1858, CAMPBELL, J., in People v. Lambert, 5 Mich. 349, 366: "Some confusion has been created by not distinguishing between the various kinds of confessions. A deliberate confession in open court is treated as sufficient evidence, always, so far as it goes, if made on the trial of the cause, and perhaps even on the preliminary hearing, provided it is made freely. It is regarded as proof on the same principle as a plea of guilty, because the accused cannot be supposed to act without consideration. But confessions made extrajudicially are often misunderstood and easily perverted. . . . There would be a peculiar difficulty in resting upon confessions and cohabitation alone, arising from the fact that persons forming illicit connections are very rarely bold enough to live openly in the community in such a relation and avow its existence. To confess it would expel them from all decent society; and very few are so infatuated as to forego the advantages of social intercourse and respectability if they can obtain them by the assumption of virtue. For civil rights the law holds them to their professions; but in criminal cases the offense must actually exist. No doubt, in these as in all other criminal prosecutions, circumstantial evidence of a conclusive nature may often avail, where direct testimony is inaccessible. But it must be testimony not reasonably capable of any other interpretation. . . . Circumstantial evidence assumes many forms, and cannot always be limited or defined in advance. We do not mean to decide whether or not evidence by an eye-witness of an actual marriage may not in some cases be dispensed with where there is other circumstantial evidence going to establish it conclusively. But it would be very unsafe to permit a conviction upon any proof which is susceptible of two interpretations and upon which any theory can reasonably be based of innocence of the offense charged. We think the first marriage and its legality must be affirmatively proved by evidence beyond the mere confessions and conduct of the prisoner [so far] as shown in the bill of exceptions."

The answer to this argument has been frequently expounded. It is, in brief, that no more consideration should be shown to a defendant in this sort of a case than in any other; that an express confession or admission, at any rate when corroborated (ante, § 2070) is sufficient evidence in all other criminal cases; and that the eye-witness rule, when admissions are available, is a serious obstacle to the due punishment of the offence of bigamy:

1825 (?), President KING, in Com. v. Murtagh, 1 Ashm. Pa. 272, 274: "I would yield without hesitation to the reasoning on which [the ruling of this Court in Forney v. Hallacher] rests, drawn from the habits, manners, and peculiar condition of the country, which makes so strict a rule as that established in Morris v. Miller inapplicable to our peculiar condition. In a country where no public or ecclesiastical agency is requisite to give a marriage validity, where a contract in 'verba de præsenti' made between the parties capable of contracting matrimony is all that is required to make a good marriage, where we have no uniform and permanent registry of marriages, where the youthful and active part of our population are daily bending their steps to the rich and boundless fields of enterprise in the region of the father of the waters, and where so great a portion of our population are foreigners whose marriages have been celebrated in lands afar remote, the most manifest inconvenience would result if we servilely followed a rule of evidence applicable to a people living in a state of society so artificial as that of modern England, — a rule obviously the offspring of the British marriage acts, and which is not satisfactory even there. . . . The reason for relaxing the rule, if it existed 'proprio vigore' in England, would be the great moral necessity which required it from the peculiar character and condition of our community; and necessity, moral or absolute, has been said to be sufficient ground for dispensing with the usual rules of evidence."

1834, MELLEN, C. J., in Ham's Case, 11 Me. 391, 394: "The question which at once presents itself on this occasion is, Why should not the defendant's deliberate and explicit confession of his marriage, in such a prosecution, be as competent evidence to prove such marriage as a similar confession is to prove the crime of adultery charged? If either fact exists, it must certainly be within his own knowledge; and, as a general proposition it is certainly true that a deliberate and voluntary confession, understandingly made, is the best evidence; for he who makes it speaks from his actual knowledge of the fact; no one has any interest in its truth or interest in disputing it. . . . Viewing the question under consideration independently of decided cases, there would seem but one reason why the deliberate confession of his marriage, made by defendant in a prosecution against him for bigamy or adultery, should not be received as competent and satisfactory evidence of such marriage, — namely, that the person solemnizing the marriage had no legal authority to do it, and yet the want of authority might not have been known by the person officiating or by the defendant himself when he made the confession. . . . In no other cases, however, do we perceive that any unfavorable consequences could ensue which would not follow upon a conviction upon undisputed proof of a legal marriage. . . . [Yet] the plea of guilty is a confession of the crime, which includes a confession of the marriage, that being essential to the existence of the crime; the Court receives such a plea and passes sentence on the offender, though even this solemn confession in open court may be made under a mistaken belief that the marriage was solemnized by a person duly authorized, though the fact was otherwise. . . . The question then is, whether a deliberate confession of marriage is not as convincing evidence of the fact as the testimony of a witness present; for in the case of confession [as well as of eye-witnesses] the question of identity can never arise. . . . When we take all the foregoing circumstances into consideration, together with the known fact that marriages are seldom recorded as the law requires, and the difficulty of ascertaining who were present at the marriage, especially among the lower classes and after the lapse of a few years, we apprehend that the interests of public justice would be advanced by a relaxation of the rules of evidence touching the point before us and by a more liberal principle applied in the investigation of facts, so that the laws of the land may be more surely enforced against unprincipled offenders and the public morals be more faithfully and effectually guarded."

1876, COFER, J., in Com. v. Jackson, 11 Bush 679, 683, 687: "[In actions for criminal conversation,] the plaintiff knows when, where, and by whom he was married, and at least some of the persons who were witnesses of the fact, and generally has it in his power to offer direct and positive proof. But the case is often quite otherwise with the government in prosecutions for bigamy. The prosecuting officer must often be wholly ignorant of the time and place of the prisoner's first marriage, of the names and residence of those present at its consummation, and the avenues of information will generally be closed to him, especially when the first marriage took place (as is generally the case with bigamists) in some other State or country. . . . It is difficult to perceive any reason for discriminating between admissions to prove a marriage and [admissions to prove] other facts essential to constitute the legal guilt of the accused. There can be no more danger of doing injustice in receiving such evidence in the class of cases under consideration than in any other. Where the declarations of the prisoner and the fact that he has recognized and cohabited with the woman alleged to be his wife are alone relied upon, the jury should still be told that this is only evidence to prove an actual marriage, and that it is for them to decide whether the facts proven are sufficient to warrant them in finding that the prisoner was in fact married to the alleged wife, and unless they so belive they should acquit, although they may believe he recognized and cohabited with her as his wife. This will place the declarations of one indicted for a crime in which proof of actual marriage is necessary to make out his guilt upon the same footing with those charged with other crimes, and will not give comparative immunity to this detestable crime by obstructing the path of the prosecutor with a rule of evidence which it is believed would render conviction impossible in a large majority of such cases where the moral evidence of guilt is conclusive, and where a conviction could be had by simply applying to that class of cases the same rules of evidence applied to other crimes subjecting the offender to like punishment." [1]

These opposing reasons have generally been regarded as preponderating.

The state of the law is as follows:

(a) In actions for criminal conversation, the defendant's admissions seem to have been held sufficient in England from the outset,[2] in spite of the ambiguous language of Lord Mansfield in Morris v. Miller (ante, § 2084); in the United States, the same view has been shown some favor.[3]

(b) In prosecutions for bigamy, Lord Mansfield's rule is not favored in England or Canada as requiring eye-witness proof where the defendant had deliberately admitted the marriage; [4] and the same view has generally

§ 2086. [1] The following are other good opinions: 1822, Gibson, J., in Forney v. Hallacher, 8 S. & R. Pa. 158; 1827, Johnson, J., in State v. Hilton, 3 Rich. L. S. C. 434; 1852, Nisbet, J., in Cook v. State, 11 Ga. 53, 59, 63.

[2] 1769, Rigg v. Curgenven, 2 Wils. 395, 399 (bribery at elections; answering an argument of the counsel in which Morris v. Miller was cited, the Court of Common Bench, Wilmot, C. J., said: "As to the case mentioned of criminal conversation, to be sure a defendant's saying, in jest or in loose rambling talk, that he had laid with the plaintiff's wife, would not be sufficient alone to convict him in that action; but if it were proved that the defendant had seriously or solemnly recognised that he knew the woman he had laid with was the plaintiff's wife, we think it would be evidence proper to be left to a jury without proving the [actual] marriage"); yet compare the contrary suggestion by some of the judges in R. v. Truman, cited infra, note 4.

[3] 1822, Forney v. Hallacher, 8 S. & R. Pa. 158 (crim. con.; eye-witness not necessary as against confessions; but, semble, reputation not sufficient; Morris v. Miller on the former point repudiated; Mr. J. Gibson's vigorous opinion makes this the leading case on this part of the subject); 1825 (?), Com. v. Murtagh, 1 Ashm. Pa. 472 (declaring the ruling in Forney v. Hallacher to be the law); 1855, Thorndell v. Morrison, 25 Pa. 326, 328 (same); S. Dak. Rev. Code 1919, § 103 (quoted ante, § 2085). Contra: 1818, Kibby v. Rucker, 1 A. K. Marsh. Ky. 391, semble; 1876, Com. v. Jackson, 11 Bush Ky. 679, 673, semble; 1834, Ham's Case, 11 Me. 391, 397.

[4] ENGLAND: 1795, R. v. Truman, East Pl. Cr., I, 470 (besides cohabitation, a document been taken in the United States.[5] Nevertheless, in a few jurisdictions, the contrary result, based chiefly on an early New York ruling, has been accepted.[6] was proved which, being a proceeding in a Scotch Court to punish the defendant for secretly contracting the first marriage, contained an indorsement in the defendant's hand acknowledging that marriage; this was held sufficient, all the Judges being present except Perryn, B., and Buller, J.; two of the judges thought that the acknowledgments being in writing upon the Court proceedings distinguished the case; but "some thought that the acknowledgment alone would have been sufficient," distinguishing Morris v. Miller because "the acknowledgment of the defendant in such an action of the plaintiff's marriage might be of a fact not within his knowledge; as [on the contrary] it must be [of his own knowledge] if a defendant in bigamy admitted his own marriage"); 1839, R. v. Upton, 1 C. & K. 165 note, Erskine, J.; 1840, Woods v. Woods, 2 Curt. Eccl. 516, 521, semble (in criminal cases acknowledgment suffices); 1843, R. v. Newton, 2 Moo. & Rob. 503, Wrightman and Cresswell, JJ.; 1843, R. v. Simmonsto, 1 C. & K. 164 (same case as the preceding, under a different name). Contra: 1876, R. v. Savage, 13 Cox Cr. 178.

CANADA: Accord: 1860, R. v. Creamer, 10 Low. Can. 404, 408. Contra: 1890, R. v. Ray, 20 Ont. 209 (bigamy; defendant's confession of the first marriage, not sufficient; "We must follow the latest English case, R. v. Savage"). Not clear: 1911, R. v. Naoum, 24 Ont. L. R. 306 (bigamy; defendant's oral admission of first marriage).

[6] Add to the following rulings the statutes cited ante, § 2085.

Federal: 1880, Miles v. U. S., 103 U. S. 304, 311; Arizona: 1920, Ford v. State, 21 Ariz. 567, 192 Pac. 1117 (Miles v. U. S. approved); Georgia: 1904, McSein v. State, 120 Ga. 175, 47 S. E. 544 ("the defendant's uncorroborated admissions are sufficient to establish the first marriage"); Illinois: 1854, Harman v. Harman, 16 Ill. 85, 88 (common-law rule not decided); 1886, Tucker v. People, 117 Ill. 88, 92, 7 N. E. 51, semble; 1887, Tucker v. People, 122 Ill. 583, 592, 13 N. E. 809 (under the statute ante, § 2085; but "whether the marriage . . . might be established solely by such evidence, it will not be necessary here to determine"); 1895, Hiler v. People, 156 Ill. 511, 520, 41 N. E. 181 (evidence including admissions, held insufficient, but no express statement is made as to the sufficiency of admissions; opinion loose; Tucker v. People not cited); 1898, Lowery v. People, 176 Ill. 466, 50 N. E. 165 (oral admissions may suffice, on a charge of bigamy); Indiana: 1861, State v. Seals, 16 Ind. 352; 1874, Squire v. State, 46 id. 459, 460; Kentucky: 1876, Com. v. Jackson, 11 Bush 679; Missouri: 1897, State v. Jenkins, 139 Mo. 535, 41 S. W. 220; North Carolina: 1892, State v. Wylde, 110 N. C. 500, 15 S. E. 5; 1897, State v. Melton, 120 N. C. 591, 26 S. E. 933; Ohio: 1847, Wolverton v. State, 16 Oh. 173, 176, semble; 1867, Stanglein v. State, 17 Oh. St. 453, 461, semble; Pennsylvania: 1825 (?), Com. v. Murtagh, 1 Ashm. 272; Rhode Island: 1897, State v. Gallagher, 20 R. I. 266, 38 Atl. 655; South Carolina: 1827, State v. Britton, 4 McC. 256 (admissions, with cohabitation, held sufficient; probably the same case as the next); 1827, State v. Hilton, 3 Rich. L. 434 (same); S. Dakota: Rev. Code 1919, § 103 (quoted ante, § 2085); Texas: 1883, Dumas v. State, 14 Tex. App. 464, 472 (reputation, with cohabitation and admission, "is competent evidence to establish a 'prima facie' case sufficient to sustain a verdict"); 1899, Waldrop v. State, 41 Tex. Cr. 194, 53 S. W. 130, semble; 1912, Johnson v. State, 68 Tex. Cr. 104, 150 S. W. 936 (following Dumas v. State; but mere admissions, without cohabitation or other circumstances, do not suffice); 1920, Ahlberg v. State, 88 Tex. Cr. 173, 225 S. W. 253; Utah: 1879, U. S. v. Miles, 2 Utah 19, 25; 1885, U. S. v. Simpson, 4 Utah 227, 230, 7 Pac. 257; 1887, U. S. v. Bassett, 5 Utah 131, 137, 13 Pac. 237; 1888, U. S. v. Harris, 5 Utah 621, 19 Pac. 197, semble; 1890, U. S. v. Schow, 6 Utah 381, 24 Pac. 30; Virginia: 1817, Warner v. Com., 2 Va. Cas. 95, 98; 1867, Oneale v. Com., 17 Gratt. 582, 587; 1871, Bird v. Com., 21 Va. 800, 807.

Add to these the rulings to the same effect in note 7, infra, concerning adultery: such Courts would perhaps make a similar ruling in bigamy.

[6] Federal: 1851, Gaines v. Relf, 12 How. 472, 534 (mere confession of a husband, not a privy in interest, that he was formerly married, held not sufficient to "overthrow his marriage"; but here the declarant was assumed to be living, and was not a party or privy); Alabama: 1907, Williams v. State, 151 Ala. 108, 44 So. 57 (Parker v. State approved and followed); Georgia: 1905, Murphy v. State, 122 Ga. 149, 50 S. E. 48; Michigan: 1858, People v. Lambert, 5 Mich. 349; 1896, People v. Isham, 109 Mich. 72, 67 N. W. 819; New York: 1810, People v. Humphrey, 7 Johns. 314 (going merely upon the authority of Morris v. Miller and Birt v. Barlow); 1850, Clayton v. Wardell, 4 N. Y. 230, 234 (People v. Humphrey disapproved; "this rule is far from being well established"); 1853, Gahagan v. People, 1 Park. Cr. 378, 385 (following People v. Humphrey); 1862, Hayes v. People, 25 N. Y. 390, 393, 396 ("To convict of bigamy, a marriage in fact must be proved").

Add to these the Courts ruling the same way

(c) In a prosecution for adultery, the eye-witness rule should not apply; [7] yet in a few jurisdictions the requirement is made.[8]

(d) To criminal cases in general there is of course no ground for extending the rule.[9]

(e) In suits for divorce, founded on adultery, the rule has equally no place; [10] as also in suits for divorce founded upon any other cause.

(f) In civil cases in general, just as habit and repute may suffice (ante, § 2083), so also the opponent's admissions of the marriage are unquestionably sufficient, so far as any rule of law is concerned.[11] for adultery, infra, note 8; such Courts would apply the same rule for bigamy.

The Alabama rulings leave the law perhaps uncertain: 1842, Ford v. Ford, 4 Ala. 142, 144 (dower; said obiter that in bigamy and crim. con. the register or an eye-witness is necessary); 1847, Morgan v. State, 11 Ala. 289 (incestuous adultery; admission of relationship, uncorroborated, insufficient); 1848, Cameron v. State, 14 Ala. 546 (living in adultery; defendant's oral admission of marriage, sufficient; Morris v. Miller repudiated); 1853, Martin v. Martin, 22 Ala. 86, 102 (dower; register or eye-witness not required); 1857, Langtry v. State, 30 Ala. 536 (bigamy; cohabitation and a written admission offered; neither register nor eye-witness necessary); 1870, Williams v. State, 44 Ala. 24 (bigamy; point not decided); 1875, Brown v. State, 52 Ala. 338 (bigamy; cohabitation alone, not sufficient); 1875, Williams v. State, 54 Ala. 131 (bigamy; repeated oral admissions of a foreign marriage, sufficient); 1876, Buchanan v. State, 55 Ala. 154 (living in adultery; admissions of the marriage held "competent," but repute held "not legal proof"); 1877, Brewer v. State, 59 Ala. 101 (bigamy; sufficiency of admissions, not decided); 1884, Parker v. State, 77 Ala. 47 (bigamy; admissions sufficient).

[7] Ga. 1852, Cook v. State, 11 Ga. 53, 59 (incestuous adultery); Haw. 1902, Terr. v. Castro, 14 Haw. 131 (adultery); Me. 1830, Cayford's Case, 7 Greenl. 57 (but not deciding that a confession of a domestic marriage, without any corroboration, would suffice); 1834, Ham's Case, 11 Me. 391, 396 (the above doubt settled; the principle being equally applicable to a domestic marriage; quoted supra); 1841, State v. Hodgskins, 19 Me. 155, 158; 1858, State v. Libby, 44 Me. 469, 478; Mass. 1876, Com. v. Holt, 121 Mass. 61, 63; Mo. 1857, State v. McDonald, 25 Mo. 176, semble (but the distinction between sufficiency and admissibility is not noticed); 1883, State v. Gouce, 79 Mo. 600, 601, semble; 1890, State v. Cooper, 103 Mo. 266, 271, 15 S. W. 327; R. I. 1867, State v. Medbury, 8 R. I. 543; Utah: 1906, State v. Thompson, 31 Utah 228, 87 Pac. 709; 1909, State v. Moore, 36 Utah 521, 105 Pac. 293; 1912, State v. Moore, 41 Utah 247, 126 Pac. 322.

Add also the statutes cited ante, § 2085.

[8] Conn. 1827, State v. Roswell, 6 Conn. 446 (cited ante, § 2085, n. 4); Mass. 1799, Com. v. Moffat, 2 Dane's Abr. 296 ("In this case the Court decided, on agreement, that no written or parol proof that he confessed he was married in England could be good. . . . This decision was on the authority of Morris v. Miller and other cases cited"); Minn. 1860, State v. Armstrong, 4 Minn. 335, 344; 1867, State v. Johnson, 12 Minn. 476, 481. Yet for the last two jurisdictions compare the statutes cited ante, § 2085. For Alabama rulings, see note 6, supra.

[9] Eng. 1765, R. v. Norwood, East Pl. Cr., I, 337 (wife's murder of a husband as petit treason; on objection that there must be proof "of actual marriage, and that such proof could only be by producing a copy of the register of such marriage or by some person who was present at the time," the evidence in the case being of cohabitation and admissions and the defendant's brother's testimony, Mansfield, L. C. J., with Parker, C. B., Smythe, Bathurst, Perrot, and Aston, JJ., "were of opinion that the marriage was sufficiently proved"); Can. St. 1913, 3–4 Geo. V, c. 13, § 14 (failure to support family; quoted ante, § 2085); U. S. 1910, People v. Adams, 161 Mich. 371, 127 N. W. 354 (seduction by a married man); 1898, State v. Misenheimer, 123 N. C. 758, 31 S. E. 852 (criminal slander; admissions of a divorce, allowed); 1853, West v. State, 1 Wis. 209, 218 (seduction by a married man); and the other statutes concerning family-desertion, quoted ante, § 2085, n. 6.

[10] Accord: the statutes cited supra, § 2085, frequently declare this, and the rulings cited in the foregoing notes to the present section will usually indicate the same result. Contra, semble: 1919, Bolmer v. Edsall, 90 N. J. Eq. 299, 106 Atl. 646 (nullity; discussion of habit and repute as corroborative evidence of a ceremonial marriage); 1855, Simons v. Simons, 13 Tex. 468, 473 (in divorce for adultery, under the statutory rule of § 2067, ante). Undecided: 1861, Fuller v. Fuller, 17 Cal. 605, 611.

[11] 1774, Mace v. Cadell, Cowp. 232 (trover by a bankrupt's creditors against a woman claiming the goods as 'feme sole'; 'her admission of marriage to the bankrupt, held sufficient); U. S. Code 1919, § 4356 (marriage of white man to Indian woman of Five Civilized

In any case, no matter what the rule as to eye-witness proof, the admission or confession is receivable. The eye-witness rule merely declares it insufficient of itself to support a verdict.[12] What constitutes an admission or confession has here received little attention in judicial definition.[13] It may be supposed that in general the sense of the word, as used for the confessions of accused persons (ante, § 821), would be followed, i. e. any express statement in words declaring that a marriage took place or that the relation of husband and wife exists. There can be within this broad notion no further limitation by rule of law. This or that admission may by the jury be held not persuasive under the circumstances, but the rule of law will not attempt to discriminate further.[14]

§ 2087. Same: (6) Other Rules affecting Proof of Marriage, distinguished. (a) In dealing with the precedents on the foregoing topic, particularly in criminal prosecutions for bigamy and adultery, it is to be understood that the case may also be affected by a distinct rule (ante, § 2070), applicable (in the jurisdictions recognizing it) in all criminal cases alike, namely, the rule that an uncorroborated confession of the accused is insufficient. By the rule here, the confession is of the fact of marriage, which is for bigamy and adultery only one element of the charge; while the confession to which the corroboration-rule applies is a confession of the crime as a whole.

Tribes may be evidenced by admissions); 1902, State v. Miller, 3 Pennew. Del. 518, 52 Atl. 262 (information for failure to support children); 1866, Laughlin v. Eaton, 54 Me. 156, 157 (malicious prosecution on charge of adultery); 1889, Applegate v. Applegate, 45 N. J. Eq. 116, 119, 17 Atl. 293, semble (bill for support); 1909, Walker v. Walker, 151 N. C. 161, 65 S. E. 923 (inheritance depending on legitimacy; the mother's declarations as to non-marriage received); 1859, Hill v. Hill's Adm'r, 32 Pa. 511, 513 (dower; intestate's admission of marriage to claimant, received); 1860, Kenyon v. Ashbridge, 35 Pa. 157 (title depending on legitimacy; father's admissions of marriage, receivable); 1877, Greenawalt v. McEnelley, 85 Pa. 353, 355 (title depending on legitimacy; father's admissions, cohabitation, and repute, sufficient; in bigamy and crim. con., admissions said to be "sufficient evidence"); 1810, Purcell v. Purcell, 4 Hen. & M. Va. 507, 512 (alimony).

Contra: 1813, Wilson v. Mitchell, 3 Camp. 93 (assumpsit; plea, coverture; plaintiff's admissions held insufficient, per Lord Ellenborough; this ruling is anomalous and inexplicable); 1911, Whigby v. Burnham, 135 Ga. 584, 69 S. E. 1114 (action by son against widow, for land inherited; the deceased father's admission that he was already married to another woman, not received for the plaintiff; the grounds of the ruling are inexplicable).

For the Alabama rulings, see note 6, supra.

For a comparison of other rules as to sufficiency of admissions, see ante, § 1055.

[12] 1853, Parker, J., in Gahagan v. People, 1 Park. Cr. N. Y. 378, 386; 1920, Ahlberg v. State, 88 Tex. Cr. 173, 225 S. W. 253.

Contra: 1827, State v. Roswell, 6 Conn. 446 (Peters and Lanman, JJ., diss. on this point); 1905, Bowman v. Little, 101 Md. 273, 61 Atl. 223, 657, 1084 (to prove identity; the opinion is full of loose law); 1867, State v. Johnson, 12 Minn. 476, 482 (cohabitation, repute, conduct, and admissions, not admissible at common law; McMillan, J., diss.).

There is no ground whatever for the view taken in these three rulings; it proceeds merely upon an early looseness in the use of the word "competent" in the sense of "sufficient." The same fallacy has already been noted (ante, § 2069, par. 4, and § 2085, n. 9) as to evidence of confessions and of habit and repute.

[13] 1869, Vincent's Appeal, 60 Pa. 228, 241 (indorsement on a false certificate that it was true, held sufficient).

[14] In particular, any such limitation as that proposed in the following passage is unsound: 1853, Smith, J., in West v. State, 1 Wis. 209, 226, 228, "Declarations of the defendant, made idly, or with a view to shield himself from prosecution or public censure while living in a state of concubinage, . . . so also, declarations made to parry social criticism or to avoid legal inquisition, are of little or no weight. But marriage in fact is the point to be established by proof; a confession, therefore, of the fact of marriage, — not of the relation of husband and wife; a distinct unequivocal confession, seriously and solemnly made, of the fact of the marriage rite having been performed . . . should be held sufficient."

(b) In a suit for divorce, the uncorroborated admission of the respondent as to the cause for the divorce is generally held insufficient, by a different rule (ante, § 2067). That rule, however, properly has no reference to the proof of the marriage upon which the petitioner's claim rests, but only to the proof of the cause for divorce.

(c) For proving a marriage before an administrative official, the Federal War Risk Insurance Act [1] makes provision sanctioning five different modes; the general Pension Act accepts the law of the place of residence.[2]

(d) Numerous other rules affect the proof of marriage. Whether the wife may testify to the fact of marriage, against one charged with bigamy, is a question of privileged testimony (post, § 2231). Whether the parent may bastardize the issue, by testifying to non-access or non-marriage, has been already dealt with (ante, § 2063). Whether the hearsay statement of a deceased member of the family, as to the fact of marriage, may be admitted is a question of the Pedigree exception to the Hearsay rule (ante, §§ 1480–1503). In the same way, the admissibility of affidavits (ante, § 1710), of registers of marriage (ante, § 1642), and of certificates of marriage (ante, § 1645), has been already dealt with in considering other Hearsay exceptions; and the conclusiveness of the marriage-register has been considered with the rules for preferred evidence (ante, § 1336). The question whether marriage will be presumed from cohabitation after a legal obstacle has been removed is a question of the law of presumptions, and, so far as it has any place in the law of Evidence, is noticed post, § 2506; the expressions about eye-witness proof in such a case are really expressions as to the effect of the presumption. So also the question whether the authority of the celebrant must be expressly shown (post, § 2505).

§ 2088. Same: (7) Celebrant's Certificate or Register not preferred to Oral Eye-Witness. Some heresies die a hard death. With a phœnix-like persistence they arise again and again, after repeated judicial pronouncements which ought to have been final, to plague each new generation and to call for fresh incinerations. One of these is the supposition that, as between possible sorts of eye-witness evidence, the celebrant's certificate or register-entry is preferred to the oral testimony of celebrant, clerk, or bystander. This, if it were the law, would be a genuine rule of preference as between different kinds of testimony (ante, §§ 1286, 1336). But there is no such rule. The marriage-certificate was at common law probably not even admissible (ante, § 1645); and it has always been recognized that both certificate and register were of inferior value, inasmuch as further evidence of the identity of the parties named may be required:

1834, MELLEN, C. J., in Ham's Case, 11 Me. 391, 396: "It is an admitted principle, and constantly adopted in practice, that the testimony of a witness who was present at the marriage ceremony is legal evidence, and in fact it is better evidence than the record; because the record does not establish the fact of identity, but a witness on the stand proves not only the marriage solemnized but that the defendant on trial was one of the parties."

§ 2087. [1] U. S. St. 1917, Oct. 6, c. 105 § 2, Code § 10252 as amended by St. 1919, Dec. 24.
[2] Code §§ 10188, 10189, quoted ante, § 2085.

That the certificate or register, or a copy, should have been thought to be preferred to oral testimony could hardly be due to Lord Mansfield's language in the original cases.[1] Nor did the later English rulings give the notion any countenance.[2] Yet not only have the Courts been constantly called upon to repeat the primal ruling, but Legislatures have frequently deemed it necessary to dispel some apparently persistent misconception by declaring the same thing in statutes. These statutes usually deal only with the issue of bigamy and family-desertion, because chiefly upon these issues the eye-witness rule was invoked.[3] The judicial utterances have declared that no such rule exists for bigamy,[4] or for adultery,[5] or for desertion or criminal cases in general,[6] or for criminal conversation,[7] or for divorce,[8] or for civil cases in general.[9]

§ 2088. [1] 1765, R. v. Norwood, East Pl. Cr., I, 337 (quoted ante, § 2086, n. 9); 1767, Morris v. Miller, 4 Burr. 2057 (quoted ante, § 2084); 1779, Birt v. Barlow, 1 Doug. 171 (crim. con.; the register-copy being offered, the trial Court ruled "that the Marriage Act had directed the witnesses to subscribe their names to the register in order to facilitate the investigation of the legal evidence of marriages; and that till these five witnesses and the minister were accounted for, as by shewing them all dead or the like, I could not admit less proof than that of some person present to demonstrate the identity of the parties"; Lord Mansfield, C. J.: "[The registers] were meant as well to prevent false entries as to guard against illegal marriages without license or the publication of banns; . . . but it would be very prejudicial if the act were so construed as to render the proof of marriages more difficult than formerly; . . . registers are in the nature of records, and need not be produced, nor proved by subscribing witnesses; . . . as to the proof of identity, whatever is sufficient to satisfy a jury is good evidence").

[2] Eng. 1840, Woods v. Woods, 2 Curt. Eccl. 516, 522 (incest; Dr. Lushington: "The evidence of any one person present at the marriage is sufficient, without calling for the register at all"; quoted ante, § 1336); 1762, St. Devereux v. Much Dew Church, 1 W. Bl. 367 (pauper settlement; marriage provable by bystander, without celebrant or lawful register); U. S. 1889, State v. Schweitzer, 57 Conn. 533, 537, 18 Atl. 787 (failure to support wife).

[3] These are quoted ante, § 2085.

[4] 1840, Jackson v. People, 3 Ill. 231 (statute applied); 1865, State v. Williams, 20 Ia. 98; 1906, Richardson v. State, 103 Md. 112, 63 Atl. 317; 1888, People v. Perriman, 72 Mich. 184, 187, 40 N. W. 425 (marriage certificate not preferred; eye-witnesses said to supply "more direct and reliable testimony" than documents); 1839, State v. Kean, 10 N. H. 347, 349; 1857, State v. Marvin, 35 N. H. 22; 1845, State v. Robbins, 6 Ired. N. C. 23, 26; 1920, Ahlberg v. State, 88 Tex. Cr. 173, 225 S. W. 253; 1817, Warner v. Com., 2 Va. Cas. 95, 108 (marriage certificate, required by law in Pennsylvania, not preferred to testimony of eye-witness on the stand); 1867, Oneale v. Com., 17 Gratt. Va. 582, 587; 1871, Bird v. Com., 27 Gratt. Va. 800, 806.

[5] Ia. 1867, State v. Wilson, 22 Ia. 364; 1874, State v. Hazen, 39 id. 648; Mass. 1813, Com. v. Norcross, 9 Mass. 492; 1818, Com. v. Littlejohn, 15 Mass. 163; 1892, Com. v. Dill, 156 Mass. 226, 228, 30 N. E. 1016; 1895, Com. v. Hayden, 163 Mass. 453, 456, 40 N. E. 846 (under statute); N. H. 1843, State v. Winkley, 14 N. H. 480, 495; 1857, State v. Marvin, 35 N. H. 22, 27 (town register, not preferred to other testimony; here, of the celebrant); 1874, State v. Clark, 54 N. H. 456, 460; Vt. 1834, State v. Way, 6 Vt. 311, semble; 1913, State v. Nieburg, 86 Vt. 392, 85 Atl. 769; Wash. State v. McGilvery, 20 Wash. 240, 55 Pac. 115 (incest); 1905, State v. Nelson, 39 Wash. 221, 81 Pac. 721; Wis. 1839, Mills v. U. S., 1 Pinney, 73, 75, semble; 1887, State v. Hooks, 69 Wis. 182, 184, 43 N. W. 57.

[6] 1889, State v. Schweitzer, 57 Conn. 532, 537, 18 Atl. 787 (neglect to support a wife); 1903, State v. Tillinghast, 25 R. I. 391, 56 Atl. 181, semble (non-support); 1884, Firmeis v. State, 61 Wis. 140, 142, 20 N. W. 663 (desertion of children); 1899, Jenness v. State, — Wis. —, 29 N. W. 759 (failure to support).

[7] 1836, Nixon v. Brown, 4 Blackf. Ind. 157, semble; 1867, Kilburn v. Mullen, 22 Ia. 498, 503; 1906, Hill v. Pomelear, 72 N. J. L. 528, 63 Atl. 269; 1914, Vollmer v. Stregge, 27 N. D. 579, 147 N. W. 797; 1885, Jacobsen v. Siddal, 12 Or. 280, 7 Pac. 108.

[8] 1814, Ellis v. Ellis, 11 Mass. 92 (divorce for adultery; certificate of marriage not sufficient; proof must be "on oath").

[9] 1848, Patterson v. Gaines, 6 How. U. S. 550, 589; 1842, Arthur v. Broadnax, 3 Ala. 557; 1906, Southern R. Co. v. Brown, 126 Ga.

In the few jurisdictions where the Continental system of an official register of civil status has been inherited, the register of course is the preferred evidence for all the recorded facts of family history, and this would include the fact of marriage on all issues.[10] But this is distinctly alien to the Anglo-American common-law traditions.

§ 2089. Owner's Testimony to Non-Consent, in a Charge of Larceny. At the suggestion of two eminent American writers and judges, based upon a single English ruling afterwards repudiated, a rule came near to being built up that, on a charge of larceny, the evidence that the taking was done against the owner's consent must include the owner's testimony as an indispensable element. That suggestion was placed on the following grounds:

> 1858, Messrs. Esek Cowen and Nicholas Hill, Note to the Fourth Edition of Phillipps on Evidence, No. 183, p. *635: "Where non-consent is an essential ingredient in the offense, as it is here, direct proof alone, from the person whose non-consent is necessary, can satisfy the rule. You are put to prove a negative, and the very person who can swear directly to the necessary negative must if possible always be produced.[1] Other and inferior proof cannot be resorted to till it be impossible to procure this best evidence. . . . In such cases mere presumptive 'prima facie,' or circumstantial evidence, is secondary in degree and cannot be used till all the sources of direct evidence are exhausted. Indeed the rule is general. You shall not be permitted to grope in the twilight of circumstantial evidence when the broad daylight of direct and positive proof is attainable."

This proposed rule — which might perhaps be more correctly classed as a rule of preference (ante, § 1335) — had but a slight foundation. Premised by certain unimportant English rulings as to the burden of proof in showing a negative,[2] there came a single tentative ruling requiring, in proof of non-consent, the testimony of the person whose non-consent was affirmed.[3] This

1, 54 S. E. 911 (death by wrongful act); 1907, Sellers v. Page, 127 Ga. 633, 56 S. E. 1011 (foreclosure); 1903, Casley v. Mitchell, 121 Ia. 96, 96 N. W. 725 (dower); 1906, Smith v. Fuller, — Ia. —, 108 N. W. 765 (dower); 1883, Baughman v. Baughman, 29 Kan. 283 (said generally of all cases); 1905, Hardin v. Hardin, — Ky. —, 87 S. W. 284 (negro marriage); 1871, Shotwell v. Harrison, 22 Mich. 410, 415; 1902, Rhode Island H. T. Co. v. Thorndike, 24 R. I. 105, 52 Atl. 873; 1893, McQuade v. Hatch, 65 Vt. 482, 483, 27 Atl. 136 (loss of support by liquor furnished); 1907, Massuco v. Tomasi, 80 Vt. 186, 67 Atl. 551 (breach of promise to marry).

Whether the certificate or register needs to be supplemented by evidence of the identity of the persons named and the parties in the case is a question involving the presumption of identity of person from identity of name, treated post, § 2529.

[10] I. e. in Louisiana, Philippines, and Porto Rico; the statutes and cases cited ante, § 1336, show the bearing of those rules: Louisiana: here the rule obtains that the record, or a copy, must be produced or accounted for: 1917, Green v. New Orleans S. & G. I. R. Co., 141 La. 120, 74 So. 717 (action for death by wrongful act; plaintiff's claim to be the legitimate sisters of the decedent was disputed; Monroe, C. J., referring to the requirement of registration introduced in 1855, Civ. C. § 105: "In any case in which it is sought to prove a contract of marriage, the proponent should be required to produce a certified copy of the public record which the law declares shall be made of the contract," using the analogies of wills and contracts required to be in writing and recorded; 1918, Thomas' Succession, 144 La. 25, 80 So. 186 (rival widows claiming an inheritance). Philippines: 1915, Sison v. Ambalada, 30 P. I. 118, 124 (inheritance; lack of record of marriage does not negate the presumption from cohabitation).

§ 2089. [1] Citing R. v. Rogers, infra, note 3, and Williams v. East India Co., cited ante, § 1339.

[2] 1801, R. v. Stone, 1 East 639 (shooting game, not being qualified); 1802, Frontine v. Frost, 3 B. & P. 302 (quitting a ship without leave).

[3] 1811, R. v. Rogers, 2 Camp. 654 (indictment for coursing a deer without the consent of was afterwards wholly repudiated in England.[4] Nevertheless, the approval of the eminent writers above quoted gave the question a vogue in this country, and left it a living one long after the suggestion had been negatived in England. In at least three jurisdictions the suggestion seems to have become the law, and perhaps in one or two others.[5] In the remainder, no notice of the suggestion has in general been taken.[6] So far as the policy of it is concerned, the owner; the question being whether "the onus lay upon the prisoner to prove that he had the consent," Lord Ellenborough, C. J., held that the owner must be called to negative consent).

[4] 1826, R. v. Hazy, 2 C. & P. 458 (cutting timber without the owner's consent; the steward testified to the non-consent of the deceased owner; Bayley, J., left it to the jury to say whether there was "reasonable evidence" to show this); 1826, R. v. Allen, 1 Moo. Cr. C. 154 (killing deer, etc., without the owner's consent; Gaselee, J., on the citation of R. v. Rogers, consulted the Judges, who met and held that the owner need not be called); 1856, R. v. Wood, Dears. & B. 1 (being unlawfully on land to take game; on objection that the "direct evidence" of tenant or landlord must be brought to prove lack of permission, the Court for Crown Cases Reserved overruled the objection).

[5] Colorado: 1905, Jones v. People, 33 Colo. 161, 79 Pac. 1013 (rule apparently approved, citing only Wisconsin cases; but here it was proved impossible to find the owner); Florida: 1921, Albritton v. State, 81 Fla. 684, 88 So. 623 (larceny of cow owned by six persons; non-consent may be evidenced circumstantially, but here there was no evidence at all as to three of the six); Iowa: 1869, State v. Osborne, 28 Ia. 9 (rule accepted, on the authority of the note to Phillipps; testimony of the owner's son in possession, the owner being ill, held here sufficient); Nebraska: 1891, Bubster v. State, 33 Nebr. 663, 50 N. W. 953 (larceny of a buggy; the owner required to be called, on the authority of the note to Phillipps); 1895, Perry v. State, 44 Nebr. 414, 63 N. W. 26 (larceny of a buggy; same ruling); 1897, Rema v. State, 52 Nebr. 375, 72 N. W. 474 (if the owner testifies, he must deny consent); 1901, Trimble v. State, 61 Nebr. 604, 85 N. W. 844 (owner's testimony here held satisfactory); 1903, Van Syoc v. State, 69 Nebr. 520, 96 N. W. 266 (circumstances may suffice; 1910, Johns. v. State, 88 Nebr. 145, 129 N. W. 247 (non-consent must clearly appear from the owner's evidence); Tennessee: 1833, Lowrance v. State, 4 Yerg. 145 (owner's daughter's testimony as to ownership of money, sufficient); Texas: Here the rule was first repudiated, then adopted, and then intermittently applied: 1855, Henderson v. State, 14 Tex. 503, 513 (death of a person whose name was forged need not be proved by "direct evidence"); 1876, Wilson v. State, 45 Tex. 76, 78 (charge that want of consent could be established by the owner or possessor or "by facts and circumstances . . . of such a nature as to exclude absolutely every reasonable presumption" of consent, approved; owner need not be called); 1876, McMahon v. State, 1 Tex. App. 102, 105 (want of consent may be established "by circumstantial as well as direct testimony; this we regard as a settled proposition . . . acted on by our own Supreme Court without variation from the decision in Henderson v. State down to the present time"; defendant had here argued that the owner's testimony was "the best evidence"); then a change of ruling took place: 1876, Erskine v. State, 1 Tex. App. 405 (possessor required, as the "best evidence," to be called, on authority of the note in Phillipps; none of the preceding cases alluded to and no other authority cited in support); 1879, Jackson v. State, 7 Tex. App. 363 (person having actual possession, required to be called); 1880, Rains v. State, 7 Tex. App. 588 (owner not required to be called); 1882, Wilson v. State, 12 Tex. App. 481, 487 (where there are both owner and possessor and want of consent of both is essential, each must be called, if available, before resorting to circumstantial evidence); 1883, Bowling v. State, 13 Tex. App. 338 (same); 1883, Williamson v. State, 13 Tex. App. 514, 519 (same); 1883, Dresch v. State, 14 Tex. App. 175, 178 (second Wilson case approved); 1901, Wisdom v. State, 42 Tex. Cr. 579, 61 S. W. 926 (burglary, owner's lack of consent may be evidenced circumstantially, but not when direct testimony is available); 1902, Spiars v. State, — Tex. Cr. —, 69 S. W. 533 ("It appears to be the rule now that the want of consent of the owner to the taking must be proved by positive testimony, where this is attainable, and circumstantial evidence, no matter how strong, will not suffice"); Wisconsin: 1853, State v. Morey, 2 Wis. 495 (larceny of meat; testimony of owner, if known, must be offered; on the authority of the note in Phillipps); 1877, State v. Moon, 41 Wis. 684 (larceny of mare; same ruling; testimony other than the owner's can be resorted to only as secondary); 1901, Fetkenhauer v. State, 112 Wis. 491, 88 N. W. 294 (failure to call the owner does not of itself require a verdict to be directed for defendant).

[6] Except in the following rulings repudiating it: Cal. 1893, People v. Davis, 97 Cal. 194, 31 Pac. 1109 (larceny of a pocket-book; rule not applied); Mass. 1823, Com. v. James, 1 Pick. 375, 381 (larceny of barilla-soda, by a miller mixing with it other substances and there is nothing to be said in its favor. The accused is amply protected by the rule of reasonable doubt (post, § 2497); and the proposed rule merely adds an unnecessary complication and an opportunity for contriving a verbal trap for the judge in his instructions to the jury.

§ 2090. Required Expert Witnesses: Medical Witnesses in (a) Malpractice, (b) Committal of Insane. There is no general policy or rule that requires expert testimony to form a part of the evidence on subjects open to expert testimony. No rule of Preference exists for expert witnesses as such (ante, § 1286): much less, then, would a rule of Quantity be recognized.

Two exceptional rules, however, here find wide acceptance, — the first, an apparent exception only; the second, a real one, based on a special policy.

(a) On any and every topic, only a qualified witness can be received; and where the topic requires special experience, only a person of that special experience will be received (ante, §§ 555, 556). If therefore a topic requiring such special experience happens to form a main issue in the case, the evidence on that issue must contain expert testimony, or it will not suffice.

Now such an issue is rarely found. Generally, the topics on which only an expert witness can be received form usually but one element in the main issuable fact. Moreover, generally, the parties are eager enough to produce such expert testimony without any rule to require them. It happens, however, that in one class of cases, viz., actions for malpractice against a physician or surgeon, the main issue of the defendant's use of suitable professional skill is generally a topic calling for expert testimony only; and also that the plaintiff in such an action often prefers to rest his case on the mere facts of his sufferings, and to rely upon the jury's untutored sympathies, without attempting specifically to evidence the defendant's unskilfulness as the cause of those sufferings. Here the Courts have been obliged to insist on the dictate of simple logic, resulting from the principle above cited (of § 555, ante), that expert testimony on the main fact in issue must somewhere appear in the plaintiff's whole evidence; and for lack of it the Court may rule, in its general power to pass upon the sufficiency of evidence (post, § 2551), that there is not sufficient evidence to go to the jury. In actions for malpractice, therefore, something like a rule-of-thumb has been recognized in many jurisdictions:[1] retaining part of the original; held, that the truckman carrying the goods to and from the mill need not be produced to negative adulteration during transport); 1847, Com. v. Kenney, 12 Metc. 235, 236 (robbery); Mich. 1889, People v. Jacks, 76 Mich. 218, 221, 42 N. W. 1134; Nev. 1913, State v. Patchen, 36 Nev. 510, 137 Pac. 406 (burglary); Okl. 1901, Filson v. Terr., 11 Okl. 351, 67 Pac. 473; 1906, Hurst v. Terr., 16 Okl. 600, 86 Pac. 280 (larceny of cattle; rule repudiated); S. Dak. 1908, State v. Faulk, 22 S. D. 183, 116 N. W. 72 (non-consent need not be proved by the owner); Wash. 1901, State v. Wong Quong, 27 Wash. 93, 67 Pac. 355.

The following ruling seems to be of the present sort; 1809, White v. Fox, 1 Bibb Ky. 369, 370 (prosecuting attorney, not preferred in proving consent of prosecutor).

§ 2090. [1] The doctrine seems to have obtained its popularity through the ruling of the Federal Court first cited:

Federal: 1897, Ewing v. Goode, C. C. S. D. Oh., 78 Fed. 442 (eye-treatment; quoted supra); California: 1919, Perkins v. Trueblood, 180 Cal. 437, 181 Pac. 642 (leg-operation; McGraw v. Kerr, Colo., approved; here experts were called, but they failed to assert facts of negligence); Colorado: 1895, Jackson v. Burnham, 20 Colo. 536, 39 Pac. 577 (phimosis; "resort must be had to the opinion of experts"); 1912, McGraw v. Kerr, 23

1891, JOHNSTON, J., in Pettigrew v. Lewis, 46 Kan. 78, 26 Pac. 458 (eye-operation; the defendant demurred to the sufficiency of the plaintiff's evidence of negligence): "There was no proof, however, of a want of skill or care on the part of the defendants; and negli-

Colo. App. 163, 128 Pac. 870 ("If no standard [of skill] was established by the testimony of physicians then the jury had no standard"); 1917, Norkett v. Martin, 63 Colo. 220, 165 Pac. 256 (diagnosis and treatment of "an ailment"; McGraw v. Kerr approved); 1918, Tadlock v. Lloyd, 65 Colo. 40, 173 Pac. 200 (malpractice; expert testimony to cause of death was in the case; but "the code of ethics among physicians is frequently a bar to securing positive testimony on questions such as are here involved"); Indiana: 1916, Adolay v. Miller, 60 Ind. App. 656, 111 N. E. 313 (arm-fracture; verdict for plaintiff set aside because "there is no evidence from any physician who has given the jury any standard"); Iowa: 1911, Kline v. Nicholson, 151 Ia. 710, 130 N. W. 722 (said obiter that questions of professional skill "are to be determined in the light of expert evidence"); 1917, Snearly v. McCarthy, 180 Ia. 81, 161 N. W. 108 (leg-fracture; lack of expert testimony held to justify a directed verdict for defendant); 1917, Semmons v. National Travelers' Ben. Ass'n, 180 Ia. 666, 163 N. W. 338 (death consequent upon a fall; medical testimony held not necessary; cases collected); 1918, O'Grady v. Cadwallader, 183 Ia. 178, 166 N. W. 755 (arm-fracture; "in the absence of any showing [of negligence] from those learned in the profession . . . there can be no recovery"); Kansas: 1870, Tefft v. Wilcox, 6 Kan. 46 (shoulder-dislocation; said obiter that expert testimony is required); 1891, Pettigrew v. Lewis, 46 Kan. 78, 26 Pac. 458 (eye-operation; quoted supra; demurrer to evidence sustained for lack of expert testimony to the skill and effect of the operation); 1912, Johnson v. Powell, Sly v. Powell, 87 Kan. 142, 123 Pac. 881 (finger-injury; unskilled testimony held not sufficient); 1919, Paulich v. Nipple, 104 Kan. 801, 180 Pac. 771 (leg-fracture; Sly v. Powell followed); 1921, Rainey v. Smith, 109 Kan. 692, 201 Pac. 1107 ("It is the rule in this State that negligence of a physician or surgeon must be proved by expert evidence"); Michigan: 1886, Carstens v. Hanselman, 61 Mich. 426, 28 N. W. 159 (fractured leg; Campbell, C. J.: "It is not competent to allow juries to determine for themselves [by mere inspection] whether a physician's course has been proper or improper in the treatment of a fractured limb"); 1907, Neifert v. Hasley, 149 Mich. 232, 112 N. W. 705 (leg-amputation; "if in any case non-expert testimony . . . may be such evidence of negligent treatment by an attending surgeon as a jury may act upon, this case is not such a one"); 1909, Farrell v. Haze, 157 Mich. 374, 122 N. W. 197 (leg-fracture; an instruction that the cause of the loss of the foot was "a scientific question, which . . . can only be answered by an expert," held improperly refused); 1912, Rogers v. Kee, 171 Mich. 551, 137 N. W. 260 (femoral fracture; "malpractice must be sustained by the testimony of expert witnesses in order to prevail"); 1914, Miller v. Tolles, 183 Mich. 252, 150 N. W. 118 (amputation of leg; Farrell v. Haze, supra, followed); 1915, Zoterell v. Repp, 187 Mich. 319, 153 N. W. 692 (ovarial operation; Miller v. Tolles approved); Minnesota: 1912, Sawyer v. Berthold, 116 Minn. 441, 134 N. W. 120 (wrist-fracture; "there must be evidence from expert witnesses tending to show improper or unskilful treatment, in order to sustain a charge of malpractice against the physician"); Montana: 1920, London v. Scott, 58 Mont. 645, 194 Pac. 488 (administration of an anæsthetic; "from the very nature of the case," expert opinion was required); New York: 1868, Walsh v. Sayre, 52 How. Pr. 334 (hip-operation; motion by defendant to require plaintiff to submit to examination by defendant's expert witnesses, granted, because "the determination of the action depends on the judgment of skilled surgeons"); 1919, Robbins v. Nathan, Sup. App. Div., 179 N. Y. Suppl. 281 (dental operation; verdict for plaintiff set aside, because of "an absolute dearth of testimony" from experts; though "in some cases the lack of skill or want of care is so obvious that expert testimony is unnecessary"; citing intervening cases in the intermediate courts); Pennsylvania: 1903, De Long v. Delaney, 206 Pa. 226, 55 Atl. 965 (leg crushed; verdict for plaintiff set aside, for lack of expert testimony as to using a tourniquet); Rhode Island: 1901, Barker v. Lane, 23 R. I. 224, 49 Atl. 963 (treatment of arm; said obiter that the question "must be determined by the testimony of experts"); 1904, Bigney v. Fisher, 26 R. I. 402, 59 Atl. 72 (leg-fracture; Barker v. Lane approved); Vermont: 1907, Sheldon v. Wright, 80 Vt. 298, 67 Atl. 807 (leg-fracture; "there cannot be a recovery for malpractice in the case of an operation like this under consideration without medical expert testimony"; but the testimony may not be credited); 1909, Lawson v. Crane, 83 Vt. 115, 74 Atl. 641 (leg-fracture; Sheldon v. Wright approved); Virginia: 1918, Hunter v. Burroughs, 123 Va. 113, 96 S. E. 360 (X-ray injury; there was no expert witness for the plaintiff, on the "mechanical standard," and one on the "general professional standard"; but for the defendant there were several; held sufficient); Washington: 1914, Coombs v. James, 82 Wash. 403, 144 Pac. 536 (electrical treatment producing a miscarriage; Ewing v. Goode, gence cannot be presumed. The mere fact that the plaintiff's eyes have been weak and sore since the operation was performed does not prove negligence in the defendants, nor establish a liability against them. To maintain her action, the plaintiff should have offered the evidence of skilled witnesses to show that the present condition of her eyes was the result of the operation, and that it was unskillfully and negligently performed. 'This evidence must, from the very nature of the case, come from experts, as other witnesses are not competent to give it, nor are juries supposed to be conversant with what is peculiar with the science and practice of the professions of medicine and surgery to that degree which will enable them to dispense with all explanations.' . . . Cases may arise where there is such gross negligence and want of skill in performing an operation as to dispense with the testimony of professional witnesses; but not so in the present case. It is not conceded or proved that the weakness of her eyes had materially resulted from the operation; and even if it was, the questions would still arise: Was she in a fit physical condition to undergo the operation? Did the defendants, before beginning the operation, make due examination to determine her condition and the necessity for an operation? Was the operation performed in a careful and skillful manner? What was the standard of professional skill and scientific knowledge required of these men in that locality? Was the after-treatment and were the directions given for the subsequent care of the eye such as would meet the approval of the profession in its present advanced condition? If a mistake was made, was it a case of reasonable doubt or uncertainty or a mere error in judgment for which there is no responsibility? . . . In the absence of competent proof, showing that the defect in plaintiff's eyes was due to a want of ordinary care and skill on the part of the defendants, the district Court ruled correctly in sustaining the demurrer to the evidence."

1897, TAFT, J., in Ewing v. Goode, C. C. S. D. Oh., 78 Fed. 442: "When a case concerns the highly specialized art of treating an eye for cataract, . . . the Court and jury must be dependent on expert evidence; there can be no other guide; and, where want of skill or attention is not thus shown by expert evidence applied to the facts, there is no evidence of it proper to be submitted to the jury," in the exercise of the judge's general power to direct a verdict for the defendant where the whole evidence is not sufficient to go to the jury.

It must be understood that this rule-of-thumb may not always be applicable on the facts; that it is due merely to a peculiar situation in actions for malpractice; and that it is merely a special application of the judge's general power to pass upon the sufficiency of evidence. There is not and ought not to be any general rule, for actions in general, requiring expert testimony, so far as the topic permits of testimony from persons not so qualified.

(b) The other exceptional rule applies to an issue on which lay testimony is indeed admissible (ante, §§ 568, 1934), but has shown itself in the past to supra, followed; "there is no other guide" than the "evidence of medical men"); 1918, Inglis v. Morton, 99 Wash. 570, 169 Pac. 962 ("It may be conceded that in malpractice cases the case is made by the nature of the testimony and not by the profession or calling of the witnesses"; but here the trial judge's action in taking the issue from the jury for lack of expert testimony was sustained); 1918, Swanson v. Hood, 99 Wash. 506, 170 Pac. 135 (malpractice; argument that the case "is to be determined upon expert testimony alone," repudiated); 1922, Cornwell v. Sleicher, — Wash. —, 205 Pac. 1059 (malpractice; "evidence by a person skilled in surgery," held not indispensable); Wisconsin: 1885, Quinn v. Higgins, 66 Wis. 664, 24 N. W. 482 (leg-fracture; the question of a surgeon's negligence "must be determined mainly upon expert evidence"); 1896, Wurdemann v. Barnes, 92 Wis. 206, 66 N. W. 111 (ear-and-eye injury; no medical witness being called by plaintiff, the evidence was held insufficient); 1920, Krueger v. Chase, 172 Wis. 163, 177 N. W. 510 (dental anæsthetic; verdict for plaintiff set aside because the expert testimony was not given effect).

be inadequate and capable of leading to gross error, viz., the issue of insanity as a ground for committal to a place of restraint.

The confinement of the insane in asylums both private and public was for a long time attended with abuses, chief among which was the constant possibility of dreadful injustice by the incarceration of a sane person, either through error or through sinister design of relatives. As early as the eighteenth century a proposal was made in Parliament,[2] as a part of a bill for regulating madhouses, to require the testimony of physicians to be adduced upon any hearing for committal. But it was nearly a century later before radical measures were taken to remove thoroughly the shortcomings of the administrative law; these measures followed an agitation fomented by the novelist Charles Reade, that heroic breaker-of-lances against oppression and injustice.[3]

In the United States, the same movement led to similar measures. It is now virtually the universal rule (by statute) that on a proceeding to commit a person to restraint as mentally deranged or defective, the testimony of two physicians must be adduced.[4] The details vary in the different States;

[2] Hansard's Parliamentary History, XVII, 837 (April 22, 1773; on the second reading, the mover, Mr. Townsend, said: "I have proposed in the bill, Sir, that no person should be received into these houses without being examined by persons appointed by the College of Physicians").

[3] Charles Reade, Hard Cash (1863); Memoir of Charles Reade, by C. L. and C. Reade, pp. 357, 304, 314 (1887).

[4] CANADA: Dominion: R. S. 1906, c. 136, § 12 (committal of a leper to a lazaretto; two duly qualified and practising physicians, or a medical officer of a lazaretto, must certify); 1918, R. v. Keirstead, 42 D. L. R. 193, N. B. (murder; plea, insanity; held that the crown was not bound to call Dr. A., superintendent of the Provincial hospital for mental diseases); Newfoundland: Consol. St. 1916, c. 114, § 27 (committal of insane; "a certificate signed by two medical practitioners" must be produced at the inquiry). The following statute is peculiar: Saskatchewan: R. S. 1920, c. 193, § 4, St. 1921–22, c. 6, § 15 (committal of lunatics and mental defectives; the evidence must include "if possible, the evidence of two non-professional persons acquainted with the facts").

UNITED STATES: Alabama: Code 1907, § 859 (committal of insane; the judge "shall examine witnesses, at least one of whom shall be a physician"); § 7180 (accused appearing to be insane; the judge must "call a respectable physician and other credible witnesses"); Alaska: Comp. L. 1913, § 831 (committal of insane; examination and testimony by physician or surgeon required, "in case there is a physician or surgeon in the vicinity who can be procured"); Arkansas: Dig. 1919, § 9404 (committal of insane; the judge in addition to other testimony "shall cause such insane person to be examined by two reputable, competent, and disinterested physicians, such examination to be made at different times and places separately"); California: Pol. C. 1872, § 2169 (on proceedings of committal for insanity, the court must secure "at least two medical examiners, who must hear the testimony of all witnesses, make a personal examination of the alleged insane person, and testify before the judge" etc.; the Court must also call "any other person whom he has reason to believe has any knowledge" etc.); Colorado: Comp. L. 1921, §§ 550, 559 (committal of insane; county lunacy commissioners shall consist of two licensed physicians; if the county has not enough physicians, one shall be appointed from elsewhere); § 565 (discharge; two reputable physicians shall be appointed to report); Connecticut: Gen. St. 1918, § 1658 (for committal of insane, "two reputable physicians," qualified as further defined, must testify to insanity); Florida: Rev. G. S. 1919, § 3809 (in proceedings for relinquishment of dower of insane married women, "such witnesses shall consist of not less than two practicing physicians and three other credible witnesses who shall be personally acquainted with said woman"); § 2309 (committal of insane; Court appoints a committee, consisting of one "intelligent citizen" and "two practising physicians of good professional standing," etc.); Georgia: Rev. C. 1910, § 3092 (guardianship of lunatics, etc.; the jurors must include a physician); St. 1915, Aug. 14, No. 192, and Civ. C. 1910, § 3092 (committal of the insane; jury must include a physician); Idaho: Comp. St. 1919, §§ 1177, and sometimes the medical experts sit as assessors with the judge; but the principle is the same, and is unquestionably sound. Even with this precau-

1178 (commitment of insane; judge must summon "two or more witnesses best acquainted with such insane person" and "at least one graduate in medicine"); §§ 1219, 1220 (similar for commitment of feeble-minded or epileptic); Indiana: Burns Ann. St. 1914, § 3694 (committal of insane; "two reputable practicing physicians," residing in the county, must examine the person); Iowa: Comp. C. 1919, § 2059; Kansas: Gen. St. 1915, §§ 9597, 9600 (on application containing the names of two witnesses, judge must designate a physician to report; if no jury is had, judge must appoint "a commission of two qualified physicians in regular and active practice," to make a personal examination and report); Kentucky: Stats. 1915, § 2157 (committal of insane; the person charged must be present in court, unless two regular practising physicians make oath that he is of unsound mind, etc.); Louisiana: St. 1910, No. 253, § 1 (committal of insane; judge must summon two licensed and reputable physicians, one of whom is the coroner, etc., to sit with him as a commission); Maine: Rev. St. 1916, c. 145, § 18 (commitment to insane hospital; "the evidence of at least two respectable physicians . . . shall be required"); Massachusetts: Gen. L. 1920, c. 123, §§ 51, 62, 115 (committal of insane or of defective delinquent; certificate of insanity by "two properly qualified physicians," required); c. 201, § 6 (appointment of guardian for insane; "the Court may require additional medical testimony"); Michigan: Comp. L. 1915, § 1324 (committal to asylum as insane must be on certificate of insanity made by "two reputable physicians," appointed by probate court); § 1343 (similar, for order of discharge as sane); § 1424 (similar, for committal as insane of person charged with certain crimes); § 1546 (similar for committal of feeble-minded, etc., to asylum); § 1601 (similar for committal of epileptics, but here only "one or more competent and disinterested physicians" is required); Minnesota: Gen. St. 1913, § 4086 (committal for mental disease; judge appoints a board of three physicians, who determine); § 4114 (committal of inebriates; judge appoints a board of "two reputable persons," one a physician, who with him determine); § 7467 (similar, for committal of insane); St. 1917, c. 344, § 6 (committal of feeble-minded, inebriate, and insane; judge may appoint two physicians who with him form the board; and the board may appoint as adviser "some person skilled in mental diagnosis"); Mississippi: St. 1920, Apr. 3, c. 210, § 18 (committal to State colony for feeble-minded; certificate of two physicians necessary); Missouri: Rev. St. 1919, § 12289 (committal to State insane hospital; "at least one of the witnesses examined shall be a reputable physician"); Montana: Rev. C. 1921, § 1433 (committal of insane; "at least two graduates of medicine" must be examined); Nebraska: Rev. St. 1921, § 6905 (committal of insane; county commissioners of insanity "shall appoint some regular practicing physician of the County to visit or see such person and make a personal examination," etc.); Nevada: Rev. L. 1912, § 2204 (committal of insane; "one or more licensed practicing physicians" must also be summoned to examine the party); § 2211 (same, for idiots and feeble-minded); St. 1913, Mar. 25, p. 348 (like provision, but repealing the foregoing); New Hampshire: Pub. St. 1891, c. 10, § 18, St. 1895, c. 14 (committal to asylum must be on certificate or testimony of "two reputable physicians"); New Jersey: Comp. St. 1910, Idiots, etc., §§ 3*b*, 3*i* (committal to asylum; two physicians required, for certain purposes); Lunatic Asylums, §§ 117, 125 (similar, with elaborate detail); New Mexico: Annot. St. 1915, § 5099 (on an issue of commitment of an insane person to an asylum, the judge "must issue subpœnas to two or more witnesses best acquainted with said person, to appear and testify"; also a subpœna "for at least one graduate of medicine"); New York: Cons. L. 1909, Insanity, §§ 80, 81 (committal of insane; judge's order must be based on certificate by "two qualified medical examiners in lunacy," as defined); St. 1919, c. 633, being Cons. L. 1909, c. 71, Mental Deficiency, § 24 (committal of mental defectives; order shall be made "only upon a certificate of mental defect made by two qualified examiners"); § 25 (committal for examination; "the examination . . . must be made by two competent physicians, or a competent physician and psychologist, duly qualified as required by § 25 of this Chapter"); North Carolina: Con. St. 1919, § 6192 (committal of insane; clerk of court shall call in the county physician, or "some other licensed and reputable physician"; "he shall take the testimony of at least one licensed physician," etc.); North Dakota: St. 1915, Mar. 8, c. 121 (amending Comp. L. § 4380; insanity as ground for divorce; three specialists in mental diseases must first examine the party, "all of whom shall agree that such insane person is incurable"); Ohio: Gen. Code Ann. 1921, §§ 1954, 1956 (committal of insane; judge shall subpœna witnesses "two of whom shall be reputable physicians," not related to the party, etc.); Oklahoma: St. 1917, c. 174, Mar. 26, §§ 11, 12 (committal of insane; the judge "shall appoint two reputable physicians" to examine the person, and their certificate must first be filed); Oregon: Laws 1920, § 2838 (committal of insane; "one or more competent physicians" shall examine the person); Pennsylvania: St. 1905, Apr. 18, Dig. 1920, § 1994

tion, it is to be feared that judges too often rely perfunctorily on the formal certificates of the medical experts.

§ 2091. Miscellaneous Proposals as to requiring Testimonial Evidence for Wills, Contracts, etc. (1) It has been at least once decided that the proof of the contents of a lost will must include the testimony of an eye-witness, i. e. one who has read it;[1] but this ruling seems to stand alone.

(2) For some issues, official certificates, or other official testimony, is required to be called; but these are Preferential rules (ante, §§ 1335–1356).

(3) There is for some kinds of documents a rule that certain sorts of testimonial evidence shall be preferred to others in proving a copy; but these are Preferential rules (ante, § 1267).

(4) The question of substantive law whether a promise to marry suffices if made by implication in conduct, and not expressly in words (a question generally answered in the affirmative), has sometimes been discussed as if it involved the question whether testimonial evidence was necessary and circumstantial evidence insufficient;[2] but this is merely a case of the misuse of evidential terms.

(5) For a nuncupative will some statutes require that the proof must include a writing of some sort, made seasonably after the testamentary act by the witnesses (ante, § 2050).

§ 2092. Contracts to Require Specific Kinds of Witnesses (Insurance Policies; Construction Contracts, etc.). It is common, in a few classes of transac-

(divorce for insanity; "the question of lunacy shall be fully established by expert testimony"); St. 1913, June 12, § 13, Dig. § 10653 (committal of feeble-minded; there must be a certificate under oath of a reputable physician, etc.); Rhode Island: Gen. L. 1909, c. 96, § 1 (committal of insane; certificate or testimony of two practising physicians required); South Carolina: Civ. C. 1922, § 5304 (commitment to State hospital for insane; probate judge may summon "two duly licensed physicians," who must agree in their certificate); § 5348 (State training-school for feeble-minded; on hearing for commitment, the Court shall appoint a commission of "two qualified physicians, or one qualified physician and one qualified psychologist," to be residents, etc.); South Dakota: Rev. C. 1919, § 10071 (committal to insane hospital; "the board . . . shall appoint some regular practicing physician . . . to report to it thereon"); Tennessee: Shannon's Code 1916, § 2617 (committal of insane; statement of "at least one reputable physician," necessary); § 2677a7 (another mode; certificate by "two reputable physicians," etc.); Texas: Rev. Civ. St. 1911, § 152 (committal to asylum; judge must appoint a commission of six, one or more of whom must be a physician, according to locality); Utah: Comp. St. 1917, § 5402 (insanity committal; Court shall summon "two practicing physicians," who shall examine the person, etc.); Virginia: Code 1919, § 1017 (committal of insane, etc.; judge and two physicians shall constitute a commission, the physicians to make personal examination); § 1032 (certificate of two physicians, sufficient, without an order of the judge); Washington: R. & B. Code, 1909, § 5953 (committal of insane; judge must summon "two or more witnesses," to testify, "and shall also cause to appear . . . two reputable physicians," who act as jury); West Virginia: Code 1914, c. 55, § 5, as amended by St. 1915, c. 51 (committal of insane; commissioners shall include among the witnesses "two reputable physicians" etc.); § 9 (committal of lunatics; the justice shall "summon a physician and any other witnesses"); Wisconsin: Stats. 1919, § 51.01 (commitment of insane; judge shall appoint "two disinterested physicians to examine and report").

§ 2091. [1] 1847, Chisholm v. Ben, 7 B. Monr. Ky. 408, 412 (contents and execution not sufficiently proved; there must be some testimony by persons who have seen the will; testator's declarations alone not enough).

Distinguish the rules as to the qualifications of a witness to the contents (ante, § 1278), the preference for a copy (ante, § 1267), and the completeness of the terms as proved (post, § 2106); there is no rule requiring two witnesses to contents (ante, § 2052).

[2] E. g. in Honyman v. Campbell, 2 Dow & Cl. 282.

tions, to require that in case of controversy arising, the evidence shall include the testimony of a specified kind of witness. This requirement is based on experience in such cases, as viewed from the standpoint of the party making the requirement for the protection of his interest. The principal question here is only the contractual validity of such a clause; this has been considered ante, § 7*a*.

The most common instances are the requirements of an eye-witness to injury or death in a policy of insurance against death or accident; of an architect's certificate of work done under a construction contract; and of an arbitrator's award in a contract of arbitration.

§ 2093. Statute of Frauds; Written Admission of the Party to be charged. Under this head — i. e. as a Synthetic rule — falls the requirement of the Fourth and the Seventeenth Sections of the Statute of Frauds and Perjuries that no action shall be maintainable upon certain kinds of contracts unless there be "some note or memorandum in writing of the said bargain" "signed by the parties to be charged." The effect of these provisions is not to require the contract to be constituted in and by the writing, but to declare that, on a trial for its enforcement, the evidence shall be insufficient, no matter what it may amount to, unless it includes "the admission in writing of the party to be charged." [1]

The application of the rules of the Statute is impossible and unnecessary to be followed in this work. But it may be observed that its evidential policy is sound:

1828, Best, C. J., in Strother v. Barr, 5 Bing. 136, 151: "I seldom pass a day in a Nisi Prius Court without wishing that there had been some written statement evidentiary of the matters in dispute. More actions have arisen, perhaps, from want of attention and observation at the time of a transaction, from the inperfection of human memory, and from witnesses being too ignorant, too much under the influence of prejudice, to give a true account of it, than from any other cause. There is often a great difficulty in getting at the truth by means of parol testimony." [2]

The requirements of the remaining Sections of the Statute are distinct in theory; they make the writing a constitutive formality of the act; the transaction shall be "utterly void" if not "in writing." In this aspect their place in the law is elsewhere briefly examined (post, §§ 2454–2455).

§ 2093. [1] 1895, Browne, Statute of Frauds, 5th ed., § 354*a*; and the further exposition in this treatise, post, § 2454.

In a few States, the statute additionally provides that, apart from a signed memorandum, the party's testimony will suffice to establish the contract: Iowa, Code 1919, § 4628. This is construed to mean that the party's testimony must in itself suffice completely for the purpose, and can neither be corroborated nor contradicted: 1920, Quaker Oats Co. v. Kidman, 189 Ia. 695, 179 N. W. 128 (collecting prior cases).

[2] The radical difference of proportion, in the part played by this rule, between the Continental law and our own, is emphasized in Mr. Bodington's essay on The French Law of Evidence (1904).

TITLE V (continued): SYNTHETIC RULES

SUB-TITLE III: VERBAL COMPLETENESS

CHAPTER LXXI.

§ 2094. General Principle: Verbal Utterances must be taken as a Whole, not by Fragments or by Summary. A. When an ordinary act or occurrence is testified to — as, a collision on the highway or an affray in a room, — the witness relates whatever circumstances are deemed useful by the party offering him, and then rests. There is no rule specifying how much of the entire happening, or how many particulars in the sequence of events, must be placed before the tribunal by him as a condition precedent to his relating anything at all. There is no need of such a rule, and for several reasons:

First, the remainder of the relevant facts known to the witness may be fully brought out upon cross-examination; this is, indeed, one of the chief functions and utilities of the process of cross-examination (ante, §§ 1361, 1368). Secondly, a single witness is seldom acquainted with the entire sequence of events or of conduct, and it would therefore be impracticable to reject any one witness because he cannot recount the whole. Thirdly, a rule requiring the party to offer the whole of the occurrences through the several witnesses who together could testify about the whole would be unduly exigent, because presumably the opponent is equally well acquainted with the possible sources of testimony and can equally well call such witnesses to supplying missing material circumstances. Finally, matters of conduct and external event are seldom so inseparably united that any one act or occurrence would by itself be wholly misleading, and therefore could seldom need to be compared with other acts and occurrences to arrive at a true comprehension of the sense of the former; the whole, to be sure, will need to be known, but each event has in itself usually a clear and unchangeable significance. For example, on a charge of larceny of a horse, one witness testifies to having seen the defendant driving the horse on a certain day at a certain street corner. Here, whatever else significant there was at that time and place, as observed by the witness, can be ascertained on cross-examination; again, it would be absurd to require that this one witness, who happened to see merely this one act, should testify to all the rest of the defendant's conduct, as a condition of testifying at all; furthermore, it would be equally unfair to require the prosecution through other witnesses to cover the entire matter of the defendant's conduct or of the horse's fate since the date of the taking; and, finally, nothing is lost by not so doing, because the fact (if believed to be so) of the defendant's possession of the horse at the time and place stated remains absolute and unchangeable, no matter what innocent explanation the defendant may subsequently give; the inferences to be drawn from his possession may be changed, but, whether it appears that he had bought or had borrowed the horse or had taken him by mistake or had stolen him, the possession at that place and time remains as a constant fact and has suffered no change in the course of the later testimony.

In general, then, looking at the usual character and practical bearings of conduct and events not involving verbal[1] utterances, there is for such facts no need and no opportunity for a rule requiring the whole of the deed or the occurrence to be offered or taken together.[2]

§ 2094. [1] "Verbal" is here used in its proper sense of "consisting in words," whether spoken or written. "Oral" signifies "consisting in speech," and not written or printed. Unless these two terms are kept distinct, scientific discussion is impossible.

B. But where words are the object of proof, the conditions are decidedly otherwise. Verbal[3] utterances are attempts to express ideas in words. The more complicated the idea, the more elaborate is the structure of the verbal utterance. A simple life, reduced to its lowest terms, may be lived in a dwelling of one room; but a 'fin-de-siècle' existence, with all its appurtenant needs, conveniences, luxuries, and follies, demands a complex mansion with scores of apartments, countless petty fittings, and a huge estate of many departments. The rural weekly newspaper and the metropolitan daily journal represent, in their contrast between brief simplicity and voluminous detail, the contrasts of life in country and city. So with any utterance of any thought; the complexity of the latter produces elaboration in the former. It follows that the thought as a whole, and as it actually existed, cannot be ascertained without taking the utterance as a whole and comparing the successive elements and their mutual relations. To look at a part alone would be to obtain a false notion of the thought. The total — that is to say, the real — meaning can be got at only by going on to the end of the utterance. One part cannot be separated and taken by itself without doing injustice, by producing misrepresentation.

I. Now the causes of an incomplete reproduction of a verbal[3] utterance, in making proof in court, are diverse, and thus lead to diverse expedients to cure them. For example, where a written utterance is produced, all the words are then and there before the tribunal, and the only source of incompleteness would be the party's failure to read or to show the whole; the remedy for this — to compel complete reading or exhibition — is simple, and lies ready at hand (post, § 2102). If, however, the original cannot be brought into court, but is available — as, a public record — for taking a copy, or if it is a lost private document but a copy has been preserved, the remedy lies in requiring the use of the copy (post, §§ 2105, 2108).

But if the document is lost and no copy exists, or if the utterance was originally oral and was not reduced to writing at the time, there is no source of reproducing it except the memory of those who saw or heard it. Here the question becomes a serious one whether we are to be satisfied with as much as can be remembered of it, or whether none is to be listened to because of the risk of obtaining only an imperfect and perhaps misleading account. The law has solved this problem by declaring that the substance shall suffice, even if verbal[3] precision and minor portions are sacrificed (post, §§ 2097, 2099, 2105). A contrary rule would no doubt be unendurable, and the risk of error must be incurred in preference to the certainty of hardship which would otherwise ensue. Nevertheless, the great possibilities of error in trusting to recollection-

[2] It is true that the Michigan rule about calling all the eye-witnesses of a crime (ante, § 2079) was originally based on the suggestion of some such principle as the above; but no such doctrine has been advanced elsewhere.

[3] See note 1, supra.

testimony of oral utterances, supposed to have been heard, have never been ignored; but an antidote is constantly given by an instruction to the jury against trusting overmuch to the accuracy of such testimony. In the following passage, the typical warning is well phrased; here, as usually, it is applied specifically to proof of oral admissions or confessions of a party, because these are the commonest in practice; but the general warning applies to all oral utterances: [4]

1833, Earle v. Picken, 5 C. & P. 542: "In the course of this circuit, Mr. Justice PARKE several times observed that too great weight ought not to be attached to evidence of what a party has been supposed to have said, as it very frequently happens, not only that the witness has misunderstood what the party has said, but that by unintentionally altering a few of the expressions really used, he gives an effect to the statement completely at variance with what the party really did say."

1866, REDFIELD, C. J., Note to Greenleaf on Evidence, 12th ed., § 200: "In a somewhat extended experience of jury trials we have been compelled to the conclusion that the most unreliable of all evidence is that of the oral admissions of the party. And especially where they purport to have been made during the pendency of the action, or after the parties were in a state of controversy. It is not uncommon for different witnesses of the same conversation to give precisely opposite accounts of them; and in some instances it will appear that the witness deposes to the statement of one party as coming from the other; and it is not very uncommon to find a witness of the best intentions repeating the declarations of the party in his own favor as the fullest admissions of the utter falsity of his claims. When we reflect upon the inaccuracy of many witnesses in their original comprehension of a conversation, their extreme liability to mingle subsequent facts and occurrences with the original transactions, and the impossibility of recollecting the precise terms used by the party, or of translating them by exact equivalents, we must conclude that there is no substantial reliance upon this class of testimony."

1875, NEILSON, J., in Tilton v. Beecher, Abbott's Rep. II, 837 (on the above quotations being cited to him): "When you and I were boys, we found that general principle cited in all the text-books very much after the form that you have put it. . . . Perhaps the best statement of that has been given in Starkie on Evidence, to the effect that this kind of testimony is dangerous, first, because it may be misapprehended by the person who hears it; secondly, it may not be well-remembered; thirdly, it may not be correctly repeated."

Such, then, are the sources of incompleteness, and the appropriate remedies which they suggest.[5]

II. As to the forms in which the incompleteness may appear, they are reducible to two, namely, lack of verbal precision and lack of entirety of parts. Upon this distinction will depend many of the rules applying the general

[4] So also: 1808, Trimble, J., in Myers v. Baker, Hardin Ky. 544, 549; 1830, Walworth, M. C., in Law v. Merrills, 6 Wend. N. Y. 268, 277; 1921, Kimball, J., in Hoge v. George, 27 Wyo. 423, 200 Pac. 96.

As to the giving of an instruction on this point, there is much useless learning: 1903, People v. Wardrip, 141 Cal. 233, 74 Pac. 744 (under C. C. P. § 2061); 1904, People v. Buckley, 143 Cal. 375, 77 Pac. 169; 1904, People v. Moran, 144 Cal. 48, 77 Pac. 777; 1904, People v. Ruiz, 144 Cal. 251, 77 Pac. 907; 1905, Castner v. Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co., 126 Ia. 581, 102 N. W. 499; 1905, Rosenwald v. Middlebrook, 188 Mo. 58, 86 S. W. 200; 1904, Thompson v. Purdy, 45 Or. 197, 77 Pac. 113, 83 Pac. 139; 1906, State v. Hutchings, 30 Utah 319, 84 Pac. 893; 1905, Grotjan v. Rice, 124 Wis. 253, 102 N. W. 551.

[5] For a further consideration of the grounds of distrust as affecting an accused's confession, see ante, § 866.

principle (post, §§ 2097, 2099), because the defect to be cured may exist in only one of these forms without the other; and their difference may properly be illustrated at the outset:

(1) Verbal[6] precision is of course important to the correct understanding of any verbal utterance, whether written or oral, because the presence or absence or change of a single word may substantially alter the true meaning of even the shortest sentence. The fact is undoubted; although the law cannot deter tribunals from accepting the best precision that is obtainable merely because of the inherent possibilities of vital error on individual words. The following illustrations will serve to show something of the part this danger has played in judicial annals:

1824, Mr. Thomas Starkie, Evidence, 7th Am. ed., II, 549: "Of all kinds of evidence, that of extrajudicial and casual observations is the weakest and most unsatisfactory. Such words are often spoken without serious intention, and they are always liable to be mistaken and misremembered, and their meaning is apt to be misrepresented and exaggerated. I once heard a learned judge (now no more), in summing up on a trial for forgery, inform the jury that the prisoner, in a conversation which he had had with one of the witnesses, had said, 'I am the drawer, the acceptor, and the indorser of the bill.' Whilst the learned judge was commenting on the force of these expressions, he was, at the instance of the prisoner, set right as to the statement of the witness, which was that the prisoner had said, 'I know the drawer, the acceptor, and the indorser of the bill.' Had the witness, and not the judge, made the mistake, the consequences might have been fatal. The prisoner was acquitted."

1875, Tilton v. Beecher, Abbott's Rep. II, 305, 307, 815; the plaintiff, in his action for criminal conversation, was confronted with a public statement of his, in which he had printed certain of the evidence in his possession as to the defendant's adultery with his wife; a part of this consisted of passages from letters to him from his wife, showing her consciousness of the temptations of the defendant, her original resistance, and her subsequent yielding; one of these extracts as printed was: "To love is praiseworthy, but to abuse the gift is sin. Here I am strong. No demonstrations or fascinations could cause me to yield my womanhood." The defence showed that the original passage read: "I have been thinking, my darling, that, knowing as you do your immense power over an audience to move them as you will, — that same power you have with all public men, over any woman whom you may love — to love is praiseworthy, but to abuse your gift of influence is sin; therefore I would fain help restore to you that which I broke down, — self-respect. Your manhood and its purity and dignity, if you feel it, is stronger than even love itself. I know this; because here I am strong. No demonstrations or fascinations could cause me to yield my womanhood." The defence claimed that this letter was written just after a mutual explanation in which he had confessed to her that he had gone too far in his relations with women-friends, and in which she had received his expressions of contrition, forgiven him, and sought to restore his sense of self-respect; so that the extract quoted was made, by the omission of the words above italicized, to refer to her temptations, when in fact it referred to his own; Mr. Tracy, for the defendant, thus arguing: "This is the letter, gentlemen, which was so marvelously garbled by the plaintiff in the early part of this controversy before the church, — so garbled as to put upon the wife an imputation that she herself was tempted, and was likely to fall, and was resisting her own temptation. He made it read, as you remember, speaking of herself: 'To love is praiseworthy, but to abuse the gift is sin. Here I am strong. No temptation could induce me,' etc." But when you get at this letter and read the whole of it, you see that she is speaking of him, and the abuse of his influence over women, and she is remonstrating with him against that abuse."

[6] See note 1, supra.

1909, Trial of Professor Foster for Heresy (Chicago Record-Herald, June 8, 1909). Dr. Wm. Matthews, a zealous religionist, believing that Professor Foster, of the Theological Faculty of the University of Chicago, had published heretical doctrine, advanced charges of heresy before an ecclesiastical Conference held in Chicago. The critic in his address quoted many passages from the accused's writings, and commented on them; and the following incident here occurred:

Dr. Matthews, after quoting Professor Foster as stating in his book that "he who calls himself a Bible believer is a knave," declared with great earnestness: "If that be so, thank God I am one."

"Does Professor Foster say that?" interrupted Professor Parker.

"Yes, sir," declared Dr. Matthews.

"On what page?" demanded Professor Parker.

"Page 282," was the reply.

"How do you spell the word 'knave'?" was the next question.

"K-n-a-v-e," spelled Dr. Matthews.

"If you will turn to the passage you refer to on page 282 of Professor Foster's book," returned Professor Parker, pointing to it in an open copy of the book which he held in his hand, "you will find that it reads: 'He who calls himself a Bible believer is a naive,' meaning a simple, untutored person, not a scoundrel, as one would be led to believe from your interpretation."

Dr. Matthews thanked the professor for his correction, but was visibly embarrassed by his error.

(2) Entirety of parts is equally essential to the correct understanding of an utterance. A word is interpretable in the light of the use of the same word in another part; a clause is modified by a prior or subsequent clause; one sentence qualifies another; and one paragraph may form only a part of the whole exposition. We must compare the whole, not because we desire the remainder for its own sake, but because without it we cannot be sure that we have the true sense and effect of the first part. Entirety of parts is thus as essential as verbal precision; for the greatest possibilities of error lie in trusting to a fragment of an utterance without knowing what the remainder was. Apparent as this is to all, the following illustrations emphasize its truth in judicial annals:

1683, Algernon Sidney's Trial, 9 How. St. Tr. 817, 829, 868; seditious libel. Mr. Williams, his counsel, had instructed him: "In the evidence against you for your writing, take care that all that was writt by you on that subject be produced, and that it be not given in evidence against you by pieces, which must invert your sense"; on the trial, one of the passages read against Sidney from his manuscript was: "The general revolt of a nation from its own magistrates can never be called rebellion." Sidney, arguing against using these passages piecemeal, said: "My lord, if you will take Scripture by pieces, you will make all the penmen of Scripture blasphemous. You may accuse David of saying, 'There is no God,' and accuse the Evangelists of saying, 'Christ was a blasphemer and a seducer,' and the Apostles, that they were drunk." L. C. J. JEFFRIES: "Look you, Mr. Sidney; if there be any part of it that explains the sense of it, you shall have it read. Indeed, we are trifled with a little. It is true, in Scripture it is said, 'There is no God'; and you must not take that alone, but you must say, 'The fool hath said in his heart, There is no God.' Now here is a thing imputed to you in the libel; if you can say there is any part that is in excuse of it, call for it." [7]

1888, Parnell Commission's Proceedings, 85th day, Times' Rep. pt. 23, p. 227; the Land League and its leaders were charged with encouraging crime and outrage, by speech and action; Mr. T. D. Sullivan was cross-examined as to speeches of his which seemed to encourage crime. Q. "Now I will call your attention to a speech of yours at Kilbrennon on the 18th of October, 1880. (Reading.) 'We will so organize the Irish counties that they will want extra police in every county in Ireland.' How would you make it necessary to have extra police force; by crime, or not by crime?" A. "By no crime; by an extension of the National organization to those counties." . . . Q. "Will you explain what you mean by the words 'they will want extra police in every county'?" A. "Please read the other portion of my speech." President Hannen: "I am bound to say that I think that that requires explanation; but the witness asks that the context should be read." Mr. Murphy (reading): "'Against that accursed system the people are rising in peaceful revolt, and it is high time that they should do so; and I tell you that that peaceful revolt of theirs cannot be put down if the people prove true to each other. . . . A few days ago there was issued from Dublin Castle a circular announcing that an increased force of constabulary would be sent to the counties of Galway and Mayo, and the increased charges of these constabulary, it is said, will be put on the people. I will tell you what to do with those increased charges. The people are already paying as much as they can pay, and a great deal more than they ought to pay, and if this increased charge or increased rate is put on the tenantry in any part of Ireland, I tell them to go and stop it out of their rent. Let them tell the landlord that this increased police rate exceeds their power to meet or discharge, that they have no way under heaven of paying it unless by stopping it out of their rents. But once the landlords find out that you are on the track, you will see how soon they will manage to do without this extra force. . . . I tell you that for the working out of your cause no outrages on your part are necessary or desirable. If you spread through your county, and if there is spread through all Ireland, this organization I speak of, it will be more powerful than any amount of terrorism or outrage that could be committed in any one corner of the land.'" Witness: "My meaning is practically plain; that extra police force were sent to that part of the country for the suppression of a legal and righteous agitation, and the extent of that legal and righteous agitation in other parts of the country would put a burden upon the landlords in Dublin Castle which they would not like to bear." President Hannen: "I think I see the witness's meaning; his explanation is that the Government would suppress their agitation, though a legal one, and by extending the organization they would make it necessary for the Government to employ more police in suppressing what he regards as a legal organization." [8]

[7] Scripture passages are sometimes in danger from this rule, as the following anecdote shows: "J. T. Trowbridge, the aged author, is writing his autobiography at his home in Arlington, Mass. Mr. Trowbridge was born in Ogden, N. Y. The other day he said: 'I went to school at Lockport in my boyhood, and there was a Lockport stonecutter whom I used to like to talk to, for he had a mind as simple as a child's. I remember a job that he once undertook — the job of cutting a sentence from Scripture over the door of a little stone church. The committeemen who intrusted him with this job did not comprehend his childlike, unreflecting nature, or they would not have couched their order in the terms they did. They wanted the sentence: "My house shall be called a house of prayer." He told them they had better write it down for him. But they said it would only be necessary to write down the chapter and verse, and he could copy the sentence right out of the good book. Well, our Lockport stonecutter copied the sentence, but he did not end where he should have ended. He went right on to the sentence's conclusion. The result was that the legend over the church door read: "My house shall be called a house of prayer; but ye have made it a den of thieves." ' " (Chicago Record-Herald, Aug. 23, 1903.)

[8] Even better, if that were possible, than Sidney's celebrated illustration, is the following anecdote; 'se non è vero, è ben trovato': "One evening there was arrested in the city an old gentleman of position and cheery habits. The policeman said he had found the old gentleman on the street very drunk. The complaint was entered against him, but he was released on

But what is the whole of the utterance? No doubt this principle of entirety is flexible in its application. A simple thought requires but a simple utterance; a complex thought, a complicated utterance. When, therefore, we obey the canon that the whole of the utterance must be considered, the scope of our survey may be very variable, so far as concerns the mere number of words, sentences, or paragraphs. The whole that is to be considered is obviously not the whole of a phrase or a paragraph, any more than it is the whole of the printer's line or page, but the whole of the thought, — that is, such a quantity of utterance as the utterer has indicated to be distinct and entire in itself, for the purpose of representing a distinct thought. If this dividing line can be ascertained, there is no need of looking beyond it. A cry for "help!" is entire in a single exclamation. A local railroad-passage contract is entire upon a small piece of pasteboard. But a treatise in defence of usury will require a perusal of several chapters to discover the entire thesis. Thus the possibilities are infinite and the boundaries indefinite, in this search for entirety of utterance. It will be difficult for the law, in applying the principle, to employ any fixed test. Yet the law cannot be expected to be satisfied practically with the indefiniteness which in theory the conception of entirety involves; and therefore the application of it is full of difficulties.

The general principle, then, — which may be termed the principle of Completeness — that the whole of a verbal utterance must be taken together, is accepted in the law of Evidence; for the law in this respect does no more than recognize the dictates of good sense and common experience. There are in the application of it important qualifications and exceptions, but the recognition of the principle, and the reason for it, is unquestionable. It appears clearly conceded and consciously applied as early as the 1600s,[9] and no doubt his recognizance, and sent home in a hack. When his case came up in court, the only witnesses summoned to prove his condition were the policeman and the old family servant of the accused, a faithful and devoted retainer. The policeman had given his testimony to the fact of the old gentleman's intoxication. Then the old servant was called to the stand. He testified flatly, to the surprise of the court room, that the old man was sober when he came home. The prosecuting attorney proceeded to question. 'You say that Mr. —— was sober when he came home?' 'Yes, sir.' 'Did you put him to bed?' 'Yes, sir.' 'And he was perfectly sober?' 'Yes, sir.' 'What did he say when you put him to bed?' 'He said "Good night."' 'Anything else?' 'He said as how I was to call him early.' 'Anything else?' 'Yes, sir.' 'What was it? Tell us exactly what he said, every word.' 'He said as how I was to call and wake him early, for he was to be queen of the May!' The old gentleman was fined."

[9] The following precedents seem to show that the rule, as such, dates definitely from the 1600s: 1571, Newis v. Lark, 2 Plowd. 403, 410 (assize of disseizin; objection "to the manner of giving evidence," that "the whole last will and testament was not shewn, but part of it only; . . . and forasmuch as the last will is the foundation of the evidence, it was said that the plaintiffs ought to shew it fully and entirely as it is, for it may be that there is some other matter of substance precedent, as a condition or other circumstance, limited to all that which comes after, for which reason it was said that the whole ought to be shewn. But all the justices argued to the contrary; for the party in any title or bar or other matter, where land or other thing may be gained or lost, shall not be forced to shew more than that which serves his purpose"; two judges partly dissenting); 1613, Read v. Hide, Coke's Third Institute, 173 ("It was resolved that no exemplification ought to be of any letters patent or of any other record, or of the inrolment thereof; but the whole record or the inrolment thereof ought to be exemplified, so that the whole truth may appear, and not of such part as makes for the one party and nothing that makes against him or that manifesteth the truth").

was implicitly understood long before that period. Nothing turns upon its history as a general principle (though there have been historical changes in specific rules coming under it), because it has had little distinct individuality in judicial practice and has thus had no independent development as a whole. In the following passages, scattered through three centuries, will be found some of the most interesting and instructive expositions of the principle:

Ante 1625, Stukeley v. Butler, Hob. 168, 170: "It is a good rule, 'incivile est, nisi tota sententia perspecta, de aliqua parte judicare' . . . And indeed in one sentence it is vain to imagine one part before another; for though words can neither be spoken nor written at once, yet the mind of the author comprehends them at once, which gives 'vitam et modum' to the sentence."

Circa 1690, Sir John Hawles, Solicitor-General, Remarks on Lord Russell's Trial, 9 How. St. Tr. 809: "How could Sheppard speak positively of the discourse, or of the design of it, when he owns he did not hear all the discourse, and gives a very good reason for it? For he said he went several times down to fetch wine, sugar, and nutmeg, and did not know what was said in his absence: he said he heard nothing about a rising, nor heard any further discourse; but on recollection, he heard something about a declaration of grievances in order to a rising, as he supposed; the particulars he could not tell. Now what sort of evidence was that? In all civil matters, a witness shall not be permitted to give evidence of the content of a deed or writing, without producing the deed or writing itself, or a true copy of it, and upon very good reason; for he may make an untrue construction of it. I remember a witness who swore to the content of a deed of intail; and being asked, whether he knew a deed of intail, and by what he knew the deed he spoke of to be a deed of intail, answered he knew a tailed deed very well, and he knew the deed to be a tailed deed, because it had a tail half as long as his arm (meaning the label of the deed). And if this be the practice and the reason of the practice, in civil matters, shew me any authority or reason anything should be permitted to be given in evidence in treason, which is not permitted to be given in evidence in the trial of any civil matter."

Ante 1767, BULLER, J., Trials at Nisi Prius, 228: "When a man gives in evidence a sworn copy of a record, he must give the copy of the whole record in evidence, for the precedent or subsequent words or sentence may vary the whole sense and import of the thing produced, and give it quite another face."

1789, Mr. Thomas Erskine, for the defence, in Stockdale's Trial, 22 How. St. Tr. 257 (the alleged libel was a pamphlet criticising the prosecution of Warren Hastings as unfair and corrupt, and certain extreme passages were set out in the indictment): "Out of a work consisting of about two thousand five hundred and thirty lines of manly, spirited eloquence, only forty or fifty lines are culled from different parts of it and artfully put together, so as to rear up a libel out of a false context, by a supposed connexion of sentences with one another, which are not only entirely independent, but which, when compared with their antecedents, bear a totally different construction! In this manner the greatest works upon government, the most excellent books of science, the sacred Scriptures themselves, might be distorted into libels, by forsaking the general context and hanging a meaning upon selected parts. Thus, as in the text put by Algernon Sidney, 'The fool has said in his heart, There is no God,' the attorney-general, on the principle of the proceeding against this pamphlet, might indict the publisher of the Bible for blasphemously denying the existence of Heaven, in printing 'There is no God.' These words alone, without the context, would be selected by the information, and the Bible, like this book, would be underscored to meet it. Nor could the defendant in such a case have any possible defence, unless the jury were permitted to see, by the Book itself, that the verse, instead of denying the existence of the Divinity, only imputed that imagination to a fool."

1820, ABBOTT, C. J., in The Queen's Case, 2 B. & B. 287 (for all the judges): "One of the reasons for the rule requiring the production of written instruments is in order that the Court may be possessed of the whole. If the course which is here proposed should be followed [i. e. not producing it] the Court may never be in possession of the whole, though it may happen that the whole if produced may have an effect very different from that which might be produced by a statement of a part."

1823, ABBOTT, C. J., in Thomson v. Austen, 2 Dowl. & R. 361: "It is at all times a dangerous thing to admit a portion only of a conversation in evidence, because one part taken by itself may bear a very different construction and have a very different tendency to what would be produced if the whole were heard; for one part of a conversation will frequently serve to qualify and to explain the other."

1831, CURIA, in Bank v. Brown, Dudley 62, 65: "It is an established rule that the whole of a document or writing offered in evidence must be read, if required. Otherwise there would be no certainty as to the sense and meaning of the entire document. The dangerous tendency of permitting an extract from a letter to be read in evidence is at once obvious; by suppressing a part, the meaning of the writer may be entirely perverted."

1858, MERRICK, J., in Com. v. Keyes, 11 Gray, 323, 324: "It is undoubtedly the general rule that whenever the statements, declarations or admissions of a party are made subjects of proof, all that was said by him at the same time and upon the same subject is admissible in his favor, and the whole should be taken and considered together. This is essential to a complete understanding of what he intended to express by the particular phrases and language which he uses. To give effect to general statements, without regard to the qualifications with which they are accompanied, and by which they may be materially modified, would manifestly lead to error, and be likely to be directly productive of injustice. All therefore is to be heard and weighed before it can be affirmed that the force and effect of language, whether written or spoken, are fully and justly apprehended. In the construction of contracts, the same principle prevails, requiring that each particular part shall be examined and considered, in order to learn and comprehend, the scope and purport of the whole. All writings, whether of a public or private character, are to be subjected to the same kind of scrutiny. No provision of a statute, however minute, is to be overlooked when searching for the design and object of the Legislature in its enactment, and in considering how it ought to be interpreted and explained; just as particular covenants in a deed, or devises in a will, are to be construed according to the intent of the parties in the one case, and of the testator in the other, so far as it can be ascertained by bringing into view all the expressions and provisions contained in these respective instruments."

§ 2095. Two Branches of the Rule; Compulsory and Optional Completeness; Precision and Entirety. (1) The application of the general principle takes, first of all, two distinct aspects having practical consequences; they are represented by the questions, Must the whole be offered? and, May the whole be offered?

I. The first is obviously a question asked by the original proponent of the utterance. He proposes to prove a part of a conversation, a deed, or a record; he is met by the objection that he can offer no part unless he offers the whole; and the question for him is, Must he do this? This is, in practical application, the stricter effect of the principle, and indeed is not enforced invariably or for all classes of utterances.

II. Supposing that a part only is deemed sufficient, the further question then arises, but this time for the opponent, against whom the utterance is offered, namely, May the whole be now put in? Here the principle has naturally a universal application. To arrive at the sense of the utterance as a whole, the remainder of it may now be put in by the opponent. The chief practical question here is, of course, as to the limits to be set to these complementary parts, in order to admit nothing more than what really qualifies the first utterances; for otherwise the rule would become a mere excuse for the intrusion of irrelevancies.

(2) Under the first head, in applying the rule that the whole must be put in (and in theory under the second head also, but not commonly in practice), the principle divides into two sub-principles, which may be termed respectively the principles of Precision and of Entirety (ante, § 2094). The distinction rests on the obvious fact that the incompleteness of a verbal utterance may lie either in using a summary of its effect, without the precise words, or in using a fragment only, verbally precise as far as it goes, but wholly lacking the complementary portion. By the sub-principle of Precision, verbal accuracy of reproduction is required; by the sub-principle of Entirety, the presence of all the parts is required. Either of these may be dispensed with, while requiring the other; and circumstances often make desirable this partial modification of the general principle.

(3) A difference of rule may often turn upon the circumstance that the utterance, when in writing, is produced before the tribunal, availably for direct use in evidence by the opponent, or is not so produced. On the one hand, the requirement of Precision may be impracticable in the latter case, yet plainly feasible in the former. On the other hand, the requirement of Entirety may be dispensed with in the former case, because the opponent has it easily in his power to put in the complementary portions.

(4) Finally, the rules must often, by practical necessity, be different for oral and for written utterances. The former lie in memory only, and overmuch cannot be demanded in the reproduction of words by mere memory. The latter may be copied literally and entirely, or may be produced 'in specie' (ante, § 1179). Hence, less strictness may be shown in applying the principle to the former class of utterances.

An arrangement of rules, in such a way as to exhibit the practical consequences connected with these vital distinctions, while at the same time keeping together the various kinds of utterances (letters, conversations, deeds, records, depositions, and so on) that naturally classify themselves in ordinary usage, seems to be not feasible. But, with a view to clear exposition of principle and also to practical convenience, the following grouping seems most satisfactory:

I. Must the Whole of the Utterance be first offered by the Proponent? A. Oral Utterances; considered with reference to (a) Verbal Precision; and (b) Entirety of Parts. B. Documents; considered according as they are (a) Produced in court; or (b) Lost or destroyed; (c) Public records. II. May the Whole be afterwards offered by the Opponent? (a) General principle; and its application to various kinds of utterances; (b) Application to separate speeches or writings; (c) Application to answers in chancery.

I. MUST THE WHOLE OF THE UTTERANCE BE FIRST OFFERED BY THE PROPONENT?

A. ORAL UTTERANCES

§ 2097. (a) Verbal Precision; General Principle, and its Application to Conversations, Admissions, Confessions, Slanders, and Sundry Utterances. Complete certainty as to an utterance's true meaning can be ascertained only by considering every word in it. The change, omission, or addition of even a single word may radically alter the meaning. But for oral utterances such verbal precision need not and cannot be required. It need not be, for the importance of single words in oral discourse is comparatively much less than in writings; and it cannot be, since memory does not retain precise words, except of simple utterances and for a short time. Hence, verbal precision is in general not required in proving oral utterances; the substance or effect is sufficient:

1836, RICHARDSON, C. J., in Eaton v. Rice, 8 N. H. 380: "It can rarely happen that a witness who was present when a conversation was had between two individuals can at any time afterwards, and particularly at any distant time, state precisely what was said by them, although he may recollect distinctly an agreement made between them at the time. If, then, in all cases the witness is required to state what was said so accurately that the jury may be enabled to judge by the terms used what a contract was, it must frequently happen that a contract not in writing cannot be proved at all. . . . The recollection of a witness as to what an agreement between parties was, according to his understanding of what was said by them at the time, may be very satisfactory evidence, although he may not be able to recollect distinctly one word that was said. . . . . The credit that may be due to a witness in these cases may depend much on his being able to detail enough of the conversation to show that his understanding of the matter was probably right. But what he understood is in all cases evidence to be weighed by the jury."

1883, COOLEY, J., in Bathrick v. Detroit Post & T. Co., 50 Mich. 629, 637, 16 N. W. 172 (dealing with a question as to the plaintiff's admission of carnal intercourse): "It would have been entirely proper to permit the witness to testify that he had conversations in which the criminal intercourse was admitted or assumed, even though he did not remember the words made use of. It is not surprising that a man should remember the substance or the result of a conversation, and yet not be able to recall the words made use of; and it sometimes casts suspicion on the veracity of a witness that he assumes to remember the very words of a conversation, when there was nothing in the case which was likely to impress upon his mind anything beyond the general result. But if a witness fails to remember words when it would seem that he ought to do so, the jury must be relied upon to give due weight to the fact when considering his evidence."

The general rule, universally accepted, is therefore that the substance or effect of the actual words spoken will suffice, the witness stating this substance as best he can from the impression left upon his memory. He may give his "understanding" or "impression" as to the net meaning of the words heard. This rule is applicable to oral utterances in general, — including admissions, conversations (whether as forming contracts or merely as admissions), and the like.[1] It applies also to an accused's confessions,[2] and to seditious utterances;[3] yet it is commonly said that precise proof must be made for defamatory utterances,[4] — though here the rulings under the § 2097. [1] Ill. 1871, Helm v. Cantrell, 59 Ill. 524, 531 ("the witness does not pretend to give either the conversation or the substance of it," but says that C. "fully admitted his liability on the note"; held inadmissible, as an inference); 1879, Hewitt v. Clark, 91 Ill. 608; Me. 1856, Lewis v. Brown, 41 Me. 448, 451 (the witness could not recollect the language of a compromise-agreement, but "understood" from him that he would limit his claim; not excluded, but treated as inconclusive); Md. 1901, Worthington v. State, 92 Md. 222, 48 Atl. 355 (a witness' "impression" as to the substance of a dying declaration; "it was rather the recollection than the impression of the witness which was sought; . . . the law does not require that the very words be repeated"); Mass. 1873, Kittredge v. Russell, 114 Mass. 68; 1903, Hayes v. Pitts-Kimball Co., 183 Mass. 262, 67 N. E. 249 (the exact words of a deceased's statement, admissible under St. 1898, c. 535, are not required); Mich. 1875, Willard v. Fralick, 31 Mich. 435; 1876, Chambers v. Hill, 34 Mich. 523, 524 (title to personalty; that the plaintiff's intestate spoke of it "as the defendant's," allowed; though "the witness should certainly have given the words of the intestate if she could do so"); 1883, Bathrick v. D. P. & T. Co., 50 Mich. 629, 637 (quoted supra); Mo. 1867, Buchanan v. Atkinson, 39 Mo. 504; 1875, Cornet v. Bertelsmann, 61 Mo. 126 (admissible; but of little weight); 1904, McKee v. Higbee, 180 Mo. 263, 79 S. W. 407 (conversations and terms of a lost letter, involving a contract to bequeath, held not sufficiently proved); N. H. 1836, Eaton v. Rice, 8 N. H. 380 (quoted supra); 1841, Maxwell v. Warner, 11 N. H. 569; 1844, Braley v. Braley, 16 N. H. 432; 1864, Kingsbury v. Moses, 45 N. H. 222, 225 ("he may mean to state what the parties in fact or in substance said as he understood them, or merely to give his inferences drawn from what was said; in the former case the testimony would be competent"); N. Y. 1910, People v. Giro, 197 N. Y. 152, 90 N. E. 432; N. Car. 1897, State v. Robertson, 121 N. C. 151, 28 S. E. 59; Or. 1905, Busch v. Robinson, 46 Or. 539, 81 Pac. 237, semble; Vt. 1895, Norton v. Parsons, 67 Vt. 526, 32 Atl. 481; Wis. 1898, Fertig v. State, 100 Wis. 301, 75 N. W. 960 (the substance of the relevant parts, sufficient).

The following distinction is sound, but rests ultimately on the principle of leading questions (ante, § 769): 1897, Chatfield v. Bunnell, 69 Conn. 511, 37 Atl. 1075 (excluding the question whether to A, who heard the defendant talk with B, the defendant said the same as to B; "a witness cannot thus be allowed to testify in gross as to the similarity of separate and distinct conversations with different persons on the same subject").

Compare similar rulings for proof of former testimony, post, § 2098.

For proving the substance of dying declarations, see ante, § 1448.

[2] 1911, Godinho's Case, 7 Cr. App. 12 (not decided; R. v. Sexton, as cited in Roscoe, Criminal Evidence, 13th ed., 39, doubted); 1855, Brister v. State, 26 Ala. 107, 127; 1904, State v. Brinte, 4 Del. 551, 58 Atl. 258 (the questions, to which the confession made answer, need not be included); 1883, State v. Donovan, 61 Ia. 278, 281, 16 N. W. 130 (the witness "could not give the language used by defendant, but could testify only from the impressions received and the ideas formed from the conversations"; held sufficient); 1877, State v. Hughes, 29 La. An. 514; 1895, State v. Madison, 47 La. An. 30, 16 So. 566; 1896, State v. Desroches, 48 La. An. 30, 19 So. 250.

For the rule as to putting in the remainder of the confession, see post, § 2101.

[3] Eng. 1820, R. v. Hunt, 1 State Tr. N. S. 171, 252 (seditious meeting; the sense of the spoken utterances, though not the exact words, allowed); 1821, R. v. Edmonds, ibid. 785, 820 (conspiracy; the substance of words in a speech allowed; L. C. B. Richards: "Am I not to hear in court what a gentleman says of what passes because he cannot give the words?"); 1843, R. v. O'Connell, 5 St. Tr. N. S. 1, 196 (notes of the substance of portions of a speech, admitted, though other portions of the speech were not noted by the witness); U. S. 1920, Trelease v. U. S., 8th C. C. A., 266 Fed. 886 (seditious utterances, under Espionage Act 1917; testimony to the substance and impression of the speech, not its exact language, held admissible).

[4] Eng. 1838, Harrison v. Bevington, 8 C. & P. 708, 710 (slander; a witness testified: "I do not remember the words at all, only the impression made upon my mind; it was respecting Harrison; the conversation was with Mr. L.; the defendant began it"; Abinger, L. C. B.: "What were the words? This is an action for slander; you cannot have the present principle can with difficulty be distinguished from those applying the doctrine of variance in the law of pleading.[5]

The Opinion rule is sometimes given an improper effect in excluding such evidence of the "substance" or "effect" of utterances. Supposing that the witness could relate from memory the precise words used, the Opinion rule would operate to prohibit him from condensing them into a summary statement of their substance or effect, because by that rule the data observed by the witness must be laid in detail before the jury, if they can be, without his inferences based upon them (ante, § 1918). But if they cannot be laid before the jury, then the witness' inferences, or net impressions, are by that very rule allowable. Consequently, if his memory of the precise words fails him, his impression of their net meaning is not forbidden by the Opinion rule. That rule does not require the impossible; it merely forbids the superfluous. It does not, in its proper use, commit the absurdity of saying that, even when the witness cannot remember the precise words, he is forbidden from giving any account at all of what he heard. Nevertheless, some Courts misguided by the Opinion rule, have reached that result (ante, § 1969).[6]

§ 2098. Same: Application to Testimony at a Former Trial. A controversy was once rife, and came up for settlement in almost every Court, over the propriety of making an exception to the general rule in offering evidence of testimony at a former trial. This may be proved under certain conditions (ante, §§ 1373, 1401), and a witness speaking merely from memory is equally receivable with a written report (ante, § 1330). For the witness, speaking from memory, then, is there to be any stricter rule as to verbal precision than there is for the proof of other kinds of utterances? Must the former witness' very words be reproduced? If they must, then a special exception to the general rule here obtains.

The propriety of such an exception has been defended in the following passage:

1836, PUTNAM, J., in Com. v. Richards, 18 Pick. 434, 439: "We require full proof of all that the deceased witness swore to. His words . . . are to be recited; . . . Some part which was said and not recollected might certainly limit and qualify the meaning of the words which are recollected. Hence it is that persons who are in hearing, who are impression"); U. S. 1845, Teague v. Williams, 7 Ala. 844, 847 (he "cannot be allowed to state the impression produced," but "must state the language that was employed, according to the best of his recollection"); 1848, Douge v. Pearce, 13 Ala. 127, 130 ("while it is not proper for a witness to give his impression derived from the conversation," yet he may "give the substance of the conversation").

[5] And for that reason it is useless to examine here the mass of decisions inextricably dealing with the two principles. The following may serve as illustrations: Eng. 1802, Maitland v. Goldney, 2 East 426, 437 (to prove words "to the effect of those set forth" is not enough); U. S. 1811, Nye v. Otis, 8 Mass. 122; 1826, Fox v. Vanderbeck, 5 Cow. N. Y. 513, 515 ("they must be proved substantially as laid; all the words need not be proved, but it is enough to prove some material part of them"); 1828, Olmstead v. Miller, 1 Wend. N. Y. 506, 510 (preceding case approved).

[6] Furthermore, the word "impression" or "understanding," may be used by the witness in the sense that he never actually heard the utterance plainly; and in that view it may be a question whether he is qualified at all as a witness. The principle and the rulings governing such instances have been already considered in dealing with testimonial qualifications, ante, §§ 658, 727.

favorably inclined to one party, may recollect a particular expression which conformed to their wishes, and wholly omit the words of qualification; while others, who incline towards the other side, will remember the words of qualification and forget or take no notice of the particular expression. . . . To be worth anything, the whole of what the deceased said upon the matter should be stated. And if you get the whole, it is very defective; for you cannot have a true representation of the countenance, manner, and expression of the deceased witness, which either confirmed or denied the truth of the testimony. . . . It is true that this strictness will generally exclude such testimony."

But this strictness is in fact neither necessary nor feasible. The objections to recognize such an exception to the general rule are forcibly stated in the following passages, which are also useful for their broad statements as to the universality of the principle:

1843, HUBBARD, J., in Warren v. Nichols, 6 Metc. Mass. 261, 268: "Such a rule is in my judgment rather a provision for the exclusion than for the admission of such testimony, because as a matter of fact not one person in ten thousand can possibly recollect the very words used by the witness. It is the constant observation of lawyers familiar with trials at Nisi Prius that the testimony of witnesses is never taken down by different persons in the same words, though the facts and ideas are substantially the same; and also that the same witness, when called to testify on a second trial, does not and cannot repeat the very words used by himself on the first hearing, though he is narrating the same events or expressing the same thoughts. . . . In other cases, where a person is called to testify to words spoken, as in actions of slander, [or] to the declarations of a party or of a witness with a view of contradicting him, he is not required to give the identical words of the party or the witness, but he may state the substance of what he has heard and in language as nigh that which was used as he can recollect. What sufficient reason, then, exists in the present case to depart from the rule as practised upon in other cases? It is said that a slight variation may substantially affect the testimony. Very possibly it may; but is there not the like exposure to material variation in those cases where the substance of the declaration is admitted? It is argued that the deceased party was under oath, and therefore the same words should be given; but such is the case with living witnesses whose declarations under oath are testified to with the view of contradicting them. The substance of what the witness said, the facts he stated, the opinions he expressed, the reasons he assigned, the explanations he gave, the motives he avowed, may all be faithfully testified to without repeating all his words. The synonymy of our language is such that a literal adherence to the same expressions is not necessary to the conveying of the same ideas. . . . [The stricter view would] prescribe a rule for the admission of testimony which the imperfection of our nature in the structure of our memories will not warrant. It in truth excludes the thing which it proposes to admit, and at the same time opens a door for knaves to enter where honest men cannot approach."

1846, PERLEY, J., in Young v. Dearborn, 22 N. H. 372, 377: "Where the former testimony has any complication or any considerable extent, no cautious and conscientious witness would take it on himself to repeat it in the exact words from memory, or from any notes that could possibly be taken. To hold a rule so stringent would be likely to encourage rash and unscrupulous witnesses to undertake an exact recital of the evidence, and exclude the cautious and guarded statement of others who were conscious of the extreme difficulty of such a task and would venture to give no more than the substance."

1856, BARTLEY, C. J., in Summons v. State, 5 Oh. St. 325, 346, 351: "There would seem to be no sound reason for subjecting it [former testimony] to a rigid rule amounting to its almost total exclusion, which is inapplicable in other cases where testimony showing words spoken or the statements of a party or other person is admissible. In prosecutions for perjury, the testimony of the accused upon which perjury is assigned is not required to be 'ipsissimis verbis,' but allowed to be given in substance; so with the declarations of a co-conspirator, declarations made 'in extremis,' or the admissions or confessions of a party. So also with testimony of a verbal slander, or the declarations or statements of a party or witness, offered for purposes of contradiction or impeachment. . . . What sufficient reason can exist for a departure from the rule in case of the testimony of a deceased witness on a former trial?"

The stricter doctrine was clearly not the original and orthodox one in England,[1] and seems to have come first into existence there under Lord Kenyon;[2] but apparently did not long persist.[3] In the United States, Lord Kenyon's ruling served to raise the question, which passed along from Court to Court, in the first half of the 1800s, as one of the serious controversies of the day in the law of Evidence. But the better view finally prevailed everywhere; the general principle that verbal precision was not necessary, and that the substance or effect would suffice, came to be accepted as the sound one; and the contrary rule now survives only in the one or two jurisdictions bound by early decisions, — decisions which are gradually being whittled away so as to leave at least an endurable and not wholly impracticable rule.[4] The uni-

§ 2098. [1] 1685, Cornish's Trial, 11 How. St. Tr. 434; Sir John Hawles' comments, 11 How. St. Tr. 459; 1696, Sir John Fenwick's Trial, 13 How. St. Tr. 620; 1754, Canning's Trial, 19 How. St. Tr. 514.

[2] 1791, R. v. Joliffe, 4 T. R. 284, 290 (Kenyon, L. C. J.: a person who "could not undertake to give his words, but merely to swear to the effect of them," was rejected); 1791, R. v. Jones, Peake N. P. 37 (Kenyon, L. C. J.: "The whole of the defendant's evidence on the former trial should be proved, for if in one part of his evidence he corrected any mistake he had made in another part of it, it will not be perjury"); 1793, R. v. Dowlin, Peake N. P. 170 (same; yet where a matter could only be dealt with on cross-examination, proof of the whole cross-examination was sufficient).

[3] 1825, R. v. Rowley, Mood. Cr. C. 111 (perjury as to a vehicle-accident; the witness recited "all [of the testimony] that was material to this inquiry"; "all of the evidence of the prisoner relative to the accident, to the best of his recollection"; admitted, by all the Judges). Contra, in Canada: 1851, Fraser v. Black, 2 All. N. Br. 312 (the words used by the former witness, required to be proved).

