprudence. In our opinion it is one of the rules of the common law inapplicable to our situation and 'inconsistent with our circumstances,' and hence not to be followed. We find ourselves unable to approve the doctrine that perjury is a more heinous crime than murder, or that one charged with perjury should have greater immunity than one charged with murder. Suppose, for example, the only eyewitness to a murder should testify that the accused is not the man who committed the crime, and yet the circumstantial evidence of guilt is so strong that the jury convicts of first degree murder. With what consistency can it be said that a quality of testimony which will justify a court in condemning a defendant to life imprisonment, or, in some jurisdictions, to be hanged, is insufficient to sustain a conviction of the falsifier of the crime of perjury for which he may suffer a penalty of a short term of imprisonment? The lightness with which (we are pained to say) the oath of a witness is too often treated, does not warrant us in making conviction of the crime of perjury most difficult of all crimes of which State courts have jurisdiction. We hold that perjury may be proved by circumstantial evidence if proof is made beyond reasonable doubt, as in the case of other crimes."

§ 2042. Same: (c) A Single Witness, if Corroborated, Suffices. A feature of the rule is now to be noticed which vitally distinguishes this and most of the following rules from the treason-rule, namely, the feature that a single witness suffices if corroborated. The other and corroborating evidence will of course usually be furnished in some shape through another witness, and thus there come to be two witnesses. But the corroborating evidence might conceivably come without another witness, for example, through the inspection of the accused's person (ante, § 1150). But the corroboration is asked merely to confirm the single witness' testimony and to induce the belief of it; so that when the corroboration has been furnished and the witness is believed, the verdict ultimately is founded upon the single witness' assertion. Or, put in another way, the treason rule requires two witnesses to the same fact; the perjury rule requires only one witness to the fact, and merely provides a means of reaching a belief in his testimony. This rule, then, while requiring a specific quantity of evidence, does not rest exclusively on the antiquated numerical or quantitative conception of testimony. It proceeds in part on the modern rational theory that an oath-assertion varies infinitely in its quality and significance, and that a single person's assertion, if made under specified conditions of credibility, may suffice to produce complete persuasion.

(1) This aspect of the rule — as requiring merely a single witness, if duly corroborated — has been fully recognized in modern times. It is said [1] that Lord Tenterden maintained two witnesses to the same fact to be necessary, and such an understanding perhaps prevailed with other judges at one time.[2] But it has been since repudiated in England;[3] and it is now everywhere conceded in this country that a single witness, somehow corroborated, suffices.[4]

(2) As to the nature of the corroboration, no detailed rule seems to have § 2042. [1] 1836, Coleridge, J., in R. v. Champney, 2 Lew. Cr. C. 258; 1854, Lord Broughan, in Jordan v. Money, 5 H. L. C. 185, 232.

[2] 1827, State v. Howard, 4 McC. 159 (no authority cited).

[3] 1854, Lord Broughan, ubi supra; 1859, R. v. Braithwaite, 8 Cox Cr. 254, 444, 1 F. & F. 638, 640 ("that rule is now exploded"); 1860, R. v. Towey, 8 Cox Cr. 328; St. 1911, 1 & 2 Geo. V, c. 6, § 13 (no person to be convicted of perjury, or subornation thereof, "solely upon the evidence of one witness as to the falsity of any statement alleged to be false").

Can. R. S. 1906, c. 146, Crim. C. § 1002 (like the treason rule, quoted ante, § 2036).

[4] Besides the following statutes and cases, the cases cited post assume the same principle: Ariz. Rev. St. 1913, P. C. § 1043 (perjury must be proved by "two witnesses, or one witness and corroborating circumstances"); Cal. C. C. P. 1872, § 1968 (perjury and treason must be proved "by more than one witness; treason, by the testimony of two witnesses to the same overt act; and perjury, by the testimony of two witnesses, or one witness and corroborating circumstances"); St. 1903, c. 532 (adds a new P. C. § 1103*a*, like the last clause of C. C. P. 1872, § 1968, supra); Ga. Rev. C. 1910, § 5742 (two witnesses, or one and corroborating circumstances); Ida. Comp. St. 1919, § 7972 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1968); Ill. 1885, Mackin v. People, 115 Ill. 312, 329, 3 N. E. 222; Mo. 1892, State v. Blize, 111 Mo. 464, 469, 20 S. W. 210; Mont. Rev. C. 1921, § 10608 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1968); N. M. 1898, Terr. v. Williams, 9 N. M. 400, 54 Pac. 232; Or. Laws 1920, § 801 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1968); Tex. Rev. C. Cr. P. 1911, § 806 (no conviction "except upon the testimony of two credible witnesses, or of one credible witness corroborated strongly by other evidence as to the falsity of the defendant's statement under oath, or upon his own confession in open court"); 1893, Meeks v. State, 32 Tex. Cr. 420, 422, 24 S. W. 98; 1906, Cleveland v. State, 50 Tex. Cr. 6, 95 S. W. 521 (the witness must be a "credible" one); 1922, Wooten v. State, — Tex. Cr. —, 237 S. W. 920 (an accomplice is not a credible witness); Utah: Comp. L. 1917, § 8848 ("Perjury must be proved by the testimony of two witnesses, or one witness and corroborating circumstances").

Not decided: 1921, State v. Storey, 148 Minn. 398, 182 N. W. 613 ("whether the direct testimony of one witness without more will sustain conviction," not decided).

For the nature of corroboration in general, from the point of view of logic and psychology as applicable to argument before the jury (not the rules of Admissibility), see the materials collected in the present author's "Principles of Judicial Proof, as given by Logic, Psychology, and General Experience, and illustrated in Judicial Trials" (1913), § 367.

been laid down, nor ought to be laid down.[5] The jury should be instructed not to convict unless the testimony of the principal witness has been so corroborated that they believe it to be true beyond a reasonable doubt.

(3) The rule of course applies only to the proof of the fact alleged as falsely sworn, and therefore a corroboration as to the act of swearing and the words

[5] ENGLAND: 1834, R. v. Mayhew, 6 C. & P. 315 ("even a letter [not on oath] . . . would be sufficient to make it unnecessary to have a second witness"); 1841, R. v. Yates, Car. & M. 132, 139 ("evidence confirmatory of that one witness in some slight particulars only," not sufficient); 1842, R. v. Parker, Car. & M. 639, 646 (there must be "some documentary evidence or some admission or some circumstances to supply the place of a second witness"); 1852, R. v. Boulter, 2 Den. Cr. C. 3966, 5 Cox Cr. 543, 16 Jur. 135 (no general rule laid down; "there must be something in the case to induce the jury to believe one rather than the other"; here, entries made at the time by the single witness, held insufficient; "it is corroborating him by himself"); 1859, R. v. Webster, 1 F. & F. 515 (memorandum made at the time by the single witness, held sufficient); 1859, R. v. Braithwaite, 1 F. & F. 638, 8 Cox Cr. 254, 444 (no corroboration, on the facts); 1860, R. v. Towey, 8 Cox Cr. 328 (oral admissions, held sufficient corroboration); 1865, R. v. Shaw, 10 Cox Cr. 66, 72 (Erle, C. J.: "What degree of corroborative evidence is requisite must be a matter for the opinion of the tribunal that tries the case, which must see that it deserves the title of corroborative evidence; any attempt to define the degree of corroborative evidence necessary would be illusory").

CANADA: 1914, R. v. Nash, 17 D. L. R. 725, Alta. (perjury; corroboration found, under Cr. C. § 1002; Stuart, J., diss.).

UNITED STATES: Federal: 1912, Allen v. U. S., C. C. A., 194 Fed. 664 (an instruction requiring two witnesses or one witness with corroborative circumstances, held erroneously refused; nature of corroboration discussed); California: 1900, People v. Rodley, 131 Cal. 240, 63 Pac. 351 (instructions held correct); 1903, People v. Parent, 139 Cal. 600, 73 Pac. 423 (statute applied); 1906, People v. Chadwick, 4 Cal. App. 63, 87 Pac. 384 (instruction construed); Delaware: 1902, State v. Fahey, 3 Del. 594, 54 Atl. 690 (rule applied); Columbia (Dist.): 1905, Cook v. U. S., 26 D. C. App. 427; Florida: 1922, Ward v. State, — Fla. —, 91 So. 189 (corroboration found); Georgia: 1876, Ransone v. Christian, 56 Ga. 351, 356 (need not amount to the testimony of a second witness); Illinois: 1902, Hereford v. People, 197 Ill. 222, 64 N. E. 310 (rule applied); Indiana: 1866, Hendricks v. State, 25 Ind. 493 (need not be "equivalent to the positive testimony of one witness"); 1916, Hann v. State, 185 Ind. 56, 119 N. E. 304; Iowa: 1866, State v. Raymond, 20 Ia. 582, 587 ("it must be at least strongly corroborative" and "must be by independent circumstances"); Kentucky: 1902, Williams v. Com., 13 Ky. 652, 68 S. W. 871 (rule applied); 1892, Com. v. Davies, 92 Ky. 460, 18 S. W. 10 (rule applied); 1905, Goslin v. Com., 121 Ky. 698, 90 S. W. 223 (rule applied); 1907, Stamper v. Com., — Ky. —, 100 S. W. 286 (rule applied); 1913, Partin v. Com., 154 Ky. 701, 159 S. W. 542 (form of instruction declared); Massachusetts: 1848, Com. v. Parker, 2 Cush. 212, 223 (there must "be established, by independent evidence, strong corroborating circumstances, of such a character as clearly to turn the scale"); Mississippi: 1901, Whittle v. State, 79 Miss. 327, 30 So. 722 (rule applied); Missouri: 1874, State v. Heed, 57 Mo. 252, 254 (it must be "at least strongly corroborative"); 1903, State v. Faulkner, 175 Mo. 546, 75 S. W. 116 (rule applied); 1904, State v. Hunter, 181 Mo. 316, 80 S. W. 955 (State v. Heed followed); New York: 1826, Woodbeck v. Keller, 6 Cow. 119, 121 (it need not be "tantamount to another witness," but it must be "strongly corroborative" of the single witness); 1921, People v. Henry, Sup. App. Div. 187 N. Y. Suppl. 673; North Carolina: 1827, State v. Molier, 1 Dev. L. 263, 265 ("some other independent evidence is necessary"); Ohio: 1859, Crusen v. State, 10 Oh. St. 258, 269 (need not be "of sufficient force to equal the positive testimony of another witness"); Porto Rico: 1906, U. S. v. Lozano, 7 P. I. 142 (one witness not sufficient); Pennsylvania: 1879, Williams v. Com., 91 Pa. 493, 501 (if "any material circumstances be proved" in confirmation, it suffices); South Carolina: 1819, State v. Hayward, 1 Nott & McC. 546, 548 ("some other independent evidence" is necessary); South Dakota: 1907, State v. Pratt, 21 S. D. 305, 112 N. W. 152 (citing cases); Texas: 1875, State v. Buie, 43 Tex. 532, 535 (corroboration, under the Code, must be of the material facts); Washington: 1905, State v. Rutledge, 37 Wash. 523, 79 Pac. 1123 (the corroboration need not be "of equal weight" to another witness).

It has very sensibly been held that if the defendant himself takes the stand, his manner as a witness may sufficiently supply the corroboration, of which the jury alone judges; so that here the rule virtually falls away: 1884, State v. Miller, 24 W. Va. 802, 807.

sworn is not called for.[6] Moreover, the corroboration is required for the perjured fact as a whole, and not to every detail or constituent part of it.[7] But as to each separate assignment of fact in the indictment (whether or not in the same count) the rule applies independently.[8]

(4) The rule has usually been held to apply even in civil causes where the proof of perjury becomes necessary.[9]

(5) The rule should not apply necessarily to a charge of subornation of perjury, because the act of subornation does not involve the theory of oath against oath, and the perjury may be evidenced by the perjured witness himself, whose present testimony is thus not opposed to the testimony for the prosecution.[10]

(6) In at least one State, the rule has been in effect repudiated, by holding that circumstantial evidence suffices, i. e. that not even one witness is needed to the main fact of falsity, that this main fact's falsity may be sufficiently evidenced by inference from circumstances, and that no one of these circumstances need be evidenced by any particular number of witnesses.[11]

[6] Accord: 1887, U. S. v. Thompson, 31 Fed. 331, C. C. (subornation of perjury; the perjurer's testimony need not be corroborated); 1906, Boren v. U. S., 144 Fed. 801, C. C. A., semble (subornation of perjury; the rule does not apply); 1903, Stone v. State 118 Ga. 705, 45 S. E. 630 (the perjurer testifying to the fact of subornation, on a charge of subornation, need not be corroborated, but the rule of corroboration applies to the perjury itself); 1864, State v. Wood, 17 Ia. 18; 1847, Com. v. Pollard, 12 Metc. Mass. 225, 227; 1901, State v. Renswick, 85 Minn. 19, 88 N. W. 22 (subornation; the corroboration of the actual perjury need not extend to the fact of the defendant's inducement); 1819, State v. Hayward, 1 Nott & McC. S. C. 546, 548.

Contra: 1869, People v. Evans, 40 N. Y. 1 (subornation of perjury; the testimony of the perjurer, testifying to both perjury and subornation, required to be corroborated; the opinion proceeds upon the rule as to accomplices, post, § 2056); 1827, State v. Howard, 4 McC. S. C. 159 (to prove "the facts sworn to").

[7] Eng. 1848, Patteson, J., in R. v. Roberts, 2 C. & K. 607, 614 ("There need not be two witnesses to prove every fact necessary to make out an assignment of perjury. If the false swearing be that two persons were together at a certain time, and the assignment of perjury that they were not together at that time, evidence by one witness that at the time named the one was at London, and by another witness that the other was at York, would be sufficient proof"); Can. 1913, R. v. Curry, N. Sc., 12 D. L. R. 13; U. S. 1916, Goins v. Com., 167 Ky. 603, 181 S. W. 184 (if the false oath involves two facts, one witness to each suffices; "they corroborate each other in the fact that the accused swore falsely"); 1922, State v. Cerfoglio, — Nev. —, 205 Pac. 791 (perjury as to sale of liquor; careful opinion by Coleman, J.); 1902, State v. Courtright, 66 Oh. 35, 63 N. E. 590 (the subject of the corroborated witness' testimony must be the main fact forming the subject of the perjury).

[8] Can. 1916, R. v. Peterson, 31 D. & L. R. 295, Alta. (perjury; corroboration required "for each separate assignment of fact in the indictment"; citing the above text with approval); U. S. 1921, Pressley v. State, — Ala. App. —, 88 So. 291; 1890, Marvin v. State, 53 Ark. 395, 398, 14 S. W. 87; 1920, Yarbrough v. State, 79 Fla. 256, 83 So. 873 (larceny; falsity of defendant's oath to non-possession; rule applied); 1879, Williams v. Com., 91 Pa. 493, 501.

[9] 1849, Spruil v. Cooper, 16 Ala. 791 (slander for charging with perjury): 1851, Laughran v. Kelly, 8 Cush. Mass. 199, 202 (action on the case for garnishee's false statement under oath); 1826, Woodbeck v. Keller, 6 Cow. N. Y. 119 (slander for charging with perjury); 1828, Coulter v. Stewart, 2 Yerg. Tenn. 225 (slander by charging perjury). Contra: 1876, Rice v. Coolidge, 121 Mass. 393, 397 (action for subornation of perjury; the perjury rule is "applicable only to criminal proceedings"; Laughran v. Kelly not cited).

[10] Cases cited supra, n. 6, and post, § 2060, n. 1 (rule for accomplices); 1913, State v. Richardson, 248 Mo. 563, 154 S. W. 735 (subornation; the rule is here not applicable to proof of the perjury; cases collected).

[11] 1921, State v. Storey, 148 Minn. 398, 182 N. W. 613 (quoted ante, § 2041 in text; here the perjury as to the identity of the person selling liquor was held sufficiently evidenced circumstantially).

§ 2043. Same: (d) Exception for Self-Contradictory Oaths. Suppose that the accused has sworn contraries on two different occasions; does the rule still require a corroborated witness, when as against the oath charged in the indictment is produced the other oath to the contrary?

Perhaps the two contraries are reconcilable, or perhaps the accused's knowledge of the falsity on the one occasion does not of itself appear from the contrary oath. But it is not a question whether additional corroborative evidence may be needed. The question is whether it is invariably needed, as a rule, even when the nature of the fact sworn to makes it perfectly clear that the falsity must have been stated knowingly. Furthermore, the difficulty of framing an indictment (arising from the uncertainty whether the one or the other assertion should be alleged false) has nothing to do with the rule of evidence; for it may be impossible to allege which of the two is false, while it may still be an incontrovertible fact that the accused has in either the one or the other assertion spoken with knowing falsity. Is it then not proper, without more, to allow the jury, merely by comparing the assertions, to determine that one of them was perjured? The question is practically the same even where the second assertion was not under oath; for the nature of the fact asserted remains the same, and the comparison may equally suffice to convince the jury.

It seems clear that the rule here suffers an exception, and that by mere comparison the jury may determine the falsity. The purpose of the rule is to protect the accused from the false testimony of a single witness swearing against him; here no attempt is made to condemn him upon the credit of another person; the rule's protection is not needed; and the rule should fall with its reason:

1840, WAYNE, J., in U. S. v. Wood, 14 Pet. 430, 437, 440: "If it be true, then (and it is so) that the rule of a single witness being insufficient to prove perjury rests upon the law of a presumptive equality of credit between persons, or upon what Starkie terms the apprehension that it would be unsafe to convict in a case where there is merely the oath of one man to be weighed against that of another, [it follows that we may] satisfy the equal claim to belief, or remove the apprehension, by concurring written proofs which existed and are proved to have been in the knowledge of the person charged with the perjury when it was committed, especially if the written proofs came from himself and are facts which he must have known because they were his own acts, — and the reason for the rule ceases. . . . In what cases, then, will the rule not apply? or, in what cases may a living witness to the 'corpus delicti' of a defendant be dispensed with and documentary or written testimony be relied upon to convict? We answer, to all such where a person is charged with a perjury directly disproved by documentary or written testimony springing from himself, with circumstances showing the corrupt intent; in cases where the perjury charged is contradicted by a public record, proved to have been well known to the defendant when he took the oath, the oath only being proved to have been taken; in cases where a party is charged with taking an oath contrary to what he must necessarily have known to be the truth, and the false swearing can be proved by his own letters relating to the fact sworn to, or by other written testimony existing and being found in the possession of a defendant and which has been treated by him as containing the evidence of the fact recited in it." [1]

§ 2043. [1] So also a good statement in the Reporters' note to 5 B. & Ald. 939 (1822).

This conclusion has been usually accepted, and may be regarded as the orthodox one, presumably for the case of a contradictory statement not under oath,[2] and certainly for that of a contradictory oath.[3]

§ 2044. Sundry Crimes, under Statutes. In a few jurisdictions, a requirement of number has been introduced by statute for certain additional crimes.[1]

[2] 1840, U. S. v. Wood, 14 Pet. 430, 437, 441 (false oath to cost of imported goods; the invoice-book and letters of the defendant, held sufficient to prove the perjury; Thompson, J., diss.; quoted supra). Contra: 1904, State v. Hunter, 181 Mo. 316, 80 S. W. 955; 1854, Dodge v. State, 24 N. J. L. 455, 461 semble (cited infra); 1889, State v. Buckley, 18 Or. 228, 22 Pac. 838; 1917, Paytes v. State, 137 Tenn. 129, 191 S. W. 975.

[3] Accord: Eng. 1764, Anon., cited 5 B. & Ald. 931, 939 (per Lord Mansfield, C. J., Wilmot, Aston, and Yates, JJ.); 1774, R. v. Dane, cited ib. 939, semble (per Chambre, J.); 1822, R. v. Knill, cited ib. 929 ("the jury might infer the motive from the circumstances"); 1822, R. v. Harris, ib. 926, 932 (counsel for defendant conceded that the contradiction of oaths "might have been sufficient alone for the jury to have convicted the defendant of perjury"); 1823, R. v. Jackson, 1 Lew. Cr. C. 270, semble (if the jury believe one of the oaths false); Can. 1921, R. v. Brewer, 60 D. L. R. 558, Alta. semble (if the jury believe that the oath charged is false); U. S. Fed. 1840, U. S. v. Wood, 14 Pet. 430, 437 (quoted supra); Cal. P. C. 1872, § 118*a* (perjury in false affidavit of intended testimony; the affiant's subsequent testimony "contrary to any of the matters in such affidavit" to be 'prima facie' evidence of falsity).

Contra: Eng. 1838, R. v. Wheatland, 8 C. & P. 238, Gurney, B. (contradiction of oaths, alone not sufficient, and confirmatory evidence required; but here the difficulty turned on the indictment); 1839, R. v. Gaynor, 1 Cr. & D. 142, 147 (Ireland; Torrens, J., thought this sufficient; but the judges afterwards unanimously decided to the contrary); 1844, R. v. Hughes, 1 C. & K. 519, 527, per Tindal, C. J. (merely to "prove the two contradictory statements and leave it there" is not enough); U. S. 1916, People v. McClintic, 193 Mich. 589, 160 N. W. 461; 1854, Dodge v. State, 24 N. J. L. 455, 461 (such evidence "in connection with the testimony of one other witness" suffices); 1920, People v. Glass, Sup. App. Div., 181 N. Y. Suppl. 547 (perjury charged in a statement on cross-examination contradicting statements on direct examination and before a magistrate; citing neither U. S. v. Wood nor any of the above cases in accord with it); 1906, Billingsley v. State, 49 Tex. Cr. 620, 95 S. W. 520 (there must be other evidence than the contradictory oath); 1876, Schwartz v. Com., 27 Gratt. Va. 1025 (leading opinion, by Staples, J.).

The following peculiar case also is sound: 1902, People v. Doody, 172 N. Y. 165, 64 N. E. 807 (perjury in falsely testifying that he did not remember certain criminal acts; no direct testimony from witnesses as to the accused's memory being possible, the rule was held not applicable, and proof by comparison with his repeated prior testimony asserting and admitting the acts was held sufficient).

Compare Pigott's perjury in the Parnell case (quoted ante, § 1260).

A New York statute of 1906 (c. 324, amending Penal Code, § 101*a*), Consol. L. 1909, Penal, § 1627, seems to touch this point (in perjury, the falsity shall be presumptively established by proof of the defendant's contrary testimony under oath "in any other written testimony, declaration, deposition, certificate, affidavit, or other writing by him subscribed").

§ 2044. [1] ENGLAND: 1885, St. 48 & 49 Vict. c. 69, § 2 (procuring for prostitution or seduction; no conviction to be had on the evidence "of one witness, unless such witness be corroborated in some material particular by evidence implicating the accused"); § 3 (so also for procuring defilement by fraud, etc.).

CANADA: Dom. R. S. 1906, c. 146, Crim. C. § 1002 (the treason rule, quoted ante, § 2036, applied to forgery, fraudulent marriage, seduction, and kindred offences specified); Alta. 1916, R. v. Peterson, 31 D. L. R. 295 (forgery; corroboration held to be lacking); Man. 1915, R. v. Rabinovitch, 21 D. L. R. 600, (secret commissions; the accomplice's evidence held corroborated); Ont. 1906, R. v. Daun, 12 Ont. L. R. 227, 231 (rule of Dom. Crim. Code, § 684, supra, applied, in a charge of seduction); Sask. 1914, R. v. Scheller, 16 D. L. R. 462 (forgery; Can. Cr. C. § 1002 applied).

UNITED STATES: Arizona: Rev. St. 1913, P. C. § 1050 (false pretences; if the pretence is not in writing by defendant, it must be proved "by the testimony of two witnesses, or that of one witness and corroborating circumstances," except on a charge of marrying or obtaining money or property by personation);

California: P. C. 1872, § 1110 (certain kinds of cheating by false pretences; if the alleged pretence was merely "in language unaccompanied by a false token or writing" then there must be either a written memorandum signed by defendant, or two witnesses, or "one witness and corroborating circumstances"); St. 1905, c. 532 (amends P. C. 1872, § 1110, as to the crimes covered);

These crimes include sexual offences (as in England and Canada), forgery and false pretences (as in Canada and Idaho), capital offences in general (in Connecticut), and miscellaneous offences. Each measure has doubtless a special local history and reason.

The propriety of such rules will depend somewhat on local conditions, and may perhaps be adequately tested by the canon already stated (ante, § 2037). Most of these statutes have probably been based upon some single local instance of hardship, and not upon any general survey of experience in the class of crimes dealt with. They may contain suggestions worth considering,

Connecticut: Gen. St. 1918, § 6633 (no person is to be convicted of any capital crime "without the testimony of at least two witnesses, or that which is equivalent thereto"); 1881, State v. Smith, 49 Conn. 376, 384 (the two witnesses are not required for every important fact; what is the "equivalent" of the witnesses is entirely for the jury); 1905, State v. Marx, 78 Conn. 18, 60 Atl. 690 (the trial Court need not define the meaning of "equivalent thereto," under the above statute); 1905, State v. Kelly, 77 Conn. 266, 58 Atl. 705; 1905, State v. Bailey, 79 Conn. 589, 65 Atl. 951; 1908, State v. Washelesky, 81 Conn. 22, 70 Atl. 63 (State v. Smith followed); 1914, State v. Wakefield, 88 Conn. 164, 90 Atl. 230 (rule adhered to);

Idaho: Comp. St. 1919, § 8956 (false pretences; unless there be a writing in defendant's hand, there can be no conviction "unless the pretence be proven by the testimony of two witnesses, or that of one witness, and corroborating circumstances"; not applicable to personation to obtain marriage or receive money or property);

Indiana: Burns' Ann. St. 1914, § 2114 ("Three witnesses at least shall be required to prove the fact of genuineness" of a note, bill, etc., or "other instrument of writing, except in case of larceny"; but "the single evidence of the cashier of the bank purporting to have issued the same" suffices);

Kansas: Gen. St. 1915, § 8137 (persons of skill may testify to the genuineness of a bill or other writing; "but three witnesses at least shall be required to prove the fact, except [that] in case of a larceny thereof the single evidence of the president, cashier, or teller of the bank purporting to have issued the same, or the maker thereof, may be received as sufficient"); 1883, State v. Foster, 30 Kan. 365, 367, 2 Pac. 628 (statutory requirement for number applies only when expert witnesses are used; not, as here, to a cashier testifying to a draft of his own bank);

Kentucky: Stats. 1915, § 1594 (no one is to be convicted of offences under the election-law "upon the testimony of a single witness, unless sustained by strong corroborating circumstances"); 1895, Com. v. Hart, 98 Ky. 7, 32 S.W. 138 (applying the statute);

Massachusetts: Gen. L. 1920, c. 272, § 11 (enticing for prostitution, fornication, etc.; one witness alone is not sufficient, unless "corroborated in a material particular");

Minnesota: Gen. St. 1913, § 4060 (committal of infant to State training school; charges must be proven "by the testimony of at least two disinterested witnesses");

Montana: Rev. C. 1921, § 11987 (false pretences; like Cal. P. C. § 1110);

Nevada: Rev. L. 1912, § 7179 (like Cal. P. C. § 1110);

New Jersey: 1903, State v. Kenilworth, 69 N. J. L. 114, 54 Atl. 244 (construing St. 1888, p. 249, requiring the oath of one or more "credible" witnesses to convict of palmistry);

North Dakota: Comp. L. 1913, § 10842 (like Cal. P. C. § 1110);

Oklahoma: Comp. St. 1921, § 1807 (a threat, not in writing, to publish a libel, and the "character of libellous matter," must be proved "by at least two witnesses, or by one witness and corroborating circumstances"); § 2702 (like Cal. P. C. § 1110);

Porto Rico: Rev. St. & C. 1911, § 6284 (certain kinds of cheating by false pretences; like Cal. P. C. § 1110);

South Carolina: Crim. L. 1922, § 189 (breach of a verbal contract for land-lease is punishable by fine or imprisonment; "the contract herein referred to, if verbal, shall be witnessed by at least two disinterested witnesses"); § 184 (contracts of personal service; "if verbal, they must be witnessed by at least two disinterested witnesses, not related by blood or marriage within the sixth degree to either party"); 1901, State v. Easterlin, 61 S.C. 74, 39 S.E. 250 (brother of a party, held disinterested, under the statute);

South Dakota: Rev. C. 1919, § 4883 (like Cal. P. C. § 1110, but this does not apply to the offences of false personation to secure marriage or money or property);

Utah: Comp. L. 1917, § 8991 (like Cal. P. C. § 1110); § 1923 (offences against dairy and food law; to prove identity of sample analysed, the "testimony of said two witnesses as above shall be sufficient," i.e. of the sender and the receiver of the sample).

For other statutes requiring corroboration of a specific kind of witness (rape-complainant, children, Chinese, etc.), see post, §§ 2056–2066.

but on the whole they are likely to be of little service. A capable judiciary, and an effective jury system (both depending upon a conscientious citizenship and a sound condition of politics), are in the end the only real safeguards of an innocent man.

Compare here the similar rules post, §§ 2061, 2066, also applicable in criminal cases, but resting upon the kind of witness, and not primarily upon the kind of offence; those rules nevertheless are sometimes limited to trials for specific offences.

2. Civil Cases

§ 2045. Civil Cases: Rules derived from the Ecclesiastical Law. The rule of the later Roman law, and of its successors, the Continental civil law and the Canon law, required at least two witnesses to prove any fact (ante, § 2032). Whatever detailed additional rules of number existed on the Continent, and in the earlier English canon law as administered in the spiritual Courts, the later ecclesiastical law in England seems to have been satisfied in general with the simple rule of two witnesses for all classes of cases.[1] In the final form, as it appears when the rulings of those Courts begin to be published (that is, by the end of the 1700s), the rule is still further attenuated, and requires only one witness with corroborating circumstances.[2] The further definition of the notion of corroboration seems seldom to have been formulated into rules,[3] and was carried out in each case according to the discretion of the judge.

But in the meantime this rule of the ecclesiastical law had been exercising an influence, direct and indirect, upon English law outside of the narrow jurisdiction of the ecclesiastical Courts. In the first place, its methods of procedure and proof had been adopted by the Chancellors, who, being originally ecclesiastics, were trained in the civil and canon law, and made its practice the basis of that of the Court of Chancery.[4] These rules, there enforced, became an integral part of the common law as distinguished from the canon law. In the next place, the jurisdiction of the ecclesiastical Courts was exclusive over some subjects — matrimonial and testamentary — and thus certain rules became associated with certain classes of litigation. Thus, the ecclesiastical rule in some subjects came later to be incorporated into the ordinary (or "common") system of law in one of two ways; namely, either a statute imitated or adopted the ecclesiastical rule, or, when the ecclesiastical Courts were abolished and their jurisdiction transferred to the ordinary Courts, § 2045. [1] The authorities have been noted ante, § 2032, par. 1.

[2] 1790, Crompton v. Butler, 1 Hagg. Cons. 460, 463 (rule applied to an action for defamation; one witness each to separate utterances, held sufficient); 1792, Hutchins v. Denziloe, ib. 181, 182 ("the ordinary rule of the ecclesiastical law" requires two witnesses, or one with corroborating circumstances; here applied to a prosecution for quarrelling in church).

[3] 1847, Dr. Lushington, in Simmons v. Simmons, 1 Rob. Eccl. 566, 575 ("evidence to mere probability, not applying to the act, cannot be received as corroborative"; treating the fact of A.'s intercourse with M., before A.'s marriage to B., as evidence making probable his adulterous intercourse with her after marriage, but not as corroboration to the act itself).

[4] Langdell, Summary of Equity Pleading, § 46.

their rule of proof was followed as well as their rules of substantive law. Of the former mode — statutory adoption — at least one instance (that of nuncupative wills) occurred during the existence of the ecclesiastical Courts; but the remainder were created by the very statutes transferring the ecclesiastical jurisdiction, for it was natural in one and the same enactment to deal with both the jurisdiction and the rules of law to be transferred. Of the latter mode — judicial adoption of precedent — it would seem that there ought to have been no instances at all; because the legislative transfer of jurisdiction, with a confirmation of established substantive rules, would still leave a common-law Court free (in the absence of express legislation) to follow in its newly acquired matters of jurisdiction all its traditional rules of proof, in particular the rule requiring no more than one witness. This was indeed the result wherever the question was expressly forced upon the attention of those Courts.[5] Yet in one or two subjects — for example, the rule about a respondent's confession in divorce (post, § 2067) — there was a general assumption that the rule of evidence came over with the jurisdiction and the rules of substantive law.

Thus, in several instances (now to be examined), a rule of number originating in the ecclesiastical Court and not indigenous to the common law, has become a part of our law, either by filtration through the Court of chancery or the Court of probate, or by express statutory confirmation or imitation. On the other hand, it remains true that except in these ways no rule of number pure and simple — i. e. no rule declaring insufficient a single witness, irrespective of kind — has found a footing in the common law for civil cases.

§ 2046. Same: Divorce Cause denied. The ecclesiastical rule (post, § 2067) requiring corroboration for the confession of a divorce-respondent, applied solely to the confessing testimony of the respondent, and had no application to that of the complainant, nor to the number of witnesses produced by the complainant. Nevertheless, the general rule of the ecclesiastical Courts, that one witness alone was insufficient for any claim, was equally applicable to a petition for divorce, and was so construed.[1] The two rules, it will thus be perceived, were entirely independent of each other, — the present rule for the complainant resting on the general principle of canon law everywhere accepted, and the other rule, for confessions (post, § 2067), having its origin in local English ecclesiastical law. The former, therefore, would disappear entirely, in the common-law Courts, with the entire ecclesiastical principle (ante, § 2045) about numbers of witnesses. The latter would also, it is true, disappear as a matter of precedent; but a special policy (post, § 2068) sufficed to preserve it.

[5] Robinson v. Robinson, 1 Sw. & Tr. 362, post, § 2067 (divorce confession); Gould v. Safford, 39 Vt. 498, post, § 2050 (nuncupative will).

§ 2046. [1] These cases deal with adultery only; but the rule seems to have applied to all causes for divorce: Eng. 1795, Donellan v. Donellan, 2 Hagg. Eccl. (Suppl.) 144; 1832, Kenrick v. Kenrick, 4 Hagg. Cons. 114, 136; 1844, Evans v. Evans, 1 Rob. Eccl. 165, 175 (one witness alone is insufficient, as general principle of canon law); 1847, Simmons v. Simmons, ib. 566, 569, 577.

In Porto Rico the canon-law rule appears to be in force: 1903, Ortiz v. Rodriguez, 4 P. R. 51 (two witnesses held "to constitute sufficient evidence," on objection that "one single witness testifying to his own knowledge of the fact is not enough"); 1903, Fortuno v. Ferreras, 4 P. R. 214 (the two witnesses here held not "sufficiently explicit and circumstantial"); 1904, Loaiza v. Caballero, 6 P. R. 117 (two witnesses sufficient).

Accordingly, it seems clear that, so far as the testimony for the complainant in divorce is concerned, no common-law principle requires that a second witness or corroborating circumstances be brought, either to support ordinary testimony or to support the complainant's own testimony.[2]

One or two Courts, however, have judicially introduced a rule, not prescribing (like the ecclesiastical rule) that any one witness is insufficient, but merely that the testimony of the complainant alone,[3] or of a particeps criminis alone,[4] without corroboration, is insufficient; and in several other jurisdictions a similar provision has been made by statute.[5]

Other statutes provide generally that the testimony of "the parties" alone

[2] Can. 1921, Cesale v. Cesale, 57 D. L. R. 614, N. Sc. (divorce for adultery; petitioner's testimony may suffice without corroboration; English rulings reviewed); U. S. 1920, Sweet v. Sweet, 119 Me. 81, 109 Atl. 379 (Robbins v. Robbins, Mass., followed); 1868, Robbins v. Robbins, 100 Mass. 150 ("the rule . . . is merely a general rule of practice, and not an inflexible rule of law; . . . there is no law to prevent the finding of a fact upon the testimony of a party whose credibility and good faith are satisfactorily established"); 1878, Flattery v. Flattery, 88 Pa. 27 ("the law has made the libellant a competent witness; whether credible, was a question for the jury and not for the Court"); 1891, Lee v. Lee, 3 Wash. 236, 237, 28 Pac. 355.

[3] England: 1915, Joseph v. Joseph, Prob. 122 (desertion by husband; to find a second desertion relied upon, "the uncorroborated evidence of the woman" is not enough). Arkansas: 1919, Wood v. Wood, 140 Ark. 361, 215 S. W. 681 (rule not applied to a petition for temporary alimony); Columbia (Dist.): 1904, Lenoir v. Lenoir, 24 D. C. App. 160, 165 (cited post, § 2067, n. 10); New Hampshire: 1842, Kimball v. Kimball, 13 N. H. 222, 225 ("or, if no other persons have knowledge respecting the facts In the case, there must be evidence that the libellant sustains a good general character"; compare the rule for corroboration of witnesses, ante, § 1104); New Jersey: 1870, Woodworth v. Woodworth, 21 N. J. Eq. 251 (the plaintiff's testimony alone is insufficient); Reid v. Reid, 21 N. J. Eq. 331, 333; 1871, Palmer v. Palmer, 22 N. J. Eq. 88, 90; 1889, McShane v. McShane, 45 N. J. Eq. 341, 19 Atl. 465; 1890, Costill v. Costill, 47 N. J. Eq. 346, 350, 21 Atl. 35; 1901, Moak v. Moak, — N. J. Eq. —, 48 Atl. 394; 1901, Garcin v. Garcin, 62 N. J. Eq. 189, 50 Atl. 71; 1902, Grover v. Grover, 63 N. J. Eq. 771, 50 Atl. 1051 (for all causes of divorce); 1904, Cotter v. Cotter, — N. J. Eq. —, 58 Atl. 73; 1905, Sabin v. Sabin, — N. J. Eq. —, 59 Atl. 627; 1905, Hunt v. Hunt, — N. J. Eq. —, 59 Atl. 642; 1905, Wood v. Wood, — N. J. Eq. —, 62 Atl. 429; 1905, Kline v. Kline, — N. J. Eq. —, 61 Atl. 160 (desertion); 1907, Foote v. Foote, 71 N. J. Eq. 273, 65 Atl. 205 (desertion); 1908, Topfer v. Topfer, — N. J. Eq. —, 68 Atl. 1071 (desertion); 1916, Hague v. Hague, 85 N. J. Eq. 537, 96 Atl. 579 (desertion); 1918, Rogers v. Rogers, 89 N. J. Eq. 1, 104 Atl. 32 (pointing out that the rule here is not of statutory origin, and noting an error in the syllabus to Foote v. Foote, supra); 1920, Lasker v. Lasker, 91 N. J. Eq. 352, 110 Atl. 27 (desertion); 1920, Stieglitz v. Stieglitz, 92 N. J. Eq. 292, 112 Atl. 310; 1920, Meek v. Meek, 92 N. J. Eq. 23, 112 Atl. 409; 1921, Foster v. Foster, — N. J. L. —, 114 Atl. 333.

[4] 1823, Best v. Best, unreported, quoted in Poynter, Marr & Div. 198; 1845, Emmons v. Emmons, Walker Ch. (Mich.) 532, 534; 1855, Simons v. Simons, 13 Tex. 468, 4714, semble.

Such rules are therefore in theory really of the sort examined post, § 2066.

[5] Colorado: Comp. St. 1921, § 5597 (residence in Colorado of an applicant for divorce must be proved by "at least one credible witness other than the plaintiff," except for divorce for adultery or cruelty done within the State); Iowa: Comp. Code 1919, § 6622 ("no divorce shall be granted on the testimony of the plaintiff alone"); Maryland: Annot. Code 1914, Art. 34, § 4 (in proceedings for divorce no decree shall be rendered "upon the testimony of the plaintiff alone; but in all such cases testimony in corroboration of that of the plaintiff shall be necessary"); Kentucky: Stats. 1915, § 2119 (quoted post, § 2067); 1901, Barnett v. Barnett, — Ky. —, 64 S. W. 844 (statute applied); Wisconsin: Circuit Court Rule 28, under Stats. 1919, § 2348; Contra: Indiana: Burns Ann. St. 1914, § 1077 (divorce; defendant's denial under oath "shall not render necessary any further or other proof" than if he had not denied).

shall not suffice; these, being aimed chiefly at the use of respondents' confessions, are placed post, § 2067; but they are usually construed as including the testimony of the complainant.[6]

§ 2047. Same: (2) Chancery Bill denied by Defendant's Oath. The Court of Chancery, in all classes of cases, followed directly the ecclesiastical rule that two witnesses were required to prove any material fact as the foundation of a decree. This rule seems not to appear in the reports until the end of the 1600s,[1] nearly two centuries after the Chancery system had begun to be an organized competitor of the common-law Courts. But it is not to be doubted that the rule was followed from the beginning. Probably the direct and simple form of the ecclesiastical rule was in the beginning unchanged; but in later development there came alterations both in the scope of the rule and in the reasons given for it.

(1) The scope of the rule, as it comes into the modern law, is confined to cases where the defendant by his sworn answer has directly denied on oath the allegation of the bill. In other words, the rule does not apply in all cases other than where the allegation is admitted to be true. In Chancery, a mere failure to deny did not (as at common law) amount to a judicial admission; unless a defendant expressly admitted the allegation, or unless he was in contempt for refusing to answer at all and the bill was ordered to be taken 'pro confesso,' the plaintiff must still prove his allegations.[2] Accordingly, it

[6] Arizona: 1921, Lundy v. Lundy, — Ariz. —, 202 Pac. 809 (divorce; under Civ. C. 1913, § 3861, amending the prior text, the corroboration of the petitioner's testimony may be furnished by the respondent's admissions; Flanigan, J., diss.); California: 1871, Evans v. Evans, 41 Cal. 103 ("It would be impossible to lay down any general rule as to the degree of corroboration which will be requisite"); 1874, Matthai v. Matthai, 49 Cal. 90, 94; 1891, Cooper v. Cooper, 88 Cal. 45, 48, 25 Pac. 1062; 1892, Venzke v. Venzke, 94 Cal. 225, 29 Pac. 499; 1894, Wolff v. Wolff, 102 Cal. 433, 437, 36 Pac. 767, 1037; 1897, Smith v. Smith, 119 Cal. 183, 48 Pac. 730; 1898, Andrews v. Andrews, 120 Cal. 186, 52 Pac. 208 (nature of corroboration, defined); 1905, Avery v. Avery, 148 Cal. 239, 82 Pac. 967 (similar); Idaho: 1908, Bell v. Bell, 15 Ida. 7, 96 Pac. 196; 1917, Donaldson v. Donaldson, 31 Ida. 180, 170 Pac. 94 (divorce for cruelty; Rev. C. § 2661 applied); 1919, Piatt v. Piatt, 32 Ida. 407, 184 Pac. 470 (failing to cite Bell v. Bell, supra); Iowa: 1916, Leonard v. Leonard, 174 Ia. 734, 156 N. W. 803 (statute applied); 1921, Anderson v. Anderson, 191 Ia. 497, 181 N. W. 241 (statute applied); Maryland: 1880, LeBrun v. LeBrun, 55 Md. 496, 503 ("mere declarations of either of the parties" not sufficient); Minnesota: 1900, Westphal v. Westphal, 81 Minn. 242, 83 N. W. 988 (statute applied); Ohio: 1833, Hansel v. Hansel, Wright 212 (under statute); N. Dakota: 1916, Thompson v. Thompson, 162 N. D. 255, 156 N. W. 492 (statute applied).

Contra: 1901, Rosecrance v. Rosecrance, 127 Mich. 322, 86 N. W. 809 (under Comp. St. § 8652, a divorce may be decreed on the testimony of complainant alone, the statute referring only to confessional declarations).

Whether under such statutes a respondent's confession, which would of itself be insufficient under § 2067 post, may serve as sufficient corroboration for the present purpose, is a petty quibble upon which different views have been expressed, — affirmatively, in Smith v. Smith, Cal. supra, and Lundy v. Lundy, Ariz., post, § 2067; and negatively, in Scarborough v. Scarborough, Ark., cited post, § 2067; Piatt v. Piatt, Ida., supra; 1916, Garrett v. Garrett, 86 N. J. Eq. 293, 98 Atl. 848.

For the requirement of corroboration for detectives, prostitutes, and persons of loose character in divorce cases, see post, § 2066.

§ 2047. [1] The following are early cases: 1679, Wakelin v. Walthal, 2 Ch. Cas. 8; 1682, Hobbs v. Norton, 1 Vern. 136; 1683, Alam v. Jourdan, 1 Vern. 161; 1692, Christ College v. Widdrington, 2 Vern. 283; 1693, Bath and Mountague's Case, 3 Ch. Cas. 53, 123 (per Lord Keeper Somers).

On all of the ensuing points, compare the learned article of Mr. (now Judge) Gest, "The Responsive Answer in Equity," cited ante, § 2032, note 1.

[2] Langdell, Summary of Equity Pleading, §§ 84, 137.

would seem that in the intermediate case, i. e. where the defendant answered, and yet neither expressly admitted nor expressly denied the allegation under oath, and also even where he denied but in an answer not under oath, the allegation must be proved, and yet needed not two witnesses:

1778, THURLOW, L. C., in Pember v. Mathers, 1 Bro. Ch. C. 52: "I take the rule to be that, where the defendant in express terms negatives the allegations of the bill, and the evidence is only one person affirming what has been so negatived, there the Court will neither make a decree nor send it to a trial at law. Where the Court does not send it to a trial at law, it orders the answer to be read in evidence, and sends it to the Court of law only to find the consequences. Because the Court of equity has such a rule, therefore it refers to a court of law what a court of equity should do; this was done by the House of Lords in Lord Milton's case.[3] The original rule stands on great authorities; so does the manner of liquidating it; I do not see great reason in either."

(2) This rule, like the general rule of the ecclesiastical Courts (ante, § 2045), thinned out, in the course of modern development, into a rule requiring merely one witness with corroborating circumstances:

1837, Mr. R. N. Gresley, Evidence in Equity, 4: "Some corroboration is required, — the testimony of a second witness, or any circumstances which may give a turn to the balance; the corroboration, however, has sometimes been so extremely slight that . . . there can be little doubt that this circumstance [of the defendant being interested] has a considerable weight."

As a current rule of Chancery practice, it is not within the present purview.[4]

(3) The theory of the rule was originally no other than that of the eccle-

[3] Brown's P. C., V, 313, 8vo ed.

[4] See Gresley, Evidence in Equity, pp. 4, 156; Greenleaf, Evidence, I, § 260, III, § 289; Note to first American edition of Brown's Chancery Cases, I, 53, Pember v. Mathers; Daniell, Pleading and Practice in Chancery, I, 843 ff., Gould's sixth American edition; Story, Equity Jurisdiction, II, § 1528.

The rule has been applied in the following cases: CANADA: 1853, Boulton v. Robinson, 4 Grant U. C. 109, 123; 1873, Powell v. Lea, 20 Grant U. C. 621; 1879, Moberly v. Brooks, 27 Grant U. C. 270, 278.

UNITED STATES: Federal: 1812, Russell v. Clark, 7 Cr. 63, 92; 1815, Clark v. Van Riemsdyk, 9 Cr. 152, 160; 1881, Vigel v. Hopp, 104 U. S. 441; 1885, Conly v. Nailor, 118 U. S. 127, 6 Sup. 1001; 1892, Monroe Cattle Co. v. Becker, 147 U. S. 47, 13 Sup. 217; 1903, Jacobs v. Van Sickle, 127 Fed. 62, 61 C. C. A. 598; 1919, Demarest v. Winchester Repeating Arms Co., U. S. D. C. Conn., 257 Fed. 162 (nor does the plaintiff's express waiver of verification of the defendant's answer deprive a verified answer of the effect given by the rule; here applied to an application for temporary injunction, following Clements v. Moore, 6 Wall. 299); whether the rule is any longer in force since the Federal Equity Rules of 1912 (198 Fed. xix), which make no requirement for verifying an answer by oath, is an interesting question: 1919, Watts v. Crabb, 9th C. C. A., 257 Fed. 717 (not decided); Alabama: 1847, Moyler v. Moyler, 11 Ala. 620, 628; Columbia (Dist.): 1906, Northwest E. I. Co. v. Campbell, 28 D. C. App. 483, 493; Florida: 1903, Pinney v. Pinney, 46 Fla. 559, 35 So. 95; 1904, Parken v. Safford, 48 Fla. 290, 37 So. 567; 1917, Farrell v. Forest Inv. Co., 73 Fla. 191, 74 So. 216; New Jersey: 1904, Evans v. Evans, — N. J. Eq. —, 59 Atl. 564; Pennsylvania: 1847, Brawdy v. Brawdy, 7 Pa. St. 157, 159; 1883, Juniata Bldg. Ass'n v. Hertzel, 103 Pa. 507, 514; 1884, Phillips v. Meily, 106 Pa. 536, 544; 1887, Sylvius v. Kosek, 117 Pa. 67, 76, 11 Atl. 392; 1904, McGary v. McDermott, 207 Pa. 620, 57 Atl. 46; Tennessee: 1791, Humphreys v. Blevins, 1 Overt. 177, 179; 1901, Bennett v. Ins. Co., 107 Tenn. 371, 64 S. W. 758 (rule not applied to a bill to annul an insurance policy on the ground of fraud); Vermont: 1906, Phelps v. Root, 78 Vt. 493, 63 Atl. 941 (but here the rule is emasculated by declaring that "circumstantial evidence may take the place of the testimony of one or both witnesses, if of equal weight and credibility").

The rule has been repudiated in the following cases and statutes: Ga. Rev. C. 1910, § 4547; La. 1902, Rush v. Landers, 107 La. 549, 32 So. 95; 1904, Thibodeaux v. Thibosiastical Courts, namely, that two witnesses are required to prove any fact. But in later times the rule was explained, though still in the quantitative conception of testimony (ante, § 2032), on the theory that the answer of the defendant on oath was equivalent to one witness in his favor, and that therefore this offset the single witness for the plaintiff and made another necessary:

1837, Mr. R. N. Gresley, Evidence in Equity, 4: "Where a material fact was directly put in issue by the answer, the Courts of equity followed the maxim of the civil law, 'responsio unius non omnino audiatur,' and required the evidence of two witnesses as the foundation for a decree. But of late years the rule has been referred more closely to the equitable principle on which it is grounded, namely, the equal right to credit which a defendant may claim when his oath, 'positively, clearly, and precisely given,' and consequently subjecting him to the penalties of perjury, is opposed to the oath of a single witness." [5]

Such an explanation could have occurred as a natural one only after the rule had come to be restricted to the case of an answer on oath. But it was in any event inconsistent with the fundamental theory of an answer in chancery. The answer, so far as it is capable of being treated as evidence, is merely an admission extracted from the defendant on compulsion, and hence is available for the plaintiff only, if he cares to use it. Since the rule of parties' disqualification (ante, § 575) applied equally in chancery, the answer, on principle, is not testimony in the defendant's own favor.[6] The modern explanation of the rule, therefore, needlessly obscures its origin and rests upon a false theory of chancery pleading. This was long ago pointed out:

1838, Lord Brougham, in Attwood v. Small, 6 Cl. & F. 232, 297: "It is said that you must have recourse to the answer . . . [because of a rule that if the defendant denies on oath] you must have more than one witness, or some circumstances more than one witness, in order to rebut that denial. But I take it that the denial is not read as evidence in the cause, and the Court does not use it as evidence; it is rather considered as a general denial in the nature of a plea of not guilty, — a sort of general issue which puts the plaintiff to the proof in a particular way."

(4) The policy of the rule has perhaps something to be said for it, because of the practice of the Chancery court to act without sight of the witnesses and (practically) without cross-examination — in short, without the usual accompaniments of a jury trial.[7] But the question may be pressed more deaux, 112 La. 906, 36 So. 800 (apparently qualifying Rush v. Landers); Miss. Code 1906, § 586, Hem. § 346 ("The rule . . is abolished" where the bill is sworn to); Mo. 1875, Cornet v. Bertelsmann, 61 Mo. 118, 125; N. J. Comp. St. 1910, Evidence § 6 (quoted ante, § 488); Oh. Gen. Code Ann. 1921, § 11359 (verified pleading shall not make "other or greater proof necessary" for the opponent); Pa. St. 1913, May 28, Dig. 1920, § 17233 (the rule of two witnesses etc. "is hereby abolished"; saving the requirements for reforming or overthrowing a written instrument); Thomas v. Herring, 244 Pa. 550, 91 Atl. 500 (noticing the statute); W. Va. Code 1914, c. 125, § 59; and cases cited in Mr. Gest's article supra, note 1.

For its application to a corporation-defendant, see the following case: 1901, Kane v. Ins. Co., 199 Pa. 198, 205, 48 Atl. 989.

For the rule that the whole of a responsive answer must be read, see post, § 2123.

[5] This theory is found as early as Gilbert (ante 1726), Evidence, 152. It was early made popular in the United States by Marshall and Story.

[6] Laugdell, ubi supra, §§ 68, 78, 83, 126.

[7] For a good examination of its policy, see Evans, Notes to Pothier, II, 235 (1806).

closely, why should the Chancery court deprive itself of these aids, and thus be obliged to rely on a rule of thumb for the determination of a rational investigation? Mr. Bentham's irony has forever pilloried the delinquencies in this respect of the traditional methods of the Court of Chancery:

1827, Mr. Jeremy Bentham, Rationale of Judicial Evidence, b. IX, pt. VI, c. I, § 1 (Bowring's ed., Vol. VII, p. 530): "Where the defendant contradicts the witness, it [Equity] counts testimonies, without weighing them. . . . The ground on which this arrangement is placed by the account given of it in the books, is curious enough: 'Here is oath against oath; therefore nothing is to be done.' The judge who should allege this contrariety as a reason for doing nothing, would recognize himself unfit for his office. Injured suitor: 'To weigh testimony against testimony in a jury-box is the business, the everyday's business, of the same sort of man whose business it is, when behind a counter, to weigh lead or brass against bread or candles. What then? Is the task too hard for you? Do you sink under it? Such imbecility, is it the fruit of all your science? Sue, then, for a place in the jury-box; and learn your business from bakers and tallow-chandlers.' Lord Chancellor: 'It is not but that, if I were at liberty, I could weigh testimony against testimony as well as any tallow-chandler; but the mode of inquiry which I am bound and content to conform to, does not allow me to weigh evidence. Where truth is at all doubtful, equity is altogether unfit for the discovery of it. This we are all sensible of; accordingly, as often as evidence is worth weighing, we send it to the tallow-chandlers; they have a method of their own, which it does not suit the purpose of equity to follow. . . . Equity receives evidence in a scientific way — a way which was designed, not for the discovery of truth, but for better purposes.'"

§ 2048. Same: (3) Wills of Personalty, in the Ecclesiastical Court; Wills in Pennsylvania. (a) The secular jurisdiction of the ecclesiastical Courts was settled (after the first early struggles) to include (mainly) matters matrimonial and testamentary.[1] But the common-law Courts would not concede that this jurisdiction extended to the determination of land-titles. The practical result was that a judgment of the ecclesiastical Court could not validate a title depending on a will of land, and virtually their testamentary jurisdiction was confined to wills of personalty. Within this jurisdiction they applied of course the ecclesiastical rule requiring at least two witnesses:

1640, SWINBURNE, J., Wills, pt. I, § 9: "[By the Roman law] it must be proved forsooth by seven witnesses. Wherefore with good reason was this excesse reformed first by the ecclesiasticall law, which did reduce the number of seven witnesses to three (the parochiall minister being one) and in some cases two; and then by the general [ecclesiasticall] custom of this realm,[2] which distinctly requireth no more witnesses than two, so they be free from any just cause of exception. . . . So we are no further tyed than to the observation of those requisites that be necessary 'jure gentium,' which requireth but two witnesses. . . . [A man,] if he will, he may procure the witnesses to subscribe their names to the testament; . . . but no man is tyed to the observation of these cautels." [3]

18—, Edward Sugden, Letters to a Man of Property, 99 (as quoted in William Kitchiner's The Pleasure of Making a Will, 1822, p. 12): "I am somewhat unwilling to give you any instructions for making your Will, without the assistance of your professional Adviser. It is quite shocking to reflect upon the litigation which has been occasioned by men making their own Wills. . . . If your estate consists of what is called personalty, as Money — Goods — Leasehold Estates, and the like, You may make your Will yourself without any witnesses; and any two persons who know your handwriting, may, after your death, prove it. But it is better to have two [subscribing] Witnesses, in order that the execution of the Will may be proved without difficulty."

§ 2048. [1] Makower, Constitutional History of the Church of England (Sonnenschein's ed.), 1895, pp. 417, 451.

[2] This author deals with the ecclesiastical law, and his "custom of the realm" means the English ecclesiastical custom.

[3] So also ib. pt. IV, § 21.

Thus, down to the time of the abolition of the ecclesiastical prerogative Courts (in England, in 1857,[4] and in this country, at earlier dates), a will of personalty must be proved by two witnesses.[5]

As it happened, however, this rule, ever since 1678, had been in two important respects less stringent than the rule for proving wills in the common-law courts, namely, the witnesses need not have subscribed the will's execution (ante, § 1290) and the number required to be called was less than the number required to have attested a will of realty (post, §§ 2426, 2456). Postponing for a moment the consideration of the difference for wills of realty, it is enough to note that, with the statutory assimilation of the attesting-witness requirement for personalty and realty alike (ante, §§ 1290, 1310), and the abolition of the ecclesiastical Courts, their rule disappeared,[6] apparently everywhere except in one of our own State jurisdictions.

(b) In Pennsylvania, an early statute perpetuated the rule of the ecclesiastical Courts, and extended it to both kinds of wills.[7] In the application of this statute, the modern doctrine of the English ecclesiastical law (supra, par. a, and ante, § 2405), that corroborating circumstances might supply the place of a second witness directly to the act of execution, was here also carried out.[8] It is enough to note that the practical difference between this

[4] St. 20 & 21 Vict. c. 77, c. 85.

[5] 1696, Twaites v. Smith, 1 P. Wms. 10 (will of personalty; two of the witnesses, children of the residuary legatee, being incompetent by the canon law, "the common-law judges agreed with the civilians that these two children were not to be allowed as witnesses [by the canon law, which applied to such wills]; therefore the will failed for want of proof, one witness being by the civil law as no witness"); 1826, Brett v. Brett, 3 Add. 210, 224 (the requirement is merely of an affidavit to the signature "by two persons"; or if there is one attesting witness, then the affidavit of one other person); 1832, Theakston v. Marson, 1 Hagg. Cons. 290, 313 ("evidence of one witness, unsupported by any circumstances," does not make "legal proof of a testamentary act"; this because "by the general law of these Courts one witness does not make full proof"; here applied to a will's execution); 1842, Mackenzie v. Yeo, 3 Curt. Eccl. 125, 133, 145, 150 (rule applied to a will's execution).

[6] In South Carolina, Tennessee, and Virginia, a similar rule once existed, either by statute or by judicial adoption of the ecclesiastical rule in probate Courts (infra, note 8); but the modern statutes seem to have assimilated all will-proof under the common-law rule.

[7] Pa. St. 1833, Dig. 1920, Decedents' Estates, § 8308 (Act of 1705; a will "shall be proved by the oaths or affirmations of two or more competent witnesses"); § 6, Dig. § 8312 (bequests to a body politic or for religious or charitable uses; the will shall be "attested by two credible and at the same time disinterested witnesses"). In the "Great Body of the Laws" of 1682 (Eastman, Courts and Lawyers of Pennsylvania, 1922, I, 77) a clause had provided for "all wills in writing attested by two sufficient witnesses"; but the subsequent practice seems to show that "attested" here meant "proved," and not "subscribed."

[8] The detailed questions need not be here further noticed; with the Pennsylvania rulings are here placed the early rulings in the other States once having a similar practice:

Pennsylvania: 1788, Lewis v. Maris, 1 Dall. 278 (under the act of 1705; "two or more credible witnesses"); 1791, Walmesley v. Read, 1 Yeates 87 (same); 1803, Eyster v. Young, 3 Yeates 511, 514 ("circumstances may supply the want of one witness, where they go directly to the immediate act of disposition"); 1820, Hock v. Hock, 6 S. & R.

rule and that now obtaining in the other jurisdictions for attesting witnesses (ante, §§ 1290, 1302) is that by the present one the entire elements of a valid execution must be proved twofold, i. e. either by two witnesses each testifying to all the elements, or by one witness to all and by circumstances sufficient alone to evidence all, while by the other rule the specified number of attesters need merely be called, whether or not they prove anything by their testimony.

§ 2049. Same: Wills of Realty at Common Law, and Statutory Attested Wills, distinguished from the Preceding. The establishment of wills of realty, falling as it did within the jurisdiction of the common-law Courts, was regulated by their rules of evidence. Hence, at common law, a will of realty, even after the statute of Henry VIII requiring it to be in writing, could be sufficiently proved by a single witness; the common law having no

47 ("each must make proof complete in itself," where they testify to circumstantial evidence, and not to the fact of execution); 1820, Miller v. Carothers, S. & R. 215, 223 (one attesting witness deceased after taking oath before the register, and one witness to handwriting, sufficient); 1827, Reynolds v. Reynolds, 16 S. & R. 82, 86 (discussing the question, Who is a "complete" witness?); 1836, Mullen v. M'Kelvy, 5 Watts 399 (when there are but two witnesses, the testimony of each must be such as would be sufficient to submit to the jury were only one required); 1844, Jones v. Murphy, 8 W. & S. 275, 295 (circumstances may supply the place of one witness); 1851, Shinkle v. Crock, 17 Pa. St. 159 (competency of witness to mark); 1868, Carson's Appeal, 59 Pa. 493, 498 (one complete witness, and another whose testimony is completed by circumstances, sufficient; here the element thus supplied was the identity of the document); 1874, Derr v. Greenwalt, 76 Pa. 239, 253 (approving Hock v. Hock, and applying it); 1884, Combs' Appeal, 105 Pa. 155; 1893, Simrell's Estate, 154 Pa. 604, 26 Atl. 599; 1899, McKenna v. McMichael, 189 Pa. 440, 42 Atl. 14; 1906, Michell v. Low, 213 Pa. 526, 63 Atl. 246; 1906, Fallon's Estate, 214 Pa. 584, 63 Atl. 889; 1913, Rhoads' Estate, 241 Pa. 38, 88 Atl. 71 (statute held not satisfied because each witness did not separately depose to all the facts, following Hock v. Hock); 1918, Morrish v. Morrish, 262 Pa. 192, 105 Atl. 83 (only the material allegations need be so sustained); 1919, McClure v. Redman, 263 Pa. 405, 107 Atl. 25 (testatrix wrote part of her signature, then stopped, and Mrs. O. guided her hand in re-writing an entire signature; Mrs. O. signed as attesting witness; held, that other witnesses to testatrix' handwriting might suffice for the second required witness, but that they must be qualified independently of the will-signatures); 1922, Lawman's Estate, — Pa. —, 116 Atl. 538.

South Carolina: 1821, Sampson v. White, 1 McC. 74 (the rule is satisfied proof of the handwriting of subscribing witnesses, if they cannot be had in person); 1821, White v. Helmes, 1 McC. 430, 437 (wills must be proved by two witnesses, but not necessarily to the direct fact of execution; here one testified to that, and others to handwriting, etc.).

Tennessee: 1834, Suggett v. Kitchell, 6 Yerg. 425, 428 (will of personalty, usually by two witnesses; one witness to execution, and another to a plan to make a will, here held insufficient); 1850, Moore v. Steele, 10 Humph. 562 (two witnesses required for a will of personalty; preceding case approved); 1850, Jones v. Arterburn, 11 Humph. 97, 101 (preceding cases approved; "facts and circumstances" may be equivalent to the testimony of one witness; handwriting of one subscribing witness alone, not sufficient; if witnesses' handwriting is unavailable, two witnesses to testator's are required); 1860, Johnson v. Fry, 1 Coldw. 101, 102 (will of personalty; testimony by one to execution and by another to handwriting only, insufficient; unless, semble, the will were holographic or evidence of his acknowledgment of it were added); 1872, Morris v. Swaney, 7 Heisk. 591, 596 (will of lands; "one fact may be proven by one witness, and other facts and corroborating circumstances may be proven by other witnesses"; this is loose and unsound).

Virginia: 1828, Redford v. Peggy, 6 Rand. 316, 326, 339, 344, 347 (wills of personalty must be proved by two witnesses; except, per Green and Cabell, JJ., an ograph will, for which by analogy of the statute for wills of realty one witness suffices); 1834, Worsham v. Worsham, 5 Leigh 589, 596 (preceding case over-ruled; one witness sufficient for will of personalty; the decision proceeds upon local practice).

Where one witness recollects nothing or becomes incompetent, but has attested, his attestation should be equivalent to one witness; as to this, and as to the facts imported by an attestation, the authorities have already been examined ante, §§ 1315, 1316, 1511.

rule requiring two witnesses (ante, § 2032, post, § 2426). But in 1678, the Statute of Frauds added for such wills the requirement of attestation by at least three witnesses.[1] The question therefore arises whether any requirement of quantity or number was thereby introduced into the rules of Evidence. The result reached by the Courts was perfectly plain and settled; but, to appreciate it, three sorts of legal requirements must be distinguished:

(1) In the first place, the validity of the will, as to its formalities of execution, was affected. The act of execution, after the Statute, must include the act of signing by three witnesses; without their coöperation, the will is void. Here is no matter of evidence, but of substantive law (post, § 2455).

(2) Among the kinds of witnesses who might be qualified to speak to the execution, the attesting witnesses were (after the Statute) to be preferred before all others. This came, not by express direction of the Statute, but by the general principle of the common law that an attesting witness must be called (or shown unavailable) before any other can be resorted to (ante, § 1290). The Statute merely provided the attesting witness for wills; the common-law principle of evidence, thus applying, required him to be used.[2] Here is now a rule of Evidence; but it is merely a rule of preference between kinds of witnesses; it is not a rule of numbers.

But, furthermore, this rule of preference may also provide how many of these preferred witnesses shall be called. Such a further rule will of itself say nothing as to the proof supplied by these witnesses; for example, it might require that each and all be called, but not that each and all should prove respectively the entire elements of due execution. Now the common-law Courts never required that more than one be even called. It is true that the chancery Court (probably under the influence of its ecclesiastical rule) did at some periods require all to be called; and that some modern statutes have made similar provisions. But at common law not even this much of a rule of number existed (ante, § 1304). Thus, by whichever practice judged (common law, chancery, or statute), the effect of the attesting-witness rule is limited to requiring that he be called, and involves nothing as to the proof he shall make (ante, § 1302).

(3) The third question, then, remains: Was any rule of number, for the purposes of establishment of belief, or proof, introduced by implication of the Statute? Suppose that all three witnesses are called, and thus the attesting-witness rule in its extremest form is satisfied; but suppose further that two of them are unable to recollect, or deny seeing the execution, or otherwise fail to furnish any evidence of execution; in other words, there remains but one witness actually contributing evidence of execution; is he sufficient? It is clear that by the common-law rule for attesting witnesses, he is (ante, § 1302); but that by the ecclesiastical rule for wills of personalty (ante, § 2049. [1] St. 29 Car. II. c. 3, § 5 (devises of lands or tenements "shall be attested and subscribed in the presence of the said devisor by three or four credible witnesses, or else they shall be utterly void and of none effect"); the history is examined post, §§ 2426, 2454.

[2] Compare the exposition of L. C. J. Pratt quoted infra, par. 3.

§ 2048), he is not. The question is thus whether, for wills of realty under the Statute, there is, besides the attesting-witness rule of preference, a rule of number requiring that more than one witness shall give credited testimony to the elements of due execution.

The judicial answer to this was plain and inevitable, namely, that the common law possessed no rules of number, that the Statute merely introduced a new rule of substantive law as well as invoked the existing general rule for attesting witnesses, and that no more was intended by the Statute, and therefore the common-law rule of one witness remained in full application. This was established at the very outset of the judicial consideration of the Statute, and was continuously maintained:

1683, Hudson's Case, Skinner 79; two of the attesting witnesses swearing against the due execution, other evidence of it was received and acted on; "to which the counsel of the other side urged that if the witnesses were not to be believed, then there would not be three witnesses to the will, and so no will within the statute of frauds and perjuries; to which PEMBERTON, C. J., answered that if there were three witnesses to a will, whereof one was to his own knowledge a thief or person not credible, yet the words of the statute being satisfied, and he having collateral proof to fortify the will, he would direct a jury to find it a good will."

1765, L. C. J. PRATT (Lord CAMDEN), in Doe v. Hindson, H. v. Kersey, 1 Day 41, 49: "Here I must premise one observation, that there is a great difference between the method of proving a fact in a court of justice, and the attestation of that fact at the time it happens. These two things, I suspect, have been confounded; whereas it ought always to be remembered that the great inquiry upon this question is, how the will ought to be attested, and not how it ought to be proved. The new thing introduced by the Statute [of Frauds] is the attestation; the method of proving this attestation stands as it did upon common-law principles. Thus, for instance, one witness is sufficient to prove what all three have attested; and though that witness must be a subscriber, yet that is owing to the general common-law rule that where a witness hath subscribed an instrument, he must always be produced because it is the best evidence. This we see in common experience, for after the first witness has been examined, the will is always read."

This much is of course necessarily implied in all the judicial decisions (ante, § 1304) declaring that one attesting witness only need be called; for if one only need be called, and if he can speak to all the elements of execution, no further witness or proof is needed; the settlement of the one point settles the other also. But the question may arise as a separate one in those jurisdictions in which (following the Chancery or a statutory rule) all the attesting witnesses must be called (ante, § 1304); for it may then be asked further whether from the mouth of each of them must be obtained separate proof of execution, i.e. whether more than one testimony to execution must be given. The question is usually settled, by implication, as above noted; but it has also sometimes been expressly dealt with as a distinct question, and has been almost universally decided in accordance with the original and orthodox view taken by the English Court (quoted supra), namely, that testimony to all the elements constituting due execution, by a single witness, suffices.[3] A contrary result can properly be reached only under a statute expressly requiring that the will be attested "and proved" by more than one witness.[4]

It is plain, therefore, that a rule of preference requiring attesting witnesses to be called is distinct from a rule of number requiring credited testimony to execution to be given by two or more witnesses; that either may exist without the other; that the latter exists without the former in a single jurisdiction (ante, § 2048); that the former exists without the latter, at common law and under the Statute of Frauds, in almost every other jurisdiction; and that in perhaps a few jurisdictions, by express modern statute, both coexist.

§ 2050. Same: (4) Nuncupative Wills. A nuncupative (or oral) will of personalty would have required two witnesses in the ecclesiastical Courts, but of realty, in the common-law Courts (so far as valid at all after the statute of Henry VIII), only one witness. But by the Statute of Frauds a nuncupative will was subjected to a rule of number more stringent even than that of the ecclesiastical Courts; for three were required.[1] The Statute of Frauds was probably inspired directly by the ecclesiastical rules, for the latter had at one period required at least three;[2] and a canonist's hand had been

[3] 1855, Walker v. Hunter, 17 Ga. 364, 407; 1862, Tarrant v. Ware, 25 N. Y. 425, note; 1862, Auburn Seminary v. Calhoun, 25 N. Y. 422, 425.

In Virginia the earlier decisions took the opposite view: 1822, Burwell v. Corbin, 1 Rand. 131, 141 ("Every important requisite of the statute must be attested and proved by each witness"); 1827, Smith v. Jones, 6 Rand. 33, 37, semble (two witnesses necessary for will of realty); 1832, Dudleys v. Dudleys, 3 Leigh 436, 449, semble (two witnesses necessary; here, a will of both realty and personalty); but the later ones took the orthodox view: 1839, Clarke v. Dunnavant, 10 Leigh 13, 22 (Brooke, J., diss.); 1846, Pollock v. Glassell, 2 Gratt. 439, 461; 1849, Jesse v. Parker, 6 Gratt. 57, 61, 64 (under a statute requiring attestation by two witnesses, it is not necessary that by two such witnesses, or by any two witnesses every statutory element shall be proved); 1877, Lambert v. Cooper, 29 Gratt. 61, 67 (same); 1878, Cheatham v. Hatcher, 30 Gratt. 56, 58 (same).

[4] The statutes on the point have been already collected in dealing with the attesting-witness rule, ante, § 1304. The following case seems to justify itself on that ground: 1875, Crowley v. Crowley, 80 Ill. 469 (two witnesses necessary).

§ 2050. [1] Holdsworth, History of English Law, vol. III, 1st ed., 1909, p. 422, 3d ed., 1923, p. 539; 1678, St. 29 Car. II, c. 3, § 19 (no nuncupative will of an estate exceeding £30 is to be valid "that is not proved by the oaths of three witnesses at the least, that were present at the making thereof; nor unless it be proved that the testator at the time of pronouncing the same did bid the persons present or some of them bear witness that such was his will, or to that effect"); § 20 ("after six months passed after speaking of the pretended testamentary words, no testimony shall be received . . . except the said testimony, or the substance thereof, were committed to writing within six months after the making of the said will").

The statute's provisions as to a 'rogatio' (or calling to bear witness), and as to the reduction to writing, are matters affecting the validity of execution; and, as the interpretation of the statute on this point is scarcely to be separated from its interpretation as a rule of evidence, no attempt is here made to collect the rulings; they may be found in the following works: Jarman on Wills, 6th Amer. ed. (Bigelow), I, 79; Schouler on Wills, 3d ed., § 373; see also the following cases: 1875, Morgan v. Stevens, 78 Ill. 287 (statute applied); 1849, Parkison v. Parkison, 12 Sm. & M. Miss. 672, 677 (testator need not call upon the two witnesses also, but only upon "some person present"); 1854, Burch v. Stovall, 27 Miss. 725, 729 (the person called upon may be one of the two witnesses; no form of words for "calling" are necessary if such is the import); 1879, Broach v. Sing, 57 Miss. 115 (no "calling" proved on the facts); 1837, Tally v. Butterworth, 10 Yerg. Tenn. 501 (useful opinion as to whether the two witnesses may speak to different utterances).

[2] Swinburne, quoted ante, § 2048.

concerned in the drafting of this part of the Statute.[3] The rule of the Statute may therefore be reckoned as one of those which we owe to the ecclesiastical law.

Apart from such a statute in our own jurisdictions, it would seem that no more than one witness is to be required.[4] But in most jurisdictions there exist by statute provisions similar to those of the Statute of Frauds, specifying more than one witness as necessary.[5] Such statutes, it will be

[3] Chief Baron Gilbert, writing before 1726 (Reports, 261), makes this statement; and, though the identity of the draftsmen has been a mooted point, the influence of the ecclesiastical model at that period, in view of what has been said above in § 2032, seems clear enough. The canonist referred to was Sir Leoline Jenkins, judge of the Prerogative Court of Canterbury: C. D. Hening, The Original Drafts of the Statute of Frauds and their Authors (Pennsylvania Law Rev., LXI, 283); Geo. P. Costigan, Jr., Judicial Legislation in the Interpretation of the Contract Clauses of the Statute of Frauds (Illinois Law Rev., XIV, 1).

For further references showing the Statute of Frauds as a part of a general European movement to require written records of contracts, see the citations post, § 2454, and also the historical sketch post, § 2426.

[4] 1886, Gould v. Safford, 39 Vt. 498, 505 ("the rule of the civil law was merely a rule of proof, and did not relate to the essence of the act"; in a court of common law, the rules of proof of the latter system control).

[5] Arizona: Rev. St. 1913, Civ. C. § 1210 (a nuncupative will of an estate exceeding $50 is not valid "unless it be proved by three credible witnesses" that the testator called on "some person" to take notice, etc.);
Arkansas: Dig. 1919, § 10497 (a nuncupative will must be "proved by at least two witnesses, who were present at the making thereof"); § 10499 (the words or substance must have been reduced to writing within 15 days);
California: Civ. C. 1872, § 1289 (a nuncupative will must be proved by "two witnesses who were present at the making thereof, one of whom was asked by the testator at the time to bear witness"); § 1290 (words or substance must have been reduced to writing within 30 days after speaking);
Columbia (Dist.): Code 1919, § 1634 (only soldier's or sailor's nuncupative will shall be valid, and then only if "proved by at least two witnesses" present and requested to bear witness);
Delaware: Rev. St. 1915, § 3245 (nuncupative will of personalty not exceeding $200, must be pronounced "before two or more credible witnesses expressly requested by him to take notice thereof," and reduced to writing and attested by them within 3 days);
Florida: Rev. G. S. 1919, § 3599 (a nuncupative will must be "proved by the oaths of three witnesses present at the making thereof"); § 3600 (like D. C. Code § 1634);
Georgia: Rev. C. 1910, §§ 3925, 3926 (a nuncupative will must be "proved by the oaths of at least three competent witnesses that were present at the making thereof"; and the substance reduced to writing within 30 days); ("three competent witnesses present at the making thereof"); 1914, Reid v. Wooster, 142 Ga. 359, 82 S. E. 1054 (statute applied);
Idaho: Comp. St. 1919, § 7473 (may be proved as other wills, provided they were reduced to writing within 30 days after spoken); § 7510 (like Cal. Civ. C. § 1290);
Illinois: Rev. St. 1874, c. 148, § 15 (a nuncupative will is valid if "proven before the county Court by two or more credible disinterested witnesses" who were present and will testify to last illness, etc., "and it being also proven by two disinterested witnesses, other than those hereinbefore mentioned, that the said will was committed to writing," etc.);
Indiana: Burns Ann. St. 1914, § 3133 (nuncupative will must be proved "by two competent witnesses who shall have heard the testator in effect request some of those present to bear witness thereto");
Kansas: Gen. St. 1915, § 11825 (nuncupative will must be "reduced to writing and subscribed by two competent disinterested witnesses" within 10 days, the testator having called upon "some person present . . . to bear testimony"); Louisiana: Rev. Civ. C. 1920, § 1647 (nuncupative testaments by public act, i. e. testaments acknowledged before a notary in the presence of three witnesses; only the notary's certified instrument need be produced, unless a plea of forgery has been filed); § 1648 (nuncupative testaments under private signature, i. e. testaments not acknowledged before a notary, but made before five resident witnesses or seven non-resident witnesses, must be "proved by the declaration on oath of at least three of the witnesses who were present when they were made"); § 1649 (the witnesses must state "that they recognize their signatures and that of the testator at the foot of the testament"); §§ 1651, 1652 (mystic, or sealed, testaments, valid when acknowledged before a notary and three witnesses, must be "proved by the declaration on oath of at least four of the witnesses who were present at the act of observed, combine in effect an attesting-witness rule with a rule of number (ante, § 2049, par. 3).

superscription"; but if the notary appears, two other witnesses will suffice); § 1653 (nuncupative testament under private signature, or mystic testament; "if any of the witnesses . . . be dead or absent, so that it be not possible to procure the number of witnesses prescribed by law for proving the testament, it will be sufficient to prove it by declaration of the witnesses living who are in the State"); § 1654 ("If none of the persons who were present at such act are living in the State, but all are absent or deceased, it will be sufficient for the proof of the testament if two credible persons make a declaration on oath that they recognize the signatures of the different persons, who have signed the will or the act of superscription"); 1918, Bihm v. Bihm, 144 La. 260, 80 So. 323 (statute applied); 1922, Prudhomme v. Savant, 150 La. 256, 90 So. 640 (statute applied to a will entirely in typewriting, except the signature);

Maine: Rev. St. 1916, c. 79, §§ 19, 20 (a nuncupative will of more than $100 must be proved by three persons present at the time and requested to bear witness; nuncupative will not provable after six months, unless the substance was reduced to writing within six days);

Michigan: Comp. L. 1915, § 11822 (nuncupative will of estate up to $300, valid if "proved by two competent witnesses");

Minnesota: Gen. 1913, § 7282 (a nuncupative will is to be probated only "upon the evidence of at least two credible and disinterested witnesses");

Mississippi: Code 1906, § 5082, Hem. § 3370 (nuncupative will of an estate exceeding $100; it must "be proved by two witnesses that the testator or testatrix called on some person present" to bear testimony);

Missouri: Rev. St. 1919, § 529 (must be "proved by two witnesses, who were present at the making thereof");

Montana: Rev. C. 1921, § 6992 (nuncupative will; like Cal. Civ. C. § 1289);

Nebraska: Rev. St. 1921, § 1246 (a nuncupative will of an estate of more than $150 must be "proved by the oath of three witnesses at least that were present at the making thereof"); 1905, Godfrey v. Smith, 73 Nebr. 756, 103 N. W. 450 (statute applied);

Nevada: Rev. L. 1912, § 6206 (must be "proved by two witnesses who were present at the making thereof");

New Hampshire: Pub. St. 1891, c. 186, § 17 (nuncupative will exceeding $300 of personalty, not valid "unless declared in the presence of three witnesses," etc.);

New Jersey: Comp. St. 1910, Wills, §§ 13-17 (must be proved by three witnesses present at the making; not provable after six months, unless the testimony or its substance was "committed to writing" within six days after the will made; except for soldiers' and sailors' wills);

New Mexico: Annot. St. 1915, § 5864 (a verbal will is to be attested by the "same number of witnesses" — two — required for a written one, "and besides, two witnesses, there being no more, possessing the same qualifications as required for the written will, to testify that the testator, male or female, was in possession of a sound mind and entire judgment");

New York: S. C. A. 1920, § 141 (for a nuncupative will, "its execution and tenor must be proved by at least two witnesses");

North Carolina: Con. St. 1919, § 4144, par. 3 (a nuncupative will must be proved by "two credible witnesses present at the making" called on to bear witness; and cannot be proved after six months, unless put in writing within ten days);

North Dakota: Comp. L. 1913, § 5645 ("must be proved by two witnesses who were present at the making thereof," one of whom was asked to be a witness);

Ohio: Gen. Code Ann. 1921, § 10601 (nuncupative will must be proved by "two competent disinterested witnesses," who reduced the will to writing and subscribed it within 10 days);

Oklahoma: Comp. St. 1921, § 11226 (a nuncupative will "must be proved by two witnesses who were present at the making thereof," one of whom was asked to bear witness);

Pennsylvania: St. 1917, June 7, Dig. 1920, § 8310, Decedents' Estates (no testimony is to be received after six months from the alleged speaking, nor unless the testimony or its substance was committed to writing within six days; for a value of over $100, the requisites "shall be proved by two or more witnesses who were present at the making of such will");

Porto Rico: Rev. St. & C. 1911, §§ 1540–1547 (special rules, based on the Spanish law, and similar to the Louisiana law);

South Carolina: Civ. C. 1922, § 5574 (nuncupative will of estate over $50 must be proved "by the oaths of three witnesses at the least, who were present at the making thereof and bid by the testator to bear witness," etc.);

South Dakota: Rev. C. 1919, § 609 (like N. D. Comp. L. § 5645);

Tennessee: St. 1784, Shannon's Code 1916, § 3898 (nuncupative will of over $250, not good "unless proved two disinterested witnesses present at the making thereof, and unless they, or some of them, were especially required to bear witness thereto," etc.); § 3899 (must be "put in writing within 10 days");

Texas: Rev. Civ. St. 1911, § 7861 (no nuncupative will shall be probated, "unless it be § 2051. Same: (5) Holographic Wills; (6) Revocations and Alterations; (7) Sundry Testamentary Acts. (5) When a holographic will, being entirely in the testator's handwriting, is by law allowed to be valid, a single witness to its authenticity would upon the common-law principle (ante, § 2034) be sufficient.[1] But the few statutes authorizing such wills have usually required more than one witness to its authenticity.[2] In Louisiana, the Philippine Islands, and Porto Rico, special rules exist for proving a "mystic" or "closed" will, i. e. a holograph orally acknowledged to witnesses without showing them the contents or securing their signatures to the document, but enclosed in a sealed envelope upon which the witnesses sign their attestation.[3]

(6) The revocation or alteration of a will, to be effective, has generally been treated, in the statutes dealing with wills, on the same footing as any act of testamentary disposition, and the usual formalities of attestation have been equally prescribed for it.[4] Apart from such statutory provisions, proved by three credible witnesses that the testator called on some person" to bear witness); § 3270 (same; "and if the testimony of such witnesses differs materially as to the testamentary words spoken, or as to the testator's calling upon some one to witness the same," probate shall be refused); 1920, Walker v. Fields,—Tex. Civ. App.—, 221 S. W. 632;

Utah: Comp. L. 1917, § 6327 (like Cal. Civ. C. § 1289); § 6328 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1290);
Vermont: Gen. L. 1917, § 3208 (nuncupative will of personalty of over $200, not to be proved "unless a memorandum thereof is made in writing, by a person present at the time of making it," within six days);
Washington: St. 1917, Mar. 16, c. 156, Probate Code § 36 (none to be good "unless the same be proved by two witnesses who were present at the making thereof, and it be proven that the testator . . . did bid some person to bear witness, etc.");
Wisconsin: Stats. 1919, § 2292 (for estates exceeding $150, no will is to be good "that is not proved by the oath of three witnesses, at least, that were present at the making thereof");
Wyoming: Comp. St. 1920, § 6708 (no number of witnesses prescribed; words must be reduced to writing within 30 days).

As to the interpreting rulings under these statutes, see note 1, supra.

§ 2051. [1] 1836, Baker v. Dobyns, 4 Dana 220, 221; 1916, Lucker's Will, U. S. Court for China, 1 Extra-terr. Cas. 626 (wife's holographic will proved by husband's testimony to her handwriting).

In Miller's Will, Surr. Ct., 194 N. Y. Suppl. 843 (1922), a will wholly in the testator's handwriting, but also bearing the signatures of witnesses and an attestation clause, is referred to as "entirely [sic?] holographic"; this application of the term should be avoided.

[2] Arkansas: Dig. 1919, § 10494 (for holographic wills, even without attesting witnesses, there must be "the unimpeachable evidence of at least three disinterested witnesses to the handwriting of each testator"); 1920, Murphy v. Murphy, 144 Ark. 429, 222 S. W. 721 (construing "unimpeachable evidence");
North Carolina: Con. St. 1919, §§ 4131, 4133 (holographic will not attested, or holographic revocation, must be proved as to the testator's handwriting by "three credible witnesses"); § 4144 (also, a holographic will must by one witness be shown to have come from a specified custody);
Tennessee: St. 1784, Shannon's Code 1916, § 3896 (holographic will must be proved by three credible witnesses);
Texas: Rev. Civ. St. 1911, § 3267 (for wills in general, proof of handwriting of the testator and subscribing witnesses must be by two witnesses; for an olographic will, "two witnesses of his handwriting" are necessary).

[3] Louisiana: Rev. Civ. C. 1920, §§ 1651–1654 (quoted ante, § 2050); § 1655, as amended by St. 1896, c. 119 (holographic will must be proved by "two credible persons, who must attest that they recognize the testament as being entirely written, dated, and signed in the testator's handwriting");
Philippine Islands: Civ. C. §§ 688–693, 706–715 (like P. R. Rev. St. & C. §§ 3774–3780, 3793–3802);
Porto Rico: Rev. St. & C. 1911, §§ 1548–1557, 3774–3780 (three witnesses required; special rules, based on the Spanish law; by § 3778, the judge "shall immediately proceed to prove its identity by means of three witnesses who are acquainted with the handwriting and signature of the testator and who depose that they have no reasonable doubt that the will was written and signed by the testator's own hand. In the absence of competent witnesses, or if those examined have any doubts, and provided the district court deems it proper, handwriting experts may be employed for the purpose of comparison").

[4] That is, where the revocation is attempted by writing, and not by burning, tearing, cancelling, or obliterating.

one witness would at common law suffice for any matter affecting revocation or alteration and not covered by the statutory terms.[5] But in several jurisdictions express provision is made by statute for a specified number of witnesses to prove certain acts in the nature of revocation or alteration.[6] Some of these, in their restriction to personalty, suggest a connection with the ecclesiastical rule.

(7) There occur also a few miscellaneous provisions, affecting testamentary acts, for which by statute a specified number of witnesses are required.[7]

§ 2052. Same: (8) Contents of a Lost Will. At common law, by the general principle (ante, § 2034), no more than one witness was required to prove the contents of a will alleged to have been lost or destroyed. There was an established rule as to the fulness of detail with which the contents must be made to appear (post, § 2106), and the clearness or preponderance of proof (post, § 2498); and there was authority for the view that testimonial, not merely circumstantial, evidence must be furnished (post, § 2090), and perhaps a copy (ante, §§ 1267, 1278). But there was no rule requiring more

[5] 1886, Williams v. Williams, 142 Mass. 515, 517, 8 N. E. 424 (intent to revive former will by revocation of a later one); 1818, Burns v. Burns, 4 S. & R. 295 (similar).

[6] Ala. Code 1907, § 6174 (when a will is revoked by burning, etc., by another than the testator, the testator's "direction and consent thereto, and the fact of such burning, canceling, tearing, or obliteration, must be proved by at least two witnesses"); Alaska: Comp. L. 1913, § 593 (revocation by injury or destruction "shall be proved by at least two witnesses"); Ark. Dig. 1919, § 10501 (the destruction of a will by another than testator, and the testator's direction and consent, "shall be proved by at least two witnesses"); Cal. Civ. C. 1872, § 1293 (the cancellation or destruction of will by any other than testator, and his direction, must be proved by two witnesses); Fla. Rev. G. S. 1919, § 3598 (revocation or alteration of a will of personalty; the writing, the reading of the writing to the testator, and his allowance of it, must be "proved to have been done by three disinterested and credible witnesses"); Mich. Comp. L. 1915, § 13789 (revoking clause must be "established by at least two reputable witnesses, having knowledge thereof"); Minn. Gen. St. 1913, § 7256 (destruction, etc., by another person; like Ark. Stats. § 10501); Mont. Rev. C. 1921, § 6996 (like Cal. Civ. C. § 1293); N. J. Comp. St. 1910, Wills, § 16 (oral revocation of written will, valid only if put in writing and approved by testator "and proved to be so done by three witnesses at the least"); N. Y. Cons. L. 1909, Decedent Est. § 34 (two witnesses are required to prove the cancellation, etc., of a will by another person for the testator); N. C. Con. St. 1919, § 4133 (revocation by holograph must be shown to be in testator's handwriting by "three witnesses at least"); N. D. Comp. L. 1913, § 5661 ("the direction of the testator and the fact of such injury or destruction must be proved by two witnesses," where another than the testator does it); Okl. Comp. St. 1921, § 11,242 (cancellation or destruction by any person other than the testator, and the testator's direction, "must be proved by two witnesses"); Or. Laws 1920, § 803 (revocation by an agent; "the direction and consent of the testator, and the fact of such injury or destruction, shall be proved by at least two witnesses"); Pa. St. 1917, June 7, § 20, Dig. 1920, § 8332, Decedents Est. (revocation of will of personalty, if made by nuncupative will, must be "proved to be so done by two or more witnesses"); S. D. Rev. C. 1919, § 624 (like N. D. Comp. L. § 5661); Utah: Comp. L. 1917, § 6330 (like Cal. Civ. C. § 1293).

[7] Ariz. Rev. St. 1913, § 1220 (where a bequest to a subscribing witness would otherwise be void, it shall not be if the will is proved "by the evidence of the subscribing witnesses, corroborated by the testimony of one or more disinterested and credible persons, to the effect that the testimony of such subscribing witnesses, necessary to sustain the will, is substantially true"); N. H. Pub. St. 1891, c. 186, § 18 (a 'donatio mortis causa'; "actual delivery" must be "proved by two indifferent witnesses"); 1902, Blazo v. Cochrane, 71 N. H. 585, 53 Atl. 1026 (statute applied); Tex. Rev. Civ. St. 1911 § 3267 (cited supra, note 2).

The following rulings upon a now obsolete statute may be placed here: 1810, Donaldson v. Jude, 2 Bibb. 57, 59 (manumission required by statute to be proved by two witnesses); 1815, Clark v. Bartlett, 4 Bibb. 201 (same).

than one witness to furnish testimony to the contents;[1] and the execution was to be proved as for wills produced in specie.[2]

Yet by statute, in several jurisdictions, a rule of number has been introduced, — not apparently in imitation of the ecclesiastical law, but merely upon a supposition of the wisdom of such a safeguard.[3] It is difficult to see

§ 2052. [1] ENGLAND: 1876, Sugden v. St. Leonards, L. R. 1 P. D. 154, 221, 233, 244.

CANADA: 1858, Haye's Will, 2 Morris Newf. 227; 1859, Calahan's Will, 2 Morris Newf. 276.

UNITED STATES: Ala. 1884, Jaques v. Horton, 76 Ala. 238, 245; 1886, Skeggs v. Horton, 82 Ala. 353, 354, 2 So. 110; 1917, Rawlings v. Berry, 128 Ark. 273, 194 S. W. 249 (must be clearly proved); Conn. 1874, Johnson's Will, 40 Conn. 587, 589; Del. 1843, Kearns v. Kearns, 4 Harringt. 83, 85; Ga. Rev. C. 1910, § 3863 ("If a will be lost or destroyed subsequent to the death, or without the consent of the testator, a copy of the same, clearly proved to be such by the subscribing witnesses and other evidence, may be admitted to probate"); 1869, Kitchens v. Kitchens, 39 Ga. 168, 172 (under this statute, the execution must be proved by the three attesting witnesses, on the rule of § 1304, ante; but not the contents, which may be proved by any "other evidence"); 1883, Mosely v. Carr, 70 G 333, 336 (preceding case approved; but the opinion is inconsistent); 1884, Burge v. Hamilton, 72 Ga. 568, 614 (one witness suffices); 1901, Scott v. Maddox, 113 Ga. 795, 39 S. E. 500 (approving Kitchens v. Kitchens); Ill. 1886, Re Page, 118 Ill. 576, 578, 8 N. E. 852; Ia. 1913, Thorman's Estate, 162 Ia. 237, 144 N. W. 7; Ky. 1836, Baker v. Dobyns, 4 Dana 220, 221; Mo. 1837, Graham v. O'Fallon, 4 Mo. 601, 608; 1839, Dickey v. Malechi, 6 Mo. 177, 184; N. J. 1863, Wyckoff v. Wyckoff, 16 N. J. Eq. 401, 405; Va. 1918, Wright v. Wright, 124 Va. 114, 97 S. E. 358 (must be clearly proved).

[2] 1863, Harris v. Harris, 26 N. Y. 433 (distinguishing proceedings under 2 Rev. St. 132, § 5); 1921, Cooley v. Cooley, N. Y. Sup., 189 N. Y. Suppl. 577 (quoted infra, n. 3; pointing out that this common-law rule remains applicable in issues of title to real estate); 1870, Krise v. Neason, 66 Pa. 253, 259 (Sharswood, J.: "If one witness deposes positively to the handwriting of a party, whether to a lost or an existing paper, it satisfies the rule; the paper or copy is admissible, it matters not how many other witnesses may deny it, or what circumstances may be proved to cast doubt upon it. The question of sufficiency remains for the jury").

[3] Arizona: Rev. St. 1913, § 767 ("its provisions" must be "clearly and distinctly proved by at least two credible witnesses"); California: C. C. P. 1872, § 1339 ("no will shall be proved as a lost or destroyed will, . . . unless its provisions are clearly and distinctly proved by at least two credible witnesses"); 1901, Camp's Estate, 134 Cal. 233, 66 Pac. 227 (statute applied); 1909, Patterson's Estate, 155 Cal. 626, 102 Pac. 941 (C. C. P. § 1339 does not prevent the establishment, by two witnesses, of a part only; good opinion by Shaw, J.); 1910, Guinasso's Estate, Guinasso v. Arata, 13 Cal. App. 518, 110 Pac. 335 (a person who only heard another read a document aloud is not one witness under this rule); 1921, Re Thompson's Est., 185 Cal. 763, 198 Pac. 795 (alleged will of 1916, revoking a will of 1908, but destroyed without intent to revive the will of 1908; evidence to the 1916 will-contents was one witness to due execution and contents, and another witness to the receipt of a letter from the testatrix enclosing a copy of the 1916 will; held, that the rule requiring two witnesses to prove a lost will was not satisfied; unsound; in the first place, the testatrix' own statements were admissions of a predecessor in interest, receivable against as such either party claiming under her; in the next place, a "witness" includes testimonial statements out of Court as well as in Court, and here the testatrix' statements were testimonial; in the third place, the person testifying to the testatrix' admissions was a "witness," by one legitimate interpretation, and in view of the probative convincingness of the proof, that interpretation should have been taken; and finally the solemn futility of the judges' verbal ritual appears in the fact that the opinion actually sets forth the terms of the 1916 will, while in the same page it declares the contents not sufficiently proved: fortunately this Court retained its liquid common sense to an extent sufficient to reject, but only after several pages of conscientious exposition, the further unconscionable claim of the opponent that the 1916 will's revoking clause could be proved by one witness); Colorado: Comp. St. 1921, § 5205 ("the contents thereof," in addition to regular proof of execution, must be "likewise shown by the testimony of two or more witnesses"); Idaho: Comp. St. 1919, § 7470 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1339); Indiana: Burns Ann. St. 1914, § 3167 (the will's "provisions shall be clearly proven by two witnesses, or by a correct copy and the testimony of one witness"); 1884, Farbing v. Webster, 99 Ind. 588, 591 (statute applied); 1894, Jones v. Casler, 139 Ind. 382, 38 N. E. 812 (statute applied); 1906, Inlow v. Hughes, 38 Ind. App. 375, 76 N. E. 763 (all the provisions to be established must be proved by two witnesses, in the absence of a written copy why such a rule is more needed for lost wills than for lost deeds or bonds; and it would seem that it unnecessarily introduces an anomaly and a hampering restriction into our customary modes of proof.

§ 2053. Usage or Custom. The view has been occasionally advanced that a single witness is insufficient to prove the existence of a custom or usage,[1] — probably from the notion that, since a custom must usually be notorious in order to effect a contract, many persons would know it, and some concurrence of testimony should therefore be shown. One answer to the suggestion is that the common law knows no rule requiring more than one witness in any civil case (ante, § 2032). Another is that, if such a possibility of contradiction is proved); Michigan: Comp. L. 1915, § 13788 (lost will's execution and contents "shall be established by at least two reputable witnesses"); Minnesota: Gen. St. 1913, § 7280 (not to be established "unless its provisions are clearly and distinctly proved by at least two credible witnesses"); Montana: Rev. C. 1921, § 10050 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1339); Nevada: Rev. L. 1912, § 5881 (not to be probated, unless "its provisions are clearly and distinctly proved by at least two credible witnesses"); New York: C. C. P. 1877, § 1865, now S. C A. 1920, § 143, and Consol. L. 1909, Decedent Est. § 204, as added by St. 1920, c. 919 (provisions must be "clearly and distinctly proved by at least two credible witnesses, a correct copy or draft being equivalent to one witness"); St. 1914, c. 443 (surrogates' courts; "a lost or destroyed will can be admitted to probate in a surrogate's court," in a case where by C. C. P. § 1865 "a judgment establishing the will could be rendered by the Supreme Court"); 1921, Cooley v. Cooley, N. Y. Sup., 189 N. Y. Suppl. 577 (action for admeasurement of dower, by brother and heir against widow; held, that as the defendant was setting up title by will, which had been lost, and was not proceeding under C. C. P. § 1865 to probate a will, "title to real estate could be shown by common-law proof that the property was devised, . . . and it is not necessary therefore that the will be established by two witnesses, or by the production of the will and one witness as the statute prescribes"; citing Harris v. Harris, supra, n. 2); 1922, Re Dorrity's Will, Surr. Ct., 194 N. Y. Suppl. 573 (application to probate a lost will; Slater, S., commenting on Dec. Est. Law §§ 200, 204, and S. C. A. § 143; "The genesis of these provisions was the common law codified and placed in the revised statute of 1830. The power given to the Surrogate's Court to probate wills in existence at the time of the death of the testator, or when fraudulently destroyed in his lifetime, was given by chapter 359 of the Laws of 1870. The surrogate's power is purely statutory. The revisors of the Surrogate's Code of 1914 did not see fit to change the condition that had existed since 1870. I know of no reason why concurrent jurisdiction should not be given to the surrogate, so that that Court could probate a will that had been lost, or destroyed by accident or design. The only difference would be that statutory proof, by at least two credible witnesses, must be produced in the Surrogate's Court, while common-law proof will be sufficient in the Supreme Court. It brings to light the opportunity for further legislation to give added power to the surrogates of the State"); North Dakota: Comp. L. 1913, § 8643 (not to be probated "unless its provisions are clearly and distinctly proved by at least two credible witnesses") Oklahoma: Comp. St. 1921, § 1123 (no will is to be proved as lost or destroyed, "unless its provisions are clearly and distinctly proved by at least two credible witnesses"); Pennsylvania: 1922, Lawman's Estate, 272 Pa. 237, 116 Atl. 538 (St. 1833, § 6, Dig. 1920, § 8308, quoted ante, § 2048, applied, so as to require two witnesses to the contents of a lost will); Texas: Rev. Civ. St. 1911, §§ 3268, 3272 (written will not produced may be proved by "the same amount and character of testimony . . . as is required to prove a written will produced in court"; but "the cause of its non-production must be proved, and such cause must be sufficient to satisfy the Court that it cannot by any reasonable diligence be produced, and the contents of such will must be substantially proved by the testimony of a credible witness who has read the same or who has heard it read"); Utah: Comp. L. 1917, § 7590 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1339); Washington: St. 1917, Mar. 16, c. 156, Probate Code § 20; 1897, § 6117 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1339); Wyoming: Comp. St. 1920, § 6704 ("clearly and distinctly proved by at least two credible witnesses").

Compare the rules for restoring the record of lost documents, including wills (ante, § 1660).

§ 2053. [1] 1817, Thomas v. Graves, 1 Mill Const. 308 ("It will rarely happen that one witness will sufficiently establish a usage"; no authority cited); 1843, Halwerson v. Cole, 1 Spears L. 321, 323 ("I do not think the evidence of a single individual is enough to establish a usage of trade for Charleston different from the general rule"); and the two overruled cases cited in the next note.

to be feared, it is amply provided for in the liberty of the opponent to produce dissentient witnesses and the fair certainty that he will be prepared to do so. The rule would thus operate as a merely unnecessary burden in cases where no real dispute exists:

1851, FOOT, J., in Vail v. Rice, 1 N. Y. 155, 158: "There does not appear to be anything in the character of the fact that a usage in a given branch of trade exists, which renders it important that such fact should be established by more than one competent witness; and many cases may arise in which the administration of justice would be needlessly delayed and burthened by requiring two or more witnesses. . . . When only one witness is called to establish such a fact, the duty of a Court and jury will always lead to an inquiry and examination into the circumstances; and if his single testimony is not sufficient, it will not form a basis of judicial action. The question whether the testimony of one witness to such a fact is sufficient may be safely left in every case to the Court and jury."

The rule would probably not to-day be recognized in any court,[2] except under express statute.[3]

§ 2054. Local Rules in Miscellaneous Civil Cases (Reformation of Instrument, Oral Trust, Contracts, etc.). In a few jurisdictions, anomalous rules exist, either by judicial decision or under express statute, requiring more than one witness.

(1) In Pennsylvania, a rule exists requiring two witnesses (or one corroborated by circumstances) to impeach a written instrument,[1] and another,

[2] Fed. 1871, Robinson v. U. S., 13 Wall. 363, 366 (one witness suffices); Ala. 1856, Partridge v. Forsyth, 29 Ala. 200, 203 (one witness suffices); Ia. 1908, Jones v. Herrick, 141 Ia. 415, 118 N. W. 444 (custom in driving teams; one witness suffices); Md. 1906, Biggs v. Langhammer, 103 Md. 94, 63 Atl. 198, semble (marine charter); Mass. 1830, Parrott v. Thacher, 9 Pick. 425, 431 (one witness held not sufficient under the circumstances; "usage is a thing which must be public and notorious, at least known to all masters of packets in this trade"); 1866, Boardman v. Spooner, 13 All. 353, 359 ("It has been considered to be a rule of law that the testimony of a single witness is insufficient to establish a usage of trade"); 1880, Jones v. Hoey, 128 Mass. 585 ("Notwithstanding the dictum in Boardman v. Spooner, there can be no doubt at the present day that the circumstances that but one witness testifies to a usage is important only as bearing upon the credibility and satisfactoriness of his testimony in point of fact"); 1906, McDonough v. Boston El. R. Co., 191 Mass. 509, 78 N. E. 141; Mo. 1920, Baker v. McMurry Contracting Co., 282 Mo. 685, 223 S. W. 45 (custom as to payment of railroad subcontractors; one witness alone, not sufficient, under certain circumstances; but the opinion confuses the present question and that of the opponent's knowledge of the custom); N. Y. 1829, Wood v. Hickok, 2 Wend. 501, 504 (testimony of one witness "does not amount to proof of the usage of a particular trade"; no authority cited); 1851, Vail v. Rice, 1 N. Y. 155, 158 (preceding case held to establish no rule; one witness sufficient; see quotation supra); N. C. 1905, Penland v. Ingle, 138 N. C. 456, 50 S. E. 850 (brokerage custom); Va. 1897, Southwest Va. M. L. Co. v. Chase, 95 Va. 50, 27 S. E. 826.

[3] Or. Laws 1920, § 801 ("usage, by the testimony of at least two witnesses"); ib. § 702 (quoted ante, § 2034); 1901, Aldrich v. R. Co., 39 Or. 263, 64 Pac. 455 (designating the method of enforcing the statutory rule).

Distinguish the question whether the witness must state specific instances (ante, § 1954), and whether one instance suffices (ante, § 379), and what degree of certainty must be reached in the proof (post, § 2498).

§ 2054. [1] 1847, Brawdy v. Brawdy, 7 Pa. 157, semble; 1886, Thomas v. Loose, 114 Pa. 35, 45, 6 Atl. 326; 1895, Pyroleum Appliance Co. v. W. H. & S. Co., 169 Pa. 440, 32 Atl. 458 (ruling that two partners were two witnesses); 1898, Keystone Axle Co. v. Leyda, 188 Pa. 322, 41 Atl. 477; 1904, Pioso v. Bitzer, 209 Pa. 503, 58 Atl. 891 (rule applied); 1916, Thompson v. Schoch, 254 Pa. 585, 99 Atl. 72.

Compare the peculiar parol-evidence rule in this State (post, § 2431).

requiring the same amount to reform a written instrument;[2] both probably being applications of the Chancery or ecclesiastical rule of two witnesses (ante, §§ 2045, 2047).

(2) In Texas, professedly on the foundation of a Chancery ruling in England (approved by Chancellor Kent, but in reality a mere casual utterance of caution for the case in hand[3]), a rule has been laid down that an oral declaration or admission of a trust annexed to a deed of sale must be proved by two witnesses or by one with corroboration.[4]

(3) In Louisiana, contracts affecting personalty or the payment of money, above $500 in amount, must be proved by one witness and "other corroborating circumstances."[5]

(4) In Tennessee, the service of a surety's notice to the creditor to sue the principal must be proved by two witnesses.[6]

(5) In Alabama, it seems to be the rule that two witnesses, or one with corroboration, are required for a plea of truth in defamation.[7]

(6) In Wisconsin, it has been suggested (perhaps without intending to make

[2] 1898, Cooper v. Potts, 185 Pa. 115, 39 Atl. 824; 1902, Sutch's Estate, 201 Pa. 305, 50 Atl. 943; 1914, Thomas v. Herring, 244 Pa. 550, 91 Atl. 500 (points out that Pa. St. 1913, May 28, P. L. 358, does not abolish the present rule).

Compare the rule for measure of proof by preponderance of evidence (post, § 2498).

[3] 1805, Lench v. Lench, 10 Ves. Jr. 517, 519 (issue as to a lien upon an estate purchased by a husband with money from the wife's trustees; as to the husband's declarations, Sir W. Grant, M. R., said that "upon this evidence I should have been disposed to allow the claim or to direct an inquiry; but if evidence of this sort could be proceeded upon, standing unsupported, and in some degree contradicted by the circumstances, it ought to stand wholly uncontradicted by other evidence"); 1815, Boyd v. M'Lean, 1 John. Ch. 582, 590 (Kent, C., referred to Lench v. Lench with approval, but did not lay down any absolute rule; "Sir W. Grant did not deem the unassisted oath of a single witness to the mere naked declaration of the trustee admitting the trust, as sufficient; . . . it would be easy to multiply instances of the like caution and discretion").

Compare the rule for giving notice of such admissions (ante, § 1856).

[4] 1849, Neill v. Keese, 5 Tex. 23, 28 (purporting to follow Boyd v. M'Lean); 1852, Mead v. Randolph, 8 Tex. 191 (not clear); 1853, Miller v. Thatcher, 9 Tex. 482, 485 (rule approved and established); 1858, Cuney v. Dupree, 21 Tex. 211, 219 (rule applied); 1882, Grace v. Hanks, 57 Tex. 14, 15 (same).

So also perhaps in New Jersey: 1905, Wilson v. Terry, 70 N. J. Eq. 231, 62 Atl. 310 (apparently approving this rule for a deed absolute intended as a mortgage).

[5] La. Rev. Civ. C. 1920, § 2277 ("All agreements relative to movable property, and all contracts for the payment of money where the value does not exceed $500," if not reduced to writing, are provable by any evidence; but "such contracts or agreements, above $500 in value, must be proved by at least one credible witness and other corroborating circumstances"); applied in the following cases: 1818, Ferry v. Legras, 5 Mart. 393; 1834, Lopez v. Bergel, 7 La. 178, 181; 1835, Stanley v. Addison, 8 La. 207, 210; 1843, Leeds v. Debuys, 4 Rob. 257; 1847, Palmer v. Dinn, 2 La. An. 536; 1853, O'Brien v. Flynn, 8 La. An. 307; 1855, Harrison v. McCawley, 10 La. An. 270; 1867, Stribling v. Stewart, 19 La. An. 71; 1868, Goldsmith v. Friedlander, 20 La. An. 119; 1868, Field v. Harrison, 20 La. An. 411; Helm v. Ducayet, 20 La. An. 417; 1869, Mille v. Dupuy, 21 La. An. 53, 54; 1871, Betzer v. Coleman, 23 La. An. 785; 1872, Webster v. Burke, 24 La. An. 137; 1876, Rossignol v. Triche, 28 La. An. 144; 1898, Berges v. Daverede, — La. An. —, 23 So. 891; 1902, Clark v. Hedden, 109 La. 147, 33 So. 116; 1904, Hannay v. New Orleans C. Exchange, 112 La. 998, 36 So. 831 (Code rule applied); 1905, Morris v. Pratt, 114 La. 98, 38 So. 70.

[6] Tenn. St. 1801, Shannon's Code 1916, §3518, applied in the following cases: 1827, Waterford v. Hensley, Mart. & Y. 275; 1837, Thompson v. Watson, 10 Yerg. 362, 368; 1841, Miller v. Childress, 2 Humph. 320; 1873, Simpson v. State, 6 Baxt. 440; 1882, Jackson v. Huey, 10 Lea 184, 189.

[7] 1849, Spruil v. Cooper, 16 Ala. 791; 1900, Hereford v. Combs, 126 Ala. 369, 28 So. 582 (approving Spruil v. Cooper).

Compare the cases cited post, § 2498 (proof beyond a reasonable doubt).

a rule) that a single witness will not suffice to prove matters notoriously and highly improbable.[8]

(7) In some States a rule specifies a required number of witnesses for proof of handwriting (ante, § 2044).

(8) In Oregon, a survey of land must be verified by two surveyors.[9]

(9) In the Federal courts, two citizen-witnesses must make certain proof in naturalization proceedings.[10]

(10) In certain transactions involving action by an administrative officer, the production of a certain number of witnesses, for proving to him some preliminary fact, is sometimes required by law. But these statutes, not affecting judicial proof, are without the present purview.[11]

(11) In Alabama and Florida, two witnesses to land-value are required in proceedings for the relinquishment of dower.[12]

(12) In sundry other instances a rule for corroboration is made applicable to a certain kind of witness (not to all) in a certain issue, e. g. the claimant's testimony to a debt of a deceased person, or the wife's testimony to the consideration of a conveyance attacked by creditors. Such rules seem to be applicable in essence to the kind of witness, not the kind of issue, and are therefore noted post, §§ 2065, 2066.

(13) In other instances, where a certain kind of witness is required, the rule specifies a number required, e. g. two physicians on a proceeding to commit to an insane hospital. These rules are noted post, §§ 2090, 2091.

Topic II: RULES DEPENDING ON THE KIND OF WITNESS

§ 2056. Uncorroborated Accomplice; (1) History and Present State of the Law. May a jury lawfully convict of a crime on the sole testimony of an accomplice in the alleged crime? Or must his single testimony be corroborated by other evidence?

Historically, this question did not become a mooted one until the end of the 1700s. Long before then, a struggle had centered round the testimony of accomplices, for in the political trials ever since the time of Henry VIII (when the frequent reports begin) they appear as the chief dependence

[8] 1897, Badger v. Mills, 95 Wis. 599, 70 N.W. 687 ("contrary to conceded fact or matters of common knowledge or to all reasonable probabilities"; here the cause of the breaking of a ladder).

[9] Or. Laws 1920, § 3423 ("two competent surveyors" required, to make a survey "legal evidence," when not by official surveyors).

[10] The statutes and rulings are placed post, § 2066.

[11] The following are examples:

(a) Rule requiring two witnesses to absent grantor's signature to entitle a deed to be accepted for record by the recorder of deeds; see the statutes cited ante, § 1651; the following is an example: S. Dak. Rev. Code 1919, §§ 541, 570, 582-585 (document affecting real property not acknowledged; one subscribing witness necessary for record; otherwise, witnesses to handwriting of party and subscribing witness); § 1577 (personal property mortgage).

(b) Rule requiring two witnesses to homestead residence, to entitle an entryman to a patent of U. S. land: U. S. Rev. St. 1878, §§ 2290, 2291; 1920, Jones v. U. S., 9th C. C. A., 265 Fed. 235.

[12] Ala. Code 1907, § 3821 (relinquishment of dower; "the Court must take the testimony of two or more credible witnesses in writing as to the value of the lands," etc.); Fla. Rev. G. S. 1919, § 3809 (insane wife; quoted post, § 2090).

of the Crown in its prosecutions. But the original controversy was over their admissibility. Through the 1600s and the 1700s it had to be ruled again and again that they were to be received as witnesses.[1] But for a long time no question was made as to the sufficiency of their testimony when admitted. The quantitative conception of an oath (ante, § 2032) tended to keep this question in the background. An oath, in the notions of the time, had a certain dead-weight of its own; one oath was as good as another oath. Should a witness once get in, the harm (they thought) was done; for there would be little weighing of the comparative quality of different persons' oaths. The struggle therefore was made at the threshold.

As time went on, and the modern conception of testimony developed, the possibility of admitting a witness and yet discriminating as to the qualitative sufficiency of his testimony became more apparent; and the way was open for the consideration of this question. In a few instances, as the 1700s wore on, and even before then, judicial suggestions are found as to the feasibility of such a discrimination.[2] But not until the end of that century does any Court seem to have acted upon such a suggestion in its directions to the jury. About that time there comes into acceptance a general practice to discourage a conviction founded solely upon the testimony of an accomplice uncorroborated.[3]

But was this practice founded on a rule of law? Never, in England, — until very modern times. It was recognized constantly that the judge's instruction upon this point was a mere exercise of his common-law function of advising the jury upon the weight of the evidence, and was not a statement of a rule of law binding upon the jury:[4]

§ 2056. [1] Ante, §§ 526, 580, 967.

[2] 1680, Hale, Pleas of the Crown, I, 305 ("The credibility of his testimony is to be left to the jury; and truly it would be hard to take away the life of any person upon such a witness that swears to save his own and yet confesseth himself guilty of so great a crime, unless there be very considerable circumstances which may give the greater credit to what he swears"); 1775, R. v. Rudd, 1 Cowp. 331, 336 (Mansfield, L. C. J., after referring to the competency of accomplices as "approvers": "Though under this practice they are clearly competent witnesses, their single testimony alone is seldom of sufficient weight to convict the offenders"); 1863, Plunkett, Evidence of Accomplices, 2 ("As to the origin of this practice of requiring confirmation at all, it cannot be very clearly traced. . . . It was not laid down or acted on in the time of Lord Holt, that is, up to the year 1710: . . . it was after this decision in Rudd's case [1775] that the practice must have been introduced").

[3] 1784, R. v. Smith and Davis, 1 Leach Cr. L., 4th ed., 479, note ("The Court, though it was admitted as an established rule of law that the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice is legal evidence, thought it too dangerous to suffer a conviction to take place under such unsupported testimony"); 1788, R. v. Atwood and Robbins, 1 Leach Cr. L., 4th ed., 464 (quoted infra); 1788, R. v. Durham and Crowder, ib. 478 (foregoing case followed; this case is clearly the later, though the date is misprinted as 1787 in the report).

[4] England and Ireland: 1803, R. v. Despard, 28 How. St. Tr. 346, 487; 1809, Ellenborough, L. C. J., in R. v. Jones, 2 Camp. 132 ("Strange notions upon this subject have lately got abroad; and I thought it necessary to say so much for the purpose of correcting them"); 1821, R. v. Dawber, 3 Stark. 34; 1826, R. v. Sheehan, Jebb 54 (by all the Irish judges); 1835, R. v. Hastings, 7 C. & P. 152 ("It is altogether for the jury"); 1836, R. v. Wilkes, 7 C. & P. 272; 1837, R. v. Casey, Jebb 203 (by all the Irish judges); 1847, Simmons v. Simmons, 1 Rob. Eccl. 566, 575; 1848, R. v. Mullins, 7 State Tr. N. S. 1110, 3 Cox Cr. 526; 1852, R. v. Dunne, Ire., 5 Cox Cr. 507; 1855, R. v. Stubbs, 1 Dears. 555, 7 Cox Cr. 48 ("It is not a rule of law that an accomplice must be confirmed"); 1860, M'Clory v. Wright, 10 Ir. C. L. 514, 520; 1860, Magee

1788, BULLER, J., in R. v. Atwood and Robbins, 1 Leach Cr. L., 4th ed., 464: "I thought it proper to refer your case to the consideration of the twelve Judges. My doubt was whether the evidence of an accomplice, unconfirmed by any other evidence that could materially affect the case, was sufficient to warrant a conviction. And the judges are unanimously of opinion that an accomplice alone is a competent witness, and that if the jury, weighing the probability of his testimony, think him worthy of belief, a conviction supported by such testimony alone is perfectly legal. The distinction between the competency and credit of a witness has long been settled. If a question be made respecting his competency, the decision of that question is the exclusive province of the judge; but if the ground of objection go to his credit only, his testimony must be received and left to the jury, under such directions and observations from the Court as the circumstances of the case may require, to say whether they think it sufficiently credible to guide their decision in the case."

1848, MAULE, J., in R. v. Mullins, 7 State Tr. N. S. 1110, 3 Cox Cr. 526: "The truth of the matter is, there is no rule of law at all that an accomplice cannot be believed unless he is confirmed. . . . It is an observation addressed, not to the Court to exclude the evidence, but addressed to the jury who have to weigh the evidence, and it is for them to say whether the confirmation will satisfy them or whether they will be satisfied without any. If they are satisfied without any, they may be, and their verdict may be an honest and just and true one. . . . The directions of judges given to juries in that respect are not directions in point of law which juries are bound to adopt, but observations respecting facts, which judges are very properly in the habit of giving, because, with respect to matters of fact, the judge as well as the counsel upon both sides endeavor to assist the jury."

1919, DARLING, J., in R. v. Feigenbaum, 1 K. B. 431: "The boys were undoubtedly the accomplices of the appellant. It is a rule of law that a jury may convict on the uncorroborated evidence of an accomplice, and, therefore, a judge is not justified in directing the jury, at the close of the case for the prosecution, that they must acquit the prisoner because in his opinion the only evidence against him is the uncorroborated evidence of an accomplice. But it has been laid down in many cases, that the judge ought not to leave the case to the jury without warning them firmly that the evidence of an accomplice must always be regarded with grave suspicion, and that they ought not to convict unless the evidence of the accomplice is corroborated; further, he ought to point out to the jury what corroborative evidence there is, if any, or if, in his opinion, there is no corroborative evidence, he should tell the jury so. Practically this differs little from saying that a judge may direct an acquittal if there is indeed no corroboration of the accomplice's evidence, but a difference does exist, though it may be very slight. In the words of Browning:

'Oh, the little more, and how much it is!
And the little less, and what worlds away.'"

v. Magee, 11 Ir. C. L. 449, 462; 1868, R. v. Boyes, 1 B. & S. 311, 320; 1894, Re Meunier, 2 Q. B. 415, 418 (the warning to the jury is customary; but there is no right to withdraw the case for want of corroboration).

But since the establishment of the Court of Criminal Appeal, there is a definite rule of law; 1908, R. v. Tate, 2 K. B. 680 (the omission of the caution renders the verdict invalid where no corroboration existed, in the appellate Court's opinion); 1916, R. v. Baskerville, 2 K. B. 658 (gross indecency with boys; held that "the rule of practice [as to corroboration] has become virtually equivalent to a rule of law"; examining prior cases).

In CANADA, the orthodox doctrine is still adhered to: Alta. 1912, Rex v. Betchel, 4 Alta. 402, 5 D. L. R. 497 (abortion; the judge should give a caution to the jury, but a verdict without corroborative evidence is valid); 1915, R. v. McClain, 23 D. L. R. 312 (stealing; uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice may suffice); N. Br. 1880, R. v. Tower, 20 N. Br. 168, 207 (there is no positive rule of law requiring direct corroboration); N. Sc. 1917, R. v. Morrison, 38 D. L. R. 568 (manslaughter; conviction reversed for failure to give an instruction with warning as to accomplices); Ont. 1886, R. v. Andrews, 12 Ont. 184, 191 (the practice of instruction is proper, but it is not a rule of law reviewable on appeal); 1910, R. v. Frank, 21 Ont. L. R. 196 (following R. v. Meunier); 1910, R. v. Trapnell, 22 Ont. L. R. 219, 224; Sask. 1908, R. v. Reynolds, 1 Sask. 480.

In the United States the same discrimination was early accepted:

1837, RUFFIN, C. J., in State v. Hardin, 2 Dev. & B. 407, 411: "The evidence of an accomplice is undoubtedly competent, and may be acted on by the jury as a warrant to convict, though entirely unsupported. It is, however, dangerous to act exclusively on such evidence; and therefore the Court may properly caution the jury and point out the grounds for requiring evidence confirmatory of some substantial part of it. But the Court can do nothing more; and if the jury really yield faith to it, it is not only legal, but obligatory on their consciences, to found their verdict upon it."

As a matter of common law, then, the doctrine was universally understood (except by one or two Courts [5]) as amounting to no rule of evidence, but merely to a counsel of caution given by the judge to the jury.[6] It followed

[5] Cal. 1860, People v. Eckert, 16 Cal. 110 (misunderstanding some of the English cases); Ia. 1848, Ray v. State, 1 G. Greene 316 (with sentimental reflections upon the lack of harmony between the English rule and our supposed superior methods of justice); P. I. 1902, U. S. v. Balayat, 1 P. I. 451, semble (theft); 1905, U. S. v. Ocampo, 4 P. I. 400 (robbery; not clear); 1905, U. S. v. Lim Tico, 4 P. I. 440 (larceny); 1905, U. S. v. Balisacan, 4 P. I. 545 (murder); 1906, U. S. v. Dadacay, 6 P.I. 1 (conspiracy); 1907, U.S. v. Padlan, 7 P. I. 517 (robbery); but these cases are supplanted by those cited infra, n. 6; Tenn. 1844, Kinchelow v. State, 5 Humph. 9, semble; Tex. 1854, Jones v. State, 13 Tex. 168, 177, semble.

[6] Federal: 1829 (?) Steinham v. U. S., 2 Paine 168, 180; 1829, U. S. v. Kessler, Baldw. 15, 22; 1843, U. S. v. Troax, 3 McL. 224; 1876, U. S. v. Babcock, 3 Dill. 571, 619; 1887, U. S. v. Thompson, 31 Fed. 331, C. C.; 1905, Wong Din v. U. S., 135 Fed. 702, 68 C. C. A. 340 (conspiracy to evade immigration law); 1910, Hohngren v. U. S., 217 U. S. 509, 30 Sup. 588, semble; 1912, Keliher v. U. S., C. C. A., 193 Fed. 8 (contra: "It is well known that the rule in Massachusetts has always been as stated in Roscoe," citing Com. v. Bosworth, but erroneously treating it as laying down a rule of law); 1914, Lung v. U. S., 9th C. C. A., 218 Fed. 817; 1915, Diggs v. U. S., Caminetti v. U. S., 9th C. C. A., 220 Fed. 545 (a refusal to instruct as to the credibility of an accomplice is not error; Ross, J., diss.); 1916, Caminetti v. U. S., 242 U. S. 470, 495, 37 U. S. 192 ("white slave traffic"); 1917, U. S. v. Fischer, D. C. E. D. Pa., 245 Fed. 477; 1917, Bandy v. U. S., 8th C. C. A., 245 Fed. 98; 1917, Wallace v. U. S., 7th C. C. A., 243 Fed. 300, 307 (illegal sale of drugs); 1919, McGinniss v. U. S., 2d C. C. A., 256 Fed. 621 (conspiracy to forge; accomplice's testimony uncorroborated, here held insufficient); 1919, Reeder v. U. S., 8th C. C. A., 262 Fed. 36 (hindering by force the execution of a law); 1921, Wagman v. U. S., 6th C. C. A., 269 Fed. 568 (illegal carriage of liquor);
Arkansas: 1867, Flanagin v. State, 25 Ark. 92;
Colorado: 1873, Solander v. People, 2 Colo. 48, 66; 1888, Wisdom v. People, 11 Colo. 174, 17 Pac. 519;
Connecticut: 1851, State v. Wolcott, 21 Conn. 272, 281; 1875, State v. Williamson, 42 Conn. 261, 263; 1904, State v. Carey, 76 Conn. 342, 56 Atl. 632 (leading opinion, by Hamersley, J.); 1911, State v. Kritchman, 84 Conn. 152, 79 Atl. 75;
Florida: 1867, Sumpter v. State, 11 Fla. 247, 252 (R. Jones, supra, quoted with approval); 1886, Bacon v. State, 22 Fla. 51, 78; 1890, Tuberson v. State, 26 Fla. 472, 474, 7 So. 858; 1900, Brown v. State, 42 Fla. 184, 27 So. 869; 1905, Caldwell v. State, 50 Fla. 4, 39 So. 188 (murder);
Hawaii: 1869, R. v. Brown, 3 Haw. 114, 115; 1889, R. v. Wo Sow, 7 Haw. 734, 737; 1898, Republic v. Edwards, 11 Haw. 571, 573 (sodomy; but the jury should be advised not to convict, and the Court may in discretion instruct them not to do so); 1904, Tong Kai v. Terr., 15 Haw. 612 (bribery);
Illinois: 1861, Gray v. People, 26 Ill. 344, 347; 1868, Cross v. People, 47 Ill. 152, 160 ("It is a matter of discretion with the Court to advise, rather than a rule of law"); 1874, Earll v. People, 73 Ill. 329, 334; 1881, Collins v. People, 98 Ill. 584, 588 (careful opinion); 1882, Friedberg v. People, 102 Ill. 160, 164; 1892, Hoyt v. People, 140 Ill. 588, 595, 30 N. E. 315; 1895, Campbell v. People, 159 Ill. 9, 42 N. E. 123; 1897, Honselman v. People, 168 Ill. 172, 48 N. E. 304; 1906, Juretich v. People, 223 Ill. 484, 79 N. E. 181 (false pretences); 1908, People v. Frankenburg, 236 Ill. 408, 86 N. E. 128; 1908, People v. Feinberg, 237 Ill. 348, 86 N. E. 584; 1912, People v. Baskin, 254 Ill. 509, 98 N. E. 957 (receiving stolen goods); 1914, People v. Covitz, 262 Ill. 514, 104 N. E. 887; 1914, People v. Spira, 264 Ill. 243, 106 N. E. 241 (arson); 1915, People v. Craig, — Ill. —, 110 N. E. 9 (fraudulent arson; rule affirmed); 1915, People v. Rosenberg, 267 Ill. 202, 108 N. E. 54 (arson); 1919, People v. Pattin, 290 Ill. 542, 125 N. E. 248; 1920, People v. Green, 292 Ill. 351, 127 N. E. 50 (burglary); 1920, People v. Miller, 292 Ill. 318, 127 N. E. 58 (receiving stolen goods);

Indiana: 1851, Johnson v. State, 2 Ind. 652; 1853, Dawley v. State, 4 Ind. 128; 1855, Stocking v. State, 7 Ind. 326, 330; 1859, Ulmer v. State, 14 Ind. 52, 57; 1879, Johnson v. State, 65 Ind. 269, 271; 1912, Schuster v. State, 178 Ind. 320, 99 N. E. 422; 1917, Brewster v. State, 186 Ind. 369, 115 N. E. 54 (arson); 1922, Vorhees v. State, — Ind. —, 134 N. E. 855 (making liquor);

Kansas: 1866, Craft v. State, 3 Kan. 450, 479; 1875, State v. Kellerman, 14 Kan. 135, 137, semble; 1878, State v. Adams, 20 Kan. 311, 327; 1893, State v. Patterson, 52 Kan. 335, 354, 34 Pac. 784, semble (but contra, 1896, State v. McDonald, 57 Kan. 537, 46 Pac. 967, semble);

Louisiana: 1871, State v. Bayonne, 23 La. An. 78; 1873, State v. Prudhomme, 25 id. 522, 525 ("rather a rule of practice than a rule of law"); 1881, State v. Russell, 33 La. 135, 138 ("the authorities . . . justify conviction by the jury on such testimony although it may not be corroborated by other"); 1886, State v. Mason, 38 La. 476; 1888, State v. Banks, 40 La. 736, 739, 5 So. 18; 1900, State v. Vicknair, 52 La. 1921, 28 So. 273 (foregoing cases approved; here a requested charge that the accomplice's testimony should not be even considered unless corroborated was held properly refused); 1903, State v. De Hart, 109 La. 570, 33 So. 605 (the necessity of corroboration is "rather a rule of practice than a rule of law"); 1904, State v. Hauser, 112 La. 313, 36 So. 396;

Maine: 1850, State v. Cunningham, 31 Me. 355; 1870, State v. Litchfield, 58 Me. 267, 270;

Massachusetts: 1839, Com. v. Bosworth, 22 Pick. 397; 1852, Com. v. Savory, 10 Cush. 535, 538; 1857, Com. v. Brooks, 9 Gray 299, 303; 1858, Com. v. Price, 10 Gray 472, 475; 1868, Com. v. Larrabee, 99 Mass. 413, 415; 1872, Com. v. Elliot, 110 Mass. 104, 106; 1877, Com. v. Scott, 123 Mass. 222, 237; 1890, Com. v. Wilson, 152 Mass. 12, 14, 25 N. E. 16 (where the judge refused to instruct on the subject and was sustained); 1894, Com. v. Clune, 162 Mass. 206, 214, 38 N. E. 435; 1896, Com. v. Bishop, 165 Mass. 148, 42 N. E. 560, 1906, Com. v. Phelps, 192 Mass. 591, 78 N. E. 741;

Michigan: 1858, People v. Jenness, 5 Mich. 305, 330; 1874, Hamilton v. People, 29 Mich. 173, 188;

Mississippi: 1848, Keithler v. State, 10 Sm. & M. 192, 228 (the jury "may believe him, if they choose, without corroboration"); 1856, Dick v. State, 30 Miss. 593, 599, semble; 1860, George v. State, 39 Miss. 570, 592, semble; 1875, Fitzcox v. State, 52 Miss. 923, 926; 1876, White v. State, 52 Miss. 216, 227; 1921, Dedeaux v. State, 125 Miss. 326, 87 So. 665 (larceny);

Missouri: 1861, State v. Watson, 31 Mo. 361, 364 (good opinion); 1877, State v. Jones, 64 Mo. 391, 395; 1880, State v. Reavis, 71 Mo. 419; 1887, State v. Chyo Chiagk, 92 Mo. 395, 413, 417, 4 S. W. 704 (but intimating that it should be a rule of law); 1888, State v. Walker, 98 Mo. 95, 109, 11 S. W. 1133; 1890, State v. Harkins, 100 Mo. 666, 672, 13 S. W. 830 (repudiating in effect the suggestion in State v. Chyo Chiagk); 1891, State v. Jackson, 106 Mo. 174, 179, 17 S. W. 301; 1893, State v. Minor, 117 Mo. 302, 306, 22 S. W. 1085; State v. Crab, 121 Mo. 554, 565, 26 S. W. 548; 1894, State v. Dawson, 124 Mo. 418, 422, 27 S. W. 1104; State v. Marcks, 140 Mo. 656, 41 S. W. 973; 1895, State v. Donnelly, 130 Mo. 642, 32 S. W. 1124; 1897, State v. Tobie, 141 Mo. 547, 42 S. W. 1078 (it is reprehensible in a Court to consider an appeal against a doctrine so long established as this); 1898, State v. Black, 143 Mo. 166, 44 S. W. 340 (was the Bar entitled to a ruling on this point every twelve months?); 1899, State v. Sprague, 146 Mo. 409, 425, 50 S. W. 901; 1902, State v. Koplan, 167 Mo. 298, 66 S. W. 967; 1908, State v. Bobbitt, 215 Mo. 42, 114 S. W. 511 (murder); 1909, State v. Wilkins, 221 Mo. 444, 120 S. W. 22 (sodomy; not clear); 1909, State v. Shelton, 223 Mo. 118, 122 S. W. 732; 1919, State v. Cummins, 279 Mo. 192, 213 S. W. 969; 1921, State v. Howerton, — Mo. —, 228 S. W. 745 (larceny);

Nebraska: 1894, Lamb v. State, 40 Nebr. 312, 319, 58 N. W. 963; 1922, Dyson v. State, — Nebr. —, 186 N. W. 984 (burglary);

New Jersey: 1877, State v. Hyer, 39 N. J. L. 598, 603; 1902, State v. Rachman, 68 N. J. L. 120, 53 Atl. 1046; 1904, State v. Lyons, 70 N. J. L. 635, 58 Atl. 398 (murder); 1904, State v. Simon, 71 N. J. L. 142, 58 Atl. 109; 1911, State v. Lieberman, 80 N. J. L. 506, 79 Atl. 331; 1912, Letts v. Letts 79 N. J. Eq. 630, 82 Atl. 845;

New York: 1823, People v. Reeder, 1 Wheel. Cr. C. 418, 420; 1839, People v. Davis, 21 Wend. 308, 314; 1845, People v. Costello, 1 Den. 83, 87; 1860, People v. Dyle, 21 N. Y. 578; 1864, Dunn v. People, 29 N. Y. 523, 528; 1875, Linsday v. People, 63 N. Y. 145, 154; at this point the law was changed by St. 1882, c. 360, quoted infra, note 10, as C. Cr. P. § 399; the following ruling had been made meantime: 1869, People v. Evans, 40 N. Y. 1, 6 (an exception exists for the case of subornation of perjury; the perjurer must be corroborated in the charge against the suborner; this ruling stands alone; but compare the application of the statutory rule to perjury, post, § 2059, and the rule for perjury in general, ante, § 2042);

North Carolina: 1837, State v. Haney, 2 Dev. & B. 390, 397; 1837, State v. Hardin, 2 Dev. & B. 407, 411; 1880, State v. Holland, 83 N. C. 624; 1903, State v. Register, 133 N. C. 746, 46 S. E. 21; 1920, State v. Bailey, 179 N. C. 724, 102 S. E. 406;

Ohio: 1859, Allen v. State, 10 Oh. St. 287, 305; 1913, State v. Hare, 87 Oh. 204, 100 N. E. 825 (bribery);

Pennsylvania: 1879, Kilrow v. Com., 89 Pa.

that the jury might or might not regard the caution by acquitting upon an uncorroborated accomplice's testimony; [7] that they alone were to determine whether corroboration existed and was sufficient; [8] and that the trial judge's omission of the caution was of itself not a ground for a new trial, being a matter solely for the trial judge's discretion.[9]

481, 488; 1889, Cox v. Com., 125 Pa. 94, 101; 1912, Com. v. De Masi, 234 Pa. 570, 83 Atl. 430;
Philippine Islands: 1905, U. S. v. Ocampo, 5 P. I. 339 (virtually repudiating, though not citing, the cases cited supra, n. 5); 1907, U. S. v. Butardo, 9 P. I. 246; 1910, U. S. v. Granadoso, 16 P. I. 419; 1910, U. S. v. Ambrosio, 17 P. I. 295, semble; 1911, U. S. v. Bernales, 18 P. I. 525; 1912, U. S. v. Callapag, 21 P. I. 262 (expressly affirming U. S. v. Ocampo, supra); 1913, U. S. v. Soriano, 25 P. I. 624, 630 (similar); 1913, U. S. v. Dacir, 26 P. I. 503, 508; 1914, U. S. v. Bana, 27 P. I. 103; 1915, U. S. v. Valdez, 30 P. I. 293, 315; 1916, U. S. v. Wayne Shoup, 35 P. I. 57; 1916, U. S. v. Bagsic, 35 P. I. 327; 1918, U. S. v. Remigio, 37 P. I. 599, 610; 1918, U. S. v. Maharaja Alim, 38 P. I. 1;
Porto Rico: 1906, People v. Kent, 10 P. R. 325, 345, semble;
Rhode Island: 1916, State v. Riddell, 38 R. I. 506, 96 Atl. 531 (arson; corroboration not required by rule of law);
South Carolina: 1849, State v. Brown, 3 Strobh. 508, 517, semble; 1867, State v. Wingo, 11 S. C. 275, semble; 1897, State v. Green, 48 S. C. 136, 26 S. E. 234;
Vermont: 1869, State v. Potter, 42 Vt. 495, 506 ("only a rule of practice, and not a rule of law"); 1922, State v. Montifoire, — Vt. —, 116 Atl. 77 (abortion);
Virginia: 1839, Brown v. Com., 2 Leigh 769, 777, semble;
Washington: 1891, Edwards v. State, 2 Wash. 291, 306, 26 Pac. 258, semble; 1891, Rose v. State, 2 Wash. 310, 320, 26 Pac. 264, semble; 1900, State v. Coates, 22 Wash. 601, 61 Pac. 726; 1901, State v. Concannon, 25 Wash. 327, 65 Pac. 534 (corroboration usually to be required); 1901, State v. Harras, 25 Wash. 416, 65 Pac. 774 (State v. Coates followed); 1905, State v. Pearson, 37 id. 405, 79 Pac. 985 (refusal to give a long instruction requiring corroboration under certain circumstances, held error; the opinion harks back to Edwards v. State, throws doubt on the intervening rulings, and then declines to lay down any rule; a good example of the kind of cobwebby opinion directed more to arachnidial athletics than the demands of plain certainty in criminal justice); 1909, State v. Jones, 53 Wash. 142, 101 Pac. 708; 1911, State v. Ray, 62 Wash. 582, 114 Pac. 439; 1911, State v. Stapp, 65 Wash. 438, 118 Pac. 337; 1911, State v. Dalton, 65 Wash. 663, 118 Pac. 829; 1911, State v. Mallahan, 66 Wash. 21, 118 Pac. 898; 1912, State v. Wappenstein, 67 Wash. 502, 121 Pac. 989; 1915, State v. Engstrom, 86 Wash. 499, 150 Pac. 1173 (larceny);
West Virginia: 1877, State v. Betsall, 11 W. Va. 703, 740; 1900, State v. Hill, 48 W. Va. 132, 35 S. E. 831;
Wisconsin: 1854, Mercer v. Wright, 3 Wis. 645 ("A jury ought not to convict upon the testimony of an accomplice uncorroborated, but all now agree that they may do so"); 1879, Ingalls v. State, 48 Wis. 647, 652, 4 N.W. 785; 1884, Black v. State, 59 Wis. 471, 18 N. W. 457; 1895, Porath v. State, 90 Wis. 527, 537, 63 N. W. 1061; 1894, State v. Juneau, 88 Wis. 180, 59 N. W. 580; 1905, Murphy v. State, 124 Wis. 635, 102 N. W. 1087; 1905, Means v. State, 125 Wis. 650, 104 N. W. 815; 1922, O'Keefe v. State, — Wis. —, 187 N. W. 656 (indecent liberties);
Wyoming: 1894, McNealley v. State, 5 Wyo. 69, 36 Pac. 824 (undecided); 1902, Smith v. State, 10 Wyo. 157, 67 Pac. 977 (accomplice's uncorroborated testimony may suffice; but the opinion is inconsistent); 1906, Clay v. State, 15 Wyo. 42, 86 Pac. 17 ("[The question] was discussed by this Court in Smith v. State, but was not decided"; here again left undecided).