[4] In the following citations, the substance or effect is held sufficient, except as otherwise noted; an additional note is made where some form of qualification is used, or where the principle of Entirety, and not merely of Verbal Precision, is dealt with, since under the principle of Entirety (post, § 2103) the present rulings often serve also as authorities:

Federal: 1838, U. S. v. White, 5 Cr. C. C. 457 (the "very words," not necessary); 1851, U. S. v. Macomb, 5 McLean 286, 293, 299 (substance, including cross-examination, sufficient; practically repudiating the prior rulings of U. S. v. Wood, 3 Wash. C. C. 440, and Bennett v. Adams, 2 Cr. C. C. 551); 1878, Ruch v. Rock Island, 97 U. S. 693 (precise words not necessary; the "main and principal points" sufficient); 1897, Chicago St. P. M. & O. R. Co. v. Myers, 25 C. C. A. 486, 80 Fed. 361 (the testimony had shown the place where the plaintiff was standing when injured, and effected this by verifying certain photographs; the non-production of the photographs with the stenographic report was held to leave the latter substantially defective);

Alabama: 1846, Gildersleeve v. Caraway, 10 Ala. 260, 263 (yet here excluded, where the witness had forgotten the substance of the cross-examination); 1849, Tharpe v. State, 15 Ala. 749; 1850, Davis v. State, 17 Ala. 354, 357; 1850, Clealand v. Huie, 18 Ala. 343, 346; 1895, Thompson v. State, 106 Ala. 67, 17 So. 512;

Arkansas: 1894, Vaughan v. State, 58 Ark. 353, 378, 24 S. W. 885; 1905, Petty v. State, 76 Ark. 515, 89 S. W. 465 (substance);

California: 1872, People v. Murphy, 45 Cal. 137, 145; 1905, Arnold's Estate, 147 Cal. 583, 82 Pac. 252 (usually the questions, and not only the answers, must be read);

Connecticut: 1912, Hope v. Valente, 86 Conn. 301, 85 Atl. 541 (a party's admission contained in his former testimony may be read against him without putting in the remainder);

Delaware: The stricter rule has been laid down, and would perhaps be followed to-day: 1842, Kinney v. Hosea, 3 Harringt. 397 ("even to his very words"; but only as to the relevant portions);

Georgia: Rev. C. 1910, § 5773, P. C. § 1027 (must remember "the substance of the entire versal practice of stenographic reporting of testimony in important litigation has now removed the question from the field of frequent controversy.

testimony as to the particular matter about which he testifies"); 1852, Riggins v. Brown, 12 Ga. 271, 275 (a "brief" of testimony "as M. gave it," admitted); 1859, Trammell v. Hemphill, 27 Ga. 525, 527 ("the substance of the words"); 1879, Puryear v. State, 63 Ga. 692; 1882, Atkins v. State, 69 Ga. 595, 596; 1883, Mitchell v. State, 71 Ga. 128, 154; 1900, Denson v. Denson, 111 Ga. 809, 35 S. E. 680;
Illinois: 1849, Marshall v. Adams, 11 Ill. 41 (the "words substantially must be given, and not the result of what his evidence proved"); 1885, Iglehart v. Jernegan, 16 Ill. 513 (undecided; the rule that the substance is sufficient, preferred);
Indiana: 1864, Horne v. Williams, 23 Ind. 37, 40 (repudiating Ephraims v. Murdock, 7 Blackf. 10, which had been doubted in Ward v. State, 8 Blackf. 101); 1893, Bass v. State, 136 Ind. 165, 170, 36 N. E. 124 (all on the particular subject suffices);
Iowa: 1851, Rivereau v. St. Ament, 3 G. Greene 119; 1870, Woods v. Gevecke, 28 Ia. 561; 1876, Harrison v. Charlton, 42 Ia. 573, 575; 1876, Fell v. R. Co., 43 Ia. 177, 179; 1884, State v. Fitzgerald, 63 Ia. 271, 19 N. W. 202; 1881, Small v. R. Co., 55 Ia. 582, 592, 8 N. W. 437; 1890, State v. O'Brien, 81 Ia. 88, 90, 46 N. W. 752 (substance sufficient; but it must include the cross-examination); St. 1898, c. 9, § 1, Suppl. 1902, § 245*a*, Comp. C. § 7291 (transcript of the shorthand notes of a court reporter must be certified to contain "the whole of the shorthand notes of the evidence of such witness," "but the party offering the same shall not be compelled to offer the whole of such transcript"); 1903, Connell v. Connell, 119 Ia. 602, 93 N. W. 582 (under St. 1898, c. 9, the shorthand transcript must contain the "whole of the evidence of such witness");
Kansas: 1874, Gannon v. Stevens, 13 Kan. 460; 1885, Solomon R. Co. v. Jones, 34 Kan. 461, 8 Pac. 730; 1904, State v. Harmon, 70 Kan. 476, 78 Pac. 805 (substance suffices; preceding cases not cited, though cases from seven other jurisdictions are cited); but a stricter rule is laid down in Kan. St. 1905, c. 494, § 1, Gen. St. 1915, § 3003, making a court stenographer's transcript of "all the evidence of any witness," admissible; cited more fully ante, § 1669;
Kentucky: 1856, Thompson v. Blackwell, 17 B. Monr. 609, 623 ("substance of all that was sworn," sufficient); 1882, Bush v. Com., 80 Ky. 247;
Maine: 1855, Emery v. Fowler, 39 Me. 326, 332; 1864, Lime Rock Bank v. Hewett, 52 Me. 531, 534; 1906, State v. Herlihy, 102 Me. 310, 66 Atl. 643 ("it is sufficient to prove the substance of the whole testimony");
Maryland: 1821, Bowie v. O'Neale, 5 H. & J. 226, 231 (not the "legal effect," but "what he did actually prove"); 1840, Garrot v. Johnson, 11 G. & J. 173, 182 (sufficient "to prove facts," i. e. that the deceased "in giving his testimony deposed to certain facts"); 1872, Waters v. Waters, 35 Md. 539 (here excluded because the cross-examination was omitted); 1873, Black v. Woodrow, 39 Md. 194, 220 (not "the precise language," but "the facts proved, and not the mere substance of the evidence");
Massachusetts: The strict rule was originally adopted and for a long time persevered with: 1828, Melvin v. Whiting, 7 Pick. 79, 81, semble (words required); 1836, Com. v. Richards, 18 Pick. 434, 438 ("his words . . . are to be recited"); 1843, Warren v. Nichols, 6 Metc. 261 ("The witness must be able to state the language in which the testimony was given, substantially and in all material particulars"; distinguishing the case of perjury, where it is enough to prove that the witness "testified positively to a fact and did not afterwards . . . retract or modify that statement"; Hubbard, J., diss., quoted supra); 1852, Gould v. Norfolk Lead Co., 9 Cush. 346; 1860, Corey v. Jones, 15 Gray 544; 1867, Woods v. Keyes, 14 All. 236; but a paring process has since been begun, usefully modifying the rule: 1879, Costigan v. Lunt, 127 Mass. 354 ("the language must be given 'substantially and in all material particulars,' but not necessarily with absolute verbal identity"); 1908, McGivern v. Steele, 197 Mass. 164, 83 N. E. 405; 1910, Jaquith v. Morrill, 204 Mass. 181, 90 N. E. 556 (Costigan v. Lunt approved and applied); 1911, Com. v. Shooshanian, 210 Mass. 123, 96 N. E. 70 (the witness may state such part as he remembers, if the needed remainder is stated by others);
Michigan: 1870, Burson v. Huntington, 21 Mich. 429; 1873, Fisher v. Kyle, 27 id. 455;
Missouri: 1865, Jaccard v. Anderson, 37 Mo. 94; 1867, Morris v. Hammerle, 40 Mo. 489, 496; 1877, State v. Able, 65 Mo. 357, 371 (substance, but not merely effect, receivable; good instance of the mode of applying the principle); 1887, Scoville v. R. Co., 94 Mo. 84, 87, 6 S. W. 654 ("substantially the same," though not all nor in the very language, suffices);
Nebraska: 1896, Twohig v. Leamer, 48 Nebr. 247, 67 N. W. 152;
New Hampshire: 1846, Tibbets v. Flanders, 18 N. H. 284, 292 (excluded, where not reciting "the substance of the whole of his testimony"); 1851, Young v. Dearborn, 22 id. 372 (the "substance" is sufficient; quoted supra);
New Jersey: 1843, Sloan v. Somers, 20 N. J. L. 66, 67 (testimony as to "substantially what he then stated," apparently held sufficient; but here certain notes supplied the words also);
New York: There has here been a progress

By many Courts a distinction was once taken between the "substance" and the "effect" or "legal effect" of the testimony as heard, the former being from strictness to liberality: 1806, Jackson v. Bailey, 2 Johns. 17, 20 ("what such witness had formerly sworn," received; Livingston, J., diss., because the testimony cannot be sufficiently recollected); 1826, Wilbur v. Selden, C. Cow. 162, 165 ("the words of the witness must be given, not what is supposed to be the substance of his testimony"); 1836, Clark v. Vorce, 15 Wend. 193, 195 (over-strictness discountenanced; a witness admitted "who could not pretend to give his precise words," but "intended to take down the words" and had taken "very full and particular minutes"); 1852, Huff v. Bennett, 6 N. Y. 337 (minutes which "were pretty full," but "he would not say that they contained the testimony of S. accurately," excluded); 1863, Martin v. Cope, 3 Abb. App. C. 182, 192 (minutes containing "not substantially the meaning, but substantially the language of the witness," received); 1867, McIntyre v. R. Co., 37 N. Y. 287, 291 (minutes containing the "substance," admitted, though they had not "the whole language of the witness, nor the whole of his testimony"); 1882, Trimmer v. Trimmer, 90 N. Y. 676 (one who remembered "the general topics to which B. testified and the subject of some of the evidence," allowed to give "the substance" of that evidence);

North Carolina: 1832, Ballenger v. Barnes, 3 Dev. 460, 465 (the substance is sufficient, but not merely the effect); 1836, Ingram v. Watkins, 1 Dev. & B. 442, 444 (where the testimony is offered in chief, the whole must be given; but where offered only to show a self-contradiction as impeaching, only "all that the impeached witness said in relation to the matter in which the repugnancy is alleged"); 1848, Edwards v. Sullivan, 8 Ired. 302, 304 (preceding case approved); 1855, Jones v. Ward, 3 Jones L. 24, 26 (approving Ballenger v. Barnes); 1875, Buie v. Carver, 73 N. C. 264 (the witness had not heard all that the other had said; excluded); 1900, State v. McLaughlin, 126 N. C. 1080, 35 S. E. 1037 (that the former testimony "was substantially the same" as the present, excluded, in impeaching a witness; details must be specified);

Ohio: 1848, Wagers v. Dickey, 17 Oh. 439, 440; 1856, Summons v. State, 5 Oh. St. 325, 352 (quoted supra; practically repudiating Bliss v. Long, Wright 351);

Pennsylvania: 1823, Cornell v. Green, 10 S. & R. 16 (practically repudiating Lightner v. Wike, 4 S. & R. 203); 1824, Wolf v. Wyeth, 11 S. & R. 149; 1824, Watson v. Gilday, 11 S. & R. 337, 342 (but the cross-examination must be included); 1825, Smith v. Lowe, 12 S. & R. 34; 1828, Chess v. Chess, 17 S. & R. 409, 411; 1843, Moore v. Pearson, 6 W. & S. 53; 1845, Gould v. Crawford, 2 Pa. St. 85, 90; 1864, Philadelphia & R. R. Co. v. Spearen, 47 Pa. St. 300, 306 (though a witness took only such part of a cross-examination as was material, it was received as sufficient); 1873, Brown v. Com., 73 Pa. 326; 1881, Hepler v. Bank, 97 Pa. 420, 424 ("He may state in his own language the facts as detailed by that witness, as they were impressed on his mind at the time. . . . All that is required is that the recollection of the witness be reasonably clear as to the fact testified to, and how, if at all, such testimony was affected by the cross-examination");

South Carolina: 1888, State v. Jones, 29 S. C. 201, 229, 7 S. E. 296;

Tennessee: 1850, Kendrick v. State, 10 Humph. 479, 488 (substance sufficient, provided the whole, including the cross-examination, is given); 1871, Planters' Bank v. Massey, 2 Heisk. 360, 367 (substance on the particular subject, sufficient); 1871, Kinnard v. Willmore, 2 Heisk. 619, 621 (the witness could not remember what M. had sworn at a former trial where he was present, but was sure that, whatever it was, it was the same as at another trial; excluded, as having no real memory); 1872, Wade v. State, 7 Baxt. 80 (substance sufficient; that different accounts differ in detail is immaterial); 1898, Weeks v. McNulty, 101 Tenn. 495, 48 S. W. 809 (whole of former testimony, so far as relevant, admissible);

Texas: 1866, Thurmond v. Trammell, 28 Tex. 371, 382; 1882, Parks v. Caudle, 58 Tex. 220; 1893, Bennett v. State, 32 Tex. Cr. 216, 219, 22 S. W. 687 (substance of the particular subject only is sufficient);

Vermont: 1845, State v. Hooker, 17 Vt. 670 (any quantity of recollection sufficient); 1849, Marsh v. Jones, 21 Vt. 378, 380 (the substance in the very words of the deceased, required; "this is the rule required in proving the words spoken in slander, libel, and on indictments for perjury; and substantially the same rule is required" for parties' admissions); 1851, Williams v. Ward, 23 Vt. 369, 376 (the witness could not recollect the deceased's cross-examination, but thought he should have recollected had it altered the testimony in chief; held sufficient); 1852, Downer v. Rowell, 24 Vt. 343, 346 (like Marsh v. Jones); 1867, Whitcher v. Morey, 39 Vt. 470; 1873, Earl v. Tupper, 45 Vt. 284;

Virginia: 1827, Caton v. Lenox, 5 Rand. 31, 39 (enough to give "the matter substantially");

Wisconsin: 1892, Jackson v. State, 81 Wis. 127, 132, 51 N. W. 89 ("substantially correct," sufficient);

Wyoming: 1903, Foley v. State, 11 Wyo. 464, 72 Pac. 627 (the substance of the whole of what related to the subject must be given).

Compare also the cases cited ante, § 1045, n. 3 (witness' self-contradictions).

received, the latter rejected. The distinction seems to have originated in the following passage:

1856, BARTLEY, C. J., in Summons v. State, 5 Oh. St. 325, 351: "There is a distinction, however, between narrating the statements made by the deceased witness and giving the effect of his testimony. This distinction may be illustrated thus: If a witness state that A, as a witness on a former trial, proved the execution of a written instrument by B, that would be giving the effect, which is nothing else than the result or conclusion produced by A's testimony. But if the witness states that A testified that he had often seen B write, that he was acquainted with his handwriting, and that the name subscribed to the instrument of writing exhibited was B's signature, that would be giving the substance of A's testimony, though it might not be in the exact words."

It is true enough that by the Opinion rule the witness should perhaps be forbidden to give the merely legal effect of the testimony, as illustrated in the above passage, — provided at least that he can remember the further details from which he drew his inference. But the terms "substance" and "effect" are ill calculated to convey any tangible distinction to the mind of the witness, and their use tends to degenerate into an unprofitable quibble. It would be simple enough to leave the application of the principle entirely in the hands of the trial judge, who will see that the witness searches his memory for as precise an account as he can give.[5]

But it is proper enough, in applying the principle of Entirety of Parts (post, § 2099), to discriminate to this extent, that when the former testimony is used not as that of an independent witness (ante, § 1373) but merely as containing a self-contradictory statement by the same witness on the stand (ante, § 1032), or as containing a party's admission (ante, §§ 1048, 1075), it suffices to put in only the part containing the self-contradiction [6] or the admission.[7]

[5] Another distinction, occasionally drawn, is between the "substance of the words" and the "substance of the testimony"; but this is a futile one and comes fairly within the definition of a quibble; it is merely another way of telling the witness that he must give the testimony as nearly as he can in the original words.

Still another discrimination, lacking any virtue, but sometimes met with, is that the substance suffices for former testimony, when used in contradiction (ante, § 1032), but not when used as independent testimony (ante, § 1373): 1852, Gould v. Lead Co., 9 Cush. Mass. 338, 347; 1867, Day v. Stickney, 14 All. Mass. 260 (distinguishing the asking of such a question merely by way of fair notice to the witness before proving the contradiction; the Massachusetts rule not requiring this under the rule of §§ 1025, 1029 ante).

[6] Can. 1873, Bryson v. Hamilton, N. Br., Stevens Dig. 1880, p. 619; U. S. 1871, Pound v. State, 43 Ga. 130; 1891, Burnett v. State, 87 Ga. 622, 13 S. E. 552; 1893, State v. Sortor, 52 Ga. 531, 540, 34 Pac. 1036 (defendant's preliminary examination; all that bears on subject in question, sufficient); 1892, Maxted v. Fowler, 94 Mich. 111, 53 N. W. 921 (even for a written report of the testimony; compare Lightfoot v. People, cited post, § 2103, for a deposition); 1902, Zibbell v. Grand Rapids, 129 Mich. 659, 89 N. W. 563; 1903, Mackmasters v. State, 83 Miss. 1, 35 So. 302 (accused's testimony); 1836, Ingram v. Watkins, 1 Dev. & B. N. C. 442, 444 (cited in note 4, supra); 1848, Edwards v. Sullivan, 8 Ired. N. C. 304; 1883, Rounds v. State, 57 Wis. 48, 14 N. W. 865 (defendant's preliminary examination); 1896, Emery v. State, 92 Wis. 146, 65 N. W. 848 (parts of testimony before the coroner).

[7] Eng. 1803, Collett v. Lord Keith, 4 Esp. 212 (the defendant's testimony at a former trial, admitted, though the judge had there told him, at a certain point, "he need not indicate his conduct by giving reasons; the whole world would agree with him," and the witness had refrained; this circumstance held merely to be "matter of observation to make to the jury"); U. S. 1902, Southern L. & T. Co. v. Benbow, 131 N. C. 413, 42 S. E. 896 (former testimony as admissions; entirety

Where the former testimony is offered in the shape of a written report or of a deposition, it is no longer offered as an oral utterance but as a writing, and is amenable to a somewhat different principle, later dealt with (post, § 2103).

Distinguish, of course, the question, under the Hearsay rule, whether a judge's note or a magistrate's or stenographer's written report of testimony is admissible to prove what was said (ante, §§ 1666, 1667, 1669), and also the question, under the same rule, whether a bill of exceptions is receivable for the same purpose (ante, § 1668); the exclusion of the latter by some Courts is partly based on the incompleteness of the testimony set forth in such a bill, i. e. the present principle is given a certain effect in reaching that result. Distinguish also the question, under the principle of Preference, whether a magistrate's report of testimony is preferred to a witness speaking from memory only (ante, §§ 1329, 1330) and whether such a report is conclusive as to the tenor of the testimony (ante, § 1349).

§ 2099. (b) Entirety of Parts: General Principle, as applied to Admissions, Conversations, Slanders, Former Testimony, and the like. It has been already noted (ante, § 2095, par. 2) that the idea of Completeness involves, not merely Verbal Precision, but Entirety of Parts. The second branch of inquiry therefore is, how far the principle of Completeness requires the offering at the same time of all the parts of an oral utterance, as a condition of offering any part of it. This inquiry conceives of an utterance as composed, not simply of consecutive words, but of clauses and sentences, forming connected parts of a single effort to express a general thought having various details. It is understood on all hands that the opponent may in any event afterwards put in the remainder (post, § 2103); but the question here is, whether the proponent must in the first instance put in all the parts, or may merely select that part which serves his purpose.

On this point, there is a singular lack of judicial authority. While working out in fair detail the application of the principle of Entirety to written utterances (post, §§ 2102 ff.), the Courts have almost ignored its development in application to oral utterances. We are relegated for information to the general spirit pervading their treatment of other aspects of the principle, and are obliged to depend upon an implied rather than an expressed rule.

These general indications are of three sorts. In the first place, the existence of copious rulings allowing the opponent afterwards to put in the remainder of the utterance (post, § 2115), and the absence of rulings requiring the proponent to put in the whole at first, indicate that there is no general and accepted principle or practice making the latter requirement. In the next place, however, the language judicially used in applying the rule of Verbal Precision requiring the "substance" to be offered (ante, § 2097) suggests that this "substance," though not reproducing the precise words, should at least not required; compare the second ruling in this case, cited post, § 2099, n. 1); 1868, Johnson v. Powers, 40 Vt. 611, 612 (examination in chief of an opponent suffices, where the witness was unable to give the cross-examination, unless the opponent had no opportunity to show that the cross-examination qualified the direct).

represent the tenor of the utterance as a whole, and not mere fragments of it. In the third place, the single case in which Entirety of Parts is clearly required, namely, testimony at a former trial (infra, par. 4) appears to be treated judicially as exceptional. So far, then, as judicial indications have gone, it may be said that there is no general rule requiring the proponent to put in the whole of an oral utterance (either the whole as it was in fact uttered or the whole of what a specific witness heard), but that in exceptional instances some such a requirement would be made.

The following passages will illustrate both this general tendency and also the absence of a positive rule:

1888, Parnell Commission's Proceedings, 1st, 4th, 6th, 7th, 83d, days, Times' Rep. pt. 1, p. 236, pt. 2, pp. 28, 104, 109; pt. 23, p. 60; the Land League and its leaders were charged with encouraging outrage and crime, and numerous speeches were offered to prove this; repeated discussions took place, during the trial, as to the fair and proper way of using the passages relied upon; in the Attorney-General's opening, the following statements were made; the Attorney-General: "I have not got the whole of the speeches; I have only reports. A man may speak for two hours, but I may have only a few lines of his speech." President HANNEN: "If you have not got the whole of them, it will be open to Sir Charles Russell to correct you by referring to such reports as do exist; but what you do use [in your opening address] you will put in the whole of it [in evidence later]." The Attorney-General: "Without exception, the whole extract at my command of every speech I read shall be put in." Then at a later day, when certain speeches were put in evidence by Sir H. James from constables' notes, Mr. Healy having claimed that "the proper course is to read the entire speech," President HANNEN said: "It is not necessary for you, Sir Henry, to read the whole speech, but only those portions on which you rely. . . . The only regular course is this (and whatever it leads to, it must be followed): You, Sir Henry, will call attention to what you consider the material parts of the speech, and Sir C. Russell can on cross-examination refer to other portions which he may consider, and, if necessary, the cross-examination can be postponed until he has had an opportunity of seeing the full speeches." Shortly afterwards, the counsel for the Times proposed an arrangement by which copies of all the reports of speeches were to be prepared and underlined and furnished to all parties for convenient reference, when Mr. Healy inquired: "Some of the speeches made would cover two or three columns if taken verbatim, but they have been condensed [in the constables' notes] into three or four sentences. What is the intention with regard to them?" Sir H. James: "We can only present the short report in those cases, because that is all we have got." On a still later occasion, Mr. Reid, the counsel for Mr. O'Brien, read passages from his speeches showing his opposition to criminal methods, and was interrupted by the Attorney-General: "You have omitted a passage which precedes that." Mr. Reid: "I thought the rule was that what you wished to read should be read subsequently." Attorney-General: "I was only suggesting that the course which has been pursued on every other occasion by Sir Charles Russell and yourself should be pursued now." President HANNEN (to Mr. Reid): "This question arose before, and there was great complaint on your part that the Attorney-General did not read all, and then you read, or Sir C. Russell read something. But I have laid down the rule that, unless you can come to a compromise, the true rule is for you to read what you attach importance to and for the other side to do the same."

In order to ascertain the propriety of any exceptions to the rule, it may be noted that three general considerations affect here the policy of requiring the whole of an oral utterance. In the first place, oral utterances are not marked off as distinct wholes in the way that written utterances are. It is simple enough to see that one letter or one deed ends at the signatures, and that the piece of paper is an entirety by itself. So one account in a ledger, or the judicial record of a single cause, plainly constitutes a connected series of written utterances having an entirety and a distinct existence of its own. But oral utterances can usually not be given any such separate unity of character; nor can it be told whether a later utterance will concern the prior one; and the process of discovering in advance such unity as may here and there exist would result, on the whole, in innumerable subtle discriminations and tedious investigations, with rarely any profit to correspond. In the second place, oral utterances (even assuming that some entirety could be predicated of them) are often or usually so delivered that no one witness could testify to the entire utterance on the subject in question. This witness may have heard a definite portion, and yet the speaker may have delivered a qualifying remainder after the departure or during the inattention of the particular hearer. More commonly still, and most important of all, the hearer will have remembered only that portion in which he was interested or in which he heard what he wished to hear; the remainder he has made no effort to remember. If, then, any requirement of entirety existed, that witness would perhaps seldom be found who could honestly aver that he heard and remembered all the parts of the entire utterance. In the third place, the opponent himself, in many or most instances, has it in his own power to remedy any defects in the proponent's proof of parts of utterances, by bringing forward, at his stage of the proof, the remaining parts, if any, which qualify the others. This consideration, so far as it goes, reduces to a minimum the need for any requirement that the proponent should prove the whole in the first instance.

Keeping in mind, then, the relative force of these three considerations, and applying them to the most common kinds of oral utterances which come to be proved in litigation, it may be suggested that the following rules would adequately meet the needs of proof in the present respect:

(1) For a party's admissions and conversations involving admissions, for a witness' self-contradictions at a prior time, and for oral words charged as seditious or defamatory, the proponent need prove in the first instance that part only which serves his purpose;[1] and this would mean not only that

§ 2099. [1] Can. 1916, Huck v. Canadian Pacific R. Co., 29 D. L. R. 571, Alta. (personal injury; a report of defendant's employee having been introduced by the plaintiff as containing admissions, held that the jury were not as matter of law required to accept and believe the whole, including exculpatory parts); U. S.: Fed. 1920, Schoberg v. U. S., 6th C. C. A., 264 Fed. 1, 9 (seditious anti-war utterances; report of seditious parts of speeches at meetings, admitted, the listener having omitted the remarks on other subjects, but having taken notes of "all conversation of defendants which bore on their supposed pro-German utterances"); Fla. 1903, Sylvester v. State, 46 Fla. 166, 35 So. 142; La. 1906, State v. Freddy, 117 La. 121, 41 So. 436 (conversation only partly heard, admitted); N. C. 1876, Davis v. Smith, 75 N. C. 115 (witness called by the parties to answer a question, allowed to give what fragments he heard of their conversation); 1883, State v. Lawhorn, 88 N. C. 634, 637; and cases cited ante, § 2097, note 1, § 2098, notes 6, 7.

The following rulings require the whole of an admission: Ga. 1853, Brown v. Upton, 12 Ga. 505, 507; La. 1828, Quick v. Johnson, 6 Mart. N. S. 532; Mass. 1849, O'Brien v.

the whole utterance need not be proved, but not even all that the witness heard.

(2) For contracts and other oral utterances having in themselves a legal effect — notices, demands, orders to an agent, and the like — all material parts should be offered at once, subject to exceptions in the circumstances of each case.[2]

(3) For dying declarations and other oral utterances admissible under exceptions to the Hearsay rule, since the above considerations usually conflict in result, no general rule can fairly be laid down.[3]

(4) For testimony at a former trial, the first consideration above noted is lacking, since the cross-examination often results in decided modifications of the direct examination. Nevertheless, many topics are often dealt with in a single testimony, so that what is needed is only the part dealing with that particular topic, on both the direct and the cross-examination. The second and third considerations above also are often lacking. Accordingly, the fair rule, and the one generally applied judicially, is to require the witness to be able to state all the material parts of the testimony on that topic, both in direct and in cross-examination.[4]

§ 2100. Same: Application to Accused's Confessions. (5) For an accused's confessions, the second and third considerations above point to the same result as in ordinary admissions; yet the first is not of such force, since a confession in the stricter sense (ante, § 821) is usually a distinct connected statement. As a practical compromise, then, the rule might well be that the witness should state the material parts of all that he heard; but no more should be required. The precise judicial rule, however, is not entirely clear:

(a) In the first place, it is generally conceded that the whole of the utter-

Cheney, 5 Cush. 148, 152 (admission as to a bond; "the admission in full" must be taken; here, however, a judicial admission was concerned); N. C. 1904, Southern L. & T. Co. v. Benbow, 135 N. C. 303, 47 S. E. 435 (memorandum of admissions in a conversation, not containing the exact words nor the entire substance, but only the effect of isolated parts, excluded; the opinion confuses the principles involved, and while citing inappropriate cases on former testimony, fails to cite either the N. C. cases supra, or that cited ante, § 2097, n. 1, or even the prior ruling on the similar point at the former trial of the same case, cited ante, § 2098, n. 7).

In the Philippines and Porto Rico the following provisions, taken from Spanish law, apply: P. R. Rev. St. & C. 1911, § 4302 ("Entries, registries, and private papers shall be evidence against the person who has written them only in all that may appear clearly stated; but a person who wishes to make use thereof is bound to accept them also in the part prejudicial to him"); § 4307 ("The confession [i. e. admission] can not be partially used against him who makes it unless it should refer to different facts, or when a part of the confession is proven by other means, or when, in any particular it should be contrary to nature or law"); Philippine Isl. Civ. C. §§ 1228, 1233 (like P. R. Rev. St. & C. §§ 4302, 4307).

Compare the cases cited ante, § 2097.

The subject of proof of oral utterances evidenced by notes or a written report sworn to is apt to be confused with the proof of a writing admissible for its own sake (post, §§ 2103-2111).

[2] 1877, Flood v. Mitchell, 68 N. Y. 507, 511 (memorandum of an oral agreement, omitting "two articles"; not admitted, because "it was not an accurate statement of the conversation and agreement").

[3] For dying declarations, the cases are collected ante, § 1448.

[4] The cases to this effect have been for convenience placed ante, § 2098; it is difficult to separate the rulings upon that topic and this.

For written reports or depositions, see post, § 2103.

ance is not required if it was not heard, but only so much as was heard and is remembered.[1]

(b) In the next place, the circumstance that there were at another time separate utterances, touching the same subject, but not otherwise connected, does not exclude the one utterance offered.[2]

(c) In the third place, for the remaining case — an entire utterance, wholly heard — the precise rule of law is obscure. It is commonly said that the whole of the confession or admission must be taken together; but this obviously leaves unsettled whether it is meant that the prosecution must put it all in at first, or merely that the accused may call for or offer the remainder (post, § 2115), on cross-examination or otherwise, — two very different meanings in practical effect.[3] The following classical passages illustrate the usual obscure tenor of judicial utterances on this point:

§ 2100. [1] Alabama: 1849, Drake v. State, 110 Ala. 9, 20 So. 450 (defendant's threats); California: 1895, People v. Daniels, 105 Cal. 262, 38 Pac. 720; 1898, People v. Dice, 120 Cal. 189, 52 Pac. 477 (murder; substance of threats, though only a part of the whole conversation, sufficient); 1910, People v. Luis, 158 Cal. 285, 110 Pac. 580 (admitted, where he heard all and remembers the substance); Delaware: 1917, Lowber v. State, 6 Boyce Del. 353, 100 Atl. 322 (rape under age; whole of defendant's conversation, admitted); Florida: 1896, Thalheim v. State, 38 Fla. 169, 20 So. 938; 1916, Morey v. State, 72 Fla. 45, 72 So. 490 (murder; exculpatory statements of defendant, made on the same subject and at the same time as inculpatory ones already evidenced, admitted; following Thalheim v. State, supra); Georgia: 1872, Westmoreland v. State, 45 Ga. 225, 279; 1890, Woolfolk v. State, 85 Ga. 69, 99, 11 S. E. 814; Illinois: 1893, Jamison v. People, 145 Ill. 357, 378, 34 N. E. 486; Iowa: 1855, Mays v. Deaver, 1 Ia. 216, 222 ("That he did not hear all, would go to the effect of the testimony, and not to its admissibility"); 1863, State v. Elliott, 15 Ia. 72, 74 (conversation overheard in jail; the part heard may be received); 1880, State v. Moelchen, 53 Ia. 310, 314, 5 N. W. 186 (a witness to a quarrel in a foreign language, who understood only one word used, "knife," admitted); Kentucky: 1904, Green v. Com.,— Ky. —, 83 S. W. 638 (here the substance is required); Louisiana: 1895, State v. Vallery, 47 La. An. 182, 16 So. 745; 1897, State v. Daniel, 49 La. An. 954, 22 So. 415 (part of an altercation between deceased and defendant, received); 1900, State v. Spillers, 105 La. 163, 29 So. 480; 1904, State v. Gianfala, 113 La. 463, 37 So. 30 ("in the main, all that was said suffices); Montana: 1906, State v. Lu Sing, 34 Mont. 31, 85 Pac. 521 (confession of a Chinese, speaking broken English, and understood in part only, admitted; the above rule confirmed); 1909, State v. Berberick, 38 Mont. 423, 100 Pac. 209 (substance of a confession, admitted); North Carolina: 1897, State v. Robertson, 121 N. C. 551, 28 S. E. 59, semble; Oklahoma: 1918, Oklahoma State Bank v. Buzzard, — Okl. —, 175 Pac. 750; Philippine Isl. 1911, U. S. v. Gavarlan, 18 P. I. 510; South Carolina: 1832, State v. Covington, 2 Bail. 569, 570 ("That which is heard may be given in evidence, but that which is not heard cannot, from necessity"); 1856, State v. Gossett, 9 Rich L. 428, 436; Texas: 1922, Parker v. State, — Tex. Cr. —, 238 S. W. 943; Vermont: 1911, State v. Averill, 85 Vt. 115, 81 Atl. 461; Virginia: 1858, Shifflet's Case, 14 Gratt. 652, 657 (testimony of one who did not hear the whole of a confession, received).

Contra: 1870, People v. Gelabert, 39 Cal. 663 ("The alleged confession was partly in Spanish and partly in broken English, and the witness stated that he did not understand all that the prisoner said in Spanish"; excluded); 1874, State v. Gilcrease, 26 La. An. 622 (no precedent cited).

There might be an exception where the utterance was palpably incomplete with reference to the accused's intended utterance, — as where an external interruption cuts off his statement before he has voluntarily stopped: 1865, William v. State, 39 Ala. 532 (slave's confession, stopped at a certain point by his master's command, excluded entirely).

Compare the similar rule for dying declarations, ante, § 1448.

[2] 1872, Com. v. Pitsinger, 110 Mass. 101; 1899, Com. v. Chance, 174 Mass. 245, 54 N. E. 551 (certain conversations of defendant, held not connected); 1910, People v. Giro, 197 N. Y. 152, 90 N. E. 432; 1847, State v. Cowan, 7 Ired. N. C. 239, 242 (the witness had overheard a conversation between two prisoners in jail, but not the conversation that they had at other times; held, sufficient to state all that was said by them on the one occasion, and, semble, merely on the one subject in controversy); 1856, State v. Gossett, 9 Rich L. S. C. 437; 1854, Jones v. State, 13 Tex. 168, 177.

[3] In an occasional decision a rule is sometimes enforced that the whole must be pre-

1696, R. v. Paine, 5 Mod. 163; seditious libel; the defendant had confessed "that he wrote the libel, but that he did neither compose or publish it, but only delivered it, instead of another paper, to B."; Per Curiam: "As to the first point, [whether he was the author and composer of the libel,] there was no proof that he was the composer of it, or that he wrote it. but by his own confession before the mayor. Now if such confession shall be sented in the first instance; but it cannot be said that this is in general the implied meaning. It is only possible to note this universally accepted, but inconclusive phrase, that "the whole of the confession must be taken together":

ENGLAND: 1827, R. v. Jones, 2 C. & P. 629 (the defendant had confessed that she cut the child's throat, but had also said that it was stillborn; Bosanquet, Serjt.: "There is no doubt that if a prosecutor uses the declaration of a prisoner, he must take the whole of it together, and cannot select one part and leave another"); 1829, R. v. Higgins, 3 C. & P. 603 (larceny; the prisoner's statement before the magistrate "was read as evidence on the part of the prosecution"; in it he said that the goods were "honestly bought and paid for"; Park, J.: "If the prosecutor makes the prisoner's declaration evidence, it then becomes evidence for the prisoner, as well as against him; but still, like all evidence given in any case, it is for you to say whether you really believe it"); 1830, R. v. Steptoe, 4 C. & P. 397 (oral statement; Park, J., "You are to take what he says altogether; you are not bound to take the exculpatory part as true, merely because it is given in evidence"); 1910, Stone's Case, 6 Cr. App. 89, 96; 1911. Gray's Case, 6 Cr. App. 242.

CANADA: 1916, R. v. Girvin, 34 D. L. R. 344, Alta. (forgery; the accused's admissions must be considered as a whole; careful elucidation per Beck, J.).

UNITED STATES: Ala. 1845, Wilson v. Calvert, 8 Ala. 757; 1854, Eskridge v. State, 25 Ala. 33; 1855, Chambers v. State, 26 Ala. 59, 63; 1858, Corbett v. State, 31 Ala. 329, 341; 1872, Parke v. State, 48 Ala. 266, 268; 1873, Burns v. State, 49 Ala. 370, 374; 1875, Eiland v. State, 52 Ala. 335; 1893, Webb v. State, 100 Ala. 47, 51, 14 So. 865; Ark. 1883, Frazier v. State, 42 Ark. 72; 1901, Williams v. State, 69 Ark. 599, 65 S. W. 103; Cal. 1853, People v. Nairs, 3 Cal. 106; 1870, People v. Gelabert, 39 Cal. 663; 1875, People v. Keith, 50 Cal. 137; 1904, Risdon v. Yates, 145 Cal. 210, 78 Pac. 641 (the defendant's plea of guilty before a justice having been introduced, the Court allowed the entire statement made at the time by the defendant to be used in explanation); Ga. 1857, Long v. State, 22 Ga. 40, 42; 1896, Myers v. State, 97 Ga. 76, 25 S. E. 252; Ill. 1870, Comfort v. People, 54 Ill. 404, 406; Ia. 1899, State v. Novak, 109 Ia. 717, 79 N. W. 465; Ky. 1873, Berry v. Com., 10 Bush 17; Mass. 1892, Com. v. Campbell, 155 Mass. 537, 30 N. E. 72; 1892, Com. v. Trefethen, 157 Mass. 180, 197, 31 N. E. 961; 1893, Com. v. Russell, 160 Mass. 8, 10, 35 N. E. 84; Mich. 1912, People v. Bowen, 170 Mich. 129, 135 N. W. 824 (the remainder may be introduced, even though it involved disclosing privileged communications with a wife); Miss. 1849, Coon v. State, 13 Sm. & M. 249; 1850, McCann v. State, 13 Sm. & M. 498; Mo. 1838, Bower v. State, 5 Mo. 382; 1874, State v. Carlisle, 57 Mo. 106; 1904, State v. Knowles, 185 Mo. 141, 83 S. W. 1083; 1905, State v. Merkel, 189 Mo. 315, 87 S. W. 1186; 1906, State v. Myers, 198 Mo. 225, 94 S. W. 242 (for the prosecution); N. C. 1870, State v. Worthington, 64 N. C. 594, 595; Tenn. 1824, Tipton v. State, Peck 307, 314; Tex. 1871, Conner v. State, 34 Tex. 659, 661; 1920, Pickens v. State, 86 Tex. Cr. App. 657, 218 S. W. 755 (applying the further detail, adopted in this State, that where exculpatory statements are coupled with confessional statements and are introduced for the prosecution, the prosecution has the burden of disproving the exculpatory parts); Vt. 1859, State v. Mahon, 32 Vt. 244; Va. 1838, Brown's Case, 9 Leigh 633; Wis. 1869, Griswold v. State, 24 Wis. 148; Wyo. 1906, Clay v. State, 15 Wyo. 42, 86 Pac. 17.

Supposing all to be required, it may of course be supplied by combining the testimony of two or more witnesses: 1874, People v. Ah Wee, 48 Cal. 236 (here the deceased's remark in English was reported by one, and the defendant's answer in Chinese by another person); 1875, People v. Keith, 50 Cal. 137, 139.

In many of these rulings, it is a favorite cautionary addition that the exculpatory part need not be believed; the opinion in Tipton v. State, Tenn., supra, perhaps best phrases this; it is never denied, and citations in detail are unnecessary. But obviously it is a superfluous statement. No witness need be believed (ante, § 2034); the jury may always believe as much or as little as they please of his testimony. Furthermore, the complementary and exculpatory part of the confession is put in, not as testimony, but merely as qualifying the effect of the confessing portions; this is more fully considered at large, post, § 2113. There is but one instance in which the tribunal must accept the qualifying portions of a statement and give effect to them as true, and that is a pleading not traversed; because the other party has there admitted the statements in the pleading to be true; this principle is illustrated post, § 2122, in the question whether an entire answer in chancery is to be taken as true.

taken as evidence to convict him, it is but justice and reason, and so allowed in the civil law, that his whole confession shall be evidence as well for as against him; and then there will be no proof of a malicious and seditious publication of this paper, for he confessed that it was delivered by mistake."

1716, Serjeant Hawkins, Pleas of the Crown, II, c. 46, § 40: "It seems an established rule that, wherever a man's confession is made use of against him, it must all be taken together and not by parcels."

1868, WILSON, J., in Johnson v. Powers, 40 Vt. 611, 612: "The object of the party using such declarations or admissions against the party who made them is only to ascertain that which he conceded against himself; yet, unless the whole is received and considered, the true meaning and import of the part which is evidence against him cannot be ascertained. It is therefore a rule of evidence that the whole declaration or admission of the party made at one time shall be taken together; but the jury are at liberty to believe a portion and disbelieve the other, as they are all evidence."

It may be suggested, however, that where the confession is presented in written form — as, in a magistrate's report of a preliminary examination — the considerations affecting written documents should apply (post, § 2103), and the whole need not be put in, because the writing is before the Court, and the accused may have the remainder read for himself.[4] This, however, was apparently not the English practice; the whole was read for the prosecution.

(d) Since Confessions are not admissible against third persons (ante, §§ 1076, 1079), the names of other co-indictees, mentioned in a confession used and read against the party making it, were by most English judges ordered to be omitted.[5] But by other judges the names were ordered read and the jury instructed not to use the confession against them.[6] In Canada and the United States the latter practice is favored.[7] The statement need in theory

[4] 1893, Webb v. State, 100 Ala. 47, 52, 14 So. 865 (entire confession need not be offered by the prosecution). Add here the cases cited ante, § 2098, notes 4, 6, 7, dealing with a defendant's examination before the magistrate.

For the rule of preference that the magistrate's written report must be produced, see ante, § 1326.

[5] 1830, Note by the Reporters, 4 C. & P. 225 ("The practice has been, in reading confessions, to omit the names of other accused parties, and, where they are used, to say 'another person,' 'a third person,' etc., where more than one other prisoner was named; and some judges have even directed witnesses who came to prove verbal declarations to omit the names of those persons in like manner").

[6] 1830, R. v. Clewes, 4 C. & P. 221, 224; R. v. Fletcher, 4 C. & P. 250; R. v. Hearne, 4 C. & P. 215 (all per Littledale, J.); compare R. v. Walkley (1833), 6 C. & P. 175.

[7] CANADA: 1905, R. v. Martin, 9 Ont. L. R. 218 (the whole is read, but the judge instructs the jury "not to pay the slightest attention to it except so far as it goes to affect such person" confessing).

UNITED STATES: Fed. 1896, U. S. v. Ball, 163 U. S. 662, 16 Sup. 1192; Ark. 1904, Howson v. State, 73 Ark. 146, 83 S. W. 933; Del. 1904, State v. Brinte, 4 Del. 551, 58 Atl. 258; Ill. 1914, People v. Hotz, 261 Ill. 239, 103 N. E. 1007; 1916, People v. Buckminster, 274 Ill. 435, 113 N. E. 713 (contra: parts affecting other persons on trial must be omitted if they can be omitted "without in any way weakening the confession as to the one who made it," but the opinion remains obscure, by applying the ruling only to involuntary, i. e. inadmissible confessions); Ky. 1908, Polson v. Com., — Ky. —, 108 S. W. 844; La. 1893, State v. Donelson, 45 La. An. 744, 749, 12 So. 922; 1896, State v. Thibodeaux, 48 La. An. 600, 19 So. 680; 1900, State v. Robinson, 52 La. An. 616, 27 So. 124; 1901, State v. Sims, 106 La. 453, 31 So. 71; Mass. 1896, Com. v. Bishop, 165 Mass. 148, 42 N. E. 560; 1913, Com. v. Borasky, 214 Mass. 313, 101 N. E. 377; 1919, Com. v. Teregno, 234 Mass. 56, 124 N. E. 889 (murder); N. J. 1917, State v. Stanford, 90 N. J. L. 724, 101 Atl. 53; 1921, State v. Newman, 95 N. J. L. 280, 113 Atl. 225 (conspiracy, joint indictees tried together); N. M. 1921, State v. McDaniels, — N. M. —, 196 Pac. 146 (murder); N. Car. 1897, State v.

be only in the nature of an admission (ante, § 1048); yet practically, when it involves others, it ought to be a real confession (ante, § 821).[8]

(c) Of course, the prosecution may desire here to invoke the rule (post, § 2115) allowing the whole to be put in. This is usually the case where the confession contains a mention of another crime committed by the accused. On the usual principles (ante, §§ 194, 300–367), this additional crime would ordinarily not be provable for its own sake; yet under the present principle and that of § 2115, post, the accused's allusion to it in his confession may and must be listened to if it is a part of the one entire statement confessing the crime charged at bar.[9]

B. Documents

§ 2102. (a) Document produced in Court; must the whole be put in? When a document is produced in Court, the principle of Verbal Precision (ante, § 2095, par. 2) is of course usually satisfied, because the document itself contains all of its very words. The only question can be as to the applicability of the other principle, Entirety of Parts (ante, § 2095, par. 2). Here, too, it would seem at first sight that the principle was amply satisfied, since the whole and every part of it is in fact produced in the document itself. Yet not every part may be desired to be put in evidence and read as such by the offeror at that time. Undoubtedly it may be read later by the opponent (post, § 2113). But must the offeror read it then as a part of his evidence?

In the majority of instances, perhaps, the decision of this question either way is of no real consequence, and the application of the rule becomes a mere Collins, 121 N. C. 667, 28 S. E. 520; Okl. 1911, Ford v. State, 5 Okl. Cr. 240, 114 Pac. 273; S. Car. 1881, State v. Workman, 15 S. C. 540, 545; 1881, State v. Dodson, 16 S. C. 453, 460; Tex. 1908, Gibson v. State, 53 Tex. Cr. App. 349, 110 S. W. 41; 1920, Sapp v. State, 87 Tex. Cr. App. 606, 223 S. W. 459 (special discriminations made by Morrow, J.); Utah: 1912, State v. Romeo, 42 Utah 46, 128 Pac. 530; Vt. 1895, State v. Cram, 67 Vt. 650, 32 Atl. 502; 1896, State v. Fournier, 68 Vt. 262, 35 Atl. 178; Wash. 1905, State v. Mann, 39 Wash. 144, 81 Pac. 561; 1912, State v. Beebe, 66 Wash. 463, 120 Pac. 122 (contra, distinguishing State v. Mann in some way not entirely clear).

[8] 1907, McCann v. People, 226 Ill. 562, 80 N. E. 1061 (here two judges dissented because of this principle); 1897, State v. Green, 48 S. C. 136, 26 S. E. 234; 1897, State v. Mitchell, 49 S. C. 410, 27 S. E. 424 (here the whole was excluded, because it was in no sense a confession, but merely a throwing of blame on the other defendant).

The principle upon which the confession can be used against a co-defendant has been considered ante, § 1076; it is only on the supposition that the confession cannot lawfully affect the co-defendant that the above question arises as to omitting names.

[9] There is usually an unnecessary scrupulosity on this point: 1896, Gore v. People, 162 Ill. 259, 266, 44 N. E. 500 (murder); 1905, Wistrand v. People, 218 Ill. 323, 75 N. E. 891 (rape; the whole may be read, under proper instructions); 1854, Lord v. Moore, 37 Me. 208, 217 (civil action for arson; in the defendant's admissions, a part which mentioned another similar act of his was received as being inseparable from the whole); 1904, People v. Loomis, 178 N. Y. 400, 70 N. E. 919 (a confession of another crime, made at the same time as the confession of the crime charged, is not admissible, unless the latter "necessarily relates to another crime" or "is so essentially interwoven with every other part" of the statement that the whole must be listened to); 1908, People v. Rogers, 192 N. Y. 331, 85 N. E. 135 (murder; following People v. Loomis, supra); 1908, People v. Cahill, 193 N. Y. 232, 86 N. E. 38 (electoral perjury; three judges dissenting); 1904, State v. Knapp, 70 Oh. 380, 71 N. E. 705 (wife-murder; defence, insanity; a written confession, recounting also the killing of four other women, held properly admitted, under cautionary instructions); 1907, Barnett v. State, 50 Tex. Cr. 538, 99 S. W. 556 (burglary); 1906, State v. Dalton, 43 Wash. 278, 86 Pac. 590 (murder at a burglary; a confession mentioning former crimes, admitted).

quibble, or a skirmish for a tactical position, involving the rule against impeaching one's own witness (ante, § 909). But in a given case this may not be so, and the question must be answered on principle. Unfortunately, no generally accepted rule seems to have been established, as the following passages illustrate:

1794, Eaton's Trial, 23 How. St. Tr. 1030, Mr. Gurney, for the defence: "I desire that the whole of the [alleged seditious] speech of Mr. Thelwall may be read, a part only of which is included in the indictment." Mr. Fielding, for the prosecution: "You may read it as part of your evidence." Mr. Gurney: "I know I may; but I conceive I have a right to have it read as part of yours. Whenever a part of a paper is read in evidence by one party, the other party has a right to insist upon the whole being read at that time." Mr. RECORDER: "I think you [to Mr. Gurney] must read it as a part of your evidence, if you wish to have it read."

1837, Messrs. Moody & Robinson, Note to 2 Mo. & Rob. 46: "It seems reasonable that, where a party produces a document in evidence, he must be considered as producing the whole of the document; his opponent has therefore a right to refer to any part of it as already in proof. In other words, he may extract the remaining contents of the document (provided they be relevant to the subject-matter) and bring them before the jury, on the same principle that he may by cross-examination extract from a witness all facts within that witness' memory, provided they be relevant to the subject-matter."

1875, Tilton v. Beecher, N. Y., Abbott's Rep. II, 270; Mr. Evarts (cross-examining); "Look at this article, Mr. Tilton, . . . and say if it was written by you and published in your newspaper?" A. "Yes, sir." Mr. Shearman: "It is an article entitled, 'Mr. Tilton's Rejoinder to Mr. Greeley.'" Mr. Fullerton: "If we have the sermon, let us have the text." Mr. Beach: "I think it is the rule, sir, that where an answering letter is read, the letter to which it was a reply should be read also." Judge NEILSON: "That is the rule. Perhaps if counsel will look at it they can judge whether it is material." Mr. Evarts: "Your Honor, we understand exactly what the rule is. All that can be claimed by our learned friends is that it gives them the right to read any part of the paper to which it is a reply, if they see fit. They cannot make us read it." Judge NEILSON: "I have had occasion to say that where one party puts a paper in they were at liberty to read a part of it. But it was deemed all put in by them, and the other side could read any portion of it they thought proper." Mr. Fullerton: "That does not present this case." Mr. Evarts: "How does it fail to present this case? Supposing it is all in, are we obliged to read it all? . . . I do not understand that we are obliged to read the whole article to get at the point which is important to us." Judge NEILSON: "The whole must be deemed put in by you." Mr. Evarts: "That may be." Judge NEILSON: "And you read such part as you now think proper, and they can afterwards call attention to other parts. I think that will answer."

It would seem that the general tendency is to require the whole of a single document to be put in and treated as the evidence of the party desiring to offer a part only, even though the actual reading be postponed. But the rulings are not harmonious, nor always definite.[1] The matter should be left entirely to the discretion of the trial Court.

§ 2102. [1] Eng. 1862, Milne v. Leisler, 7 H. & N. 786, 795 (whole of a letter must be read); Can. 1915, Stanoszek v. Canadian Collieries, 22 D. L. R. 691, B. C. (report of a mine-manager; ruling obscure); U. S. 1899, Wright v. Bragg, 37 C. C. A. 574, 96 Fed. 729 (on a witness' admission of genuineness of a letter and passage in it, opposing counsel may inspect the letter to find explanations in other parts of it); 1869, Spanagel v. Dellinger, 38 Cal.

§ 2103. Same: Depositions and Former Testimony. (1) A deposition represents the answers to the direct examination and the cross-examination. Since the proponent of a witness testifying 'viva voce' offers merely his answers to the direct examination, and the opponent may or may not choose to obtain further testimony on cross-examination, it would seem, by analogy, that the taker of a deposition, when using it, need put in the direct examination only,[1] leaving to the opponent to use the cross-examination or not, as he pleases.[2] The same rule — that not all need be read — should also obtain for the non-taker wishing to use a deposition which the taker has failed to 279, 283 ("they were entitled on demand to a reading of the remaining portions thereof immediately and before the intervention of other evidence"; here, the opponent's pleading in a former suit); 1875, Lester v. Ins. Co., 55 Ga. 475, 479 (part only of a letter may be read; "the whole letter was in evidence," and either party might read relevant portions); 1909, Augusta N. S. Co. v. Forlaw, 133 Ga. 138, 65 S. E. 370 (the whole of a letter need not be offered); 1898, Slingloff v. Bruner, 174 Ill. 561, 51 N. E. 772 (letters showing a testator's feelings; the whole not required to be read); 1904, Fowles v. Joslyn, 135 Mich. 333, 97 N. W. 790 (defendant's book-entry admitting payment, received against him, without offering the entire book).

For the general right to inspect a document before cross-examination begun, see ante, § 1859.

For the time of putting in a contradictory document in impeachment and the time of re-examining upon it for explanations, see ante, § 1261.

§ 2103. [1] Accord: 1897, Bunzel v. Maas, 116 Ala. 68, 22 So. 568; 1920, Bernhardt v. City & Suburban R. Co., — D. C. App. —, 263 Fed. 1009 (plaintiff having failed to read a deposition, defendant then offered to read parts of it; held error to require defendant to read the whole, even as testimony of the plaintiff); 1903, Reed v. Ins. Co., 117 Ga. 116, 43 S. E. 433, semble (remainder of answers to interrogatories may be put in by the opponent, as the evidence of the party offering the first part); 1899, Watson v. R. Co., 76 Minn. 358, 79 N. W. 308 (part may be read, subject to trial Court's order to read all at the same time); 1922, Littig v. Urbauer-Atwood & Co., — Mo. —, 237 S. W. 779 ("reading a detached portion of the deposition or instrument, and then asking the witness whether he made such a statement, etc.," held improper: this is unsound; a lying witness could not be exposed, under such restrictions; e. g. Sir Charles Russell could never have exposed the forger Pigott, in the cross-examination quoted ante, § 1260); 1841, Southwark v. Ins. Co., 6 Whart. Pa. 327, 330 (all of the direct examination must be read); 1892, Thomas v. Miller, 151 Pa. 482, 486, 25 Atl. 127 (same for party's own deposition).

Contra: 1832, Temperley v. Scott, 5 C. & P. 341 (proponent of a deposition required to read the cross-examination after the direct examination; Tindal, C. J.: "If the witness was here, the cross-examination would immediately follow on the examination in chief; and I do not see any reason why they should be separated when the examination is in writing"); 1901, Orland v. Farrell, — Cal. —, 65 Pac. 976; 1872, McArdle v. Bullock, 45 Ga. 89, 92; 1875, Kilbourne v. Jennings, 40 Ia. 473, 474 (co-defendant firm reading a deposition of a partner, obliged to read the whole, so far as pertinent); 1899, Walkley v. Clarke, 107 Ia. 451, 78 N. W. 70 (must read all material parts); 1875, Grant v. Pendery, 15 Kan. 236, 243 (cross-examination also must be read); 1868, Lightfoot v. People, 16 Mich. 507, 511, 516 (the whole must be read, whether used as independent evidence or as containing inconsistent statements serving to impeach); 1874, Hamilton v. People, 29 Mich. 195, 198 (preceding case approved); 1859, Hill v. Sturgeon, 28 Mo. 323, 329; 1883, Converse v. Meyer, 14 Nebr. 190, 15 N. W. 340; 1919, Landis Christmas S. Club v. Merchants' Nat'l Bank, 178 N. C. 403, 100 S. E. 607 (cross-examination must also be read).

Not decided: 1902, Alexander v. Grand Lodge, 119 Ia. 519, 93 N. W. 508.

But of course the whole of each answer must in any case be read and not be taken by sentences or fragments: 1842, Perkins v. Adams, 5 Metc. Mass. 44, 48; compare § 2121, post.

[2] Whether the proponent should read the cross-examination immediately after the taker has read the direct examination, as ruled in Temperley v. Scott, supra, is merely a question of the time and order of evidence (ante, § 1884).

Of course the opponent in such case is not obliged to put in the cross-examination unless he pleases, — any more than he would be obliged to cross-examine on the stand; this is elementary: 1849, Williams v. Kelsey, 6 Ga. 365, 375; 1890, Byers v. Orensstein, 42 Minn. 386, 44 N. W. 129 (here omitting a part only); compare §§ 909, 1893, ante.

But the direct examiner may, on the present principle, put in the cross-answers to a deposition if the cross-examiner does not do so; 1849, Williams v. Kelsey, 6 Ga. 365, 375.

use; and this much seems generally conceded.[3] Where the deposition (so-called) consists of the opponent's answers to interrogatories in the nature of a bill of discovery, the analogy of answers in chancery is the controlling one (post, § 2124).[4]

(2) When testimony at a former trial is offered in the shape of a written verbatim report, and is not proved by oral testimony resting on recollection, the analogy of a deposition would seem to apply, so that the offeror need not read any more than he considers material, the opponent having it conveniently in his power to use the remainder afterwards.[5] Yet the general rule applied for oral utterances, namely, that all the parts must be given, in substance, and so far as relevant (ante, § 2098), would probably by some Courts be here applied.[6]

§ 2104. Same: Separate Writings referred to in the Writing offered; Letters of a Correspondence. Where a writing offered refers to another writing,

[3] Fed. 1909, Crotty v. Chicago Great Western R. Co., 8th C. C. A., 169 Fed. 593 (not all need be read, "if what is read does not consist of mere fragmentary excerpts, a correct appreciation of which depends upon the context"); Ia. 1885, Citizens' Bank v. Rhutasel, 67 Ia. 316, 319, 25 N. W. 261 (the party reading a deposition taken but not used by the opponent must read all that covers "any given subject," but need read no more); 1908, Farmers' Merchants' Bank v. Wood, 143 Ia. 635, 118 N. W. 282 (whether the deposition of an officer of an opponent corporation must all be offered, not decided); Minn. 1899, Watson v. St. P. C. R. Co., 76 Minn. 358, 79 N. W. 308; Nebr. 1883, Converse v. Meyer, 14 Nebr. 190, 15 N. W. 261; 1901, Hamilton B. S. Co. v. Milliken, 62 Nebr. 116, 86 N. W. 913 (need not use the whole, but must offer all that affects a given subject); N. Dak. 1902, First Nat'l Bank v. Minneapolis & N. E. Co., 11 N. D. 280, 91 N. W. 436 (only parts that are relevant must be read); 1904, Gussner v. Hawks, 13 N. D. 453, 101 N. W. 898 (First N. Bank v. M. & N. E. Co. approved; but here the cross-examiner's offer of three answers of the cross-examination only was held insufficient); Okl. 1921, Sealey v. Smith, 81 Okl. 97, 197 Pac. 490 (issue of title; plaintiff allowed to use parts of depositions taken by defendant); Pa. 1844, Calhoun v. Hays, 8 W. & S. 127, 130.

Contra: 1876, Fountain's Adm'r v. Ware, 56 Ala. 558, semble; 1913, Walter v. Sperry, 86 Conn. 474, 85 Atl. 739, semble; 1915, Jonas v. South Covington & C. St. R. Co., 162 Ky. 171, 172 S. W. 131; Hill v. Sturgeon, 28 Mo. 323, 329; 1913, Boney v. Boney, 161 N. C. 614, 77 S. E. 784 (cannot put in the cross-examination alone).

But here may the cross-examiner put in merely the cross-answers, without the related direct answers? On the present principle, he may not; for the cross-answers, like bill and answer in chancery (post, § 2111), are connected with the direct questions. But the same consequence follows also under the rule for order of examination (ante, § 1893), and the authorities are there examined.

If however the cross-examiner does put in the whole, he is not prevented from doing so by the fact that he did not take the deposition; for either party may use a deposition once taken (ante, § 1389).

Whether former testimony reported in writing need be proved by the writing at all is examined elsewhere (ante, § 1326).

Compare the cases cited post, § 2115, n. 3, and ante, § 1045, n. 3.

[4] An opponent's answer in chancery, when used in evidence at law, must by a rule of long tradition be read as a whole if used at all; but, when used in the same suit in chancery, it is a pleading, and only so much need be used as is desired by the one using it, provided he does not separate grammatically connected parts. This much is accepted on all hands. But the subject is so closely united, in the course of precedents, with the further question how much the opponent may put in by way of explanation, that the two matters cannot well be dealt with separately, and they are therefore considered post, § 2121. Whether the bill must be put in with the answer is considered post, § 2111.

[5] 1920, Boulder v. Stewardson, 67 Colo. 582, 189 Pac. 1 (former direct testimony of a deceased witness, admitted without offering the cross-examination); 1897, Waller v. State, 102 Ga. 684, 28 S. E. 284 (in reading the report of a deceased witness' testimony, the prosecution need offer only the direct examination, or such portions as it deems material; the defence being at liberty to read the remaining portions); 1908, Leifheit v. Neylon, 139 Ia. 32, 117 N. W. 4 (testimony of a party-opponent at a former trial, here used as containing admissions; the offerer need read only such parts as he sees fit).

[6] The cases have been placed ante, § 2098.

the latter should also be put in at the same time, provided the reference is such as to make it probable that the latter is requisite to a full understanding of the effect of the former. The same principle would apply to another writing, not expressly referred to, but necessary by the nature of the documents to a proper understanding of the one offered. Much, therefore, will depend upon the circumstances of each case and the character of each document, and no fixed rule can fairly be laid down; the trial Court's discretion should control. Such separate writings have been required to be offered in various classes of cases;[1] in particular, the requirement may be made for other documents referred to in a deposition,[2] or for prior letters of a correspondence referred to in subsequent ones offered,[3] though on the latter point inconsistent general rules have been laid down.

§ 2104. [1] Eng. Thornton v. Stephen, 2 Mo. & Rob. 45 (libel; another document referred to, required to be read by the plaintiff); U. S. 1901, Barber v. International Co., 73 Conn. 587, 48 Atl. 758 (admission of a contract referring to a schedule, without the schedule, held not improper on the facts); 1906, Merchant's L. & T. Co. v. Egan, 222 Ill. 494, 78 N. E. 800 (memorandum referred to in a conversation; the trial Court's discretion controls); 1885, Elmore v. Overton, 104 Ind. 548, 555, 4 N. E. 197 (action for maliciously refusing a license to a qualified teacher; parts of a full set of examination papers, rejected); 1846, Cordray v. Mordecai, 2 Rich. S. C. 518, 525 (an order to sell a ship, and a guaranty by the purchaser, executed at the same time, required to be read together).

[2] 1828, Yates v. Carnsew, 3 C. & P. 99 (defendant had been examined in bankruptcy, and his books had at that time been inspected at his office for convenience' sake; held that his examination and the inspection were "all one transaction," and the latter could not be used without the former); 1831, Hewitt v. Pigott, 5 C. & P. 75 (letter to the plaintiff, handed in with his answer in chancery in another proceeding, not allowed to be used here without the answer in chancery); 1837, R. v. Dennis, 2 Lew. Cr. C. 261 (defendant's examination before a magistrate may be put in without putting in all the preceding depositions, because it is "not an answer to the depositions but to the charge"; but any particular deposition referred to must be read).

[3] Eng. 1801, Johnson v. Gilson, 4 Esp. 21 (opponent's letter produced and read; held, that a reference in the letter to papers inclosed in it made their reading necessary if it "refers to them in such a way that it is necessary to incorporate the papers inclosed with the body of the letter in order to make it intelligible or the sense complete," but not if they were "independent papers not referred to by the letter but which it only covers"); 1844, Watson v. Moore, 1 C. & K. 626 (a letter offered which appeared to be an answer to one of the offeror's; the latter required to be offered with it); U. S. 1858, Coats v. Gregory, 10 Ind. 345, 346 (letter of plaintiff offered as containing extracts from letters and statements of defendant; rejected, the whole of the quoted letters, etc., not accompanying it).

Contra: Eng. 1795, Barrymore v. Taylor, 1 Esp. 326 (because the prior letters were in the receiver's hands, "and if he thought them necessary to explain the transaction, he might produce them"); 1850, DeMedina v. Owen, 3 C. & K. 72; U. S. 1832, U. S. v. Doebler, 1 Baldw. 519, 522, semble (forgery, an accomplice wrote to defendant telling him to write if he wanted any more forged notes; defendant wrote to ask for some; the latter letter proved, without proving the former); 1897, Barnes v. Trust Co., 169 Ill. 112, 48 N. E. 31 (letter by the defendant in answer to one from the plaintiff, put in by the plaintiff; held, that the one from the plaintiff need not be put in at the same time, being receivable afterwards from the defendant); 1871, Brayley v. Ross, 33 Ia. 505, 508 (not required, unless the initial letter is necessary to the correct understanding of the reply); 1870, Stone v. Sanborn, 104 Mass. 319, 324 (breach of promise of marriage; the plaintiff offered certain of the defendant's letters containing admissions of the promise and words constituting a breach; held, that so far as any letter of the defendant appeared to be a reply to a letter of the plaintiff, this did not require the latter to be put in jointly; "when a particular communication which refers to a previous one is not introduced as containing the terms of a contract, we see no more reason for obliging the party to put in the previous communication also, when the communications are written, than when they are oral"); 1899, New Hampshire T. Co. v. Korsmeyer P. & H. Co., 57 Nebr. 784, 78 N. W. 303 (in offering a reply-letter of opponent, the answered letter need not be offered, where the former "is fairly self-explanatory"); 1856, Hayward R. Co. v. Duncklee, 30 Vt. 29, 39 (letter leading to a reply-letter from a third person; former letter not required, being unavailable).

§ 2105. (b) Document Lost or Destroyed; (1) Deeds, Letters, Contracts, Abstracts, etc.; Substance of the Material Parts suffices. In dealing with the general principle requiring the production of a documentary original if it is available, it has already been seen (ante, § 1267) that testimony based on recollection is an allowable mode of proof for lost documents, though for some kinds of documents testimony by copy is preferred if it can be had (ante, §§ 1268–1272). Assuming, then, that there is no prohibition of any qualified witness to the contents of a lost or destroyed document, the question arises, under the present principle, how far Completeness is required in the proof of its terms.

Here must be distinguished the sub-principles (ante, § 2095, par. 2) of Verbal Precision and of Entirety of Parts. (a) As to Entirety of Parts, it is clear that for documents having in themselves a legal effect — such as deeds and contracts — all the material parts must be established by the testimony to contents. It would be imprudent to act judicially upon a part of a document whose material effect must depend equally upon other and missing parts. This practice, doubtless, would sometimes leave honest rights unenforceable because their tenor is unknown; but this contingency is preferable to the constant and greater risk in the other direction. Much will depend, to be sure, on the circumstances of each case, for certain parts of a document might alone be material in certain litigation and the remainder immaterial. Moreover, for writings not having in themselves a legal effect — such as letters involving admissions — less strictness ought to be observed. (b) As to the other sub-principle, however, namely, Verbal Precision, the opposite conclusion is to be approved. Not only are the identical words not always essential, but the proof of them, when a copy does not exist, is practically impossible. To insist on complete verbal accuracy would be in effect to prohibit entirely the proof of lost documents by recollection, and this, as above noted, would be contrary to a fundamental principle. Verbal precision of proof, then, is usually not insisted upon, and could not be.

The substance of the material parts, but by no means the words themselves (except, of course, so far as the witness is able), is the rational limit of the law's requirement. This principle has been repeatedly enunciated judicially:

1794, L. C. J. EYRE, in Hardy's Trial, 24 How. St. Tr. 681: "That paper being destroyed, the witness will give such account of it as he can; he may either refresh his memory by looking at this paper, or if he can venture to say that this contains in it the substance of the other, it may be received upon that account as the best evidence."

1828, MARSHALL, C. J., in Tayloe v. Riggs, 1 Pet. 591, 600: "When a written contract is to be proved, not by itself but by parol testimony, no vague uncertain recollection concerning its stipulations ought to supply the place of the written instrument itself. The substance of the agreement ought to be proven satisfactorily."

1857, GOOKINS, J., in Thompson v. Thompson, 9 Ind. 323, 333 (holding that the date of a deed need not be shown): "Proof of its contents is necessarily addressed to the jury; but under the direction of the Court that on the one hand vague and uncertain recollection will not do, and on the other that a degree of precision which the memory never retains is not required. The property conveyed, the estate created, the conditions annexed, the signing, sealing, and delivery, are required to be proved with reasonable certainty by witnesses who can testify clearly to its tenor and contents."

1861, JENKINS, J., in Roe & McDowell v. Doe & Irwin, 32 Ga. 39, 50: "We know of no rule which determines with precision the degree of fulness with which the contents of a deed shall be stated in such cases. We think all the law requires is a statement of the substantial, material parts of a deed, so that the jury may determine who were the parties, what the subject of conveyance, whether a deed was really signed, sealed, delivered, and attested as the law requires, and, as nearly as may be, the time of execution."

1884, SCHOLFIELD, C. J., in Perry v. Burton, 111 Ill. 138, 140: "A witness testifying to the contents of a lost deed is not to be expected to be able to repeat it 'verbatim' from memory. . . . All that parties, in such cases, can be expected to remember is that they made a deed, to whom, and about what time, for what consideration, whether warranty or quit-claim, and for what party. To require more would, in most instances, practically amount to an exclusion of oral evidence in the case of a lost or destroyed deed."

(1) In the application of this principle to documents in general there is ample room for difference of opinion as to the soundness of particular rulings; the principle deserves liberal treatment, and this it has not always received. But, as to the principle itself, there seems to be no controversy.[1]

§ 2105. [1] The following cases include those which merely require a stronger degree of proof of the contents than mere preponderance of evidence, under the principle of § 2498, post; Courts do not always distinguish the two principles; compare also the cases applying the Opinion rule to a witness' impression or understanding (ante, § 1957).

CANADA: 1841, Doe v. Stiles, 1 Kerr N. Br. 338, 346 (deed's terms held not sufficiently shown); 1849, Doe v. Jack, 1 All. N. Br. 476 (surrender of lease; rules of sufficiency, declared); 1887, Ross v. Williamson, 14 Ont. 184 (agreement; sufficiency of contents, defined).

UNITED STATES: Federal: 1822, U. S. v. Britton, 2 Mason 464, 468 (the contents must be "pointedly and clearly" described); 1828, Riggs v. Taylor, 1 Pet. 591, 600 (contract; quoted supra); 1851, U. S. v. Macomb, 5 McLean 286, 298 (substance of an instrument, sufficient); Alabama: 1859, Shorter v. Sheppard, 33 Ala. 648, 653 (proof must be "clear and satisfactory and such as to secure as far as possible the safety designed to be given by the written evidence"); 1888, Potts v. Coleman, 86 Ala. 94, 100, 5 So. 780 (substance or substantial parts of a lost deed, sufficient); 1895, Elyton Land Co. v. Denny, 108 Ala. 553, 561, 18 So. 561 (acreage and grantor of deed mentioned, but not signature, attestation, record, length, boundaries, or words; excluded); 1901, Anniston C. L. Co. v. Edmondson, 127 Ala. 445, 30 So. 61 (parts of a deed allowed to be proved); 1901, Laster v. Blackwell, 128 Ala. 143, 30 So. 663 (testimony to the substance of a lost deed, held sufficient); Arkansas: 1838, Brown v. Hicks, 1 Ark. 233, 243, semble (copy of a bill of sale "substantially the same," held not sufficient); 1853, Hooper v. Chism, 13 Ark. 496, 501 ("reasonable certainty" required as to its terms; here, a lost bill of sale, insufficiently proved); 1905, Carpenter v. Jones, 76 Ark. 163, 88 S. W. 871 (lost deed; instructions passed upon; foregoing cases not cited); California: 1855, Posten v. Rassette, 5 Cal. 469; 1860, Collier v. Corbett, 15 Cal. 183, 186 (contents of lost deeds, held sufficiently proved); 1903, Kenniff v. Caulfield, 140 Cal. 34, 73 Pac. 803 (substance of a deed suffices); Florida: 1895, Edwards v. Rives, 35 Fla. 89, 17 So. 416 (substance sufficient; see this case in another aspect, ante, § 1957); Georgia: 1831, Bank v. Brown, Dudley 62, 65 (part of a letter, insufficient on the facts); 1861, Roe & McDowell v. Doe & Irwin, 32 Ga. 39, 50 (deed sufficiently proved on the facts); 1861, Bond v. Whitfield, 32 Ga. 215, 217 (judicially established copy of a bill of exchange, held imperfect on the facts); 1896, Neely v. Carter, 96 Ga. 197, 23 S. E. 313 (copy of a deed showing several signers, though the execution by one only had been proved, excluded); Illinois: 1846, Rector v. Rector, 8 Ill. 105, 119 ("it should be made satisfactorily to appear what were the substantial conditions and covenants"; here said of specific enforcement of a contract); 1858, Rankin v. Crow, 19 Ill. 630; 1859, Bennett v. Walker, 23 Ill. 97, 103 (contents of a deed sufficiently shown; careful opinion); 1864, Owen v. Thomas, 33 Ill. 320, 326 (deed; contents not sufficiently proved); 1872, Case v. Lyman, 66 Ill. 229, 233 (lost letter; contents sufficiently shown); 1874, King v. Worthington, 73 Ill. 161, 163 (substance of deeds, etc., sufficient); 1882, Rhode v. McLean, 101 Ill. 467, 471 (bond sufficiently proved); 1884, Perry v. Burton, 111 Ill. 138 (quoted supra); 1899, Harrell v.

Enterprise Sav. Bank, 183 Ill. 538, 56 N. E. 63 (Perry v. Burton approved; an entry that land had been "conveyed," held sufficient on the facts); 1903, South Chicago B. Co. v. Taylor, 205 Ill. 132, 68 N. E. 732 (a quitclaim deed said to be "similar" to one lost, excluded); 1916, Shipley v. Shipley, 274 Ill. 506, 113 N. E. 906 (deed destroyed before recording); Indiana: 1857, Thompson v. Thompson, 9 Ind. 323, 333 (date of a deed need not be proved); 1858, Wiggins v. Holley, 11 Ind. 11 (not sufficient on the facts); Iowa: 1879, Elwell v. Walker, 52 Ia. 256, 261, 3 N. W. 64 (antenuptial contract in letters; proof of contents not sufficiently definite); 1880, Jackson v. Benson, 54 Ia. 655, 7 N. W. 88 (that a deed was a warranty deed, excluded); 1884, Ross v. Loomis, 64 Ia. 437, 20 N. W. 749 (substance of a deed, sufficient); Maine: 1858, Tobin v. Shaw, 45 Me. 331, 349 (contents of letters, "so far as she recollected," allowed); 1886, Camden v. Belgrade, 78 Me. 204, 3 Atl. 652 (substance sufficient; here a marriage certificate); Maryland: 1893, Baltimore v. War, 77 Md. 593, 603, 27 Atl. 85 (letter described as being "an order to put B. to work," held insufficient); 1909, Robinson v. Singerly P. & P. Co., 110 Md. 382, 72 Atl. 828 (lost agreement, sufficiently shown); Massachusetts: 1858, Clark v. Houghton, 12 Gray 44 (substance sufficient); Michigan: 1882, People v. McKinney, 49 Mich. 334, 336, 13 N. W. 619 (letters; one who remembered a part of their substance, admitted); 1890, Shouler v. Bonander, 80 Mich. 531, 535, 45 N. W. 487 (substance must be shown; here, an agreement); 1899, Holmes v. Deppert, 122 Mich. 275, 80 N. W. 1094 (lost deed; "the words or the substance of the words," sufficient, but not the "sense of the deed"); Minnesota: 1889, Wakefield v. Day, 41 Minn. 344, 347, 43 N. W. 71 (lost deed's contents must be "clearly established"); 1908, Rogers v. Clark Iron Co., 104 Minn. 198, 116 N. W. 739 (lost land-patent; Perry v. Burton, Ill. approved); Mississippi: 1854, Mayson v. Beazley, 27 Miss. 106 (full abstract of the contents of lost partnership-books, admitted); 1876, Jelks v. Barrett, 52 Miss. 315, 321 (lost deeds, map, etc., proved in sufficient fulness); Missouri: 1878, Wilkerson v. Allen, 67 Mo. 502, 510 (contents of advertisement, sufficiently proved); 1886, Strange v. Crowley, 91 Mo. 287, 294, 2 S. W. 421 (substance of a letter, received); 1920, Gipson v. Owens, 286 Mo. 33, 226 S. W. 856 (deed of adoption; evidence of substantial contents held insufficient); Montana: 1904, Capell v. Fagan, 29 Mont. 507, 77 Pac. 55 (deed's terms not sufficiently shown); New Jersey: 1913, Borstelman v. Brohan, 81 N. J. Eq. 401, 87 Atl. 145 (proof should be "clear and cogent"); New York: 1820, Jackson v. M'Vey, 18 John. 330, 333 ("We consider the conclusion unsound that because a witness cannot recollect the courses of the description in a deed, that therefore he cannot prove the contents of it"); 1847, Sizer v. Burt, 4 Den. 426, 429 (a witness to the contents of a memorandum of claims spoke of it as "containing a list of claims . . . but these two were all that in any way referred to" the claim in hand, and then read a copy of those two items in the memorandum; held that he had in substance given the entire contents, and that therefore the fact that the exact copy covered a part only was immaterial); 1850, Metcalf v. Van Benthuysen, 3 N. Y. 424, 428 ("the substance of the contents of the operative parts of the instruments," required; here on the facts a deed was not substantially proved); 1865, Graham v. Chrystal, 2 Abb. App. C. 263 (one who "thought he might perhaps state" the substance of letters, held properly excluded); 1875, Edwards v. Noyes, 65 N. Y. 126, semble (substance required); North Carolina: 1835, Kello v. Maget, 1 Dev. & B. 414, 424 (abstract of a bond receivable, where no copy exists); 1906, Ivey v. Bessemer C. C. Mills, 143 N [illegible] 55 S. E. 613 (a "substantial copy of t[illegible] part of a letter," excluded, on the f[illegible], State v. Corpening, 157 N. C. 621, [illegible]14 (part of a letter of defendant being [illegible]oyed, the remainder containing admissions was received; but the opinion does not show appreciation of the question involved); 1904, Simpson v. Weise, 34 Wash. 360, 75 Pac. 973 (a memorandum of a contract detained by the opponent may suffice); 1909, Scurry v. Seattle, 56 Wash. 1, 104 Pac. 1129 (deed with conditions, held not sufficiently evidenced); Con. St. 1919, § 1766 (when a deed is shown to be lost or destroyed, and the registry also is destroyed, and no copy can be had, the deed will be presumed to have "transferred an estate in fee simple," if the grantor had one, and to have been made upon sufficient consideration); Ohio: 1875, Gillmore v. Fitzgerald, 26 Oh. St. 171, 174 (deed's contents not sufficiently shown); Pennsylvania: 1821, Dennis v. Barber, 6 S. & R. 420 (an over-strict ruling); 1832, Hart v. Yunt, 1 Watts 253 (brief abstract of receipts, showing only the sums mentioned in each, semble, inadmissible); 1854, Bell v. Young, 3 Grant 175 ("As to the degree of certainty required in secondary evidence, the law has no rule, except that it need not be a copy of the lost instrument"; here testimony that a note was for "about $80, above $70," was held sufficient); 1860, Boyd v. Com., 36 Pa. 355, 359 (docket entry of contents of a trustee's bond, filed but lost, received); 1870, Coxe v. England, 65 Pa. 212, 223 (portion of contents of a letter, held insufficient); 1895, Burr v. Kase, 168 Pa. 81, 31 Atl. 954 (proof insufficient on the facts); Texas: 1887, Shifflet v. Morelle, 68 Tex. 382, 387 (title-documents destroyed; testimony that in substance they vested title in J. M., excluded; opinion rule invoked); 1921, Hutchison v. Massie, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 226 S. W. 695 (lost deed; evidence of its terms, held not sufficient); Vermont: 1830, Booge v. Parsons, 2 Vt. 456, 459

(2) The same principle should apply where the original document, though produced, is illegible.[2]

(3) It would follow from the foregoing that, as to lost deeds, a conveyancer's abstract of title, as ordinarily made up, would suffice when verified by him as a witness on the stand.[3] To avoid the inconvenience of calling such persons in every instance, and to meet the objection of the Hearsay rule, as well as to provide for the preservation of trustworthy abstracts and notes, a statute has in several States authorized the use of such abstracts under special conditions without calling the maker.[4]

(4) A peculiar case arises where the deed is sought to be proved (the production of the original being excused) by a public deed-register containing only an abstract, not a full copy, of the deed. Here the present principle would not necessarily allow the use of these recorded-abstracts, because the original might still be available, though not required to be produced (ante, § 1224); accordingly they have sometimes been excluded.[5] But the matter is also complicated by the question whether these records are (as official statements) sufficiently authorized by law to be used at all, even if they are full copies; and the rulings under that principle (ante, §§ 1648, 1651, 1682) must be considered in reaching a conclusion.

Whether the copy of a recorded deed must indicate or recite the existence of the seal on the deed was formerly a much mooted topic; it involved three questions, whether the deed was valid without bearing a seal, whether the record was valid without recording the seal, and the present one, whether the copy sufficed in completeness.[6]

(lost deed; testimony that P. "deeded to O. and J. his right in said town, designating lot No. 57 as a part of said right," held insufficient by itself); 1839, Cleavland v. Button, 11 Vt. 138 (bond apparently destroyed; evidence held not "clear, satisfactory, and conclusive"); Virginia: 1871, Poague v. Spriggs, 21 Gratt. 220, 231 (loose testimony as to the contents of important letters, received, but held insufficient to produce persuasion).

Distinguish the following question of criminal pleading: 1901, State v. Peterson, 129 N. C. 556, 40 S. E. 9 (indictment for forging a lost note; proof of the substance, held sufficient).

[2] Eng. 1842, Lord Trimlestown v. Kemmis, 9 Cl. & F. 749, 775 (mutilated deed, received on the facts); U. S. 1812, Peart v. Taylor, 2 Bibb Ky. 556, 559 (mutilated letter, received, as "its fair import can be collected with certainty"); 1827, Rhoades v. Selin, 4 Wash. C. C. 715, 717 (a copy "so far as the deed is legible," admitted). The following ruling is over-strict: Ire. 1795, R. v. Jackson, Dublin, Ridgeway's Rep. 67 (a seditious letter was offered to be proved by a press copy; but as it was "not legible throughout," it was excluded).

[3] Some of the foregoing cases were doubtless of this sort.

[4] These have been placed ante, § 1705, with the rulings applying them. Compare the citations post, § 2109.

[5] 1839, New Jersey R. & T. Co. v. Suydam, 17 N. J. L. 25, 59, per Dayton, J. (a registry of mortgages contained by law merely an abstract; neither the registry nor a copy of it admissible to show the contents of the original). Contra: 1886, Smith v. Lindsey, 89 Mo. 76, 80, 1 S. W. 88 (abstract or index of deeds, made by law, admissible where the full records are destroyed and the originals unavailable); 1851, Garrigues v. Harris, 16 Pa. St. 344, 352 (abstract of a N. J. mortgage, received, because supposed to be there allowed by law); 1825, Bird v. Smith, 3 McC. S. C. 300 (under a statute authorizing certified copies of North Carolina grants, a certified copy of the plat and the memorial or abstract of the grant was receivable, the complete grant being well understood not to be recorded). Compare § 1225, ante.

Sometimes a statute expressly regulates the matter: Ont. Rev. St. 1914, c. 122, § 2 (contracts for sale of land; quoted ante, § 1225); Mich. Comp. L. 1915, §§ 2817, 3162, 3397 (village or city or county condemnation proceedings; register's or deputy's certified abstract of title, admissible to show ownership).

[6] The substantive law being so much involved, the authorities cannot be here col-

(5) From the foregoing general principle must be distinguished the operation of certain distinct principles which sometimes have a bearing on the same situation: (a) A witness who has not read all of a document is not qualified to speak to its terms, and is therefore excluded at the outset (ante, § 1278). Supposing him to be properly qualified in this respect, the present principle then operates to exclude his testimony if he cannot recollect the substance of the contents. (b) A witness must not, in testifying to the contents of a deed or the like document, give his opinion as to its legal effect, but must state the concrete facts of its terms. This application of the Opinion rule to proof of the contents of a document has already been considered (ante, § 1957); but in one or two instances the rulings above cited appear to proceed upon this ground; the rulings (ante, § 2097), distinguishing between the "substance" and "effect" of an oral utterance, proceed upon the same principle. (c) It is a much mooted question whether an opponent's admissions of a document's contents suffice to exempt from producing the original (ante, § 1255); assuming that they do, it would seem to follow that the admission need not be precise and detailed as to the terms of the document, but may merely admit its general tenor and effect.[7] (d) The degree of persuasion — whether beyond a reasonable doubt, or the like — required for proof of a lost deed is usually greater than that required ordinarily in civil cases (post, § 2498).

§ 2106. Same: (2) Wills. It has already been seen (ante, § 1267) that the contents of a lost will may be proved by testimony from recollection as well as by copy. But, in applying the present principle and asking what detail of terms must be reached by the proof, it is obvious that somewhat more strictness is allowable for proof of wills. Not only is the case of a lost will commonly more material (owing to the lack of a registration system) than of an alleged lost deed, but the contingent harm at stake is less, since the devolution of property to the legal heirs is (in the traditional English belief) less of an injustice to the devisee who cannot prove the will than would be the loss of title by a grantee who was unable to prove the terms of his deed against the grantor or his successors. There is therefore, both in lected; the following will give a clue: 1859, Smith v. Dall, 15 Cal. 510; 1864, Holbrook v. Nichol, 36 Ill. 161, 164; 1866, Deininger v. McConnel, 41 Ill. 227, 232; 1900, Pease v. Sanderson, 188 Ill. 597, 59 N. E. 425; 1859, Switzer v. Knapp, 10 Ia. 72, 75; 1816, Hedden v. Overton, 4 Bibb 406; 1874, Starkweather v. Martin, 28 Mich. 471; 1901, Strain v. Fitzgerald, 128 N. C. 396, 38 S. E. 929; N. C. St. 1915, c. 249 (certified copies by the State secretary of abstracts of grants not reciting the great seal of State to have been affixed to the original are admissible); 1915, Howell v. Hurley, 170 N. C. 401, 87 S. E. 107 (applying St. 1915, c. 249); 1899, State v. Cooper, — Tenn. Ch. —, 53 S. W. 391; 1895, Reusens v. Lawson, 91 Va. 226, 21 S. E. 347; 1903, Virginia Coal & I. Co. v. Keystone C. & I. Co., 101 Va. 723, 45 S. E. 291 (land-patent); 1850, Williams v. Bass, 22 Vt. 352; 1904, Wilson v. Braden, 56 W. Va. 372, 49 S. E. 409; 1902, Peters v. Reichenbach, 114 Wis. 209, 90 N. W. 184.

[7] 1851, Pritchard v. Bagshawe, 11 C. B. 459, 463 (an abstract of deeds, received as an admission of the deeds' contents; Jervis, C. J.: "It would be a dangerous principle to lay down that a statement made by a party is not evidence against him because it is not quite full"). Contra: 1859, Shorter v. Sheppard, 33 Ala. 648, 658, semble (admission that a person had "reconveyed," held insufficient to establish its contents).

policy and in practice, more strictness shown in requiring proof of the terms of an alleged lost will.

They must be "clearly and satisfactorily" proved, it is usually said.[1]

§ 2106. [1] These rulings, as noted later, deal also in part with the degree of persuasion which the tribunal must reach; but it is practically convenient to place them all here:

ENGLAND: 1823, Lemann v. Bonsall, 1 Add. 389, 390 (nuncupative will; "the true import and substance, at least," must be proved); 1823, Foster v. Foster, 1 Add. 462, 465 (a good example of a will made up of torn fragments with the gaps supplied by the draftsman's recollection); 1876, Sugden v. St. Leonards, L. R. 1 P. D. 154 (quoted supra); 1890, Harris v. Knight, L. R. 15 P. D. 170, 179 ("by evidence which is so clear and satisfactory as to remove, not all possible, but all reasonable doubts on those points"); 1917, Phibbs' Estate, Prob. 93 (will destroyed by fire in the post-office; here the names of the attesting witnesses could not be ascertained).

CANADA: 1890, McLeod's Estate, 23 N. Sc. 154, 162 (codicil's contents held not sufficiently shown).

UNITED STATES: Alabama: 1884, Jaques v. Horton, 76 Ala. 238, 245 (proof must be "clear and positive"); 1886, Skeggs v. Horton, 82 Ala. 353, 354, 2 So. 110 (but it need not be proved beyond a reasonable doubt); 1914, Allen v. Scruggs, 190 Ala. 654, 67 So. 301 (substance only is required, not the words); Arkansas: Dig. 1919, § 10545 (inadmissible "unless its provisions be clearly and distinctly proved by at least one witness, a correct copy or draft being deemed equivalent to one witness"); California: C. C. P. 1872, § 1339 ("its provisions" must be "clearly and distinctly proved by at least two credible witnesses"); 1901, Camp's Estate, 134 Cal. 233, 66 Pac. 227 (will held sufficiently established on the facts); 1909, Patterson's Estate, 155 Cal. 426, 102 Pac. 941 (a part distinctly proved can be given effect); Connecticut: 1874, Johnson's Will, 40 Conn. 587, 589 (not sufficiently proved on the facts); Delaware: 1849, Butler v. Butler, 5 Harringt. 178 (see quotation supra); Georgia: Rev. C. 1910, § 3863 (must be "clearly proved"); Illinois: 1882, Anderson v. Irwin, 101 Ill. 411, 415 (will sufficiently proved on the facts, quoted supra); 1913, Cassem v. Prindle, 258 Ill. 11, 101 N. E. 241 ("substance of the will" suffices); Indiana: 1894, Jones v. Casler, 139 Ind. 382, 384, 38 N. E. 812 (will sufficiently proved on the facts); Kentucky: 1838, Allison's Dev. v. Allison's Heirs, 7 Dana 90, 95 (proof of "the substance of the different devises as to the property or interest devised, and to whom devised," held sufficient); 1844, Steele v. Price, 5 B. Monr. 58, 65 (will sufficiently proved on the facts); 1907, Bradshaw v. Butler, 125 Ky. 162, 100 S. W. 837 (Steele v. Price followed); Maine: 1910, In re Lord's Will, 106 Me. 51, 75 Atl. 286 ("clear, strong, satisfactory, and convincing"; why not add, "positive, plain, pronounced, and persuasive"?); Maryland: 1913, Tinnan v. Fitzpatrick, 120 Md. 342, 87 Atl. 802 (purporting, executor the sole beneficiary with holding a will for eight years until all attesting witnesses were dead, and then coming forward with a copy, the original having been destroyed in a great conflagration; proof held not sufficient); Massachusetts: 1844, Davis v. Sigourney, 8 Metc. 487 (where the proof is by "the recollection of witnesses, the evidence must be strong, positive, and free from doubt"; here there was some doubt as to whether certain estates were for life or in fee); 1900, Tarbell v. Forbes, 177 Mass. 238, 58 N. E. 873 ("what is required is the substance of its material provisions"; explaining Davis v. Sigourney); Missouri: 1835, Jackson v. Jackson, 4 Mo. 210 (part of a lost will may suffice); 1839, Dickey v. Malechi, 6 Mo. 177, 184 (same); Nebraska: 1903, Williams v. Miles, 68 Nebr. 463, 94 N. W. 705, 96 N. W. 151 (there must be "clear and convincing" proof); New Jersey: 1863, Wyckoff v. Wyckoff, 16 N. J. Eq. 401, 405 ("The true rule is that the will may be established upon satisfactory proof of the destruction of the instrument and of its contents or substance; whether the proof be by one witness or by many, it must be clear, satisfactory, and convincing"); 1898, Coddington v. Jenner, 57 N. J. Eq. 528, 41 Atl. 874 (must be "clear, satisfactory, and convincing"); New York: 1844, Grant v. Grant, 1 Sandf. Ch. 235, 243, semble ("substantial contents" suffice); 1922, Fox's Will, Surr., 193 N. Y. Suppl. 232 (terms of will, not sufficiently shown); Ohio: Gen. C. 1921, §§ 10546, 10547, Rev. St. 1898, § 5947 (contents of lost or destroyed will may be "substantially proved"); Oklahoma: Comp. St. 1921, § 1123 ("No will shall be proved as a lost or destroyed will . . . unless its provisions are clearly and distinctly proved by at least two credible witnesses"); Pennsylvania: 1906, Michell v. Low, 213 Pa. 526, 63 Atl. 246; Philippine Isl. 1906, Araujo v. Celis, 6 P. I. 223 (proof not sufficient); 1906, Timbol v. Manalo, 6 P. I. 254 (proof held sufficient); South Dakota: Rev. C. 1919, § 3214 (like Okl. Comp. St. § 1123); Tennessee: 1897, McNeely v. Pearson, — Tenn. —, 42 S. W. 165 (must be "clear and convincing"); Vermont: 1842, Minkler v. Minkler, 14 Vt. 125, 127; 1868, Dudley v. Wardner, 41 Vt. 59 ("full and satisfactory" proof; here a copy was said to be receivable); Virginia: 1896, Thomas v. Ribble, — Va. —, 24 S. E. 241 (proof must be very clear).

Though the situation obviously admits of no fixed rule, the following passages will illustrate the general mode of judicial treatment:

1876, COCKBURN, C. J., in Sugden v. St. Leonards, L. R. 1 P. D. 154, 161, 230 (here the will was lost, but there was evidence of its contents in the shape of a summary by a witness who had many times read it or heard parts read, of eight codicils, and of other fragmentary evidence): "[As regards the question] whether, assuming that we have not before us all the contents of the lost will, probate should be allowed of that which we have, so long as we are satisfied that we have the substantial parts of the will made out, I cannot bring myself to entertain a doubt. If part of a will were accidentally burnt, or if a portion of it were torn out designedly by a wrongdoer, it would nevertheless, in my opinion, be the duty of a court of probate to give effect to the will of the testator as far as it could be ascertained. It is not because some, who would otherwise have benefited by the will, may thus fail to profit by the intended dispositions of the testator, that his will should be frustrated and fail of effect where his intentions remain clearly manifest. . . . I think that there could not be a more mischievous consequence; and although it may be unfortunate that the will cannot be carried into execution to the full extent of the testamentary dispositions of the testator, I think that of two evils or inconveniences it is far better, where the Court can see its way to the essentially substantial dispositions made in a will, that it should give effect to them, although possibly some of the intentions of the testator may not be carried into effect."

1849, WOOTTEN, J., in Butler v. Butler, 5 Harringt. 178, 179: "Proving part only of the contents of a will which is lost or destroyed is not sufficient to establish it, even as to the part so proved, unless it satisfactorily appears that there is nothing in the preceding or subsequent part of the will which would qualify, change, or in any way alter the particular devise proved; for without knowing the certainty of the will, and the language used by the testator, it would be impossible to determine what estate would pass by it. The words of the particular devise which may be attempted to be established might convey a fee simple; yet something might precede or follow which would reduce it to a life estate or subject it to some other restriction or limitation; or the words of the devise might create but a life estate, which by the preceding and subsequent part of the will might be enlarged and extended to a fee simple; and either an estate in fee simple, for life, or for years, might depend entirely upon some contingencies, conditions, limitations, or restrictions imposed by some subsequent part of the will. . . . [The proof should be] at least sufficient to form the basis of a correct conclusion as to the legal import of the will, and the nature and extent of the estate conveyed by it. Any rule less stringent would, instead of closing the avenues to fraud, throw open the door to those of a much more serious and dangerous character than could reasonably be expected to result from the loss or destruction of such instruments."

1882, MULKEY, J., in Anderson v. Irwin, 101 Ill. 411, 414: "The law is intended to be practical in its application to the varied transactions and circumstances which go to make up the affairs of life and which are constantly giving rise to legal controversies. . . . The counterpart of this [the best evidence] rule is, the law is always satisfied where the fact sought to be established has been proven by the best evidence of which in its nature it is susceptible. . . . The instrument in controversy having been destroyed without the fault of the defendant in error and with the connivance of a part if not all of the plaintiffs in error who interposed any defence in the court below, and there not appearing to be any copy of it in existence, it would be equivalent to denying the plaintiff relief altogether to require her to prove the very terms in which it was conceived. All that could reasonably be required of her under such circumstances would be to show in general terms the disposition which the testator made of his property by the instrument, that it purported to be his will, and was duly attested by the requisite number of witnesses."

This general principle has been applied in different courts with varying degrees of strictness, and no more detailed rule can be deduced; a statute, however, often adopts a rule in some similar form of words.

From the operation of the present principle, however, must be distinguished certain others: (a) The degree of persuasion — whether beyond a reasonable doubt, or the like — which is required for the tribunal in proof of a lost will is apparently greater than that ordinarily demanded — i. e. persuasion by preponderance of evidence — in other civil cases (post, § 2498). The same rulings usually lay down both principles without discrimination in the same phrases (as illustrated in the citations above), yet the fulness of detail as to the contents of the will and the degree of persuasion as to the fact of these contents are certainly different things, and may properly be distinguished even though judges may fail to do so. (b) The number of witnesses required in proof of the contents of a lost will is no other than is required in other documentary cases (ante, § 2052); yet the execution of it must of course be proved by the same number that would have been required for a will produced 'in specie' (ante, §§ 1304, 2048, 2049). (c) A fragment of a will never executed is of course not receivable, because it never became a will,[2] but it is in that case not rejected because of the present rule. (d) When a will has been probated, it becomes part of the record of the judgment of probate; whether it can be used in another court by copy of the will alone, without also bringing a copy of the remainder of the probate proceedings, is therefore a question of proving the parts of a judicial record (post, § 2110). (e) Whether a lost will must be evidenced preferably by a copy, was once much debated (ante, § 1267).

§ 2107. (c) Public Records; (1) Lost or Destroyed; Substance suffices; Burnt Record Acts. When a public record is lost or destroyed, the same situation exists as for private documents lost or destroyed; hence, as already noticed (ante, § 2105), verbal precision of proof cannot be required, but entirety of material parts must be insisted upon. The substance of the missing document suffices;[1] and a statute sometimes expressly sanctions this for specific classes of records.[2]

[2] 1824, Montefiore v. Montefiore, 2 Add. Eccl. 354.

§ 2107. [1] 1836, Sturtevant v. Robinson, 18 Pick. Mass. 175, 179 (paper containing "the substantial contents of the lost paper," here a writ, received, nothing better being available); 1851, Com. v. Roark, 8 Cush. Mass. 210, 213 (verbatim testimony to a part of a lost judicial record, not necessary); 1875, Cunningham v. R. Co., 61 Mo. 33, 36 (nature and substance of the lost record must be shown); 1849, Browning v. Flanagin, 22 N. J. L. 567, 571 ("a mere abstract of the writ," sufficient on the facts); 1865, Leland v. Cameron, 31 N. Y. 115, 120 (lost execution; an attorney's entry of its issuance, held sufficient evidence; "its contents were prescribed either by statute or by the practice of the Courts," and "we must assume that the execution was in due form"); 1876, Mandeville v. Reynolds, 68 N. Y. 528, 533 (contents of a lost judgment-roll, sufficiently shown by a judgment-docket verified by the clerk upon past recollection as substantially correct, and by a "judgment-book," similarly verified; "where the lost paper is of a kind which is usually drawn up in accordance with a statute and usually follows a form devised for that kind of instrument," such evidence suffices to show that the document contained the essential legal features).

[2] Ind. Burns Ann. St. 1914, § 480 (burnt record of partition proceedings, provable by certified transcript of judgment "without the residue of the record"); § 481 (burnt or lost

It follows that the proof of lost deed-records by an abstract of title based upon them would at common law suffice, if duly authenticated on the stand by the person who made it; the chief object, therefore, of the "burnt-record acts" of several States is to authorize the hearsay use of conveyancers' abstracts without calling the maker to the stand (ante, § 1705).[3]

But, though under the present principle, the substance as proved by a witness from recollection or memoranda may thus suffice, yet by another principle — that of Preference — proof by written copy is always preferred, in the case of a public record; i. e. if a written copy is known to be in existence and can be obtained, it must be used (ante, § 1269).

§ 2108. Same: (2) Record Accessible; Copy of Whole required. Where the public record is in existence, it is usually no more procurable for presentation in Court than when it is lost, and therefore, being by law irremovable, its production 'in specie' is ordinarily not required (ante, §§ 1215–1222). But, with reference to the proof of its contents, a very different application of the principle of Completeness ensues; for, since the original is in existence and accessible to all, it is still feasible to reproduce the original by written copy, in full both as to verbal precision and as to entirety of parts. Since this is feasible, it may well be required, having in mind the great importance, especially for legal documents, of comparing every word and part in the whole before determining the total sense and effect that should be given it.

Accordingly, it has always been an accepted principle, for accessible public records, that the proof must be by written verbatim copy of the whole:

Ante 1726, Chief Baron GILBERT, Evidence, 17, 23: "When any record is exemplified, the whole record must be exemplified, for the construction must be taken from the view of the whole matter taken together; . . . for the precedent and subsequent words and sentence may vary the whole sense and import of the thing produced, and give it quite another face; and therefore so much at least ought to be produced as concerns the matter in question."

1820, JOHNSON, J., in Vance v. Reardon, 2 N. & McC. 299, 303: "The mischiefs of confounding them [copies and extracts] appear to me too manifest to need exposure. A party is not presumed, nor is he bound, to know what evidence his adversary will adduce against him; and if he [the adversary] be permitted to extract from a record only so much as he may deem necessary to his own side of the question and to give it in as evidence, he will always take care to leave out that which makes against him. By the same rule, the opposite party would have the same right to extract so much as was subservient to his side of the question, which, from the specimen of extraction furnished by this case, would produce inexplicable difficulties."

record of deed or mortgage; "general index of the record," sufficient to prove "proper execution and record"); Md. Annot. C. 1914, Art. 35, § 56 (land-office commissioner's certified copy under seal of extract of deed transmitted by court clerk, admissible if deed and record are lost or destroyed); W. Va. Code 1914, c. 73 A, § 10 (proceedings of commissioners to establish contents of burnt records, usable when "no higher or better evidence can be had").

Add here the statutes dealing with the use of judicially established copies (ante, § 1660), and of illegible, mutilated, or other records recopied (ante, § 1275).

The use of a clerk's docket or minute-book is further considered post, § 2450, under the principle that it is the record itself, when the judgment-roll has not been made up or is lost.

[3] For an abstract of title as an admission by the party making it, see ante, § 2105, note 5. The proof of the lost deed itself by a record containing only an abstract has already been considered in § 2105, note 4.

1829, PORTER, J., in Dismukes v. Musgrove, 8 Mart. N. S. 375, 381: "The necessity of producing the whole of a record is founded on the idea that the part omitted contains something unfavorable to the party offering it, and that the construction must be gathered from the whole taken together."

Before noticing the application of this principle, certain others must be called to mind which lead by other roads to the same result in certain respects. (a) By the rule about producing originals, a voluminous record (usually of pecuniary accounts, sometimes of other entries) may be proved by a summary or abstract (ante, § 1230). This is in form an exemption from producing the original, but practically involves the present rule also. (b) By the exception to the Hearsay rule for Official Statements, a certified copy of a public record is admissible when made by an officer having authority to furnish copies. Now this authority is universally conceded to extend merely to the furnishing of full copies, and consequently an official certificate of the effect or substance of a record is not receivable under that Hearsay exception, unless by statute express authority to give such certificates has been conferred (ante, § 1678). The result of that principle is to require a 'verbatim' copy from official certifiers.[1] But obviously it says nothing as to the use of sworn or examined copies, i. e. verified on the stand by the witness who has made them; and in his case, therefore, the requirement of Completeness is due solely to the present principle; though for certified copies the present principle and the above Hearsay exception coincide in their effect. (c) By a rule of Preference, a written copy is always preferred to oral testimony by recollection, in proving the contents of a public record (ante, § 1269). Its practical effect coincides with that of the present rule of Completeness. Nevertheless, it is genuinely a rule of Preference, because, even if a witness could repeat the record's contents 'verbatim' from recollection, still a written copy would be preferred; so that the rule of preference is directed to the priority of written-testimony over recollection-testimony, and does not in itself declare anything as to the 'verbatim' tenor of the testimony. (d) Last of all comes the present principle of Completeness, by virtue of which the record's contents must be reproduced 'verbatim,' — this principle being independent of the other two, and having an operation of its own over and above theirs, even though at some points there may be a coincidence of effect, apparent or real.

By the rule of Completeness, then, there is required (ante, § 2095, par. 2) both verbal precision and entirety of parts:

(1) Verbal precision might be satisfied by a recollection-witness testifying 'verbatim' to the record's contents. But, by the rule of Preference above noted, this 'verbatim' report must be in writing, i. e. a "copy." That a written copy of the record must be produced is thus the composite result of the two rules.[2]

§ 2108. [1] Whether the certificate is in form correct — as, by using the words "a true copy," a "correct copy" — also concerns the principle of § 1678, ante; some authorities are there collected.

[2] Authorities have been placed ante, § 1269.

(2) The requirement of entirety of parts renders it necessary to examine the different kinds of public records, in order to ascertain in what consists entirety, and what portions belong together as inseparable parts of a single whole. To that question we now come:

§ 2109. Same: Application to Sundry Public Records (Deed-Registers, Land-Patents, Assessors' Books, Corporate Records, Statute-Rolls, Marriage-Registers, etc.). The various sorts of public records differ so widely in tenor and constitution of parts that no fixed rule is possible. In general, there is a broad distinction between records which merely copy in succession for permanent reference single private documents each complete in itself — such as records of deeds or land-patents — and records which contain successive entries of officers as to their doings from time to time in a certain class of matters. In the former instance, the same rule should apply that would have been applied to the document if proved by copy from the original (ante, §§ 1268–1272), i. e. the copy must be of the whole document as recorded, but not of any other document that may happen to be recorded in the same book.[1] But in the other class of records, where successive entries are made by the officer in a single book, concerning many persons or pieces of property, the same person or property being dealt with in perhaps various parts of the book, it is not necessary to reproduce any but the entries affecting the subject-matter of the litigation.[2] In particular, the use of copies of entries in a parish-register of marriages, births, and deaths will depend much on the scope of the family occurrences desired to be proved.[3] So also the proof of corporate

§ 2109. [1] Eng. 1650, Nelthrop v. Johnson, Clayt. 142 ("in this case, part of a long patent was copied out, and sworn true and [that] it was so much of it as did concern the thing in question"; excluded, "for that there may be provisoes, etc., in the patent, and the witness could not swear he did read the roll throughout of this patent, . . . 'quod nota', if he could, it seems it had been admitted"); U. S. 1866, Rice v. Cunningham, 29 Cal. 492, 497 (book of official grants, with an entry of a grant to K.; the marginal entry, "not taken," required to be read also); 1884, Hamilton v. Shoaff, 99 Ind. 63, 65 (record of a deed; answers in a deposition reciting items in the record, excluded); 1887, Mercier v. Harnan, 39 La. An. 94, 1 So. 410 (abstract of record of copy of marriage-contract, excluded); 1899, Cary v. Cary, 189 Pa. 65, 42 Atl. 19 (copy of a mortgage containing also a copy of an entry of satisfaction; the latter held to be also in evidence); 1857, Atkins v. Lewis, 14 Gratt. Va. 30, 34, semble (abstract of a land-patent, not receivable on objection made).

Contra: Can. N. Br. Consol. St. 1903, c. 127, § 30 ("in the proof of title from the Crown" by examined or certified copy, clauses "which may not be pertinent or relevant to the matter in question" need not be proved; and no copy shall be excluded for omissions which "do not prejudice the opposite party or affect the merits in question"); § 31 (yet plats or plans referred to must be copied, unless on proof that no such plat or plan is there entered); U. S. 1831, Robinson v. Gilman, 3 Vt. 163, 164 (extracts from a land-warrant, sufficient on the facts).

Compare the rule as to proving the substance of a lost deed (ante, § 2105). Whether a seal must be recited in the copy of the record, or in the record, is also there briefly noticed.

Compare also, on all the kinds of documents in this section, the cases cited ante, § 1678 (certificate of effect of a record).

[2] Ark. Dig. 1919, § 4128 (extract or entry from tax-list or book or from auditor's records, admissible equally with the entire list, etc.); 1848, Job v. Tebbetts, 10 Ill. 376, 380 (extracts from tax-records, held sufficient); 1898, State v. Howard, 91 Me. 396, 40 Atl. 65 (U. S. collector's list of liquor taxpayers; entry relating to defendant alone, sufficient); Oh. Gen. C. 1921, § 12362, § 5339 c (abstracts of certain lost records, etc., receivable); 1845, Farr v. Swan, 2 Pa. St. 245, 255 ("An extract is evidence, if it appears on its face to contain all that relates to the subject in controversy"; here, of a plot of lots); Tenn. Shannon's Code 1916, § 5576*a* 2 (deed-register's copy of relevant part of description of tract is admissible).

[3] 1875, American Life Ins. Co. v. Rosenagle, 77 Pa. 507, 515 (copy of parish-register entries records will naturally vary according to the matters in issue.[4] The parts of a statute are in no less a degree composite and variant, and the extent to which a copy must reproduce the terms depends on the issue and on the scope of the statute.[5]

§ 2110. Same: Application to Judicial Records (Common-Law Judgment, Chancery Decree, Probate of Will, Criminal Conviction, Sheriff's Deed, etc.). (1) A judicial record, made up as it is of separate documents and entries representing the successive stages in the proceedings, is of all records the one which most requires the application of the principle of Completeness; and it is to this kind of record that the judicial utterances already quoted (ante, § 2108) chiefly refer. Without considering the plaintiff's statement of claim, the defendant's statement of defence, the intermediate motions and orders, the verdict, and the later doings, it is impossible to ascertain what are the terms of the judgment which is to be proved and acted on.

Only one distinction is to be noted, namely, that since a judgment may be invoked for varying purposes, the scope of the portion needing to be examined may not be the whole. Ordinarily, a judgment is invoked in order to obtain its enforcement in a later proceeding in the same or another court or in another jurisdiction, and thus the whole of the record must be consulted. But in many cases the fact of the judgment having been rendered is sufficient for the purpose in hand, and in this situation the final order of judgment is alone needed. It is therefore conceded on all hands that in cases where the fact of judgment rendered, irrespective of the full details of the precise matters in controversy, is alone material, a copy of the final by tabulating all material dates, etc., held sufficient); 1878, State v. Colby, 51 Vt. 291, 295 (clerk's certified copy of marriage record, omitting the certificate of the minister, not sufficient); 1879, State v. Potter, 52 Vt. 33, 38 (copy of marriage record held sufficient on the facts); 1887, Blair v. Sayre, 29 W. Va. 604, 606, 2 S. E. 97 (official abstract of marriage certificates, etc., admitted under statute). Compare the statutes cited ante, § 1644, which often imply something on this point.

[4] 1855, Banks v. Darden, 18 Ga. 318, 341 (corporation books, when offered, "are testimony before the jury as to all entries appertaining to the same transaction"; but the offeror may read what he chooses, leaving the opponent to read the rest); 1866, Vischer v. R. Co., 34 Ga. 536, 539 (corporation book of minutes; relevant parts not first read may be treated as "already before the jury"); 1900, Fouche v. Bank, 110 Ga. 827, 36 S. E. 256 (corporation minutes; the whole relating to the transaction, not required); 1843, Woods v. Banks, 14 N. H. 101, 109 ("In admitting copies of records [here proprietary records], it would be absurd to require a copy of the whole book; copies of so much of the record as relates to the subject-matter of the suit are allowed; but there should generally be an entire copy of the proceedings of a particular meeting or anything else done and transacted at a particular time"); 1854, Whitehouse v. Bickford, 29 N. H. 471, 481 (semble it must be merely "a full record of the entire matter which it embraces or to which it relates"); 1858, Sinking Fund Com'rs v. Bank, 1 Metc. Mass. Ky. 174, 185 (recital of corporation's proceedings as set forth in a mortgage, received as a copy).

[5] 1838, Adle v. Sherwood, 3 Whart. Pa. 481, 483 (so much only of a statute "as pertains to the matter in point" need be certified); 1839, Swift v. Fitzhugh, 9 Port. Ala. 39, 54 (only the material portion need be offered); 1845, Chamberlain v. Maitland, 5 B. Monr. Ky. 448 (deposition of a foreign notary verifying an extract from a law as to holidays, admitted); 1864, Biesenthall v. Williams, 1 Duv. Ky. 329 (similar; treated as a "sworn extract" of a record); 1859, Grant's Succession, 14 La. An. 795 (contents of a usury statute, sufficient on the facts); 1824, State v. Welsh, 3 Hawks N. C. 404, 407 (title of a statute not sufficient, in proving an incorporation); 1876, Grant v. Coal Co., 80 Pa. 208, 216 (copy of a chapter of a foreign statute, held sufficient).

For proof of a foreign statute by expert testimony, see ante, §§ 1271, 1953.

order of judgment, with perhaps one or two other parts of the record, will suffice:[1]

1828, MILLS, J., in McGuire v. Kouns, 7 T. B. Monr. 386: "It is a general rule that records, when used in evidence, must be produced entire. But this rule is laid down with some exceptions and limitations. The reason assigned for it is that the part of the record which is lacking may give the rest a different meaning. Where a record is used as evidence to prove the facts therein contained, the rule well applies. But where it is only used (as it is here) to show the fact that there was such a judgment, then so much of the record as is relevant is frequently permitted to be used. Here the fact to be shown [in an action for land bought at a sale on execution] was that there was such judgment to warrant the execution, and enough of the record is produced to establish that fact."

(2) Between these two extremes, therefore, lie an innumerable variety of cases. At one end are the cases in which the entire record is needed in order to enforce in detail the terms of the right vindicated by the judgment. At the other end are the cases in which merely the final order is needed as showing that in fact it was made. Naturally, then, the scope of the copy will depend upon the nature of the issue in hand. No fixed rule can be laid down; the substantive law applicable to the case in hand will have an important bearing.[2]

§ 2110. [1] 1892, Gibson v. Robinson, 90 Ga. 756, 763, 16 S. E. 969; 1900, Little Rock C. Co. v. Hodge, 112 Ga. 521, 37 S. E. 743; 1855, Lee's Adm'x v. Lee, 7 Mo. 531, 534; Md. Ann. Code 1914, Art. 35, § 64 ("short copies" of a judgment or decree are receivable to prove "the recovery of such judgment or decree"); 1897, Rainey v. Hines, 121 N. C. 318, 28 S. E. 410.

[2] The substantive law being usually the determining feature, it would be unprofitable to attempt a full collection of the precedents; the following will serve merely as illustrations of the principle:

ENGLAND: 1661, Trowel v. Castle, 1 Keb. 21, semble (chancery decree must be accompanied by bill and answer); 1833, Blower v. Hollis, 1 Cr. & M. 393 (same question; undecided); 1841, Leake v. Westmeath, 2 Moo. & Rob. 394 (bill and answer required).

CANADA: N. Br. Consol. St. 1903, c. 127, § 29 ("such parts which may be so necessary" of specified kinds of records will suffice instead of the whole); N. Sc. Rev. St. 1900, c. 163, § 15 (certified copy of an order or entry of judgment suffices, without the record).

UNITED STATES: Arkansas: 1881, Wilson v. Spring, 38 Ark. 181, 186 (decree in chancery reciting former proceedings, the other records having been burned; decree alone sufficient on the facts, but also because it was effective in this case 'proprio vigore' without the other proceedings); 1886, Hallum v. Dickinson, 47 Ark. 120, 124, 14 S. W. 477 ('nul tiel record'; parts set forth held insufficient); California: 1857, Nims v. Johnson, 7 Cal. 110 (record, lacking judgment-book, held insufficient); 1861, Goldstone v. Davidson, 18 Cal. 41 (certification of each part of the record as a separate paper, sufficient, though not proper); C. C. P. 1872, § 1907 (certified copy of a foreign judicial record must contain "an exact transcript of the whole of it"); Georgia: 1887, Doggett v. Sims, 79 Ga. 253, 257, 4 S. E. 909 (record of conviction, not sufficient on the facts); 1899, Ocean S. S. Co. v. Wilder, 107 Ga. 220, 33 S. E. 179; 1906, Patterson v. Drake, 126 Ga. 478, 55 S. E. 175; Illinois: 1886, McMillan v. Lovejoy, 115 Ill. 498, 4 N. E. 772; 1902, People v. Pike, 197 Ill. 449, 64 N. E. 333 (county court records, held sufficiently proved on the facts); Indiana: 1861, Phelps v. Tilton, 17 Ind. 423; 1881, Kusler v. Crofoot, 78 Ind. 597, 600 (action on notes for a judgment; copy held incomplete on the facts); 1881, Jenkins v. State, 78 Ind. 133 (conviction; record sufficient on the facts); 1883, Anderson v. Ackerman, 88 Ind. 481, 490 (partnership; record held sufficiently complete); 1884, Brown v. Eaton, 98 Ind. 591, 595 (action on a judgment; record incomplete on the facts); 1889, Winemiller v. Thrash, 125 Ind. 353, 25 N. E. 350 (malicious prosecution; the indictment allowed to be read); 1905, Chicago & S. E. R. Co. v. Grantham, 165 Ind. 279, 75 N. E. 265 (eminent domain; transcript held sufficient); Iowa: 1855, Lattourett v. Cook, 1 Ia. 1, 5 (whole not required on the facts); 1858, Campbell v. Ayres, 6 Ia. 339, 344 (judgment without pleadings, not sufficient on the facts); Kentucky: 1808, Walker v. Kendall, Hardin 404, 409; 1819, Grebbin v. Davis, 2 A. K. Marsh. 17; 1903, Tompkins v. Com., 117 Ky. 138, 77 S. W. 712 (competency of a divorced wife; record of divorce not required); Maryland: Annot. Code 1914, Art. 35, § 67 (instead of a transcript of the record of a cause in a domestic court, the original papers with a transcript under seal of the docket entries will suffice); St. 1918, Apr. 10, c. 130, amending Ann. Code, Art. 35, § 56 (certified copy of extract of deed, mortgage, etc. by court clerk, transmitted to land office, admissible); 1911, Mundy v. Jacques, 116 Md. 11, 81 Atl. 289 ('nul tiel' record; complete copy of Illinois judgment-record required; distinguishing Code Art. 35, supra, n. 1, as applying only to domestic judgments); Massachusetts: 1842, Eaton v. Hall, 5 Metc. 287, 290 (an order of reference to arbitration; "proof of a copy, or of the contents so full and complete as to be substantially a copy," allowed); Michigan: 1897, Drosdowski v. Chosen Friends, 114 Mich. 169, 72 N. W. 169; Mississippi: 1854, Mandeville v. Stockett, 28, Miss. 398, 408 (when the record itself is not producible, its disputed contents must be tried by complete transcripts, not by certified extracts or by depositions); 1857, Shirley v. Fearne, 33 Miss. 653, 667 (same); 1897, Rule v. State, — Miss. —, 22 So. 872 (perjury; to determine materiality the whole of the record or as much as is helpful should be produced; here, the defendant was allowed to produce additional parts); Missouri: 1829, Phillipson v. Bates, 2 Mo. 116 [95]; New York: 1807, Wilson v. Conine, 2 John. 280 (chancery decree awarding execution on a prior decree recited, offered to show the prior decree; held insufficient as a copy); 1830, Winans v. Dunham, 5 Wend. 47 (approving the preceding); 1827, Packard v. Hill, 7 Cow. 434, 443, on app. 2 Wend. 411, 5 Cow. 375, 384 (foreign judgment; documents held sufficient); Pennsylvania: 1823, Hampton v. Speckenagle, 9 S. & R. 212, 221 (record of partition, held insufficient); Tennessee: 1833, Lowry v. M'Durmott, 5 Yerg. 225 (decrees of sale read, without producing bill and answer, to show land-title); 1842, Lewis v. Bullard, 3 Humph. 207 (action on a prosecution bond; execution not usable without the whole record); 1848, McCully v. Malcom, 9 Humph. 187, 192 (copy of indictment, without the rest of the record, excluded); 1849, Whitmore v. Johnson, 10 Humph. 610, 612 (decree divesting title to realty, sufficient without the whole record); 1865, Carrick v. Armstrong, 2 Coldw. 265 (champertous agreement to transfer judgment; deposition, etc., without the entire record, inadmissible); 1871, Coffee v. Neely, 2 Heisk. 304, 307 (clerk's certificate of record, held to import a copy of the whole); 1873, Saint v. Taylor, 12 Heisk. 488, 491 (insolvency in another State; decree sufficient, without the entire record); 1880, Garner v. State, 5 Lea 213, 217 (justice's judgment recovered on county warrants; whole of the record to be produced); 1880, Willis v. Louderback, 5 Lea 561 (sale by decree of Court; whole record required); 1912, King v. Cox, 126 Tenn. 553, 151 S. W. 58 (damages on dissolution of injunction; part of record, held not sufficient on the facts: cases collected); St. 1919, Apr. 16, c. 130 (certified copy of final decree, without the entire record, admissible); Vermont: 1797, Richards v. Pearl, D. Chip. 113 (trespass for cattle taken from the plaintiff, who obtained them under an execution; judgment as well as execution required to be read); Virginia: 1836, White v. Clay, 7 Leigh 68, 78 (injunction bond decree; extracts sufficient on the facts); 1918, Virginia & W. Va. Coal Co. v. Charles, D. C. W. D. Va., 251 Fed. 83 (decree of sale of lands).

(3) The probate of a will is a judgment pronouncing the due execution of a will, and therefore a copy of the will alone will usually not suffice, where the offer assumes the execution of the will as a fact; the whole of the record of probate must on principle be offered. But the presumption of regularity of official proceedings (post, § 2534) may well suffice to dispense with certain parts of the record or to prove certain parts of the proceedings not contained in the record. The requirements, however, of the substantive law and of local procedure, as well as the general regulation of the subject in modern times by express statute of procedure, so complicate the subject that it would be unprofitable to attempt to disentangle the operation of the principle of Evidence.[3]

Sometimes, though a prior decree is required, it may be sufficiently proved by a recital in the one offered (ante, § 1664).

Compare the citations ante § 1678 (certificate of effect of a record).

[3] The following cases may serve as illustrations; the statutes collected ante, § 1681, will guide to the local statutory provisions: Fed. 1897, Newman v. V. T. C. S. & I. Co., 25 C. C. A. 382, 80 Fed. 228 (probate presumed to have been made on due proof); 1909, Pineland Club v. Robert, 4th C. C. A., 170 Fed. 341 (a record of a will must show that there was a decree admitting it to probate, on the principle of § 1658, ante; hence a re-record of a certified copy of a will from the probate

(4) In discrediting a witness by proof of conviction for crime, a copy of the entire record was required at common law; but now, almost everywhere, by statute, it is allowed to prove the conviction by the cross-examination of the witness himself or by a brief certificate of the record's tenor (ante, § 1270).