[7] This is stated or implied in all the above cases.

[8] This was the practical consequence; nevertheless, the judges, merely as a part of the caution, did define certain elements of corroboration; these are treated post, § 2058.

[9] 1892, Hoyt v. People, 140 Ill. 588, 596, 30 N. E. 315; 1890, Com. v. Wilson, 152 Mass. 12, 14, 25 N. E. 16; 1896, Com. v. Bishop, 165 Mass. 148, 42 N. E. 560; 1877, State v. Jones, 64 Mo. 391, 395; 1892, State v. Woolard, 111 Mo. 248, 256, 20 S. W. 27.

Contra: Can. 1887, U. S. Express Co. v. Donohue, 14 Ont. 333, 337; U. S. 1873, Solander v. People, 2 Colo. 48, 66, semble (but only where there is in fact no corroboration); 1861, State v. Stebbins, 29 Conn. 463, 473 ("To omit it is now held a clear omission of judicial duty, and becomes a ground, perhaps, for granting a new trial"); 1875, State v. Williamson, 42 Conn. 261, 264 (apparently approving the above passage); 1902, Anthony v. State, 44 Fla. 1, 32 So. 818; 1858, People v. Jenness, 5 Mich. 305, 330, semble; 1861, State v. Watson, 31 Mo. 361, 365, semble; 1918, State v. Massey, 274 Mo. 578, 204 S. W. 541 (when "all of the evidence . . is circumstantial"); 1877, State v. Hyer, 39 N. J. L. 598, 605; 1854, Jones v. State, 13 Tex. 168, 177 (provided the facts make it applicable); 1869, State v. Potter, 42 Vt. 495, 506.

Undecided: 1886, State v. Mason, 38 La. An. 476.

But in nearly half of the jurisdictions in our own country a statute has expressly turned this cautionary practice into a rule of law.[10] The judge must therefore under these statutes instruct the jury in the rule of law, and [10] Alabama: Code 1897, § 5300, C. 1907, § 7897 ("A conviction of a felony cannot be had on the testimony of an accomplice, unless corroborated by other evidence tending to connect the defendant with the commission of the offense; and such corroborative evidence, if it merely shows the commission of the offense, or the circumstances thereof, is not sufficient"); Alaska: Comp. L. 1913, § 2262 (like Or. Laws 1920, § 1540); § 1505 (like Or. Laws 1920, § 868); Arizona: § 1051 (like Or. Laws 1920, § 1540, inserting after "other evidence," the clause "which in itself and without the aid of the testimony of the accomplice" etc.; this follows the original text of the Cal. Code, since changed); Arkansas: Dig. 1919, § 3181 (in felony, not sufficient, "unless corroborated by other evidence tending to connect the defendant with the commission of the offense; and the corroboration is not sufficient if it merely shows that the offense was committed, and the circumstances thereof"); § 3180 (in all cases where a rule requires corroboration, the judge "shall instruct the jury to render a verdict of acquittal," if the requirement is not fulfilled); California: P. C. 1872, § 1111 (an accomplice's testimony is not sufficient, "unless he is corroborated by such other evidence as shall tend to connect the defendant with the commission of the offense; and the corroboration is not sufficient if it merely shows the commission of the offense or the circumstances thereof"); C. C. P. § 2061, par. 4 (the judge to instruct, "on all proper occasions," that "the testimony of an accomplice ought to be viewed with distrust"); Georgia: Rev. C. 1910, § 5742, P. C. 1910, § 1017 ("The testimony of a single witness is generally sufficient to establish a fact"; except "in any case of felony where the only witness is an accomplice"; but "corroborating circumstances may dispense with another witness"). Idaho: Comp. St. 1919, § 8957 (like Cal. P. C. § 1111); Iowa: Code 1897, § 5489, Comp. C. 1919, § 9474 (insufficient, "unless corroborated by other evidence which shall tend to connect the defendant with the commission of the offense; and the corroboration is not sufficient if it merely show the commission of the offense or the circumstances thereof"); Kentucky: C. Cr. P. 1895, § 241 (all offenses; like Ark. Dig. § 3181); Minnesota: Gen. St. 1913, § 8463 ("A conviction cannot be had upon the testimony of an accomplice, unless it is corroborated by such other evidence as tends to convict the defendant of the commission of the offence; and the corroboration is not sufficient if it merely shows the commission of the offence or the circumstances thereof"); § 8741 (gambling offences; any person may be convicted "on his own confession out of court or upon the testimony of an accomplice"); Montana: Rev. C. 1921, § 11988 (like Cal. P. C. § 1111); § 10672, par. 4 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 2061); Nevada: Rev. L. 1912, § 7180 (like Cal. P. C. § 1111, as originally phrased, inserting, after "evidence which," the words, "in itself and without the aid of the testimony of the accomplice"); New Hampshire: Pub. St. 1891, c. 272, § 4 (fornication; "no person shall be convicted solely upon the testimony of a partner in guilt"); New York: C. Cr. P. 1881, § 399 (not sufficient, "unless he be corroborated by such other evidence as tends to connect the defendant with the commission of the crime"); North Dakota: Comp. L. 1913, § 10841 (like Ia. Code § 9474); Oklahoma: Comp. St. 1921, § 2701 (like Ia. Code, § 9474); § 1610 (in bribery, "no conviction shall be had on the uncorroborated testimony of one witness," i. e. an informing participant granted immunity); 1913, Fairgrieve v. State, — Okl. —, 134 Pac. 837 (an instruction is obligatory); 1913, Gillam v. State, 10 Okl. Cr. App. 176, 135 Pac. 441; Oregon: Laws 1920, § 868, par. 4 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 2061); § 1540 (like Ia. Code, § 9474); Pennsylvania: St. 1860, Mar. 31, § 49, Dig. 1920, § 7721, Crimes (in bribery, an accomplice's testimony is not sufficient, unless "corroborated by other evidence or the circumstances of the case"); Porto Rico: Rev. St. & C. 1911, § 6285 (like Cal. P. C. § 1111 as originally worded, i. e. inserting "which in itself and without the aid of the testimony of the accomplice," after "other evidence"); § 1530 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 2061); South Dakota: Rev. C. 1919, § 4882 (like Ia. Code, § 9474); Texas: Rev. C. Cr. P. 1911, § 801 (like Ia. Code, § 9474); Utah: Comp. L. 1917, § 8992 (no conviction, etc., unless he is "corroborated by other evidence which in itself and without the aid of the testimony of the accomplice tends to connect," etc. as in Cal. P. C. § 1111); Wyoming: Comp. St. 1920, § 7522 (in trials for subornation of perjury "no conviction shall be had on the evidence of the person attempted to be influenced, unsupported by other testimony").

In Tennessee and in Texas, statutes have now reverted to the common law rule for certain offences: Tenn. St. 1913, 2d Extra Sess., c. 1, p. 659, § 13 (liquor offences; "the unsupported evidence of any accomplice" suffices); Tex. Rev. P. C. 1911, § 574 (for gaming offences, "a conviction may be had upon the unsupported evidence of an accomplice or participant"); § 582 (betting on horse-race; conviction may be had "upon the unsupported evidence of an accomplice or participant").

the jury must follow it; moreover, the judge administers the rule of law (so far as this is practicable) by defining for the jury the precise conditions of its application. The binding rule of evidence thus created differs little from the terms of the common-law practice; the statute merely makes a rule of law out of a practice which before had no standing except in actual usage. To refuse the instruction when asked is, under the statute, of course unlawful.[11] Moreover, the existence of corroborating circumstances becomes a question of law,[12] upon which a verdict of guilty may be set aside; and the definition of corroboration becomes a task for the judge, which might properly be left, but usually is not, to the trial Court.

The manner in which this change came about is not difficult to perceive. At common law the judge was entitled and bound to assist the jury, before their retirement, with an expression of his opinion (in no way binding them to follow it) upon the weight of the evidence. This utterance was made the medium of many useful general suggestions based on experience. The benefit of this experience was thus obtained for them, without any attempt to fetter their judgment by inflexible dogmas unfitted for invariable application as rules of law. One of these general hints was that about accomplices' testimony. But in this country the orthodox function of the judge to assist the jury on matters of fact was in a misguided moment (except in a few jurisdictions) eradicated from our system (post, § 2551). The judge was forbidden to contribute to the jury's aid any expression of opinion upon the weight of evidence in a given case. Unless there was a rule of the law of Evidence upon the subject of an accomplice's testimony, he could not in a given case advise them to refuse to convict upon the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice. The makers of this innovation upon established trial-methods were thus obliged to turn into a rule of law the old practice as to accomplices, if they wished to retain its benefit at all. This they therefore did. Whether or not they had attempted the impracticable and the undesirable, — whether it is either wise or feasible to construct a fixed rule of law for all cases, is a question which may now be considered.

§ 2057. Same: (2) Policy of the Rule. The reasons which have led to this distrust of an accomplice's testimony are not far to seek. He may expect to save himself from punishment by procuring the conviction of others. It is true that he is also charging himself, and in that respect he has burned his ships. But he can escape the consequences of this acknowledgment, if the prosecuting authorities choose to release him provided he secures the conviction of his partner in crime:

[11] 1879, State v. Odell, 8 Or. 30, 33; 1877, Davis v. State, 2 Tex. App. 588, 606; 1877, Carroll v. State, 3 Tex. App. 117. All the cases assume this.

But in California, even under C. C. P. § 2061 (quoted supra, n. 10), the instruction is not demandable; though the repeated dissent of some of the judges leaves the matter still partly in controversy; 1903, People v. Wardrip, 141 Cal. 229, 74 Pac. 744; 1904, People v. Buckley, 143 Cal. 375, 77 Pac. 169; 1904, People v. Moran, 144 Cal. 48, 77 Pac. 77; 1904, People v. Ruiz, 144 Cal. 251, 77 Pac. 907.

[12] Post, § 2059.

1837, Lord ABINGER, C. B., in R. v. Farler, 8 C. & P. 106: "It is a practice which deserves all the reverence of law, that judges have uniformly told juries that they ought not to pay any respect to the testimony of an accomplice unless the accomplice is corroborated in some material particular. . . . The danger is that when a man is fixed, and knows that his own guilt is detected, he purchases immunity by falsely accusing others."

It is true that this promise of immunity is usually denied, and may not exist; but its existence is always suspected. The essential element, however, it must be remembered, is this supposed promise or expectation of conditional immunity. If that is lacking, the whole basis of distrust fails. We have passed beyond the stage of thought in which his commission of crime, self-confessed, is deemed to render him radically a liar (ante, § 526). The extreme case of the wretch who fabricates merely for the malicious desire to drag others down in his own ruin can be no foundation for a general rule.

The promise of immunity, then, being the essential element of distrust, but not being invariably made, no invariable rule should be fixed as though it had been made. Moreover, if made, its influence must vary infinitely with the nature of the charge and the personality of the accomplice. Finally, credibility is a matter of elusive variety, and it is impossible and anachronistic to determine in advance that, with or without promise, a given man's story must be incapable of being believed:

1844, Chief Baron JOY, Evidence of Accomplices, 4: "How the practice which at present prevails could ever have grown into a general regulation must be matter of surprise to every person who considers its nature, or inquires into the foundation on which it rests. Why the case of an accomplice should require a particular rule for itself; why it should not, like that of every other witness of whose credit there is an impeachment, be left to the unfettered discretion of the judge, to deal with it as the circumstances of each particular case may require, it seems difficult to explain. Why a fixed, unvarying rule should be applied to a subject which admits of such endless variety as the credit of witnesses, seems hardly reconcilable to the principles of reason. But, that a judge should come prepared to reject altogether the testimony of a competent witness as unworthy of credit, before he had ever seen that witness; before he had observed his look, his manner, his demeanour; before he had had an opportunity of considering the consistency and probability of his story; before he had known the nature of the crime of which he was to accuse himself, or the temptation which led to it, or the contrition with which it was followed; — that a judge, I say, should come prepared beforehand, to advise the jury to reject without consideration such evidence, even though judge and jury should be perfectly convinced of its truth, seems to be a violation of the principles of common sense, the dictates of morality, and the sanctity of a juror's oath. . . . Nor, if we inquire into the foundation of the rule, shall we find in it anything certain or fixed, such as ought to be the basis of an uniform and never varying rule. We shall be told by one that it is the moral guilt of the witness which produces this, as it were, practical incompetency; whilst another ascribes it to the desire which he has to purchase impunity for his own transgression. If it be the moral guilt of the witness that affects his credit, the degree to which his credit is affected must depend upon and vary with the magnitude of the crime of which each witness confesses himself to be guilty. Crimes are of every different shade, from the most venial petit larceny to the most atrocious murder. Yet to all the rule equally applies. The witness who on cross-examination confesses that he has been engaged in many murders, appears more stained with guilt than he who comes forward as an accomplice in the petit larceny then under trial; yet the former is without the scope of the rule, whilst the latter comes entirely within the sphere of its application. The testimony of the same witness may in one trial be absolutely rejected under the operation of the rule, and in the very next trial, in the course of the same day, it may be permitted to go to the jury; yet his moral character has undergone no change in the interval. Moral guilt, then, can never afford any rational foundation for a rule which applies indiscriminately to the highest and to the lowest degrees of that guilt. — But an accomplice, we are told, comes forward to save himself, and his credit is affected by the temptation which this holds out to forswear himself. But who is it that establishes his guilt? He himself — he is his own accuser; and the proof, and often the only proof which can be had, of his guilt, comes from his own lips. He is generally admitted as a witness from the necessity of the thing, and from the impossibility without him of bringing any of the offenders to justice. If this be the foundation of the rule, it rests on a shifting sand. The temptation to commit perjury which influences his credit must be proportioned to the punishment annexed to the crime of which the witness confesses himself guilty. But the rule applies with equal force to the accomplice who may apprehend but a month's imprisonment for the most trifling petit larceny, and to him who may reasonably dread death for an atrocious murder. Universal and undiscriminating, the rule levels all distinctions. Where then is the necessity for, or good sense in, such a rule? Why not leave the credit of the accomplice to be dealt with by the jury, subject to such observations upon it from the judge as each particular case may suggest? . . . That persons whom the interest of the community require, and the principles of sound policy invite to come forward, should not be marked by a rule which has not been deemed necessary in the case of more atrocious offenders not appearing in the character of accomplices, seems to me to be what is required by reason and good sense."

1904, Hamersley, J., in State v. Carey, 76 Conn. 342, 56 Atl. 632: "When the testimony of accomplices was first used, it was, under the then settled law of evidence, incompetent, and was admitted notwithstanding, as an exception to that settled law, justified by necessity. The conditions at that time affecting such testimony were mainly these: A convicted felon was an incompetent witness; an accomplice confessed himself guilty of felony; a person having an interest in the event of a prosecution was an incompetent witness; the liberty or death of an accomplice, at first absolutely, and afterward more or less directly, might depend on the event of the prosecution in which he testified; the necessity of punishing certain crimes induced the enactment of statutes offering bribes to perpetrators of these crimes who, confessing their commission, might charge the crime upon their associates, or furnish the government with evidence that would lead to the arrest and conviction of others. . . . The statutes encouraging informers to buy immunity in crime by accusing others produced accomplices as witnesses in the most odious possible light. The danger of their testimony was enhanced by the condition of the law, which excluded an accused person from the witness stand. The most reputable persons in the realm might be convicted of crime because they could not be heard in contradiction or explanation of accusations by the most infamous. Instances of such cruel injustice were not wanting in times of high political excitement. Notwithstanding an accomplice was thus admitted as a witness only as an exception to the settled law governing competency, he was nevertheless a competent witness. . . . It was under these conditions and in respect to witnesses known as accomplices, thus defined, that during the latter part of the eighteenth and the earlier part of the nineteenth centuries the statements of English judges in respect to their own practice in dealing with such witnesses was made. The undoubted practice of sharply, and often indignantly, denouncing the worthlessness of the unconfirmed testimony of a witness who acknowledged himself a knave, and that he was testifying against his comrades in the hope of obtaining by this means a pardon for his own crimes, was natural, lawful, and just. And the form, force, and extent of such denunciation was wholly discretionary with the judge, according to the circumstances surrounding each witness. The practice, so far as it was a general practice, of denouncing accomplices as per se witnesses whose unconfirmed testimony it was unsafe to believe, arose from the conditions we have mentioned.

"Those conditions no longer exist. An accomplice, as a witness, is not an exception to the law of competency, selected on grounds of doubtful morality, based on public necessity. A convicted felon is not an incompetent witness. A person interested in the event of a prosecution, however great his interest, is not incompetent. The peculiar statutes that bred the approvers or informers of former times have no place in our legislation. Arrangements for king's evidence or state's evidence cannot be initiated by the informer himself or a private prosecutor, but are confined to an officer of the court appointed by the court. The accused is no longer excluded from the witness stand. He is free to defend himself from unjust accusation. The general law of competency places accomplices on the same footing as other witnesses. The same rules apply to the weight and credibility of their testimony. There is no longer any excuse for speaking of accomplices as an exceptional class of witnesses, incompetent on general principles, and unfortunately admitted under the stress of public necessity. It is not true that every accomplice, even if the meaning of the word is strictly limited to the 'king's evidence' of former times, acknowledges a moral turpitude, ordinarily inconsistent with veracity, or testifies under the compulsion of an irresistible self-interest. It is true that moral turpitude, whether shown by confession or conviction of crime, or otherwise, and self-interest, however great, does not affect the competency of any witness. It is true, as it always has been, that when a competent witness is shown in the course of a trial to have exhibited moral turpitude of a nature ordinarily inconsistent with veracity, or to have such an interest in giving his testimony as to render the temptation to perjury peculiarly powerful, it is the right of the court, in the exercise of its discretion, and may be its clear duty, to call the attention of the jury in the strongest terms to the danger of giving credit to such testimony, unconfirmed by independent evidence. . . . The doctrine of this case, affirmed in the subsequent cases, is inconsistent with the existence of a rule of law binding the judge, whenever an accomplice testifies, to instruct the jury that it is not safe to convict on his testimony alone. We think there is no such rule of law, for the reasons above given." [1]

It may be noted that the legislative creation of a rule of law, by introducing detailed refinements of definition to be applied by the jurors, has merely tended to confuse them with sounds of words, and to place in the hands of counsel a set of juggling formulas with which to practice upon the chance of obtaining a new trial.

§ 2058. Same: (3) Kind of Crime affected by the Rule. In the common-law practice, the caution was given without distinction as to the kind or the grade of the crime. But under some of the statutory provisions both distinctions are found; the rule being limited, for example, to felonies,[1] or to bribery.[2] If the rule is a just one at all, it is worth using for all charges of crime.

§ 2057. [1] Compare also the following good opinions: 1870, Appleton, C. J., in State v. Litchfield, 58 Me. 267, 270; 1877, Johnson, J., in State v. Betsall, 11 W. Va. 703, 740 (pointing out that the judge could in case of need set aside the verdict).

§ 2058. [1] Statutes cited supra, § 2056, note 10; the following rulings under them declare the rule not applicable below felonies: 1877, Moses v. State, 58 Ala. 117; 1871, Parsons v. State, 43 Ga. 197; 1874, Crisson v. State, 51 Ga. 597; 1885, Askea v. State, 75 Ga. 356; 1886, Porter v. State, 76 Ga. 658.

[2] Statutes cited supra, § 2056, note 10.

It is also applicable to accomplices in civil actions for a penalty,[3] but not to civil cases generally.[4]

§ 2059. Same: (4) Nature of Corroborative Evidence required. In examining the nature of the corroborative evidence to be required, the common-law rulings may be drawn upon, for it was by them that the terms of the caution were developed, and the statutory rule of law usually follows closely the judicial custom.

(a) It is clear, as to the testimonial source of the corroboration, that it must be independent of the accomplice himself; it must rest on other than his credit.[1] It is usually said that the testimony of another accomplice is not sufficient;[2] yet the circumstances may sometimes render it sufficiently trustworthy.[3] So also the testimony of an accomplice's wife, though sometimes held insufficient,[4] may properly be treated, in a given case, as amply confirmative.[5]

The corroboration may of course come from the accused himself, for example, from a confession,[6] or from his failure to produce available testimony, or the like.[7]

[3] Contra: 1860, M'Clory v. Wright, 10 Ir. C. L. 514, 521; 1860, Magee v. Mark, 11 Ir. C. L. 449, 462. It was held not applicable on a bastardy charge: 1882, State v. Nichols, 29 Minn. 357, 359, 13 N. W. 153.

[4] 1887, United States Expr. Co. v. Donohoe, 14 Ont. 333, 337, semble; 1898, Graham v. British C. L. & I. Co., 12 Man. 244, 262, 269 (the practice in criminal cases does not apply to civil cases).

§ 2059. [1] This is assumed in all the cases; it is also expressly and superfluously stated in some of the statutes, cited ante, § 2056 ("other evidence, in itself and without the aid of the testimony of the accomplice"); it is also expressly noted in the following rulings: 1870, Lopez v. State, 34 Tex. 133; 1880, Hannahan v. State, 7 Tex. App. 664.

[2] Eng. 1832, R. v. Noakes, 5 C. & P. 326; 1909, Gay's Case, 2 Cr. App. 327 ("This Court will certainly not hold that the evidence of a number of accomplices needs any less corroboration than that of one accomplice").

U. S. 1898, People v. Creegan, 121 Cal. 554, 53 Pac. 1082; 1853, Johnson v. State, 4 G. Greene Ia. 65; 1876, Blackburn v. Com., 12 Bush Ky. 181, 188; 1901, Porter v. Com., — Ky. —, 61 S. W. 16; 1899, State v. Yellow Hair, 22 Mont. 33, 55 Pac. 1026; 1903, People v. O'Farrell, 175 N. Y. 323, 67 N. E. 588 (that two accomplices testify does not exempt the case from the rule; the sufficiency of the corroboration is for the jury, but its existence is a question of law for the Court); 1919, People v. Vollero, 178 N. Y. Suppl. 787; 1875, Roberts v. State, 44 Tex. 119, 123; 1879, Heath v. State, 7 Tex. App. 464, 466.

It has been ruled that a confession of a co-conspirator, inadmissible against the accused, may not be admitted to corroborate an accomplice: 1919, Fitter v. U. S., 2d C. C. A., 258 Fed. 567, 582; this seems unsound.

[3] Eng. 1839, R. v. Aylmer, 1 Cr. & D. 116 (insufficient unless they have been separately confined); 1913, Payne's Case, 8 Cr. App. 171 (R. v. Neal questioned; point not decided); U. S. 1875, State v. Williamson, 42 Conn. 261, 265 (insufficient unless they had "had no opportunity of being together to prepare a uniform story"); 1903, Stone v. State, 45 Ga. 630, 45 S. E. 630 (good opinion by Lamar, J.); 1919, State v. Seitz, — Ia. —, 174 N. W. 694 (larceny).

[4] 1835, R. v. Neal, 7 C. & P. 168.

[5] Can. 1912, R. v. Eberts, 4 Alta. 310.

U. S. 1862, U. S. v. Horn, 5 Blatchf. 102 with qualifications; general rule not laid down; 1884, Woods v. State, 76 Ala. 35, 39; 1868, State v. Moore, 25 Ia. 128, 138; 1876, Blackburn v. Com., 12 Bush Ky. 181, 188 ("So far as this hope [of escaping prosecution] may be supposed to influence his statements, it may be expected that his wife will be equally affected by it. But the wife, who has none of the moral taint which affects the husband because of his participation in crime, ought not to be discredited alone on the ground that her husband is a felon; such a rule is neither just to her nor safe to society"); 1876, Dill v. State, 1 Tex. App. 278, 286.

Not decided: 1857, Haskins v. People, 16 N. Y. 344, 351.

[6] 1883, Snoddy v. State, 75 Ala. 23; 1914, Knowles v. State, 113 Ark. 257, 168 S. W. 148 (incest); 1893, Schaefer v. State, 93 Ga. 177, 18 S. E. 552 (confession, plus 'corpus delicti,' suffices); 1921, Parsons v. State, — Ind. —, 131 N. E. 382 (knowing receipt of stolen goods); 1915, State v. Christianson, 131 Minn. 276, 154 N. W. 1095; 1920, State v. Huebsch, 146 Minn. 34, 177 N. W. 778 (incest; confession may supply corroboration); 1921, Shaw v. State, 89 Tex. Cr. 205, 229 S. W. 509 (illegal making of liquor).

[7] 1896, People v. Sternberg, 111 Cal. 3, 43 Pac. 198; 1860, People v. Dyle, 21 N. Y. 578, 580;

(b) As to the tenor of the confirmative evidence, the question was raised at an early date whether it should be required to refer to specific kinds of facts, or whether the definition should be left untrammelled by further details. The suggestion came to be advanced that the corroborative evidence must at least confirm the accomplice as to the accused's actual participation in the crime (or, "connection with the offence"), or (thus it is sometimes put) as to the accused's identity with the participators; and for the following reason:

1837, Lord ABINGER, C. B., in R. v. Farler, 8 C. & P. 106: "A man who has been guilty of a crime himself will always be able to relate the facts of the case, and if the confirmation be only on the truth of that history, without identifying the person, that is really no corroboration at all."

1826, BUSHE, C. J., and others, in R. v. Sheehan, Jebb 54, 57, thought "that 'ex concesso' an accomplice was concerned in the crime and knew all the facts; that it was his interest to relate the facts only, because otherwise he would run the risk of differing from the account given by some person present at the commission of the crime; therefore that his uttering truth with regard to the facts did not lead to the inference that he also told truth with respect to the persons concerned, unless he had reason to suppose that there was some unimpeached person who could also prove that the persons charged by him were the persons concerned; and inasmuch as in the case supposed no such person appeared on the trial, he might well suppose that their persons were unknown and could not be identified, so that he might safely charge whom he pleased." [8]

But the fallacy of this reasoning has been well expounded by Chief Baron Joy. Briefly, it lies in this: We are assuming that the accomplice is not to be trusted in the case in hand; his credit is an entire thing, not a separable one; therefore, whatever restores our trust in him personally restores it as a whole; if we find that he is desiring and intending to tell a true story, we shall believe one part of his story as well as another; whenever, then, by any means, that trust is restored, our object is accomplished, and it cannot matter whether the efficient circumstance related to the accused's identity or to any other matter. The important thing is, not how our trust is restored, but whether it is restored at all:

1844, Chief Baron JOY, Evidence of Accomplices, 8: "[There are] different opinions entertained upon the subject — First, some hold that the corroboration required must go to the criminality or identification of every prisoner on trial accused by the accomplice — . . . Lastly, others are of opinion that the points of corroboration are not necessarily confined to the criminality or identification of any of the prisoners, but that it is enough if the testimony of the accomplice is confirmed in such and so many material parts of it as may reasonably induce the jury to credit him as to the entire of his narrative, and among other parts, as to the guilt of the prisoners. The first opinion appears plausible, and the arguments in support of it are specious, . . . and are apt to captivate those who do not attentively consider the subject. . . . This opinion originates in a misconception as to the nature of the defect in the evidence which is to be supplied. The defect in the evidence is not in its quantity, but in its quality. The witness swearing directly to the prisoner's guilt, that guilt is established if the witness be credible. What, therefore, is required is to throw something, no matter of what nature, into the opposite scale, which will serve as a counterpoise to the impeachment of the witness' credit arising from the character in which he appears; something that will improve the quality of the proof which has been given by the accomplice; and that something may be anything which induces a rational belief in the mind of the jury that the narrative of the accomplice is in all respects a correct one. Now, if we try the question by what passes in our own minds, we shall find that there may be many things which may contribute to inspire us with a rational confidence in the testimony of an accomplice as well as some corroboration as to that part of the evidence which goes to affect the prisoner. . . . The correct and accurate manner in which an accomplice details the circumstances of the transaction shows that he was cool and collected, that he possessed observation, that his recollection is fresh, that he was an observer, not an inventor of facts and incidents; and if we find that in every point in which the evidence of other witnesses can be brought into contact with his, they fit into one another and correspond exactly, it is good ground for presuming that his entire narrative is correct. . . . The accomplice, who must be supposed to know the whole details, is expected to relate them, and is thus exposed to detection in a variety of ways. There is, therefore, less necessity for breaking the general uniformity and destroying the harmony of the rules of law, in this case, than in the other."

1884, People v. Ryland, 97 N.Y. 126, 132, semble. Contra: 1868, State v. Hull, 26 Ia. 292, 295.

[8] So also: 1839, Morton, J., in Com. v. Bosworth, 22 Pick. Mass. 397, 399.

An ideal instruction upon the theory of Chief Baron Joy is found in the following passage:

1820, GARROW, B., in Tidd's Trial, 33 How. St. Tr. 1483 (charging the jury): "It may not be unfit to observe to you here that the confirmation to be derived to an accomplice is not a repetition by others of the whole story of the accomplice and a confirmation of every part of it; that would be either impossible or unnecessary and absurd; . . . and therefore you are to look to the circumstances to see whether there are such a number of important facts confirmed as to give you reason to be persuaded that the main body of the story is correct. . . . You are, each of you, to ask yourselves this question: Now that I have heard the accomplice and have heard other circumstances which are said to confirm the story he has told, does he appear to me to be so confirmed by unimpeachable evidence, as to some of the persons affected by his story or with respect to some of the facts stated by him, as to afford me good ground to believe that he also speaks the truth with regard to other prisoners or other facts, with regard to which there may be no confirmation? Do I, upon the whole, feel convinced in my conscience that his evidence is true and such as I may safely act upon?" [9]

In England, this view obtained at first, that no specific corroboration need be furnished as to the accused's identity.[10] But the opposite opinion began to be taken at Nisi Prius, some twenty years later, and finally prevailed.[11]

[9] So also: 1803, R. v. Despard, 28 How. St. Tr. 346, 487.

[10] 1803, R. v. Despard, supra; 1813, R. v. Birkett and Brady, R. & R. 252, at a meeting of the judges; 1820, Tidd's Trial, quoted supra.

[11] 1826, R. v. Sheehan, Jebb 54 (of the Irish judges, six favored the new view; five believed that any corroboration sufficed); 1834, R. v. Addis, 6 C. & P. 388, Patteson, J.; R. v. Webb, ib. 595, Williams, J.; 1836, R. v. Wilkes, 7 C. & P. 272, 273, Alderson, B.; 1837, R. v. Farler, 8 C. & P. 106, Lord Abinger, C. B.; 1838, R. v. Kelsey, 2 Lew Cr. C. 45; 1838, R. v. Dyke, 8 C. & P. 261, Gurney, B.; 1839, R. v. Birkett, 8 C. & P. 732, Patteson, J.; 1855, R. v. Stubbs, 7 Cox Cr. 48, 1 Dears. 555, by three judges; 1860, M'Clory v. Wright, 10 Ir. C. L. 514, 521; 1909, Everest's Case, 2 Cr. App. 130 ("some particular which goes to implicate the accused"); 1909, Warren's Case, 2 Cr. App. 194 ("It is not sufficient that the accomplice has said something which was true"). Then comes vacillation again: 1911, Wilson's Case et al., 6 Cr. App. 125 ("It must not be supposed that corroboration is required, amounting to independent evidence implicating the accused"); 1911, Blatherwick's Case, 6 Cr. App. 281 ("Everest's Case goes too far; Wilson's Case is the correct state-

In the United States, it also obtained general acceptance as applied to the common-law caution;[12] and when by statute the cautionary practice was in many jurisdictions created into a rule of law, this definition of the scope of the corroborative evidence was expressly retained.[13] ment of the law"); 1911, Dimes' Case, 7 Cr. App. 43 (incest; corroboration necessary for an accomplice); 1913, Watson's Case, 8 Cr. App. 249 (Pickford, J., citing Wilson's Case, thought "that authority seems to show that corroboration generally that the story is true is sufficient"; yet Ridley, J., in argument, harking back a century to Thistlewood's Case, 33 How. St. Tr. 681, says "An accomplice may be believed without corroboration"); 1913, Bloodworth's Case, 9 Cr. App. 80 (not clear; Ridley, J., cites Thistlewood's Case again); 1914, Cohen's Case, 10 Cr. App. 91, 101 (subornation of perjury; Reading, L. C. J.: "It is sufficient to say that Everest's Case and Wilson's Case seem to us to lay down the right principle"); 1914, Threlfall's Case, 10 Cr. App. 112, 117 (subornation of perjury; Reading, L. C. J.: "Without attempting to decide whether Everest's Case or Wilson's Case is correct, and assuming that Everest's Case is correct," etc., etc.); 1916, R. v. Willis, 1 K. B. 933 (Reading, L. C. J.: "This Court had no intention [in R. v. Cohen] . . . to unsettle the law as established in R. v. Wilson and R. v. Blatherwick"); then comes the following opinion by the same judge, which nevertheless seems to "unsettle" things after all: 1916, R. v. Baskerville, 2 K. B. 658 (gross indecency with boys; Reading, L. C. J.: "Evidence in corroboration must be independent testimony which affects the accused by connecting or tending to connect him with the crime"; but it may be circumstantial only); 1919, R. v. Feigenbaum, 1 K. B. 431 (incitement to theft; corroboration held sufficient; quoted ante, § 2056).

[12] Federal: 1910, Holmgren v. U. S., 217 U. S. 523, 30 Sup. 588; 1919, Kelly v. U. S., 6th C. C. A., 258 Fed. 392, 406; Alabama: 1856, Martin v. State, 28 Ala. 71 (before the statute); California: 1866, People v. Garnett, 29 Cal. 622, 625 (before the statute); Georgia: 1874, Childers v. State, 52 Ga. 106, 110 (Warner, C. J., diss.); Hammack v. State, 52 Ga. 397, 403; Middleton v. State, 52 Ga. 527, 530; 1875, Roberts v. State, 55 Ga. 220; 1876, Bailey v. State, 56 Ga. 314, semble; 1886, Evans v. State, 78 Ga. 351 (slight evidence suffices); 1893, Johnson v. State, 92 Ga. 577, 20 S. E. 8; 1920, Thompson v. State, 25 Ga. App. 29, 102 S. E. 453; 1921, Myers v. State, 151 Ga. 826, 108 S. E. 369 (murder); Illinois: 1861, Gray v. People, 26 Ill. 344, 347; Iowa: 1848, Ray v. State, 1 G. Gr. 316, 322; Louisiana: 1895, State v. Callahan, 47 La. An. 444, 482, 17 So. 50; Massachusetts: 1839, Com. v. Bosworth, 22 Pick. 397, 399; 1856, Com. v. O'Brien, 12 All. 183; 1868, Com. v. Larrabee, 99 Mass. 413, 419; 1872, Com. v. Elliot, 110 Mass. 104, 107; 1873, Com. v. Snow, 111 Mass. 411, 417; 1877, Com. v. Scott, 123 Mass. 222, 238 (repudiated to an extent by Com. v. Holmes, infra; see note 18, infra); 1878, Com. v. Drake, 124 Mass. 21, 25; 1879, Com. v. Holmes, 127 Mass. 424, 438 ("upon a point material to the issue, in the sense that it tends to prove the guilt of the defendant"); 1886, Com. v. Hayes, 140 Mass. 366, 369; 5 N. E. 264; Missouri: 1887, State v. Chyo Chiagk, 92 Mo. 395, 417, 4 S. W. 704; 1888, State v. Walker, 98 Mo. 95, 109, 9 S. W. 646, 11 S. W. 1133; 1890, State v. Harkins, 100 Mo. 666, 672, 13 S. W. 830; 1891, State v. Jackson, 106 Mo. 174, 179, 17 S. W. 301; South Carolina: 1849, State v. Brown, 3 Strobh. 508, 517; Washington: State v. Jones, 53 Wash. 142, 101 Pac. 708; Wyoming: 1894, McNealley v. State, 5 Wyo. 69, 36 Pac. 824.

[13] The statutes are given ante, § 2056; they are applied in the following cases, but, as each ruling depends upon the evidence in the case in hand, its details are useless for the purpose of a precedent:

Federal: 1921, Rich v. U. S., 8th C. C. A., 271 Fed. 566 (knowing transportation of stolen shoes);

Alabama: 1867, Montgomery v. State, 40 Ala. 684, 688; 1877, Smith v. State, 59 Ala. 104; 1880, Marler v. State, 67 Ala. 55, 66, Lumpkin v. State, 68 Ala. 56; Marler v. State, 68 Ala. 580, 585 (good opinion by Somerville, J.); 1888, Burney v. State, 87 Ala. 80, 6 So. 391; 1909, McDaniels v. State, 162 Ala. 25, 50 So. 324;

Arkansas: 1894, Vaughan v. State, 58 Ark. 353, 365, 24 S. W. 885; 1905, Chancellor v. State, 76 Ark. 215, 88 S. W. 880;

California: 1870, People v. Ames, 39 Cal. 403; 1870, People v. Melvane, 39 Cal. 614; 1875, People v. Cleveland, 49 id. 577, 580; 1875, People v. Cloonan, 50 Cal. 449; 1875, People v. Thompson, 50 Cal. 480 (the evidence must do more than merely "raise a suspicion"); 1882, People v. Rolfe, 61 Cal. 541, 544; People v. Kunz, 73 Cal. 313, 14 Pac. 836; 1888, People v. Grundell, 75 Cal. 301, 305, 17 Pac. 214; 1890, People v. McLean, 84 Cal. 480, 483, 24 Pac. 32; 1890, People v. Hong Tong, 85 Cal. 171, 173, 24 Pac. 726; 1903, People v. Morton, 139 Cal. 719, 73 Pac. 609; 1904, People v. Balkwell, 143 Cal. 259, 76 Pac. 1017; 1912, People v. Coffey, 161 Cal. 433, 119 Pac. 901; 1915, People v. Robbins, 171 Cal. 466, 154 Pac. 317 (crime against nature with a boy; the boy being an accomplice, corroboration was not found; as to P. C. 1872, § 1111, amended by St. 1911, p. 484, "we

This element of the requirement, however, would not be essential when the accomplice's testimony did not directly relate to the accused's partici- cannot see that its meaning has been changed at all");

Georgia: 1900, Chapman v. State, 112 Ga. 56, 37 S. E. 102; 1905, Rawlins v. State, 124 Ga. 31, 52 S. E. 1; 1914, Baker v. State, 14 Ga. App. 578, 81 S. E. 805 (burglary); 1916, Montford v. State, 144 Ga. 582, 87 S. E. 797 (homicide);
Idaho: 1906, State v. Bond, 12 Ida. 424, 86 Pac. 43 (murder);
Iowa: 1857, State v. Upton, 5 Ia. 465 (concealing stolen goods); 1859, State v. Willis, 9 Ia. 582 (burglary); 1860, State v. Pepper, 11 Ia. 347 (counterfeit money); 1864, State v. Tulley, 18 Ia. 88 (seduction); 1868, State v. Thornton, 26 Ia. 79, 82 (larceny); 1872, State v. Moran, 34 Ia. 453 (burglary); 1874, State v. Clemens, 38 Ia. 257 (obstructing track); 1877, State v. Graff, 47 Ia. 384 (burglary); 1878, State v. Stanley, 48 Ia. 221 (larceny); 1879, State v. Wart, 51 Ia. 587, 2 N. W. 405 (arson); 1880, State v. Hennessy, 55 Ia. 299, 360, 7 N. W. 641 (arson); 1881, State v. Allen, 57 Ia. 431, 435, 10 N. W. 805 (murder); 1883, State v. Reader, 60 Ia. 527, 15 N. W. 423 (arson); 1885, State v. Dietz, 67 Ia. 220, 25 N. W. 141 (murder); 1886, State v. Mikesell, 70 Ia. 176, 30 N. W. 474 (robbery); 1890, State v. Van Winkle, 80 Ia. 15, 22, 45 N. W. 388 (larceny); 1893, State v. Thompson, 87 Ia. 670, 673, 54 N. W. 1077 (this long list of cases illustrates the abuse to which the rule lends itself in requiring a decision by the Supreme Court upon matters properly for the trial judge alone); 1922, State v. Christie, —Ia. —, 187 N. W. 15 (robbery);
Kentucky: 1879, Miller v. Com., 78 Ky. 15, 21 ("must extend to every fact necessary to establish the fact that the offense charged was committed and that the prisoner was the perpetrator"); 1881, Bowling v. Com., 79 Ky. 604; 1898, Stevens v. Com., — Ky. —, 45 S. W. 76 (apparently approving Miller v. Com.; here, rape); 1901, Howard v. Com., 110 Ky. 356, 61 S. W. 756; 1904, Mann v. Com., — Ky. —, 79 S. W. 230 (felonious assault); 1907, Simpson v. Com., 126 Ky. 441, 103 S. W. 332 (murder); 1919, Hale v. Com., 185 Ky. 119, 214 S. W. 821;
Louisiana: 1905, State v. Hopper, 114 La. 557, 38 So. 452 (manslaughter);
Minnesota: 1881, State v. Lawlor, 28 Minn. 216, 224, 9 N. W. 698 (it must "tend in some degree to establish the guilt of the accused, but need not be sufficiently weighty or full as standing alone to justify a conviction"); 1883, State v. Brin, 30 Minn. 522, 525, 16 N. W. 406; 1901, State v. Clements, 82 Minn. 434, 85 N. W. 229; 1915, State v. Christianson, 131 Minn. 276, 154 N. W. 1395 (larceny); 1920, State v. Ettenburg, 145 Minn. 39, 176 N. W. 171 (arson); 1921, State v. Morris, 149 Minn. 41, 182 N. W. 721 (larceny);
Montana: 1912, State v. Lawson, 44 Mont. 488, 120 Pac. 808;
Nevada: 1913, State v. Williams, 35 Nev. 276, 129 Pac. 316;
New York: 1884, People v. Hooghkerk, 96 N. Y. 149, 162; 1884, People v. Ryland, 97 N. Y. 126, 131; 1887, People v. Everhardt, 104 N. Y. 591, 594, 11 N. E. 62; 1887, People v. Elliott, 106 N. Y. 288, 292, 12 N. E. 602; 1888, People v. O'Neil, 109 N. Y. 251, 267, 16 N. E. 68; 1919, People v. Vollers, 178 N. Y. Suppl. 787;
North Dakota: 1911, State v. Reilly, 22 N. D. 353, 133 N. W. 914;
Oklahoma: 1905, Hill v. Terr., 15 Okl. 212, 79 Pac. 757; 1906, Barbe v. Terr., 16 Okl. 562, 86 Pac. 61; 1906, Fisher v. Terr., 17 Okl. 455, 87 Pac. 301 (here the instruction omitted the words of the statute "or the circumstances thereof," though it added other words requiring corroboration of the circumstances connecting the defendant; for this reason alone a new trial was ordered; which demonstrates that freedom from bigoted traditions of antiquated technicality is not necessarily to be looked for in the courts of a new and advanced community); 1907, Coopar v. Terr., 19 Okl. 496, 91 Pac. 1032; 1920, Winfield v. State, — Okl. Cr. —, 191 Pac. 609 (robbery); 1921, Davis v. State, — Okl. Cr. —, 196 Pac. 146 (larceny); 1921, McKinney v. State, — Okl. Cr. —, 201 Pac. 673;
Oregon: 1879, State v. Odell, 8 Or. 30, 33; 1890, State v. Townsend, 19 Or. 213, 23 Pac. 968; 1907, State v. Kelliher, 49 Or. 77, 88 Pac. 867 (forgery); 1912, State v. Wong Si Sam, 63 Or. 266, 127 Pac. 683; 1919, State v. Moss, — Or. —, 182 Pac. 149 (misbranding cattle; State v. Odell, approved); 1921, State v. Brake, 99 Or. 310, 195 Pac. 583 (murder; corroboration must tend to connect defendant with the act);
Porto Rico: 1907, People v. Robles, 13 P. R. 299 (applying C. Cr. P. § 1253);
South Dakota: 1894, State v. Hicks, 6 S. D. 325 (need only "tend" to connect the defendant); 1910, State v. Walsh, 25 S. D. 30, 125 N. W. 295 (State v. Hicks not cited); Texas: 1858, Bruton v. State, 21 Tex. 337, 347; 1875, Wright v. State, 43 Tex. 170, 174; 1875, Thomas v. State, 43 Tex. 658, 661; 1875, Coleman v. State, 44 Tex. 109, 111; Roberts v. State, 44 Tex. 119, 123; 1877, Nourse v. State, 2 Tex. App. 304, 317; Gillian v. State, 3 Tex. App. 132, 137 (mere suspicion is not enough); 1878, Jones v. State, 3 Tex. App. 575, 578; Hoyle v. State, 3 Tex. App. 239, 245; 1880, Myers v. State, 7 Tex. App. 640, 659; 1905, Wright v. State, 47 Tex. Cr. 433, 84 S. W. 593; 1905, Crenshaw v. State, 48 Tex. Cr. 77, 85 S. W. 1147 (this Court appears disposed to enter upon some questionable pation[14]; yet it would be sufficient, i. e. corroboration as to the accused's participation would suffice although the subject of it was not a part of the accomplice's testimony.[15] Where there were several defendants, the corroboration must affect each one in order to make the accomplice's testimony sufficient as against him.[16]

(c) In a few jurisdictions it is occasionally said that the corroboration must affect some material fact in the accomplice's testimony.[17] But this phrase seems not to mean more, in any case, than that the corroboration must have the effect of persuading to trust the testimony. To-day the place of this phrase is taken by the foregoing requirement as to corroborating the accused's participation or identity;[18] and that indeed seems to have been the meaning of the original proposers.

quibblings in the wording of charges); 1915, Slaughter v. State, 76 Tex. Cr. 157, 174 S. W. 580 (prior cases reviewed); 1921, Boone v. State, 90 Tex. Cr. 374, 235 S. W. 580 (robbery; test fully defined, approving Welden v. State, 10 Tex. App. 400); 1921, Nunnally v. State, 90 Tex. Cr. 233, 234 S. W. 391 (transportation of liquor); 1921, Shaw v. State, 89 Tex. Cr. 205, 229 S. W. 509 (illegal making of liquor); Utah: 1888, U. S. v. Kershaw, 5 Utah 618, 19 Pac. 194; 1897, State v. Spencer, 15 Utah 149, 49 Pac. 302; 1899, State v. Collett, 20 Utah 290, 58 Pac. 684 (Spencer case followed); 1906, State v. Thompson, 31 Utah 228, 87 Pac. 709 (adultery); 1914, State v. Powell, 45 Utah 193, 143 Pac. 588 (horse-stealing);

Vermont: 1905, State v. Bean, 77 Vt. 384, 60 Atl. 807 (Massachusetts rule approved); Wyoming: 1906, Clay v. State, 15 Wyo. 42, 86 Pac. 17.

[14] 1889, Cox v. Com., 125 Pa. 94, 102, 17 Atl. 227.

[15] 1889, Malachi v. State, 89 Ala. 134, 141, 8 So. 104; 1874, Hammack v. State, 52 Ga. 397, 403; 1893, Blois v. State, 92 Ga. 584, 20 S. E. 12 (proof of 'corpus delicti' does not suffice); 1897, McCrory v. State, 101 Ga. 779, 28 S. E. 921; 1909, Lane v. Com., 134 Ky. 519, 121 S. W. 486; 1852, Com. v. Savory, 10 Cush. Mass. 535, 539; 1879, Com. v. Holmes, 127 Mass. 424, 441; 1888, Com. v. Chase, 147 Mass. 597, 599, 18 N. E. 565; 1860, People v. Dyle, 21 N. Y. 578, 580, semble; 1915, People v. Diaz, 22 P. R. 177, 202 (conspiracy).

A peculiar doctrine in Massachusetts is that it may be erroneous to admit corroborating evidence which does not satisfy the above requirement, although in that State the jury may lawfully convict without corroboration: 1839, Com. v. Bosworth, 22 Pick. 397; 1852, Com. v. Savory, 10 Cush. 535, 538, semble; 1868, Com. v. Larrabee, 99 Mass. 413, 415; 1879, Com. v. Holmes, 127 Mass. 424, 441, 445 ("The decision in Com. v. Bosworth has for forty years been treated as settling that if evidence is admitted for the purpose of so far corroborating the testimony of an accomplice as to make it safe for the jury to convict, which is not legally to be considered as corroborative in that sense, the error may be revised by bill of exceptions"; Morton, J., diss.). The effect is that if no evidence at all is offered in corroboration, the jury may convict, but if evidence is offered and admitted, a rule of sufficiency may apply which will render a verdict of conviction illegal; in other words, a = a, but a + 0 = −a. As a consequence, trial judges there would do better to exclude all corroboration whatever, or at least to omit all caution on the subject; and this seems to be the practice begun in Com. v. Wilson (1890), 152 Mass. 12, 14, 25 N. E. 16, and continued in Com. v. Phelps, 192 Mass. 591, 78 N. E. 741 (1906).

The Massachusetts doctrine is of course unsound, and has been repudiated in Bruton v. State, 21 Tex. 337, 348.

In Keliher v. U. S., C. C. A., 193 Fed. 8 (1912), the supposed Massachusetts rule is applied without any notice of the later cases.

[16] Eng. 1836, R. v. Moores, 7 C. & P. 270; 1829, R. v. Wells, M. & M. 326, Littledale, J.; 1845, R. v. Jenkins, 1 Cox Cr. 177, Alderson, B.; 1855, R. v. Stubbs, 7 id. 48, Dears. 555, by three judges; 1916, R. v. Baskerville, 2 K. B. 658 (approving R. v. Jenkins); U. S. 1876, Dill v. State, 1 Tex. App. 278, 287; 1869, State v. Potter, 42 Vt. 495, 506.

[17] This is said in some of the English cases quoted supra, and is laid down in the following rulings: 1908, Barrett's Case, 1 Cr. App. 64 ("some material parts of the evidence"); 1865, State v. Schlagel, 19 Ia. 169; 1880, State v. Hennessey, 55 Ia. 299, 7 N. W. 641; 1881, State v. Allen, 57 Ia. 431, 435, 10 N. W. 805; 1901, State v. Jones, 115 Ia. 113, 88 N. W. 196; 1879, Kilrow v. Com., 89 Pa. 481, 488; 1889, Cox v. Com., 125 Pa. 94, 102, 17 Atl. 227; 1858, Bruton v. State, 21 Tex. 337, 348; 1859, State v. Howard, 32 Vt. 380, 403.

[18] Massachusetts: 1839, Com. v. Bosworth, 22 Pick. 397, 399, semble; 1879, Com. v. Holmes, 127 Mass. 424, 436, 443 (Gray, C. J., referring to the opinion in the preceding case,

(d) Under the statutory rule, the sufficiency of the evidence as satisfying the definition of the rule of law is of course for the judge, while its effect as actually making the accomplice's testimony trustworthy is for the jury.[19]

(e) The requirement of corroboration leads to many rulings as to sufficiency, based wholly upon the evidence in each case; from these no additional development of principle can profitably be gathered.[20] As recorded which first in this State advanced the distinction: "Taking the whole paragraph together, it is manifest that the phrase 'material to the issue' is used as equivalent to 'involving the guilt of the party on trial' or 'having necessary connection with the guilt of the defendant'"; thus practically repudiating the intimation in Com. v. Scott, 123 Mass. 222, 231, 238, that a "material" fact might be sufficient though falling short of a fact "tending to connect the defendant with the crime"); 1888, Com. v. Chase, 147 Mass. 597, 18 N. E. 565 (approving the foregoing remark); Missouri: 1887, State v. Chyo Chiagk, 92 Mo. 395, 417, 4 S. W. 704, semble; 1890, State v. Harkins, 100 Mo. 666, 672, 13 S. W. 830; 1900, State v. McLain, 159 Mo. 340, 60 S. W. 736 (following State v. Chyo Chiagk); Texas: 1875, Wright v. State, 43 Tex. 170, 174, semble; 1878, Hoyle v. State, 4 Tex. App. 239, 244 ("It would serve no good purpose, nor tend to enlighten the jury, to tell them that the accomplice must be corroborated in his statements in any 'material matter'").

In Idaho these two phrasings are combined: 1905, State v. Knudtson, 11 Ida. 524, 83 Pac. 226 (interpreting Rev. St. 1887, § 7871, quoted ante, § 2056).

[19] 1879, Lockett v. State, 63 Ala. 5, 11; 1882, Craft v. Com., 80 Ky. 349; 1903, People v. O'Farrell, N. Y. (cited supra, note 2); 1896, People v. Mayhew, N. Y. (cited infra, n. 20); 1905, People v. Patrick, N. Y. (cited infra, n. 20); 1912, State v. Dodson, 23 N. D. 305, 136 N. W. 789.

[20] ENGLAND: 1910, Kams' Case, 4 Cr. App. 8; 1910, Lucy's Case, 4 Cr. App. 165; 1910, Mason's Case, 5 Cr. App. 171; 1910, Martin's Case, 5 Cr. App. 1; 1917, R. v. Kennaway, 1 K. B. 25 (forgery of a will).

UNITED STATES: Arkansas: 1881, Casey v. State, 37 Ark. 67, 84; 1889, Fort v. State, 52 Ark. 180, 187, 11 S. W. 959; 1896, Scott v. State, 63 Ark. 310, 38 S. W. 338; 1897, Kent v. State, 64 Ark. 247, 41 S. W. 849; 1921, Casteel v. State, — Ark. —, 235 S. W. 386 (illegal making of liquor); California: 1896, People v. Barker, 114 Cal. 617, 46 Pac. 601; People v. Armstrong, 114 Cal. 570, 46 Pac. 611; People v. Main, 114 Cal. 632, 46 Pac. 612; 1899, People v. Compton, 123 Cal. 403, 56 Pac. 44; 1899, People v. Solomon, 125 Cal. 19, 58 Pac. 55; 1903, People v. Hoagland, 138 Cal. 338, 71 Pac. 359; Georgia: 1899, Chapman v. State, 109 Ga. 157, 34 S. E. 369 (slight evidence may suffice); 1900, Taylor v. State, 110 Ga. 150, 35 S. E. 161; 1902, Dixon v. State, 116 Ga. 186, 42 S. E. 357; 1906, Hargrove v. State, 125 Ga. 270, 54 S. E. 164 (murder); 1921, Gilbert v. State, 27 Ga. App. 604, 109 S. E. 697 (larceny of automobile); 1922, Williams v. State, 152 Ga. 498, 110 S. E. 286 (murder; whether motive alone is sufficient corroboration); Illinois: 1922, People v. Riello, — Ill. —, 135 N. E. 62 (burglary); Iowa: 1894, State v. Russell, 90 Ia. 493, 494, 58 N. W. 890; 1895, State v. Feurhaken, 96 Ia. 299, 65 N. W. 299 (instruction, on a charge of receiving stolen goods, not requiring corroboration as to defendant's knowledge of the stolen character, held proper); 1898, State v. Smith, 106 Ia. 701, 77 N. W. 499; 1900, State v. Chauvet, 111 Ia. 687, 83 N. W. 717; Kentucky: 1914, Deaton v. Com., 157 Ky. 308, 163 S. W. 204; Montana: 1899, State v. Geddes, 22 Mont. 68, 55 Pac. 919; 1900, State v. Calder, 23 Mont. 504, 59 Pac. 903; 1902, State v. Stevenson, 26 Mont. 332, 67 Pac. 1001; Nevada: 1871, State v. Chapman, 6 Nev. 320, 324; New York: 1896, People v. Mayhew, 150 N. Y. 346, 44 N. E. 971; 1905, People v. Patrick, 182 N. Y. 131, 74 N. W. 843; 1918, People v. Cohen, 223 N. Y. 406, 119 N. E. 886 (murder); 1921, People v. Dixon, 231 N. Y. 111, 131 N. E. 752 (murder); North Dakota: 1897, State v. Coudotte, 7 N. D. 109, 72 N. W. 913; Oregon: 1895, State v. Scott, 28 Or. 331, 42 Pac. 1 (evidence of mere opportunity to commit adultery, not amounting to design or inclination, held insufficient); 1900, State v. Savage, 36 Or. 191, 60 Pac. 610; 1920, State v. Turnbow, 99 Or. 270, 193 Pac. 485, 195 Pac. 569 (assault with intent to rob); 1921, State v. Rathie, 101 Or. 339, 368, 199 Pac. 169 (murder); South Dakota: 1894, State v. Phelps, 5 S. D. 480, 488, 59 N. W. 471; 1899, State v. Levers, 12 S. D. 265, 81 N. W. 294; Texas: 1914, Gillespie v. State, 73 Tex. Cr. 585, 166 S. W. 135 (wherein the Court finds itself obliged to repudiate "the impression which prevails with some" that the corroborating evidence "must itself show appellants' guilt without and exclusive of the accomplice's testimony"; it is painful to think that such a belief could be entertained by a lawyer holding a brief in an appellate court); 1922, Townsend v. State, 90 Tex. Cr. 552, 236 S. W. 100 (selling liquor); Utah: 1915, State v. Kimball, 45 Utah 443, 146 Pac. 313 (adultery); 1920, State v. Stewart, 57 Utah 224, 193 Pac. 855 (adultery); Washington: 1901, State v. Harras, 25 Wash. 416, 65 Pac. 774.

precedents of Supreme Courts, they are mere useless chaff, ground out by the vain labor of able minds mistaking the true material for their energies.

§ 2060. Same: (5) Who is an Accomplice. In the application of the rule requiring corroboration, the definition of an accomplice, as made by the substantive law, usually suffices and is followed.

(a) In bribery or subornation, the other participator is not an accomplice; [1] so also for subornation of perjury.[2] In knowing receipt of stolen goods, the thief is not an accomplice.[3] In dealings with intoxicating liquor, the buyer is an accomplice.[4] Sundry crimes are from time to time ruled upon.[5]

(b) In sexual crimes, the other person — usually the woman — may or may not be an accomplice, according as she is, by the nature of the crime, a victim of it or a voluntary partner in it. Thus, in adultery, the other party may well be deemed an accomplice; [6] and so also, perhaps, in § 2060. [1] 1912, People v. Coffey, 161 Cal. 433, 119 Pac. 901; 1889, State v. Quinlan, 40 Minn. 55, 57, 41 N. W. 299 (taking money to withhold evidence; the payor not an accomplice); 1898, State v. Durnam, 73 Minn. 150, 75 N. W. 1127 (demanding a bribe; the person paying it not an accomplice); 1895, State v. Carr, 28 Or. 389, 42 Pac. 215 (bribery); 1912, State v. Wappenstein, 67 Wash. 502, 121 Pac. 989 (approving State v. Durnam, Minn.).

Contra, semble: Statutes cited ante, § 2056, for Oklahoma, Pennsylvania, Wyoming.

[2] 1887, U. S. v. Thompson, 31 Fed. 331, C. C. (subornation of perjury); 1903, Storie v. State, — Ga. —, 45 S. E. 630; Contra: 1869, People v. Evans, 40 N. Y. 1, 6 (perjured person is an accomplice).

[3] 1920, Leon v. State, 21 Ariz. 418, 189 Pac. 433; 1913, Newman v. People, 55 Colo. 374, 135 Pac. 460; 1898, Springer v. State, 102 Ga. 447, 30 S. E. 971; 1899, State v. Kuhlman, 152 Mo. 100, 53 S. W. 416.

[4] 1921, Franklin v. State, 88 Tex. Cr. 342, 345, 414, 227 S. W. 486, 487, 488 (buyer of liquor is an accomplice, though the offense is distinct); Contra: 1919, Baumgartner v. State, 20 Ariz. 157, 178 Pac. 30 (purchaser is not an accomplice); 1922, Plachy v. State, — Tex. Cr. —, 239 S. W. 979 (under St. 1921, Nov. 2, Vernon's P. C. § 588¼*a* 3, the purchaser is not an accomplice).

[5] In the following sundry crimes the rule was applied according to the tests of the substantive law: ENGLAND: 1831, R. v. Hargrave, 5 C. & P. 170 (manslaughter; spectators at prize-fight).

UNITED STATES: Ala. 1859, Davidson v. State, 33 Ala. 350, 352 (illegal card-game); 1860, English v. State, 35 Ala. 428 (same); 1860, Bird v. State, 36 Ala. 279 (same); 1861, Bass v. State, 37 Ala. 469 (betting at illegal game); 1886, Ash v. State, 81 Ala. 76 (aiding an escape from jail); 1915, Darden v. State, 12 Ala. App. 165, 68 So. 550 (burglary); Ark. 1884, Melton v. State, 43 Ark. 367, 371 (murder); 1885, Carroll v. State, 45 Ark. 539, 545 (murder); 1888, Hillian v. State, 50 Ark. 523, 526, 8 S. W. 834 (rescue of prisoner); 1921, Simon v. State, 149 Ark. 609, 233 S. W. 917 (keeping a gambling house); Cal. P. C. 1872, § 1111 ("An accomplice is hereby defined as one who is liable to prosecution for the identical offense charged against the defendant on trial" etc.); Colo. 1903, Porter v. People, 31 Colo. 508, 74 Pac. 879 (larceny); D. C. 1914, Paylor v. U. S., 42 D. C. App. 428 (the other party to a wager is not an accomplice); Ga. 1906, Hargrove v. State, 125 Ga. 270, 54 S. E. 164 (murder); Minn. 1919, State v. Lyons, — Minn. —, 175 N. W. 689 (fraudulent casting of ballots); 1916, State v. Price, 135 Minn. 159, 160 N. W. 677 (murder); Nev. 1915, Ex parte Bowman, 38 Nev. 484, 151 Pac. 517 (burglary); N. Y. 1916, People v. Swersky, 216 N. Y. 471, 111 N. E. 212 (poisoning a horse); Okl. 1913, Hendrix v. State, 8 Okl. Cr. 530, 129 Pac. 78 (gaming); P. R. 1914, People v. Cerecedo, 21 P. R. 52, 59, 60 (purchaser of lottery tickets, not an accomplice); S. Dak. 1904, State v. Phillips, 18 S. D. 1, 98 N. W. 171 (larceny); Tex. 1919, Scales v. State, — Tex. Cr. App. —, 217 S. W. 149 (concealing stolen property); 1921, Chandler v. State, 89 Tex. Cr. 308, 232 S. W. 336 (liquor); 1922, Smith v. State, — Tex. Cr. —, 237 S. W. 265 (murder by a mother; a daughter under 18, punishable under the juvenile law, may be an accomplice).

[6] 1891, State v. Henderson, 84 Ia. 161, 165, 50 N.W. 758 (if voluntary); 1894, State v. Ean, 90 Ia. 534, 536, 58 N. W. 898; 1909, State v. Brown, — Ia. —, 121 N. W. 513; 1912, Letts v. Letts, 79 N. J. Eq. 630, 82 Atl. 845; 1912, State v. Case, 61 Or. 265, 122 Pac. 304; 1888, U. S. v. Kershaw, 5 Utah 618, 19 Pac. 194, semble.

Contra: 1878, State v. Colby, 51 Vt. 292, 295 (adultery; testimony of the 'particeps' is to be weighed as in any other crime; repudiating State v. Annice, N. Chipm. 9).

For fornication, see the New Hampshire statute cited ante, § 2056.

incest,[7] and in pandering or pimping.[8] But the woman is not an accomplice in rape,[9] rape under age,[10] seduction,[11] or abortion;[12] nor the participant in

[7] Accord: ENGLAND: 1910, Brown's Case, 6 Cr. App. 24; 1911, Drine's Case, 7 Cr. App. 43 (incest; the girl held not an accomplice on the facts); 1913, Bloodworth's Case, 9 Cr. App. 80 (not clear).

UNITED STATES: Arkansas: 1914, Knowles v. State, 113 Ark. 257, 168 S. W. 148 (if voluntary); California: 1904, People v. Stratton, 141 Cal. 604, 75 Pac. 166 (like Porath v. State, Wis., infra); Georgia: 1882, Raiford v. State, 68 Ga. 672, semble; 1901, Solomon v. State, 113 Ga. 192, 38 S. E. 332 (for one who "knowingly and wilfully consents"); 1905, Whidby v. State, 121 Ga. 588, 49 S. E. 811; Idaho: 1915, State v. Clark, 27 Ida. 48, 146 Pac. 1107 (on the facts); Iowa: 1908, State v. Goodsell, 138 Ia. 504, 116 N. W. 605 (unless "the victim of force, fraud, or undue influence," or unless she is under age); 1912, State v. Heft, 155 Ia. 21, 134 N. W. 950 (ignoring State v. Kouhns, infra); 1917, State v. Pelser, 182 Ia. 1, 163 N. W. 600 (where the woman consents; but not if under age to consent; these refinements are far removed from any testimonial significance); 1917, State v. Kurtz, 183 Ia. 480, 165 N. W. 353; Minnesota: 1920, State v. Huebsch, 146 Minn. 34, 177 N. W. 778; North Dakota: 1899, State v. Kellar, 8 N. D. 563, 80 N. W. 476 (if not acting under force or fraud); Oregon: 1890, State v. Jarvis, 18 Or. 360, 364, 20 Or. 437, 23 Pac. 251, 26 Pac. 302; South Dakota: 1906, State v. Mungeon, 20 S. D. 612, 108 N. W. 552; Texas: 1903, Tate v. State, — Tex. Cr. —, 77 S. W. 793 (if she consents); 1904, Clifton v. State, 46 Tex. Cr. 18, 79 S. W. 824 (for one who "did not oppose the act"); 1922, Cottrell v. State, — Tex. Cr. —, 237 S. W. 928; Wisconsin: 1895, Porath v. State, 90 Wis. 527, 538, 63 N. W. 1061 (unless she "was the victim of force, fraud, or undue influence").

Contra: Ark. 1910, Gaston v. State, 95 Ark. 233, 128 S. W. 1033; Cal. 1894, People v. Patterson, 102 Cal. 239, 244, 36 Pac. 436, semble; Ia. 1897, State v. Kouhns, 103 Ia. 720, 73 N. W. 353; 1905, State v. Rennick, 127 Ia. 294, 103 N. W. 159 (here the intercourse was by force); 1915, State v. Stalker, 169 Ia. 396, 151 N. W. 527 ("unless she consents to the act and is in fact guilty of it herself"); Ky. 1894, Whittaker v. Com., 95 Ky. 632, 27 S. W. 83; 1915, McCreary v. Com., 163 Ky. 206, 173 S.W. 351 (statutory rape of an adopted orphan); 1921, Craig v. Com., 190 Ky. 198, 226 S. W. 1074; Neb. 1902, Schwartz v. State, 65 Nebr. 196, 91 N. W. 190; Or. 1912, State v. Hornaday, — Or. —, 122 Pac. 304 (apparently without qualification).

The real futility of this accomplice rule is well seen in the opinions on this question whether the woman in incest is an accomplice; it is obviously a matter of the individual case, and will not submit to a rigid rule; any such rule on this subject is solemn gabble.

[8] Eng. 1914, King's Case, 10 Cr. App. 117 (pimping; there is no rule, but "the judge is justified in warning the jury"); 1914, Pickford's Case, 10 Cr. App. 269 (corroboration not essential; "there may be cases where it is plain that the woman was an accomplice," and there the "rule of prudence and discretion should be followed); U. S. 1916, Caminetti v. U. S., 242 U. S. 470, 495, 37 Sup. 192 ("white slave traffic"; the woman assumed to be an accomplice); 1920, Freed v. U. S., — D. C. App. —, 266 Fed. 1012 (transporting women for purposes of prostitution; held that though corroboration is not required, an instruction of caution should be given; purporting to follow Caminetti v. U. S., 242 U. S. 470; Smyth, C. J., diss.); 1917, People v. Richardson, 222 N. Y. 103, 118 N. E. 514 (keeping a disorderly house); 1921, Carter v. State, 90 Tex. Cr. 248, 234 S. W. 535 (enticement for carnal intercourse; whether the woman is an accomplice depends on the facts). Contra, semble: 1920, Harrington v. U. S., 8th C. C. A., 267 Fed. 97 (conspiracy to eloign a witness before trial of a charge of transporting women for purposes of prostitution); 1918, Jackson v. U. S., 48 D. C. App. 269 (inmates of a bawdy house are not accomplices of the keeper).

[9] 1903, Trimble v. Terr., 8 Ariz. 273, 71 Pac. 932; 1909, Reeves v. Terr., 2 Okl. Cr. 351, 101 Pac. 1039.

[10] 1896, Republic v. Parsons, 10 Haw. 601, 606; 1922, State v. Dahl, — Minn. —, 186 N. W. 586; 1903, State v. Peres, 27 Mont. 358, 71 Pac. 162; 1900, Winston v. Winston, 165 N. Y. 553, 59 N. E. 273 (it is "not a rule of evidence, but one for the guidance of the judicial conscience"); 1914, Yates v. Yates, 211 N. Y. 163, 105 N. E. 195 (rule held not applicable on the facts); 1900, State v. Hilberg, 22 Utah 27, 61 Pac. 215; 1903, State v. Roller, 30 Wash. 692, 71 Pac. 718.

[11] 1898, Keller v. State, 102 Ga. 506, 31 S. E. 92; 1905, Washington v. State, 124 Ga. 423, 52 S. E. 910 (reviewing and approving Keller v. State, supra); 1903, Gatzmeyer v. Peterson, 68 Nebr. 832, 94 N. W. 974 (bastardy).

But, by the statutes cited in the next section, corroboration is required in these two cases as an independent rule, irrespective of the theory of accomplices.

[12] Accord: Conn. 1904, State v. Casey, 76 Conn. 342, 56 Atl. 632 (best opinion, by Hamersley, J.); Ia. 1896, State v. Smith, 99 Ia. 26, 68 N. W. 428; Ky. 1888, Peoples v. Com., 87 Ky. 487, 489, 9 S. W. 509, 810; Stats. 1915, § 1219; Md. 1912, Meno v. State, 117 Md. 435, 83 Atl. 759; Mass. 1858, Com. v. Wood, 11 Gray 85, 93; 1874, Com. v. Boynton, 116 Mass. 343; 1878, Corn. v. Drake, 124 sodomy.[13] Reference may here profitably be made to the psychology of women's testimony on charges of sexual crime (ante, § 875).

(c) A joint principal is of course an accomplice for the present rule.[14] But the mere prior existence of an indictment for the same offence does not of itself make the person an accomplice.[15]

(d) The case of a pretended confederate, who as detective, spy, or decoy, associates with the wrongdoers in order to obtain evidence, is distinct from that of an accomplice, although the distinction may sometimes be difficult of application:

1848, MAULE, J., in R. v. Mullins, 7 State Tr. N. S. 1110, 3 Cox Cr. 756: "An accomplice is a person who has concurred in the commission of an offence. . . . [But such are different from] spies, that is, persons who take measures to be able to give to the authorities information so as to prevent those who are disposed to break out from effecting their purpose. . . . In the case of an accomplice, he acknowledges himself to be a criminal; in the case of these men, they do not acknowledge anything of the kind."

The line should perhaps be drawn in this way: When the witness has made himself an agent for the prosecution before associating with the wrongdoers or before the actual perpetration of the offence, he is not an accomplice; but he may be, if he extends no aid to the prosecution until after the offence is committed. A mere detective or decoy or paid informer is therefore not an accomplice;[16] nor an original confederate who betrays before the crime's

Mass. 21, 24; Minn. 1875, State v. Owens, 22 Minn. 238, 244; N. J. 1877, State v. Hyer, 39 N. J. L. 598, 601; N. Y. 1864, Dunn v. People, 29 N. Y. 523, 527; 1885, People v. Vedder, 98 N. Y. 630; N. C. 1914, State v. Shaft, 166 N. C. 407, 81 S. E. 932; Tenn. 1904, Smartt v. State, 112 Tenn. 539, 80 S. W. 586; Utah: 1918, State v. McCurtain, 52 Utah 63, 172 Pac. 481 (father of illegitimate child; not decided); Vt. 1922, State v. Montifoire, — Vt. —, 116 Atl. 77.

Contra: 1912, R. v. Betchel, 4 Alta. 402; Mo. St. 1907, p. 245, Mar. 16, Rev. St. 1919, § 4034 (dying declarations of woman in abortion cases; cited more fully ante, § 1432).

[13] 1838, R. v. Jellyman, 8 C. & P. 604; 1921, People v. Troutman, 187 Cal. 313, 201 Pac. 929 (lewd act with a boy under 14; the boy held not an accomplice); 1901, Kelly v. People, 192 Ill. 119, 61 N. E. 425 (crime against nature; corroboration of the boy-victim held not necessary); 1917, State v. Yates, 181 Ia. 539, 164 N. W. 798. Contra: 1908, R. v. Tate, 2 K. B. 680 (boy of 16); 1914, R. v. Williams, 19 D. L. R. 676, Ont. (gross indecency with a boy; the boy said to be an accomplice); 1915, People v. Robbins, 171 Cal. 466, 154 Pac. 317.

[14] 1875, Barrara v. State, 42 Tex. 260, 263; Williams v. State, 42 Tex. 392, 395; 1876, Irvin v. State, 1 Tex. App. 301, 303; 1877, Davis v. State, 2 Tex. App. 588, 605; 1878, Roach v. State, 4 Tex. App. 46, 49; 1880, Myers v. State, 7 Tex. App. 640, 658.

[15] 1919, Music v. Com., 186 Ky. 45, 216 S. W. 116 (joint indictment); 1875, Barrara v. State, 42 Tex. 260, 263 (the mere fact of the dismissal of an indictment does not show the witness an accomplice; but its dismissal upon an understanding that he will testify and be exempted from prosecution is an admission by the State that he is an accomplice, though his testimony may not criminate him); 1875, Roberts v. State, 44 Tex. 119, 123, semble (same); and conversely, prior acquittal on the same charge does not show him not an accomplice: 1898, People v. Creegan, 121 Cal. 554, 53 Pac. 1092.

Compare the rulings cited ante, §§ 949, 967 (impeachment of an accomplice). Compare also the rules denying the disqualification of an accomplice merely by reason of his self-confessed turpitude (ante, § 526) or by reason of his being indicted for the same offense (ante, § 580, notes 2–4); by those rules, however, inasmuch as they declared an accomplice admissible, it seldom became necessary to define the term.

Distinguish also the question whether an accomplice is a "credible witness" under statutes requiring a complaint to be sworn to by a specific kind or number of witnesses: 1920, Halbadier v. State, 87 Tex. Cr. App. 129, 220 S. W. 85.

[16] Eng. 1803, R. v. Despard, 28 How. St. Tr. 346, 489; 1848, R. v. Dowling, 3 Cox Cr. 509, 515 ("if he only lent himself to the scheme for committal;[17] yet an accessory after the fact would be,[18] if he had before betrayal rendered himself liable as such.

(e) The burden of proving the witness to be an accomplice is of course upon the party alleging it for the purpose of invoking the rule, namely, upon the defendant. Whether the witness is in truth an accomplice is left to the jury to determine, and if they conclude him to be such, then and then only are they to apply the rule requiring corroboration.[19] If they are in doubt, and unable to decide, the rule is not to be applied;[20] but they need only believe by the preponderance of evidence.[21] the purpose of convicting the guilty," he was not an accomplice); 1909, Bickley's Case, 2 Cr. App. 53; 1910, Henser's Case, 6 Cr. App. 76; Can. 1916, Amsden v. Rogers, 30 D. L. R. 534, Sask. (illegal liquor selling; the buyer held not an accomplice, even though he was a special constable seeking proof of such offences; citing the above text with approval); U. S. 1866, People v. Farrell, 30 Cal. 316 (counterfeiting); 1874, People v. Barric, 49 Cal. 342, 344 (larceny); 1908, O'Grady v. People, 42 Colo. 312, 95 Pac. 346; 1873, State v. McKean, 36 Ia. 343 (private detective; R. v. Despard followed); 1892, State v. Brownlee, 84 Ia. 473, 476, 51 N.W. 25 (malicious threat to kill); 1917, State v. Burley, 181 Ia. 981, 165 N. W. 190, semble (keeping a house of prostitution); 1855, Com. v. Downing, 4 Gray Mass. 29 (one purchasing liquor to obtain evidence); 1887, State v. Baden, 37 Minn. 212, 34 N. W. 24 (similar); 1910, State v. Lee, 228 Mo. 480, 128 S. W. 987 (gaming); 1901, State v. Douglas, 26 Nev. 196, 65 Pac. 802 (deputy-sheriff, held not an accomplice on the facts); 1911, State v. Smith, 33 Nev. 438, 117 Pac. 19; 1877, Campbell v. Com., 84 Pa. 187, 197 (detective becoming a confederate in the Molly Maguire confederacy of crime); 1905, U. S. v. Quiamson, 5 P. I. 444 (brigandage; testimony of paid informers, etc., here held to require corroboration); 1905, Marmer v. State, 47 Tex. Cr. 424, 84 S. W. 830 (liquor offence; here by express statute).

Compare the cases cited post, § 2066 (detective in divorce cases). Compare also the cases ante, § 969, as to a detective's testimony being less credible).

[17] 1893, Com. v. Hollister, 157 Pa. 13, 16, 27 Atl. 386 (confederate betraying his companions and going on with the crime, not an accomplice). Contra: 1916, R. v. Willis, 1 K. B. 933 (receiving stolen goods, two accomplices who had pleaded guilty testified, and also the wife of a third; the wife's testimony held not to require corroboration).

An accomplice's wife may need corroboration: 1913, Payne's Case, 8 Cr. App. 171.

[18] 1876, State v. Hayden, 45 Ia. 11, 16, semble; 1879, Miller v. Com., 78 Ky. 15, 22 (undecided); 1879, State v. Odell, 8 Or. 30, 33.

Contra: 1898, McFalls v. State, 66 Ark. 16, 48 S. W. 492 (one who merely conceals the crime out of fear, not an accomplice); 1910, Davis v. State, 96 Ark. 7, 130 S. W. 547 (abortion; McFalls v. State approved); 1884, Lowery v. State, 72 Ga. 649; 1885, Allen v. State, 74 Ga. 769, 771; 1918, People v. Sapp, 282 Ill. 51, 118 N. E. 416 (murder); 1922, Anderson v. Com., 193 Ky. 663, 237 S. W. 45 (robbery); 1893, State v. Umble, 115 Mo. 452, 461, 22 S. W. 378; 1916, State v. Riddell, 38 R. I. 506, 96 Atl. 531 (arson).

The rule does not apply to an accomplice in another crime; 1896. People v. Sternberg, 111 Cal. 3, 43 Pac. 198; nor to a person promised immunity for a distinct offense: 1920, Wiley v. State, — Okl. Cr. —, 191 Pac. 1057.

[19] 1915, Darden v. State, 12 Ala. 165, 68 So. 550 (burglary); 1880, Polk v. State, 36 Ark. 117, 126; 1879, People v. Curlee, 53 Cal. 604, 607 (provided "there is any evidence, however slight, tending to prove his complicity"); 1886, Bernhard v. State, 76 Ga. 613, 617; 1907, Driggers v. U. S., 7 Ind. Terr. 752, 104 S. W. 1166; 1864, State v. McKinzie, 18 Ia. 573; 1865, State v. Schlagel, 19 Ia. 169; 1912, Smith v. Com., 148 Ky. 60, 146 S. W. 4; 1914, Deaton v. Com., 157 Ky. 308, 163 S. W. 204; 1872, Com. v. Elliot, 110 Mass. 104, 107; 1881, State v. Lawlor, 28 Minn. 216, 223, 9 N. W. 698; 1884, People v. Hooghkerk, 96 N. Y. 149, 163; 1908, Driggers v. U. S., 21 Okl. 60, 95 Pac. 612; 1880, Butler v. State, 7 Tex. App. 635, 639; 1908, Franklin v. State, 53 Tex. Cr. 547, 110 S. W. 909 (but the judge should charge peremptorily, where there is no doubt).

Contra: 1895, State v. Callahan, 47 La. An. 455, 17 So. 50, semble (the Court decides whether he is an accomplice; here the opinions differed, and the effect of the decision is not clear); 1895, State v. Carr, 28 Or. 389, 42 Pac. 215 (the question is for the Court, when no corroboration is offered and the evidence of complicity is undisputed). — Of course the prosecution may have conceded the witness to be an accomplice: 1855, Com. v. Desmond, 5 Gray, Mass. 80; 1872, Com. v. Elliot, 110 Mass. 104, 106 (but a mere hypothetical argument is not an admission). Compare § 2550, post (judge and jury).

[20] 1883, Ross v. State, 74 Ala. 532, 536; 1888, Childress v. State, 86 Ala. 77, 86, 5 So. 775.

[21] 1897, State v. Smith, 102 Ia. 656, 72 N. W.

(f) In all these details the technical rule requiring corroboration wanders far away from the considerations which psychology tells us are really important and useful in scrutinizing credibility.[22]

§ 2061. Uncorroborated Complainant in Rape, Sodomy, Adultery, Seduction, Enticement, Bastardy, Breach of Marriage-Promise, and the like. At common law, the testimony of the prosecutrix or injured person, in the trial of offences against the chastity of women, was alone sufficient evidence to support a conviction; neither a second witness nor corroborating circumstances were necessary:[1]

279; 1912, State v. Wong Si Sam, 63 Or. 266, 127 Pac. 683.

[22] For the point of view of psychology as applicable to argument before the jury (not the rules of admissibility), see the materials collected in the present author's "Principles of Judicial Proof, as given by Logic, Psychology, and General Experience, and illustrated in Judicial Trials" (1913) especially §§ 179–190, 203–216; and the citations ante, § 875.

2061. [1] (1) RAPE. Accord (corroboration not required): Ala. 1875, Boddie v. State, Ala., quoted supra; 1887, Barnett v. State, 83 Ala. 40, 45, 3 So. 612; Ariz. 1895, Curby v. Terr., 4 Ariz. 371, 42 Pac. 953; Cal. 1892, People v. Fleming, 94 Cal. 308, 310, 29 Pac. 647; 1904, People v. Keith, 141 Cal. 686, 75 Pac. 304; Fla. 1897, Doyle v. State, 39 Fla. 155, 22 So. 272; Ga. 1907, Fields v. State, 2 Ga. App. 41, 58 S. E. 327 (assault with intent to rape; rule of Davis v. State, infra, refused to be extended to assault with intent); Minn. 1894, State v. Connelly, 57 Minn. 482, 483, 59 N. W. 479; Miss. 1893, Monroe v. State, 71 Miss. 196, 198, 13 So. 884; Mo. 1892, State v. Dusenberry, 112 Mo. 277, 292, 20 S. W. 461; 1897, State v. Marcks, 140 Mo. 656, 41 S. W. 973 (repudiating the 'obiter dictum' in State v. Patrick, infra; Sherwood, J., diss.); 1905, State v. Dilts, 191 Mo. 665, 90 S. W. 782; 1905, State v. Welch, 191 Mo. 179, 89 S. W. 945 (following State v. Marcks); Okl. Brenton v. TERR., 15 Okl. 6, 78 Pac. 83 (repudiating Sowers v. Terr., infra, which purported to go upon a statute; "this Territory has no statute" applicable to rape); 1904, Brenton v. Terr., 15 Okl. 10, 78 Pac. 84; 1909, Reeves v. Terr., 2 Okl. Cr. 351, 101 Pac. 1039; 1920, Ex parte Ledington, — Okl. Cr. —, 192 Pac. 595 (but "her testimony should stand unimpeached"); P. I. 1916, U. S. v. Ramos, 35 P. I. 671, semble (attempted rape); Tex. 1894, Gonzales v. State, 32 Tex. Cr. 611, 620, 25 S. W. 781; 1894, Thompson v. State, 33 Tex. Cr. 472, 475, 26 S. W. 987; 1900, Keith v. State, — Tex. Cr. —, 56 S. W. 628; Wis. 1899, Wilcox v. State, 102 Wis. 650, 78 N. W. 763; 1902, Lanphere v. State, 114 Wis. 193, 89 N. W. 128; 1909, Vogel v. State, 138 Wis. 315, 119 N. W. 190; Wyo. 1897, Tway v. State, 7 Wyo. 74, 50 Pac. 188.

Contra (corroboration required): Ga. 1904, Davis v. State, 120 Ga. 435, 48 S. E. 180 (by a majority); Ida. 1899, State v. Anderson, 6 Ida. 706, 59 Pac. 180 (conviction may be "upon the uncorroborated testimony of the prosecutrix," but only when her character is unimpeached and where the circumstances "are clearly corroborative of the statements of the prosecutrix," — whatever this delphic utterance may mean); Mo. 1891, State v. Patrick, 107 Mo. 147, 168, 173, 17 S. W. 666 (adopting the Nebraska rule; but repudiated ubi supra); Nebr. 1886, Mathews v. State, 19 Nebr. 330, 337, 27 N. W. 234 (where the defendant's testimony "expressly denies that of the prosecutrix, she must be corroborated to authorize a conviction"); 1887, Fager v. State, 22 Nebr. 332, 333, 35 N. W. 195 (these two rulings overturn the following, in which originally it had been held that corroboration was not essential: 1877, Garrison v. People, 6 Nebr. 274, 283; 1881, Oleson v. State, 11 Nebr. 276, 277, 9 N. W. 38); 1894, Hammond v. State, 39 Nebr. 252, 257, 58 N. W. 92 (not required necessarily as to the criminal act directly); 1899, Dunn v. State, 58 Nebr. 807, 79 N. W. 719; Okl. 1897, Sowers v. Terr., 6 Okl. 436, 50 Pac. 257; 1913, Allen v. State, 10 Okl. Cr. App. 55, 134 Pac. 91, semble; Wis. 1898, O'Boyle v. State, 100 Wis. 296, 75 N. W. 989 (necessary where her testimony seems unreliable).

(2) RAPE UNDER AGE (STATUTORY RAPE). Accord (corroboration not required): 1904, Peckham v. People, 32 Colo. 140, 75 Pac. 422; 1912, Kidwell v. U. S., 38 D. C. App. 566 (corroboration not technically necessary; but here a verdict was set aside for lack of it); 1911, State v. Brown, 85 Kan. 418, 116 Pac. 508; 1912, State v. Stackhouse, 242 Mo. 444, 146 S. W. 1151; 1914, State v. Hughes, 258 Mo. 264, 167 S. W. 529; 1915, State v. Hammontree, — Mo. —, 177 S. W. 367; 1908, Leedom v. State, 81 Nebr. 585, 116 N. W. 496; 1910, State v. Fugita, 20 Nebr. 555, 129 N. W. 360; 1914, State v. Ellison, 19 N. M. 428, 144 Pac. 10 (prior cases examined); 1920, State v. Armijo, — N. M. —, 187 Pac. 553 (but here a conviction was set aside for lack of corroboration); 1911, State v. Rash, 27 S. D. 185, 130 N. W. 91; 1920, State v. Dachtler, 43 S. D.

1680, HALE, L. C. J., Pleas of the Crown, I, 633, 635: "The party ravished may give evidence upon oath and is in law a competent witness; but the credibility of her testimony, and how far forth she is to be believed, must be left to the jury, and is more or less credible according to the circumstances of fact that concur in that testimony. . . . It is one thing whether a witness be admissible to be heard; another thing, whether they are to be believed when heard. It is true, rape is a most detestable crime, and therefore ought severely and impartially to be punished with death; but it must be remembered that it is an accusation easily to be made and hard to be proved; and harder to be defended by the party accused, tho never so innocent."

1875, BRICKELL, C. J., in Boddie v. State, 52 Ala. 395, 398: "No principle of law forbids a conviction on her uncorroborated testimony, though she is wanting in chastity, if the jury are satisfied of its truth. Her testimony should be cautiously scrutinized, and Court and jury should diligently guard themselves from the undue influence of the sympathy in her behalf which the accusation is apt to excite. If she did not conceal but immediately discovered the offence, and the offender is known to her; if the place of its commission was such that if she made outcry it would not probably be heard and bring her assistance and defence, — these and other circumstances should be considered by the jury. The manner in which she testifies, the consistency of her testimony, should also be carefully considered. If, viewed fairly and carefully, the jury are satisfied of the truth of her evidence, it needs no corroboration from other witnesses to support a conviction."

Nevertheless, in many jurisdictions, a statute, based plausibly on the laudable purpose of protecting against false accusations, has introduced a rule requiring corroboration.[2] This rule is made applicable, in some jurisdic-

407, 179 N. W. 653; 1905, Wallace v. State, 48 Tex. Cr. 548, 89 S. W. 827; 1903, State v. Fetterly, 33 Wash. 599, 74 Pac. 810; 1905, State v. Patchen, 37 Wash. 24, 79 Pac. 479; 1906, State v. Mobley, 44 Wash. 549, 87 Pac. 815; 1917, State v. Smith, 95 Wash. 271, 163 Pac. 759.

Contra (corroboration required): 1906, Livinghouse v. State, 76 Nebr. 491, 107 N. W. 854.

(3) SEDUCTION. Accord (corroboration not required): 1913, Bray v. U. S., 39 D. C. App. 600 (seduction); 1906, Wrynn v. Downey, 27 R. I. 454, 63 Atl. 401 (breach of promise); 1897, Ferguson v. Moore, 98 Tenn. 342, 39 S. W. 341 (even where she consents to an abortion); 1900, State v. Seiler, 106 Wis. 346, 82 N. W. 167 (fornication with a female of previous chaste character).

(4) BASTARDY. Accord (corroboration not required): 1910, Belford v. State, 96 Ark. 274, 131 S. W. 953; 1874, McFarland v. People, 72 Ill. 368, semble; 1905, Evans v. State, 165 Ind. 369, 74 N. E. 244; 1881, State v. McGlothlen, 56 Ia. 544, 9 N. W. 893; 1882, State v. Nichols, 29 Minn. 357, 359, 13 N. W. 153; 1891, Olsen v. Peterson, 33 Nebr. 358, 360, 50 N. W. 155; 1894, Robb v. Hewitt, 39 Nebr. 217, 220, 58 N. W. 88; 1918, Overseer etc. of Montclair v. Eason, 92 N. J. L. 199, 104 Atl. 291 (filiation of a bastard; corroboration of the mother's testimony, not required); 1901, State v. Meares, 60 C. S. 527, 39 S. E. 245.

Contra: see the early English cases for married woman's filiation proceedings, post, § 2063.

(5) INCEST. Accord: 1909, State v. Aker, 54 Wash. 342, 103 Pac. 420.

(6) IMPROPER LIBERTIES. Accord: 1910, People v. Freeman, 244 Ill. 590, 91 N. E. 708 (but the evidence must be "most clear and convincing").

(7) CRIMINAL CONVERSATION: 1914, Morrow v. Morrow, 2 Ir. R. 183 (crim. con.; corroboration of the plaintiff's wife as to acts of adultery, not needed).

[2] With the statutes are placed, in this note, the rulings which merely apply the statutory rule to the facts of a given case, or define the scope of the statute; rulings defining or applying some general canon of corroboration (except for the English statutes) are placed in the next section; for statutes applicable merely to children (in all crimes), see post, § 2066.

ENGLAND: (1) Rape under age, Incest, Indecent Assault, etc.: 1885, St. 48 & 49 Vict. c. 69, §§ 2–4 (on a charge of carnally knowing a girl under the age of consent, the testimony of the girl or "any other child of tender years" being made admissible without oath, on certain conditions; nevertheless no conviction can be had on such testimony unless it is "corroborated by some other material evidence in support thereof implicating the accused"); 1909, Cohen's Case, 3 Cr. App. 234 (carnal knowledge; St. 48 & 49 Vict. c. 69 applied); 1909, Hedges' Case, 3 Cr. App. 262 (statute applied); 1910, Graham's Case, 4 Cr. App. 218 (carnal knowledge; here the extraordinary statement is made by Channell, J., that "it is not a case in which corroboration tions, to rape only; in others, to seduction under promise of marriage; in others, to bastardy; in others, to abortion; and in others, to two or more is necessarily required"); 1910, Brown's Case, 6 Cr. App. 24, 148 (here the extraordinary statement in Graham's Case, supra, is repeated; but on the present charge under the Incest Act 1908, 8 Edw. VII, c. 45, § 2, it is said that "the jury ought to have been cautioned against accepting the uncorroborated evidence of the girl"); 1910, Stone's Case, 6 Cr. App. 89 (similar to Brown's Case); 1913, Pitt's Case, 8 Cr. App. 126 (indecent assault, not under St. 439 Vict., on a girl of 10; "a jury may act on her uncorroborated evidence," but a caution as to a young child's evidence "is always wise"); 1913, Murray's Case, 9 Cr. App. 248 (similar; the jury ought to be directed to require corroboration, where the child is not on oath); 1913, Cratchley's Case, 9 Cr. App. 232 (sodomy with boys of 12 and 10; similar direction, but not mentioning the oath); here compare the English rulings on Accomplices, ante, § 2059.

(2) Bastardy: 1834, St. 4 & 5 W. IV, c. 76, § 72 (no order of filiation shall be made "unless the evidence of the mother of such bastard child shall be corroborated in some material particular by other testimony"); 1839, R. v. Read, 9 A. & E. 619 (statute applied); 1844, St. 7 & 8 Vict. c. 101, § 3 (similar requirement); 1852, R. v. Pearcy, 17 Q. B. 902 (corroboration found, under the statute); 1860, Hodges v. Bennett, 5 H. & N. 625 (statute applied); 1872, St. 35 & 36 Vict. c. 65, § 4 (a man may be adjudged the putative father of a bastard, "if the evidence of the mother be corroborated in some material particular by other evidence to the satisfaction of the said justices"); 1872, R. v. Armitage, L. R. 7 Q. B. 773 (under the statute the mother's testimony is indispensable; her death does not alter the rule); 1877, Cole v. Manning, L. R. 2 Q. B. D. 611 (under St. 35 & 36 Vict. c. 65, § 4, acts of familiarity held a corroboration on the facts of the case); 1914, Mash v. Darley, 1 K. B. 1 (bastardy; the defendant's conviction of the carnal intercourse with the complainant, held sufficient corroboration); 1914, Mash v. Darley, 3 K. B. 1226 (bastardy; corroboration by defendant's implied admissions, held sufficient on the facts); 1917, Burbury v. Jackson, 1 K. B. 17 (bastardy; mere opportunity of intercourse, held not sufficient, but "it is dangerous to lay down any general rule"); 1920, Thomas v. Jones, [1920] 2 K. B. 399, [1921] 1 K. B. 22 (bastardy; R. v. Baskerville, ante, § 2059 cited; the Court divided on appeal, as to corroboration).

(3) Breach of marriage-promise: 1869, St. 32 & 33 Vict. c. 68, § 2 (no plaintiff, in an action for breach of marriage-promise, is to recover, unless his or her testimony "shall be corroborated by some other material evidence in support of such promise"); 1872, Hickey v. Campion, 6 Ir. Rep. C. L. 557 (corroboration held sufficient); 1872, Willcox v. Gottfrey, 26 L. T. N. S. 328 (Bramwell, B.: "The promise itself must be confirmed, and not merely the fact that the parties were keeping company;" defendant's failure to testify, held sufficient corroboration); 1877, Bessela v. Stern, L. R. 2 C. P. D. 265, 271 ("the corroboration need not go the length of establishing the contract; if the evidence supports the promise, it is enough;" defendant's failure to deny the promise, when charged in conversation, held sufficient); 1891, Wiedemann v. Walpole, 2 Q. B. 534 (statute applied).

(4) Cruelty: 1889, St. 52 & 53 Vict. c. 44, § 8 (similar to St. 1885, for offences of cruelty to children); 1904, St. 4 Edw. VII, c. 15, § 15 (Prevention of Cruelty to Children Act; similar to St. 52 & 53 Vict. c. 44, supra).

CANADA: Dominion: St. 1890, c. 37, § 13, Crim. Code 1892, § 685, R. S. 1906, c. 146, Crim. C. § 1003 (rape under age, and indecent assault, like Eng. St. 1885); Crim. Code 1892, § 684, R. S. 1906, Crim. C. § 1002 (quoted ante, § 2036, n. 22; the rule for treason is made applicable to fraudulent marriage and seduction; but note that it is not of the present type of rule, which requires corroboration for the prosecutrix, but of the former type, ante, § 2044, which requires corroboration for a single witness of any sort); St. 1893, c. 31, § 25, R. S. 1906, c. 145, § 16, Evidence Act ("in any legal proceeding," the rule of Eng. St. 1885, supra, is adopted, requiring corroboration of a child's testimony "by some other material evidence"; this provision, not being limited to sexual offences, belongs to the broader type noted post, § 2066); 1918, Shorten v. The King, 42 D. L. R. 591, Can. S. C. (carnal knowledge of a female child; corroboration found, under Cr. C. § 1003);

Alberta: St. 1910, 2d sess., c. 3, Evidence Act, § 11 (like B. C. Rev. St. c. 78, § 8); 1912, R. v. Whistnant, 8 D. L. R. 468 (indecent assault on a child of 12, under Cr. Code, § 1003; testimony of another child, here her sister aged 9, held not sufficient corroboration); 1916, R. v. Picco, 35 D. L. R. 124 (seduction; corroboration under Cr. C. § 1002 required to implicate the accused);

British Columbia: Rev. St. 1911, c. 76, § 8 (in breach of promise of marriage, the plaintiff's testimony must be "corroborated by some other material evidence in support of such promise"); c. 107, § 60 (necessaries to the mother of an illegitimate child; in an action against the father, the fact of paternity "shall be proved by other testimony than that of the mother"); 1910, R. v. Inman Din, 15 Br. C. 476 (indecent assault on boys; Can. Cr. C. § 1003, applied); 1914, R. v. McGivney, 15 D. L. R. 550, B. C. (indecent such offences having in common the feature that an alleged injured woman is likely to be the principal witness.

assault upon a child of 6 years; corroboration held sufficient on the facts, one judge diss., under Can. Cr. Code 1906, § 1003, and Can. Evid. Act 1906, § 16); 1914, R. v. McInulty, 16 D. L. R. 313, B. C. (indecent assault, etc., under Can. Cr. C. § 1003; held, that the testimony of a second child of tender years cannot be sufficient corroboration, either under Cr. Code, § 1003, or under Can. Evid. Act, § 16; approving R. v. Whistnant, 8 D. L. R. 468, Alta., and disapproving R. v. Inman Din, 15 Br. C. 476);

Manitoba: Rev. St. 1913, c. 92, § 17 (illegitimate children, filiation of; no order to be made "unless the evidence of the mother is corroborated by some other material evidence implicating the accused"); 1888, Waters v. Bellamy, 5 Man. 246 (breach of promise statute applied); 1914, R. v. Fontaine, 18 D. L. R. 275 (indecent assault upon a female; corroboration found, under Can. Cr. Code, § 1003); 1921, R. v. Schiraba, 62 D. L. R. 308, 316, per Cameron, J. A. (rape; corroboration not required);

Newfoundland: Consol. St. 1916, c. 91, § 4 (like Ont. Rev. St. c. 76, § 11);

Northwest Terr.: 1895, R. v. Wyse, 2 N. W. Terr. 103 (Dominion statute applied);

Ontario: Rev. St. 1914, c. 76, § 11 (in breach of promise of marriage, no plaintiff shall recover unless "his or her testimony is corroborated by some other material evidence in support of the promise"); St. 1921, c. 54, § 25, Children of Unmarried Parents Act (no order of affiliation shall be made at the instance of the mother "unless her evidence is corroborated by some other material evidence," but subject thereto proof of paternity may be such as satisfies the judge); 1906, R. v. Daun, 12 Ont. L. R. 227, 231 (Dom. Crim. Code 1892, § 684, cited supra, applied, on a charge of seduction); 1906, R. v. Burr, 13 Ont. L. R. 485 (seduction; corroboration broadly defined); 1907, R. v. Armstrong, 15 Ont. L. R. 47 (rape under age; Can. Cr. Code applied); 1909, R. v. Bowes, 20 Ont. L. R. 111 (Cr. Code applied); 1912, Dunn v. Gibson, 8 D. L. R. 297 (action for assault and ravishment; rule of corroboration held not applicable); 1914, R. v. Williams, 19 D. L. R. 676 (gross indecency with a boy; corroboration held not necessary, under Can. Cr. C. § 206);

Prince Edward's Isl.: St. 1889, c. 9, § 7 (like Eng. St. 1869, for breach of marriage-promise); Saskatchewan: R. S. 1920, c. 44, § 37 (like Ont. R. S. c. 76, § 11).

UNITED STATES: Federal: Rev. St. 1878, § 5351, Code § 10563 (seduction of female passenger by officer or crew; "no conviction shall be had on the testimony of the female seduced, without other evidence");

Alabama: Code 1907, § 7776 (no conviction for seduction is to be had "on the uncorroborated testimony of the woman"); § 7701 (carnal knowledge by personating husband; no conviction must be had "on the unsupported evidence of the woman"); 1905, Weaver v. State, 142 Ala. 33, 39 So. 341 (corroboration as to "either of the material facts, so as to satisfy the jury that prosecutrix was worthy of credit" suffices);

Alaska: Comp. L. 1913, § 2264 (like Or. Laws 1920, § 1542);

Arkansas: Dig. 1919, § 2414 (no person shall be convicted of seduction under marriage-promise "upon the testimony of the female, unless the same be corroborated by other evidence"); 1918, Patrick v. State, 135 Ark. 173, 204 S. W. 852 (seduction; rule of corroboration applied);

California: P. C. 1872, § 1108 (prosecutions for abortion or for enticement of chaste female for purpose of prostitution; the woman's testimony not sufficient "unless she is corroborated by other evidence"); 1897, People v. Wade, 118 Cal. 672, 50 Pac. 841 (prosecutrix in seduction under Pen. C. §§ 268, 1108; corroboration not required); 1921, People v. Anthony, 185 Cal. 152, 196 Pac. 47 (indecent liberties with female child; semble, no rule requiring corroboration); 1921, People v. Hulbart, — Cal. App. —, 202 Pac. 939 (under P. C. § 288, prohibiting lewd acts with a child under 14, no rule of corroboration applies to the complaining witness); 1921, People v. Troutman, 187 Cal. 313, 201 Pac. 929 (lewd act with a boy, under P. C. § 288; rule of corroboration, held not applicable);

Colorado: Comp. St. 1921, § 6841 (no conviction for seduction is to be had "on the testimony of the female seduced unsupported by other evidence"); 1921, Jones v. People, 69 Colo. 500, 195 Pac. 526 (statutory rape; corroboration required);

Hawaii: Rev. L. 1915, § 3903 (rape, abortion, and seduction; no person shall be convicted "upon the mere testimony of such female uncorroborated by other evidence direct or circumstantial"); 1917, Terr. v. Capitan, 23 Haw. 771 (seduction; statute applied); 1919, Terr. v. Nishi, 24 Haw. 677 (rape; fresh complaint by the female cannot suffice as corroboration; Terr. v. Schilling, 17 Haw. 249, repudiated); 1920, Terr. v. Fong Yee, 25 Haw. 309 (seduction);

Idaho: Comp. St. 1919, § 8955 (abortion and enticing for prostitution; no conviction is to be had "upon the testimony of the woman upon or with whom the offence was committed, unless she is corroborated by other evidence"); 1916, State v. Andrus, 29 Ida. 1, 156 Pac. 421 (incest; corroboration required);

Illinois: Rev. St. 1874, c. 38, § 525 (St. 1899, April 19) (no conviction is to be had for seduc-

Upon principle, the common law lack of a rule was merely an instance of the general absence in our law of rules requiring a specified number tion "upon the testimony of the female unsupported by other evidence"); 1874, McFarland v. People, 72 Ill. 368, semble (bastardy; no rule of corroboration exists);

Indiana: Burns' Ann. St. 1914, § 2120 (seduction, and enticement for prostitution; the female's testimony "must be supported by at least one other witness or by strong corroborating circumstances as to every material point necessary to the commission of the offense"); 1905, Evans v. State, 165 Ind. 369, 74 N. E. 244 (in bastardy, no corroboration for the mother is necessary); 1905, Evans v. State, 165 Ind. 369, 75 N. E. 651 (under Rev. St. 1897, §§ 1004, 1008, now Burns' Ann. St. 1914, §§ 1015, 1019, quoted ante, §§ 488, 1326, 1387, 1413, in bastardy no corroboration of the mother is required as a rule of law; here a married mother);
Iowa: Code 1897, § 5486, Comp. C. 1919, § 9473 (in prosecutions for rape or assault with intent, or for enticing for prostitution, or for seduction, the testimony of the "person injured" is insufficient, "unless she be corroborated by other evidence tending to connect the defendant with the commission of the offence"); § 4757, Comp. Code § 8609 (compulsory marriage or defilement; no conviction is to be had "unless the evidence of the prosecuting witness be corroborated by other evidence tending to connect the defendant with the commission of the crime"); 1884, State v. Miller, 65 Ia. 60, 63, 21 N. W. 181 (statute assumed applicable to incest); 1891, State v. Moore, 81 Ia. 578, 47 N. W. 772 (same); 1897, State v. Kouhns, 103 Ia. 720, 73 N. W. 353 (no corroboration needed, where the crime though charged as incest was also rape); 1881, State v. McGlothlen, 56 Ia. 544, 9 N. W. 893 (bastardy; corroboration is not required);
Kansas: Gen. St. 1915, § 3397 (seduction under promise of marriage; "the testimony of the woman alone shall not be sufficient evidence of a promise of marriage"); 1907, State v. Waterman, 75 Kan. 253, 88 Pac. 1074 (seduction under promise of marriage; rule applied);
Maryland: Ann. Code 1914, Art. 35, § 3 (in proceedings founded on adultery or for breach of marriage-promise, no recovery can be had on the "testimony of the plaintiff alone," but "testimony in corroboration of that of the plaintiff shall be necessary");
Minnesota: Gen. St. 1913, § 8654 (slander of a female's chastity; no conviction "upon the testimony of the woman defamed, unsupported by other evidence, but must be proved by the evidence of at least two persons other than such woman, who heard and understood the language charged as slanderous, or by the admission of the defendant"); § 8662 (seduction under promise of marriage; no conviction "upon the unsupported testimony of the female seduced");
Mississippi: Code 1906, § 1372, Hem. § 1108 (seduction; "the testimony of the female seduced, alone, shall not be sufficient to warrant a conviction"); St. 1914, c. 171 (rape under age; "no person shall be convicted upon the uncorroborated testimony of the injured female"); 1921, State v. Bradford, 126 Miss. 868, 89 So. 767 (carnal knowledge of female under St. 1914, c. 171, Hem. Code § 1094; rule of corroboration applied);
Missouri: Rev. St. 1919, § 4029 (in trials for seduction under marriage-promise, "the evidence of the woman as to such promise must be corroborated to the same extent required of the principal witness in perjury"); 1886, State v. Hill, 91 Mo. 423, 425, 4 S. W. 121 (by statute, the corroboration need touch only the promise to marry); 1891, State v. Wheeler, 108 Mo. 658, 665, 18 S. W. 924; 1897, State v. Marshall, 137 Mo. 463, 39 S. W. 63; 1897, State v. Davis, 141 Mo. 522, 42 S. W. 1083; 1914, State v. Long, 257 Mo. 199, 165 S. W. 748; 1918, State v. Stemmons, 275 Mo. 544, 205 S. W. 8 (seduction);
Montana: Rev. C. 1921, § 11984 (like Cal. P. C. § 1108); 1921, State v. Pippi, 59 Mont. 116, 195 Pac. 556 (pimping, under St. 1911, c. 1, § 8; the woman-prostitute not required to be corroborated);
Nebraska: Rev. St. 1922, § 10141 (on a trial for taking a woman with intent to marry forcibly or to defile, "and for seduction, for the purpose of prostitution," the female's evidence, "unsupported by other evidence," is insufficient); 1921, Preston v. State, — Nebr. —, 185 N. W. 1004 (adultery; the "unsupported evidence of one of the parties," held not sufficient; following Blue v. State, 86 Nebr. 189, 125 N. W. 136); 1921, Roberts v. State, 106 Nebr. 362, 183 N. W. 555 (carnal knowledge of female under age without consent; statute applied);
Nevada: Rev. L. 1912, § 765 (the paternity of an illegitimate child "shall be established by mutual agreement of the mother and any person whose relations have been sufficiently intimate with her to warrant the conclusion. It may also be established by the confession or admission of the father, when not denied by the mother"; and otherwise, according to the trial Court's discretion); § 6435 (slander of woman's chastity; no conviction shall be had "upon the testimony of the woman slandered unsupported by other evidence"); § 7177 (abortion, enticement of female, etc.; no conviction upon the woman's testimony, "unless she is corroborated by other evidence");
New Jersey: Comp. St. 1910, Crimes, § 49 (intercourse and pregnancy on false representation of singleness or under promise of marriage; "the evidence of the female must be corroborated to the extent required in case of an indictof witnesses. As to policy, the same result seems to be sufficiently justified. In the first place, applying the canon already suggested in dealing with the ment for perjury"); 1881, Zabriskie v. State, 43 N. J. L. 640, 647 (corroboration defined and illustrated); 1900, State v. Brown, 64 N. J. L. 414, 45 Atl. 800 (statute applied);

New York: Cons. L. 1909, Penal §§ 71, 533, 2013, 2177, 2460 (complaining female's testimony in rape, defilement, abduction, seduction, compulsory prostitution, or compulsory marriage, is insufficient if "unsupported by other evidence"); 1900, People v. Page, 162 N. Y. 272, 56 N. E. 750 (rape; corroboration held not sufficient);
North Carolina: Cons. St. 1919, § 4339 (in seduction under promise of marriage, "the unsupported testimony of the woman shall not be sufficient to convict"); § 4225 (abduction or elopement with a married woman; "no conviction shall be had upon the unsupportedtestimony of any such married woman"); 1906, State v. Connor, 142 N. C. 700, 55 S. E. 787 (statute applied); 1919, State v. O'Higgins, 178 N. C. 708, 100 S. E. 438 (Rev. 1905, § 3360, C. S. § 4225, applied);
North Dakota: Comp. L. 1913, § 10843 (like Okl. Comp. St. § 2703, applying it to abortion also, but omitting from "tending to connect" to the end);
Ohio: Gen. Code Ann. 1921, § 13671 (in prosecutions for seduction under marriage-promise and fornication by a teacher with a pupil, the sole testimony of the female is to be insufficient if "unsupported by other evidence to the extent required" in perjury);
Oklahoma: Comp. St. 1921, § 2703 (on a trial for enticing for prostitution or for seduction, no conviction is to be had "upon testimony of the person injured, unless she is corroborated by other evidence tending to connect the defendant with the commission of the offense"); 1922, Ferbrache v. State, — Okl. Cr. —, 206 Pac. 617 (rape; statute applied);
Oregon: Laws 1920, § 1542 (on a trial for enticing to prostitution or for seduction, the female's testimony is not sufficient, "unless she is corroborated by some other evidence tending to connect the defendant with the commission of the crime"); this is not applied to a charge of rape under age: 1901, State v Knighten, 39 Or. 63, 64 Pac. 866;
Pennsylvania: St. 1860, Mar. 31, § 41, Dig. 1920, § 8042, Crimes (seduction; "the promise of marriage shall not be deemed established unless the testimony of the female seduced is corroborated by other evidence, either circumstantial or positive"); 1882, Rice v. Com., 100 Pa. 28 (statute applied; defendant's competency to testify does not affect the rule); St. 1895, June 26, Dig. § 10361 (quoted ante, § 1432; dying declarations in abortion);
Porto Rico: Rev. St. & C. 1911, § 6282 (like Cal. P. C. § 1108, including seduction and rape); 1904, People v. Cabranes, 7 P. R. 297 (seduction, as distinguished from seduction under promise of marriage; corroboration not required); 1905, People v. Santos, 8 P. R. 348 (seduction under promise of marriage; corroboration held not necessary for offences under P. C. § 261, C. Cr. P. § 250, but necessary for offences under P. C. § 260; following the interpretation of Cal. P. C. § 268); 1905, People v. Cordova, 9 P. R. 311 (similar to People v. Santos, supra); 1907, People v. Martinez, 13 P. R. 241, 246 (seduction; under promise of marriage; similar); 1907, People v. Canal, 13 P. R. 179, 187 (rape of a female of 14; the opinion is blind, though it scolds the trial Court for a "vacillating" charge); 1912, People v. de Jesús, 18 P. R. 575 (rape on a female under 14; St. 1909, Mar. 11, amending C. Cr. P. § 250, by requiring corroboration, applied); 1917, People v. Rosario, 25 P. R. 675 (seduction; corroboration as to the promise of marriage, required);
Rhode Island: Gen. L. 1909, c. 347, § 5 (criminal seduction, or drugging to obtain intercourse, etc.; no conviction is to be had upon the testimony of one witness only, unless "corroborated by other evidence");
South Carolina: C. Cr. P. 1922, § 296 (seduction; no conviction "on the uncorroborated testimony of the woman"); 1909, State v. Turner, 82 S. C. 278, 64 S. E. 424 (statute applied);
South Dakota: Rev. C. 1919, § 4884 (like Okl. Comp. St. 1921, § 2703);
Tennessee: Shannon's Code 1916, § 6456 (rape under age; no conviction shall be had "on the unsupported testimony of the female");
Texas: Rev. C. Cr. P. 1911, § 789 (seduction; "no conviction shall be had upon the testimony of the said female, unless the same is corroborated by other evidence tending to connect the defendant with the offense charged");
Utah: Comp. L. 1917, § 8988 (like Cal. P. C. § 1108);
Virginia: Code 1919, § 4413 (no conviction shall be had for seduction or for abduction for defilement or marriage, "on the testimony of the female seduced, abducted, or detained, unsupported by other evidence"); 1889, Hausenfluck v. Com., 85 Va. 702, 8 S. E. 68[illegible] (statute applied);
Washington: R. & B. Code, 1909, § 2434 (slander of a woman's chastity; no conviction to be had "upon the testimony of the woman slandered unsupported by other evidence"); St. 1907, c. 170, p. 396 (no conviction for rape or seduction "upon the testimony of the female raped or seduced, unless it is corroborated by such other evidence as tends to convict the defendant of the commission of the offense"); R. & B. Code 1909, § 2443 (no conviction for rape, seduction, or other sexual crimes, "upon treason-rule (ante, § 2037), the first condition justifying a rule of number does perhaps exist, namely, the frequency of false accusations of the class in question; but the second does not exist, namely, the relatively small disadvantage that would ensue in case an individual guilty man escaped through the lack of the required number of witnesses, for in none of these offences can such a view be taken of the consequences of letting such offences go unpunished. Furthermore, a rule of law requiring corroboration has probably little actual influence upon the juror's minds over and above that ordinary caution and suspicion which would naturally suggest itself for such charges; and the rule thus tends to become in practice merely a means of securing from the trial judge the utterance of a form of words which may chance to be erroneous and to lay the foundation for a new trial. Finally, the purpose of the rule is already completely attained by the judge's power to set aside a verdict upon insufficient evidence, and under this power verdicts are constantly set aside, in jurisdictions having no statutory rule, upon the same evidence which in other jurisdictions would be insufficient under the statutory rule requiring corroboration.

The truth is that, in the light of modern psychology, this technical rule of corroboration seems but a crude and childish measure, if it be relied upon as an adequate means for determining the credibility of the complaining witness in such charges. The problem of estimating the veracity of feminine testimony in complaints against masculine offenders is baffling enough to the experienced psychologist.[3] This statutory rule is unfortunate in that it tends to produce reliance upon a rule of thumb. Better to inculcate the resort to an expert scientific analysis of the particular witness' mentality, as the true measure of enlightenment.

§ 2062. Same: Nature of Corroborative Evidence. The further definition of the term "corroboration," by detailed rules of law, is unwise and unpractical. Whether there exists such corroborative evidence ought to be a question for the determination of the trial judge upon the circumstances of each case; and a few Courts occasionally incline to such a doctrine.[1] So far as the testimony of the female upon or against whom the crime was committed, unless supported by other evidence"); St. 1913, c. 100, p. 298 (repealing Rem. & Ball. Annot. Codes & Stats. § 2443); 1915, State v. Morden, 87 Wash. 465, 151 Pac. 832 (statutory rape; since St. 1913, repealing the Code provision, corroboration is not required as matter of law);

Wisconsin: Stats. 1919, § 4581 (no conviction is to be had for seduction "on the testimony of the female seduced, unsupported by other evidence"); § 4569 (quoted post, § 2066);

Wyoming: Comp. St. 1920, § 7521 (in trials for seduction and for taking with intent to force marriage or defilement, "no conviction shall be had on the evidence of the female offended against, unsupported by other evidence").

[3] From the point of view of psychology as applicable to argument before the jury (not the rules of Admissibility), see the materials collected in the present author's "Principles of Judicial Proof, as given by Logic, Psychology and General Experience, and illustrated in Judicial Trials" (1913), especially §§ 172–190; and the works cited ante, § 875.

§ 2062. [1] 1882, Cunningham v. State, 73 Ala. 51, 55 ("Whenever there is any evidence, no matter how slight, in support of any material subject of inquiry, its sufficiency can never become a question for the Court"); 1895, Mills v. Com., 93 Va. 815, 22 S. E. 863 ("It is sufficient here to say that it must be evidence which does not emanate from the mouth of the seduced female; that it must not rest wholly upon her credibility, but must be such evifurther definitions have been attempted, they are of two general types similar to those already noted for the accomplice-rule (ante, § 2059). By some Courts it is said that the corroboration must be upon some or all material facts.[2] By others, and sometimes by express statutory definition, the corroboration is required to consist of facts tending to connect the defendant with the commission.[3] Most of the rulings were a waste of the State's time by the Supreme Courts.

dence as adds to, strengthens, confirms, and corroborates her testimony").

Of course, if it is legally sufficient, the jury have still to say whether it convinces them: 1878, State v. Bell, 49 Ia. 440, 443.

[2] Ala. 1882, Cunningham v. State, 73 Ala. 51, 56 (must be merely "of some matter material to the guilt of the accused," and its effect must be to convince the jury of the witness' truth); 1883, Wilson v. State, 73 Ala. 527, 534 (Cunningham case approved; Brickell, C. J., diss., holding that the evidence should "extend to every material fact," and should "tend to connect the defendant with the commission of the offense"); 1888, Cagle v. State, 87 Ala. 93, 97, 6 So. 300 (Cunningham case followed); 1890, Cooper v. State, 90 Ala. 641, 8 So. 821 (same); 1898, Suther v. State, 118 Ala. 88, 24 So. 43; 1909, Allen v. State, 162 Ala. 74, 50 So. 279 (Cunningham v. State followed); 1909, Pannell v. State, 162 Ala. 81, 50 So. 281 (similar); Del. 1920, State v. Ellis, — Del. —, 112 Atl. 172 (adultery; scope of corroboration, defined); Minn. 1860, State v. Timmens, 4 Minn. 325, 332 ("upon every material point necessary to the perfection of the offence"); Mo. 1883, State v. Brassfield, 81 Mo. 151, 159; 1885, State v. Patterson, 88 Mo. 88, 92, 99; Nebr. 1909, Henderson v. State, 85 Nebr. 444, 123 N. W. 459 (the fresh complaint may suffice as corroboration; the opinion makes certain distinctions which seem to be more than any jury should be expected to understand or any trial judge to remember); 1921, Darwin v. State, — Nebr. —, 185 N. W. 312; Okl. 1901, Harvey v. Terr., 11 Okl. 156, 65 Pac. 837 (State v. Timmens, Minn., followed).

[3] ABDUCTION: 1885, People v. Plath, 100 N. Y. 590, 592, 3 N. E. 790 (abduction for purpose of prostitution, under P. C. § 583; corroboration must extend to "the material facts necessary to establish the commission of a crime and the identity of the person committing it").

ABORTION: 1870, People v. Josselyn, 39 Cal. 393 (the evidence must corroborate her in some part of the testimony which "imputes to the defendant the commission of the crime alleged," though not necessarily as to the particular method stated by her); 1911, People v. Richardson, 161 Cal. 552, 120 Pac. 20 (People v. Josslyn approved).

RAPE: Iowa: 1876, State v. McLaughlin, 44 Ia. 82, 85; 1877, State v. Comstock, 46 Ia. 265, 268; 1883, State v. Stowell, 60 Ia. 535, 538, 15 N. W. 418; 1885, State v. Mitchell, 68 Ia. 116, 121, 26 N. W. 44; 1890, State v. Watson, 81 Ia. 380, 387, 46 N. W. 868; 1892, State v. Cassidy, 85 Ia. 145, 52 N. W. 1; 1893, State v. Chapman, 88 Ia. 254, 55 N. W. 489; 1894, State v. Cook, 92 Ia. 483, 487, 61 N. W. 185; 1895, State v. Hutchison, 95 Ia. 556, 64 N. W. 610; 1895, State v. French, 96 Ia. 255, 65 N. W. 156; 1897, State v. Bailor, 104 Ia. 1, 73 N. W. 344; 1898, State v. Baker, 106 Ia. 99, 76 N. W. 509; 1899, State v. Fountain, 110 Ia. 15, 81 N. W. 162; 1904, State v. Carpenter, 124 Ia. 5, 98 N. W. 775; 1904, State v. Egbert, 125 Ia. 443, 101 N. W. 191; 1905, State v. Norris, 127 Ia. 683, 104 N. W. 282; 1906, State v. Crouch, 130 Ia. 478, 107 N. W. 173; 1907, State v. Johnson, 133 Ia. 38, 110 N. W. 170; 1908, State v. Ralston, 139 Ia. 44, 116 N. W. 1058; 1909, State v. Hetland, 141 Ia. 524, 119 N. W. 961; 1920, State v. John, 188 Ia. 494, 176 N. W. 280 (assault with intent); 1920, State v. O'Meara, 190 Ia. 613, 177 N. W. 563; 1917, State v. Powers, 181 Ia. 452, 164 N. W. 856 (assault with intent to rape); Nebraska: 1907, McConnell v. State, 77 Nebr. 773, 110 N. W. 666 (assault with intent); 1907, Fitzgerald v. State, 78 Nebr. 1, 110 N. W. 676; 1909, Mott v. State, 83 Nebr. 226, 119 N. W. 461 (opportunity alone is not enough); Porto Rico: 1907, People v. Cancel, 13 P. R. 179, 187; 1920, People v. Molina, 28 P. R. 157 (rape; an instruction in the simple language of the Code, held not specific enough; unsound); Washington: 1909, State v. McCool, 53 Wash. 486, 102 Pac. 422; 1911, State v. Gibson, 64 Wash. 131, 116 Pac. 872; 1912, State v. Raymond, 69 Wash. 98, 124 Pac. 495 (rape; the corroboration must extend to both the intercourse and the force; this court is here backsliding in its elaboration of such technical rules; it was enough to say that there was not sufficient evidence in this case, without building up a fabric of fixed rules).

RAPE UNDER AGE (STATUTORY RAPE): Iowa: 1907, State v. Blackburn, — Ia. —, 110 N. W. 275; 1907, State v. Stevens, 133 Ia. 684, 110 N. W. 1037; Nebraska: 1921, Nabower v. State, 105 Nebr. 848, 182 N. W. 493; 1921, Robbins v. State, 106 Nebr. 423, 184 N. W. 53; Porto Rico: 1915, People v. Rodriguez, 22 P. R. 98 (rape under 14);

SEDUCTION: CANADA: 1921, R. v. Stefanie,

Distinguish here the doctrine about constancy of accusation in travail by the complainant in bastardy (ante, § 1141), and the admissibility of pregnancy or birth of a child, as corroborating evidence (ante, § 168).

60 D. L. R. 452, Alta. (seduction; corroboration need not include the promise of marriage; Stuart, J., diss.); UNITED STATES: Alabama: 1920, Tarver v. State, 17 Ala. App. 424, 85 So. 855 (seduction); Arkansas: 1883, Polk v. State, 40 Ark. 482, 484 (must "tend to connect the defendant with the commission of the offense"); 1904, Keaton v. State, 73 Ark. 265, 83 S. W. 911; 1905, Carrens v. State, 77 Ark. 16, 91 S. W. 30; 1905, Burnett v. State, 76 Ark. 295, 88 S. W. 956; 1906, Lasater v. State, 77 Ark. 468, 94 S. W. 59; 1909, Nichols v. State, 92 Ark. 421, 122 S. W. 1003 (must relate to the promise and the connection); 1920, Woodard v. State, — Ark. —, 220 S. W. 671; 1920, Stevens v. State, 143 Ark. 618, 221 S. W. 186; Hawaii: 1917, Terr. v. Capitan, 23 How. 771 (corroboration need extend only to the promise and to the intercourse); Indiana: 1901, Hinkle v. State, 157 Ind. 237, 61 N. E. 196 (an example of the absurdity of the rule in practice); 1912, Hay v. State, 178 Ind. 478, 98 N. E. 712 (seduction; nature of corroboration, discussed); Iowa: 1864, State v. Tully, 18 Ia. 88; 1871, State v. Shean, 32 Ia. 88, 90; 1874, State v. Kingsley, 39 Ia. 439; 1878, State v. Danforth, 48 Ia. 43, 47; State v. Wells, 48 Ia. 671; 1879, State v. Curran, 51 Ia. 112, 119, 49 N. W. 1006; 1880, State v. Smith, 54 Ia. 743, 7 N. W. 402; 1882, State v. Heatherton, 60 Ia. 175, 177, 14 N. W. 230; 1884, State v. Fitzgerald, 63 Ia. 268, 272, 19 N. W. 202; 1887, State v. Richards, 72 Ia. 17, 21, 33 N. W. 342; State v. McClintic, 73 Ia. 663, 665, 35 N. W. 696; 1888, State v. Standley, 76 Ia. 215, 219, 40 N. W. 815; 1890, State v. Bell, 79 Ia. 117, 119, 44 N. W. 244; 1891, State v. Gunagy, 84 Ia. 177, 180, 50 N. W. 882; 1892, State v. Smith, 84 Ia. 522, 51 N. W. 24; State v. Enke, 85 Ia. 35, 51 N. W. 1146; 1892, State v. Brown, 86 Ia. 121, 126, 53 N. W. 92; 1893, State v. Baldoser, 88 Ia. 55, 61, 55 N. W. 97; State v. Lenihan, 88 Ia. 670, 56 N. W. 292; 1894, State v. Knutson, 91 Ia. 549, 552, 60 N. W. 129; 1895, State v. Bauerkemper, 95 Ia. 562, 64 N. W. 609; 1898, State v. Hayes, 105 Ia. 82, 74 N. W. 757; 1898, State v. Hughes, 106 Ia. 125, 76 N. W. 520; 1899, State v. Reinheimer, 109 Ia. 624, 80 N. W. 669; 1899, State v. McGinn, 109 Ia. 641, 80 N. W. 1068; 1900, State v. Burns, 110 Ia. 745, 82 N. W. 325; 1900, State v. Kissock, 111 Ia. 690, 83 N. W. 724; 1901, State v. Mulholland, 115 Ia. 170, 88 N. W. 325; Mississippi: 1894, Ferguson v. State, 71 Miss. 805, 815, 15 So. 66 ("as with the accomplice, so here, corroboration to the extent of fairly tending to connect the accused with the commission of the offence should be held sufficient"); 1922, Hollins v. State, — Miss. —, 90 So. 630 ("the secret part of the crime . . . is the element as to which she must be corroborated"); Missouri: 1904, State v. Phillips, 185 Mo. 185, 83 S. W. 1080; 1905, State v. Sublett, 191 Mo. 163, 90 S. W. 374 (defendant's admission may suffice); 1911, State v. Long, 238 Mo. 383, 141 S. W. 1099; 1916, State v. Spears, — Mo. —, 183 S. W. 311; Nebraska: 1907, Russell v. State, 77 Nebr. 519, 110 N. W. 380; New York: 1863, Kenyon v. People, 26 N. Y. 203, 208 (corroboration need go only to "those facts which go to prove the offence charged"); 1873, Boyce v. People, 55 N. Y. 644 (nature of corroboration indefinitely defined); 1877, Armstrong v. People, 70 N. Y. 38, 43 (corroboration is necessary as to the promise and the intercourse; nature of corroboration defined); 1919, People v. Taleisnik, 225 N. Y. 489, 122 N. E. 615 (corroboration must cover the marriage and the seduction); North Carolina: 1918, State v. Fulcher, 176 N. C. 724, 97 S. E. 2; 1918, State v. Cooke, 176 N. C. 731, 97 S. E. 171 (seduction; "the statute does not specify how much or in what way she shall be supported"); Ohio: 1919, Wertenberger v. State, 99 Ohio 353, 124 N. E. 243 (applying Gen. Code, § 13671); Oklahoma: 1901, Harvey v. Terr., 11 Okl. 156, 65 Pac. 837 (corroboration must cover the promise and the intercourse); 1916, Butts v. State, 12 Okl. Cr. 391, 157 Pac. 704; Porto Rico: 1916, People v. Lopez, 24 P. R. 410; South Dakota: 1912, State v. Holter, 30 S. D. 353, 138 N. W. 953 (State v. King followed); Texas: 1911, Nash v. State, 61 Tex. Cr. 259, 134 S. W. 709 (the corroboration need not cover the essentials of the offence, in particular, both the promise and the intercourse; Davidson, P. J., diss.; prior cases reviewed); 1912, Murphy v. State, 65 Tex. Cr. 55, 143 S. W. 616 (Nash v. State followed); 1916, Wood v. State, 78 Tex. Cr. 654, 182 S. W. 1122; 1920, Slaughter v. State, 86 Tex. Cr. App. 527, 218 S. W. 767 (prior cases elaborately examined, and details of the rule formulated); 1921, Gainer v. State, 89 Tex. Cr. 538, 232 S. W. 830; 1922, Polk v. State, — Tex. Cr. —, 238 S. W. 834; Virginia: 1922, Harding v. Com., — Va. —, 110 S. E. 376 (seduction; defendant's admissions may suffice).