(5) In proving title by the deed of a sheriff or tax-collector selling upon execution for a private debt or for taxes, the present principle requires at least the proof of the judgment and the execution as well as the deed. But, since the sheriff's deed usually recites the former documents or one of them, the further question arises whether this hearsay recital is admissible evidence of the other documents. Over both of these questions much controversy has occurred (ante, § 1664).[4] The present principle would also in strictness require the copy of the recorded deed to include the entire description of all parcels of land sold and conveyed on that occasion; but here again, for reasons of practical convenience, statute often permits the use of a deed-copy containing the description of the specific parcel of land in controversy "exclusive of the description of all other real estate therein described." [5]

§ 2111. Same: Application to Bill, Answer, and Deposition in Chancery. (1) It came to be generally accepted at common law that a bill in Chancery could not be used as an admission in another cause at law against the party filing the bill (ante, § 1065). So far, however, as it may nowadays be admissible, it is not to be considered as a judicial record, for it is offered without regard to what was determined in the suit or whether anything at all was determined. It is separable by itself, as a single connected statement, and it may of course be read without using the remaining parts of the record.[1] Whether it must be read as a whole, or may be read in parts only, depends upon the view taken of the controverted question already examined court, no decree of probate appearing therein, was held not admissible under S. C. St. 1866, Dec. 20, admitting records of certified copies of lost originals); Fla. 1880, Bellamy v. Hawkins, 17 Fla. 750, 756 (certified extracts of probate records, excluded); Ind. 1885, Vail v. Rinehart, 105 Ind. 6, 12, 4 N. E. 218 (probate proceedings, held sufficiently complete); N. J. 1911, May 1, c. 309 (exemplified copy of probate of foreign will need not contain proofs of execution); Pa. 1820, Miller v. Carothers, 6 S. & R. 215, 223 (held sufficient although here only one witness had sworn before the register; both being now dead); 1829, Ripple v. Ripple, 1 Rawle 386, 389 (admissible, where by the certificate on the copy the probate appears to have been in due form); 1841, Loy v. Kennedy, 1 W. & S. 396 (register's certificate of probate, with a copy of the will, sufficient, though it showed defective proof before the register); S. C. 1893, Hankinson v. R. Co., 41 S. C. 1, 17, 19 S. E. 206 (statutory permission to prove the appointment of an executor by copy of the letters of administration dispenses with using the rest of record); Tenn. 1849, Harris v. Anderson, 9 Humph. 779 (certified copy of a foreign registered will, omitting the probate, excluded); 1860, Marr v. Gilliam, 1 Coldw. 488, 512 (same); 1884, Smith v. Neilson, 13 Lea 461, 467 (same); 1881, Mosely v. Wingo, 7 Lea. 145 (certified copy of a probate, held sufficient); 1897, McNeely v. Pearson, — Tenn. —, 42 S. W. 165 (a certified copy of a will in the probate court lacked signatures, etc., but the recitals of the record described the missing elements of the will; the due execution presumed); Va. 1831, Ex parte Todd, 2 Leigh 819 (whether the certificate must show foreign proof in detail, undecided).

[4] Similar questions arise for an administrator's deed: 1908, Felix v. Caldwell, 235 Ill. 159, 85 N. E. 228 (administrator's deed without decree, the records of court being destroyed, admitted, in connection with Rev. St. 1872, c. 30, § 12).

[5] E. g.: Wash. R. & B. Code 1909, § 1261.

§ 2111. [1] See the cases cited ante, § 1065.

(ante, § 2102), namely, whether the whole of any single writing must be used; and the practice is apparently unsettled.[2]

(2) An answer in Chancery — which was unquestionably receivable as an admission (ante, § 1065) — is for the same reason a separable document which may be treated as independent of the record; the remainder of the record, therefore, need not as such be proved. But an answer is at least, as its very name implies, a response to charges in the bill. On the principle, therefore, of incorporated separate writings (ante, § 2104), the bill must in strictness be read with the answer; for how can an answer be intelligible without the question calling for it?

1838, Pennell v. Meyer, 8 C. & P. 470. Mr. Campbell, for the defendant, on the defendant's answer being offered by the plaintiff: "The bill must be read as well as the answer; it is like parts of a conversation." Mr. Wilde, for the plaintiff: "It is not necessary; it is only the rigmarole of a draftsman.[3] . . . It is not like a conversation, because one part takes place at one time, and another part at another. . . . It is the surmise of counsel only; it does not tell the real case." Mr. Campbell, for the defendant: "An answer in chancery is an answer to specific questions put; first, it tells the story, and then divides the narrative into particular questions." TINDAL, C. J.: "What is the use of it, when I must tell the jury that it is only the imagination of a young man sitting in his chambers? It can only be to prejudice the jury. I never knew it done." Mr. Campbell: "How can your lordship and the jury know what the answer is, unless you know the statement to which it is an answer?" TINDAL, C. J.: "No doubt the questions are evidence, — the interrogatory parts of the bill." Mr. Campbell: "I believe the defendant's answer would not be held sufficient, though he answered all the interrogatories, if he omitted to answer all the parts of the narrative." TINDAL, C. J.: "I think, if you insist upon it upon principle, I cannot object to it; though I never knew it done before."

In strictness, then, the bill must be put in with the answer;[4] yet it is not likely that this would to-day be required, except so far as the former appears necessary to complete the sense of the latter.[5] — That the whole of the answer must at least be put in is elsewhere noticed (ante, § 2103, post, § 2121).

(3) A deposition is no part of the record, but is a separate statement by a person not a party to the cause; hence, there would ordinarily be no need of producing with it a copy of the record. But since a deposition in another

[2] 1859, Davies v. Flewellen, 29 Ga. 49 (opponent allowed to read "other parts of the same bill relating to the same issue"); 1878, Sciple v. Northcutt, 62 Ga. 42, 45 (amendment, in a separate document, to a bill in chancery, need not be read with the bill, but the opponent may read it); 1888, Jones v. Grantham, 80 Ga. 472, 476, 5 S. E. 764 (bill in chancery; "whatever the law may be, with regard to admitting a part only, . . . we are sure that if a part only be tendered, that part should be distinctly pointed out, and all of the instrument necessary to make that part fully and correctly understood should go to the jury").

[3] For this peculiarity of it, see ante, § 1065.

[4] 1726, Gilbert, Evidence, 55 ("because without the bill there does not appear to be a cause depending"); 1828, Rowe v. Brenton, 8 B. & C. 737, 765 (answer to interrogatories in an ancient proceeding, admitted, the interrogatories themselves being lost).

[5] 1879, Munroe v. Phillips, 64 Ga. 32, 40 (action against an administratrix; after two returns to the probate court were admitted, the opponent was allowed to put in the remainder made at the same time and sworn to in the same affidavit); 1884, Dowling v. Feeley, 72 Ga. 557, 567 (similar suit; a return of the defendant being offered by the plaintiff, held that he need not put in the vouchers referred to therein, the defendant being allowed to put in such as were connected); 1899, Edwards v. Mattingly, 107 Ky. 332, 53 S. W. 1032 (original answer, without all the pleadings, may be read).

cause cannot be used unless the parties and the issues were there the same (ante, § 1386), a copy of the record must, in strictness, be produced, that the identity of parties and issues may be seen. To avoid this cumbrous formality, it early became customary for the Chancellor, on authorizing an issue at law, to order the depositions to be there received without that formality. Accordingly, when the commission or other order adequately exhibits the necessary data, a copy of the record is unnecessary:[6]

1813, L. C. ELDON, in Corbett v. Corbett, 1 Ves. & B. 335, 336: "There is a great mistake upon this subject of reading depositions at law. The interposition of this Court is not from absolute necessity. If the depositions are taken in a cause between the same parties, and proof is given at the trial that the witnesses are unable to attend, the depositions may be read without an order. But then the party must incur the expense and trouble of having the bill, answer, and all the proceedings. To prevent that inconvenience, therefore, where the trial is ancillary to a suit here, an order of this Court is obtained, directing the judge at 'nisi prius' to receive the deposition without more proof than that it is the deposition."

II. MAY THE WHOLE OF THE UTTERANCE BE AFTERWARDS PUT IN BY THE OPPONENT?

§ 2113. General Principle; the Whole on the Same Subject, if Relevant, may be put in. For the reasons already sufficiently examined (ante, § 2094) the opponent, against whom a part of an utterance has been put in, may, in his turn, complement it by putting in the remainder, in order to secure for the tribunal a complete understanding of the total tenor and effect of the utterance. It has been seen, in the foregoing sections, that there is much opportunity for difference of opinion whether the proponent in the first instance must put in the whole. But there is and could be no difference of opinion as to the opponent's right, if a part only has been put in, himself to put in the remainder. Indeed it is the very fact of this opportunity and right which (as already seen) has frequent bearing upon the question whether it is worth while to require it from the proponent in the first instance.

This right of the opponent to put in the remainder is universally conceded, for every kind of utterance without distinction; and the only question can be as to the scope and limits of the right.[1]

[6] Accord: 1807, Bayley v. Wylie, 6 Esp. 85 (Ellenborough, L. C. J., said that "no state of things could make it necessary to produce the bill and answer, provided . . . the commission was produced"; and even this might be dispensed with where it was by lapse of time presumed lost); 1808, Palmer v. Aylesbury, 15 Ves. Jr. 176 (by the Editor, an order is not necessary; but without it "the Court of law must go through the other preliminary proof of the bill, answer, and issue joined; and it is to exempt the judge who tries the questions at law from the necessity of hearing the whole record read that an order is made as an authority for the reception of the evidence without that introductory matter"); 1818, Gordon v. Gordon, 1 Swanst. 165, 170.

Whether the whole of the deposition itself must be read has been considered ante, § 2103.

§ 2113. [1] It is therefore one of the characteristic superfluities of Code legislation that this always conceded principle should frequently be found solemnly enacted, while the important controversies already considered are ignored and left without a settlement: Cal. C. C. P. 1872, § 1854 ("When part of an act, declaration, conversation, or writing is given in evidence by one party, the whole on the same subject may be inquired into by the other; when a letter is read, the answer may

The ensuing controversies are in effect concerned merely with drawing the line so that the opponent shall not, under cloak of this conceded right, put in utterances which do not come within its principle and would be otherwise irrelevant and inadmissible. In the definition of the limits of this right, there may be noted three general corollaries of the principle on which the right rests, namely: (a) No utterance irrelevant to the issue is receivable; (b) No more of the remainder of the utterance than concerns the same subject, and is explanatory of the first part, is receivable; (c) The remainder thus received merely aids in the construction of the utterance as a whole, and is not in itself testimony.[2]

(a) First, then, no utterance irrelevant to the issue is receivable. This limitation is obvious enough; because the sole purpose in listening to the remainder is to obtain a correct understanding of the effect of the part first put in; and no remaining part, even if contained in the same breath or the same writing, can furnish such aid if it is wholly irrelevant to the issue. Practically, this limitation is often unenforceable where the remainder of the utterance is contained in the same single writing; but in theory of law, at any rate, the irrelevant portions are to be given no consideration for any purpose by the tribunal:[3]

1862, WILDE, B., in Milne v. Leisler, 7 H. & N. 786, 803: "No doubt, there are cases where documents which are admissible are not proof of all the facts stated in them. For instance, if a notice to quit is given in evidence, and on its being read it appears that the landlord has drawn it up thus: 'In consequence of your not having paid your rent for the last year, and having ill-treated the farm, and allowed the premises to be out of repair, I hereby give you notice to quit on such a day,' . . . it is plain that a document may be admissible and yet not proof of all the facts stated in it."

1840, COWEN, J., in Garey v. Nicholson, 24 Wend. 350, 351: "[The rule about the whole being admissible] must obviously mean that the additional conversation called for

be given; and when a detached act, declaration, conversation, or writing is given in evidence, any other act, declaration, conversation, or writing which is necessary to make it understood may also be given in evidence"); Ga. Rev. C. 1910, § 5830 ("Where either party introduces part of a document or record, the opposite party may read so much of the balance as is relevant"); Rev. C. 1910, § 5783, P. C. § 1030 ("When an admission is given in evidence, it is the right of the other party to have the whole admission and all the conversation connected therewith"); Ia. Code 1897, § 4615, Comp. Code § 7322 (like Nebr. Rev. St. § 8849); La. C. Pr. 1900, § 356 (the opponent using a party's confessions in answers to interrogatories "must not divide them; they must be taken entire"); Mont. Rev. C. 1921, § 10515 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1854); Nebr. Rev. St. 1921, § 8849 ("When part of an act, declaration, conversation, or writing, is given in evidence by one party, the whole on the same subject may be inquired into by the other; thus, when a letter is read, all other letters on the same subject between the same parties may be given. And when a detached act, declaration, conversation, or writing which is necessary to make it fully understood, or to explain the same, may be given in evidence"); Or. Laws 1920, § 711 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1854); P. I. C. C. P. 1901, § 283 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1854); P. R. Rev. St. & C. 1911, § 1391(like Cal. C. C. P. § 1854); Tex. Rev. C. Cr. P. 1911, § 811 ("When part of an act, declaration, or conversation or writing is given in evidence by one party, the whole on the same subject may be inquired into on the other, as when a letter is read all other letters on the same subject between the same parties may be given. And when a detached act, declaration, conversation, or writing which is necessary to make it fully understood, or to explain the same may also be given in evidence").

[2] Approved in People v. Schlessel, 196 N. Y. 476, 90 N. E. 44 (1909).

[3] Accord: 1888, Hathaway v. Tinkham, 148 Mass. 85, 87, 19 N. E. 18.

should be relevant to the matter in issue. All evidence is received under that qualification; and, if not so restrained, might operate as a waste of time; other subjects might be introduced having no connection with the subject-matter of the suit."

1902, GRANT, J., in Atherton v. Defreeze, 129 Mich. 364, 88 N. W. 886 (title to horses; a witness for the plaintiff testified to the defendant's admission that the horses were not his; on cross-examination by the defendant's attorney, the witness, in reply to the question, "What else did he say?" said: "He said he was so blind he couldn't see; and I asked him about how much the colts were worth, and he said about $300, and if he didn't get them he would go to the poorhouse"): "Parts of a conversation, having no reference whatever to the issue upon trial, are not admissible under the rule that a party is entitled to the entire conversation. The rule means only that he is entitled to the entire conversation bearing upon the subject in controversy. Ten subjects may be talked about in one conversation. When one of the ten is the subject of litigation, it is not competent to put in evidence the conversation about the other nine. Defendant's blindness and poverty had nothing to do with the title to the property."

(b) Secondly, no more of the remainder of the utterance than concerns the same subject, and is explanatory of the first part, is receivable. This limitation is the logical result of the principle on which the rule rests. But it has not been commonly observed in defining the rule. The usual phrase is that the "whole" of the utterance — i. e. the remainder of the whole — may be put in; and this received distinct sanction in the following leading opinion:

1820, ABBOTT, C. J., in The Queen's Case, 2 B. & B. 297: "The conversations of a party to the suit, relative to the subject-matter of the suit, are in themselves evidence against him in the suit, and if a counsel chooses to ask a witness as to anything which may have been said by an adverse party, the counsel for that party has a right to lay before the Court the whole which was said by his client in the same conversation, — not only so much as may explain or qualify the matter introduced by the previous examination, but even matter not properly connected with the part introduced upon the previous examination, provided only that it relate to the subject-matter of the suit; because it would not be just to take part of a conversation as evidence against a party without giving to the party at the same time the benefit of the entire residue of what he said on the same occasion."

But this liberal allowance cannot, in theory at least, be defended. The single purpose of considering the utterance as a whole is to be able to put a correct construction upon the part which the first party relies upon, and to avoid the danger of mistaking the effect of a fragment whose meaning is modified by a later or prior part (ante, § 2094). It follows that the purpose is accomplished when the tribunal has had placed before it the remaining parts which may modify or explain the first part:

1838, DENMAN, L. C. J., in Prince v. Samo, 7 A. & E. 627 (on cross-examination, in an action for falsely prosecuting a suit for debt, testimony was obtained of the plaintiff's admission on the stand in the former trial that he had been an insolvent; on re-examination, other parts of his former testimony, dealing with his present claim, were asked about): "My opinion was that the witness might be asked as to everything said by the plaintiff, when he appeared on the trial of the indictment, that could in any way qualify or explain the statement as to which he had been cross-examined, but that he had no right to add any independent history of transactions wholly unconnected with it. . . .

Upon the whole, we think it must be taken as settled that proof of a detached statement made by a witness at a former time does not authorize proof by the party calling that witness of all that he said at the same time, but only of so much as can be in some way connected with the statement proved. . . . We cannot assent to [the above passage of the opinion in The Queen's Case]. We will merely observe that it was not introduced as an answer to any question proposed by the House of Lords, and may therefore be strictly regarded as extrajudicial; that it was not necessary as a reason for the answer to the question that was proposed; that it was not in terms adopted by Lord Eldon or any of the other judges who concurred; that it was expressly denied by Lords Redesdale and Wynford; and that it does not rest on any previous authority."

1858, MERRICK, J., in Com. v. Keyes, 11 Gray 323, 325: "There is an important limitation to the rule, in giving evidence of conversations or of oral statements and declarations. The proof in such case is to be confined to what was said upon or concerning those matters which are made subjects of inquiry or investigation. Every remark or observation made upon those topics is to be received as competent evidence, because they may essentially modify the character and purport of the whole conversation, and vitally affect what might otherwise appear to be explicitly asserted or denied. But if, during the same interview between the witness and the party, other subjects of conversation or discussion are introduced, remote and distinct from that which is the object of inquiry or investigation, it is obvious that whatever may be said concerning them can have no tendency to illustrate, vary or explain it. Everything pertaining to these additional and extraneous matters should therefore be rejected as irrelevant and useless. . . . It appears that Smith, a witness produced in behalf of the government, testified on cross-examination to a conversation which he had with Walton, after they left the shop where the liquor, the sale of which constituted the offence alleged against the defendant, was procured, relative to the woman from whom they obtained it. Before re-examination the district attorney asked him by what name the woman was called by Walton; to which it was answered 'He called her Mrs. Keyes.' This inquiry was limited to what was said by Walton concerning the name of the woman, and necessarily restricted the reply to that matter alone. It did not in the least degree refer to anything which Walton might have said relative to the act of sale, or to what took place in the shop before they left it. The two things were entirely distinct and independent of each other. The first related merely to the identity of the woman; the other, to an act alleged to have been done in violation of law. It is easy to see what, in this position of the case, were the extent and limit of the right of the defendant in pursuing the examination in reference to the inquiry which had already been made. She was entitled to pursue it for the purpose of drawing out from the witness everything whatever which was said by Walton, directly or indirectly, concerning the name or identity of the woman; but having exhausted his knowledge on that subject, she could not proceed to bring in statements or declarations on another subject essentially distinct and different. She desired to ask what further was said about the transaction; which plainly must be understood to have been an inquiry what was said concerning the act of sale with which the defendant was charged in the complaint. The statement or declaration of Walton on that subject could be nothing more than mere hearsay, and was of course in itself inadmissible."[4]

Nevertheless, it is perhaps in practice undesirable to enforce such a limitation, if it is likely to lead to cumbersome definitions and to lend itself rather to quibbling objections than to substantial improvement in the investigation of truth. The simple rule, in the form to-day most commonly enforced, that [4] The following is also a good opinion; 1840, Cowen, J., in Garey v. Nicholson, 24 Wend. 350, 352. The propriety of the distinction taken in the Queen's Case has been well defended by Spear, J., in Lombard v. Chaplin, 98 Me. 309, 56 Atl. 903 (1903).

"the whole of what was said at the same time on the same subject" may be put in, has proved easily workable, and has been attended by no technical refinements in its use.[5] It may therefore be said that the above limitation, though sound enough in principle, should not be sanctioned unless Courts can trust themselves to leave its application wholly to the determination of the trial judge.[6]

(c) Thirdly, the remainder thus received merely aids in the construction of the utterance as a whole, and is not in itself testimony. This, also, is simply a necessary deduction from the general principle. The remainder of the utterance, regarded as an assertion of the facts contained in it, is merely a hearsay statement, and as such has no standing. It is considered by the tribunal merely in order to piece out and interpret the first fragment and ascertain whether as a whole the sense of the first becomes modified. For example, in Sidney's celebrated example, if a person is charged with saying "There is no God," he appeals to the preceding clause, "The fool hath said in his heart"; the total effect is to remove the first impression that the speaker has himself asserted atheism, and to show that he has merely attributed the atheistic utterance to a fool; but the prior clause is nevertheless not to be taken as testimony that some fool has made that statement. It may be immaterial whether he has or not; but if it were material, this prior clause could not serve to prove it; that clause is 'functus officio' when it has removed the misleading effect of the last clause as being a statement of the speaker himself. All this is logically unquestionable. Nevertheless, it is not uncommon for Courts to treat the remaining utterance, thus put in, as having a legitimate assertive and testimonial value of its own, — as if, having once got in, it could be used for any purpose whatever.[7]

§ 2114. Other Principles discriminated (Res Gestæ, Witness' Explanation of Inconsistencies, Admissions by Reference or by Silence, Letters explaining Conduct). In other parts of the system of Evidence, there are rules which

[5] The rulings will be found noted in the appropriate classes of precedents, post, § 2115.

[6] The principle in question was given a ludicrous application and led to a quick passage of wit between eminent counsel on an occasion in the trial of Tilton v. Beecher (Abbott's Rep. II. 546); Mr. Tilton having taken up a Bible in order to give Mr. Evarts on cross-examination "a better answer than my own, sir," Mr. Evarts objected. Judge Neilson: "Do you think it would be incongruous?" Mr. Evarts: "It gives us a right to put in the whole book, if he reads a part." Mr. Fullerton: "Well, sir, that would bring on your own condemnation."

[7] 1848, Church, C. J., in Bristol v. Warner, 19 Conn. 7, 19 (approving an instruction allowing the plaintiff to read the remainder of his own letter as evidence: "By 'substantive evidence' the judge did not mean conclusive evidence, nor even evidence which the jury was bound to believe, but only that it was, if true, relevant to the matter in dispute, to prove or disprove, as distinguished from mere explanatory evidence"); 1841, Storer v. Gowen, 18 Me. 174 ("Both are equally evidence to the jury").

Contra: 1894, Carter v. Carter, 152 Ill. 434 449, 28 N. E. 948 (letters referred to in a conversation); 1906, Merchant's L. & T. Co. v. Egan, 222 Ill. 494, 78 N. E. 800; 1873, Com. v. Vosburg, 112 Mass. 420 (telegram containing a significant assertion of fact admitted as explaining part of an admissible conversation in which it was referred to, but not allowed to be relied upon as to the assertion in it); 1832, Rice v. Withers, 9 Wend. N. Y. 138, 141 ("If those declarations were proof of the facts asserted, every defendant could justify, and no recovery would be had against him").

Compare the correct view as applied to a witness' self-contradictions (ante, § 1018).

admit the use of utterances complementary or explanatory in their nature; and their difference in principle from the present principle must here be noticed:

(1) Under the 'res gestæ,' or Verbal Act doctrine, it is allowable to ascertain the complete significance of a person's conduct by listening to what he said when doing the act (ante, §§ 1772–1786). For example, if adverse possession by Doe is relied upon to give prescriptive title, Doe's occupation of the land having been shown and his acts of ploughing or fencing having been put in evidence, it may further be shown that he said, when ploughing or fencing, "My father left me this land by will," or "I have a deed to this farm," because this gives to his acts the significance of an adverse claim.[1]

(2) An opponent may be shown to have made an admission by reference, i.e. by expressly stating that whatever a certain third person has said or will say is true, or by silent assent to another person's statement. Here, in effect, he adopts the other person's statement as his own, and the statement of the other person is received on the footing of an admission (ante, §§ 1070–1075).[2]

(3) Again, when conduct is offered as indicating a state of mind, the inference from the conduct can often not be properly made unless the circumstances leading up to and causing the conduct are considered, and these circumstances may consist in third persons' statements, which may therefore be evidenced. Thus, on an issue of sanity, the person's conduct acting upon letters received may show that his mind operated rationally upon the letters (ante, § 228).

(4) When a witness or a party has been impeached by prior utterances showing bias or self-contradiction, fairness requires that he be allowed to explain away their effect, if he can (ante, §§ 952, 1044, 1058). One way of explaining may be to give the remainder of what he said at the time. Here, then, the putting in of the explanatory parts is justifiable equally on two principles.[3]

(5) That the stage of re-examination or cross-examination is the proper time for putting in explanatory utterances is one of the rules for the Order of Evidence (ante, §§ 1884, 1896), and does not involve the tenor or limits of the utterance.

§ 2114. [1] It may be noted here that this is genuinely a branch of the principle of Completeness; i. e. under the Verbal Act Doctrine, the act as a whole consists of a conduct-part and a verbal part, and the verbal part may be put in as completing the conduct-part; while the principle as applied in the present Chapter deals with a verbal part complementing another verbal part. In both classes of cases it is done by virtue of the principle of Completeness; but the former class is more conveniently dealt with in the above-cited place in order to distinguish it from the Hearsay exceptions.

[2] Thus, where the separate statement is that of a third person, the two principles may overlap in their application; i. e. the separate statement is admissible equally under both principles.

[3] On this point a distinction was drawn by Abbott, C. J., in The Queen's Case (quoted supra, § 2113), in which he pronounced for admitting only the explanatory remainder in favor of a witness, but the whole in favor of a party. This distinction, however, already examined for the case of a witness (in § 1045), is unsound, and was repudiated in Prince v. Samo (quoted supra).

§ 2115. Principle's Application to (1) Oral Admissions, Conversations, Confessions, Former Testimony, Depositions. The general phrasing of the principle, then, is that when any part of an oral statement has been put in evidence by one party, the opponent may afterwards (on cross-examination or re-examination) put in the remainder of what was said on the same subject at the same time. This phrasing leaves something to be desired in definiteness, but it is practically applied without much difficulty and with little or no quibbling.

Its most common application is to conversations in general, including the admissions of an opponent and to inconsistent statements of a witness used in impeachment;[1] here, it may be noted that a conversation in a party's § 2115. [1] In the following rulings it is not always certain whether the statements were oral or written; in some cases, they were the statements of a witness, not a party's admissions; furthermore, the rulings usually declare merely that the whole may be admitted, and where they expressly limit the utterance to the explanatory part (on the principle of § 2113, par. 2, ante) it is so noted; the rule is applied to a conversation, where not otherwise noted; compare also the statutes quoted ante, § 2113, and the cases cited post, §§ 2119, 2120:

CANADA: 1890, Halifax Banking Co. v. Smith, 29 N. Br. 462, 465, 18 Can. Sup. 710 (conversation between a solicitor and one of the officers of the plaintiff bank; in the Dominion Court a larger scope was allowed; in the Provincial Court Prince v. Samo, Eng., was followed).

UNITED STATES: Alabama: 1849, McLean v. State, 16 Ala. 672, 677; 1853, Nelson v. Iverson, 24 Ala. 14; 1879, Washington v. State, 63 Ala. 192; 1896, Drake v. State, 110 Ala. 9, 20 So. 450 (threats by a defendant); 1903, Hudson v. State, 137 Ala. 60, 34 So. 854; 1905, Braham v. State, 143 Ala. 28, 38 So. 919 (all said upon the same subject); California: 1904, Risdon v. Yates, 145 Cal. 210, 78 Pac. 641 (general principle stated); Connecticut: 1832, Barnum v. Barnum, 9 Conn. 242, 247; 1833, Clark v. Smith, 10 Conn. 1, 5 (expressly following the opinion in The Queen's Case, ante, § 2113); 1848, Bristol v. Warner, 19 Conn. 7, 19; 1909, Thomas v. Young, 81 Conn. 702, 71 Atl. 1100 (not all that is said on any subject at a single interview is admissible); Florida: 1896, Thalheim v. State, 38 Fla. 169, 20 So. 938; 1903, Fields v. State, — Fla. —, 55 So. 185; Georgia: 1851, Rolfe v. Rolfe, 10 Ga. 143, 145; 1874, Hanson v. Crawley, 51 Ga. 528, 534; 1879, Cox v. State, 64 Ga. 374, 382, 411, 414; 1904, Brown v. State, 119 Ga. 572, 46 S. E. 833 (only the explanatory parts); Illinois: 1842, Young v. Bennett, 5 Ill. 43, 47 (the witness having stated some of his remarks drawing forth the defendant's answers, held that the rest of the witness' remarks were not admissible, "unless the answer would without them be unintelligible"); 1893, Jamison v. People, 145 Ill. 357, 378, 34 N. E. 486 (by an accused); 1904, Chicago City R. Co. v. Bundy, 210 Ill. 39, 71 N. E. 28 (remainder of a conversation forming part of a negotiation of compromise, admitted); 1913, Foster v. Shepherd, 258 Ill. 164, 101 N. E. 411 (remainder of defendant's conversation with several persons, admitted); Indiana: 1901, Diehl v. State, 157 Ind. 549, 62 N. E. 51 (the whole is admissible, "at least so far as it may materially tend to impeach, rebut, explain, or qualify, the portion introduced by his adversary"); 1912, Tyrrel v. State, 177 Ind. 14, 97 N. E. 14 (former testimony; after impeachment by parts, then only so much as "explains, modifies, or is necessary to enable the jury to understand the statements introduced to impeach," is admissible in rebuttal); Iowa: 1859, Gaddis v. Lord, 10 Ia. 141, 142 (whole of a conversation at the same time and on the same subject, admissible; under the Code, quoted ante, § 2113); 1862, Wilhelmi v. Leonard, 13 Ia. 335 ("whole of the conversation"); 1863, State v. Elliott, 15 Ia. 72, 73 (rule not applicable to statements volunteered by the party not as a part of a conversation); 1882, Hess v. Wilcox, 58 Ia. 380, 382, 10 N. W. 847 (principle applied); 1897, Hartman Steel Co. v. Hoag, 104 Ia. 269, 73 N. W. 611 (conversation by opponent; what was said to him, admitted); 1904, Pettis v. Green Riv. A. Co., — Ia. —, 99 N. W. 235 (Code rule applied); 1916, State v. Menilla, 177 Ia. 283, 15 S. N. W. 645 (murder; applying Code § 4615); Louisiana: 1825, Pratt v. Fowler, 3 Mart. N. S. 452, 454; 1844, Lewis v. Gibson, 9 Rob. 146, 148; 1854, Bean v. Evans, 9 La. An. 163; Maine: 1841, Storer v. Gowen, 18 Me. 174 (party's oral admissions; the whole "must be taken together"); 1903, Lombard v. Chaplin, 98 Me. 309, 56 Atl. 903 (party's letter; the whole admitted); Maryland: 1827, Turner v. Jenkins, 1 H. & G. 161, 163; 1916, Flaccus Glass Co. v. Gavin, 39 Md. 431, 98 Atl. 213 (contract for bottles); Massachusetts: 1814, Whitwell v. Wyer, 11 Mass. 6, 10; 1858, Com. v. Keyes, 11 Gray 323 (only the explanatory part; quoted ante, § 2113); 1867, Straw v. Greene, 14 All. 206 (same); 1868, Farley v. Rodocanachi, 100 Mass. 427, 429 (here, by a slip, the rule is stated in the broader form); 1886, Dole v. Wooldredge, 142 Mass. 161, 184, 7 N. E. 832 (same as Com. v. Keyes); 1893, Com. v. Armstrong, 158 Mass. 78, 32 N. E. 1032 (same); 1899, Cusick v. Whitcomb, 173 Mass. 330, 53 N. E. 815 (same); Michigan: 1902, Atherton v. Defreeze, 129 Mich. 364, 88 N. W. 886 (only the part that relates to the subject is admissible; quoted ante, § 2113); Mississippi: 1904, Flowers v. State, 85 Miss. 591, 37 So. 814 (statement of the deceased); Missouri: 1839, Howard v. Newsom, 5 Mo. 523; 1873, Burghart v. Brown, 51 Mo. 600; 1911, State v. McDonough, 232 Mo. 219, 134 S. W. 545 (remainder of a conversation with a witness on other topics, excluded); 1911, State v. Lovell, 235 Mo. 343, 138 S. W. 523; Nebraska: 1901, Curlson v. Hohn, — Nebr. —, 95 N. W. 1125 (irrelevant parts, admissible in the trial Court's discretion); New Hampshire: 1843, State v. Winkley, 14 N. H. 491 (instead of the question to the impeached witness being confined to a specification of the original remarks, and asking categorically whether he made them, it may ask, "What did you say at the time?" thus bringing out the whole of the conversation; the theory being that by detailing the whole "he makes a denial in substance of having used the expressions in question"); 1844, Barker v. Barker, 16 N. H. 333, 338, semble; 1900, State v. Saidell, 70 N. H. 174, 46 Atl. 1083 (the whole, "so far as it explained or qualified the matters inquired about," allowed); New Jersey: 1850, Somerville & E. R. Co. v. Doughty, 22 N. J. L. 495, 500, semble; New York: 1875, Tilton v. Beecher, N. Y., "Official" Report, II, 313 (crim. con.; Mr. Samuel Wilkeson, a witness for the defendant, was discredited by testimony that he had admitted that the publication of the charges of crim. con. would "knock the Life of Christ higher than a kite," meaning Mr. Beecher's book; but explained that what he had really said was that this result would occur "if these imputations were true"); 1808, Carver v. Tracy, 3 Johns. 427 (whole of an oral admission must be taken); 1840, Garey v. Nicholson, 24 Wend. 350, 352 (like Prince v. Samo, Eng.); 1842, Kelsey v. Bush, 4 Hill 440 (action on a note for a store; defendant's statement, when admitting execution, alleging a breach of warranty, held admissible; the rule stated in the old form, and the preceding case not cited); 1862, Rouse v. Whited, 25 N. Y. 170, 172 (Prince v. Samo, Eng., followed; good opinion by Sutherland, J.); 1879, Platner v. Platner, 78 N. Y. 90, 103 (preceding case approved); 1892, Fleischman v. Toplitz, 134 N. Y. 349, 355, 31 N. E. 1089 (similar); North Carolina: State v. Pulley, 63 N. C. 9 (the witness an accomplice testifying for the State); Oklahoma: 1911, Gibbons v. Terr., 5 Okl. Cr. 212, 115 Pac. 129; 1909, Mahon v. Rankin, 54 Or. 328, 102 Pac. 608 (only the qualifying parts; the opinion illustrates the possibilities of perverse technicalism above-mentioned in § 2113); Oregon: 1918, Boyd v. Grove, 89 Or. 80, 173 Pac. 310 (trespass by sheep); Rhode Island: 1902, Sherman v. Stafford Mfg. Co., 23 R. I. 529, 51 Atl. 26 (the rule "does not extend to matters distinct from the admissions"); South Dakota: 1910, State v. West, 24 S. D. 530, 124 N. W. 751 (accused's admissions); Tennessee: 1901, Colquit v. State, 107 Tenn. 381, 64 S. W. 713 (irrelevant opinion statements, held inadmissible in explanation); Vermont: 1905, State v. Bean, 77 Vt. 384, 60 Atl. 807 ("all that he said upon the subject at the same time must be received"); Virginia: 1921, Ellison v. Com., 130 Va. 748, 107 S. E. 697 (witness' affidavit read in self-contradiction; the whole, containing hearsay not a part of the contradiction, not admissible); Wisconsin: 1896, Emery v. State, 92 Wis. 146, 65 N. W. 848; 1903, Paulson v. State, 118 Wis. 89, 94 N. W. 771; 1906, Hupfer v. National Dist. Co., 127 Wis. 306, 106 N. W. 831 (witness allowed to put in parts of his former testimony in explanation; English rule followed); 1906, Smith v. Milwaukee E. R. & L. Co., 127 Wis. 253, 106 N. W. 829 (whole of a conversation affecting contributory negligence).

presence is in effect merely one form of an admission, because statements in a party's presence are usually equivalent to admissions by him (ante, § 1071).

The rule equally admits a statement by a third person taking part in the conversation between the parties: 1866, Gillam v. Sigman, 29 Cal. 637, 641; this is on the principle of § 1071, ante (admissions by silent assent to statements made in one's presence).

But the rule does not admit the remainder of the utterance when the first part has come into evidence merely incidentally and has not been put in evidence for its own sake: 1919, People v. Baker, 290 Ill. 349, 125 N. E. 263 (murder; to explain the witness' notice of defendant's actions, he answered on cross-examination that deceased had called his attention to defendant's presence; on re-examination, the remainder of deceased's utterance, alleging defendant's hostility, was not admitted); 1827, Winchell v. Latham, 6 Cow. N. Y. 682, 684 (a witness to a note was asked on cross-examination, to test his credit, whether he had mentioned seeing it to anybody, and to whom; he named the alleged maker as such a person; the alleged maker's reply not allowed to be evidenced on re-examination; otherwise, if the purpose and effect of the original question had been to show an admission by the maker's silence).

The principle also finds application to confessions of an accused[2] and to testimony at a former trial and to depositions.[3]

§ 2116. Same: (2) Sundry Writings. The principle as applied to writings permits the whole of the same document to be put in. But since for writings the whole is usually either required to be put in by the first party or is in effect before the Court, under the principles already examined (ante, §§ 2102–2111), there remains but little opportunity for the operation of the present principle. It finds occasional use for miscellaneous documents,[1] for judicial records,[2] and for corporate records.[3]

[1] The authorities have already for convenience been placed ante, § 2097.

Compare also the citations ante, § 2100.

[2] Federal: 1820, Harrison v. Rowan, 3 Wash. C. C. 583; Georgia: 1896, Lowe v. State, 97 Ga. 792, 25 S. E. 676 (all of the former testimony containing the alleged contradiction); Illinois: 1864, Aulger v. Smith, 34 Ill. 534 (former testimony of a party; the whole may be called for); 1905, Miller v. People, 216 Ill. 309, 74 N. E. 743 (former testimony used as admissions; the remainder may be offered "which tended to explain, qualify, correct, or in any manner throw light on the matters touched upon by the questions and answers which were proven"); Indiana: 1895, Siberry v. State, 149 Ind. 684, 39 N. E. 937 (after a stenographer had given parts of testimony at a former trial, the stenographer was asked by the opponent to give other and qualifying parts of the testimony, and these parts were ruled to be not in effect qualifying); Massachusetts: 1910, Grebenstein v. Stone & Webster Eng. Co., 205 Mass. 431, 91 N. E. 411 (the whole of a witness' former statement, held not improperly read, in the trial Court's discretion); Michigan: 1904, Culver v. South H. & E. R. Co., 126 Mich. 443, 101 N. W. 663 (whole of former testimony, inadmissible); Missouri: 1857, State v. Phillips, 24 Mo. 485 (the whole was read); 1875, Prewitt v. Martin, 59 Mo. 333 (same); 1881, State v. Talbott, 73 Mo. 358 (taking a modified view); 1892, Wilkerson v. Eilers, 114 Mo. 245, 251, 21 S. W. 514 (after cross-examination to contradictions in a deposition, the whole may be read, even though the cross-examiner read none); 1896, State v. Punshon, 133 Mo. 44, 34 S. W. 25 (of an accused before the coroner); 1857, State v. Phillips, 24 Mo. 475, 485 (deposition); 1875, Prewitt v. Martin, 59 Mo. 325, 334 (deposition); 1906, State v. Myers, 198 Mo. 225, 94 S. W. 242 (foregoing cases approved); Montana: 1890, State v. Jackson, 9 Mont. 518, 24 Pac. 213; New Hampshire: 1885, Whitman v. Morey, 63 N. H. 448, 454, 2 Atl. 899 (parts of a deposition having been used as a self-contradiction, the opponent was allowed to read as much "as pertained to the same subjects and tended to qualify, limit, or explain the answers read"); New York: 1893, Re Chamberlain, 140 N. Y. 390, 393, 35 N. E. 602 (former examination used by opponent in part; in rebuttal, only the explanatory parts are to be used); 1904, Hanlon v. Ehrich, 178 N. Y. 474, 71 N. E. 12 (there is no "hard and fast rule that will fit every case alike"; "in no event, however, should the writing, or any part thereof, be read until it has been marked in evidence"; here a general objection not specifying the parts objected to as not strictly contradictory, was held not sufficient); 1904, Taft v. Little, 178 N. Y. 127, 70 N. E. 211 (other parts of the opponent's former testimony, allowed to be read, so far as explanatory); Oklahoma: 1898, Huntley v. Terr., 7 Okl. 60, 54 Pac. 314 (self-contradictions in former testimony; the whole of the witness' testimony may be read in explanation); 1904, Flohr v. Terr., 14 Okl. 477, 78 Pac. 565; Texas: 1907, Corpus v. State, 51 Tex. Cr. 315, 102 S. W. 1152 (so much as is pertinent and explanatory of a contradictory statement offered in impeachment may be used; otherwise, the whole; here applied to former testimony).

Compare the cases ante, § 2098. The same is implied in the cases cited ante, § 2103; an opponent's own answers to interrogatories may stand on a different footing (post, § 2124).

Distinguish the question whether, in showing the rest of the utterances, the magistrate's report of testimony may be contradicted or added to (ante, § 1349).

§ 2116. [1] 1905, McBrayer v. Walker, 122 Ga. 245, 50 S. E. 95 (a deed offered by a grantee's administrator; the grantor allowed § 2116. [1] 1855, Miles v. Wingate, 6 Ind. 458 (bill of exceptions as part of record of former suit, admitted; "a record is an entire thing, and if admissible for any purpose, all its parts are received"); 1871, Jones v. Hopkins, 32 Ia. 503, 504 (whole of a record introduced, to explain a claim leading to the judgment); 1908, Matias v. Alvarez, 10 P. I. 398 (whole of a record introduced); 1920, State v. Bramlett, 114 S. C. 389, 103 S. E. 755 (murder of Mrs. M.; defendant had introduced some affidavits in alimony proceedings brought by his wife; the State not allowed to use the whole record including an affidavit of the wife).

---

Compare the cases cited ante, § 2108.

[2] 1823, Pike v. Dyke, 2 Greenl. 213 (records of an adjourned meeting of town proprietors three years later, excluded). Compare the cases cited ante, § 2109.

§ 2117. Same: (3) Charge and Discharge Statements. When the admission offered consists of a statement that the claimed money, services, or the like, were in fact received, a statement made at the same time, that the claim was discharged in some way, should be admitted; because the statement thus on the whole becomes a statement of non-liability, not of liability, and the first part of it is materially modified. It is not that the second part is in itself testimony to the discharge, but rather that it destroys the 'prima facie' quality of the first part as an admission of liability:

1813, MANSFIELD, C. J., in Randle v. Blackburn, 5 Taunt. 245 (the defendant having made out an account of the plaintiff's claim for timber against a ship, figuring it at £807, and having written on the same paper a counter-claim for £764 demurrage, the plaintiff offered the paper as an admission of the whole claim, without offering other evidence, and insisted that the defendant should offer some evidence of the counter-claim): "The defendant never admitted this account as distinct from the demurrage. His statement was made all in one breath; and I cannot distinguish what he admitted to be due for the timber from what he claimed for the demurrage. The verdict therefore was only for the balance, and was perfectly right. . . . It would be doing monstrous injustice if we were not to hold this, that the whole of the declaration must be taken together. I always have thought that, if a man gave an account of a transaction, the whole of it must be taken together."

1808, Carver v. Tracy, 3 Johns. 427: "The defendant said that he received a dollar of the plaintiff, but it was his due; on this declaration [for one dollar had and received], the justice without further evidence decided that the plaintiff was entitled to recover, and that the defendant must prove the debt he claimed." On appeal, per CURIAM: "The justice was manifestly wrong. The whole conversation of the defendant must be taken together. The plaintiff could not take one part and reject the other. What was said by the defendant, taken together, was a denial of the demand of the plaintiff, who was bound to prove it."

This would seem to be to-day universally conceded.[1] That any doubt ever arose is probably due to the existence at one time of a controversy on a similar point as to the use of a statement of discharge in an answer in chancery, which rests on other grounds (post, § 2121).

to use, on this principle, the grantee's indorsement on the deed showing a usurious mortgage; properly, however, the principles governing were those of § 2132, post, and § 1082, ante, and not the present one at all); 1882, State v. Hawkins, 81 Ind. 486, 487 (official bond); 1895, Robinson v. Cutter, 163 Mass. 377, 40 N. E. 112 (letter); 1815, Griffith v. Ketchum, 12 Johns. N. Y. 379, 380 (sheriff's return); 1883, Grattan v. Life Ins. Co., 92 N. Y. 284 (letter); 1823, Trustees v. Hogg, 2 Hawks N. C. 370, 374 (petition to plaintiff); 1922, Weston v. Royal Typewriter Co., — N. C. —, 110 S. E. 581 (party's pleading in the case); 1917, Stern & Sons, Inc. v. Chagnon, 39 R. I. 567, 99 Atl. 592 (breach of contract; remaining parts of correspondence, excluded because immaterial); 1922, Shell v. State, — Tex. Cr. —, 240 S. W. 546 (murder; part of a letter of deceased having been admitted, the remaining pages were held admissible for defendant).

§ 2117. [1] Arkansas: 1854, Adkins v. Hershy, 14 Ark. 442 (admission as to an account, asserting credits due, considered as a whole); Maryland: 1827, Oliver v. Gray, 1 H. & G. 204, 219 (a debtor's acknowledgment, used to take a debt out of the statute; his statement of its discharge, made at the same time, must stand or fall with the acknowledgment; so that the creditor cannot disprove the discharge and still use the acknowledgment); New York: 1808, Carver v. Tracy, 3 Johns. 427 (quoted supra); 1812, Wailing v. Toll, 9 Johns. 141 (defendant's statement, admitting plaintiff's attendance as physician, but alleging that she was under age and had not employed him, taken as a whole); 1813, Fenner v. Lewis, 10 Johns. 38, 45; 1813, Credit v. Brown, 10 Johns. 365 (defendant's statement, that he shot the plaintiff's dog, but did it to defend himself from attack, taken as a whole); 1814, Hopkins v. Smith, 11 Johns. 161 (plaintiff's statement that defendant signed a note with J. H., but claiming that J. H. signed as surety only, taken as a whole); 1817, Methodist Ep. Church v. Jaques, 2 Johns. Ch. 77, 116 (paper exhibited to charge may be used also in discharge); 1818, Smith v. Jones, 15 Johns. 229 (statement admitting a purchase but alleging payment, taken as a whole); 1837, Gough v. St. John, 16 Wend. 646, 652 ("'Prima facie' an inculpatory admission must be viewed in connection with matter in exculpation which comes out in the same conversation"; here, admissions of knowledge of insolvency); North Carolina: 1797, Barnes v. Kelly, 2 Hayw. 45; 1823, Jacobs v. Farrall, 2 Hayw. 570, 571 (statement admitting an account but claiming another account in discharging, taken together); Pennsylvania: 1788, Newman v. Bradley, 1 Dall. 240 (defendant's statement that he borrowed the money, but repaid it, taken as a whole; yet where the details mentioned in the favorable part of the statement are disproved by others, that part should be rejected); 1814, Shaller v. Brand, 6 Binn. 435, 438 (memorandum stating a right of dower and also its release, taken together); South Carolina: 1818, Arthur v. Wells, 1 Mill Const. 314 (declaration, by one admitting a shooting, that he did not mean to kill, taken as a whole); 1821, Smith v. Hunt, 1 McC. 449.

§ 2118. Same: (4) Account-Books. The use of the whole of a ledger-account (or, in general, of all the items of account between the same parties in the same book or series of books) is open to the objection that the entries are not made at the same time but at different times, and that the case is therefore not precisely like a single oral statement or letter admitting a claim but asserting its discharge. In the latter instance it is easy to see that the intended tenor as a whole is a statement of non-liability, while in the former instance each entry admitting debit is usually at the time of making it a separate whole. Nevertheless, good sense has dictated that the whole of an account shall be taken together, whatever on strict principle might have been excluded.[1] The result has been thus defended:

Contra, semble: 1830, Barber v. Anderson, 1 Bail. 358, 360 (trover, resting upon a demand and refusal; defendant on demand failed to return the slave, but said that he had sent her home; the latter statement held to be matter of defence, provable by defendant).

§ 2118. [1] Accord: ENGLAND: 1701, Darston v. Oxford, 1 Eq. Cas. Abr. 10 ("Where a man was charged only by an oath, or a book, the same should be his discharge"); 1842, Rowland v. Blaksley, 1 Q. B. 403 (set-off; the defendant, putting in the plaintiff's bill of particulars to prove the items set off, held bound to take the whole document).

IRELAND: 1828, L. C. Hart, in Kilbee v. Sneyd, 2 Moll. 186, 193 ("If you use one side of an account produced by the adversary, you must take both; you must take it altogether, or reject it 'in toto'").

CANADA: 1849, Palmer v. Gilbert, 1 All. N. Br. 505 (account rendered); 1893, [illegible] v. O'Brien, 27 N. Br. 145, 156, Can. Dig., in Cassels' Dig. 1893, p. 297 (defendant's books of account having been offered by the plaintiff as showing admissions of knowledge [illegible] solution of a partnership, the defendant was allowed to offer other entries in the same books to explain away the apparent inference from the former entries).

UNITED STATES: Fed. 1806, Morris v. Hurst, 1 Wash. C. C. 433 (good opinion by Washington, J.); 1818, Bell v. Davidson, 3 Wash. C. C. 328, 333; 1904, Simpson v. First Nat'l Bank, 129 Fed. 257, 264, C.C.A. (banking account); Ga. 1900, Bridges v. State, 110 Ga. 246, 34 S. E. 1037 (a whole book, containing certain relevant entries, allowed to go to jury under instructions, the detaching of the irrelevant parts being impossible without mutilation); Ill. 1901, Boudinot v. Winter, 190 Ill. 394, 60 N. E. 553; Ia. 1859, Withs v. Hagge, 8 Ia. 163, 189 (when charge items are offered, credit items to the same party in the same book are equally made evidence); La. 1826, Wakeman v. Marquand, 5 Mart. La. N. s. 265, 272; Rev. Civ. C. 1920, § 2248 (merchant's books are usable against them, though not in their favor; "but if used as evidence, the whole must be taken together"); Md. 1824, King v. Maddux, 7 H. & J. 467 (all the entries in the same book against the same party, admitted); N. H. 1907, Page v. Hazelton, 74 N. H. 252, 66 Atl. 1049 (other items in an account-book, admitted); N. Y. 1818, Walden v. Sherburne, 15 Johns. 409, 424 (whole of an account admitted); 1858, Pendleton v. Weed, 17 N. Y. 72, 76 ("the whole relating to the same matter is admissible"); 1864, Dewey v. Hotchkiss, 30 N. Y. 497, 502 (quoted supra); N. C. 1826, Turner v. Child, 1 Dev. 133; Pa. 1821, Withers v. Gillespy, 7 S. & R. 10, 14 (admissible not for "matter impertinent to the issue," but "for all purposes of explanation, . . . everything necessarily connected with the entries relied on by the plaintiff which their books contained at the time the suit was brought"); 1824, Thommon v. Halbach, 12

1864, HOGEBOOM, J., in Dewey v. Hotchkiss, 30 N. Y. 497, 502: "The books constituted one entire series of accounts between these parties, and, for the purposes of this case, may be regarded as if they contained nothing else whatever — indeed, as if they had all been presented in court by the plaintiffs on a single paper or account current. In such case could the defendant be permitted to cull particular entries from the account and exclude the residue? I think not. The rule that a party whose oral declarations, in a conversation, are improved in evidence by his adversary, is not thereby permitted to introduce in his own favor disconnected portions of the same conversation having reference to distinct and independent matters, has no close application to such a case; 1st, Because the account must be regarded as the single, entire, and continuous statement of the party offering it, presenting his version of the true state of the business transactions between the parties, — not necessarily entitled to credit in every part, if discredited by other evidence, but admissible for the consideration of the jury; 2d, Because the defendant, having adopted the whole statement by ranging through its entire scope and contents, has given currency to the whole, and has made it necessary to examine and take in the whole, in order to determine how far the portions rejected by him bear upon, affect, or qualify the portions selected. There is no evidence that the portions of the account introduced by the plaintiff, after those introduced by the defendant, do not materially qualify the effect of the latter items, and do not in fact relate to the same precise subject-matter."

§ 2119. Separate Utterances excluded; (1) Conversations, Oral Admissions and Confessions, Libels, etc. It follows, from the general principle (ante, § 2113), that a distinct or separate utterance is not receivable under this principle. The boundary here is usually defined by saying that all that was uttered at the same time on the same subject is receivable; yet it is difficult to test the line of admissibility by any formula, and none seems to have been sanctioned by general acceptance:

1839, DENMAN, L. C. J., in Sturge v. Buchanan, 10 A. & E. 598 (assumpsit for the value of a cargo improperly sold by the defendant's agent; the plaintiff having read three letters of the defendant admitting parts of the plaintiff's case, the defendant was not allowed to read other letters of his in the same letter-book dealing with the same correspondence): "This is a series of copies of letters written from time to time, on principle exactly the same thing as if they had been kept in his counting-house on a file; it is like proving what

S. & R. 238; Vt. 1846, Mattocks v. Lyman, 18 Vt. 98, 103 (payment allowed to be shown by the same books); 1900, State v. Powers, 72 Vt. 168, 47 Atl. 830 (entire page of a book bearing a certain entry, admitted to show the character of the book and the time of entries); Va. 1808, Waggoner v. Gray, 1 Hen. & M. 603, 608; 1809, Jones v. Jones, 2 id. 447; W. Va. 1901, Rowan v. Chenoweth, 49 W. Va. 287, 38 S. E. 544.

Contra, semble: 1820, Catt v. Howard, 3 Stark. 6 (the whole of a single entry in an account-book read, but not "distinct entries in different parts of the book").

But it is a proper qualification to exclude entries made after suit begun: 1821, Withers v. Gillespy, 7 S. & R. Pa. 10, 15; and the following ruling seems sound: 1893, Doolittle v. Stone, 136 N. Y. 613, 616, 32 N. E. 639 (defendant's book of accounts having been put in by plaintiff as an admission, a "distinct and separate book [of the defendant], making no reference to any other, not even bringing down a balance of account," not admitted in his favor).

The following case, making an exception to the general rule for executors and other fiduciaries, probably rests directly on the rule for chancery answers, post, § 2121, and should therefore be applied only to pleadings rendering an account: 1827, Robertson v. Archer, 5 Rand. Va. 319, 324 (excluded, because such persons are obliged "to furnish those to whom they are accountable the means of charging them to the full extent of their liabilities").

Where an entry in a book of entries is offered under the principle of § 1551, ante (regular entries), the jury may examine the whole of the book in order to determine from its appearance whether it is what it purports to be: 1904, Hauser v. People, 210 Ill. 253, 71 N. E. 416 (hotel-register).

a party said in one conversation; one of these letters or one of these conversations may be proved without authorizing the opposite party to bring forward for his own benefit what he himself said or wrote in another conversation or a different letter."

1824, HOSMER, C. J., in Stewart v. Sherman, 5 Conn. 244, 245 (rejecting a subsequent conversation concerning the ownership of a note): "It is a correct principle that the whole of a conversation must be taken together, in order to show distinctly the full meaning and sense of the party. . . . The question is merely this, whether a particular conversation is part of a preceding conversation because a negotiation begun was still pursued. . . . [Here] the conversation, in the manner above-mentioned, was not the same. The past and future cannot thus be brought together in order to form an artificial identity. The law never intends that a party may make evidence for himself from his own declarations, but merely that the meaning of a conversation shall not be perverted by proof of a part of it only."

The application of this principle to conversations, including oral admissions and confessions, depends almost entirely on the circumstances of each case;[1] what is a separate utterance can ordinarily not be the subject of fixed definition; so also for utterances charged as libellous or seditious.[2]

§ 2119. [1] With the following rulings should be compared those already cited under § 2115, admitting the remainder of the same admission or confession; the present principle is there constantly mentioned: Fed. 1808, Blight v. Ashley, 1 Pct. C. C. 15, 20 (statement on another day, excluded); Ala. 1842, Lee v. Hamilton, 3 Ala. 529, 533; Conn. 1824, Stewart v. Sherman, 5 Conn. 244; 1836, Robinson v. Ferry, 11 Conn. 460, 462; Ill. 1912, Norton v. Clark, 253 Ill. 557, 97 N. E. 1079 (admitting the statements made by the other conversant when useful for explaining the sense of the statements of the other conversant already admitted); Ia. 1856, Dougherty v. Posegate, 3 Ia. 88, 90 (separate conversation or declaration, admissible only when it is necessary to explain the first or make it fully understood; under the Code); 1859, Williams v. Donaldson, 8 Ia. 108, 112 (principle applied); 1864, State v. Vance, 17 Ia. 138, 140 (principle applied); 1904, State v. Leuhrsman, 123 Ia. 476, 99 N. W. 140 (prior statement, excluded); La. 1895, State v. Jones, 47 La. An. 1524, 18 So. 515; 1906, State v. Thompson, 116 La. 829, 41 So. 107 (accused); Mass. 1871, Adam v. Eames, 107 Mass. 275 (statement "at another interview," excluded); S. D. 1906, State v. Kapelino, 20 S. D. 591, 108 N. W. 335 (assault with intent; conversations between other persons, at a prior time, the defendant and the injured person being present, excluded); Tex. 1921, Williams v. State, 89 Tex. Cr. 334, 231 S. W. 110 (accused's exculpatory declarations made at a later time, held admissible on the facts, under C. Cr. P. § 811, quoted ante, § 2113).

Whether the statement is a separate one is of course for the judge to determine (post, § 2550) before it is offered to the jury: 1836, Robinson v. Ferry, 11 Conn. 460, 463.

Distinguish the question whether a witness who has been discredited by inconsistent statements may be supported by evidence of other consistent statements (ante, § 1122), and whether a party whose inconsistent claims have been used against him as admissions may show that at other times he has made the same claim as now (ante, § 1133); both these things are generally forbidden; yet they might be received as corroborating, even though inadmissible under the present principle of Completeness.

[2] From the following rulings distinguish those already cited under §§ 195, 369, 403, where the object is, not to show the total sense of a specific utterance, but to show the general state of opinion or feeling of an accused as being loyal, revolutionary, malicious, or the like; under the latter principle the allowable range of utterances would obviously be greater than under the present one, but the rulings are sometimes difficult to classify; compare also the statements admissible under the Hearsay exception (ante, § 1732), and the citations under the present principle (ante, § 2099).

England: 1683, Sidney's Trial, 9 How. St. Tr. 817 (quoted ante, § 2094); 1789, Stockdale's Trial, 22 How. St. Tr. 257 (quoted ante, § 2094); 1810, R. v. Lambert, 2 Camp. 398, 400 (libel in a newspaper; passages "of the same paper upon the same topic with the libel, or fairly connected with it, although locally disjoined from it," entitled to be read by defendant, "to show the intention and mind of the defendant with respect to this specific paragraph"); 1832, Pinney's Trial, 3 State Tr. N. S. 11, 464 (riot and sedition; after part of a speech, the other part may be shown, and after a speech having one tendency, another by the same person to the contrary may be shown); 1843, R. v. O'Connell, 5 State Tr. 1, 289, semble (sedition; a § 2120. Same: (2) Utterances incorporated by Reference, Other Letters of a Correspondence, etc. (a) Where the utterance first offered includes by reference a concurrent or prior utterance, the one thus referred to (no matter by whom made) becomes a part of it. Nevertheless, what is thus incorporated may be only a portion of the prior utterance, i. e. the portion referred to; and thus that portion only should be put in which is useful as completing the sense of the later one:

1860, HOAR, J., in Trischet v. Ins. Co., 14 Gray 457: "Where a letter is written in answer to another, it may often be unintelligible without referring to the previous one. By referring to the letter to which he is replying the writer to that extent makes it a part of his own communication. Suppose that the first letter contained a question; and the reply was, 'To the question contained in your letter, I answer "Yes."' How could the meaning of the answer be ascertained by the jury without knowing the question? We can perceive no just distinction between oral conversation and written correspondence in this respect. Where a statement is made in the course of a conversation or correspondence, which is itself admissible in evidence, the rest of the conversation or correspondence must be admitted, so far as it is connected with and necessary to a full understanding of what follows."

This principle applies to admit a prior oral utterance [1] as well as a prior writing.[2] It should be noted, however, that in neither case is it essential speech published in a certain newspaper being read by the prosecution as seditious, the defence were allowed to read an article by the same person on "The morality of war"; good opinion by Crampton, J.); 1848, R. v. Martin, 6 State Tr. 925, 998 (seditious article; another in the same paper, not received in his favor, because not explaining the one charged); 1856, Darby v. Ouseley, 1 H. & N. 1, 7, 11 (libel in a newspaper; extract in another number, not having "a tendency to explain, exculpate, modify, or control the other paragraph," excluded); 1888, Parnell Commission's Proceedings (quoted ante, § 2099).

United States: 1914, Clark v. U. S., 8th C. C. A., 211 Fed. 916 ("The question then presents itself, whether when an indictment charges that a certain book is obscene, the passages which the prosecutor claims to be obscene may be introduced in evidence and submitted to the jury, and the remaining portion of the book excluded?" The question is then answered, No. The odd thing about it is that neither counsel nor judges, so far as the opinion or the printed briefs show, had an inkling that a great principle was involved over which our forbears in the law had contended in notable political and historic struggles at different times going back three centuries. It is a discouraging hint of the ignorance and indifference of our intelligent bench and bar to the importance of historical knowledge and professional biography that a case involving this principle could reach and pass through the appellate court of the United States without any of the participants discovering that the principle involved had been made immortal in our legal history by the names of Sidney and Erskine).

§ 2120. [1] 1908, Sears v. Howe, 80 Conn. 414, 68 Atl. 983 (letters referred to in replies thereto, held admissible as a part of the replies); 1906, Proctor v. Cable Co., 145 Mich. 503, 108 N. W. 992 (salary contract; series of letters, admitted); 1904, Gosnell v. Webster, 70 Nebr. 705, 97 N. W. 1060 (rest of a correspondence, admitted); 1844, Barker v. Barker, 16 N. H. 333, 339 (former expressions referred to, "which imparted any significance to the remarks of either beyond their ordinary and obvious meaning," admissible); 1866, Judd v. Brentwood, 46 N. H. 430 (preceding case approved); 1909, People v. Schlessel, 196 N. Y. 476, 90 N. E. 44 (the witness' mere avowal of ignorance of a document's contents when asked on cross-examination, is not a reference sufficient to admit the document in rebuttal).

[2] Fed. 1874, Insurance Co. v. Newton, 22 Wall. 32, 35 (insurer's admission of sufficiency of proof of death, held not separable from his claim at the same time that the death was by suicide); 1877, Mutual Benefit L. Ins. Co. v. Higginbotham, 95 U. S. 380, 390 (preceding case approved); Ala. 1899, Amos v. State, 123 Ala. 50, 26 So. 524 (false pretences; defendant represented that M. had money of his; M. wrote to B. that he had not; B. handed the postal card to defendant, who read it and then said "I have lied to you about this"; the postal card admitted as a part of defendant's admission); Ill. 1903, Morris v. Jamieson, 205 Ill. 87, 68 N. E. 742 (letter accompanying a statement of account, received; that the reference to the prior utterance be express; for, especially in a correspondence, the reference may be implied only. Perhaps, for letters, the rule should be that by an express reference the whole of the prior utterance becomes admissible, but otherwise, only that portion of a prior letter which tends to explain the later one; yet no definite rule seems to be judicially agreed upon.

(b) A subsequent utterance by another person can hardly be conceived as incorporated by reference. Hence, when B puts in A's admission, B cannot put in at the same time his own reply, since the sense of A's utterance can hardly be qualified by what B may later say of it.[3] Nevertheless, when A's utterance has in some way referred to an utterance of B's, the latter's subsequent utterance may be useful to explain;[4] as in the following case:

1836, Roe v. Day, 7 C. & P. 705; after several letters of each party had been put in by the defence, the last being a letter of the plaintiff, the defendant offered his reply to the plaintiff's last. Mr. Thesiger, arguing contra: "It is a letter written by the defendant and not answered by the plaintiff. It frequently happens that a person may receive a letter from another, containing all sorts of absurd statements and assertions, and may throw it into the fire and take no further notice of it, and it is rather too much to say that all those statements and assertions may be given in evidence against him." PARK, J.: "I shall

The Queen's Case, quoted ante, § 2113, followed); Ia. 1871, Brayley v. Ross, 33 Ia. 505, 508; 1872, Collins v. Bane, 34 Ia. 385, 389; Mass. 1860, Trischet v. Ins. Co., 14 Gray 457 (quoted supra); 1900, Buffum v. York Mfg. Co., 175 Mass. 471, 56 N. E. 599; 1919, Sargent v. Lord, 232 Mass. 585, 122 N. E. 761 (services as an architect; prior letter of plaintiff held not made admissible by a later one of defendant, on the facts); N. D. 1915, Guild v. More, 32 N. D. 432, 155 N. W. 44 (deceit; remainder of correspondence introduced); Okl. 1915, Tishomingo El. L. & P. Co. v. Gullett, 52 Okl. 180, 152 Pac. 849 (entire correspondence admitted); Or. 1901, Sturgis v. Baker, 39 Or. 541, 65 Pac. 810 (cashier's indorsement on a note, held explainable by his account-entries, under Code § 690, quoted ante § 2113); S. C. 1819, M'Grath v. Isaacs, 1 N. & McC. 563, 573 ("In all cases where papers are called for, which are in the possession of one party, by another, they ought not to be garbled, but the whole produced"; here, a letter called for referred to another, and the latter's production was held proper).

For other rulings, sometimes hard to distinguish, see the citations under admissions by reference, ante, § 1070; the distinction of principle has already been explained in § 2114.

A letter inadmissible under the present rule may be made admissible by the receiver's silent assent, or failure to answer (ante, § 1073).

For the question whether the prior letter must be offered by the party offering the later letter, see ante, § 2104.

Distinguish the question of the legal effect of the execution of document A referring to document B; 1859, Ingoldsby v. Juan, 12 Cal. 564, 577.

[3] Accord: 1853, Collins v. Todd, 17 Mo. 537, 540; 1913, Mulroy v. Jacobson, 24 N. D. 354, 139 N. W. 697 (not clear); 1915, Blunt v. Montpelier & W. R. Co., 89 Vt. 152, 94 Atl. 106 (conversation between the plaintiff and the defendant's conductor; the latter's reply held not admissible on the facts).

[4] Fed. 1909, Crawford v. U. S., 212 U. S. 183, 29 Sup. 260 (an accused having surreptitiously taken away certain correspondence apparently inculpating, the custodian wrote him charging him with the act; this letter being admitted, the answer was held also admissible; no authority is cited; but the ruling rests properly on the principle of § 281, ante); 1909, Perrin v. U. S., 9th C. C. A., 169 Fed. 17 (contracts by the defendant made on Oct. 31, 1903, Nov. 20, 1903, and Feb. 4, 1904, forwarded by the defendant in a letter of Sept. 14, 1905; the contract of Oct. 31, 1903, being offered by the prosecution as an admission, the defendant was held entitled to introduce the other contracts; Gilbert, J., diss.); Conn. 1905, Hoggson & P. Mfg. Co. v. Sears, 77 Conn. 587, 60 Atl. 133 (plaintiff's reply-letter admitted for him, on the facts); Ia. 1883, Burlington C. R. & N. R. Co. v. Sherwood, 62 Ia. 309, 314, 17 N.W. 564; 1904, Robertson v. Vasey, 125 Ia. 526, 101 N.W. 271.

Distinguish the following: 1858, Bradley v. Gardner, 10 Cal. 371 (slander; the "reply made by the plaintiff when the defendant uttered the words." admitted; it "might have qualified or explained the words, or shown in what sense they were used, or even admitted their truth").

receive the letter in evidence; it is an immediate answer to the letter of the plaintiff"; the letter was read. PARK, J.: "We now see the importance of this letter. In a former letter the defendant says to the plaintiff, in substance, 'You tried to entrap me into admissions,' and to this the plaintiff answered, 'I could not have so intended, because I could not be a witness to prove them'; and then the defendant explains that in the last letter by saying, 'I did not mean that, but I meant that you tried to entrap me into giving you a guarantee.'"

§ 2121. Chancery Answer: (1) Used at Law as an Evidential Admission. It was perfectly settled at common law that, when an answer obtained from a defendant in chancery proceedings was offered in evidence in a trial at law, as containing an admission, the whole must be used, and not merely such part as the proponent might choose:

Ante, 1726 Chief Baron GILBERT, Evidence, 50: "When you read an answer [at law], the confession must be all taken together, and you shall not take only what makes against him, and leave out what makes for him; for the answer is to be read as the sense of the party himself, and if it is to be taken in this manner, you must take it entire and unbroken."

It did not become of practical importance to settle whether the proponent of it must at the outset read it all, or whether the opponent was to read later the remainder left at first unread; this more or less academic question, often raised for writings in general (ante, § 2102), was apparently left here unsettled, or at least was stated indifferently in one way or the other. The important thing was that the opponent whose answer was thus used had the right to have the whole, or none, laid before the Court; and no doubt has ever existed on this point.[1]

§ 2121. [1] England: 1695, Bath v. Bathersea, 5 Mod. 9; 1697, Lynch v. Clerke, 3 Salk. 154 (L. C. J. Holt "said that if the plaintiff will read the defendant's answer in chancery against him in evidence, the defendant may likewise take advantage thereof; for all is evidence, or none"); 1767, Buller, Trials at Nisi Prius, 237; 1781, Bermon v. Woodbridge, 2 Dougl. 781, 788 (L. C. J. Mansfield: "Though the whole of an affidavit or answer must be read, if any part is, yet you need not believe all equally"); 1806, Ormond v. Hutchinson, 13 Ves. Jr. 47, 53 (the whole of an answer in discovery must be read at law); 1808, Butterworth v. Bailey, 15 Ves. Jr. 358, 362 (same).

United States: 1792, Benedict v. Nichols, 1 Root Conn. 434 (account; the defendant's examination on citation before a probate court, required to be read as a whole); 1803, Hoffman v. Smith, 1 Cai. N. Y. 157 (not decided); 1814, Lawrence v. Ins. Co., 11 Johns. N. Y. 241, 260 ("It is an invariable rule that where an answer is given in evidence in a court of law, the party is entitled to have the whole of his answer read"; here applied to a production under rule of Court "analogous to an answer in chancery").

Contra: 1909, Colby v. Reams, 109 W. Va. 308, 63 S. E. 1009 (citing merely a treatise, on the general principle of § 2113, ante, and apparently unaware of the specific rule here applicable).

The rule was equally applied to a document produced in the answer: 1836, Brown v. Thornton, 1 Myl. & Cr. 243, 246 (discovery with document produced; L. C. Cottenham: "The rule stated to prevail at law [that a party shall not be at liberty to read a part only of an answer] does prevail there; and where a party produces at law a document which he has obtained by means of a bill of discovery only, the judges at common law will not allow him to use it without using the answer also; . . . [unless] this Court has made an order for the production of the document").

The practice for separate answers seems to have been various: 1826, Roberts v. Tennell, 3 T. B. Monr. Ky. 247, 248 (after an answer in another suit, a second answer to an amended bill in the same suit, excluded); 1829, Duncan v. Gibbs, 1 Yerg. Tenn. 256 (bill against D. and others; after a reading of the bill and one answer, the opponent was allowed to read D.'s answer).

§ 2122. Same: (2) Used in Chancery as a Pleading; Charge and Discharge Clauses. But an answer in chancery, when used in the same chancery cause, stands upon a radically different footing. When used at law, it is offered merely as his opponent's admission in writing, and goes in like any other informal admission offered in evidence; i. e. it is not conclusive, like a judicial admission (post, § 2590), but merely a piece of discrediting evidence, which may be explained away or otherwise overthrown (ante, § 1058). But in the chancery cause in which it is filed it has a double character; it is the defendant's pleading in defence, and it is also his evidential admission by way of compulsory discovery under oath as demanded by the plaintiff.[1] Consequently, it is subject to certain rules of Pleading, as well as to rules of Evidence, according as it is used by the plaintiff in one character or another.

1. Let us suppose now that it is to be used as a pleading. As such, it might of course contain allegations both denying the plaintiff's charges and affirming new matter in avoidance, or allegations admitting the charges but affirming matter in avoidance. The answer might be met by the plaintiff in one of two ways; either he might demur to its sufficiency in law, or he might take issue of fact upon its allegations.

(a) The former object was accomplished in chancery, not by a demurrer so called, but by an analogous process called "setting the cause down for a hearing upon bill and answer."[2] This of course admitted the truth of the defendant's allegations, while claiming them insufficient in law; hence, on the hearing, the whole of the answer might be used by the defendant as being conceded true by the plaintiff. This much follows necessarily as a rule of pleading, and has not been questioned.[3]

(b) But suppose the plaintiff takes the other course, and puts the answer in issue. It is here that the controversy arises. Upon this issue, there is no such clear separation of pleadings as at common law; i. e. in chancery, at the same hearing, the plaintiff must prove the allegations pertaining to his case, and the defendant must prove the allegations made in affirmative avoidance.[4] But since the defendant (as above noted) is in chancery not obliged to separate his pleas into negative and affirmative ones (as he must at common law, by a traverse and a confession and avoidance), and may thus put into his single answer a denial as to part and a confession and avoidance as to part,

§ 2122. [1] Langdell, Summary of Equity Pleading, § 68 ("In chancery, these two things, so different in their nature, are indiscriminately blended in the answer. . . . The answer has generally been treated as if it were homogeneous, and every part of it subject to the same rules. At one time, indeed, it has been assumed to contain the defendant's examination under oath [as an admission]; at another, to contain his defence; but the fact has seldom been intelligently recognized that it contained both of these; and the failure to do this, and to apply to it different rules, according as it was presented to the Court in the one aspect or the other, has caused infinite confusion in equity pleading"); and the authorities cited in note 119 of Mr. Gest's article cited ante, § 2032, note 1. Compare a similar ambiguity in common-law pleadings (ante, §§ 1063–1067).

[2] Langdell, ubi supra, § 83.

[3] Professor Langdell, indeed (ubi supra, § 83), questions the soundness of this so far as concerns the statements not constituting defensive allegations; but this is not material to the present controversy.

[4] Langdell, ubi supra, § 90.

it follows that the plaintiff may be able to find some part of his claim confessed in the defendant's pleading. This part he may therefore take as admitted, i.e. not in issue, and therefore not necessary to be evidenced by the plaintiff, — a consequence parallel to that which ensues at common law. But, on the other hand, there is no such allowance to the defendant; for, as to his mere affirmations in avoidance, they are but his pleading, and in his turn he must prove them. It would be absurd to say that, by merely alleging certain affirmative facts, and though these very facts have been put in issue by the plaintiff, the defendant could insist on having them taken for true in his own favor without evidence. They are mere pleading-statements of what he expects to prove, and he is bound to prove them, — precisely as the plaintiff is bound to prove whatever of his own case has been put in issue.

The orthodox rule, then, has always been that, upon a hearing in chancery, the plaintiff may use as judicial admissions whatever admissions he can find in the defendant's answer, but the defendant may not use the remainder of the answer in his own favor:

1707, Anon., reported in Gilbert, Evidence, 52; bill of account against an executor, who answered that £1100 was deposited with him by the testator, but that afterwards he settled by giving bond for £1000 and receiving the remaining £100 for his trouble and pains; the answer being put in issue, it was argued that the whole should be taken as true for the defendant; but the Court held that, "When an answer was put in issue, what was confessed and admitted need not be proved [by the defendant], but it behoved the defendant to make out by proofs what was insisted upon by way of avoidance; . . . where the defendant admitted a fact, and insisted on a distinct fact by way of avoidance, there he ought to prove the matter of his defence; . . . but if it had been one fact, as if the defendant had said the testator had given him £100, it ought to have been allowed, unless disproved [by the plaintiff], because nothing of the fact charged is admitted."

1806, Mr. W. D. Evans, Notes to Pothier, II, 135 (No. XVI, § 4): "The above decision [quoted in Gilbert] is principally referable to the course of proceeding in courts of equity. A bill is filed, an answer is put in, the plaintiff either sets down the cause for hearing upon bill and answer (which is an admission of the truth of the whole [of the answer]) and merely brings the sufficiency of it into contest; or he replies to the answer, putting the whole in issue generally, whereupon the defendant must substantiate by proof all the facts upon which he means to insist, whilst the plaintiff may rely upon every fact admitted which he conceives to be material, without being bound to the admission of any others. Upon this proceeding no questions of credit, no inferences of fact, can regularly occur; . . . if a real disputable question occurs respecting a matter of fact, it is referred to the examination of another tribunal. . . . If my ideas upon the general subject are correct, the distinction in this matter is not between courts of law and equity, but between pleadings and evidence; and that if an answer in chancery was introduced incidentally and merely by way of evidence [in another suit] in a court of equity, it ought to be treated precisely in the same manner as in a court of law; on the other hand, it is very clear that if in a court of law a plea confesses the matter in demand but avoids it by other circumstances, the proof of the avoidance is incumbent on the defendant."

1816, KENT, C., in Hart v. Ten Eyck, 2 John. Ch. 62, 90: "When the answer is put in issue [in chancery], the defendant must support by proof all the facts upon which he means to insist; while the plaintiff may rely upon every fact admitted which he conceives material, without being bound to the admission of any others. But when the answer is offered in evidence at law, no part of it is immediately in issue, [and therefore no question arises as to the defendant's having to prove it]; it is only parcel of the evidence, and if one side introduce it, the other may insist upon the whole being read; and if read, it does not necessarily follow that it must be wholly admitted [i. e. believed] as true or wholly rejected as false. . . . The distinction, therefore, as Evans says, is not between Courts of law and equity, but between pleadings and evidence. If an answer is introduced collaterally, and merely by way of evidence, in chancery, it ought to be treated precisely as in a Court of law."

(c) But the present principle of Compulsory Completeness (ante, §§ 2094, 2103) here came into play. It created a restriction for a plaintiff reading a defendant's answer as a pleading in the same cause, namely, that he could not misrepresent the tenor of the admission, or could not represent as an admission that which was not really an admission when the sense of the immediate context was taken. In other words, the plaintiff was required to use, additionally, whatever was grammatically connected with the part he desired to offer; but this only; and it came in, according to the general principle (ante, § 2113, par. (c)), not as independent evidence for the defendant, but merely as explanatory of the tenor of his alleged admissions against himself:

1826, ELDON, L. C., in Bartlett v. Gillard, 3 Russ. 149, 157 (a passage read began, "Before such demand was made," and the preceding passage relating to the demand included other circumstances in the same sentence): "Where a plaintiff chooses to read a passage from a defendant's answer, he reads all the circumstances stated in the passage. If the passage so read contains a reference to any other passage, or to a fact stated in any other passage, that other passage must be read also. But it is to be read only for the purpose of explaining, so far as explanation may be necessary, the passage previously read in which reference to it is made. If, in the passage thus referred to, new facts and circumstances are introduced in grammatical connection with that which must be read for the purpose of explaining the reference, the facts and circumstances so introduced are not to be considered as read."

The application of this restriction was attended with some controversy. In particular, it was long in dispute whether the plaintiff's use of a clause admitting (for example) the receipt of money required him to use also another clause in the same or ensuing sentence alleging a payment, — in other words, whether a clause of discharge must be read with a clause of charge. The liberal view prevailed in the end; but the question was merely as to the application of the general principle, and never as to the undoubted principle itself.[5]

[5] England: 1690, Awdley v. Awdley, 2 Vern. 194 (the Court said that Howard v. Brown, unreported, was the first case "where, because a man had charged himself by answer, that his answer should be allowed as a good discharge; and it ought to be the last"); 1693, Hampton v. Spencer, 2 Vern. 288 (bill for reconveyance under a mortgage agreement; the answer admitting that the conveyance was in trust for the plaintiff's family but denying the mortgage agreement, the Court decreed upon the trust without further proof); ante, 1726, Gilbert, Evidence, 52 (quoted supra); 1748, Kirkpatrick v. Love, Ambl. 589 (account of merchandise; the plaintiffs in their examination admitted the receipt of one parcel and said that they had paid for it; held that the plaintiffs need not prove payment, as they "charged and discharged themselves in the same sentence; otherwise it had been, if the discharge or avoidance had been in a distinct sentence"); 1792, Blount v. Burrow, 1 Ves. Jr. 546 (defendant, charged with having four bonds of the testator,

2. But suppose, now, that, in a chancery cause, an answer is offered in the ordinary way of an evidential admission, not as a pleading defining the matters at issue; this would in effect be the case of an answer in another chancery cause. Here no rule of pleading would apply; the plaintiff cannot treat this answer as being in one aspect a pleading to his bill, admitting the truth of some of its allegations; he must use it as he uses any other written admission offered in evidence. In other words, it must be treated precisely as when offered in a trial at law, and the whole must be read (ante, § 2121). This rule also was unquestioned,[6] and it brings out clearly that the distinction lay not between a rule in chancery and a rule at law, but between a rule of Pleading and a rule of Evidence:

1813, Boardman v. Jackson, 2 Ball & B. 382; bill for accounting; the plaintiff produced an old account furnished to him by the defendant, and the latter insisted on using the discharging items in evidence; arguing as follows: "The distinction is this: . . . Where a plaintiff refers to an answer [of the defendant] as constituting part of the pleadings in the cause, the defendant cannot by any separate passage of the answer discharge himself from any admission he may there have made; that he can do only by producing evidence. But when a plaintiff refers to an answer in another cause, by way of evidence, he makes the whole answer evidence, and the defendant may then read any part of it in his defence. The same distinction exists at law between pleadings and evidence; if a plea confess a fact, but at the same time avoids it by other circumstances, the defendant must substantiate the avoidance by proof." L. C. MANNERS: "The account which is the subject of this exception forms no part of the pleadings in this cause; . . . [then] the question is answered on examination that he had received them, but with a direction to keep them if the donor died; held sufficient; L. Com'r Eyre: "The examination is evidence in discharge of the party who is charged by it; the modern cases have gone that far, and rightly"); 1802, Ridgeway v. Darwin, 7 Ves. Jr. 404 (L. C. Eldon said that "the discharge following immediately in the same sentence, that would do," but not in a separate affidavit); 1802, Thompson v. Lambe, 7 Ves. Jr. 587 (L. C. Eldon ruled that an answer admitting receipt of money on one day and alleging payment on another day could not suffice, as it was "a distinct transaction"); 1806, Ormond v. Hutchinson, 13 Ves. 47, 53 (L. C. Erskine; on reading in chancery an answer put in issue by replication, the plaintiff "cannot . . . stop at the end of a sentence, but must proceed to the completion of the immediate subject to which the defendant is answering; as at law a witness cannot be stopped where the party wishing to elicit from him particular facts finds it convenient to stop him, but must be allowed to finish the particular subject and to proceed to state anything with reference to it, . . . but that does not apply to distinct matter"); 1816, Robinson v. Scotney, 19 Ves. Jr. 582 (answer alleging a set-off diminishing a balance due, treated in the same way); 1829, Davis v. Spurling, 1 Rus. & M. 64, 68 (mere connection by "but" or "and," not sufficient, unless the subsequent matter was "explanatory"); 1830, Rude v. Whitechurch, 3 Sim. 562 (subsequent qualifying sentence, not referred to in the first, but connected in meaning, allowed to be read); 1832, Nurse v. Bunn, 5 Sim. 225 (plaintiff compellable to read "all other passages . . . explanatory of the passages read"); 1841, Connop v. Hayward, 1 Y. & C. 33, 34 ("such a connection between the passages as to render it necessary to read the latter with the former," here applied as the test); 1841, Miller v. Gow, 1 Y. & C. Ch. 56, 59, V. C. Bruce ("The practice at law is clearly established that when an answer [to a relief-bill] is used, the whole must be read; it is different in this Court; but the rule here is that you cannot in reading sever parts that in substance are connectedtogether").

United States: 1904, Stewart v. N. C. R. Co., 136 N. C. 385, 48 S. E. 793; Hedrick v. Southern R. Co., ib. 510, 48 S. E. 830; 1905, Reager's Adm'r v. Chappelear, 104 Va. 14, 51 S. E. 170 (administrator's answer).

[6] Accord: Eng. 1806, Ormond v. Hutchinson, 13 Ves. 47, 53 (the Solicitor-General had argued: "The rules of evidence in equity and at law are not different; . . . upon a bill for discovery only, the answer being produced as evidence, the whole of it must be read, not a part only"; L. C. Erskine: "As to the answer, I agree to what has been stated by the Solicitor-General"); U. S. 1816, Kent, Ch., in Hart v. Ten Eyck, 2 Johns. Ch. N. Y. 62, 90 (quoted supra); 1823, Taylor, C. J., in Jacobs v. Farrall, 2 Hawks N. C. 570.

whether the same rule of evidence is to be adopted by this Court as would be by a Court of law, or whether there is anything to take it out of the rule of law? It is quite clear that, where a party produces a letter or other document, he cannot use it partially; he is not permitted to garble it; and if he by his own act makes that evidence which otherwise would not be, he makes the whole of it evidence and it must be taken together. I have not been able to find even a 'dictum' that the rule of evidence in this Court in this respect differs from what it would be at law. . . . In this Court, as well as in a Court of law, where the answer of a party in another cause is resorted to, as evidence, the whole of it becomes admissible; and so, I conceive, with respect to any other document made evidence in the cause."

§ 2123. Same: (3) Anomalous New York Rule; "Responsive" Parts may be Read. How then could any confusion or change of practice arise, these principles being so well settled? Partly because of a strong and constant pressure on the part of defendants to use their answers in their favor, partly because of the mixed and misleading nature of a chancery answer as to traverses and avoidances, and partly because of the rule requiring two witnesses for a responsive denial, and the misuse of the term "responsive" in applying it out of its proper sphere.

1. The defendant's motive to use his answer. Notice first that the importance of the question in a chancery hearing is far greater than at a common-law trial. In the latter case it is simply a question whether a certain additional piece of evidence shall or shall not go in with the rest to the jury. If the defendant succeeds in having read to the jury an additional sentence in his answer, he nevertheless goes on with his other evidence as before. By receiving it, the Court does not add to the allegations which the plaintiff must prove, nor by rejecting it does the Court add to the allegations which the defendant must prove. But in chancery, on the other hand, the whole state of the pleadings is involved. If, for example, the answer admits receiving one hundred dollars, but asserts its payment, the plaintiff, by appealing to the first statement in the defendant's pleading, relieves himself of that issue and needs no evidence upon it. If, now, the defendant can oblige the plaintiff either to take the two together or none at all, he changes the whole effect of the pleadings; for if the plaintiff accepts the first alternative and uses the whole, he has a pleading-admission that no money is due, i. e. he has no confession at all, and consequently he has obtained no profit from this pleading and must still prove his claim by other means. If he accepts the second alternative, and uses none of the statement, he is in the same position, and must prove as before. But if the defendant cannot put the plaintiff in this dilemma by forcing the two statements upon him together, the defendant must himself prove his affirmative fact of payment pleaded in discharge, and has relieved himself of no burden.

It is thus apparent that the defendant had always the strongest motive to enlarge the scope of the passages which he could compel the plaintiff to use as an admission. In fact, the incidence of the whole burden of proof was at stake. A defendant ought not to be allowed to change, and to throw upon the plaintiff, the burden of proof of the facts forming an affirmative defence. But still, there was a motive for him to try to do so; and it was the striving after this improper advantage which finally led to the anomalous rule now under consideration.

2. The mixed nature of a chancery answer as to traverses and avoidances. An answer in chancery, as already noted, does not separate its pleas distinctly according to their negative or affirmative nature; i. e. there needs no separate count or plea for a traverse or denial as distinguished from a confession and avoidance; either of these follows the other indiscriminately, pursuant to the order in which the charges are made and replied to. Accordingly, the nature of a particular part of the answer, whether as being in denial or in affirmative avoidance, can only be ascertained by comparing its terms with that of the corresponding charge in the bill. Its form as an affirmation is immaterial, if in reality it is a traverse, and 'vice versa.' Thus, in ascertaining the burden of proof, the form of the defendant's statement is not decisive; a source of inextricable confusion, and an opportunity for erroneously changing that burden, is amply furnished. If, then, any rule of evidence should exist, peculiar to the case of a plaintiff having the burden of proof, and not applicable to the defendant at all, it would be easy, by juggling with the really affirmative allegations of fact and by giving them a negative form, to make it appear that this rule of proof was applicable to the plaintiff on a point stated negatively by the defendant.

3. The rule of two witnesses for responsive denials. Such a rule did exist, namely, the rule already examined (ante, § 2047) that the plaintiff must prove by two witnesses every allegation explicitly denied on oath in the defendant's answer. In invoking this rule, defendants naturally tried to state in negative form every fact which they were able conscientiously to assert. The Chancellor might rule that the fact was genuinely an affirmative defensive one; but still there was a constant effort to get whatever advantage might accrue in a doubtful case. Now the effect of this rule was to lead to a deceptive form of expression, historically unsound but empirically accurate, namely, that the defendant's answer on oath was evidence. Less erroneously expressed, it was said that the answer was "equivalent to" the oath of one witness,[1] i. e. on the theory that it nullified one witness for the plaintiff and thus required him to produce a second. The result indeed was that the answer on oath compelled the plaintiff to produce a second witness; yet this was far from making the defendant's answer evidence. It was not and never had been considered as testimony,[2] except for the purpose of the above rule,[3] which could be more properly stated in another form. Nevertheless, the notion thus became common in some quarters, through the formula above, that a defendant's answer had some quality of testimony receivable on his own behalf. Hence, when a defendant denied an allegation in a bill, and so far as he denied it, two thoughts would be associated with this fact, first (as above noted), that the plaintiff was put to his proof by two witnesses, and secondly, that the defendant's answer in denial was evidence for himself. Notice, however, that both of these notions have relation to evidence, and have nothing to do with the question of pleading or burden of proof; for the ignoring of this led to the later fallacy.

§ 2123. [1] See the quotations under that rule (ante, § 2047).

[2] Langdell, Summary of Equity Pleading, § 56; and Lord Brougham's passage in Attwood v. Small, quoted ante, § 2047.

[3] "In equity, by answer, he is a witness only to deny affirmative allegations" (Lampton v. Lampton's Ex'rs, 6 T. B. Monr. Ky. 616, 620).

The result (to sum up) of the above rule of two witnesses was that, for the purpose of enforcing it against the plaintiff, it became highly important to decide whether a given allegation of the answer, negative in form, was genuinely a denial or only a new affirmation, or whether, though apparently a denial, it was truly an argumentative admission. The inquiry thus came to be whether the answer was "responsive," i. e. whether it directly met and controverted some allegation essential to the bill;[4] for if it did, the rule applied, otherwise not.

4. We are now prepared to understand the appearance of the main fallacy in question. (a) In the first place, the function of the "responsive" denial-answer as putting in force a rule of two witnesses for the plaintiff came to be given a pleading-sense. For example, Messrs. Cowen and Hill (both judges in New York), in their notes to Mr. Phillipps' treatise on Evidence,[5] stated that "though the answer be affirmative, if it be responsive to an inquiry in the bill, it will conclude, unless overcome by more than one witness"; here the fallacy is apparent that the defendant by an affirmative answer can somehow relieve himself of the burden of making out his defence. (b) Again, this rule about two witnesses, forced upon the plaintiff by the answer, came to be misused as legitimately including the defendant's matter in affirmance and not merely matter in denial. Thus Mr. Justice Thompson, in Clason v. Morris,[6] declared that "it is an undeniable rule in chancery that the answer to a bill for discovery, being under oath, must be taken as true, unless disproved by two witnesses." This ignoring of the vital difference between denial and affirmance, between putting in issue the plaintiff's allegations and setting up defensive affirmations, was here applied merely to the two-witness rule. But as the term "responsive" was used to express the test for that rule, "responsive" came to be understood as legitimately covering not merely ordinary denials, but also truly defensive affirmations answering questions of discovery on the defendant's own case.

The net consequence of these hazy confusions was as follows: (a) The effect of "responsive" answers was extended to the pleading rule about the plaintiff's use of the defendant's admissions in the answer, instead of being confined to the two-witness rule of evidence; and (b) the term "responsive" was enlarged to include affirmative, as well as negative matter. For example, if the plaintiff had brought a bill against a vendor, alleging a contract to convey and asking specific performance, and incidentally seeking discovery on the anticipated defence that the premises had been destroyed by fire, and the defendant had answered to the contract-charge, admitting the terms of the contract, and had also answered stating how the house was burned, the orthodox ruling would be that the plaintiff might make use of the defendant's pleading so far as it admitted the contract, but need use it no further than he chose, leaving the defendant with the burden of proving his affirmative defence. But under the erroneous notions now introduced, the answer would be held "responsive" to the bill, since it gave discovery to a question asked therein, and consequently the plaintiff, by using the admission of the contract, must also use the affirmation of the burning, set up in excuse, and must therefore either take it for true or disprove it by two witnesses. In other words, the plaintiff, to get the benefit of a pleading-confession, became obliged to assume to disprove the very fact which the defendant set up in avoidance.

[4] No precedents for English usage have been found, but this sense of "responsive" occurs frequently in the United States from an early date: 1798, Maupin v. Whiting, 1 Call. Va. 224; 1810, Paynes v. Coles, 1 Munf. Va. 373, 393, 395; 1812, Russell v. Clark's Ex'rs, 7 Cr. 69, 92; 1826, Ringgold v. Ringgold, 1 H. & G. Md. 11, 81.

[5] Ed. 1843, I, 154, note 292.

[6] 10 John. 524, 542.

5. This singular and illogical rule, almost incredible in its twistings of principle, was nevertheless sought to be defended on grounds of policy, in a specious argument which in fact persuaded the Court of Errors of New York and led it to repudiate even Chancellor Kent's orthodox doctrine:

1816, Mr. Thomas Addis Emmet,[7] arguing in Hart v. Ten Eyck, as reported in 1 Cow. 744, note: "We contend that where the answer is a direct and proper reply to the interrogatories of the bill, it is 'prima facie' evidence for the defendant, if in his favor; and our adversaries contend that, where the answer affirms a matter in avoidance, the defendant must prove his affirmation. . . . [Their position] would be universally true if qualified by ours, that the defendant must prove his affirmation unless it be a direct and proper reply to an interrogation of the defendant. . . . [There is] justice in giving to the defendant the benefit of those parts of the answer which are mere evidence, because the extent to which they go must entirely depend on the complainant's election. Such responsive affirmations on the part of the defendant [as distinguished from denials, which concededly put the plaintiff to proof by two witnesses], can only arise out of the charging part of the bill, which sets forth what are supposed to be the defendant's pretensions, or from the breadth of the interrogatories. Neither of these are necessary parts of a bill; . . . they are voluntary, and calculated only to elicit evidence; they are therefore often dangerous, and perhaps imprudently used; . . . [they] may undoubtedly be restricted by the pleader's prudence. Where the complainant has such entire control as to the extent of the defendant's answer, with what truth can it be said that to allow his answer, where it states an affirmative fact in precise reply to the complainant's bill, to be 'prima facie' evidence 'would render it absolutely dangerous to employ the jurisdiction of the Court of chancery, inasmuch as it would enable a defendant to defeat the complainant's just demands by the testimony of his own oath setting up a discharge or matter of avoidance'?[8] . . . It is the choice or ignorance of the complainant's pleader only, that can afford the defendant such an opportunity. If he does not choose to appeal to the defendant's oath, he may shape his bill for effectual relief without enabling him [the defendant] to make any affirmative averment which would be evidence. . . . . A doctrine contrary to what we contend for would stretch the defendant's conscience on a moral rack, and receive nothing for proof but confessions of guilt."

[7] Then Attorney-General; brother to Robert Emmet, the Irish leader; himself an exile from Ireland.

[8] Quoted from the opinion of Chancellor Kent, infra.

Of this remarkable argument it need only be said, so far as its principle is concerned, that it is utterly irreconcilable with the fundamental principle of a bill of discovery in equity, namely, to give a plaintiff this very benefit of such admissions as he can extract from the defendant's conscience, without imposing any burden of using it unless and so far as the plaintiff sees fit; and, furthermore, that this principle could equally be availed of by the plaintiff even where seeking discovery to disprove the defendant's defence.[9] However unfair the advantage may once have been [10] (and modern statutes have dealt out a fairer justice by affording the opportunity equally to both parties), the principle was clear enough. Mr. Emmet's argument invited practically a repudiation of this fundamental principle. As for policy, the unsoundness of his claim seems even plainer. The notion that a fact which, by all rules of pleading and of good sense, constituted an affirmative defence could be, by the defendant's own unsupported affirmation of it, so twisted from its natural place as to fall within the plaintiff's sphere of proof, and that the plaintiff should be obliged, at the risk of failing, to disprove whatever the defendant has selected for assertion, is preposterous. The circumstance that the plaintiff has appealed for discovery on the point is no excuse for overturning rooted principles of pleading. The practical consequence would be that defences whose proof was chiefly in the power of the defendant could be made invulnerable by his mere assertion of them; and that, in particular, trustees and other persons having a fiduciary account to render could find absolute immunity by giving any explanation that a false imagination might suggest and then challenging the plaintiff to the impossible task of disproof. It seems entirely likely that the general modern disinclination in this country (otherwise difficult of explanation) to ask for chancery discovery on oath, is due mainly to the dilemma between the futility and the risk created for plaintiffs by the wide vogue of this rule.

The practical injustice of the proposed innovation was foreseen by more than one judge repudiating it at the time of its inception:

1816, KENT, C., in Hart v. Ten Eyck, 2 John. Ch. 62, 90: "I am satisfied that the [orthodox] rule is perfectly just, and that a contrary doctrine would be pernicious and render it absolutely dangerous to employ the jurisdiction of this Court, inasmuch as it would enable the defendant to defeat the plaintiff's just demands by the testimony of his own oath setting up a discharge or matter in avoidance."

1826, ARCHER, J., in Ringgold v. Ringgold, 1 H. & G. 11, 82 (after declaring Chancellor Kent's opinion preferable to that of the Court of Errors): "The establishment of a contrary doctrine would lead to dangerous consequences, and would be calculated to render trusts valueless, by giving to trustees, executors, and guardians the power on their own oaths to exempt themselves from responsibility. The [orthodox] rule then may be stated . . . that in all cases where a complainant seeks a discovery and relief, and to make out his case applies himself to the conscience of the defendant, if in his answer the liability is once admitted, there can be no escape from it but by proof [by the defendant himself]."

[9] Langdell, ubi supra, §§ 85, 87, 88.

[10] No doubt the use of cross-bills mitigated it.

This anomalous doctrine allowing the use of "responsive" affirmations of defence is not to be found in the earliest New York rulings,[11] and seems to have been introduced in 1816,[12] and to have thenceforth exercised wide influence elsewhere,[13] — chiefly, it may be supposed, through the approval of the fallacy in the learned editorial notes above cited.[14] In the earlier rulings of other jurisdictions, the fallacy did not appear.[15] How far it prevails

[11] That the defendant must prove all matters of avoidance of the above sort had been clearly the early rule: 1805, Bush v. Livingstone, 2 Cai. Cas. N. Y. 66 (the bill alleged a security to have been given "on good and valuable consideration"; the answer alleged the consideration to have been usurious; counsel for defendant admitted that the answer could not be used to support matter of avoidance, but maintained that this was not avoidance but denial; the case was decided upon another point); 1806, Green v. Hart; 1 Johns. 580, 582, 590 (per Spencer, J., for the Court of Errors, "This is a well established principle in chancery proceedings, and will be found recognized in every treatise on that subject"; here usury was treated as an affirmative fact in avoidance of a note, "although in answer to the complainant's allegation of a pre-existing 'bona fide' debt").

[12] 1816, Hart v. Ten Eyck, 2 Johns. Ch. N. Y. 62, 87 (bill for account against administrators; discharging items in the answer, held not admissible, per Kent, Ch.; said, in 1 Cow. N. Y. 743, 744, to have been reversed in the Court of Errors, in an opinion unreported; quoted supra); 1823, Woodcock v. Bennet, 1 Cow. N. Y. 712, 743 (bill for specific performance; a part of the answer alleging cancellation by mutual consent was held "legal and competent evidence, because it is responsive to the bill and within the discovery sought; . . . whatever may be the rule in the English courts, this question is at rest with us"; following Hart v. Ten Eyck); 1834, Bartlett v. Gale, 4 Paige N. Y. 503, 508 (mortgage bill; an unsworn answer held to be no evidence at all for the defendant; as to a sworn one, "except as to those parts of it which are responsive to the bill," the complainant need not take the whole "as evidence" nor is "bound" by the parts not used by him).

[13] Columbia (Dist.): 1918, Bradley v. Davidson, 47 D. C. App. 266, 277; Florida: 1906, Mayo v. Hughes, 51 Fla. 495, 40 So. 499 (failure of consideration); 1906, Southern Lumber & S. Co. v. Verdier, 51 Fla. 570, 40 So. 676 (creditor's bill to set aside a voluntary conveyance; an answer upon facts "inseparably connected . . . is responsive to the bill as well when it discharges as when it charges the defendant"); 1921, Johnson v. Sumner, 82 Fla. 377, 90 So. 171 (cause set down for hearing on bill and answer, plaintiff waiving answer under oath; "in such cases the rule is that where answer is made under oath the averments contained in it which are responsive to the bill and which set up facts to which other testimony could be received are to be taken as true, unless disproved by evidence of greater weight than the testimony of one witness); Georgia: 1877, Heard v. Russell, 59 Ga. 25, 51 (answer given not under oath; defendant may put in the remainder "as evidence," though not as having the effect of requiring two witnesses to overcome; no authority cited); 1878, Armstrong v. Lewis, 61 Ga. 680, 688 (similar, such other parts "as bear directly on the subject-matter of the admissions" may be read); Ohio: 1831, Methodist Ep. Ch. v. Wood, 5 Oh. 283, 285 (assumpsit; "the answer [in discovery] of the defendant is evidence for him so far as it is responsive to the call in the bill for discovery or connected necessarily with the responsive matter or explanatory of it; . . . [otherwise] it cannot be used in evidence by the party making it"; no authority cited); Tennessee: 1874, Beech v. Haynes, 1 Tenn. Ch. 569 (the rule of the N. Y. Court of Errors accepted; careful opinion by Cooper, C.); Virginia: 1867, Fant v. Miller, 17 Gratt. 187, 206, 211, semble (New York rule followed); 1869, Mayo's Ex'r v. Carrington's Ex'r, 19 Gratt. 74, 116, semble; 1873, Morrison's Ex'rs v. Grubb, 23 Gratt. 342, 349 (Fant v. Miller followed); 1874, Statham v. Ferguson, 25 Gratt. 28, 39; 1895, Clinch River M. Co. v. Harrison, 91 Va. 122, 129, 21 S. E. 660 (preceding cases approved).

Cases are often cited for this fallacious rule which do not countenance it; for example: 1827, M'Caw v. Blewit, 2 McC. S. C. 90, 102; 1827, Branch Bank v. Black, 2 McC. S. C. 344, 350. Distinguish also the occasional rule (Fant v. Miller, Va., supra) that the accounts of executors and trustees are taken as 'prima facie' correct; this leads to the same consequences as the New York rule.

[14] Their treatment of this whole subject is hopelessly confused and misleading; see, for example, their note 646, ubi supra.

[15] Fed. 1850, McCoy v. Rhodes, 11 How. 131, 140 (admission of a liability, with averment of payment in discharge; "[the answer's statements] are not responsive to charges to-day is a question which would require an examination of the contemporary chancery practice, not within the present purview.[16]

§ 2124. Same: (4) Party's Answers to Statutory Interrogatories. Keeping in mind the orthodox difference between the use of an answer as a pleading in chancery and its use in a trial at law as evidence (ante, §§ 2121, 2122), the proper treatment of an opponent's answers to interrogatories authorized by statute ought not to be difficult to determine.

(1) If, as in some jurisdictions, the statute authorizes these to be used as an answer to a bill of discovery could be used,[1] then the plaintiff who uses any part must put in the whole, and cannot stop with the parts grammatically connected; in other words, the rule applies for using answers as evidence at law (ante, § 2121), and not the rule for using them as pleadings in chancery (ante, § 2122).[2]

made by the bill, but set up an independent defence; . . . as the respondents cannot make evidence for themselves, . . . the defence must fail"; following Chancellor Kent); 1867, Clements v. Moore, 15 Wall. 299, 315 (similar; citing Chancellor Kent); the following rule was presumably based on these rulings, but was omitted in the revised Rules of 1912: Federal Equity Rules, No. 41, as amended 1871 (if answer under oath is waived, or is required for specific interrogatories only, "the answer of the defendant, though under oath, except such part thereof as shall be directly responsive to such interrogatories, shall not be evidence in his favor, unless the cause be set down for hearing on bill and answer only"); Ky. 1828, Lampton v. Lampton's Ex'rs, 6 T. B. Monr. 616, 620 ("In equity, by answer he is a witness only to deny affirmative allegations; . . . [otherwise] it places a strong temptation of interest [to executors] to defeat all claims both of legatees and creditors, and by his own swearing, and thus shield not only his proper estate but also keep the estate of his testator in his hands"); Md. 1826, Ringgold v. Ringgold, 1 H. & G. 11, 82 (quoted supra); Mass. 1829, New England Bank v. Lewis, 8 Pick. 113, 120 ("If the defendants saw fit to go further, as they had a right to do, and aver additional matter on which they rely in their defence, they must prove the additional matter, it being traversed by the general replication"); Va. 1793, Beckwith v. Butler, 1 Wash. 224 (bill for distribution; an executor may not use his answer to prove a gift to him by the deceased); 1810, Paynes v. Coles, 1 Munf. 373, 395 ("The rule is well-settled that the answer of a defendant in chancery is not evidence where it asserts a right affirmatively in opposition to the plaintiff's demand, but that in such case is as much bound to establish it by independent testimony as the plaintiff is to sustain the bill").

[16] A partial collection may be found in a note to Hart v. Ten Eyck, supra, 2 Johns. Ch. N. Y. 62, ed. Lawyers' Coöp. Pub. Co., Book I, and in Beech v. Haynes, Tenn., supra; Roach v. Glos, 6 Am. & Eng. Dec. in Eq. 65; 1905, Ocala F. & M. W. v. Lester, 49 Fla. 347, 38 So. 56; 1922, Woodyard v. Sayre, — W. Va. —, 111 S. E. 313 (bill of discovery by an administrator; the answer held to be evidence; disapproving Knight v. Nease, 53 W. Va. 51); and in Mr. Gest's interesting and learned article (cited ante, § 2032, n. 1) on The Responsive Answer in Equity.

The following statutes deal with the rule: Fla. Rev. G. S. 1919, § 3136 (like Fed. Eq. Rule 41); Ga. Rev. C. 1910, § 4547 ("The petitioner is not bound to read any portion of the answer, except that responsive to the petition"); Pa. St. 1913, May 28, P. L. 358 (abolishes the rule); 1914, Thomas v. Herring, 244 Pa. 550, 91 Atl. 500 (statute noted); Va. Code 1919, § 6128 (like Fed. Equity Rules).

§ 2124. [1] The statutes will be found cited without quotation, ante, § 1856 (discovery before trial), post, § 2218 (party's privilege abolished); they are strictly legislative adaptations of the equitable bill for discovery, and hence are without the present purview.

[2] In Alabama, the chancery-pleading rule was at first erroneously adopted, but the correct rule was afterwards substituted, for a while: 1845, Lake v. Gilchrist, 7 Ala. 955, 959 (ordinary Chancery rule for relief-answers, applied to an answer obtained by statutory discovery on interrogatories, so as to exclude a "totally distinct matter"); 1853, Pritchett v. Munroe, 22 Ala. 501, 507 (same; the answer "becomes evidence so far as it is responsive to the call for discovery or is necessarily connected with the responsive matter"); 1853, Saltmarsh v. Bower, 22 Ala. 221, 230 ("If he offers a portion of it [the discovery], he makes the whole evidence, and submits for the jury to determine what weight they will give it"; even though the answering party goes beyond the specific interrogatories and answers with affirmative matter as he could have done to a bill for discovery; repudiating Lake v. Gilchrist); 1853, Crocker v. Clements, 23 Ala. 296, 307 (answer in another chancery suit; "the whole answer, if pertinent, must be taken together"); 1897, Southern R. Co. v. Hubbard, 116 Ala. 387, 22 So. 541 (approving the preceding case, where the answers were offered to disprove the party's facts stated by him on the stand; whether the same would be required for answers offered merely as inconsistent with his testimony, undecided); 1899, Bank v. Leland, 122 Ala. 289, 25 So. 195 (a defendant's answers not responsive may be stricken out; reverting to the original rule); 1904, Garrison v. Glass, 139 Ala. 512, 36 So. 725 (following Bank v. Leland); 1909, Sullivan Timber Co. v. Louisville & N. R. Co., 163 Ala. 125, 50 So. 941 (the foregoing two cases overruled; Saltmarsh v. Bower followed); 1911, Birmingham R. L. & P. Co. v. Bush, 175 Ala. 49, 56 So. 731 (the original rule again; part may be used without making the whole evidence; foregoing cases not cited); 1913, Southern R. Co. v. Hayes, 183 Ala. 465, 62 So. 874 (Sullivan T. Co. v. L. & N. R. Co. followed).

(2) If, however, the statute does not put such answers on the footing of an answer of discovery in chancery, but treats them merely as depositions of a party-witness who has by statute been deprived of his privilege (post, § 2218), the analogy of ordinary depositions (ante, § 2103) and of admissions in testimony (ante, § 2098, note 7) would seem to apply, and therefore the whole need not be put in, according to the better view; though there appears sometimes an inclination to adopt and adapt the chancery rule and require so much of the answers as is inseparably connected with the part offered.[3]

In Louisiana, the rule is peculiar. By what seems to have been the original ecclesiastical and later civil-law rule, each answer to each interrogatory was considered as a whole, not blended all into one document called an "answer" as in chancery; and to each answer the rule was applied that the whole must be taken: Ante 1635, Hudson, Treatise of the Court of Star Chamber, 221 ("If the plaintiff read a defendant's examination to convict any, the defendant may read at the same examination to all that interrogatory to excuse him, for perhaps he explaineth his own meaning in some other part of the interrogatory"); Pothier, Obligations, I, 827, Evans' ed. ("Observe, that a party who would take advantage of the confession made by the opposite party upon his interrogatories cannot divide the answer but must take it altogether"); Wood's Civil Law, ed. 1760, p. 305, b. IV, c. 2, cited by Mr. Gest; this principle has been followed in the Code: La. C. Pr. 1894, § 353 (a party in answering interrogatories "may state some other facts tending to his defence, provided they be closely linked to the fact on which he has been questioned and an appeal made to his conscience," such declarations to be evidence; see also ib. § 356, quoted ante, § 2113); the Code has been construed in the following cases: 1811, Read v. Bailey, 2 Mart. 67, 75, semble (interrogatory charging a letter admitting the receipt of money; answer admitting it but asserting a payment, received); 1823, Crummen v. Cavenah, 1 Mart. N. S. 532, 534, semble (qualifying parts must be considered); 1877, McLear v. Hunsicker, 29 La. An. 540 (citing cases); 1879, Auge v. Variol, 31 La. An. 865, 869 (citing cases).

[3] ENGLAND: 1883, Rules of the Supreme Court, Order XXXI, rule 24 (a party may use "one or more of the answers or any part of an answer of the opposite party to interrogatories without putting in the others or the whole of such answer; provided always that in such case the judge may look at the whole of the answers, and if he shall be of opinion that any others of them are so connected with those put in that the last-mentioned answers ought not to be used without them, he may direct them to be put in").

CANADA: Alta. Rules of Court 1914, No. 250 (like Ont. Rule 330); B. C. Rules of Court 1912, Rules 366, 370 r (like Eng. Ord. 31, Rule 24); 1896, Lyon v. Marriott, 5 Br. C. 157 (applying the rule of Court which lets the judge's discretion control in putting in the remainder of the opponent's examination); Man. R. S. 1913, c. 46, Rules 419–421 (like Ont. Rule 330); Newf. Consol. St. 1916, c. 83, Rules of Court 28, par. 18 (like Ont. Rule 330); N. W. Terr. Consol. Ord. 1898, c. 21, Rule 224 (like Ont. Rule 330); St. 1902, c. 5, § 1, amending Rules of Court 224 (special Rules prescribed when a part of the examination of a corporate officer is used); N. Sc. Rules of Court 1900, Ord. 30, Rule 23 (substantially like Ont. Rule 330); Ont. Rules of Court 1914, Rule 330, § 461, par. 1 (a party may use "any part" of his opponent's examination; but the judge, "if he is of opinion that any other part is so connected with the part to be so used that the last-mentioned part ought not to be used without such other part," may order it put in); Rule 327 (examination of a corporate officer or agent is not to be used); 1921, Capital Trust Co. v. Fowler, 64 D. L. R. 289,

In any event, the decision is of little practical consequence, because not only may the opponent put in the remainder of the document [4] (ante, §§ 2099, 2103) and no question of admission by pleading is involved, but he may also take the stand on his own behalf if he desires.

§ 2125. Inspection of Opponent's Document, as making the Whole of it admissible. An anomalous doctrine, requiring the whole of document to be treated as evidence, though no part of it had been offered, appears in some rulings of the early 1800s in England.[1] The operation of the rule is to be seen in this colloquy:

1836, Calvert v. Flower, 7 C. & P. 386. Mr. Kelly, for the defendant, having called for the plaintiff's ledger, due notice to produce having been given, Mr. Campbell, for the plaintiff, said: "I will produce it, if it is called for as your evidence." Mr. Kelly: "I call for it, but subscribe to no condition." DENMAN, L. C. J.: "If it is produced and given to Mr. Kelly, it will be for me to decide whether Mr. Kelly makes such use of it as will compel him to use it as his evidence." The book was produced, and Mr. Kelly turned over several pages of it, so as to look at the contents of them. DENMAN, L. C. J.: "I ought now to say that if Mr. Kelly looks at the book, he will be bound to put it in as his evidence."

Ont. (stock bought on false representations; the plaintiff having used part of the defendant's answers against him, the defendant was held entitled to use the remainder affecting the admission); Sask. 1921, Houlding v. Canadian Credit Men's T. Ass'n, 60 D. L. R. 533, Sask. (examination in bankruptcy; "the whole must be put in evidence"); Yukon: Consol. Ord. 1914, c. 48, Rule 224 (like Ont. Rule 330).

UNITED STATES: Alabama: Code 1896, § 680, Code 1907, § 3117 (the sworn answer must be taken to be true, so far as responsive; but where the bill is sworn to, the two-witness rule "is abolished," and the answer has "only such weight as evidence" as replies to "interrogatories"); Georgia: 1914, Hope v. First National Bank, 142 Ga. 310, 82 S. E. 929 (answers on supplemental proceedings to execution; "the entire evidence of the witness" need not be offered); Iowa: 1882, Van Horn v. Smith, 59 Ia. 142, 148, 12 N. W. 789 (defendant reading plaintiff's deposition is not obliged to read the whole); Maine: 1847, Hammatt v. Emerson, 27 Me. 308, 335 (deposition by plaintiff in a different suit, required to be used as a whole by defendant; on the theory that it was a "judicial document," like an answer in chancery, and could not be separated); Massachusetts: Gen. L. 1920, c. 231, § 89 (demandant may read answers to interrogatories "as evidence at the trial"; "the party interrogated may require the whole of the answers upon any one subject inquired of to be read, if a part of them is read; but if no part is read, the party interrogated shall in no way avail himself of his examination, etc."); 1900, Demelman v. Burton, 176 Mass. 363, 57 N. E. 665 (statute construed); North Carolina: 1897, Gossler v. Wood, 120 N. C. 69, 27 S. E. 33 (part of an answer admitting the first five allegations of a complaint, admitted, without reading the remainder setting up a counterclaim); 1921, White v. Hines, 182 N. C. 275, 109 S. E. 31 (personal injury; defendant's answer admitting that plaintiff was a passenger and that the train was derailed, received without reading the remaining clause denying negligence); Washington: 1899, Allend v. R. Co., 21 Wash. 324, 58 Pac. 244 (need not all be read, unless inseparable in regard to a particular matter); Wisconsin: 1899, Wunderlich v. Ins. Co., 104 Wis. 382, 80 N. W. 467 (whole need not be offered).

[4] Contra: 1921, Thomas v. Lockwood Oil Co., 174 Wis. 486, 182 N. W. 841 (death by wrongful act of defendant's agent F.; plaintiff having read parts of F.'s answers taken adversely by way of discovery under Stats. § 4096, as amended by St. 1913, c. 246, quoted ante, § 1416, defendant was not allowed to read other relevant parts of F.'s deposition; clearly unsound, through proceeding upon the literal words of the statute).

Compare the rule for an opponent putting in his own answers of discovery when not used by the party taking (ante, § 1416).

§ 2125. [1] The rule was apparently invented by Lord Ellenborough: 1805, Wharam v. Routledge, 5 Esp. 235 (book produced by plaintiff; Ellenborough, L. C. J., ruled that if the defendant inspected it, it became evidence, whether he used it or not); 1823, Wilson v. Bowie, 1 C. & P. 8, 10 ("if it is at all material to the case," but not otherwise).

Originally, it would seem, the rule applied only when the calling party "made use" of some part of it, and then on the present principle (ante, § 2113) the other party could use the remainder; 1795, Sayer v. Kitchen, 1 Esp. 209.

Mr. Kelly: "Certainly, I am fully aware that I must do so." DENMAN, L. C. J.: "I have mentioned this because it has been supposed by some, that an opposite counsel may look at the papers or books called for under a notice to produce, and then not use them."

The motive for this peculiar rule seems not to have been any direct bearing on the present principle of Completeness; for that would only come into application (ante, §§ 2102, 2113) when some part, at least, of the document had been put in evidence. The real motive seems to have been a desire to penalize indirectly the attempted evasion of another fundamental doctrine of the common law, namely, that a party is not entitled to know beforehand the tenor of evidence in his opponent's possession (ante, § 1845). The opponent was privileged not to produce any document in his possession (post, § 2219); yet, if he did not do so upon notice, the party desiring to prove its contents would be allowed to do so by a copy or other secondary evidence (ante, § 1199). Hence, to evade allowing this, the opponent would usually have the document ready in court, in case the first party should desire to put it in as evidence. If the first party, however, should on coming to that stage of the evidence, call for the document with the supposed purpose of putting it in, and receive it in his hands for the purpose, he might on perusal find that it was not suitable and decline to put it in. Nevertheless he would thus have become aware of its contents, without the obligation of using it. This might not in itself be a serious matter; but obviously he might, on the mere pretext of intending to prove documents as a part of his case, give notice to produce sundry documents whose contents were unknown to him, on the chance that they might be useful to him or might at least reveal important parts of the opponent's case, and then on perusing them when produced, he might hand them back without putting them in, — having thus in effect conducted a fishing expedition under the cover of a notice to produce for proof. This neat evasion of the fixed principle that a party was to be kept entirely in the dark as to the tenor of evidence in his opponent's possession was thereupon struck at by this present rule. It obliged him to take the risk of putting all the document in evidence if he even perused it on production; for this would prevent him from perusing any documents except those of whose contents he was already fairly certain that they would be favorable and would be put in evidence by him:

1803, RADCLIFF, J., in Lawrence v. Van Horne, 1 Caines 276, 285: "A party who gives notice to produce a paper in evidence must be supposed to know its contents. If he does not, he ought not to be permitted to speculate through the forms of law and obtain from his adversary the inspection of any paper or document he may choose to demand. Such a privilege would be liable to abuse."

1861, BIGELOW, C. J., in Clark v. Fletcher, 1 All. 53, 57: "A party cannot require his adversary to produce a document, and after inspecting it insist on excluding it from the case altogether. Such a course of proceeding would give one party an advantage over the other. He would gain the privilege of looking into the private documents of the other party, without any corresponding obligation or risk on his own part. It is therefore generally deemed a just and wise rule that in such cases the paper called for and produced, after it has been seen and examined by the party calling for it, becomes competent evidence in the case for both parties. It is manifest that this rule would be of little use if the paper can be excluded on the allegation that the party calling for it mistook the nature of its contents."

The answers to this plausible suggestion were plain. (1) The very principle whose evasion was thus penalized was itself unfair and reprehensible. Its vices have been already considered (ante, § 1847); it is enough here to repeat that the common-law notion of keeping a party entirely ignorant of the evidence possessed by his opponent was one to be discountenanced, not maintained. Moreover, by a bill of discovery in equity such documents could have been obtained even under the common-law system; and similar statutory proceedings at law now are authorized almost everywhere (ante, § 1859). Thus, by the judgment of posterity, and by the contemporary standards of equity, the penalty of the present rule was in truth imposed upon a party who was attempting to do no more than justice and good sense entitled him to do, namely, inform himself at the trial of the documentary evidence available against him. (2) Furthermore, the opponent in this kind of case was in no situation to complain, because he had only himself to thank for the disclosure of the evidence. The opponent was not compellable to produce the document; he did so voluntarily. The charge of speculative tactics with the rules of evidence was rather, under the supposed rule, to be laid to the opponent who produced; because, not being obliged to produce, he still did so, knowing that their contents were unfavorable to the first party, in the hope that the first party would have to risk their perusal and thus be compelled to put them in evidence.