It is in some rulings further held that the corroboration need not relate directly to the fact of intercourse; Ia. 1857, State v. Andre, 5 Ia. 389 (evidence need not refer to "the fact of illicit intercourse," but may concern "intimacy, opportunity, and inducement"); 1874, State v. Kingsley, 39 Ia. 439 (Andre case approved); 1879, State v. Painter, 50 Ia. 317, 319 ("intimacy" and "opportunity"

§ 2063. Parent's Bastardizing of Issue, by Testimony to Non-Access; (a) History and Present Scope of the Rule. The story of the rule that parents may not "bastardize their issue" is a singular one; though it has had some parallels in other parts of our law. First, a settled rule; then, a chance judicial expression, in apparent contradiction; then, a series of rulings based on a misunderstanding of this expression and an ignoring of the settled rule; then, an entirely new rule, and new and wondrous reasons contrived and put forward to defend the novelty, as if it had from the beginning been based on the experience and wisdom of generations.

(1) In the first place, then, there clearly was in the beginning no rule at all against using the testimony of a husband or a wife, to prove the non-access of the husband as evidence of the child's bastardy (i. e. the parentage of another man than the husband). The only objection that was brought forward was that of the disqualification of wife or husband (ante, § 600, post, § 2227) to testify for or against the other. This was usually held not applicable on the facts of the case; and, in any event, it had nothing to do with the fact of non-access, as such; it applied, if at all, to whatever facts might be in issue involving bastardy. All this is perfectly plain and unquestionable in the precedents of the 1700s.[1]

(2) But about the middle of the 1700s there arose a rule peculiar to filiation cases (i. e. proceedings to charge a bastard's father with its support), that the order of support should not be made against the defendant on the sole and uncorroborated testimony of the mother, if a married woman:

1734, R. v. Reading, Lee temp. Hardwicke 79 (order of filiation of a child born of a married woman; objected, "that the wife is the only evidence, and that she is not a competent witness in law to exonerate her husband of the charge and burthen of this child"). HARDWICKE, L. C. J.: "[The wife] may be a competent witness to prove the criminal conversation between the defendant and herself, by reason of the nature of the fact, which is usually carried on with such secrecy that it will admit of no other evidence; . . . but then in the present case it is gone further, for the wife is [here] the only evidence to prove the absence and want of access of her husband, whereas this might be made to appear by other witnesses. . . . It must be a very dangerous consequence to lay it down in general that a wife should be a sufficient sole evidence to bastardize her child and to discharge her further defined); 1880, State v. Araah, 55 Ia. 258, 7 N. W. 601 (same); 1892, State v. Smith, 84 Ia. 522, 51 N. W. 24 (same); and other cases supra: S. D. 1897, State v. King, 9 S. D. 628, 70 N. W. 1046, semble.

§ 2063. [1] 1717, St. Andrews [v. St. Brides, Sessions Cas. K. B. 35 (order of filiation for a married woman's children, wife testifying to non-access; objected "that the wife was not good evidence, it being against her husband"; "but not allowed, for the parishes are only concerned"); 1717, Clerk v. Wright, 1 Bott Poor Law, 4th ed., pl. 558, 6th ed., pl. 496 (Chancery issue to try legitimacy; mother's declarations "that the child was not her husband's," excluded, but "if she had been here herself, she might have been examined as to this fact"); 1732, Pendrell v. Pendrell, 2 Stra. 925 (inheritance-issue; defendant offered "strong evidence of no access" of the claimant's parents, and the mother was allowed to be called and cross-examined by defendant and her contradictory declarations put in); 1735, R. v. St. Peter, 1 Burr. Sett. Cas. 25, Bull. N. P. 112 (father allowed to testify to no marriage, in a pauper-settlement case, because he was not testifying in his own discharge, being liable in either event); 1763, Buller, Nisi Prius, 113 (comments on R. v. Reading, infra, that, after the husband's death and the cessation of his liability, the mother could without question testify to non-access; so also 287).

husband of the burthen of his maintenance; but the opinion the Court is of at present will not be a precedent to determine any other case wherein there are other sufficient witnesses as to the want of access; but the foundation that is now gone upon is the wife's being a sole witness."

This rule was simple enough, and went on being steadily enforced, without departure, for three quarters of a century.[2] Two or three things about it are plain. In the first place, it was limited strictly to filiation proceedings; it had no status as a rule of general application, for its reason had no such bearings. In the next place, the ground of the objection was that of interest, i. e. the wife was testifying to discharge the husband of the child's support; yet the objection did not in strictness apply (since the husband was not a party), and furthermore the exception of necessity (ante, § 612) would in any event allow her testimony to intercourse with the other man. Her testimony to non-access, however, being only technically admissible within the rule of disqualification by interest, some additional corroboration was thought essential in order to found an order; hence the doctrine of R. v. Reading forbade such an order, in Lord Hardwicke's language, where the wife was "a sole witness."

The important feature of this rule is thus the bearing of the wife's disqualification by interest; and, when the question first comes up in the United States, the same objection is the one that occupies judicial attention,[3]

[2] 1737, R. v. Bedel, Lee temp. Hardw. 379 (order of filiation, granted below upon proof of non-access by "the examination of the said E. the wife and other proof upon oath"; order confirmed: Page, J.: "Though 't is said to be on the examination of the wife, 't is also upon other good proof upon oath"); 1752, R. v. Rook, 1 Wils. 340 (order of filiation; the mother, being married, swore that her husband was in jail and had had no access; it was objected that "a wife cannot be admitted to prove that her husband had no access to her"; and the whole Court agreed, upon the ruling of Lord Hardwicke in R. v. Reading, that "an order of bastardy could not therefore be made upon her oath alone"; distinguishing R. v. Bedel, "for there were [other] witnesses to prove the husband had no access"; and concluding that "as the justices have determined solely upon the evidence of a wife, the order must be quashed"); 1807, R. v. Luffe, 8 East 193 (order of filiation for a married woman's bastard, granted below "upon the oath of the said M. T., as otherwise," proving non-access; Ellenborough, L. C. J.: ["The objection is] that the wife was examined generally and alone to the fact of non-access, and that the order is founded on her evidence only, whereas it is laid down in the cases that an order of this sort cannot be made on the evidence of the wife alone, but that there must be other proof of non-access"; but he pointed out that the words "as otherwise" in the order must imply other sufficient testimony upon oath; Lawrence, J.: "[The order is sustainable] because it was made upon other evidence besides that of the wife; . . . we may presume that if there had been no other evidence of non-access than that of the wife, the sessions would not have confirmed the order"; Grose and LeBlanc, JJ., spoke similarly).

[3] New Hampshire: 1844, Parker v. Way, 15 N. H. 45 (filiation proceeding, by married woman; said obiter, citing Com. v. Shepherd, Pa., that the mother is "not a witness to prove non-access"); Pennsylvania: 1801, Com. v. Stricker, 1 Browne Appendix 47 (indictment for bastardy; "the parent is not a witness to prove non-access," because "it may be proved by other testimony"); 1814, Com. v. Shepherd, 6 Binn. 283 (prosecution for begetting a bastard on a married woman; the woman allowed to testify to connection, but not to non-access, "because everything else is capable of proof by other persons, and nothing but necessity will warrant the dispensing with the rule that a woman shall not be a witness in a matter wherein her husband is concerned"; Yeates, J., diss., on the authority of R. v. M'Clean, "a case of great notoriety some years before the American revolution"; "many instances have occurred wherein that precedent has been followed; also such is the practice in England, under orders of filiation of the bastard children of married women"); circa 1825, Com. v. Wentz, 1 Ashm. 269 (indictment for fornication and bastardy; the statute of — a principle which, of course, to-day in most of our jurisdictions is outlawed (partly or entirely) by statute (ante, § 619). That the testimony is to the fact of non-access is therefore of no importance at all in this rule of R. v. Reading, except so far as the necessity-exception to the rule of disqualification by interest might not apply to that fact while it might apply to others. That the fact of non-access, of itself, was a thing not proper to be testified to, either on moral or on sentimental grounds, or that parents could not testify to illegitimacy, never for a moment occurred to these judicial expounders of the common law; and this is seen clearly enough in rulings throughout the 1700s, in other kinds of litigation, where the objection based on disqualification by interest did not arise as it did for the case of filiation-proceedings.[4]

(3) But, in the meantime, while these rulings were being made, came Lord Mansfield's sonorous utterance, in another part of the juristic field, that "the law of England," as well as "decency, morality, and policy," forbade a parent's testimony to non-access:

> 1777, Goodright v. Moss, Cowp. 591 (ejectment; issue of the claimant's legitimacy as born after marriage of F. and M.; argued for the claimant that "though the testimony of parents in their lifetime or their declarations after their decease might be admissible in cases where proof of the marriage was presumptive only, as by cohabitation or general reputation, yet neither their declarations nor their personal testimony [of birth before marriage] could be admitted to bastardize their issue, where as in this case the fact of the marriage was actually proved [by the register-entry]." MANSFIELD, L. C. J.: "All the cases cited are cases relative to children born in wedlock; and the law of England is clear that the declarations [or testimony on the stand] of a father or mother cannot be admitted to bastardize the issue born after marriage. . . . As to the time of the birth, the father and mother are the most proper witnesses to prove it. But it is a rule founded in decency, morality, and policy, that they shall not be permitted to say after marriage that they have had no connection, and therefore that the offspring is spurious; more especially the mother, who is the offending party."

It is possible to imagine more than one explanation of the aberration which prompted this utterance. But what Lord Mansfield said was plain. It might be argued that he spoke 'obiter'; yet Lord Mansfield's 'obiter dicta' were as effective as other men's positive decisions; and at any rate it was his opinion. What must be conceded and emphasized, however, is that he had no authority whatever for his utterance. If there is any such law of England, or was for any period, it was invented by him and dates from his utterance.[5]

1705 making the unmarried mother competent to prove the intercourse, held not to exclude a married mother; the opinions in Com. v. Shepherd followed and approved as to the early practice).

[4] Cases cited supra, note 1; the following utterance is plain: 1795, Kenyon, L. C. J., in R. v. Bramley, 6 T. R. 330: "Parents may be called as witnesses with respect to the legitimacy of their issue; and if they may be called to prove that they are legitimate children, there is no reason why they should be considered as incompetent when called to prove that the children are illegitimate."

[5] Compare his inventions of the rule against 'allegans suam turpitudinem' (ante, § 525) and of the rule against jurors impeaching their verdicts (post, § 2352).

Before long it began to be repeated with approval,[6] and the way was paved for substituting his new law for the existing law.[7]

(4) But what had become, in the meantime, of R. v. Reading? Was not its authority, and that of its successors, as firm and unmistakable as ever? Could Lord Mansfield's single utterance overthrow a long line of clear precedents? It could and did, but first through misconstruing them. Whom the gods wish to destroy, they first make mad; which, for legal precedents, means that they must first be misunderstood. In 1809, in R. v. Kea, within two years after R. v. Luffe [8] (the last lineal successor of R. v. Reading), the settled rule in filiation-orders was held to mean that the married mother was incompetent to testify, and not merely that she could testify but must be corroborated.[9] This, of course, was in positive contradiction of those cases, though it purported to follow them. The way was now open. R. v. Kea excluded the married mother's testimony to non-access in filiation cases; Lord Mansfield had declared for a broader exclusion of either parent's testimony to that fact in all cases. The two rules were now harmonious; one was merely broader than the other. The broader now began to be followed, and for fifty years in England was accepted without question.[10] By that

[6] 1792, Sir W. Wynne, in Smyth v. Chamberlayne, quoted in Nicolas, Adulterine Bastardy, 147, from Gardner Peerage Case, Appendix; 1813, Banbury Peerage Case, reported in Nicolas, Adulterine Bastardy, 470 (Lord Redesdale refers with doubt to a mother's declarations); 1814, Phillipps, Evidence, 1, 241.

For the modern English rule requiring corroboration for bastardy in general, see ante, § 2061.

[7] The wide contrast between the then existing law, and the law that was about to be, may be easily seen. Lord Mansfield's rule, in the first place, applied to all issues of litigation whatever; the rule of R. v. Reading applied to filiation proceedings only. Lord Mansfield's rule applied to both parents equally; the rule of R. v. Reading applied only to the mother. Again, the one was based on a broad and fixed ground of policy; while the other was flexible according to the rule of disqualification by interest. Finally, and most important, the former was a rule excluding absolutely the testimony; while the latter admitted the testimony and merely required corroboration before an order could be founded on it. This last feature of Lord Mansfield's rule was its most ill-advised one, and has constantly remained a stubborn puzzle and a source of fantastic speculation in judicial opinion.

[8] Quoted supra, note 2.

[9] 1809, R. v. Kea, 12 East 132 (order of filiation of married woman's child, granted "as well on the testimony of the said other witnesses as to the non-access of M. P., as on the evidence so given by M. D. [the wife] as aforesaid, and not exclusively on either"; order quashed, because "to hold this evidence receivable would be in direct contradiction to R. v. Reading and other cases," the wife being examinable "only to those facts which she might legally prove, and not to the non-access of the husband").

[10] 1833, Cope v. Cope, 1 Moo. & R. 269, Alderson, J. (issue to try legitimacy; wife's declarations as to the father, excluded, because "she is not allowed herself to prove the illegitimacy of the child, as by showing non-access"); 1836, R. v. Sourton, 5 A. & E. 180, K. B. (pauper-settlement; husband's testimony not receivable to prove non-access, on the authority of Goodright v. Moss, though the true doctrine of R. v. Reading was called to the Court's attention by counsel; the first bench decision positively adopting the new rule); 1841, R. v. Mansfield, 1 Q. B. 444 (pauper settlement; the wife was sole witness to non-access, but this was not treated as improper, the Court holding merely that non-access was not fully proved); 1850, Wright v. Holdgate, 3 C. & K. 158, Cresswell, J. (issue to try legitimacy; husband not admitted to prove access, on the principle of R. v. Sourton); 1855, Anon. v. Anon., 22 Beav. 481, 23 Beav. 273 (legitimacy; rule held to forbid wife's testimony to non-access before marriage, the child being then conceived); 1856, Legge v. Edmonds, 26 L. J. Ch. 125, 135 (title depending on legitimacy; wife's testimony to facts regarding non-access—here, by reason of impotency—held not receivable, by Wood, V. C., who pointed out the correct early rule, and said of the modern rule "that it appears to me to be very far from satisfactory").

time, the statutory abolition of married persons' incompetency (ante, § 620) led to a reconsideration of the question; and, for a time at least, the original and orthodox rule of R. v. Reading (but not limited to filiation cases) was revived. To what extent the law of England will pare down Lord Mansfield's innovation cannot be surely known from the modern rulings.[11]

(5) In the United States, the original practice, so far as there is any report of it, was entirely in harmony with the orthodox rule of R. v. Reading, i. e. it knew merely a rule of corroboration for married mothers in filiation or similar proceedings.[12] But the circulation of Lord Mansfield's dogmatic pronouncement, in the treatises of the early 1800s, soon brought the new rule to the attention of our Courts; and they seem usually to have accepted it with unquestioned faith.[13] It may have become, in some jurisdictions, too deeply planted to be uprooted.[14]

[11] 1870, Rideout's Trusts, L. R. 10 Eq. 41 (title depending on legitimacy; James, V. C., having in view the statutory abolition of husband's and wife's incompetency, took the fact of non-access to be proved upon the husband's testimony with other corroborating evidence; having refused to act on the husband's testimony alone); 1877, Yearwood's Trusts, L. R. 5 Ch. D. 545 (title depending on legitimacy; Hall, V. C., followed the preceding case, similar in its facts, as involving the principle that the evidence was "admissible, but not to be acted upon unless corroborated by other evidence"); 1879, Nottingham Guardians v. Tomkinson, L. R. 4 C. P. D. 343 (ruling in Yearwood's Trusts doubted); 1889, Burnaby v. Baillie, L. R. 42 Ch. D. 282, 294 (similar).

[12] 1801, Yeates, J., in Com. v. Shepherd, Pa., quoted supra, note 3.

[13] Federal: 1825, Stegall v. Stegall's Adm'r, 2 Brockenb. 256, 262 (title depending on legitimacy; whether mother's testimony to non-access was admissible, left undecided; Marshall, C. J.); Arkansas: 1915, Kennedy v. State, 117 Ark. 113, 173 S. W. 842 (filiation of a bastard; the married mother's testimony to non-access of her husband, held inadmissible; here her testimony to the defendant's intercourse was admitted, but the presumption of legitimacy is held to prevail for lack of any evidence of non-access by the husband; the opinion heartily approves Lord Mansfield's rule and unctuously descants on the propriety of forbidding the resolution of "secrets purely delicate and personal" which it would be "grossly indecent to advertize to the world" and would "scandalize the marital relation"; but the opinion fails to explain why the mention of the married mother's marital non-access does all these shocking things and yet the mention of her adultery with the defendant does not; the sentimental view of the present doctrine has never been able to square itself with logic); California: Civ. C. 1872, §§ 144, 145 (provisions as to presumption of legitimacy after divorce for adultery of husband or of wife); 1902, Mills' Estate, 137 Cal. 298, 70 Pac. 91 (rule applied to A.'s wife's testimony to non-access with A., in favor of her children claiming as illegitimate heirs of B.; but the opinion seems to confuse this rule and the presumption of legitimacy, post, § 2527); 1911, People v. Richardson, 161 Cal. 552, 120 Pac. 20 (defendant was charged with administering drugs with intent to commit abortion, to a woman seduced by him in August, 1908—June, 1909, and married to another man in August, 1909, the child being safely born alive in December, 1909; the mother's testimony to the pregnancy by the defendant, held not to be excluded by the present doctrine); 1919, McNamara's Estate, 181 Cal. 82, 183 Pac. 552 (inheritance; wife may testify to separation during marriage; but may not testify to non-intercourse during the period of cohabitation; the Code does not sanction the common-law rule here in question; Mills' Estate not approved on that point; and the prohibition above noted is attributed to the

---

[14] It has been held that the abolition of disqualification by interest does not abolish this rule: 1880, Egbert v. Greenwalt, 44 Mich. 245, 248, 6 N. W. 654; 1861, Chamberlain v. People, 23 N. Y. 85, 88; 1874, Tioga v. South Creek, 75 Pa. 433, 437.

Distinguish the question as to using hearsay statements under the pedigree-exception (ante, §§ 1494, 1500), and the question as to the force of the presumption of legitimacy (post, § 2527).

Compare the rulings on corroboration in bastardy (ante, § 2061), and the modern statutes making parents competent in cases of family-desertion (ante, § 488); which presumably would avail to nullify the present rule in issues of family desertion.

conclusive presumption of legitimacy, post, § 2527; Melvin, J., diss.); Delaware: 1912, Bancroft v. Bancroft, 27 Del. 9, 85 Atl. 561 (question not decided); Georgia: 1854, Wright v. Hicks, 15 Ga. 160, 172 (adulterine bastardy; the declarations of the parents, were they alive, were said to be not admissible, "but being dead, they are competent testimony"); Hawaii: 1906, Godfrey v. Rowland, 17 Haw. 577, 583 (rule followed); Rev. L. 1915, § 2975 (in prosecutions for wife-desertion, etc., the parents are competent as to "the parentage of such child or children"); Indiana: 1868, Dean v. State, 29 Ind. 483 (bastardy suit by a married woman whose husband had been absent in the army; the mother admitted as a witness); 1905, Evans v. State, 165 Ind. 369, 74 N. E. 244 (bastardy; the married mother's testimony to non-access of her husband is admissible); 1905, Evans v. State, 165 Ind. 369, 75 N. E. 651 (the married mother, on a bastardy charge, may testify to non-access; repudiating the policy of the above rule, but reaching the result under Burns' Ann. St. 1914, §§ 1015, 1019 quoted ante, §§ 488, 1326, 1387, 1413, by refusing to imply the rule into the statute as a qualification; refusing also to require corroboration as a rule of law); Iowa: 1908, Wallace v. Wallace, 137 Ia. 37, 114 N. W. 527 (divorce on the ground of wife's pregnancy by another man at the time of marriage; a child was born four months after marriage; the wife's affidavit of her ante-marital intercourse with the other man and of lack of intercourse with the husband at the same period, rejected; but on the former point alone, the Court would have admitted the affidavits); Kansas: Gen. St. 1915, § 3415 (like Haw. Rev. L. § 2975); Louisiana: 1829, Tate v. Penne, 7 Mart. N. S. 548, 555 (title depending on legitimacy; declarations of the mother, a party, held inadmissible under the French law); Massachusetts: 1814, Canton v. Bentley, 11 Mass. 441 (pauper settlement; husband's testimony to his absence from the wife during the appropriate period, to prove the son illegitimate, held probably inadmissible; question expressly not decided, and no cases cited); 1861, Hemmenway v. Towner, 1 All. 209 (illegitimacy; father's declarations not admitted, but on the ground of the presumption of legitimacy); 1862, Haddock v. R. Co., 3 All. 656 (ejectment; parent's declarations as to offspring being spurious, inadmissible); 1870, Abington v. Duxbury, 105 Mass. 287, 290 (pauper settlement; wife's testimony to non-access, excluded); 1922, Taylor v. Whittier, — Mass. —, 134 N. E. 346 (devise to a child, whose legitimacy was disputed; on the issue of impotency, the mother's testimony was held inadmissible); Michigan: 1880, Egbert v. Greenwalt, 44 Mich. 245, 248, 6 N. W. 654 (crim. con.; wife's and husband's testimony to their non-intercourse during cohabitation, so as to fix defendant as author of her pregnancy, held inadmissible); 1897, Rabeke v. Baer, 115 Mich. 328, 73 N. W. 242 (marriage with R. in February, and a child in September; wife's testimony to non-intercourse with R. before marriage, excluded, in an action against B. for seduction in the previous October; but to intercourse with B. in October, allowed); 1921, Brown v. Long Mfg. Co., 213 Mich. 221, 182 N. W. 124 (claim as child of deceased employee; testimony of alleged wife and deceased father as to non-access, held not within the present rule, the parties not being lawfully married); New York: 1832, Cross v. Cross, 3 Paige Ch. 139, 141 (wife's admissions, not receivable to establish non-access, in a bill for divorce and declaration of illegitimacy); 1841, Ratcliff v. Wales, 1 Hill 63, 65 (obiter statement similar to the next ruling); 1853, People v. Overseers, 15 Barb. 286, 292 (filiation of married woman's bastard; mother inadmissible to prove non-access); 1861, Chamberlain v. People, 23 N. Y. 85, 88 (perjury by husband in trial of divorce for adultery, by testifying to non-access to the wife; declared to be improper testimony); North Carolina: 1825, State v. Pettaway, 3 Hawks 623, 625 (filiation of married woman's bastard; mother not allowed to speak to non-access); 1849, State v. Wilson, 10 Ired. 131 (bastardy; opinion obscure, but apparently assumes that the wife was not competent as to non-access); 1874, Boykin v. Boykin, 70 N. C. 262 (neither husband nor wife may prove access or non-access); 1916, West v. Redmond, 171 N. C. 742, 88 S. E. 341 (partition proceedings; principle applied to exclude a mother's declarations as to a child's illegitimacy); Oklahoma: Comp. St. 1921, § 8024 (presumption of legitimacy can be disputed by husband or wife only, etc.; "illegitimacy, in such case, may be proved like any other fact"); 1899, Bell v. Terr., 8 Okl. 75, 56 Pac. 853 (bastardy; mother may not testify to the husband's non-access); Oregon: 1921, Westfall v. Westfall, 100 Or. 224, 197 Pac. 271 (annulment of marriage for fraud in concealing pregnancy; rule cited); Pennsylvania: the early cases are cited supra, note 3; 1857, Dennison v. Page, 29 Pa. 420, 423 (legitimacy; neither parent may prove non-access); 1874, Tioga v. South Creek, 75 Pa. 433, 536 (pauper settlement; same ruling); South Carolina: 1853, Johnson v. Chapman, Busbee Eq. 213 (title depending on legitimacy of a posthumous child; father's admissions as to non-access, held inadmissible); 1868, Moseley v. Eakin, 15 Rich. 324, 340 (wife admitted to testify that a marriage was consummated by intercourse, but not the contrary to prove a child spurious); Texas: 1892, Simon v. State, 31 Tex. Cr. 186, 196, 199 (incest; declarations of defendant's parents as to his illegitimacy, excluded); Utah: Comp. L. 1917, § 8113 (desertion or non-support of wife or child; husband and wife may testify to "the fact of such marriage and the parentage of such child"); Vermont: Gen. L. 1917, § 3541 (family-desertion; hus-

It is agreed, however, on all hands that the prohibited testimony concerns solely the specific fact of non-access, i. e. testimony to any other fact constituting illegitimacy, or to illegitimacy in general, is admissible.[15]

The example of the modern English judges in allowing the question to be reconsidered justifies us in inquiring whether there is any sound policy which to-day can be invoked in its maintenance.

§ 2064. Same: (b) Policy of the Rule. In considering the possible grounds upon which the rule may be supported, the rule of disqualification by interest may be dismissed as irrelevant. That rule was advanced as the foundation of the original rule of corroboration,[1] and it did have a bearing in the specific and original case of filiation-proceedings (although even there it was technically satisfied), but not on the fact of non-access, merely or always.

The rule, then, as an independent one, standing by itself, must be based upon some extrinsic ground of "decency, morality, and policy," in Lord Mansfield's phrase. But why is such a person's testimony to such a fact indecent, immoral, or impolitic? Among several judicial efforts to supply an answer to this question, the following may be taken as typical:

1874, GORDON, J., in Tioga v. South Creek, 75 Pa. 433, 437: "Many reasons have been given for this rule. Prominent among them is the idea that the admission of such testimony would be unseemly and scandalous; and this, not so much from the fact that it reveals immoral conduct upon the part of the parents, as because of the effect it may have upon the child, who is in no fault, but who must nevertheless be the chief sufferer thereby. That the parents should be permitted to bastardize the child is a proposition which shocks our sense of right and decency."

band and wife competent and compellable as to any fact, "including . . . the parentage of such child"); Virginia: 1811, Bowles v. Bingham, 2 Munf. 442 (title depending on legitimacy; the answer of the husband, an opponent, denied legitimacy on the ground of non-access; point not decided); Wisconsin: 1884, Mink v. State, 60 Wis. 583, 585, 19 N. W. 445 (prosecution by a married woman for filiation of a bastard; wife's testimony to non-access, held inadmissible); 1885, Watts v. Owens, 62 Wis. 512, 519, 22 N. W. 720 (same ruling, on an issue of legitimacy); 1892, Shuman v. Shuman, 83 Wis. 250, 53 N. W. 455 (title depending on legitimacy; parents' statements of non-access, excluded).

[15] Eng. 1860, Darcy's Infants, 11 Ir. C. L. R. 298 (legitimacy under a will; mother's affidavits to an illegal Roman Catholic ceremony, admitted); 1875, Murray v. Milner, L. R. 12 Ch. D. 845, 849 (deceased father's statements in a will, as to "my reputed son," admitted); 1885, Aylesford Peerage Case, L. R. 11 App. Cas. 1 (a letter of the mother, held admissible, not as an assertion regarding legitimacy, but as an "act of an important nature done by the mother with reference to the care, custody, and bringing up of her child"); 1903, Poulett Peerage, App. Cas. 395 (legitimacy of a peerage claimant, born less than six months after the marriage; the father's testimony of non-access before marriage and of separation shortly after marriage upon the wife's confession of pregnancy by another man before marriage, admitted; the general principle held not to include such a case).

Can. 1892, Mulligan v. Thompson, 23 Ont. 54 (loss of service; rule not applicable to illegitimate birth as evidence of seduction; commenting on Evans v. Watt, 2 Ont. 166, and Ryan v. Miller, 21 U. C. Q. B. 202, 22 id. 87).

U. S. Cal. 1919, McNamara's Estate, 181 Cal. 82, 183 Pac. 552 (inheritance of a child born during separation of husband and wife; the presumption of legitimacy here being not conclusive, the deceased husband's admissions that he was the father were received); Ia. 1862, Niles v. Sprague, 13 Ia. 198, 207 (declarations denying marriage, admitted on the facts); Pa. 1801, Com. v. Stricker, 1 Browne, Appendix 47 (bastardy; mother, a married woman, may prove anything but non-access); S. C. 1819, Allen v. Hall, 2 Nott & McC. 114 (partition; parent admissible to disprove marriage).

§ 2064. [1] Cases cited ante, § 2063, note 2.

We learn, then, that the indecency or unseemliness lies in allowing a person to testify to an illicit connection, and that the immorality consists in allowing a parent to give testimony which will ruin his own child's legal status. The utterly artificial and false nature of the rule could not more forcibly appear than in the inconsistency of these 'ex post facto' reasons. (1) There is an indecency, we are told. And yet, in nine cases out of ten, the sole question that the wife is asked is (for example) whether her husband was in St. Louis from 1849 to 1853 during the time that she was in New York. Is this indecent? Moreover, the very next question may be whether during that time she lived with the alleged adulterer; and this (by general concession) is indubitably allowable. In every sort of action whatever, a wife may testify to adultery or a single woman to illicit intercourse; yet the one fact singled out as "indecent" is the fact of non-access on the part of a husband. Such an inconsistency is obviously untenable.[2] (2) There is an immorality and a scandal, we are told, in allowing married parents to bastardize their children. And yet they may lawfully commit this same immorality by any sort of testimony whatever, except to the fact of non-access. They may testify that there was no marriage-ceremony, or that the child was born before marriage, or that the one party was already married to a third person, or their hearsay declarations (after death) to illegitimacy in general may be used. In all these other ways they may lawfully do the mean act of helping to bastardize their own children born after marriage. Where is the consistency here? Of what value is this conjuring phrase about "bastardizing the issue," if it will not do the trick more than once in a dozen times? Moreover, what shall be said of a system of law which, while thus rebuking parents who come to prove their children bastards, at the same time by its own inhuman prohibition (unique among civilized peoples) has refused absolutely to allow those parents, by any means whatever, to remove afterwards (by legitimation) the consequences of their original error and to give to their innocent children the sanction of lawful birth, — a refusal which is still maintained in most of our jurisdictions? That the same law which harshly fixes the stain of bastardy as perpetually indelible should censure parents for the abomination of testifying to that bastardy is preposterous.

The truth is that these high-sounding "decencies" and "moralities" are mere pharisaical afterthoughts, invented to explain an otherwise incomprehensible rule, and having no support in the established facts and policies of our law. There never was any true precedent for the rule; and there is just as little reason of policy to maintain it.

§ 2065. Surviving Claimant's Testimony against Deceased; Oral Admissions of Deceased; Advancements and Bequests. Beginning with a modern

[2] 1801, Rush, P., in Com. v. Stricker, 1 Browne, Appendix 47 Pa.: "To admit a married woman, upon an inquiry into the legitimacy of a child born in the absence of her husband, to swear she has lived in adultery, . . . and at the same time to say that she shall not give evidence that her husband had no access to her, because the evidence would be indecent, seems rather mysterious and incomprehensible."

Chancery ruling in England, an effort was there made to declare, by an inflexible rule, that the testimony of a claimant on his own behalf, in support of a claim against a deceased person, could never of itself suffice, but must be corroborated by other evidence:

1886, CHATTERTON, V. C., in Re Harnett, 17 L. R. Ire. 543, 547: "Look at the result of acting on such evidence alone. A claimant, who cannot by possibility be contradicted, and who may be too clever and unscrupulous to break down under cross-examination, could put forward a claim founded solely on his own oath, which the judge can detect no reason for disregarding, and which in the absence of such a rule he would be bound to act upon, the only person who could contradict it being dead. It is not a rule which depends on the character of the witness, but on the manifest danger which requires the establishment of a general rule applicable to all alike from the great difficulty or impossibility of detecting falsehood."

The danger against which this rule attempts to guard is plausible, and the same which has led, in most States, to the absolute exclusion of such testimony. But the obnoxious character of that rule has been already noticed (ante, § 578). It remains only to oberve that the present rule, though decidedly an improvement over the rule of exclusion, and though lacking the peculiar vices of the latter, is nevertheless a misguided one. In the first place, it favors the dead above the living, for it would rather see an honest survivor unjustly lose his claim than an honest decedent be made unjustly to pay; yet, the equities being equal, the living person should rather be favored. In the next place, it is based on a mere contingency — the contingency that the claim will be dishonest and that there will be no means of exposing its dishonesty; and so, for the sake of defeating the dishonest man who may arise, the rule is willing to defeat the much more numerous honest men who are sure to possess just claims. Again, the rule in England was utterly inconsistent (until recently) with the practice in criminal cases. The mouth of the accused was closed by law, as in civil cases that of the opponent was closed by death; yet no judge on this account was found to advance a rule that the person injured by the crime must be corroborated in order that a conviction might be supported. Finally, there is always an abstract impropriety and injustice in any rule which interposes a technicality to prevent judicial action upon testimony which is in fact completely believed and trusted:

1885, BRETT, M. R., in Re Garnett, L. R. 31 Ch. D. 1, 9: "There is no such law. Are we to be told that a person whom everybody on earth would believe, who is produced as a witness before the judge, who gives his evidence in such a way that anybody would be perfectly senseless who did not believe him, whose evidence the judge in fact believes to be absolutely true, is according to a doctrine of the Courts of Equity not to be believed by the judge because he is not corroborated? The proposition seems unreasonable the moment it is stated. . . . The evidence ought to be thoroughly sifted, and the mind of any judge who hears it ought to be first of all in a state of suspicion. But if in the end the truthfulness of the witnesses is made perfectly clear and apparent, and the tribunal which has to act on their evidence believes them, the suggested doctrine becomes absurd. And what is ridiculous and absurd never is, to my mind, to be adopted either in law or in equity."

Nor did this rule ever obtain a final place in English law. It was, after some time, completely repudiated in England [1] and in some Courts of Canada; [2] although it has been preserved by the Courts of Ireland,[3] and has been legislated into Canadian law.[4]

§ 2065. [1] 1852, Crouch v. Hooper, 16 Beav. 182 (Romilly, M. R.: "In these cases, from the nature of the evidence given, it is not subject to any worldly sanction, it being obviously impossible that any witness should be convicted of perjury for speaking of what he remembers to have been said in a conversation with a deceased person"); 1865, Grant v. Grant, 34 Beav. 623, 627 (parol gift to a wife, claimed by her against the executor; Sir J. Romilly, M. R.: "There is a rule constantly acted on in chambers in equity, that the unsupported testimony of any person on his own behalf cannot be safely acted on"; here corroboration was found); 1865, Down v. Ellis, 35 Beav. 578, 581 (similar ruling by same judge); 1873, Hill v. Wilson, L. R. 8 Ch. App. 888, 899 (gift to the plaintiff by the deceased of money covered by a note from the plaintiff; one judge said that the plaintiff's testimony, "unless corroborated, should be wholly disregarded"); 1875, Fowkes v. Pascoe, L. R. 10 id. 343, 349 (gift claimed against a deceased's estate; James, L. J.: "Although this Court has more than once said that it is too dangerous to rely on the mere evidence of a party interested as to conversations with a deceased person, yet it is legally admissible, and is not to be disregarded"); 1882, Re Finch, L. R. 23 Ch. D. 267 (similar facts; Jessel, M. R.: "It is the first time I have ever heard of such a doctrine as this. . . . It is a rule of prudence that, sitting as a jury, we do not give credence to the unsupported testimony of the claimant; with a view, no doubt, of preventing perjury and with a view of protecting a dead man's estate from unfounded claims. It is not a rule of law, but it is a question to be decided by a jury"; Baggallay, L. J., speaks of it as "the general rule," Lindley, L. J., as "the ordinary practice. . . to be very reluctant" in such cases); 1883, Maddison v. Alderson, L. R. 8 App. Cas. 467, 487 (Lord Blackburn denied the existence of such a rule); 1885, Re Richardson, L. R. 30 Ch. D. 400 (circumstances held to furnish corroboration); 1885, Re Garnett, L. R. 31 App. Cas. 1, 8 (quoted supra); 1885, Re Hodgson, 31 App. Cas. 177 (Sir J. Hannen: "We are of opinion that there is no rule of English law laying down such a proposition").

[2] Man. 1885, Rankin v. McKenzie, 3 Man. 323 (creditor's claim against an estate; Hill v. Wilson, Eng., followed); 1906, Doidge v. Mimms, 13 Man. 48, 54 ("There is no distinct law against it; the rule is one of prudence only"; but here it was applied); N. Br. 1874, Ex parte Simpson, 15 N. Br. 142, 144 (the uncorroborated evidence of an interested person, fixing an estate with liability, ought to be "very clear and free from suspicion"); 1880, Powell v. Wark, 20 N. Br. 15, 24 (there is no rule requiring such corroboration; but "it would be well if it were enacted"); N. W. Terr. 1901, Blank Estate, 5 Terr. L. R. 230 (the rule of corroboration held not applicable in passing an administrator's account, but only where a claim is contested in court; Re Garnett and Re Hodgson approved).

[3] 1869, Hartford v. Power, Ir. R. 3 Eq. 602, 607 (claim of loan against deceased woman's separate estate; Chatterton, V. C., refused to allow "any claim merely upon the unsupported evidence of the claimant"; following Lord Romilly's rule); 1879, Re Boak, L. R. Ire. 3 Ch. D. 222 (similar); 7 id. 322, 327 (ruling affirmed on appeal); 1886, Re Harnett, 17 L. R. Ire. 543, 547 (rule continued, in spite of the English rulings).

[4] CANADA: Dominion: 1903, McDonald v. McDonald, 33 Can. Sup. 145 (applying the Nova Scotia statute); 1903, Thompson v. Coulter, 34 Can. Sup. 261 (applying the Ontario statute);

Alberta: St. 1910, 2d sess., c. 3, Evidence Act, §§ 12, 13 (like Ont. Rev. St. c. 76, § 12); 1914, Voyer v. Le Page, 17 D. L. R. 476 (mortgage claim; Alta. Stat. 1910, c. 3, Evid. Act, § 12, applied); 1914, Voyer v. Le Page, 19 D. L. R. 52 (partnership and mortgage; under Evidence Act, § 12, where separate transactions are involved, corroboration as to some only suffices if it satisfies the Court of the party's general credibility); 1915, Brocklebank v. Barter, 22 D. L. R. 209 (building-contract; Alta. Evid. Act, § 12 held not to require corroboration where the "party's own evidence" is "documentary"); 1921, Imperial Bank v. Trusts & Guarantee Co., 57 D. L. R. 693 (note indorsed by the deceased; issue as to the deceased's waiver of notice of dishonor; the rule held not applicable to the testimony of an employee of a bank acting as collecting agent);

British Columbia: Rev. St. 1911, c. 78, §§ 10, 11 (substantially like Ont. R. S. c. 76, §§ 12, 13); 1904, Blacquierre v. Corr, 10 B. C. 448; 1914, Groat v. Kinnaird, 20 D. L. R. 421 (B. C. Ev. Act, § 12, requiring corroboration, held not applicable to a son who was defendant to a counterclaim by the executors for a loan, unless the executors had made out a 'prima facie' case so that the burden of proof shifted to the son to prove that the money received was a gift; per Beck, J.: "It is much to be regretted that such a provision appears in our Evidence Act; I think it is calculated to produce gross injustice in many cases");

In the United States, it has been introduced in a few jurisdictions by statute,[5] — not as a reproduction of a supposed English rule, but rather as 1915, Ledingham v. Skinner, 21 D. L. R. 300 (claim for board and lodging furnished by plaintiff's wife; the wife's testimony held not sufficient corroboration, under B. C. R. S. 1911, c. 78, § 11; two judges diss.);

Newfoundland: Consol. St. 1916, c. 91, §§ 13, 14 (like Ont. R. S. c. 76, §§ 12, 13);
Nova Scotia: Rev. St. 1900, c. 163, § 35 (quoted ante, § 488); construed in the following cases: 1877, Chesley v. Murdock, 2 Can. Sup. 48; 1879, Confederation L. Ass'n v. O'Donnell, 2 Russ. & C. 570, Can. Sup. Cassels' Dig. 1893, p. 370; 1910, Kaulbach's Estate, Moorhead v. Kaulbach, 45 N. Sc. 62 (each fact material to recovery must be corroborated); 1916, Josephs v. Morton, 26 D. L. R. 433 (claim against an insolvent deceased; corroboration required); 1917, McGuire v. McGuire, 33 D. L. R. 103, whether a sum of money handed by deceased to D. was a gift 'causa mortis,' not 'inter vivos'; corroboration required for the donee under R. S. 1900, c. 163, § 35);
Ontario: Rev. St. 1914, c. 73, § 12 (in an action "by or against the heirs, next of kin, executors, administrators, or assigns of a deceased person, an opposite or interested party to the action shall not obtain a verdict, judgment, or decision therein, on his own evidence, in respect of any matter occurring before the death of the deceased person, unless such evidence is corroborated by some other material evidence"); § 13 ("In an action by or against a lunatic so found or an inmate of a lunatic asylum, or a person who from unsoundness of mind is incapable of giving evidence, an opposite or interested party shall not obtain a verdict, judgment, or decision on his own evidence, unless such evidence is corroborated by some other material evidence"); some of the cases applying the statute are as follows: 1876, Birdsell v. Johnson, 24 Grant 202; 1878, McDonald v. McKinnon, 26 Grant 12; 1881, Halleran v. Moon, 28 Grant 319; 1886, Tucker v. McMahon, 11 Ont. 718; 1891, Radford v. Macdonald, 18 Ont. App. 167 (leading case); 1896, Green v. McLeod, 23 Ont. App. 676; 1910, Schwent v. Roetter, 21 Ont. L. R. 112 (statute applied); 1920, Mushol v. Benjamin, 54 D. L. R. 248 (moneys advanced to deceased; corroborative evidence not needed for each item separately, where there is "an underlying connection between several items" and there is sufficient corroboration as to some); 1921, Capital Trust Co. v. Fowler, 64 D. L. R. 289 (stock bought on false representations; the statute held not to apply to the opponent's answers on discovery are used against him in part; Magee, J. A., diss.); 1921, Hawley v. Hand, 64 D. L. R. 504 (action by an execution creditor of the estate of H., to set aside transfers of stock by H. to his wife as fraudulent; held that the wife's testimony in support of the transfer, though not within the letter of the statute, was within the spirit, but that the judge was at liberty to act upon the wife's uncorroborated testimony; the opinion turns in part on the burden of proof of good faith in transfers between relatives, on the principle of § 2504, post);
Prince Edward Island: St. 1889, c. 9, § 11 (like Ont. Rev. St. c. 76, § 12); § 12 (like ib. § 13);
Yukon: Consol. Ord. 1914, c. 30, § 35 (like N. Sc. Rev. St. 1900, c. 163, § 35).

[5] Federal: 1916, Bassity's Estate, U. S. Court for China, Extra-terr. Cas. 595 (U. S. St. 1900, c. 786, cited infra, under Alaska, applied);
Alaska: U. S. St. 1900, June 6, c. 786, § 823, Alaska Comp. L. 1913, § 1655 (no claim against a decedent's estate, rejected by the executor, etc., shall be allowed "except upon some competent or satisfactory evidence other than the testimony of the claimant");
Illinois: Rev. St. 1874, c. 3, § 60 (if objection is made to a claim against a decedent's estate, "the same shall not be allowed without other sufficient evidence" than the claimant's oath to his claim in writing);
Louisiana: St. 1906, No. 207 ("Parol evidence shall be incompetent to prove any debt or liability upon the part of a party deceased, except it consist of the testimony of at least one credible witness of good moral character besides the plaintiff; or except it be to corroborate a written acknowledgment or promise to pay signed by the debtor; or unless an action upon the asserted indebtedness shall have been brought within a delay of twelve months after the decease of the debtor"); 1920, Manion's Succession, 148 La. 98, 86 So. 667 (under St. 1906, No. 207, all parol evidence is excluded, if the claim is not sued on before 12 months); 1922, Moon v. Dye, 150 La. 254, 90 So. 639 (son's debt to mother; statute applied);
New Mexico: Annot. St. 1915, §§ 2175, 2280 (in a suit by or against the heirs, etc., of a deceased person, "an opposite or interested party to the suit shall not obtain a verdict, judgment, or decision therein, on his own evidence, in respect to any matter occurring before the death of the deceased person, unless such evidence is corroborated by some other material evidence"); 1891, Gildersleeve v. Atkinson, 6 N. M. 250, 27 Pac. 477 (corroboration defined; it must "of itself . . . point with reasonable certainty to the allegation"); 1898, Byerts v. Robinson, 9 N. M. 427, 54 Pac. 932 (statute applied); 1904, Gillett v. Chaves, 12 N. M. 353, 78 Pac. 68 (statute applied); 1910, Childers v. Hubbell, 15 N. M. 450, 110 Pac. 1051 (statute applied); 1910, Radcliffe v. Chaves, 15 N. M. 258, 110 Pac. 699 (statute a half-way measure intended to answer the same purpose as the statutes which in other jurisdictions (ante, §§ 488, 578) absolutely prohibit such testimony.

In a few States a similar rule is recognized for proof of an oral agreement for an advancement or bequest by a deceased;[6] and in a few jurisdictions a claim against a decedent's estate cannot be sufficiently established by the decedent's oral admissions alone.[7] applied); 1915, National Rubber Co. v. Oleson, 20 N. M. 624, 151 Pac. 695 (statute applied); 1915, Union Land & G. Co. v. Arce, 21 N. M. 115, 152 Pac. 1143 (statute applied); 1921, 1922, Cardoner's Est., Bujac v. Wilson, — N. M. —, 196 Pac. 327, — N. M. —, 206 Pac. 1070 (contract to carry on litigation; rule of Gildersleeve v. Atkinson adhered to; as to the suggestion above in the text, that the rule is unwise in that it prevents recovery where the Court "believes absolutely in the claimant's testimony and feels sure that he ought to recover, as we feel free to say we do in this case," the opinion points out that the Legislature must remedy this, "if the rule is bad in policy"; statute held not applicable to matters occurring since the death);

Oregon: Laws 1920, § 1241 (no claim against an executor or administrator, if rejected by him, shall be allowed "except upon some competent or satisfactory evidence other than the testimony of the claimant"); 1904, Goltra v. Pentland, 45 Or. 254, 77 Pac. 129 (nature of the corroboration, defined);
Virginia: Code 1919, § 6209 ("In an action or suit by or against a person who, from any cause, is incapable of testifying, or by or against the committee, trustee, executor, administrator, heir, or other representative of the person so incapable of testifying, no judgment or decree shall be rendered in favor of an adverse or interested party founded on his uncorroborated testimony; and in any such action or suit, if such adverse party testifies, all entries, memoranda, and declarations by the party so incapable of testifying made while he was capable, relevant to the matter in issue, may be received as evidence"); 1921, Robertson's Ex'r v. Atlantic C. R. Co., 129 Va. 494, 106 S. E. 521 (Code 1919, § 6209, requiring corroboration, does not apply to the testimony of an agent making a contract with a deceased person, the agent not being "an adverse or interested party").

In New Hampshire, a statute allowing the Court to admit such testimony exceptionally, where "injustice may be done without the testimony," has been interpreted to mean that the injustice must appear from other evidence, i. e. a species of corroboration: N. H. Pub. St. 1891, c. 224, §§ 16, 17 quoted ante, § 488; 1919, Cobb v. Follansbee, 79 N. H. 205, 107 Atl. 630 (reviews the entire body of rulings under this statute).

In Maryland, an analogous rule requires a claim of contract against a deceased person to be established by "clear and satisfactory proof from disinterested sources"; 1903, Duckworth v. Duckworth, 98 Md. 92, 56 Atl. 490 (citing the prior cases, and ruling also as to the use of the deceased's admissions).

[6] California: 1917, Emerson's Estate, 175 Cal. 724, 167 Pac. 149 (the heirs charging a special administrator with a loan of $9000 by the deceased his brother, the administrator testified to an oral settlement with the brother; held (1) that the evidence needed corroboration on the present principle, and (2) that it was prohibited by Cal. C. C. P. § 1880, par. 3); New Jersey: 1896, Cochrane v. McEntee, — N. J. Eq. —, 51 Atl. 279 (uncorroborated testimony of a daughter, as to a promise by her deceased parents to make her a bequest, held insufficient "under the usual rule of a court of equity"; citing only Jacob's Fisher's Digest, p. 1504); New York: The following explanation has been made: 1918, McKeon v. Van Slyck, 223 N. Y. 398, 119 N. E. 851 ("In Hamlin v. Stevens, 177 N. Y. 39, we said that oral declarations of an intention to bequeath one's estate to another ought not to be held sufficient basis for the finding of a contract unless corroborated in all substantial particulars by disinterested witnesses. In saying that, we did not mean to lay down a rule of law"); 1919, Ward v. New York Life Ins. Co., 225 N. Y. 314, 322, 122 N. E. 207 (foregoing case approved); 1919, Re Sherman, Re De-Yoe's Estate, 227 N. Y. 350, 125 N. E. 546 (earlier cases distinguished); 1920, Atkins v. Nelson, App. T. 184 N. Y. Suppl. 876 (foregoing cases noticed); 1922, Re Sullivan, Surr. Ct., 192 N. Y. Suppl. 318 (claim for board furnished to decedent; "claims of this character must be carefully scrutinized"; prior rulings noticed); Tennessee: 1919, Gibson v. Buis, 142 Tenn. 133, 218 S. W. 220 (advancement to a legatee, claimed by her as a gift; rule applied to her testimony; citing only the erroneous statement of an American treatise that "the English Courts" apply such a rule).

[7] 1906, Clarke v. Roberts' Estate, 38 Colo. 316, 87 Pac. 1077; 1918, Fee v. Wells, 65 Colo. 348, 176 Pac. 829 (alleged parol trust of an insurance amount; the beneficiary's admissions of a trust, held not sufficient); 1855, Wilder v. Franklin's Ex'r, 10 La. An.

§ 2065*a*. Industrial Patent Applicant's Claim of Prior Invention. In patent causes, where an existing grant of patent is sought to be avoided by the fact of priority of another claimant's invention of the same thing, the assertion of the rival claimant that his conception and use of the invention were prior in time will often describe conduct and events taking place in the privacy of his own workshop or home. Such assertions are easy to make and hard to meet. Accordingly, a rule of practice has grown up in the United States Patent Office declaring that the alleged inventor's uncorroborated testimony will not suffice.[1] But this rule has not been definitely sanctioned by the Federal Supreme Court.[2]

Nor should it be. There can be no need for such a rule of law (ante, § 2033), especially where the evidence is weighed by a seasoned official acting without a jury. If the official does not believe the claimant's assertion, his own reasoning suffices to support his judgment of credibility. If he does believe the assertion, he should not be hampered by a fixed rule of thumb interfering with that judgment. That he should be cautious in relying on such assertions, is unquestioned:

279; 1883, Bodenheimer v. Bodenheimer's Ex'r, 35 La. An. 1005; 1919, Roy v. King's Estate, 55 Mont. 567, 179 Pac. 821 (action for board and lodging furnished to deceased; her admissions held sufficient); 1855, Portis v. Hill, 14 Tex. 69.

Compare the rule in some jurisdictions for the sufficiency of proof of such claims by oral admissions of a trust (ante, § 2054, n. 4).

§ 2065a*. [1] 1895, Hisey v. Peters, 6 D. C. App. 68 (priority of inventions; priority of conception rested "virtually upon the imperfectly supported assertions of H. himself; and this, according to the repeated rulings by the Commissioners of Patents, is not deemed sufficient evidence of the fact of priority in a case of interference, and especially not where there are circumstances that throw doubt upon the accuracy of the allegation or statement"; citing only rulings of the Commissioner of Patents); 1897, Mergenthaler v. Scudder, D. C. 11 App. 264 ("It has been ruled in many cases that the mere unsupported evidence of the alleged inventor on an issue of priority as to the fact of conception and the time thereof cannot be received as sufficient proof of the fact of prior conception"; citing only rulings of the Commissioner of Patents); 1908, Durkee v. Winguist, 31 D. C. App. 248 ("It is well settled that the uncorroborated testimony of a junior party in an 'interference' is insufficient to overcome the presumption attaching to the prior filing date of the senior party"); 1909, Schmidt v. Clark, 32 D. C. App. 290; 1912, Huff v. Gulick, 38 D. C. App. 334; 1913, Kitchen v. Smith, 189 Off. Gaz. 255, 39 D. C. App. 500, Decisions Com. Pat. 1913, p. 335 ("An inventor's uncorroborated testimony is not sufficient to establish conception of the invention or its reduction to practice"; citing precedents); 1913, Shields v. Lees, 41 D. C. App. 236; 1920, H. C. Underwood, Interference Practice, p. 61 ("the mere uncorroborated statements of an inventor are not sufficient to show conception, disclosure, or reduction to practice").

[2] 1891, Clark Thread Co. v. Willimantic Linen Co., 140 U. S. 481 (invention said to have anticipated one patented in 1858; the Court remarks, the only evidence as to time being the inventor's own testimony, "that species of evidence in cases of this kind ought to be received with great caution"); 1891, The Barbed Wire Patent, 143 U. S. 275, 284 (quoted supra); 1917, Crone v. Gibson Co., 2d C. C. A., 247 Fed. 503 (anticipation of invention; "written corroboration" as to date, not necessary); 1922, Armstrong v. DeForest Radio T. & T. Co., D. C. S. D. N. Y., 279 Fed. 445 (Mayer, D. J.: "I do not understand that corroboration, in the sense of full knowledge by a witness of the inventive conception and an understanding of the apparatus, in addition to the testimony of the inventor, is necessary; the question always is as to what will satisfy the trier of the facts"); 1922, Armstrong v. DeForest Radio T. & T. Co., 2d C. C. A., — Fed. — (priority of invention: Manton, J.: "While it is true that the uncorroborated testimony of an inventor is to be accepted with caution, yet there is no rule of law that requires the rejection of the uncorroborated testimony of an inventor as to the date of his conception; . . . the rule as to corroboration is one of caution and discretion, and is not a statutory provision").

1891, BROWN, J., in The Barbed Wire Patent, 143 U. S. 275, 284, 12 Sup. 443: "We have now to deal with certain unpatented devices, claimed to be complete anticipations of this patent, the existence and use of which are proven only by oral testimony. In view of the unsatisfactory character of such testimony, arising from the forgetfulness of witnesses, their liability to mistakes, their proneness to recollect things as the party calling them would have them recollect them, aside from the temptation to actual perjury, Courts have not only imposed upon defendants the burden of proving such devices, but have required that the proof shall be clear, satisfactory and beyond a reasonable doubt. Witnesses whose memories are prodded by the eagerness of interested parties to elicit testimony favorable to themselves are not usually to be depended upon for accurate information. The very fact, which Courts as well as the public have not failed to recognize, that almost every important patent, from the cotton gin of Whitney to the one under consideration, has been attacked by the testimony of witnesses who imagined they had made similar discoveries long before the patentee had claimed to have invented his device, has tended to throw a certain amount of discredit upon all that class of evidence, and to demand that it be subjected to the closest scrutiny. Indeed, the frequency with which testimony is tortured, or fabricated outright, to build up the defence of a prior use of the thing patented, goes far to justify the popular impression that the inventor may be treated as the lawful prey of the infringer. The doctrine was laid down by this court in Coffin v. Ogden, 18 Wall. 120, 124, that 'the burden of proof rests upon him,' the defendant, 'and every reasonable doubt should be resolved against him.'"

§ 2066. Miscellaneous Witnesses requiring Corroboration (Children, Chinese Immigrants, Aliens Naturalized, Divorce Witnesses, Notary's Certificate, etc.). (1) In a few jurisdictions, a statute requires the testimony of a child to be corroborated.[1]

(2) A Federal statute has required the testimony of Chinese, in establishing a right of alien re-immigration, to be corroborated by white witnesses;[2] but § 2066.[1] Eng. 1885, St. 48 & 49 Vict. c. 69, § 4 (quoted ante, § 2061); 1889, St. 52 & 53 Vict. c. 44, § 8 (offences of cruelty to children; cited ante, § 2061, n. 2); 1904, St. 4 Edw. VII, c. 15, § 15 (Prevention of Cruelty to Children Act; similar to the preceding act); St. 1908, 8 Edw. VII, c. 67, § 30 (Children Act; like St. 48 & 49 Vict. c. 69, § 4, for offences against children).

Can. Dom. St. 1893, c. 31, § 25, being R. S. 1906, c. 145, Evid. Act, § 16 (child's testimony "in any legal proceeding," admissible without oath; quoted ante, § 488; adding, as par. 2, "No case shall be decided upon such evidence alone, and such evidence must be corroborated by some other material evidence"); compare also ibid. Crim. C. § 1003, quoted ante, § 2061; Alta. St. 1910, 2d sess., c. 3, Evidence Act, § 17 (like Dom. Evid. Act, § 16); B. C. Rev. St. 1911, c. 78, § 6 (like Dom. Evid. Act, § 16); c. 107, § 100 (contributing to a child's delinquency; like Eng. St. 1885); Man. Rev. St. 1914, c. 65, § 39 (like Dom. Evid. Act, § 16); Sask. Rev. St. 1920, c. 44, Evidence Act, § 36 (like Dom. Evid. Act, § 16);

U. S. N. Y. C. Cr. P. 1881, § 392 (unsupported testimony in a criminal prosecution of a child under twelve, allowed to testify without an oath, is insufficient; quoted in full, ante, § 1828, n. 1).

[2] U. S. St. 1892, May 5 (27 Stat. L. 25), c. 60, § 6, Code § 3658 (deportation of Chinese laborers, unlawfully without certificate in the U. S.; the judge is to order deportation "unless he shall establish clearly . . . to the satisfaction of said United States judge, and by at least one credible witness other than Chinese," that he was a resident of the U. S. on May 5, 1892); St. 1893, Nov. 3 (28 Stat. L. 7), c. 14, § 2, Code § 3045 (a Chinese applying for readmission as a merchant formerly here "shall establish by the testimony of two credible witnesses other than Chinese" the fact of having conducted such business and of not having been a manual laborer); Departmental Rulings S. 17555, 21039 (statute construed as to the tenor of the required testimony); 1900, Li Sing v. U. S., 180 U. S. 486, 21 Sup. 449 (statute of 1893 applied); 1902, Quong Sue v. U. S., 54 C. C. A. 652, 116 Fed. 316 (statute of 1892 applied); 1904, U. S. v. Louie Juen, 128 Fed. 522, D. C. (Chinese witnesses suffice to prove presence as a merchant before the passage of St. 1892); 1915, U. S. v. Chin Sing Quong, D. C. N. D. N. Y., 224 Fed. 752 (under St. May 5, 1892, c. 60, § 6, the rule requiring the testimony of other than Chinese witnesses does not expressly apply to proof of a Chinese merchant status before 1892 as entitling a Chinese who this cannot be extended to one of Chinese parentage making proof of citizenship by birth.[3] The policy of such race-discriminations has elsewhere been criticized (ante, §§ 516, 936).

(3) For more than a century past, an alien applying for naturalization must provide corroboration of his own statements as to residence, and other facts, in the shape of two citizens of the United States.[4] Experience shows the need of some such precaution;[5] but it may be questioned whether this is the soundest one.

(4) In divorce, the testimony of detectives, or spies, or persons of loose moral character, has been said to require corroboration;[6] but this ought merely to be a caution of common sense which would occur to any juror.

has never left the U. S. and is resisting deportation, but only to one seeking re-entry; but the testimony of Chinese witnesses, though not technically requiring such corroboration, is open to such credit as may seem proper in each case).

[3] 1900, U. S. v. Lee Seick, 40 C. C. A. 448, 100 Fed. 398 (statutory requirement of two witnesses does not apply to proof of U. S. birth; Chinese testimony to U. S. birth of Chinese, sufficient); 1901, Woey Ho v. U. S., 48 C. C. A. 705, 109 Fed. 888 (in passing on a claim of citizenship by one of Chinese parentage, the Court said: "A Court is not at liberty to arbitrarily and without reason reject or discredit the testimony of a witness upon the ground that he is a Chinaman, an Indian, a negro, or a white man. All people, without regard to their race, color, creed, or country, whether rich or poor, stand equal before the law").

The following ruling is therefore presumably discredited: 1899, Re Louie You, 97 Fed. 580 (one of Chinese race claiming to have been born in the U. S. and to have been absent sixteen years, three Chinese witnesses testifying to the petitioner's identity with the person proved to have been born here; held, nevertheless, that the identity must be corroborated by "some white witness, or some fact not depending on Chinese testimony").

For the exclusion of Chinese witnesses in similar cases, see ante, § 516.

[4] U. S. St. 1906, June 29, § 4, Code 1919, § 3675 (petition for naturalization "shall also be verified by the affidavits of at least two credible witnesses, who are citizens of the U. S."); § 3680 (similar rule for proof of residence); 1908, In re Martorana, D. C. E. D. Pa., 159 Fed. 1010; 1908, In re Schatz, C. C. Or., 161 Fed. 237 (the two witnesses to prove at the hearing need not be the same two witnesses named in the notice posted prior to the hearing); 1917, U. S. v. Gulliksen, 8th C. C. A., 244 Fed. 727 (naturalization; St. 1906, June 29, applied); 1921, U. S. v. Olsen, D. C. W. D. Wash., 272 Fed. 706, 719 (under U. S. St. 1906, June 29, § 4, requiring two credible witnesses that the petitioner "is in every way qualified" to be a citizen, testimony that he is qualified except in that he was active in the I. W. W. is not sufficient).

[5] E. g. 1899, Re Lipshitz, 97 Fed. 584.

[6] England: 1859, Sopwith v. Sopwith, 4 Sw. & Tr. 243, 245 (comments on the untrustworthiness of hired detectives' testimony, without stating any rule); 1865, Ginger v. Ginger, L. R. 1 P. & D. 37 (Lord Penzance: "It is a serious responsibility to undertake to separate man and wife on the unsupported testimony of one witness [to adultery], and that a woman, by her own admission, of loose character").

Canada: 1899, Bell v. Bell, 34 N. Br. 615, 622 (not clear); 1891, Aldrich v. Aldrich, 21 Ont. 447, 449 (one witness of loose character, uncorroborated, held insufficient).

United States: Del. 1912, Bancroft v. Bancroft, 27 Del. 9, 85 Atl. 561 (construing St. 1907, c. 221, § 20, vol. 24, replacing Rev. St. 1893, c. 75, § 6); Ky. Stats. 1915, § 2119 (quoted post, § 2067); 1918, Wesley v. Wesley, 181 Ky. 135, 204 S. W. 165 (divorce; corroboration of witness to adultery required, under Stats. § 2119); N. J. 1921, Sargent v. Sargent, 92 N. J. Eq. 703, 114 Atl. 439 ("While the testimony of detectives, paid spies, and household servants is competent, it should be scrutinized carefully and should not be relied on unless it is corroborated"); N. Y. 1839, Banta v. Banta, 3 Edw. Ch. 295 (McCoun, V. C.: "The only witness to prove the adultery is a common prostitute," and the decree was on this and other circumstances, refused); 1844, Turney v. Turney, 4 id. 566 (testimony to adultery from two women of loose character "may do when corroborated by facts or circumstances from other witnesses," but here it did not suffice); 1889, Moller v. Moller, 115 N. Y. 466, 468, 22 N. E. 169 ("The Courts have come to regard the uncorroborated evidence of such witnesses [prostitutes and private detectives] as insufficient to break the bonds of matrimony"; citing the above cases); W. Va. Code 1914, c. 64, § 10, as amended by St. 1915, c. 73 (quoted post, § 2067).