There is, then, not only no sound reason for establishing such a penal rule, but it is itself open to abuse, and merely adds to the sportsmen's rules elsewhere noticeable in the common-law system. Moreover, it is totally out of harmony with the modern statutory procedure for discovery at law:

1803, THOMPSON, J., in Lawrence v. Van Horne, 1 Caines, 276, 286: "The practice of giving notice to produce papers, as in the present case, has been introduced to save the expense of going into chancery for a discovery; and I can see no good reason why the party ought not to be entitled to all the advantages he would have, had he resorted to his bill in equity; in that case, after a discovery, he might exercise his discretion whether to use it as evidence or not. I do not think this right of inspection would be liable to the abuses suggested by the plaintiff's counsel, that it might lead to an impertinent inspection of papers having no relevancy to the controversy; . . . it would be competent for the party having the paper to object against the introduction, or the proof of its contents, as being illegal or irrelevant, in the same manner as if the party calling for the paper had been in possession of it, or as might be done with respect to every other piece of testimony."

1863, BARTLETT, J., in Austin v. Thomson, 45 N. H. 113, 117: "The only reason given for the supposed rule is [the unconscionable advantage of prying without responsibility]. . . . But as the party notified is not obliged to produce the papers, and as he may if he produce them decline to allow them to be examined except upon condition that if examined they shall be read in evidence, parties notified seem amply protected from any such unconscionable advantage, and the reason stated entirely fails; and we see no sufficient reason for a rule that is at variance with the general course of our practice and that can hardly facilitate the administration of justice, since, if it has any practical effect in addition to the rules for the admission of competent evidence, it must be to compel the Court to allow incompetent evidence to go to the jury."

The rule that the whole document must be put in, if merely perused or inspected by the party calling for it, even though he does not desire to use it, was clearly the orthodox English practice;[2] but it seems to have been properly abandoned in more recent times.[3]

In the United States, the earlier English rule was in a majority of jurisdictions followed;[4] while in others it has been repudiated, sometimes by express statute.[5]

[2] Cases cited supra, note 1.

[3] 1888, Parnell Commission's Proceedings, Times' Rep. pt. 26, p. 169 (President Hannen: "The important fact of their having called for it does not alter the matter at all. You produce it; if they do not put it in, you are not on that account entitled to put it in. You have met their challenge; that is what it comes to").

But even the reading of a single word entitles the opponent to put in the whole; see an extreme instance of this technicality in Steinie Morrison's Trial, 1911, p. 61 (Notable British Trials Series, 1922).

[4] Federal: 1811, U. S. v. Mitchell, 2 Wash. C. C. 478 (mere calling for the document does not make it evidence); 1811, Jordan v. Wilkins, 2 Wash. C. C. 482 (mere inspection requires the demandant to read in evidence); 1891, Edison El. L. Co. v. U. S. El. L. Co., 45 Fed. 55, 59 (same); Delaware: 1832, Randel v. Chesap. & Del. Canal Co., 1 Harringt. 233, 284 (mere calling for papers does not make them evidence, but inspection does); 1837, Hutchinson v. Gordon, 2 Harringt. 179, semble (same); 1839, Read v. Randel, 2 Harringt. 500 (same); Georgia: 1855, Wooten v. Nall, 18 Ga. 609, 614 ("With the wisdom of this rule, we have nothing to do"); 1893, Cushman v. Coleman, 92 Ga. 772, 19 S. E. 46; Maine: 1839, Penobscot B. Co. v. Lamson, 4 Shepl. 224, 233; 1851, Blake v. Russ, 33 Me. 360; Maryland: 1913, Eckels & S. I. M. Co. v. Cornell E. Co., 119 Md. 107, 86 Atl. 38; Massachusetts: 1848, Com. v. Davidson, 1 Cush. 33, 44 ("The result of the examination of the cases seems to be: 1. That all the authorities agree that mere calling for the books is not enough to make them evidence; 2. That whether calling for the books of the opposite party and inspecting them, and doing nothing more, makes the book evidence is a mooted point; 3. That the books, when produced upon notice, if inspected by the party calling for them and actually used as evidence by him, are thereby made evidence for the other party"; "all irrelevant matter would of course be properly excluded"); 1853, Reed v. Anderson, 12 Cush. 481 (the second question above, answered affirmatively; but here not applied because the document produced was not the one called for); 1861, Clark v. Fletcher, 1 All. 53, 57; 1873, Long v. Drew, 114 Mass. 77, 80 (made evidence for both parties); 1911, Boyle v. Boston Elevated R. Co., 208 Mass. 41, 94 N. E. 247 (rule properly held not applicable to admit a document which though called for and produced was not otherwise admissible for the calling party; whether the rule itself should be regarded as now valid, not decided); 1921, Capodilupo v. Stock, 237 Mass. 550, 130 N. E. 65 (rule of Clark v. Fletcher assumed to be law); Mississippi: 1847, Anderson v. Root, 8 Sm. & M. 362, 364; Pennsylvania: 1821, Withers v. Gillespy, 7 S. & R. 10, 14 (rule laid down, but doubted); Texas: 1857, Saunders v. Duval, 19 Tex. 467, 472, semble.

The rule, however, ought not to extend to a second trial so as to admit documents inspected at the first: 1893, Cushman v. Coleman, 92 Ga. 772, 19 S. E. 46. Contra: 1855, Wooten v. Nall, 18 Ga. 609, 614.

Nor does it apply where no formal demand for production has been made: 1820, Farmers' & M. Bank v. Israel, 6 S. & R. Pa. 293, 296 (rule not applicable where inspection is allowed merely as an act of courtesy).

[5] Cal. C. C. P. 1872, § 1939 ("Though a writing called for by one party is produced by the other and is thereupon inspected by the party calling for it, he is not obliged to produce it as evidence in the case"); Conn. 1897, Laufer v. Traction Co., 68 Conn. 475, 37 Atl. 379 (reports made to the defendant by its employees as to an accident, called for by plaintiff but not used); Ida. Comp. St. 1919, § 7963 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1939); Ia. Code 1897, § 4567, Comp. C. § 7364 ("though a writing called for by one party is by the other produced," the party calling need not use it as evidence); Mont. Rev. C. 1921, § 10587 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1939); Nebr. Rev. St. 1921, § 8907 (like Ia. Code, § 4567); N. H. 1863, Austin v. Thompson, 45 N. H. 113, 116 (repudiating the "supposed English rule"; quoted supra); N. Y. 1803, Lawrence v.

Distinguish two superficially related situations. (1) When on cross-examination a document is offered to a witness for authentication, to be put in later by the cross-examiner, the other counsel is entitled then and there to inspect it, so as to be prepared to re-examine upon it (ante, § 1861). Since he is entitled to do so, and since the document is not desired by him for his own case, and since his inspection is a mere precaution to protect him against the cross-examiner, he is of course not obliged, through this inspection, to put in the document.[6] (2) When a document is called for and the opponent produces it from his possession, the execution of it remains to be proved. This mere production by the opponent is not a waiver of proof of execution, and the party calling for it is still obliged to prove its execution (ante, § 1298). There was, however, some controversy at one time on that question, and in the course of it the precedents were sometimes confused with those of the present rule; but there is no connection whatever of principle between them.

Van Horne, 1 Caines 276, 277, 285, 287 (inspection does not oblige the inspecting party to read, per Thompson, J., and Lewis, C. J., against Radcliff, J.; though Lewis, C. J., seemed to think that there was no "essential difference" between the other two judges' opinions; quoted supra); 1806, Kenny v. Clarkson, 1 Johns. 385, 395 (calling for and perusing a document does not oblige the party to read it); 1890, Carradine v. Hotchkiss, 120 N. Y. 608, 611, 24 N. E. 1020; Or. Laws 1920, § 783 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1939); P. I. C. C. P. 1901, § 323 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1939); P. R. Rev. St. & C. 1911, § 1454 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1939); Utah: Comp. L. 1919, § 7109 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1939).

So far, however, as a statute has not made production compulsory, it is obvious that the opponent may produce only upon an express stipulation that the document shall be read, and this if accepted would be binding: 1855, Huckins v. Ins. Co., 31 N. H. 238, 240, 247 ("The plaintiff was not obliged to produce his ledger, and could attach to it the condition which he did").

[6] 1827, R. v. Ramsden, 2 C. & P. 603.

Sub-title IV: AUTHENTICATION OF DOCUMENTS

CHAPTER LXXII.

I. In General

II. Specific Rules of Sufficiency for Circumstantial Evidence

1. Authentication by Age of Document

2. Authentication by Contents

3. Authentication by Custody

4. Authentication by Purporting Official Seal or Signature

§ 2128. Nature of these Rules. The control given to the judge over the jury appears usually in the form later examined (post, §§ 2494, 2551), namely, in his power to pass upon the sufficiency of a party's evidence, after all is offered, to go to the jury on the entire issue. This general power, being exercised in each case according to the whole mass of evidence as there presented, ordinarily does not result in abstract rules; each ruling stands by itself, and can form no precedent. But for many classes of issues, experience has dictated definite rules, which may be invoked to control all cases. Here there is a genuine rule of Evidence, i. e. declaring that a certain group of data is or is not sufficient to send the case to the jury. It is not a rule of admissibility as to any one piece of the evidence, for each is at least admissible; but a rule of final admissibility as to the group of facts, i. e. that it is or is not, taken all together, sufficient to go to the jury. Such rules are therefore of the present type, Quantitative or Synthetic (ante, § 2030). In fact, all of the preceding rules of this type may be regarded as the concrete expressions of this general power of the Court to declare a quan ity of evidence insufficient.

For certain sorts of these rules, it is often difficult to separate in them their character as rules of the present sort and their character as rules of presumption affecting the burden of proof (post, § 2490); for they often embody both. For example, when the rule is named that a man's absence, unheard of, for seven years, raises a presumption of his death, it is obvious that two rules are in effect involved, first, a rule that this fact of absence with these accompanying circumstances is sufficient to go to the jury on the issue of death, and, secondly, that it also raises a presumption of death, i. e. requires a verdict of death unless the opponent offers evidence in explanation. In one and the same formula, two steps are accomplished with reference to the duty of proof as between the parties, namely, relieving one's self of the duty and also shifting it to the opponent (post, § 2494). Yet there may be rules of sufficiency which remain merely such, and are not given the added force of rules of presumption. Such are those which have preceded in this Title. For example, the rule that two witnesses are necessary for certain facts admits the evidence by two witnesses to go to the jury; but it does not declare that two witnesses raise a presumption and shift the duty of proof. No one has ever contended that it should go so far. There, then, the emphasis is solely on the insufficiency of certain evidence, and the rule marks the line where the evidence becomes sufficient, but does not attempt to declare that it passes the further line where it would raise a presumption. It is perfectly apparent that most of the other preceding rules have the one character only.

But we now come to a particular class of rules in which the emphasis on the one or the other character is doubtful. They are neither clearly rules of sufficiency alone, nor clearly rules of presumption. The emphasis seems to be sometimes on the one, sometimes on the other character, according to the particular facts of the litigation. For example, that identity of name is some evidence of identity of person is in general unquestioned; but is it a rule of sufficiency, i. e. that identity of name, with nothing more, is sufficient to go to the jury and thus needs no other evidence first to be coupled with it; or is it a rule that identity of name raises a presumption of identity of person, so as to require a verdict unless the opponent takes up the duty of disproof? This question, when discriminated at all, is variously answered (post, § 2529).

Wherever there has been any claim for this double character to such a rule, it is more practicable to consider it with Presumptions.

But one particular sort of such rules may more suitably be considered here, because the emphasis has generally been upon their character as rules of sufficiency, namely, the rules relating to the authentication of documents, i. e. proving their genuineness or execution. This has probably been due to the tangibleness of the line marking sufficiency from insufficiency, as compared with the line marking a presumption. The stage when the counsel desiring to introduce a document has accumulated sufficient evidence of its execution to be allowed to read it or hand it to the jury is dramatically marked and apparent; and thus the emphasis of the rule of Evidence has come to be placed on the question whether the proof has reached that stage, i. e. on the question of sufficiency. The struggle centres about this point; what happens afterwards is less tangible and less worth arguing over; and thus the question of a presumption has received comparatively little emphasis. It will be proper, therefore, to treat the rules for authenticating documents as having the essential character of rules of sufficiency, although they may sometimes be accorded also the quality of rules of presumption.

§ 2129. General Principle of Authentication; Chattels. The foundation on which rests the necessity of authentication is not any artificial principle of Evidence, but an inherent logical necessity. For example, when Doe is charged with the murder of Roe, and it is evidenced that some one murdered Roe, but the person killing is not shown to be the accused, the failure of the prosecution is not due to any rule of Evidence, but to the absence of a fact logically inherent in its claim, namely, Doe's identity with the murderer. So, when a knife is offered as J. S.'s knife, with which he did the killing, the proof of the knife's use, and of its finding, leaves unsupplied an essential element in the assertion, namely, J. S.'s use or ownership.

In short, when a claim or offer involves impliedly or expressly any element of personal connection with a corporal object, that connection must be made to appear, like the other elements, else the whole fails in effect. Thus, then, if as a part of some facts asserted Doe's letter is offered, what is involved in the assumption of the offer is (a) a letter written (b) by Doe; thus, a letter alone, without the fact that it is Doe's, is not receivable, simply because it is not the thing offered. By one of the many rules of Evidence, Doe's letter may be admissible; but, whatever the particular rule of Evidence may be, the element of Doe's connection with the letter is logically assumed in all.

Beyond all this, there is a general mental tendency, when a corporal object is produced as proving something, to assume, on sight of the object, all else that is implied in the case about it. The sight of it seems to prove all the rest. Thus, it is easy for a jury, when witnesses speak of a horse being stolen from Doe by Roe, to understand, when Doe is proved to have lost the horse, that it still remains to be proved that Roe took it; the missing element can clearly be kept separate as an additional requirement. But if the witness to the theft were to have the horse brought into the court-room, and to point it out triumphantly, "If you doubt me, there is the very horse!", this would go a great way to persuade the jury of the rest of his assertion and to ignore the weaknesses of his evidence of Roe's complicity. The sight of the horse, corroborating in the flesh, as it were, a part of the witness' testimony, tends to verify the remainder. This tendency, illogical though it be, is deeply rooted in all persons, even the most intelligent and reflective; it has been already specially noticed with reference to the propriety of using autoptic proference (or, real evidence) as a source of proof (ante, §§ 1157, 1158). The great dramatist [1] has satirized it in his scene with Jack Cade's mob, where their leader proclaims himself, to the questioning magistrate, as the descendant of Earl Mortimer, whose son

> "Was by a beggar woman stol'n away,
> And, ignorant of his birth and parentage,
> Became a bricklayer when he came to age.
> His son am I! deny it if you can!";

to which his follower, Smith the Weaver, adds vehemently the following strong confirmation:

> "Sir, he made a chimney in my father's house; and the bricks are alive at this day to testify it; therefore, deny it not!"

This logical element, and also the mental tendency to forget the importance of proving it, exists wherever any personal connection with a corporal object is assumed in the offer. The necessity of authentication, therefore, applies equally well to chattels, — to a knife, a horse, a coat, or a machine, whenever it is asserted to be connected with a person; and this authentication of objects other than writings is a common necessity of every day's trial practice.[2]

§ 2129. [1] Henry VI, pt. II, Act IV, Sc. 2.

[2] The following list includes casual instances only: Fed. 1909, Hauger v. U. S., 4th C. C. A., 173 Fed. 54, 60 (coins, in a counterfeiting charge); Cal. 1909, People v. Muhly, 11 Cal. App. 129, 104 Pac. 466 (keys, clothes, etc., held not sufficiently connected with the defendant); Ia. 1902, State v. Hossack, 116 Ia. 194, 89 N. W. 1077 (hairs on an axe); 1905, State v. Seery, 129 Ia. 259, 105 N. W. 511 (weapon); 1921, State v. Kingsbury, 191 Ia. 743, 183 N. W. 325 (intoxicating liquor; contents of bottles produced and analyzed were testified to be intoxicating; excluded, because of insufficient evidence that the bottles were the very ones taken from defendant, and that the contents were unchanged in the meantime; the ruling is artificially over-strict on the latter point, ignoring the principle of § 2530, post); 1921, State v. Walker, 192 Ia. 823, 185 N.W. 619 (burglary; certain automobile tires said to have been stolen from the building in question, held improperly exhibited to the jury, because not shown to have been in defendant's possession and not sufficiently identified as the stolen ones); Ky. 1898, Parrott v. Com., — Ky. —, 47 S.W. 452 (club used in killing, required to be authenticated); La. 1904, State v. Aspara, 113 La. 940, 37 So. 883 (pistol); 1905, State v. Gordon, 115 La. 571, 39 So. 625 (pistol); Mass. 1867, Com. v. Bently, 97 Mass. 551, 554 (samples of liquor analyzed by a witness and said to be that kept by the defendant); Mo. 1919, State v. Powell, — Mo. —, 217 S. W. 35 (murder; defendant's shirt and hat as worn by him at the time of the affray, not admitted, for lack of evidence authenticating it); 1920, State v. Smith, — Mo. —, 222 S. W. 455 (viscera of deceased, on a charge of murder by poison); Mont. 1895, State v. Cadotte, 17 Mont. 315, 42 Pac. 857 (knife introduced as accused's); 1921, State v. Davis, 60 Mont. 426, 199 Pac. 421 (pistol used in homicide); N. J. 1901, State v. Hill, 65 N. J. L. 626, 47 Atl. 814 (cartridges found in a coat); 1852, People v. Larned, 7 N. Y. 445, 451, 452 (tools, offered with connecting evidence); N. Y. 1866, People v. Gonzalez, 35 N. Y. 49 (clothes worn by the accused); Tex. 1921, Davis v. State, 89 Tex. Cr. 411, 231 S. W. 784 (larceny of wheat).

This process of authenticating chattels is ordinarily referred to as identifying them; but the two ideas are distinct, and different principles of Evidence are applied. Identification presupposes that two objects, apparently different, have been referred to, and the issue is whether they are in fact one and identical, not separate objects. Thus, the existence of specific marks, essential to the one, and found also in the other, becomes significant, and the admissibility of this evidence of identity may come into question (ante, § 415), as well as the presumption of identity (post, § 2529). Authentication, however, presupposes a single object only, and refers to it as associated with a person, a time, a place, or other known conditions. Thus, the object itself, when offered, is not relevant unless it is the object that was in fact thus associated with those conditions. Hence, the evidencing of those conditions is necessary; and the principle of Authentication requires that some evidence connecting the object with those conditions be introduced before or at the time of offering the object itself.

Nevertheless, no specific rules have grown up about the authentication of such objects, chiefly because the variety of circumstances involved is so great that no specific rules would be suitable.

§ 2130. Same: Documents. How, then, have such specific rules come to exist particularly for documents? Chiefly through two reasons:

(1) Most documents bear a signature, or otherwise purport on their face to be of a certain person's authorship. Hence, a special necessity exists for separating the external evidence of authorship from the mere existence of the purporting document. A horse or a coat contains upon itself no indications of ownership; when it is claimed that Doe wore it or rode it, all can appreciate that this element is missing and must be supplied by evidence. But a document purports in itself to indicate its authorship; and the perception that this element is nevertheless missing, and must still be supplied, is likely not to occur. There is a natural tendency to forget it. Thus it has constantly to be emphasized by the judicial requirement of evidence to that effect.

(2) The original of a writing is usually presented to the tribunal 'in specie,' while other material objects are not required to be and seldom are brought into court (except such articles as the tools of a crime or the clothes of a victim); so that, in practice, the most common opportunity for the operation of this aberrant tendency occurs for writings, visibly in existence and mutely suggesting that they are all that they purport to be. Thus the mental tendency is especially forcible, frequent, and misleading where documents are involved.

For these two reasons, then, it has happened that the specific rules that have grown up concerning modes of authentication have come to relate to writings alone.

Thus it is that in the traditions of the common law a wise emphasis has been placed upon the necessity of supplying the logical element of authenticity for writings. The general principle has been enforced that a writing purporting to be of a certain authorship cannot go to the jury as possibly genuine, merely on the strength of this purport; there must be some evidence of the genuineness (or execution) of it: [1]

1794, Horne Tooke's Trial, 25 How. St. Tr. 78; Mr. (later L. C.) Erskine, arguing against the reading of a treasonable paper not authenticated: "Would it be said that this should be read as evidence against the prisoner before his connexion with it is proved to have had an existence? I take the reason of that to be this — and I take the reason of it to be founded in great wisdom, in that which in my opinion forms the glory of the English law in all its parts, in an acquaintance with the human character, in the recognition of all that belongs to the principles of the human mind, in the recollection of our wise ancestors that men are not angels, that they carry about them (and your lordships even carry about you) all the infirmities of humanity, and that it therefore shall not be permitted to make a strong impression upon the minds of men by reading matters at which . . . the mind of man revolts, and so in the course of a long trial the jury afterwards cannot discharge from their recollection what they have heard. They do not remember with precision whether that which was read was brought home to the prisoner; and then they mix up in their imagination and recollection matters which they may disapprove with disapprobation of the person who is on trial before them. I take that, with humility, to be the principle. . . . It must first of all be brought home to the person who is to be affected by it, before it is suffered to be read; for after it is read, the effect is had, and that is the danger I complain of." L. C. J. EYRE: "If the question is whether it is now to be read, I think the objection is good. If the question is whether it is evidence admissible, not yet to be read, but to be read or not as other evidence shall bring the matter of it sufficiently home to the prisoner, then the objection is ill-founded."

1847, BRONSON, C. J., in Willson v. Betts, 4 Den. 201, 213: "In the ordinary affairs of men, it is very often assumed, without proof, that he whose name has been affixed to a written instrument placed it there himself. But when the signing becomes a matter of legal controversy, it must be established by proof."

1856, BENNING, J., in Stamper v. Griffin, 20 Ga. 312, 320: "No writing can be received in evidence as a genuine writing until it has been proved to be a genuine one, and none as a forgery until it has been proved to be a forgery. A writing, of itself, is not evidence of the one thing, or of the other. A writing, of itself, is evidence of nothing, and therefore is not, unless accompanied by proof of some sort, admissible as evidence."

§ 2130. [1] Eng. 1810, Pfial v. Vanbatenberg, 2 Camp. 439 (the mere possession by defendant of a receipt, in unproved handwriting — here on a bill of exchange — not evidential; Ellenborough, L. C. J.: "A man cannot be allowed to manufacture evidence for himself at the risk of being convicted of forgery; . . . [moreover,] these receipts may have been fraudulently indorsed without the plaintiff's privity"); U. S. Fed. 1913, Oregon & Cal. R. Co. v. Grabissich, 9th C. C. A., 206 Fed. 577 (answer filed in a prior suit); 1918, McGowan v. Armour, 8th C. C. A., 248 Fed. 676 (alienation of husband's affections; a letter found by plaintiff in the husband's pocket signed by defendant's name, excluded on the facts); Conn. 1794, Neil v. Miller, 2 Root 117 (receipt; "if the defendant had produced any evidence, though ever so small, of its being the plaintiff's signature, it would have been proper to have left it to the jury to weigh; but there being no evidence at all of its being genuine, it would be improper to let it go to the jury"); Haw. 1918, Terr. v. Alohikea, 24 Haw. 570 (cheating; a check purporting to be indorsed by defendant, not received; cases collected); Mich. 1875, McHugh v. Brown, 33 Mich. 3 (note and mortgage not shown, executed, excluded); Mo. 1881, State v. Albert, 73 Mo. 347, 360 (letter found on A. purporting to be from B.); Okl. 1918, Columbian Nat'l Life Ins. Co. v. Wirthle, — Okl. —, 176 Pac. 406 (receipts for payment of premium, with lithograph signature of secretary and treasurer, but no countersign as required, excluded for lack of evidence of genuineness); P. I. 1906, Nonan v. Salas, 7 P. I. 1; W. Va. 1922, Woodrum H. O. Co. v. Adams Ex. Co., — W. Va. —, 110 S. E. 549 (purporting receipts for goods, returned to plaintiff shipper by drayman, excluded for lack of evidence of genuineness).

Add the authorities cited in § 2134, n. 1, post.

For the presumption of genuineness from recording, possession, delivery, etc., see post, §§ 2516, 2520.

For the necessity of pleading a denial of genuineness, see post, § 2596.

§ 2131. Modes of Authenticating Documents. Some of the various possible modes of evidencing a document's genuineness are, of course, never questioned to be sufficient to entitle it to go to the jury. Those about which question has arisen are only certain kinds of circumstantial evidence. It will be necessary therefore to eliminate at the outset the kinds of evidence as to which there is no dispute from the present point of view.

Evidence may be of three different sorts (ante, § 24); namely, autoptic proference (or, real evidence), testimonial evidence, and circumstantial evidence:

(1) Autoptic proference (or, real evidence), occurs, for the execution of writings, when the act of writing is done in the presence of the tribunal. The sufficiency of this is plain.[1]

(2) Testimonial evidence is always regarded as sufficient; the only questions being the ordinary ones as to the qualifications of the witness by knowledge.[2] Ordinary admissions of a party are a sort of evidence always regarded as sufficient to admit a document to the jury;[3] but they are to be distinguished from judicial admissions (post, § 2132).

(3) Circumstantial evidence is of various sorts; and first, of those not here involved:

(a) Style of handwriting, i. e. similarity between that of the document and that of the person alleged as its maker, is a sort of circumstantial evidence (ante, § 383) undisputed in its sufficiency; the controversies have arisen over the proper modes of proving the fact of similarity.[4]

(b) Sundry circumstances preceding or following the act of writing may be appealed to as evidence.[5] For example, if an unsigned writing is left in a § 2131. [1] It is ordinarily available only when a person is required to write his name as a specimen for comparison; its genuineness is then beyond dispute, and the only question that arises concerns entirely different principles, and has been already examined (ante, § 2015, post, § 2264). The other possible case is that of a recognizance entered into before the Court, and this becomes unimpeachable as a part of the record (post, § 2450).

[2] Note that in strictness the only kind of direct testimonial evidence to execution is that of a witness who saw the very act of writing; for testimony based on the style of handwriting is in strictness testimony to a circumstantial fact. An attesting witness is one of the two chief instances of those who in practice speak directly to the act of execution; the use of his hearsay attestation has been already examined (ante, §§ 1505, 1511); it is generally held that the signature of attestation implies testimony to the act of execution. The use of official certificates or records of acknowledgment or execution is the other chief class; these have been already considered (ante, §§ 1648, 1676); but their relation to the present subject is briefly noted post, § 2162.

[3] Such admissions may not suffice to dispense with the production of the original (ante, §§ 1255–1259), nor with the calling of an attesting witness (ante, § 1300); but, supposing these other rules not to stand in the way, an ordinary admission suffices as evidence of execution; though there may be a question as to identity (post, § 2156). Furthermore, a judicial admission, or formal waiver of proof, suffices, for this as for every other issue, to dispense entirely with evidence (post, §§ 2132, 2595).

[4] The type of handwriting may be evidenced by persons familiar with it (ante, §§ 693, 2008); or it may be evidenced by specimens produced to instruct the tribunal directly (ante, § 2016). With this subject we are not here concerned.

[5] The following are instances: ENGLAND: 1849, R. v. James, 4 Cox Cr. 90 (at 6 P. M. the defendant had a bill without an indorsement; at 6.30, he presented it with a forged indorsement; held, evidence of forgery).

UNITED STATES: Alabama: 1902, Woodruff v. Hundley, 133 Ala. 395, 32 So. 570 (analogous instance); 1920, Chisolm v. State, 204 Ala. 69, 85 So. 462 (robbery; the defendant's identity being in issue, an anonymous threatening letter was offered; assuming that de-room with pen and ink, and Doe goes alone into the room, then comes out with fresh ink-marks on his hand, and the writing is then found to bear his name in signature, this would be regarded, no doubt, as sufficient evidence to go to the jury; it is the same sort of evidence that might be used to prove a murder or any other act done in that room. For evidence of this sort there seem to be no specific rules of sufficiency.[6]

It is the remaining sorts of Circumstantial Evidence which give rise to rulings of sufficiency. They consist of groups of circumstances, each by itself perhaps insufficient, but all combined amounting in common experience to a sufficiency. They fall, roughly, under four heads: (c) age; (d) contents; (e) custody; (f) signature or seal.

(c) Age. An ancient document, i. e. one having existed for a generation or more, coming from a natural place of custody, and not bearing a suspicious appearance, may on these circumstances, with perhaps others combined, be taken to be sufficiently evidenced as to its genuineness (post, §§ 2137–2146).

(d) Contents. A letter, coming in answer by mail, and corresponding in time and contents to a prior letter sent to the purporting writer, may be regarded as sufficiently evidenced; and in other ways a document's contents may serve the purpose (post, §§ 2148–2156).

(e) Custody. A document purporting to be official, and found in its natural fendant had handed to the victim an envelope containing this letter, held, by the majority, that the delivery of the envelope, and certain other circumstances sufficed to admit the letter; the minority holding that apart from handwriting, "the possession or delivery of an unsigned writing is no evidence whatsoever that the person . . . himself put the writing on it"; the minority view seems unsound, first in stating so extremely that these facts are "no evidence whatsoever"; secondly, in making a general rule out of what was really only a specific situation where the accused's color seemed to call for special protection against prejudice); California: 1904, Bauer v. State, 144 Cal. 740, 78 Pac. 280 (testimony by one who had not seen the actual signing of the document, held sufficient on the facts); Georgia: 1886, Smith v. State, 77 Ga. 705, 710 (receiving a letter handed to the witness by the person purporting to have written it); 1907, Proctor & Gamble Co. v. Blakeley O. & F. Co., 128 Ga. 606, 57 S. E. 879 (arbitration contract in the custody of a third party out of the State; handwriting testimony not being accessible, and a sworn copy being in evidence, the execution was held sufficiently evidenced by the parties' prior conduct, etc.); Kentucky: 1830, Fleming v. Thomas, 4 J. J. Marsh. 47 (lost receipt for part payment on a note; the fact of some payment on that date, together with the absence of an indorsement on the note, held sufficient to evidence the receipt's genuineness); New York: 1916, People v. Manganaro, 218 N. Y. 9, 112 N. E. 436 (wife-murder; a writing called a will, purporting to be the defendant's, held not sufficiently authenticated by the mere fact that it was found on a dresser in the room occupied by him; the question of admissibility of the inference from possession was not involved); Washington: 1906, State v. Dilley, 44 Wash. 207, 87 Pac. 133 (murder; a letter containing suggestions for shaping testimony was seen to fall out of the window where one defendant was confined in the upper story of the jail, the other defendants being confined in a room below; admitted against the former defendant, with other evidence of handwriting).

[6] There are, however, rulings of admissibility as to certain kinds of facts; for example, whether a plan or design to execute a contract (ante, §§ 104, 376) or a habit of executing a certain kind of contract (ante, §§ 94, 95, 96, 377, 380) is receivable, — the question, however, being the same whether the alleged contract is written or oral; whether a motive existed for executing a certain kind of contract (ante, §§ 391, 392); whether the subsequent possession or use of a document is admissible to show its execution (ante, § 157). In some of these rulings, particularly of the last sort, a question of sufficiency may be involved; but ordinarily the question is merely one of the admissibility of the specific evidence to add to other evidence; and it does not appear whether it would by itself have been regarded as sufficient to go to the jury. With this sort of evidence, therefore, the present class of rules is practically not concerned.

place of official custody, may be regarded as sufficiently evidenced (post, §§ 2158, 2159).

(f) Purporting Official Signature or Seal. A document purporting to be official, and bearing a signature or seal or other mark purporting to be that of the purporting official, may be regarded as sufficiently evidenced (post, §§ 2161–2169).[7]

Before examining these four circumstances in detail, certain distinctions must be noted.

§ 2132. Authentication not Necessary, when not in Issue or when Admitted; Judicial Admission; Opponent's Spoliation. (1) When the execution of a document is not in issue, but only the contents or the fact of the existence of a document of such a tenor, no authentication is necessary.[1] This occurs chiefly where a deed is used as constituting color of title, i. e. as being by implication a part of the act of adverse occupation and thus exhibiting the boundaries or quality of the occupier's estate; for there it is immaterial by whom the deed was executed.[2] The same principle, dispensing altogether with evidence of execution, dispenses with calling the attesting witness (ante, § 1293).[3]

[7] All these modes, so far as the relevancy, or logical course of inference, is concerned, rest on the principle of circumstantial evidence treated ante, §§ 148–160. But the question there was merely of the relevancy of specific facts; here it is of the sufficiency and necessity of groups of facts.

§ 2132. [1] 1864, Hicks v. Coleman, 25 Cal. 122, 129 (a deed conveyed "all my right, etc., in the property described in the foregoing instrument"; proof of the execution of the other deed, held unnecessary; "the only office the H. deed performs is to furnish a description of the land, and for that purpose it is not a matter of the slightest consequence whether it was genuine conveyance or not"); 1869, Neuval v. Cowell, 36 Cal. 648 (so for a contract referred to for specifications in another contract); 1893, Barber's Appeal, 63 Conn. 393, 411, 415, 27 Atl. 973 (letters to a testator, admitted without proof of genuineness, because his use of them under the rule of § 234, ante, bore on the question of sanity); 1879, Skinner v. Brigham, 126 Mass. 132 (conversion of goods, exchanged for a void deed; deed admitted without proof of execution, as being the document actually exchanged); 1905, State v. Waldrop, 73 S. C 60, 52 S. E. 793 (murder; a rent-contract in the deceased's pocket; "formal proof of the execution" not required).

[2] Alabama: 1892, Alabama State L. Co. v. Kyle, 99 Ala. 474, 479, 13 So. 43 (certificate of entry used as color of title); 1904, Dorlan v. Westervitch, 140 Ala. 283, 37 So. 382 (deed not acknowledged nor attested nor recorded, admitted); 1905, Brannan v. Henry, 142 Ala. 698, 39 So. 92; Missouri: 1881, Alexander v. Campbell, 74 Mo. 142, 147 (existence of power of attorney to execute deed); Oregon: 1905, Leavitt v. Shook, 47 Or. 239, 83 Pac. 391 (bill of sale of a mare, used to show the circumstances of obtaining possession); South Carolina: 1828, Forrest v. Trammell, 1 Bail. 77 (where the extent of possession only is to be shown, as in a claim for dower, and the deed to the husband is offered only as coloring such possession, execution need not be proved, and therefore copies are receivable without any evidence of execution); 1872, Stewart v. Blease, 4 S. C. 37, 40, 44 (same; copies receivable without the statutory notice); 1902, Turner v. Poston, 63 S. C. 244, 41 S. E. 296 (deed not properly authenticated, admitted for defendant in mitigation of damages in an action for trespass); Vermont: 1909, Hassam v. Safford, 82 Vt. 444, 74 Atl. 197 (deed defectively sealed and acknowledged, used as color of title).

Some Courts, however, seem to require proof of execution: 1869, Hightower v. Williams, 38 Ga. 597, 601. The matter obviously depends much on the substantive law as to the requisites of adverse possession, and cannot be further examined here; see Sedgwick & Wait, Trial of Title to Land, § 761.

The use of deeds in color of title has also to be considered from other points of view in the rules of evidence, namely, the Hearsay rule, as admitting verbal acts (ante, § 1778), and possession of a part as circumstantial evidence of possession of the whole (ante, § 378).

[3] The instances cited there under § 1293 are equally applicable here.

In certain parts of the substantive law or of the law of pleading may be found rules declaring the execution of documents not to be in issue on a certain state of facts, — for ex-

(2) When the execution of a document, though claimed by one party, is judicially admitted by the other, and thus the issue is waived, there is no necessity for evidence of the execution. Such a judicial admission may be of the ordinary sort, i.e. by a stipulation for the purposes of the trial in hand.[4] Or it may consist in a failure to plead in denial of execution; the range of this sort of admission has been much enlarged by modern statutes declaring that execution need not be evidenced unless by affidavit or other sworn denial (equivalent in effect to a pleading) the opponent raises an issue of genuineness.[5] Where the opponent claims under the instrument, or where he merely produces the instrument on notice, this would equally suffice, so far as it amounts to a judicial admission.[6] When the opponent fails to object to the admission of the document, this is, of course, on general principles (ante, § 18) a waiver as to the need of any evidence authenticating its genuineness; and this waiver is commonly held to extend to the fact of authority of an agent purporting to sign the document for a principal, but not as to the legal sufficiency of the instrument for any purpose.[7]

(3) An ordinary informal or extrajudicial admission differs wholly in its nature from a formal or judicial admission of the above sort; it is merely a piece of circumstantial evidence impeaching the party (ante, § 1048). It is regarded by some Courts as insufficient for certain purposes, — in particular, for dispensing with the attesting-witness rule (ante, § 1300) and for dispensing with the production of the original of the document (ante, §§ 1255–1259). But for the purpose of evidencing execution, where no requirement as to the attesting witness is involved, an extrajudicial admission of the party ample, the rule that a plaintiff in ejectment or the like need not prove the prior deeds forming his chain of title: 1794, Thompson v. Miles, 1 Esp. 184 (action for refusing to complete the purchase of premises; as to showing the plaintiff's title, Kenyon, L. C. J., said "he would never allow it, where the question was respecting a title, that the party should be called upon to prove the execution of all the deeds, deducing a long title"); or the rule that a common source of title may suffice, unless the opponent denies on oath: 1884, Thatcher v. Olmstead, 110 Ill. 26.

Distinguish the question whether a trustee's or administrator's accounting may be sufficiently made by producing vouchers purporting to be signed by third persons, without evidencing the genuineness of the vouchers: 1917, Wylie v. Bushnell, 277 Ill. 484, 115 N. E. 618.

[4] 1881, Jones v. Henry, 84 N. C. 320; 1856, Miller v. Hale, 26 Pa. 432, 435. For this kind of admission in general, see post, § 2588.

[5] These are noticed post, § 2596.

The same principles exempt from calling the attesting-witness (ante, §§ 1294-1296), and the cases cited under that head are here applicable.

The following statute seems to belong either here or under § 1211, ante: S. C. St. 1910 No. 361, p. 695, Code 1922, C. C. P. § 728 (one may introduce "any instrument purporting to be the original or copy of any waybill, receipt, bill of lading, or similar instrument issued by a common carrier as 'prima facie' evidence that the same is genuine or is a true and correct copy; provided the adverse party shall fail upon due notice given to produce the original instrument").

[6] The cases are collected ante, §§ 1297, 1298, under the attesting-witness rule.

[7] 1860, Lowe v. Bliss, 24 Ill. 168 (note not objected to; its execution held to be admitted, but not its validity); 1822, Birney v. Haim, 2 Litt. 262, 268 (deed purporting to be by town trustees); 1880, Bartlett v. O'Donoghue, 72 Mo. 263 (unacknowledged deed not objected to; execution held to be admitted, but not its legal effect as a conveyance); 1905, McClung v. McPherson, 47 Or. 73, 82 Pac. 13 (notice of termination of tenancy, not objected to; the attorney's authority to sign, held to be admitted, but not the legal sufficiency of the notice).

Compare the doctrine for ancient documents (post, § 2144).

has always been regarded as sufficient; [8] the only question could be whether the party's words or conduct under the circumstances amounted to an admission (ante, §§ 1060–1067).[9] It is upon this principle that the acknowledgment of a deed, being an admission of genuineness, may always be used as against the party acknowledging, even where the record is not regarded as an admissible official statement to prove the execution (ante, §§ 1650, 1653, 1676).

(4) A circumstance sometimes treated as an extrajudicial admission, though in theory distinct in nature, is the opponent's destruction or suppression of the instrument in question. This is one sort of circumstantial evidence, already examined (ante, § 291) in its use to evidence a document's contents. It remains only to note here that this circumstance is uniformly treated also as sufficient evidence of execution to go to the jury.[10] The mode in which this doctrine is to be applied in connection with other principles affecting execution is sufficiently illustrated in the following opinion:

1837, GIBSON, C. J., in M'Reynolds v. M'Cord, 6 Watts 288, 290: "Preliminary to proof of contents [of a lost document], and involving proof of execution, stands proof of the preëxistence in the state of a valid instrument. This is a rudimental principle, which

[8] 1895, Dunbar v. U. S., 156 U. S. 191, 15 Sup. 325 (defendant's oral admission of the genuineness of a telegram, sufficient; "an admission as to a writing is like an admission of any other fact"); 1863, Hilborn v. Alford, 22 Cal. 482 (oral admissions, sufficient; here, a note); 1863, Wright v. Carillo, 22 Cal. 595, 606 (same, for a deed); Cal. C. C. P. 1872, § 1942 (confused language; quoted post, § 2137); 1879, Smith v. Wilton, 69 Mo. 458, 460; 1832, Kingwood v. Bethlehem, 13 N. J. L. 221, 227 (pauper settlement; the deceased pauper's acknowledgment of an indenture of apprenticeship, sufficient); 1878, Bardin v. Stevenson, 75 N. Y. 164, 168 (an admission of the genuineness of a document of that description does not suffice); 1890, Dakota v. O'Hare, 1 N. D. 42 (the defendant handed an unsigned communication to the witness; sufficient); 1870, Krise v. Neason, 66 Pa. 253, 258 ("If the party . . . should himself hand the paper as genuine to a copyist, that certainly would be such an unequivocal acknowledgment of its genuineness as to dispense with any other evidence"; here, the written acknowledgment of the party's agent was sufficient); P. I. C. C. P. 1901, § 326 (similar to Cal. C. C. P. § 1942, but revised; quoted post, § 2137).

On the principle that proof of loss does not exempt from proof of execution (ante, § 1188), an admission of the loss or of the correctness of a copy may not be an admission of execution: 1840, Sharpe v. Lamb, 3 Perry & Dav. 454 (copy of a letter, admitted by the opponent to be a true copy; held, that proof of the sending of the letter was necessary; Patteson, J.: "It has been often objected before me at chambers that an admission could not safely be made that such a paper is a copy, because it would admit that there was an original; I have always said that there is no danger in that, because the copy cannot be read unless the party were entitled to read the original").

[9] There may, however, be the further question, when the admission did not relate to a specific piece of paper, whether the paper offered is the one thus admitted to be genuine; here it would seem that an inference from identity of tenor might usually suffice, in analogy to other principles (post, § 2148); but the Courts seem inclined to be strict: 1897, Mann v. Forein, 166 Ill. 446, 46 N. E. 1119 (admission of "a note for $5,000" not sufficient to prove execution of a note dated April 6, 1882, due at death); 1895, People v. Corey, 148 N. Y. 476, 42 N. E. 1066 (the defendant had admitted writing a letter not otherwise identified as the one offered; excluded, by a divided Court); 1910, In re Pirie, 198 N. Y. 209, 91 N. E. 587 (recital of a note in a mortgage is not an admission that a specific note offered is the note so described; other evidence of genuineness is needed; People v. Corey approved; this seems overcautious).

[10] 1893, Lambie's Estate, 97 Mich. 49, 55, 56 N. W. 223 (destruction of a second testamentary paper by the parties benefited by the first, held evidence of due statutory execution); 1837, M'Reynolds v. M'Cord, 6 Watts Pa. 288, 290 (quoted supra); 1852, Cheatham v. Riddle, 8 Tex. 162, 166 (defendant's principal had fraudulently absconded with plaintiff's title-document; direct proof of execution not required).

is not contested. Now there was no specific proof of execution; and what was there also? [The other party to the alleged agreement had burnt the paper.] Everything is to be presumed 'in odium spoliatoris'; and had it certainly appeared that the destroyed paper purported to be an agreement such as is attempted to be established, it would have sufficed for the admission of subsequent evidence of its contents. . . . It seems clear on principle that, if there be no subscribing witness, the act of destruction is itself the best evidence of which such a case is susceptible, because it has put it out of the party's power to submit the paper to witnesses of the handwriting; and the act of a spoiler is in its nature equipollent to a confession. But, before he can be fixed with the character of a spoiler, the purport of the paper must be proved to have been what it is surmised to have been; . . . there are few men who have not papers which it would be not only innocent but prudent to destroy. . . . If the paper destroyed were shown to have been an agreement for the land, it would raise a presumption of identity, sufficient to dispense with the ordinary proof of execution, and let in the contents of the paper [as proved by another witness]. . . . [But the witness to destruction appeared not to have read the paper destroyed, and thus to be unable to identify it.] It would seem, therefore, that the plaintiffs, in making out a circumstance to stand for proof of execution, ought to have shown a competent degree of knowledge [of identity] in the witness, drawn from the declarations of him who destroyed the paper or from some other source equally satisfactory if such there were. Had that been done, it would have produced a presumption of identity and consequent execution."

§ 2133. Other Principles affecting Execution of Writings, discriminated (Rules as to Possession of Documents; Identity of Name; Order of Proof of Execution; Lost Will; Attesting Witness; Number of Witnesses; Presumption of Delivery; Alterations; Lost Grant). (1) It may be desired to show a person's privity to or knowledge of the contents of a document, without regard to its authorship; and for this purpose his possession of it may be offered as evidence (ante, § 260). So, also, whether possession of a document — such as a matured note — is evidence of its payment, or justifies other such inferences, is a different question (ante, § 156).

(2) The execution of a document by one J. S. being sufficiently evidenced, it may remain to be shown whether that J. S. is identical with the J. S. in the case at bar; for this purpose the presumption from identity of name to identity of person may be appealed to (post, §§ 2156, 2529); the question is the same whether the execution of a document or any other issue is involved.

(3) Whether the order of evidence should be, in the case of a document produced, first to prove execution and then to prove contents, has been elsewhere considered (ante, § 1189).

(4) Whether the execution of a lost will or other document is required to be proved by one who has read it is a question as to qualifications of witnesses (ante, §§ 1278, 2090).

(5) Whether more than one witness is required to prove the execution of a will, involves the general rule as to a required number of witnesses (ante, §§ 2048–2051).

(6) Whether an attesting witness is required to be called to prove execution involves the general rule of preference (ante, § 1287).

(7) What degree of proof of the execution of a lost will — whether it is to be "clear and satisfactory" — has already been noticed in dealing with proof of a lost will's contents (ante, § 2106); the two questions are seldom discriminated.

(8) Whether proof of signing raises a presumption of sealing and delivery is a question of the presumption of delivery (post, § 2520).

(9) That proof of loss, allowing the use of a copy, does not dispense with proof of execution of the lost original is an important rule already noticed (ante, § 1188).

(10) That the witness to execution must have the document before him involves the rule for production of originals (ante, §§ 1185, 1248).

(11) Whether an alteration is to be treated as made before or after execution is a question of the presumption as to alterations (post, § 2525).

(12) Whether a recital in an ancient deed is admissible to prove the execution of a lost deed thus recited, is a question of an exception to the Hearsay rule (ante, § 1573).

(13) The presumption of a lost grant involves a rule affecting both execution and contents (post, § 2522).

§ 2134. Authentication as involving either Signature or Contents. (1) When a person is charged with executing a signed document, for the purposes of affecting him with certain legal consequences, the act which suffices to charge him is any act by which he adopts and makes his own the terms of the writing. It is therefore, in general, immaterial whether he has himself written the body of the document or not, if he has signed it. It is even immaterial whether he has signed it, if he has otherwise acknowledged or adopted it. Hence, proof of the signature of the document is sufficient to charge him;[1] precisely as proof of the oral acknowledgment would suffice (ante, § 2132, par. 3).

But this is a consequence of the substantive law, not of a rule of Evidence.[2] Thus, so far as there are any exceptions to the general rule — as, for example, in the question whether one may be charged on a contract which he has signed but not read — they are doctrines of the substantive law, not rules of evidence (post, § 2415). In the field of Evidence, they receive frequent application — as where a party writing a letter referring to another letter may be charged with its contents, which become by adoption part of his admission (ante, §§ 1070, 2120). But it is by some act of adoption — such as signing or acknowledging the writing of another — that he becomes thus chargeable; and hence it is this act of adoption which constitutes the execution. Hence, proof of execution involves merely proof of signature or of whatever else constitutes the act of adoption.[2]

§ 2134. [1] 1909, Western Union Tel. Co. v. Northcutt, 158 Ala. 539, 48 So. 553, semble (telegram delivery sheet); 1845, Pullen v. Hutchinson, 12 Shepl. Me. 249, 254 (note and letter; signature sufficient, where there are no indications of falsity as to date).

[2] Hence the question may arise what constitutes, in the substantive law, the document in question; e. g. whether a will written on separate sheets and signed on the last is a single document (post, § 2452).

If an alteration appears in the body of docu-

(2) Conversely, where the document lacks a signature, no rule of Evidence prevents the proof of its execution in some other way. Some rule of the substantive law may require a signature; for example, it may be required that a will shall be signed at the end and not merely bear the name in the midst or at the beginning or on a superscription (post, § 2456); or a corporate or judicial record may be required to be signed;[3] or a deed may be required to be not merely signed but also acknowledged (ante, § 1653). With such rules the law of Evidence is not concerned. It accepts them as otherwise determined. Accordingly, if there is no signature, and the substantive law makes no requirement as to a signature, the execution may be established by evidencing the handwriting of the contents,[4] as in the case of records (post, § 2164), or by evidencing some oral act of acknowledgment or assent.[5]

§ 2135. Authentication as a Rule of Presumption. We are now in a position, after this survey of the various modes of authentication and its incidental questions, to consider whether, for authentication in general, the rules are properly rules of presumption or merely rules of sufficiency. It has been noticed (ante, § 2129) that they may partake of the double character, but that the emphasis has in general been thrown on the latter aspect. Remembering, however, the variety of modes in which authentication may properly be evidenced, it would seem that the situation does not, as a whole, admit of a clear-cut rule of presumption easily defined and applied. The possible combinations of evidence are too many to make such a rule practicable. It is better to treat the question, in general, merely as one of sufficiency (post, §§ 2487, 2494), i. e. to allow the writing, upon the evidence in question, to go to the jury, without any rule of law strictly binding them to presume its execution:

1820, DUNCAN, J., in Siegfried v. Levan, 6 S. & R. 308, 311: "All that is done by the Court, in admitting the deed in evidence, is this, that if the execution of the deed is proved by the subscribing witness, the party has made out a 'prima facie' case, not a conclusive one, or, in cases where recourse is had to the secondary evidence, the collateral proof is such that a jury might presume [i. e. infer] the execution; and then these facts are submitted to the jury to exercise their own judgment, to draw their own conclusion of the sealing and delivery. . . . If the bond is proved by the subscribing witness, it is read in evidence; why? Not because the Court pronounce, by admitting it in evidence, that it is the deed of the party; but because the party has given evidence of its execution. So, ment, the question whether it affects the liability of the signer is a question of substantive law; the question whether the alteration was made before or after signing is a mere question of fact, upon which however there may be a further question as to the burden of proof (post, § 2525).

Upon proof of the signature of an agent, no presumption as to his authority arises (post, § 2521, par. b); otherwise, for ancient documents (post, § 2144). As to the effect in this respect of an admission, see ante, § 2132, par. (2).

[3] 1874, People v. E. L. & Y. Co., 48 Cal. 143, 146 (under a statute requiring a public board's proceedings to be signed by chairman and clerk, these signatures are not essential to validity, but mere aids to authentication).

[4] 1834, Nichols v. Alsop, 10 Conn. 263, 268.

[5] For example, an assent by silence, under the principle of § 1071, ante. That it is essentially a question of the substantive law is illustrated in the statutes forbidding any acknowledgment of a debt to suffice to take the case out of the statute of limitations unless made in writing signed by the debtor.

where the execution is to be made out by facts and circumstances, it is admitted, not because the Court draw any conclusion of the fact in issue, but because some evidence is offered from which the jury might presume [i. e. infer] the fact in issue, the sealing and delivery of the bond. If there be no evidence of the execution, the Court will not permit the bond to be read in evidence; but if there be any fact or circumstance tending to prove the execution or from which the execution might be presumed, then like other presumptive evidence it is open for the decision of the jury."

This seems to be the view generally taken.[1]

It follows, that, after a ruling in favor of the sufficiency of the evidence by the party offering the document, it goes to the jury, before the opponent can offer evidence in denial;[2] and the opponent's evidence in denial, when it comes, is to be addressed to the jury, not to the judge, for the judge has ruled as matter of law upon the sufficiency of the evidence, and the question rests now with the jury.[3] Conversely, if the opponent offers no evidence in denial, nevertheless there is no rule of law requiring the jury to presume execution; they are to weigh the evidence without any compulsory rule of law.[4]

Yet, though this may be so for authentication in general, as provable by sundry sorts of evidence, there may conceivably occur a specific rule of presumption for specific kinds of evidence, — for example, for ancient documents (post, § 2146), or for officially sealed documents (post, § 2161).

II. Specific Rules of Sufficiency for Circumstantial Evidence

1. Authentication by Age of Document

§ 2137. Ancient Documents; General Principle. For three centuries the rule has existed, unquestioned in its general validity, that an ancient document, under certain conditions, is to be taken as sufficiently evidenced, in regard to its genuineness of execution, to be submitted to the jury.[1]

The reasons for this specific and simple rule are twofold. First, after a long lapse of time, ordinary testimonial evidence from those who saw the document's execution or knew the style of handwriting or heard the party admit the execution, is practically unavailable, and a necessity always exists for resorting to circumstantial evidence. Secondly, the circumstance of age — or long existence — of the document, together with its place of custody, its unsuspicious appearance, and perhaps other circumstances, suffice, in combination, as evidence to be submitted to the jury. Whether the mere age is itself an evidential circumstance at all has been judicially doubted; though it may be argued that men would hardly undertake the risk of forgery for § 2135. [1] 1849, Hicks v. Chouteau, 12 Mo. 341.

[2] 1863, Verzan v. McGregor, 23 Cal. 339; 1853, Flournoy v. Warden, 17 Mo. 435, 441.

[3] Verzan v. McGregor, supra.

[4] 1877, Scott v. Delany, 87 Ill. 146, 150.

§ 2137. [1] 1648, Anon., in Styles' Pract. Reg. 175 ("An ancient writing, that is proved to have been found amongst deeds and evidences of land, may be given in evidence to a jury, though the execution of it cannot be proved"); 1666, Wright v. Sherrard, 1 Keb. 877 ("An auncient deed is good evidence, without proving, or seal on it, as [in a case in] 44 Eliz. [1602]"); 1696, Lynch v. Clerke, 3 Salk. 154, Holt, C. J. ("An old deed is good evidence, without any witness to swear it was executed").

the sole use of posterity, and thus the circumstance of age alone is some evidence; but it has never been suggested to be sufficient of itself.

The reasons judicially advanced may be gathered from the following passages:

1806, ELLENBOROUGH, L. C. J., in Roe v. Rawlings, 7 East 291: "Ancient deeds proved to have been found amongst deeds and evidences of land may be given in evidence, although the execution of them cannot be proved; and the reason given is, 'that it is hard to prove ancient things, and the finding them in such a place is a presumption that they were fairly and honestly obtained and reserved for use, and are free from suspicion of dishonesty.'"

1840, COWEN, J., in Northrop v. Wright, 24 Wend. 221, 228: "When the primary evidence is gone, you resort to what good fortune enables you to lay hold of as a substitute. This is often merely circumstantial."

1847, BRONSON, C. J., in Willson v. Betts, 4 Den. 201, 213: "The mere fact that the instrument has existed for more than thirty years, unaided by other proofs, cannot be enough to establish it in a Court of justice. . . . Showing that the instrument is thirty years old has no greater tendency to prove it genuine than would the fact that it had existed for a single day. The mere fact of existence, whether the time be long or short, has no tendency whatever, in a legal point of view, to prove the due execution of the instrument. . . . Indeed, when nothing has ever been done [by way of possession] under the deed, the lapse of time tends to discredit it. Courts have not relaxed the rules of evidence in relation to ancient deeds because time alone furnishes any presumption in their favor, but because the lapse of time renders it difficult, and sometimes impossible, to give the usual proof of execution."

The rule itself is simple enough, although the legislative attempts to re-declare it have sometimes disfigured its native simplicity.[2] But there have been controversies over some of its details; and these may now be considered.

[2] California: C. C. P. 1872, § 1942 ("Where, however, evidence is given that the party against whom the writing is offered has at any time admitted its genuineness, no other evidence of execution need be given when the instrument is one mentioned in § 1945, or one produced from the custody of the adverse party and has been acted upon by him as genuine"); § 1945 ("Where a writing is more than thirty years old, the comparisons [of handwriting, allowed under C. C. P. § 1944] may be made with writings purporting to be genuine, and generally respected and acted upon as such by persons having an interest in knowing the fact"); § 1963, par. 34 (there is a presumption "that a document or writing more than thirty years old is genuine, when the same has been since generally acted upon as genuine by persons having an interest in the question, and its custody has been satisfactorily explained"); Georgia: Rev. C. 1910, § 4190 (a deed "more than thirty years old, having the appearance of genuineness on inspection, and coming from the proper custody, if possession has been consistent therewith," is admissible without proof of execution); § 5736 ("conclusive presumptions" are stated to include that of "ancient deeds, and other instruments more than thirty years old, when they come from the proper custody, and possession has been held in accordance with them"); § 5771 ("ancient documents, purporting to be a part of the transaction to which they relate," are admissible); Montana: Rev. C. 1921, § 10606, par. 34 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1963); New Mexico: Annot. St. 1915, § 2186 ("all church records," admissible to show dates of marriage, etc., provided they are, "first, more than thirty years old; second, shall come from the proper custody; and third, shall be examined and inspected by the Court, and upon such examination and inspection shall be found by the Court to be free from all suspicion of fabrication, alteration, or fraud of any kind"); North Dakota: Comp. Laws 1913, § 7936, par. 34 (it is presumed "that a document or writing more than thirty years old is genuine when the same has been since generally acted upon as genuine by persons having an interest in the question and its custody has been satisfactorily explained"); Oregon: Laws 1920, § 799, par. 35 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1963); Philippine Isl. C. C. P. 1901, § 326 ("where a writing is more than 30 years old and evidence is given that the party against whom the writing is offered has at any time admitted its execution, or where the writing is one produced from the custody of the adverse party and has been acted upon by him as genuine, no other evidence of execution need be given"; this is a re-casting of Cal. C. C. P. §§ 1942, 1945, but merely makes worse its confusion of principles); § 334, par. 32 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1963, par. 34); Civ. C. § 1221 (like P. R. Rev. St. & C. 1911, § 4295); Porto Rico: Rev. St. & C. 1911, § 1460 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1945); § 1470 (like ib. § 1963); § 4295 (copies 30 years old; quoted in full ante, § 1225).

§ 2138. Age; Thirty Years of Existence; Mode of Reckoning. (1) Since the chief reason for the rule is the impossibility of obtaining living testimony to the signing or to the handwriting, the necessity does not arise until time has made such testimony unavailable. At first, this requirement was satisfied by the simple and indefinite notion that the deed must be "ancient." [1] But a more definite standard naturally became desirable. Since the lack of living witnesses to the document was the justifying fact, and since such witnesses might be assumed to have been at least of age at the time of execution, they would presumably have disappeared from the stage of life after the lapse of forty or at most fifty years.[2] Accordingly, the period of forty years came, by the 1700s, to be taken as the time when a document was treated as "ancient" under this rule.[3] But this reckoning was too strict, because the witnesses were more likely to have been mature persons, and therefore at least thirty years of age; and another thirty years would suffice to bring them near the end of their span. Ever since the second half of the 1700s, therefore, the period of thirty years [4] has sufficed to constitute an "ancient" document; except under some special statutory rules.[5]

(2) It is immaterial that an attesting witness is in fact alive at the time of trial, or even that he is in court. The rule is for convenience' sake a rule of thumb. Neither the attesting witness need be called nor other usual testimonial evidence be offered.[6]

§ 2138. [1] The quotations ante, § 2137, note 1, show this for the 1600s.

[2] 1726, Gilbert, Evidence, 100 ("for the witnesses cannot be supposed to live above forty years; . . . for the age of a man is no more than sixty years, and a man is supposed to be twenty years before he is of age sufficient; . . . and therefore since no person living can be supposed to be coeval with such deeds, therefore they may be offered in evidence without proof").

[3] 1730, Benson v. Olive, Bunbury 280 (a supposed deed of 1694 was offered; but "though sometimes thirty-five or even thirty years has been thought sufficient, yet not where it is objected to; but the usual rule is forty years"); 1782, Clarkson v. Woodhouse, 3 Doug. 169 (the latest of some alleged leases received was dated 1702 or 1703; one dated 1730 was excluded).

[4] 1740, Dean of Ely v. Stewart, 2 Atk. 44 (document of copyhold, of thirty years' age, received); 1744, Omychund v. Barker, 1 Atk. 21, 49, Hardwicke, L. C.; 1788, Buller, J., in R. v. Farringdon, 2 T. R. 466, 471 ("It is an established rule, which holds in the case of every deed, that if it be above thirty years' standing, it proves itself"); 1793, R. v. Ryton, 5 T. R. 259 (certificate of pauper settlement); 1795, Chelsea Waterworks v. Cowper, 1 Esp. 275 (bond; Kenyon, L. C. J., "said that all deeds above thirty years' date proved themselves"); 1798, Marsh v. Collnett, 2 Esp. 665 (Yates, J., ex rel. Kenyon, L. C. J.).

This period has been accepted in almost every American ruling: 1828, Waldron v. Tuttle, 4 N. H. 371, 377; 1843, Homer v. Cilley, 14 N. H. 85, 98; 1808, Jackson v. Blanshan, 3 Johns. N. Y. 292. Occasionally, traces are seen of the earlier English rule: 1839, Crane v. Marshall, 4 Shepl. Me. 27, 29 (a deed more than forty years old, admitted); 1800, Gittings v. Hall, 1 H. & J. Md. 14, 18, semble ("upwards of thirty-nine or forty years"). Occasionally, also, Courts have intimated that they would be satisfied with a shorter period, but these rulings are anomalous: 1856, Boykin v. Wright, 11 La. An. 531, 533 (deed twenty-seven years old, admitted on the facts); 1784, Burke v. Ryan, 1 Dall. Pa. 94 (twenty years, semble, but here said of possession accompanying a sheriff's deed); 1814, Shaller v. Brand, 6 Binn. Pa. 435, 439 (thirty years; here applied to a will); 1823, McGennis v. Allison, 10 S. & R. Pa. 197, 199 (Duncan, J.: "Thirty years seems the fixed time; a shorter period, twenty-five, perhaps twenty-one, the period of limitation, might be sufficient; but of this I give no opinion").

[5] These are collected post, § 2143.

[6] The authorities have been considered under the attesting-witness rule, ante, § 1311.

(3) The period of thirty years signifies of course the period in which the specific document has been in existence.[7] The purporting date is of itself nothing; for anybody may have forged the written date but yesterday. Accordingly this existence of the document thirty years ago must be somehow shown.[7]

(4) The period is to be reckoned backwards from the time of offering the deed, not from the time of suit begun or any earlier period; [8] and, forwards, from the time of existence or purporting execution of the document, and not from the time of its taking effect in law (as, in a will, from the death of the testator).[9]

§ 2139. Natural Custody. The document, at the time of its original discovery, must have been in some place where it would be natural to find a genuine document of such a tenor as the one in question.[1] A forger can usually not secure the placing of the document in such a custody; and hence the naturalness of its custody, being relevant circumstantially (ante, §§ 148, 157), is required in combination with the document's age:

1850, EASTMAN, J., in Gibson v. Poor, 21 N. H. 440, 446: "The reason why it is required that an ancient document shall be produced from the proper depository is that thereby credit is given to its genuineness. Were it not for its antiquity, and the presumption that consequently arises that evidence of its execution cannot be obtained, it would have to be proved. It is not that any one particular place of deposit can have more virtue in it than another, or make true that which is false; but the fact of its coming from the natural and proper place tends to remove presumptions of fraud and strengthens the belief in its genuineness."

[7] Eng. 1764, Forbes v. Wale, 1 W. Bl. 532 (a bond bearing the date 1732; objected that "if the length of the date was alone sufficient to establish it, a knave has nothing to do but to forge a bond with a very ancient date"; whereupon Mansfield, L. C. J., "directed the bond to be proved"); U. S. 1814, Yeates, J., in Shaller v. Brand, 6 Binn. Pa. 435, 444 ("A paper cannot be read because it is dated back thirty or forty years, or because it carries with it the appearance of time"). Accord: 1853, Jones v. Morgan, 13 Ga. 515, 523; 1888, Pridgen v. Green, 80 Ga. 737, 739, 7 S. E. 97 (deed bearing affidavit of the subscribing witness before a justice; age sufficiently shown); 1906, Bower v. Cohen, 126 Ga. 35, 54 S. E. 918 (map dated 1859, but not shown to exist till later); 1874, Whitman v. Heneberry, 73 Ill. 109 (kind of evidence sufficient, examined); 1883, Quinn v. Eagleston, 108 Ill. 248, 253 (age of deeds sufficiently proved); 1859, Fairly v. Fairly, 38 Miss. 280, 290 (thirty years' existence required; unless thirty years' possession of the property is shown; anomalous doctrine); 1833, Robinson v. Craig, 1 Hill S. C. 389 ("I think a jury ought always to be satisfied in some way that it has been in existence for the length of time required").

[8] Eng. 1844, Man v. Ricketts, 7 Beav. 93, 101; U. S. 1870, Gardner v. Grannis, 57 Ga. 539, 554 ("A witness once incompetent may become competent; a document not well authenticated may become better authenticated") ; 1899, Reuter v. Stuckart, 181 Ill. 529, 54 N. E. 1014; 1883, Bass v. Sevier, 58 Tex. 567, 569.

[9] Eng. 1803, M'Kenire v. Fraser, 9 Ves. Jr. 5 (a will thirty years old, the testator dead twenty years ago; Sir W. Grant, V. C.: "I do not see how a will can be distinguished from a deed," yet seemed doubtful; but here, after proof of two witnesses' handwriting, the paper was admitted); 1826, Doe v. Deakin, 3 C. & P. 402 (will dated more than thirty years ago, the testator dead less than thirty years, admitted); 1828, Doe v. Wolley, 8 B. & C. 22 (will); 1844, Man v. Ricketts, 7 Beav. 93, 101 (will).

Contra: U. S. 1808, Jackson v. Blanshan, 3 Johns. N. Y. 292, 298 (will; but here the doctrine was applied as a part of the rule about possession; Savage, J., diss.); 1814, Shaller v. Brand, 6 Binn. Pa. 435, 439, per Tilghman, C. J. (will; holding that the period can begin only after death, because possession is also required).

§ 2139. [1] This requirement seems to have been originally not insisted upon: 1730, Benson v. Olive, Bunbury 280 (an alleged deed was old enough, but "Baron Carter objected that the plaintiff should give some account how he came by it; but the Lord Chief Baron said he could not see the use of that, and it would be very inconvenient; . . . the rest of the Barons seemed to be of opinion with the Lord Chief Baron").

The important feature of this requirement is that no one custody is to be esteemed the necessary one. All that is required is that it be a natural one: [2]

1836, TINDAL, C. J., in Meath v. Winchester, 3 Bing. N. C. 183; 200: "It is not necessary that they should be found in the best and most proper place of deposit. If documents continue in such custody, there never would be any question as to their authenticity. But it is when documents are found in other than the proper place of deposit that the investigation commences whether it was reasonable and natural under the circumstances in the particular case to expect that they should have been in the place where they are actually found. For it is obvious that whilst there can be only one place of deposit strictly and absolutely proper, there may be various and many that are reasonable and probable though differing in degree, some being more so, some less. And in these cases the proposition to be determined is whether the actual custody is so reasonably and probably to be accounted for that it impresses the mind with the conviction that the instrument found in such custody must be genuine."

1839, COLERIDGE, J., in Doe v. Pearce, 2 Moo. & Rob. 240: "It is not necessary that the custody from which an ancient document comes should be strictly according to the legal right; it is enough if it be brought from a place of deposit where in the ordinary course of things such a document, if genuine, might reasonably be expected to be found."

The question is therefore especially one to be left to the determination of the trial Court on the circumstances of the particular case.[3] Various phrasings of definition have been suggested by way of guidance; [4] but none can be regarded as fixed.[5] The general principle is conceded on all hands, and has received varied application according to the facts of each case.[6]

[2] Accord: Eng. 1843, Croughton v. Blake, 12 M. & W. 205, 208 (Parke, B.: "It is not necessary to show that it has come from the most proper custody; it is sufficient if it come from a place where it might reasonably be expected to be found"; admitting ancient terriers); 1845, Denman, L. C. J., in Doe v. Phillips, 8 Q. B. 158; 1848, Wightman, J., in Doe v. Keeling, 11 Q. B. 884, 889; U. S. 1847, Collier, C. J., in Doe v. Eslava, 11 Ala. 1028, 1040; 1850, Eastman, J., in Gibson v. Poor, 21 N. H. 440, 446.

[3] Eng. 1848, Denman, L. C. J., in Doe v. Keeling, 11 Q. B. 884 ("The [trial] judge is in the situation of a jury; . . . Courts ought to be liberal in this respect. . . . [The question is] whether the learned judge was here so far wrong that we ought to set aside his ruling"); U. S. 1905, Campbell v. Bates, 143 Ala. 338, 39 So. 144 (the proper custody will be presumed in favor of the ruling below).

[4] Eng. 1838, Doe v. Samples, 3 Nev. & P. 254, 8 A. & E. 151, 154 (whether "the custody was not so improper or improbable as to require proof of the execution of the deed"; "proper custody means . . . the custody of any person so connected with the deed as that his possession of it does not excite any suspicion of fraud"); [Ky. 1881, Harlan v. Howard, 79 Ky. 373 ("produced by those whose custody affords a reasonable presumption of their genuineness").

[5] From the present requirement for ancient documents should be distinguished the use of custody of official records as evidence of genuineness, post, § 2158.

[6] ENGLAND: 1753, Jones v. Waller, 2 E. & Y. 141 (collector of tithes); 1783, Clarkson v. Woodhouse, 5 T. R. 412; 1794, Atkins v. Hatton, 2 Anstr. 386 (parish terrier); Miller v. Foster, 2 Anstr. 387, note (same); 1795, Lygon v. Stuart, ib. 601 (list of a monastery's possessions); 1801, Earl v. Lewis, 4 Esp. 1 (documents possessed by a parish rector); 1810, Swinnerton v. Stafford, 3 Taunt. 91 (a grant of common); 1816, Bertie v. Beaumont, 2 Price 303, 307 (receipt for tithe-payments); 1816, Bullen v. Michel, 4 Dow 297 (chartularies of abbey-lands); 1817, Armstrong v. Hewitt, 4 Price 216, 218 (vicar's books of tithes); 1818, Randolph v. Gordon, 5 Price 312, 315 (book of tithe-payments); 1823, Pulley v. Hilton, 12 Price 625, 626, 630, 637 (sequestrator's tithe-account); 1828, Rowe v. Brenton, 8 B. & C. 737, 747 (extent of a manor); 1829, Brett v. Beales, M. & M. 416, 419 (town tax-table); 1836, Meath v. Winchester, 3 Bing. N. C. 183, 197, 202 (case stated by a former Bishop for the opinion of counsel, found in a family mansion); 1838, Doe v. Samples, 8 A. & E. 151, 3 Nev. & P. 254 (deed of settlement); 1838, Rees v. Walters, 3 M. & W. 527, 531 (lease); 1839, Doe v. Pearce, 2 Moo. & Rob. 240 (will); 1842, Doe v. Pulman, 3 Q. B. 622 (counterpart

§ 2140. Unsuspicious Appearance. A third requirement is that the document must in appearance be unsuspicious. No clear definition of the marks of suspicion which will exclude its use seems to have been agreed upon; but the general notion is conceded: [1]

1877, JACKSON, J., in Hill v. Nisbet, 58 Ga. 586, 589: "On inspection it must exhibit an honest face; otherwise it is not such an ancient document that its countenance will pass muster. Age will not sanctify ear-marks of fraud."

§ 2141. Possession of the Land, for Deeds and Wills. Whether a fourth requirement is to be made for deeds and wills of land, namely, that the party claiming under the instrument should have been (by himself or his predecessors) in occupation of the land since the time of the document's purporting execution, has been the subject of one of the longest and most widespread controversies in the law of Evidence. The case in favor of such a requirement has rested partly, it is true, upon misunderstanding of the precedents for a totally different doctrine about possession (post, § 2142). But, in the course of speculation, genuine arguments of policy were found for requiring possession under the present principle. The process of thought has thus been somewhat vacillating and elusive.

(1) In England, the original foundation for requiring possession seems not to have rested on any element of execution at all. The age and custody of a deed sufficed for the genuineness of execution; but there remained, as necesof a lease, found in the lessor's possession); 1845, Doe v. Phillips, 8 Q. B. 158 (deed creating an attendant term, in an attorney's custody); 1846, Slater v. Hodgson, 9 Q. B. 727 (bond to indemnify parish officers); 1848, Doe v. Keeling, 11 Q. B. 884 (lease).

CANADA: 1835, R. v. Wilson, Ber. N. Br. 1 (old plan annexed to a grant); 1873, Walker v. Bayers, 9 N. Sc. 270 (old plans in the Crown land-office, rejected on the facts); 1872, Thompson v. Bennett, 22 U. C. C. P. 393, 401.

UNITED STATES: Federal: 1886, Applegate v. Lexington & C. C. M. Co., 117 U. S. 255, 261, 6 Sup. 742 (deeds in the county record-office; custody held proper); 1889, Baeder v. Jennings, 40 Fed. 199 (deeds); 1896, Templeton v. Luckett, 21 C. C. A. 325, 75 Fed. 254 (following Applegate v. Mining Co., and receiving a deed, found in the Texas general land-office, of land in Texas issued on military scrip); 1905, McGuire v. Blount, 199 U. S. 142, 26 Sup. 1 (certain probate records of Spanish Florida, in the custody of the U. S. Surveyor-General, received); Georgia: 1846, M'Cleskey v. Leadbetter, 1 Ga. 551, 558; 1857, Adams v. Dickson, 23 Ga. 406, 410 (marriage settlement); Massachusetts: 1817, Stockbridge v. W. Stockbridge, 14 Mass. 257, 261 ("in the possession of the party claiming under it"); 1826, Tolman v. Emerson, 4 Pick. 160, 163 (book of records of proprietors of common lands); 1896, Whitman v. Shaw, 166 Mass. 451, 44 N. E. 333 (old plan); 1904, Re Butrick, 185 Mass. 107, 69 N. E. 1044 (possession of a grantee's heir, held sufficient); New Hampshire: 1850, Gibson v. Poor, 21 N. H. 440, 445 (old plan in the town-clerk's records); 1854, Whitehouse v. Bickford, 29 N. H. 471, 480 (old plan in the custody of a corporation's agent, admitted as part of its records); Ohio: 1911, Wright v. Hull, 83 Oh. 385, 94 N. E. 813 (receipt's custody by the party here held insufficient, in view of suspicious discrepancies); South Carolina: 1892, Martin v. Bowie, 37 S. C. 102, 110, 117, 15 S. E. 736.

§ 2140. [1] Eng. 1726, Gilbert, Evidence, 100 ("any blemish in the deed, by rasure or interlineation," makes proof necessary; also, "if the deed imports a fraud; as where a man conveys a reversion to one, and after conveys it to another, and the second purchaser proves his title, there the first deed must be proved"); 1838, Mayor v. Craven, 2 Moo. & Rob. 140 (the absence of a seal, on a document purporting to need a seal — here an exemplification — will not be fatal); U. S. 1895, Wisdom v. Reeves, 110 Ala. 418, 18 So. 13 (discretion of trial Court); 1905, Campbell v. Bates, 143 Ala. 338, 39 So. 144 (rule applied); 1876, Gardner v. Grannis, 57 Ga. 539, 554 ("fair on its face"); 1881, Harlan v. Howard, 79 Ky. 373 ("unblemished by any alterations"); 1847, Green v. Chelsea, 24 Pick. Mass. 71, 76 ("unaccompanied by any circumstances of suspicion").

sary elements to give legal effect, either seisin of the land or (in its place) delivery of the deed; and, unless the delivery of the deed could be shown, of course the seisin must be shown.[1] This was intelligible; and it clearly did not look upon possession as having anything to do with genuineness. In the course of time, however, doubts arose, and Chief Baron Gilbert's reasoning was lost sight of. Nevertheless, the doubts seem not to have prevailed; and the English rulings, though they served to introduce the controversy to American courts, appear to have repudiated the necessity of a possession.[2]

(2) In the United States, the controversy appears in the rulings of almost all the older States, and long vacillation is sometimes found, especially in New York. The greater number of Courts seem to have settled, with fair certainty, upon the proposition that possession is not necessary as an absolute requirement; but that either this or some other circumstance giving an equivalent inference of genuineness must appear as additional to those of age, appearance, and custody. There are further minor variations in some of the jurisdictions;[3] but the general result is represented by these three dis-

§ 2141. [1] 1628, Coke upon Littleton, 6, b ("In the case of a charter of feoffment, if all witnesses to the deed be dead (as no man can keep his witnesses alive, and time weareth out all men), then violent presumption, which stands for a proofe, is continuall and quiet possession. . . . In ancient charters of feoffment, there was never mention made of the delivery of the deed, or any livery of seisin indorsed, for certainly the witnesses named in the deed were witnesses of both"; it appears from the above that the "violent presumption" raised by possession was of the livery); 1726, Gilbert, Evidence, 101, 102 ("If a deed of feoffment be proved, and the possession has gone along with the deed, there the livery shall be presumed, though it be not proved; . . . but if possession hath not gone along with the deed, then the livery must be proved upon the feoffment; . . . [the Court] cannot conclude there was a lawful conveyance, unless the jury find the delivery of the deed").

[2] 1764, Forbes v. Wall, 1 Esp. 278 (Mansfield, L. C. J., approved an objection to an old bond that "possession or something equivalent" was necessary; afterwards he said that "if proof had been made that the bond had been found among the papers of the deceased," he would have received it; here his "possession" seems to be the "proper custody" of other judges); 1795, Chelsea Waterworks v. Cowper, 1 Esp. 275 (objection being made to an old bond produced, it was said that as to deeds of land, "there, possession, having gone with the deed, confirmed it"; but Kenyon, L. C. J., "said that all deeds above thirty years' date proved themselves," particularly when, as here, coming from the proper custody); 1817, Rancliffe v. Parkyns, 6 Dow 149, 202 (Eldon, L. C., said that in a court of law "a will thirty years old, if the possession has gone under it, and sometimes without the possession, but always with the possession, if the signing is sufficiently recorded, proves itself; but if signing is not sufficiently recorded, it would be a question whether the age proves its validity; and then possession under the will, and claiming and dealing with the property as if it had passed under the will, would be cogent evidence to prove the duly signing, though it should not be recorded"); 1826, Doe v. Passingham, 2 C. & P. 440 (both counsel agreed that according to Rancliffe v. Parkyns, a will thirty years old, and from the proper repository, and accompanied by possession under it, "proves itself"; but the necessity of the latter requirements was denied by one side, and Burrough, J., approved this denial, on the ground that "after the will is read, it may be seen whether the possession of the estate has followed the will, but that can hardly be known till it is read"); 1845, Lord Gosford v. Robb, 8 Ir. L. R. 217, 219, per Pennefather, C. J. (possession necessary).

[3] For example: The possession need not be continuous during the whole time since the alleged execution: 1871, Matthews v. Castleberry, 43 Ga. 346, 351, and other cases. Contra: 1808, Jackson v. Blanshan, 3 Johns. N. Y. 292, 298. The possession of a part of the land suffices: 1825, Jackson v. Davis, 5 Cow. N. Y. 123, 127; 1825, Jackson v. Luquere, 5 Cow. N. Y. 221, 227 (by each devisee under a will, not necessary). The non-possession of the land by any other person suffices: Turner v. Tyson, and other Georgia cases. The possession need not be shown if no evidence about it is attainable: Harlan v. Howard, Ky., and other cases. The requirement applies to deeds only, not to wills: Duncan v. Beard, and other South Carolina cases.

tinct forms, namely, requiring possession absolutely, requiring it alternatively, and not requiring it at all.[4] The effect of a recording of the deed would serve sometimes to supplant other requirements (post, § 2143).

[4] UNITED STATES: Federal: 1819, Barr v. Gratz, 3 Wheat. 213, 221 (possession not required); 1830, Watson v. Coulson, 1 McLean, 120, 124 (assertion of a claim, without possession, here held sufficient); 1831, Clarke v. Courtney, 5 Pet. 319, 344 (possession assumed necessary); 1886, Applegate v. Lexington & C. C. M. Co., 117 U. S. 255, 263, 6 Sup. 742 (admissible "if either possession under it is shown, or some other corroborative evidence of its authenticity, freeing it from all just grounds of suspicion"; deed-record in the proper office, with other circumstances, held sufficient); 1902, Hodge v. Palms, 54 C. C. A. 570, 117 Fed. 396(possession not indispensable); Alabama: 1847, Doe v. Eslava, 11 Ala. 1028, 1040 ("If proof of possession cannot be had, the deed may be read, if its genuineness is satisfactorily established by other circumstances"); 1852, Carter v. Doe, 21 Ala. 72, 91 (requiring "enjoyment under it, or other equivalent explanatory proof"); 1883, Bernstein v. Humes, 75 Ala. 241, 244 (ancient deeds received on the facts; no principle laid down); 1884, Beard v. Ryan, 78 Ala. 37, 43, semble (required); 1900, White v. Farris, 124 Ala. 461, 27 So. 259 (not required on the facts); Arkansas: 1871, Peay v. Capps, 27 Ark. 160, 162, 165 (not required);
Columbia (Dist.): 1913, Lane v. Watts, 41 D. C. App. 139, 156 (requirement not mentioned); Connecticut: 1806, Mallory v. Aspinwall, 2 Day 280, 287, 290, 293 (not required); 1917, Jarboe's Appeal, 91 Conn. 265, 99 Atl. 563 (will of 1860; possession not required);
Georgia: 1846, M'Cleskey v. Leadbetter, 1 Ga. 551, 558 ("early possession and enjoyment" or "modern possession and user" are "desirable"; but if they cannot be had, other circumstances may suffice); 1851, Beverly v. Burke, 9 Ga. 440, 443 (acting on the deed, or taking possession of land by grantee, said to be necessary); 1852, Jordan v. Cameron, 12 Ga. 267, 269 (not clear); 1853, Jones v. Morgan, 13 Ga. 515, 523 (some possession apparently required); 1859, Bell v. McCawley, 29 Ga. 355, 360 (possession assumed necessary); 1860, Doe v. Roe, 31 Ga. 593, 599 (assumed not necessary); 1863, Webb v. Wilcher, 33 Ga. 565, 568 (same); Code 1860, § 2658, Code 1895, § 3610, Rev. C. 1910, § 4190 (admissible, "if possession has been consistent therewith"); 1871, Mathews v. Castleberry, 43 Ga. 346, 350 (under the Code, possession need not be continuous); 1871, Payne v. Ormond, 44 Ga. 514, 526 (payment of taxes, and other circumstances, held sufficient on the facts); 1873, Turner v. Tyson, 49 Ga. 165, 168 (suffices if there has been no inconsistent adverse possession); 1876, Gardner v. Granniss, 57 Ga. 539, 555 (necessary perhaps "if the good appearance, the date, and the custody of the paper were all"; but here other circumstances sufficed); 1876, Thursby v. Myers, 57 Ga. 155, 157 (similar); 1879, Weitman v. Thiot, 64 Ga. 11, 17 (possession apparently not necessary); 1888, Pridgen v. Green, 80 Ga. 737, 739, 7 S. E. 97 (deed bearing affidavit of a witness, received, though without possession, the land having been wild); 1893, King v. Sears, 91 Ga. 577, 586, 18 S. E. 830 (deed of 1852, with possession, received); 1900, Williamson v. Mosley, 110 Ga. 53, 35 S. E. 301 (Code § 3610 applied); 1909, Leverett v. Tift, 6 Ga. App. 90, 64 S. E. 317 (deed of 1843, recently recorded, admitted without proof of possession);
Illinois: 1858, Smith v. Rankin, 20 Ill. 14 (possession probably not necessary; circumstances here not sufficient); 1899, Reuter v. Stuckart, 181 Ill. 529, 54 N. E. 1014 (not necessary for the entire period, if other circumstances exist);
Indiana: 1822, Henthorn v. Doe, 1 Blackf. 157, 162 (possession assumed not necessary);
Kentucky: 1835, Ross v. Clore, 3 Dana 189, 196 (not clear); 1836, Bennett v. Runyon, 4 Dana 422, 424 (possession assumed necessary); 1838, Cook v. Totton, 6 Dana 108 (document admissible, "especially when it has accompanied the possession"); 1839, Thruston v. Masterson, 9 Dana 228, 233 (possession assumed necessary); 1842, Taylor v. Cox, 2 B. Monr. 429, 434 (not clear); 1847, Winston v. Gwathmey, 8 B. Monr. 19, 20 (not clear); 1848, Burgin v. Chenault, 9 B. Monr. 285, 287 (expressly not decided); 1853, Dickerson v. Talbot, 14 B. Monr. 60, 69 (not clear); 1854, Hedger v. Ward, 15 B. Monr. 106, 114 (insufficiently recorded deed, received, without possession); 1881, Harlan v. Howard, 79 Ky. 373 (not required, at least when not available since "until the Court is made acquainted with the tenor of the instrument, the natural order of introducing the evidence would be reversed by requiring proof of corresponding possession"); 1901, Thompson v. R. Co., 110 Ky. 973, 63 S. W. 42 (deed forty years old, accompanied by possession, admitted); 1915, Everidge v. Martin, 164 Ky. 497, 175 S. W. 1004 (requirement mentioned); 1916, James v. Davis, 172 Ky. 381, 189 S. W. 440 (deed of 1849, accompanying possession, admitted);
Maryland: 1800, Gittings v. Hall, 1 H. & J. 14, 18, semble (possession necessary); 1801, Carroll v. Norwood, 1 H. & J. 167, 174 (same);
Massachusetts: 1817, Stockbridge v. W. Stockbridge, 14 Mass. 257, 261 (admissible, "when the possession of the thing conveyed has followed the conveyance"); 1826, Tol-

The policy of thus requiring possession as a fourth circumstance (additional to age, appearance, and custody), and the probative importance of that circumstance, may be indicated by putting a question: If this document can man v. Emerson, 4 Pick. 160, 162, semble (same); 1847, Green v. Chelsea, 24 Pick. 71, 76 (same); 1900, Cunningham v. Davis, 175 Mass. 213, 56 N. E. 2 (not necessary);

Mississippi: 1858, Nixon v. Porter, 34 Miss. 697, 706 (possession, with other things, here held sufficient); 1859, Fairly v. Fairly, 38 Miss. 280, 290 (possession not necessary, if the deed is shown to have existed for thirty years; a peculiar doctrine, apparently based on a misunderstanding of the precedents);
Missouri: 1872, Crispen v. Hannavan, 50 Mo. 415, 418 (age not sufficient; it must "be otherwise accounted for" or proper custody shown); 1872, Ryder v. Fash, 50 Mo. 476 (possession of document for thirty years, and payment of taxes, here held sufficient); 1872, Wheeler v. Standley, 50 Mo. 508 (similar); 1874, Shaw v. Pershing, 57 Mo. 416, 421 (custody of deed and payment of taxes, sufficient, no one being in possession of the land); 1885, Long v. McDow, 87 Mo. 197, 201 (possession not necessary, if evidence of it is unavailable);
New Hampshire: 1828, Waldron v. Tuttle, 4 N. H. 371, 377 (possession necessary); 1843, Homer v. Alley, 14 N. H. 85, 98 (same);
New Jersey: 1856, Osborne v. Tunis, 25 N. J. L. 633, 663 (possession "or other collateral proof," required); 1890, Havens v. Sea Shore L. Co., 47 N. J. Eq. 365, 379, 20 Atl. 497 (possession not required, on the facts);
New York: 1803, Jackson v. Laroway, 3 John. Cas. 283, 286 (admissible "where no possession has accompanied it, if such account be given of the deed as may be reasonably expected under all the circumstances of the case and will afford the presumption that it is genuine"; Kent, J., diss.); 1804, Jackson v. Bradt, 2 Cai. 169, 174 (possession assumed necessary, per Kent, J.); 1808, Jackson v. Blanshan, 3 Johns. 292, 298 (possession necessary; Kent, C. J.: "It is the accompanying possession alone which establishes the presumption of authenticity in an ancient deed"; Savage, J., dissented as to the time of possession only); 1812, Doe v. Phelps, 9 Johns. 169 (possession assumed necessary); 1813, Doe v. Henry, 10 Johns. 475, 477 (preceding case approved); 1825, Jackson v. Davis, 5 Cow. 123, 127 (possession necessary); 1825, Jackson v. Luquere, 5 Cow. 221, 225 (same; applied to a will; yet "where no possession appears, other circumstances are admitted to account for it"; Jackson v. Laroway approved); 1827, Jackson v. Lamb, 7 Cow. 431, semble (possession required); 1830, Jackson v. Christman, 4 Wend. 278, 282, semble (same); 1831, Hewlett v. Cock, 7 Wend. 371 (going back to Laroway's case; either possession or other circumstances, i. e. proper custody and fair appearance, must be shown); 1832, Jackson v. Chamberlain, 8 Wend. 620, 624, semble (same); 1834, Fetherly v. Waggoner, 11 Wend. 599, 602 (custody and regular appearance sufficient; here of a will); 1840, Northrop v. Wright, 24 Wend. 221, 228 (a will from the proper registry received; possession not necessary); on app. s. c. 7 Hill 476, 485 (possession apparently held necessary; the same will held not receivable); 1847, Willson v. Betts, 4 Den. 201, 213 ("It now seems to be settled that other facts besides possession may be sufficient to raise the presumption that the deed is genuine"; approving Jackson v. Luquere); 1858, Clark v. Owens, 18 N. Y. 434, 438 (either possession or "other circumstances" suffice; here a deed); 1859, Hunt v. Johnson, 19 N. Y. 279, 285 (ancient field-notes, produced from the town records, received); 1864, Enders v. Sternbergh, 40 N. Y. (Keyes) 264, 268 (possession not necessary, if "such an account of it be given as may under the circumstances be reasonably expected and will afford the presumption that it is genuine"; here said of a will); 1869, Enders v. Sternbergh, 2 Abb. App. Cas. 31 ("possession or other circumstances" suffice; "it was never absolutely indispensable that possession . . . should be shown"); 1890, Sanger v. Merritt, 120 N. Y. 109, 114, 24 N. E. 386 (town records of 1792, granting land, admitted as genuine, the custody being proper and no suspicion of non-genuineness being raised; none of the preceding cases are cited; perhaps decided on the principle of § 2158, post);
North Carolina: 1911, Nicholson v. Eureka L. Co., 156 N. C. 59, 72 S. E. 86 (certificate of survey of 1841, admitted without evidence of possession); Pennsylvania: 1811, Garwood v. Dennis, 4 Binn. 314, 326 ("possession is a circumstance of great importance"); 1814, Shaller v. Brand, 6 Binn. 435, 439, 444 (Tilghman, C. J.: "Although the antiquity of the writing affords some evidence in its favor, yet the main ingredient is possession. Both, however, are necessary"; here, of a will); 1823, McGennis v. Allison, 10 S. & R. 197, 199 (Duncan, J.: "It is the accompanying possession which establishes the authenticity of an ancient deed"); 1829, Arnold v. Gorr, 1 Rawle 223, 226 (same); St. 1841, Mar. 26, § 2, Dig. 1920, § 8819 (certain old unrecorded deeds, to be provable if "the actual possession of the land has accompanied the said deed"); 1846, Williams v. Hillegas, 5 Pa. St. 492, 494 ("In Pennsylvania the leaning of the determination is in favor of the more rigid rule [requiring possession] . . .; still I think the precise point has never been expressly decided with us in a case necessarily be shown to have been in existence for thirty years, and therefore presumably to have been known to the parties benefiting by its provisions, why have they not acted upon its provisions during all this time, either by taking possession of the land granted or at least by bringing suit to dispossess the usurpers if any?

The argument from the implied answer to this question has been the chief persuading one for those judges who have attempted to establish the rule upon a basis of reason:

1811, TILGHMAN, C. J., in Garwood v. Dennis, 4 Binn. 314, 327: "If the deed had not been executed, it is to be presumed that the persons entitled to the land would not have suffered the possession to remain out of them. But where possession has not gone along with the deed, the presumption is against it; because, if the deed is genuine, it is difficult to account for the want of possession."

calling for it"; left undecided, but payment of taxes upon wild land held equivalent to possession); St. 1851, Apr. 15, § 10, etc., Dig. 1920, §§ 8753, 8754 (ancient deeds executed without the State to land in the State, and recorded for 30 years, but defectively acknowledged, etc., to be admissible if claimant has had possession); 1867, Bowser v. Cravener, 56 Pa. 132, 142 (it "in some circumstances proves itself; certainly it does so where there is possession under it"); 1870, Walker v. Walker, 67 Pa. 185, 193 ("Where proof of possession cannot be had, the deed may be read in evidence if its genuineness is satisfactorily established by other circumstances"; here the living on the land with the owner as manager for him, the partial evidence of signatures, etc., was held sufficient); South Carolina: 1794, Thompson v. Bullock, 1 Bay 364 ("some reasonable proof of possession" required); 1819, Middleton v. Mass, 1 N. & McC. 56 (possession necessary; but intimating that the rule applies to deeds only); 1820, Duncan v. Beard, 2 N. & McC. 400, 406 (possession necessary; but, semble, held applicable to deeds only, and doubted as to wills; where not applicable, it is enough "if they be found in the place in which they should be deposited in pursuance of their object"); 1827, Sims v. DeGraffenreid, 4 McC. 253 (possession required for a deed); 1833, Robinson v. Craig, 1 Hill 389 ("If there are other circumstances which exempt it from suspicion, . . . with no inconsistent possession in the meantime, . . . slight evidence of possession, even of recent date, might be sufficient"); 1838, Wagner v. Aiton, Rice 100, 106, semble (possession necessary, but not for the whole of the time); 1840, Edmonston v. Hughes, Cheves 81, 83 (possession "or other circumstances accompanying them and showing their authenticity," required; here, recording, and the witness' handwriting thus sufficed); 1842, Eubanks v. Harris, 1 Speer 183, 191, semble (possession necessary); 1844, Swygert v. Taylor, 1 Rich. L. 54, 56 (possession "not indispensably necessary"; proper custody in a registry would suffice; the opinion is useless, however, because it treats these facts as simply evidence to show the document's age, — a fallacy pointed out by Wardlaw, J., diss.); 1853, Brown v. Wood, 6 Rich. Eq. 155, 164 (old deed received, though not from natural custody and not accompanied by possession; but one of the witnesses swore to it before the Recorder, and the hands of all were proved); 1880, Thompson v. Brannon, 14 S. C. 542, 550 (possession apparently held unnecessary, citing four of the above cases);

Texas: 1866, Stroud v. Springfield, 28 Tex. 649, 663 (when possession cannot be had, other circumstances may suffice); 1878, Gainer v. Cotton, 49 Tex. 101, 118 (not decided); 1878, Johnson v. Timmons, 50 Tex. 521, 534, semble (possession not necessary); 1879, Hollis v. Dashiell, 52 Tex. 187, 194 (not decided); 1883, Holmes v. Coryell, 58 Tex. 680, 688 (possession not required);

Vermont: 1850, Williams v. Bass, 22 Vt. 353, 355 ("At the present time the balance of authority seems to be the other way [against requiring possession], and that the presumption may be raised when sufficiently corroborated by other circumstances"; here nothing else appeared, the question being whether a missing seal could be presumed); 1856, Colchester v. Culver, 29 Vt. 111, 113 (preceding case approved; but here in a similar case the fact of a preceding contract to convey sufficed to admit); 1859, Townsend v. Downer, 32 Vt. 183, 199, 213 (necessity of possession, not clear);

Virginia: 1811, Roberts v. Stanton, 2 Munf. 129, 135, semble (possession necessary); 1824, Ben v. Peete, 2 Rand. 539, 543 (same); 1842, Dishazer v. Maitland, 12 Leigh 524, 529 (same); 1848, Shanks v. Lancaster, 5 Gratt. 110, 116, semble (same); 1855, Caruthers v. Eldridge, 12 Gratt. 670, 686 (possession not essential; "other evidences . . . equally capable of producing the same degree of belief," sufficient; careful examination of authorities and final settlement); 1881, Nowlin v. Burwell, 75 Va. 551, 553 (possession not indispensable; preceding case followed; several other circumstances here held sufficient on the facts).

1819, JOHNSON, J., in Middleton v. Mass, 1 N. & McC. 56: "The only reason which I have seen in opposition to it . . . is because old things are hard to be proved. Now, if this be a good reason, it operates with a twofold force on the opposite side of the question; for it is certainly more difficult, to say the least of it, to disprove an old thing than to prove it, especially when in most cases the party would be called on to do so without notice of its antiquity or the necessity of doing it. . . . No such indulgence [as to presume due execution] is due to him who, as in the present case, neglects for almost a century to assert his claim by one single act of ownership. The doctrine contended for on the part of the motion might in its consequences be productive of incalculable mischiefs; for, although it is not now usual to enter upon a course of villainy the fruits of which are not to be reaped for thirty years to come, yet establish the rule contended for, and it opens the door, and many will no doubt find an easy entry."

But there is a weakness in this argument. In the first place, it is in its nature an argument in rebuttal; it ought to come from the opponent of the deed. An inference is sought to be drawn from non-possession by the claimant; and it would therefore seem to be more properly a part of the opponent's case to show that non-possession as the foundation for his inference. This is especially true where (as often happens) no evidence one way or the other as to the possession is available; for then the burden of not being able to prove would fall justly on the opponent. In the next place, the inference is not always a legitimate one; the deed or will may have been in existence but its contents unknown to the beneficiaries under it; or circumstances may have prevented their acting upon it; or some other explanation may be available. Instead of making possession, therefore, an invariable requirement, it would seem better to lay down no fixed rule, but to let the circumstances of each case indicate whether there is any additional corroboration of genuineness:

1855, DANIEL, J., in Caruthers v. Eldridge, 12 Gratt. 670, 687: "A presumption may be the result of a single circumstance or of many circumstances. Why say that in the case of an ancient deed there must be a departure from the general rule in respect to presumptions, and that its authenticity may be presumed from the single circumstance of possession, but may not be presumed from other circumstances the existence of which is equally inconsistent with any other hypothesis than that of the genuineness of the instrument? The direct evidences, the positive proofs by which the execution of the deed is established, being no longer attainable, and the rule which requires their production being dispensed with, it seems to me wholly at war with the spirit of the law, which under such exigency allows a resort to circumstantial or presumptive evidence, to hold that a corresponding possession shall be the only evidence from which the authenticity of the deed may be presumed."

This result, accepted by the greater number of Courts, seems to avoid rigid technicality, while amply protecting against fraud.

§ 2142. Same: Doctrine of Inferred Possession under Leases, distinguished. It so happens that there is a doctrine of Relevancy by which an inference precisely the reverse of the present one may under certain circumstances be drawn. Instead of inferring, as here, the execution of a document from the possession of the land, the possession of land may be inferred from the execu- tion of the document (ante, § 157). Naturally enough, the precedents under the latter principle (which are almost exclusively English ones) have sometimes been misused by our own Courts in dealing with the present principle. The superficial features and the terms of discussion have much in common; but the principles are wholly unconnected, and it is necessary to note here the practical distinctions.

(a) When Doe claims title by prescription against J. S., Doe may rest on long possession under claim of title, and, for showing this, may prove acts of occupation under claim by ancestors or other predecessors. In so doing he may produce a lease or a license to the land in question by the ancestor. The question then arises whether the mere act of execution of the lease suffices, with nothing more, to evidence that occupation. Such an act is clearly a claim of title, but that is not enough in the substantive law; there must be accompanying possession. Now, may not possession be inferred from the act of execution? Or must there be, additionally, express evidence of possession of the land by the lessor or lessee? For ancient matters this would be often impossible. Hence, it has been settled, by a long line of decisions in England, that an ancient lease or license, otherwise proved genuine, may serve as an act of exercise of possession under claim, the possession being supplied by inference from the act of execution; since (in the words of Lord Blackburn) "men do not generally execute leases unless they are in possession" (ante, § 157).

(b) Under the present principle, on the contrary, the whole situation of the parties, the nature of the documents, and the inference to be drawn, are different. Suppose, as before, Doe to be claiming by prescription against J. S.; and suppose J. S. to set up a title by grant. J. S. produces an ancient deed or will from Roe to J. S.'s ancestor; the question arises whether the document is genuine. J. S. proves its age, custody, and fair appearance; must he also prove possession by his ancestor under Roe's grant? That is the question just examined (ante, § 2141).

It is obvious that the two principles are so distinct that they cannot come up for application in the same connection, the marks of difference being as follows: (1) In (a), the genuineness of execution of the document is assumed somehow to be settled, in (b), that is the question at issue; (2) in (a), the document is supposed to be made by the offeror's predecessor, granting out a temporary part of his estate; in (b) it is supposed to have been made to the predecessor, by which he receives an estate; (3) in (a), the document purports to be a lease or license, in (b), a deed or will; (4) in (a), the predecessor does not claim title under the document, but only under prescriptive possession, in (b), he does claim title under it as grantee; (5), in (a) the possession which it is objected ought to be proved is the lessor's possession, by himself or by his lessee, in (b) it is the grantee's possession. It is apparent, therefore, that there is no connection between the principles, and that the precedents cannot be used in any way interchangeably. It may also be added, not only that the lines of precedents have been kept separate in England, but furthermore that the English rulings under (a) supra assume in effect the negative of the possession-doctrine under (b); since, if the ancient leases were allowed to be used as themselves evidence of possession by the lessor, obviously the Court could not have required proof of possession as a preliminary (additional to age and custody) to presume them genuine; for if it had, the very question decided by the Court could never have arisen.

§ 2143. Old Recorded Deeds and Old Copies. The use of a copy of an old deed, instead of the original, raises two or three questions somewhat different in their bearings; the significance, moreover, of the circumstance that an old original deed offered has been recorded is connected with the question of record-copies; and the two sets of questions may best be considered together.

It may be assumed at the outset, that the general principle (ante, § 1192) requiring the original to be produced or else accounted for as lost or the like, has been satisfied; because, if it is not, a copy is of course inadmissible on grounds irrespective of the present question.[1] It may further be kept in mind that, by statute or otherwise, the official record (or a copy therefrom) of a lawfully recorded deed, the original having been accounted for or dispensed with (ante, §§ 1224–1226), is receivable to prove the execution and contents of the original (ante, §§ 1648–1649), but that this rule does not enable us to use an unauthorized record. Thus, when the record is unauthorized, some other mode of proving the deed must be resorted to; and the question will arise how far the present ancient-document rule can serve the purpose.

With these principles in mind, the various situations may be distinguished into four: (1) an alleged ancient original lost; the contents testified to orally, or copy proved, by a competent witness on the stand; (2) an alleged ancient original lost; an alleged ancient non-official copy offered; (3) an alleged ancient original lost; an alleged official record-copy offered, though not made in pursuance of law; (4) an ancient original produced; the official record, not made in pursuance of law, offered in corroboration.

(1) Where the alleged ancient original is lost, and proof of its contents (including the purporting signatures) is offered to be made by one who, having seen it before its loss, recollects its contents or took a copy, the difficulty in assuming genuineness is that the third element, of unsuspicious appearance (ante, § 2140), can never be furnished, since the original is lacking; perhaps also the second, that of natural custody (ante, § 2139), will usually also be lacking. It may be said to be doubtful, therefore, whether a Court would consider the rule as satisfied.[2]

§ 2143. [1] 1882, Dotson v. Moss, 58 Tex. 152, 154 (excluding a land-office copy of an old grant there belonging). Distinguish the odd rule of the following case, which is apparently designed merely to exempt from accounting for the original under the peculiar New England rule (ante, § 1224): 1897, New York, N. H. & H. R. R. Co. v. Benedict, 169 Mass. 262, 47 N. E. 1027 ("an office copy of an ancient [lawfully] recorded deed" is admissible).

[2] Can. 1841, Doe v. Stiles, 1 Kerr N. Br. 338, 346 (doubted whether the presumption applies unless the document itself is produced); U. S. 1853, Bryan v. Walton, 14 Ga. 185, 188, 195 (lost will dated 1812, offered by testimony to contents; an objection that "it must itself

Nevertheless, this of course is not because of the general rule (ante, § 1192) requiring an original's production (for that rule excuses production of a lost original), but only because an important circumstance (namely, unsuspicious appearance) evidencing genuineness cannot be furnished. The lack of it might perhaps be dispensed with, by reason of necessity; but at any rate, if in place of this circumstance some other confirming circumstance can be furnished, it would seem that the absence of the original need be no fatal defect. Such a circumstance seems to be presented in the following two situations.

(2) Where the alleged ancient original is lost, and an ancient purporting copy is offered, made by a private hand, and the purporting maker being unknown or deceased, it seems to have been long accepted that this suffices, and that the copy may be received under the ancient-document rule:[3]

1726, Chief Baron GILBERT, Evidence, 97: "Where the possession has gone along with any deed for many years, there a very old copy of the deed may be given in evidence, with proof also that the original is lost; and that is according to the rule of the civil law, 'si vetustate temporis et judiciaria cognitione sint roboratæ'; for possession could not be supposed to go along in the same manner unless there had been originally such a deed and so executed as the copy mentions."

be present to establish its presumed proper execution and probate," sustained on the authority of Jones v. Morgan, infra, note 4, and also because the copy ought to be established by a special proceeding to establish lost documents); 1904, Carter v. Wood, 103 Va. 68, 48 S. E. 553 (a county-court entry of a deed in 1859, and a copy of the deed made in 1866–72 by one who knew nothing of its genuineness, excluded); 1907, Dickinson v. Smith, 134 Wis. 6, 114 N. W. 133 (an ancient copy of a recorded map, the copy coming from the register's custody, and generally reputed as correct, admitted).

Of course where the witness to contents is also competent to verify the lost signatures and does so, this furnishes ample proof of the ordinary sort to execution, and the copy can be used independent of the deed's antiquity: 1874, Shaw v. Pershing, 57 Mo. 416, 421 (examined copy allowed, the witnesses' handwriting being proved); 1835, Winn v. Patterson, 9 Pet. 663, 675 (old power of attorney, now lost, proved by a witness who had seen the signature; record of it admitted).

[3] Accord: Eng. 1705, Anon., 6 Mod. 225 ("All the Court held that the counterpart of an ancient deed which might be lost was good evidence with other circumstances, but not of itself without other circumstances," except for a deed accompanying a fine); 1726, Gilbert, Evidence, 22 ("Where a record is lost, . . . the copy must be admitted without swearing any examination concerning it; since there is nothing with which the copy can be compared, and therefore it must be presumed true without examination. But . . . they must be 'vetustate temporis judiciaria cognitione roborata'"); 1867, Buller, Trials at Nisi Prius, 254 (like Gilbert, as quoted in the text); 1816, Bullen v. Michel, 4 Dow 297, 321, 333 (transcriptions in ancient abbey-books of instruments affecting land, admitted, the originals being lost; Lord Redesdale: "This appears to be the best evidence after the originals"; L. C. Eldon: "The entry appears to be a transcript of the original instrument, and within the scope and principle of all the authorities ought to be received as evidence"); Can. 1858, Songster v. Payzant, 3 N. Sc. 408 (certain copies of plans, acted on, held admissible on proof of loss of the original); U. S. 1914, Prince v. Prince, 188 Ala. 559, 66 So. 27 (acknowledgment not presumed; see the comment on this case post, § 2520); 1917, Baber v. Baber, 121 Va. 740, 94 S. E. 209 (counsel's copy of a contract now lost, the copy being filed in a lawsuit of 1878, and the original's existence being otherwise evidenced, admitted).

Contra: 1901, Hamilton v. Smith, 74 Conn. 374, 50 Atl. 884 (map by one H., dated 1886, copied in 1891, and destroyed in 1892; the copy held not admissible under the rule of ancient documents).

This result might be justified on the following grounds: The purporting copy, being ancient, may be presumed genuine, i. e. to be a correct copy of a once existing original; since, then, the ancient correct copy has been treated and acted upon precisely as the original would have been, it should have the benefit of the rule which would have applied to the original; the elements of unsuspicious appearance and the like, being duly supplied.

Compare here the general doctrine excluding ordinary hearsay copies (ante, § 1281); and the doctrine admitting recitals in an ancient deed of the contents of a prior deed (ante, § 1573).

(3) Where the alleged ancient original is lost (or otherwise unavailable), and a purporting official record is offered, made more than thirty years before, and certifying the deed's contents and execution, but inadmissible as an official record (ante, §§ 1648–1649), because not made in accordance with statutory provisions, may not this ancient record-copy serve as sufficient evidence of genuineness? It is apparent that the case is not only as strong as the preceding one, but is stronger in two respects, namely, the defects of the record are in a measure technical only and it still is entitled to some consideration as an official statement, and the long publicity of it has given ample opportunity for correction and opposition if any just ground existed for doubting the original's authenticity. Accordingly, there has been a general disposition, on one ground or another, to accept such an ancient record, though otherwise inadmissible, as sufficient, after the lapse of time:

1726, Chief Baron GILBERT, Evidence, 99 (after stating that an unauthorized enrolment or 'inspeximus' is in general not receivable): "But the 'inspeximus' on an ancient deed may be given in evidence, though the deed needs no inrolment; for an ancient deed may be easily supposed to be worn out or lost, and the offering the 'inspeximus' in evidence induces no suspicion that the deed is doubtful, for it hath a sanction from antiquity, and if it had been ill executed, it must be supposed to be detected when it was newly made."

1850, EASTMAN, J., in Gibson v. Poor, 2 N. H. 440, 447 (holding admissible a copy of an ancient official survey): "Ancient plans must at some time become worn out by age and use, and the necessity of the case seems to require that their place be supplied by copies. After these copies have been kept among the records, and used by the inhabitants a sufficient number of years to raise the ordinary presumption of genuineness, can they not be used as substitutes for the originals, without resorting to proof of being true transcripts, if the originals cannot be found or have become defaced and unintelligible by use? If the originals should be lost, there would be no doubt of the competency of the copies as secondary evidence; and the reason would seem to be quite as cogent for the admission of copies after the originals had become defaced by age and use."

1883, STAYTON, J., in Holmes v. Coryell, 58 Tex. 680, 688 (admitting a copy of a deed-record of 1843, the record not being usable as an official registry under the terms of the statute): "The fact that it was recorded raises a presumption that it was delivered. The record made in 1843 evidences with more certainty than the original deed would if produced that the deed was more than thirty years old; for skilful indeed would be the spoliation of a record book which could not be detected. It comes free from suspicion upon any just ground, with strong facts corroborative of its genuineness. . . . [After noting in detail the facts of payment of taxes, etc., as corroborating,] the certified copy of the deed, coming surrounded with such facts, was properly admitted in evidence, for under the common-law rules of evidence the deed would prove itself."

This conclusion has been usually accepted.[4] The rulings to the contrary seem rarely, if ever, to have gone upon any supposition that the ancient-

[4] ENGLAND: 1675, Green v. Proude, 1 Mod. 117 (an exemplification of a recovery being offered, the original being ancient and burned in the wars, no proof of authenticity was required); 1773, Ludlam's Will, Lofft 362 (will of land of an ancestor of the previous century, now lost, and offered by copy of the spiritual Court's record, objected to because "the hand and seal of that Court is not the proper evidence to prove the authenticity of a will by copy"; but admitted as the best evidence).

CANADA: 1848, Doe v. Turnbull, 5 U. C. Q. B. 129, 131 (a "memorial," or recorded-copy, of a lost ancient deed, admitted; the acknowledgment for record suffices as against the party acknowledging, without other proof of document rule was in itself impossible to apply to a copy, but rather upon the lack of confirming circumstances in the case in hand. Moreover, the execution; but this limitation, as to using it against the party only, is unsound, as may be seen ante, § 1650).

UNITED STATES: Federal: 1826, Stokes v. Dawes, 4 Mason 268, Story, J. (office copy of deed recorded in 1765, admitted without other proof of execution); 1889, Baeder v. Jennings, 40 Fed. 199 (old unauthorized record, admitted); 1892, Van Gunden v. V. C. & I. Co., 3 C. C. A. 294, 52 Fed. 838, 8 U. S. App. 229, 251 (certified copy of old record of deed, recorded too late and in the wrong county, received in corroboration of other evidence); 1911, Northrup v. Columbian Lumber Co., 5th C. C. A., 186 Fed. 770, 774 (certified copy of a deed to Georgia land irregularly recorded in South Carolina in 1868, admitted the original being lost); Alabama: 1844, Beall v. Deering, 7 Ala. 124, 127 (unlawfully recorded old deed, lost; record held, on the facts, to be sufficient evidence of deed's existence to go to the jury); 1866, White v. Hutchings, 40 Ala. 253, 257 (record more than 20 years old in the proper office, but not showing due probate, admissible on the presumption that execution was legally proved for record, if the original is lost; no possession need be shown); 1885, England v. Hatch, 80 Ala. 247, 249 (preceding principle affirmed; but here a record less than 20 years old was excluded); 1888, Allison v. Little, 85 Ala. 512, 516, 5 So. 221 (principle affirmed); Arkansas: 1856, Trammell v. Thurmond, 17 Ark. 203, 219 (certified copy of an old unauthorized record of deed; the original deed was lost; though such a record might with corroborating circumstances have been used "as a link in a chain," it was here excluded, such circumstances being lacking); 1904, Arbuckle v. Matthews, 73 Ark. 27, 83 S. W. 326 (certified copy of official record, made in 1885, of a purporting original land-patent certificate of 1860 not entitled to record, excluded; preceding case not cited); Georgia: 1853, Jones v. Morgan, 13 Ga. 515, 523 (defective record in 1827 of a deed dated 1820; insufficient on the facts, chiefly because the old deed could not be assumed to exist until 1827, less than 30 years before); 1885, Patterson v. Collier, 75 Ga. 419, 426 (old record, if not usable as statutory evidence of execution of the lost original, because of affidavit of forgery, is not usable as an ancient copy to prove execution); 1904, Bentley v. McCall, 119 Ga. 530, 46 S. E. 645 (a certified copy of the record, insufficient here under § 1651, ante; the record-book itself lost, and the record purporting to be of a deed of 1846; these facts were held insufficient to authenticate); Illinois: 1903, Bradley v. Lightcap, 201 Ill. 511, 66 N. E. 546 (certified copy of a deed, recorded more than thirty years, but not duly acknowledged, admitted); Kentucky: 1907, Ball v. Loughridge, — Ky. —, 100 S. W. 275 (record of 1853 of unlawfully recorded power of attorney, not admitted; "this rule has never [!] been applied to a copy"); Louisiana: 1856, Boykin v. Wright, 11 La. An. 531, 533 (ancient record-copy of a lost deed, apparently not legally registered, admitted); Maine: 1908, McCleery v. Lewis, 104 Me. 33, 70 Atl. 540 (here the record-copy was over 50 years old, and was regular, but under the Maine rule (ante, § 1225), could not be used because the offeror was the grantee in the deed; excluded, but erroneously, on the ground that the original was not shown to have been executed; yet that is precisely the fact which the present doctrine purports to facilitate; moreover, the learned Court seems to have forgot that the grantee-rule (§ 1226, ante) is aimed merely to account for the original, and that, if the original is duly accounted for, a regular record-copy is admissible in Maine to prove execution, on the principle of § 1651; the ruling produces an insurmountable impossibility of proof where none need ever exist, nor was meant to, by any rule of law); Michigan: 1906, Murphy v. Cady, 145 Mich. 33, 108 N. W. 493 (bill for accounting for pension moneys; exemplified copies of pension vouchers of about 1873, admitted under U. S. Rev. St. § 882, quoted ante, § 1680, held to admit the originals purporting to be signed by the party charged, without proof of the signatures on the latter; it is difficult to see why the exemplified copy was not sufficient, on the principle of § 1680, ante, without the aid of the ancient-document rule); New Hampshire: 1850, Gibson v. Poor, 21 N. H. 440, 447 (quoted supra); Ohio: 1827, Allen v. Parish, 3 Oh. 107, 112 (old unauthorized notarial copy of lost dead, admitted, "after a sufficient foundation had been laid from which to infer its existence"); 1847, Webster v. Harris, 10 Oh. 490, 499 (certified copy of a record of 1805, of a deed purporting to be of 1804, admitted on the facts; good opinion by Birchard, C. J.); South Carolina: 1905, Lancaster v. Lee, 71 S. C. 280, 51 S. E. 139 (deed of 1864, not legally recorded, and now lost; the record, sworn to by the transcribing clerk on the stand, was admitted to prove contents and apparently execution also); Tennessee: 1916, Fielder v. Pemberton, 136 Tenn. 440, 189 S. W. 873, semble; Texas: 1883, Holmes v. Coryell, 58 Tex. 680, 688 (quoted supra; old record-copy admitted); 1883, Belcher v. Fox, 60 Tex. 527, 530 (similar; but only with strong corroborative evidence); 1887, Brown v. Simpson, 67 Tex. 225, 231, 2 S. W. 644 (similar; provided the recording is shown to have been ancient); 1887, Shifflet v. Morelle, 68 Tex. 382, 388, 390, 4 S. W. 843 (bond for title; unauthorized record-copy of 1837, excluded; "it stands like any other fact of possession of the land, as a confirming circumstance, seems often to be here insisted upon, irrespective of its general requirement (ante, § 2141). It may be added that the analogies of the presumption of regularity in official transactions (post, § 2534), as well as of the presumption of a lost grant (post, § 2522), may be traced in some of the rulings. In a few jurisdictions the problem has been solved by statutes, applicable to specific kinds of deeds and defining various shorter periods of antiquity.[5] unauthorized copy"; yet "if the clerk had been living and had made the record, he could have testified to it"; preceding cases not cited and ancient-document rule not considered); 1890, Hill v. Taylor, 77 Tex. 295, 299, 14 S. W. 366 (unauthorized record-copy of 1842, the original deed being lost; excluded because the original was not sufficiently shown to be lost; preceding cases not cited); Vermont: 1859, Townsend v. Downer, 32 Vt. 183, 211 (old record-copy of a deed, the record not being lawful and therefore not sufficing 'per se'; possession, together with this recorded copy, sufficient).

It must be remembered that, although what is actually offered is a copy recently taken from the record, yet this copy merely proves the record (ante, § 1655), so that the real question is, after all, whether the record is sufficient evidence.

[5] Some of these statutes seem equally to sanction the use of the record when the original is produced, thus covering also the case of the next paragraph of the text above; comparison should also be made with the respective recording-statutes (ante, §§ 1225, 1651):

CANADA: Ont. Rev. St. 1914, c. 122, § 2 (contracts for sale of land; grantor's recorded memorial twenty years old, admissible; quoted ante, § 1225); 1877, R. v. Guthrie, 41 U. C. Q. B. 148 (memorial over thirty years old, executed by the grantor, held admissible); 1881, Allan v. McTavish, 28 Grant U. C. 539, 548, 8 Ont. App. 440, 444 (mortgage more than twenty years old, presumed genuine under the statute); 1883, Van Velsor v. Hughson, 9 Ont. App. 390, 397 (memorial over sixty years old, but executed by the grantee, and without proper possession, not admitted; Gough v. McBride approved); 1884, Mulholland v. Harman, 6 Ont. 546, 561 (memorial by the grantee, not admitted where possession had not followed the deed); 1888, McDonald v. McDougall, 16 Ont. 401 (memorial of a will, twenty years old, executed by a devisee, with consistent possession, held sufficient).

UNITED STATES: Alabama: Code 1907, § 3382 (defectively acknowledged and recorded instrument being 20 years of record in the proper court of record; duly certified transcript is admissible); St. 1911, No. 191, p. 192, Apr. 4, § 2 (certified copy of defectively executed conveyance of State lands, prior to Feb. 12, 1879, and recorded for 20 years in the probate court, admissible);

Colorado: Comp. L. 1921, § 4906 (deeds, etc., affecting real estate, defectively recorded for a period of 20 years, or certified copies, are admissible "without additional proof of the execution");

Florida: Rev. G. S. 1919, § 3250 (certified copy of a lost or destroyed deed defectively recorded for twenty years, admissible in proceedings to re-establish); 1907, Campbell v. Skinner, 53 Fla. 632, 43 So. 874 (statute held constitutional);

Georgia: In this State the rule about proving execution when an affidavit of forgery is filed by the opponent (post, § 2146) should be consulted;

Indiana: Burns' Ann. St. 1914, § 398S (a certified record-copy of certain deeds executed more than twenty years before the date of this act and recorded in the wrong county, is receivable);

Missouri: Here a series of statutes must be collated in order to ascertain the law: Rev. St. 1919, § 5363 (a deed duly acknowledged or proved and recorded according to the law then in force, "though not declared by such law to be evidence," shall be received if appearing to have been duly recorded within one year after date and more than twenty years before the time of offering); § 5364 (such a recorded deed, though "not recorded within one year after date nor twenty years before it is offered, may be read in evidence upon proof of such facts and circumstances as, together with the certificate of acknowledgment or proof, shall satisfy the Court that the person who executed the instrument is the person therein named as grantor"); § 5365 (when the original of such a deed "has been lost or destroyed, or is not in the power of the party who wishes to use it," a certified copy of the record and certificate is admissible); § 5369 (certified copy of a record, made one year before this law's taking effect, of a deed, will, etc., not duly acknowledged or proved, to be admissible only when the execution of the original is proved, "except where such record shall have been made thirty years or more prior to the time of offering it in evidence"); § 5373 (when in a county recorder's office the record exists of a writing affecting realty, and the interest was claimed or enjoyed under the writing for ten consecutive years, the writing, "and a certified copy thereof, and of the time of its record, shall be 'prima facie' evidence of the execution of such writing," provided the record was made ten

(4) When the original is produced, and also an official record of it, made more than thirty years before, but inadmissible of itself as an official record years before the offering in evidence); § 5398 (an instrument purporting to convey or affect land, "executed and acknowledged in conformity with the provisions of any law in force" at the time in this State, Louisiana, or Missouri, and duly recorded for more than thirty years before March 28, 1874, is admissible "without further proof of the execution thereof"); § 5399 (on proof that the original is lost or not within the party's power, a certified copy is admissible); 1842, Moss v. Anderson, 7 Mo. 337, 341 (certified copy of record of lost original, defectively recorded thirty-three years before, admitted under statute); 1872, Briggs v. Henderson, 49 Mo. 531, 534 (record-copy of deed more than thirty years old, not being admissible as a lawfully recorded copy; the age, record, and other circumstances, together with the death of the parties and witnesses, held sufficient); 1878, Smith v. Madison, 67 Mo. 694 (by statute a certified copy of a deed recorded thirty years is receivable, whether defectively acknowledged or not); 1880, Crispen v. Hannavon, 72 Mo. 548, 552 (same; but the original must be shown lost or destroyed); 1898, Rigney v. Plaster, — C. C. A. —, 88 Fed. 688 (applying R. S. § 4865, now § 3119, to a deed corresponding to R. S. § 4859, now § 5363, i. e. acknowledged under a repealed law); 1899, Plaster v. Rigney, 38 C. C. A. 25, 97 Fed. 12 (Mo. Rev. St. § 4865, now § 5369, admits a certified copy of a deed proved properly when taken but not when recorded);

New Jersey: Comp. St. 1910, Conveyances, § 57 (deeds recorded more than ten years after date of acknowledgment, and certain ancient deeds; a certified copy may be used if the original "has been destroyed, lost, or taken out of the office" of the proper clerk); § 64 (deeds defectively acknowledged, if recorded more than six years, may be received in evidence, either by original or by certified copy, without other proof, if "corroborated by evidence of corresponding enjoyment or other equivalent or explanatory proof"); § 68 (certified copy of record of exemplified copy of deed recorded out of the State in the U. S. more than twenty years, admissible though defectively acknowledged);

New Mexico: 1915, Union Land & G. Co. v. Arce, 21 N. M. 115, 152 Pac. 1143 (certified copy of an unacknowledged deed recorded in 1877, admitted, the original being lost; citing the above text with approval);

New York: Cons. L. 1909, Real Property § 306 (validates acknowledgments of deeds recorded for 30 years);

North Carolina: Con. St. 1919, § 1776 (will proved and ordered recorded, but "destroyed during the war between the States" before record; a copy, "though not certified by any officer, shall, when the Court shall be satisfied of its genuineness, be ordered to be recorded," and be admissible);

Pennsylvania: St. 1851, Apr. 15, § 10, etc., Dig. 1920, §§ 8753, 8754 (deeds of lands within the State, purporting to be executed, etc., but not as required by law, and recorded; record receivable if recorded for thirty years before the act's date and accompanied by possession);

Philippine Islands: Civ. C. § 1221 (like P. R. Rev. St. & C. § 4295);

Porto Rico: Rev. St. & C. 1911, § 4295 (where the original instrument and record are lost, copies 30 years old are evidence on certain conditions; quoted in full, ante, § 1225);

Tennessee: Shannon's Code 1916, § 3761 ("Whenever a deed has been registered twenty years or more, the same shall be presumed to have been upon lawful authority"); § 3762 ("Where a deed has been registered more than 30 years, but the register has failed to register the name of the grantor or bargainor," the name shall be presumed to have been subscribed, etc.); § 3763 (provisions for presuming genuine instruments authorized to be registered and in fact registered before 1839, though defective in specified details); 1899, Perry v. Clift, — Tenn. Ch. —, 54 S. W. 121 (statute applied);

Texas: Rev. Civ. St. 1911, § 3700, an instrument lacking in due acknowledgment or proof but recorded for 10 years or more, or a certified copy if the original is lost or not procurable, is admissible "without the necessity of proving its execution"); in this State consult the rule (post, § 2146) about proving an issue of forgery;

Virginia: St. 1912, c. 235, p. 524 (deeds, etc., recorded before 1865 and made under a statute or decree providing for conveyance; if the proceedings under which it was made are "lost or destroyed or cannot be produced," the deed or a certified copy of the record shall be evidence of the authority, due compliance, etc.); St. 1914, c. 100, p. 186 (repealing the foregoing); 1917, Virginia & W. V. Coal Co. v. Charles, D. C. W. D. Va., 251 Fed. 83, 123 (Va. St. 1912, Mar. 13, providing a presumption of due execution for certified copies of ancient official deeds recorded before 1865, whose record is lost, was repealed by St. 1914, Mar. 14, being an impolitic and dangerous rule, tending to unsettle thousands of titles, and the rule for trials after 1914 applied equally to claims acquired in the period 1912–1914 while St. 1912 was in effect); St. 1922, Mar. 24, c. 391 (Commonwealth grants recorded but lacking the governor's signature; Code § 417 amended, in unspecified details);

West Virginia: St. 1907, c. 76, p. 291, § 2 Code 1914, § 4944 (certain judicial deeds recorded for 10 years or more, presumed to be made on due authority); of execution because it was not made in accordance with statutory provisions (ante, § 1648), the record may nevertheless be treated as a confirming circumstance in lieu of possession of the land.[6]

§ 2144. Authority to Execute. Whether the circumstances of age, custody, and the like will suffice as evidence not only of genuineness of execution by the person purporting to execute, but also, when he purports to act only as agent for another, of the existence of due authority to execute given by that other, has been a matter of some difference of judicial opinion. The general consensus is that a mere authority as agent or attorney will be thus assumed to have existed.[1] Any other result would practically nullify the utility of the whole doctrine in its application to such instruments, since the same lapse of time that has removed the evidence of execution will equally have removed (in the usual case) the evidence of authority to execute.[2]

But when the missing element is anything beyond an agent's authority there is in some Courts a hesitation; it may be said that they distinguish, in effect, between a matter of mere authority and a matter of title in the estate.[3]

Wisconsin: Stats. 1919, §§ 2216 a, 2216 b (certain specified documents, otherwise defectively acknowledged, etc., to be admissible if recorded for twenty years, and to be provable by the record or a certified copy); 1897, Gratz v. Land & R. I. Co., 27 C. C. A. 305, 82 Fed. 381 (Wisconsin statute applied to a bill to quiet an action begun before its enactment).

[6] A few cases of this sort have been collected under § 2141, ante; the statutes are in note 5, supra.

§ 2144. [1] 1882, Hogans v. Carruth, 19 Fla. 84 (ancient deed of 1834; the signature of one party being in the handwriting of a witness not interested, and the party not being able to write, and "there is neither charge nor evidence of fraud," the authority of the signer to sign by direction of the party was presumed); 1899, Reuter v. Stuckart, 181 Ill. 529, 54 N. E. 1014 (existence of a power of attorney will be presumed; distinguishing the case infra of an administrator's power of sale); Minn. Gen. St. 1913, § 7372 (deed of executor, etc., recorded more than 6 years, the probate court records being destroyed; authority presumed); 1812, Doe v. Phelps, 9 Johns. N. Y. 169, 171 (a power of attorney "will be equally embraced by the presumption"); 1813, Doe v. Campbell, 10 Johns. N. Y. 475, 477 (same); 1833, Robinson v. Craig, 1 Hill S. C. 389 ("Antiquity and other circumstances dispense with the necessity of any proof by witnesses, of handwriting, when the deed purports to be executed by the grantor personally, and there seems to be no good reason why they should not have the same effect when it purports to be executed by attorney; the proof of the power would be only one of the facts to make out a due execution"); 1856, Watrous v. McGrew, 16 Tex. 506, 513 (the rule covers "in most cases" the authentication of a power under which it purports to be made); 1874, Johnson v. Shaw, 41 Tex. 428, 436 (power recited in a deed, presumed on the facts); 1878, Johnson v. Timmons, 50 Tex. 521, 534 ("in most cases," the power's execution will be presumed); 1882, Storey v. Flanagan, 57 Tex. 649, 654 (power's execution presumed); 1890, O'Donnell v. Johns, 76 Tex. 362, 364, 13 S. W. 376 (power of attorney presumed on the facts). Contra: 1866, Jones v. McMullen, 25 U. C. Q. B. 542 (ancient deed purporting to be executed under a power of attorney, held not to prove the power).

Compare the use of recitals in ancient deeds, to prove the contents of a prior deed, ante, § 1573.

[2] Consequently, when the document of authority has in fact survived, it must be proved: 1912, Butterfield v. Miller, C. C. A., 195 Fed. 200, 208 (recital in an ancient deed of a power of attorney, held not sufficient, when the power is matter of record, without producing the original or a copy or accounting for failure to produce); 1826, Tolman v. Emerson, 4 Pick. Mass. 160, 162 (a deed executed by a legislative committee under a power in 1744; the power being of record, the deed was not admitted without it).

[3] England: 1897, Airey v. Stapleton, 1 Ch. 164 (authority as attorney to exercise a special power of appointment, not presumed); United States: 1872, Fell v. Young, 63 Ill. 106, 109 (an ancient deed still requires evidence of power to convey of an administrator making it); 1908, Koch v. Streuter, 232 Ill. 594, 83 N. E. 1072 (deed of State public land trustees; State title from the United States, not presumed); 1826, Innman v. Jackson, 4 Greenl. Me. 237, 253 (certain assessors' deeds, under a special mode of divesting a proprietor of his property; statutory directions not presumed to have been followed); 1856, Osborne v.

Nevertheless, the other Courts seem to set no definite limits, and to be liberal in assuming all the elements necessary to authenticate and to constitute a due execution.[4]

§ 2145. Kinds of Documents covered by the Rule. The probative value of the circumstances of age, custody, and the like, as evidence of genuineness, exists equally for all sorts of documents, as does also the necessity for being satisfied with such evidence (ante, § 2137). For grants of land, the additional circumstance of possession of the land may be required (ante, § 2141). Apart from that requirement, however, it is universally conceded that the rule applies alike to all sorts of documents whatever, — in particular, to wills,[1] as well as to letters, records, contracts, maps, certificates, and whatever other writings may need authentication.[2]

Tunis, 25 N. J. L. 633, 663 (deed of commissioners of loan office; due statutory advertisement, etc., not presumed unless possession "or other collateral proof" appears); 1873, State v. Jersey City, 36 N. J. L. 188, 195 (same); 1915, Carmichael v. Reed, 76 W. Va. 672, 86 S. E. 662 (Code 1913, c. 132, § 4944, as to deeds recorded for 10 years, held not applicable).

[4] ENG. 1808, Doe v. Thynne, 10 East 206, 210 (books alleged to be those of rent-collecting agents; to show the character of the author as collector, other similar books, duly authenticated, held not sufficient, but the internal evidence of the books held sufficient to consider); CAN. 1866, Monk v. Farlinger, 17 U. C. C. P. 41, 51 (regularity of certificate of married woman's acknowledgment, presumed); U. S. Fed. 1913, Wilson v. Snow, 228 U. S. 217, 33 Sup. 487 (a will was probated in 1858, but there was no record of the executrix having qualified; a deed was made in 1865, by a grantor as the executrix under a power to this will; held, that the fact of the grantor's authority to sell as executrix was sufficiently evidenced by the deed's recital of such authority, and by the circumstance of possession for 40 years under the deed; the opinion does not carefully distinguish the hearsay exception for deed-recitals and the rule for authenticating ancient deeds; either of them might suffice for the present case; but the opinion cites cases from both, without noting that there are two; it also ignores the limitations on the deed-recital rule, though citing Carver v. Jackson, ante, § 1573, which established them); 1920, Smythe v. New Providence, 3d C. C. A., 263 Fed. 481 (town bonds of 1868; registration and other facts, presumed); Me. 1829, Battles v. Holley, 6 Greenl. 145 (administrator's authority, etc., to make an inventory and schedule of claims, presumed on the facts); Mass. 1848, King v. Little, 1 Cush. 436, 440 (records of "the Lower Housatonic Propriety," admitted without showing the organization of that body); 1866, Berry v. Raddin, 11 All. 577, 578 (ancient copies of depositions 'in perpetuam memoriam'; the antiquity held to presume due taking, etc.); N. H. 1852, Adams v. Stanyan, 24 N. H. 405, 416 (the due holding of a corporation meeting whose minutes were offered in an ancient book of records); 1858, Little v. Downing, 37 N. H. 355, 365 (corporation record; the due holding of the meeting); Wis. 1907, Dickinson v. Smith, 134 Wis. 6, 114 N. W. 133 (plat and survey certificate, more than 30 years old, held sufficient evidence of necessary authority from the city council).

For instances of old documents used as containing statements against interest (receipt of money, etc.), under an exception to the Hearsay rule, see ante, § 1472.

§ 2145. [1] Eng. 1803, M'Kenire v. Fraser, 9 Ves. Jr. 5 (cited ante, § 2138); 1817, Rancliffe v. Parkyns, 6 Dow 149, 202 (quoted ante, § 2141); 1826, Doe v. Passingham, 2 C. & P. 440 (quoted ante, § 2141); 1826, Doe v. Deakin, 3 C. & P. 402; 1827, Holton v. Lloyd, 1 Moll. 30, 32; Can. 1898, Roman Catholic Episcopal Co. v. Murphy, 8 Newf. (Morris & Browning) 96; U. S. 1917, Jarboe's Appeal, 91 Conn. 265, 99 Atl. 563; 1852, Jordan v. Cameron, 12 Ga. 267, 269; 1803, Jackson v. Laroway, 3 Johns. Cas. N. Y. 283, 286; 1808, Jackson v. Blanshan, 3 Johns. N. Y. 292, 295; 1814, Shaller v. Brand, 6 Binn. Pa. 435, 439, 447; 1842, Eubanks v. Harris, 1 Spear S. C. 183, 191; 1843, Giddings v. Smith, 15 Vt. 344, 348, semble; and additional instances cited ante, §§ 2139, 2141.

[2] Besides the following, the cases cited ante, §§ 2139, 2141, 2144, exhibit other kinds of documents:

ENGLAND: 1814, R. v. Netherthong, 2 M. & S. 337 (certificate of pauper settlement); 1816, Bertie v. Beaumont, 2 Price 303, 308 (receipt for tithe-money); 1821, Wynne v. Tyrwhitt, 4 B. & Ald. 376 ("The rule is not confined to deed or wills, but extends to letters and other written documents coming from the proper custody"; here applied to the books of a manor-steward); 1831, R. v. Bathwick, 2 B. & Ad. 639 (papers of ordination, sealed by the archbishop, admitted under the rule; whether a document sealed by a corporation or court would in general not be included in it, because of the presumable extancy of proof, undecided);

§ 2146. Presumption created; Statutory Denial of Genuineness. (1) That this rule about ancient documents is not merely a rule of sufficiency, but also a rule of presumption (ante, § 2135) is often implied in judicial language, and has sometimes been distinctly decided.[1] There seems no reason against giving it this additional quality, at any rate wherever the requirement of possession (ante, § 2241) is exacted.

(2) In a few jurisdictions, a statute provides that, upon affidavit of the opponent denying the genuineness of a deed pleaded, the proponent of the deed cannot evidence its execution by a record-copy or cannot raise a presumption thereby. The effect of such a statute upon the presumption ordinarily raised by the ancient-document rule depends chiefly on the terms of the local statute.[2]

1835, Doe v. Burdett, 4 A. & E. 1, 19 ("any instrument of that age, whether deed or will or other instrument, proves itself"); 1840, Doe v. Benyon, 4 P. & Dav. 193, 196, 198 (letters); 1899, Blandy-Jenkins v. Dunraven, 2 Ch. 121 (agreement in settlement of litigation).

CANADA: 1848, Robinson, C. J., in Doe v. Turnbull, 5 U. C. Q. B. 129, 131 ("the principle . . . is not confined to the deeds themselves . . ., but extends to any written documents whatever, even to letters").

UNITED STATES: Fed. 1899, Smith v. New Orleans C. & B. Co., 35 C. C. A. 646, 93 Fed. 899 (certain ancient Spanish and French archives); 1905, McGuire v. Blount, 199 U. S. 143, 26 Sup. 1 (Spanish probate proceedings); Conn. 1896, Enfield v. Ellington, 67 Conn. 459, 34 Atl. 818 (lists and books of election found among the records of a town, purporting to be 29 years old and upwards, held admissible if the circumstances indicated authenticity); D. C. 1910, Cole v. Lea, 35 D. C. App. 355 (account-books); Fla. 1894, Sullivan v. Richardson, 33 Fla. 1, 18, 31, 111 (certain old Spanish documents admitted on the facts); Ill. 1897, Cooney v. Packing Co., 169 Ill. 370, 48 N. E. 406 (abstract of title, in vogue in a certain office, and 30 years old, received; compare the statute ante, § 1705); Mass. 1828, Rust v. B. M. Co., 6 Pick. 158 (records of the town of Boston, preserved in the archives); 1849, Boston v. Weymouth, 4 Cush. 538, 542 (selectmen's book of accounts with the town, found in the town's custody); 1866, Berry v. Raddin, 11 All. 577, 578 (ancient copies of depositions 'in perpetuam memoriam' recorded); Oh. 1887, Bell v. Brewster, 44 Oh. St. 690, 694, 10 N. E. 679 (letter and payroll); Pa. 1898, Smucker v. Penns. R. Co., 188 Pa. 40, 41 Atl. 457 (old official map in proper custody); R. I. 1893, Almy v. Church, 18 R. I. 182, 26 Atl. 58 (ancient proprietary and public records); S. C. 1906, McCreary v. Coggeshall, 74 S. C. 42, 53 S. E. 978 (letter found among the papers of the addressee); 1918, Goings v. Mitchell, 110 S. C. 380, 96 S. E. 612 (plat made in 1851; Gage, J.: "the plat was of age and could speak for itself"); Vt. 1893, Aldrich v. Griffith, 66 Vt. 390, 404, 29 Atl. 376 (ancient field book; kept by a town clerk).

Of course, the doctrine cannot avail to introduce a document which would not be valid, even if genuine: 1904, O'Neal v. Tennessee C. D. & R. Co., 140 Ala. 378, 37 So. 275 (deed without acknowledgment or witnesses, and purporting to be signed by mark; the statute at that time requiring either attestation or acknowledgment for validity of a deed, the document was rejected).

§ 2146. [1] 1868, Chamberlain v. Torrance, 14 Grant Ch. U. C. 181, 182; 1895, Wisdom v. Reeves, 110 Ala. 418, 428, 434, 18 So. 13 (treated as a strict presumption, shifting the duty of going forward).

Of course the presumption cannot be conclusive, as the Georgia Code declares it (ante, § 2137); this error probably arose from Professor Greenleaf's unaccountable lapse in classifying the rule under that head (Evidence, § 21). But distinguish the effect of a statute declaring a defective ancient certificate "conclusively" presumed to be regular (the theory of these is examined ante, § 1345): 1857, Mathewson v. Spencer, 4 Sneed Tenn. 383 ("after the lapse of twenty years, . . . all inquiry upon that subject [of regularity of probate] is cut off").

[2] The statutes affecting the question have been collected ante, § 1651; for their judicial interpretation applying them to ancient deeds, see the following cases: Georgia: 1871, Matthews v. Castleberry, 43 Ga. 346, 351, 525; 1877, Hill v. Nisbet, 58 Ga. 586, 587; 1888, Parker v. Waycross & F. R. Co., 81 Ga. 387, 393, 8 S. E. 871; 1898, Albright v. Jones, 106 Ga. 392, 31 S. E. 761; 1899, McArthur v. Morrison, 107 Ga. 796, 34 S. E. 205 (explaining preceding cases); 1904, Bentley v. McCall, 119 Ga. 530, 46 S. E. 645 (cited ante, § 2143, n. 4); 1907, Chatman v. Hodnett, 127 Ga. 360, 56 S. E. 439; 1909, Leverett v. Tift, 6 Ga. App. 90, 64 S. E. 317 (explaining McArthur v. Morrison); Texas: 1883, Holmes v. Coryell, 58 Tex. 680, 688; 1921, Emory v. Bailey, — Tex. —, 234 S. W. 660 (title to land; certified copy of deed recorded in 1862, admitted as sufficiently evidenced by age, even as against an affidavit raising the issue of forgery).

2. Authentication by Contents

§ 2148. Authentication by Contents; in general. If Doe is the sole person who knows the circumstances of a certain event, and if a letter arrives purporting to be from Doe and stating those circumstances, and the statement appears by subsequent developments to be accurate, it would be a simple matter, for the law as well as for common sense, to deem that sufficient evidence (ante, § 171) of Doe's authorship had been furnished. But as there can seldom be a sole person knowing the circumstances of events, and as it could seldom be proved (if it were the case) that no other person had the knowledge, it is obvious that there are here multiple opportunities for a different authorship. Moreover, the other persons knowing the same facts are often persons hostilely interested, who thus have a motive for fabrication; and, if it were once laid down, as a general rule of law, that the contents of a letter might be taken as evidencing its authenticity, too many would be found to take fraudulent advantage of this rule. It is true that, in the vast majority of transactions in everyday life, persons do act upon just such evidence of authenticity and no more; and it might be supposed that the law could well follow this practice.[1] But, in the first place, it is also true that frauds are constantly perpetrated in this very manner (as in obtaining goods by forging the name and letter-heads of reputable merchants); and, secondly, there is little necessity for relying upon such evidence, in view of the ample opportunities of proof afforded by witnesses to handwriting.

Accordingly, it seems generally conceded that the mere contents of a written communication, purporting to be a particular person's, are of themselves not sufficient evidence of genuineness.[2] Only in special circumstances, where the contents reveal a knowledge or other trait peculiarly referable to a single person, could the contents alone suffice.[3]

§ 2148. [1] 1827, Bentham, Rationale of Judicial Evidence, b. VII, c. III, Bowring's ed., vol. VII, p. 179 ("When from an individual more or less known to me in person or by reputation, I receive a letter bearing his signature — that is, when I receive a letter with a signature purporting to be that of a person known to me as above, — on what supposition can such a letter have emanated from any other hand than his? On no other than that of forgery, — a crime not to be presumed, or so much as suspected, without special ground, in any single instance: much less, in a number of unconnected instances").

[2] 1895, Freeman v. Brewster, 93 Ga. 648, 21 S. E. 165; also the cases cited ante, § 2130.

[3] In a few rulings, some force has been allowed for such evidence: England: 1758, William Barnard's Case, 19 How. St. Tr. 824 (anonymous letters sent to the Duke of Wellington; one of the most remarkable and puzzling cases on record; quoted in full in the present writer's Principles of Judicial Proof, § 38); 1805, R. v. Johnson, 7 East 65 (a publisher in M. received an anonymous letter notifying him that the writer would send to him a paper of a certain description; subsequently such papers, in the same hand, came to him by mail, and were published; the question being whether this publication in M. was authorized by the defendant, the correspondence of the papers with the description, and the defendant's handwriting's similarity to that of the libels, and the similarity of the handwriting of the libels and the original letter, was held sufficient); United States: 1896, Thalheim v. State, 38 Fla. 169, 20 So. 938 (mere possession of a letter, not enough; but here other facts, such as the letter's references to acts of his, sufficed to authenticate; perhaps, as mere knowledge of contents was involved, the case belongs rather under § 260, ante); 1910, People v. Adams, 162 Mich. 371, 127 N. W. 354 (letters and telegrams of a seducer, admitted);

But where the necessity above-mentioned does in fact exist, namely, the impossibility of obtaining handwriting-testimony, it would seem to follow that resort must be had to the evidence from contents, — at any rate, in some circumstances or upon the facts of a particular case. Such an impossibility may exist for three sorts of writing, (a) an illiterate's writing by amanuensis, (b) a type-written letter, (c) printed matter.

§ 2149. Illiterate's Letter; Typewriting. It ought to be conceded that, where there is no direct testimony to the act of execution or sending by an illiterate, the evidence to be drawn from the contents should, in some situations, be allowed to suffice to go to the jury:

1824, NOTT, J., in Singleton v. Bremer, Harp. 201, 209: "The usual method of proving an instrument of writing, where there is no subscribing witness, is by proof of handwriting. But that could not be expected in this case, as the party cannot write. Even if her name had been subscribed to the letters, the difficulty would not have been lessened. Some other method must therefore be resorted to, and why may not the letters be looked into? If they furnish internal evidence of the source from whence they were derived, I can see no reason why we may not avail ourselves of that evidence. Thus, for instance, if they relate to facts which cannot be known to any other person, it will be presumed that they were written by her authority. If they embrace a number of facts which relate to her and her situation, and which cannot apply to any other person, each of those facts constitutes a link in the chain of circumstances which go to strengthen the presumption. In ordinary cases such evidence will not be allowed, because the writing is always presumed to be by the person by whom it purports to be written, and proof of the handwriting therefore is higher evidence. But in the present case the evidence offered was the best which the nature of the case could afford." [1]

The case of an amanuensis, using a typewriting-machine, presents a similar impossibility, whenever the signature (as sometimes happens) is also typewritten or stamped; and it would seem that a similar necessity justifies a resort to evidence from contents.[2] If there were a serious possibility of abuse, this step would not be advisable. But in fact there is also a danger of abuse in the opposite direction; for the difficulty of authenticating such a docu-

1915, People v. Dunbar Contracting Co., 215 N. Y. 416, 109 N. E. 554 (typewritten letter, referring to telephone conversation, admitted); 1906, International Harv. Co. v. Campbell, 43 Tex. Civ. App. 421, 96 S. W. 93 (letter admitted, on the above principle).

The following case has special reasons: 1824, Truelove v. Burton, 9 Moore 64 (signature of an attorney's agent to a judicial admission need not be proved).

But the marks of cancellation on a will found in the testator's custody may be presumed genuine: 1906, Wikman's Estate, 148 Cal. 642, 84 Pac. 212.

Compare the citations ante, § 87 (physical marks of identity), § 270 (personal knowledge as a mark of identity), § 2024 (spelling as a mark of identity), and the Minnesota statute in § 2596 (pleading denial of execution).

§ 2149. [1] Accord: 1909, Whalen v. Gleeson, 81 Conn. 638, 71 Atl. 908 (illiterate's letters by an amanuensis).

[2] 1906, Sprinkle v. U. S., C. C. A., 150 Fed. 56, 59 (typewritten letter signed with a stamp or stencil, held not sufficiently authenticated on the facts; an example of over-strict ruling); 1900, Re Deep River Nat'l Bank, 73 Conn. 341, 47 Atl. 675 (letters typewritten, and signed by a rubber stamp, held sufficiently proved by the person's custom as to authorizing a stenographer to stamp, etc.); 1906, State v. Freshwater, 30 Utah 442, 85 Pac. 447 (typewritten letters, sufficiently evidenced by contents, etc.; Singleton v. Bremer, supra, approved); 1920, Maynard v. Bailey, 85 W. Va. 679, 102 S. E. 480 (typewritten letter proposing a bribe, admitted as by the plaintiff, on evidence of its contents, etc.).

Compare also the cases cited ante, §§ 87, 270, 2024, 2148, 2149.

ment is sometimes taken advantage of by those who wish to be able to disavow their authorship. It is, no doubt, a question of experience, i. e. which danger is actually the greater. On the whole it would seem safe to authorize the trial Court, in discretion, to allow to go to the jury a typewritten communication bearing sufficient indication of authenticity in its contents and letterhead. Today, however, in view of the scientific development of the study of documents by microscopy and other arts,[3] the authorship of typewritten documents can often be traced with certainty to the specific machine used; so that this mode of authentication does not then in principle differ from that of using the handwriting.

§ 2150. Printed Matter; (1) Newspapers. Printed matter in general bears upon itself no marks of authorship other than contents. But there is ordinarily no necessity for resting upon such evidence, since the responsibility for printed matter, under the substantive law, usually arises from the act of causing publication, not merely of writing, and hence there is usually available as much evidence of the act of printing or of handing to a printer as there would be of any other act, such as chopping a tree or building a fence. There is therefore no judicial sanction for considering the contents alone as sufficient evidence:

1696, Maule's Trial, Mass., 5 Amer. St. Tr. 85; prosecution of a Quaker at Salem for blasphemy; a printed book was introduced; the accused, arguing for himself, said: "You must go to the printer for satisfaction, for I am ignorant of any such matter in the book; my hand is only to my copy, which is in the hands of the printer in another government, and my name in the printed book does not in law prove the same to be Thomas Maule." The jury returned a verdict of Not Guilty. The Court, "after expressing much dissatisfaction at the result, asked the jury how they could return such a verdict with the book before them," and was answered by the jury, "The book was not sufficient evidence, for Thomas Maule's name was placed there by the printer."

For newspapers and the like, special questions arise. Suppose, for example, that the publication of a libel is to be proved, and that the libel is alleged to have been communicated to J. S. It is simple enough to prove that J. S. read a copy of the paper containing the libel; but how shall the defendant's publication of that copy be proved? Here the process would be to bring home to him the issuance on that day of a certain copy (either by the testimony of one who bought at an office proved to be the defendant's [1] or by some statutory method); then the identity between that copy and the one read by J. S. will suffice as evidence that the two issued from the same press, i.e. the defendant's:

1846, ALDERSON, B., in Gathercole v. Miall, 15 M. & W. 319, 336: "The question is whether there is reasonable evidence that this is a copy of the individual paper which has been produced and which has been shown to have been published by the defendant. . . . We must use our own common sense, and remember that, with respect to newspapers, not one, but a great variety of copies, are published for general circulation among the public at large. If you compare an instrument in one or two parts, and find the one is an exact copy of the other, you would have no difficulty in saying it was printed from the same materials and from the same type. . . . So I say here with respect to a newspaper. If you find it in general corresponds, it is evidence from which the jury may infer that the paper is printed from the same type as the paper which is produced, and if so, it is printed by the defendant."

[3] Osborn, Questioned Documents (1910), The Problem of Proof (1922), passim; and cases cited ante, § 2024.

§ 2150. [1] This could not be used as the basis of the libel, because its publication is invited by the plaintiff's agent; 'volenti non fit injuria.'

This is but one of the various questions that arise;[2] their solution depends chiefly on the application of ordinary principles of Evidence to the varying substantive law.[3]

§ 2151. Same: (2) Official Printer; Statute-book; Reports of Decisions. The intolerable inconvenience of having to prove the genuineness of printed matter purporting to be published by the Government has led to a general concession, by judicial decision or by statute, that such purporting publications, at least when in the form of the standard official documents constantly issued and referred to, are to be assumed genuine. Two principles, however, are in fact usually involved, first, the admissibility of a copy, proved to be printed by official authority, as hearsay evidence of the contents of the original, and, secondly, the presumption of genuineness of a particular printed document purporting to be of such official origin. The two questions are seldom separated, either in decisions[1] or in statutes; a sanction of the former principle has usually been regarded as carrying with it a sanction of the latter also.[2]

[2] 1922, Saenger Amusement Co. v. Murray, — Miss. —, 91 So. 459 (issue as to who was principal of plaintiff employee in a theatre; newspaper advertisements giving defendant's name, not admissible).

Distinguish the following: 1902, State v. Dixon, 131 N. C. 808, 42 S. E. 944 (murder; the gun-wadding was a piece of paper from a printed periodical; a duplicate of the same periodical was admitted to identify the piece, without other evidence of genuineness).

[3] Statutory facilitation has sometimes been given:

ENGLAND: 1798, St. 38 Geo. III, c. 78, re-enacted in 6 & 7 Wm. IV, c. 76 (requires a daily deposit of a newspaper copy at the Stamp Office, with an affidavit of authenticity, and on production of the affidavit and any newspaper corresponding with this copy, the defendant's responsibility for its publication need be no further proved); 1835, Watts v. Fraser, 7 A. & E. 223, 232 (deposit of a copy of newspaper at the Stamp Office as required by statute is not sufficient evidence that others of that issue were circulated; this is absurd); 1843, R. v. O'Connell, 5 State Tr. N. S. 1, 538 (copy of newspaper signed by printer and filed at Stamp Office under statute, admitted in favor of the registered proprietor).

CANADA: Alta. St. 1913, 2d sess., c. 12, § 15 (newspaper libel; "the production of a printed copy of a newspaper" to be evidence of publication); Newf. Consol. St. 1916, c. 69, §§ 8, 11 (similar to Eng. St. 6 & 7, Wm. IV, c. 76); P.E.I. St. 1889, § 54 (in libel trials the production of a printed copy purporting to be published by the defendant shall suffice, on certain conditions); Sask. Rev. St. 1920, c. 56, § 15 (libel; printed copy of newspaper to be evidence of publication).

In the United States no similar statutes appear to exist, though they are needed; but the following may be noted: Ala. Code 1907, § 5192 (newspapers containing advertisement of notices "shall be received as evidence of publication"); N. Y. St. 1914, c. 113 (illegal advertisement; "the placing of an advertisement" etc. is evidence that the person named as vender etc. "caused or procured the same to be so placed" etc.); the same purpose is generally accomplished by statutory affidavit; ante, § 1710.

Whether one or another copy of a newspaper is the original required to be produced has been elsewhere considered (ante, §§ 1234, 1237), as also the question of identification by contents (ante, §§ 415, 440).

§ 2151. [1] In the following case the distinction was recognized: 1814, R. v. Forsyth, R. & R. 274 (to prove the publication of a notice in the Gazette, "a printed paper purporting to be the Gazette was put in," no evidence of its authenticity being offered; "the Judges seemed to think that the production of the Gazette would be sufficient, without proof of its being bought of the Gazette printer, or where it came from").

[2] The statutes and cases are collected ante, § 1684.

§ 2152. Same: (3) Postmark; Brand. The use of a postmark in evidence may involve at least three distinct principles, only one of which concerns the principle of Authentication:

(a) In the first place, the question arises, May it be inferred from the presence of the purporting official mark that the mark was genuinely affixed by the purporting official? This is a question of Authentication, and may well enough be answered in the affirmative. This may be regarded on the whole, as to-day conceded, though there was some fluctuation in the English rulings.[1] But assuming it not to be conceded, the question may arise, Who is qualified to testify to its genuineness? On general principles (ante, §§ 699, 705) it would seem that any official of the post-office, or any person familiar with the mark of the particular post-office, would be sufficient.[2]

(b) If the postmark be taken as genuine, it is evidence that the letter bearing it was stamped on the purporting date.[3] This signifies that the post-officer need not be called to make proof, and that his postmark, being an implied assertion that the date of the mark is the date of affixing it, is receivable under the Hearsay exception (ante, § 1674) for statements made under official duty.

(c) Upon the same principle, the postmark is evidence that the purporting place or office is the one at which it was actually affixed.[4]

§ 2152. [1] England: 1805, R. v. Johnson, 7 East 65, 66, 70 (an objection to the use of an Irish postmark as evidence of a posting in Ireland, that "there was no evidence that either of the papers was received from the Post-office, which might have been ascertained by persons employed in that office," was not sanctioned); 1808, R. v. Watson, 1 Comp. 215 (postmark not sufficient to show posting at the place named); 1811, Arcangelo v. Thompson, 2 Comp. 620, 623 (postmark assumed genuine, in proving receipt of a letter in a certain year); 1814, R. v. Plumer, R. & R. 264 (post-office marks, and other customs, used to show that the letter came to that office); 1819, Hitchon v. Best, 2 B. & B. 299, semble (postmark presumed genuine); 1821, Fletcher v. Braddyll, 3 Stark. 64, semble (postmistress called to identify); 1829, Abbey v. Lill, 5 Bing. 299 (not decided; Gaselee, J., said: "Where it is disputed, it ought perhaps to be proved, though what might be deemed to amount to proof is not clear"); 1834, Warren v. Warren, 1 C. M. & R. 250 (here the postmaster of one of the offices was called); 1836, Shipley v. Todhunter, 7 C. & P. 680, 686 (postmark presumed genuine); 1841, Stocken v. Collin, 7 M. & W. 515 (same); 1846, Woodcock v. Houldsworth, 16 M. & W. 124, semble (postmark not sufficient; some witness must prove it; citing R. v. Watson and Abbey v. Lill, but no other cases).

United States: 1904, Kirkland v. State, 141 Ala. 45, 37 So. 352 (postmark in another State presumed genuine); 1842, New Haven Co. Bank v. Mitchell, 15 Conn. 206, 225 (postmark presumed genuine); 1851, Burgess v. Clark, 3 Ind. 250 (postmark presumed genuine).

[2] 1821, Fletcher v. Braddyll, 3 Stark. 64 (postmistress at L., called to prove a mark purporting to be at W.); 1829, Abbey v. Lill, 5 Bing. 299, 303 (Best, C. J., thought that the officer making it should be called; Gaselee, J., thought that persons "who live in London and see the mark every day" were at least as competent as an officer not making it).

[3] Eng. 1754, Canning's Trial, 19 How. St. Tr. 370 (postmark, verified as authentic by the clerk, admitted to show that the latter passed through the office on the date of the mark); 1821, Fletcher v. Braddyll, 3 Stark. 64 (to show that the letter existed at that date); 1829, Abbey v. Lill, 5 Bing. 298, semble (to show that the enclosed letter was misdated); 1841, Stocken v. Collin, 7 M. & W. 515 (to show the hour of posting a notice); U. S. 1842, New Haven Co. Bank v. Mitchell, 15 Conn. 206, 225 (indicates that the letter was mailed and sent, not merely put into the office, on that date); 1851, Burgess v. Clark, 3 Ind. 250, semble; 1906, Beeman v. Supreme Lodge, 215 Pa. 627, 64 Atl. 792 (postmark, used to show the time of arrival at a post-office).

Contra: 1846, Woodcock v. Houldsworth, 16 M. & W. 124, semble.

[4] Eng. Canning's Trial, and most of the other cases supra, note 3; 1805, R. v. Johnson, 7 East 65, 66 (Irish postmark, admitted to show a posting in Ireland); U. S. 1904, Kirkland v. State, 141 Ala. 45, 37 So. 352 (postmark in

The use of brands, on cattle or on timber, is somewhat different, because it is usually desired to infer from the presence of the brand, not merely that it was affixed by the person commonly using or legally entitled to use it, but also that he was the owner of the cattle or logs.[5]

§ 2153. Reply-Letter received by Mail. When a letter is received by due course of mail, purporting to come in answer from the person to whom a prior letter has been sent, there are furnished thereby, over and above mere contents showing knowledge of facts in general (ante, § 2148), three circumstances evidencing the letter's genuineness: First, the tenor of the letter as a reply to the first indicates a knowledge of the tenor of the first. Secondly, the habitual accuracy of the mails, in delivering a letter to the person addressed and to no other person (ante, § 95), indicates that no other person was likely to have received the first letter and to have known its contents. Thirdly, the time of the arrival, in due course, lessens the possibility that the letter, having been received by the right person but left unanswered, came subsequently into a different person's hands and was answered by him. To this may be added the empirical argument that in usual experience the answer to a letter is found in fact to come from the person originally addressed:

1906, NEILL, J., in International Harvester Co. v. Campbell, 43 Tex. Civ. App. 421, 96 S. W. 92: "'The second assignment of error is that 'the Court erred in permitting plaintiff to testify, over the objections of defendant to a letter alleged to have been written by defendant to J. D. Cameron as follows, viz.: "We have received your letter, also Mr. Campbell's references which are good. You are on the ground, employ him" — as appears more fully by defendant's bill of exceptions No. 1.' The bill of exceptions discloses a number of objections to the testimony, but as the proposition under the assignment embraces only one, it alone will be considered. It is: 'In order to admit parol evidence of the contents of a letter, its genuineness must be established.' The genuineness of a writing may be proved by indirect or circumstantial evidence, as other facts; and in some instances, this is the only character of evidence that can be adduced. Before the testimony complained of was introduced, it was shown by the testimony of appellee that the letter in question was written on one of the International Company's letterheads; that Mr. Cameron, the agent of the company, showed him the letter about the first of June, 1903; that the signature was the same as that affixed to a letter he had received from the company a few days before and to other letters of the company written to Mr. Boldic, its traveling agent. The defendant and its attorney had been duly notified to produce the letter upon the trial, or that secondary evidence would be introduced to prove its contents. It was not denied by defendant or its counsel that such letter had been written, or was in their possession. The only challenge to plaintiff was: 'You must show the genuineness of such letter before you can prove its contents.' These circumstances, when taken in connection with the contents of the letter, fully meet the challenge. Campbell was seeking employment from the company; its agent, Cameron, had written informing the company of the fact; Campbell's references had been sent to the company; a letter is received in reply written from the company's office in Chicago, on one of its Florida, admitted to show that the witness was there).

Contra: 1846, Woodcock v. Houldsworth, supra, semble.

The following rules might equally well be made judicially: Eng. St. 1908, 8 Edw. VII, c. 48, §§ 8, 9 (post-office stamp to be evidence that an addressee of packet has refused it or is dead or cannot be found; also that the sum marked due is due).

[5] The cases and statutes are placed ante, § 150.

letterheads, bearing the same signature as other letters of the company to its agent, in which it is said: 'We have received your letter, also Mr. Campbell's references, which are good.' As no one, save the company, could have received the letter and references mentioned in the letter received by Cameron, and shown to plaintiff, its contents, when taken in connection with other facts, are, under the principle quoted, cogent evidence of its genuineness. We by no means wish to be understood as holding that the mere contents of a written communication, purporting to be a particular person's, are of themselves, sufficient evidence of genuineness, for the contrary is the rule."

There seems to be here adequate ground for a special rule declaring that these facts, namely, the arrival by mail of a reply purporting to be from the addressee of a prior letter duly addressed and mailed, are sufficient evidence of the reply's genuineness to go to the jury. Such a rule — varying slightly in the phraseology of different judges — seems now to be universally accepted.[1]

§ 2153. [1] ENGLAND: 1824, Harrington v. Fry, 1 C. & P. 290 (that letters purporting to be signed by S. F. were received in answer to letters sent to S. F., and that there was only one person of that name in the place, sufficient); 1845, Ovenston v. Wilson, 2 C. & K. 1 (letter coming in answer to a letter addressed to the defendant at his residence and put into the post, admitted as the defendant's, by Pollock, C. B.); 1875, R. v. Saunders, L. R. 1 Q. B. D. 19 (false pretences by advertising to give work by mail and requesting stamps in the answer; to show repeated acceptances of this advertisement, evidence was received of 281 letters, answering the advertisement, having been received at the post-office addressed to the defendant, no other evidence authenticating their genuineness being offered).

CANADA: 1889, McDonald v. Gilbert, 16 Can. Sup. 700 (whether M. and K. constituted a partnership; letters admitted, bearing on them the printed names of M. and K., and received in answer to letters addressed to that firm).

UNITED STATES: Fed. 1894, Scofield v. Parlin & O. Co., 10 C. C. A. 83, 61 Fed. 804 ("a letter received in due course of mail, and especially if it be in response to a letter sent by the receiver, is presumptively the letter of the one whose name is signed to it"); 1897, National Acc. Soc. v. Spiro, 24 C. C. A. 334, 78 Fed. 775 (letter on letter heads of the defendant and stamped with a fac-simile signature of its officers, received in the mail in reply to one addressed to the defendant, held sufficiently proved); 1910, Consolidated Grocery Co. v. Hammond, 5th C. C. A., 175 Fed. 641 (letter received by mail, and purporting but not otherwise evidenced to have been elicited by a prior letter from the addressee, excluded); 1918, Holsman v. U. S., 9th C. C. A., 248 Fed. 193 (using the mails to defraud; answers made to decoy letters, and purporting to come from the defendant's office, admitted); Ala. 1898, White v. Tolliver, 110 Ala. 300, 20 So. 97 (letter received, in answer to another, properly postmarked and in due course of [illegible] referring to the first, admitted); 1904 [illegible] State, 141 Ala. 32, 37 So. 435 (let[illegible]wn to have been received in reply, [illegible]); Ark. 1910, Barham v. Bank of Delight, [illegible]. Ark. 158, 26 S. W. 394; Ga. 1897, Ragan v. Smith, 103 Ga. 556, 29 S. E. 759; Ia. 1877, Lyon v. Ass. Co., 46 Ia. 631, 637 (letters received in reply, assumed genuine); 1885, Davis v. Robinson, 67 Ia. 355, 363, 25 N. W. 280 (letters purporting to be in answer to an offeror's, assumed genuine; here typewritten letters); 1905, Dorr Cattle Co. v. Chicago & G. W. R. Co., 128 Ia. 359, 103 N. W. 1003 (notice of quarantined cattle, received by mail, not presumed genuine); Kan. 1893, Norwegian Plow Co. v. Munger, 52 Kan. 371, 373, 35 Pac. 11 (letters by mail from a non-resident corporation, presumed genuine); Ky. 1916, Louisville & N. R. Co. v. O'Brien & Co., 168 Ky. 403, 182 S. W. 227 (shipping-contract); La. 1898, Boykin v. State, — La. An. —, 24 So. 141 (receiving an answer in due course to a letter duly addressed, sufficient); Md. 1907, American Bonding Co. v. Ensey, 105 Md. 211, 65 Atl. 921 (letter received in reply, and purporting to be signed by the C. H. T. Co., admitted as genuine and duly authorized); Mass. 1817, Connecticut v. Bradish, 14 Mass. 296, 300 (that the letter in question had been received by mail in answer to one addressed to the signer, held sufficient for admission); Minn. 1885, Melby v. Osborne, 33 Minn. 492, 24 N. W. 253; Nebr. 1882, Gartrell v. Stafford, 12 Nebr. 545, 554; 1898, People's Nat'l Bank v. Geisthardt, 55 Nebr. 232, 75 N. W. 582 (receipt by mail in answer, sufficient); 1901, Whitwell v. Johnson, — Nebr. —, 96 N. W. 272 (letter not received in response to another, excluded); 1903, Peycke v. Shinn, 68 Nebr. 343, 94 N. W. 135 (letters received not in answer to others, excluded); 1909, Helwig v. Aulabaugh, 83 Nebr. 542, 120 N. W. 162 (reply-letters purporting to come from defendant, followed by plaintiff's employment by defendant, admitted); N. C. Cons. St. 1919, § 1785 (actions involving a

§ 2154. Reply-Telegram. That a telegram not following a previous one calling for a reply should sufficiently authenticate itself by its contents, any more than any other communication (ante, § 2148), seems never to have been contended.[1]

But may not a reply-telegram thus authenticate itself, as well as a reply-letter received by mail, on the conceded principle of the preceding section? This question has usually been answered in the negative, for the following reasons:

1869, SARGENT, J., in Howley v. Whipple, 48 N. H. 487, 488: "It is claimed that, as in the case of a letter, so in case of a telegraphic despatch, the person who answers a despatch is so generally and uniformly the person to whom the communication was addressed that it may be safely acted upon, and that it is thus acted upon in all the business arrangements of the country. But there is a difference in principle between the two cases. . . . There is nothing about the handwriting here that could indicate that the message came from Gould, nor is there anything in the case to make this message evidence any more than there would be if Gould had sent a verbal message by one man who had communicated it to another, and the latter had at length conveyed the message to the party for whom it was designed and to whom it was originally sent. This message might be received as it was sent, and would ordinarily be acted on in the business of life; but the only way to prove such a message in a court of law would be to summon both the intermediate agents or bearers of the message and in that way trace the message from the lips of the one party until it was received in the ear of the other party. Anything short of that would be to rely upon hearsay evidence of the very loosest character."

1885, Mr. Morris Gray, Communication by Telegraph, § 135: "It is true that the person who answers a telegram is usually the person to whom it is addressed. It is also true, however, that while it is unnecessary to disclose the intelligence contained in a letter to anyone to effect its transportation by mail, it is absolutely necessary to disclose intelligence to at least two operators to effect its transmission by telegraph. Consequently common carrier's bill of lading; an original or duplicate bill of lading, "received in due course of mail from consignor or agent of said carrier" or "delivered by said carrier to the consignee," etc., if first shown to opponent 10 days before trial, is admissible and "the due execution thereof shall be 'prima facie' established") · N. D. 1918, Koale v. Keane, 39 N. D. 560, 168 N. W. 74; S. C. 1906, Leesville Mfg. Co. v. Morgan W. & I. Wks., 75 S. C. 342, 55 S. E. 768 (reply-letter presumed genuine); S. D. 1894, Armstrong v. Advance T. Co., 5 S. D. 12, 17, 57 N. W. 1131 (letter received by mail in due course in answer to a mailed letter, presumed genuine; here from a corporation manager); Tex. 1906, Taylor v. State, 50 Tex. Cr. 381, 97 S. W. 474 (letter received by mail, but not a reply, excluded); W. Va. 1906, Loverin & D. Co. v. Bumgarner, 59 W. Va. 46, 52 S. E. 1000 (reply-letters admitted without proof of handwriting).

The following statute carries the inference further: Eng. St. 1908, 8 Edw. VII, c. 48, § 8 (in proceeding to recover goods sent by post and undelivered, the person from whom the packet "purports to have come" shall be presumed to be the sender).

For the qualifications of a handwriting-witness, based upon correspondence by mail, see ante, § 702.

For the rule that the arrival of a letter in the hands of the addressee is sufficiently evidenced by its due mailing, see ante, § 95.

Distinguish the use of a party's admissions to evidence merely the sending or the receipt of a letter: 1839, Sturge v. Buchanan, 10 A. & E. 598, 604 (the copying of letters in a letter-book "clearly shows that they were sent," as an admission by the party keeping the book); 1845, Ovenston v. Wilson, 2 C. & K. 1, 3 (letter to which defendant had answered, held sufficiently proved, as to delivery to him, by his answering it).

§ 2154. [1] 1902, Distad v. Shanklin, 15 S. D. 507, 90 N. W. 151 ("Undoubtedly, there should be some evidence" of authenticity; here held sufficient on the facts); 1903, Reynolds v. Hinrichs, 16 S. D. 602, 94 N. W. 694 (telegram merely found in an office, not assumed genuine).

But by statute such a rule has been introduced: Miss. St. 1916, c. 133 (telegram as delivered is "best evidence" of the filing by the sender; quoted ante, § 1236, n. 1).

the telegraph offers far greater opportunity to deliver fraudulent answers to inquiries than the mail does. This distinction renders the principle at present under consideration inapplicable to communications by telegraph, however sound its application to communications by mail may be deemed to be."

The only valid objection here advanced seems to be that the opportunity furnished to the operators to learn the contents may enable a forger to return a purporting reply. Even this objection does not apply to a cipher-telegram. But in any case, regard being had to the busy routine of a telegraph-office, the slight motives for fraud, the penal liability for disclosure, and the small contingency of acquaintance or co-operation between operator and interested forger, it would seem that too much stress is laid on this circumstance of distinction. The empirical argument, that telegraphic answers are in fact commonly genuine, also deserves here great weight.[2] Moreover, the handwriting of the original of the reply would usually afford sufficient means for defence against forgery. There seems to be no sound reason why the same rule as for mail-replies should not obtain.[3]

[2] The following incident illustrates that it is a question of experience:

New York "Times," Aug. 5, 1920: "The National Surety Company discovered yesterday that the name of the company had been forged to a telegram which was sent to Snyder Owen Lybrand of Oklahoma City, Okla., in the interest of a man named Salisbury, apparently either to save the credit of Salisbury or to stop some proceeding against him. . . . Mr. Lybrand took the precaution to ask the Oklahoma City branch of the Western Union to verify the telegram. General Manager Joel Rathbone of the Surety Company notified the Western Union that the company had sent no such telegram and then wired to Mr. Lybrand that the message had not been sent or authorized by the company.

"'The telegraph used to be widely used by swindlers,' said President Joyce of the company, 'but, for several years, they seemed to abandon this method. Today there are a great many smart men engaged in dishonest tricks of all kinds, and it would be well for business men to be on their guard against new schemes for making the telegraph an instrument in frauds. I am surprised that its use has not been attempted more often. There should be some method by which financial institutions would have a check against the fraudulent use of their signatures.'"

[3] Accord: Canada: N. Br. Consol. St. 1903, c. 127, § 35 (ten days' notice and a copy of the message having been served, a telegraphic message shall be received as being "dated, directed, written and signed" as it purports); § 36 (a message produced on notice by the opponent shall be similarly received); N. Sc. Rev. St. 1900, c. 163, § 30 (quoted ante, § 1236); United States: 1903, People v. Hammond, — Mich. —, 43 N. W. 1085 (telegraphic answer, admitted without other authentication); 1855, Taylor v. Steamer Robert Campbell, 20 Mo. 254 (plaintiff sent a telegram to the defendant steamer, and received an answer apparently sent by the captain; testimony that the former was delivered by the telegraph-officer to the steamer and that an answer was next day left at his office, held sufficient; carefully reasoned opinion); Nev. Rev. L. 1912, §§ 4615–4617 (certain instruments, when sent by telegraph, presumed to be genuine on certain conditions); 1921, State v. Rothrock, — Nev. —, 200 Pac. 525 (embezzlement; telegram sent by defendant to C. and acknowledged and acted upon by C. as genuine, admitted); 1899, Western Twine Co. v. Wright, 11 S. D. 521, 78 N. W. 942 (telegraphic answer, presumed genuine); Utah Comp. L. 1917, §§ 6119, 6120 (similar to the Nevada statute); Wash. R. & B. Code 1909, §§ 9309–9313, Stats. 1897, §§ 4364–4366 (similar); 1905, Cobb v. Glenn B. & L. Co., 57 W. Va. 4[illegible] 9 S. E. 1005 (certain reply-telegrams not assumed genuine).

Contra: Eng. 1887, R. v. Regan, 16 Cox Cr. 203, semble (receipt of telegram purporting to be from the defendant, no evidence of his authorship); U. S. 1873, Lewis v. Havens, 40 Conn. 363, 369 (telegram not sufficiently authenticated on the facts); 1861, Matteson v. Noyes, 25 Ill. 591 (said obiter that the original's "execution must be proved, precisely as any other instrument"); 1880, Smith v. Easton, 54 Md. 138, 146 (telegram not presumed to have been sent by defendant or by his authority, though received in reply to one addressed to him dealing with the same subject; Howley v. Whipple, N. H., followed); 1884, Burt v. R. Co., 31 Minn. 472, 18 N. W. 285, 289 (unauthenticated telegram-copy, excluded); 1884, Adams v. Lumber Co.;

§ 2155. Reply-Telephone. In proving the receipt of a communication by telephone, any one of several distinct principles of Evidence may be involved and give rise to distinct objections, whose validity may rest on different considerations.

(1) B asserts that certain words (assumed to be receivable as admissions or the like) were uttered to him by A over the telephone; how can B testify that the antiphonal speaker was A? This involves genuinely the principle of Authentication; [1] and three situations are to be distinguished:

(a) It is generally conceded that a person may be recognized and identified by his voice, if the hearer is acquainted with the speaker's voice.[2] Assuming, then, that B is thus acquainted with A's voice, and that voices can sometimes be distinguished on the telephone, and that B did in this instance distinguish A's voice, then B's belief that A was the speaker is founded on sufficient evidence. This much seems to be generally accepted.[3]

(b) But if there is no recognition of voice, what can supply sufficient evidence to authenticate the antiphonal speaker? In a given case, no doubt, sundry circumstances (including other admissions, and the like) may suffice.[4] But, apart from special circumstances, can any rule be laid down?

No one has ever contended that, if the person first calling up is the very one to be identified, his mere purporting to be A is sufficient, any more 32 Minn. 216, 19 N. W. 735 (same); 1903, Yeiser v. Cathers, — Nebr. —, 97 N. W. 840, semble; 1869, Howley v. Whipple, 48 N. H. 487 (quoted supra); 1877, State v. Hopkins, 50 Vt. 316, 332 (obscure).

For the question whether the original is the writing received or the one sent, see ante, § 1236.

§ 2155. [1] It may also be stated as a question of testimonial qualification, i. e. whether B is qualified (ante, § 659) to testify to A's identity; but this in the end also resolves itself into the question whether the data observed by B were sufficient evidence of identity.

[2] Ante, §§ 222, 413, 660.

[3] Ia. 1900, Shawyer v. Chamberlain, 113 Ia. 742, 84 N. W. 661 (testimony to a conversation, held admissible; "identity may be established by means of the hearing or other circumstances"); 1907, State v. Usher, 136 Ia. 606, 111 N. W. 811 (conversation by telephone with the defendant, identified by his voice, admitted); Mass. 1901, Lord Electric Co. v. Morrill, 178 Mass. 304, 59 N. E. 807; Minn. 1897, Deering v. Shumpik, 67 Minn. 348, 69 N. W. 1088 (conversation admitted, the speaker's voice being identified as that of the person in question); N. Y. 1908, People v. Strollo, 191 N. Y. 42, 83 N. E. 573 (detective's testimony to a telephone conversation with the accused, admitted, the detective subsequently recognizing the voice); 1915, People v. Dunbar Contracting Co., 215 N. Y. 416, 109 N. E. 554 (the hearer of a message purporting to be from D. received other such messages, and later met D. personally and identified his voice with the telephone speaker, admitted); 1920, Woodruff v. Benesch, App. T., 182 N. Y. Suppl. 880 (defendant's witness to telephone conversation with plaintiff, admitted, the witness not knowing plaintiff nor his voice at the time but hearing his voice at the trial and identifying it; as the trial took place a year or so later, this testimony was far-fetched; it is of a type easily manufactured; better to give up the requirement, and estimate the actual value of the testimony in each case); Tex. 1892, Stepp v. State, 31 Tex. Cr. 349, 352, 20 S. E. 753 (defendant's admissions; identity of voice sufficient); 1915, Collins v. State, 77 Tex. Cr. 156, 178 S. W. 345 (robbery).

[4] Ia. 1886, Davis v. Walter, 70 Ia. 466, 30 N. W. 804 (receiving admissions, where identity appeared by testimony of the other defendant); Ky. 1907, Holzhauer v. Sheeny, 127 Ky. 28, 104 S. W. 1034 (admitted where the conversation's details helped to identify the party); Minn. 1908, Barrett v. Magner, 105 Minn. 118, 117 N. W. 245 (voice-recognition is not the exclusive means; here the plaintiff's conversation with a person purporting to be Z., at Z.'s office telephone-number, was admitted on the facts); Mo. State v. Vickers, 209 Mo. 12, 106 S. W. 999 (identification in part by voice); N. Y. 1894, People v. McKane, 143 N. Y. 455, 38 N. E. 950 (admitting a conversational admission over the telephone where the speaker's voice was not known to the witness but the latter had since heard read an affidavit of the former admitting his identity as the person conversing).

than the mere purporting signature of A to a letter would be sufficient (ante, § 2148).[5]

The only case practically presented therefore is that of B's calling up A and being answered by a person purporting to be A. There is much to be said for the circumstantial trustworthiness of mercantile custom (ante, § 95), by which, in average experience, the numbers in the telephone-directory do correspond to the stated names and addresses, and the operators do call up the correct number, and the person called does in fact answer. These circumstances suffice for some reliance in mercantile affairs; and it would seem safe enough to treat them in law as at least sufficient evidence to go to the jury, just as testimony based on prices-current is received (ante, § 719). This view has received some judicial support:[6]

1886, THOMPSON, J., in Globe Printing Co. v. Stahl, 23 Mo. App. 451, 458 (the plaintiff's agent called up the defendant in the ordinary way, and asked "if that was S.," the defendant, and was answered "Yes"; then he asked why the defendant did not pay the bill in question, and was answered that the defendant would attend to it soon; the agent did not know the defendant personally and was not acquainted with his voice): "All these decisions [concerning identity] proceed upon the principle that those evidentiary

[5] Accord: 1915, Carroll v. Parry, 43 D. C. App. 363, 375; 1919, Com. v. Harris, 232 Mass. 588, 122 N. E. 749 (receipt of stolen goods; conversation reported by telephone without evidence of identity, excluded; approving the text above); 1921, Miller v. Kelly, 215 Mich. 254, 183 N. W. 717.

[6] The rulings are variant:

CANADA: 1916, Fidelity Oil & Gas Co. v. Janse Drilling Co., 27 D. L. R. 651, N. Sc. (payment of a claim; to prove notice given to defendant that the money had been paid to a bank, the bank clerk's testimony to an admission on the telephone by the purporting manager of defendant was received, without further evidence to identify the person answering; here the telephone system used was the "automatic").

UNITED STATES: Ala. 1901, Vaughn v. State, 130 Ala. 18, 30 So. 669 (telephone message to a physician, who did not identify the voice, excluded, the sender not being otherwise identified); Conn. 1907, General Hospital Soc'y v. New Haven R. Co., 79 Conn. 581, 65 Atl. 1065 (the failure to identify the voice does not necessarily exclude); Ia. 1916, Barber v. City Drug Store, 173 Ia. 651, 155 N. W. 992 (illegal sale of liquor; issue whether O. or R. was lessee; telephone conversation calling up the store and asking for O. and being answered by a person purporting to be O. who said that he operated the place, excluded, the witness not knowing the voice; on the other evidence in this case, the way of the transgressor is made easy and the lions in the path of the righteous are not caged); Md. 1909, Miller v. Leib, 109 Md. 414, 72 Atl. 466 (conversation by telephone with a party called up and responding as the plaintiff, whose voice was not known to the speaker, admitted; following Knickerbocker Ice Co. v. Gardiner D. Co., infra, n. 6); Minn. 1921, Re Delinquent Real Estate Taxes, 149 Minn. 335, 183 N. W. 671 (conversation of M. with plaintiff, admitted, M. having called for plaintiff and the answering party purporting to be plaintiff); Mo. 1888, Wolfe v. R. Co., 97 Mo. 481, 11 S. W. 49 (like Globe P. Co. v. Stahl, supra); 1907, Kansas City S. Co. v. Standard W. Co., 123 Mo. App. 13, 99 S. W. 765 (admissions heard over the telephone from one representing himself as defendant's agent, received); Nebr. 1903, Lincoln Mill Co. v. Wissler, — Nebr. —, 95 N. W. 857 (not decided); Pa. 1906, Dunham v. McMichael, 214 Pa. 485, 63 Atl. 1007 (telephone conversation alleged to be with the defendant, excluded, because neither the witness knew defendant's voice nor did defendant's admissions identify her; no authority cited); R. I. 1902, Deluglio v. Barney, 23 R. I. 626, 51 Atl. 425 (whether a telephonic communication was admissible, "without evidence of the identification of the defendant or his agent," not decided).

Distinguish the following cases, not concerned strictly with testimony to a jury; the standard of certainty or sufficiency may well be a different one: 1889, Banning v. Banning, 80 Cal. 273, 22 Pac. 210 (acknowledgment of deed received by notary over telephone; question expressly reserved); 1894, Murphy v. Jack, 142 N. Y. 217, 36 N. E. 882, 31 Abb. N. C. 207 (information as the basis of an affidavit; there must be some evidence of identity besides the mere assertion of the informant); 1896, State v. Nelson, 19 R. I. 467, 34 Atl. 990 (information received by an officer of the court, on the telephone, that a juror was ill, held insufficient).

matters upon which men are compelled to act in the ordinary affairs of life and in the usual transactions of business ought to be allowed to go to the jury in cases where they become material to the issues on trial. . . . The use of this instrument facilitates business to such an extent that it would be very prejudicial to the interests of the business community if the Courts were to hold that business men are nc entitled to act upon the faith of being able to give in evidence to juries replies which they receive to communications made by them to persons at their usual places of business in this way."

(c) An additional element enters where the antiphonal speaker does not purport to be a particular person, but merely some member of the office-staff authorized to make a contract or an admission. Here the question is whether there is sufficient evidence that he was really a person acting in the opponent's office and authorized for such transactions, or was a mere intruder, or by-stander, or unauthorized clerk. On the principle above suggested (though not with the same force) mercantile experience may well suffice, by which customarily the person who is in fact summoned to the telephone and proceeds to conduct the negotiation is 'prima facie' a person authorized to do so, precisely as a person receiving money at the cashier's desk is presumably authorized to do so:

1918, FELLOWS, J., in Theisen v. Detroit Taxicab & Transfer Co., 200 Mich. 136, 166 N. W. 901 (personal injury in a collision with the defendant's taxicab; P. was defendant's manager; to prove the taxicab to be defendant's, a witness testified "that he called up the defendant by telephone, using the telephone directory, and asked for the manager; that he 'got hold of' Mr. P., who said he was the manager; and that he had never talked with Mr. P. before): "The important questions presented on this record are the admissibility of the telephone conversation and its effect. Upon these questions the authorities are not in harmony. This Court has already held that a telephone conversation is admissible where the identity of the persons communicated with by telephone is established. The contention here goes further, and we are now called upon to determine the admissibility and effect of a telephone conversation conducted in the usual manner in the business world, by ascertaining through the directory the number of the subscriber and then being connected with that subscriber through 'central' and conducting such conversation.

"Courts must take judicial knowledge of modern discoveries and inventions that have become of general and almost universal use in our commercial life. The telephone is no longer a luxury or even a mere convenience, but is a necessity in the conduct of business, especially in our large cities. We cannot close our eyes to the fact that a very large and considerable portion of the business of the country is transacted over it and by its use, nor that mistakes in connections are infrequent, and when they occur the party calling is at once informed of the mistake by the party at the other end of the line. We cannot close our eyes to the fact that business transactions of large moment and private affairs daily depend upon the presumption and inference that by the use of the telephone parties have conversed with the actual party called, and that the party answering was, in the absence of a mistaken connection, the person called for and was the person whom he represented himself to be. The business man who installs a telephone in his office invites the public to transact business with him by its use, and he extends such invitation with the knowledge that such presumptions and inferences exist in the business world. . . . We are persuaded that those cases holding such conversations admissible are by far the better reasoned, and that the weight of authority sustains the admissibility of such proof. . . . None of the cases sustaining the admissibility of such conversations, so far as we can ascertain, lose sight of the rule that agency may not be proved by statements of the agent.

nor the rule that the authority of the agent must be established to bind the principal by his acts; but proceed upon the theory, based upon business experience, that when one in the usual manner obtains the office of another on the telephone a presumption or inference arises, sufficient to make a 'prima facie' case, that the person who is in fact summoned to the telephone and who conducts the negotiations is authorized so to do, rather than to assume until the contrary is proved that he is an officious intermeddler with the affairs of others. . . . We do hold, that, where both parties are subscribers to the same telephone exchange, and one party, using the telephone directory to ascertain the number of the other party, calls for such other party, and is connected by central with such other party, and a conversation ensues in which the party called responds and informs the party calling that he is the party called, upon proof of such facts, a rebuttable presumption or inference arises sufficient to make a 'prima facie' case of identity."

Upon this point there is a marked judicial inclination to take the liberal view.[7]

In any event, particular additional circumstances may always suffice to complete the gap.[8]

[7] Fed. 1920, Merritt v. U. S., 9th C. C. A., 264 Fed. 870 (hoarding food; witness to a telephone order "from some one at the home of M." whose voice was recognized as that of one giving prior orders, admitted); Cal. 1912, Union Construction Co. v. Western U. Tel. Co., 163 Cal. 298, 125 Pac. 242 (conversation with a purporting agent at the purporting office of the defendant, by telephone call in the usual way, admitted; careful opinion by Shaw, J.); Conn. 1907, General Hospital Soc'y v. New Haven R. Co., 79 Conn. 581, 65 Atl. 1065 (on the facts, a conversation from an unidentified person in the office, apparently having charge, was admitted); Ill. 1890, Obermann Brewing Co. v. Adams, 35 Ill. Ap. 540 (supposed admissions of the authority of O. as agent were rejected, the only evidence of identity being that a telephonic answer was received, to the inquiry about O.'s authority, from what purported to be the defendant's office, but the voice of no employee or firm-member of the defendant being known or recognized by the plaintiff; the Court's reason was that some person not having authority to answer might have answered); 1889, Rock Island & P. R. Co. v. Potter, 36 Ill. 592 (admitting a telephonic admission, as to receipt of stock, purporting to come from some one in the defendant's office); 1907, Godair v. Ham Nat'l Bank, 225 Ill. 572, 80 N. E. 407 (conversation by telephone, purporting to come from G. in his office, received, though the voice was not identified); Md. 1908, Knickerbocker Ice Co. v. Gardiner Dairy Co., 107 Md. 556, 69 Atl. 405 (testimony to sales of ice by defendant, based on telephone conversations with a person responding for the defendant and purporting to be a sales agent, admitted; approving the doctrine in the text above); Mass. 1921, Larner v. Massachusetts B. & I. Co., — Mass. —, 130 N. E. 92 (whether defendant's agent B. had visited plaintiff to consult on proofs of loss on a policy; defendant denied that he had any such agent; a telephone message purporting to come from defendant's office, stating that agent B. was coming, excluded); Mich. 1918, Theisen v. Detroit T. & T. Co., 200 Mich. 136, 166 N. W. 901 (quoted supra); Tex. 1906, St. Louis S. W. R. Co. v. Kennedy, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 96 S. W. 653 (testimony of an offer of wages received by telephone, excluded).

Where the person answering from an office gives no name, it will usually be sufficient to identify him with some employee authorized to make such admissions. But where he gives a name, and the name is that of a person having no authority to make admissions, it is useless to offer evidence of identity or to consider that question at all, because the statements of that person, even if made as alleged, would be irrelevant; an instance of this is found in Morrell v. Lumber Co., 15 Mo. App. 595 (1892).

[8] 1906, Fitzgerald v. Benner, 219 Ill. 485, 76 N. E. 709 (certain telephone inquiries of the opponent's agent, admitted as part of the 'res gestæ,' on the principle of § 1777, ante); 1906, Harrison G. Co. v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 145 Mich. 712, 108 N. W. 1081 (conversations by telephone, admitted, the identity and the authority of the speakers being otherwise shown); 1901, Herendeen Mfg. Co. v. Moore, 66 N. J. L. 74, 48 Atl. 525 (conversation with defendant's agent received, where defendant admitted that he heard and authorized the agent's reply); 1891, Missouri P. R. Co. v. Heidenheimer, 82 Tex. 201, 17 S. W. 608 (here the opponent's admissions were received, the witness having recognized the voice as that of an employee, not known by name, of the opponent, and the details of the conversation further indicated that the answering person was at the opponent's office and familiar with the matter).

The exact nature of the thing to be proved is

(2) The matter of identity or authority not being in dispute, there may still be a question of the Hearsay rule. If B, for example, instead of speaking directly to A, converses with a clerk or telephone-operator at the other end of the line, and the latter reports to B the alleged statements of A just communicated to him, then B is no longer in any view a witness to A's remarks, but only to the operator's or clerk's assertion of what A said to him (ante, § 659), and we are in truth asked to receive the hearsay (i. e. extrajudicial) testimony of the operator or clerk. This situation has elsewhere been examined (ante, § 669).

(3) Occasionally still other principles may be involved, — for example, whether a person may corroborate himself by telling what he stated at the time to be a message received by him; as in an instance elsewhere cited (ante, § 1124).

§ 2156. Presumption of Identity of Person from Identity of Name. The case of a telephone-reply, examined in the preceding section, brings us to the point where the question ceases to be one of authenticating a document and begins to be one of authenticating any parol act purporting to have been done by a given person; and here the presumption of identity of person from identity of name (post, § 2529) plays a most important part. It may always come in question for the general authenticating of documents (ante, § 2133, par. 2); but it is of most frequent application to oral admissions and to grantees and grantors in deeds. The rulings may be of equal service in proving a telephone-answer or a document seen to be signed by one calling himself by a certain name.[1]

3. Authentication by Custody

§ 2158. General Principles, as applied to Judicial Records and Files. When in a government office are kept permanent records under the custody of an officer appointed to that duty, there is commonly little danger in assuming that records found there existing are genuine. It would be difficult as well as criminal to substitute or insert false records. Moreover, the usual mode of authenticating such documents (as by proving the clerk's or officer's not always kept in mind. Thus, in Wolfe v. R. Co., Mo., supra, note 6, Barclay, J., says, of a supposed admission purporting to come from the plaintiff's office: "When a person places himself in connection with the telephone system through an instrument in his office, he thereby invites communication in relation to his business through that channel. Conversations so held are as admissible in evidence as personal interviews by a customer with an unknown clerk in charge of an ordinary shop would be in relation to the business there carried on." Here the learned judge is assuming the very fact in controversy, viz., whether the communication did in fact come from a clerk in the plaintiff's office.

Again, in Gzowski v. Forst (1910), 22 Ont. L. R. 441, the plaintiff testified to a contract-conversation over the telephone with the defendant, then the defendant testified to a different version; witnesses who overheard the defendant's utterances, being present in the room, were received; here the only question could be whether the occasion was the same as that testified to by the plaintiff, and the defendant's testimony was some evidence of that.

§ 2156. [1] For the question whether an opponent's admission of the execution of a writing named is sufficient, see ante, § 2132, par. 3; the missing element might there be supplied by an inference from identity of contents.

handwriting) would be both highly inconvenient, on account of its repeated necessity, and also often impossible, on account of the change of officials as well as the antiquity of many portions of the records. It seems, therefore, never to have been doubted that the existence of an official document in the appropriate official custody is sufficient evidence of its genuineness to go to the jury.[1]

The forms in which the testimony to this fact may be presented are four, according as the witness is the official custodian himself or some other person, namely, A, (a) the official custodian bringing the record into court and identifying it, (b) the official custodian certifying a copy from it, B, (a) a private person bringing the record into court and identifying it, (b) a private person proving a sworn or examined copy of it.

A (a) As to the first method, the identifying of the original by its official custodian bringing it into court, the only question here arising is based on the impolicy of allowing official records to be taken out of the office (post, § 2182).

(b) When the official custodian certifies a copy to be used in evidence, and such a copy is admissible under the Hearsay Exception for Official Statements, the certificate also testifies, expressly or by implication, to the genuineness of the original in his custody from which the copy is made (ante, §§ 1677, 1680).

B (a) When a private person identifies the original, brought into court by him, there arise two difficulties. The first is analogous to that already noticed A (a) (supra), namely, that, even though the production of the original by the official custodian himself may be allowable, yet the taking of it from official custody by a private person exceeds all bounds of propriety and safety, and no testimony obtained in that way can be received. This consideration has weighed with some Courts; but there is no generally accepted distinction of the sort.[2] The second difficulty arises from the necessity of the witness'

§ 2158. [1] Compare the doctrine allowing an officer to testify to a predecessor's official handwriting from acquaintance with the records of the office (ante, § 704).

[2] With the following compare the cases cited ante, §§ 1186, 1244, 1677, and post, § 2182:

Inadmissible: Ark. 1905, Junior v. State, 76 Ark. 483, 89 S. W. 467 (magistrate's record of conviction, one witness having received it from the magistrate's successor, and another identifying the handwriting, excluded: no authority cited; McCulloch, J., diss.; the ruling is unsound); Pa. 1840, Devling v. Williamson, 9 Watts 311, 317 (a paper found in the Court files of another county and brought away by a member of the bar, excluded; such papers should be authenticated by production by the custodian or by his certificate); 1841, Hockenbury v. Carlisle, 1 W. & S. 282 (good opinion); 1851, Garrigues v. Harris, 16 Pa. 344, 351, semble (records brought from the Court by the custodian-clerk; admitted); 1856, Miller v. Hale, 26 Pa. 432, 435 (if the opponent admits genuineness, the official custodian need not attend to authenticate); S. Car. 1833, Perry v. Mays, 1 Hill S. C. 76 (a schedule and assignment offered as a record of the court; there being no intrinsic evidence, such as the seal of court, it must be authenticated by being produced in court by the keeper of the court records, or by his official certificate).

Admissible: Ga. 1897, Columbus v. Ogletree, 102 Ga. 293, 29 S. E. 749, semble (city council minutes sufficiently authenticated by an officer, other than the clerk, having temporary custody); Me. 1860, Hathaway v. Addison, 48 Me. 440, 443 (town records identified by another than the clerk; "we know of no rule of law which requires the identification of such a record by any officer of the town; it is sufficient if it be proved by any competent testifying to finding the records in the appropriate custody; he must clearly know and show that its place of origin was the proper one. This question is identical with that arising under the next mode.

(b) When a private person testifies to a sworn or examined copy of a public record, i. e. a record examined by him for the purpose of making the copy, it is obvious that proving the copy includes not only proof that its contents are a correct transcription of the original, but also that the original was the genuine one it purported to be; here certain details develop:

(1) A witness to a copy must of course speak from personal knowledge (ante, § 1278), and the witness' personal knowledge can here extend only to the fact of official custody. This fact (as above noted) suffices to authenticate, but it must be clearly made to appear. Accordingly, some strictness is shown in testing the proof of this fact:[3]

1816, ELLENBOROUGH, L. C. J., in Adamthwaite v. Synge, 4 Camp. 372, 1 Stark. 183 (rejecting a witness to a copy of an Irish judgment, who was taken by an attorney to the court-record room, and shown a parchment; but he did not see whence it was obtained nor know who produced it for him). . . . "It must in the first place be proved by the witness that the original came out of the proper custody; this cannot be shown by any witness who knows the fact"); Va. 1868, Bullard v. Thomas, 19 Gratt. 14, 18 (record-book from another Court is sufficiently proved by one who knows it to be such, whether clerk or not); and the cases cited infra, note 3, and post, § 2159, note 1, where the present difficulty was not raised.

Some Courts reach the result by declaring judicial notice of their own records, at least in the same suit, when produced: post, § 2579; but this is really a ruling that the custody is sufficient evidence of genuineness, for the real question is whether a particular piece of paper is what it purports to be.

Statute sometimes provides for the anomalous process of producing an official record itself without the custodian, and without testimony of the party producing: Nev. Rev. L. 1912, § 5409 (custodian's certificate; quoted ante, § 1680).

[3] The principle has been applied to judicial records in the following cases, which include instances of the production of the original: Ill. 1844, Williams v. Jarrot, 6 Ill. 120, 127 (judicial records in the proper custody; authentication not required); Ind. 1828, Modisett v. Governor, 2 Blackf. 135, 137 (receipts in the reputed docket of a justice, which was in the possession of another justice, not assumed genuine); Kan. 1906, State v. Schaeffer, 74 Kan. 390, 86 Pac. 477 (Federal revenue collector's records, proved by an examined copy); Me. 1841, Vose v. Manly, 1 Appl. 331, 332 (original record of a court-martial; admitted, being produced from the Adjutant-General's office); 1920, Audibert v. Michaud, 119 Me. 295, 111 Atl. 305 (town record of marriage, produced by the wife of the town clerk, acting as deputy; in his absence, admitted; "the person who produces the record in court is important only as proving that the book produced is the identical record"); Mich. 1901, McLeod v. Crosby, 128 Mich. 641, 87 N. W. 883 (files obtained from the clerk of the court, held sufficiently authenticated); Pa. 1826, Eisenhart v. Slaymaker, 14 S. & R. 153, 155 (an original record of a judgment formerly rendered in the same court, identified as coming from the Supreme Court, received); S. Car. 1831, Browning v. Huff, 2 Bail. 174, 180 (proof of signature of the Ordinary in a probate book, and that the book was his original record, sufficient); Tex. 1906, Smithers v. Lowrance, 100 Tex. 77, 93 S. W. 1064 (examined copy of land-office records, made by one to whom the land-commissioner pointed out the records in his office, admitted).

Compare the citations ante, § 1273 (examined copies).

Where one part of a record is sufficiently authenticated, the remainder may sometimes be received when it is referred to in the authenticated part and its identity can be ascertained by inspection: Eng. 1800, Jackson v. Burleigh, 3 Esp. 34 (malicious arrest; the writ was produced by a witness who said "it had been sent up to him in a letter"; it was excluded; but on proving the warrant founded on it, the writ was admitted); U. S. 1807, Stevelie v. Lowry, 2 Brev. S. C. 135 (original execution with a copy of the judgment, in another court-district; execution objected to as "only admissible when offered to a court of which it is of record, and can only legally be known to form a part of the record exemplified when certified" by the proper keeper; received, when found by inspection to be a part of the proceedings under the judgment).

light reflected from the record itself, which may have been improperly placed where it was found. . . . If the witness had stated that the record came out of the hands of the proper officer, it would have been sufficient. The evidence must be launched by proving that the document came either from the proper person or proper place."

(2) By statute, an express form is often laid down for an examined copy of a judicial record, and sometimes it is required anomalously to bear the Court seal.[4]

(3) The case of papers purporting to be executed by another person than the official, but filed with the record as a part of it, is a difficult one to resolve, and there seems to be little authority regarding it;[5] but it may be suggested that the test should be whether it is made the duty of the custodian to satisfy himself of the genuineness of the document before filing it, or whether in a subsequent part of the judicial proceedings the document in question has been treated as genuine by the Court or by the party now charged. A document satisfying either of these tests should be received as sufficiently evidenced, if it is found filed in the appropriate place.[6] The case of a bill or answer or affidavit in chancery has often been passed upon in rulings which seem to justify some such generalization.[7]

[4] Cal. C. C. P. 1872, § 1907 (a copy of a judicial record of a foreign country is admissible on proof, "1, that the copy offered has been compared by the witness with the original and is an exact transcript of the whole of it; 2, that such original was in the custody of the clerk of the court or other legal keeper of the same; 3, that the copy is duly attested by a seal which is proved to be the seal of the court where the record remains, if it be a court of record, or, if there be no such seal or if it be not a record of a court, by the signature of the legal keeper of the original"); Colo. Comp. St. 1921, C. C. P. § 395 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1907); Ida. Comp. St. 1919, § 7951 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1907); Mich. Comp. L. 1915, § 12504 (record of a court in a foreign country, provable by sworn copy by one who compared the copy with the original in custody of the clerk or legal custodian, the copy being attested by seal proved to be that of the court); Mont. Rev. C. 1921, § 10557 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1907); Nev. Rev. L. 1912, § 5412 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1907); N. Y. C. P. A. 1920, § 396 (an attested copy of a foreign judicial record is provable by an examined copy, with the examiner's testimony to the legal custody of the original and the genuineness of its attestation); Or. Laws 1920, § 755 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1907, omitting the clause about a record not of a court); P. I. C. C. P. 1901, § 305 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1907); Utah: Comp. L. 1917, § 7090 (like Cal. C. C. P. 1907).

[5] 1821, Wood v. Fitz, 10 Mart. La. 196, 201 ("the bonds taken by the officers of the court, in pursuance to law, are matters of record, when put on the files of the court, and need no proof of the officer's signature"); 1903, Craw v. Abrams, 68 Nebr. 546, 94 N. W. 639; 97 N. W. 296 (official bond, in the proper custody and recorded as approved, held not sufficiently authenticated); 1835, Kello v. Maget, 1 Dev. & B. N. C. 414, 422 (guardian's bond taken by a Court and preserved among its records; authenticity presumed); 1860, Boyd v. Com., 36 Pa. 355, 359 (trustee's bond approved and filed in Court, admitted; "it might and ought to be inferred in such a case that its genuineness had been inquired of and passed on by the Court").

[6] Compare the precedents on a similar question, ante, § 1677, where the effect of a certified copy, as evidence of the genuineness of filed documents, is considered.

[7] England: 1689, R. v. James, 1 Show. 397 (perjury upon an affidavit in Chancery; held in answer to an objection that there was no proof that it was really the defendant's, that the affidavit being of the defendant in the cause and used by him upon motion in Court, it's enough; . . . a copy of an affidavit only, produced against a man, without proof that he made it, used it, or was concerned in the cause, that would be insufficient"); 1726, Gilbert, Evidence, 49 (chancery papers filed, admissible; unless there have been no proceedings on the bill; for such a bill "is of no use to the party, and therefore must be supposed rather to be filed by a stranger to do him an injury"); 1777, Cameron v. Lightfoot, 2 Wm. Bl. 1191 (affidavit in the same court in a former suit now the subject of an action for malicious prosecution, admitted without proving signature, "being filed in the very court where the action was tried"); 1817, Hennell v. Lyon, 1 B. & Ald. 182, 185 (admitting a copy of a bill and answer in Chancery; "the answer, being a proceeding in a court of justice, must have been received there in the usual course, and verified by the person putting it in, as the answer of the person sustaining the character which it imparts him to bear"); 1824, Dartnall v. Howard, Ry. & Mo. 169 (examined copy of answer in Chancery, admitted); 1825, Rees v. Bowen, 1 McCl. & Y. 383, 389, 391 (affidavit in another suit, offered as an admission, without evidence that it had ever been used in the other suit; excluded; "it appears to have been found in the office, but there is no proof by whom it was put there, or that it was used"); 1827, Highfield v. Peake, M. & M. 109 (deposition, admitted by examined copy); especially as the trial was on an issue out of Chancery); 1849, R. v. Turner, 2 C. & K. 732, 736 (affidavit; proof of handwriting of the witness and of an officer signing "By the Court"; the proper swearing, and presence of the officer in Court, held sufficiently shown).

§ 2159. Same: Application to Sundry Official Records. The same general principles apply to official records of all sorts.[1] The fact of the document

United States: 1837, Doughton v. Tillay, 4 Blackf. Ind. 433 (purporting answer in chancery, not shown to be filed, excluded).

For the question whether on proof of the answer's genuineness, identity of name suffices to show the identity with the party charged, see post, § 2529.

§ 2159. [1] CANADA: 1850, Wiggins v. McLean, 1 All. N. Br. 671 (surveyor's return, admitted; "it is filed in a public office and purports to be an official return").

UNITED STATES: Ark. 1903, Miller v. Johnston, 71 Ark. 174, 72 S. W. 371 (deposition stating that "a copy is attached" of the rules of a cotton exchange, held insufficient, for lack of any statement as to the place of custody or other circumstance indicating the genuineness of the original); Fla. Rev. Gen. St. 1919, § 3832 (a record in the appropriate book of an instrument required or authorized to be recorded is "presumed to have been made by the officer whose duty it was to make it"); Ill. 1871, Rockford v. Hildebrand, 61 Ill. 155, 159 (city records from clerk's office, admitted on the facts); La. 1881, Hebert's Succession, 33 La. An. 1099, 1105 (entry in a marriage register in official custody, assumed genuine); Me. 1824, Sumner v. Sebec, 3 Greenl. 223 (town record of marriages, received from former town clerk, admitted); Mass. 1886, Com. v. Richardson, 142 Mass. 71, 72, 7 N. E. 26 (lease of a pond purporting to be executed by public commissioners with authority, not received without proof of authenticity; here the commissioners were to have custody of leases so granted, and this document came from other custody); Minn. 1866, Sanborn v. School District, 12 Minn. 17, 28 (book of school-records in clerk's custody, sufficiently proved on the facts); 1875, Board v. Smith, 22 Minn. 97, 102, 115 (entries "paid," with defendant's signature, on town assessment-books, the existence of the entries when the books were in the defendant's custody as treasurer not being shown; genuineness not presumed); Mo. 1881, Alexander v. Campbell, 74 Mo. 142, 147 (book of deed records, custody not shown, excluded); N. H. 1858, Ferguson v. Clifford, 37 N. H. 86, 95; 1858, Little v. Downing, ib. 355, 364 ("official books, or books kept by persons in public office, in which they are required to write down the proceedings of some public body or corporation, . . . where the books themselves are adduced, and it is proved or admitted that they come from the proper depository, are received as evidence without further attestation"); N. J. 1897, Schubert Lodge v. Schubert Verein, 56 N. J. Eq. 78, 38 Atl. 347 (printed copy of the constitution of a secret order, the State-lodge secretary receiving it from the supreme lodge secretary; genuineness of the original presumed); N. Y. Laws 1884, c. 376, § 1, C. P. A. 1920, § 336 (municipal corporation's payments; receipt for money is provable by the fact of production from official files, if purporting to be given six years before commencement of proceedings); Okl. 1921, Bradshaw v. State, — Okl. Cr. —, 197 Pac. 715 (document purporting to be a school census, excluded because not shown to come from the proper custody); Pa. 1820, Miller v. Carothers, 6 S. & R. 215, 221 (survey-draft found in the office among the official papers of a deputy-surveyor, presumed genuine, if the official had received orders on that matter); 1821, Leazure v. Hillegas, 7 S. & R. 313, 317 (survey in the handwriting of a deputy-surveyor, though not found among official papers, admitted); 1835, Snyder v. Bowman, 4 Watts 132 (survey in the handwriting of a deputy-surveyor, found among official papers, excluded); 1836, Com. v. Alburger, 1 Whart. 469, 473 (ancient official plan of Philadelphia, found in the surveyor-general's office, accredited by the officers as authentic, received); 1841, Hockenbury v. Carlisle, 1 W. & S. 282 (tax-books provable by exemplified copies, but if not, then by one who has the keeping of them officially; here, not by an ex-clerk of the office); 1869, Baird v. Rice, 63 Pa. 489, 497 (like Com. v. Alburger); S. C. 1901, Steen, Ex parte, 59 S. C. 220, 37 S. E. 829 (books conceded to be those of the sheriff's office, admitted, as made by his authority); Tex. 1849, Houston v. Perry, 5 Tex. 462, 465 (land-office book, proved genuine by custody).

For the peculiar case of a Spanish 'testimonio,' see the following rulings: 1851, Paschal v. Perez, 7 Tex. 348; 1860, Word v. McKinney, 25 Tex. 258, 268.

purporting to be an official document and being found in the appropriate custody suffices to evidence its genuineness. An occasional apparent opposition of rulings indicates that perhaps the rule is one which is and ought to be more or less affected in its application by the circumstances of each case and the customs of official care and strictness in each locality. The rule may even be applied to admit entries made or documents filed by third persons in official records,[2] within the limits already suggested (ante, § 2158, par. bb). But a purporting official record, lacking the signature or other verifying attestation, will usually be treated with strictness, so that the appropriate custody alone will not suffice to authenticate it.[3]

§ 2160. Documents produced from Private Custody; (1) Opponent producing on Notice; (2) Indorsements on Negotiable Instruments. During the vogue of the attesting-witness rule, an unsound doctrine obtained a partial vogue that an opponent producing a document from his possession on notice admitted its genuineness, so that the attester need not be called (ante, § 1298). Obviously the mere possession of any document, especially one purporting to be signed by a third person, should not be treated as an admission of genuineness.

But, apart from any principle of Admissions, and looking only at the circumstantial value (ante, § 2131) of the party's possession, may it not fairly be said that a party's possession of documents purporting to be made by himself, and, particularly, of documents used and acted on by him in the ordinary conduct of his business, is sufficient evidence of their genuineness to justify their reception? This rule would be justified, not only by the inference thus drawn from daily experience, but also by the fact that the burden of disproof of genuineness, if it is actually disputed, can the more readily be placed in such a case on the party himself.

[2] 1866, Rice v. Cunningham, 29 Cal. 492, 498 (entry of release or discharge on the margin of a mortgage record, to be assumed genuine; "the presumption of law is that the discharge has been regularly and honestly entered"); 1846, Bouchaud v. Dias, 3 Den. 238, 241 (release of a Government claim by the secretary of the treasury, deposited in the department, not assumed genuine as a public document).

[3] 1870, Hall v. People, 21 Mich. 456, 460 (alleged records of township officers, not assumed official from the recitals merely); 1878, Wilt v. Cutler, 38 Mich. 189, 195 (record of a deed; presence in the proper office, though unsigned, may suffice); 1860, Hall v. Manchester, 40 N. H. 410, 413 (a deceased town-clerk's supposed copy of a record of the selectmen, not attested by him; the genuineness of the entry being shown, the place of the copy in the clerk's book was held sufficient evidence of its being intended as a true copy); 1795, Penn v. Hartman, 2 Dall. Pa. 230 (old survey, in the surveyor-general's office, but not signed or otherwise authenticable, not received as official); 1830, Booge v. Parsons, 2 Vt. 456, 459 (record of a lost deed nearly 40 years old, received; the clerk's attestation of record being lacking, but his handwriting being proved); 1832, Johnson v. McGuire, 4 Vt. 327 (clerk's certificate of a record, unsigned in part, proved by handwriting); 1848, Northfield v. Plymouth, 20 Vt. 582, 588 (old record of marriage in town records; no attestation appearing, proof of handwriting of the clerk sufficed).

The case of a marriage certificate handed over by the celebrant official to the parties is generally treated as sufficiently authenticated by that circumstance (though it may perhaps better be justified on the principle noted ante, § 2131, par. 3 (c)): 1855, Northrop v. Knowles, 52 Conn. 522, 525 (marriage certificate; that it was given by the officiating magistrate, sufficient); 1894, Fratini v. Caslani, 66 Vt. 273, 274, 29 Atl. 252 (certificate of marriage; authenticity evidenced by fact that it was given to parties at time by celebrant priest). Compare the cases cited ante, § 1644.

For corporate records, which raise certain complications of the substantive law, see Thompson on Corporations, § 7737; 1905, Lowry Nat'l Bank v. Fickett, 122 Ga. 489, 50 S. E. 395; and cases cited post, § 2169.

Such a rule has thus far formed acceptance in two classes of cases only:

(1) Where one party calls upon the opponent (either by discovery, ante, § 1859, or at the trial, post, § 2219) to produce documents made and possessed by the latter, and the latter does produce the described documents, this is sufficient evidence of genuineness, by statute in at least one State,[1] — a statute which might well be imitated.

(2) Where a negotiable instrument is produced from the custody of the obligee or his successor, an indorsement of payment thereon is presumed to have been made by the obligee or by his authority.[2]

4. Authentication by Official Seal or Signature

§ 2161. General Principle. The history of the seal is the history of an epoch in our law. It is the source of rules distinguishing the Anglo-American system of law from its predecessors. Out of the use of the seal grew the two great doctrines of the authenticity and the indisputability of written instruments. It is with the former that we are here concerned.[1]

As the doctrine survives to us to-day, it is in the shape of a settled rule that the genuineness of certain purporting official seal-impressions need not be evidenced otherwise than by the production for inspection of the document bearing them.

1. The History. The various stages of development, in more primitive times, need not be here rehearsed.[2] It is necessary only (in these days of the extinct vogue of private seals) to notice enough of the history to appreciate how this doctrine, now accepted on mere tradition, once rested upon reasons so practical and so convincing that its living force was apparent to all:

1894, M. Arthur Giry, Manuel de Diplomatique, c. IX, pp. 622, 649, 836: "Of all the methods used in the Middle Ages to validate written instruments, the most common was § 2160. [1] La. St. 1915, No. 11 (trusts and monopolies; defendant's books and documents shall be received in evidence "without other formality than proof of their having been in the archives or in the possession or under the control of the defendant").

Compare the doctrine about corporate records (post, § 2169).

[2] 1886, Chamberlain v. Chamberlain, 116 Ill. 480, 484 (an indorsement of payment on a note is presumed to have been made by the payee or on his authority, when the note is produced from the custody of the party entitled under him; otherwise, when produced by the obligor); 1827, Stocking v. Fairchild, 5 Pick. Mass. 181 (action on a mortgage-title; a condition of mortgage, written on the back of the deed, presumed to be "a part of the original contract"); 1862, Turrell v. Morgan, 7 Minn. 372, 375 (note offered, containing indorsements of payment; proof of the note does not raise a presumption of the genuineness of the indorsements); 1881, Bailey v. Danforth, 53 Vt. 504 (promissory note given by the deceased payee to the plaintiff, and bearing an indorsement of payment of date before the statute had run; semble, the indorsement presumed to be in the payee's hand and of the purporting date).

Compare the presumption of delivery from possession (post, § 2520), the presumption of payment from possession (post, § 2518), and the rule for admitting indorsements of payments as statements against interest (ante, § 1466).

§ 2161. [1] The history of the latter is examined post, § 2426.

[2] The following works contain the history on the Continent: 1877, Ficker, Beitraege zur Urkundenlehre, I, §§ 57–59; 1887, Posse, Die Lehre von Privaturkunden; 1889, Bresslau, Handbuch der Urkundenlehre, 501–555, especially 517–520, 539–544 ("the law was as expressed by the Zurich writing-master Konrad V. Mure in 1275, that 'the whole credibility of a document rests upon an authentic, well-known, and notorious seal'"); 1894, Giry, Manuel de diplomatique; 1920, Tout, cited above: and sources cited post, § 2426.

the affixing of the seal. In general vogue under the Roman Empire, its use fell away in the period of the Germanic conquests, and was limited for several centuries to the royal chancelleries only. After the close of the 900s, its vogue began once more to spread; and from the 1100s to the 1400s inclusive the seal was the most generally used mark of validation. Then the rise of the written signature, and the employment of paper as a material, once more diminished the vogue of the seal; but it remained in use, nevertheless, in its pristine form, for formal documents of the royal chancelleries, and, in the form of a signet, for private individuals. . . .

"The seals of sovereigns, barons, prelates, churches, and municipalities were from the very beginning used to guarantee the authenticity, not only of those instruments in which the owner of the seal bound himself or was otherwise a party; but also of all documents to which it was desired to give (in legal phraseology) an 'authentic' character, — including contracts and deeds of private persons (other than the owner of the seal). It was natural, particularly in the regions where notaries public were unknown, for such private persons to have recourse, when executing documents that affected legal rights, to those superior authorities whose seals could give authenticity to the document. For it must not be supposed that, even after the general spread of the seal in the 1200s, all seals alike were credited with equal value for this purpose. Though any one whosoever could possess a seal, yet these private persons' seals had no other credit than to-day is accorded to a personal signature or seal. They were indeed used, in executing documents, to indicate one's personal sanction or liability, and to supplement an 'authentic' document with one's personal guarantee, for example, on private letters, receipts, orders, and the like. But deeds, or like instruments, which bore no other mark of validation than the seal of a private individual were not deemed to be drawn in 'public form,' and were treated in law as merely 'documents under private signet,' — as the modern expression has it. Beaumanoir, for example, speaking of the authority of seals, guards his statement thus: 'However, it is not meet that the seals of a common subject should be of so great authority that it will be credited in any case without other testimony. . . . The seal of a gentleman is not authentic, nor has credit in court.' Ever since the beginning of the 1200s we find the laws and treatises using the expression 'authentic seal' ('sigillum authenticum'); under this term the lawyers recognized only the seals of persons or groups having a legal jurisdictional authority, viz., sovereigns, feudal lords, bishops, churches, and municipalities.

"Such a prerogative naturally tended to be exploited to the profit of its possessors; and sovereigns were not slow in providing, each in his jurisdiction, special kinds of seals, known as 'contract-seals,' and in appointing an official as keeper of this seal, whose duty was to give to the deeds of private persons the guarantee of the royal seal. . . . In the course of the 1200s, bishops, archdeacons, and abbots came also to possess seals of jurisdiction in the exercise of their ecclesiastical powers. In France, it does not appear that the seals of any other ecclesiastical officials had the force of authenticity. But in England, in 1237, by the Council of London, the right to validate contracts by their seals was accorded not only to bishops and their deputies, but even to priors, deans, chapters, and others. Matthew Paris, in his Chronicles, thus records the ordinance: 'Of those who can have authentic seals: Inasmuch as notaries are not in vogue in England, and for this reason it is the more needful to resort to authentic seals, and an abundance of such should be available, now therefore we ordain that seals may be possessed, not only by archbishops and bishops, but also by their deputies, also by abbots, priors, deans, archdeacons and their deputies, rural deans, and also chapters of churches, and all other bodies, with their rectors or separately, according to their usage or ordinance. For distinguishing them, furthermore, each of the said bodies or persons shall have a seal graved, in known and legible characters, with the name of the title, office, or body, and also the individual name of those who enjoy the honor of the permanent title or office. And this their seal shall be authentic.' . . .

"This principle of conferring 'authenticity' on the documents of private persons by giving them the guarantee of the seal of a superior jurisdictional authority, was of general application during the Middle Ages in the northern (or 'customary') regions of France. The usual way to provide this proof for a contract was for the party to present himself before the judge and there to make acknowledgment ('recognitio,' 'confessio') of the execution of the contract, which acknowledgment the judge recorded in the form of a letter, validated by his seal, — generally termed 'letter of acknowledgment.' This custom dates from the beginning of the 1200s, — the period in which the theory of the 'authentic document' took on that form in northern France which it had reached after passing through successive phases. . . . This custom, spreading down from the sovereign chancelleries to the feudal lords and the bishops, with the spread of the seal, became an everyday affair. . . . The bishops seem to have been the first to regularize the exploitation of their seal of office, by establishing in their ecclesiastical courts of justice, what might be called a special service for this voluntary jurisdiction; and it would seem that more than one feature of the bishops' system was borrowed by the royal and the baronial administrations. . . . In France, the loss caused to the royal treasury by the increasing resort to the church's officials for authenticating deeds and contracts, led not only to competition but also to restriction, and royalty sought to establish the principle that this right of authentication by seal was a royal prerogative."

1920, Professor T. F. Tout, The King's Seal, and Sealing as the Means of Authentication (Chapters in the Administrative History of Mediaeval England, c. IV, p. 121): "The multiplication of royal seals towards the end of the twelfth century was a result of the process, completed somewhat earlier, by which the apposition of a seal became for the greater part of Western Europe the most general method of proving the authenticity of all public and private documents. As far as England and Northern France were concerned, the only way by which a man could validate his documentary acts was by sealing them with his seal.

"Elsewhere, notably in Italy, there was an alternative to sealing, in the public notarial act, drawn up in rigidly formal fashion by a class of scribes styled notaries. These notaries, sometimes also called 'tabelliones,' practised on their own account, but were authorized by emperors, popes, princes, bishops and towns in such a fashion that their acts were recognized as possessing a public and official character. Organized in corporations with a strong professional tradition, and a systematic training, the Italian notaries drew up most private and many public acts, which owed their validity partly to the technical form of their composition, and partly to the characteristic 'signa,' or signs manual, affixed by each authorized notary with his own hand. These marks constituted evidence of authenticity corresponding to the seal of the north and west. During the period with which we are dealing, the notarial system was extended from Italy to southern France, where it became very firmly established. At an early date notaries began to win a footing in some parts of northern France, notably in the county of Flanders, and even in Normandy. Somewhat later, also, they began to establish themselves in Germany. But their influence in these regions remained restricted.

"When in the thirteenth century northern France began to establish its authority over the south, sealed acts tended to replace notarial acts. Along with Gothic architecture, the 'langue d'oil', customary law, and monarchical centralisation, so authentication by seal was to the 'langue d'oc' one of the many signs of the preponderance of northern influence. The triumph of the seal over the notarial act came out decidedly in the edict of 1291, in which Philip the Fair ordered that no credit was henceforth to be given to any notarial instrument unless it received the additional validation of an authentic seal. In England, also, the notarial system began to appear in the course of the thirteenth century, but it was always there an exotic and foreign custom, and notaries were never much employed, save in the drawing up of certain restricted types of diplomatic documents, and some sorts of private contracts of international character which perforce had to assume a form in which they were acceptable in lands where notarial acts were more usual than sealed documents.

"As a result, England ever remained emphatically a land of seals, the employment of which became essential to the authentication of all public and private documents. It followed from this that every person of property or official position, down to the humblest, ultimately felt bound to provide himself with a seal. For us, however, it is more important that the immense development of administrative centralisation during the Angevin period resulted in an enormous demand upon the royal seal, and practically required its reduplication.

"The continuous history of sealing in England only begins on the eve of the Norman conquest. Even on the continent the usage of signet seals, common all over the Roman empire, almost died away in the dark ages, when documents were validated by signatures, crosses of witnesses, and other marks of 'signa.' Even when seals were employed, as they were by the Merovingian sovereigns, the subscription of the 'referendarius,' who composed the document, seems to have been regarded as better evidence of its validity than its seal. The revival of seals was, like the revival of the notarial system, a symptom of the Carolingian renascence, and by the tenth and eleventh centuries not only sovereigns, but every great baron and bishop, had his seal. The seals of the Carolingian monarchs differ in type from the signet rings of antiquity. Following their fashion, lay and ecclesiastical magnates, who had from early times had signets of their own, began also to use seals which were different in type from the ancient signet. During the eleventh century the use of seals as evidence of the validity of documents became so common that they gradually pushed into the background, and ultimately made obsolete, in all western lands, the earlier methods of attesting the authenticity of documents."

1867, Mr. J. C. Jeaffreson, A Book about Lawyers, I, 21: "The Great Seal. In days when writing was an art almost entirely confined to religious persons, sealing was a far more important and efficacious means of testifying the genuineness of documents than it is at present. . . . In the feudal ages any needy clerk who had turned his attention to caligraphy could have perpetrated forgeries in perfect confidence that they would endure the scrutiny of the most accurate and skilful of living readers. But the necessity for sealing placed almost insuperable obstacles in the way of those who were best qualified and most desirous to triumph over right by fictitious deeds. It was no easy matter to procure seals of any kind; it was very difficult to obtain for dishonest ends the temporary possession of well-known seals. . . . . Great barons, ecclesiastical dignitaries, secular and religious corporations, had distinctive seals at an early date; but they were confided to the care of trusty keepers, and were guarded with jealousy. When an official seal was used, its keeper brought it with reverential care from its customary place of concealment, and it was not applied to any document without satisfactory cause shown why its sanction was required. An obscure tamperer with parchments could not hope to lay his hands on one of these important seals. If he procured an impression of a respected seal, he could not obtain a fac-simile of the original. Seal-engraving was an art in which there were but few adepts; and the artists were for the most part men to whom no rogue would dare propose the hazardous task of counterfeiting an official device. . . . The forger of deeds in older time had not overcome all difficulties, when he had surreptitiously obtained a seal. The mere act of sealing was by no means the simple matter that it is now-a-days. To place the seal on fit labels rightly placed, and in all respects to make the fictitious deed an accurate imitation of the intended deeds to which the particular seal of a particular great man was applied, were no trifling feats of dexterity, ere scriveners had congregated into fraternities and law-stationers had been called into existence. To get a supply of suitable wax was an undertaking by no means easy in accomplishment. Sealing-wax was not to be bought by the pound or stick in every street of feudal London. 'Cire d'Espagne' — sealing-wax akin to the bright vermilion compound now in use — was not invented till the middle of the sixteenth century. William Howe assures his readers that 'the earliest letter known to have been sealed with it was written from London August 3, 1554, to Heingrave Philip Francis von Daun, by his agent in England, Gerrand Herman,' and long after that date the manufacture of sealing-wax was a secret known to comparatively few persons. In feudal England there were divers adhesive compounds used for sealing. Every keeper of an official seal had his own recipe for wax. Sometimes the wax was white; sometimes it was yellow; occasionally it was tinged with vegetable dyes; most frequently it was a mess bearing much resemblance to the dirt-pies of little children. But its combination was a mystery to the vulgar; and no man could safely counterfeit a sealing-impression who had not at command a stock of a particular sealing-earth or paste or wax. Eyes powerless to detect the falsity of a forger's handwriting could see at a glance whether his wax was of the right colour. Moreover, this practice of attesting private deeds by public or well-known seals gave to transactions a publicity which was the most valuable sort of attestation. A simple knight could not obtain the impression of his feudal chieftain's seal without a formal request, and a full statement of the business in hand. The wealthy burgher, who obtained permission to affix a municipal seal to a private parchment, proclaimed the transaction which occasioned the request. The thriving freeholder who was allowed the use of his lord's graven device had first sought for the privilege openly. 'Quia sigillum meum plurimis est incognitum' were the words introduced into the clause of attestation; and the words show that publicity was his object. And to attain that object the seal was pressed in open court, in the presence of many witnesses."

2. The Rule. The rule has been phrased in various terms. But the same policy, in modern times, has always served as the foundation of it, namely, the great inconvenience, amounting sometimes to practical impossibility, of furnishing any further evidence, as well as the slight danger of forgery in such cases. The kinds of seals to which this rule applies have never been the subject of uniform judicial enumeration; but the general principle has been universally accepted:

1726, Chief Baron GILBERT, Evidence, 19: "Here the distinction is to be made between seals of public and seals of private credit; for seals of public credit are full evidence in themselves, without any oath made; but seals of private credit are no evidence but by an oath concurring to their credibility. Seals of public credit are the seals of the king, and of the public courts of justice, time out of mind."

1816, GOULD, J., in Griswold v. Pitcairn, 2 Conn. 85, 90: "In the proof of foreign documents, there must from the nature and necessity of the case be some ultimate limit, beyond which no solemnity of authentication can be required. And the public national seal of a Kingdom or sovereign State is, by the common consent and usage of civilized communities, the highest evidence and the most solemn sanction of authenticity, in relation to proceedings either diplomatic or judicial, that is known in the intercourse of nations. . . . But there is no evidence, it is said, that the seal was affixed by a proper officer. Assuming the seal to be genuine, that fact must of course be presumed, unless the contrary is shown. For any higher evidence of the fact, appearing upon the face of the record, than the seal itself imports, is impossible, and to require extrinsic evidence of it would be to subvert the rule itself that a national seal is the highest proof of authenticity."

3. The Theory. What is the significance of this rule? What is it that Courts actually do, evidentially, when they accept such seals with no further evidence? The theory of the matter has been so overlaid with conventional phrases about "judicial notice" and "presumptions," and is so closely related in practice to the Hearsay exception admitting official statements (ante, §§ 1630–1638), that it is necessary at the outset to analyze the precise nature of the process:

When a document bearing a purporting official seal — a notary's certificate of protest, for example — is offered in court, the acceptance of it for the offered purpose involves the assumption of four things, namely, (1) that there is an official of that name, (2) that this is genuinely his seal's impression, (3) that this seal-impression was affixed by him; and, furthermore, (4) that it is allowable to receive his hearsay official statement as testimony to the fact stated by him. The first three of these elements go to the matter of the genuineness of the document; that is to say, the document purports to be that of J. S., a notary, asserting a certain fact, and the net result of the first three elements is that we accept as a fact that J. S., a notary, did make this written assertion. If there were a signature only, with no seal, and the document was similarly accepted, the second and third elements would merge (i. e. the purporting J. S.'s signature is accepted as written by him); it is only in the case of a seal that they are distinct (for it might be his seal's impression and yet another person might have affixed it). Thus it is that the second and third elements are always judicially united, i. e. any presumption of genuineness, whenever made, covers both elements; there is no case presuming the seal's impression to have been of his seal but not affixed by him, nor 'vice versa.' Hence, in effect, the situation, for seal or signature alike, is reducible to the following elements and is so in practice treated: (1) that there is an official of that name; (2) (3) that this document was genuinely executed by him. Now the remaining element (4), that this hearsay statement of his is admissible, is obviously concerned with the Hearsay rule only, and may therefore be dismissed as having no present relation with the principle of Authentication. There remain therefore to be considered the first three (or two) elements above noted.

Of these, the elements (2) (3) are obviously pure questions of Authentication; i. e. the acceptance of the document signifies that we have somehow assumed that this document was genuinely executed by one J. S. What is the true nature of this process? Is it the process of Judicial Notice? It is sometimes dealt with in these terms.[3] But this seems clearly unsound. In the first place, the principle of judicial notice, i. e. of assuming the truth of an allegation without any evidence (post, § 2565), rests on the conceded notoriety of the fact alleged, as being too well known to need evidence; obviously this can never be the case with the specific act of executing a particular document. In the next place, the doctrine of judicial notice applies as soon as the allegation is made, without any evidence whatsoever in its support (post, § 2565); it would follow that, as soon as the party alleged by counsel that J. S. had executed an alleged document, the Court must notice that as a fact, and no production of a purporting seal or signature would be necessary; but this is obviously not the practice. Furthermore, it is conceivable that a Court might judicially know what the design of a certain public seal was, but this would not of itself enable the judge to declare that the specific impression offered in court was genuine or forged. It would seem, then, that what is actually done is not done by virtue of any doctrine of judicial notice. It is, on the contrary, a simple instance of declaring that sufficient evidence of genuineness exists, on the general principle of Authentication (ante, § 2130). The fact constituting this sufficient evidence is the existence upon the document of an impression or writing purporting to be the official seal or signature; and this may well serve as sufficient evidence because the forgery of the seal or signature would be a crime, and detection would be fairly easy and certain.[4]

[3] For example: "The seal of a notary public is judicially taken notice of" (Greenleaf, Evidence, § 5).

On the other hand, the element (1) noted above, namely, that the J. S. who has thus genuinely executed this document is the official that he purports to be, is a real result of the principle of Judicial Notice. This element is wholly separable from that of the authenticity of the paper. Whether by witnesses or otherwise we prove the paper genuine, we arrive simply at the fact that a certain J. S. executed this as an official paper. It is thus genuinely all that it purports to be, and its authentication is complete. But that J. S. is the officer that he claims to be is still a fact external to the document, and must be reached by some other principle than that of authentication. That principle is here judicial notice. So far as the incumbent of any office is judicially noticed, when his acts are in question, this notice of him when he executes a document is merely an application of the general principle to a particular variety of act; the same thing would have been done had his act not been a documentary one. It seems, then, that the satisfaction of this element (1) — namely, that J. S., the purporting notary, is actually the lawful incumbent of that office — is reached by a true application of the principle of judicial notice.[5]

What we find, then, is this general rule: So far as a particular seal or signature is held to admit a document, the purporting impression of a specific seal or signature evidences the document as genuinely executed by the purporting person, and his official character is assumed without evidence.

§ 2162. Same: Mode of Authenticating when Genuineness is not Presumed; Certificates of Attestation; Statutes presuming Genuineness. Suppose, now, that the seal or signature is one of a kind which does not sufficiently evidence its own genuineness, — a tax-collector in another State, for example. Its genuineness therefore remains to be proved by testimony. The inconvenience of producing a witness who of his knowledge can testify to the genuineness of the seal or signature would be intolerable, and a resort to hearsay testimony in the shape of official statements has long been accepted as proper. But who is the appropriate officer to make such statements? Naturally, at common law, that chief officer at the source of executive power, who knows what persons have been appointed and what are their seals or signatures. He must also know their duties, and be authorized to certify to these, because the document, being usually offered as a hearsay statement, must appear to have been made under an official duty (ante, § 1633). Finally, the certifying officer must himself have such a seal as is presumed genuine, because otherwise the process of certifying would only have to be repeated anew. Such a seal, at common law, would practically be the seal of State only (post, § 2163), for foreign officers at least, though for domestic officers it might be one of a lower grade.

[4] This true process is seen in the forms of expression of the statutes cited post, § 2162, from England, Colorado, Florida, United States, West Virginia, and Wisconsin.

[5] It follows that a Court might presume the document genuine, and still decline to notice the official character of the writer, — as in some of the cases cited post, § 2165.

It will thus be seen that at common law, whenever a seal not itself presumed genuine is to be authenticated otherwise than by testimony on the stand, two distinct rules are always involved in practice, namely, the admissibility of the hearsay certifying officer's statement, and the genuineness of his own purporting certificate. In other words, two questions must be answered: (1) What higher officer is authorized to certify to the authority of the lower office, the official incumbency of the person exercising it, and the genuineness of the document purporting to be executed by him; and (2) Is this higher officer's purporting certificate to be presumed genuine? [1] The one requirement might be satisfied without the other; for example, (1) a judge of court might be a proper officer to certify to a clerk's authority to copy the records and to the genuineness of a copy purporting to be by the clerk; but (2) the judge's own purporting certificate might not be sufficiently authenticated by his seal if from a foreign State, though it might be if from the domestic jurisdiction; and resort might further be required to the seal of State, which would be presumed genuine. Now it is the Authentication principle which answers the second question, and the Hearsay exception which answers the first question. Practically, it is natural to answer the second one first, because this narrows the scope of the search for the answer to the first; for example, in the above instance, if the law declines to presume genuine any foreign seal less than the seal of State, it is at once obvious that such a seal must ultimately be obtained, and the remaining question is merely as to the proper intervening certifying officers.

In dealing, therefore, with the principle of Authentication by official seal, it is impossible to treat of all the elements practically required to exist for the admissibility of a hearsay official document, because the Authentication principle merely tells what seals will be presumed genuine; and if the seal in question is of an inferior grade, resort must be had to the Hearsay exception to determine what officer has authority to certify to it; and the rules of that exception are so distinct and detailed that it would be impracticable to deal with them apart from their general principle.

Statutes have copiously intervened to liberalize the rules of the common law on both subjects.[2] But the matter is further complicated by the cir-

§ 2162. [1] This distinction has already been examined, ante, § 1679; but it seems desirable to note it again here.

[2] For convenience, all statutes of this double composite character have been placed under the Hearsay exception (ante, §§ 1680–1682), cumstance that most statutes dealing with the subject provide in the same section for both sets of rules, i. e. they not only declare the higher officers classified according as they deal with judicial records or other kinds of official documents. Under the present head are placed only such statutes as deal exclusively with the principle of Authentication, i. e. expressly and merely declaring that certain kinds of seals shall be presumed genuine, and therefore shall need no further certifying of genuineness; as well as judicial rulings interpreting these statutes. Besides the following statutes, which deal with seals only, or seals and signatures, may be consulted those dealing with signatures only, collected post, § 2167:

ENGLAND: 1845, St. 8 & 9 Vict. c. 113, § 1 ("Whereas it is provided by many statutes . . . [that various official documents, corporation proceedings, certified copies, etc., shall be admissible when duly authenticated], and whereas the beneficial effect of these provisions has been found by experience to be greatly diminished by the difficulty of proving that the said documents are genuine, and it is expedient to facilitate the admission in evidence of such and the like documents," it is enacted that whenever any certificate, official document, etc., is receivable in evidence, it shall be admitted if it "purport to be sealed or impressed with a stamp, or sealed and signed, or signed alone, as required, or impressed with a stamp and signed, as directed by the respective acts . . . , without any proof of the seal or stamp, where a seal or stamp is necessary, or of the signature of the official character of the person appearing to have signed the same, and without any further proof thereof, in every case in which the original record could have been received in evidence"); § 2 (judicial notice to be taken of the signatures of the judges of the superior courts at Westminster); 1851, St. 14 & 15 Vict. c. 99, § 7 (presuming genuine the purporting seal or signature and official character of a person certifying a copy of a foreign statute, judgment, etc.); § 11 (every document admissible in England, Wales, or Ireland, "without proof of the seal or stamp or signature authenticating the same," or of the official character of the signer, shall equally be received in the colonies); St. 1905, 5 Edw. VII, c. 15, § 52 (trade-marks; documents purporting to be orders of the Board of Trade and to be under Board seal or to be signed by its secretary, etc., admissible without further proof); 1918, Permanent Trustee Co. v. Fels, A. C. 879 (marriage-settlement in Poland; cited more fully ante, § 1681).