(5) Occasionally it is ruled that the recitals of a notary's certificate of acknowledgment of a deed cannot be overthrown by the grantor's uncorroborated assertion.[7]

(6) Sometimes it is said that a wife's testimony to the consideration of a parol contract for a conveyance to her from the insolvent husband must be corroborated in chancery.[8]

(7) Here and there an odd local rule is found for some special sort of testimony, e. g. the party's oral rescission of a written contract,[9] the correctness of a guardian's account,[10] the parental claim to custody of children,[11] the woman plaintiff in an action for slander of chastity,[12] the dying declaration of the woman on a charge of abortion,[13] the testimony of a person professing to have been instigated to crime,[14] the plaintiff's testimony in certain issues arising as to stray animals,[15] the mother's testimony on an issue of an illegitimate child's inheritance,[16] the accused's testimony on a charge of frequent-

[7] Ill. 1874, Russell v. Baptist Theol. Union, 73 Ill. 337, 341 ("the mere evidence of the party purporting to have made the acknowledgment" is not sufficient to overthrow the notary's certificate); 1892, Oliphant v. Liversedge, 142 Ill. 160, 169, 30 N. E. 334 (same); 1898, Davis v. Howard, 172 Ill. 340, 50 N. E. 258 (same); 1899, Sassenberg v. Huseman, 182 Ill. 341, 349, 55 N. E. 346 (same); 1903, Gritten v. Dickerson, 202 Ill. 372, 66 N. E. 1090 ("the uncorroborated testimony of the grantor, or party executing a deed, is not sufficient to overcome the evidence afforded by the officer's certificate of acknowledgment"); Wash. 1903, Western L. & S. Co. v. Waisman, 32 Wash. 644, 73 Pac. 703 (mortgagor).

Compare here the rule for standard of proof (post, § 2498).

[8] Can. 1917, Union Bank v. Murdock, 37 D. L. R. 522, Man. (conveyance to wife in fraud of creditors; the wife's testimony to valuable consideration, held not sufficient without corroboration; reviewing prior Canadian cases); U. S. 1905, Davis v. Yonge, 74 Ark. 161, 85 S. W. 90, semble; 1905, Waters v. Merrit P. Co., 76 Ark. 252, 88 S. W. 879 ("by some other evidence of the existence of a valid debt").

[9] Wash. 1894, Quinn v. Parke & L. M. Co., 9 Wash. 136, 37 Pac. 288 (oral rescission of a written contract; the uncorroborated testimony of a party, held not sufficient); 1904, Cooke v. Cain, 35 id. 353, 77 Pac. 682 (oral rescission; Quinn v. P. & L. M. Co., supra, held not to establish a general rule).

[10] Vt. Gen. L. 1917, § 3710 (guardian's account; Court shall examine the guardian on oath, except when no objection is made and other evidence establishes correctness of account).

[11] Ohio: Gen. Code Ann. 1921, § 8033 (custody of children; "upon hearing the testimony of either or both of such parents, corroborated by other proof," the Court shall award the custody).

[12] Wis. Stats. 1919, § 4569 (slander of chastity; the testimony of the plaintiff "unsupported by other evidence" is not sufficient; "but must be proved by the evidence of at least two persons other than such person who heard and understood the language charged as slanderous or by admission of the defendant"); and other statutes cited ante, § 2061, note 2.

[13] Mo. St. 1907, p. 245, Mar. 16, R. S. 1919, § 4034 (corroboration of the woman's dying declarations in abortion cases; cited more fully ante, § 1432); 1921, State v. Keller, 287 Mo. 124, 229 S. W. 203 (R. S. 1909, § 5240, now R. S. 1919, § 4034, applied).

[14] Hawaii: Rev. L. 1915, § 3684 (instigation to commit an offense; the "mere testimony" of the person professing to have been instigated, not sufficient when "not corroborated by other evidence direct or circumstantial," except when expressly otherwise provided).

[15] Can. Alta. St. 1913, 2d sess., c. 27, § 4 (dangerous animals; an order of impounding may be made "upon hearing the evidence of two credible witnesses other than the complainant," where no claimant appears); U. S. Md. Ann. Code 1914, Art. 34, § 3 (estray animal; owner must prove title, before a justice, "by one credible witness").

[16] La. Rev. Civ. C. 1920, § 210 (proving paternal descent of unacknowledged illegitimate child; "the oath of the mother, supported by proof of the cohabitation of the reputed father with her, out of his house, is not sufficient to establish natural paternal descent, if the mother be known as a woman of dissolute manners," etc.).

Compare the bastardy statutes ante, § 2061.

The following statute, now obsolete, may here be noted: Eng. St. 21 Jac. I, c. 27 (if a bastard's mother conceal its death so that it ing an opium den;[17] and doubtless others will be proposed.[18] Other rules having a similar object, but applicable in terms to specific issues, and not specific kinds of witnesses, have been noted (ante, §§ 2044, 2054). Both varieties should be compared with the rules for measure of proof in certain issues (post, § 2498), which seek likewise to regulate belief by an artificial standard.

None of these rules are worth while; and none need receive attention in any other jurisdiction than their native habitat.

§ 2067. Uncorroborated Confession of Respondent in Divorce; (a) History of the Rule. The ecclesiastical Courts in England administered the canon or church law as emanating from the continental authorities of the Catholic church; additionally to this, there were in local force certain constitutions of the legates sent to England, as well as other ecclesiastical rules provided by the English church authorities. Now in the general canon law, as contained in the Corpus Juris Canonici, consisting of papal decrees and decretals, and dating prior to 1400, there appears to have been no general and established rule declaring a confession by the respondent in divorce insufficient to support a judgment.[1] Nor does there appear to have existed, in the local English ecclesiastical decrees or constitutions before 1600, anything to that effect.[2] The rule, then, as we find it later obtaining, must be regarded may not appear whether or not it is born alive, this is to be murder, unless she prove, by one witness at least, that it was born dead); repealed by St. 43 Geo. III, c. 58, § 3; commented on in Hawkins, Pl. Cr. II, c. 46, § 43, Blackstone, Comm. IV, 198; 1791, Pennsylvania v. M'Kee, Addis. 1, 5 (statute commented on).

[17] Or. Laws 1920, § 2160 (the frequenting of an opium den is 'prima facie' evidence of the purpose of smoking; defendant's evidence "unsupported by other evidence" is not to rebut this).

[18] 1921, Buncle v. Sioux City Stockyards Co., 192 Ia. 555, 185 N. W. 139 (personal injury of employee; corroboration not necessary as matter of law; here, hernia).

§ 2067. [1] It does not clearly appear, from the rescript given in Decretal. IV, 19, 5 'de divortiis' (dated 1187–1191), that there was then any rule as to the insufficiency of a confession in a petition for divorce in general; it appears, however, that the wife was 'diligentius admonita' whether she had confessed adultery for ulterior motives; in 1091 (Decret. Pars II, causa 35, qu. VI, can. IV, 'si duo viri') a canon had been made, providing for dissolution on the ground of consanguinity if two or three witnesses prove it 'vel ipsi forte confessi fuerint.' But in 1188–1191 (Decretal. IV, 13, 5, 'de cognatione legali'; attributed to Pope Celestine III) it was ordered that a petition for separation on the ground of prior consanguinity should not be granted "upon their confession alone nor upon repute of the neighborhood, since some persons sometimes would wish to collude between themselves against their marriage and would incline easily to a confession of incest"; and in 1216–1227, ib. IV, 15, 7, 'de frigidis,' a judge is directed to grant a divorce for impotence after causing an inspection, 'ne id confiterentur in fraudem.'

The modern Catholic Church procedure appears to have no rule about using divorce-confessions; but the institution of 'defensor vinculi' (Codex juris canonici Pii X, 1917, Canons 1586, 1968) presumably renders needless any formal rule.

[2] Lindewood's Provinciale discloses nothing of the sort. The work Reformatio Legum Ecclesiasticarum (Anglicanarum), which was a report of a committee of revision, acting under St. 25 H. VIII (1534) and St. 5 Edw. VI (1551), and was promulgated in 1552 (consulted in the edition of 1640), contains no trace of a divorce rule; of this book Sir Wm. Scott said, in Hutchins v. Denzell, infra, that it was "of great authority" in showing the practice. Gibson, in his Codex Juris Ecclesiastici Anglicani (ed. 1713, tit. 12, c. 17, p. 534), commenting on Canon 105 of 1603 (supra in the text) says that the church rule rested on the Decretal of Celestine III, cited as Extrav., tit. 13, c. 5 (cited supra, note 1), and adds: "This prohibition had been expressly renewed in the canons of 1597," without citation. The editor of Walcott's Constitutions and Canons Ecclesiastical of the Church of England (1874; at p. 145) in a note mentions, without citing the source, a constitution of 1597, reading: 'Nec partium confessioni, quæ in his causis saepe fallax est, temere confidatur'; which falls short of the canon of 1603.

as founded on an ecclesiastical law of specifically English origin; for after the time of Henry VIII no papal or continental pronouncement was of any validity in English ecclesiastical Courts.[3]

In 1603 and 1605, at convocations in Canterbury and York, certain constitutions and canons were passed by the assembled Church of England, and were ratified by the King; though never by Parliament. These canons, thus imperfectly sanctioned, were held[4] not to bind the laity 'proprio vigore' as to their new matter; though they did bind the clergy, and therefore presumably the ecclesiastical Courts within their proper jurisdiction. It is upon one of these canons of 1603, and upon that only, that the modern rule in question rests (for it cannot be doubted that the common-law Courts knew nothing of any such rule).[5] This canon is as follows:

1603, Canon 105, at the Convocation of Canterbury:[6] "Forasmuch as matrimonial causes have been always reckoned and reputed amongst the weightiest, and therefore require the greater caution when they come to be handled and debated in judgment, especially in causes wherein matrimony having been in the church duly solemnized is required upon any suggestion or pretext whatsoever to be dissolved or annulled, We do strictly charge and enjoin that, in all proceedings to divorce and nullities of matrimony, good circumspection and advice be used, and that the truth may (as far as it is possible) be sifted out by deposition of witnesses and other lawful proofs and evictions, and that credit be not given to the sole confession of the parties themselves, howsoever taken upon oath either within or without the court."

This canon seems thenceforth to have been regarded as a valid rule of law in the ecclesiastical Courts, and received repeated application.[7]

[3] By St. 25 H. VIII, c. 19, St. 35 H. VIII, c. 16, and St. 1 Eliz. c. 1, the existing papal decrees and decretals, with the English provincial and legatine constitutions, were confirmed, so far as not repugnant to the common law and so far as they "be yet accustomed and used here in the Church of England." In the time of Edward VI, the proposed Reformatio (cited supra), of 1552, had failed to receive the royal assent. The history is most amply given in Makower's Constitutional History of the Church of England (Sonnenschein's ed.), 1895, pp. 161, 366.

[4] Lord Hardwicke, in Middleton v. Croft, 2 Stra. 1056 (1737).

[5] Because they had no jurisdiction of divorce causes, and because no ecclesiastical rule had been made binding upon the lay Courts. The following case, sometimes cited as authority, involves a different point and throws no light on either the common law or the ecclesiastical rule: 1682, Anon., 2 Mod. 314 (in a libel for annulment of marriage on account of the husband's former marriage, "they both appear and confess the matter, upon which a sentence of divorce was to pass"; whereon a prohibition was asked by the children in the King's Bench, because it was "a contrivance between him and his wife . . . to defeat their children of an estate settled upon them in marriage with remainders over"; and "the reason why a prohibition was prayed was . . . for that the inheritance and freehold of land were concerned in this case"; and since the spiritual Court had no jurisdiction in such causes, the prohibition was intimated to be grantable; evidently on the general principle of Hicks v. Harris, 12 Mod. 35, that "if they encroach on the common law, though they have original conusance, we will prohibit"; compare § 2250, post).

[6] Walcott's Constitutions and Canons, p. 145; the text is also to be found in Poynter (1824), Marriage and Divorce, p. 196 and App. II. In Ireland, Canon 53, in 1634 (quoted in Milw. 537), followed the English canon of 1603.

[7] These reports before the 1800s are scanty: 1792, Timmings v. Timmings, 3 Hagg. Eccl. 76, 77 (separation only); 1798, Williams v. Williams, 1 Hagg. Cons. 299, 304 (Lord Stowell: "Confession [here extrajudicial] is a species of evidence which, though not inadmissible, is to be regarded with great distrust; . . . [it] is received in conjunction with other circumstances, yet it is on all occasions to be most accurately weighed"); 1800, Crewe v. Crewe, 3 Hagg. Eccl. 123, 131; 1816, Searle v. Price, 2 Hagg. Cons. 187, 189; 1817, Burgess v. Burgess, 2 Hagg. Cons. 223; 1820, Mortimer v. Mortimer, 2 Hagg. Cons. 310, 315; 1831, Owen

But in 1857 the ecclesiastical (prerogative) Courts were reorganized by statute in England, and their secular jurisdiction was transferred to the common-law Courts; and the question naturally then arose whether the rules of Evidence (including this one) of the ecclesiastical law were transplanted into the common-law Courts along with their new jurisdiction; and, if not, whether there was any common-law rule requiring corroboration for a respondent's confession in divorce. Both these questions were immediately answered in the negative: [8]

1858, Cockburn, C. J., in Robinson v. Robinson, 1 Sw. & Tr. 362, 365, 393 (divorce for adultery; Court for Divorce and Matrimonial Causes, superseding the Ecclesiastical Court, and including all the common law judges, the chancellor, and the probate judge, any two of them with the probate judge forming a full Court): "As this Court is not a Court of ecclesiastical jurisdiction, nor bound in cases of divorce 'a vinculo' by rules of merely ecclesiastical authority, it is at liberty to act and bound to act on any evidence, legally admissible, by which the fact of adultery is established; and if therefore there is evidence, not open to exception, of admissions of adultery by the principal respondent, it would be the duty of the Court to act on such admissions, although there might be a total absence of all other evidence to support them. No doubt the admissions of a wife unsupported by corroborative proof should be received with the utmost circumspection and caution. . . . Nevertheless, if after looking at the evidence . . . the Court should come to the conclusion, first, that the evidence is trustworthy, secondly, that it amounts to a clear, distinct, and unequivocal admission of adultery, we have no hesitation in saying that the Court ought to act upon such evidence and afford to the injured party the redress sought for."

In the United States, in the few instances in which no express statute existed, the opposite conclusion was reached, — not by deliberate decision, but apparently upon the tacit assumption that the statutory transference of the former jurisdiction of the ecclesiastical Courts included by implication this rule of evidence.[9] In most jurisdictions, however, the same statute had in fact expressly enacted the ecclesiastical rule of evidence; and thus the rule was placed beyond the necessity of judicial

v. Owen, 4 Hagg. Eccl. 261; 1841, Cobbe v. Garston, Milw. 529, 537 (Ireland; a confession, plus a single uncorroborated witness, insufficient; here, in annulment on the ground of previous marriage); 1842, Harrison v. Harrison, 4 Moore P. C. 96, 103 (divorce for impotence; on appeal from the Consistory Court, the Privy Council refused to declare that inspection of the person was essential as corroboration, and held that the party's refusal to allow inspection was sufficient, the absence of collusion being clear); 1845, Shuldham's Divorce, 12 Cl. & F. 363, semble; 1846, Noverre v. Noverre, 1 Rob. Eccl. 428, 440 ("There must be other evidence, then; though I am not aware of any case in which the 'quantum' or description, as auxiliary to a confession, has been the subject of discussion"); 1847, Tucker v. Tucker, 11 Jur. 893 ("I accede not only to the rule of the canon, but to the principle on which it is founded").

[8] Accord: England: 1858, Robinson v. Robinson, 1 Sw. & Tr. 362, 365, 393, 29 L. J. P. M. 178, 191 (quoted supra); 1865, Williams v. Williams, L. R. 1 P. & D. 29 (preceding case approved; "in each case the question will be whether all reasonable ground for suspicion is removed"); 1907, Getty v. Getty, Prob. 334 (written confession by wife of adultery committed 19 years before, not mentioning the name; corroboration required; the facts of this case are as odd as any modern fiction).

Canada: 1912, Edmonds v. Edmonds, B. C., 1 D. L. R. 550.

In Ontario, however, a limited legislative change has been made: Ont. R. S. 1914, c. 148, § 37 (no marriage shall be declared void "upon consent of parties, admissions, or in default," etc.).

[9] Cases infra, note 10, in Massachusetts, Minnesota, and elsewhere.

adoption.[10] Whether it does exist as a part of the common law, where no such statute obtains and no prior rulings have assumed its existence, seems therefore to be an arguable question.

[10] Alabama: Code 1907, § 3799 ("no decree can be rendered on the confession of the parties or either of them"); 1856, King v. King, 28 Ala. 315, 319 (Code held to adopt in effect the rule of Canon 105); 1858, Cornelius v. Cornelius, 31 Ala. 479, 481;
Alaska: Comp. L. 1913, § 1516 (like Or. Laws 1920, § 880);
Arizona: Rev. St. 1913, Civ. C. § 3861 ("no divorce shall be granted on the testimony of a party, unless the same be corroborated by other evidence");
Arkansas: Dig. 1919, § 3504 (statements of complaint are not to be taken as true because of defendant's "failure to answer, or his or her admission of their truth"); 1853, Viser v. Bertrand, 14 Ark. 267, 278, 283 (confessions, in the answer or otherwise, not sufficient for any charge); 1855, Welch v. Welch, 16 Ark. 527, 528; 1857, Jacob v. Bob, 18 Ark. 399, 410; 1879, Rie v. Rie, 34 Ark. 37, 38; 1881, Kurtz v. Kurtz, 38 Ark. 119, 123; 1881, Brown v. Brown, 38 Ark. 324, 327; 1890, Scarborough v. Scarborough, 54 Ark. 20, 14 S. W. 1098;
California: C. C. P. 1872, § 2079 (in divorce for adultery, "a confession of adultery, whether in or out of the pleadings, is not of itself sufficient to justify a judgment of divorce"); Civ. C. § 130 (the "uncorroborated statement, admission, or testimony of the parties," in divorce, is not sufficient); 1858, Conant v. Conant, 10 Cal. 249, 254; 1859, Baker v. Baker, 13 Cal. 87, 96 ("The question . . . is this, 'Would the entire testimony, confessions, and circumstances lead the guarded discretion of a reasonable and just man to the conclusion?'"); 1898, Andrews v. Andrews, 120 Cal. 184, 52 Pac. 298 (corroboration found, on the facts); 1905, Berry v. Berry, 145 Cal. 784, 79 Pac. 531;
Columbia (Dist.): Code 1919, § 964 (no default decree "without proof"; "nor shall any admissions contained in the answer of the defendant be taken as proof of the facts charged as the ground of the application, but the same shall in all cases be proved by other evidence"); 1904, Lenoir v. Lenoir, 24 D. C. App. 160, 165 (the rule applied in a proceeding for annulment, where on default the plaintiff testified by deposition); 1905, Michalowicz v. Michalowicz, 25 D. C. App. 484 (corroboration held not sufficient on the facts);
Delaware: Rev. St. 1915, § 3023 (no decree to be granted "unless the cause is shown by affirmative proof aside from any admissions on the part of the defendant");
Georgia: Rev. C. 1910, § 2949 (confessions of adultery or cruelty are insufficient "if unsupported by corroborating circumstances and made with a view to be evidence in the cause"); 1858, Buckholts v. Buckholts, 24 Ga. 238, 244 ("When the evidence consists exclusively in such confessions, a total divorce will not be granted"); 1875, Woolfolk v. Woolfolk, 53 Ga. 661 (Code applied);
Hawaii: Rev. L. 1915, § 2925 ("no sentence of nullity of marriage shall be pronounced solely on the declarations or confessions of the parties, but the Court shall in all cases require other satisfactory evidence of the facts on which the allegation of nullity is founded"); § 2931 (in divorce, "the Court shall require exact legal proof upon every point, notwithstanding the consent of parties; and the admission of the respondent shall not be competent evidence, except to prove the original marriage");
Idaho: Comp. St. 1919, § 4641 (divorce not to be granted "upon the uncorroborated statement, admission, or testimony of the parties"); 1908, Bell v. Bell, 15 Ida. 7, 96 Pac. 196 (the confession of the respondent is not sufficiently corroborated by the plaintiff's testimony and admissions; going on the language of the statute); 1919, Piatt v. Piatt, 32 Ida. 407, 184 Pac. 470 (like Bell v. Bell);
Illinois: Rev. St. 1874, c. 40, § 8 ("If the bill is taken as confessed, the Court shall proceed to hear the cause by examination of witnesses in open court," and the Court shall in no case grant divorce unless satisfied "that the cause of divorce has been fully proven by reliable witnesses"); § 9 ("No confession of the defendant shall be taken as evidence unless the court or jury shall be satisfied that such confession was made in sincerity and without fraud or collusion to enable the complainant to obtain a divorce"); 1852, Shillinger v. Shillinger, 14 Ill. 147, 150 ("It would be erroneous to grant the decree, on taking the bill for confessed, without any evidence"); 1859, Bergen v. Bergen, 22 Ill. 187, 189, semble (admissions, if free from fraud or collusion, may suffice);
Indiana: Burns' Ann. St. 1914, § 1077 ("no decree shall be rendered on default without proof"); 1846, McCulloch v. McCulloch, 8 Blackf. 60 (other evidence is necessary, under the early statute, even if the confession is believed); 1861, Scott v. Scott, 17 Ind. 309, semble (default or confession alone not sufficient, even under later statutes declaring marriage a civil contract);
Kansas: Gen. St. 1915, § 7579 (a divorce is not to be granted "upon the uncorroborated testimony of either husband or wife or both of them"); § 7578 (admissions not obtained "by connivance, fraud, coercion or other improper means," are receivable); 1905, May v. May, 71 Kan. 317, 80 Pac. 567 (statutes applied);

Kentucky: Stats. 1915, § 2119 (no divorce petition "shall be taken for confessed, or be sustained by the admission of the defendant alone, but must be supported by other proof. Two witnesses, or one and strong corroborating circumstances, shall be necessary to sustain the charge of adultery or lewdness. The credibility of good character of such witnesses must be personally known to the judge, or to the officer taking the deposition, who shall so certify, or it must be proved"); C. C. P. § 422 ("The statements of a petition for divorce shall not be taken as true because of the defendant's failure to answer on admission of their truth; and the facts as to residence of the parties must be proved by one or more credible witnesses"); 1898, McCampbell v. McCampbell, 103 Ky. 745, 46 S. W. 18 (the statute is satisfied by testimony to the witnesses' good character presented to the judge); 1908, Robards v. Robards, — Ky. —, 109 S. W. 422 (McCampbell v. McCampbell followed);

Louisiana: 1840, Harman v. McLeland, 16 La. 26 ("mere acknowledgment," insufficient); 1866, Weigel's Succession, 18 La. An. 49, 53 (preceding case approved); 1887, Mack v. Handy, 39 La. An. 491, 496, 2 So. 181 (mere confession is "insufficient of itself");

Maine: 1830, Cayford's Case, 7 Greenl. 57, 61 (the mere confession of a party charged with adultery is not sufficient, "to prevent collusive arrangements between husband and wife to obtain a divorce"); 1834, Bradley v. Bradley, 11 Me. 367 (cruelty; record of conviction, on a plea of guilty, for assault and battery on the wife, admitted; nothing said as to sufficiency);

Maryland: Ann. Code 1914, Art. 16, § 36 (in all cases of default in divorce, "the Court shall order testimony taken and shall decide the case upon the testimony so taken"); § 41 ("The admission of a respondent of the facts charged . . . shall not be taken of itself as conclusive proof");

Massachusetts: 1806, Holland v. Holland, 2 Mass. 154 (confession, "unsupported by other evidence," insufficient); 1831, Billings v. Billings, 11 Pick. 461 ("the circumstances here proved by other evidence than the confessions showed there could be no collusion," and this sufficed; the reporter's headnote to this case is misleading);

Michigan: Comp. L. 1915, § 11428 ("No decree of divorce shall be made solely on the declarations, confessions, or admissions of the parties, but the Court shall require other evidence of the facts"); 1842, Sawyer v. Sawyer, Walker Ch. 48, 51 ("other proof is required in corroboration"; but on a charge other than adultery corroboration "need not be of so decisive a character," where there is less danger of collusion); 1845, Emmons v. Emmons, Walker Ch. 48, 532 (a rule of Court requires proof to be taken on a confession by default or answer); 1867, Robinson v. Robinson, 16 Mich. 79 (decree cannot be entered by consent); 1869, Dawson v. Dawson, 18 Mich. 335 (statute applied);

Minnesota: Gen. St. 1913, § 8465 ("Divorces shall not be granted on the sole confessions, admissions, or testimony of the parties, either in or out of court"); 1861, True v. True, 6 Minn. 458, 462 (confession alone, insufficient, even though no statute expressly adopts the ecclesiastical rule);

Mississippi: Code 1906, § 1676, Hem. § 1418 (divorce bill "is not to be taken as confessed, nor shall admissions made in the answer be taken as evidence"); 1839, Tewksbury v. Tewksbury, 4 How. 109, 112 (confessions here held sufficient with other evidence); 1856, Armstrong v. Armstrong, 32 Miss. 279, 288, semble (confessions alone, insufficient);

Missouri: 1858, Twyman v. Twyman, 27 Mo. 383 (admissions alone, insufficient);

Montana: Rev. C. 1921, § 10685 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 2079);

Nebraska: Rev. St. 1922, § 1550 (no decree of divorce and nullity "shall be made solely on the declarations, confessions, or admissions of the parties"; but "other satisfactory evidence" shall be required);

New Hampshire: 1830, Washburn v. Washburn, 5 N. H. 195 (confessions "alone are clearly insufficient"); 1863, White v. White, 45 N. H. 121 (same; limited here to adultery); 1867, Burgess v. Burgess, 47 N. H. 395 (plea of guilty to indictment in another State for adultery, sufficient if corroborated);

New Jersey: 1831, Clutch v. Clutch, 1 N. J. Eq. 474 (confessions "are never held sufficient without strong corroborating circumstances"); 1838, Miller v. Miller, 2 N. J. Eq. 139, 142; 1866, Jones v. Jones, 17 N. J. Eq. 351; 1870, Derby v. Derby, 21 N. J. Eq. 36, 47 ("it is not usual" to rely upon them alone); 1875, Tate v. Tate, 26 N. J. Eq. 55 ("it is a settled rule" not to rely upon them alone); 1883, Summerbell v. Summerbell, 37 N. J. Eq. 603, 610 ("I take the rule to be that if the proofs in a cause irrespective of the confession of the incriminated party well nigh demonstrate the fact of the adultery charged but do not entirely satisfy the conscience of the Court, the confession may then (if free from suspicion of collusion or duress or improper influence or of having been prepared to furnish evidence) be permitted to decide the otherwise doubtful judgment of the Court"); 1900, Perkins v. Perkins, 59 N. J. Eq. 515, 46 Atl. 173 (applied to a defence of adultery set up to the wife's application for alimony); 1900, Weigel v. Weigel, 60 N. J. Eq. 322, 47 Atl. 183; 1901, Kloman v. Kloman, 61 N. J. Eq. 153, 49 Atl. 810 (confession alone, not sufficient without corroboration as to the act charged); 1919, Carsten v. Carsten, 90 N. J. Eq. 181, 107 Atl. 45 (corroboration may be by circumstances); 1921, Stewart v. Stewart, — N. J. Eq. —, 114 Atl. 851 (plea of guilty of adultery, in a criminal case, suffices without corroboration);

§ 2068. Same: (b) Policy of the Rule. The rule is founded on the rooted propensity (apparently nothing novel in our own generation) to resort to a

New York: C. P. A. 1920, § 1143 (annulment; the confession of a party is alone insufficient; "other satisfactory evidence of the facts must be produced"); § 1150 (divorce; if the defendant defaults or does not deny the allegation of adultery, the plaintiff "must nevertheless satisfactorily prove the material allegations"); 1799, Doe v. Doe, 1 John. Cas. 25 (confessions, "with other proof," held sufficient, by a majority); 1814, Betts v. Betts, 1 Johns. Ch. 197 (an early statute at this time required proof to be taken, upon admission by default or answer; a master's report based "almost wholly on proof by confession," held insufficient for a decree of divorce for adultery); 1824, Barry v. Barry, 1 Hopk. Ch. 113 (decree of separation, not to be found on a default alone); 1836, Devenbagh v. Devenbagh, 5 Paige 554 (statute applied, prohibiting a decree solely upon confessions); 1861, Lyon v. Lyon, 62 Barb. 138, 142;

North Carolina: Con. St. 1919, § 1662 (in divorce for adultery, neither party's admissions shall be received); 1849, Hansley v. Hansley, 10 Ired. 506, 511; 1893, Toole v. Toole, 112 N. C. 152, 16 S. E. 912 (effect of extrajudicial admissions, considered);

North Dakota: Comp. L. 1913, § 4400 ("No divorce can be granted . . . upon the uncorroborated statement, admission, or testimony of the parties");

Ohio: Gen. Code Ann. 1921, § 11988 (in divorce or alimony proceedings, admissions obtained by "fraud, connivance, coercion, or other improper means," not to be received; a decree is not to be granted "upon the testimony or admissions of a party unsupported by other evidence"); 1833, Brainard v. Brainard, Wright 354 (applying the statute); 1834, Bascom v. Bascom, ib. 632;

Oklahoma: Comp. St. 1921, § 515 (in divorce or alimony proceedings, "the Court may admit proof of the admissions of the parties, . . . carefully excluding such as shall appear to have been obtained by connivance, fraud, coercion, or other improper means. . . . But no divorce shall be granted without proof");

Oregon: Laws 1920, § 880 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 2079);

Pennsylvania: 1847, Matchin v. Matchin, 6 Pa. St. 332, 337 ("confession alone," insufficient); 1868, Wood v. Wood, 2 Brewst. 447 (preceding case followed); 1916, Hess v. Vinton Colliery Co., 255 Pa. 78, 99 Atl. 218 (trespass to property; plaintiff's original statement of claim, before amendment, admitted);

Rhode Island: Gen. L. 1909, c. 247, § 18 (no divorce shall be granted "solely upon default nor solely upon admissions by the pleadings");

South Dakota: Rev. C. 1919, § 161 (like N. D. Comp. L. § 4400);

Tennessee: Shannon's Code 1916, § 4212 (where defendant's answer admits the facts, the Court shall nevertheless "hear proof of the facts");

Texas: Rev. Civ. St. 1911, § 4633 ("the decree of the Court shall be rendered upon full and satisfactory evidence; . . . no divorce shall be granted upon the evidence of either husband or wife, if there be any collusion between them"); 1848, Sheffield v. Sheffield, 3 Tex. 79, 83 (statute applied); 1855, Simmons v. Simmons, 13 Tex. 468, 473 (same); 1874, Mathews v. Mathews, 41 Tex. 331, 333 (same); 1884, Endick v. Endick, 61 Tex. 559, 561 (same; conviction of assault and battery on a wife, upon plea of guilty, insufficient);

Utah: Comp. L. 1917, § 2999 ("no decree of divorce shall be granted upon default or otherwise, except upon legal testimony taken in the cause");

Vermont: Gen. L. 1917, § 3558 (no marriage is to be declared null "solely on the declarations or confessions of the parties"); 1827, Gould v. Gould, 2 Aik. 180 (confession alone, not sufficient on a charge of adultery); 1877, Richardson v. Richardson, 50 Vt. 119, 122 (statute applied);

Virginia: Code 1919, § 5106 (in divorce, "the bill shall not be taken for confessed, nor shall a divorce be granted on the uncorroborated testimony of the parties or either of them; and . . . the cause shall be heard independently of the admissions of either party in the pleadings or otherwise");

Washington: R. & B. Code 1909, § 985 (divorce; when defendant admits the allegations or fails to answer, "the Court shall require proof" before granting a decree of divorce, etc.);

West Virginia: Code 1914, c. 64, § 8, as amended by St. 1915, c. 73 (divorce bill "shall not be taken for confessed," and "the cause shall be tried and heard independently of the admissions of either party in the pleadings or otherwise"); Code 1914, c. 64, § 10, as amended by St. 1915, c. 73 ("no divorce for adultery shall be granted on the uncorroborated testimony of a prostitute or a 'particeps criminis'"); 1906, Trough v. Trough, 59 W. Va. 464, 53 S. E. 630 (statute applied);

Wisconsin: Stats. 1919, § 2360*i* (in divorce defaults, the cause must be shown "by affirmative proof aside from any admission to the plaintiff on the part of the defendant");

Wyoming: Comp. St. 1920, § 5013 (no decree "shall be made solely on the declarations, confessions or admissions of the parties, but the Court shall in all cases require other evidence in its nature corroborative of such declarations," etc.).

Compare the cases cited ante, § 2046 (corroboration of divorce complainant), and § 2066 (corroboration of witnesses of loose character, etc.).

false confession of guilt in order to secure freedom from the marriage tie in cases where no legally recognized cause for its dissolution really exists:

1738, Mr. Thomas Oughton, Ordo Judiciorum, tit. 213, p. 316: "Since in our days (by the Devil's persuasion) a great many divorces are sought on the ground of adultery, in order by that pretext that the divorced parties may be able to proceed to another marriage, and since (in order thus the more easily to obtain a divorce) the wife is used to confess the adultery of which she is by collusion charged, though in truth none has been committed; and sometimes also the husband (that he may take a new wife) induces the wife by threats, blows, blandishments, or some other unlawful mode, to confess the adultery, though she had committed none, Therefore, to avoid and obviate this craft and fraud, the judge, in this class of cases, is accustomed to search out the woman's mind in private (all other persons, especially the husband, being withdrawn), and to examine her carefully as to the truth and as to the motive for such a confession, and by every lawful means and mode to elicit the truth; and if he finds craft and fraud of this sort, or even some probable suspicion of it, he is accustomed to refuse a judgment of divorce, unless the petitioner for the divorce shall have proved the alleged adultery by witnesses, or at least by vehement presumptive circumstances and public repute, or otherwise informed the judge's conscience (because the alleged crime may be true), from which the judge may believe that the woman's confession of the adultery has not proceeded from craft or fraud."

1859, FIELD, J., in Baker v. Baker, 13 Cal. 87, 94: "The object of the rule is to prevent collusion between the parties. Without some limitation of this kind it would be in the power of the parties to obtain a divorce in all cases. The public is interested in the marriage relation and the maintenance of its integrity, as it is the foundation of the social system; and the law wisely requires proof of the facts alleged as the ground for its dissolution. The agreement of the parties will not answer, as then the marriage relation would be one only of temporary convenience. The default in the action will not answer, as this would only be another form for carrying out their previous agreement. Confessions will not answer, because they may be the result of collusion, and be untrue in fact. But the public can have no interest in suppressing the truth; and, as a means of its ascertainment, the confessions of parties against their interests have always been regarded as evidence of the most important character."

That such a frequency of false confession prevails is indubitable. That prudence would require a judge always to seek such corroboration is equally indubitable. But it does not follow that a fixed rule of law ought to exist. Its behest is generally superfluous, since ordinary prudence and knowledge of human nature point the same warning. All the arguments generally applicable against fixed rules of number or quantity (ante, § 2033) are here also applicable. The present rule probably does less harm than any other of the sort; but it belongs to a class of rules not broadly wise in principle nor essentially useful in practice.

§ 2069. Same: (c) Scope of the Rule. (1) The language and the policy of the Canon apply to the proof of all causes of divorce; and, although the comments of Oughton are limited to the cause of adultery, the ecclesiastical practice seems to have followed no such limitation, nor have the statutes or decisions in this country (with rare exceptions) accepted it.[1]

§ 2069. [1] Cases cited ante, § 2067. The rule, however, applies only to proof of the cause for divorce, and not to proof of the fact of marriage: 1868, Hitchcox v. Hitchcox, 2 W. Va. 435, 438 (Maxwell, J., diss.). For the rule as to proof of marriage, see post, § 2082.

(2) The application of the rule to a petition for separation (divorce 'a mensa et thoro'), and not merely to divorce in the narrower sense ('a vinculo matrimonii') has sometimes been doubted; but the policy of the rule seems to apply alike to both.[2]

(3) The language of the Canon requires only that "credit be not given to the sole confession" of the party; and Oughton's comment shows the proper construction of this to be, not that a decree may not be rendered upon the confession as the sole testimony to the direct fact of the charge, but that credit is not to be given to it for that purpose until all fear of collusion or duress is removed. In other words, the corroboration from other evidence need not directly bear upon the main fact, but need only be such as restores confidence in the confession itself. This is the view taken in the more careful rulings;[3] although ordinarily the distinction seems to have been ignored. As to any further detailed rules defining the nature of the corroborative evidence, the orthodox practice refuses properly to make any.[4]

(4) That the confession is at least and always admissible, and that the rule merely declares it insufficient unless corroborated, is plain enough on principle; and this is generally conceded.[5] Nevertheless, their inadmissibility has sometimes been asserted inadvertently or in ambiguous language,[6] and even deliberately;[7] and the phrasing of a statute has in some jurisdictions perpetuated this totally groundless rule and has forced the Courts to follow it in those jurisdictions.[8]

(5) The rule does not require corroboration where the confession is con-

[2] 1792, Timmings v. Timmings, Eng., cited ante, § 2067; 1837, Richardson v. Richardson, 4 Port. Ala. 467, 477; 1919, Bolmer v. Edsell, 90 N. J. Eq. 299, 106 Atl. 646 (nullity; extent of corroboration of parties, considered).

[3] For example, in Billings v. Billings, 11 Pick. 461, cited ante, § 2067.

[4] English cases cited ante, § 2067.

[5] 1814, Kent, C., in Betts v. Betts, 1 John. Ch. 197, 199 ("The confession of the accused is a legitimate species of proof, which is recognized throughout the whole law of evidence"); 1859, Baker v. Baker, 13 Cal. 87, 96 (Field, J.: "Having in view, then, the doctrine of the law as it existed previous to the adoption of the statute, and the reason of it, and regarding the statute as merely declaratory of that doctrine, we are necessarily led to the conclusion that it was never intended to exclude entirely the introduction of the confessions, but only, as the statute in terms purports, that upon them the decree shall not be granted"); 1905, Michalowicz v. Michalowicz, 25 D. C. App. 484; 1860, Johns v. Johns, 29 Ga. 718, 722; 1887, Mack v. Handy, 39 La. An. 491, 496, 2 So. 181; 1877, Richardson v. Richardson, 50 Vt. 119, 122.

[6] 1853, Scott, J., in Viser v. Bertrand, 14 Ark. 267, 278; 1831, Vance v. Vance, 8 Greenl. 132 (confession admitted where collusion was wanting; but here the decree seems to have been given upon the confession alone, and the ruling seems to have been upon its sufficiency); 1794, Tewksbury v. Tewksbury, 2 Dane's Abr. Mass. 310, semble (similar); 1805, Baxter v. Baxter, 1 Mass. 346 (confession uncorroborated, held "inadmissible"; but here no other evidence was offered, and the ruling was really upon the sufficiency of the confession).

[7] 1849, Hansley v. Hansley, 10 Ired. N. C. 506, 510, semble.

[8] 1837, Richardson v. Richardson, 4 Port. Ala. 467, 477 ("Our statute has not left the discretion to any Court to receive aid from a confession"); 1847, Moyler v. Moyler, 11 Ala. 620, 628; 1849, Gray v. Gray, 15 Ala. 779, 785 (the Code, cited ante, § 2067, afterwards changed the law in this State); 1833–1834, Brainard v. Brainard, Bascom v. Bascom, Wright Oh. 354, 632; 1848, Sheffield v. Sheffield, 3 Tex. 79, 83 (inadmissible, probably, under a statute requiring a decree to proceed upon "evidence independent of the confession"); 1884, Endick v. Endick, 61 Tex. 559, 561; 1890, Hampton v. Hampton, 87 Va 148, 12 S. E. 340 (excluded, under the statute quoted ante, § 2067, n. 10; displacing Bailey v. Bailey, 21 Gratt. 43); 1906, Trough v. Trough, 59 W. Va. 464, 53 S. E. 630 (excluded, under the statute quoted ante, § 2067, n. 10).

tained in a formal plea of guilty to a criminal charge, made in prior proceedings and admissible on the principle of § 1066, ante.[9]

§ 2070. Uncorroborated Confession of Accused in Criminal Cases; (1) English Rule. Whether the uncorroborated confession of the accused in a criminal case is alone sufficient to support a conviction is a question which for more than a hundred years has been culpably left unsettled in English law.[1] Frequent opportunities were presented for settling it, but they were not improved; and the law was left in an unfortunate state of obscurity, subject to much difference of opinion.

To begin with, there is a report of a ruling in 1784 that such a confession sufficed;[2] but neither the report nor the ruling was treated as of final authority. It is fairly clear that before that time no special requirement existed, and that the matter was unhampered by any quantitative rule.[3] But during the 1800s the question was frequently raised; and, while the trend of opinion apparently disfavored such a fixed rule, none of the decisions enunciated a clear proposition or put the matter beyond controversy.[4] [9] 1921, Stewart v. Stewart, — N. J. Eq. —, 114 Atl. 851.

§ 2070. [1] The principle that an extra-judicial confession, without corroboration, does not suffice, was an important one in the Continental legal systems: 1900, Pertile, Storia del diritto italiano, 2d ed., vol. VI, pt. 1, p. 428; 1882, Esmein, Histoire de la procédure criminelle en France, 268, 278 (transl. as History of Continental Criminal Procedure, 1913, in Continental Legal History Series, vol. V). Examples of its application may be seen in Feuerbach's Remarkable (German) Criminal Trials (1846; tr. Duff-Gordon), passim, and in N. W. Senior's essay on Feuerbach, in his Biographical Sketches (1863).

[2] 1784, R. v. Wheeling, 1 Leach Cr. L., 4th ed., 311, in note to R. v. Jacobs ("In the case of John Wheeling, tried before Lord Kenyon at the summer assizes at Salisbury, 1784, it was determined that a prisoner may be convicted on his own confession, when proved by legal testimony, although it is totally uncorroborated by any other evidence").

[3] The passages from Lord Hale and Sir Edward Coke, quoted post, § 2081, are sometimes cited upon the present point; but it is obvious that they have nothing to do with a confession rule. Whatever rule there was in earlier times would have looked in the opposite direction, i. e. the confession would have been regarded as the strong and necessary evidence; for example: 1660, Hulet's Trial, 5 How. St. Tr. 1179, 1195 (L. C. B. Bridgman, charging the jury: "If you believe it upon these relations [of witnesses], and after his own confession, . . . then he is to be found guilty. . . . If you take it singly, if you have nothing of other proof, what another man says of me doth not charge me, unless there be something of my own. . . . It is my duty to tell you that what is said by another of me, that alone is not a pregnant evidence").

The civil law rule about confession throws no light on the subject, because it rested on a different theory of proof; see the citations supra, note 1, and Professor Lowell's articles on the Judicial Use of Torture, 11 Harv. L. Rev. 293.

[4] 1821, R. v. Eldridge, R. & R. 440 (larceny of a mare; whether the mare had been stolen or had been found as an estray was in issue; "a very full confession" was read; the question was reserved "whether a prisoner can or ought to be convicted of a felony on his own confession merely, without other proof of a felony having been committed"; the judges held that there was "sufficient evidence to confirm the confession," thus not deciding the question); 1822, R. v. Falkner, R. & R. 481 (robbery; the prosecuting witness not appearing, the confessions were used; the question being reserved, the judges "held the conviction right"; yet here there was evidence that one defendant "was desirous" to prevent the witness from appearing); 1823, R. v. White, Rt. & R. 509 (larceny of oats; explicit confessions of guilt; the trial judge doubted about using them, as the prosecutor "could not establish that a felony had been committed," but after admitting the confessions and reserving the point, "the judges present held the conviction right"; from the report, however, it would seem that there was in fact sufficient independent evidence of the loss of the oats); 1823, R. v. Tippet, R. & R. 509 (similar charge; on reserving the question, all the seven judges meeting held that there was sufficient independent evidence, "and most of the learned judges thought that without the owner's evidence the prisoner's confession was evidence upon which the jury might have con-

The proposed rule appeared in two variations; by the one, the corroborative evidence might be of any sort whatever; by the other, it must specifically relate to the 'corpus delicti', i. e. the fact of injury. The latter form tended to prevail; but in neither form did the rule obtain a general footing. So far as it can be supposed to obtain at all to-day in the English and Irish courts,[5] it is apparently restricted to the case of homicide:

1874, FITZGERALD, J., in R. v. Unkles, Ir. R. 8 C. L. 50, 58: "The rule is rather one of judicial practice than part of the law of evidence. . . . It would perhaps at present be more correct to define it thus, that a party accused of homicide ought not to be convicted on his own confession merely, without proof of the finding of the dead body or evidence 'aliunde' that the party alleged to have been murdered is in fact dead."

The policy of any rule of the sort is questionable. No one doubts that the warning which it conveys is a proper one; but it is a warning which can be given with equal efficacy by counsel or (in a jurisdiction allowing the orthodox function of judges) by the judge in his charge on the facts. Common intelligence and caution, in the jurors' minds, will sufficiently appreciate it, without a laying on of the rod in the shape of a rule of law. Moreover, the danger which it is supposed to guard against is greatly exaggerated in common thought. That danger lies wholly in a false confession of guilt. Such confessions, however, so far as handed down to us in the annals of our courts, have been exceedingly rare (ante, § 867). Such a rule might ordinarily, if not really needed, at least be merely superfluous. But this rule, and all such rules, are to-day constantly resorted to by unscrupulous counsel as mere victed"); 1824, Hawkins, Pleas of the Crown, 8th ed., b. 2, c. 46, § 37 ("But if a confession be voluntarily made and regularly proved on the trial, it is sufficient, if the jury believe it to be true, to convict the prisoner without any corroborating evidence to support it"; so also ib. § 42, citing Hall's case, MS., 1790, "before the judges"); 1831, R. v. Tuffs, 5 C. & P. 167 (Lord Lyndhurst, C. B.; larceny of heifers; the heifers were not proved to be missed, but on the defendant's confession that he had taken two heifers from the "World's End Dolver," this, with evidence that the prosecutor's farm was the only one of the name, was held sufficient); 1831, R. v. Edgar, note by Mr. Greaves to Russell on Crimes, 4th ed., III, 367, 825 (indictment for obtaining money by false pretenses; Patteson, J.: "Could a man be convicted of murder on his own confession alone, without any [other] proof of the person being killed? I doubt it"); 1847, R. v. Flaherty, 2 C. & K. 782 (bigamy; the defendant had surrendered himself voluntarily as a felon, saying "that he had married two wives, both of whom were now with him, and that he could have no peace or quiet with them"; Pollock, C. B., held that his mere confession was not sufficient); 1854, R. v. Burton, Dears. Cr. C. 282 (cited post, § 2076; the defendant here had said, "Don't be hard on me"; taking this as a confession, the case is still inconclusive as a ruling on the present point). The following learned writers have also expressed the opinion that no clear decision was deducible in these rulings: 1865, Mr. Greaves, note to Russell on Crimes, 4th ed., III, 366, 825; 1843, Professor Greenleaf, Evidence, § 217 ("In each of the English cases usually cited in favor of the sufficiency of this evidence, there was some corroborating circumstance").

[5] 1874, R. v. Unkles, Ir. R. 8 C. L. 50 (unlawful disclosure by election agent of the tenor of a vote; defendant's confession as to the tenor of the vote held sufficient; "it is not open now to doubt that the mere confession of the accused alone is sufficient to warrant his conviction," but conceding the special rule of practice as to homicide; Whiteside, C. J., diss.); 1887, R. v. Sullivan, Ire., 16 Cox Cr. 347 (unlawful publication of notice of seditious meeting; assuming that the actual holding of such a meeting was a necessary part of the 'corpus delicti,' held that "an uncorroborated confession is sufficient to sustain a conviction for larceny" or any other crime, except homicide); 1913, Sykes' Case, 8 Cr. App. 233 (murder; corroboration apparently held necessary).

verbal formulas with which to entrap the trial judge into an error of words in his charge to the jury. These capabilities of abuse make it a positive obstruction to the course of justice.

§ 2071. Same: (2) Rule in the United States. The conflicting state of the English rulings left it open to the different Courts of this country to choose which rule they might please. Except in a few jurisdictions,[1] they seem to have preferred, wherever the question has come up for decision, to adopt the fixed rule that corroboration was necessary, — chiefly moved, in all probability, by Professor Greenleaf's suggestion [2] that "this opinion certainly best accords with the humanity of the criminal code and with the great degree of caution applied in receiving and weighing the evidence of confessions in other cases."

In a few jurisdictions, the rule is properly not limited to evidence concerning the 'corpus delicti'; i. e. the corroborating facts may be of any sort whatever, provided only that they tend to produce a confidence in the truth of the confession: [3]

§ 2071. [1] Federal: 1858, U. S. v. Williams (quoted infra); Hawaii: 1894, Republic v. Tokuji, 9 Haw. 548, 552 (question not decided); Massachusetts: Corroboration not necessary: 1862, Com. v. Tarr, 4 All. 315, semble (adultery); 1867, Com. v. McCann, 97 Mass. 580, semble (arson); necessary: 1857, Com. v. Howe, 9 Gray 110, semble (burglary); 1876, Com. v. Smith, 119 Mass. 305, 309, 312, semble (arson); undecided: 1900, Com. v. Morrissey, 175 Mass. 264, 56 N. E. 285; North Carolina: 1797, State v. Long, 1 Hayw. 455 [524] ("A naked confession, unattended with circumstances, is insufficient. . . . As there are no confirmatory circumstances in the present case, it is better to acquit the prisoner"); 1847, State v. Cowan, 7 Ired. 239, 244, semble (not necessary); Philippine Isl.: 1902, U. S. v. Sotelo, 1 P. I. 544, semble (larceny; corroboration here held sufficient); 1903, U. S. v. De La Cruz, 2 P. I. 148 (robbery; corroboration required); 1912, U. S. v. So Fo, 23 P. I. 379, 382 (opium offence; uncorroborated extrajudicial confession, held sufficient; citing Hopt v. Utah, 110 U. S. 574, which does not decide this point; ignoring U. S. v. Sotelo and U. S. v. De La Cruz, supra, and making the singular statement that "the proposition is so well settled that further citation of authorities is unnecessary"); 1913, U. S. v. De los Santos, 24 P. I. 329, 359 (confession must be corroborated; said obiter).

[2] Evidence, § 217.

[3] Accord: Federal: 1858, U. S. v. Williams, 1 Cliff. 5, 21, 26, 27 ("All that can be required is that there should be corroborative evidence tending to prove the facts embraced in the confession"; but "whether under any circumstances a free and voluntary confession, deliberately made, would be sufficient without corroboration, it is not necessary now to decide"); 1916, Bolland v. U. S., 4th C. C. A., 238 Fed. 529 (knowing receipt of stolen goods); Georgia: P. C. 1910, § 1031 ("A confession alone, uncorroborated by other evidence, will not justify a conviction"); 1871, Murray v. State, 43 Ga. 256 (arson); 1872, Holsenbake v. State, 45 Ga. 43, 56 (murder; under the Code, "we do not feel authorized to draw any line; the confession must be corroborated, but how far and in what particulars is not said; . . . each case must stand on its own footing, the jury being the judges"); 1876, Crowder v. State, 56 Ga. 44 (aiding an escape; corroboration found); 1876, Williams v. State, 57 Ga. 478 (murder; same); 1879, Daniel v. State, 63 Ga. 339 (same); 1880, Paul v. State, 65 Ga. 152 (same); 1882, Williams v. State, 69 Ga. 11, 34 (same); 1883, Anderson v. State, 72 Ga. 98, 105 (same); 1888, Burger v. State, 81 Ga. 196, 6 S. E. 282 (corroboration found); 1893, Schaefer v. State, 93 Ga. 177, 18 S. E. 552 (murder; same; compare the later cases cited in the next note); 1909, Milner v. State, 7 Ga. App. 82, 66 S. E. 280; 1910, Huey v. State, 7 Ga. App. 398, 66 S. E. 1023 (assault with intent to rape); Illinois: 1856, Bergen v. People, 17 Ill. 426 (incest; rule restricted to felonies; but compare the later cases cited in the next note); Indiana: Burns Ann. St. 1914, § 2115 ("A confession made under inducements is not sufficient to warrant a conviction without corroborating evidence"); Kansas: 1905, State v. Kesner, 72 Kan. 87, 82 Pac. 720; 1913, State v. Cardwell, 90 Kan. 606, 135 Pac. 597, semble (rape under age); New Jersey: 1818, State v. Aaron, 1 South. 232, 239, 244 (murder; confession of a child, held not sufficient without some corroboration); 1828, State v. Guild, 10 N. J. L 163 (not deciding the point, but holding that the corroboration need only involve any cir-

1856, SKINNER, J., in Bergen v. People, 17 Ill. 426, required "some proof that a crime had been committed, or of circumstances corroborating and fortifying the confession; . . . proof of any number of these facts and circumstances consistent with the truth of the confession, or which the confession has led to the discovery of, and which would not probably have existed had not the crime been committed, necessarily corroborate it; . . . the corroborating fact or facts in proof need not necessarily, independent of the confession, tend to prove the 'corpus delicti.'"

But in most jurisdictions the stricter form of rule is taken, and the evidence must concern the 'corpus delicti': [4] cumstances "such as serve to strengthen it, . . . to impress a jury with a belief in its truth"); 1912, State v. Kwiatkowski, 83 N. J. L. 650, 85 Atl. 209; North Dakota: Comp. L. 1913, § 9459 ("No person can be convicted of murder or manslaughter or of aiding suicide, unless the death of the person alleged to have been killed and the fact of the killing by the accused as alleged, are each established as independent facts; the former by direct proof and the latter beyond a reasonable doubt; but in no case upon a plea of not guilty, shall the confession or admission of the accused, in writing or otherwise, be admissible to establish the death of the person alleged to have been killed"); Oregon: 1904, State v. Rogoway, 45 Or. 601, 78 Pac. 987, 81 Pac. 234 (rule in U. S. v. Williams approved); Rhode Island: 1899, State v. Jacobs, 21 R. I. 259, 43 Atl. 31 (the other evidence need not prove the crime independently of the confession); Vermont: 1904, State v. Blay, 77 Vt. 56, 58 Atl. 794 (larceny); Washington: R. & B. Code 1919, § 2151 ("A confession made under inducement is not sufficient to warrant a conviction without corroborating testimony").

[4] Accord: Federal: 1918, Daeche v. U. S., 2d C. C. A., 250 Fed. 566, 571 (conspiracy to injure vessels);
Alabama: 1860, Mose v. State, 36 Ala. 211, 231 (murder; "the 'corpus delicti' being otherwise established," confession suffices, if satisfactorily proved); 1876, Matthews v. State, 55 Ala. 187, 194 (rape; rule, as stated, confined to felony); 1877, Johnson v. State, 59 id. 37 (larceny; extrajudicial confession, "not corroborated by independent evidence of the 'corpus delicti,'" insufficient); 1884, Winslow v. State, 76 Ala. 42, 47 (arson; general principle affirmed); 1893, Ryan v. State, 100 Ala. 94, 14 So. 868 (larceny; general principle affirmed); 1902, Hall v. State, 134 Ala. 90, 32 So. 750;
Arkansas: Dig. 1919, § 3182 (if not made in open court, not sufficient "unless accompanied with other proof that such offense was committed"); 1884, Melton v. State, 43 Ark. 367, semble (murder); 1905, Misenheimer v. State, 73 Ark. 407, 84 S. W. 494 (rape; New York rule followed); 1905, Hubbard v. State, 77 Ark. 126, 91 S. W. 11 (murder; foregoing case approved); 1910, Harshaw v. State, 94 Ark. 343, 127 S. W. 745 (forgery); 1913, Greenwood v. State, 107 Ark. 568, 156 S. W. 427; 1914, Russell v. State, 112 Ark. 282, 166 S. W. 540 (embezzlement); 1918, Lind v. State, 137 Ark. 92, 207 S. W. 47 (seduction; the woman's testimony may serve as corroboration);
California: 1867, People v. Jones, 31 Cal. 565 (for felonies; here robbery); 1875, People v. Thrall, 50 Cal. 415 (robbery); 1913, People v. Frey, 165 Cal. 140, 131 Pac. 127; 1914, People v. Ford, 25 Cal. App. 388, 143 Pac. 1075 (murder; but why does an Appellate Court cite six cases from another Supreme Court on this point, ignoring its own?);
Florida: 1894, Lambright v. State, 34 Fla. 564, 575, 16 So. 582 (murder); 1897, Holland v. State, 39 Fla. 178, 22 So. 298; 1903, Mitchell v. State, 45 Fla. 76, 33 So. 1009 ('corpus delicti' must include the criminal agency);
Georgia: 1898, Wimberly v. State, 105 Ga. 188, 31 S. E. 162; 1898, Davis v. State, 105 Ga. 808, 32 S. E. 158, semble (some evidence of 'corpus delicti' needed); 1903, Bines v. State, 118 Ga. 320, 45 S. E. 376 (arson; the evidence other than the confession must show the burning to have been felonious); 1904, Joiner v. State, 119 Ga. 315, 46 S. E. 412 (wife-beating; corroboration found); 1904, Owen v. State, 119 Ga. 304, 46 S. E. 433 (larceny); 1904, Morgan v. State, 120 Ga. 499, 48 S. E. 238 (arson); 1921, Langston v. State, 151 Ga. 388, 106 S. E. 903 (murder);
Illinois: 1879, May v. People, 92 Ill. 343, 345, semble (larceny); 1882, Williams v. People, 101 Ill. 382, 386 (receiving stolen goods); 1886, Andrews v. People, 117 Ill. 195, 202, 7 N. E. 265 (similar); 1895, Bartley v. People, 156 Ill. 234, 40 N. E. 831, semble; 1895, Campbell v. People, 159 Ill. 9, 42 N. E. 123; 1896, Gore v. People, 162 Ill. 259, 44 N. E. 500; 1902, Johnson v. People, 197 Ill. 48, 64 N. E. 286 (Gore v. People approved); 1914, People v. Harrison, 261 Ill. 517, 104 N. E. 259 (a quibble over the instructions);
Indiana: 1904, Griffiths v. State, 163 Ind. 555, 72 N. E. 563 (corroboration defined); 1909, Strickland v. State, 171 Ind. 642, 87 N. E. 12; 1911, Messel v. State, 176 Ind. 214, 95 N. E. 565 (stating the rule in a peculiar form, not noting the real point of distinction);

1876, BRICKELL, C. J., in Matthews v. State, 55 Ala. 187, 194: "Evidence of facts and circumstances attending the particular offense, and usually attending the commission of similar offenses, or of facts to the discovery of which the confession has led, and which would not probably have existed if the offense had not been committed, or of facts having a just tendency to lead the mind to the conclusion that the offense has been committed, would be admissible to corroborate the confession."

1921, Gaines v. State, — Ind. —, 132 N. E. 580 (burglary);
Indian Territory: 1906, Leftridge v. U. S., 6 Ind. T. 305, 97 S. W. 1018 (homicide; some evidence of the 'corpus delicti' is needed);
Iowa: Code 1897, § 5491, Comp. C. 1919, § 9475 ("The confession of the defendant, unless made in open court, will not warrant a conviction unless accompanied with other proof that the offense was committed"); 1865, State v. Turner, 19 Ia. 145 (under the Code); 1878, State v. Knowles, 48 Ia. 598 (here held not a confession); 1879, State v. Feltes, 51 Ia. 495, 501, 1 N. W. 755 (murder); 1880, State v. Dubois, 54 Ia. 363, 6 N. W. 578 (larceny); 1905, State v. Westcott, 130 Ia. 1, 104 N. W. 341 (murder; rule of the statute applied and developed); 1920, State v. Cook, 188 Ia. 655, 176 N. W. 674 (attempt to break and enter; a fantastic application of the rule, tending to dishearten police officers and encourage thieves);
Kentucky: C. Cr. Pr. 1895, § 240 ("A confession of the defendant, unless made in open court, will not warrant a conviction, unless accompanied with other proof that such an offense was committed"); 1872, Cunningham v. Com., 9 Bush 149, 152 (murder; the Code held to imply corroboration by evidence tending to connect the accused); 1887, Patterson v. Com., 86 Ky. 313, 320, 5 S. W. 387 (murder; preceding construction disapproved); 1891, Wigginton v. Com., 92 Ky. 282, 289, 17 S. W. 634 (murder; the construction in the Cunningham case definitely repudiated); 1897, Dugan v. Com., 102 Ky. 241, 43 S. W. 418 (declaring the Cunningham case overruled); 1901, Gilbert v. Com., 111 Ky. 793, 64 S. W. 846 (a confession needs no corroboration, if the 'corpus delicti' is otherwise evidenced); 1908, Polson v. Com., — Ky. —, 108 S. W. 844 (rule as to instructions, stated); 1911, Higgins v. Com., 142 Ky. 647, 134 S. W. 1135 (murder; Patterson v. Com. followed); 1913, Lee v. Com., 155 Ky. 62, 159 S. W. 648 (burglary; instruction not needed where the 'corpus delicti' is independently proved); 1915, Clary v. Com., 163 Ky. 48, 173 S. W. 171 (embezzlement); 1917, Frierson v. Com., 175 Ky. 684, 194 S. W. 914 (rape under age); 1921, Bruce v. Com., 191 Ky. 846, 232 S. W. 63 (larceny; confessions held not corroborated); 1921, Com. v. Stites, 190 Ky. 402, 227 S. W. 574 (incest; instruction held not proper on the facts);
Michigan: 1882, People v. Lane, 49 Mich. 340, 13 N. W. 622 (attempt to murder); 1908, People v. Ranney, 153 Mich. 293, 116 N. W. 999 (obtaining money by a worthless check; prior cases collected); 1911, People v. Lapidus, 167 Mich. 53, 132 N. W. 470;
Minnesota: Gen. St. 1913, § 8462 (a confession is not "sufficient to warrant his conviction, without evidence that the offence charged has been committed"); § 8741 (gambling offences; conviction may be had "on his own confession out of court"); 1860, State v. Laliyer, 4 Minn. 368, 375 (murder); 1882, State v. Grear, 29 Minn. 221, 222, 13 N. W. 140 (assault); 1922, State v. Wylie, — Minn. —, 186 N. W. 707 (larceny);
Mississippi: 1853, Stringfellow v. State, 26 Miss. 157, 163 (murder; restricting the rule to "capital felonies"); 1856, Brown v. State, 32 Miss. 433, 450 (murder; preceding case cited); 1857, Sam v. State, 33 Miss. 347, 352 (arson; general principle affirmed); 1867, Jenkins v. State, 41 Miss. 583 (larceny; same); 1870, Pitts v. State, 43 Miss. 472, 481 (murder; same);
Missouri: 1849, Robinson v. State, 12 Mo. 592, 596 (larceny); 1859, State v. Lamb, 28 Mo. 218, 229, semble (murder); 1867, State v. Scott, 39 Mo. 424, 425 (robbery); 1874, State v. German, 54 Mo. 526, 529 (murder); 1881, State v. Patterson, 73 Mo. 695, 708 (murder); 1883, State v. Dickson, 78 Mo. 438, 447 (murder); 1903, State v. Coats, 174 Mo. 396, 74 S. W. 864 (the 'corpus delicti' need not be "absolutely proven, independent of the confession"); 1904, State v. Knowles, 185 Mo. 141, 83 S. W. 1083 (embezzlement);
Montana: 1871, Terr. v. McClin, 1 Mont. 394, 398 (burglary);
Nebraska: 1880, Priest v. State, 10 Nebr. 393, 399, 6 N. W. 468 (murder); 1885, Smith v. State, 17 Nebr. 358, 361, 22 N. W. 780 (larceny); 1899, Sullivan v. State, 58 Nebr. 796, 79 N. W. 721; 1905, Blacker v. State, 74 Nebr. 671, 105 N. W. 302 (forgery);
Nevada: 1905, Re Kelly, 28 Nev. 491, 83 Pac. 223 (rape);
New York: 1836, People v. Hennessey, 15 Wend. 147, semble (embezzlement); 1836, People v. Badgley, 16 N. Y. 53, 57 (forgery); 1855, People v. Porter, 2 Park. Cr. C. 14 (blasphemy); 1859, U. S. v. Mulvaney, 4 Park. Cr. C. 164 (opening a letter before delivery); C. Cr. P. 1881, § 395 (a confession is insufficient "without additional proof that the crime charged has been committed"); 1886, People v. Jachne, 103 N. Y. 182, 199 (any circumstances which are "calculated to suggest the commission of crime" suffice; though semble they do not touch the 'corpus

No further detailed rules as to the nature of the corroborative evidence seem to have been attempted.[5]

As to the application of the rule, it remains only to note that it has of course no bearing upon an infra-judicial confession, which is in effect a plea of guilty.[6]

§ 2072. Same: (3) Definition of Corpus Delicti. The meaning of the phrase 'corpus delicti' [1] has been the subject of much loose judicial comment, and an apparent sanction has often been given to an unjustifiably broad meaning. It is clear that an analysis of every crime, with reference to this element of it, reveals three component parts, first, the occurrence of the specific kind of injury or loss (as, in homicide, a person deceased; in arson, a house burnt; in larceny, property missing); secondly, somebody's criminality as the source of the loss, — these two together involving the commission of a crime by somebody; and, thirdly, the accused's identity as the doer of this crime.

(1) Now, the term 'corpus delicti' seems in its orthodox sense to signify merely the first of these elements, namely, the fact of the specific loss or injury sustained:

delicti'); 1888, People v. Deacons, 109 N. Y. 374, 377, 16 N. E. 676 ("The meaning of the Code is that there must be some other evidence of the 'corpus delicti' besides the confession"); 1903, People v. White, 176 N. Y. 331, 68 N. E. 630 (statute applied); 1915, People v. Roach, 215 N. Y. 592, 600, 109 N. E. 618 (murder; confession held corroborated);
Ohio: 1872, Blackburn v. State, 23 Oh. St. 146, 149, 164 (homicide);
Oklahoma: 1909, Shires v. State, 2 Okl. Cr. 89, 99 Pac. 1100;
Oregon: Laws 1920, § 1537 (a confession is insufficient "without some other proof that the crime was committed"); 1909, State v. Brinkley, 55 Or. 134, 105 Pac. 708 (larceny; semble, other admissions of the accused may suffice as evidence to corroborate the confession);
Pennsylvania: 1882, Gray v. Com., 101 Pa. 380, 386 (homicide);
Porto Rico: 1911, People v. Rosado, 17 P. R. 417 (murder; P. C. § 206 cited);
South Carolina: 1852, State v. Vaigneur, 5 Rich. L. 391, 401 (not clear);
Texas: 1854, Jones v. State, 13 Tex. 168, 177; in this State the rule's application seems to have been supplanted by the other rules about 'corpus delicti' (post, § 2182) and confessions (ante, § 831); 1912, Harris v. State, 64 Tex. Cr. 594, 144 S. W. 232 ("the confession may be used to aid the proof of the 'corpus delicti'");
Washington: 1906, State v. Marselle, 43 Wash. 273, 86 Pac. 586 (rape; here the rule is pedantically applied).

[5] The testimony of an accomplice may suffice: 1921, Parsons v. State, — Ind. —, 131 N. E. 382 (knowing receipt of stolen goods); 1887, Patterson v. Com., 86 Ky. 313, 320, 5 S. W. 387; 1922, People v. Joyce, 233 N. Y. 61, 134 N. E. 836 (murder; per two judges); 1918, Henry v. State, 14 Okl. Cr. 189, 169 Pac. 658 (sale of official civil service examination papers); 1921, State v. Weston, — Or. —, 201 Pac. 1083 (murder). Contra, semble: 1884, Melton v. State, 43 Ark. 367, 370.