CANADA: Dominion: Rev. St. 1906, c. 139, § 94 (affidavits, etc., before the Supreme Court; purporting seal and signature of commissioner, notary public, judge or court, etc., etc., is presumed genuine); c. 144, § 146 (winding-up of companies; seal of any court, etc., on any document, to be judicially noticed); Order-in-Council, Aug. 5, 1916, issued under War Measures Act 1914 (desertion; enlistment paper and officer's certificate of absence; purporting signatures suffice); Alberta: St. 1910, 2d sess., Evidence Act, c. 3, § 41 (like Ont. Rev. St. 1897, c. 76, § 39); British Columbia: Rev. St. 1911, c. 78, § 44, c. 127, § 147 (land registrar; quoted ante, § 1651); c. 78, § 57 (depositions; like Ont. R. S. c. 76, § 39); Manitoba: Rev. St. 1913, c. 65, § 53 (documents certifying the making of an affidavit, and purporting to bear the signature or seal of the commissioner, judge, notary, consul, or other authorized officer as specified, shall be received without proof of signature, seal, or official character); c. 171, § 90 (title-registrar's certificate of registration, admitted "without proof of the signature or seal"); § 81 (purporting certificate of registered land-title, presumed genuine, "without proof of signature or seal"); c. 47, § 5 (purporting Surrogate Court's seal need not be proved); New Brunswick: Consol. St. 1903, c. 62, § 7 (commissioners to administer oaths, etc., out of the Province; affidavit, etc., admissible without proof of signature or seal); § 3 (commissioner's acts in taking affidavits must be authenticated in the same manner as for conveyances); c. 127, § 59 (all documents admissible by the law of England without proof of seal, stamp, signature, or official character, are here also thus admissible); Newfoundland: Consol. St. 1916, c. 83, Ord. 34, Rule 6 (judicial notice is to be taken of the seal or signature of any judge, notary, consul, etc., authorized to take examinations, etc., in other British possessions or in foreign States); c. 91, § 17 (like N. Br. Consol. St. 1877, c. 127, § 59, substituting "British" for "England"); Nova Scotia: Rev. St. 1900, c. 163, § 18 (like N. Br. Consol. St. c. 127, § 59, adding Ireland); § 48 (any document purporting to bear the seal or signature of one of the specified officials authorized to administer and certify to oaths in or out of the Province shall be admitted without proof of the seal, signature, or official character); Rules of Court 1900, Ord. 59, Rule 2 ("all copies, certificates and other documents, appearing to be sealed with a seal of the Court, used by the prothonotary, shall be presumed to be authenticated"); Ontario: Rev. St. 1914, c. 76, § 39 (signature of a judge, or signature and seal of a foreign notary, corporation, mayor, chief magistrate, governor, judge, consul, vice-consul, or consular agent, appended to a certificate of administration of an oath, etc., shall be admitted "without proof of such signature or seal and signature" or official character); Prince Edward Isl. St. 1889, § 25 (the seal of any foreign State and the certificate of a Secretary thereof, when offered to prove "the existence and competency" of any court, officer, or clergyman, "shall be deemed authentic without proof thereof," whether it be an independent State or one of a federation); § 38 (affidavits taken without the province; the officer's "signature and official character" must be certified by a notary public under seal or a judge or clerk of a court of record or superior or county court under court seal, or the mayor of a city or town and the corporate seal, or a British consul under seal; the certifier's signature and seal taken for genuine without other proof); Quebec: 1915, Chiniquy v. Begin, 24 D. L. R. 687 (certified copy, by clerk of the county court, of a record of marriage at Kankakee, Ill., admitted without proof of seal or signature, under Que. Civ. C. Art. 1220; also a copy of a register of baptisms at St. Anne, Ill., signed by the pastor); Saskatchewan: Rev. St. 1920, c. 44, § 44 (like Ont. Rev. St. c. 76, § 39); Yukon: Consol. Ord. 1914, c. 30, § 18 (like Eng. St. 14 & 15 Vict. c. 99, § 11, omitting "Wales"); ib. § 46 (like N. Sc. Rev. St. 1900, c. 163, § 48).

authorized to certify to other official documents, but also declare how far up the process must be continued before reaching a seal which will be presumed

UNITED STATES: Federal: Rev. St. 1878, § 1750, Code § 3304 (on a prosecution for perjury, any document "purporting to have affixed, impressed, or subscribed thereto or thereon the seal and signature of the officer administering or taking the same in testimony thereof, shall be admitted in evidence without proof of any such seal or signature being genuine or of the official character of such person"); Code 1919, § 683 (original application for entry in general land-office; cited more fully ante, § 1680); § 1387 (comptroller of the currency; his certificates, etc., "sealed with his seal of office," admissible); §§ 8071, 8122 (U. S. shipping commissioner; "any instrument, either printed or written, purporting to be the official act of a shipping commissioner and purporting to be under the seal and signature of such shipping commissioner," admissible); Arizona: Rev. St. 1913, Civ. C. §§ 1765, 1766 (certificates of administration of oath by certain officers without the State, with seal affixed, may be read in evidence); Arkansas: Dig. 1919, § 6594 (seal of commissioner of State lands, to be sufficient authentication); §§ 4212–4214 (official character of a judicial officer in a State or Territory of U. S., to be authenticated by certificate under seal of clerk of a court of record in county; of officer without the U. S., by seal of State of the government; within this State, need not be authenticated); § 667 ("every paper executed" by State bank commissioner under official seal "shall be received in evidence"); California: C. C. P. 1872, § 1875 ("Courts take judicial notice of . . . the seals of all the Courts of this State and of the United States; the accession to office and the official signatures and seals of office of the principal officers of government in the legislative, executive, and judicial departments of this State and of the United States; the existence, title, national flag, and seal of every State or Sovereign recognized by the executive power of the United States; the seals of Courts of admiralty and maritime jurisdiction, and of notaries public"); § 2015 (judge's certificate of affidavit in a foreign country or domestic State, attested by clerk of Court under its seal, to be admissible); Colorado: Comp. L. 1921, § 4331 (State industrial commission; Courts shall take judicial notice of its seal); Delaware: Rev. St. 1915, § 579 (State insurance commissioner's instruments under official seal, admissible); Florida: G. S. 1919, § 2726 ("the impression of the seal" of the commissioner of agriculture on a deed or contract purporting to have been made by trustees of an internal improvement fund, or members of a board of education, or the commissioner of agriculture, "shall entitle the same to be received in evidence"); § 3798 (similar, for deeds of certain State lands, under seal of State department of agriculture, attested by the commissioner); Georgia: Rev. C. 1910, § 5734 (seals of admiralty and maritime Courts "of the world" and of States of the Union and departments of the U. S. Government, are noticed without proof); Hawaii: Rev. L. 1915, § 2593 (quoted ante, § 1680); § 2605 ("Whenever by any law now or hereafter to be in force, any certificate, official or public document or documents, or proceeding of any corporation, or joint stock, or other company, or any certified copy of any document or by-laws, entry in any register or other book, or of any other proceeding shall be receivable in evidence of any particulars, the same shall respectively be admitted in evidence in any court, and by any person having by law or by consent of parties authority to hear, receive and examine evidence, provided they respectively purport to be sealed or impressed with a stamp, or sealed and signed, or signed alone as required, or impressed with a stamp, and signed as directed by the respective acts made or to be hereafter made, without any proof of the seal or stamp where a seal or stamp is necessary, or of the signature or of the official character of the person appearing to have signed the same, and without any further proof thereof in every case in which the original record or document could have been received in evidence"); Idaho: Comp. St. 1919, § 7933 (like Cal. C. C. P., § 1875); Illinois: Rev. St. 1874, c. 101, § 6 (certificate under official seal of an officer out of the State is 'prima facie' evidence of his authority to administer oaths); Iowa: Code 1897, § 4679, Comp. Code § 7386 (signature and seal of an officer author-genuine. For example, they may provide that a city tax-collector's certified copy may be authenticated by the mayor's certificate under city seal, and this in turn by the seal of the governor, or chancellor, or secretary of State under seal of State. Every such statute includes a declaration of the Authentication rule as well as of the rule of the Hearsay exception.

§ 2163. Seal of State. The purporting seal of State of a foreign nation, by universal concession, at common law, is presumed genuine;[1] though it is difficult to say how far the rule would apply to a colony or other dependency having a seal of its own.[2]

The principle is in the United States conceded to apply to the purporting seal of the United States and of any one of the States,[3] and presumably also ized to take depositions and affidavits are presumed genuine; Comp. Code § 6375 (notarial seal on extra-State certificate is 'prima facie' evidence that recital on seal conforms to extra-State law); § 7411 (made of authenticating a deposition); Louisiana: Rev. L. 1897, § 1436 (attestation and seal of an American consul, consul-general, vice-consul, or commercial agent, to be proof "that it emanated from said consul," etc.); Maryland: Ann. Code 1914, Art. 68, § 3 (administration of an oath, provable by "a certificate under the notarial seal of a notary public"); Michigan: Comp. L. 1915, § 588 (land-office seal, to be "'prima facie' evidence of the due execution" of a certificate of purchase, etc.); Mississippi: Code 1906, § 1973, Hem. § 1633 ("any certificate, attestation, or authentication purporting to have been made or given by any person as an officer of any State or of the United States, shall be 'prima facie' evidence of the official character of such person"); Code § 590, Hem. § 350 (same for certificate of officer administering oath out of the State); Montana: Rev. C. 1921, § 10532 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1875); Nevada: Rev. L. 1912, § 3213 (impression of seal of the State land-office "shall impart verity" to papers "emanating from such office"); New Hampshire: Pub. St. 1891, c. 167, § 8 (insurance commissioner; no further proof than his official seal "shall be required to authenticate" his official certificates, etc.); New York: C. P. A. 1920, § 330 (certified copies by officers having seals must bear the seal, except for use in the same Court); North Dakota: Comp. L. 1913, § 299 (State land commissioner's seal is "'prima facie' evidence of the due execution" of any contract or other paper of the State board of university and school lands); § 7902 (authentication of depositions by seal); Oregon: Laws 1920, § 729 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1875); Pennsylvania: St. 1840, Apr. 3, § 1, Dig. 1920, § 8685, Evid. (certificate under seal of an acknowledgment of a recordable deed, etc., is receivable "without requiring proof of the said seal," whether made within or without the State); St. 1869, Mar. 12, Dig. § 13000, Just. Peace (public seal of certain aldermen, presumed genuine); St. 1901, May 21, Dig. § 8731 (official character of an officer taking an acknowledgment in Cuba, Porto Rico, or the Philippines, to be evidenced by his official seal, and if he has none, by the certificate of a U. S. officer there who has one); Tennessee: Shannon's Code 1916, § 3273 *a*19 (State bank superintendent's seal; any paper executed by him under seal is admissible); Utah: Comp. L. 1917, § 7076 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1875); Virginia: Code 1919, §§ 6197–8 (certified copy or certificate purporting to be by a clerk of court and certain public officers in the State and in West Virginia, receivable without proof of seal or signature or official character); West Virginia: Code 1914, c. 130, § 5 (certified copy or certificate purporting to be signed or sealed by court clerk, Secretary of State, treasurer, auditor, or county surveyor, need not be proved genuine); c. 130, § 31, as amended by St. 1917, c. 48 (affidavit before an officer of "another State or country," authenticated by official seal, or if he have none by "some officer of the same State or country under his official seal"); Wisconsin: Stats. 1919, § 4149 (quoted ante, § 1680).

§ 2163. [1] Eng. 1724, Anon., 9 Mod. 66 (exemplification of a judgment "under the common seal of the States" of Holland, admitted); 1825, Yrisarri v. Clement, 2 C. & P. 223, 225 (foreign State seal will be assumed genuine, if the State is one recognized); U. S. 1816, Griswold v. Pitcairn, 2 Conn. 85, 89 (foreign judgment under great seal of Denmark, received); 1851, Watson v. Walker, 23 N. H. 471, 496 (seal of England, presumed genuine).

[2] 1803, Henry v. Adey, 3 East 221 (seal of the island of Granada, not accepted); 1807, Buchanan v. Rucker, 1 Camp. 63 (judgment sealed with the seal of the island of Tobago; the judge's handwriting proved).

[3] Besides the following rulings, many statutes, cited ante, §§ 2162, 1680–1682, expressly recognize this rule: Fed. 1826, U. S. v. Amedy, 11 Wheat. 392, 407 (exemplification of incorporation-act of Massachusetts, under to that of a Territory organized by Congress. But whether the Court, for the purposes of substantive law, will treat as an independent State any community not already so treated or recognized by the Executive is a different question (post, § 2566).[4]

§ 2164. Seal of Court; Clerk's Signature; Justice of the Peace. (1) At common law, it would seem that the purporting seal of no court of a foreign State would be presumed genuine,[1] except that of a court of admiralty;[2] the distinction depending, not perhaps upon any greater ease of detecting a forgery of the latter, but rather upon the general and peculiar position of an admiralty court as applying the common law of nations and therefore as partaking by comity of the nature of a domestic court. Statutes have, however, in some jurisdictions amplified the scope of the common-law rule (ante, §§ 2162, 1681).

(2) The purporting seal of any court within the jurisdiction is presumed to be genuine.[3] Under this principle, in the United States, would be included purporting signature of Secretary of State and seal of State, received, as under Fed. St. 1790, quoted ante, § 1680; the seal of State suffices under the statute, and "the annexation [of it] must, in the absence of all contrary evidence, always be presumed to be by a person having the custody thereof and competent authority to do the act"); Cal. 1859, Yount v. Howell, 14 Cal. 465, 467 (U. S. land-patent, with signature of President and seal of U. S., received as genuine); Ga. 1897, Reppard v. Warren, 103 Ga. 198, 29 S. E. 817 (an original grant and plat from a State, authenticated by the State seal; unless the seal is in such a condition that its genuineness cannot be determined); Ill. 1894, Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Keegan, 152 Ill. 413, 416, 39 N. E. 33 (Governor's deed, under seal of State; genuineness presumed); Me. 1841, Robinson v. Gilman, 7 Shepl. 299 (seal of Massachusetts, affixed to the exemplification of a law, presumed genuine); N. H. 1831, State v. Carr, 5 N. H. 367, 370 (seal of Connecticut); Va. 1831, Ex parte Povall, 2 Leigh 816, 817 (record of a domestic State, sealed by a judge of probate, attested by the Governor under State seal, received).

[4] Eng. 1825, Yrissari v. Clement, 2 C. & P. 223 (cited supra); U. S. 1818, U. S. v. Palmer, 3 Wheat. 610, 635, 642 (seal of a foreign government not acknowledged by our Executive does not prove itself).

§ 2164. [1] Eng. 1803, Henry v. Adey, 3 East 221 (judgment of the island of Grenada; "the Court held the nonsuit proper for defect of the proof of the seal; they said that they could not take judicial notice that the seal affixed was the seal of the island, which was necessary to be shown"); U. S. 1807, De Sobry v. De Laistre, 2 H. & J. Md. 191, 218 (seal of a foreign court does not prove itself); 1852, Pickard v. Bailey, 26 N. H. 152, 167 (seal of a Canadian Court required to be proved); 1808, Delafield v. Hand, 3 Johns. N. Y. 310, 314 (exemplification of a French judgment not assumed authentic. "Of what notoriety can such a seal be in this country? The extension of the rule insisted on by the plaintiff would open the avenues of fraud and imposition"). Contra, semble: Can. 1853, Cyr v. Sanfacon, 2 All. N. Br. 641 (purporting seal of Supreme Court of Maine, shown to be used by the District Court, received); 1863, Junkin v. Davis, 22 U. C. Q. B. 369 (judgment in the tenth judicial district of California; exemplification under seal purporting to be of the fourteenth district, excluded).

If the court is proved to have no seal, then some other seal that can be presumed genuine is necessary: 1827, Packard v. Hill, 7 Cow. N. Y. 434, 443, app. 2 Wend. 411, 5 Cow. N. Y. 375, 384 (copy of a Spanish judgment at Havana, signed by the clerk who kept the records, the seal of the Royal College of Notaries being used and the Court having no seal, held sufficiently authenticated).

[2] 1713, Stennil v. Brown, 10 Mod. 108 (copy of a sentence of a French admiralty court, "subscribed by the officer of the court," excluded; the seal of the court required); 1819, Thompson v. Stewart, 3 Conn. 171, 181 (seal of any Admiralty Court, but not an ordinary foreign Court, presumed genuine).

Not decided: 1811, Gardere v. Ins. Co., 7 Johns. N. Y. 514, 519 (certified copy of a British Vice-Admiralty judgment, with Court seal; whether assumed authentic, left undecided).

Contra: 1826, Catlett v. Ins. Co., 1 Paine C. C. 594, 613 (judgment of Vice-Admiralty Court of Isle of France; seal does not prove itself).

[3] Eng. 1658, Olive v. Gwin, 2 Sid. 145 ("We ought to take notice of a seal created generally by act of Parliament"; noticing the seal of a Welsh court); 1702, Green v. Waller, 2 Ld.

the seal of a Federal court,[4] as well as that of the court of another State of the United States.[5] That this was the accepted common-law rule is of particular importance in view of the varying forms of authentication sanctioned by many statutes, especially the Federal statute (ante, §§ 2162, 1681); because, since such statutes merely sanction the form specified therein and do not forbid the use of any form otherwise receivable (ante, § 1681), a document may be sufficiently authenticated by judicial seal on common-law principles, though it may not satisfy the statute.

(3) The signature of the clerk alone, without the court seal, has been by most Courts regarded as sufficient to be presumed genuine, for any certified copy of the records of a court within the jurisdiction,[6] though not of a court

Raym. 891, 893 (judgment of an admiralty court, proved by exemplification under its seal); 1844, Bailey v. Bidwell, 13 M. & W. 73 (petition in bankruptcy, sealed by the Court, sufficiently authenticated); U. S. 1831, Com. v. Phillips, 11 Pick. Mass. 28, 30 (to a certified copy of a record in Middlesex Co. under the purporting clerk's hand and court seal, it was objected that the judges of another court had "no means of knowing whether he is the clerk lawfully appointed or a usurper of the office, and that the seal of the court without a clerk's signature is insufficient, for a stranger might get possession of the seal"; held, that a certified copy "by the clerk of such court [of record] under the seal thereof" was sufficient "in every other judicial tribunal of the Commonwealth"); 1869, Kingman v. Cowles, 103 Mass. 283 ("The clerk is the proper custodian of the records; and the seal of the Court attached to his certificate attests the possession of the record in the person who certifies; records so certified are always received as true 'prima facie,' without proof in the first instance of their genuineness or of the official character of the person who assumes to act in such official capacity").

[4] 1838, Womack v. Dearman, 7 Port. Ala. 513, 516 (seal of a Federal court in a Territory, presumed genuine); 1866, Adams v. Way, 33 Conn. 419, 429 (seals of a Federal court assumed genuine, and not treated as foreign); 1850, Williams v. Wilkes, 14 Pa. St. 228 (seal of U. S. circuit court proves itself, as that of a domestic court).

[5] 1903, Ford v. Nesmith, 117 Ga. 210, 43 S. E. 483 (but here under statute); 1841, Steamboat Thames v. Erskine, 7 Mo. 213, 217 (certificate of clerk under court seal to deposition without the State, sufficient); 1833, Dunlap v. Waldo, 6 N. H. 450 (signature of a county clerk under county seal in New York, assumed genuine, as being the seal of the county court).

Contra, semble: 1857, Behn v. Young, 21 Ga. 207, 213 (jurat of affidavit by purporting judge of probate in Florida, not recognized without proof of official character).

It may be added that the effect of a judicial seal, with respect to raising the presumption of genuineness for the document, is to be distinguished from its effect as importing also an order by the Court to the clerk to make the specific copy sealed; for only by such a specific order, in the English rule, does a certified copy of a judicial record become admissible as a hearsay statement (ante, § 1681). The distinction is neatly brought out in the case of Henry v. Adey, supra, note 1, where a judgment of the island of Grenada was offered; the judge's signature to a certified copy of the clerk was proved by testimony on the stand, so that the document was sufficiently authenticated; but the clerk's copy was inadmissible unless he had authority to make it, and the order to do so could be implied only from the seal; thus, a seal was necessary, and the purporting seal of a foreign court does not authenticate itself and hence had to be otherwise proved.

[6] 1888, Ponder v. Shumans, 80 Ga. 505, 507, 5 S. E. 502 (signature of a probate clerk, assumed genuine); 1918, Ames Evening Times v. Ames Weekly Tribune, 183 Ia. 1188, 168 N. W. 106 (affidavit sworn before clerk of court); 1816, Rowland v. M'Gee, 4 Bibb Ky. 439 (certified copy of a will by a clerk of a court without seal, receivable because of the general authority in clerks to certify such copies); 1901, Marsee v. Middlesborough T. L. Co., — Ky. —, 65 S. W. 118 (county court clerk's signature and name will be noticed as genuine; "though generally Courts will require" some evidence of identification, — whatever this inconsistent pronouncement may mean); 1897, Com. v. Kennedy, 170 Mass. 18, N. E. 782 (certified copy of a domestic record need not be under seal); 1854, Major v. State, 2 Sneed Tenn. 11, 15, semble (certified transcript by a clerk of a domestic court, authenticated without official or court seal, admissible).

Contra, semble: 1853, Thomasson v. Driskell, 13 Ga. 253 (clerk's certificate from a local court, not under court or private seal, excluded); 1843, Chambers v. People, 5 Ill. 351, 355 (clerk of another court's signature without without the jurisdiction.[7] This question could not arise at common law in England, because it was there maintained that the clerk had no authority, merely from his office, to certify copies, and the court seal was necessary as importing a specific order to him (ante, § 1681); but in the United States it was early conceded that the clerk had by his office an implied authority to furnish copies, and thus the only question remaining was that of presuming his signature genuine, and this was not a difficult step to take for clerks of domestic courts. By statute, however, this rule has been sometimes amplified (ante, §§ 1681, 2162, post, § 2167).

(4) The case of a judge's signature alone seems rarely to have arisen for express decision at common law.[8] It may be supposed that, wherever it could have any legal force, it would be presumed genuine for the judge of a domestic court.

(5) A justice of the peace's court is not at common law a court of record, nor does it possess a seal. It has therefore generally been held that a purporting signature of a justice of the peace, even within the jurisdiction, is not presumed genuine; though the practice is not uniform.[9] A justice's authority to take a deposition is always a creature of statute (ante, §§ 1376, 1330–1382), and hence the mode of authenticating his certificate must be sought thereunder. On these points the statutes are elsewhere referred to in dealing with the authentication of the taking of depositions (ante, § 1676), and with the admissibility of copies of judicial records in general (ante, § 1681) and official signatures (post, § 2167). The presumption of official character (as where the certificate is merely signed "J. P.") is elsewhere noticed (post, § 2168); and the authentication of a justice's docket by proving its custody has already been considered (ante, § 2158).

seal, but the signature proved; official character must be shown; same for a justice of the peace of another county).

Not clear: 1830, Burton v. Pettibone, 5 Yerg. Tenn. 443 (copy of a record; the clerk's name need not be signed at the end, if it appears somewhere, at least when the Court seal is added).

Compare the cases cited post, § 2578 (judicial notice).

[7] 1825, Allen v. Thaxter, 1 Blackf. Ind. 399 (clerk of probate court of another State; certificate without court, seal not presumed genuine).

[8] 1796, Alston v. Taylor, 1 Hayw. N. C. 381, 395 (Virginia record-copy certified by clerk and presiding justice without seal; excluded; "where there is no seal it should be certified there was none").

[9] Ala. 1874, Holleman v. De Nyse, 51 Ala. 95, 100 (one signing as J. P. during a rebel occupation, presumed to have held over in the office); Ark. 1876, Jenkins v. Tobin, 31 Ark. 306, 308 (justice of the peace in another State; certificate of deposition does not prove itself); 1888, Moore v. State, 51 Ark. 130, 10 S. W. 22 (justice's docket entry does not prove itself); Cal. 1860, Ede v. Johnson, 15 Cal. 53, 57 (justice of the peace's certificate of acknowledgment, assumed genuine); Ind. 1837, Doughton v. Tillay, 4 Blackf. 433, 434 (signature of justice's jurat in adjoining State, not assumed genuine; nor his authority to administer oaths assumed); 1892, Bridges v. Branam, 133 Ind. 488, 496, 33 N. E. 271 (justice's record not presumed genuine); Ky. 1811, Talbott v. Bradford, 2 Bibb 316 (justice of the peace within the Commonwealth; office presumed); 1815, Geohegan v. Eckles, 4 Bibb 5 (copy of a record attested by a justice, not admissible except under seal of court, or except when acting under statutory authority to give copies); 1847, Winston v. Gwathmey, 8 B. Monr. 19, 20 (justice of the peace of another State, authenticable by the clerk of the county court or of the city hustings court); Mass. 1855, Com. v. Dowring, 4 Gray 29, 30 (no seal required, for a copy of a record coming up from a justice of the peace); N. Car. 1826, Hamilton v. Wright, 4 Hawks 283, 285 (official character and signature must be authenticated).

Compare the cases cited post, § 2578 (judicial notice).

§ 2165. Seal of Notary. (1) Other than a foreign seal of State (ante, § 2163), the only foreign official seal presumed at common law to be genuine, by universal concession, was that of a notary. The notary's hearsay certificate was at common law not admissible except for the single purpose of evidencing the fact of demand and non-payment (protest) of a foreign bill of exchange (ante, §§ 1675, 1676); but, so far as it was thus receivable, the purporting notary's seal sufficiently evidenced its genuineness. The reason for the exceptional recognition of this officer's seal was undoubtedly the necessity for prompt action in fixing the liabilities accruing on commercial paper, and the consequent impossibility of securing further certification of the document under the seal of State; this consideration sufficing to override the risk of forgery:

1699, Anon, 12 Mod. 234: "Plaintiff, to show a protest, produced an instrument attested by a notary public; and though it was insisted on that he should prove this instrument, or at least give some account how he came by it, HOLT, [L. C. J.] ruled it not to be necessary; for that, he said, would destroy commerce and public transactions of this nature."

1821, TILGHMAN, C. J., in Browne v. Philadelphia Bank, 6 S. & R. 484: "Public convenience requires that a certificate under a seal of this kind shall be 'prima facie' evidence, without proving that the person who used it and signed the certificate was a notary commissioned by the governor. It ought to be presumed, till the contrary be proved, that no man would dare to assume the office without proper authority."

1840, MURPHY, J., in Waldron v. Turpin, 15 La. 552, 555: "The Courts of one State can have or be presumed to have no more knowledge of the signature and capacity of the public officers of another State than of any other foreign country. To the above rule there exists an exception as regards notarial protests of foreign bills of exchange. It has been introduced in aid of commerce, founded wholly upon the custom of merchants and public convenience; it has been acknowledged and maintained by the Courts of law, and such protests receive credit everywhere without any auxiliary evidence. . . . The importance and almost universal use of bills of exchange as the means of remittances from one country to another; the great commercial facilities they have been found to offer; and the delay and trouble of procuring evidence from distant places are among the grounds upon which this exception has grown up."

This rule seems never to have been disputed, and its universal concession has caused the precedents to be few in number.[1] The only question seems § 2165. [1] Eng. 1725, Walrond v. Van Moses, 8 Mod. 322 (notary in Holland); 1802, Hutcheon v. Mannington, 6 Ves. Jr. 823 (certificates of a notary public and a magistrate in an East Indian colony; Eldon, L. C., observed "that a notary public by the law of nations has credit everywhere; the Court therefore will give credit to him; but that it was necessary to prove that the other person was a magistrate"); 1816, Kinnaird v. Saltoun, 1 Madd. 227 (French notarial seal, without magisterial authentication, but certified by a London notary, received).

U. S. 1840, Dunn v. Adams, 1 Ala. 527, 530; 1877, Hart v. Ross, 57 id. 518, 520; 1795, Spegail v. Perkins, 2 Root 274; 1901, Barber v. International Co., 73 Conn. 587, 48 Atl. 758 (a foreign notary's seal is judicially noticed, "whenever it is used to attest a document which by the usages of nations may be so attested"; yet the opinion afterwards inconsistently refers to a consular certificate as evidencing the notary's official character); Ind. Burns' Ann. St. 1914, § 476 (a certificate purporting to be under seal of a notary in the U. S. is presumptive evidence of official character); Ia. Code 1897, § 4624, Rev. C. § 7331; 1903, Metcalfe v. Carr, 133 Mich. 123, 94 N. W. 734 (sworn probate petition; notary's seal is presumed genuine in negotiable instruments only); 1846, McGarr v. Lloyd, 3 Pa. St. 474, 482.

Compare the statutes cited ante, §§ 1675, 1680, dealing with the history and admissibility of notaries' certificates.

to have been as to the form of the seal; and this was properly held to depend upon the law of the place of purporting execution.[2]

(2) It followed that the purporting notary's certificate, lacking the seal, could not be presumed genuine, and his signature and official character must be otherwise evidenced;[3] except that, by local statute or practice, a domestic notary's signature alone has sometimes been presumed genuine.[4] The lack of the seal, therefore, merely deprives the offering party of the advantage of thereby evidencing genuineness. The purporting seal is not essential, as a matter of technical form (unless by some doctrine of substantive law or by express statute[5]), to the acceptance of the certificate as a hearsay official statement; it is merely a circumstance which enables the document's genuineness to be presumed:[6]

[2] 1837, Tickner v. Roberts, 11 La. 14 (seal of Alabama notary, not in the form there prescribed, held insufficient to authenticate); 1838, Carter v. Bailey, 9 N. H. 558, 568; 1842, Bank of Rochester v. Gray, 2 Hill N.Y. 227, 230.

[3] Ala. 1894, Alabama Nat'l Bank v. Chattanooga D. & S. Co., 106 Ala. 663, 665, 18 So. 74 (Tennessee notary's certificate of affidavit, lacking seal, rejected); 1894, Bayonne K. Co. v. Umbenhauer, 107 Ala. 496, 499, 18 So. 175 (same, for Georgia affidavit); 1902, Hayes v. Bank, 132 Ala. 354, 31 So. 464 (certificate of acknowledgment by a "chancery clerk" in another State, styling himself "'ex officio' notary public," but lacking a notarial seal, excluded); Conn. 1871, Ashcraft v. Chapman, 38 Conn. 230 (notary's appointment and signature, proved by certificate of Secretary of State, the seal not being attached to the notarial certificate); Ind. 1888, Pape v. Wright, 116 Ind. 508, 19 N. E. 462 (New York notary's jurat to a deposition, lacking seal, authenticated by certificate of the county clerk under seal); Ia. 1859, Rindskoff v. Malone, 9 Ia. 540 (seal necessary); Mo. 1906, Gharst v. St. Louis T. Co., 115 Mo. App. 403, 91 S. W. 453 (Michigan notary's jurat to a deposition, lacking a seal, authenticated by certificate of the circuit court clerk under seal); Nebr. 1907, Sheridan Co. v. McKinney, 79 Nebr. 220, 112 N.W. 329 (a certificate lacking the date of expiration of the notary's commission as required by Comp. St. 1903, c. 73, § 14, is not self-authenticating; the recital of date being equally essential with the seal itself); N.H. 1838, Carter v. Bailey, 9 N.H. 558, 567 (if a foreign certificate of protest lacks the notarial seal, the official character of the notary, and the law stating the due manner of making, must be expressly evidenced); N. Y. 1842, Bank of Rochester v. Gray, 2 Hill N. Y. 227, 230 (foreign notary's protest without seal, not receivable "as evidence 'per se'").

The modes of certifying to it by some other official may be ascertained from the common-law principle (ante, § 2163), and from the statutes collected ante, §§ 1675, 1680.

The recital, by the officer certifying a copy, that the notary's certificate of acknowledgment bore seal, may suffice, even though the notarial certificate as copied shows no seal: 1912, Davis v. Seybold, C. C. A., 195 Fed. 402 (collecting authorities).

[4] Alabama: 1876, Harrison v. Simons, 55 Ala. 510, 516 (notary acting under local statute as justice of the peace; presumed genuine without seal); Illinois: 1850, Stout v. Slattery, 12 Ill. 162, 164 (domestic notary's jurat to an affidavit, bearing the signature only; genuineness and official character presumed, within the same county); 1850, Rowley v. Berrian, 12 Ill. 198, 200 (similar; semble otherwise for a notary out of the State, by statute); 1859, Dyer v. Flint, 21 Ill. 80, 82 (similar); 1888, Schaefer v. Kienzel, 123 Ill. 430, 434, 15 N. E. 164 (Stout v. Slattery "still applies," in spite of the subsequent statutes about notaries' seals, c. 101, § 6, and c. 99, § 7, relating to oaths and notaries; here, a jurat of an affidavit of non-residence); 1896, Hertig v. People, 159 Ill. 237, 42 N. E. 879 (preceding case approved; here, a jurat to an affidavit of publication).

For the statute in this State as to the mode of certifying a foreign notary's seal, see ante, § 1676, and infra, § 2165, note 9.

[5] See examples in the following cases: 1873, Donegan v. Wood, 49 Ala. 242; 1848, Fund Com'rs v. Glass, 17 Oh. 542 (certificate of a deed's acknowledgment).

[6] 1841, Lambeth v. Caldwell, 1 Rob. La. 61 (domestic notary's protest without seal, received; "we are acquainted with no law requiring notaries to furnish themselves with seals; . . . this practice [of using them] is certainly laudable, but nothing authorizes us to say that the absence of a seal on the certificate of a notary can prevent its admission when offered in evidence"); 1842, Bank of Rochester v. Gray, 2 Hill N. Y. 227, 229 ("There is considerable doubt whether any seal is strictly requisite, — whether the notary's signature alone, that being proved in the ordinary way, would not be enough anywhere"); 1904, Kinkade v. Howard, 18 S. D. 60, 99 N. W. 91 (lack of a notary's seal to a certificate of deposi-

1850, TREAT, C. J., in Stout v. Slattery, 12 Ill. 162 (admitting a notarial jurat to a petition for 'certiorari,' the seal lacking): "The failure of the notary to annex his official seal to the jurat does not vitiate the proceedings based on the petition. Within the county of Adams the addition of the seal was not necessary [even to evidence genuineness]. If the petition was to be used in another county, the seal of the notary, or some other evidence of his official character, would be indispensable. . . . The power to administer oaths is expressly conferred by statute and is not one of the incidents of office. The affixing of the notarial seal is not essential to the validity of his acts, except in cases where it is required by some rule of the common law or some provision of the statute. In all other cases his official acts, at least within the State, are none the less valid because they are not authenticated by his notarial seal. The only difference relates to the proof of his authority. If the act is not evidenced by the seal of the notary, his signature and official character must be established by some other legitimate evidence. . . . It is only when it becomes necessary to prove the making of the oath that the seal of the officer or some competent evidence of his authority must be produced."

(3) But by statute the power of a notary has been everywhere enlarged, not only as to certifying other kinds of commercial paper and other acts relating to it (ante, § 1675), but also as to certifying acknowledgments of deeds, swearing of oaths, taking of depositions, and the like (ante, § 1676). Suppose now that a notary's certificate is offered, purporting to represent his act under this broader statutory authority, and to bear his seal, does the purporting seal sufficiently evidence the genuineness of such a document and of his official character as notary? It has been by some Courts contended that, so soon as the common-law scope of his functions is exceeded, his seal loses the benefit of the common-law presumption:

1816, MATTHEWS, J., in Las Caygas v. Larionda's Syndics, 4 Mart. La. 283 (admitting a power of attorney executed before a Trinidad notary, bearing a seal, and certified as to his office by three other officers): "In cases of protested bills of exchange, the certificate of a notary public, authenticated by his seal of office, is received in courts of the United States as full proof of the drawer's refusal to accept or pay the bill. . . . This is perhaps allowed for the benefit of commerce, as the delay necessary to obtain authenticity to the protest under the great seal of the nation may be considered as incompatible with the dispatch required in aid of fair and profitable commerce. . . . Whatever may be the reason for it, it is in such case an established rule of evidence; but we believe it does not extend further. Are we in the present case bound to require other testimony of the truth and genuineness of the instrument under consideration than that which it bears on its face? . . . We are of opinion that the only thing necessary to give the certified copy of the power of attorney (the subject of the present contestation) the same credit in our courts of judicature which it would have in those of Spain, is proof that the person who certifies it is a notary public of the place from whence it comes, and that the certificate attached to it is really his. This evidence might be had by a certificate under the national seal, attesting that the person certifying the instrument is a notary public for Trinidad by the king's appointment; and if the dispute had any relation to his right to fulfil the duties of the office claimed by him, it would be the best evidence admissible in the case. But for all other purposes it appears to us that proof of his being a notary 'de facto' is sufficient; this may be made by witnesses, as well as by a certificate under the national seal. Therefore, if the witness offered by the plaintiff knows and will prove the person who authentition does not exclude it, "if the authority of the officer is otherwise sufficiently shown," and if no express statutory requirement prescribes the contrary); also Ashcraft v. Chapman, Conn., Pape v. Wright, Ind., Gharst v. St. Louis T. Co., Mo., cited supra, note 3.

cates the power of attorney to be a notary public in the city of Trinidad, and that from a knowledge of his handwriting it is he who certifies and signs it, he ought to be received to verify these facts."

This reasoning is supported by the consideration that the peculiar necessity for speedy informality in commercial matters does not apply to certificates of oaths, acknowledgments, and the like; and a few Courts have accepted this result.[7] But even the argument just named does not apply to a notary's certificates of notice to indorsers or of protest of promissory notes or inland bills, each of which has been made receivable by statute (ante, § 1675) and each of which equally needs speedy informality. Moreover, it is notable that the common law raised the presumption of genuineness to the full extent that the notary's certificate was admissible at all; and it might be argued that in the same way the presumption should be kept parallel with the statutory extension of authority. This view has apparently been favored by the majority of Courts.[8] Though it creates an anomaly, in contrast to other official certificates, it is perhaps preferable as maintaining uniformity for notaries' certificates in general.

(4) In such a case — the notary purporting to act under an enlarged statutory authority — may we go even further, and from the purporting seal presume not only the document's genuineness and the notary's incumbency, but also his authority to do the act in question and to certify it?[9] To

[7] Eng. 1854, Haggitt v. Iniff, 5 DeG. M. & G. 910 (affidavit with a jurat of a New York notary, certified to be a notary by the British consul under seal, received); 1858, Re Earl's Trust, 4 K. & J. 300 (affidavit with a jurat of a notary of Ohio under seal; not allowed to be filed as genuinely made by a person who was notary public); 1869, Re Davis' Trusts, L. R. 8 Eq. 98 (jurat of affidavit, purporting to be by a notary of West Virginia, with seal and signature; signature required to be otherwise evidenced); U. S. 1816, Las Caygas v. Larionda's Syndics, 4 Mart. La. 283 (quoted supra); 1821, Ferrers v. Bcsel, 10 Mart. La. 35; 1907, Washburn L. Co. v. Swanby, 131 Wis. 1, 110 N. W. 806 (notary's certificate under seal to a deed without the State; additional evidence not required, under statute).

[8] Cal. 1906, Pardee v. Schanzlin, 3 Cal. App. 597, 86 Pac. 812 (notary's certificate of jurat of affidavit, under seal, presumed genuine); D. C. 1876, Denmead v. Maack, 2 McArth. 475 (affidavit's jurat, by a purporting Maryland notary, presumed genuine, the law of Maryland authorizing notaries to administer oaths); Md. 1846, Barry v. Crowley, 4 Gill 194, 202 (by statute the notary's certificate was made evidence of demand and notice, thus enlarging the common law; held, that "no proof is necessary that the seal attached is the notary's seal or that the handwriting signed thereto is the proper signature of the notary"); N. C. 1912, Nicholson v. Eureka Lumber Co., 160 N. C. 33, 75 S. E. 730 (Texas notary's seal with signature "Delia Sadler," held to presume lawfulness of appointment of a woman); Pa. 1821, Browne v. Phila. Bank, 6 S. & R. 484 (certificate of notice to indorser, under statute, with notarial seal; presumed genuine); P. R. 1914, Bigelow v. Porto Rico Planters' Co., 7 P. R. Fed. 386 (Porto Rican notary's signature and seal verifying a pleading, admissible without further proof); Va. Code 1919, § 5680 (notary's seal presumed genuine for certificate of protest to domestic instrument); Wis. 1882, Hayes v. Frey, 54 Wis. 503, 521, 11 N. W. 695 (deposition certified by a notary out of the State; by statute, no other certificate to his official character is needed); 1883, Sleep v. Heymann, 57 id. 495, 504, 16 N. W. 17 (same).

[9] Illinois: St. 1861, p. 79, Rev. St. 1874, c. 101, § 6 (oath required to be taken out of the State may be administered by any officer there authorized; and "his certificate under his official seal shall be received as 'prima facie' evidence without further proof of his authority to administer oaths"); 1895, Ferris v. Commercial Nat'l Bank, 158 Ill. 237, 241, 41 N. E. 1118 (Canadian notary's jurat to an affidavit; excluded because no recital of authority was included); 1899, Trevor v. Colgate, 181 Ill. 129, 54 N. E. 909 (notary's seal out of the State, under this statute, does not raise a presumption of authority to administer oath; the jurat must presume this would be apparently to transgress the general principle of the common law that no official, merely from his office, has an implied authority to furnish certificates (ante, § 1674), and that somehow a specific duty must first appear (ante, § 1632). If a foreign statute creates such a specific enlarged duty, it would seem that the statute must be expressly shown, not presumed; and it has been already noted (ante, § 2161) that the elements of genuineness and of official character are distinct from that of authority to make official statements. No doubt a statute may expressly create a presumption of such authority from the purporting seal; but otherwise it could not be conceded.

§ 2166. Sundry Official Seals. Other than the seal of State, of an admiralty court, and a notary, and, by extension in the United States, as already seen (ante, § 2164), the seal of a Federal court or that of a State of the Union, no purporting seal of a foreign officer will be apparently presumed genuine at common law; though occasionally the purporting eal of the Secretary of State or of Foreign Affairs seems to have been treated on the same footing as the seal of State.[1] But the purporting seals of local State officers and, within a county, of local county officers, would probably always be presumed genuine;[2] and the seal of a municipal corporation should probably receive similar treatment. The purporting seals of Federal officers, or at least, where the office is subdivided into districts (as the land-office), the officer of a Federal district lying within the State jurisdiction, will be treated like the seals of domestic officers.[3] Apparently the purporting seals of officers of recite expressly the possession of such authority); 1900, Desnoyers Shoe Co. v. First Nat'l Bank, 188 Ill. 312, 58 N. E. 994 (jurat of affidavit of proof of execution of warrants of attorney, by a Missouri notary; foregoing cases approved); 1901, Bell v. Farwell, 189 Ill. 414, 59 N. E. 955 (foregoing cases approved); 1906, Williams v. Williams, 221 Ill. 541, 77, N. E. 928 (Virginia justice's jurat, with clerk of circuit court's certificate of justice's authority, admitted); 1907, Bishop v. Hilliard, 227 Ill. 382, 81 N. E. 403; 1913, Tompkins v. Tompkins, 257 Ill. 557, 100 N. E. 965 (holding that the foregoing line of decisions does not apply to a notary's authority to administer the oath in a deposition taken by commission; the court's appointment by commission is an implied authority to administer the oath; hence the foreign statutory authority need not be shown nor presumed); Indiana: 1920, Kwiatkowski v. Putzhaven, 189 Ind. 119, 126 N. E. 3 (notary's recital of authority to take oaths of witnesses in a foreign state, held sufficient, under Burns' Stats. 1914, § 476, cited supra, n. 1).

§ 2166. [1] 1820, Garvey v. Hibbert, 1 Jac. & W. 180 (a paper made at Washington, authenticated by a notary with his seal and signature, with a certificate from the clerk of the circuit court and the court seal, and a certificate of the secretary of State with his official seal, received; an affidavit verified by a mayor of Georgetown, D. C., with nothing further, rejected); 1850, Beach v. Workman, 20 N. H. 379 (Canadian customs officer's commission; purporting private seal of the Governor, not presumed genuine); 1876, Evans v. Lee, 11 Nev. 194, 197 (sealed certificate of acknowledgment by vice-consul-general in London, assumed genuine); 1867, Stanglein v. State, 17 Oh. St. 453, 462 (certificate of marriage-record copy, under the Bavarian seal of foreign affairs, admitted as genuine).

A tax-receipt must be authenticated under general rules: 1904, Chastang v. Chastang, 141 Ala. 451, 37 So. 799.

[2] This may at any rate be implied from some of the rulings cited post, § 2167, and from most of the statutes cited ante, § 1680, and is expressly covered by many of the statutes cited ante, § 2162.

When such a statute gives authority for admitting official certificates under seal, the implication is that they will not be presumed genuine without it: 1896, Noanes v. State, 143 Ind. 299, 42 N. E. 609 (the custodian of a record was authorized by statute to certify to copies by affixing his seal, and the seal was omitted; excluded).

[3] 1910, Wynne v. U. S., 217 U. S. 234, 30 Sup. 447 (certified copy of a vessel's enrolment, another State of the Union would not be assimilated to those of domestic officers. The precise state of the law in a given jurisdiction, however, will depend greatly on the statutory enlargements (ante, §§ 2162, 1680).

§ 2167. Official Signatures. The seal is an emblem more difficult to forge and more likely to be generally known than the signature. Hence, so far as affects the presumption of genuineness, at common law, it would seem that, for officers possessing a seal (and this circumstance can be ascertained from statute), nothing less than the seal should ordinarily suffice, even for a domestic officer.[1] Nevertheless, there has been no steady adherence to such a rule, if there is one; and by statute so many express sanctions have been given to the presumption of genuineness based on signature alone that it seems impossible to venture any generalizations as to the state of the law. The cases of a judge's signature, a court-clerk's, a justice-of-the-peace's, and a notary's, have been already noticed (ante, §§ 2164, 2165). It may also be supposed, as a matter of principle, that if any purporting signatures of domestic officers are to be presumed genuine, such recognition should properly include also those of commissioners of deeds appointed by the local Executive to act abroad,[2] and of the officers of a prior sovereignty in the same territory.[3]

The express statutes allowing recognition of signatures, of officers both within and without the jurisdiction, are now numerous.[4] The judicial rulings purporting to be signed and sealed by a deputy collector of customs, assumed genuine on the facts); 1842, Nicks v. Rector, 4 Ark. 251, 277 (seal of U. S. land-office commissioner proves itself); 1850, McNamee v. U. S., 11 Ark. 148, 150 (U. S. treasury auditor's seal proves itself); 1863, Gallup v. Armstrong, 22 Cal. 480 (government patent, authenticated by official seal, admitted); 1883, Wilcox v. Jackson, 109 Ill. 261, 264, semble (exemplification, under land-office seal, of its records, assumed genuine); 1897, Cooney v. Packing Co., 169 Ill. 370, 48 N. E. 406 (certified copy of a government plat under land-office seal and commissioner's certificate, received); 1837, Harris v. Doe, 4 Blackf. Ind. 369, 373 (seal of U. S. land-office presumed genuine); 1898, Davis v. Watkins, 56 Nebr. 288, 76 N. W. 575 (U. S. acting comptroller's sealed certificate, assumed genuine); 1915, State v. Kilmer, 31 N. D. 442, 153 N. W. 1089 (seal of the Federal collector of internal revenue for North and South Dakota, assumed genuine).

§ 2167. [1] Distinguish the question of the formal validity, under statute, of a document lacking seal: 1896, Hertig v. People, 159 Ill. 237, 42 N. E. 879 (like the next case); 1896, Kimball v. People, 160 Ill. 653, 43 N. E. 710 (certificate of publication of notices by the president of a newspaper-company, under Revenue Act, § 186); 1897, Fisk v. Hopping, 169 Ill. 105, 48 N. E. 323 (under statute, the certificate of acknowledgment of a commissioner of deeds does not need a seal for its validity, nor to be certified by the secretary of State; the statute is intended merely to cure otherwise defective acknowledgments).

[2] 1897, Fisk v. Hopping, 169 Ill. 105, 48 N. E. 323, semble (commissioner of deeds for Illinois in another State; his signature to a certificate will be presumed genuine, and also his official character will be noticed; so far as no statute requires more).

[3] 1812, Hayes v. Berwick, 2 Mart. La. 138 (prior Spanish governor's signature, presumed genuine without seal); 1817, Jones v. Gale, 4 Mart. La. 635 (same).

[4] Not all of the ensuing statutes clearly recognize the signatures alone, but they may be so construed; to these should be added those cited ante, § 2162, which sometimes recognize either seal or signature; and with them should be compared the statutes cited ante, §§ 1676, 1680, 1681, 1683, which sanction specific modes of proving certain classes of documents:

CANADA: Dominion: R. S. 1906, c. 146, §§ 979, 982 (certificates of trial and of conviction; in certain cases no proof of signature or official character is needed); R. S. 1906, c. 145, Evid. Act, § 29 (like Ont. R. S. c. 76, § 24, for orders signed by the secretary of State of Canada); R. S. 1906, c. 37, §§ 68, 69 (railway board; no proof needed of certain signatures); c. 145, Evid. Act, § 31 (no proof of handwriting or official position is required for copies certified under this Act); c. 144, § 146 (winding-up of companies, signature of any officer, etc., on any document, to be judicially noticed); Alberta: St. 1910, 2d sess., Evidence Act, c. 3, § 27 (like Ont. Rev. St. c. 76, § 24); ib. § 33 (like Ont. Rev. St. c. 76, § 30; applying it to any judge of any Court of Canada, Alberta, and any other province and territory in Canada, and to the Board of Railway Commissioners of Canada); British Columbia: Rev. St. 1911, c. 78, § 35 (like Ont. R. S. c. 76, § 24); c. 142, § 92 (similar to Ont. Rev. St. c. 215, § 105); Manitoba: Rev. St. 1913, c. 117, § 205 (like Ont. Rev. St. 1914, c. 215, § 105); c. 198, § 10 (like Dom. Evid. Act, § 29, applying to Manitoba only); New Brunswick: Consol. St. 1903, c. 127, § 45 (a contract entered into by a foreign corporation within the Province is sufficiently authenticated by proof that it was "duly signed or issued by the accredited agent or officer" of the corporation in the Province); § 75 (an act done "by any mayor or chief magistrate of a city, under the corporate seal" may be authenticated by the seal of the mayor or chief magistrate, "unless the act done be a corporate act"); Nova Scotia: Rev. St. 1900, c. 163, § 7 (like Dom. Evid. Act, § 29); § 8 (similar, applying it to the provincial secretary of Nova Scotia); Ontario: Rev. St. 1914, c. 76, § 24 (order signed by the secretary of State of Canada and "purporting to be written by command of the Governor-General shall be received in evidence as the order of the Governor-General"; so also for the provincial secretary and the Lieutenant Governor); § 30 (judicial notice shall be taken of the signatures of any judge in Canada, and of members of the Canada railway board, Ontario railway board, etc.); § 31 ("no proof shall be required of the handwriting or official position of any person certifying "to the truth of a copy, etc., of a proclamation, etc., or to any matter within his authority to certify); § 41 (copies of depositions shall be received "without proof of the signature" of the officer); c. 215, § 105 a document purporting to be a valid liquor license; its signature "shall 'prima facie' be taken to be genuine"); Prince Edward Isl. St. 1889, § 32 (like Ont. R. S. c. 76, § 24); § 53 (contracts of foreign corporations; like N. Br. Consol. St. c. 127, § 45); St. 1907, 7 Edw. VII, c. 3, § 25 (liquor offences; prior conviction provable by magistrate's certificate, without proof of his signature or official character); Saskatchewan: Rev. St. 1920, c. 44, Evidence Act, §§ 8, 9 (like Ont. Rev. St. 1897, c. 76, § 24); §§ 13–16 (certain certificates of inspection, etc., issued under the Canada Grain Act, to be received "without any proof of the signature" of the officers); c. 194, § 87 (similar, for provincial analyst's certificate of liquor analysis); c. 44, § 27 (handwriting of official certifying a copy; like Ont. R. S. c. 76, § 31); Yukon: Consol. Ord. 1914, c. 30, § 7 (like Dom. Evid. Act, § 29); § 8 (similar, for orders of the Territorial secretary); § 31 (like Ont. R. S. c. 76, § 31).

UNITED STATES: Alabama: Code 1907, § 3979 (patents issued by the U. S. or any U. S. State "must be received in evidence without further proof"); Colorado: Comp. St. 1921, § 6545 ("any patent" may be admitted "without further proof of its execution"); Hawaii: Rev. L. 1915, § 2605 (quoted ante, § 2162); § 2621 ("All Courts . . . shall henceforth take judicial notice of the signature of every person who is, or shall be, or shall have been, cabinet minister, judge of the supreme court or of any circuit court, of clerk or deputy clerk of the supreme court or of any circuit court, the commissioners of the board to quiet land titles, or masters in chancery, provided such signature shall be attached or appended to any decree, order, certificate, affidavit or other judicial or official document"); Indiana: Burns' Ann. St. 1914, § 9224 (auditor's certified copy of an officer's account, in an action against the latter, presumed genuine); § 5535 (railroad commission; schedules of rates, reports, etc., to be received in evidence "without formal proof being offered as to their authenticity"); Iowa: Code 1897, § 4642, Comp. Code § 7350 (signature of an officer to certificates of certified copies authorized by preceding sections of statutes, presumed genuine); Kansas: Gen. St. 1915, § 7287 ("the signature of the officer to any certificate or document" admissible as a certified copy or record, presumed genuine); Kentucky: Stats. 1915, § 1625 (official signature of any officer of this State, the U. S., or any U. S. State or Territory, to be noticed); Massachusetts: Gen. L. 1920, c. 159, § 10 (State department of public utilities; seal shall be judicially noticed); Minnesota: Gen. St. 1913, § 6907 (registration of title; owner's attested or acknowledged receipt for a duplicate in place of a lost original certificate; the signature shall be presumed genuine); Nebraska: Rev. St. 1921, § 8918 (signature of an officer certifying a copy or giving a certificate of the tenor of office records, presumed genuine); North Carolina: Con. St. 1919, § 265 (when records are destroyed, certified copies by the proper officer are admissible—"though without the seal of office"); Oklahoma: Comp. St. 1921, § 652 (signature of any officer to a certificate or document made admissible by foregoing sections, to be presumed genuine); Virginia: Code 1919, § 6194 (notice to be taken of the signature of the Governor or a domestic judge to any official or judicial document); §§ 6225–6 (certification of deposition in the State by the officer taking it; no proof of signature is necessary; certification of a deposition taken out of the State is receivable if authenticated by the officer's seal if he has one, and if not, by "some officer of the same State or country" under seal, except when taken by a justice in another domestic State or by an agreed person, when no seal or proof of signature is necessary); § 6197 (seal or signature of any officer certify-are not in harmony, and many of them rest, either explicitly or silently, upon local statutes.[5]

ing copies specified, as quoted ante, §§ 1680, 1681, to be admitted without further evidence); West Virginia: Code 1914, c. 130, § 33 (signature of the officer taking a deposition in or out of the State need not be proved genuine); § 34 (signature, without seal, of the officer taking a deposition out of the State must be authenticated by "some officer of the same State or country" under official seal).

[5] It is not clear in all of these cases whether the document bore the signature alone, without the seal:

ENGLAND: 1855, Bruce v. Nicolopulo, 11 Exch. 129, 133 (on a wall in a town in Turkey in the military occupation of the Russians was a proclamation bearing the printed signature "Gortschakoff"; held sufficient authentication); 1909, Turner's Case, 3 Cr. App. 103, 155, [1910] 1. K. B. 346 (signature of Director of Public Prosecutions, not noticed as genuine; "there happens to be no statute authorizing a Court to take notice of the signature of the Director of Public Prosecutions"); 1909, Waller's Case, 3 Cr. App. 213, 222, [1910] 1 K. B. 364 (similar).

UNITED STATES: Federal: 1900, Apache Co. v. Barth, 177 U. S. 538, 20 Sup. 718 (papers purporting to be county warrants, and to be signed by certain county officers, not presumed genuine); Alabama: 1858, Carhart v. Clark, 31 Ala. 396 (certificate of insolvency-claimant's oath, in another State, by a notary, judge of a court of record, or commissioner, proves itself, under statute); 1873, Stewart v. Trenier, 49 Ala. 492 (land-office register's copy of a document in his office, under statute, received without seal); 1889, Hawes v. State, 88 Ala. 37, 43, 69, 7 So. 302 (the statute for marriage registers applies to registers kept out of the State; semble, a certificate of purporting custodian proves itself); Arkansas: 1853, Floyd v. Ricks, 14 Ark. 286, 293 (U. S. land-register's certificate of location proves itself); 1878, Ferguson v. Peden, 33 Ark. 150, 152 (certificate of acknowledgment by a clerk of court of another State proves itself under statute); California: 1867, Wetherbee v. Dunn, 32 Cal. 106, 108 (signature of county tax-collector, presumed genuine); 1872, Himmelman v. Hoadley, 44 Cal. 213, 226 (city deputy-superintendent's signature assumed genuine; the title need not be added where the official character of the document appears); Connecticut: 1873, State v. Dooris, 40 Conn. 145 (certificate of an Irish marriage registrar, not assumed genuine); 1885, Northrop v. Knowles, 52 Conn. 522, 525 (marriage certificate signed by the officiating magistrate; signature treated as genuine without further proof); 1889, State v. Schweitzer, 57 Conn. 533; 537, 18 Atl. 787 (same); 1892, Erwin v. English, 61 Conn. 502, 507, 23 Atl. 753 (same); Florida: 1895, Yellow River R. Co. v. Harris, 35 Fla. 385, 17 So. 568 (certificates of title from the land-office receiver); 1921, Cobb v. State, 82 Fla. 233, 89 So. 417 (purporting certificate of marriage by deputy city clerk of New York City, lacking seal, excluded); Georgia: 1855, Dobbs v. Justices, 17 Ga. 624, 629 (attachment; official attestation presumed genuine); Illinois: 1853, Buckmaster v. Job, 15 Ill. 328 (governor's certificate of justice's official character in another State or Territory must be authenticated by the State seal); 1880, Walcott v. Gibbs, 97 Ill. 118 (tax-collector's receipts; whether presumed genuine, undecided); 1902, Morrison v. People, 196 Ill. 454, 63 N. E. 989 (stamped signatures of the county civil service commissioners on a certificate, presumed genuine on the facts); Kentucky: 1823, Wickliffe v. Hill, 3 Litt. 430 (U. S. Treasury auditor's certified copy, not presumed genuine without seal); 1823, Bernard v. Lewis, 4 Litt. 148, 151 (jailer's receipt, not presumed genuine); 1878, Loving v. Warren Co., 14 Bush 316, 322 (county bonds, bearing signatures of the county clerk and the judge and seal of the county; proof of the first and third, with evidence of part payment, held sufficient to show the genuineness of the second); Louisiana: 1859, Grant's Succession, 14 La. An. 795 (justice's certificate subscribed by the secretary of State, excluded); 1906, State v. Hopkins, 118 La. 99, 42 So. 660 (deputy coroner's signature, judicially noticed); Michigan: 1876, Boyce v. Stambaugh, 34 Mich. 348 (U. S. land-patent transcript, admitted); Mississippi: 1846, Sessions v. Reynolds, 7 Sm. & M. 130, 155 (foreign mayor's certificate, assumed genuine); Missouri: 1835, Bryan v. Wear, 4 Mo. 106, 110 (U. S. land-surveyor's certificate, assumed genuine without proof of signature); New Hampshire: 1858, Ferguson v. Clifford, 37 N. H. 85, 95 (certificate of city-clerk to copy of record, not assumed genuine); New York: 1840, Thurman v. Cameron, 24 Wend. 87, 91 (certificate by a statutory officer of a certificate of acknowledgment of a deed; the official character, signature, and jurisdiction, are to be presumed, as in the case of a notary); North Carolina: 1894, State v. Behrman, 114 N. C. 797, 805, 18 S. E. 220 (Russian rabbi's certificate, not presumed genuine); Oklahoma: 1920, Son-se-gra's Will, 78 Okl. 213, 189 Pac. 865 (secretary and assistant secretary of the Interior; signatures noticed, on an approval of an Indian will); Pennsylvania: 1875, American Life Insurance Co. v. Rosenagle, 77 Pa. 507, 516 (certificate of a copy of a Baden law; the signer not authenticated on the facts); Porto Rico: 1906, People v. Gallart, 11 P. R. 361, 367 (revenue offense; Territorial treasurer's certificate of sums paid, § 2168. Official Character and Title to Office. It has already been noted (ante, § 2161) that the acceptance of a purporting official document necessarily assumes, not only that the document was genuinely executed by the person named, but that the person thus claiming to act officially was in fact the lawful official having that character. The latter element is a fact external to the document, and is not included in the process of authentication in the narrow sense; nevertheless it may be equally supplied or assumed, by the principle of judicial notice or otherwise. Certain questions that concern this element, where a document's authentication is involved, may now be examined.

Suppose that a purporting official document by J. S. under seal of office is presumed genuine; there remains to be accounted for the element of J. S. being the officer that he purports in the document to be. This element can be supplied by the principle of judicial notice. On turning to that principle, however, we find (post, § 2576) that in strictness it does not always extend below certain supreme or central officers; i. e. to accept as true, without any evidence whatever, the allegation that J. S. is the incumbent of a certain office, is a step that may be sanctioned for the President, the Governor, the judges of the highest Court, and a few other officers, but not always for officers below these. For the inferior officers, then, may be required some evidence. Upon slight evidence a presumption may be built — for example, so as to dispense with proof of the document of appointment; but there must be at least some evidence, as a foundation for a presumption. Accordingly, for such officers there is a presumption of office (post, § 2535). This presumption may not be raised in all kinds of issues — for example, not in a direct proceeding to try the title to the office, and perhaps not in some criminal proceedings; but in general it suffices. The official character of the person, then, is reached, either by accepting it without any evidence (judicial notice), or by raising a presumption upon certain evidence. This presumption is usually without seal, excluded, under Evid. Act, § 69); Tennessee: 1825, Wilson v. Smith, 5 Yerg. 379, 407 (certificate of a deposition-commissioner will be assumed genuine and lawful only where he appears in it to have that character, etc.); 1827, Bennett v. State, Mart. & Y. 133 (the signature of an officer of government appointed by the Legislature proves itself, though not signed officially; here, an attorney-general); 1858, Fancher v. De-Montegre, 1 Head 40 (deed register's signature, presumed genuine); 1899, State v. Cooper, — Tenn. Ch. —, 53 S. W. 391 (land-register's certificate, presumed genuine); Texas: 1920, Langford v. Newsom, — Tex. —, 220 S. W. 544 (certified copy of certain Indian records, offered under U. S. St. May 27, 1908, excluded for lack of a seal); Vermont: 1870, State v. Horn, 43 Vt. 20, 23 (marriage certificate by a justice in another domestic State; signature and office must be proved); 1878, State v. Colby, 51 Vt. 291, 294 (certificate of marriage by a minister; signature must be proved); 1879, State v. Potter, 52 Vt. 33, 38 (town clerk's copy of a record including a minister's certificate, received, without authenticating the latter); Virginia: 1858, Ushers v. Pride, 15 Gratt. 190, 195 (auditor's certificate of delinquent tax-land, admitted without proof of execution or official character, though made before the statute).

For the peculiar case of a 'testimonio' in Texas, see the following cases: 1851, Paschal v. Perez, 7 Tex. 348; 1862, Andrews v. Marshall, 26 Tex. 212, 216; 1864, Lambert v. Weir, 27 Tex. 359, 363; 1867, Hatchett v. Connor, 30 Tex. 104, 109.

Questions of validity under rules of substantive law or of procedure — such as the nullity of an indictment by reason of informality in the signing — are not within the present purview.

raised whenever the person is shown to be acting in the office under claim of incumbency (post, § 2535).

Now, as applied to purporting official documents, this requirement is satisfied by the document's purporting to be executed by him as an officer; for this is an acting in the office. By the rule of authentication we have presumed that J. S. did actually sign and seal, purporting to do so as officer of the sort named; upon this act then, the presumption of office may be raised. Thus, for official documents the presumption of Authentication is usually found followed by the presumption of Office, though the latter presumption has an independent and larger existence of its own, and is also applied to official acts other than documentary ones. It merely follows naturally when the genuineness of the document is reached by the presumption of genuineness.

It is convenient to note here the application of the general presumption to purporting officers executing documents. The rules may be summarized as follows:

(1) Where a document purports to be executed by an officer, and the genuineness of the seal or signature can be presumed, the official character (or incumbency of office) of the person thus purporting to act as officer will also be presumed. This rule is amply illustrated by implication in the precedents already considered (§§ 2162–2168),[1] and is also expressly involved in some of the foregoing statutes dealing with authentication (ante, §§ 2162, 2167). Less frequently, but apparently without any difference of judicial opinion, it has been expressly laid down, whenever the question has been raised.[2]

(2) Where the document does not sufficiently purport to be executed as officer, the presumption cannot be raised, because (as above noted) it rests

§ 2168. [1] See, for example, the language of the Court in Kingman v. Cowles, cited ante, § 2164, and in Brown v. Phila. Bank, cited ante, § 2165.

[2] ENGLAND: 1813, R. v. Verelst, 3 Camp. 432 (Ellenborough, L. C. J.: "It is a general presumption of law that a person acting in a public capacity is duly authorized to do so"; here, the appointment of a surrogate administering an oath under which perjury was charged); 1832, R. v. Howard, 1 Moo. & Rob. 187 (commissioner to take affidavits); 1844, Bunbury v. Matthews, 1 C. & K. 380 (sheriff); R. v. Newton, ib. 469, 480 (commissioner for taking affidavits).

UNITED STATES: Fed. 1817, Willink v. Miles, 1 Pet. C. C. 429 (justice of the peace taking acknowledgment); 1824, Ruggles v. Bucknor, 1 Paine C. C. 358, 362 (officer taking a deposition); Ala. 1837, Bullock v. Wilson, 5 Port. 338, 339, 342 (receipt of U. S. receiver of public monies); 1837, Kennedy v. Dear, 6 Port. 90, 96 (slander by charging perjury; in proving the trial proceedings, the justice's office is provable by this presumption); 1895, Jinwright v. Nelson, 105 Ala. 399, 17 So. 91 (consular certificate of corporation-papers); 1904, Leech v. Karthaus, 141 Ala. 509, 37 So. 696 (certificate of acknowledgment by "W. S. Wells, Jr., N. P.," held sufficient); Cal. 1867, Wetherbee v. Dunn, 32 Cal. 106, 108 (tax-collector's deed); 1896, Galvin v. Palmer, 113 Cal. 46, 45 Pac. 172 (official character of one certifying to a copy of a map); Ill. 1843, Shattuck v. People, 5 Ill. 477, 481 (same as the next case); 1844, Livingston v. Kettelle, 6 Ill. 116, 119 (domestic justice of the peace certifying an acknowledgment); 1844, Vance v. Schuyler, 6 Ill. 160, 163 (commissioner of deeds for a domestic State in a foreign State); 1845, Thompson v. Schuyler, 7 Ill. 271, 280 (same); Ind. 1905, Old Wayne M. L. Ass'n v. McDonough, 164 Ind. 321, 73 N. E. 703 (a certified transcript signed with initials only of the judge's and clerk's Christian names suffices); Me. 1835, Cottrill v. Myrick, 3 Fairf. 222, 234 (persons making up records as town clerks); Mich. 1871, People v. Johr, 22 Mich. 461, 464 (official bond indorsed by S. D. B. as deputy attorney-general); N. H. 1866, Wells v. J. J. Mfg. Co., 47 N. H. 235, 254 (commissioner or notary); Vt. 1819, Brush v. Cook, Brayt. 89 (deed recorded by a clerk of the town); 1879, State v. Potter, 52 Vt. 33, 38 (town clerk's certified copy of a marriage-record; the signer presumed to be clerk of the town where the marriage purported to be solemnized).

upon the fact of an acting in office; hence, if the maker of the document does not clearly purport so to act, the required basis for the presumption is lacking.[3] This question is presented most frequently by documents signed by initials only or by some other imperfect designation of the office; here a liberal view of the principle would accept as sufficient any symbol plainly intelligible and unmistakably intended to indicate an official act; yet the tendency to follow statutory words literally, and the necessity of fulfilling forms prescribed by the substantive law, leads often to rejection on technical grounds.[4]

(3) If by seal or signature the presumption of genuineness is not raised, then, it has been said, the presumption of official character cannot be raised merely by proving otherwise (through handwriting-witnesses, or the like) the genuineness of the document. In other words, the testimony must be to the effect both "that the person who certifies it is really an officer of the place whence it comes" and that "the certificate is really his."[5] But this consequence is to be regarded as artificial; for there is apparently no reason of policy against raising the presumption of official character as soon as the genuineness of the document is sufficiently evidenced in any way whatever, — whether from the seal by presumption, or otherwise.[6] Yet the usual practice seems clear, from the precedents in the foregoing sections; and the reason is probably that the two presumptions were often not distinctly separated in theory, so that it was unnatural to recognize the one without the other; moreover, a person who could testify to the handwriting of the maker of the document could practically always testify to his official character, so

[3] 1821, Short v. Lee, 2 Jac. & W. 464, 466 (book of a tithe-collector, seventy years before; the character of the person as collector, not presumed from his acting as such, because he was acting merely as a private person).

[4] The following rulings serve as illustrations: Ill. 1850, Rowley v. Berrian, 12 Ill. 198, 200 (certificate signed "N. P.," presumed that of a notary); Ia. 1881, Bixby v. Carskaddon, 55 Ia. 533, 538, 8 N. W. 354 (certificate signed A. B. "Recorder"; office presumed); S. C. 1895, Miller v. Miller, 43 S. C. 306, 21 S. E. 254 (certificate of marriage, signed "Michael Naughton, J. P., C. Co., Ga.," excluded); Tenn. 1808, Donohoo v. Brannon, 1 Overt. 327 (certificate of acknowledgment before "J. M." received, as made by a lawful judge; "an officer ought to state the character in which he does the act; when this is done, the law will presume he possesses the character he assumes"; but express statement is not necessary if the character appears from the document; and as this certificate could not be given except by an official, his official character may be presumed; but an undated certificate by "N. M.," who was temporarily an officer, was rejected); 1809, State v. Manley, 1 Overt. 428 (warrant signed by A. B. "J. P.," not received); 1809, Stinson v. Russell, 2 Overt. 40 (certificate of deed by A. B., "C. G. C.," for "Clerk of Green Co.," received; "if from the caption and of the writing it appears to be a copy of a record or clearly intended as a certificate of an official act, and there is no reason to believe the person giving the certificate does not possess the character that would enable him to give it, it [the Court] will receive it in evidence"); Va. 1825, Sexton v. Pickering, 3 Rand. 473 (deed purporting to be by T. deputy of J. S. sheriff; proof of office required); 1845, Pollard v. Lively, 2 Gratt. 216, 218 (justice's attestation of a deposition, signed "J. P.," admitted); 1846, M'Neale v. Clarke, 3 Gratt. 299, 306 (constable's receipts signed "C.P.C." presumed official); 1848, Wynn v. Harman, 5 Gratt. 157, 165 (certified copy of a probated will, signed by J. H., "C.L.C.," sufficient).

Compare the cases cited ante, § 2159, as to authentication by official custody of documents lacking a purporting official signature, and ante, § 2133, as to authentication by proving the handwriting of an unsigned private document; and the Illinois cases ante, § 2165, notes 4, 9, as to a foreign notary's jurat.

[5] In the language cf. Matthews, J., in Las Caygas v. Larionda's Syndics, ante, § 2165; compare also Stout v. Slattery, there quoted.

[6] Accord: 1900, State v. Clough, 111 Ia. 714, 83 N. W. 727 (on proof of the officer's signature his official character will be presumed).

that no real hardship was involved. In such cases, then, a witness should testify to the general acting of the person as such officer, according to the requirements of the presumption of office as ordinarily enforced (post, § 2535).[7]

(4) The presumption of genuineness from official custody will equally serve to raise the presumption of official character, if the document purports to be official (ante, §§ 2158, 2159).

§ 2169. Corporate Seal. A document bearing a purporting corporate seal usually raises two distinct questions, somewhat different from those which arise for a purporting official document. The latter is usually offered as a hearsay statement, admissible under a special exception (ante, § 1630), either as a register, a report, or a certificate, to prove some act done or occurrence investigated by the officer; the former is usually a written transaction material as a part of the issue, such as a deed. Accordingly, the two questions for the former are: (1) Is the purporting seal genuine? (2) Was its affixing (i. e. the execution of the document) an act duly authorized by the corporation through its members or through its empowered officers? There will thus be incidentally involved some questions of substantive law affecting the validity of corporate acts (such as the implied authority of directors, the capacity of a 'de facto' corporation, and the like); so that a complete examination of the subject would be beyond the present purview. It will be enough here to note the general application of the present presumption to this class of documents.

(1) It seems clear that at common law in England the purporting seal of an ordinary private corporation was not presumed genuine,[1] although an occasional exception was made for quasi-public corporations:

1800, KINSEY, C. J., in Den v. Vreelandt, 7 N. J. L. 352, 353 (distinguishing the question whether the corporate seal implies a duly authorized corporate act): "It has been usual to allow deeds and other instruments relating to real estate to go to the jury when authenticated under the seals of the cities of London, Edinburgh, or Dublin; . . . this may be owing to the recognition of these corporations by the Legislature, or to the difficulty of making out the proof of the fact with the necessary precision, or perhaps to the almost utter impossibility of imposing a false or counterfeit for the genuine seal. . . . [But since the reason for recognizing public seals, as given by Gilbert, is their immemorial use and general familiarity,] the seals of private Courts, or of private persons are not evidence of themselves; there must be proof of their credibility. It cannot be presumed that they are universally known, and consequently they must be attested by the oath of some one acquainted with them"; and so the seal of a church corporation was treated as requiring evidence.

[7] Where the office is one whose incumbent will be judicially noticed without any evidence, the presumption of genuineness will be of no avail to raise the presumption of office if the purporting incumbent is judicially known not to be in fact the incumbent of the office; 1842, Follain v. Lefevre, 3 Rob. La. 13 (judge's signature to a bill of exceptions, "N. Jackson"; excluded, because the fact that no such judge existed was noticed); compare § 2578, post.

§ 2169. [1] 1799, Moises v. Thornton, 8 T. R. 303 (corporate seal of the Scotch University of St. Andrews, not accepted without proof; per Lawrence, J., the act of affixing need not be evidenced, but only the authenticity of the seal); 1825, Chadwick v. Bunning, Ry. & Mo. 306 (common seal of the Apothecaries' Company, not presumed genuine; even though a statute had provided that their seal should be "sufficient proof of the authenticity" of a certificate).

(2) But, the genuineness of the seal once evidenced, the presumption was raised that due consent and authority had been given to affix the seal to the document as a corporate act:

1682, Brounker v. Atkyns, Skinner 2; ejectment against a corporation; "Where there is a common seal put to a deed, that is title enough of itself, without witness to prove it or that the major part of the college be agreed; and if it be said that it was put to by the hand of a stranger, that shall be proved on the side that says so."

With this simple and safe solution, the rulings of the Courts in this country have not always agreed; and as their agreement has sometimes been in part with one or in part with the other of the two answers to the above questions, a variety of rules have come to be recognized in different jurisdictions.[2] Some-

[2] Besides the following cases, compare the citations in Cook on Corporations, 1898, 4th ed., § 722; Thompson on Corporations, 1895, §§ 5070–5084; and some of the Canadian statutes quoted ante, § 2162.

CANADA: Dom. R. S. 1906, c. 37, § 67 (railway board; documents purporting to have been issued by or for any railway company, receivable against it without further proof).

UNITED STATES: Alabama: 1839, Roberts v. Bank, 9 Port. 312, 317 (signature of the president of Alabama State Bank, and official character, presumed, without corporate seal); 1890, Robinson v. Cahalan, 91 Ala. 479, 481, 8 So. 415 (deed by the president under corporate seal, reciting authority; authority presumed); 1905, Collier v. Alexander, 142 Ala. 422, 38 So. 244; St. 1911, No. 52, p. 31, Feb. 20, § 1 (execution by president, etc. presumes authority); 1920, Sovereign Camp W. O. W. v. Burrell, 204 Ala. 210, 85 So. 762 (benefit certificate purporting to be executed by authorized officers under corporate seal; "this is evidence of its due execution"); California: 1892, Gutzeil v. Pennie, 95 Cal. 598, 30 Pac. 836 (by the vice-president and secretary with corporate seal; authority presumed); Colorado: 1906, Bliss v. Harris, 38 Colo. 72, 87 Pac. 1076 (corporate seal is presumed genuine, and the secretary's authority is presumed); Georgia: 1859, Hunter v. Blount, 27 Ga. 76 (diploma of a medical college in another State; existence of the college must be shown); 1877, Parkerson v. Burke, 59 Ga. 100, 101 (medical diploma; same ruling); Hawaii: 1907, Bottomley v. Hall, 18 Haw. 412 (deed bearing corporate seal, with signatures of president and secretary, admitted); Illinois: 1872, Sawyer v. Cox, 63 Ill. 130, 134 (corporate seal presumed genuine); 1894, Consolidated Coal Co. v. Peers, 150 Ill. 344, 358, 37 N. E. 937 (signed by the president or vice-president, with a seal; the seal presumed corporate, and authority presumed); Indiana: 1899, Ellison v. Branstrator, 153 Ind. 146, 54 N. E. 433 (corporate seal affixed by the secretary; authority presumed); 1908, Elkhart H. Co. v. Turner, 170 Ind. 455, 84 N. E. 812 (president's signature to note; authority not presumed); Iowa: 1874, Cooper v. Nelson, 38 Ia. 440, 445 (book admitted to be corporate records; secretary's signature of minutes presumed genuine); 1880, Chicago B. & Q. R. Co. v. Lewis, 53 Ia. 101, 4 N. W. 842 (seal presumed genuine, and authority presumed after proof of the officer's signature); 1902, State v. Phillips, 118 Ia. 660, 92 N. W. 876; Michigan: 1903, Gould v. Gould & Co., 134 Mich. 515, 96 N. W. 576 (mortgage); Comp. L. 1915, § 12537; Montana: 1922, Genzberger v. Adams, — Mont.—, 205 Pac. 658 (bank's assignment of a judgment); Nebraska: 1893, Gorder v. Canning Co., 36 Nebr. 548, 552, 54 N. W. 830 (by the president and secretary with corporate seal; authority presumed); New Jersey: 1800, Den v. Vreelandt, 3 N. J. L. 352 (quoted supra); 1893, Raub v. B. C. Ass., 56 N. J. L. 262, 28 Atl. 384 (cognovit executed by the president; seal not shown to be corporate; no presumption of authority or of seal's genuineness); 1900, Re West Jersey T. Co., 59 N. J. Eq. 63, 45 Atl. 282 (corporate seal and secretary's signature raise presumption of authority); New York: 1882, Trustees Canandarqua Academy v. McKechnie, 90 N. Y. 618, 629, semble (corporate seal raises presumption of authority); 1903, Quackenboss v. Globe & R. F. Ins. Co., 177 N. Y. 71, 69 N. E. 223; 1914, United Surety Co. v. Meenan, 211 N. Y. 39, 105 N. E. 106 (corporate seal, with signatures of president and secretary; authority presumed); Ohio: 1867, Sheehan v. Davis, 17 Oh. St. 571, 580 (corporate seal raises presumption of authority); Pennsylvania: 1821, Foster v. Hall, 7 S. & R. 156, 164 (seal of the public corporation of Belfast, not presumed genuine; but genuineness raises a presumption of due affixing by authority); 1821, Leasure v. Hillegas, 7 S. & R. 313, 318 (same rule applied to a seal of the Bank of North America); South Carolina: 1859, Josey v. R. Co., 12 Rich. 134, 137 (seal presumed genuine after proof of the officer's signature); South Dakota: Rev. Code 1919, § 545; Texas: 1921, Emory v. Bailey, — Tex. —, 234 S. W. 660 (deed by railroad company); times the English rule is accepted in both respects, i. e. there is a presumption of authority, but not of genuineness; sometimes it is reversed, and there is a presumption of genuineness but not of authority; sometimes both presumptions are recognized, and sometimes neither. Not uncommonly one or the other presumption is raised, or both, only when the document bears a particular officer's purporting signature; or, again, only when such a signature has been proved genuine; and this effect is given or refused to certain signatures by some Courts and not by others. In some instances, moreover, a signature alone is presumed genuine. That any general consensus exists on any proposition is not apparent.

West Virginia: 1906, Deepwater Council v. Renick, 59 W. Va. 343, 53 S. E. 552 (deed under seal, signed by the chief officers; authority presumed).

The mere recital of the affixing of the seal does not suffice to evidence the existence of the seal on the document: 1919, Fischer v. Lukens, 41 Cal. App. 358, 182 Pac. 967 (certified copy of lost recorded deed, the certificate not mentioning the seal).

BOOK I (continued): RULES OF ADMISSIBILITY

PART III: RULES OF EXTRINSIC POLICY

CHAPTER LXXIII.

§ 2175. General Nature of these Rules. The rules of Admissibility of evidence, as already pointed out (ante, § 11), fall into three general groups: first, those which determine the probative value, or Relevancy, of circumstantial and testimonial evidence, — that is, the fundamental quality without which no evidential data are to be allowed to be considered by the jury (ante, §§ 24–1168); secondly, those Auxiliary Rules of Probative Policy which impose artificially some added conditions of admissibility, but are directed solely to improving the quality of proof and strengthening the probabilities of ascertaining the truth as the result of the investigation (ante, §§ 1171–2169); and, thirdly, the present group, — those rules which rest on no purpose of improving the search after truth, but on the desire to yield to requirements of Extrinsic Policy. They forbid the admission of various sorts of evidence because some consideration extrinsic to the investigation of truth is regarded as more important and overpowering.

The rules of this last class thus differ from those of the second class, in that their effect is to obstruct, not to facilitate, the search for truth, and in that this effect is consciously accepted as less harmful, on the whole, than the extrinsic disadvantages which would ensue to other interests of society if no such limitations existed. It ought to follow that no limitation of the present nature ought to be recognized unless it is clearly demanded by some specific important extrinsic policy, and that every intendment should be made against such a demand.

The most natural grouping of these rules of Extrinsic Policy is that which regards them according as they are absolute or conditional. The former class of prohibitions are enforced by the Court like other rules of Evidence; the latter are applied only on demand of the person who is supposed to be affected in his interests by the extrinsic policy in question and to be protected by the rule from an injury to that interest. The latter class of rules — the rules of Privilege — have features in common, which sharply distinguish them from the former. The former class is small in number; indeed, it can hardly be said that there are any definite and well-established rules of exclusion of that type; they have usually been discountenanced in judicial opinion. The rules of the latter class, on the contrary, are numerous and well established, and affect in a marked degree the daily course of proof in litigation.

Title I: RULES OF ABSOLUTE EXCLUSION

§ 2180. Indecency. The notion of indecency is often regarded as though it were an absolute quality of words and actions. In truth, it is merely a relative term. "Unto the pure, all things are pure," said Paul. Indecency depends upon the spirit and purpose of the utterance or the act. The law punishes what it calls "indecent exposure of the person"; but it has no penalty for the very same actions when done in the presence of a physician for the purpose of obtaining his medical assistance. The utterance of vile words of slander may be indecent from the mouth of the slanderer; but the repetition of those words in a court of justice by the witness who is called by the injured person to prove them in his action for redress is in no sense indecent. What we are to conclude, then, since the process of investigating the truth in courts of justice is both an indispensable and a dignified function of life, is that no utterances or acts called for in evidence in that process are to be prohibited because under other circumstances they might be characterized by indecency. In other words, the general policy of discountenancing indecency does not extend to the exclusion of evidence in a court of justice.[1]

To this the only qualification can be that, if utterances or acts, which might be indecent in some circumstances and might therefore excite prurient attention among onlookers at a public occasion and lead to shame and embarrassment in the person of whom they are required in evidence, are not materially useful for the purpose of the proof in hand, they may be dispensed with and prohibited; the discretion of the trial Court to determine the exigency in each case. This limitation upon the general principle is a fair one, and would probably find general judicial recognition.[2] Its application would § 2180. [1] "Utilius scandalum nasci permittitur quam veritas relinquatur" (Decretalium Gregorii IX Compilatio, lib. V, tit. XLI, cap. III).

[2] Eng. 1765, Dacosta v. Jones, Cowp. 729 (action on a wager as to the sex of the Chevalier D'Eon, a French person who in male attire had frequented race-courses, fought duels, etc., in England; testimony of many who had been confidentially employed by the Chevalier was received, and a verdict for the plaintiff — who bet on the female sex — was given; but the whole inquiry was declared improper and judgment rendered for the defendant; quoted supra); U. S. 1920, Kinzell v. Chicago M. & St. P. R. Co., 33 Ida. 1, 190 Pac. 255 (cited more fully ante, § 1159); 1900, Renaud v. Bay City, 124 Mich. 29, 82 N. W. 617 (a wife suing for personal injury testified to a miscarriage within a week thereafter; a question whether she had intercourse with her husband during that week was excluded, on grounds of "public policy"; as to this, if it was material as being inconsistent with her testimony, it should be received, just as the fact of sexual intercourse is always provable when material; but if the fact was not relevant, it should have been excluded on that ground; the ruling is unsound); 1811, Fall v. Overseers, 3 Mumf. Va. 495, 502, 506 (admissible where "necessary to effectuate the purposes of justice"; here, intercourse of third persons with a bastardy sometimes take the extreme form (as in Lord Mansfield's ruling) of refusing to entertain at all a specific plea or cause of action; but the principle would be in effect the same, whether it resulted in a rule of evidence or in a rule of substantive law. Lord Mansfield's utterance plainly lays down both the general principle and its qualification:

1765, MANSFIELD, L. C. J., in Dacosta v. Jones, Cowp. 729 (refusing to allow the trial of a wager as to the sex of the Chevalier D'Eon): "The trial of this cause made a great noise all over Europe; and, from the comments made upon it, and farther consideration, I am sorry that I did not at once yield to the consideration that it led to indecent evidence, and was injurious to the feelings and interests of a third person. I am sorry, likewise, that the witnesses subpœnaed had not been told they might refuse to give evidence if they pleased. But no objection to their being examined was made by the counsel for the defendant, nor did any of themselves apply for protection or hesitate to answer. . . . Mere indecency of evidence is no objection to its being received when it is necessary to the decision of a civil right or criminal liability. Upon this ground we think that Mr. J. Burnet was wrong in refusing to try the case before him where a young lady brought an action of slander for saying that she had a defect in her person which unfitted her for marriage, and the defendant alleged in his plea that she had such a defect; for there, if the statement was false, the plaintiff had received a grievous injury, for which she was entitled to exemplary damages; and, if it was true, the defendant ought to have been freed from the charge of a malicious lie, however he might still be liable to censure for indelicately proclaiming the truth. But if it had been merely an action on a wager whether the young lady had such a defect, it would have been nearly the present case. . . . Here is a person who represents himself to the world as a man, is stated on the record to be 'Monsieur le Chevalier D'Eon,' has acted in that character in a variety of capacities, and has his reasons and advantages in so appearing. Shall two indifferent people, by a wager between themselves, try whether he is a cheat and imposter, and be allowed to subpœna all his intimate friends and confidential attendants to give evidence that will expose him all over Europe? Such an inquiry is a disgrace to judicature."

§ 2181. Impropriety (Judge, Counsel, Juror). In the case of certain officers of justice, it has sometimes been argued that their appearance as witnesses would be a violation of the policy applicable to their profession or function:

(1) A judge, it has been argued, should not become a witness, because of the difficulty of reconciling the due exercise of his functions as judge and as witness (ante, § 1909).

(2) A counsel or attorney, it has been thought, should not appear as witness, except in unavoidable necessity, because (among other reasons) of the danger which this practice would involve of a loss of public confidence in the integrity of the profession (ante, § 1911).

(3) A juror, it has been argued, should not be a witness, because of the inconsistency of the two functions (ante, § 1910). Whether the other rule about jurors, that they shall not testify to the doings of the jury-room (if this be a rule of evidence at all), is a rule of the present sort, is open to question (post, § 2352).

complainant); 1909, Dunkin v. Hoquiam, 56 Wash. 47, 105 Pac. 149 (rupture of bowels, in an action for personal injury; exhibition allowed, quoting the above text).

For further applications of the principle, see the citations under autoptic proference, or real evidence (ante, § 1159).

§ 2182. Inconvenience (Public Records). The removal of public records from their proper place of custody, to be used as evidence in court, is attended with danger of loss and mutilation of the records and with delay and annoyance to those who are entitled to consult them and those who are charged with preparing them. For these reasons, and especially since the purpose of proof can usually be as well served by a copy, Courts have often laid down a rule forbidding the use, as evidence, of the originals of public records. To what extent the present rule of policy makes such a prohibition can be better examined elsewhere (post, § 2373), where the rule as to Official Secrets comes to be discriminated from the present rule. It is to be noted that, so far as the illegality of the removal of the document is concerned, there is concededly no objection on that score (post, § 2183).

§ 2183. Documents, Chattels, Testimony, obtained by Illegal Search or Removal; General Principle. Necessity does not require, and the spirit of our law does forbid, the attempt to do justice incidentally and to enforce penalties by indirect methods. An employer may perhaps suitably interrupt the course of his business to deliver a homily to his office-boy on the evils of gambling or the rewards of industry. But a judge does not hold court in a street-car to do summary justice upon a fellow-passenger who fraudulently evades payment of his fare; and, upon the same principle, he does not attempt, in the course of a specific litigation, to investigate and punish all offences which incidentally cross the path of that litigation. Such a practice might be consistent with the primitive system of justice under an Arabian sheikh; but it does not comport with our own system of law. It offends, in the first place, by trying a violation of law without that due complaint and process which are indispensable for its correct investigation. It offends, in the next place, by interrupting, delaying, and confusing the investigation in hand, for the sake of a matter which is not a part of it. It offends, further, in that it does this unnecessarily and gratuitously; for since the persons injured by the supposed offence have not chosen to seek redress or punishment directly and immediately, at the right time and by the proper process, there is clearly no call to attend to their complaints in this indirect and tardy manner. The judicial rules of Evidence were never meant to be an indirect process of punishment. It is not only anomalous to distort them to that end, but it is improper (in the absence of express statute) to enlarge the fixed penalty of the law, that of fine or imprisonment, by adding to it the forfeiture of some civil right through loss of the means of proving it. The illegality is by no means condoned; it is merely ignored.

For these reasons, it has long been established that the admissibility of evidence is not affected by the illegality of the means through which the party has been enabled to obtain the evidence:[1]

§ 2183. [1] In the following citations, the document or chattel was received, unless otherwise noted; the later citations in each jurisdiction include those which have recanted from the orthodox rule and follow the doctrine of Boyd v. U. S., described in § 2184.

ENGLAND: 1723, Bishop Atterbury's Trial, 16 How. St. Tr. 495, 629 (the Crown having 1841, WILDE, J., in Com. v. Dana, 2 Metc. 329: "Admitting that the lottery tickets and materials were illegally seized, still this is no legal objection to the admission of them in evidence. If the search warrant were illegal, or if the officer serving the warrant exceeded obtained treasonable letters, imputed to the defendant, by intercepting the mails under authority of a statute, questions directed to discover whether that authority had been properly followed in so doing were not allowed); 1740, Jordan v. Lewis, 2 Stra. 1122, 14 East 306, note (malicious prosecution; copy of indictment admitted, though the order granting it was to another person; "nor could the Court take notice in what manner it was obtained"); 1811, Legatt v. Tollervey, 14 East 302 (similar; "if the officer shall, even without authority, have given a copy of the record," it is admissible, although it were "surreptitiously obtained"); 1814, Stockfleth v. De Tastet, 4 Camp. 11 (certain former testimony was said to have been obtained by breach of trust: "What is proved to have been written or signed by any of the defendants, I must admit as evidence against them, without considering how it was obtained"); 1826, R. v. Derrington, 2 C. & P. 419 (the turnkey promised to post a letter of the accused, but instead handed it to the authorities); 1827, Caddy v. Barlow, 1 Man. & Ry. 275, 277 (malicious prosecution; copy of an indictment receivable, though not procured according to law, "without inquiry to the mode by which he became possessed of it"); 1849, R. v. Granatelli, 7 State Tr. N. S. 979, 987 (document taken by the police illegally); 1854, Phelps v. Prew, 3 E. & B. 430, 437, 441, per Crompton, J. (preceding doctrine approved).

CANADA: 1886, R. v. Doyle, 12 Ont. 350 (liquors obtained by unlawful search).

UNITED STATES: Alabama: 1887, Chastaing v. State, 83 Ala. 29, 3 So. 304 (pistol found on searching defendant, admitted, irrespective of legality of search); 1893, Shields v. State, 104 Ala. 35, 41, 16 So. 85 (similar); 1897, Scott v. State, 113 Ala. 64, 21 So. 425 (carrying a concealed weapon; illegality of the search by the officer testifying to it, immaterial);
Arkansas: 1896, Starchman v. State, 62 Ark. 538, 36 S. W. 940 (tools found by officers, searching defendant's house, admitted irrespective of legality of search); 1921, Benson v. State, 149 Ark. 633, 233 S. W. 758 (violation of liquor law; testimony to the finding of liquor "without a warrant or other process," held admissible; following Starchman v. State);
California: 1896, People v. Alden, 113 Cal. 264, 45 Pac. 327 (judgment-roll improperly removed for use as evidence); 1922, People v. Mayen, — Cal. —, 205 Pac. 435 (larceny; documents, etc., found in defendant's house on a search-warrant invalid because not specific enough, held not inadmissible, although an application for return made on the day of trial had been erroneously denied; the party's right to the return of the articles and the State's right to use evidence being separate things; quoted supra);
Connecticut: 1896, State v. Griswold, 67 Conn. 290, 34 Atl. 1047 (seizure of papers by a trespass on premises);
Georgia: 1857, Wood v. McGuire, 21 Ga. 576, 582 (papers improperly ordered to be given up); 1897, Williams v. State, 100 Ga. 511, 28 S. E. 624 (liquors found by illegal search, admitted; repudiating the contrary obiter intimation in Rusher v. State, 94 Ga. 363, 21 S. E. 593; quoted supra); 1901, Sanders v. State, 113 Ga. 267, 38 S. E. 841; 1903, Jackson v. State, 118 Ga. 780, 45 S. E. 604 (stolen goods found by illegal search); 1899, Dozier v. State, 170 Ga. 708, 33 S. E. 418 (cited post, § 2264); 1904, Springer v. State, 121 Ga. 155, 48 S. E. 907 (pistol taken from the accused; this line of cases in Georgia does not carefully distinguish the present principle and that of § 2264, post); 1906, Duren v. Thomasville, 125 Ga. 1, 53 S. E. 814 (like Williams v. State); 1907, Hammock v. State, 1 Ga. App. 126, 58 S. E. 66 (carrying a concealed weapon; a deputy sheriff arrested the defendant on information and searched him without a warrant for arrest or for search, and found a concealed weapon; the deputy's testimony was excluded; this is a flat repudiation of Williams v. State, although the opinion endeavors to distinguish it; the opinion terms the arrest "illegal" though the defendant was certainly committing a misdemeanor in fact in the deputy's presence, and the arrest was ordinarily legal; the opinion goes on the ground that there was a compulsory self-incrimination, but this is unsound, for the deputy took the pistol out of the defendant's pocket, and the defendant himself did no voluntary act at all; the opinion frankly avows "a public policy which would rather see the guilty go unpunished than have the guilt of the accused established" in this manner; Powell, J., the writer of the opinion, is one of our most accomplished living judges; but in a country so cursed by the use of concealed weapons the "public policy" thus declared is the worst kind of a policy; and it is undoubtedly doing just what it confesses to, viz. letting the guilty go unpunished); 1907, Hughes v. State, 2 Ga. App. 29, 58 S. E. 390 (repeating the ruling of Hammock v. State; the opinion, by Russell, J., professes "the utmost abhorrence and detestation of the practice of carrying deadly weapons"; but this term "utmost" is scarcely correct; for the learned Court obviously feels a still more intense abhorrence for a zealous police officer's attempts at suppression of a detestable crime without formalities which the event shows were quite needless); 1907, Sherman v. State, 2 Ga.

his authority, the party on whose complaint the warrant issued, or the officer, would be responsible for the wrong done. But this is no good reason for excluding the papers seized, as evidence, if they were pertinent to the issue, as they unquestionably were. When

App. 686, 58 S. E. 1122 (foregoing cases followed); 1907, Smith v. State, 3 Ga. App. 326, 59 S. E. 934 (selling liquor illegally; testimony by officers arresting in the act, and seizing whisky, without a warrant: the Hughes and Hammock cases approved but distinguished; the opinion is interesting as the exhibition of an able mind unsuccessfully struggling to be consistent); 1912, Whitaker v. State, 11 Ga. App. 208, 75 S. E. 258 (U. S. bankruptcy petition, excluded on this ground; but incorrectly); 1913, Underwood v. State, 13 Ga. App. 206, 78 S. E. 1103 (illegal sale of liquor; the accused was arrested without a warrant, his safe-keys forcibly taken from his pocket, his safe unlocked, and whisky found therein; excluded, following Hammock v. State; careful opinion by Hill, C. J.); 1915, Heimer v. State, 16 Ga. App. 588, 85 S. E. 821 (liquor obtained by illegal search of property or premises is inadmissible; otherwise, as to illegal search of the person; Broyles, J., concurring, repudiates the distinction and stands upon Williams v. State, supra); 1916, Calhoun v. State, 144 Ga. 679, 87 S. E. 893 (liquor discovered by illegal search of the person is admissible, except so far as the privilege against self-crimination might be violated; Williams v. State affirmed; "the criterion is, who furnished or produced the evidentiary fact connecting the defendant with the crime?" this opinion reviews prior cases and was given in answer to a request for instruction by the Court of Appeals); 1916, Smith v. State, 17 Ga. App. 693, 88 S. E. 42 (pistol offense; Calhoun v. State applied); 1921, Johnson v. State, 152 Ga. 271, 109 S. E. 662 (carrying concealed weapons; the pistol was found during a search without warrant while accused was under arrest for burglary; held admissible; Calhoun v. State, affirmed);

Hawaii: 1903, Terr. v. Sing Kee, 14 Haw. 586, 588 (liquor obtained by unlawful search is admissible);

Idaho: 1906, State v. Bond, 12 Ida. 424, 86 Pac. 43 (letter of the accused; mode of obtaining it, held immaterial); 1918, State v. Anderson, 31 Ida. 514, 174 Pac. 124 (illegal carriage of liquors; liquors found by illegal search by the sheriff, on stopping the defendant's automobile, admitted; flatly approving the orthodox principle, and not taking the trouble to notice Weeks v. U. S.);

Illinois: 1875, Stevison v. Earnest, 80 Ill. 513, 517 (records illegally removed from court; quoted supra); 1891, Gindrat v. People, 138 Ill. 103, 105, 27 N. E. 1085 (larceny; articles obtained by a detective's search of defendant's rooms without a warrant, admitted); 1892, Siebert v. People, 143 Ill. 571, 583, 32 N. E. 431 (similar; here, letters); 1894, Trask v. People, 151 Ill. 523, 38 N. E. 248 (similar; here, papers); 1919, People v. Paisley, 288 Ill. 310, 123 N. E. 573 (Gindrat v. People approved); 1922, Chicago v. Di Salvo, 302 Ill. 85, 134 N. E. 5 (purchasing a revolver without a permit; the police took possession of the revolver at the accused's house; a motion for return of the revolver was made at the opening of the case and again at the close, but without offering any evidence in support; the revolver itself was put in evidence without objection; held that "the legality of the means by which the officers obtained possession of the revolver was immaterial" under the circumstances);

Iowa: 1897, State v. Van Tassel, 103 Ia. 6, 72 N. W. 497, semble (papers taken by illegal search); 1901, Sullivan v. Nicoulin, 113 Ia. 76, 84 N. W. 978 (illegal order for inspection of premises); 1922, State v. Rowley, — Ia. —, 187 N. W. 7 (attempt to produce a miscarriage, the defendant being apparently a professional abortionist; abortion tools obtained by the sheriff's search of defendant's house in her absence, without a search warrant, held inadmissible);

Kansas: 1905, State v. Schmidt, 71 Kan. 862, 80 Pac. 948 (bottle of liquor seized without a warrant, admitted); 1910, State v. Turner, 82 Kan. 787, 109 Pac. 654 (revolver procured from defendant by threats); 1921, State v. Smithmeyer, 110 Kan. 172, 202 Pac. 638, documents produced under a subpoena before the Attorney-General, under St. 1919, c. 316 (the process held not to have been a search and seizure);

Kentucky: 1920, Youman v. Com., 189 Ky. 152, 224 S. W. 860 (possession of intoxicating liquors; the sheriff having a warrant of arrest, but no search warrant, went to defendant's house but failed to find him; while there, they searched, found, and impounded some liquor; afterwards a motion to restore the liquor was denied, and the liquor was destroyed; on the trial, the sheriff testified to the finding of the liquor; held, that evidence thus unlawfully obtained was inadmissible, and that the condition required in Weeks v. U. S., viz. a prior motion to return the articles, was not necessary; quoted supra); 1921, Banks v. Com., 190 Ky. 330, 227 S. W. 455 (malicious shooting; shoes obtained by search made with consent of owner of premises, admitted; distinguishing Youman v. Com.); 1921, Turner v. Com., 191 Ky. 825, 231 S. W. 519 (chicken-stealing; taking of a sack of chickens from defendant after arrest without a search warrant, held not to make the fact of finding the chickens on him inadmissible; Youman v. Com. distinguished); 1921, Com. v. Riley, 192 Ky. 153, 232 S. W. 630 (possession of burglars' tools; Youman and Gouled cases explained and affirmed); 1921, Bruner v. Com., 192 Ky. 386, papers are offered in evidence the Court can take no notice how they were obtained, — whether lawfully or unlawfully, — nor would they form a collateral issue to determine that question."

233 S. W. 795 (burglary; the police while searching under a warrant for liquor found shoes stolen; Youman v. Com. approved, but here defendant consented to the search; the evidence held admissible); 1922, Ash v. Com., 193 Ky. 452, 236 S. W. 1032 (keeping liquor; Youman v. Com. followed; the noble vow of the French at Verdun, "They shall not pass!" is sentimentally dragged in to protect petty lawbreakers); 1922, Bowling v. Com., 193 Ky. 642, 237 S. W. 381 (illegal making of liquor; seizure of a still, out of doors, seen in operation by the officers, held legal, though without a search warrant; Youman v. Com. distinguished); 1922, Royce v. Com., 194 Ky. 480, 239 S. W. 795 (liquor found in "open and obvious" possession in an automobile, and taken without a warrant, admitted);

Louisiana: 1898, State v. Renard, 50 La. An. 662, 23 So. 894 (letter given to a trusty in jail for mailing, and by him handed to officials, admitted);

Maine: 1876, State v. Gorham, 60 Me. 270, 272 (admissible, "whether it is or not improperly taken from the office where the law requires, as in this case, that it shall be constantly kept"; said of an internal revenue record-book);

Maryland: 1906, Lawrence v. State, 103 Md. 17, 63 Atl. 96 (conspiracy to defraud; certain shares of stock, taken by the police from a satchel at the defendant's hotel or from the defendant's person under arrest, admitted, regardless of the illegality of procuring them);

Massachusetts: 1838, Faunce v. Gray, 21 Pick. 243, 246 (deposition of defendant, taken 'in perpetuam,' admitted, regardless whether it has been "unfairly obtained" by a "perversion and abuse" of the statutory process); 1841, Com. v. Dana, 2 Metc. 329 (quoted supra); 1850, Com. v. Certain Lottery Tickets, 5 Cush. 369, 374 (approving Com. v. Dana); 1862, Com. v. Certain Intox. Liquors, 4 All. 593, 600 (officer's misconduct in executing process does not exclude his testimony based on knowledge thus obtained); 1872, Com. v. Welsh, 110 Mass. 359 (similar); 1882, Com. v. Taylor, 132 Mass. 261 (similar, for a medical officer making an unauthorized autopsy); 1885, Com. v. Henderson, 140 Mass. 303, 5 N. E. 832 (like Com. v. Welsh); 1889, Com. v. Keenan, 148 Mass. 470, 472, 20 N. E. 101 (similar); 1892, Com. v. Ryan, 157 Mass. 403, 405, 32 N. E. 349 (ballots admitted, irrespective of the process of obtaining them); 1893, Com. v. Tibbetts, 157 Mass. 519, 521, 32 N. E. 910 (letters obtained by search under warrant for search of husband's premises for liquor); 1893, Com. v. Hurley, 158 Mass. 159, 33 N. E. 342 (police officers unlawfully arresting, allowed to testify to what they found); 1893, Com. v. Byrnes, 158 Mass. 172, 174, 33 N. E. 343 (butter-sample, admitted, irrespective of the legality of obtaining it); 1894, Com. v. Brelsford, 161 Mass. 61, 36 N. E. 677 (like Com. v. Welsh); 1895, Com. v. Welch, 163 Mass. 373, 40 N. E. 103 (unlawful search of the person for liquor); 1895, Com. v. Acton, 165 Mass. 11, 42 N. E. 329 (illegal search for liquor by officers); 1896, Com. v. Smith, 166 Mass. 370, 44 N. E. 503 (unlawfully seized gaming implements); 1905, Com. v. Tucker, 189 Mass. 457, 76 N. E. 127 (officers obtaining a knife, by a trespass and search in the defendant's house; admitted);

Michigan: 1894, Cluett v. Rosenthal, 100 Mich. 193, 197, 58 N. W. 1009 (testimony admitted to the contents of books, by one who saw them while they were in the sheriff's possession under an unauthorized attachment); 1911, People v. Aldorfer, 164 Mich. 676, 130 N. W. 351 (liquors seized under a search-warrant); 1919, People v. Marxhausen, 204 Mich. 559, 171 N. W. 557 (liquor found by officers on defendant's premises, by search without a warrant, during his absence, held returnable to defendant, under Weeks v. U. S. infra, and Newberry v. Carpenter, 107 Mich. 567); 1922, People v. Margelis, — Mich. —, 186 N. W. 488 (unlawful possession of whisky; the officers, unlawfully arresting the defendant, "grabbed him around the arms like that, tussled around, rolled on the floor, and the bottle fell out of his pocket; when I got up my partner had the bottle"; the whisky-bottle was held not admissible in evidence; it may be wondered whether the ruling would have been different had the object been a dynamite bomb; if it would not, how are police officers going to arrest dynamiters in emergencies?);

Minnesota: 1905, State v. Stratt, 94 Minn. 384, 102 N. W. 913 (bank books); 1906, State v. Hoyle, 98 Minn. 254, 107 N. W. 1130 (gambling apparatus obtained by officers' unlawful entrance, admissible);

Mississippi: 1922, Faulk v. State, — Miss. —, 90 So. 481 (making intoxicating liquor; articles found without a search-warrant, admitted, the defendant consenting to the search); 1922, Tucker v. State, — Miss. —, 90 So. 845 (making intoxicating liquor; articles seized without a search-warrant in defendant's home and premises, held returnable on application, following Gouled v. U. S., 'et id omne genus'; declining to accept the principle that "the Courts will not stop to inquire into [sic?] whether evidence offered was illegally obtained," and falling back on the sentiment, "It is better that the guilty escape punishment in some instances than that these securities of liberty be violated"; has it 1875, SCHOFIELD, J., in Stevison v. Earnest, 80 Ill. 513, 518: "It is contemplated, and such ought ever to be the fact, that the records of Courts remain permanently in the places assigned by the law for their custody. It does not logically follow, however, that occurred to these courts that there is in reality no such dilemma?);

Missouri: 1895, State v. Pomeroy, 130 Mo. 489, 497, 32 S. W. 1002 (lottery tickets seized by officers from defendant's desk and on his person, without a search-warrant);
Montana: 1906, State v. Fuller, 34 Mont. 12, 85 Pac. 369 (defendant's shoes compared with footprints); 1921, State ex rel. Samlin v. District Court, 59 Mont. 600, 198 Pac. 362 (writ of prohibition to stay search-warrant; the warrant being unlawfully exercised, ordered that "the whisky seized under the warrant be returned to him"; but if the articles unlawfully seized had been offered in evidence on trial, they would not have been rejected); 1917, State v. Reed, 53 Mont. 292, 163 Pac. 477 (pandering; documents obtained by opening defendant's premises with a key taken from his person when arrested, held admissible);
Nebraska: 1907, Younger v. State, 80 Nebr. 201, 114 N. W. 170 (shoes taken by force from the accused);
New Hampshire: 1858, State v. Flynn, 36 N. H. 64 (liquor found on defendant's premises by officers searching under a warrant, admitted, irrespective of the legality of the search); 1895, State v. Sawtelle, 66 N. H. 488, 32 Atl. 831, semble (a telegram claimed by the company to be privileged was ordered to be produced, and as to the defendant it was held that "the method of procuring the telegrams did not concern him");
New Jersey: 1915, State v. Mausert, 88 N. J. L. 286, 95 Atl. 991 (keeping a disorderly house; books openly displayed on the counter, and seized without a search-warrant at the time of arresting the defendant, held properly admitted, because they were "proofs of guilt found upon his arrest within the control of the accused," as defined in U. S. v. Weeks, and not papers secreted and obtained by search);
New York: 1903, People v. Adams, 176 N. Y. 351, 68 N. E. 636 (seizure of papers under a search-warrant); People v. Adams was affirmed on writ of error in Adams v. New York, U. S., cited post, § 2184;
North Carolina: 1912, State v. Wallace, 162 N. C. 622, 78 S. E. 1 (letter found by a policeman searching defendant's house, admitted, following Adams v. New York, U. S., infra); 1916, State v. Fowler, 172 N. C. 905, 90 S. E. 408 (burglary; property found at a sister's house, entered upon her invitation, admitted); 1922, State v. Simmons, — N. C. —, 110 S. E. 591 (transporting liquor; liquor taken without a search-warrant, admitted; following Adams v. New York, U. S.; Gouled v. U. S. distinguished as applying to articles evidential only; "where the article itself is the 'corpus delicti,' as illicit liquor or a weapon illegally carried, and in similar cases, the article itself however obtained is admissible in evidence");
Oklahoma: 1919, Knight v. State, 16 Okl. Cr. 298, 182 Pac. 736 (illegal search-warrant);
Oregon: 1901, State v. McDaniel, 39 Or. 161, 65 Pac. 520 (letter seized on defendant's person); 1922, State v. Laundy, — Or. —, 204 Pac. 958, 974 (criminal syndicalism; books and papers were taken from defendant's person and club premises without a search-warrant; held that at the time of a lawful arrest the officer may "lawfully take articles in the possession or under the control of the prisoner, if they supply evidence of guilt"; sensible opinion by Harris, J.);
Porto Rico: 1914, People v. Cereedo, 21 P. R. 52, 57, 60 (lottery offence; books taken under a search-warrant not objected to before trial, admitted; citing Weeks v. U. S.); 1915, People v. Diaz, 22 P. R. 177, 194; 1917, Morales v. Vivaldi, 25 P. R. 206 (action to restore money seized by the prosecuting attorney for use as evidence on a charge of conspiracy);
South Carolina: 1893, State v. Atkinson, 40 S. C. 363, 371, 18 S. E. 1021 (papers taken from defendant's house by trespass); 1916, Blacksburg v. Beam, 104 S. C. 146, 88 S. E. 441 (liquor obtained by illegally searching defendant for a key, while traveling, and then opening and searching his trunk, excluded); 1917, State v. Harley, 107 S. C. 304, 92 S. E. 1034 (lottery; articles found in a locked room adjacent to the arrest, unlocked by the accused at the officer's command, admitted, illegality being immaterial); 1918, State v. Quinn, 111 S. C. 174, 97 S. E. 62 (liquor found on arresting drunken man in a car without a warrant, held admissible);
South Dakota: 1909, State v. Madison, 23 S. D. 584, 122 N. W. 647 (liquor found under an illegal warrant); 1922, State v. Kieffer, — S. D. —, 187 N. W. 164 (search warrant for liquor; conditions of issuance discussed); 1922, Sioux Falls v. Walser, — S. D. —, 187 N. W. 821 (violation of city liquor ordinance; liquor seized under an invalid warrant, held admissible, the property seized being used in violation of law, so that "the person in possession can claim no property in it);
Tennessee: 1908, Cohn v. State, Perkins v. State, Horton v. State, 120 Tenn. 61, 109 S. W. 1149, illegal sale of liquor, etc.; (testimony obtained by unlawfully trespassing and making a peekhole in a wall, admitted); 1922, Hughes v. State, 145 Tenn. 544, 238 S. W. 588 (liquor found in an automobile when stopped by the officer and searched without a warrant, held lawfully seized by way of preventing an offense, and therefore admissible in evidence);
Texas: 1879, Walker v. State, 7 Tex. App. 245, the records, being obtained, cannot be used as instruments of evidence; for the mere fact of [illegally] obtaining them does not change that which is written in them. . . . Suppose the presence of a witness to have been procured by fraud or violence, while the party thus procuring the attendance of the witness would be liable to severe punishment, surely that could not be urged against the competency of the witness. If he could not, why shall a record, although illegally taken from its proper place of custody and brought before the Court, but otherwise free from suspicion, be held incompetent"?

1897, LUMPKIN, P. J., in Williams v. State, 100 Ga. 511, 28 S. E. 624: "As we understand it, the main, if not the sole, purpose of our constitutional inhibitions against unreasonable searches and seizures, was to place a salutary restriction upon the powers of government. That is to say, we believe the framers of the constitutions of the United States and of this and other States merely sought to provide against any attempt, by legislation or otherwise, to authorize, justify, or declare lawful, any unreasonable search or seizure. This wise restriction was intended to operate upon legislative bodies, so as to render ineffectual any effort to legalize by statute what the people expressly stipulated could in no event be made lawful; upon executives, so that no law violative of this constitutional inhibition should ever be enforced; and upon the judiciary, so as to render it the duty of the Courts to denounce as unlawful every unreasonable search and seizure, whether confessedly without any color of authority, or sought to be justified under the guise of legislative sanction. For the misconduct of private persons, acting upon their individual 264 (foot-tracks; cited post, § 2264, n. 3); 1920, Rippey v. State, 86 Tex. Cr. App. 539, 219 S. W. 463 (stolen property, recovered from defendant's premises by illegal search, held admissible; (1) rule of U. S. v. Weeks, 232 U. S. 383, held inapplicable; (2) stolen property found by search without a warrant is in any event admissible; distinguishing "things whose undeniable ownership and property is in the accused and which are not directly connected with the crime"); 1920, Moore v. State, 87 Tex. Cr. 569, 226 S. W. 415 (robbery; footprints made by defendant while under arrest, admissible, though arrest was illegally made without a warrant; Walker v. State adhered to);

Utah: 1922, Salt Lake City v. Wight, — Utah —, 205 Pac. 900 (selling liquor; money and liquor obtained by officers on search without a warrant, held admissible; the offense being committed in their presence);

Vermont: 1891, State v. Mather, 64 Vt. 101, 23 Atl. 590 (letter obtained surreptitiously; "the Court can take no notice of how they were obtained, whether legally or illegally"); 1899, Barrett v. Fish, 72 Vt. 18, 47 Atl. 174 ("A court of law will take no notice on trial of a respondent how letters or other papers offered in evidence were obtained for the purpose of determining their admissibility in evidence"); 1901, State v. Slamon, 73 Vt. 212, 50 Atl. 1097 (general principle conceded); 1906, State v. Suitor, 78 Vt. 391, 63 Atl. 182 (liquor offence; liquor, etc., obtained on a search-warrant, admitted, irrespective of the legality of the search);

Washington: 1905, State v. Royce, 38 Wash. 111, 80 Pac. 268 (articles obtained by illegal search of the person are admissible); 1922, State v. Gibbons, — Wash. —, 203 Pac. 390 (unlawful possession of liquor; the sheriff, seeing the defendant's car, telephoned to the courthouse for a search warrant, arrested defendant, drove the car to the courthouse, took whisky from the car and found the search-warrant awaiting him in his office; held that "the lawfulness or unlawfulness of the seizure of the whisky by the sheriff becomes determinative of the right of the prosecution to introduce it," and that it was unlawfully seized; following Amos v. U. S.; as to which it may be remarked that our constitutional forefathers would have been astonished to see the great principle twisted in this way to obstruct the vigilant administration of the law by efficient officers);

West Virginia: 1882, State v. Douglass, 20 W. Va. 770, 791 (improper conduct of the landlord of the defendant's counsel in searching the latter's trunk during his absence, or "any improper means they may have used," held not to exclude the fact of finding a pistol); 1897, State v. Cross, 44 W. Va. 315, 29 S. E. 527 (pistol discovered by illegal search of the defendant admissible); 1902, State v. Edwards, 51 W. Va. 220, 41 S. E. 429 ("If it was an illegal seizure, that is no objection to the use of the papers as evidence, they being proper evidence in the case in other respects");

Wyoming: 1922, Wiggin v. State, — Wyo. —, 206 Pac. 373 (killing cattle; articles taken in the party's immediate possession on lawful arrest are admissible; details not decided).

For an analogous principle, see the doctrine about admitting a confession obtained by fraud, ante, § 841.

For the rule as to confessions made by an accused on an illegal examination before a magistrate, see ante, §§ 849, 852.

responsibility, and of their own volition, surely none of the three divisions of government is responsible. If an official, or a mere petty agent of the State, exceeds or abuses the authority with which he is clothed, he is to be deemed as acting, not for the State, but for himself only; and therefore he alone, and not the State, should be held accountable for his acts. If the constitutional rights of a citizen are invaded by a mere individual, the most that any branch of government can do is to afford the citizen such redress as is possible, and bring the wrongdoer to account for his unlawful conduct. . . . Whether or not prohibiting the Courts from receiving evidence of this character would have any practical and salutary effect in discouraging unreasonable searches and seizures, and thus tend towards the preservation of the citizen's constitutional right to immunity therefrom, is a matter for legislative determination."

§ 2184. Modern Federal Doctrine of Boyd v. U. S. and Weeks v. U. S. The foregoing doctrine was never doubted until the appearance of the ill-starred majority opinion of Boyd v. United States, in 1885, which has exercised unhealthy influence upon subsequent judicial opinion in many States. That opinion, thoroughly incorrect in its historical assertions, and travelling outside the question at issue, advanced two fallacious conclusions, viz.: first, that the Fourth Amendment to the Constitution (prohibiting unreasonable search and seizure) was so related to the Fifth Amendment (prohibiting compulsory self-incrimination) that the Fifth Amendment could be invoked by an accused to withhold from surrender documents sought by even a lawful official search; and secondly, that documents obtained by unlawful official search could be excluded from evidence, as a consequence of the Fourth Amendment.

The first of these fallacies was soon afterwards fully repudiated in the court of origin; the subject is elsewhere fully considered, under the Privilege against Self-Crimination (post, § 2264).

The second fallacy is of course in direct contradiction to the fundamental principle here under consideration (ante, § 2183); and remains to be noticed.

1. The progress of this doctrine of Boyd v. United States was as follows: (2) (a) The Boyd Case remained unquestioned in its own Court for twenty years; meantime receiving frequent disfavor in the State Courts (ante, § 2183). (b) Then in Adams v. New York, in 1904, it was virtually repudiated in the Federal Supreme Court, and the orthodox precedents recorded in the State courts (ante, § 2183) were expressly approved. (c) Next, after another twenty years, in 1914 — moved this time, not by erroneous history, but by misplaced sentimentality — the Federal Supreme Court, in Weeks v. United States, reverted to the original doctrine of the Boyd Case, but with a condition, viz., that the illegality of the search and seizure should first have been directly litigated and established by a motion, made before trial, for the return of the things seized; so that, after such a motion, and then only, the illegality would be noticed in the main trial and the evidence thus obtained would be excluded. (d) Subsequent rulings attempted to work out this doctrine consistently.[1]

§ 2184. [1] The following Federal cases cover all four periods mentioned in the text; the State cases are all placed ante, § 2183:

(a) 1885, Boyd v. U. S., 116 U. S. 616, 618, 6 Sup. 524 (documents obtained from the accused, by official seizure unlawful under the

Meanwhile, the heretical influence of Weeks v. United States spread, and evoked a contagion of sentimentality in some of the State Courts, inducing them to break loose from long-settled fundamentals.

Fourth Amendment prohibiting unreasonable searches and seizure, not admissible; unsatisfactory opinion; the case is further examined post, § 2264); 1899, Bacon v. U. S., 38 C. C. A. 37, 97 Fed. 35 (letter of a bank-president illegally obtained by the State receiver and handed to the U. S. marshal, admitted).