Conversely, a confession duly corroborated may serve as sufficient, under § 2059, ante, to corroborate an accomplice: 1893, Schæfer v. State, 93 Ga. 177, 18 S. E. 552; 1887, Patterson v. Com., 86 Ky. 313, 320.

[6] And this should include a confession to a committing magistrate: 1876, Matthews v. State, 55 Ala. 187, 190, semble; 1859, State v. Lamb, 28 Mo. 218, 230; 1847, State v. Cowan, 7 Ired. N. C. 239, 244. In Messel v. State, 176 Ind. 214, 95 N. E. 565 (1911), the opinion needlessly hesitates by stating that this "seems to be" thus.

But of course the rule itself does not apply to a committing magistrate's action: 1909, Lundstrom v. State, 140 Wis. 141, 121 N. W. 883 (not decided).

In the Philippine Islands a special interpretation is placed on a plea of guilty at the preliminary inquiry; 1905, U. S. v. Tolosa, 5 P. I. 616; 1906, U. S. v. José, 6 P. I. 211.

The rule at large has been erroneously said to apply to the admissions of a plaintiff suing for a defamatory charge of crime: 1876, Georgia v. Kepford, 45 Ia. 48, 52.

For the rule in treason, where a confession in open court dispenses with the two witnesses, see ante, § 2038.

§ 2072. [1] "The term 'corpus delicti' first appears in Farinacius, Quæstiones, 1, 6" (Pertile, Storia del diritto italiano, 2d ed., 1900, vol. VI, pt. 2, p. 144); compare the quotations in Esmein (1882), Hist. de la procédure criminelle, 267 (translated as History of Continental Criminal Procedure, in the Continental Legal History Series).

1705, Captain Green's Trial, 14 How. St. Tr. 1199, 1246; piracy; the ship said to have been seized was not shown to be missing. Counsel for defence: "By the 'corpus delicti,' subject of the crime, is not meant that the subject of the crime must be so extant as to fall under the senses, but that the loss sustained is felt and known. As for example, in the crime of murder, though the body cannot be reached, yet the particular loss is known; it is notorious the queen wants a subject, friends want a relation whom they can point out; in piracy and robbery, merchants want their ships and goods; so that the loss is felt and known, though 'de facto' the subject cannot be pointed out. . . . And this is the true meaning of what is 'corpus delicti,' the subject of the crime."

1879, BARRETT, J., in State v. Potter, 52 Vt. 33, 39: "The idea and the rule is . . . that a person should not be convicted of having killed a person until it was proved that that person is in fact dead. When that is made out, the 'corpus delicti' is made out, — that is, the subject-matter of the alleged crime, namely, a person dead."

This, too, is 'a priori' the more natural meaning; for the contrast between the first and the other elements is what is emphasized by the rule; i. e. it warns us to be cautious in convicting, since it may subsequently appear that no one has sustained any loss at all; for example, a man has disappeared, but perhaps he may later reappear alive. To find that he is in truth dead, yet not by criminal violence — i. e. to find the second element lacking, is not the discovery against which the rule is designed to warn and protect us.

(2) But by most judges the term is made to include the second element also:[2]

1850, SHAW, C. J., in Com. v. Webster, Mass., Bemis' Rep. 473: "In a charge of criminal homicide, it is necessary in the first place by full and substantial evidence to establish what is technically called the 'corpus delicti', — the actual offence committed; that is, that the person alleged to be dead is in fact so; that he came to his death by violence and under such circumstances as to exclude the supposition of a death by accident or suicide and warranting the conclusion that such death was inflicted by a human agent; leaving the question who that guilty agent is to after consideration."

1872, CHURCH, C. J., in People v. Bennett, 49 N. Y. 137, 143: "The 'corpus delicti' has two components, viz., Death as the result, and the criminal agency of another as the mean."

This broader form makes the rule much more difficult for the jury to apply amid a complex mass of evidence, and tends to reduce the rule to a juggling-formula.

(3) A third view, indeed, too absurd to be argued with, has occasionally been advanced, at least by counsel, namely, that the 'corpus delicti' includes the third element also, i. e. the accused's identity or agency as the criminal. By this view, the term 'corpus delicti' would be synonymous with the whole

[2] So also: 1910, Ausmus v. People, 47 Colo. 167, 107 Pac. 204 (stating also but not definitely approving the orthodox rule); 1921, State v. James, — N. J. L. —, 114 Atl. 553; 1907, State v. Pienick, 46 Wash. 523, 90 Pac. 645; 1917, State v. Gray, 98 Wash. 279, 167 Pac. 951 (liquor prescriptions); 1913, State v. Merrill, 72 W. Va. 500, 78 S. E. 699 (infanticide).

This is the common phrasing of this second form. But originally it appears merely in the form "death by the agency of another," i. e. not necessarily by a criminal act, but merely a death other than by the operation of disease or other natural force. A loose reading of this original phrasing, which probably belongs under the first form, led to the second form quoted above; the original phrasing may be seen in the following opinions: 1858, Clifford, J., in U. S. v. Williams, 1 Cliff. 5, 25; 1871, Christian, J., in Smith v. Com., 21 Gratt., Va. 809, 813.

of the charge, and the rule would require that the whole be evidenced in all three elements independently of the confession.[3]

To illustrate the different definitions by the various crimes, it would follow, under the orthodox definition, that in homicide the fact of death, whether or not feloniously caused, is the 'corpus delicti';[4] in arson, the fact of burning, whether or not wilful;[5] and in false representations, the fact of the acting in reliance upon representations, whether or not they were false.[6]

§ 2073. Same: (4) Order and Sufficiency of Evidence of Corpus Delicti. (a) That the evidence of the 'corpus delicti' should be put in before a confession is certainly good practice, and is occasionally said to be the rule;[1] but the

[3] Repudiating this definition: 1911, Messel v. State, 176 Ind. 214, 95 N. E. 565 (rape under age); 1917, State v. Schyhart, — Mo. —, 199 S. W. 205 (killing cattle).

[4] Accord: 1908, State v. Gebbia, 121 La. 1083, 47 So. 32 (fact of death is the 'corpus delicti'). Contra: 1918, People v. Pretswell, 202 Mich. 1, 167 N. W. 1000 (death by an automobile); 1904, State v. Knapp, 70 Oh. 380, 71 N. E. 705 (but the term does not include the precise mode of death as charged, — here, by strangulation); 1921, State v. Weston, 102 Or. 102, 201 Pac. 1083 (murder); 1921, State v. Howard, 102 Or. 431, 203 Pac. 311; 1921, Williams v. Com., 130 Va. 778, 107 S. E. 655 (murder of wife; indigestion as the cause of death, held not sufficiently negatived).

The identification of the deceased is not a part of the 'corpus delicti'; 1888, People v. Palmer, 109 N. Y. 110, 114, 16 N. E. 529 (in a lucid opinion by Finch, J.). Contra: 1921, People v. Peete, — Cal. App. —, 202 Pac. 51, 58 (murder; identification of belt-buckle, ring, cuff-buttons, tooth, etc., on a corpse with unrecognizable features, held sufficient proof of 'corpus delicti'; but purporting to follow People v. Palmer, N. Y.).

[5] Accord: 1857, Sam v. State, 33 Mass. 347, 352, semble.

Contra: Canada: 1911, R. v. Girvin, 3 Alta. 387, 398. United States: 1884, Winslow v. State, 76 Ala. 42, 48; 1915, Daniels v. State, 12 Ala. App. 119, 68 So. 499; 1895, People v. Simonsen, 107 Cal. 345, 40 Pac. 440; 1898, People v. Jones, 123 Cal. 65, 55 Pac. 698; 1915, Wade v. State, 16 Ga. App. 163, 84 S. E. 593; 1922, People v. Wallace, 303 Ill. 504, 135 N. E. 723 (larceny of 11 hogs of L.; in L.'s fenced farm were 61 hogs on July 25, and on Sept. 6, only 50; none had died, and none could get through the fence; on Aug. 22 defendants hauled and sold 11 hogs for W., whose farm was near L.'s; held, that the 'corpus delicti' was not proved, in that the identity of the hogs taken by defendant was not proved; unsound; it was amply proved that L. lost 11 hogs and that they were lost by criminal agency; this was the 'corpus delicti'; anything more, to complete the charge, was the defendant's agency; the identity of the hogs taken by defendant was part of this third element); 1921, State v. Cristani, 192 Ia. 615, 185 N. W. 112; 1922, Meyers v. Com., 194 Ky. 523, 240 S. W. 71; 1915, State v. McLarne, 128 Minn. 163, 150 N. W. 787; 1915, State v. Cox, 264 Mo. 408, 175 S. W. 50; 1920, State v. Adkins, — Mo. —, 222 S. W. 431; 1916, State v. Maranda, 114 Oh. 364, 114 N. E. 1038; 1916, State v. Brown, 103 S. C. 437, 88 S. E. 21.

[6] 1876, State v. Lewis, 45 Ia. 20; 1908, People v. Ranney, 153 Mich. 296, 116 N.W. 999 (obtaining money by passing a worthless check).

Contra: 1904, Johnson v. State, 142 Ala. 1, 37 So. 937 (false pretences; the falsity of the pretence is part of the 'corpus delicti,' under the present rule); 1895, People v. Simonsen, 107 Cal. 345, 40 Pac. 440.

Other crimes: 1904, Wistrand v. Pepple, 213 Ill. 72, 72 N. E. 748 (rape; the age of the defendant, being part of the 'corpus delicti,' cannot be evidenced by the confession alone); 1901, Brown v. State, 85 Miss. 27, 37 So. 497 (breaking and entering with intent).

These definitions are seldom directly passed upon, and it would be unprofitable to trace the various obiter expressions in judicial opinion.

The following curious statute seems to belong here: Kan. St. 1913, c. 244, Gen. St. 1915, § 8128 (in prosecutions for forgery, "proof that such signature is not in the handwriting of the person whose signature it purports to be shall be 'prima facie' evidence that the signing of such name was unauthorized and is a forgery").

§ 2073. [1] 1884, Winslow v. State, 76 Ala. 42, 47 ("some preliminary testimony, tending to show the 'corpus delicti'"); 1902, Smith v. State, 133 Ala. 145, 31 So. 806 (no authority cited); 1901, People v. Ward, 134 Cal. 301, 66 Pac. 372 (the order of evidence, except where a confession is offered, is in the trial Court's discretion); 1899, Gantling v. State, 41 Fla. 587, 26 So. 737; 1918, Terr. v. Hart, 24 Haw. 349, 358 (embezzlement); 1919, People v. Jackzo, 206 Mich. 183, 172 N. W. 557 (murder).

better view is that the trial judge may determine the order of this evidence,[2] on the general principles otherwise prevailing (ante, §§ 1867, 1869).

(b) The application of all rules of Evidence rests with the judge, not the jury; hence, under this rule requiring the existence of some corroborative evidence of the 'corpus delicti', it is for the trial judge to say whether there is such evidence; i. e. on the general principle of the judicial function (post, § 2550) he may take the case from the jury if there is not at least some evidence sufficient to satisfy the rule:[3]

1884, CLOPTON, J., in Winslow v. State, 76 Ala. 42, 47: "It is the province of the judge to determine whether there is testimony sufficient to make it appear 'prima facie' that a crime has been committed. The evidence on which the judge acts may not necessarily establish the 'corpus delicti.' It may be and often is conflicting and contradictory. In such case, the credibility of the witnesses and the sufficiency of the entire evidence are for the ultimate decision of the jury."

(c) Yet for the jury again the same question comes up for determination, after retiring to consider their verdict. They are bound by the rule of Evidence not to convict unless there is in their belief some evidence of the 'corpus delicti' to corroborate the confession. The judge's ruling was provisional only, as preliminary to allowing the case to go to the jury; and they in their turn must conclude, without reference to the judge's ruling, whether the corroboration exists to satisfy them.[4]

(d) Supposing that it does, the rule of Evidence is at an end for them, and they are left with nothing but the general duty in criminal cases to be convinced of the defendant's guilt beyond a reasonable doubt. Here, however, it is often said that they must be convinced beyond such a doubt both as to the 'corpus delicti' and the defendant's guilty participation.[5] But this is

[2] 1904, Scott v. State, 141 Ala. 1, 37 So. 357 (homicide by poisoning; one judge diss.); 1910, People v. Wilkins, 158 Colo. 130, 111 Pac. 612; 1908, State v. Washelesky, 81 Conn. 22, 70 Atl. 62; 1897, Holland v. State, 39 Fla. 178, 22 So. 298; 1905, Williams v. State, 123 Ga. 138, 51 S. E. 322 (murder); 1905, State v. Kesner, 72 Kan. 87, 82 Pac. 720; 1908, State v. Gebbia, 121 La. 1083, 47 So. 32; 1860, State v. Laliyer, 4 Minn. 368, 378; 1882, State v. Grear, 29 Minn. 221, 222, 13 N. W. 140; 1898, Whitney v. State, 53 Nebr. 287, 73 N. W. 696; 1921, State v. James, — N. J. L. —, 114 Atl. 553; 1921, State v. Weston, 102 Or. 102, 201 Pac. 1083 (murder); 1917, State v. Desloyers, 40 R. I. 89, 100 Atl. 64 (murder); 1879, State v. Potter, 52 Vt. 33, 40; 1915, State v. Scott, 86 Wash. 296, 150 Pac. 423.

Undecided: 1900, Carl v. State, 125 Ala. 89, 28 So. 505; 1915, Daniels v. State, 12 Ala. App. 119, 68 So. 499 (arson).

Other rulings dealing with the order of evidence are: 1839, R. v. Howell, 3 State Tr. N. s. 1087, 1104 (felonious burning during a riot; principle applied so as to require evidence of identity after proof of burning the house in question and before other evidence of the riot was offered); 1902, Anthony v. State, 44 Fla. 1, 32 So. 818; 1899, People v. Benham, 160 N. Y. 402, 55 N. E. 11 (the order as between 'corpus delicti' and motive is in the trial Court's discretion).

[3] 1905, People v. Ward, 145 Cal. 736, 79 Pac. 448 (he must "advise" them to acquit; prior cases in this State reconciled); 1894, Lambright v. State, 34 Fla. 564, 575, 16 So. 582; 1921, Buckhanon v. State, 151 Ga. 827, 108 S. E. 209 (felonious nature of death here evidenced by expert opinion only); 1860, State v. Laliyer, 4 Minn. 368, 377; 1921, Walker v. State, — Miss. —, 89 So. 921 (making liquor illegally); 1882, Gray v. Com., 101 Pa. 380, 386 (there need be offered only "sufficient evidence of the 'corpus delicti' to entitle the case to go to the jury").

[4] 1884, Winslow v. State, 76 Ala. 42, 47; 1921, Driver v. State, — Ala. App. —, 89 So. 897 (larceny); 1899, Coley v. State, 110 Ga. 271, 34 S. E. 845.

[5] 1884, Winslow v. State, 76 Ala. 42, 47; 1893, Ryan v. State, 100 Ala. 94, 95, 14 So. 868 ("If upon the whole evidence the jury are unnecessary. They cannot believe the defendant's guilt of crime beyond a doubt without also believing that the harm charged as the 'corpus' of the crime was sustained.[6]

§ 2074. Same: (5) Other Rules as to Sufficiency of Admissions and Proof of Corpus Delicti, discriminated. (a) Whether the accused's statement amounts to a confession, so as to require corroboration under the present rule, depends on the definition of a confession (ante, § 821).

(b) Whether a confession, otherwise inadmissible at all, becomes admissible when confirmed by discovering the facts confessed, involves another principle (ante, § 856).

(c) The supposed rule that the 'corpus delicti' must be evidenced by direct testimony, or eye-witnesses (post, § 2081) has nothing to do with the rule about confessions; except that the definition of 'corpus delicti' is common to both discussions.

(d) Confessions of adultery may call for the application of several independent rules.[1]

§ 2075. Uncorroborated Admissions in Civil Cases. There is no general rule that the admissions of a party in a civil case are insufficient, without corroborating evidence, as a foundation for a verdict (ante, § 1055). But there are a few such rules limited to admissions in specific classes of issues, viz. divorce (ante, § 2067), marriage (post, § 2086), and sundry issues (ante, § 2066), or to admissions dispensing with certain rules of evidence, viz. documentary originals (ante, §§ 1255, 1259), and attesting witnesses (ante, § 1300).

satisfied beyond a reasonable doubt both as to the 'corpus delicti' and the identity of the defendant as the guilty perpetrator, it becomes their duty to convict"); 1894, Lambright v. State, 34 Fla. 564, 575, 16 So. 582; 1860, State v. Laliyer, 4 Minn. 368, 377 (going upon the statutory word "proof"); 1870, Pitts v. State, 43 Miss. 472, 481.

[6] This seems the view taken in the following opinions: 1882, Gray v. Com., 101 Pa. 380, 386; 1858, State v. Davidson, 30 Vt. 377, 386.

[§ 2074. [1] In a suit for divorce, the general principle (ante, § 2067) applies to a confession of adultery. In a criminal prosecution for adultery, the general principle (ante, §§ 2070–2073), requiring corroboration of an accused's confession, may be applied to a confession of adultery. In a similar prosecution, the rule, if it existed, requiring the 'corpus delicti' to be proved by eye-witnesses (post, § 2081), would equally apply to a charge of adultery. In a similar prosecution, or in a suit for divorce grounded on adultery, the question whether a marriage may be sufficiently proved by admissions or confessions, without eye-witness proof (post, § 2086), may be raised; but there the subject of the confession is supposed to be the fact of marriage, not the adultery.

TITLE V (continued): SYNTHETIC RULES

SUB-TITLE II: KINDS OF WITNESSES REQUIRED

CHAPTER LXX.

§ 2078. Nature of these Rules. The nature of these rules has been already briefly examined, in surveying the various kinds of Synthetic rules (ante, § 2030). We are here concerned with such rules as require a particular kind of witness to be indispensably included in the whole mass of evidence upon a given subject. The distinction between the preceding sort of Synthetic rules (ante, § 2034) and the present sort is that those require a specified number of witnesses, while these require a specified kind of witness. For example, a rule requiring that among the evidence of a certain fact there should always be the testimony of a white person, or the testimony of a male person, or the testimony of a military officer, or the testimony of a citizen, would be a rule of the present sort. Such a rule must, however, be distinguished from a rule of Preference (ante, §§ 1285, 1335). A rule preferring provisionally a certain kind of witness has the effect of requiring such a witness to be produced, or shown unavailable, before any other evidence can be used; but if he is unavailable, other testimony may suffice. By the present type of rule, it is not required that such a witness be called before any other can be offered, yet if he is not ultimately called, the impossibility of obtaining him is no excuse. At both points, the two types of rule are opposed.

In fact, however, rules of this sort are almost wholly lacking in our law. They rest upon the assumption that, no matter how strong and complete the remainder of the evidence may be, a particular kind of testimony will always be, for the subject in hand, relatively so valuable that it should be indispensably required in every case whatever. Such an assumption, in its rigidity, is wholly opposed to that spirit of our law of Evidence (ante, § 1286) which trusts, for the due securing of evidence, rather to the interested zeal of the parties than to the command of the law.

There has been practically no attempt to establish such a rule except for one class of testimony, namely, eye-witnesses. Even for that class, there is to-day no universally accepted rule making an eye-witness indispensable, and the one rule that has any considerable vogue was an anomalous creation intruded into the common law merely by the powerful pronouncement of Lord Mansfield. This type of rule is opposed to the genius and traditions of the common law.

§ 2079. In Criminal Cases, All Eye-Witnesses, or Witnesses Indorsed on the Indictment, must be Produced by the Prosecution; (1) History and Present State of the Law. In England, many things are done, or left undone, by custom and understanding, in the practice of the law, though no rule of law compels or forbids the doing. Especially in the conduct of a criminal prosecution are tacit traditional dictates of professional ethics, wholly lacking the force of legal rules, daily observed by counsel for the prosecution. Among these customs, based on a supposed fairness and honorable decency, seems to have been a practice of calling all the witnesses whose names were by law required by statute in cases of felony to be indorsed upon the indictment, as having testified before the grand jury. This indorsement was intended as a measure of fairness to give notice to the accused of the witnesses to be produced against him; its effect as excluding witnesses not so indorsed has been already considered (ante, § 1850). In its present aspect, the additional effect was recognized that all witnesses thus indorsed were to be called, without omission.

This custom, doubtless of not much earlier standing, appears noted in the reports by 1820–1830. During the next decade, there appears a related though distinct custom of professional ethics, having the same bearing for known eye-witnesses of the facts, whether or not such witnesses had testified before the grand jury and been indorsed on the indictment. In a long series of Nisi Prius rulings, these two practices are noticed in the reports, the different judges taking more or less rigid views of their stringency as rules of professional behavior. But it will be apparent, from the judicial language, and in the light of the known relations between bench and bar in England, that at no time did this principle of professional behavior receive the sanction of a rule of law.[1] Nor did it in Canada.[2]

But these Nisi Prius rulings, in which the judicial language varied somewhat, coming incompletely to the notice of some American Courts, and being considered without due regard to the impalpable but real distinction

§ 2079. [1] 1823, R. v. Simmonds, 1 C. & P. 84 (larceny; Hullock, B.: "Though the counsel for the prosecution is not bound to call every witness whose name is on the back of the indictment, it is usual for him to do so; and if he does not, I, as the judge, will call the witness, that the prisoner's counsel may have an opportunity of cross-examining him"); 1823, R. v. Whitbread, 1 C. & P. note (Holroyd and Burrough, JJ., held that the prosecution was not bound to call every indorsed witness); 1823, R. v. Taylor, 1 C. & P. note (Park, J., called all the witnesses, to allow cross-examination); 1825, R. v. Hollingberry, 6 Dowl. & R. 345, 348 (not all witnesses before the grand jury need be called); 1830, R. v. Beezley, 4 C. & P. 220 (Littledale, J., said that all ought to be called); 1833, R. v. Bodle, 6 C. & P. 186 (if the prosecution declines to call, the Court may in discretion order his examination); 1838, R. v. Chapman, 8 C. & P. 558 (murder; an eye-witness, defendant's brother; semble that the prosecution ought to, but need not, call him); 1838, R. v. Holden, 8 C. & P. 606, 609 (murder; prosecution required by Patteson, J., to call defendant's daughter, an eye-witness; "every witness who was present at a transaction of this sort ought to be called"); 1839, R. v. Bull, 9 C. & P. 22 (manslaughter; Vaughan, J.: "I think that every witness ought to be examined; in cases of this kind counsel ought not to keep back a witness because his evidence may weaken the case for the prosecution; our only object here is to discover truth"); 1839, R. v. Vincent, 3 State Tr. N. s. 1037, 1064 (calling of indorsed witnesses is discretionary even in felony, "but it is a discretion always exercised"; here done for a misdemeanor); 1844, R. v. Carpenter, 1 Cox Cr. 72 (rape; every witness deposing to the magistrate should go before the grand jury, be indorsed, and summoned at the trial; per Alderson, B.); 1845, R. v. Stroner, 1 C. & K. 650 (rape; a person to whom the woman had complained, and a washerwoman who had washed her clothes, were not indorsed nor summoned, but were in attendance for the defence; Pollock, C. B.: "They must both be called as witnesses for the prosecution; but I shall allow the counsel for the prosecution every latitude in examining them"); 1847, R. v. Woodhead, 2 C. & K. 520 (prosecution not bound to call all indorsed witnesses, "the rule which the judges have lately laid down"; but they "should be here," because otherwise the defendant might rely on the indorsement and neglect to summon them himself); 1847, R. v. Barley, 2 Cox Cr. 191 (arson; Pollock, C. B., at first agreed with an unreported ruling of Alderson, B., that indorsed witnesses need not be called, but "after consulting Coleridge, J., intimated that the witnesses ought to be called"); 1848, R. v. Edwards, 3 Cox Cr. 82 (Erle, J.: "I believe a majority of the judges have distinctly decided that the counsel for the prosecutor is not bound to call all the witnesses at the back of the bill"); 1848, R. v. Farrell, 3 Cox Cr. 139 (Ireland; Pennefather, B.: "It is not only due to the public, but also due to the prisoner, that every one produced before the grand jury should be called"); 1857, Monaghan, C. J., in Spollen's Trial, Ire., pamph. 122 ("We see no obligation to examine any witness. The duty of the crown is simply this, to examine and bring forward every trustworthy witness upon whose truth and accuracy they can rely; but it is not their duty to bring forward any witness that they may think is not telling the truth"); 1858, R. v. Cassidy, 1 F. & F. 79 (Parke, B., "said that certainly the usual course was for the prosecutor to call the witness, and if he declined to examine, the prisoner might cross-examine him. He thought however, the practice did not stand upon any very clear or correct principle, and was supported only on the authority of single judges"; "the correct principle" being merely that the prosecutor "by having had certain witnesses examined before the grand jury whose names were on the back of the indictment, he only impliedly undertook to have them in court for the prisoner to examine them as his witnesses; for the prisoner, on seeing the names there, might have abstained from subpœnaing them"; and he ruled that the prosecutor was not bound to call); 1876, R. v. Thompson, 13 Cox Cr. 181 (Lush, J., followed R. v. Edwards).

By St. 1894, 57 & 58 Vict. c. 41, § 16 (Prevention of Cruelty to Children), providing for using the child's deposition when its evidence was not "essential," some question arose whether the cause could be proceeded with at all for lack of the child's testimony; but a statute of 1904, 4 Edw. VII, omitted the doubtful clause; citations are given ante, § 1411.

[2] 1914, R. v. Hazel and Westlake, 16 D. L. R. 378, Man. (conspiracy with K. to assist K. to escape from jail when confined under a charge of murder; trial Court's refusal to call K. as a witness, or to direct the prosecution to call him, held proper on the facts).

at the English bar between professional custom and a rule of law, served to establish in some quarters the notion that a rule of common law existed, requiring the prosecution to call all indorsed witnesses or all eye-witnesses. This notion first obtained a recognition in Michigan, where it became firmly established.[3] But in only one or two other jurisdictions has it found favor,

[3] The rule begins in 1872, with Hurd v. People; but the opinion in that case sought to support it by prior unrelated rulings, which really dealt only with the relevancy of circumstantial evidence; whether the rule in Michigan to-day applies to indorsed witnesses also, or only to eye-witnesses, is doubtful: 1862, Maher v. People, 10 Mich. 212, 225 (murder; evidence of the deceased's adultery with the defendant's wife just before the killing, and of the defendant's information of it, held admissible for the defendant, on the ground that the prosecution should not "designedly select a part of the facts," but should "show the transaction as a whole"; citing, "by analogy," the above English cases, and adding obiter: "For myself, I am inclined to the opinion that all the facts constituting the 'res gestæ,' so far as the prosecuting counsel is informed of and has the means of proving them, should . . . be laid before the jury by the prosecution"); 1868, Brown v. People, 17 Mich. 429, 433 (murder; prosecution's evidence of a smell of chloroform about the premises, admitted; because it was "both the right and the duty of the prosecution . . . to give to the jury by evidence as complete a picture as possible of all the surroundings"); 1871, Strang v. People, 24 Mich. 1, 10 (rape; defendant's conduct before and after, admitted for prosecution, citing the Brown case); 1872, Hurd v. People, 25 Mich. 404, 416 (murder; circumstances affecting self-defence considered; the principle of the Maher case invoked as authority for a ruling that the prosecution should have produced a certain eye-witness of the assault; the English cases cited, and the present rule here first laid down); 1874, Wellar v. People, 30 Mich. 16, 22 (murder; one of two eye-witnesses required to be called; the rule does not perhaps require all where they would be too numerous; but indorsement of name involves no more than to "have the witness in court ready to be examined"); 1877, Bouker v. People, 37 Mich. 4, 8 (celebrating unlawful marriage; certain bystanders not required to be called, because merely cumulative and also participants in crime); 1878, Thomas v. People, 39 Mich. 309, 312 (assault with intent to murder; failure of the only eye-witness to certain conduct to respond to subpœna, no excuse for not producing); 1878, People v. Goldberg, 39 Mich. 545 (receiving stolen goods; defendant's brother-in-law, at whose house the goods were afterwards deposited, not required to be called); 1879, People v. Gordon, 40 Mich. 716, 720 (burglary; available eye-witness not produced; inference may be drawn); 1880, People v. Long, 44 Mich. 296, 6 N. W. 673 (larceny; defendant's father, who searched him immediately afterwards, not required to be called); 1883, People v. Quick, 51 Mich. 547, 18 N. W. 375 (larceny; prosecution need not call every witness named on the information; no cases cited); 1883, People v. Wolcott, 51 Mich. 612, 618, 17 N. W. 78 (larceny; defendant's wife indorsed, not required to be called on account of relationship); 1884, People v. Henshaw, 52 Mich. 564, 18 N. W. 360 (larceny; same; indorsed witness not present at the offence need not be called); 1889, People v. Swetland, 77 Mich. 53, 57, 43 N. W. 779 (forgery; persons whose names were borne on the instrument, required to be called by prosecution); 1890, People v. McCullough, 81 Mich. 25, 34, 45 N. W. 515 (manslaughter; "there is no rule requiring the prosecution to call accomplices as witnesses," but it should not at the same time join them, if eye-witnesses, as defendants, so as to disqualify them for defendant); 1891, People v. Deitz, 86 Mich. 419, 428, 49 N. W. 296 (assault with intent to do bodily harm; prosecution held bound to call four eye-witnesses); 1892, People v. Wright, 90 Mich. 362, 51 N. W. 517 (keeping a house of ill-fame; a companion of one witness to an act of prostitution, not required to be called, the act being merely evidence and not the offence); 1892, People v. Kenyon, 93 Mich. 19, 22, 52 N. W. 1033 (assault and battery; a fifth person present, the only indifferent one, required to be called); 1894, People v. Germaine, 101 Mich. 485, 60 N. W. 44 (assault with intent to murder; the second of two eye-witnesses required to be called); 1894, People v. Kindra, 102 Mich. 147, 150, 60 N. W. 458 (keeping open a saloon after hours; witnesses merely cumulative to a matter fully proved, not required to be called; rule depends upon circumstances); 1895, People v. Considine, 105 Mich. 149, 63 N. W. 196 (certain witnesses required, in trial Court's discretion, to be called); 1895, People v. Resh, 107 Mich. 251, 65 N. W. 99 (accomplice need not be called); 1896, People v. Pope, 108 Mich. 361, 66 N. W. 213 (calling and tendering for cross-examination suffices); 1896, People v. Grant, 111 Mich. 346, 70 N. W. 647 (rule applied); 1897, People v. Baker, 112 Mich. 211, 70 N. W. 431 (accomplice need not be called); 1897, People v. Savant, 112 Mich. 297, 70 N. W. 576 (calling one who did not see the affray, not necessary); 1898, People v. Hughes, 116 Mich. 80, 74 N. W. 309 (the witness need not be asked about the

and in these it is not clear that the rule in both branches has been accepted; elsewhere, it is repudiated.[4] act charged; calling, swearing, and tendering, sufficient); 1904, People v. Hossler, 135 Mich. 384, 97 N. W. 754 (like People v. Wolcott, supra); 1921, People v. Schwartz, 215 Mich. 197, 183 N. W. 723 (murder; principle applied).

From the following rulings on the present point should be distinguished (as they sometimes are not) the rule and the precedents (ante, §§ 1850–1855) as to the exclusion of unindorsed witnesses.

[4] Federal: 1834, U. S. v. Gibert, 2 Sumner 19, 81 (piracy, and setting fire to a ship; a witness who saw the match applied, not required, in preference to one who saw the smoke, etc.);
Arizona: 1900, Halderman v. Terr., 7 Ariz. 120, 60 Pac. 876 (rule entirely repudiated);
Florida: 1886, Selph v. State, 22 Fla. 537, 543 (prosecution need not call all eye-witnesses nor all indorsed witnesses; see quotation post, § 2080); 1899, Alvarez v. State, 41 Fla. 532, 27 So. 40 (Selph case approved);
Idaho: 1901, State v. Rice, 7 Ida. 762, 66 Pac. 87 (failure to call an indorsed witness, held not error on the facts);
Illinois: 1880, Lamb v. People, 96 Ill. 73, 91 (murder; per Craig, J., the prosecution is not bound to call all the indorsed witnesses); 1886, Bressler v. People, 117 Ill. 422, 437, 8 N. E. 62 (larceny; prosecution not compelled to call all the indorsed witnesses); 1902, Carle v. People, 200 Ill. 494, 66 N. E. 32 (similar rule); 1912, People v. Baskin, 254 Ill. 509, 98 N. E. 957 (State may ask judge to call an eye-witness); 1912, People v. Rardin, 255 Ill. 9, 99 N. E. 59 (similar for three indorsed witnesses);
Indiana: 1877, Winsett v. State, 57 Ind. 26, 30 (illegal sale of liquor; prosecution not bound to call "all the witnesses present at the transaction"); 1889, Keller v. State, 123 Ind. 110, 111, 23 N. E. 1138 (assault and battery; similar ruling); 1892, Siberry v. State, 133 Ind. 677, 685, 33 N. E. 681 (calling of eye-witnesses not necessary, where unavailable; whether ever demandable, undecided); Burns' Ann. St. 1914, § 1944 (in a complaint before a justice for assault or battery, no trial can be had unless the injured party "be present as a witness at the trial, or having been subpœnaed refuses to attend and cannot be compelled to attend by attachment for any other cause than sickness or inability to attend by reason of the injuries" alleged, or unless he is subpœnaed and returned not found, etc.; and "no trial shall be had upon a complaint for an affray, unless some person who saw the same shall be present as a witness, or having been subpœnaed refuses to attend");
Iowa: 1883, State v. Middleham, 62 Ia. 150, 153, 17 N. W. 446 (murder; prosecution not bound to call all eye-witnesses); 1899, State v. Hudson, 110 Ia. 663, 80 N. W. 232, semble (rule not accepted); 1920, State v. Christ, 189 Ia. 474, 177 N. W. 54 (homicide; the State not required to call deceased's wife, who was in Court and had testified before the grand jury);
Kentucky: 1911, Porter v. Com., 145 Ky. 548, 140 S. W. 643 (two of five eye-witnesses of a homicide; Commonwealth's attorney's discretion controls);
Louisiana: 1904, State v. Gosey, 111 La. 616, 35 So. 786 (the Michigan doctrine given an indefinite approval; here, with reference to putting on the stand a co-indictee not on trial); 1878, State v. Williams, 30 La. Ann. 842 (murder; the calling of certain witnesses not required; Michigan rule repudiated; but the State's attorney's unfair conduct may be ground for a new trial); 1906, State v. Goodson, 116 La. 388, 40 So. 776 (State v. Gosey approved); 1906, State v. Stewart, 117 La. 476, 41 So. 798 (assault with intent to kill; an exception to the judge's refusal "to require the district attorney to call the witnesses to the 'res gestæ' and to place them upon the stand for examination" was overruled, following State v. Williams; the professional duty of the State officer to elicit all the truth "is other and very different from a right in the accused to require that the district attorney" should produce all the eye-witnesses; "it may be that some special case might justify special relief");
Massachusetts: 1808, Com. v. Kinison, 4 Mass. 646 (counterfeit note; the receiver of it testified by accidental marks to its identity, but a person to whom he had passed the note received was not called; held, on the principle of the best evidence and the authority of Williams v. E. I. Co., quoted ante, § 1339, that the other person should have been called); 1885, Com. v. Haskell, 140 Mass. 128, 2 N. E. 773 (arson; "there is no law which required the Government, rather than the defendant, to hold or call him [an alleged accomplice] as a witness");
Minnesota: 1899, State v. Smith, 78 Minn. 362, 81 N. W. 17 (not necessary to call all indorsed witnesses, nor, semble, all eye-witnesses); 1907, State v. Sheltrey, 100 Minn. 107, 110 N. W. 353 (the prosecution held not bound to call all eye-witnesses or indorsed witnesses; but either party may comment on the failure of the other to call, on the principles of § 285, ante);
Mississippi: 1880, Morrow v. State, 57 Miss. 836 (murder; the stepdaughter of defendant's brother, an eye-witness, whose former testimony exonerated defendant, not required to be produced; production not necessary in general, except in the Court's discretion, or § 2080. Same: (2) Policy of the Rule. The arguments advanced in favor of the rule are in effect two only. The first, which applies only to the case where the eye-witness is biassed against defendant); 1894, Hale v. State, 72 Miss. 140, 144, 16 So. 387 (murder; prosecution held not compelled to call the eye-witnesses, who were here the accused's sister and a co-defendant); 1895, Carlisle v. State, 73 Miss. 87, 19 So. 207 (criminal seduction; trial Court's discretion approved in not requiring production of the woman, who would have favored defendant);

Missouri: 1879, State v. Kilgore, 70 Mo. 546, 550 (question raised, but not decided; the desired person not being "certainly" an eye-witness); 1882, State v. Eaton, 75 Mo. 586, 593 (on the suggestion of defendant's counsel that there were other eye-witnesses, no calling is required; rule wholly repudiated); 1895, State v. Harlan, 130 Mo. 381, 32 S. W. 997 (same); 1896, State v. David, 131 Mo. 380, 33 S. W. 28 (same); 1897, State v. Billings, 140 Mo. 193, 41 S. W. 778 (no rule requires calling all that have been summoned); 1919, State v. Ferguson, 278 Mo. 119, 212 S. W. 339 (not all eye-witnesses need be called);
Montana: Rev. C. 1921, § 11981 ("Upon a trial for murder or manslaughter it is not necessary for the State to call as witnesses all persons who are shown to have been present at the homicide; but the Court may require all of such witnesses to be sworn and examined"); 1884, Terr. v. Hanna, 5 Mont. 248, 5 Pac. 252 (murder; wife of deceased required to be called, the deceased's family being the only eye-witnesses; the authorities described as "clear and conclusive," citing only the Michigan and earlier English cases); here the Code was enacted; then: 1893, State v. Russell, 13 Mont. 164, 169, 32 Pac. 854 (murder; one not an eye-witness, not required to be called); 1896, State v. Metcalf, 17 Mont. 417, 424, 43 Pac. 182 (murder; one of two persons present required to be called, though drunk at the time of the affray; the rule applies to "those witnesses who were present at the transaction, or who can give direct evidence on any branch of it, . . . unless possibly where too numerous"); 1898, State v. Rolla, 21 Mont. 582, 55 Pac. 523 (under P. C. § 2082, the calling of eye-witnesses is in the Court's discretion); 1903, State v. Tighe, 27 Mont. 327, 71 Pac. 3 (all need not be called); 1920, State v. Vandervoort, 57 Mont. 540, 189 Pac. 764 (homicide; the defendant's brother was the only eye-witness; the State held not bound to call him under the circumstances; the opinion, by relying upon Chitty's Criminal Law and not referring to the original authorities, is led to record the erroneous statement that "under the old English common law, the prosecution was compelled to place all eye-witnesses on the stand");
New York: 1857, People v. Fitzpatrick, 5 Park. Cr. C. 26 (rule denied);
North Carolina: 1841, State v. Martin, 2 Ired. 101, 119 (murder; rule wholly repudiated); 1849, State v. Stewart, 9 Ired. 342, 344 (murder; preceding case approved); 1850, Simpson's Trial, N. C., 5 Amer. St. Tr. 370, 384 (murder by poison; endorsed witnesses, not required to be called; here, two medical men; State v. Martin followed); 1853, State v. Perry, Busbee 330, 333; State v. Martin followed); 1876, State v. Smallwood, 75 N. C. 104, 106 (same); 1880, State v. Baxter, 82 N. C. 602, 606 (same);
North Dakota: 1893, State v. McGahey, 3 N. D. 293, 301, 55 N. W. 753 (shooting with intent to kill; a seventh eye-witness not required to be called; precise rule not clearly stated);
Oregon: 1898, State v. Barrett, 33 Or. 194, 54 Pac. 807 (no such rule of compulsory calling exists; but the trial Court might in discretion require the production of testimony which the prosecution was attempting to suppress; quoted post, § 2080);
Pennsylvania: 1880, Donaldson v. Com., 95 Pa. 21, 24 (rape; a physician who had examined the woman "should have been called as a witness," but "we do not reverse for this reason . . . but merely express our opinion as to what should have been done in the peculiar circumstances of this case"); 1883, Rice v. Com., 102 Pa. 408 (criminal seduction; it was "the plain duty" of the prosecution to call the woman's father, who was present at an alleged admission of a promise of marriage); 1899, Com. v. Keller, 191 Pa. 122, 43 Atl. 198 (cumulative testimony to threats; calling not required); 1908, Com. v. Deitrick, 221 Pa. 7, 70 Atl. 275 (rule repudiated);
Philippine Isl.: 1912, U. S. v. Gonzalez, 22 P. I. 325 (adultery; one of several eye-witnesses, not required to be called); 1914, U. S. v. Bragat, 28 P. I. 78 (prosecuting officer's discretion generally controls);
Porto Rico: 1903, People v. Roman, 5 P. R. 17 (rape; the prosecution required to produce two women, said to be the ones raped, for identification); 1904, People v. Battistini, 5 P. R. 120 (fraudulent representations; certain witnesses not required to be called); 1904, People v. Perez, 7 P. R. 345 (seduction; a boy eye-witness required to be called); 1912, People v. Roman, 18 P. R. 217, 231 (murder, no requirement for producing "all the witnesses whose names were indorsed on the information");
South Dakota: 1906, State v. Kapelino, 20 S. D. 591, 108 N. W. 335 (assault with intent; Michigan rule repudiated); Texas: 1876, Porter v. State, 1 Tex. App. 394, 396 (assault with intent to murder; assaulted party required to be called, on the "best evidence" principle); 1886, Hunnicutt v. State, 20 Tex. App. 632, 639 (murder; three of indorsed witnesses, is that the failure to call them may deprive the accused of their testimony, since he has properly expected, from observing their names indorsed on the indictment, to find them called by the prosecution, and may therefore have omitted to secure them by summons on his own behalf.[1] The second argument, which applies to both branches of the rule, is that the burden and risk of calling a hostile witness, and of being obliged to examine a material witness under the restrictions applicable to examining one's own witness (ante, § 896), should fall upon the prosecution rather than upon the accused:

1872, CHRISTIANCY, C. J., in Hurd v. People, 25 Mich. 404, 416: "The prosecutor in a criminal case is not at liberty, like the plaintiff in a civil case, to select out a part of an entire transaction which makes against the defendant, and then to put the defendant to the proof of the other part, so long as it appears at all probable from the evidence that there may be any other part of the transaction undisclosed, especially if it appears to the Court that the evidence of the other portion is attainable. The only legitimate object other eye-witnesses required to be called, though relatives of the defendant; general principle sanctioned); 1886, Phillips v. State, 22 Tex. App. 139, 174, 2 S. W. 601 (murder; whether a certain witness should be called, left to the trial Court's discretion); 1887, Wheelis v. State, 23 Tex. App. 238, 245, 5 S. W. 224 (same); 1891, Thompson v. State, 30 Tex. App. 325, 328, 17 S. W. 448 (murder; certain eye-witnesses held improperly not put on the stand); 1893, Mayes v. State, 33 Tex. Cr. 33, 41, 24 S. W. 421 (like Phillips v. State); 1894, Reyons v. State, 33 Tex. 143, 144, 25 S. W. 786 (same); 1895, Kidwell v. State, 35 Tex. 264, 33 S. W. 342; 1896, Williford v. State, 36 Tex. 414, 424, 37 S. W. 761 (murder; defendant's mother not required to be called; "there is no rule of law to compel the State to put on every witness who may have been near and knew of any circumstances connected with the killing"); 1899, McGrew v. State, — Tex. —, 49 S. W. 226 (similar); 1900, Robinson v. State, — Tex. —, 57 S. W. 811 (similar); 1901, McCandless v. State, 42 Tex. Cr. 655, 62 S. W. 745; 1903, Holloway v. State, 45 Tex. Cr. 303, 77 S. W. 14 (this and the preceding case leave the rule still unsettled); 1905, Thompson v. State, — Tex. Cr. —, 89 S. W. 1081 (assault; one eye-witness having testified, the rule that the others must be called was held not applicable; "it seems that the later authorities have drifted away from that proposition; but it is not necessary to discuss it"; is "drifting away" a process to be viewed with equanimity?); 1906, McCrear v. State, 49 Tex. Cr. 228, 94 S. W. 899 (assault on defendant's wife; the State not required to call the wife);

Utah: 1886, People v. Oliver, 4 Utah 460, 11 Pac. 612 (assault; an indorsed witness out of the jurisdiction, not necessary to be called); 1889, People v. Robinson, 6 Utah 101, 104, 21 Pac. 403 (assault; "we know of no law requiring the prosecution to call the witnesses whose names are indorsed"; yet if the transaction is only imperfectly disclosed, it is the prosecution's duty to call those who can complete it);

Vermont: 1877, State v. Magoon, 50 Vt. 333, 340 (said obiter that "the State is bound to produce and use all witnesses within reach of its process, of whatever character, whose testimony will throw light upon and characterize the transaction under inquiry"; compare the citation ante, § 918); 1894, State v. Harrison, 66 Vt. 523, 527, 29 Atl. 807 (same, said obiter); 1897, State v. Slack, 69 id. 486, 38 Atl. 311 (same);

Virginia: 1892, Hill v. Com., 88 Va. 633, 639, 14 S. E. 330 (shooting with intent to wound; indorsed witnesses need not all be called, unless the trial Court in discretion requires it; "it is for the representatives of the Commonwealth to say what witnesses he may call"; yet the trial Court may in discretion make an order requiring a certain eye-witness to be called); 1893, Clark v. Com., 90 Va. 360, 367, 18 S. E. 440 (murder; same ruling as to eye-witnesses; here the trial Court had exercised its discretion to call the witness);

Washington: 1895, State v. Payne, 10 Wash. 545, 39 Pac. 57 (prosecution need not produce all its witnesses);

West Virginia: 1882, State v. Cain, 20 W. Va. 679, 685, 693 (murder; State not required to call an eye-witness; rule wholly repudiated, on the ground that defendant has equal power to produce the witness);

Wisconsin: 1909, Dillon v. State, 137 Wis. 655, 119 N. W. 352 (rule rejected);

Wyoming: 1899, Ross v. State, 8 Wyo. 351, 57 Pac. 924 (eye-witness not required to be called); 1899, Johnson v. State, ib. 494, 58 Pac. 761 (indorsed witness, not being an eye-witness, not required to be called).

§ 2080. [1] Stated by Parke, B., in R. v. Cassidy, quoted ante, § 2079.

of the prosecution is to show the whole transaction as it was, whether its tendency be to establish guilt or innocence."

1874, CAMPBELL, J., in Wellar v. People, 30 Mich. 16, 24: "If such witness need not be called by the prosecution, the defense cannot impeach him, and must either call him and run the risk of finding him against them, or, if they fail to call him, be prejudiced by the argument that they have omitted to prove what was in their power, and must have done so because they dared not call out the facts. There is no fairness in such a practice, and a prosecutor should not be permitted to resort to it. He is not responsible for the shortcomings of his witnesses, and he is responsible for any obstacle thrown in the way of eliciting all the facts."

Any rule supported by the names of Campbell and Christiancy must receive respectful consideration; but it may be doubted whether they ever lent their great authority to a doctrine of so little worth. As to the first argument above noted, it is sufficiently met by the trial judge's unquestioned power to postpone the trial in case of a real hardship; ordinarily, the accused's counsel can protect himself by ascertaining beforehand the intentions of the prosecuting counsel, which the latter is in fairness bound to disclose. As to the second argument, it is as easily answered. There is no question, it must be remembered, of losing useful testimony; for the accused has the power to summon the same witness if he desires to. The question is merely whether the accused can force the prosecution to summon him and tender his testimony. The efforts to establish the rule have been made by counsel who wish to have a witness' testimony without the restrictions of using him as their own. These restrictions are no doubt artificial and impolitic (ante, § 899), and the present issue is merely another instance of the absurdity of the rule against impeaching one's own witness. But so long as the rule exists, and exists equally for accused and for prosecution, there is no reason why the former should be allowed to evade it by indirection. Its burden must be borne by one party as well as by the other. So far as the leading-question rule is concerned, it does not hamper the direct examination of a hostile witness (ante, § 774); and it thus disappears from consideration. The sum and substance, therefore, of the proposed rule here under consideration is that the counsel for the accused desires to be freed from the disadvantage of not being able to impeach a witness called by himself; that is the 'animus' of all these efforts. If that rule is a good one, it ought not to be evaded in this way; if it is a bad one, there ought to be no exemption for one side which is withheld from the other side.[2] There is no occasion for a new rule compelling the prosecution to call a witness for no other reason than to relieve the defence from those restrictions.

This answer, in one form or another, has been repeatedly expounded in repudiation of the proposed rule:

1882, HENRY, J., in State v. Eaton, 75 Mo. 586, 594: "One accused of crime is entitled in this country to the State's process to compel the attendance of such witnesses as he may desire; and there is therefore no sound reason for requiring the State to introduce all persons to testify who were witnesses to the alleged criminal act. It is not unfrequently the case that a hundred persons are present at a homicide, and to require the State to introduce them all would unreasonably protract a trial and cause a vast and unnecessary accumulation of costs. We see no reason why the State's attorney, acting under official oath, and as much bound as the representative of the State to protect the innocent as to bring the guilty to justice, should not be left to his discretion as to what number and character of witnesses he will call for the State to prove an alleged crime against the accused. If others than those called by him know facts favorable to the accused, he may have process to compel their attendance; and if they come to speak the truth, a cross-examination by the State's attorney can be a matter of no consequence to them."

[2] In some jurisdictions, the just method is taken of allowing either party to impeach, where the witness is one called by the Court using its discretion (ante, § 918).

1886 McWHORTER, C. J., in Selph v. State, 22 Fla. 537, 544: "There is no necessity for any such practice in this State. The prisoner . . . is entitled to the compulsory process of the Court to compel the attendance of his witnesses, and if he introduces no evidence, he is entitled to the concluding argument to the jury. Every lawyer knows the value to the prisoner of this privilege. Were the rule as insisted on in force in this State, it would be difficult to convict a prisoner where the State was compelled to introduce the evidence relied on by him for his defence, and then, because he had not introduced any evidence himself, allow him the concluding argument to the jury. Besides this, the compulsion of one side to introduce witnesses for the other would create confusion in practice as to the right of contradiction of witnesses and their cross-examination; and would be useless, as the prisoner has the power to put the witnesses on the stand himself if he desires it."

1892, LEWIS, P., in Hill v. Com., 88 Va. 633, 639, 14 S. E. 330: "It is obvious that the rule contended for by the prisoner would, if adopted, lead to very serious results in the administration of justice. If the prosecuting attorney were bound to call all attainable witnesses present at the transaction, he might often be compelled to introduce witnesses unworthy of credit, and yet not be permitted to impeach them. He might be unwittingly compelled to call confederates of the defendant, and thus by his own evidence win an easy victory for the accused at the expense of justice."

1898, BEAN, J., in State v. Barrett, 33 Or. 194, 54 Pac. 807: "[The practice] probably came into use in England at a time when the right of a defendant in a criminal case to be represented by counsel, or to have witnesses appear and testify in his behalf, was either denied entirely, or very much abridged. Under such circumstances, it was, of course, important that the prosecution be compelled to prove the entire transaction, and to call all the witnesses present at the time, whether they would testify for or against the defendant. But these restrictions upon the rights of a defendant do not, and never did, exist in this country. Here the right of the accused to appear by counsel, and to have compulsory process for obtaining witnesses in his favor, is everywhere recognized, and generally guaranteed by the fundamental law. There is therefore no necessity for requiring the State to call all the persons who were present when the offense was committed, or any particular number of them. The rights of the defendant are not in any way abridged by a failure to do so. He has the assistance and advice of counsel selected by himself, if able to employ one, and, if not, appointed by the Court, and compulsory process for obtaining witnesses at the public expense. In addition to this, the State is bound to make out its case beyond a reasonable doubt; and if the prosecuting officer does not call sufficient witnesses for that purpose, or if any unfavorable inference can be drawn from his failure to call any witness, the defendant is not likely to suffer by the omission; and if he calls only such witnesses as are favorable to the State, the defendant has a right to call any others which he may suppose will relate the facts favorable to him."

§ 2081. Corpus Delicti must be proved by Eye-witnesses, not merely by Circumstantial Evidence. The attempt has often been made to establish a rule that, for proving the 'corpus delicti' — the fact of death, on a charge of homicide, or of abstraction of goods, on a charge of larceny [1] — there must be direct or testimonial evidence, i. e. a witness who has seen the lifeless body of the person, or the vacant place where the goods were. This attempt has been founded chiefly upon a cautionary passage of Lord Hale's and a misunderstood utterance of Lord Stowell's:

1680, Sir Matthew HALE, Pleas of the Crown, II, 290: "I would never convict any person for stealing the goods 'cujusdam ignoti' merely because he would not give an account how he came by them, unless there was due proof made that a felony was committed of these goods. I would never convict any person of murder or manslaughter, unless the fact were proved to be done, or at least the body found dead, — for the sake of two cases, one mentioned in my lord Coke's P. C. cap. 104, p. 232, a Warwickshire case,[2] another that happened in my remembrance in Staffordshire." [3]

1790, Sir Wm. SCOTT (Lord STOWELL) in Evans v. Evans, 1 Hagg. Cons. 35, 105 (divorce for cruelty; the particular issue being whether the husband had wilfully pushed the wife out of bed, and the only fact established being that the wife somehow had fallen out of bed): "I certainly shall not presume circumstances in order to make out such a case [of intentional ejection]. It has been asked, and very properly asked, 'Don't Courts of justice admit presumptive proof? Do you expect ocular proof in all cases?' I take the rule to be this: If you have a criminal fact ascertained, you may then take presumptive proof to show who did it, — to fix the criminal, having then an actual 'corpus delicti.' Show me, then, in this case, that the crime has been committed, and I shall not be at a loss to fix the criminal. But to take presumptions in order to swell an equivocal fact, a fact that is absolutely ambiguous in its own nature, into a criminal fact, is a mode of proceeding of a very different nature, and would, I take it, be an entire misapplication of the doctrine of presumptions. The fact, then, not being a criminal one upon the face of it, and being subject to three or four different interpretations, all of which are perfectly innocent, I think myself by no means at liberty to say that I ought by presumption merely to make out this fact to be necessarily an act of delinquency."

1858, JOHNSON, C. J., in Ruloff v. People, 18 N. Y. 179, 184: "[The rule] may have its probable foundation in the idea that where direct proof is absent as to both the fact of the death and of criminal violence capable of producing death, no evidence can rise to the degree of moral certainty that the individual is dead by criminal intervention, or even lead by direct inference to those results; and that where the fact of death is not certainly ascertained, all mere inculpatory moral evidence wants the key necessary for its satisfactory interpretation and cannot be depended on to furnish more than probable results. It may be also that such a rule has some reference to the dangerous possibility that a general preconception of guilt, or a general excitement of popular feeling, may creep in to supply the place of evidence, if upon other than direct proof of death or a cause of death the jury are to be permitted, upon whatever evidence may be presented to them competent upon any part of the case, to pronounce a defendant guilty."

§ 2081. [1] The definition of the term 'corpus delicti' has been already examined (ante, § 2072).

[2] The following is the case referred to: 1628, Coke, Third Institute, 232 (Warwickshire case of 1611; an uncle, charged with the murder of a niece who had disappeared, produced another child to impersonate the niece; the fraud being discovered, he was hanged; in truth, the niece had run away, and at the age of sixteen returned to claim her property).

[3] This was a case resembling that of the Perrys, cited infra, and perhaps that very case.

A similar warning to Lord Hale's was later given in a forcible passage not so often cited: 1688, Sir John Hawles, Solicitor-General, Remarks on Cornish's Trial, 11 How. St. Tr. 463: "To say truth, when verdicts have been given on such evidence [probable presumptions or inferences], they have been often faulty. [After noting the Perry case and the Warwickshire case,] therefore it is a most dangerous and unwarrantable thing for a jury in capital matters, especially in treason, to convict a person upon the evidence of probabilities."

The class of cases referred to by Lord Hale certainly call attention to the risk of hastily concluding that an accused is guilty before it appears plainly that the alleged injury has been actually suffered. These cases, to be sure, are rare enough; not half a dozen seem to be recorded in all our annals.[4] But their rarity of occurrence makes caution none the less necessary. Lord Hale's remark, however, appears to be nothing more than a general expression of caution, not a definite rule of law. Moreover, a caution as to the degree of proof or persuasion is a very different thing from a requirement as to a specific kind of evidence; and it does not appear that he meant to say definitely that an eye-witness of the 'corpus delicti' was necessary. As to Lord Stowell's remark, he was in the first place dealing with the civil-law rules of Evidence, which rested on a different classification;[5] and in the next place, he merely requires that some evidence be produced, and that one's conclusion be not formed merely by bare presumption or inference. The supposed authorities, in short, yield scanty support for the rule.

Concluding, then, that a caution is desirable as to the degree of persuasion that ought to be insisted on in the tribunal, i. e. a rule in the nature of the reasonable-doubt rule (post, § 2497), but asking whether there is any proper place for a rule of Evidence requiring an eye-witness to the fact of loss or injury, the unnecessary and impracticable nature of such a fixed rule is apparent. It would be unnecessary, because complete persuasion may often be attained without such testimony. It would be impracticable, because such testimony may often be unattainable, and then the effect of such a rule is merely to promise immunity to such criminals as can also succeed in making that kind of testimony unavailable:

1854, R. v. Burton, Dears. Cr. C. 282, 18 Jur. 157; the defendant was found, with pepper in his pocket, coming out of a warehouse containing a large quantity of similar pepper, both loose and in bags; it was impossible to ascertain directly whether there was

[4] Besides the Staffordshire and Warwickshire cases, the following are the only ones of false conviction that appear to be recorded: 1705, Captain Green's Trial, 14 How. St. Tr. 1199, 1294, 1309, 1312 (piracy by seizing a ship in the East Indies; it subsequently appeared that the ship and crew in question were safe and had never been seized at all); 1660, Perry's Case, 14 How. St. Tr. 1312 (murder; the supposed murdered man, whose body was not found, returned home two years after the accused's execution); 1819, Boorn's Case, Rutland, Vt., Fay & Burt's Pam. Report, 5 Law Reporter, 193, 10 North Amer. Review 418, Greenleaf's Evidence, 7th ed., § 214, note, reprinted also in 6 American State Trials Series (murder; several years after the disappearance, there was a confession, trial, and conviction; the culprit was about to be hung, when the supposed deceased was discovered alive and brought back; but here parts of the body were believed to have been found).

Compare the cases of false confession (ante, § 867). In 12 American Criminal Reports 213 (1905), the editor, Mr. John F. Geeting, has a valuable note collecting cases, including some not elsewhere noticed.

[5] It may be noted here that the passage in the Roman Digest sometimes put forward as the source of the supposed rule, concerns an altogether different problem: Digesta, 29, 5, 1, §§ 1, 24: De senatus consulto Silaniano et Claudiano: "Cum aliter nulla domus tuta esse possit, nisi periculo capitis sui custodiam dominis tam ab domesticis quam ab extraneis praestare servi cogantur, ideo senatus consulta introducta sunt de publica quaestione [torture] a familia necatorum habenda. . . . Item illud sciendum est, nisi constet aliquem esse occisum, non haberi de familia quaestionem: liquere igitur debet scelere interemptum, ut senatus consulto locus sit."

any shortage in the warehouse amount. Mr. Ribton, of counsel: "It is submitted that the 'corpus delicti' must be proved in every case, and you cannot make any difference in the application of the rule." MAULE, J.: "The offence must be proved. If a man go into London Docks sober, without means of getting drunk, and comes out of one of the cellars very drunk wherein are a million gallons of wine, I think that would be reasonable evidence that he had stolen some of the wine in that cellar, though you could not prove [by direct testimony] that any wine was stolen or any wine missed." Mr. Ribton: "The 'corpus delicti' must be proved." MAULE, J.: "Where is the rule that the 'corpus delicti' must be expressly proved?" Mr. Ribton: "In Lord Hale it is so laid down." MAULE, J.: "Only as a caution in cases of murder." JERVIS, C. J.: "We are all of opinion that there is nothing in the objection."

1834, STORY, J., in U. S. v. Gibert, 2 Sumn. 19, 27: "[This] proposition [that the body must be found] certainly cannot be admitted as correct in point of common reason or of law. . . . A more complete encouragement and protection for the worst offences of this sort could not be invented than a rule of this strictness. It would amount to a universal condonation of all murders committed on the high seas."

1850, SHAW, C. J., in Com. v. Webster, Mass., Bemis' Rep. 479: "It has sometimes been said by judges that a jury ought never to convict in a case of homicide unless the dead body be found and identified. This, as a general proposition, is undoubtedly true and correct; and disastrous and lamentable consequences have resulted from disregarding the rule. But, like other general rules, it is to be taken with some qualification. It may sometimes happen that the dead body cannot be produced, although the proof of the death is clear and satisfactory; as in a case of murder at sea, where the body is thrown overboard in a dark and stormy night, at a great distance from land or any vessel; although the body cannot be found, nobody can doubt that the author of that crime is chargeable with murder."

A striking example, both of the sufficiency of circumstantial evidence for purposes of this kind and of the impracticability of a rule requiring any other sort of evidence, is found in a celebrated trial of some piratical murderers, in which Mr. Justice Story illuminated the subject in his charge to the jury:

1818, Williams' Trial, U. S. Circ. Ct. Boston, Russell & Gardner's Rep. 42, 68, 80; murder on the high seas. Mr. Samuel L. Knapp, for the defence: "The difference between a certainty to a common intent, and a certainty to an absolute intent, is greater than we commonly imagine. If a man goes out to sea in a small boat, and a storm arises, and afterwards the boat is found upset, it is fair and just, to all common purposes and intents, to infer that he has perished; but still he might not be dead; such instances have occurred in our time, and the supposed deceased was afterwards found to be alive. Would you not say, gentlemen, that a man who was seen going over the falls of Niagara in a skiff, and never heard of more, was dead? Yet men have gone over the falls safe, and it would not be impossible that he might be alive whom we thought was lost. When Daniel was cast into the lion's den, it might have been fairly inferred that he was instantly destroyed. But still that inference would have been false; for he was not killed; the angel of the Lord shut the mouths of the famished lions. Does not the same angel walk on the waters to rescue his charge from the deep? It was indeed a special providence; but that special providence which all acknowledge, and which no one can define, is constantly operating on all the incidents of life. If Baynard should at this time come into this court, it would surprise us; but stranger things than that have happened. In this case you have no right to conjecture or reason upon his being dead. The only question is, has his death been proved to a demonstration?" Mr. George Blake, for the prosecution: "First, then, gentlemen, is it true that Thomas Baynard, the person alluded to, is actually dead? . . . Without the aid of inference or presumption, the fact is now established, that the body of this supposed victim was seen upon the deck of the schooner Plattsburgh, breathless, and to all appearance lifeless, on the night of that day which is mentioned in the indictment. That while lying in this situation, it was taken from the deck by two of the prisoners at the bar, Williams and Rog, and thrown into the sea. He was never afterwards seen on board the vessel; nor does it appear that, from that day to this, any man has seen or heard from him, as being alive on the face of the earth. The vessel, at the time of this occurrence, was upon the ocean, and at the distance of several hundred miles from any land. No other vessel was then in view; nor was any one seen for several days preceding or subsequent to the period alluded to. Such, gentlemen of the jury, are the circumstances, upon which the allegation is founded that this man is dead. Permit me to inquire, can there be a doubt of the fact? It is true indeed, that the body of this sufferer was not followed to his deathbed in the ocean, by either of the witnesses, who have spoken on this occasion. No one has declared to you, upon the sanctity of an oath, that he watched the process of that suffocation which is described in the indictment, or witnessed the very last gasp of the deceased. It has, therefore, been insisted by the counsel in the defence, and with a degree of earnestness that would denote their sincerity in the objection, that our evidence of the death is yet incomplete. The wide ocean must be ransacked, the dead body must have been discovered, or it would be unsafe and presumptuous to convict for the murder. Such, gentlemen, is the argument of counsel in the defence. . . . [But I say to you that] so sure as that the life of Thomas Baynard was not preserved by a miracle, if his body as well as spirit (as in one memorable instance that might be mentioned) were not literally translated, that fatal night, from its abiding place on earth, to another and a brighter world, so certain is the conclusion, that he is not now existing." STORY, J., charging the jury: "The counsel for the prisoner contend to you, that there is no evidence of the actual death of Baynard, that it is still possible he may have been saved, by some miraculous interposition, from the devouring waves to which they had committed him. But by what spirit of the deep was he protected? To what region has he been conveyed? He has gone, gentlemen, you will think, I believe, to that region towards which we are all of us advancing. If you are satisfied with the truth of the evidence presented to you, it is impossible for you to indulge the least doubt on the point of his actual death. In no case can you arrive, perhaps, at absolute certainty of the death of an individual. There always remains some ground for the conjectures of the doubting. They may say that your own senses are not always sufficient to satisfy you. Should you even see a man laid out in his coffin, you may yet call to mind, that there have been instances of resuscitation, which have contradicted the tenor of human experience. But we must act as reasonable men on reasonable evidence; and in this case, that can leave no doubt that Baynard is dead."

In the rulings in England, there was at first some indication of a willingness to erect Lord Hale's caution into a definite rule of law. But it may now be said that no such fixed rule is there countenanced, either at large, or for the specific cases of larceny and murder;[6] and in the ecclesiastical

[6] England: 1792, R. v. Hindmarsh, 2 Leach Cr. L., 4th ed., 569 (murder on shipboard by throwing the captain overboard; counsel for the defendant argued that the death was not shown and the captain might have been picked up by other ships; the Court "admitted the general rule of law," presumably meaning L. C. B. Hale's rule, and Mr. J. Ashurst "left it to the jury upon the evidence to say whether the deceased was not killed before his body was cast into the sea"; all the judges approved the finding of murder); 1820, Best, J., in R. v. Burdett, 4 B. & Ald. 95, 122 (criminal libel; the issue being whether there was evidence of publication in Leicestershire, to support the venue; "We must act on presumptive proof or leave the worst crimes unpunished. I admit, where the presumption is attempted to be

Courts Lord Stowell himself early repudiated such a rule for the proof of adultery.[7]

In the United States, it has been generally conceded that no such rule exists; i. e. circumstantial evidence of a proper degree of strength is sufficient to prove the death of the person, loss of the goods, or other injury forming the 'corpus delicti', and testimony by eye-witnesses of the deed done, or at least of the person's dead body, or of the vacant place where the goods were, is not required.[8] In three jurisdictions, however, such a rule has

[7] 1798, Williams v. Williams, 1 Hagg. Cons. 299 (Sir Wm. Scott: "[The Court will be] vigilant to see that the two main points of such cases [of adultery] are sufficiently proved, viz. the criminal act, and that the person against whom the proofs of that act is established was the wife. It is undoubtedly true that direct evidence of the fact is not required, as it would render the relief of the husband almost impracticable; but I take the rule to be that there must be such proximate circumstances proved" as satisfy the Court); 1810, Loveden v. Loveden, 2 Hagg. Cons. 1, 2 (Sir Wm. Scott: "It is a fundamental rule that it is not necessary to prove the direct fact of adultery").

[8] The following cases declare this, except so far as any qualifications are expressly noted; the qualification, sometimes made, that direct evidence must be produced when it is obtainable, lacks of course the most objectionable feature of the proposed rule, and expresses nothing more than the practice which any competent prosecuting officer would naturally observe:

Federal: 1834, U. S. v. Gibert, 2 Sumn. 19, 27 (quoted supra); 1858, U. S. v. Williams, 1 Cliff. 5, 20 (a rule requiring the finding of the body "ought always to be enforced whenever direct proof exists and it is practicable to obtain it");

Alabama: 1878, Colquitt v. State, 61 Ala. 48, 52, semble; 1884, Winslow v. State, 76 Ala. 42, 47; 1893, Ryan v. State, 100 Ala. 94, 95, 14 So. 868; 1900, Martin v. State, 125 Ala. 64, 28 So. 92;

California: 1880, People v. Alviso, 55 Cal. 230, 233 (murder; in exceptional cases); 1920, People v. Hamilton, — Cal. App.—, 192 Pac. 467 (murder);

Florida: 1899, Gantling v. State, 41 Fla. 587, 26 So. 737 (murder);

Georgia: 1859, Phillips v. State, 29 Ga. 105, 108, semble (arson; opinion not clear; perhaps contra for murder);

Illinois: 1894, Carlton v. People, 150 Ill. 181, 186, 37 N. E. 244 (arson); 1895, Campbell v. People, 159 Ill. 9, 42 N. E. 122 (infanticide); 1904, Heyman v. Heyman, 210 Ill. 524, 71 N. E. 591 (divorce); 1905, Hoch v. People, 219 Ill. 265, 76 N. E. 356 (murder); 1913, People v. See, 258 Ill. 152, 101 N. E. 257; 1914, People v. Goodwin, 263 Ill. 99, 104 N. E. 1018; raised as to the 'corpus delicti,' that it ought to be strong and cogent; but in a part of the case relating merely to the question of venue, leaving the body of the offence untouched, I would act on as slight grounds of presumption as" in the most trifling cause); 1838, R. v. Hopkins, 8 C. & P. 591 (infanticide; a body, differing in description, being found, Abinger, L. C. B., said the defendant need not account for her child "unless there be evidence to show that her child is actually dead"); 1845, R. v. Dredge, 1 Cox Cr. 235 (larceny of a doll; the goods being found on the defendant, but the prosecuting witness being unable to identify them or to swear that he had not sold them, an acquittal was ordered); 1854, R. v. Burton, Dears. Cr. C. 282 (larceny; see quotation supra); 1857, R. v. Hooper, 1 F. & F. 85 (larceny of coal; there being no testimony that coal from the place in issue was missed, Willes, J., left it to the jury to say whether any had been taken); 1862, R. v. Cheverton, 2 F. & F. 833 (infant-murder by mother; the body of a child was found near the place next day, but was not identified; Erle, C. J.: "It is no doubt essential that you should be satisfied that the body found in the Colne was the body of the prisoner's child, and put there by her. . . . [After referring to Lord Hale,] On the whole evidence, are you satisfied that the body found in the river was the body of the prisoner's child and that it was put there by her;"); 1868, R. v. Mockford, 11 Cox Cr. 16 (larceny of fowls; circumstantial evidence of the loss of the fowls, held sufficient); 1908, R. v. Nash, L. R. 6 Cr. App. 225 (murder); 1910, R. v. Crippen, 1 K. B. [1911] 149, and Notable British Trials Series, Crippen's Trial (1920), App. D. (murder; mutilated body held sufficiently identified; no question raised as to the present rule);

Ireland: 1917, R. v. McNicholl, 2 Ir. R. 557 (murder of an illegitimate child, the body not being found; Sir James Campbell, C. J.: "What has been relied upon as an inflexible legal maxim is nothing more than a wise and necessary caution to be addressed by the presiding judge to the jury"; nor is the case of murder any exception to the rule; the opinion carefully reviews the authorities and the policy); been enacted by statutes;[9] one of which, at least, seems to be, in Mr. Justice Story's phrase, "a condonation of all murders" in which the murderer has Indiana: 1855, Stocking v. State, 7 Ind. 326, 330 (murder); 1874, McCulloch v. State, 48 Ind. 109, 111 (murder; but no decision made as to a case where no remains of the person are found); 1908, Mason v. State, 171 Ind. 78, 85 N. E. 776 (larceny); 1911, Messel v. State, 176 Ind. 214, 95 N. E. 565 (rape under age);

Canada: 1905, R. v. King, 6 N. W. Terr. 139, 147 (murder).

Indian Terr.: 1906, Leftridge v. U. S., 6 Ind. T. 305, 97 S. W. 1018 (homicide);

Iowa: 1870, State v. Keeler, 28 Ia. 551 (murder); 1897, State v. Millmeier, 102 Ia. 692, 72 N. W. 275 (arson); 1921, State v. Townsend, 191 Ia. 362, 182 N. W. 392 (murder; decomposed corpse);

Kansas: 1876, State v. Winner, 17 Kan. 298, 305 (murder); 1913, State v. Cardwell, 90 Kan. 606, 135 Pac. 597 (rape under age);

Kentucky: 1896, Laughlin v. Com., — Ky. —, 37 S. W. 590 (murder);

Massachusetts: 1850, Com. v. Webster, 5 Cush. 295, 310 (murder); 1898, Com. v. Williams, 171 Mass. 461, 50 N. E. 1035;

Minnesota: 1867, State v. Hogard, 12 Minn. 293, 298, semble (larceny);

Missouri: 1905, State v. Henderson, 186 Mo. 473, 85 S. W. 576 (murder); 1906, State v. Barrington, 198 Mo. 23, 95 S. W. 235 (murder); 1911, State v. McCord, 237 Mo. 242, 140 S. W. 885 (rape); 1921, State v. Poor, 286 Mo. 644, 228 S. W. 810 (murder; body burned);

New Mexico: 1902, U. S. v. Griego, 11 N. M. 392, 72 Pac. 20 (adultery);

North Carolina: 1860, State v. Williams, 7 Jones L. 446, 454 (homicide);

Oklahoma: 1913, Woody v. State, 10 Okl. Cr. 322, 136 Pac. 430 (adultery);

Oregon: 1899, State v. Hanna, 35 Or. 195, 57 Pac. 629, semble (larceny); 1905, State v. Williams, 46 Or. 287, 80 Pac. 655 (murder); 1906, State v. Barnes, 47 Or. 592, 85 Pac. 998 (murder);

Pennsylvania: 1846, Com. v. Harman, 4 Pa. St. 269, 272, semble (homicide); 1882, Gray v. Com., 101 id. 380, 386, semble (homicide);

Philippine Isl.: 1903, U. S. v. De La Cruz, 2 P. I. 148 (robbery);

Porto Rico: 1917, People v. Villegas, 25 P. R. 815 (larceny of ducks);

Rhode Island: 1917, State v. Deslovers, 40 R. I. 89, 100 Atl. 64;

South Carolina: 1896, State v. Martin, 47 S. C. 67, 25 S. E. 113 (though not definitely deciding more than that the identification of a body found may be made by circumstantial evidence);

Tennessee: 1844, Tyner v. State, 5 Humph. 383, semble (larceny); 1847, Carey v. State, 7 Humph. 499, semble (stealing); 1891, Lancaster v. State, 91 Tenn. 267, 269, 18 S. W. 777, semble (murder);

Vermont: 1858, State v. Davidson, 30 Vt. 377, 385, semble (robbery); 1879, State v. Potter, 52 Vt. 33, 39; 1896, State v. Brink, 68 Vt. 659, 35 Atl. 492 (adultery; overruling State v. Way, 6 Vt. 311); 1902, State v. Kimball, 74 Vt. 223, 52 Atl. 430 (adultery);

Virginia: 1871, Smith v. Com., 21 Gratt. 809, 813 (murder); 1878, Johnson v. Com., 29 Gratt. 796, 820 (burglary; preceding case approved);

Washington: 1902, State v. Gates, 28 Wash. 689, 69 Pac. 385;

West Virginia: 1885, State v. Flanagan, 26 W. Va. 116, 123 (murder); 1913, State v. Merrill, 72 W. Va. 500, 78 S. E. 699 (infanticide);

Wisconsin: 1892, Zoldoske v. State, 82 Wis. 580, 597 (murder); 1899, Buel v. State, 104 Wis. 132, 80 N. W. 78; 1903, Paulson v. State, 118 Wis. 89, 94 N. W. 771; 1905, Winsky v. State, 126 Wis. 99, 105 N. W. 480 (burglary);

Wyoming: 1898, Dalzell v. State, 7 Wyo. 450, 53 Pac. 297 (no rule laid down; evidence here held sufficient).

[9] New York: 1856, People v. Wilson, 3 Park. Cr. C. 191, 207, semble (murder; circumstantial evidence suffices); 1858, Ruloff v. People, 18 N. Y. 179, 184 (the law in homicide "does not permit a conviction without direct proof of the death or of the violence or other act of the defendant which is alleged to have produced death"); 1872, People v. Bennett, 49 N. Y. 137, 143 ("The point of the [preceding] decision is that, as to one or the other of the component parts of the 'corpus delicti', there must be direct evidence; that both cannot be established by mere circumstantial evidence; but the Court affirms the rule that when one is proved by direct evidence, the other may be by circumstances"); 1881, Penal Code, § 181, Cons. L. 1909, Penal, § 1041 ("No person can be convicted of murder or manslaughter unless the death of the person alleged to have been killed, and the fact of killing by the defendant as alleged, are each established, as independent facts; the former by direct proof, and the latter beyond a reasonable doubt"); 1888, People v. Beckwith, 108 N. Y. 67, 71, 15 N. E. 53 (murder; statute applied); 1888, People v. Palmer, 109 N. Y. 110, 112, 16 N. E. 529 (murder; statute construed; 'corpus delicti' does not include identity of the deceased); 1905, People v. Patrick, 182 N. Y. 131, 74 N. E. 843 (statute applied);

North Dakota: Comp. L. 1913, § 9459 (quoted ante, § 2070; like N. Y. P. C. § 181, supra); 1917, State v. Sogge, 36 N. D. 262, 161 N. W. 1022 (infanticide; Comp. L. 1913, § 9459 applied; here there was direct evidence that the child had been born alive, but the trial Court's instruction was held faulty); successfully destroyed his victim's body. In another jurisdiction, it is provided that in capital cases the death penalty shall not be imposed for a conviction on circumstantial evidence alone;[10] i. e. there must be some direct or testimonial evidence; but this loose and unpractical rule violates all the traditions of the common law, and merely represents a compromise on the issue of abolishing capital punishment.

§ 2081*a*. Eye-witness of a Personal Injury; Insurance-Clause. There is of course no rule, at either common law or by statute, requiring an eye-witness as part of the period of a personal injury, in a civil action either of tort or of contract (ante, 2078). Under statutes providing for a review by the Supreme Court of findings of an industrial commission, as to the sufficiency of evidence that the employee's injury was received in the course of employment, it has sometimes been argued that there must be an eye-witness to the injury. But such a rule would be not only unfair in numerous cases of actual injury, but often futile and productive of evasion in dishonest cases; and has properly been repudiated.[1]

Insurers against death or personal injury by accident have experienced difficulty in exposing false claims of accident, advanced in cases of suicide or self-inflicted injury, where the absence of eye-witnesses has left the evidence doubtful. Courts have here wisely made no deviation from the general rule. But in contracts of accident-insurance or life-insurance such a clause is sometimes inserted. On the general principle of the validity of such contracts affecting the mode of proof (ante, § 7*a*), this species of clause is plainly valid.

§ 2082. Proof of a "Marriage in Fact"; (1) Marriage in Evidence and in Substantive Law. The possible modes of evidencing a marriage depend so intimately upon the theory of the marriage-contract in substantive law that the main features of the latter must be kept in mind in examining the rules of Evidence.

Texas: 1874, Wilson v. State, 41 Tex. 320, 325, 43 id. 412, 476, semble (murder; circumstantial evidence suffices); 1876, Brown v. State, 1 Tex. App. 154, semble (same; larceny); 1885, Lightfoot v. State, 20 Tex. 77, 98, semble (same; murder); P. C. § 549, Rev. P. C. 1911, § 1084 ("No person shall be convicted of any degree of homicide unless the body of the deceased, or portions of it, are found and sufficiently identified to establish the fact of the death of the person charged to have been killed"); 1889, Puryear v. State, 28 Tex. 73, 78, 11 S. W. 929 (statute applied); 1898, Kugadt v. State, 38 Tex. Cr. 681, 44 S. W. 989 (the identification, under the statute, may be by circumstantial evidence); 1899, Gay v. State, 40 Tex. Cr. 242, 49 S. W. 612 (preceding case followed); 1900, Bailey v. State, 42 Tex. Cr. 289, 59 S. W. 900 (following Kugadt v. State); 1902, Landreth v. State, 44 Tex. Cr. 239, 70 S. W. 758 (preceding cases approved); 1921, Mettall v. State, 89 Tex. Cr. 216, 233 S. W. 315 (confession may be used "in aid of other proof to establish the 'corpus delicti' ").

[10] Colo. R. S. 1908, § 1624, Comp. St. 1921, § 6666 ("nor shall any person suffer the death penalty who shall have been convicted on circumstantial evidence alone"); 1913, Dumas v. People, 62 Colo. 418, 163 Pac. 259 (Rev. St. 1908, § 1624, quoted supra, applied to a charge of murder; "a confession by the defendant is circumstantial evidence"; unsound in theory; two judges diss.).

§ 2081*a*. [1] 1917, Ohio Building Safety Vault Co. v. Industrial Board, 277 Ill. 96, 102 (employee's death; cause of death, as occurring in course of employment, may be evidenced "by circumstantial as well as by direct evidence"); 1918, Smith-Lohr Coal Co. v. Industrial Com., 286 Ill. 34, 37 (following Ohio B. S. V. Co. v. Ind. Board, supra); 1920, Hydrox Chemical Co. v. Industrial Commission, 291 Ill. 579, 126 N. E. 564.

As the common law emerged into the 1800s, and the question of the elements of a valid marriage came exclusively within the jurisdiction of the common-law Courts, after the long domination of the ecclesiastical Courts over that subject, there came up everywhere for settlement a controversy upon a fundamental point, requiring a long historical survey for its proper understanding. That controversy was, briefly, over this question: Whether for a valid marriage-contract an informal and private exchange of consent, similar to that by which any other contract could be made, would suffice; or whether the exchange of consent must take place before an ordained clergyman or other person authorized to celebrate marriages. In 1843, the latter requirement was declared to be and to have been the common law of England;[1] though it seems entirely clear that the former view is historically the correct one;[2] and it has in fact been taken as the law for Scotland and for probably every one of the jurisdictions in the United States.[3] The controversy in the substantive law thus lay between the private or informal consent and the public or ceremonial consent.

Now this ceremonial marriage, so important in the substantive law, though open to confusion with the "marriage in fact" of the law of Evidence, is unquestionably distinct in its meaning; indeed the evidential rule about a "marriage in fact" was laid down nearly a century before the case of R. v. Millis, and at a time when the erroneous doctrine about a ceremonial marriage had not yet been clearly adopted by English Courts. The meaning of "marriage in fact" is simple and undoubted (though it is not a meaning for which any clue is given by the unfortunate phrase itself); it is a marriage which can be evidenced by an eye-witness of the act of exchanging consent.[4] It is thus apparent that, so far as the theory of law is concerned, the informal marriage can be equally a "marriage in fact" with the ceremonial one; that is to say, a friend who is present at the informal exchange of consent may testify as an eye-witness to the "marriage in fact" and thus satisfy the rule of Evidence. Conversely, a ceremonial marriage may in the substantive law be required (as in England), and yet may be evidenced merely by habit and repute, where the rule of Evidence requiring proof by an eye-witness does not apply. It can be understood, then, at the outset, that the evidential rule about a "marriage in fact" has nothing essentially to do with the controversy of substantive law as to a ceremonial marriage.

There is, to be sure, an accidental relation between the two so far as concerns the ease of proof of one sort or another. (1) On the one hand, proof of a "marriage in fact" i. e. by an eye-witness, will be more likely to be available in a jurisdiction where the ceremonial marriage is the only valid one.

§ 2082. [1] R. v. Millis, 10 Cl. & F. 534; Beamish v. Beamish, 9 H. L. C. 274.

[2] Pollock & Maitland, History of the English Law, II, 362–382.

[3] 1905, Reaves v. Reaves, 15 Okl. 240, 82 Pac. 490 (summarizing the history); 1891, Bishop, Marriage, Divorce, and Separation, § 409; 1904, Howard, History of Matrimonial Institutions; 1922, O. E. Koegel, Common Law Marriage and its Development in the United States, passim.

[4] See the quotations post, § 2085.

The celebrating clergyman or magistrate being an eye-witness, his certificate serves as eye-witness proof (post, § 2087), and either this or the marriage-register kept by him will generally be available; moreover, the persons usually required in such jurisdictions to attend the ceremony as witnesses will furnish another available source of eye-witness proof. In a jurisdiction sanctioning the informal exchange of marriage-consent, no eye-witness proof will be available, if the parties have taken the full liberty of the law and have exchanged consent privately and without the presence of either clergyman, magistrate, or friends. Consequently, to require as a rule of Evidence, eye-witness proof of marriage in such jurisdictions often amounts to practically the same thing as requiring, by rule of substantive law, a ceremonial marriage; because the required eye-witness cannot be had.[5] Nevertheless, this is purely an accidental coincidence of fact, and not the result of any legal identity of ceremonial marriage and "marriage in fact"; as is easily seen by supposing the case of a consent informally exchanged before friends; for this would not be a ceremonial marriage valid by the substantive law of England, although it would furnish the eye-witness proof sufficient to satisfy the rule of evidence. (2) On the other hand, proof by habit and repute, i. e. by conduct as married persons and by reputation of the community (post, § 2083), will be more significant and cogent in jurisdictions where the substantive law requires no more than an informal and private exchange of consent to constitute a valid marriage. But in a jurisdiction where a ceremonial marriage is alone valid and must therefore have been alleged in the pleadings, here, though from habit and repute it may still be inferred that this ceremonial marriage had been performed, yet the inference will not be so readily drawn unless some satisfactory explanation can be given of the absence of that eye-witness evidence which ought ordinarily to be available if in truth there was a ceremonial marriage, — for example, the certificate or the register. Thus, in such a jurisdiction, as a mere coincidence, that kind of evidence — habit and repute — may often be discredited in a way which would be impossible in other jurisdictions, — a difference often noticeable between Scotch and English marriages in their consideration by the House of Lords.[6] This difference, however, will be seen, from what has been said, to be merely a practical consequence of the substantive law, and not of any difference in the rules of evidence as to the sufficiency of habit and repute.

§ 2083. Same: (2) Habit and Repute as the Ordinary Evidence. The act of exchange of marriage-consent, as constituting a marriage, may conceivably be evidenced by various sorts of evidence, any one of which might suffice to persuade the tribunal, in the absence of some special quantitative requirement. One of these kinds would be the testimony of a person present and seeing or hearing the words of consent. Another would be the admissions of a party-opponent to the suit. Both of these would be ordinary instances of evidence usually employed for proving any other fact in litigation. But two other kinds are also available, by way of exception to the general rules of evidence.

[5] See Lord Eldon's amusing anecdote of the Irish peer (ante, § 1642). But even in the Gretna Green marriages it was once in a while resorted to: 1827, Wakefield's Trial, Pelham's Chronicles of Crime, ed. 1891, II, 132 (where David Laing himself, the celebrated blacksmith-parson, was a witness).

[6] An example of the efficacy of the cohabitation evidence in leading to the inference even of a ceremonial marriage is seen in Re Shephard, 1904, 1 Ch. 456. An example of the occasional violence of this inference, based on habit and repute only, is found in Travers v. Reinhardt, 205 U. S. 423, 27 Sup. 563.

In the first place, the conduct of the two persons, in living together in the manner usual for married persons, is some circumstantial evidence that they exchanged consent at a prior time. The evidential nature of this inference has been already examined (ante, § 268); its general admissibility is unquestioned. It is enough here to note that this evidence from conduct is commonly spoken of as "habit"; and that it is something more than mere cohabitation, or living together, because it signifies living together and behaving in every way with the evident belief and assumption that they have the rights and responsibilities of persons who have contracted a lawful marriage.

In the second place, repute of the community or neighborhood that these persons have been lawfully married is a kind of testimony which is based partly on the parties' habit as married persons, partly on contributions of personal knowledge by those who have witnessed the exchange of consent, and partly on the absence of contrary evidence which would naturally have come to light had it existed. This net result of the sifting of the facts by gossip and by interested investigation is summed up on the community's reputation; and this, though it would ordinarily be inadmissible by the Hearsay rule, is by long acceptance admissible under a special exception to that rule. The scope and reason of this Exception, making reputation admissible to prove marriage, has already been considered, (ante, §§ 1602–1605); it is enough here to note that it is always admissible.

Now these two sorts of evidence, habit and reputation, are commonly found available together, and are therefore commonly offered at the same time. They are admitted on distinct theories, the one being circumstantial in its nature, the other testimonial; but in practical use they are generally found associated. The typical judicial treatment of them may be gathered from the following exposition:

1867, L. C. CHELMSFORD, in the Broadalbane Case, L. R. 1 Sc. App. 182, 192, 196, 211: "Habit and repute arises from parties cohabiting together openly and constantly, as if they were husband and wife, and so conducting themselves towards each other for such a length of time in the society or neighborhood of which they are members as to produce a general belief that they are really married." Lord WESTBURY: "Cohabitation as husband and wife is a manifestation of the parties having consented to contract the relationship 'inter se.' It is a holding forth to the world by the manner of daily life, by conduct, demeanor, and habit, that the man and woman who live together have agreed to take each other in marriage and to stand in the mutual relation of husband and wife; and when credit is given by those among whom they live, by their relatives, neighbors, friends, and acquaintances, to these representations and this continued conduct, then habit and repute arise and attend upon the cohabitation. The parties are holden and reputed to be husband and wife; and the law of Scotland accepts this combination of circumstances as evidence that consent to marry has been lawfully interchanged."

These two kinds of evidence, then, being always admissible (ante, §§ 268, 1602), the question now to be considered is whether there is any quantitative rule as to their sufficiency; i. e. Are they alone sufficient, if the jury trust them, to prove a marriage, or is proof by an eye-witness indispensable? Is it of no avail to furnish evidence of habit and repute unless also a certificate or register or oral testimony of a bystander is furnished?

Here we may start with the general proposition that habit and repute alone suffice ordinarily in civil cases.[1] There is a common-law rule declaring them

§ 2083. [1] Accord: ENGLAND: 1805, Leader v. Barry, 1 Esp. 353 (non-assumpsit; Lord Kenyon said "an action for criminal conversation was the only civil case where an actual marriage, by producing a copy of the register, need be proved; the same strictness was required in an indictment for bigamy"); 1827, Doe v. Fleming, 4 Bing. 266 (ejectment; quoted infra); 1832, Maxwell v. Maxwell, Milward Eccl. 290, 292 (restitution of conjugal rights); the following early case is therefore of no validity: 1754, Conran v. Lowe, 1 Lee Eccl. 630, 638 (on the facts, proof of cohabitation held insufficient without calling a witness to the ceremony, in a claim for restitution of conjugal rights).

CANADA: 1885, Currie v. Stairs, 25 N. Br. 4, 7 (slander charging adultery); 1858, Graham v. Law, 6 U. C. C. P. 310, 313 (dower).

UNITED STATES: Federal: 1907, Travers v. Reinhardt, 205 U. S. 423, 27 Sup. 563; 1919, Hamlin v. Grogan, 8th C. C. A., 257 Fed. 59 (inheritance; following Travers v. Reinhardt); Arkansas: 1913, Farmer v. Towers, 106 Ark. 123, 152 S. W. 993 (heirship); California: 1864, People v. Anderson, 26 Cal. 129, 133 (proving a witness incompetent by marriage); Connecticut: 1812, Hammick v. Bronson, 5 Day 290, 293 (ejectment, title depending on marriage); 1885, Northrop v. Knowles, 52 Conn. 522 (title depending on legitimacy; reputation of adulterous relation, excluded on the principle ante, § 1602; present point not involved); Delaware: 1902, State v. Miller, 3 Pen. 518, 52 Atl. 262 (information for failure to support children); Illinois: 1875, Miller v. White, 80 Ill. 580, 585 (trespass); 1878, Lowry v. Coster, 91 id. 182, 184 (loss of support by sale of liquor); Indiana: 1846, Fleming v. Fleming, 8 Blackf. 234 (dower); Iowa: 1906, Smith v. Fuller, — Ia. —, 108 N. W. 765 (dower); Kentucky: 1808, Crozier v. Gano, 1 Bibb 257, 258 (detinue); 1831, Sneed v. Ewing, 5 J. J. Marsh. 460, 491 (inheritance and legitimacy); 1835, Stover v. Boswell, 3 Dana 232, 233 (dower); 1844, Taylor v. Shemwell, 4 B. Monr. 575, 576 (ejectment); 1846, Kuhl v. Kuaner, 7 B. Monr. 130 (claim against husband for deceased wife's estate; here proof of a marriage in fact was required, because "a direct issue is made up by the parties" on that point; no authority cited; the other cases in this State leave this ruling of no authority); 1847, Donnelly v. Donnelley's Heirs, 8 B. Monr. 113, 116 (dower); 1859, Chiles v. Drake, 2 Metc. 146, 154 (death by wrongful act); Louisiana: 1831, Taylor v. Swett, 3 La. 33, 36 (inheritance); 1833, Holmes v. Holmes, 6 La. 463, 471 (breach of carrier's contract); 1847, Hobdy v. Jones, 2 La. An. 944 (slander charging concubinage); 1878, Blasini v. Blasini, 30 La. Rev. 1388, 1397 (succession); Maine: 1849, Taylor v. Robinson, 29 Me. 323, 328 (slander spoken of plaintiff's wife); Maryland: 1739, Cheseldine v. Brewer, 1 H. & McH. 152 (ejectment); 1828 Fornshill v. Murray, 1 Bland Ch. 479, 482 (distribution of estate; eye-witness required; this and the following case are of no authority in view of the other rulings); 1836, Sellman v. Bowen, 8 G. & J. 50, 54 (dower; eye-witness required); 1848, Cope v. Pearce, 7 Gill 247, 263 (distribution of estate); 1868, Boone v. Purnell, 28 Md. 607, 629 (ejectment); 1873, Redgrave v. Redgrave, 38 Md. 93, 97 (administration); Massachusetts: 1812, Newburyport v. Boothbay, 9 Mass. 414 (pauper settlement); Michigan: 1878, Proctor v. Bigelow, 38 Mich. 282 (dower); Minnesota: 1877, State v. Worthingham, 23 Minn. 528, 534 (bastardy complaint); Mississippi: 1849, Stevenson v. McReary, 12 Sm. & M. 9, 56 (ejectment); 1856, Henderson v. Cargill, 31 Miss. 367, 409 (distribution of estate); Missouri: 1857, Boatman v. Curry, 25 Mo. 433, 438 (title to sue as husband and wife); New Hampshire: 1841, Wendell v. Safford, 12 N. H. 179, 184 (breach of promise); 1843, Young v. Foster, 14 N. H. 114, 118 (dower); 1846, Dalton v. Bethlehem, 20 N. H. 505, 514 (pauper settlement); 1858, Stevens v. Reed, 37 N. H. 49, 53 (dower); New York: 1809, Fenton v. Reed, 4 Johns. 52 (insurance); 1820, Jackson v. Claw, 18 Johns. 347 (ejectment); 1842, Re Taylor, 9 Paige 611, 614 (lunatic's estate); 1850, Clayton v. Wardell, 4 N. Y. 230, 234 (legitimacy); 1868, O'Gara v. Eisenlohr, 38 N. Y. 296, 298 insufficient in bigamy and criminal conversation (post, § 2085); there is a further field for controversy as to their sufficiency in other criminal charges and in suits for divorce (post, § 2085); and there is sometimes a distinction as to marriage documents (post, § 2088). But, apart from these special rules, there remains the uncontroverted field of civil cases in general; and here the universally accepted principle, serving as the normal doctrine, is to be understood as making no discrimination against this sort of evidence:

1878, CAMPBELL, C. J., in Proctor v. Bigelow, 38 Mich. 282: "In most cases where the right to property is to be made out by proof of a marriage, the witnesses who were present are not living or attainable. One or both of the married persons must die before any inheritance or dower can exist. It would be impossible in a majority of such cases to prove a marriage by any better testimony than conduct and reputation."

But is this true except of the two kinds of evidence, habit and repute, in combination? Will either alone equally suffice? In practice, the conditions which furnish the one sort usually furnish the other; so that the question rarely arises for decision. Moreover, the terms are not always used with precision, for in judicial utterances each of the two words is frequently found employed in the sense of both combined. Nevertheless, in evidential theory the two are distinct; and there seems no sound reason for treating them as valueless unless coupled.

(a) Habit, then, or conduct as married persons, ought of itself to be sufficient:[2]

(administration); 1832, Jenkins v. Bisbee, 1 Edw. Ch. 377 (creditor's bill); 1877, Chamberlain v. Chamberlain, 71 N. Y. 423, 427 (distribution of estate); North Carolina: 1799, Telts v. Foster, Taylor 121 (remainder over on marriage); 1827, Weaver v. Cryer, 1 Dev. 337, 341 (trover); 1859, Archer v. Haithcock, 6 Jones L. 421; Pennsylvania: 1816, Chambers v. Dickson, 2 S. & R. 475 (dower); 1855, Thorndell v. Morrison, 25 Pa. 326, 327 (ejectment); 1866, Com. v. Stump, 53 Pa. 132. 135 (inheritance tax); 1873, Richard v. Brehm. 73 Pa. 140, 144 (ejectment); Texas: 1847, Tarpley v. Poage, 2 Tex. 139, 149 (promissory note); Vermont: 1819, Poultney v. Fairhaven, Brayt. 185 (pauper settlement; to prove a woman not the lawful wife of E., prior cohabitation and reputation as the wife of A. were held "not proper to disprove her the wife of S."; not cited, but practically repudiated, in the next case); 1860, Northfield v. Vershire, 33 Vt. 110, 112 (facts substantially similar; "evidence of reputation and cohabitation is competent to prove a marriage whenever the question arises in any civil action, except in actions for criminal conversation"); Virginia: 1899, Eldred v. Eldred, 97 Va. 606, 34 S. E. 477 (title depending on legitimacy); 1919, Reynolds v. Adams, 125 Va. 295, 99 S. E. 695 (inheritance); Washington: 1909, Weatherall v. Weatherall, 56 Wash. 344, 105 Pac. 822 (bill to establish a marriage; prior cases reviewed).

[2] Accord: England: 1751, Revel v. Fox, 2 Ves. Sr. 269 (bill by remainder-man against a woman who was given an estate till marriage; the defendants denied the marriage; L. C. Hardwicke: "The great thing in this case is the shortness of time in which the cohabitation subsisted; . . . those circumstances are certainly proper evidence of the marriage, for on a limitation over in case of marriage, if marriage is had, it is probably clandestine; if therefore the Court was to say such circumstances were evidence, it would be impossible to prove it. But, both defendants denying it on oath, and insisting on trying it, it must be tried; for a jury are proper judges of the fact"); 1762, R. v. Stockland, 2 Burr. Sett. Cas. 508 (pauper settlement; "Lord Mansfield seemed to think that thirty years' cohabitation as man and wife was sufficient proof"); 1874, Lyle v. Ellwood, L. R. 19 Eq. 98, 106, semble.

United States: 1852, Morris v. Morris, 20 Ala. 168, 172, semble (divorce for adultery); 1906, Ward v. Merriam, 193 Mass. 135, 78 N. E. 745 (slander); 1846, Dalton v. Bethlehem, 20 N. H. 505, 514. Contra: 1893, Arnold v. Chesebrough's Ex'r, 7 C. C. A. 572, 58 Fed. 927; 1876, Cargile v. Wood, 63 Mo. 501, 513; 1866, Com. v. Stump, 53 Pa. 132, 135. In these opposed cases, the judges probably use "cohabitation" as meaning merely "living together"; this of course makes their state-

1844, Mr. J. Hubback, Succession, 248: "The mere cohabitation of two persons of different sexes, or their behavior in other respects, as husband and wife, always affords an inference of greater or less strength that a marriage has been celebrated between them. Their conduct, being susceptible of two opposite explanations, is to be moral rather than immoral, and credit is to be given to their own assertions, whether express or implied, of a fact peculiarly within their own knowledge. The presumption of marriage from these circumstances is too reasonable not to have a place in the laws of other countries. 'Cohabitation,' says Lord Stair, 'and the behaving as man and wife for a considerable time, presumeth marriage, though there be neither contract, promise, nor 'sponsalia' preceding, nor evidence of copulation by children.' 'Oritur presumptio matrimonii ex tractatu quo vir et mulier ut conjuges alter alterum se habet' (Mascardus). . . . If the marriage to be proved was kept secret and disavowed by the parties, and thus not only wants the aid of reputation in its favor, but may also be encountered by declarations and reputation of a contrary tendency, it will be important to adduce evidence of reasons for the concealment."

(b) Repute, also, may alone suffice; and in practice, it may well occur that reputation-evidence alone will be available: [3]

1827, PARKE, B., in Doe v. Fleming, 4 Bing. 266: "The general rule is that reputation is sufficient evidence of marriage, and a party who seeks to impugn a principle so well established ought at least to furnish cases in support of his position."

§ 2084. Same: (3) Lord Mansfield's Rule in Morris v. Miller. The cast of thought, in that greatest of English judges, was a strong and individual one; and his instincts of justice and common sense were at the same time so keen that his influence upon the whole body of English law was not only marked but beneficent. It goes with such a nature to disregard precedent, where precedent, or the lack of it, seems to stand in the way of good sense; he did not sit there (in his celebrated phrase) "to take the rules of Evidence from Keble or Siderfin." [1] Yet the guidance of instinct alone — one's individual or momentary views of justice — may prove erroneous, by the broader standard either of other men or of other times; and in such instances the willingness to disregard precedents appears, for the case in hand, as a regrettable source of error. In the course of events, little opportunity has arisen to pass such censure upon Lord Mansfield's judgments; his immediate successors, smaller men than he, were shocked at his innovations; but Time has been his vindicator. Yet in the law of Evidence, oddly enough, it has been his fate not to find this vindication. Rarely did he make any real contribution to its theory or its practice; [2] not infrequently he helped to obscure ment correct enough, since (as above explained) the "habit" which is evidence of marriage is something more than mere cohabitation in the narrow sense; it is "living together as husband and wife."

[3] Accord: England: 1790, Sherborne v. Naper, 2 Ridgw. P. C. 224 (not clear); 1795, Reed v. Passer, Peake, N. P. 231, 233, semble, per Kenyon, L. C. J.: 1832, Evans v. Morgan, 2 Cr. & J. 453, 456; 1843, R. v. Millis, 10 Cl. & F. 534, 596, per L. C. Lyndhurst; 1858, Goodman v. Goodman, 4 Jur. N. S. 1220, 1224, 28 L. J. Ch. 745 (Doe v. Fleming approved); United States: 1841, Wendell v. Safford, 12 N. H. 179, 186 (breach of promise). Contra: Eng. 1814, Lord Redesdale, in Cunningham v. Cunningham, 2 Dow 482, 510; U. S. 1903, Summerville v. Summerville, 31 Wash. 411, 72 Pac. 84.

That a divided reputation is insufficient is noticed ante, § 1603.

§ 2084. [1] Lowe v. Jolliffe, 1 W. Bl. 365.

[2] The notable instance is his rule for compelling documentary discovery on motion (ante, § 1858).

it; and in several respects he created, in scorn of precedent, rules which merely encumbered the law of Evidence with unnecessary and impolitic restrictions.[3] One of these was the rule requiring proof of a "marriage in fact" in bigamy and criminal conversation.

This rule he laid down in the following cases:

1767, Morris v. Miller, 4 Burr. 2057; the opinion of the Court was asked "upon the following question, 'whether to support an action for criminal conversation, there must not be proof of an actual marriage'; the fact was, they were married at Mayfair chapel; the register or books could not be admitted in evidence; Keith, who married them, was transported; and the clerk, who was present, was dead; so that the plaintiff could not prove the actual marriage by any evidence." Counsel for plaintiff argued that "we proved articles [of post-nuptial settlement], . . . cohabitation, name, and reception of her by everybody as his wife; though we did not indeed prove it by any register or by witnesses who were present at the marriage." Lord MANSFIELD said: "It certainly may be done so in all cases except two," namely, bigamy and criminal conversation. The plaintiff's counsel argued that the defendant's admission of the marriage sufficed. The defendant's counsel argued that the reputation evidence "does not come up to the rule of being the best evidence in the plaintiff's power," and that it was not an actual i. e. ceremonial marriage. Lord MANSFIELD, C. J.: "Proof of actual marriage is always used and understood in opposition to proof by cohabitation and reputation and other circumstances from which a marriage may be inferred. . . . We are all clearly of opinion that in this kind of action, an action for criminal conversation with the plaintiff's wife, there must be evidence of a marriage in fact; acknowledgment, cohabitation, and reputation, are not sufficient to maintain this action. . . . It shall not depend upon the mere reputation of a marriage, which arises from the conduct or declarations of the party himself. . . . Inconvenience might arise from a contrary determination; which might render persons liable to actions founded upon evidence made by the persons themselves who should bring the action.[4] . . . Perhaps there need not be strict proof from the register, or by a person present, but strong evidence must be had of the fact, — as, by a person present at the wedding dinner, if the register be burnt and the parson and clerk are dead."

1779, Lord MANSFIELD, C. J., in Birt v. Barlow, 1 Doug. 171, 174: "An action for criminal conversation is the only civil case where it is necessary to prove an actual marriage; in other cases, cohabitation, reputation, etc., are equally sufficient since the Marriage Act as before. But an action for criminal conversation has a mixture of penal prosecution; for which reason, and because it might be turned to bad purposes by persons giving the name and character of wife to women to whom they are not married, it struck me, in the case of Morris v. Miller, that in such an action a marriage in fact must be proved."

Certain things may plainly be gathered from these two cases, upon which the rule has always been supposed to be founded. (a) It does not appear that there was any such restriction before these opinions were rendered.[5] "It struck me," says Lord Mansfield, that there ought to be such a rule. No doubt the then prevalent canon of the "best evidence," [6] invoked by counsel

[3] The others were the rule excluding 'allegans suam turpitudinem' (ante, § 525), the rule against parents "bastardizing their issue" (ante, § 2063), and the rule against jurors impeaching their verdict (post, § 2352).

[4] The following sentence is from the report in 1 W. Bl. 632.

[5] The only prior cases on the subject seem to have been one in the Ecclesiastical Court, Conran v. Lowe, 1754, 1 Lee Eccl. 630, cited ante, § 2083, and R. v. Norwood, 1765, cited post, § 2086.

[6] Ante, § 1173.

in argument, served as the justifying principle. (b) The phrase "proof of a marriage in fact," or "actual marriage," signified, as a rule of evidence in these decisions, proof by an eye-witness, i. e. either by the register containing the parson's entry or by the oral testimony of parson, clerk, or some other person present at the ceremony. This has since been the accepted meaning;[7] though in a jurisdiction where a ceremonial marriage is not required by the substantive law (ante, § 2082) the term covers also proof by an eye-witness to the exchange of marriage-consent, even when given informally. (c) This special requirement, as declared by Lord Mansfield, was limited to two kinds of issues, one a criminal charge, namely, bigamy, the other a civil action, namely, criminal conversation. (d) The requirement of eye-witness proof, as made by him, clearly declared evidence of habit and repute insufficient. He further mentioned "acknowledgment" as insufficient; but here he probably signified merely that acknowledgment which is to be found in conduct as a married person, in other words, "habit" (ante, § 2082), and did not mean to include an express admission, in words, of the performance of a marriage ceremony. Nevertheless, his meaning is open to dispute; and hence different judicial views have since been taken upon the question whether by Lord Mansfield's rule eye-witness proof was required even where the marriage had been expressly admitted by the defendant.[8]

The policy of Lord Mansfield's rule has received but scanty judicial exposition.

(1) For the action of criminal conversation, it was placed by him on the ground, partly that the action was penal in its nature (as indeed it has always been treated, in a marked degree, in England), partly that to receive habit and repute alone might enable a man having a mistress to recover damages from another man for the seduction of a woman whose relation to the plaintiff did not justify him in claiming any right to her chastity. So far as the first reason is concerned, it stands or falls with the general policy of establishing a special rule for criminal cases. So far as the second reason is concerned, it indeed is based on a real contingency; yet it is doubtful whether there is any need of exercising special vigilance in behalf of a defendant whose conceded conduct deprives him of honorable sympathy.[9]

[7] 1843, Gilchrist, J., in State v. Winkley, 14 N. H. 480, 495: "In criminal prosecutions, like indictments for bigamy, adultery, etc., direct evidence of the marriage is required, and this may appear from the testimony of witnesses who were present at the ceremony. This constitutes proof of a marriage in fact, and is merely direct evidence of the marriage as contradistinguished from cohabitation, etc. which is indirect evidence of the marriage."

[8] The best judicial examinations of the decision in Morris v. Miller are those of Smith, J., in West v. State (1853), 1 Wis. 209, 218, and of White, J., in Warner v. Com. (1817), 2 Va. Cas. 95, 98, where its significance is carefully analyzed.

[9] It may be added that the action for criminal conversation, in Lord Mansfield's time, occupied a far more prominent position and was therefore more liable to abuse. The prevalence of rakish habits among men of fashion and birth, and the practical lack of divorce, made this action frequent as the sole means of self-vindication for the injured husband; in this manner it came naturally to present also an attractive means of blackmail. Lord Baltimore's case (quoted ante, § 782), into which Lord Mansfield himself was drawn as a mediator, was a typical and celebrated instance of the social conditions amid which he laid down the rule in Morris v. Miller.

(2) For the charge of bigamy, there is in the first place the general policy of caution applicable in all criminal cases. Nevertheless, this seems sufficiently met by the broad rule of reasonable doubt (post, § 2497); moreover, it was clearly not Lord Mansfield's reason, for he expressly confines the rule to a charge of bigamy, and the reason must therefore be sought in some circumstance peculiar to that offence. Here he vouchsafed no light in his opinion. What reasons there are, pro and con, may partly be gathered from the judicial language later quoted (post, § 2086). On the whole, the reasons against making such a requirement in the present connection seem plainly to preponderate. Whatever peculiarity there is to the offence of bigamy points indeed to a looser rather than a stricter rule as appropriate. What is the peculiar immorality of the offence of bigamy? Usually, it is the deception of the other party to the marriage, by leading her (or him) into a void and unsanctioned relation and by afterwards deserting for another; as well as the injury to the progeny by placing them in the world without the rights of legitimate children. Now this deception and desertion and social wrong are equally consummated by a relation appearing in habit and repute to be a marriage, even though it be not a valid one. The moral meanness of that man, and the social consequences of his misconduct, are equally reprehensible, whether or not his first marriage could be proved by an eye-witness, and whether the marriage was legally binding or not. If it was not, it ought to have been. That the law of Evidence, instead of applying the equitable maxim that what ought to have been done will be treated as having been done, should let him go free of the charge of bigamy, precisely because he did not do the honest and lawful thing, is a singular instance of 'hæret in cortice'. As the rule of Evidence is confessedly based on a moral tenderness for the accused, it would seem that this moral tenderness should not be shown to a person whose conduct is equally reprehensible in any case. The most meritorious opponent in a civil case, whether it be a wife, or heirs, or creditors, may be deprived of his alleged rights upon proof of marriage not consisting in eye-witness testimony. It is a scandal to be more cautious and tender in favor of an opponent in that particular criminal charge in which the opponent has placed himself on a level of moral meanness below that of the least meritorious opponent in any civil case.

§ 2085. Same: (4) Eye-Witness required for Criminal Conversation and Bigamy. It remains to notice the state of the law to-day in respect to Lord Mansfield's rule:

(a) In the civil action for criminal conversation, there is no doubt about the common law; it was plainly determined in Morris v. Miller and Birt v. Barlow (ante, § 2084), and has ever since been accepted.[1] The comparative § 2085. [1] ENGLAND: 1784, Hemmings v. Smith, 4 Doug. 33 (an eye-witness proved the marriage-ceremony, but did not identify the then wife with the person debauched by defendant; Buller, J.: "Upon the point of identity there is no difference between this action and others; it is only in the proof of marriage in fact that it differs"; and the fact that the woman married was alive as wife in 1778, four or five years before the adultery, infrequency of this action nowadays has allowed the rule to continue without dispute.

(b) On a charge of bigamy, the English rule has in a few jurisdictions been followed.[2]

But in the great majority it has been rejected, either by judicial ruling or by statutory change;[3] so that in the latter jurisdictions habit and repute suffice, as on other issues (ante, § 2083).

was held sufficient to go to the jury as to her identity with the woman debauched); 1844, Catherwood v. Caslon, 13 M. & W. 260 ("the uniform practice ever since" Morris v. Miller and Birt v. Barlow requires proof of a marriage in fact).

CANADA: 1912, Zdrahal v. Shatney, 7 D. L. R. 554, Man. (criminal conversation; the testimony of the plaintiff alone to a ceremonial marriage, held not sufficient, by two judges; but Cameron and Haggart, JJ. A., correctly held that "we have the evidence of an eye-witness, to wit, the plaintiff," and thus the rule of Morris v. Miller was satisfied); 1920, Robson v. Thorpe, 55 D. L. R. 139, Sask (crim. con.; certified copy of the marriage registry in England, with the wife's testimony, held sufficient; the wife's testimony alone would not have sufficed).

UNITED STATES: 1818, Kibby v. Rucker, 1 A. K. Marsh. Ky. 391; 1905, Snowman v. Mason, 99 Me. 490, 59 Atl. 1019; 1921, Reed v. Stevens, 120 Me. 290, 113 Atl. 712 (crim. con., the marriage "must be strictly proved"); 1875, Hutchins v. Kimmell, 31 Mich. 126, 130; 1883, Perry v. Lovejoy, 49 Mich. 529, 532, 14 N. W. 485 (the rule does not apply to an action for enticement, not alleging criminal intercourse); 1914, Vollmer v. Stregge, 27 N. D. 579, 147 N. W. 797 (the parties themselves are eye-witnesses). Add to these the citations under § 2086, post; Courts there adopting the eye-witness rule would equally do so here; the statutes also, in the next note, sometimes deal with this action.

Contra: Ala. Code 1907, § 2466 (criminal conversation; proof may be made "by general reputation" and cohabitation); Ga. Rev. C. 1910, § 4465 (adultery or crim. con.; "proof of the marriage may be made by general reputation and the parties living together as husband and wife").

For the question whether other evidence is needed of the identity of the person named in the marriage-register or by the oral witness, see post, § 2529, where the presumption of identity from name is treated.

[2] 1879, Halbrook v. State, 34 Ark. 511, 514, semble (for the second marriage); 1885, Green v. State, 21 Fla. 403 (polygamy); 1895, Hiler v. People, 156 Ill. 511, 520, 41 N. E. 181 (but compare the statute infra, note 3); 1829, Damon's Case, 6 Greenl. Me. 148, 149; N. H. Pub. St. 1891, c. 174, § 17 (cited infra, note 7); 1915, U. S. v. Evangelista, 29 P. I. 215; Tex. Rev. P. C. 1911, § 485 (on a trial for bigamy or racial intermarriage, "proof of marriage by mere reputation shall not be sufficient"); Wash. R. & B. Code 1919, § 2153, Stats. 1897, § 7232 (on charge of bigamy, adultery, etc., "a recorded certificate of marriage, . . . there being no decree of divorce, proves the marriage of the person"). Add to these the Courts in the following notes requiring eye-witness proof for other issues; they would certainly require it for bigamy also. So also the Courts cited in § 2086, post, as requiring it even where admissions are offered, would also require it where habit and repute are offered.

[3] UNITED STATES: Federal: Code 1919, § 10600 (polygamy, etc.; "every ceremony of marriage . . shall be certified by a certificate," etc., which "shall be prima facie evidence of the facts required by this section to be stated"; but this shall not prevent "the proof of marriages, whether lawful or unlawful, by any evidence otherwise legally admissible").

Alabama: 1898, Bynon v. State, 117 Ala. 80, 23 So. 640 (for the first marriage); 1898, Moore v. Heineke, 119 Ala. 627, 24 So. 374 (same); for prior Alabama rulings, see post, § 2086; Arizona: Rev. St. 1913, Civ. C. § 1047 (on a charge of bigamy, evidence of "either of the marriages by the register, certificate, or other record evidence," is not necessary, but only "such evidence as is admissible to prove a marriage in other cases"); Civ. C. § 1762 (proof of marriage; like Minn. Gen. St. 1913, § 8459); California: P. C. 1872, § 1106 (in bigamy, "it is not necessary to prove either of the marriages by the register, certificate, or other record evidence thereof"); Colorado: Comp. St. 1921, § 6835 (like Ill. Rev. St. c. 38, § 29); Idaho: Comp. St. 1919, § 8953 (bigamy; proof of marriage by "register, certificate, or other record evidence," not necessary; marriage provable as "in other cases"); Illinois: Rev. St. 1874, c. 38, § 29 (St. 1845; in bigamy, "it shall not be necessary to prove either of the marriages by the register or certificate thereof, or other record evidence; but the same may be proved by such evidence as is admissible to prove a marriage in other cases"); Indiana: Burns Ann. St. 1914, § 2351 (bigamy; like Ill. Rev. St. c. 38, § 29); Kansas: Gen. St. 1915, § 7578

(c) On a prosecution for adultery or incest, Lord Mansfield's rule would not be applicable. In a few jurisdictions it has been extended to those offences;[4] but this is not justified either by precedent or by policy, and has elsewhere been denied.[5]

(d) In criminal cases in general the rule as stated in terms by Lord Mansfield does not apply; and modern statutes defining the offence of family-desertion have taken care to make this clear.[6] Never-

(cohabitation and reputation, receivable); Massachusetts: Gen. L. 1920, c. 207, § 47 ("Marriage may be proved by evidence of the admission thereof by an adverse party, by evidence of general repute or of cohabitation by the parties as married persons, or of any fact from which the fact may be inferred"); 1876, Com. v. Holt, 121 Mass. 61; Minnesota: Gen. St. 1913, § 8459 (whenever marriage is in issue, the admission of it by the opponent, or general repute, or cohabitation, or "any other circumstantial or presumptive evidence from which the fact may be inferred, shall be competent"); 1867, State v. Johnson, 12 Minn. 476, 483 ("competent" means here "such evidence as if believed would authorize a jury to find the fact of marriage"; and thus changes the common-law rule as to sufficiency); 1878, State v. Armington, 25 Minn. 29, 35; Missouri: 1883, State v. Gouce, 79 Mo. 600, 601, semble; 1890, State v. Cooper, 103 Mo. 266, 271, 15 S. W. 327; Montana: Rev. C. 1921, § 5697 (consent and consummation of marriage "may be proved under the same general rules of evidence as facts in other cases"); § 11982 (like Cal. P. C. § 1106); Nevada: Rev. L. 1912, § 6456 (bigamy; like Cal. P. C. § 1106); North Dakota: Comp. L. 1913, § 10861 (like Cal. P. C. § 1106); Oklahoma: Comp. St. 1921, § 2720 (like Cal. P. C. § 1106); Philippine Islands: Civ. C. §§ 53–55 (quoted ante, § 1336); Porto Rico: Rev. St. & C. 1911, § 3223 (for marriages dating after the Code, "certification from the book of marriages" is the only proof, unless "the book shall have disappeared"); § 3224 (in the latter case, cohabitation and the record of birth of children may suffice); § 3225 (for marriages in the U. S. or a foreign country not requiring registration "in a regular and authentic manner," any evidence admissible by law may suffice); § 6280 (like Cal. P. C. § 1106); South Dakota: Rev. C. 1919, § 4901 (like Cal. P. C. § 1106); § 103 ("Consent to and subsequent consummation of marriage . . . may be proved under the same general rules of evidence as facts in other cases"); Vermont: Gen. L. 1917, § 7010 (cohabitation and admissions, competent in prosecutions involving marriage); 1896, State v. Sherwood, 68 Vt. 414, 35 Atl. 352, semble (eye-witness not necessary to show a previous marriage which would make a later one no bigamy).

[4] 1827, State v. Roswell, 6 Conn. 446 (incest with daughter; to prove the marriage with her mother, marriage in fact must be shown; admissions and reputation insufficient; rule for bigamy and crim. con. held applicable); 1875, Arnold v. State, 53 Ga. 574 (adultery by marrying another's wife); 1896, Republic v. Kuhia, 10 Haw. 440 (adultery; here the testimony of the celebrant himself, without his record, was held sufficient); 1896, Republic v. Waipa, 10 Haw. 442 ("on a charge of adultery, marriage must be proved by direct evidence"); 1841, State v. Hodgskins, 19 Me. 155, 157; 1868, Boone v. Purnell, 28 Md. 607, 629; 1799, Com. v. Moffat, 2 Dane's Abr. Mass. 296 (must be proved by a witness present or by a register-certificate); 1818, Com. v. Littlejohn, 15 Mass. 163 (lewd cohabitation with a married person; the marriage not sufficiently provable by cohabitation); 1904, State v. Eggleston, 45 Or. 346, 77 Pac. 738, semble; 1893, Bailey v. State, 36 Nebr. 808, 812, semble; 1843, State v. Winkley, 14 N. H. 480, 495; 1915, U. S. v. Nebrida, 32 P. I. 160 (on the facts); 1916, U. S. v. Memoracion, 34 P. I. 633 (eye-witness' testimony may suffice); 1789, State v. Annice, N. Chipm. Vt. 9.

[5] Canada: 1916, R. v. Lindsey, 30 D. L. R. 417, Ont. (incest; habit and repute held sufficient); United States: Ga. Rev. C. 1910, § 4465 (quoted supra, note 1); 1921, Plummer v. State, 27 Ga. App. 185, 108 S. E. 128 (adultery and fornication); Tenn. 1834, Ewell v. State, 6 Yerg. 364, 369 (incest; proof of marriage by eye-witnesses not required; here reputation sufficed); Tex. P. C. 1911, § 489, 1895, § 352 (on a trial for incest, the relationship may be proved as in civil suits); § 491 (adultery; proof of marriage may be made by marriage license and return or certified copy, or by a person "present at such marriage," or by one "who has known the husband and wife live together as married persons").

The statutes cited in note 3, supra, also often bear on this point. For Alabama rulings, see post, § 2086.

[6] ENGLAND: 1765, R. v. Norwood, East Pl. Cr., I, 337 (wife's murder of husband, i. e. petit treason; Lord Mansfield, C. J., with others); 1826, R. v. Hassall, 2 C. & P. 435 (indictment against Sarah H., as single woman, and James H., for stealing; defence, that Sarah H. was wife of James H. acting under coercion; habit and repute held insufficient on the facts, by Garrow, B.; but "I quite agree theless, a few Courts have seen fit to expand the rule to cover all criminal cases.[7] with my Lord Mansfield that the two cases mentioned are the only ones in which it is necessary to give direct proof of an actual marriage").

CANADA: St. 1913, 3–4 Geo. V, c. 13, § 14 (inserting a new § 242 B in Criminal Code 1906; failure to support family; "that a man has cohabited with a woman or has in any way recognized her as being his wife" shall be evidence of lawful marriage, and "that a man has in any way recognized children as being his children" shall be evidence of their being his legitimate children).

UNITED STATES: Alaska: St. 1919, c. 49, § 5 (family desertion; like Tex. P. C. § 640c); Arkansas: Dig. 1919, § 2597 (wife-abandonment, etc.; "no other evidence" than in civil cases, needed to prove marriage or paternity); California: 1909, People v. Le Doux, 155 Cal. 535, 102 Pac. 517 (marricide; a bigamous marriage with L. being alleged as the motive, the rule for bigamy was correctly not applied to the proof of marriage with the deceased, because the defendant's belief alone was material to the motive); Colorado: 1918, Smith v. People, 64 Colo. 290, 170 Pac. 959 (desertion and non-support); Columbia (Dist.); St. 1906, Mar. 23, § 2, c. 1131, U. S. Stat. L. vol. 34, p. 87 (offence of failing to support one's family; "no other evidence shall be required" to prove marriage or parentage than in civil actions); Delaware: Rev. St. 1915, § 3041 (family-desertion; like Wis. Stats. 1919, § 4587c); Florida: 1899, Mobley v. State, 41 Fla. 621, 26 So. 732 (murder of paramour; eye-witness not necessary to prove defendant's marriage to another woman); Hawaii: Rev. L. 1915, § 2975 (desertion of family by husband; "no other or greater evidence" required to prove the marriage or paternity than in civil action); Illinois: Rev. St. 1874, c. 38, § 491, St. 1893, June 17 (in a prosecution of a husband for abandoning his family, no other evidence of marriage is necessary than is required "in a civil action"); St. 1901, May 11, § 3 (in prosecutions for abandonment of wife or child, no other evidence of marriage shall be required than in civil actions); St. 1915, June 24, p. 470, § 6 (family-desertion; like Wis. Stats. § 4587c, omitting "whether legitimate or illegitimate"); Iowa: 1906, State v. Rocker, 130 Ia. 239, 106 N. W. 645 (murder; marriage of one co-defendant to the deceased); Kansas: Gen. St. 1915, § 3415 (family-desertion by husband; like Haw. Rev. L. 1915, § 2975); Massachusetts: Gen. L. 1920, c. 273, § 7 (desertion or non-support of family; like Wis. Stats. 1919, § 4587c); Minnesota: 1917, c. 213, § 3 (family desertion; "no other or greater evidence" required to prove "the relationship of the defendant to such wife or child" than in a civil action); Missouri: Rev. St. 1919, § 3274 (on a prosecution for abandonment of wife or child, proof of marriage or paternity as in civil cases suffices); St. 1921, Apr. 7, p. 281, and Mar. 24, p. 284, amending Rev. St. 1919, § 3274 (abandonment etc. of family; "no other evidence" required to prove marriage or parentage than would be needed in a civil action); Nevada: St. 1913, Mar. 26, p. 445, § 2 (family desertion; "no other evidence" required to prove marriage or parentage than in a civil action"); New Jersey: St. 1917, Mar. 19, c. 61, § 5 (family-desertion; "no other or greater evidence shall be required" to prove marriage or parentage than "to prove such facts in a civil action"); North Carolina: 1859, Archer v. Haitchcock, 6 Jones L. 421 ("in criminal proceedings, it is confined to an indictment for bigamy"); North Dakota: Comp. L. 1913, § 9600 (family-desertion; like Wis. Stats. 1919, § 4587c); Oregon: Laws 1920, § 2171 (family non-support; (1) cohabitation to be evidence of marriage; (2) birth of child during marriage to be evidence of paternity); Texas: 1880, Jackson v. State, 8 Tex. App. 60 (assault with intent to murder); Rev. P. C. 1911, § 640c (family-desertion; for proving marriage or parentage "no other or greater evidence shall be required" than in civil actions; wife shall be competent to all facts, including marriage and parentage); Utah: Comp. L. 1917, § 8113 (desertion or non-support of wife or child; for evidencing marriage or parentage, "no other evidence" to be required than "to prove such fact in civil action"). Vermont: Gen. L. 1917, § 3541 (family desertion a penal offence; no other evidence of marriage required than in civil action); Washington: R. & B. Code 1909, § 5935 (family-desertion; no other evidence required to prove marriage or parentage than "to prove such facts in a civil action"); Wisconsin: St. 1911, c. 576, Stats. 1919, § 4587c (family-desertion; "no other or greater evidence shall be required to prove the marriage of such husband or wife, or that the defendant is the father or mother of such child or children whether legitimate or illegitimate, than is or shall be required to prove such facts in a civil action"); Wyoming: Comp. St. 1920, § 5036 (desertion of family; like Wis. Stats. 1919, § 4587c, omitting "whether legitimate or illegitimate").

[7] 1852, Cook v. State, 11 Ga. 53, 61; 1917, Green v. New Orleans S. & G. I. R. Co., 141 La. 120, 74 So. 717, semble (cited more fully, post, § 2088); N. H. Pub. St. 1891, c. 174, §§ 16, 17 (in civil actions, except for criminal conversation, "acknowledgment, cohabitation, and reputation is competent proof of marriage"; in indictments for "bigamy, adultery, and the like," and actions for criminal conversation, "there must be proof of a marriage in fact"); 1903, State v. Tillinghast, 25 R. I. 391, 56 Atl.

(e) In suits for divorce, founded on adultery, Lord Mansfield's rule has of course no application; nevertheless the rule has occasionally been applied in such a proceeding.[8]

Much less has it any proper place in divorce suits founded on other causes, or in other civil cases; and on this there has been general agreement; [9] except in the few jurisdictions (ante, § 1336) where the register of civil status is the preferred evidence for family history in general.[10]

It must of course be understood, looking both at the general nature of this class of rules (ante, § 2077) and at the principle of receiving habit and repute as ordinarily sufficient (ante, § 2083), that habit and repute are always admissible, even where by the present rule eye-witness evidence is required in order that the case may go to the jury.[11] The rule, in other words, merely declares habit and repute insufficient evidence without eye-witness evidence, 181 (crime of non-support; rule assumed to apply to all criminal cases, without citing authority, and in an ill-considered opinion); 1872, Dove v. State, 3 Heisk. Tenn. 348, 355, 365 (woman offered by the State, objected to as defendant's wife; on the facts, proof by certificate or eye-witness required; no authority cited); 1920, State v. Stewart, 57 Utah 224, 193 Pac. 855 (adultery; oral testimony to marriage, held sufficient; but the Court's remark "It is generally held that stricter proof of marriage is required in criminal than in civil cases," is incorrect; there never has been for criminal cases in general a stricter rule as generally held); 1853, West v. State, 1 Wis. 209, 218, 225 (here, seduction by a married man).

Note also the following: 1906, Green v. State, 125 Ga. 742, 54 S. E. 724 ("a witness cannot be impeached by showing by parol evidence that he has committed bigamy"; no authority is cited for this confused statement).

[8] 1814, Ellis v. Ellis, 11 Mass. 92 (divorce for adultery by second marriage; the hearsay certificate not sufficient; oath in Court required); 1861, Case v. Case, 17 Cal. 598, 600 (divorce for adultery; proof of "actual marriage" necessary); 1886, People v. Stokes, 71 Cal. 263, 12 Pac. 71 (open cohabitation; opinion not clear). The statutes cited supra, note 3, would probably affect these rulings. The rule would be absurd for divorce.

[9] Fed. U. S. Code 1919, § 4356 (Five Civilized Tribes of Indians; proof of marriage of Indian woman to white man may be made by general repute or cohabitation "or any other circumstantial or presumptive evidence"); § 10188 (pensions of widows of colored and Indian soldiers and sailors, enlisted prior to Mar. 4, 1873; no other evidence is required than habit and repute or a ceremony believed to be obligatory); § 10189 (soldiers' and sailors' widows' pensions; marriage "shall be proven in pension cases to be legal marriages according to the law of the place where the parties resided at the time," etc.); § 10252 (World War pensions; cited post, § 2087); Cal. Civ. C. 1872, § 57 ("Consent to marriage and the solemnization thereof may be proved under the same general rules of evidence as facts are proved in other cases"); Fla. 1869–71, Burns v. Burns, 13 Fla. 369, 380, semble (cruelty); Ill. Rev. St. 1874, c. 40, § 11 (in divorce proceedings, a marriage in a "foreign state or country" is provable by "acknowledgment of the parties, their cohabitation, and other circumstantial testimony"); Ind. 1850, Trimble v. Trimble, 2 Ind. 76 (unspecified grounds); Me. 1921, Smith v. Heine S. B. Co., 119 Me. 552, 112 Atl. 516 (widow's claims under workmen's compensation law; eye-witness not required); Mich. 1884, Cross v. Cross, 55 Mich. 280, 21 N. W. 309, semble (cruelty and abandonment); Oh. Gen. C. Annot. 1921, § 11989 (in divorce and alimony cases, habit and repute are "competent evidence," and in the Court's discretion may suffice); 1832, Houpt v. Houpt, Wright 156 (but only under statute, for the marriage to be dissolved; for any other marriage, such evidence is probably to be rejected in discretion); Okl. Comp. St. 1921, § 515 (in divorce and alimony proceedings, cohabitation and reputation "may be received as evidence of the marriage"); Tex. 1851, Wright v. Wright, 6 Tex. 3, 19 (cruelty); Vt. 1839, Mitchell v. Mitchell, 11 Vt. 134 (unspecified grounds); Wash. 1903, Summerville v. Summerville, 31 Wash. 411, 72 Pac. 84; 1921, Emmans' Estate, 117 Wash. 182, 200 Pac. 1117 (letters of administration; certificate of marriage not required); W. Va. 1868, Hitchcox v. Hitchcox, 2 W. Va. 435, 438, semble (cruelty).

Contra: 1854, Harman v. Harman, 16 Ill. 85 (divorce for cruelty; but this ruling is probably affected by the statute cited supra).

[10] See the citations supra, note 3, post, § 2088, and ante, § 1336.

[11] 1860, Com. v. Hurley, 14 Gray 411, and cases cited ante, §§ 268, 1602. Contra: 1867, Berry, J., in State v. Johnson, 12 Minn. 476, 482; but this view is without any support whatever.

precisely in the same way that an accomplice's testimony is by some Courts (ante, § 2056) held insufficient without corroboration.

§ 2086. Same: (5) Eye-Witness not required when Proof is by Admissions. Should Lord Mansfield's rule be extended to require eye-witness evidence, not only in addition to habit and repute, but even where the defendant's express admissions of the marriage can be shown? This is the part of the controversy about which there has been most argument. The authorities for enlarging the rule to that extent have never been numerous, but they have served to force the question strongly upon the attention of almost every Court. The argument in favor of such an extension has been set forth as follows:

1803, Serjeant East, Pleas of the Crown, I, 471: "It may be difficult to say that it is not evidence to go to the jury, like the acknowledgment of any other matter 'in pais' where it is made by a party to his own prejudice at the time. But it must be admitted that it may under circumstances be entitled to little or no weight; for such acknowledgments, made without consideration of the consequences and palpably for other purposes at the time, are scarcely deserving of that name in the sense in which acknowledgments are received as evidence, — more especially if made before the second marriage, or upon occasions when in truth they cannot be said to be to the party's own prejudice nor so conceived by him at the time."