(b) 1904, Adams v. New York, 192 U. S. 585, 24 Sup. 372 (seizure of papers under a search-warrant; Boyd v. U. S. is mentioned with respect, but Com. v. Dana, Mass., and the early State cases, are expressly approved, and it is said that the Amendment is intended to "give remedy against such usurpations when attempted" and "to render invalid legislation or judicial procedure having such effect," but not to "exclude testimony which has been obtained by such means, if it is otherwise competent"); 1906, Hale v. Henkel, U. S. (cited post, § 2264); 1908, U. S. v. Wilson, C. C. S. D. N. Y., 163 Fed. 338 (trunk and contents of defendant seized by officers on defendant's premises; motion for return of property denied, as to later admissibility on trial of the evidence thus found, the Court says: "Any objection because of trespass will be overruled. . . . This proposition is stated by the supreme Court of the United States in the case of Adams v. N. Y., and is so well recognized that it cannot be the subject of much discussion"; whence may be inferred that the practitioners were not the only ones surprised by the later decision in Weeks v. U. S., infra); 1910, Holt v. U. S., 218 U. S. 245, 31 Sup. 2 (Adams v. N. Y. approved).

(c) 1914, Weeks v. U. S., 232 U. S. 383, 34 Sup. 341 (use of the mails for lottery; documents found by the police and marshal in the defendant's house, entered and searched without a warrant, excluded; Adams v. New York distinguished on the ground that there the point was "collateral," while here the defendant had before trial moved for the return of the documents and the trial Court refused to return those used in evidence; this distinction is vain; in effect this decision violates the principle).

(d) 1916, Flagg v. U. S., 20 C. C. A., 233 Fed. 481 (fraudulent use of the mails; the defendant was arrested at his place of business, and his books and papers were seized by the police without a warrant; on his trial, the evidence obtained from them was used; reversed, on the authority of Weeks v. U. S., Veeder, J., concurring, with a criticism of the inconsistency between Weeks v. U. S. and Adams v. N. Y.); 1916, U. S. v. Friedberg, D. C. E. D. Pa., 233 Fed. 313 (the rule declaring illegality immaterial, Adams v. N. Y. does not apply on an application to the Court before trial for a return of books and papers unlawfully seized); 1918, Rice v. U. S., 1st C. C. A., 251 Fed. 778 (fraudulent use of the mails; papers obtained under a search warrant, not followed by proceedings to determine legality and obtain their return, held admissible); 1918, Re Tri-State Coal & Coke Co., D. C. W. D. Pa., 253 Fed. 605 (commercial combination to fix excessive prices; certain books, etc., seized under search-warrant, ordered returned for lack of specific description); 1919, Fitter v. U. S., 2d C. C. A., 258 Fed. 567, 573 (Flagg v. U. S. approved, but here distinguished on the ground that here the documents illegally taken without a warrant were not offered in evidence nor used as the basis of testimony; the other facts in this case were like Weeks v. U. S.); 1919, Schenck v. U. S., Baer v. U. C., 249 U. S. 47, 39 Sup. 247 (Holt v. U. S. and Weeks v. U. S. held not to exclude the use of documents obtained on a valid search-warrant against the headquarters of a society of which defendants were officers); 1919, Coastwise Lumber & Supply Co. v. U. S., 2d C. C. A., 259 Fed. 847 (seizure of defendant's papers under a search-warrant, and motion for their return; effect of the Fourth and Fifth Amendments, not decided; Manton, J., diss.); 1919, Laughter v. U. S., 6th C. C. A., 259 Fed. 94, 98 (documents taken from defendant's pocket without a warrant when arrested; until he had made a motion for their restoration, their use in evidence, held not error; but after such a motion was made and erroneously denied, their use in evidence was error, under U. S. v. Weeks, supra; but in this case it is astonishing to find that the search of accused lawfully arrested is deemed to be unlawful without a special search-warrant; such a doctrine will needlessly handicap the officers of the law; this point is ignored in the Court's opinion); 1920, U. S. v. Moresca, D. C. S. D. N. Y., 266 Fed. 713, 718 ("Since Weeks v. U. S. . . . it seems to be thought that if the prosecutor is found in possession of any documents, especially of evidential value, that once belonged to an accused, a motion to get them back should prevail, apparently because the U. S. attorney ought to be prevented from using the papers in violation of the Fifth Amendment. I am not advised of any holding to that effect. . . . The only ground on which this or any similar motion can rest is that the prosecutor's possession is the result of an unreasonable search and seizure (Fourth Amendment) or of a deprivation of property without due process of law (Fifth Amendment). This must always and here does present a question of fact"; a sane pronouncement refreshingly free from

In this last period, much of the effect may be ascribed to the temporary recrudescence of individualistic sentimentality for freedom of speech and the usual cant); 1920, Youngblood v. U. S., 8th C. C. A., 266 Fed. 795 (perjury; the sheriff had seized alleged stolen articles in defendant's home on search without a warrant; no request had been made to a court for the return of the articles, which were afterwards admitted in evidence; objection overruled, first, because of lack of request, secondly, because the sheriff did not act under Federal authority; Weeks v. U. S. followed); 1920, Silverthorne Lumber Co. v. U. S., 251 U. S. 385, 40 Sup. 182 (S., an officer of the defendant company, was arrested under an indictment with a single charge; the marshal without a warrant searched the offices of the defendant company and took away all papers, examined them, and from their contents framed a new indictment, retaining photographic copies of the papers; on application by the defendant, the District Court ordered the return of the originals, but impounded the copies; the prosecution then subpœnaed the defendant company for the originals, and on refusal to obey the District Court ordered production, and held the defendant in contempt for refusal to obey the order; held, that the order to produce was vitiated by the illegality of the original seizure; "the knowledge gained by the Government's own wrong cannot be used by it in the way proposed"; Flagg v. U. S. approved, as a corollary of Weeks v. U. S.; the opinion becomes sentimental over the Government's "outrage"; some of the language is a virtual repudiation of the whole doctrine of Adams v. U. S., and imports a return to the discredited doctrine of Boyd v. U. S.); 1920, Haywood v. U. S., 7th C. C. A., 268 Fed. 795, 800 (conspiracy to prevent execution of a Federal law; the defendants were members of the Industrial Workers of the World; documents were taken by police officers from the premises of the I. W. W. on defective search-warrants; after indictment, a motion to return the property was made and overruled; held, the motion having been correctly overruled on the Fourth Amendment on the circumstances, the doctrine of Weeks v. U. S. did not make the use of the documents at the trial a violation of the Fifth Amendment); 1921, Gouled v. U. S., 255 U. S. 298, 41 Sup. 261 (charge of using the mails to defraud; a paper was surreptitiously taken from the defendant's office by a person acting under direction of the U. S. Army, Intelligence Department, and other papers were taken under a search used primarily to find evidence of the charge, and not to impound unlawful articles; held, (1) that the secret taking of the first paper was a violation of the Fourth Amendment, (2) that the search-warrant was improperly used for the other papers, and (3) therefore that since a motion for return had been duly made before trial pursuant to Weeks v. U. S., and erroneously denied, the papers were erroneously admitted on the trial; the principle that the illegal obtaining of evidence is no ground for its exclusion is said to be "only a rule of procedure," and therefore "not to be applied as a hard-and-fast formula to every case, regardless of its special circumstances"; inasmuch as Boyd v. U. S. is repeatedly referred to with approval, while Adams v. U. S. and Holt v. U. S. are not even mentioned, this imports that the Federal Supreme Court herein returned wholeheartedly to the doctrine of Boyd v. U. S.); 1921, Amos v. U. S., 255 U. S. 313, 41 Sup. 266 (charge of selling whisky illegally; whisky was found by revenue officers in defendant's house on search without a warrant; after the jury was sworn, a motion for return of the whisky was made and denied; held that the motion was not too late, and that the possession of the whisky was erroneously shown in evidence); 1921, Honeycutt v. U. S., 4th C. C. A., 277 Fed. 939, 941 (two cases; knowing possession of stolen goods; checks, etc., taken under a warrant not sufficiently specific, held improperly admitted; according to this ruling, prosecuting attorneys would have to qualify as telepathists); 1922, U. S. v. Falloco, D. C. W. D. Mo., 277 Fed. 75 (liquor seizures; the rule of Weeks v. U. S. construed to admit chattels seized by State officers not acting under direction of Federal officers; but here there was such direction or coöperation); 1921, U. S. v. Kelly, D. C. E. D. N. C., 277 Fed. 485 (stolen automobiles; the rule of Weeks v. U. S. held to forbid search for letters, etc., having only an evidential value); 1922, U. S. v. Bateman, D. C. S. D. Calif., 278 Fed. 231 (searching on the highway without a warrant an automobile entering the country from Mexico with liquor; the rule of U. S. v. Weeks held not to forbid; sensible opinion by Trippet, J.); 1922, U. S. v. Camarota, D. C. S. D. Calif., 278 Fed. 388 (motion for return of property taken on a search-warrant, denied, the defendant being absent from the premises, and the officer being lawfully there: "being lawfully there, and seeing a crime being committed, had a perfect right, and it was his plain duty, to seize the articles which were being used in committing the crime; in making such seizure, the officer could not do so by virtue of the search-warrant, but in the performance of his general duty to prevent the commission of crime"; this particular Court stands out prominently with its healthy disinclination to put a throttling interpretation on the natural and legitimate processes of law enforcement); 1922, U. S. v. Snyder, D. C. N. D. W. Va., 278 Fed. 650 (liquor taken from defendant, arrested without a warrant on sight by bulging pockets as he stood on the conscience, stimulated by the stern repressive war-measures against treason, disloyalty and anarchy, in the years 1917–1919. In a certain type of mind, it was impossible to realize the vital necessity of temporarily subordinating the exercise of ordinary civic freedom during a bloody struggle for national safety and existence. In resistance to these war-measures, it was natural for the misguided pacifistic or semi-pro-German interests to invoke the protection of the Fourth Amendment. Thus invoked and made prominent, all its ancient prestige was revived and sentimentally misapplied. In such a situation, the forces of criminality, fraud, anarchy, and law-evasion perceived the advantage and made vigorous use of it. Since the enactment of the Eighteenth Amendment and its auxiliary legislation, a new and popular occasion has been afforded for the misplaced invocation of this principle; and the judicial excesses of many Courts in sanctioning its use give an impression of maudlin complaisance which would be ludicrous if it were not so dangerous to the general respect for law and order in the community.

No doubt a stage of saturation must be reached before this period of misuse of the Fourth Amendment will come to a close.

2. As to the legal theory of Weeks v. United States, there seems to be little support for it, — assuming at least that the fundamental principle of § 2183, ante, is accepted.

(a) The opinion in Weeks v. United States seeks to distinguish the above established principle as merely requiring "that a collateral issue will not be raised to ascertain the source from which testimony competent in a criminal case comes," while in the Weeks case the defendant made a formal motion before trial for the return of the seized documents. But this is an unsound use of the term "collateral." That term signifies "not relating to the main issue," and is applied to a class of facts. Now a defendant cannot turn a collateral fact into a material fact by merely making a formal motion before trial, instead of waiting till the offer of evidence. Suppose, in this lottery charge, he has made a motion that (say) the results of the last municipal lottery in Naples be sent for, to be laid before the jury; that would not turn the obviously collateral fact into a material fact. The point is that the fact of illegality of method in obtaining evidential materials is a collateral fact street, held admissible; sensible opinion by Baker, J., quoted supra); 1921, Dillon v. U. S., 2d C. C. A., 297 Fed. 639 (liquor offence; whisky taken by officers at the public bar of a hotel, without a warrant, and on subsequent search with defendant's consent, admitted); 1922, Woods v. U. S., 4th C. C. A., 279 Fed. 706 (drug traffic; articles found on search under a warrant insufficiently descriptive, held inadmissible; the pedantic interpretation of the fullness of description here required under U. S. Rev. St. § 3462 would do credit to the medieval pleading system of the 1200s as described in Mr. H. C. Lea's Superstition and Force).

On the subject of these modern decisions, the following article ably expounds views favoring the doctrine of Weeks v. U. S.: Professor Z. Chafee, Jr., "Progress of the Law, 1921–1922: Evidence; Searches and Seizures" (1922; Harvard Law Rev. xxxv, 673, 694).

Whether an indictment should be quashed because illegally obtained evidence was produced to the grand jury, seems to be the same question on principle; but there is a separate line of precedents: 1920, U. S. v. Silverthorne, D. C. W. D. N. Y., Mar. 31, 265 Fed. 853, May 3, id. 859.

to the main issue; and all the motions in the world will not make it anything else.

(b) Looking still deeper, the mainstay of the special doctrine of Weeks v. United States is that the party whose documents were obtained by illegal search has a right to obtain their return by motion before trial. But no such consequence is implied in the Fourth Amendment. The object of the amendment was to protect the citizen from domestic disturbance by the disorderly intrusion of irresponsible administrative officials. It expressly forbids such official misconduct, and it implies both a civil action by the citizen thus disturbed and a process of criminal contempt against the offending officials. But it implies nothing at all as to the nature of the documents or chattels possessed by the citizen; and they may be treasonable, criminal, wicked, harmless, or meritorious, so far as the Amendment's tenor is concerned. And when the citizen sets up a right to a remedial process for their return, certainly the merits of the articles themselves must come into issue. If the officials, illegally searching, came across an infernal machine, planned for the city's destruction, and impounded it, shall we say that the diabolical owner of it may appear in court, brazenly demand process for its return, and be supinely accorded by the Court a writ of restitution, with perhaps an apology for the "outrage"? Such is the logical consequence of the doctrine of Weeks v. U. S., unless the right to return be dependent on the merits of the document or chattel as being instruments of crime or not. Yet no such issue is permitted by the doctrine of Weeks v. United States. — The truth is that the doctrine in question is illogical, and that the citizen has no right to claim a return of the articles taken unless their criminal or innocent nature be first determined; but as that is part of the very issue in the main charge, it cannot be determined in advance; so that the doctrine leads to impracticable results.

3. But the essential fallacy of Weeks v. United States and its successors is that it virtually creates a novel exception, where the Fourth Amendment is involved, to the fundamental principle (ante, § 2183) that an illegality in the mode of procuring evidence is no ground for excluding it. The doctrine of such an exception rests on a reverence for the Fourth Amendment so deep and cogent that its violation will be taken notice of, at any cost of other justice, and even in the most indirect way.

The following opinion contains the best that can be said from this point of view:

1920, CARROLL, C. J., in Youeman v. Com., 189 Ky. 152, 224 S. W. 860: "It stands admitted that the evidence offered on the trial, and to the introduction of which objection was then made, was obtained in an unlawful way by a county officer charged with the duty of giving complete obedience to the Constitution and laws of the State. The officer, in violation of the Constitution and in disregard of the statute pointing out the way in which premises might be searched, took the law into his own hands, invaded the premises of and went into the buildings of the suspected offender, and without asking or obtaining his consent proceeded to and did search for and find the liquor that was seized. On these facts the question presented is: Will courts, established to administer justice and enforce the laws of the State, receive, over the objection of the accused, evidence offered by the prosecution that was admittedly obtained by a public officer in deliberate disregard of law for the purpose of securing the conviction of an alleged offender? In other words, will Courts authorize and encourage public officers to violate the law, and close their eyes to methods that must inevitably bring the law into disrepute, in order that an accused may be found guilty? Will a high Court of the State say in effect to one of its officers that the Constitution of the State prohibits a search of the premises of a person without a search warrant, but if you can obtain evidence against the accused by so doing you may go to his premises, break open the doors of his house, and search it in his absence, or over his protest, if present, and this Court will permit the evidence so secured to go to the jury to secure his conviction?

"It seems to us that a practice like this would do infinitely more harm than good in the administration of justice; that it would surely create in the minds of the people the belief that Courts had no respect for the Constitution or laws, when respect interfered with the ends desired to be accomplished. We cannot give our approval to a practice like this. It is much better that a guilty individual should escape punishment than that a Court of justice should put aside a vital fundamental principle of the law in order to secure his conviction. In the exercise of their great powers, Courts have no higher duty to perform than those involving the protection of the citizen in the civil rights guaranteed to him by the Constitution, and if at any time the protection of these rights should delay, or even defeat, the ends of justice in the particular case, it is better for the public good that this should happen than that a great constitutional mandate should be nullified. It is trifling with the importance of the question to say, as some Courts have said, that the injured party has his cause of action against the officer, and this should be sufficient satisfaction. Perhaps, so far as the rights of the individual are concerned, this might answer; but it does not meet the demands of the law-abiding public, who are more interested in the preservation of fundamental principles than they are in the punishment of some petty offender."

All this is misguided sentimentality. For the sake of indirectly and contingently protecting the Fourth Amendment, this view appears indifferent to the direct and immediate result, viz., of making Justice inefficient, and of coddling the criminal classes of the population. It puts Supreme Courts in the position of assisting to undermine the foundations of the very institutions they are set there to protect. It regards the over-zealous officer of the law as a greater danger to the community than the unpunished murderer or embezzler or panderer.

Among the best judicial expositions of the orthodox view, the following stands out:

1922, BAKER, J., in U. S. v. Snyder, D. C. W. D. W. Va., 278 Fed. 650 (the accused had been arrested without a warrant, on sight of bulging pockets as he stood on the street corner, and liquor was found in his pockets): "The Fourth Amendment to the Constitution contains no prohibition against arrest, search, or seizure without a warrant. That was left under the rules of common law. The amendment provides not that no arrest, search, or seizure should be made without a warrant, but prescribes that there shall be no unreasonable search and seizure; in other words, that the people shall be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects against unreasonable searches and seizures; not against all searches and seizures, but simply against unreasonable searches and seizures. And this brings us to the question: In what cases may arrests, searches, and seizures be made without a warrant, under the principles of the common law and statutory law prevailing in this country? . . . It can be said to be the common law of the states, or the common law of the great majority of the states, in the Union, that a peace officer, a prohibition officer, has the right to arrest a criminal offender caught in the act of committing the crime; and when he arrests him, if he captures him with counterfeit coin, if he catches him with smuggled goods, if he catches him with stolen articles, if he catches him with liquor under the Prohibition Law, he has the right not only to arrest him without a warrant, but to search him and to retain the wet goods as evidence against him. . . . To hold that no criminal can in any case be arrested and searched for the evidence and tokens of his crime without a warrant, would be to leave society, to a large extent, at the mercy of the shrewdest, the most expert, and the most depraved of criminals, facilitating their escape in many instances."

1922, SLOANE, J., in People v. Mayer, — Cal. — 205 Pac. 435 (articles found under an invalid search-warrant on a charge of larceny had been erroneously denied to be returned and were afterwards used in evidence):

"Without at all minimizing the gravity of such offense, or the sacredness of the right of every citizen to be secure in his person, home, and property from any unlawful invasion by the state, it does not follow that the subsequent detention and introduction in evidence of the property thus wrongfully taken constituted error on the trial of the appellant. The trespass committed in the wrongful seizure of these personal effects by unauthorized officers, and the subsequent use of the same in evidence on the part of the prosecution, were in legal effect entirely distinct transactions with no necessary or inherent relation to each other. . . . No authority, so far as we have been able to discover, has suggested that the subsequent use of articles so taken as evidence is in itself any part of the unlawful invasion of such constitutional guaranty. The search and seizure are complete when the goods are taken and removed from the premises. Whether the trespasser converts them to his own use, destroys them, or uses them as evidence, or voluntarily returns them to the possession of the owner, he has already completed the offense against the Constitution when he makes the search and seizure, and it is this invasion of the rights of privacy and the sacredness of a man's domicile with which the Constitution is concerned. . . .

"Upon what theory can it be held that such proceeding [for the return of the articles] is an incident of the trial, in such a sense that the ruling thereon goes up on appeal as part of the record and subject to review by the appellate court? It seems to us rather an independent proceeding to enforce a civil right in no way involved in the criminal case. The right of the defendant is not to exclude the incriminating documents from evidence, but to recover the possession of articles which were wrongfully taken from him. That right exists entirely apart from any proposed use of the property by the State or its agents. . . . The fallacy of the doctrine contended for by appellant is in assuming that the constitutional rights of the defendant are violated by using his private papers as evidence against him, whereas it was the invasion of his premises and the taking of his goods that constituted the offense irrespective of what was taken or what use was made of it; and the law having declared that the articles taken are competent and admissible evidence, notwithstanding the unlawful search and seizure, how can the circumstance that the court erred in an independent proceeding for the return of the property on defendant's demand add anything to or detract from the violation of defendant's constitutional rights in the unlawful search and seizure?

"The Constitution and the laws of the land are not solicitious to aid persons charged with crime in their efforts to conceal or sequester evidence of their iniquity. From the necessities of the case the law countenances many devious methods of procuring evidence in criminal cases. The whole system of espionage rests largely upon deceiving and trapping the wrongdoer into some involuntary disclosure of his crime. It dissimulates a way into his confidence; it listens at the keyhole and peers through the transomlight. It is not nice, but it is necessary in ferreting out the crimes against society which are always done in darkness and concealment. Thus it is that almost from time immemorial courts engaged in the trial of a criminal prosecution have accepted competent and relevant evidence without question, and have refused to collaterally investigate the source or manner of its procurement, leaving the parties aggrieved to whatever direct remedies the law provides to punish the trespasser, or recover the possession of goods wrongfully taken."

The doctrine of Weeks v. United States also exemplifies a trait of our Anglo-American judiciary peculiar to the mechanical and unnatural type of justice. The natural way to do justice here would be to enforce the splendid and healthy principle of the Fourth Amendment directly, i. e. by sending for the high-handed, over-zealous marshal who had searched without a warrant, imposing a thirty-day imprisonment for his contempt of the Constitution, and then proceeding to affirm the sentence of the convicted criminal. But the proposed indirect and unnatural method is as follows:

"Titus, you have been found guilty of conducting a lottery; Flavius, you have confessedly violated the constitution. Titus ought to suffer imprisonment for crime, and Flavius for contempt. But no! We shall let you both go free. We shall not punish Flavius directly, but shall do so by reversing Titus' conviction. This is our way of teaching people like Flavius to behave, and of teaching people like Titus to behave, and incidentally of securing respect for the Constitution. Our way of upholding the Constitution is not to strike at the man who breaks it, but to let off somebody else who broke something else."

Some day, no doubt, we shall emerge from this quaint method of enforcing the law. At present, we see it in many quarters. It will be abandoned only as the judiciary rises into a more appropriate conception of its powers and a less mechanical idea of justice.

§ 2185. Same: (2) Documents violating Stamp-Tax Laws. By statutes existing for three generations past in England,[1] and by three Federal statutes, passed at different times for temporary purposes of revenue,[2] it was provided that a document not duly garnished with the required revenue-stamp should not be receivable in evidence. The policy of these statutes was a poor one, for the reasons already stated (ante, § 2183).[3] Their application depends so much upon the precise wording of the different statutes that the English

§ 2185. [1] Consolidated in 1870, St. 33 & 34 Vict. c. 97, and in 1891, St. 54 & 55 Vict. c. 39, § 14.

Newfoundland also has such a statute: Newf. Consol. St. 1916, c. 24, §§ 12, 15, c. 28, § 2.

[2] St. 1862, July 1, as amended by St. 1864, June 30, §§ 152, 158, 163; St. 1898, June 13, c. 448, §§ 6, 13, 14, 30 Stat. 448, repealed by St. 1902, April 12, c. 500, § 7, 32 Stat. 96; St. 1914, Oct. 22, St. 1917, Oct. 3 (war revenue act; failure to affix a revenue stamp is a misdemeanor); St. 1919, Feb. 24, Code 1919, § 9532 (internal revenue taxes; "no instrument, paper, or document, required by law to be stamped, which has been signed or issued without being duly stamped, or with a deficient stamp, nor any copy thereof, shall be recorded or admitted, or used as evidence in any court until a legal stamp denoting the amount of the tax shall have been affixed"; § 9533 (record of an unstamped document, etc., "shall not be used in evidence").

In the Philippines also such a measure was adopted: P. I. Act 1189, July 2, 1904, § 118 (unstamped document shall not "be used as evidence in any Insular court until a legal stamp or stamps . . . shall have been affixed"); 1913, Tan Beko v. Insular Collector, 26 P. I. 254 (under Act 1189, a witness to alien immigration who had neglected, on reasonable notice, to bring with him his certificate of residence and his cedula, held properly excluded).

[3] See the recommendations in the Second Report, 1853, of the Common Law Practice Commission, p. 26.

rulings are of little value in the interpretation of our Statutes.[4] In the United States, the Courts of the individual States ruled with practical unanimity that the Federal statutes did not effect the exclusion of unstamped documents in trials in the State Courts, first, because the Federal Congress has no constitutional power (ante, § 6) to regulate the rules of Evidence in the State Courts [5] (though this was in only a few Courts made the ground of decision), and, secondly, because the statutes did not expressly purport to make a rule for any but the Federal Courts.[6] The application of the statutes has usually been sufficiently indicated by their words.[7]

§ 2186. Discriminations: (a) Official Secrets; (b) Self-Crimination. Two other principles, however, must be discriminated in their operation. (a) Official records are sometimes excluded because the matter contained in them is privileged from disclosure, or because their custodians are not amenable to process (post, § 2373).[1]

(b) Self-criminating documents, or other evidence, obtained from an accused person, may be excluded, not because of the illegal nature of the search or other act by which they were obtained, but because the privilege against self-crimination involves their exclusion (post, § 2264).

[4] Citations of the English cases may be found in the following places: 1825, Hawkins v. Warre, 3 B. & C. 690; 1872, Marine Investment Co. v. Haviside, L. R. 5 H. L. 624; 1914, Fengl v. Fengl, Prob. 274 (support of a wife; unstamped separation agreement, excluded, under St. 54 & 55 Vict., Stamp Act, c. 39, § 14; semble, even though the fact evidenced was a collateral one); 1868, McAfferty v. Hale, 24 Ia. 355; Best, Evidence, 8th ed., § 230.

[5] 1868, Craig v. Dimock, 47 Ill. 308; 1866, Hunter v. Cobb, 1 Bush Ky. 239. The only rulings of a State Court to the contrary are said to be Turnpike Co. v. McNamara, 72 Pa. 278 (1872), where Sharswood and Thompson, JJ., dissented, and an early series of cases in Iowa beginning with Hugus v. Strickler, 19 Ia. 413.

[6] For the State Courts, the following cases collect the authorities: Colo. 1897, Trowbridge v. Addoms, 23 Colo. 518, 48 Pac. 535; Conn. 1901, Garland v. Gaines, 73 Conn. 662, 49 Atl. 19; Ga. 1901, Small v. Slocumb, 112 Ga. 279, 37 S. E. 481; Ill. 1867, Latham v. Smith, 45 Ill. 29; 1902, Richardson v. Roberts, 195 Ill. 27, 62 N. E. 840; 1905, Thompson v. Calhoun, 216 Ill. 161, 74 N. E. 775; Ia. 1906, Phillips v. Hazen, 132 Ia. 628, 109 N. W. 1096; 1922, Farmers' Savings Bank, — Ia. —, 187 N. W. 555 (reviewing prior conflicting rulings; here holding that U. S. St. 1914 did not expressly prescribe inadmissibility and hence that no such rule applied); Me. 1902, Wade v. Foss, 96 Me. 230, 52 Atl. 640; Mich. 1869, Clemens v. Conrad, 19 Mich. 170, 176; 1906, Amos-Richia v. Northwestern M. L. Ins. Co., 143 Mich. 684, 107 N. W. 707; Mo. 1906, King v. Phœnix Ins. Co., 195 Mo. 290, 92 S. W. 892; Nev. 1899, Knox v. Rossi, 25 Nev. 96, 57 Pac. 179, 48 L. R. A. 305; S. Car. 1901, Kennedy v. Rountree, 59 S. C. 324, 37 S. E. 942.

But the Federal powers of legislation do extend to the Territories, and hence the tax-stamp laws are there enforced: 1903, Makainai v. Goo Wan Hoy, 14 Haw. 607, on rehearing, 683.

[7] 1920, Cole v. Ralph, 252 U. S. 286, 40 Sup. 321 (under U. S. St. 1914, Oct. 22, title-deeds lacking revenue stamps are admissible; this Act differing from prior ones in not expressly making the documents inadmissible); Gould & Tucker's Notes to the War Revenue Act, 1898; 1874, Cox v. Jones, 52 Ga. 437, 438; 1907, Bottomley v. Hall, 18 Haw. 412 (post-stamping); 1900, State v. Shields, 112 Ia. 27, 83 N. W. 807; 1900, Taft v. Simpson, 125 Mich. 206, 83 N. W. 77; 1872, Owsley v. Greenwood, 18 Minn. 429; 1901, Plunkett v. Hauschka, 14 S. D. 454, 85 N. W. 1004.

Is the act of 1898 still in effect? 1920, U. S. v. Masters, D. C. E. D. Mo., 264 Fed. 250 (under U. S. St. Feb. 24, 1919, Internal Revenue Act, § 1107, requiring documentary stamps, by effect of § 1105 providing for the retention in force of all laws for the collection of stamp taxes, the provision of U. S. St. June 13, 1898, § 14, prohibiting the admission in evidence of an unstamped document, is revived by reference).

§ 2186. [1] One practical difference is that a document might be receivable though illegally removed from another county, and yet the production could not have been compellable; e. g. 1848, Sayer v. Glossop, 12 Jur. 464, Parke, B.

TITLE II: RULES OF CONDITIONAL EXCLUSION (PRIVILEGE)

SUB-TITLE I: PRIVILEGE, IN GENERAL

CHAPTER LXXIV.

§ 2190. History of Testimonial Compulsion, in general. 1. In looking back over the history of the recognition of the duty to testify, it must be kept in mind that, up to the 1400s, the modern witness is practically unknown in jury trials, and that not until the 1500s is he a common figure in the trial and an important source of information for the jury.[1] Even in Coke's time, in the early 1600s, it is a comparatively recent feature that he is alluding to when he remarks "most commonly juries are led by the depositions of witnesses."[2] Up to that period the jury had fulfilled the double capacity of triers and of witnesses; their own knowledge of the affair, acquired as neighbors of the parties or by searching about for evidence before the trial, had been a chief source of that information which is nowadays furnished to them by ordinary witnesses.[3]

There were, to be sure, in certain classes of cases, persons not technically jurors, who came as witnesses, — deed-witnesses and transaction-witnesses, i. e. persons who at the time of signing a deed or striking a bargain or celebrating a marriage had been called upon by the parties to bear witness in case of future need. These had originally served as the very triers themselves, in the days before jury-trial, and their oaths had formed a distinct mode of trial, which survived alongside of jury-trial.[4] As the latter progressed and expanded, these deed-witnesses and transaction-witnesses became gradually obsolete as a separate form of trial, and came to be employed in connection with jury-trial. They were summoned with the jurors, and they did not testify openly in court, but went out with the jurors to deliberate and give information to them; so that they bore the character, for a long period — say, down to the end of the 1400s — of half jurors, half witnesses.[5]

§ 2190. [1] Thayer, Preliminary Treatise on Evidence, 122–134; Holdsworth, History of English Law, 3d ed., vol. III, 1923, p. 638.
[2] Coke, 3 Inst. 26.
[3] Thayer, ubi supra, 90–97.
[4] Thayer, 17–24.
[5] Thayer, 97–104.

Now these persons joined with and yet separate from the jurors proper, were fully recognized to be under the same liability and duty as the jurors themselves; they were summoned with the jurors, and were equally subjected to compulsory process.[6] Whether the recognition of this was felt to rest more upon the implied pledge given when the person had been formally called upon by the party to bear witness, or upon the assimilation in thought of the jurors and these persons, does not clearly appear; probably both considerations entered. Towards the end of the 1400s, it became uncommon, on account of the inconvenience of numbers, to summon them with the jurors, and their function as joint juror-witnesses fell into disuse.[7]

2. In the meantime the ordinary modern witness — i. e. the person who happens to know something on the matter in issue — was gradually appearing. He was asked by the party to come and contribute his help, or he came of his own motion and interest in the cause. But he could not be compelled to come. A marked feature of the primitive Germanic law was the failure to recognize any general testimonial duty. There must be some specific pledge of faith beforehand (as in the case of the deed-witness or transaction-witness) to bear testimony for the party when called on.[8] This tradition was inherited by our law, and was at the period in question (the end of the 1400s) still a living force.

But more than this. The ordinary witness (such as we now know him) was not only not compelled; he was not welcomed. There was a radical and strict discouragement of maintenance; and the man who comes to labor privately with his neighbors on the jury by generally urging his influence in favor of one of the parties was not carefully distinguished from the man who comes merely to tell them what he knows of the facts. He is, in either case (they thought), trying to make them decide for one of the parties rather than the other; he is a meddler; that was the law's attitude towards him. This feature of the thought of the times is perhaps difficult nowadays to conceive. But it contains the whole explanation of the ordinary witness' position in the 1400s.[9]

3. The result of this rooted opposition to whatever bore the semblance of maintenance was that anybody who was not somehow concerned as a party

[6] Thayer, 97–104.

[7] Thayer, 101.

[8] Schroeder, Lehrbuch der deutschen Rechtsgeschichte, 4th ed., 1902, pp. 86, 365 ("In order to bind document-witnesses once for all to a subsequent giving of testimony, the party had to pay document-money or give wine; for no public testimonial obligation existed [in the Frankish period], and a civil obligation could be created only by a contract entered into with a consideration"); Pollock and Maitland, 1895, Hist. Eng. Law, II, 599 ("It seems to have been a general rule that no one could be compelled, or even suffered, to testify to a fact, unless when that fact happened he was solemnly 'taken to witness'"). It has been pointed out by Professor Glasson (Histoire du droit et des institutions de la France, 1895, VI, 540) that the liability of the witness, if his oath were challenged as false by the opponent, to vindicate himself by judicial combat, was a serious one, and naturally prevented the recognition of any legal obligation to appear as a witness; and he notes the contrast in the ecclesiastical courts, where the testimonial obligation already existed.

[9] It has already been further examined in dealing with the history of disqualification by interest (ante, § 575) and of the Hearsay rule (ante, § 1364).

or a counsel in the cause ran the risk, if he came forward to testify to the jury, of being afterward sued for maintenance by the party against whom he had spoken.[10] "If he had come to the bar out of his own head and spoken for one or the other," says a judge in 1450,[11] "it is maintenance, and he will be punished for it. And if the jurors come to a man where he lives, in the country, to have knowledge of the truth of the matter, and he informs them, it is justifiable; but if he comes to the jurors or labors to inform them of the truth, it is maintenance, and he will be punished for it." Thus the state of things was that the person informing the jury must (if he would escape a charge of maintenance) either be an interested party, or his counsel or his servant or tenant or relative — in short, so situated that "the law presumes him bound to be with the party" [12] — or he must have been officially called upon, either by summons as juror or deed-witness, or by the express request of the jury or of the judge — in short, by "compulsion of law"; [13] since "what a man does by compulsion of law cannot be called maintenance." [14]

This state of things lasted well on into the 1500s.[15]

But gradually it became intolerable, as may be imagined. By that time the jury was less and less able to do justice to the cause through the means of its own neighborhood-knowledge. The summoning of deed-witnesses and transaction-witnesses with the jury (a method in any event available in only certain classes of cases) had through its cumbrousness fallen into disuse. No other form of compulsory summons than that appropriate to jurors and these quasi-jurors was known in tradition.[16] The doctrine of maintenance was a harsh obstacle in the way of obtaining by persuasion the attendance of any other persons capable of giving material information. In these conditions, the trend of the law was naturally marked out by the circumstances. The lead was furnished by the existing qualification, already noted, that "what a man does by compulsion of law cannot be called maintenance." Create a general compulsion of law for all persons whose information may be needed or desired as useful by the parties, and the obstacle to getting witnesses would be removed. Let an order of the judge, commanding such a person's appearance, be obtainable, as of course, before the trial, and the risk of a charge of maintenance would be removed, and no man need fear to come forward as a witness.

4. Such was the expedient which was plainly dictated by the exigency;

[10] The data are given in Thayer, 124–129; Holdsworth, History of English Law, 3d ed., vol. I, 1922, p. 335, vol. III, 1923, p. 398.

For the writ of conspiracy, in which the same attitude towards witness-informers prevailed, the authorities are given in Mr. P. H. Winfield's History of Conspiracy and Abuse of Legal Procedure, § 32, p. 71 (Cambridge Studies in English Legal History, 1921).

[11] Y. B. 28 H. VI, 6, 1; quoted in Thayer, 129.

[12] Cheyne, C. J., in Y. B. 11 H. VI, 43, 36; quoted in Thayer, 126.

[13] 1406, Y. B. 9 H. IV, pl. 24; Y. B. 8 id. 6, 8; quoted in Thayer, 125.

[14] Littleton, arguing, in 1450, Y. B. 28 H. VI, 6, 1; quoted in Thayer, 128.

[15] 1537, Y. B. 27 H. VIII, 2, 6; quoted ante, § 575.

[16] As late as 1481 (Y. B. 28 Ed. IV, 28, 1; quoted in Thayer, 129, note) a judge even refuses to compel a man to testify who is already in the court.

and such, beyond a doubt, was the genesis — slow though the creative process was — of the notable statute of Elizabeth, in 1562–3, by which a penalty was imposed and a civil action was granted against any person who refused to attend, after service of process and tender of expenses.[17] No doubt a process had been issued on demand, increasingly often, in the preceding generation; but this appears as the first definite recognition of the general right to have that process and the general duty implied by it.[18] This statute did for testimony at common law what the subpœna had done for testimony in chancery, more than a hundred years before, by an expedient almost precisely similar.[19]

5. This statute of Elizabeth, then, which in our day appears merely to supply a means of getting a hold upon persons who are not willing to testify, and typifies the duty of being a witness, appears in its inception as serving also a different and more restricted purpose. By giving a command to those who were willing enough, but were timorous, it represented their right to come and to testify, unmolested by the apprehension of maintenance-proceedings. Its provision for a civil action against persons refusing — a provision which at first sight gives us of to-day an incorrect impression — was intended still

[17] St. 5 Eliz. c. 9, § 12 ("If any person or persons upon whom any process out of any of the courts of record within this realm or Wales shall be served to testify or depose concerning any cause or matter depending in any of the same courts, and having tendered unto him or them, according to his or their countenance or calling, such reasonable sums of money for his or their costs or charges as having regard to the distance of the places is necessary to be allowed in that behalf, do not appear according to the tenor of the said process, having not a lawful and reasonable let or impediment to the contrary, that then the party making default" shall forfeit £10 and give further recompense for the harm suffered by the party aggrieved).

[18] That this step was taken in order to remove the obstacles which the law of maintenance otherwise presented may be easily inferred from the recorded persistence of that law down to within a few years of the statute (as shown in the case of 1537, cited supra). The office of the subpœna as a sort of indemnity against an action of maintenance plainly appears also in a petition in Chancery, of the prior century, where the petitioner asks for a subpœna to his witness, because "the same David will gladly knawelygge the treweth of the same matiers, bot he wald have a manndement fro yowe, for the cause that he shuld noght be haldyn parciall in the same matier" (Calendars of Proceedings in Chancery, 1450–60, 1, p. xix; quoted in Thayer, 129). Moreover, this notion that people who come forward, without compulsion, to talk to the jury are meddlers, and that a peremptory command of the Court can alone remove the stigma of impropriety, was so rooted in popular and professional feeling that it only disappeared slowly and gradually; and as late as the early 1600s a learned clerk of the Star Chamber (ante 1635, Hudson, Treatise of the Star Chamber, III, § 21, in Hargraves' Collectanea Juridica, II, 207) remarks that he who "comes to yield his testimony without compulsion" is "esteemed a forward witness."

[19] "John de Waltham first framed it in its present form, when a clerk in Chancery, in the latter end of the reign of Edward III [about 1375]; but the invention consisted in merely adding to the old clause 'quibusdam certis de causis,' the words 'et hoc sub pœna centum librorum nullatenus omittas'; and I am at a loss to conceive how such importance was attached to it, or how it was supposed to have brought about so complete a revolution in equitable proceedings; for the penalty was never enforced, and if the party failed to appear his default was treated (according to the practice prevailing to our own time) as a contempt of court, and made the foundation of compulsory process" (Campbell, Lives of the Chancellors, 5th ed., I, 259). The learned writer would not have been "at a loss to conceive" the importance of the expedient, if he could have been acquainted with the modern researches into the history of witnesses. There had been before that time no compulsion; and the 'pœna' of 'centum libri' effectually supplied the compulsion. We may well understand that a "revolution in equitable proceedings" was by this 'sub pœna' clause brought about. This and the statute of Elizabeth mark an epoch in the history of legal theory and practice. The history of the subpœna is further noticed infra, note 27.

further to counteract their fears of maintenance-proceedings by the opponent if they did come, by subjecting them to an action by the summoning party if they did not come. In other words, the exigency which the statute meant to meet was not so much the witness' insensibility to his legal duty to the party desiring his attendance as his sensitiveness to the legal claims of the opposite party to his non-attendance. Of a legal duty to attend or to give testimony, it can hardly be said that there is at this stage any settled recognition. The effort is rather merely to create a freedom to attend.

As this freedom came to be exercised more and more generally, and the ordinary witness became, by the 1600s, the chief source of the jury's information, the notion of a duty was naturally developed from and added to the notion of a freedom or right.[20] In the next century, and hardly before then, do we find a plain recognition of the duty; and it is noticeable that there are two stages of development, for the duty of attendance to be sworn comes earlier than the duty of disclosure of knowledge. The obligation to attend and bear testimony generally had been settled; but for some time afterwards there appears still to be lacking the full conception that the answer to a specific question on the stand can be compelled; and that all desired facts are bound to be disclosed.[21]

The history of the various claims of exemption, from that time onward,[22] shows that the final achievement was in the early 1600s distinctly a new one:

1612, Sir Francis Bacon, in the Countess of Shrewsbury's Trial, 2 How. St. Tr. 769, 778: "You must know that all subjects, without distinction of degrees, owe to the king tribute and service, not only of their deed and hand, but of their knowledge and discovery. If there be anything that imports the king's service, they ought themselves undemanded to impart it; much more, if they be called and examined, whether it be of their own fact or of another's, they ought to make direct answer."

6. But as yet there was one important step to be taken. The statute of Elizabeth had apparently intended to provide only for civil causes. In criminal causes, the date when process began to be issued for the Crown's witnesses does not appear; though presumably it preceded the time of Elizabeth's statute. But the accused in a criminal cause was not allowed to have witnesses at all,[23] — much less to have compulsory process for them. By the early 1600s this disqualification began to disappear, and the accused was occasionally allowed to put on witnesses, who spoke without oath. After [20] 1599, Dobson v. Crew, Cro. Eliz. 705 (bond to give testimony; the Court said that, even apart from the bond, "he is compellable by the law").

[21] As late as about 1630, a clerk of the Star Chamber, Hudson, is found writing (Treatise on the Star Chamber, part III, § 21, Hargraves' Collectanea Juridica, II, 209) that "the great question hath been, whether a witness which in examination will not give any answer shall be compelled to make answer to the interrogatories; . . . [and Lord Chancellor Egerton] gave me answer, that he knew no law to compel a witness to speak more than he would of his own accord." This was certainly not the then practice of the Star Chamber (post, § 2250), but the statement looks like a reminiscence of the ecclesiastical law, as noticed infra, note 27.

[22] Post, § 2212 (trade secrets), § 2286 (confidences), § 2290 (attorney and client).

[23] The history of this disqualification has already been examined (ante, § 575).

two generations, and by 1679, under the Restoration, the judges began to grant him, by special order, compulsory process to bring them; [24] and finally, at slow intervals, in 1695 and in 1701, he was guaranteed this right by general statutes.[25] This guarantee was afterwards embodied in most of the constitutions of the United States (post, § 2191).

7. In the remaining important field of jurisdiction, the Court of Chancery, the general doctrine becomes a part of English history at a time when it was already in part achieved in another system of law. When the Chancellors in the 1400s were forming the procedure of their court after the model of the ecclesiastical law, they found a doctrine 'de testibus cogendis' long canvassed as a theoretic principle in the system from which they borrowed. There had indeed been a time when that system was passing through a development something like our own, — at least, when the compellability of witnesses was a new thing; the decretals of the 1200s indicate this; [26] and a final settlement had not been reached when the English Court of Chancery began to flourish, and to borrow the Continental rules.[27] But the Chancellors, without waiting, pushed the principle to the extreme test of practicality and invented the keen compulsory weapon of the subpœna writ.[28] This

[24] Ante, § 575.

[25] 1695-6, St. 7 & 8 W. III, c. 3, § 7 (persons indicted for treason and misprision "shall have the like processe of the court where they shall bee tryed, to compell their witnesses to appeare for them att any such tryal or tryals as is usually granted to compell witnesses to appear against them"); 1702, St. 1 Anne, c. 9, § 3 (requires that witnesses produced for the accused in felony shall be sworn); the latter statute was treated by implication as authorizing compulsory process: 1824, Starkie, Evidence, I, 86.

The earliest American colonial statute was probably that of South Carolina in 1712, now Code Crim. Pr. 1922, § 965.

[26] Corpus Juris Canonici, Decretal. II, 20 ('de testibus et attest.'), 21 ('de testibus cogendis'); Glasson, cited supra, note 8.

[27] That law seems to have suffered an arrest of development, and was late in reaching explicitly the complete conception of a testimonial duty. "The canon law recognized a public duty and liability to bear witness, . . . although to be sure the earlier doctrine had partially refused this recognition, for criminal cases in general, or at least for the 'accusatio'-proceeding in particular" (Hinschius, Kirchenrecht, 1897, VI, pt. 1, § 364, p. 97, note 1). The most that could be said was that the modern Church jurists, in regard to the coercion of a witness, "incline to hold it allowable, at least when proof cannot be supplied in any other manner" (Droste, Canonical Procedure, tr. Messmer, 1887, § 66). The latest revision of the modern Catholic Church procedure, however, seems to have accepted the full principle; Codex Juris Canonici Pii X, 1917, Can. 1766, § 2 ("Testis inobediens, qui nempe sine legitima causa non comparuit, aut, etsi comparuit, renuit respondere vel jusjurandum praestare vel attestationi praescribere, a judice potest congruis poenis coerceri et insuper mulctari pro rata damni quod ex eius obedientia inobedientia partibus obveniat").

Even in modern French procedure (which is founded on canon-law methods), a witness who refuses on the stand to answer a specific question cannot be compelled (Bodington, French Law of Evidence, 1904, p. 116); but see Bonnier, Traité des preuves, ed. Larnaude, 5th ed., 1888, §§ 266, 326, and Pertile, Storia del diritto italiano, 2d ed., 1903, b. V, c. III, § 1.

[28] For the history of the subpœna writ, see the quotation from Lord Campbell, supra, note 19, and further, Hudson, Treatise of the Star Chamber, pt. III, § 21, in Hargr. Coll. Jurid. II, 207; Leadam, Select Cases in the Star Chamber, Selden Soc. Pub. vol. XVI, p. xxii; Spence, Equitable Jurisdiction, I, 328, 345, 369; Choice Cases in Chancery, 1 (1672).

Mr. Kerly, in his Historical Sketch of the Equitable Jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery (1890, p. 45), pointed out that the tradition repeated by Campbell (supra, n. 19), as to John de Waltham's invention of the subpœna form about 1375 A. D. is unfounded; it existed earlier in other processes. Details as to the history will be found in the following later researches: Leadam and Baldwin, Select Cases before the King's Council, 1243–1482, Introd. p. xxxix (Selden Soc. Pub. vol. xxxvi; 1918); Holdsworth, History of English Law, vol. I, 3d ed., 1922, pp. 241, 485.

gave them more than a century's start of the common-law Courts in the recognition of a definite testimonial compulsion and duty. It may be supposed, moreover, that the rapid increase in the activity of the Chancery during the 1500s was one of the causes which contributed to the introduction at that time of compulsory process for witnesses in the common-law Courts, and was the chief influence in prescribing for that process the specific form of the subpœna writ. It may even be that the Chancery's priority in the use of compulsory process was itself one of the causes that had made it more efficient and more popular.

§ 2191. Constitutional Guaranty of Compulsory Process. This history of the law securing for accused persons the right to compulsory process for their witnesses shows that the purpose of the statutes was merely to cure the defect of the common law by giving to parties defendant in criminal cases the common right which was already in custom possessed both by parties in civil cases and by the prosecution in criminal cases. The Bills of Rights in most of the Constitutions have incorporated this statutory right,[1]

§ 2191. [1] The usual provision is that in criminal cases the accused shall have the right to "compulsory process for obtaining witnesses" (or, "process to compel the attendance of witnesses") "in his favor" (or, "in his behalf"); special variations are noted below; the figures first noted for each jurisdiction indicate the date, article, and section of the Constitutions; U. S. 1787, Am. VI: Rev. St. § 1034, Code 1919, § 1508 (in capital cases, defendant shall have the like process for witnesses as the prosecution); Ala. 1901, I, 6; Ariz. 1910, I, 24; Ark. 1874, II, 10; Cal. 1879, I, 13; Colo. 1876, II, 16; Conn. 1818, I, 9; Del. 1897, I, 7; Fla. 1887, Decl. of R. 11; Rev. G. S. 1919, § 6032; Ga. 1877, I, 5, P. C. 1910, § 8; Haw. Rev. L. 1915, §§ 3687, 3775; Ida. 1889, I, 13; Ill. 1870, II, 9; Ind. 1851, I, 13; Ia. 1857, I, 10 (for criminal cases, the usual clause; "Any party to any judicial proceeding shall have the right to use as a witness, or take the testimony of, any other person, not disqualified on account of interest, who may be cognizant of any fact material to the cause"); Kan. 1859, Bill of R. 10; Ky. 1891, 11; La. 1921, 9; R. S. 1870, § 992 (every person indicted for a capital crime or one punishable with 7 years' hard labor "shall have the same process as the State to compel the attendance of witnesses"); Me. 1819, I, 6; Md. 1867, Decl. of R. 21 ("to have process for his witnesses; to examine the witnesses for and against him on oath"); Mass. 1780, Decl. of R. 12 ("a right to produce all proofs that may be favorable to him"); Gen. L. 1920, c. 263, § 5 (accused shall be allowed "to produce witnesses and proofs in his favor"); Mich. 1908, II, 19; Comp. L. 1915, § 15623; Minn. 1857, I, 6; Miss. 1890, III, 26; Mo. 1875, II, 22; Mont. 1889, I, 16; Nebr. 1875, I, 11; Nev. Rev. L. 1912, § 6855; N. H. 1793, Bill of R. 15 (like Mass.); N. J. 1844, I, 8; N. Mex. 1911, II, 14; N. Y. Cons. L. 1909, Civil Rights, § 12; N. C. 186S, I, 11 ("to confront the accusers and witnesses with other testimony"); N. D. 1889, I, 13; Oh. 1851, I, 10; Okl. 1907, II, 20; Or. 1859, I, 11; Pa. 1874, I, 9; St. 1718, May 31, Dig. 1929, Crim. Proc., § 8163; P. I. U. S. St. 1916, Aug. 29, c. 416, § 3, Organic Act, Code 1919, § 4112 (bill of rights); P. I. Gen. Order 58 of 1900, § 15; P. R. U. S. St. 1917, Mar. 2, Organic Act, § 2, Code 1919, § 4043 (bill of rights); P. R. Rev. St. & C. 1911, § 6022; R. I. 1843, I, 10; Gen. L. 1909, c. 354, § 65; S. C. 1895, I, 18; C. Cr. P. 1922, § 943 (accused's right to compulsory process); § 951 (accused's right to "produce witnesses and proofs in his favor"); S. D. 1889, VI, 7; Rev. C. 1919, § 4410 (an accused is entitled "to have compulsory process for obtaining witnesses in his favor"); Tenn. 1870, I, 9; Tex. 1876, Bill of R. 10; Rev. C. Cr. P. 1911, § 4; Utah, 1895, I, 12; Comp. L. 1917, § 8553; Va. 1902, I, 8 (like Vt.); Vt. 1793, I, 10 ("to call for witnesses in his favor"); Wash. 1889, I, 22 ("and in no instance shall any accused person before final judgment be compelled to advance money or fees to secure the rights herein guaranteed"); R. & B. Code 1909, §§ 2132, 2307 (Criminal Code; compulsory process demandable for "all witnesses who may be necessary for his proper defence"); W. Va. 1872, III, 14; Wis. 1848, I, 7; Wyo. 1889, I, 10.

The Federal clause first occurs in its present form in the resolution of amendment by Congress, March 4, 1789; but it was founded on the recommendations of the Constitutional Convention of New York and of North Carolina, July 26 and Aug. 1, 1788; their proposal declared the accuser's right "to have because those clauses of the Constitutions were intended to sanction permanently the more fundamental features of just and liberal criminal procedure, particularly in the parts which had at various times in the past been found liable to abuse. The Constitutions, in this instance, provided nothing new or exceptional; but gave solid sanction, in the special case of accused persons, to the procedure ordinarily practised and recognized for witnesses in general.

It follows that this right does not override and abolish such exemptions and privileges as may be otherwise recognized by common law or statute; the right guaranteed is merely the general right to the compulsory process which is required for making practical the testimonial duty, so far as that duty otherwise exists.[2] So, also, this guarantee does not define the extent to which testimonial attendance is conditional on the party's tender of expenses;[3] whether an accused must make such a tender remains to be determined by the law as otherwise defined.[4]

§ 2192. Duty to give Testimony; General Principle. For three hundred years it has now been recognized as a fundamental maxim that the public (in the words sanctioned by Lord Hardwicke) has a right to every man's evidence. We may start, in examining the various claims of exemption, with the means of producing his witnesses" and "to call for evidence" (Elliot's Debates, I, 328, 334, 339, IV, 243). None of the other ratifying States (except Rhode Island, after the Congress above mentioned) seem to have called for this clause.

[2] 1854, Re Dillon, 7 Sawyer 561, 569 (Hoffman, J.: "The object and effect of the constitutional provision were merely to give to the accused the right to such process as is usually granted to compel witnesses to appear on the side of the prosecution against them"; here, a foreign consul's privilege); 1897, State v. Wiltsey, 103 Ia. 54, 72 N. W. 415 (witness prevented by illness); 1906, State v. Stewart, 117 La. 476, 41 So. 798 (testimony of a proposed witness admitted to prevent a continuance; the constitutional right covers merely the right to process by subpœna, and not the further discretionary power of the Court to attach a desired witness for failure to obey the subpœna).

The contrary was maintained by the Executive, through Mr. Marcy, Secretary of State, in this matter of Consul Dillon, supra, so far as the consular exemption was based on a treaty made subsequent to the Federal Constitution; the authorities are cited post, § 2372.

It would seem that, for procuring the attendance of a convict in prison, process (usually provided for by statute) would be obtainable even in civil cases; but this right has sometimes been placed upon the basis of the constitutional provision: 1196, Hancock v. Parker, 100 Ky. 143, 37 S. W. 594.

The right to process has been construed not to include a right of consultation with the witness before trial: 1906, State v. Goodson, 116 La. 388, 40 So. 771 (defendants not allowed to obtain information from a co-indictee in jail); 1921, State v. Storrs, — Wash. —, 197 Pac. 17 (here the witness was in prison under sentence and on application of the accused was brought from prison to testify, but was not allowed to be interviewed by accused or his counsel, four judges dissenting). But this interpretation is thoroughly unsound. Compare the statutes for furnishing a list of witnesses (ante, § 1851).

The constitutional principle does not prevent the limitation of number of witnesses, wherever that is otherwise allowable (ante, § 1907).

[3] Contra: 1853, West v. State, 1 Wis. 209, 230 ("It would be in many cases but bitter mockery to grant the prisoner the right to have witnesses examined in his behalf, and then to deny him the necessary process of the law to procure their attendance").

[4] For these requirements as to tender of expenses, see post, § 2201.

For other analogies, as to constitutional provisions merely sanctioning a general principle, and not affecting its exceptions, see ante, § 1397.

For the question whether the statutory rule refusing a continuance, where the accused's witnesses' desired testimony is admitted to be as averred, is in violation of the constitutional provision guaranteeing compulsory process, see post, § 2595.

the primary assumption that there is a general duty to give what testimony one is capable of giving, and that any exemptions which may exist are distinctly exceptional and are so many derogations from a positive general rule:

1742, Bill for Indemnifying Evidence, Cobbett's Parliamentary History, XII, 675, 693 (the debate being upon a bill to pardon in advance such witnesses as should criminate themselves in testifying to the frauds of Sir Robert Walpole, Earl of Orford, the debate took a general range). Duke of Argyle (for the bill): "On the present occasion, my lords, I pronounce with the utmost confidence, as a maxim of indubitable certainty, 'that the public has a claim to every man's evidence,' and that no man can plead exemption from this duty to his country." L. C. Hardwicke (against the bill): "It has, my lords, I own, been asserted by the noble duke, that the public has a right to every man's evidence, — a maxim which in its proper sense cannot be denied. For it is undoubtedly true that the public has a right to all the assistance of every individual."

1802, SMITH, M. R., in Butler v. Moore, McNally, Evidence, 253: "It is the undoubted legal constitutional right of every subject of the realm, who has a cause depending, to call upon a fellow-subject to testify what he may know of the matters in issue; and every man is bound to make the discovery, unless specially exempted and protected by law."

1827, Mr. Jeremy Bentham, Draft for a Judicial Establishment (Works, Bowring's ed., IV, 320): "What then? Are men of the first rank and consideration, are men high in office, men whose time is not less valuable to the public than to themselves, — are such men to be forced to quit their business, their functions, and what is more than all, their pleasure, at the beck of every idle or malicious adversary, to dance attendance upon every petty cause? Yes, as far as it is necessary, — they and everybody! What if, instead of parties, they were witnesses? Upon business of other people's, everybody is obliged to attend, and nobody complains of it. Were the Prince of Wales, the Archbishop of Canterbury, and the Lord High Chancellor, to be passing by in the same coach while a chimney-sweeper and a barrow-woman were in dispute about a halfpennyworth of apples, and the chimney-sweeper or the barrow-woman were to think proper to call upon them for their evidence, could they refuse it? No, most certainly."[1]

1861, WILLES, J., in Ex parte Fernandez, 10 C. B. N. S. 3, 39: "Every person in the kingdom, except the sovereign, may be called upon and is bound to give evidence, to the best of his knowledge, upon any question of fact material and relevant to an issue tried in any of the Queen's courts, unless he can show some exception in his favor."

1818, TILGHMAN, C. J., in Baird v. Cochran, 4 S. & R. 397, 400: "From the nature of society, it would seem that every man is bound to declare the truth when called upon in a court of justice. . . . The general welfare will be best promoted by considering the disclosure of truth as a debt which every man owes his neighbor, which he is bound to pay when called on, and which in his turn he is entitled to receive."

1853, SMITH, J., in West v. State, 1 Wis. 209, 233: "In no just sense can the requisition upon a citizen of his attendance upon court to testify as a witness be considered as the taking of private property for public use, within the meaning of the constitution. The object of that provision in the fundamental law was to protect the citizen from the grasping demands of government, not to absolve him from any of those various personal duties which every good citizen owes to his country, such as the performance of military duty, obedience to the call of the proper authority for his personal service in suppressing a riot, the apprehension of a felon, affording assistance to officers in making arrests when resisted, and the like. There are very many instances in which the citizen is required to perform personal service or render aid to his government, without other compensation than that of his participation in the general good and his enjoyment of the general security and advantage which result from common acquiescence in such obligations on the part of all the citizens alike and which is essential to the existence and safety of society." [2]

§ 2192. [1] Bentham's illustration came very nearly true in R. v. Baines, [1909] 1 K. B. 258, cited more fully post, § 2210, note 2, and § 2371, note 1, where the Prime Minister and the Home Secretary were subpœnaed to testify as to a breach of the peace committed at a meeting where they were present.

1856, PERKINS, J., in Israel v. State, 8 Ind. 467: "It is as much the duty and interest of every citizen to aid in prosecuting crime as it is to aid in subduing any domestic or foreign enemy; and it is equally the interest and duty of every citizen to aid in furnishing to all, high and low, rich and poor, every facility for a fair and impartial trial when accused; for none is exempt from liability to accusation and trial." [3]

1859, CATON, C. J., in Bennett v. Walker, 23 Ill. 97, 101 (compelling the heir of the grantor of a lost deed to execute another): "He says he owes the complainants no such duty. He forgets that society often imposes upon all its members the obligation to submit to inconveniences and trouble, and even expense, for the sole benefit of others. Where was the obligation resting upon R. S. to attend as a witness in this case? . . . What right have the Courts to compel any one to quit his own affairs, no matter how pressing they may be, and attend as a witness or juror in litigation between strangers? This duty to assist others who stand in need of our assistance for the maintenance of their rights necessarily flows from the relations we bear each other as members of the same community, we being mutually dependent upon each other for security and protection."

From the point of view of the duty here predicated, it emphasizes the sacrifice which is due from every member of the community. That sacrifice may take two forms, either of them serious enough. In the first place, it may be a sacrifice of time and labor, and thus of ease, of profits, of livelihood. This contribution is not to be regarded as a gratuity, or a courtesy, or an ill-requited favor. It is a duty, not to be grudged or evaded. Whoever is impelled to evade or to resent it should retire from the society of organized and civilized communities, and become a hermit. He is not a desirable member of society. He who will live by society must let society live by him, when it requires to.

Or the sacrifice may be of his privacy, of the knowledge which he would preferably keep to himself because of the disagreeable consequences of disclosure. This inconvenience which he may suffer, in consequence of his testimony, by way of enmity or disgrace or ridicule or other disfavoring action of fellow-members of the community, is also a contribution which he makes in payment of his dues to society in its function of executing justice. If he cannot always obtain adequate solace from this reflection, he may at least recognize that it defines an unmistakable axiom. When the course of justice requires the investigation of the truth, no man has any knowledge that is rightly private. All that society can fairly be expected to concede is that it will not exact this knowledge when necessity does not demand it, or when

[2] Mass. Const. 1780, Decl. of R. 10 ("Each individual of the society has a right to be protected by it in the enjoyment of his life, liberty, and property, according to standing laws. He is obliged, consequently, to contribute his share to the expense of his protection; to give his personal service or an equivalent, when necessary"); so also N. H. Const. 1793, Bill of R. 12; N. C. 1906, Clark, C. J., in State v. Wheeler, 141 N. C. 773, 53 S. E. 358; Vt. Const. 1793, I, 9; Gen. L. 1917, § 2496. Compare the following: Ind. Const. 1851, Art. I, § 66 ("No man's particular services shall be demanded without just compensation").

[3] Accord: 1906, Washington Nat'l Bank v. Daily, 166 Ind. 631, 77 N. E. 53 (cited post, § 2193, note 3; good opinion by Hadley, J.).

the benefit gained by exacting it would in general be less valuable than the disadvantage caused; and the various privileges are merely attempts to define the situations in which, by experience, the exaction would be unnecessary or disadvantageous. The duty runs on throughout all, and does not abate; it is merely sometimes not insisted upon.

From the point of view of society's right to our testimony, it is to be remembered that the demand comes, not from any one person or set of persons, but from the community as a whole, — from justice as an institution, and from law and order as indispensable elements of civilized life. The dramatic features of the daily court-room tend to obscure this; the matter seems to be between neighbor Doe and neighbor Roe; we are prone to shape our own course by the merits of the one or the other of their causes. But the right merely happens to be exemplified in the case of Doe v. Roe; that is all. The whole life of the community, the regularity and continuity of its relations, depend upon the coming of the witness. Whether the achievements of the past shall be preserved, the energy of the present kept alive, and the ambitions of the future be realized, depends upon whether the daily business of regulating rights and redressing wrongs shall continue without a moment's abatement, or shall suffer a fatal cessation. The business of the particular cause is petty and personal; but the results that hang upon it are universal. All society, potentially, is involved in each individual case; because the process itself is one of vitality. Each verdict upon each cause, and each witness to that verdict, is a pulse of air in the breathing organs of the community. The vital process of justice must continue unceasingly; a single cessation typifies the prostration of society; a series would involve its dissolution. The pettiness and personality of the individual trial disappear when we reflect that our duty to bear testimony runs not to the parties in that present cause, but to the community at large and forever.

It follows, on the one hand, that all privileges of exemption from this duty are exceptional, and are therefore to be discountenanced. There must be good reason, plainly shown, for their existence. In the interest of developing scientifically the details of the various recognized privileges, judges and lawyers are apt to forget this exceptional nature. The presumption against their extension is not observed in spirit. The trend of the day is to expand them as if they were large and fundamental principles, worthy of pursuit into the remotest analogies. This attitude is an unwholesome one. The investigation of truth and the enforcement of testimonial duty demand the restriction, not the expansion, of these privileges. They should be recognized only within the narrowest limits required by principle. Every step beyond these limits helps to provide, without any real necessity, an obstacle to the administration of justice.

On the other hand, if this duty exists for the individual to society, so also he may fairly demand that society, so far as the exaction of it is concerned, shall make the duty as little onerous as possible. He may demand that the compulsion be relaxed so far as it is not indispensable for the ascertainment of truth. He may demand that the situation of a witness be made as free from annoyances as is possible; that delay be diminished; that needless technicalities be ignored; that some sort of compensation for loss of time be provided; that the rules of evidence and the conduct of counsel be not such as to inflict unnecessary annoyance upon innocent persons;[4] and that the law in general be so formed as to reduce to a minimum the necessary sacrifices made by the witness in the name of duty. These just demands are too often as much ignored by the profession of the law as are the duties of witnesses by laymen. In the adjustment of the unquestioned duty of the latter to the correlative right of society, speaking through the law and its practitioners, much remains yet to be desired.

§ 2193. Same: Testimonial Duty applied to Production of Documents. This testimonial duty to attend and disclose all that is desired for the ascertainment of truth applies to every form and material of evidence whatever. In particular it applies to such evidential material as exists in a person's hands in the form of documents. "There is no difference in principle," said a great judge,[1] "between compelling a witness to produce a document in his possession, under a subpœna 'duces tecum' (in a case where the party calling the witness has a right to the use of such document), and compelling him to give testimony when the facts lie in his own knowledge." This much is unquestionable; for to give up facts possessed by physical control is no different from the giving up of data possessed as mental impressions:

1775, Trial of Maharajah Nundocomar, 20 How. St. Tr. 1057; Mr. Stewart, for the Governor and Council of the East India Company, wished not to produce the Council records, because it would lead to "many inconveniences and ill consequences to exhibit the proceedings of the Council in an open court of justice, especially as they may sometimes contain secrets of the utmost importance to the interest and even to the safety of the State." The COURT: "We are not surprised that the Governor-general and Council should be desirous to prevent their books being examined, which might tend to the consequences they mention. It would be highly improper that their books should be wantonly subjected to curious and impertinent eyes. But at the same time it is a matter of justice that, if they contain evidence material to the parties in civil suits, they may have an opportunity of availing themselves of it. Humanity requires it should be produced when in favor of a criminal, justice when against him. The papers and records of all the public companies in England — of the Bank, South Sea House, and the East India House — are liable to be called for, when justice shall require copies of the records and proceedings, from the highest court of judicature down to the court of pie-powder, and continually given in evidence. When it is necessary they should be produced, the Court will take care they are not made an improper use of."

This general and equal duty to produce documentary material is, of course, like the duty to give oral testimony, subject to various specific privileges.[2] These can be later considered in their appropriate places; for example, the privilege as to title-deeds and securities under a lien (post, § 2211), trade-secrets (post, § 2212), a civil party's documents (post, § 2219), official documents (post, § 2367), self-incriminating documents (post, § 2264), and confidential communications of various sorts (post, §§ 2285–2396). Moreover, the general requirement of notice and summons by subpœna finds special application in the use of a subpœna duces tecum for documents (post, § 2200).

[4] Compare §§ 781, 983, ante.

§ 2193. [1] 1830, Shaw, C. J., in Bull v. Loveland, 10 Pick. 9, 14.

[2] For instances of the general rule that the privacy of documents is no excuse for non-production, see post, § 2212.

Distinguish, however, the question whether before trial a third person, not a party, can be compelled to disclose documents, — a subject already treated (ante, §§ 1857–1859); there may be an obligation to disclose them finally on the trial, and yet there may be no right to inspect them before trial.

§ 2194. Same: Testimonial Duty applied to Premises, Chattels, Body, etc. If a person, by virtue of his very existence in civilized society, owes a duty to the community to disclose for the purposes of justice all that is in his control which can serve the ascertainment of the truth, this duty includes equally the mental impressions preserved in his brain, the documents preserved in his hands, the corporal facts existing on his body, and the chattels and premises within his control. There can be no discrimination. The latter forms of disclosure, though more rarely asked for, are not a whit the less necessary or proper. They are included in the general duty.

Apart from specific privileges, then (post, §§ 2210–2224) a person is bound, if required, to furnish evidence by exhibiting his corporal features, his chattels, and his premises, to the inspection of the tribunal or its duly delegated officers, and to do or exhibit any other thing which may in any form furnish evidence.[1]

The testimonial duty also includes the auxiliary function of serving as interpreter of another's testimony.[2]

§ 2195. Officers possessing Power to Compel Testimony; Depositions for Use in another State; Witness' Liability to Action, and Immunity from Arrest. In connection with the enforcement of the testimonial duty, certain other questions arise, not concerning the admissibility of evidence or the scope of privilege, but involving independent principles of substantive and procedural law:

(1) The duty to give testimony is a duty to the State, but the function of enforcing the duty resides specifically in the judicial branch of the government. The constitutional question thus arises, on the one hand, whether the power of enforcement can for any purpose be exercised by the legislative branch, in the course of investigations which it may choose to make, either as preliminary to its decision upon legislation or as ancillary to the enforcement of its own internal order;[1] or can for any purpose be exercised by § 2194. [1] The authorities are collected post, § 2216.

For the right to inspect premises and chattels of a party before trial, which rests on different principles, see ante, § 1862; and for the privilege of a party, see post, § 2221.

[2] S. Dak. Rev. C. 1919, § 2733 ("Any person . . . may be subpœnaed . . . to act as an interpreter").

§ 2195. [1] Consult the following: Federal: 1880, Kilbourn v. Thompson, 103 U. S. 176, more fully in Smith's Digest of Precedents of the Senate and House, 1894, 53d Cong. 2 sess. Misc. Doc. No. 278, p. 536; 1887, Re U. S. Pacific Railway Commission, Circ. Ct. N. D. Cal., Smith's Digest, pp. 621–707; 1914, Henry v. Henkel, 235 U. S. 219, 35 Sup. 54 (investigation by a House Committee, under a the executive branch of the government.[2] The question arises, on the other hand, whether and in what manner the power of enforcement can be delegated to inferior judicial officers other than the judges themselves, such as notaries,[3] commissioners to take depositions, or others;[4] or to ad- resolution of authority, into the financial affairs of banks, etc., with a view to needed remedies by legislation; the appellant. being summoned and examined as to the membership in a certain syndicate, declined to answer, stating also that he "would consider it dishonorable to reveal the names of his customers unless he were compelled to do so"; after indictment by the grand jury of the District of Columbia for refusal to answer, under U. S. Rev. St. §§ 101–104, Comp. St. 1901, pp. 54, 55, he appealed from a refusal to grant a writ of habeas corpus to the New York marshal who was to remove him to Washington for trial; held that the question would not be determined on habeas corpus; incidentally, it would seem that our system of appeals contains considerable of the tweedle-dum and tweedle-dee species of law); Mass. 1876, Whitcomb's Case, 120 Mass. 118; N. J. 1916, State v. Brewster, 88 N. J. L. 551, 97 Atl. 60 (power of chairman of Legislative Committee); 1916, State v. Brewster, State v. Scott, 89 N. J. L. 658, 99 Atl. 339 (legislative investigation of the expenditure of State moneys; careful opinion by Minturn, J.); S. C. 1906, Ex parte Parker, 74 S. C. 466, 55 S. E. 122; Tex. 1912, Ex parte Wolters, 64 Tex. Cr. 238, 144 S. W. 531; W. Va. 1913, Sullivan v. Hill, 73 W. Va. 49, 79 S. E. 670 (legislative committee).

[2] Canada: 1915, Kelly & Sons v. Mathers, 23 D. L. R. 226, Man. (power of commissioners appointed by an Order-in-Council under the Inquiries Act, R. S. Man. 1913, c. 34, infra, note 5; elaborate examination of the comparative state of the law in the British Dominions, by Howell, C. J. M.).

United States: 1921, State ex rel. Wehe v. Frazier, — N. D. —, 182 N. W. 551, 184 N. W. 874 (Governor's power to examine witnesses).

[3] Consult the following: Federal: U. S. Code 1919, §§ 1369, 1370, Rev. St. 1878, §§ 868, 869 (commission to take testimony); Equity Rules 1912, Nos. 46, 51, 62 (examiners "shall not have the power to decide on the competency or materiality or relevancy of the questions"); 1875, Blease v. Garlington, 92 U. S. 1, 7 (under Rev. St. 1878, § 862, and Equity Rule 67, "the examiner before whom witnesses are orally examined is required to note exceptions; but he cannot decide upon their validity; he must take down all the examination in writing, and send it to the Court with the objections noted," as also when depositions are taken); 1904, Dancel v. Goodyear S. M. Co., 128 Fed. 753, C. C. (subpœna 'duces tecum'); 1906, Dowagiac Mfg. Co. v. Lochren, C. C. A., 143 Fed. 211 (collecting the cases); 1912, Young v. Welch Mfg. Co., D. C. Mass., 201 Fed. 563 (the rule in Blease v. Garlington is further subject to exception for matters improperly asked for on cross-examination beyond the scope of the direct examination; this is thoroughly unsound; it makes a fetish out of this discreditable Federal rule as to scope of cross-examination); California: 1903, Burns v. Superior Court, 140 Cal. 1, 73 Pac. 597 (overruling Lezinsky v. Superior Court, 72 Cal. 510, 14 Pac. 104; Court's power to punish for contempt where the subpœna issued from a notary taking a deposition); Colorado: 1919, People ex rel. Davis v. District Court, 66 Colo. 424, 182 Pac. 11; Illinois: 1890, Puterbaugh v. Smith, 131 Ill. 199, 23 N. E. 428 (notary public's subpœna; Rev. St. 1874, c. 51, § 36, authorizing the Circuit Court to punish for contempt a person disobeying such subpœna, held unconstitutional, because a court's power to use contempt proceedings cannot be used to enforce the orders of a separate tribunal); 1907, McIntyre v. People, 227 Ill. 26, 81 N. E. 33 (similar); 1916, Schmidt v. Cooper, 274 Ill. 243, 113 N. E. 641 (similar, for a master in chancery's subpœna; cited more fully ante, § 1856 a); 1920, People ex rel. Ickes v. Rushworth, 294 Ill. 455, 128 N. E. 555 (St. 1919, p. 710, held to cure the above defect, by providing for original proceedings in the Circuit Court on the part of the officer whose subpœna is disobeyed); Indiana: 1888, Keller v. Goodrich Co., 117 Ind. 556, 39 N. E. 196 (refusal to answer on a deposition); Kansas: 1887, Re Beardsley, 37 Kan. 666, 16 Pac. 153, 367; Kentucky: 1917, Taylor Jr. & Sons v. Thornton, 178 Ky. 463, 199 S. W. 40 (notary public and county judge); Missouri: 1879, Ex parte Krieger, 7 Mo. App. 367; Nebraska: 1906, Re Butler, 76 Nebr. 267, 107 N. W. 572; New Jersey: 1916, Conover v. West Jersey Mortgage Co., 87 N. J. Eq. 16, 99 Atl. 604 (receiver); Ohio: 1893, De Camp v. Archibald, 50 Oh. St. 618, 623, 35 N. E. 1056; 1906, Ex parte Schoepf, 74 Oh. 1, 77 N. E. 276, 279; 1915, Benckenstein v. Scott, 92 Oh. 29, 110 N. E. 633 (notary's power to imprison for contempt; De Camp v. Archibald followed).

[4] Consult the following: Federal: 1903, U. S. v. Beavers, 125 Fed. 778 (U. S. Commissioner); 1906, Bank v. Johnson, 143 Fed. 463, 466, C. C. A. (referee in bankruptcy); Ala. 1896, Ex parte Rucker, 108 Ala. 245, 19 So. 314 (commissioner); Alaska: 1907, U. S. v. Fairbanks, 3 Alsk. 400 (an interesting case dealing with the clerk's power to issue subpœnas under Alsk. C. C. P. § 625; able

ministrative officers, such as licensing boards, industrial commissioners, and the like.[5]

(2) The State's power to compel the performance of testimonial duty is limited to its own territory; hence, it cannot compel a person being in another State to give testimony there for use in litigation pending in the forum State. By immemorial comity, the Court of the other State could and would, on request from the original Court, exercise its own power to compel the testimony; the formal request was known as "letters rogatory" (ante, § 1411). But this formality has come to be regarded as cumbrous and inconvenient. Nevertheless, Courts timidly deemed themselves not empowered to act without it. Hence, modern statutes have almost everywhere declared that Courts may by simpler methods compel residents to give testimony, by deposition, for use abroad in other States. Sometimes the usual local officials are employed; sometimes a commissioner nominated by the foreign State is recognized as having the power; and local varieties of detail are found:[6] opinion by Wickersham, J.); Cal. 1903, Manson v. Wilcox, 140 Cal. 206, 73 Pac. 1004; Colo. 1919, Joslyn v. People, 67 Colo. 297, 184 Pac. 375 (contempt proceedings for not answering in a proceeding upon petition to establish the truth of charges alleging disqualification of grand jurors); Kan. 1894, Re Sims, 54 Kan. 1, 37 Pac. 135; 1906, State v. Carter, 74 Kan. 156, 86 Pac. 138 (holding St. 1901, c. 233, to be void); Mass. 1904, Lawson v. Rowley, 185 Mass. 171, 69 N. E. 1082 (justice of the peace); Mo. 1906, State v. Standard Oil Co., 194 Mo. 124, 91 S. W. 1062 (commissioner); Nebr. 1904, Olmsted v. Edson, 71 Nebr. 17, 98 N. W. 415 (county judge); 1909, Ex parte Button, Ex parte Hammond, 83 Nebr. 636, 120 N. W. 203 (justice of the peace); N. H. 1910, Boston & Maine R. Co. v. State, 75 N. H. 513, 77 Atl. 996; N. Y. 1843, People v. Cassels, 5 Hill N. Y. 164, 167 (justice of the peace); 1901, Re Davies, 168 N. Y. 89, 61 N. E. 118 (attorney-general, and justices of the Supreme Court); Okl. 1916, Waugh v. Dibbens, 61 Okl. 221, 160 Pac. 589 (judge of county court); P. I. 1912, Narcida v. Bowen, 22 P. I. 365, 369 (justice of the peace).

Upon the general question of the jurisdiction and power of various officers to use process of contempt in compelling testimony, consult the following: Rapalje on Witnesses, §§ 303 ff.

[5] ENGLAND: 1921, St. 11 Geo. V, c. 7, Tribunals of Inquiry (Evidence) Act (declares the testimonial powers of tribunals of inquiry in general, whenever created).

CANADA: Manitoba, Rev. St. 1913, c. 34, Public Inquiries (similar to Eng. St. 1921); Nova Scotia: St. 1919, c. 23, Public Inquiries, §§ 4, 5; Prince Edward Isl. St. 1914, c. 2, Public Inquiries, §§ 4, 5.

UNITED STATES: Fed. 1894, Interstate Commerce Com'n v. Brimson, 154 U. S. 447, 472, 485, 155 U. S. 3, 14 Sup. 1125; 1897, Re Chapman, 166 U. S. 661, 17 Sup. 677; 1909, Harriman v. Interstate Commerce Commission, 211 U. S. 407, 29 Sup. 115; Ga. 1911, Plunkett v. Hamilton, Hamilton v. Plunkett, 136 Ga. 72, 70 S. E. 781 (police commission); Ida. 1914, Federal Mining & S. Co. v. Public Utilities Co., 26 Ida. 391, 143 Pac. 1173 (power of a public utilities commission to inspect books of a utility company); Ia. 1912, Witmer v. District Court, 155 Ia. 244, 136 N. W. 113 (whether certiorari is a proper mode of trying the order of commitment); Kan. 1920, State ex rel. v. Howat, 107 Kan. 423, 191 Pac. 585 (Kan. St. 1920, c. 29, establishing the Industrial Relations Court, held constitutional in respect to powers of summoning witnesses); affirmed in Howat v. Kansas, 258 U. S. 181, as to the nonprivilege to refuse because of the unconstitutionality of the grant of jurisdiction; Mo. 1911, Ex parte Sanford, 236 Mo. 665, 139 S. W. 376 (State board of equalization); 1918, State ex rel. Stroh v. Klene, 276 Mo. 206, 207 S. W. 496 (commissioner); N. D. 1919, Wallace v. Hughes Electric Co., 41 N. D. 418, 171 N. W. 840 (order by the State tax commission to officers of a public utility company, under Comp. L. 1913, § 2088, amended by St. 1917, c. 232, directing production of documents showing earnings, etc., held not valid); Wis. 1913, State v. Lloyd, 152 Wis. 24, 139 N. W. 514 (State fire-marshal).

[6] ENGLAND: St. 1856, 19–20 Vict. c. 113.

CANADA: Dom. R. S. 1906, c. 145, Evid. Act, §§ 41–46; B. C. Rev. St. 1911, c. 78, § 52; Man. Rev. St. 1913, c. 46, Rules 519–524; N. Br. Consol. St. 1903, c. 127, §§ 23–25; Ont. Rev. St. 1914, c. 73, § 50; Sask. R. S. 1920, c. 44, §§ 45–47; Yuk. Consol. Ord. 1914, c. 30, § 49.

UNITED STATES: Federal: Rev. St. 1878,

1920, STONE, J., in People ex rel. Ickes v. Rushworth, 294 Ill. 455, 128 N. E. 555: "It was long the practice in cases where the testimony of a witness residing in a foreign jurisdiction was desired, for the Court in which the case was pending to issue letters rogatory requesting the aid of the foreign Court within whose jurisdiction the witness was to be found to obtain such evidence. In later years, however, there has been developed the practice of authorizing by statute the appointment of a commissioner by a foreign Court, whose appointment fills the purpose of letters rogatory. These statutes have been passed and sustained on the principle of comity between states and nations. It has been generally held that where such a statute exists letters rogatory need not and should not be issued. Such statutes have been generally recognized as binding and valid.

"The Act of the Legislature [of 1919] in amending section 36 was an act of the legislative department of this State directing that the Circuit Courts of the State shall extend judicial comity to the orders of foreign Courts pertaining to the taking of depositions. Comity, in a legal sense, is the recognition which one nation allows within its territory to the legislative, executive, or judicial acts of another nation, and is universally extended to all cases where to do so would not conflict with international duty and convenience or with the rights of persons under the protection of its own laws. Comity rests upon the well-settled principles of expediency and convenience. These principles will be recognized and given force in cases where they do not conflict with the local law, inflict injustice on our own citizens or violate the public policy of the State. The act of the Legislature in amending section 36 and giving to a commissioner appointed by a foreign Court authority to issue subpœnas and take testimony within this State, and giving to the Circuit Courts of this State authority to hear and determine whether or not a citizen of this State should appear before such commissioner and give evidence, should, under the principles of comity, be sustained where to do so will not conflict with the rights of citizens of this State or the constitutional limitations placed upon the Legislature."

§§ 871, 874, Code 1919, §§ 1373–1376 (U. S. State or foreign deposition by witness in the D. of Columbia); R. S. § 875, Code § 1377 (letters rogatory to a U. S. district court); Code § 6275 (letters rogatory from foreign country for deposition of a witness residing within the U. S.); Uniform Act: Uniform Foreign Depositions Act, 1920, § 1 ("Whenever any mandate, writ or commission is issued out of any court of record in any other State, territory, district or foreign jurisdiction, or whenever upon notice or agreement it is required to take the testimony of a witness or witnesses in this State, witnesses may be compelled to appear and testify in the same manner and by the same process and proceeding as may be employed for the purpose of taking testimony in proceedings pending in this State"); Ariz. Rev. St. 1913, Civ. C. § 1720; St. 1921, c. 3 (following the Uniform Foreign Depositions Act); Cal. C. C. P. 1872, §§ 2035–2038; D. C. Code 1919, § 1062 (commission from any U. S. or State, etc. court to take testimony in the District; proceedings to be as in U. S. Rev. St. §§ 868, 869); Conn. Gen. St. 1918, §§ 5715, 6582; Del. St. 1919, April 21, c. 230; Ida. Comp. St. 1919, §§ 8026–8029; Ill. 1920, People ex rel. Ickes v. Rushworth, 294 Ill. 455, 128 N. E. 555 (St. 1919, p. 710, amending Rev. St. 1874, c. 51, § 36, extending the power of the Circuit Court to enforce attendance and testimony so as to include witnesses summoned before a commissioner for a foreign State in a cause pending abroad, held constitutional; distinguishing Marshall v. Irwin, 280 Ill. 90, 117 N. E. 483, which was decided on the principle of § 2195, note 3, supra, before the statutory amendment of 1919 changed the procedure as to contempt proceedings to enforce testimony on subpœna by a commissioner); Ia. Comp. Code 1919, § 9466 (criminal cases); Me. Rev. St. 1916, c. 134, § 12 (witness may be ordered to appear and testify in any court in any other New England state); Md. Ann. Code 1914, Art. 35, § 36; Mass. Gen. L. 1920, c. 233, § 12 (for a criminal prosecution pending in Maine or adjoining State, witness may be required to attend); c. 233, § 45 (for a cause pending in another State or Government, witness may be required to depose as if for cause pending within the State); 1865, Com. v. Smith, 11 All. 243, 250 (statute construed); Minn. Gen. St. 1913, § 8398; N. H. Pub. St. 1891, c. 224, §§ 8, 9; N. J. Comp. St. 1910, Evidence § 58; N. Mex. Annot. St. 1915, §§ 2160–2162 (for a case pending outside the State, any judge may order attendance of a witness to depose; on refusal, he may be proceeded against in the usual manner; perjury to be punished as usually); N. Y. C. P. A. 1920, §§ 310–312; N. C. Con. St. 1919, § 1822; Pa. St. 1833, Apr. 8, Dig. 1920, § 21876; P. I. C. C. P. 1901, §§ 365–368; P. R. Rev. St. & C. 1911, §§ 1513–1516; R. I. Gen. L. 1909, c. 292, §§ 16, 17; S. Car. C. C. P. 1922, §§ 692, 693; S. D. St. 1921, c. 413 (following the Uniform Foreign Depositions Act); Tenn. Shannon's Code, §§ 5664–5668; Utah: Comp. L. 1917, §§ 7128, 7185; Va. Code 1919, § 6217; Wash. R. & B. Code 1909, §§ 1236–1238; Wis. Stats. 1919, §§ 4109, 4109 a.

The power of a State to use testimonial process against a foreign corporation doing business within the State is noticed in Consolidated Rendering Co. v. Vermont, 207 U. S. 541, 28 Sup. 178 (1908).

A further application of the same power and duty, calculated to aid efficiency in doing justice, consists in sending a resident out of the State, to attend court and give testimony 'viva voce' at a trial in another State. This exercise of the power will naturally be restricted to urgent situations of need; and its recognition is still incipient only. The following report (though over-conservative) sets forth the professional attitude to this measure:

1922, National Conference of Commissioners on Uniform State Laws; Report of Committee on Securing Compulsory Attendance of Non-Resident Witnesses:

"1. It would not be wise to attempt to provide by uniform legislation for the compulsory attendance of non-resident witnesses in civil cases. While unquestionably at times cases arise in which the personal attendance of witnesses in civil cases is highly important, and their absence interferes with the proper administration of justice, yet in the large majority of cases statutes which provide for the taking of depositions of non-resident witnesses, which are in force in most of the States, would seem to afford sufficient protection to the rights of the litigants.

"2. In criminal cases, by the Sixth Amendment to the Federal Constitution, it is provided that the accused shall have the right to be 'confronted with the witnesses against him.' While it has been held that this provision does not apply to State Courts, yet in many of our States either by Constitutional or Statutory provision this right is granted to the one charged with a crime. Accordingly depositions of non-resident witnesses could not be taken or used against the accused unless the accused were personally present at the taking of the depositions. Therefore, to make such depositions available it would be necessary to provide for the transportation of the accused to the place where the deposition is to be taken. This would be difficult and expensive and would, of course, require legislation whereby the accused, while in transit, outside of the State wherein he has been indicted would remain in the legal custody of the officers of the State who had him in charge. The only other method of getting the advantage of the testimony of non-resident witnesses is to compel their attendance [as here proposed] by uniform or reciprocal State statutes. At the present time, so far as we have been able to find out, there are statutes of this character in force in the States of Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, New York and Pennsylvania. In most, if not all of these Statutes there is a provision limiting compulsory attendance of witnesses to criminal cases pending in adjoining States. This character of legislation is not free from constitutional difficulties, and the only case which we have found in which the constitutionality thereof has been directly upheld is the case of Commonwealth of Massachusetts vs. Klaus, 130 N. Y. Supp. 713. In the case cited the constitutionality of the New York statutes was upheld in an opinion by Judge Scott, but there is a strong dissenting opinion by Judge Laughlin.

"We have prepared a uniform State statute, based on the New York State statute, which is appended hereto. It is to be noted that in the draft of the statute we have provided that attendance of a person as a witness in a criminal trial can not be enforced if such person is more than five hundred miles from the place of trial."

(3) The testimonial duty, like other fundamental duties, may subject the violator of it to an action by the person injured by the violation, that is, by the party whose cause fails to be duly vindicated in court for lack of the testimony. Ordinarily, the plaintiff at common law in such an action on the case would have the difficult task of proving that his loss of his rights was caused specifically by the defendant's failure to bear testimony. The statute of Elizabeth (ante, § 2190) attempted to ease this difficulty by providing also that a person failing to obey a summons to testify should forfeit a specific sum of money to the party summoning him; the latter expedient has usually been imitated in modern statutes.[7] The action against one whose false testimony has resulted in the unjust loss of a party's cause seems to rest equally, in principle, upon a violation of the testimonial duty; but the doctrine of privilege in substantive law has erroneously been thought to protect against such claims.[8]

[7] For examples, see the following cases: Eng. Yeatman v. Dempsey, 7 C. B. N. S. 628, and annotation in 97 Eng. Com. L. R.; U. S. 1834, Wilkie v. Chadwick, 13 Wend. N. Y. 49; 1836, Smith v. Merwin, 15 Wend. N. Y. 184; 1838, Mattocks v. Wheaton, 10 Vt. 493, 494.

The statutes (which are rarely invoked) are as follows:

CANADA: N. Br. Consol. St. 1903, c. 127, § 21 ("any damage"); Ont. Rev. St. 1914, c. 76, § 16; Yuk. Consol. Ord. 1914, c. 48, Rule 287 (costs).

UNITED STATES: Ala. Code 1907, §§ 4025, 4035, 4061 (forfeits $100, and for depositions; is also liable in damages); § 7891 (criminal cases; forfeits $100); Alaska: Comp. L. 1913, § 1465 (forfeits $50 and all damages); Ariz. Rev. St. 1913, P. C. § 1232 (forfeits $100, in case of damage); Ark. Dig. 1919, §§ 4162, 4164 (party's costs up to $20, and "any damages occasioned"); Cal. C. C. P. 1872, § 1992 (forfeits $100 and damages); Conn. Gen. St. 1918, § 5703 ("pay all damages"); Del. 1916, State ex rel. Wolcott v. Biedler, 6 Boyce Del. 262, 99 Atl. 278 (quo warranto against persons present in the State as witnesses; well-reasoned opinion by Pennewill, C. J.); Fla. Rev. G. S. 1919, § 2708 ("any damage sustained"); Ga. Rev. C. 1910, § 5852 (finable not exceeding $300, and "liable in damages"); Ida. Comp. St. 1919, § 7988 (forfeits $100 and all damages); Ia. Comp. Code 1919, § 7371 (civil cases; liable "for all consequences," with $50 additional damages); § 9460 (criminal cases; liable for "the amount of damages"); Kan. G. S. 1915, § 7232 (liable for "any damages"); 1922, Davies v. Lutz, 110 Kan. 657, 205 Pac. 637; Ky. C. C. P. 1895, § 536 (costs up to $20, and any damages); La. C. Pr. 1870, § 137 ("damages for the loss"); Me. Rev. St. 1916, c. 87, § 120 (liable for "all damages"); Md. Ann. Code 1914, Art. 35, § 8 ("the damage sustained"); Mass. Gen. L. 1920, c. 233, § 4 ("all damages"); Mich. Comp. L. 1915, § 12562 (all damages and $50); Minn. Gen. St. 1913, § 8372 (all damages); Mo. Rev. St. 1919, § 5427 ("all damages sustained"); Mont. Rev. C. 1921, § 10625 ($100 forfeit, and "all damages"); § 12184 (criminal cases; $100 forfeit); Nebr. Rev. St. 1922, § 8865 (forfeits fine to the party, and also pays "any damages"); Nev. Rev. L. 1912, § 5439 ($100 forfeit, and "all damages"); § 7363 ($100 forfeit, in a criminal case); N. H. Pub. St. 1891, c. 924, § 6 ("all damages"), § 9 (forfeit of $300, for summons to testify out of the State); N. J. Comp. St. 1910, Evidence § 12 (forfeit of not more than £50, and "damages equivalent to the loss sustained"); N. Y. C. P. A. 1920, §§ 405, 406 ("damages sustained" and $50 more); N. C. Con. St. 1919, § 1807 (forfeits $40, and is further liable for "the full damages"); N. D. Comp. L. 1913, § 1079 (contested elections to legislative assembly; $20 forfeiture); § 11036 ($50 liability); Oh. Gen. Code Ann. 1921, § 11513 ("any damages," and sometimes the fine goes to the party injured); Okl. Comp. St. 1921, § 598, 978; Or. Laws 1920, § 821 (forfeits $50 and pays all damages); Pa. St. 1831, Feb. 26, St. 1833, Apr. 8, Dig. 1920, §§ 10304, 10308; P. I. C. C. P. 1901, § 409 ("all damages"); P. R. Rev. St. & C. 1911, § 1485 (forfeits $100, and all damages); § 6457 ($100 forfeit to defendant in criminal cases); R. I. Gen. L. 1909, c. 292, § 10 ("all damages"); S. Car. C. C. P. 1922, § 680 ("all damages"); S. D. Rev. C. 1919, § 2742 (civil case; liable for "any damages"); § 5005 (criminal cases; liable to defendant for $50); § 7356 (legislative election contest; $20 forfeit); Tenn. Shannon's Code 1916, §§ 5609, 5610 (forfeits $125, and pays "full damages"; in criminal cases, $250); Utah: Comp. L. 1917, § 7134 (forfeits $100 and damages); Vt. Gen. L. 1917, §§ 1906, 1920; Wash. R. & B. Code 1909, § 1220 ("all damages"); Wyo. Comp. St. 1920, § 5820 (fine not exceeding $50, for the use of the party in certain cases, and liable "for any damages occasioned").

[8] The cases are collected in Ames' Cases on Torts, I, 618, note 6; Wigmore's Select Cases on Torts, II, pp. 736–743.

(4) The testimonial duty is temporarily paramount to other considerations; moreover, subjectively, the witness should be encouraged, by the removal of all obstacles, to fulfil it freely and promptly; hence, an immunity from arrest on civil process is conceded to him, pending his travel to and from the place of trial and his stay at the place. This immunity, as affecting a number of rules of legal procedure and substantive right,[9] is beyond the scope of the rules of Evidence.

§ 2196. Privilege personal to the Witness; Party's Objections. The grounds for exemption from the testimonial duty are entirely extrinsic to the purpose of ascertaining the truth (ante, § 2175). They are based on a policy of dispensing with the compulsion of attendance and disclosure wherever it is not necessary, or is more disadvantageous in respect to other interests of the community (ante, § 2192). The exemptions are therefore in no sense provided for the benefit of the party whose opponent is deprived by them of the evidence which he desires. They are not intended to secure for him a better likelihood of demonstrating the truth of his cause; on the contrary, they constitute so many obstacles to the ascertainment of the truth, and these are suffered only because the several extrinsic policies are deemed to be in these respects paramount to the purpose of ascertaining the truth. For example, if Doe offers to prove the contents of a document, the rule that he must produce the original is a rule intended to secure a better likelihood of learning the contents accurately, and the invocation of it by his opponent Roe is the invocation of a rule which is directly intended to assist Roe in the establishment of the facts of the case. But, when Doe calls a witness who is exempted by illness from attendance, or is privileged not to disclose his title-deeds, it is obvious that this rule is in no sense directed to the better ascertainment of the facts, nor intended to safeguard Roe in his interest as a suitor entitled to a careful investigation of the facts. It concerns solely the interests of the witness, in his relation to justice and the State, — his interests not to have his testimonial duty enforced against him where paramount considerations of policy prevail over the purpose of judicial investigation.

[9] Greenleaf, Evidence, §§ 316–318, and cases cited; Rapalje on Witnesses, § 305; Can. 1906, Gibbons v. Tuttle, 9 Newf. Browning 186; U. S. Fed. 1917, Central Railway S. Co. v. Jackson, D. C. E. D. Pa., 238 Fed. 625: 1917, Stewart v. Ramsay, 242 U. S. 138, 37 Sup. 44 (plaintiff-witness in a civil action); 1919, Filer v. McCormick, U. S. D. C. N. D. Cal., 260 Fed. 309; Alaska: Comp. L. 1913, §§ 1509–1511; Ariz. Rev. St. 1913, Civ. C. § 1681; Ark. Dig. 1919, §§ 4159, 4171; Cal. C. C. P. 1872, §§ 2067–2070; Ga. Rev. C. 1910, § 5854; Ida. Comp. St. 1919, § 8045; Kan. G. S. 1915, § 7237; 1917, Eastern Kansas Oil Co. v. Beutner, 101 Kan. 505, 167 Pac. 1061 (applying Gen. St. 1915, § 7237); Ky. C. C. P. 1895, § 542; Md. 1911, Long v. Hawken, 114 Md. 234, 79 Atl. 190; 1920, Minch & Eisenbrey Co. v. Cram, 136 Md. 122, 110 Atl. 204 (civil party plaintiff); Mo. Rev. St. 1919, § 5431; 1921, Groce v. Skelton, 206 Mo. App. 471, 230 S. W. 329; Mont. Rev. C. 1921, §§ 10676–10679; Nebr. Rev. St. 1922, § 8869; Nev. Rev. L. 1912, § 5445; 1920, State ex rel. Gunn v. Superior Court, — Nev. —, 189 Pac. 1016 (party defendant in civil action); N. J. Comp. St. 1910, Evidence § 14; N. Y. Cons. L. 1909, Civil Rights § 25; C. P. A. 1920, § 408; N. C. Con. St. 1919, § 1808; 1921, Winder v. Penniman, 181 N. C. 7, 105 S. E. 884 (rule applied, where party had given bond to release attachment); N. D. Comp. L. 1913, § 7880; 1914, Hendersen, In re, 27 N. D. 155, 145 N. W. 574; Oh. Gen. Code Ann. 1921, § 11519; Okl. Comp. St. 1921, § 605, Rev. L. 1910, § 5064; 1916, Commonwealth Cotton Oil Co. v. Hudson, 62 Okl. 23, 161 Pac. 535 (applying Rev. L. 1910, § 5064); 1918, Bearman v. Hunt, — Okl. —, 171 Pac. 1124; 1918, Lonsdale Grain Co. v. Neil, — Okl. —, 175 Pac. 823; Or. Laws 1920, §§ 872–874; P. I. 1913, U. S. v. Jaca, 26 P. I. 100, 109; P. R. Rev. St. & C. 1911, §§ 1534–1537 (like Cal. C. C. P. §§ 2067–2070); 1915, Wilson v. Cody, 8 P. R. 271; R. I. 1912, In re Greene, 35 R. I. 67, 85 Atl. 552; S. C. C. C. P. 1922, § 271; S. D. Rev. C. 1919, § 2747; Tenn. Shannon's Code 1916, § 5616; 1908, Sewanee C. C. & L. Co. v. Williams, 120 Tenn. 339, 107 S. W. 968; Tex. Rev. Civ. St. 1911, § 3646; Utah, Comp. L. 1917, § 7143 (civil actions); Wyo. Comp. St. 1920, § 5825.

Three consequences follow: (1) The claim of privilege can be made solely by the witness himself; the privilege (as the common phrasing runs) is purely personal to himself. Whether he chooses to fulfil his duty without objection, or whether he prefers to exercise the exemption which the law concedes to him, is a matter resting entirely between himself and the State (or the Court as its representative). The party against whom the testimony is brought has no right to claim or to urge the exemption on his own behalf; and, on the witness' behalf, the Court is to be left to accord the protection if it is a proper one.[1]

(2) (a) An improper ruling by the Court, upon a question of privilege, cannot be excepted to by the party as an error justifying an appeal and a new trial, if the ruling denies the privilege and compels the witness to testify. By hypothesis, the privilege does not exist for the benefit of the party nor for the sake of the better ascertainment of the truth of his cause. The offered testimony is relevant, and is, in all other respects than the privilege, admissible. The admission of it, by denying the privilege, has not introduced material which in any way renders less trustworthy the finding of the verdict; on the contrary, only the exclusion of it could have been an obstacle to the ascertainment of the truth. The only interest injured is that of the witness himself, who has been forced to comply with a supposed duty, which as between himself and the State did not exist; his remedy was to refuse to obey, and to appeal for vindication if the Court had attempted improperly to use compulsory process of contempt. This view has been accepted by some Courts.[2] But the opposite view naturally possesses attraction for those

§ 2196. [1] This is conceded with practical unanimity. Its application to the privilege against self-crimination, the privilege against anti-marital testimony, and the privilege for client's communications to attorneys, where special questions arise, is treated post, §§ 2270, 2241, 2321.

[1] Its application to other privileges in general is seen in the following cases:

England: 1841, Doe v. Egremont, 2 Moo. & Rob. 386 (on counsel appearing for a witness claiming privilege for documents, Rolfe, B., refused to hear him, ruling that the witness should state the reasons for his claim, and then the judge is "to give to the witness the protection claimed, if he finds him to be entitled to it").

Canada: 1877, Laliberté v. R., 1 Can. Sup. 117, 131, 139, 140, by three judges.

United States: 1822, Treat v. Browning, 4 Conn. 408, 418 (self-disgracing testimony); 1910, McCray v. State, 134 Ga. 416, 68 S. E. 62 (party held not entitled to claim the privilege against disgracing facts, where the witness had not claimed it); 1890, Boyer v. Teague, 106 N. C. 576, 625, 11 S. E. 665 (voter's privilege); 1890, State v. Kraft, 18 Or. 550, 556, 23 Pac. 663, 665 (voter's privilege); 1842, Ralph v. Brown, 3 W. & S. Pa. 395, 400; 1902, State v. Hill, 52 W. Va. 296, 43 S. E. 160 (self-disgracing facts); 1902, State v. Prater, 52 W. Va. 132, 43 S. E. 230 (similar); 1868, State v. Olin, 23 Wis. 309, 318 (voter's privilege).

[2] Eng. 1834, Marston v. Downes, 1 A. & E. 31, 34 (the mortgage of a third person having been proved to the jury, against his protest and in supposed violation of his privilege, held that "the defendants were not a privileged party, and they therefore had no right of objection, even on the supposition that the learned judge

Courts — and they are in the majority — who cannot evade the Anglo-Norman instinct to look upon litigation as a legalized sport, of orthodox respectability, with high stakes, the game to be conducted according to strict rules under judicial supervision, and to be won or lost according as these rules are observed or disregarded (ante, §§ 21, 1845). From this point of view, plainly, the trial Court's erroneous denial of privilege is a proper subject for exception and forms 'per se' a reason for putting the opposing party, irrespective of the truth of the cause, to the delay, expense, and risk of a new trial. Upon the sporting theory of litigation there is no escape from this conclusion; though it is impossible to reach that conclusion upon any other theory. The sporting theory maintains thus far the upper hand, and by most Courts the party is to-day allowed the right to except to a ruling erroneously denying a privilege.[3]

(b) If, however, the ruling erroneously affirms the privilege, the case is different; for here the party who desired the testimony has obviously lost evidence which by hypothesis is relevant and might have assisted the establishment of the truth of his cause. Hence, the deprival of this evidence is for him as proper a ground of complaint and exception as it would be in any other instance,[4] and may become a ground for granting a new trial, so far as the rejection of a specific item of evidence can ever be properly so considered.[5]

(3) The privilege being purely personal to the witness, it follows, conversely, that the irrelevancy of a fact inquired about can never justify a privilege of refusing to answer. As the party has no concern with privilege proper, so the witness has no concern with anything but privilege. Irrelevancy is a ground for objection by the party alone.[6] had done wrong"); U. S. 1922, People v. Gonzales, — Cal. App. —, 204 Pac. 1688 (rape; a witness claimed privilege, but the judge overruled it; the defendant held not entitled to raise the question of error; "had the witness stood upon her refusal to answer and been committed for contempt in consequence, the question . . . would be presented"); 1842, Ralph v. Brown, 3 W. & S. Pa. 395, 400 (Gibson, C. J.: "Nor is the violation of his right a subject of exception, for no one else is injured by it"); 1863, People v. Pease, 27 N. Y. 45, 72, per Selden, J.

[3] The cases applying it to the privilege against self-crimination and the privilege against anti-marital testimony, which involve special questions, are collected under those heads, post, §§ 2241, 2270. The following cases apply it to other privileges: Eng. 1854, Phelps v. Prew, 3 E. & B. 430; U. S. 1922, Ex parte Lipscomb, — Tex. —, 239 S. W. 1101 (action by G. against T. for title to land; L. as former attorney for G. refused to testify to a deed; held, that he was properly committed for contempt, because the party G. was the only person interested and had ample remedy by appeal); 1868, State v. Olin, 23 Wis. 309, 318.

[4] This is conceded in all the cases cited supra, note 1; 1842, Coleridge, J., in Doe v. Date, 3 Q. B. 609, 621: "There is a very broad distinction between cases where the privilege had been [erroneously] allowed and those where it has been [erroneously] disallowed. In the former case, a party has been precluded from proving that which he was entitled to prove. In the latter case, the party [person] whose privilege has been disallowed has no 'locus standi' in banc. . . . Legitimate evidence has been produced against him [the party]; he is not prejudiced by that, and can have no ground for complaint." Contra: 1853, Dickerson v. Talbot, 14 B. Monr. Ky. 49, 53 (title-deeds of third person).

[5] For these considerations, see ante, § 21.

[6] This doctrine is examined in detail post, § 2210.

Is a witness entitled to have counsel present to advise? 1917, Re Emigh, D. C. N. D. N. Y., 243 Fed. 988 (bankruptcy proceedings; at certain private hearings, the witness is not entitled to counsel).

§ 2197. Kinds of Privilege, summarized. The kinds of exemption which are accorded to a person in respect of his testimonial duty may be grouped under two heads, according as they exempt him either merely from the task of travelling to and attending the court where his testimony is desired, or, having attended, from disclosing a certain part of his knowledge. An exemption of the first sort — which may be termed viatorial privilege — may and sometimes does result in an exemption also of the second sort, i. e. from giving any testimony whatever; but this is rather an accidental and not an intended effect — as appears when a witness is exempted from attendance at the court-room, but is nevertheless still liable to testify before a commissioner sent to take his deposition at his residence. An exemption of the second sort, which may be termed testimonial privilege, or Privilege proper, never includes or effects an exemption of the first sort.

The Viatorial Privilege consists in exempting the witness from attendance until three conditions are fulfilled: first, he is to have notice that his testimony is required, and be summoned to attend; secondly, he is, in some cases, to receive in advance an indemnity for his expenses; and, thirdly, he is to be excused where his health or other sufficient circumstance constitutes an inability to attend.

The Testimonial Privileges fall naturally under two heads, according as the disclosure which they affect is a topic or class of facts in his knowledge, or is a communication from or to another person, irrespective of its subject. The concededly privileged topics are some half-dozen in number, although others have been from time to time sought to be added to the list. The privileged communications, as universally conceded, are those made by persons holding a certain confidential relation, — in particular, that of husband and wife, attorney and client, fellow-jurors, and government and informer; to these are added, in some jurisdictions, the relations of priest and penitent, and physician and patient; and occasionally sundry other additions have been attempted.

TITLE II (continued): PRIVILEGE

SUB-TITLE II: VIATORIAL PRIVILEGE

CHAPTER LXXV.

§ 2199. (1) Notice and Summons; Subpœna. (a) Common fairness prescribes that, before the witness be enforced to perform his testimonial duty, adequate and express notice be given him that the testimony is likely to be needed, and a formal summons be issued by the Court to him to attend for the purpose. This process secures the effect, not only of notifying him when and where and in what sort of cause his testimony is wanted, but also of assuring him that the authority of State has sanctioned the demand, of furnishing him a voucher for proving his claim to indemnity (where it is not demandable in advance), as well as of satisfying the Court, in case the witness is not present when called to the stand, that due diligence has been used by the party to procure him and (in a contempt proceeding) that a default appears 'prima facie' on his part.

(b) The form of document traditionally used for this purpose is the writ of subpœna,[1] which commands the witness to appear at a certain court on a

§ 2199. [1] So called from the closing words of the writ, which commanded the party to attend in person, on a penalty for disobedience; for the history of the subpœna see the citations ante, § 2190, note 28.

The original Latin form of the writ of subpœna was as follows (Holdsworth, Hist. of English Law, I, 3d ed., 1922, p. 661): "Edwardus etc. dilecto sibi Ricardo Spynk des Norwyco, salutem. Quibusdam certis de causis, tibi praecipimus firmiter injungentes, quod sis coram consilio nostro apud Westmonasterium, die Mercurii proximo post quindenam nativitatis Sancti Johannis Baptistae proximo futurum: ad respondendum super hiis quae tibi objicientur ex parte nostra, et ad faciendum et recipiendum quod curia nostra consideraverit in hac parte. Et hoc sub poena centum librarum nullatenus omittas. Teste meipso apud Westmonasterium, tercio die Julii, anno regni nostri tricesimo septimo."

The subject of testimony must be in some way indicated: 1909, In re Shaw, C. C. S. D. N. Y., 172 Fed. 520 (a subpœna must notify the witness of the matter on which he is called to testify, by stating either the name of the parties or the subject of the investigation; a clause requiring him to tell "what you may know generally" is invalid). Compare the same principle for the subpœna 'duces tecum' (post, § 2200).

That a judicial order, apart from a subpœna, is a proper mode of compelling attendance, is sometimes but erroneously denied: 1906, Re Depue, 185 N. Y. 60, 77 N. E. 798.

Whether a particular officer has power to compel testimony is often a question (ante, § 2195).

The witness may before trial be detained certain day to testify what he knows in a cause between certain parties and to attend the court for that purpose until discharged. Common modern forms are as follows:

1. "The People of the State of New York, to.....and..... We command you, that, all and singular business and excuses being laid aside, you and each of you be and appear in your proper persons, before one of our justices of our Supreme Court of judicature, or one of our circuit judges, at a circuit court to be held at the court-house in the village of Ballston Spa, in and for the county of Saratoga, on the last Tuesday of November next, by ten of the clock in the forenoon of the same day, to testify all and singular those things which you or either of you know, in a certain cause now depending in our said Supreme Court, between John Doe, plaintiff, and Richard Roe, defendant, of a plea of trespass on the case, and on that day to be tried by a jury of the country, on the part of the plaintiff. And this you, or any of you, shall by no means omit, under the penalty upon each of you of fifty dollars. Witness, John Savage, Chief Justice, at the capital in the city of Albany, the thirtieth day of October, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and thirty.

PAIGE, Clerk."

"W. L. F. WARREN, Att'y."

(Phillips on Evidence, Cowen and Hill's Notes, 4th Am. ed. 1859, c. IX, p. 806.)

"In the High Court of Justice, —— Division.
Between ....., Plaintiff and
....., Defendant.

2. "GEORGE THE FIFTH, by the grace of God of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, and of the British Dominions beyond the Seas, King, Defender of the Faith, to ..... greeting: We command you to attend before ..... at ..... on ..... day the ..... day of ..... 19.., at the hour of ..... in the ..... noon, and so from day to day until the above cause is tried, to give evidence on behalf of the plaintiff (or defendant).

"Witness, ... Lord High Chancellor of Great Britain, the ..... day of ..... in the year of Our Lord One thousand nine hundred and ....."

(White, Stringer, & King's Annual Practice, 1921, vol. II, p. 1625).

3. "STATE OF ILLINOIS,
.....County. } ss. The People of the State of Illinois to.....
City of.....
.....You are Hereby Commanded To appear before me, at my office, in the City of .....in said County, on the.....day of.....19.., at..... o'clock,..M., then and there to testify the truth in a matter in suit wherein ..... plaintiff, and ..... defendant, and this you are not to omit, under the penalty of the law.

"Given under my hand and seal, this.....day of.....A. D. 19..
".....Seal.
Police Magistrate."

for appearance on the trial; and the power to commit for this purpose, in default of bail, is inherent in a court, irrespective of statutory grant: 1910, Crosby v. Potts, 8 Ga. App. 463, 69 S. E. 582 (liberal opinion, by Powell, J.).

Statutes usually provide for the form, as well as for issuance, service, and the other details now to be mentioned.[2]

Where the witness is desired to bring documents, a specific clause to that effect is additionally required to be inserted (post, § 2200).

(c) The notice conveyed in the subpœna is secured by reading or showing it to him and furnishing him with a copy,[3] the original being taken back by the process-server for filing in court with his indorsement or affidavit of service. The service is sometimes made by leaving the copy at the witness' place of abode or of business, although a personal service into the witness' hands may in strictness be required. The service should be made a reasonable time before the day specified for attendance; and the witness is ordinarily not deemed to be in default unless the service conforms to these requirements. The sufficient question in all cases should be, Has the person in all probability had actual knowledge, a reasonable time beforehand, that his

[2] The following statutes cover the subject in general:

CANADA: Dom. R. S. 1906, c. 146; Crim.C. §§ 671–677, 971–976; Alta. Rules of Court 1914, Nos. 378–389; B. C. Rules of Court 1912, Nos. 508–516; Man. Rev. St. 1913, c. 46, Rules 470–475; Newf. Consol. St. 1916, c. 83, Ord. 33, Rules 26–33; N. Sc. Rules of Court 1919, Ord. 35, Rules 25–33; Ont. Rules of Court 1913, Nos. 228, 272, 273; Rev. St. 1914, c. 63, §§ 114–117 (division courts); Yuk. Consol. Ord. 1914, c. 48, Rules 298, 299.

UNITED STATES: Fed. Equity Rules (1912), Nos. 12–15; Ala. Code 1907, §§ 4020–4029 (civil cases; subpœna); §§ 4060–4062 (subpœna d. t.); §§ 7877–7885 (criminal cases); Alaska: Comp. L. 1913, §§ 1456–1468 (civil cases); § 2360 (criminal cases); Ariz. Rev. St. 1913; Civ. C. §§ 1682–1687; P. C. §§ 1230–1238; Ark. Dig. §§ 4150–4168; Cal. P. C. 1872, §§ 1326–1331; C. C. P. 1872, §§ 1985–1994; Colo. Comp. L. 1921, C. C. P. § 478, Gen. St. § 6569; Conn. Gen. St. 1918, §§ 5703–5704; Fla. Rev. G. S. 1919, §§ 2707–2709, 6013–6021; Haw. Rev. L. 1915, §§ 2552–2562; Ida. Comp. St. 1919, §§ 7981–7990 (civil cases); §§ 9132–9136 (criminal cases); Ind. Burns' Ann. St. 1914, §§ 507–510; Ia. Comp. Code 1919, §§ 7365–7376 (civil cases); §§ 9456–9460 (criminal cases); Kan. Gen. St. 1915, §§ 7224–7234 (civil cases); §§ 8080–8082 (criminal cases); Ky. C. C. P. 1895, §§ 528–539; C. Cr. P. 1895, §§ 150–152; La. C. Pr. 1870, §§ 134–145, 473–475; Me. Rev. St. 1916, c. 87, § 110, c. 134, § 10; Md. Ann. Code 1914, Art. 35, §§ 8–15, Art. 75, §§ 159, 160; Mass. Gen. L. 1920, c. 233, §§ 1–13; Mich. Comp. L. 1915, §§ 12562–12567; Minn. Gen. St. 1913, §§ 8370–8374 (civil cases); Miss. Code 1906, §§ 3948–3956; Hem. §§ 2955–2963; Mo. Rev. St. 1919, §§ 4177–4182, 5420–5431; Mont. Rev. C. 1921, §§ 10618–10630 (civil cases); §§ 12179–12186 (criminal cases); § 79 (legislature); Nebr. Rev. St. 1922, §§ 8857–8873; Nev. Rev. L. 1912, §§ 5431–5441 (civil cases); §§ 7348–7356 (criminal cases); N. H. Pub. St. 1891, c. 224, §§ 1–9; N. J. Comp. St. 1910, Evidence, §§ 12–14; N. Y. C. P. A. 1920, §§ 403–414; J. C. A. §§ 190–201; N. C. Con. St. 1919, §§ 1456, 1496, 1497, 1535 (Nos. 26, 27, 28, forms of subpœna in justice court); §§ 1803–1807 (in general); N. D. Comp. L. 1913, §§ 11023–11031; St. 1919, Feb. 14, c. 209 (service of subpœna by telegraph, etc., amending Comp. L. §§ 7875, 7877); Oh. Gen. Code Ann. 1921, §§ 11501–11516, 13664; Okl. Comp. St. 1921, §§ 590–604, 972–978; Or. Laws 1920, §§ 812, 824 (civil cases); §§ 1683–1695 (criminal cases); Pa. St. 1831, Feb. 26, Dig. 1920, §§ 10302–10305; P. I. C. C. P. 1901, §§ 402–411; P. R. Rev. St. & C. 1911, §§ 1478–1490 (civil cases); §§ 6453–6459 (criminal cases); R. I. Gen. L. 1909, c. 292, §§ 7–13; S. C. C. C. P. 1922, §§ 676–681; S. D. Rev. C. 1919, §§ 2734–2744 (civil cases); §§ 4992–5005 (criminal cases); Tenn. Shannon's Code 1916, §§ 5602–5615, 7358–7366; Tex. Rev. Civ. St. 1911, §§ 3640–3646; Rev. C. Cr. P. 1911, §§ 525–550; Utah: Comp. L. 1917, §§ 7127–7139 (civil cases); §§ 9284–9289 (criminal cases); Va. Code 1919, §§ 6217–6221; Wash. R. & B. Code 1909, §§ 1215–1224 (civil cases); §§ 1898–1901 (justice courts); W. Va. Code 1914, c. 130, §§ 25–28, c. 162, § 1; Wyo. Comp. St. 1920, §§ 5812–5822.

[3] It has long been settled that an abstract of the writ, or "subpœna-ticket" suffices: 1639, Goodwin v. West, Cro. Car. 522, 540.

The service cannot be made on the witness by attorney: 1906, Re Depue, 185 N. Y. 60, 77 N. E. 798.

Modern methods may well be applicable here: Ark. St. 1907, No. 260, Dig. 1919, § 4158 (service of subpœna by telephone, valid).

testimony would be lawfully required at the time and place specified?[4] Upon principle, therefore, where a person already in court is desired as a witness, and is then and there called by order of the Court, no subpœna or other formal summons is needed, for it would be the merest technical formality.[5] If the desired witness is confined in jail, a subpœna would be of no avail, since he could not obey it and his custodian would still lack authority to bring him; accordingly, a writ to the custodian is necessary, ordering the prisoner to be brought to give testimony; this writ of 'habeas corpus ad testificandum,' grantable in discretion at common law, is now usually authorized by statute as a matter of course.[6]

[4] This question depends rather upon general principles as to the service of process, and not upon any peculiarity of the law of Evidence; moreover, it usually arises in contempt proceeding where the trial Court's determination depends so much on the facts of each case that it hardly creates a precedent; and the rulings are therefore not here collected; consult the following: Eng. 1736, Wakefield's Case, Lee t. Hardw. 313; U. S. 1834, Wilkie v. Chadwick, 13 Wend. N. Y. 49; 1922, Sellers v. State, — Miss. —, 90 So. 716 (there must be process of summons before a witness can be guilty of contempt; authorities collected; interesting opinions, with Ethridge, J., diss.); 1906, Ex parte Terrell, — Tex. Cr. —, 95 S. W. 536 (reading over the telephone does not suffice); 1838, Mattocks v. Wheaton, 10 Vt. 493; 1899, Chambers v. Oehler, 107 Ia. 155, 77 N. W. 853; 1902, Re Haines, 67 N. J. L. 442, 51 Atl. 929; Greenleaf, Evidence, §§ 309, 314, 315; Tidd, Practice, II, 806; Chitty, Practice, III, 829; Rapalje, Witnesses, § 302; and a note in 22 Harvard Law Review 376.

[5] Eng. 1830, R. v. Sadler, 4 C. & P. 218 (for criminal cases); U. S. 1886, U. S. v. Sanborn, 28 Fed. 299 (collecting the cases as to the right to fees); 1889, Eastman v. Sherry, 37 Fed. 844 (right to fees); 1859, Goodpaster v. Voris, 8 Ia. 334 ("The object of the summons is only to give notice and to call the witness in, and if he is already in court, he requires no further notice"); 1836, Leckie v. Scott, 10 La. 412, 417 ("Any person within the verge of the court during the trial may be called upon to disclose the truth"); 1831, Farmer v. Storer, 11 Pick. Mass. 241 (taxation of costs).

A general provision to this effect is sometimes made by statute: Can.: Newf. Consol. St. 1922, c. 91, § 6; U. S. Ark. Dig. 1919, § 4192; Cal. C. C. P. 1872, § 1990; Ky. C. C. P. 1895, § 602; Nev. Rev. L. 1912, § 5435; Or. Laws 1920, § 819; P. I. C. C. P. 1901, § 407; P. R. Rev. St. & C. 1911, § 1483; Wash. R. & B. Code 1909, § 1219.

[6] Starkie, Evidence, I, 81; Greenleaf, Evidence, § 312.

CANADA: Dom. R. S. 1906, c. 146, Crim. C. § 977; Alta. Rules of Court 1914, No. 389; Man. 1915, R. v. Kuzin, 21 D. L. R. 378, Man. (murder; the judge held to be in error, under Can. Cr. Code, § 977, in refusing an order to call as a witness a person convicted of murder and confined under sentence of death; the above statute overriding id. § 1064 as to mode of confinement of person sentenced); N. Br. Consol. St. 1903, c. 127, § 22; Ont. Rules of Court 1913, No. 230.

UNITED STATES: Fed. 1908, In re Thaw, O'Mara v. Lamb, 3d C. C. A., 166 Fed. 71 (writ held not to be of right, but of discretion; here refused for bringing to a bankruptcy proceeding a witness confined in a State asylum for criminal insane, the witness being presumably incompetent); Ala. Code 1907, § 6560; Alaska: Comp. L. 1913, § 1468; Ariz. Rev. St. 1913; P. C. § 1236; Ark. Dig. 1919, § 4169; Cal. C. C. P. 1872, §§ 1995–1997; P. C. 1872, § 1333; Ga. Rev. C. 1910, §§ 5844–5848, 5849–5855; P. C. § 1306; Ida. Comp. St. 1919, §§ 7991, 9139; Ill. 1915, People v. Kersten, 269 Ill. 597, 109 N. E. 1012 (statute applied); Ind. Burns' Ann. St. 1914, §§ 2131–2133; Ia. Comp. Code 1919, § 7377; Kan. G. S. 1915, § 7235 (civil cases); §§ 8135, 8136 (criminal cases); Ky. C. C. P. 1895, § 540; Me. Rev. St. 1916, c. 104, § 37; Mass. Gen. L. 1920, c. 248, § 25; Mo. Rev. St. 1919, § 5432; Mont. Rev. C. 1921, §§ 10628, 12186; Nebr. Rev. St. 1922, § 8867; Nev. Rev. L. 1912, §§ 5442, 7363; N. Y. C. P. A. 1920, §§ 297, 415–420; C. Cr. P. 1881, § 10 c, as added by St. 1920, c. 920; N. D. Comp. L. 1913, § 11399; Oh. Gen. Code Ann. 1921, §§ 11517, 13665; Okl. Comp. St. 1921, § 601; Or. Laws 1920, § 824; P. I. C. C. P. 1901, § 411; P. R. Rev. St. & C. 1911, §§ 1488, 6459; S. C. C. C. P. 1922, § 682; S. D. Rev. C. 1919, §§ 2745, 2746 (civil cases); § 5016 (criminal cases); Tenn. Shannon's Code 1916, §§ 7574–7576; Utah, Comp. L. 1917, §§ 7137, 9293; Wash. R. & B. Code 1909, § 1223; W. Va. Code 1914, c. 111, § 14; Wyo. Comp. St. 1920, § 5823.

The following ruling is unsound: 1921, State v. Brown, — Ala. App. —, 89 So. 862 (B. was under life-sentence and had a suit against M. for damages; a writ of 'habeas corpus ad testificandum' directing production

(d) The official source of the subpœna is the Court itself; the power to compel an answer being a part of the judicial power. But modern demands for convenience and informality have resulted in the issuance of the subpœna, by practice in many States, from the clerk of court alone, or even by the party himself; so that the name of the Court thereon is a mere form in such cases. Ultimately, this goes back to the modern custom of granting the subpœna without any conditions imposed and without any showing of necessity; so that the Court's discretion is not invoked and thus the judge's intervention would be needless. However in some States and courts, and in some classes of cases, the judge must still perform the judicial act of issuing the subpœna only upon application and a showing of cause by the party; but this feature has left its mark, for the most part, only in statutory rules denying reimbursement of costs for witness-fees where such sanction has not been obtained.

This whole modern development, i. e. the reduction to automatism of the issuance of the subpœna, is itself a natural result of the partisan principle of the Anglo-American law, which, in contrast to the Continental system, relegates to the parties themselves the search for evidence and the selection and production of witnesses (post, § 2483). This fundamental principle, depriving the judge of responsibility and initiative, has its advantages and its disadvantages, and leaves its marks deeply in many other peculiarities of our law of Evidence.

§ 2200. Same: Subpœna duces tecum for Documents. (1) A doubt was once raised as to the existence at common law of adequate process, comprehensive and unlimited, which should serve to enforce the testimonial duty as effectively for documents as for oral testimony. This doubt was repudiated as soon as raised, by an opinion which has ever since been accepted as final:

1808, Amey v. Long, 9 East 473, 479 Mr. Gibbs, Attorney-General, and Mr. Garrow, arguing against the issuing of such process: "The writ of subpœna 'duces tecum' only lay to public officers for the production of the public documents in their custody, in which all persons had or might have an interest, and could not properly be extended to private persons." ELLENBOROUGH, L. C. J., repudiating this argument: "The right to resort to means competent to compel the production of written, as well as oral, testimony seems essential to the very existence and constitution of a Court of common law, which receives and acts upon both descriptions of evidence, and could not possibly proceed with due effect without them. And it is not possible to conceive that such Courts should have immemorially continued to act upon both, without great and notorious impediments having occurred, if they had been furnished with no better means of obtaining written evidence than what the immediate custody and possession of the party who was interested in the production of it, or the voluntary favor of those in whose custody the required instruments might happen to be, afforded." Messrs. Park, Marryat, and Pell (arguing for the doctrine approved): "This writ is of essential importance to the due administration of B. to testify in the suit was refused on the ground that the statutes authorizing a deposition to be taken where the witness was in jail provided an exclusive method; unsound, because those statutes merely cured a defect in another part of the law, ante, § 1411).

of justice, oftentimes as much so as the common writ of subpœna to compel the attendance of witnesses; for where a matter depends upon written evidence in the possession of another than the party in the cause who is interested in its production, it would be nugatory to enforce his personal attendance without the document by which the truth of the fact in issue can alone be proved." LAWRENCE, J., said "this was one of the greatest questions he had ever heard agitated in Westminster Hall, — one which most deeply affected the administration of justice both civil and criminal. He could not reconcile it to his mind to suppose that the innocence of a person accused might depend on the production of a certain document in the possession of another, who had no interest in withholding it, and yet that there should be no process in the country which could compel him to produce it in evidence."

1834, BAYLEY, B., in Summers v. Moseley, 2 Cr. & M. 477: "The origin of the subpœna 'duces tecum' does not distinctly appear. It has been said on the part of the defendant that it was not introduced or known in practice till the reign of Charles II, and it may be that in its present form the subpœna 'duces tecum' was not known or made use of until that period. But no doubt can be entertained that there must have been some process similar to the subpœna 'duces tecum' to compel the production of documents, not only before that time, but even before the statute of 5 Elizabeth. Prior to that statute, there must have been a power in the Crown (for it would have been utterly impossible to carry on the administration of justice without such power) to require the attendance in courts of justice of persons capable of giving evidence, and the production of documents material to the cause, though in the possession of a stranger. The process for that purpose might not be called a subpœna 'duces tecum,' but I may call it a subpœna to produce. The party called upon in pursuance of such a process, not as a witness, but simply to produce, would do so or not, and if he did not, I can entertain no doubt that it would have been open to the party for whom he was called to make an application to the Court in the ensuing term to punish him for his contempt in not producing the document in obedience to such subpœna."

So the process for documents will be implied wherever testimonial compulsion in general is predicated by a statute.[1]

§ 2200. [1] ENGLAND: 1908, R. v. Daye, 2 K. B. 333 (a sealed packet deposited with a banker is a subject for subpœna under a statutory term "produce documents"; this was the celebrated Lamoine diamond-formula fraud, and the packet was said to contain the pretended formula).

UNITED STATES: Fed. 1879, U. S. v. Tilden, 10 Ben. 566, 578 (under U. S. Rev. St. § 863, making a witness, when beyond the district of personal attendance, compellable to give a deposition, the witness is equally liable to produce documents on subpœna d. t. for the deposition; good opinion by Choate, J.); 1904, Dancel v. Goodyear S. M. Co., 128 Fed. 753, C. C. (U. S. v. Tilden followed); 1904, Crocker-Wheeler Co. v. Bullock, 134 Fed. 241, C. C. (following the rule of U. S. v. Tilden, on authority); 1916, Re Subpœnas Duces Tecum, D. C. E. D. Tenn., 248 Fed. 137 (no order is necessary for the issuance of a subpœna 'duces tecum'); Ala. 1920, Vaughn v. State, — Ala. App. —, 84 So. 879 (official stenographer's transcript of former testimony, paid for by defendant and retained by him; stenographer's notes not being available, the defendant's counsel was held compellable to deliver the transcript in court to the State's counsel for use); Ky. 1915, Equitable Life Assur. Soc. v. Hardin, 166 Ky. 51, 178 S. W. 1155 (whether an insured's beneficiary was entitled to participation in profits; the beneficiary being entitled to inspection of the insurer's books, which were kept in another State, the proper mode of securing inspection was considered); N. Y. 1861, Mitchell's Case, 12 Abb. Pr. 249, 262 (production of documents is obtainable from a party-opponent under a statute making him compellable like any other witness; good opinion by Daly, J.); P. I. 1918, Liebenow v. Philippine Veg. Oil Co., 39 P. I. 60, 68 (careful and sensible exposition by Street, J.; motion to order production upon conditions may be used instead of subpœna d. t.).

A statute may therefore create new forms of process: 1906, Washington Nat'l Bank v. Daily, 166 Ind. 631, 77 N. E. 53 (a statute empowering an assessor to obtain a writ of inspection of documents in possession of any person containing evidence of the unlawful omission of a third person from the taxable-property list is constitutional, the process being analogous to a subpœna 'duces tecum').

(2) The form of the subpœna, when the production of documents is desired, is varied by the insertion of a special clause adapted to the purpose, and requiring the witness to bring with him — 'duces tecum' — the desired document.[2] The ordinary clause 'ad testificandum' is, however, at the same time commonly preserved; and the question is thus raised whether the summoning party can require the production of a document without also putting the producer on the stand to speak as to his general knowledge of the case. It would seem that the two forms of testimony are separable, and that the summoning party may therefore elect to have the one without the other; and this is the generally accepted opinion,[3] — a result harmonizing with the solution of the analogous question (ante, § 1894) whether the calling of the witness merely to produce a document makes him the party's own so as to subject him to cross-examination by the opponent.

(3) The time and mode of service would ordinarily be regulated by the general principle applicable to an ordinary subpœna (ante, § 2199).[4] In particular, no subpœna would be required for documents already in court in the witness' control.[5] Statutes sometimes regulate the subject in full detail.[6]

(4) A peculiarity of the subpœna 'duces tecum' is that, in the nature of things it must specify, with as much precision as is fair and feasible, the

But see the virtually contrary holding on an analogous proceeding in the form of discovery from a third person, ante, § 1859 f.

[2] The command then is to appear "to testify all and singular those things which you or either of you know in a certain cause," and also "that you do diligently and carefully search for, examine, and inquire after and bring with you and produce" a specified document, "together with all copies, drafts, and vouchers relating to the said documents and letters, and all other documents and paper writings whatsoever that can or may afford any information or evidence in this cause; then and there to testify and show all and singular those things which you or either of you know, or the said documents, letters, or instruments in writing do import, of and concerning the said cause now depending" (Chitty's Practice of the Law, III, 829).

For the question whether a subpœna 'duces tecum' is a proper form of process for obtaining documents from a party-opponent, see post, § 2219.

[3] Eng. 1830, Davis v. Dale, 4 C. & P. 335; 1834, Summers v. Moseley, 2 Cr. & M. 477 (the witness had refused to produce unless he was also sworn for the party calling him; Bayley B.: "We are clearly of opinion that he has no right to require that a party bringing him into court for the mere purpose of producing a document should have him sworn in such a way as to make him a witness"); U. S. 1850, Martin v. Williams, 18 Ala. 190, 193; 1858, Hall v. Young, 37 N. H. 134, 142, semble; 1845, Aiken v. Martin, 11 Paige N. Y. 499, 502; 1918, Liebenow v. Phil. Veg. Oil Co., 39 P. I. 60 (cited supra, note 1); 1841, Sherman v. Barrett, McMullen, S. C., 147, 163; 1920, Duncan v. Carson, 127 Va. 306, 103 S. E. 665, 105 S. E. 62 (on subpœna 'duces tecum' to a party, the opponent may examine the books without making the producing party a witness, even though the same subpœna contain both the testifying and the producing clauses; provided however the books produced are admitted or otherwise evidenced to be the books called for; the proviso seems needless, for the production would of course ordinarily be an admission of identity). Contra: 1872, Murray v. Elston, 23 N. J. Eq. 212, 214, semble (holding that subpœna d. t. without a clause 'ad testificandum' is void).

But where the demand for the witness' oral testimony is made, not by the opponent, but by the witness himself, in order to prove his non-liability to produce the document, it is of course a proper one; 1858, Hall v. Young, supra, semble (for a peremptory order, subjecting to contempt proceedings, possession must be clearly shown, and for this purpose the witness should be sworn); 1845, Aiken v. Martin, supra (claim of privilege).

[4] 1835, Chitty, Practice of the Law, III, 829 ff.

[5] 1908, Kincaide v. Cavanaugh, 198 Mass. 34, 84 N. E. 307; 1898, Hunton v. Hertz & H. Co., 118 Mich. 475, 76 N. W. 1041; 1863, Boynton v. Boynton, 16 Abb. Pr. N. Y. 87.

[6] The citations post, § 2219, will serve here also.

particular documents desired; because the witness ought not to be required to bring what is not needed, and he cannot know what is needed unless he is informed beforehand.[7]

(5) It often happens, however, that the party desiring the evidence does not precisely know what documents exist in the hands of the witness or what existing documents contain relevant material; or that a document, if of a certain tenor, would be privileged from disclosure, on one or another ground (post, §§ 2210–2223). In such a situation, it is obviously not for the witness to withhold the documents upon his mere assertion that they are not relevant or that they are privileged. The question of relevancy is never one for the witness to concern himself with (post, § 2210); nor is the applicability of a privilege to be left to his decision. It is his duty to bring what the Court requires; and the Court can then to its own satisfaction determine by inspec-

[7] ENGLAND: 1866, Lee v. Angus, L. R. 2 Eq. 59 (a subpœna d. t., in a suit concerning a mortgage, to produce accounts relating to rents etc., "and all other books, accounts, letters, papers, and documents in your possession or power, in any wise relating to the affairs and concerns of the said plaintiffs, or either of them, or the said H. L., and all books, accounts, letters, papers, and documents received by you from H. E. S. as solicitor of M. C.," held too broad; Page-Wood, V. C.: "He must speak the truth within his knowledge; but he is not bound to make this burdensome search for evidence at his own expense").

UNITED STATES: Fed. 1876, U. S. v. Babcock, 3 Dill. 566, 570 ("The papers are required to be stated or specified only with that degree of certainty which is practicable considering all the circumstances of the case, so that the witness may be able to know what is wanted of him and to have the papers on the trial so that they can be used if the Court shall then determine that they are competent and relevant evidence"; the person summoned is bound to make reasonable search for the documents); 1882, U. S. v. Hunter, 15 Fed. 712 (rules prescribed as to the particularity of the notice); 1904, Dancel v. Goodyear S. M. Co., 128 Fed. 753, 762, C. C. (an application for "all books of account, minutes," etc., etc., of the G. S. M. Co., and a long list of other documents named generally, held too broad on the facts); 1906, Hale v. Henkel, 201 U. S. 43, 26 Sup. 370 (a call for all the correspondence, etc., between the defendant's corporation and six others, all correspondence since its date of organization between itself and thirteen others, etc., held to be unreasonably broad; McKenna, J., diss.); 1906, McAlister v. Henkel, ib. 90, 26 Sup. 385 (here the subpœna was held specific enough); 1906, U. S. v. American Tobacco Co., 146 Fed. 557, C. C. (a subpœna calling for the minute-books of a corporation for a period of three years and the copy-letter-books for a period of three and a half months, held not too broad); 1908, Consolidated Rendering Co. v. Vermont, 207 U. S. 541, 28 Sup. 178 (notice held not too broad); Minn. 1901, Carson v. Hawley, 82 Minn. 204, 84 N. W. 746 (demand for all books and papers of a business during three months, held insufficient); Mo. 1880, Ex parte Brown, 72 Mo. 83, 93 (there must be a "reasonably accurate description of the paper wanted," and a showing that it is material in a pending cause here, a call for all telegrams between [illegible] dozen persons within fifteen months p[illegible] held too broad); 1910, Ex parte G[illegible] Mo. —, 132 S. W. 364 (grand jury inquiry violations of the liquor law; subpœna d. t. to the telegraph operator at Baird ordering production of all messages filed with him bearing orders for delivery of intoxicating liquors to Baird, held too broad; this paralyzing of the grand jury's function is defended by much misplaced sentimental rhetoric); N. Y. 1914, In re Mohawk Overall Co., 210 N. Y. 474, 104 N. E. 924, 156 App. Div. 879 (burdensome scope of a subpœna d. t., considered); Pa. 1908, American Car & Foundry Co. v. Alexandria Water Co., 221 Pa. 529, 70 Atl. 867 ("An order to produce all papers concerning the matter in dispute is not sufficiently specific"; approving the text above); Vt. 1907, Re Consolidated Rendering Co., 80 Vt. 55, 66 Atl. 790 (an order under St. 1906, No. 75, p. 79, directing a corporation to produce before the grand jury certain described classes of documents, held proper and not a violation of the constitutional provision against unreasonable searches).

Furthermore, on an application for a subpœna d. t., production being contested on the ground of irrelevancy, the movant must show facts sufficient to enable the Court to determine whether the desired documents are material and relevant to the issues: 1907, U. S. v. Terminal R. Ass'n, C. C. E. D. Mo., 154 Fed. 268 (collecting the cases).

Compare the general doctrines of privilege for documents (post, §§ 2211, 2219), and discovery against a witness before trial (ante, §§ 1857, 1859).

tion whether the documents produced are irrelevant or privileged.[8] This does not deprive the witness of any rights of privacy, since the Court's determination is made by its own inspection, without submitting the documents to the opponent's view; and, unless such a mode of determination were employed, there could be no available means of preventing the constant evasion of duty by witnesses:

1808, ELLENBOROUGH, L. C. J., in Amey v. Long, 9 East 473, 485: "There are circumstances in respect of which the production of an instrument required in the terms of a subpœna, would not be enforced by the authority of the Court, — which is a proposition too clear to be doubted. And to be sure, though it will always be prudent and proper for a witness served with such a subpœna to be prepared to produce the specified papers and instruments at the trial, if it be at all likely that the judge will deem such productions fit to be there insisted upon; yet it is in every instance a question for the consideration of the judge at Nisi Prius whether, upon the principles of reason and equity, such production should be required by him, and of the Court afterwards, whether, having been there withheld, the party should be punished by attachment." Messrs. Park, Marryat, and Pell (arguing for the successful side); "As the obligation of a witness to answer by parol does not depend upon his own judgment, but on that of the Court, the same rule must prevail with respect to his production of documentary evidence. The witness is bound at all events to bring with him the papers which he has been subpœnaed to produce; and when it is in Court, he may then state any legal or reasonable excuse for withholding it, of which the Court will judge. In this respect there can be no distinction between parol and written evidence. Proof of either kind, if within the knowledge or possession of the witness, ought to be produced if legal; and of its legality the Court and not the witness must judge."

In this respect the rule differs from that which has been applied in Chancery practice to discovery of documents by a party-opponent (ante, § 1859*d*, post, § 2219); but the latter rule is anomalous and rests on a peculiar tradition.

[8] Accord: ENGLAND: 1835, Doe v. Kelly, 4 Dowl. Pr. 273.

UNITED STATES: Fed. 1807, Aaron Burr's Trial, Robertson's Rep., I, 182 (the facts are fully stated post, § 2371); 1882, U. S. v. Hunter, 15 Fed. 712 (if the witness has a doubt as to the relevancy of the document, he should submit it to the Court); 1890, Edison El. L. Co. v. U. S. El. L. Co., 44 Fed. 294, 45 id. 55, C. C. (the Court will not finally determine the materiality of the documents called for upon the refusal of the witness to produce, but will inspect and determine for itself); 1904, Dancel v. Goodyear S. M. Co., 128 Fed. 753, C. C. (on a deposition 'de bene' under U. S. Rev. St. § 863, a subpœna 'duces tecum' does not issue from the clerk as a matter of course, but the application "is addressed to the discretion of the Court," and "before compelling the production . . . it will sufficiently inquire into the matter to determine if the evidence appears to be material"); 1906, Dowagiac Mfg. Co. v. Lochren, 143 Fed. 211, C. C. A. (collecting the cases); 1906, Fairfield v. U. S., 146 Fed. 508, C. C. A. ("The duty of a witness to obey a subpœna is not conditioned by his own or by his counsel's opinion of the materiality of his testimony"); Miss. 1845, Chaplain v. Briscoe, 5 Sm. & M. 198, 207; Mo. 1921, State ex rel. Tune v. Falkenhainer, 288 Mo. 20, 231 S. W. 255 (D. a city employee sued M. and T. for libel in a letter of complaint to the city board; the judge issued a subpœna to the board for the letter; the board held bound to produce it, leaving the claim of privilege in defamation to be determined after production); Vt. 1907, Re Consolidated Rendering Co., 80 Vt. 55, 66 Atl. 790.

Here compare the general rules that irrelevancy is not a ground for a witness' claim of privilege (post, § 2210); that on hearing before a master or examiner the power to decide may require a resort to the Court (ante, § 2195); and that objections must be taken prior to such reference to the Court (ante, § 18).

The Court should of course provide that the irrelevant parts of a book or document be not seen by the opponent; 1824, Hawkins v. Howard, Ry. & Mo. 64.

When the document is lawfully producible, the producer may be required to read it aloud: 1862, People v. Dyckman, 24 How. Pr. 222, 226.

(6) The requirement to produce assumes that the document is within the control of the witness. One who is dumb cannot be in default for not testifying orally, and one who has no lawful control over a document cannot properly be liable to produce it. Whether the witness has such a control depends upon the facts of each case.[9]

(7) When the documents desired are those of a corporation, its officer who is their custodian is the proper person to serve with process and to hold liable for non-production.[10] It seems highly desirable that Courts should for this purpose recognize a form of subpœna ordering a court-official to go and

[9] ENGLAND: 1807, Amey v. Long, 1 Camp. 14, 9 East 473, 483 (subpœna d. t. directed to G. and L. or one of them; it was served on L. only, but G. owned and had the document; they were partners; Ellenborough, L. C. J.: "Although a paper should be in the legal custody of one man, yet if a subpœna d. t. is served on another who has the means to produce it, he is bound to do so"; yet no man is obliged "to sue and labor in order to obtain the possession of any instrument from another for the purpose of its production afterwards by himself, in obedience to the subpœna").

UNITED STATES: Fed. 1904, Dancel v. Goodyear S. M. Co., 128 Fed. 753, 762, C. C. (the Court may require preliminary proof of the witness' possession before issuing process); 1914, Munroe v. U. S., 1st C. C. A., 216 Fed. 107 (a U. S. banker in N. Y. was a member of a partnership; three partners resided in Paris, France; certain paid checks were in custody of the Paris partners; the U. S. banker was subpœnaed to produce those checks; without notifying his Paris partners of the subpœna, or requesting them to forward the documents, or making any other effort to obtain them, he appeared and testified that he had not the documents; he was found guilty of contempt; held error, on appeal; unsound; the Court purports to follow Amey v. Long, supra, but the radical and practical distinction is that where the third person is within the jurisdiction, it is simple enough to require the applicant to serve the subpœna on the third person who is actual possessor of the document; otherwise when the document is without the jurisdiction); Cal. C. C. P. § 2064, as amended by St. 1907, c. 395 (quoted post, § 2210); Mo. 1913, Shull v. Boyd, 251 Mo. 452, 158 S. W. 313 (the Court, not the witness, decides); Vt. 1907, Re Consolidated Rendering Co., 80 Vt. 55, 66 Atl. 790 (foreign corporation, already admitted to do business in the State, and subpœnaed d. t. before a grand jury; its removal of the books out of the State, in anticipation of the inquiry, held no excuse).

The following statute provides for a special situation: N. Mex. St. 1907, c. 84, p. 192, § 3 (in proceedings to take testimony for use in a court outside the Territory, "no witness shall be required to deliver up any book, paper, or writing to be annexed to the said deposition and taken out of the Territory").

[10] ENGLAND: 1834, R. v. Woodley, 1 Moo. & Rob. 390 (a person holding documents as attorney of the lord of a borough, and also as steward of the borough, held bound to produce in the latter character, in 'quo warranto' against the bailiff of the borough).

UNITED STATES: Fed. 1883, Wertheim v. Contin. R. & T. Co., 15 Fed. 716 (a corporation not a party is compellable like other persons to produce its books; the officers of a corporation are the custodians of its books for this purpose; here the president and secretary were compelled); 1906, Nelson v. U. S., 201 U. S. 92, 26 Sup. 358 (corporate officers having custody of documents of the corporation are the proper persons to produce); 1906, Hale v. Henkel, 201 U. S. 43, 26 Sup. 370 (the Court noticed a claim by a corporation-officer that he could not "collect the documents within the time allowed," and held that this merely would entitle him to demand further time); 1906, U. S. v. American Tobacco Co., 146 Fed. 557, C. C. (a secretary held not liable to produce certain documents in the exclusive custody of the president of the corporation); N. Y. 1825, Bank of Utica v. Hillard, 5 Cow. 153, 158 (Savage, C. J.: "The obligation of Colling [a bank-clerk] to produce the [bank-books] upon the 'duces tecum' depends on the question whether they were in his possession and under his control. He was the mere clerk of the plaintiffs, and in that character had no such property in or possession of the books as imposed the obligation to bring them"); C. P. A. 1920, § 414 (describing the persons proper to produce corporate books). The statutes cited post, § 2219, sometimes cover this point.

Of course a member of a partnership has a control over documents of the firm: 1906, U. S. v. Collins, 145 Fed. 709, D. C.

Whether under U. S. Rev. St. 1878, § 724, Code § 1361 (quoted ante, § 1859, n. 1), authorizing an order, on motion, to "parties" to produce, the officers of a corporation-party are subject to such a process is an interesting question: 1907, Cassatt v. Mitchell C. & C. Co., 81 C. C. A. 80, 150 Fed. 32, 38 (order denied). Compare the reverse question post, § 2219, note 9 (whether a subpœna d. t. is appropriate for a party).

fetch the corporation-documents, and forbidding the custodian to hinder, but permitting the custodian to attend voluntarily with the books if he so prefers. The reason is this: Under the privilege of self-crimination, the custodian (clerk, secretary) may refuse to produce if the books tend to criminate himself as well as the corporation (post, §§ 2259, 2264), which will sometimes be the case; yet the corporation itself may not have the privilege (post, § 2259), or the prosecution may be willing to give immunity (post, § 2281) to the corporation but not to its officer; hence, so long as the subpœna has to be directed to the custodian when the object is merely to get the corporation-books, that object is likely to be defeated. A form of process should therefore be sanctioned which will obtain the corporation-books without involving process against the custodian-agent of the corporation.

(8) Whether the documents may be impounded in the court's custody pending trial, or may merely be brought there temporarily for inspection, or may otherwise be disposed of, is a matter of some difference of judicial opinion.[11] The proper disposition, in any event, should lie in the discretion of the Court; it is an error of judicial inefficiency to doubt that the judicial power exists and can be exercised to direct whatever is reasonable under the particular circumstances.

(9) From the foregoing questions, arising out of the requirement of notice and demand by subpœna 'duces tecum,' are to be discriminated the witness'

[11] ENGLAND: 1810, Beckford v. Wildman, 16 Ves. Jr. 438 (L. C. Eldon said that title-deeds produced for inspection would not be taken into the court's custody in the interim, without a showing "that there is reason to believe that the deed will not be produced at the hearing").

CANADA: Dom. R. S. 1906, c. 145, Evid. Act, § 33 ("Whenever any instrument which has been forged or fraudulently altered is admitted in evidence, the court or the judge or person who admits the instrument may, at the request of any person against whom it is admitted in evidence, direct that the instrument shall be impounded and be kept in the custody of some officer of the court or other proper person for such period and subject to such conditions, as to the court, judge or person admitting the instrument seems meet"); B. C. Rev. St. 1911, c. 78, §§ 49, 51 (where a document is received in evidence, the court may direct its impounding); Ont. R. S. 1914, c. 73, § 53 ("Where a document is received in evidence, the Court . . . may direct that it be impounded," etc.).

UNITED STATES: Kan. 1921, State v. Smithmeyer, 110 Kan. 172, 202 Pac. 638 (documents produced by employees of a corporation, under a subpœna from the Attorney-General, issued under St. 1919, c. 316, § 1, authorizing him to make inquisition, were retained by the Attorney-General with a view to use as evidence on the trial of the corporation on the charge of violating the anti-monopoly laws; application being made before trial by the corporation for the return of the documents, the order to return was affirmed, on the ground that "one who procures or compels the production of papers cannot take the custody of those papers from the person producing them"; yet the opinion, assuming that the Attorney-General in this case stood as the opposing party, says nothing as to the Court's power to direct the impounding of the documents); N. J. 1874, Hilyard v. Harrison, 37 N. J. L. 170 (tax-warrants; the opponent's inspection at the court does not entitle him to take them away in his possession); N. Y. 1832, Stow v. Betts, 7 Wend. 536 (books of account; the party-owner may withdraw them after they have been left a reasonable time in the clerk's custody for taking transcripts); N. C. 1825, Carter v. Graves, 1 Dev. L. 74 (deed; the party-owner held entitled to return after deposit for use in evidence by the opponent); 1921, Burleson Mica Co. v. Southern Exp. Co., 182 N. C. 669, 109 S. E. 853 (non-delivery by bailee; on plaintiff's application for inspection of papers, an order requiring defendant to file them with the clerk "within 30 days prior to the next term of this court," held too indefinite as to time and place); R. I. 1880, Ely v. Mowry, 12 R. I. 570 (the owner is required merely to produce for inspection; an order to impound or to leave on deposit will not be made).

For the impounding of chattels, see post, § 2214.

exemption from mere attendance with documents (not from disclosure) sometimes granted on grounds of convenience (post, § 2205); and also the various privileges against disclosure of documents, in particular, those affecting title-deeds, securities, and the like (post, § 2211), trade-secrets (post, § 2212), a civil party-opponent's documents (post, § 2219), self-criminating documents (post, § 2264), documents communicated between attorney and client (post, § 2307), and official documents (post, § 2373).

§ 2201. (2) Indemnity for Expenses; (a) Tender in Advance. 1. Ever since the statute of Elizabeth (and before that time it does not appear what the practice was [1]), the indemnity to which the witness is entitled has been required, at least in civil causes, to be tendered to him by the party in advance, at the time of serving the subpœna; [2] in lack of this, the witness is not compellable to attend.

2. In criminal cases, this condition was never imposed upon the prosecution. But whether it was equally dispensed with in favor of the accused in criminal cases was never settled at common law. So far as early precedent was concerned, the statute of Elizabeth was passed more than a century before the accused obtained the right to compulsory process for his witnesses.[3] Yet before this became his right, and while it was being permitted as a favor, the early practice seems to have applied to him the rule for parties to civil causes.[4] In later times, the tradition became uncertain, and judicial opinion left the matter in doubt.[5] Finally, by statute in most jurisdictions, the wise

§ 2201. [1] Ante, § 2190.

[2] 1562, St. 5 Eliz. c. 9, § 12 (penalty provided against any person who "having not a lawful and reasonable let or impediment to the contrary," fails to appear to testify in a cause after process served upon him "and having tendered unto him or them, according to his or their countenance or calling, such reasonable sums of money for his or their costs and charges as having regard to the distance of the places is necessary to be allowed in that behalf").

No exception was recognized for a party suing 'in forma pauperis': 1828, Blackburn v. Hargreaves, 2 Lew. Cr. C. 259.

In Tennessee, North Carolina, and Georgia no such requirement exists for civil cases: infra, note 6.

[3] Ante, § 2190.

[4] 1684, Braddon's Trial, 9 How. St. Tr. 1127, 1167 (quoted post, § 2202).

[5] 1814, Phillipps, Evidence, I, 9–13 (recognizes no discrimination as to defendants); 1824, R. v. Cooke, 1 C. & P. 322 (defendant need not tender); 1850, Pell v. Daubeny, 5 Exch. 955, per Alderson, B. (tender not necessary in criminal cases generally); 1806, Smith's and Ogden's Trial, Lloyd's Rep. 34, 58, 89 (the Court of two judges was divided, and gave no reasons); 1825, Ex parte Chamberlain, 4 Cow. 49 (tender not necessary by defendant in felonies); 1901, Huckins v. State, 61 Nebr. 871, 86 N. W. 485 (tender not necessary by defendant); 1853, West v. State, 1 Wis. 209, 233 (defendant need not tender; treated as a deduction from the right to compulsory process, ante, § 2191).

A witness who is too poor to pay his expenses should be exonerated from a charge of contempt: Phillipps, Evidence, I, 13; 1836, People v. Davis, 15 Wend. 602, semble.

Distinguish the following: 1917, Greene v. Ballard, 174 Ky. 808, 192 S. W. 841 (the Constitutional right to compulsory process does not entitle an accused to obtain witnesses at the expense of the Commonwealth; the opinion attempts to bolster its legal theory by adding that "to hold otherwise would license persons charged with crime, under pretense of poverty, to summons hordes of witnesses at the expense of the Commonwealth"; this is a childish statement and cruelly false; if no better thinking can be done than this on the public policy of the measure, the less said about policy by this Court the better; in the present case the petition stated that the accused, charged with murder, and the witnesses, were "poor people without money to defray the expenses of attending his trial," that they lived as far as 80 miles away, and that their presence was 'indispensably necessary to make his defense," and that the trial Court had allowed the claim, which totalled $190; the issue here arose on mandamus to compel payment by the State step was taken of declaring both parties in criminal causes exempt from a tender in advance.[6] auditor; just so long as a State regards the payment of witness' fees as a partisan duty instead of the State's, just so long will the idea of lawsuits as partisan feuds be strengthened).

[6] In the following list are collected the statutes concerning tender of expenses generally, as involved in this and the ensuing section:

CANADA: Sask. Rev. St. 1920, c. 44, § 43 ("No person shall be obliged to attend or give evidence" in any proceeding "unless he is first tendered his legal fees for such attendance and necessary travel"). Yukon: Consol. Ord. 1914, c. 30, § 39 (no person is compellable to attend in court, etc., unless on tender of fees "for such attendance and necessary travel").

UNITED STATES: Federal: Rev. St. 1878, § 876, Code § 1371 (fees for travel both ways and one day's attendance must be tendered to a witness summoned for 'dedimus' deposition); Code § 6150 (same, for contested patent causes); St. 1898, c. 541, § 41, July 1, 30 Stat. L. 556, Code § 8823 (no person shall be required to attend as witness before a referee in bankruptcy unless his fees, etc., are "first paid or tendered him"); 1903, Re Boeshore, 125 Fed. 651 (mere failure to demand a fee not tendered is not a waiver of the necessity of tender); 1903, Re Kerber, 125 Fed. 653 (similar);

Alabama: Code 1907, § 3678 (on non-payment of fee on demand in any civil cause, witness need not "appear again as a witness in the same cause until his fees are paid");

Alaska: Comp. L. 1913, § 1506 (like Or. Laws 1920, § 869);

Arizona: Rev. St. 1913, Civ. C. § 1685 (no attachment for contempt in a civil suit, unless there has been a tender of lawful fees);

Arkansas: Dig. 1919, § 4162 (fees for travel and one day's attendance must be tendered); § 3110 (tender not necessary in criminal causes);

California: C. C. P. 1872, § 1987 (fees for travel both ways and one day's attendance, required); Pol. C. 1872, § 4070 (witnesses summoned by county board of supervisors are "not entitled to have their fees prepaid");

Columbia (Dist.): Code 1919, § 1059 (fees for travel both ways and one day's attendance must be tendered);

Connecticut: Gen. St. 1918, § 5703 (fees for travel one way and one day's attendance must be tendered);

Florida: Rev. G. S. 1919, § 2713 (mileage and one day's fee, and thereafter in advance); Rev. G. S. 1919, § 6167 (insolvent accused persons may obtain subpœnas for necessary witnesses at cost of State, but "not more than two witnesses to prove the same fact"); 1906, Pittman v. State, 51 Fla. 94, 41 So. 385 (Rev. St. 1892, §§ 2867, 2875; St. 1893, c. 4120; St. 1903, c. 5132; statutes construed, as to the necessity of tender of costs by the accused);

Georgia: Rev. C. 1910, § 5850 (fees in civil cases are not demandable before attendance); 1895, Roberts v. State, 94 Ga. 66, 21 S. E. 132 (statute for State payment, construed);

Hawaii: Rev. L. 1915, § 2555 (in a court of record, in a civil cause, attendance is not required unless "travelling fees" be paid or tendered);

Idaho: Comp. St. 1919, §§ 7983, 8043 (fees for travel both ways and one day's attendance must be tendered); § 3453 (witnesses before county commissioners are not entitled to prepayment of fees); § 8073 (on behalf of the State witnesses are compellable "without paying or tendering fees in advance"); 1906, Anderson v. Ferguson-Bach S. Co., 12 Ida. 418, 86 Pac. 41 (right to compensation considered);

Indiana: Burns' Ann. St. 1914, §§ 512, 513, 515 (compellable to attend in the same county without tender; out of the county, fees for travel and one day's attendance must be tendered, and then from day to day, one day's fee in advance); § 2109 (in criminal cases, no tender necessary);

Iowa: Code 1897, § 4662, Comp. Code § 7369 (fees demandable in advance for travel both ways and one day's attendance, and, at the beginning of each day after the first, that day's fees; except for parties); § 1298, Comp. Code § 710 (fees demandable in advance by the accused's witnesses, unless subpœna is issued on order of judge); 1900, State v. Keenan, 11 Ia. 286, 82 N. W. 792 (statute applied);

Kansas: Gen. St. 1915, §§ 7228-9 (fees for travel and one day's attendance are demandable, and one day's fee at the beginning of each day after the first); § 8082 (in criminal cases, no tender need be made, by either State or defendant); 1910, State v. Kaemmerling, 83 Kan. 387, 111 Pac. 441 (rule requiring tender not applied to a State action to enjoin a nuisance);

Kentucky: C. C. P. 1895, § 536 (fees must be tendered for travel and one day's attendance); C. Cr. P. § 151 (fees need not be tendered in criminal cases); Stats. 1915, § 1734 (in a civil case, no attendance is necessary, if residing more than twenty miles away, unless tendered travel fees in advance or ordered to come without tender); 1857, Thurman v. Virgin, 18 B. Monr. 785, 790 (under the statutes, tender is still necessary in civil suits for witnesses residing out of the county);

Louisiana: Rev. Civ. C. 1920, § 3943, C. Pr. 1870, § 134 (a witness who has attended and obtained a certificate and demanded the fee of the party is not compellable to attend in the same case at a subsequent term until the fee is paid);

Maine: Rev. St. 1916, c. 87, § 125 (no person is obliged to attend in civil cases as a witness unless on pre-payment of fees for travel and

The requirement of a tender (in cases where it is applicable) is a continuing one, i. e. when the time of attendance has expired which was covered for one day's attendance); c. 134, § 10 (a witness for the accused in a criminal case may require prepayment of fees); c. 136, § 16 (otherwise for a witness summoned for the State);

Massachusetts: Gen. L. 1920, c. 233, § 3 (fees for travel and one day's attendance must be tendered in civil cases and by defendant in criminal cases); c. 277, § 69 (witness summoned by Commonwealth is bound to attend without prepayment);
Michigan: Comp. L. 1915, § 12561 (fees for one day's attendance and travel both ways must be tendered); § 15729 (tender not necessary in criminal cases);
Minnesota: Gen. St. 1913, § 5774 (attendance is not compellable unless fees for travel both ways and one day's attendance are offered); § 5786 (in criminal cases, attendance is compellable for defendant without fees, and the attorney-general or county attorney may also compel it for State);
Mississippi: Code 1906, § 2200; Hem. § 1885 (a witness in a civil case unpaid at the end of each day is not obliged to attend further till paid, unless the party files an affidavit of inability to pay);
Missouri: Rev. St. 1919, § 3963 (in criminal cases, attendance is compellable without tender); § 5422 (not compellable to attend more than forty miles from residence, unless fees for travel both ways and one day's attendance are tendered);
Montana: Rev. C. 1921, § 10620 (fees for travel both ways and one day's attendance must be tendered); Pol. C. § 4944 (no attendance is compellable unless fees for travel both ways and one day's attendance are tendered, and thereafter each day's fees in advance);
Nebraska: Rev. St. 1921, § 8862 (fees for travel and one day's attendance are demandable in advance); § 8870 (after the first day, each day's fees are demandable in advance); § 10126 (accused shall have compulsory process for witnesses at the State's expense);
Nevada: Rev. L. 1912, §§ 2000, 2012, 5431 (fees for travel both ways and one day's attendance are demandable in civil cases in advance);
New Hampshire: Pub. St. 1891, c. 224, § 5 (fees for travel and one day's attendance are to be tendered); § 9 (on tender of double the local fees, a witness may be summoned for a Federal cause in another State); 1860, Whitney v. Pierce, 40 N. H. 114 (before an auditor, a party as witness is not entitled to a tender of charges);
New Jersey: Comp. St. 1910, Evidence § 12 (the witness shall pay a forfeit if he fails to appear after process served and charges "paid or tendered at the time of such service"); 1819, Ogden v. Gibbons, 2 South. 519, 533 (statute applied);
New Mexico: Annot. St. 1915, § 2160 (witness deposing for use in case pending outside the State; not compellable unless usual fees for attendance and mileage are paid);
New York: C. P. A. 1920, § 404 (fees for travel both ways and one day's attendance must be tendered); J. C. A. 1920, § 191 (justice courts; only attendance fee need be tendered); N. Y. City Mun. Ct. Code 1915, § 98 (no mileage need be tendered); 1906, Re Depue, 185 N. Y. 60, 77 N. E. 798 (statute applied);
North Carolina: Con. St. 1919, § 1273 (no fees are demandable in advance; but a witness in civil cases, except on behalf of the State or a municipal corporation, may leave after one day, unless tendered what is then due);
North Dakota: Comp. L. 1913, §§ 7877, 7881 (in civil cases, fees for travel and one day's attendance are demandable in advance, and after the first day, each day's fee at the beginning);
Ohio: Gen. Code Ann. 1921, §§ 11506, 11508 (not compellable to attend unless on payment of travel and one day's attendance fees);
Oklahoma: Comp. St. 1921, § 595 (civil cases; fees for travel both ways and one day's attendance are demandable in advance); § 604 (each day's fees after the first are demandable at its commencement);
Oregon: Laws 1920, § 815 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1987); § 818 (double fees demandable for attendance out of the county and more than 100 miles, compellable only on court order); § 869 (fees may be demanded at the close of each day for attendance next day);
Philippine Islands: C. C. P. 1901, § 406 (need not attend out of the province unless place of trial is less than 30 miles from place of residence); Act 1130, § 1 (civilian witnesses before general court-martial or naval court; fees for travel both ways and attendance must be tendered);
Porto Rico: Rev. St. & C. 1911, § 1480 (travel both ways and one day's attendance);
Rhode Island: Gen. L. 1909, c. 292, §§ 8, 9 (fees for travel to court and one day's attendance must be tendered, except for summons on behalf of the State);
South Carolina: C. Cr. P. 1922, § 943 ((accused shall have compulsory process for obtaining witnesses in his favor; nothing said about a tender);
South Dakota: Rev. C. 1919, §§ 2738, 2748 (like N. D. Comp. L. §§ 7877, 7881); § 5308 (fees of "material witnesses on the part of the defendant shall be paid by the county, unless otherwise ordered by the Court");
Tennessee: Shannon's Code 1916, § 5608 (every witness subpœnaed shall appear); 1836, Smith v. Barger, 9 Yerg. 323 (by construction of the statute, no tender is necessary in civil cases);

by the tender, and the witness is still needed, a new tender must be made in advance, from day to day, of his cost of maintenance or daily fee.[7] On the other hand, the requirement of a tender ceases when the necessity for it ceases, for example, when the witness is already in court for another purpose.[8] Moreover, a voluntary attendance without a demand of expenses at the time of service is a final waiver of the requirement, and the witness cannot insist upon it at the moment of being called to the stand.[9]

3. The truth is that the whole doctrine of requiring a tender in advance is an unwholesome one, — a mere relic of the period when the State did not even pay the salaries of its judges but expected the parties to bear all the expense of the State's doing justice. The relic persists because there is no organized interest to demand the abolition of the anachronism.

Its defect is, in the first place, that it tends to create the false impression (ante, § 2192) that the witness' duty runs to the parties and not to the community, and that he is rendering his services for money to the party that 1865, Carren v. Breed, 2 Coldw. 465, 467 (same);

Texas: Rev. C. Cr. P. 1911, § 303 (tender of fees is not necessary where a magistrate issues an attachment); Rev. Civ. St. 1911, § 3643 (witness shall not be attached for contempt unless it appears that his "lawful fees have been paid or tendered," i.e. attendance and travel both ways);
Utah: Comp. L. 1917, § 7129 (civil cases; fees for travel both ways and one day's attendance must be tendered); § 2549 (similar; and each day's fee must be tendered in advance);
Vermont: Gen. L. 1917, § 1905 (fees for travel and one day's attendance must be tendered); § 2555 (criminal cases); § 2556 (when accused is poor, Court may order summons of witnesses at State's expense); § 2607 (insanity); 1907, Re Consolidated Rendering Co., 80 Vt. 55, 66 Atl. 790 (in a grand jury inquiry, the State need not tender the fees and expenses of producing documents to a witness, here a corporation; in a criminal case, "a witness has no right to refuse to attend because his fees are not tendered");
Virginia: Code 1919, § 6220 (fees for one day's attendance and mileage and tolls are demandable, a reasonable time before attendance); § 4969 (in criminal cases, attendance is obligatory without payment or tender);
Washington: Const. Art. I, § 22 (accused need not tender fees; quoted ante, § 2191); R. & B. Code 1909, § 1215 (not compellable in civil action unless fees for travel both ways and one day's attendance are tendered in advance, on demand); § 1900 (justice's court; similar, but reading "mileage and one day's attendance"); § 2148, as amended by St. 1915, Mar. 16, c. 83 (witnesses for either State or defendant in criminal cases are compellable to attend "without their fees being first paid or tendered");
West Virginia: Code 1914, c. 130, § 27 (one day's attendance and mileage and tolls must be paid, if required, a reasonable time beforehand); c. 162, § 1 (attendance obligatory in criminal cases without payment or tender);
Wisconsin: 1919, § 4057 (attendance not obligatory in civil action, except on behalf of the State, unless fees for one day's attendance and travel both ways are tendered); § 4058 (no tender necessary for witness summoned for the State in any civil action, or in any criminal action for either party);
Wyoming: Comp. St. 1920, §§ 5817, 7511 (substantially like Oh. Gen. Code § 11508).

[7] 1860, Bliss v. Brainard, 42 N. H. 255 (if notice and demand are made by the witness); 1838, Mattocks v. Wheaton, 10 Vt. 493, 495. This is often declared in the statutes cited supra.

[8] 1828, Blackburn v. Hargreaves, 2 Lew. Cr. C. 259 (witness also summoned for the opponent).

[9] 1894, Rozek v. Redzinski, 87 Wis. 525, 529, 58 N. W. 262 (the attendance is a waiver of payment in advance). Contra: 1684, Braddon's Trial, 9 How. St. Tr. 1127, 1167 (cited post, § 2202); 1768, Blackstone, Commentaries, III, 369 ("no witness, unless his reasonable expenses be tendered to him, is bound to appear to give evidence till such charges are actually paid him," except he resides and is called within the "bills of mortality"). It was even ruled that a tender at the trial could not cure the lack of a prior tender: 1748, Bowles v. Johnson, 1 W. Bl. 16, semble.

The witness may waive the tender of the entire amount by accepting less: 1639, Goodwin v. West, Cro. Car. 522, 540.

A voluntary attendance without subpœna or demand of expenses does not entitle the fees to be taxed afterwards against the other party: 1909, Atherton v. Atlantic C. L. R. Co., 82 N. C. 474, 64 S. E. 411.

Compare the Federal cases supra, note 6.

desires them. It tends to intensify the unwholesome partisan spirit of witnesses and to put them in the position of paid retainers. It lowers the moral level of litigation.

Its fault is, furthermore, that it places an unequal burden upon litigants, according as they are more or less able in advance to furnish the money for witness fees. A poor man in a criminal cause is entitled, without advances, to the testimony of those who can vindicate him, and he is equally entitled to it in a civil cause to defend him from injustice or to aid the enforcement of his right; any distinction in this respect between civil and criminal causes is a false one. Besides this, the fact that the party himself must make the tender when serving the subpœna puts even a well-to-do party in the power of a selfish witness, who resents being summoned even by a friend to sacrifice his business hours for attendance in a court-room.

Moreover, the question is not whether the parties in civil causes should ultimately bear the expenses of their litigation, and whether litigation should be absolutely free; that is a different problem; here we ask only whether payment in advance is necessary; there are other ways of securing the parties' liability for costs. Nor is it the question whether parties shall be licensed to cause inconvenience to their neighbors by summoning promiscuously a horde of unnecessary witnesses, without risk or hindrance; that abuse can be guarded against by penalties for parties who are found by the Court to have summoned witnesses with wanton superfluity; and in many jurisdictions such measures are provided. Nor is it a question whether the burden of advancing the expenses shall be thrown by the party upon the witness himself; the State should bear that burden. Moreover, the witness' actual inability to advance his own expenses is a sufficient excuse, in contempt proceedings, for his non-attendance.[10]

The real question is simply whether parties who can ill afford the expense shall be put at a relative disadvantage to their opponents who by the mere possession of money are enabled to prepare more freely and effectually for the proof of their cause; and in this aspect the requirement of tender is a plain injustice. To-day it is a harsh fact that the requirement amounts to a needless denial of justice in many cases. The State should by its agents serve the subpœna and tender the witness' expenses. The rule requiring tender by the party should be abolished, as an anomaly in the law and a detriment to justice, surviving by mere force of tradition.[11]

§ 2202. Same: (b) Amount of Tender. The amount of the expenses required by the statute of Elizabeth to be tendered was to be merely

[10] Supra, note 5.

[11] It may be added that the constitutional guaranty that property and (in a few constitutions) services shall not be taken by the State without due compensation does not create any exceptions to the recognized duty of a citizen to furnish, without tender of expenses, such testimony as he is capable of furnishing: 1907, Re Consolidated Rendering Co., 80 Vt. 55, 66 Atl. 790 (applied to a subpœna d. t. to a corporation to produce documents; West v. State, Wis., approved); 1853, West v. State, 1 Wis. 209, 233 (quoted ante, § 2192); 1856, Israel v. State, 8 Ind. 467; 1877, Buchman v. State, 59 Wis. 1, 14 (but distinguishing the case of an expert, post, § 2203).

"reasonable";[1] and the judges of England set their faces, from the beginning, against any attempt to deduce fixed rules, by nice calculations, for applying this principle:[2]

1684, Braddon's Trial, 9 How. St. 1127, 1167. Witness for defendant: "My lord, I shall not give any evidence till I have my charges." L.C. J. JEFFERIES: "Braddon, if you will have your witnesses swear, you must pay them their charges." Defendant: "My lord, I am ready to pay it, I never refused; but what shall I give him?" L. C. J.: "Nay, I am not to make bargains between you; agree as you can."

It was plain, however, that the charge should include three general items, namely, the cost of coming to court, the cost of returning home, and the cost of sojourning at the place of trial during the time required for attendance. Within these items, no further detailed rates or rules were promulgated; except that, under the statute, the reckoning of all three would vary according to the witness' "countenance or calling," — a distinction proper enough where the separation of ranks of life was so clear and fixed.[3]

But in the United States this policy has been abandoned, — partly because the theory of social democracy could hardly abide a legal discrimination based on social distinctions; but partly also, it may be presumed, because a lack of fixity in charges tends not only to create uncertainty and dispute as to the witness' obligation, but also to induce undue exactions by witnesses and undue pecuniary payments by parties under cover of the required expenses. By statute, therefore, the rates to be paid for attendance and for travel are now generally prescribed. What has thus been lost in depriving witnesses occasionally of adequate compensation for expenses of maintenance has probably been more than made up by the removal of the greater disadvantages above mentioned. The three general items, however, of travel to and fro and maintenance at the place of trial are almost universally preserved in these statutes.[4]

That the ordinary witness should be paid more than the nominal dollar, i. e. should be fully indemnified for sacrificing his day's livelihood in order to

§ 2202. [1] Ante, § 2201, note 2.

[2] 1741, Chapman v. Pointon, 2 Stra. 1122 ("they would not enter into any nice calculations of the expense, but confined their inquiry to the question whether the non-attendance was through obstinacy or not"). The various early English statutes extending the process of subpœna, collected in Phillipps on Evidence, I, 9–13, exhibit this same disinclination to fix the rate of charges.

[3] 1736, Wakefield's Case, Lee cas. t. Hardwicke 313 ("You must not only have an affidavit of tendering the shilling, but likewise of tender of reasonable charges"); 1741, Ryde v. Fletcher, 13 East 16, note (measure of reasonable travelling expenses, discussed); 1768, Blackstone, Commentaries, III, 369 (quoted ante, § 2201, note 9; the "bills of mortality" denoted certain boundaries in the city of London, and apparently within these limits a shilling, or nominal sum, for travel was all that was required); 1788, Fuller v. Prentice, 1 H. Bl. 49 ("the whole of which necessary expenses, as well of their going to the place of trial, as of their return from it, and also during their necessary stay there, ought to be tendered to them at the time of serving the subpœna"); 1815, Horne v. Smith, 6 Taunt. 9 (the tender must cover "sufficient for his subsistence during his probable stay there"); 1840, Newton v. Harland, 9 Dowl. Pr. 16 (expenses of return are to be included).

[4] The statutes cited ante, § 2201, and others associated with them in the statute-books, show these details.

For the witness' action against the party to recover his expenses, see the following cases: Eng. 1850, Peil v. Daubeny, 5 Exch. 955; U. S. 1860, Bliss v. Brainard, 42 N. H. 255.

perform his testimonial duty, is a plausible assertion. The argument against it, that the total cost of reimbursing highly paid citizens would be prohibitive, gives no real answer; for the State is bound to supply the necessities of justice however expensive. The true answer is that the testimonial duty, like other civic duties, is to be performed without pay; the sacrifice being an inherent burden of citizenship. Neither for military service nor for public office can the citizen claim that he shall be paid on a scale which will bear any equable proportion to the loss of his livelihood's income. Any other principle would be worthy only of a purely mercenary community. If the sacrifice made is a real one, the dignity of the service rendered should ennoble it. The sense of civic duty done must be the consolation.

§ 2203. Same: Expert's Fees. May an additional, but reasonable, charge, proportionate to the value of time spent and skill exercised, be demanded, as a condition precedent to attendance, by an expert witness, — that is (ante, §§ 560, 1923), by one who is called to testify, not merely to the facts of his simple observation by eye and ear, but to an opinion drawing from the facts such inferences as are receivable only from persons specially qualified by experience or study? This question, it is to be noted, is not simply whether such witnesses should ultimately be paid larger compensation for their attendance; but whether, as a matter of right and privilege, they are not liable to compulsory process unless such compensation is tendered beforehand. The regulation of the amount of charges is a large question; but the specific question whether the expert witness has any greater privilege than the ordinary witness may be determined independently of the policy of the other measure.

At first sight, it might be supposed that the exaction of the valuable special services of an expert, without other than the ordinary witness' pittance, was a hardship which ought not to be imposed:

1843, MAULE, J., in Webb v. Page, 1 C. & K. 23: "There is a distinction between the case of a man who sees a fact and is called to prove it in a court of justice, and that of a man who is selected by a party to give his opinion on a matter with which he is peculiarly conversant from the nature of his employment in life. The former is bound as a matter of public duty to speak to a fact which happens to have fallen within his knowledge; without such testimony the course of justice must be stopped. The latter is under no such obligation."

1877, WORDEN, J., in Buchman v. State, 59 Ind. 1, 13: "The position of a medical witness testifying as an expert is much more like that of a lawyer than that of an ordinary witness testifying to facts. The purpose of his service is not to prove facts in the cause, but to aid the Court or jury in arriving at a proper conclusion from acts otherwise proved. . . . If physicians and surgeons can be compelled to render professional services by giving their opinions on the trial of criminal causes without compensation, then an eminent physician or surgeon may be compelled to go to any part of the State at any and all times to render such service, without other compensation than such as he may recover as ordinary witness-fees."

But this argument is specious only. The grounds upon which it may be concluded that no different privilege should be established for expert witnesses than for others, may be summarized as follows: (1) The expert is not asked to render professional services as a physician or chemist or engineer; he is asked merely, as other witnesses are, to testify what he knows or believes. (2) The hardship upon the professional man who loses his day's fees of fifty or one hundred or more dollars is no greater, relatively, than upon the storekeeper or the mechanic who loses his day's earnings of two dollars or ten dollars; each loses his all for the day; moreover, though the recoupment of the witness-fee of one or two dollars is relatively greater for the mechanic, yet his risk of losing continued employment by enforced absence is greater than for the professional man, and more than equalizes the hardship to him. (3) It is only by accident, and not by premeditation or deliberate resolve with reference to the litigation, that either has become desirable as a source of evidence; neither the expert in blood-stains nor the bystander at a murder has expressly put himself in the way of qualifying as a witness, so that no claim based on a special dedication of services for the case can be predicated of one rather than of the other. And the main reason why some plausibility has been given to the claim for extra fees is that in some instances the expert has in fact not become desirable by accident, but has made himself the hired partisan of the party summoning him (ante, § 563). (4) The practical difficulty of discriminating between various kinds of experts and their earnings, and between that testimony which they give as such and that which they give as ordinary observers, would be serious, and would introduce confusion and quibbling into the law. (5) Finally, so far as concerns the policy of doing whatever should attract and not deter desirable witnesses, it would seem that no special favor need be shown to expert witnesses. No one will ever refrain from entering a professional calling because of the fear of having to spend his time gratuitously at trials; and yet an ordinary person is often deterred from observing (or disclosing his observation) of a street accident or the like, because of the apprehension of being summoned as a witness; so that the latter sort, if either, should be the one to be encouraged by special compensation.

These reasons, in one or another form, have been expounded in the following judicial utterances:

1831, TINDAL, C. J., in Lonergan v. Assurance Co., 1 Bing. 729, 731: "There is no reason for assuming that the time of medical men and attorneys is more valuable than that of others whose livelihood depends on their own exertions." PARK, J.: "Time to a poor man is of as much importance as to an attorney."

1875, MANNING, J., in Ex parte Dement, 53 Ala. 389, 393: "It is not intimated by any of them [the precedents] that a physician, when testifying, is to be considered as exercising his skill and learning in the healing art, which is his high vocation; or that a counsellor-at-law, in the same situation, is exerting his talents and acquirements in professionally investigating and upholding the rights of a client. If this were so, each one should be paid for his testimony as a witness, as he is paid by clients or patients, according to the importance of the case and his own established reputation for ability and skill. But in truth he is not really employed or retained by any person; and the evidence he is required to give should not be given with the intent to take the part of either contestant in the suit, but with a strict regard to the truth, in order to aid the Court to pronounce a correct judgment. Perhaps the attitude of one testifying as an expert, of a matter in respect to which he is made conversant or skilled by his ordinary employment, is not so different as is supposed from that of another who testifies to acts or things done by or between the parties to a cause. It generally happens that, after all the direct facts of a transaction are brought before a Court, a knowledge of other facts, not part of the dealing or affair between the litigants, is necessary to a proper understanding and decision thereupon. For instance, [in proving the value of a commodity sold or the foreign law applicable or the usage of trade in interpretation,] . . . in all these instances, persons who may be wholly unacquainted with the parties to a cause, and know nothing of the transactions between them, may be required to come from their offices and the care of their own important affairs into court to testify for the benefit of strangers, in regard to matters in which they have themselves become conversant only by attending to their own business. And why are they required to do so? Because they know things important to the right determination of a controversy pending. . . . For in fact they are all witnesses at last. And the same principle which justifies the bringing of the mechanic from his workshop, the merchant from his storehouses, the broker from 'change, or the lawyer from his engagements, to testify in regard to some matter which he has learned in the exercise of his art or profession, authorizes the summoning of a physician, or surgeon, or skilled apothecary, to testify of a like matter, when relevant to a cause pending for determination in a judicial tribunal. . . . [He] would be deposing only to things which he had learned in the course of his occupation or profession, or of the preparation for it, and the disclosure of which to the Court would conduce to a correct understanding of a cause before it. His testimony would concern the administration of justice; and of him, as of other witnesses, it could be justly 'claimed by the public as a tax paid by him to that system of laws which protect his rights as well as others'.' . . . It is therefore of vital public interest that the tribunals which pronounce these judgments shall have power to coerce the production of any relevant evidence, existing within the sphere of their jurisdiction, requisite to prevent them from falling into error."

1893, BISSELL, J., in Board v. Lee, 3 Colo. App. 177, 180, 32 Pac. 841: "It is apparently nothing but a question of relative value; and it frequently happens that the loss of time is a less serious one to the professional witness than to the person engaged in the more active business walks of life."

1897, MAGRUDER, J., in Dixon v. People, 168 Ill. 179, 48 N. E. 108: "The grounds upon which the right to such extra compensation on the part of expert witnesses has been sustained have generally been three in number: [1] The first ground is that the time of the expert witness is more valuable than the time of ordinary men, and that, by attendance at court to give his testimony, such a witness meets with a loss of time. . . . Loss of time, as a ground for claiming extra compensation for services as a witness, applies as well to all ordinary witnesses as to expert witnesses. It is conceded that when any witness, whether he is an expert witness or not, is acquainted with any facts which bear upon the matter in controversy in a litigation, he is obliged to testify; and a distinction is drawn between the testimony of an expert witness who is acquainted with the facts about which he testifies, and an expert witness who is called upon to give his opinion, in reply to a hypothetical question, without any knowledge of facts. Manifestly, the witness who goes to court and testifies as to the facts of which he knows is subjected to a loss of his time as much as a witness who goes there to testify as an expert upon a mere matter of opinion. [2] The second ground upon which the claim for such extra compensation is based is that the skill and accumulated knowledge of the expert are his property, and that a man's property should not be taken without just compensation. . . . There is no infringement here of a property right. It may be conceded that in a certain sense the knowledge of the physician, acquired by special study, is property; but the question here is, not so much whether certain knowledge is property, as whether the requirement that he shall answer a hypothetical question is a taking of his property. Where he is required to make an application of his knowledge to a particular case, so as to secure a particular result, — such as, for instance, the curing of a disease or the healing of a wound, — then he would undoubtedly be entitled to compensation. A physician or surgeon cannot be punished for a contempt for refusing to make a 'post mortem' examination unless paid therefor; nor can he be required to prepare himself in advance for testifying in court, by making an examination, or performing an operation, or resorting to a certain amount of study, without being paid therefor. But when he is required to answer a hypothetical question, which involves a special knowledge peculiar to his calling, he is merely required to do what every good citizen is required to do in behalf of public peace and public order. . . . [3] If the precedent is once established that expert witnesses must be paid a reasonable compensation for their testimony, then it will not be long before such testimony will be offered to the highest bidder. The temptation will be to give opinions in favor of that party to the suit who will pay the highest price. The testimony of expert witnesses will thus become partisan and onesided. The theory upon which such witnesses are required to testify in cases like this is that they are 'amici curiæ,' and that, testifying under the sanction of an oath, they do so, not with intent to take the part of either contestant in the suit, but with a view to arriving at the truth of the matter, and for the purpose of aiding the Court to pronounce a correct judgment. . . . Moreover, if a physician is to be allowed extra compensation as an expert witness, then men pursuing other occupations which require special experience will have the same right to demand extra fees. A banker will claim that he has earned extra compensation, a merchant will make the same claim, and so with men engaged in other branches of business. It will be easy to say in such cases that the testimony called for is the result of special knowledge and acquired skill, and therefore should be paid for. Almost every lawsuit involves testimony which is in the nature of opinion, in addition to testimony which speaks of the mere facts within the knowledge of the witness. For instance, A sells B a certain quantity of wheat, and delivers the same, and sues for the price of the wheat. One witness testifies as to the contract, which he heard the parties make. Another testifies to the delivery of the wheat, which he saw delivered. These witnesses testify to actual facts heard and seen. But still another witness, who may know nothing about the facts, may yet be required to state the value of the wheat at the time of the contract, or at the time of the delivery; and he may be required to testify from his knowledge of the market prices of wheat, as given in the market quotations. Such a witness, however, as to the value, and as to market prices, is not regarded as an expert witness who is entitled to extra compensation. . . . [4] It can make no difference whether the suit in which the witness is called upon to testify is a suit between private parties, or is a suit between the State and an alleged criminal. In either case the object is to promote public justice, and to aid the due administration of justice. It is just as important to the peace and good order of society that private controversies should be settled upon correct proofs, and in accordance with truthful testimony, as that criminals who violate the laws of the State should be punished. It is the duty of the ordinary witness and of the expert witness to testify as to facts within his knowledge which bear upon the decision of controversies in the courts. Such duty devolves upon him as a citizen; and in view of the protection which he receives from the laws of the country, in the matter of his personal liberty, and in the matter of the protection of his property, this duty devolves as much upon a physician who is required to testify as an expert witness in answer to hypothetical questions as it does upon the ordinary witness testifying to facts within his knowledge."

It has therefore been generally held that an expert witness is not entitled to demand additional compensation, other than the ordinary witness-fees, before attending to testify on the stand.[1]

§ 2203. [1] In the following list are included the few cases which do concede such a privilege, as well as cases sometimes cited upon this point but really not involving it:

ENGLAND: 1831, Lonergan v. Assur. Co., 7 Bing. 729 (rule allowing the taxation of special compensation to medical men and attorneys, acknowledged, but disapproved;

But from this result certain other questions are to be distinguished:

(a) Special services other than attendance to give testimony on a trial are not within the duty of any witness; hence, a professional man is entitled to demand special compensation for such services as a chemical analysis, a quoted supra); 1831, Collins v. Godefroy, 1 B. & Ad. 950, 956 (plaintiff, "a professional man," not allowed to recover special fees in assumpsit, because he was under "a duty imposed by law to give evidence"; the practice of taxing such costs notwithstanding); 1843, Webb v. Page, 1 C. & K. 23, Maule, J. (witness to value of cabinet-work, not bound to testify without pay for loss of time; quoted supra).

CANADA: 1905, Butler v. Toronto Mutoscope Co., 11 Ont. L. R. 12 (medico-electric experts, called to give an opinion as to the capability of a medicine to cause an injury, held not privileged to require extra fees before testifying).

UNITED STATES: Fed. 1854, Re Roelker, 1 Sprague 276 (an expert is not compellable to testify to professional opinion without extra compensation; here applied to an interpreter of German); 1881, Parker, J., U. S. v. Howe, U. S. Dist. Ct. W. D. Ark., 12 Cent. L. J. 192 (expert may demand extra compensation for professional opinion); Ala. 1875, Ex parte Dement, 53 Ala. 389 (no extra compensation demandable as a condition by any professional person); Ark. 1895, Flinn v. Prairie Co., 60 Ark. 204, 207, 29 S. W. 459 (every citizen is bound to testify without requiring extra compensation; here applied to a physician); Colo. 1893, Board v. Lee, 3 Colo. App. 177, 179, 32 Pac. 841 (experts must testify to professional opinion without extra compensation); Ida. 1898, Fairchild v. Ada Co., 6 Ida. 340, 55 Pac. 654, semble (extra fees for medical opinion at an inquest, not demandable; otherwise for an autopsy); D. C. 1918, Bradley v. Davidson, 47 D. C. App. 266, 285 (real estate broker; rule of Dixon v. People, Ill., approved); Ill. 1884, Wright v. People, 112 Ill. 540 (a physician testified to the mental condition of a person examined by him, but refused to answer a hypothetical question without an extra fee; held not privileged, because pertinent to the preceding matters); 1897, Dixon v. People, 168 Ill. 179, 48 N. E. 108 (physician summoned as an expert; no greater fee than the ordinary one is demandable, in either civil or criminal cases; quoted supra); 1899, North Chicago S. R. Co. v. Zeiger, 182 Ill. 9, 54 N. E. 1006 (Dixon case approved); 1915, O'Day v. Crabb, 269 Ill. 123, 109 N. E. 724 (People v. Dixon affirmed); Ind. 1856, Israel v. State, 8 Ind. 467 (under a constitutional provision that "no man's particular services shall be demanded without just compensation," the services of witnesses in criminal cases may still be required); 1877, Buchman v. State, 59 Ind. 1, 14 (physicians and surgeons need not testify as to professional opinions without extra compensation, under the above clause; preceding case distinguished; quoted supra); Burns' Ann. St. 1914, § 528 ("A witness who is an expert in any art, science, trade, profession, or mystery, may be compelled to appear and testify to an opinion, as such expert, in relation to any matter, whenever such opinion is material evidence, relevant to an issue on trial," without payment of other than usual fees, the same as he can be compelled to "testify to his knowledge of facts relevant to the same issue"); Mass. 1896, Barrus v. Phaneuf, 166 Mass. 123, 44 N. E. 139 (action for expert's fees promised; the Court 'obiter' remarked that it would be "slow to admit that the Court would be without power to require the attendance of a professional or skilled witness upon a summons duly served and with payment of the statutory fees," merely to give testimony of opinion); Mich. St. 1905, No. 175, Comp. L. 1915, § 12557 (forbids the payment of special fees even by the parties; cited more fully ante, § 563; Minn. 1883, LeMere v. McHale, 30 Minn. 410, 15 N. W. 682, semble (accepts the distinction of Webb v. Page, Eng.; here applied to physicians); 1887, State v. Teipner, 36 Minn. 535, 32 N. W. 678 (expert compellable to testify to a professional opinion without extra compensation; applied here to a physician); N. Y. 1872, People v. Montgomery, 13 Abb. Pr. N. S. 207, 238 (physician may not be required to examine an accused as to sanity and to listen to testimony, so as to form an opinion, without extra compensation; but, semble, he may be required to attend and "give proper impromptu answers"); Mont. Rev. C. 1921, § 4947 ("an expert is a witness, and receives the same compensation as a witness"); Ore. 1886, Daly v. Multnomah Co., 14 Or. 20, 12 Pac. 11 (services as an ordinary witness are not within a constitutional provision similar to that of Indiana; as to experts, no decision); Pa. 1846, Allegheny Co. v. Watt, 3 Pa. St. 462, 464 (attendance as an expert witness may not be conditional on extra compensation); 1856, Northampton Co. v. Innes, 26 Pa. 156 (preceding case approved); 1889, Com. v. Higgins, 5 Kulp 269 (physician not privileged to demand special compensation for a professional opinion on the stand); Tex. 1879, Summers v. State, 5 Tex. App. 365, 377 (expert must testify to a professional opinion without extra compensation); Wis. 1909, Philler v. Waukesha Co., 139 Wis. 211, 120 N. W. 829 (expert must testify without extra compensation).

The Scotch law appears to justify the privilege of an extra fee: 1903, Turnbull v. North British R. Co., 5 Ct. Sess. Cas. 5th ser. 944.

'post mortem' autopsy, or any work necessary to qualify expressly to furnish testimony.[2]

(b) The rate of charge which may be made for a professional man, not as a privilege or condition precedent, but as the measure of the fee due him after testifying — i. e. the ordinary question of the amount of costs taxable to the party liable or claimable by the witness — depends usually upon the statutes prescribing the rate of compensation for witnesses. In England, by the original statute of Elizabeth and its successors (ante, § 2202) no attempt was made to fix the rates; the charges were to be "reasonable"; and under these statutes it came to be accepted (although the judges differed somewhat in their understanding of the practice) that no allowance should be made for loss of time to any witness, expert or lay, foreign or domestic.[3] To this rule, a little later, an exception was conceded for medical men and attorneys.[4] But in the United States, the practice of fixing definite rates for witnesses' compensation was early introduced by statute; and in some of these statutes a difference is now authorized in favor of expert witnesses.[5]

[2] Fed. 1898, Northern P. R. Co. v. Keyes, — C. C. A. —, 91 Fed. 47 (witness not compellable to prepare voluminous and expensive tabulations, without a tender of expense); 1908, Consolidated Rendering Co. v. Vermont, 207 U. S. 541, 28 Sup. 178 (extra expense of collecting documents of a foreign corporation; semble, not decided); Ala. 1875, Ex parte Dement, 53 Ala. 389, 397 (question reserved, as to compensation for work done to qualify as a witness); Ark. 1895, Flinn v. Prairie Co., 60 Ark. 204, 207, 29 S. W. 459 (making preliminary examination, or attending to listen to testimony, not compulsory); 1895, Clark Co. v. Kerstan, 60 Ark. 508, 30 S. W. 1046 (similar); Colo. 1893, Board v. Lee, 3 Colo. App. 177, 179, 32 Pac. 841 ('post mortem' examination, etc., not compellable without extra compensation); Ida. 1898, Fairchild v. Ada Co., 6 Ida. 340, 55 Pac. 654 (cited supra, note 1); Mass. 1907, Stevens v. Worcester, 196 Mass. 45, 81 N. E. 907 (an expert on mill rights, who had formed an opinion and recorded it in a memorandum, held compellable to examine and read the paper, though not to labor for forming an opinion); N. Y. 1872, People v. Montgomery, 13 Abb. Pr. N. S. 207, 238 (cited supra); Pa. 1846, Allegheny Co. v. Watt, 3 Pa. St. 462 (physician not compellable to make 'post mortem' examination); 1856, Northampton Co. v. Innes, 29 id. 156 (preceding case approved); Tex. 1879, Summers v. State, 5 Tex. App. 365, 378 ('post mortem' examination not compellable without special compensation); Wis. 1909, Philler v. Waukesha Co., 130 Wis. 211, 120 N. W. 829 (medical examination of an accused in jail).

[3] Eng. 1815, Tremain v. Barrett, 6 Taunt. 88, C. P.; 1816, Moor v. Adam, 5 M. & S. 158, K. B.; 1822, Lopes v. De Tastet, 3 B. & B. 293; U. S. 1910, Gordon v. Conley, 107 Me. 286, 78 Atl. 365 (experts retained to investigate, etc.).

[4] 1816, Moor v. Adam, supra, per Ellenborough, L. C. J.; 1820, Willis v. Peckham, 1 B. & B. 516, K. B., per Park, J.; 1821, Severn v. Olive, 3 id. 72 (where the time and expense of making costly experiments, as well as of attendance to testify, were allowed for medical men); 1831, Lonergan v. Assur. Co., 7 Bing. 725, C. P. (exception conceded, but disapproved); 1831, Collins v. Godefroy, 1 B. & Ad. 950, 956, K. B. (but not allowing any legal claim for these fees in assumpsit against the party); 1843, Webb v. Page, 1 C. & K. 23, Maule, J. (exception applied to value-witness); 1862, Parkinson v. Atkinson, 31 L. J. N. S. C. P. 199.

For the English rule to-day, see Rules of Court 1883, Ord. 37, Rule 9; Ord. 65, Rule 27.

[5] Ia. Code 1897, § 4661, Comp. C. § 7368 (expert witnesses, as defined, are to receive "additional compensation to be fixed by the Court, with reference to the value of the time employed and the degree of learning or skill required," but not to exceed $4 per day); 1875, Snyder v. Iowa City, 40 Ia. 646 (statute applied); La. St. 1884, No. 19 (witnesses called only as experts are to receive additional compensation, fixed by the Court, "with reference to the value of the time employed and the degree of learning or skill required"; see also C. Pr. 1870, § 462); Minn. Gen. St. 1913, § 5777 (for "an expert in any profession or calling," the judge may allow such fee as "in his judgment may be just and reasonable"); N. H. 1917, State v. Weeks, 78 N. H. 408, 101 Atl. 35 (experts examined defendant before trial on his behalf as to sanity; their bill for special fees, not allowed, for lack of express statutory authority); N. Y. 1882, Mark v. Buffalo, 87 N. Y. 189; N. Car. Cons. St. 1919,

(c) Whether a contract to pay more than the legal fees is valid, depends upon certain larger considerations involving other principles.[6]

§ 2204. (3) Inability to Attend; in General. The witness' duty to attend is subject to a third limitation, namely, his inability to do so without direct and serious danger to his health or his family's welfare or his livelihood, sufficient to overbalance the need for his personal presence in court. This excuse does not exempt him from giving testimony. It is a viatorial privilege only; and the question which it raises is merely whether he is compellable to attend court or whether, instead, a commissioner is to be sent (if the party desires to take that step) to the witness at his domicile to take his testimony there. A proper regulation of the practice in this respect would establish identical rules for the witness' excuse for non-attendance (as here) and for the party's excuse for not producing him and for offering his deposition instead (ante, §§ 1402–1414); but the two sets of rules are not usually made uniform in the statutes, and the precedents applying them must therefore be kept distinct.

In general, at common law, the concessions made to a witness on the ground of inability to attend were limited, but reasonable, in scope. The duty of attendance presupposes some sort of sacrifice, and the hardship of this sacrifice is in itself no excuse for failing to attend; it is the witness' just contribution to the demands of social order. Nevertheless, there must be, in fairness, some concession to temporary and pressing exigencies. The following passages illustrate the range of judicial opinion in applying this concession:

1836, COWEN, J., in People v. Davis, 15 Wend. 602, 608: "The process of subpœna demands great and extraordinary efforts on the part of the witness to obey. It commands him expressly to lay aside his business and excuses; and, while it lays him under severe obligations, it clears away obstructions in the path of obedience; the witness was always privileged from arrest on civil process in going, staying, and returning. It is not denied that serious sickness in his family, such as would prevent a prudent father or husband from leaving home on his own important business, would save him from the imputation of a contempt and, perhaps, from an action. But such a cause ought clearly to be shown to the Court. . . . Above all, where the summons allows him full time, he should struggle to get ready, as he would to go abroad on his own pressing business. If inevitably disappointed, after exhausting every reasonable expedient, he ought certainly to be excused § 3893 ("experts, when compelled to attend and testify, shall be allowed such compensation and mileage as the Court may in its discretion order"); 1872, State v. Dollar, 66 N. C. 626 (statute considered); S. Car. St. 1905, No. 457, Civ. C. 1922, § 5972 ("physicians and surgeons bound over or summoned by the State to testify as experts in any case in the Court of General Sessions, or actually bound over at the instance of the defendant to testify as experts in any case of felony" in that Court, shall receive five dollars besides the usual witness fees; provided the judge certify the testimony to be material); Tenn. Shannon's Code 1916, §§ 7281, 7282 (coroner may summon a surgeon or physician to give a professional opinion, "whose fee shall not exceed the coroner's"; may summon chemist to examine for poison, whose fee shall not exceed twenty dollars).

On the general question of taxing experts' fees, see also the following rulings: 1889, Faulkner v. Hendy, 79 Cal. 265, 21 Pac. 654; 1870, Clark's Petition, 104 Mass. 537, 542.

[6] 1921, Thatcher v. Darr, 27 Wyo. 452, 199 Pac. 938 (contract to purchase stock in consideration of giving testimony to perfect a patent to public lands, held valid on the facts; elaborate opinion by Potter, C. J., covering the whole subject).

from the payment of a penalty which presupposes some degree of neglect, at least. Witnesses are the summary instruments of investigation in all our common-law courts. It is not until a positive disability is apparent that their domestic examination will be received as a substitute for their actual presence. The important right of oral examination and cross-examination is at stake; and every good citizen, if he could be supposed to regard nothing beyond his own rights, should struggle for the front rank in the order of obedience."

1851, GRIER, J., in Ex parte Beebees, 2 Wall. Jr. 127: "Where the witness who has been subpœnaed shows no disposition to treat the process of the Court with contempt, the issuing of an attachment is always a matter of discretion with the Court. Where the witness is sick, where a member of his family is dangerously ill, where age or infirmity or any other reason which would render his compulsory absence from home dangerous to his health or oppressive, the Court will not compel his attendance, but will either postpone the cause or order the deposition of the witness to be taken. In the present case there is no physical disability alleged to excuse the attendance of the witness. But under the circumstances in evidence we think it would be a great hardship and would probably cause derangement and injury to the business of the witness. . . . Must the witness be dragged from his counting-house, to the great injury of his business, and compelled to transport himself and a cartload of books of account to Philadelphia for the mileage and daily pay allowed by the law? Shall he shut up his bank, suspend his business, merely to save a little expense to the party who wants his evidence? If there was an absolute necessity for such a sacrifice on the part of the witness, if there would be a failure of justice unless his attendance at this place were enforced, the Court would be bound to issue this compulsory process. But where, as in the present case, it is but a question of convenience and expense between the party and the witness, we think that the witness may justly demur to an application which is to transfer the burthen to his shoulders."

§ 2205. Same: (a) Illness, and the like; Merchants' Books. It has always been recognized, at common law, that serious illness furnished a sufficient excuse for non-attendance.[1] Beyond this, it can hardly be said that any rules have been formulated. The matter has been left almost entirely to the trial Court's discretion, — especially because the propriety of punishing for contempt depends somewhat upon the wilfulness of the disobedience of the Court's order and thus introduces a personal element distinct from the § 2205. [1] 1852, Maclin v. Wilson, 21 Ala. 670 (statute excusing for "incapacity to attend" includes all cases where "he was not guilty either of negligence or wilful disobedience"); Ga. Rev. C. 1910, § 5920 (in injunction, etc. cases, "the condition of his health" justifies taking a deposition at the witness' residence); 1873, Cutler v. State, 42 Ind. 244, 246 ("severe sickness," held a sufficient excuse); 1880, State v. Hatfield, 72 Mo. 518 (illness preventing attendance, held sufficient); 1829, Jackson v. Perkins, 2 Wend. N. Y. 308, 317 ("No witness is bound to endanger his life by his attendance at court"); 1836, People v. Davis, 15 Wend. N. Y. 602 (illness of the family, held insufficient on the facts; quoted ante, § 2204); 1842, Eller v. Roberts, 3 Ired. N. C. 11 (witness disabled by a wound from walking; "this inability must be passed upon and decided by reference to the modes of travelling which are in use in the community," so that if some other mode of conveyance was practicable, no excuse existed); 1788, Butcher v. Coats, 1 Dall. Pa. 340 (witnesses excused, who were "so much indisposed as to be utterly incapable of attending"); 1858, Slaughter v. Birdwell, 1 Head Tenn. 341, 345 (dangerous sickness of wife or family, held not sufficient under the old statute, excusing for "incapacity to attend"); 1874, Foster v. McDonald, 12 Heisk. Tenn. 619 (serious illness of wife or family, held sufficient under a statute requiring "sufficient cause").

It would seem absurd to suppose that precisely the contrary objection should be raised, i. e. that the witness was entitled not to be examined at his home, on account of disturbance to his family, etc.; but such an objection was sustained in McSwane v. Foreman, 167 Ind. 171, 78 N. E. 630 (1906).

abstract duty of the witness.[2] Nevertheless, it may be assumed that a hardship to one's livelihood, such as might be involved in the summons of a very poor man having a family dependent on his scanty wage,[3] or of a merchant called upon for a long withdrawal of the essential books of his daily accounting,[4] should in some instances be treated as a sufficient ground for exemption.

§ 2206. Same: (b) Sex; Occupation; Officers and Official Records. For the sake of convenience only, certain innovations have been introduced in some jurisdictions by statute, excusing specific classes from attendance, and conceding a privilege, subject usually to the trial Court's discretion:

(1) For reasons which can best be appreciated by those familiar with the Southern ideal of womanhood, "females" have been in a few Southern States exempted from attendance as witnesses in the court-room.[1]

(2) In a few jurisdictions, an exemption has been accorded to persons of specific occupations, — presumably such as would be frequently liable to a call for testimonial services and would also be specially injured by the difficulty of delegating the conduct of their occupation to other hands.[2]

[2] 1853, Smith, J., in West v. State, 1 Wis. 209, 235 ("The award of the attachment rests in the sound discretion of the Court to whom application is made; . . . the refusal of which is not necessarily error, and only becomes so when that discretion is clearly abused").

[3] 1814, Phillipps, Evidence, I, 13; 1836, People v. Davis, 15 Wend. 602 (poverty, held insufficiently shown on the facts).

[4] 1851, Ex parte Beebees, 2 Wall. Jr. 127 (attendance from New York before a Master in Philadelphia, with large quantities of documents, not compelled on the facts: quoted ante, § 2204).

This privilege is sometimes expressly declared by statute: Ga. Rev. C. 1910, § 5847 (on service of a subpœna d. t., a witness making affidavit "that he cannot produce the books required without suffering a material injury in his business," may furnish a transcript and not produce the originals); § 5848 (the opposite party may have inspection if not satisfied with the transcript); Wis. Stats. 1919, § 4182 a (certain insurance companies' books, not required to be produced except by special order); § 4189 b (so also for bankers' books).

There are also statutes, which, though they do not expressly confer upon the witness the privilege of not producing such books, yet do exempt the party to the cause from offering the original and thus often practically obviate the inconvenience; these have been already examined (ante, §§ 1223, 1683, 1710).

For the witness' privilege as to not disclosing title-deeds and other private documents (which does not exempt him from bringing them to court), see post, § 2211.

§ 2206. [1] Ala. Code 1897, § 1833 (in civil cases, evidence may be taken by deposition, "1, when the witness is a woman"); 1892, Ex parte Jenks, 101 Ala. 429, 13 So. 564 (attendance may be required by order, under the Code); 1894, Ex parte Branch, 105 id. 231, 16 So. 926 (same; except when the witness resides out of the county); Ga. Rev. C. 1910, § 5886 ("all female witnesses" may be examined by commission); § 5896 ("no female witness shall be required to leave her home to appear" before commissioners); § 5920 (similar, for injunction cases, etc.); 1871, City Fire Ins. Co. v. Carrugi, 41 Ga. 660, 672; 1886, Powell v. R. Co., 77 Ga. 192, 198, 3 S. E. 757; 1889, Western & A. R. Co. v. Denmead, 83 Ga. 351, 356, 9 S. E. 683; 1890, Augusta & S. R. Co. v. Randall, 85 Ga. 297, 315, 11 S. E. 706 ("The statute does not exempt females from attendance upon court; it simply permits their interrogatories to be taken"; nevertheless, their attendance should not be compelled without good reason); La. C. Pr. 1870, § 349 (no order shall be made "requiring a female [party] to answer interrogatories on facts and articles in open Court," unless on affidavit "to the materiality of the interrogatories, and that they are not propounded for the purpose or in the hope of having them taken for confessed, but with the 'bona fide' desire to have them truly answered by the party interrogated"); Ann. Rev. L. 1915, § 3942 (no member of religious order of Saint Ursuline Nuns, in New Orleans, compellable to appear in court to give testimony); Tenn. Shannon's Code 1916, § 5625 (female witness not compelled to attend "unless upon sufficient cause shown").

[2] CANADA: Man. Rev. St. 1913, c. 95, § 46 (superintendent of an insane asylum, if he does not refuse to depose at the asylum, is not compellable to attend court in any civil case, on affidavit that it would be "seriously detri-

(3) Rarely, a voter is exempted from attendance on election day;[3] but by law the day of election is generally a holiday and courts are not in session.

(4) In a few states, certain public officers are expressly exempted by statute from attendance; moreover, at common law it is a question whether the Crown or the Executive is bound to attend court, or at least is liable to compulsory process.[4]

(5) The irremovability of public records concerns several principles which need to be discriminated. The rule requiring the party to produce a documentary original is dispensed with for public records, and a copy may be used (ante, §§ 1215, 1218). As a general rule of convenience, intended to preserve them from harm and keep them available constantly for consultation, the originals are generally forbidden to be removed for evidence (ante, § 2182). If, however, they are unlawfully removed, the illegality does not of itself exclude them (ante, § 2183). Those principles involve no question of privilege. But a few statutes expressly provide that the custodian of public records is not compellable to remove and produce them; moreover, the testimonial privilege as to official secrets operates sometimes to prevent the disclosure of the contents of such documents.[5]

§ 2207. Same: (c) Distance from Place of Trial. The jurisdiction of a court may cover an extensive territory; but at common law no discrimination was made in regard to the distance of the witness' residence from the place of trial where his testimony was needed. He was not exempted by distance, if he was within reach of the court's process. Inordinate hardship was thus constantly caused to witnesses by the necessity of travelling a long distance and absenting themselves for a tedious period from their occupations, perhaps after all for no important benefit to justice. Modern statutes have usually remedied this hardship by limiting the distance from which a witness is compellable to come to the place of trial.[1] mental and hazardous to the welfare of the inmates or some of the inmates").

UNITED STATES: Ala. Code 1907, § 875 (superintendent and physicians of State insane hospitals are privileged from attendance to testify as experts, but their depositions may be taken, in civil cases, and by the defendant in criminal cases and by the State with the defendant's consent); Ark. Dig. 1919, § 4206 (quoted ante, § 1411); Ga. Rev. C. 1910, §§ 5886, 5920 (deposition may be taken when from "the nature of his business or occupation it is not possible to secure his personal attendance without manifest inconvenience to the public or to third persons, such as postmasters, public carriers, physicians, school-teachers, etc."); Ida. Comp. St. 1919, § 8006 (practising physician or attorney-at-law, out of the county of residence); Ind. Burns' Ann. St. 1914, § 439 (practising physician or attorney-at-law); La. St. 1877, No. 103 (cited post, § 2207, note); Ky. Stats. 1915, § 217 a, par. 17 (officers etc. of State insane hospitals not required to attend court out of the county as witnesses in civil suits); N. C. 1913, In re Pierce, 163 N. C. 247, 79 S. E. 507 (a lawyer has no exemption as such; fine opinion by Clark, C. J.); S. C. C. C. P. 1922, § 688 (State insane hospital officer; cited ante, § 1411); Tenn. Shannon's Code 1916, §§ 5624–5628.

[3] Mich. Const. 1908, Art. III, § 5 ("No elector shall be obliged . . . on the day of election . . . to attend court as a suitor or witness").

[4] These questions, however, have to be discriminated from that of the testimonial protection given to official secrets; and hence the precedents and statutes are better dealt with in one place (post, § 2371).

[5] The last two principles are sometimes confused in the precedents, and accordingly the authorities are better examined in one place, post, § 2373.

§ 2207. [1] From the following statutes, dealing with this privilege, are to be distinguished those which prescribe the conditions on which a deposition is receivable (ante,

Any such fixed rules must of course operate somewhat arbitrarily and therefore unjustly. They have no reference to the importance of the cause or §§ 1411–1413); the two sets of rules, as already noted (ante, § 2204), should properly coincide but in fact that is not always the case: for depositions needed for use in a trial outside of the State, see ante, § 2195 (power to take testimony for use outside of the State). Federal: Rev. St. 1878, § 870, Code § 1371 (no witness is compellable to attend for a 'dedimus' deposition "out of the county where he resides, nor more than 40 miles from the place of his residence"); § 876, Code § 1379 (in civil cases, a subpœna shall not run more than 100 miles from the place of the court, if the witness lives out of the district of the court); 1898, Davis v. Davis, 90 Fed. 791 (R. S. § 863, construed with the foregoing; a witness may be compelled to appear for deposition outside the district of the court); St. 1898, c. 541, § 41, July 1, 30 Stat. L. 556, Code § 8823 (before a bankruptcy referee, attendance as witness is not required "at a place outside of the State of his residence, and more than 100 miles from said place of residence"); § 6148 (in contested patent causes, the limit is 40 miles); § 7133 (anti-trust laws; subpœnas "may run into any other district," but in civil cases for a witness living out of the district more than 100 miles away the Court's permission must be obtained); § 8043 (U. S. shipping board investigations; subpœna may compel attendance "from any place in the U. S."); § 8973 (U. S. employees' compensation commission; subpœnas may compel attendance "within a radius of 100 miles"); St. June 4, 1920, ch. V, subchapter II, Articles of War, art. 22 (judge advocate may issue process to compel attendance, and "such process shall run to any part of the United States, its Territories, and possessions"); 1903, U. S. v. Beavers, 125 Fed. 778 (range of distance covered by a subpœna of a U. S. Commissioner acting under N. Y. Statutes in criminal cases); 1902, Re Hemstreet, 117 Fed. 568, D. C. (bankruptcy; the effect of Bankruptcy Act, § 41, and Rev. St. § 876, determined; a witness need not leave his State to attend before a referee); 1906, Re Cole, 133 Fed. 414, D. C. (similar);

Alabama: Code 1909, § 4021 (no subpœna is to issue for a witness residing more than 100 miles distant, unless on affidavit that his personal attendance is "necessary to a proper decision of the cause, and that his deposition would be sufficient for that purpose"); 1894, Ex parte Branch, 105 Ala. 231, 233, 16 So. 926 (under Code § 2793 — in the prior Code — a witness residing more than 100 miles from the court-house is not compelled to attend; under §§ 2793, 2800, and 2813, a witness who is a woman or disabled by illness, etc., and resides without the county, is not compellable to attend);

Alaska: Comp. L. 1913, § 1462 (like Or. Laws 1920, § 818);

Arizona: Rev. St. 1913, Civ. C. § 1237 (attendance out of the county of residence or of subpœna-service is not obligatory, unless by judicial order indorsed on a subpœna, made on affidavit, that "the evidence of the witness is material, and his attendance at the examination or trial necessary"); Civ. C. § 1682 (subpœna runs to any part of the State, but justice's subpœna within the county only); § 1710 (attendance for a deposition is compellable within 20 miles of one's abode);

Arkansas: Dig. 1919, § 4161 (attendance at trial is not obligatory in a civil action "except in the county of his residence or an adjoining county," nor attendance at a deposition out of the county of residence or of service on 3 days' notice); § 3110 (in criminal causes, no such limitation exists); § 4207 (not compellable to attend where his deposition is allowable, unless he has failed to give it after summons); § 1258 (party residing in the same or adjoining county, compellable to attend); § 4208 (Court may order personal attendance in spite of the ordinary exemption, on affidavit that his testimony "is important, and that the just and proper effect of his testimony cannot, in a reasonable degree, be obtained without an oral examination before the jury");

California: Cal. C. C. P. 1872, § 1989 (attendance out of county of residence, not compellable, unless within 50 miles); P. C. § 1330 ("No person is obliged to attend" out of the county of residence or of service of subpœna, unless a subpœna is indorsed by the trial judge's order, or a judge of the supreme or superior court, on affidavit of the party "stating that he believes" the evidence to be material and attendance necessary);

Columbia (Dist.): Code 1919, § 1059 (no witness need attend for depositions out of the county of residence nor more than 40 miles from his residence);

Florida: Rev. G. S. 1919, § 2707 ("Except in justice of the peace courts," a witness subpœnaed "must reside within 25 miles of the place where the Court sits");

Georgia: Rev. C. 1910, § 5896 (no witness, whose deposition is to be taken, need "go out of the county or more than 10 miles from his residence");

Idaho: Comp. St. 1919, §§ 7985, 8007 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1989); § 9136 (like Cal. P. C. § 1330, substituting probate judge for superior court);

Indiana: Burns' Ann. St. 1914, § 440 (witness need not go out of county of residence for a deposition);

Iowa: Code 1897, § 4660, Comp. Code § 7367 (attendance not compellable (1) out of the State where served, or (2) more than 100 miles of the individual witness' testimony; nor to his ability to absent himself without serious hardship; nor to the facilities available for travel. Moreover, from the residence or place of service, except in the same county and except on Court order or (3) except in a district or superior court, more than 30 miles "from his place of residence, or of service, if not in the same county");

Kansas: Gen. St. 1915, § 7228 (witness compellable in civil cases to attend outside the county of his residence by tendering fees for one day's attendance and mileage); § 8079 (in criminal cases, witness must attend from any county in the State); § 10424 (witness summoned by State commissioner of labor and industry need not attend outside the county of residence);
Kentucky: C. C. P. 1895, § 534, C. Cr. P. § 151 (witness need not attend if residing more than 20 miles from the place of trial, or if residing, or being when served, out of the county; except in criminal cases); C. C. P. § 149 (party residing within 20 miles may be compelled to attend like any other witness);
Louisiana: Rev. Civ. C. 1920, §§ 3941, 3943 (attendance "out of the parish" of residence, not compellable); § 3959 (personal attendance of any witness, compellable on affidavit that "the personal attendance of such witness in open court on the trial of the case is necessary in order to elicit the truth from such witness, which cannot be done by taking his deposition out of court"; and in all jury cases, the same may be done on request in writing without affidavit); St. 1877, No. 103 (physicians living more than 10 miles distant, not compellable to attend in a civil case "whenever in their opinion the life of any of their patients might be endangered by their attendance," a sworn certificate of the facts to be forwarded by the physician; provided that at either party's request the Court may order the testimony "to be taken summarily in due course after notice" to the opponent); Rev. L. 1897, § 3960 (in Orleans parish any party "shall have the right to have the personal attendance of any witnesses" by subpœna, unless such testimony has been "taken contradictorily with the parties" under St. 1868, Sept. 16); C. Pr. 1894, §§ 351, 352 (party residing out of the parish not compellable to answer interrogatories in open court); R. S. 1870, § 1036 (in prosecutions for a crime punishable with death or imprisonment at hard labor in penitentiary, attendance is compellable from any parish, if in judge's discretion indispensable); 1844, Crocker v. Turnstall, 6 Rob. La. 354, 355 (preceding sections applied); 1846, Walker v. Copley, 1 La. An. 247 (same);
Maine: Rev. St. 1916, c. 49, § 11 (witnesses before State labor commissioner need not go outside county of residence); c. 112, § 11 (deponent need not travel more than 30 miles);
Maryland: Ann. Code 1914, Art. 75, § 159 (civil cases; witness must attend in any county);
Massachusetts: Gen. L. 1920, c. 233, §§ 38, 39 (depositions; deponent is compellable to go 20 miles from his abode; if a non-resident but within the State, only 10 miles);
Missouri: Rev. St. 1919, § 5422 (not compellable in a civil suit to go more than 40 miles from residence without tender of fees);
Montana: Rev. C. 1921, § 10622 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1989); § 12183 (like Cal. P. C. § 1330);
Nebraska: Rev. St. 1921, § 8861 (attendance is not compellable in a civil action out of the county of residence, nor for a deposition out of the county of residence "or where he may be" when served);
Nevada: Rev. L. 1912, § 5431 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 1989); § 7359 (like Cal. P. C. § 1330, substituting "district" for "county," and omitting "judge of the superior court");
New Jersey: Comp. St. 1910, Evidence § 12 (witness must attend out of the county);
New Mexico: Annot. St. 1915, § 2160 (witness deposing for use in a case pending outside the State, not to be compelled to attend outside the judicial district of residence or sojourn);
New York: C. P. A. 1920, § 300 (depositions; witness resident need not attend out of his county of residence or office; others, out of the county of service, except where order specifies another county); J. C. A. 1920, § 190 (before justice court witness need not go outside the county of the justice or adjoining county);
North Dakota: Comp. L. 1913, §§ 7864, 7876 (not compellable in civil cases to attend trial out of his judicial district or county of residence or to give a deposition out of the county of residence or service); § 11034 (criminal cases; like Cal. P. C. § 1330); § 1078 (similar for contested elections to legislative assembly); § 7878 (person confined in prison cannot be taken to court outside of the county for examination as witness);
Ohio: Gen. Code Ann. 1921, § 11506 (no person compellable in a civil case to attend out of the county where he resides or is subpœnaed, except to the adjoining county, or to the county where venue has been changed; nor when he is custodian of an irremovable official document, unless the Court orders its removal);
Oklahoma: Comp. St. 1921, § 594 (witness not obliged to attend in civil trials out of the county of residence, nor to attend for a deposition out of the county of residence or of service of subpœna); § 2837 (criminal cases; not obliged to attend out of the county of residence or service of subpœna, except as in Cal. P. C. § 1330);
Oregon: Laws 1920, § 818 (not compellable to attend out of the county of residence or service when they regulate the exemption merely by political subdivisions — as by counties — they even fail to take account of the very reason for their enactment, since the county line may be but a few miles from the place of trial. Such statutes are therefore ill-advised and defective, whenever they do not leave it always to judicial discretion to obviate their arbitrariness by compelling attendance beyond the usual distances when this measure seems necessary. Nevertheless, these statutes represent a just need in legislation and rest on a sound general policy, as set forth in the following passage:

1848, New York Commissioners (David D. Field and others) of Practice and Pleading, First Report, 250: "Can there be a doubt that, under our present system, the rights of witnesses are grossly disregarded? Why should the law permit a person to be taken from Suffolk to Niagara against his will, and at great sacrifice, because two persons in Niagara have a legal dispute? The loss to the witness may be more than the whole subject of litigation. Does not the law in this case inflict a greater wrong that it may redress a less? We think it does; and we propose to prevent it hereafter, by declaring that no person shall be taken hereafter out of his own county for another person's civil action. . . . There should seem, moreover, to be no good reason to require the personal attendance of a witness at so great a sacrifice. No doubt, his appearance upon the stand, where the testimony may be taken from his lips, is preferable to a written deposition, taken at a distance. But that is not the only question. The point is this, whether the increased advantage to the parties of having the judge and jury see the witness, is more than a counterpoise to the in-unless the residence is within 100 miles; except in a court of record, upon the Court's order indorsed on subpœna and made on affidavit that "the testimony of the witness is material and his oral examination important and desirable"); § 1693 (similar for criminal cases, the distance being only 30 miles; but Court may order attendance from anywhere in the State);

Pennsylvania: St. 1836, June 16, § 22, Dig. 1920, § 18322, Oyer and Terminer (Courts of common pleas and of oyer and terminer may issue subpœna into any county);
Porto Rico: Rev. St. & C. 1911, § 1482 (attendance out of the district of residence, unless less than 30 miles distant, is not obligatory);
South Carolina: C. C. P. 1922, § 687 (deponent must attend Court if within the county or not more than 30 miles away); § 689 (deponent must attend commissioners if not more than 15 miles away);
South Dakota: Rev. C. 1919, §§ 2715, 2737 (like N. D. Comp. L. §§ 7864, 7876); § 5003 (like Cal. P. C. § 1330, omitting mention of supreme and superior court judges); § 2738 (not obliged to attend in civil cases outside county of residence; for deposition, not outside county where he resides or is served); § 7355 (legislative election contests; no witness need attend outside the county of residence or service); St. 1919, Feb. 21, c. 164 (amending Rev. C. § 2738; in civil cases, judge may order attendance out of the county of residence or service);
Texas: Rev. Civ. St. 1911, § 3640 (subpœnas issue for witnesses, residing or being in the county); Rev. C. Cr. P. 1911, § 539 (witness residing out of the county may be summoned in criminal cases);
Utah: Comp. L. 1917, § 7131 (before a district court, a witness must attend "at any place in this State"; before a city court, etc., not out of the county of residence, unless within 30 miles); § 9289 (like Cal. P. C. § 1330, substituting "a magistrate" for "a justice of the supreme court," etc., and "showing" for "stating that he believes");
Vermont: Gen. L. 1917, § 9120 (travel for attendance for deposition not compellable for more than 10 miles);
Virginia: Code 1919, § 6218 (witness may be summoned from outside the city or county, if the Court considers it necessary);
Washington: R. & B. Code 1909, § 1215 (witness is not compellable to attend out of the county of residence unless within 20 miles, nor before a justice of the peace unless the residence is within 20 miles whether within the county or not); § 1235 (attendance for deposition, compellable at any place within 20 miles); § 1898 (before justice of the peace: subpœna is valid, if the witness "be within 20 miles");
Wisconsin: Stats. 1919, § 4056 (attendance before a justice of the peace is obligatory when the witness resides not more than 30 miles distant from his office); § 4096 (opponent examined by deposition cannot be required to go out of the county of residence); § 4100 (witness compellable to give deposition anywhere "within 20 miles of his abode");
Wyoming: Comp. St. 1920, §§ 5816, 7511 (witness not compellable to go out of the county of residence or service of subpœna).

creased injury to the witness from being brought so far, and at so great a loss. We think the question can be answered in only one way. In his own county let him be called to the stand. If it be wanted in another, let it be taken in his own, and transmitted thither. Should there be a really urgent occasion for the personal attendance of the witness, there can be little doubt that the party may be able to induce him to attend, by compensating him for his expenses and time. So it is now, where a witness is wanted from another State; the party makes an arrangement with him to come, in many cases where his attendance is important. If a witness in Jersey City be wanted for a trial in New York, he can generally be induced to attend, though he cannot be compelled to do so. So it will happen, we doubt not, if our plan be adopted."

SUB-TITLE III: TESTIMONIAL PRIVILEGE

TOPIC A: PRIVILEGED TOPICS

SUB-TOPIC I: SUNDRY PRIVILEGED TOPICS

CHAPTER LXXVI.

The first group of Testimonial Privileges (ante, § 2197) protect from disclosure a certain topic, or class of facts. The concededly privileged topics are half a dozen only, though others have from time to time been proposed and rejected.

The privileged topic is to be distinguished from the privileged communication (post, §§ 2285, 2396); in the former, the protection is limited to a generic fact, but is irrespective of the person possessing it; in the latter the protection is unlimited as to the topic of fact, but is limited to communications made between persons having a specific relation to each other.

§ 2210. (1) Irrelevant Matters. The witness has no privilege to refuse to disclose matters irrelevant to the issue in hand, — first, because irrelevancy is a concern of the parties alone, and may be obviated, as a ground for exclusion, by their consent or failure to object, and, secondly, because there is in the mere circumstance of irrelevancy nothing which creates for the witness a detriment or inconvenience such as should suffice (ante, § 2192) to override his general duty to disclose what the Court requires. Moreover, the recognition of a privilege of this sort would add innumerable opportunities to make a claim of privilege, and would thus tend to complicate a trial and add to the uncertainty of the event. Accordingly, it has always been accepted, at common law, that no privilege of this sort existed: [1]

§ 2210. [1] Accord: ENGLAND: 1683, Ashton, 1 Vern. 165 (probate of will; a witness demurred to one of the interrogatories "as not pertinent to the matter in issue; the Lord-

1794, Walker's Trial, 23 How. St. Tr. 1098. Mr. Erskine, cross-examining Thomas Dunn: "Who gave you the [glass of] shrub the next day?" Witness: "Suppose a gentleman was so friendly as to give me a glass of shrub, is that anything?" Counsel: "I am not finding fault with it; who was it?" Witness: "I do not know whether that is to be answered or not. . . . I do not suppose that is any material matter." Mr. Justice HEATH: "You have nothing to do whether it is material or no; answer the question."

1849, NISBET, J., in Williams v. Turner, 7 Ga. 350: "It will not do to permit a witness to judge what questions he shall answer and what not; unless the questions are such as by law he is not bound to answer, he must answer all."

1853, GAMBLE, J., in Ex parte McKee, 18 Mo. 599, 601: "The opinion of the witness that the question is irrelevant is entitled to no consideration. If a merely frivolous or impertinent question were asked of a witness, the officer taking the deposition might not feel himself called upon to compel an answer; but it would only be in a very plain case of impertinence that he would undertake to decide that the witness should be allowed to avoid answering. The Court in which the cause is pending will at the trial reject irrelevant evidence; and it would greatly detract from the value of our statutes which authorize Keeper overruled the demurrer, because he would not introduce such a precedent as for a witness to demur; it did not concern a witness to examine what was the point in issue").

UNITED STATES: Fed. 1901, People's Bank v. Brown, 50 C. C. A. 411, 112 Fed. 652, semble; 1904, Crocker-Wheeler Co. v. Bullock, 134 Fed. 241, 244 C. C. ("It seems to be settled that, ordinarily at least," no such privilege exists); 1906, Dowagiac Mfg. Co. v. Lochren, 143 Fed. 211, C. C. A. (collecting the authorities); 1906, Nelson v. U. S., 201 U. S. 92, 26 Sup. 358; Haw. 1906, Anin's Petition, 17 Haw. 339 ("a witness is not privileged to decline to answer an immaterial question"); Ill. 1899, Harding v. American Glucose Co., 182 Ill. 551, 55 N. E. 577; Ia. 1909, Finn v. Winneshiek Dist. Court, 145 Ia. 157, 123 N. W. 1066; Me. 1860, Bradley v. Veazie, 47 Me. 85, 87 ("If questions are improperly asked, they must be answered as the justice or presiding judge in his discretion shall dictate"); Mo. 1853, Ex parte McKee, 18 Mo. 599 (quoted supra); 1906, Ex parte Gfeller, 178 Mo. 248, 77 S. W. 552 (Ex parte McKee followed); Nebr. 1909, Ex parte Button, Ex parte Hammond, 83 Nebr. 636, 120 N. W. 203 (not clear); N. H. 1910, Boston & Maine R. Co. v. State, 75 N. H. 513, 77 Atl. 996; N. Y. 1865, Porter, J., in Great Western Turnpike Co. v. Loomis, 32 N. Y. 127, 138 ("When the question is irrelevant, the objection properly proceeds from the party, and the witness has no concern in the matter unless it be overruled by the judge"); 1922, Powelson v. Procter & Gamble Co., Sup. App. Div., 193 N. Y. Suppl. 94; Oh. 1893, De Camp v. Archibald, 50 Oh. St. 618, 626, 35 N. E. 1056 (apart from privilege, the Court's determination of relevancy controls); . 1901, Re Rauh, 65 Oh. 128, 61 N. E. 701 (a witness giving a deposition refuses at his peril on the ground of the incompetency of the evidence).

Add the cases cited ante, § 2200, note 8 (documents).

The following case shows the sensible way of dealing with a witness summoned who has no relevant testimony: 1909, R. v. Baines, 1 K. B. 258 (subpœna to the Prime Minister and the Home Secretary to give evidence as to a breach of the peace by woman suffragists; the subpœnaed persons were present on the occasion, but moved to set aside the subpœnas on the ground that they were "wholly unable to give any evidence which can possibly be relevant" and that the writs were served "for the purposes of vexation and to bring the defendants and their agitation into further notoriety"; held, that both the grounds set forth were in fact true, that "therefore it would be an idle waste of time and money to require them to go down to Leeds to give evidence," and that the subpœna should be set aside).

The ruling in Holman v. Austin, 34 Tex. 668, 673 (1870), went chiefly on the ground of the mayor's lack of jurisdiction; and the remark that, "if the question be 'improper,'" the refusal to answer is no contempt, was an 'obiter' interpolation based on no authority. The ruling in Ragland v. Wickware, 4 J. J. Marsh. Ky. 530 (1839), held the question there put to be relevant, without saying that it would have been privileged if irrelevant. The remark in Roberts v. Garen, 2 Ill. 396 (1837), that a witness "is bound to state all the facts in his knowledge that are applicable to the case" was not meant to limit his duty, but to express its extension beyond the mere case of the party calling him. The ruling in Ex parte Krieger (1879), 7 Mo. App. 367, purging of contempt a witness who refused as deponent to answer questions before a notary in a proceeding which should properly have been brought as a bill of discovery against him as a party, goes partly on the limited statutory powers of a notary and partly on the abuse of the process; the headnote, referring to the "irrelevancy" of the questions as a ground, is incorrect.

the taking of depositions, if the question of relevancy was to be raised before and decided by every justice of the peace or other officer who takes a single deposition in the cause, when he cannot know the aspect which the case will probably assume at the trial. To allow the witness himself to pass upon the question of relevancy and refuse to answer such questions as he thought irrelevant, would be to deprive the party of the testimony of every unwilling witness. . . . [The statute authorized the committal of any person refusing to give evidence] 'which may lawfully be required to be given.' It is sufficient to say in general terms that, so far as the witness himself is concerned, he may lawfully be required to answer any questions which it is not his personal privilege to refuse to answer. . . . All evidence which is not of this character the witness may lawfully be compelled to give, even though it may not prove to be relevant and competent in the particular cause in which it is sought to be obtained. The objection to the relevancy or competency of evidence is for the parties litigant to make, and not for the witness."

Unfortunately, the compilers of the code of California, two generations ago, inserted a provision — by what authority or reasoning does not appear — which expressly affirmed such a privilege, and this provision has since found its way, by imitation, into a few other codes;[2] though little practical application of it seems to have been invoked. It is an unsound and impolitic rule. That a witness has no concern with Relevancy ought to be the firm

[2] Alaska: Comp. L. 1913, §§ 1506–1508 (like Or. Laws 1920, §§ 869–871; California: C. C. P. 1872, §§ 2064, 2065, 2066 (a witness must answer questions "legal and pertinent to the matter in issue"; it is his "right to be protected from" irrelevant questions, and "to be examined only as to matters legal and pertinent to the issue"); 1886, Ex parte Zeehandelaar, 71 Cal. 238, 12 Pac. 259 (under Code §§ 2065, 2066, "the refusal to answer a question not pertinent to the issue was not contempt"); 1900, Re Rogers, 129 Cal. 468, 62 Pac. 47 (opinion not clear, but apparently sanctioning a refusal to answer an irrelevant question); 1903, People v. Glaze, 139 Cal. 154, 72 Pac. 965 (prosecution held not compellable to produce at the trial a paper which would not be admissible); 1904, Rogers v. Superior Court, 145 Cal. 88, 78 Pac. 344 (grand jury; privilege exists for matters not pertinent); St. 1907, c. 395, p. 735, Mar. 20 (a witness must attend "with any papers under his control lawfully required by the subpœna, and answer all pertinent and legal questions"; being C. C. P. § 2064 amended); Georgia: Rev. C. 1910, § 5870 ("It is the right of a witness to be examined only as to relevant matter, and to be protected from improper questions"); 1905, Fenn v. Georgia R. & E. Co., 122 Ga. 280, 50 S. E. 103 (refusal to answer irrelevant questions before a commissioner, privileged); Idaho: Comp. St. 1919, §§ 8043–44 (a witness is compellable to answer all "pertinent and legal questions"); Iowa: 1919, Eller v. Eller, 185 Ia. 1053, 171 N. W. 579 (divorce; S. intervened in respect to the custody of a child; application for interrogatories to perpetuate their testimony were resisted by them as not necessary; held, that since they were no more than witnesses, an order compelling answer was not appealable, in the absence of any claim of specific privilege); Kentucky: C. C. P. 1895, § 593 (subject to trial Court's control, "the parties may put such legal and pertinent questions as they may see fit"); 1922, Gordon v. Tracy, 194 Ky. 166, 238 S. W. 395 (witness before a grand jury inquiring into gambling offences); Mississippi, Code 1906, § 1923; Hem. § 1583 (a witness is not to be "excused from answering any question, material and relevant," unless self-criminating); Montana: Rev. C. 1921, §§ 10673–10675 (like Cal. C. C. P. §§ 2064–2066); New Jersey: Comp. St. 1910, Evidence § 8 (like Miss. Code 1906, § 1923; quoted post, § 2252); Nevada: Rev. L. 1912, §§ 5436, 5437 (like Cal. C. C. P. §§ 2065, 2066); Oregon: Laws 1920, §§ 869, 870, 871 (like Cal. C. C. P. §§ 2065, 2066); Philippine Isl. P. C. 1911, Gen. Order 58 of 1900, § 56 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 2065); Porto Rico: Rev. St. & C. 1911, §§ 1531, 1532, 1533 (like Cal. C. C. P. §§ 2064, 2065, 2066); Utah: Comp. L. 1917, §§ 7141, 7142 (like Cal. C. C. P. §§ 2065, 2066); § 7140 (a witness served must attend and "answer all pertinent and legal questions").

The following ruling was improperly influenced by the above code-rulings: 1899, Ex parte Jennings, 60 Oh. St. 319, 54 N. E. 262 (refusal to answer upon irrelevant facts, privileged; here, before a notary taking a deposition; but the principle is stated broadly; citing Ex parte Zeehandelaar, supra: Minshall, J., diss.). The following ruling rests on a special wording: 1896, Ehrmann v. Ehrmann, 2 Ch. 826 ("privilege" in Ord. 31. r. 19 a, sub-rule 2, includes any ground, even irrelevancy, on which discovery is resisted).

correlative of the doctrine that a party has nothing to do with Privilege (ante, § 2196).

Distinguish the questions as to the power of a deposition-officer to compel an answer (ante, § 2195) and the necessity of taking objections to relevancy before such officers (ante, § 18).

Distinguish also the party's objection to interrogatories of discovery;[3] and the judge's power to disallow any irrelevant question, under the modern English and Canadian practice (ante, § 986).

Distinguish also the question of materiality in a legislative investigation, for there it may involve the powers of that body (ante, § 2195).

Distinguish, further, the question of a grand jury investigation; here there are no pleadings to define the issues of materiality, and there is no judge to take the responsibility of restraining the inquiries within the issues; hence it may properly be held that a witness refusing to answer before a grand jury may not be held in contempt without a showing of materiality,[4] though he may not question the jurisdiction.[5]

§ 2211. (2) Documents of Title, Lien, etc. The mere fact that a document concerns the private affairs of the witness, or that its disclosure would in his opinion inconvenience him, does not create a privilege; the duty to assist the truth (ante, § 2192) is paramount, and indeed presupposes some sort of sacrifice by the witness:

1842, DENMAN, L. C. J., in Doe v. Date, 3 Q. B. 608, 617 (compelling an executor of defendant's lessor to produce a rent-book): "[The executor] possessed it in the character of executor of the late tenant for life; when produced, it proved the fact of payment of rent to his testator. Why was the witness not to prove that fact, either by his personal knowledge, if the party calling him chose to question him, or by any paper which he might possess? Such a paper was not a title-deed, nor within the protection of the rule which exempts witnesses from producing documents in the nature of title-deeds. The production of the paper was a mode of proving a fact; that this fact might be injurious to some interest of his own furnishes no reason for his not producing the book."

1879, CHOATE, J., in U. S. v. Tilden, 10 Ben. 566, 578: "While the law jealously protects private books and papers from unreasonable searches and seizures, and from unnecessary exposure, even when necessarily produced in court, yet the principle is equally strongly held that parties litigant have the right to have private writings, which are competent for proof in their cause, produced in court; and to this imperative demand of

[3] 1905, Perry v. Rubber T. W. Co., 138 Fed. 836, C. C. (depositions; "the general rule is that the witness should be required to answer all questions which may possibly be material"); Ala. Code 1909, § 4057 (opponent questioned on interrogatories "is bound to answer all pertinent questions"); 1838, Walworth, C., in Gihon v. Albert, 7 Paige N. Y. 278, 279 (when the party is "advised by his counsel that questions put to him are improper or irrelevant to the matters referred to the master, but which the master decides it is proper for him to answer, he is to refuse to answer; which refusal is in the nature of a demurrer to the interrogatory"); and citations ante, §§ 1856–1859, and post, §§ 2218, 2219.

[4] 1920, Hobson v. District Court, 188 Ia. 1062, 177 N. W. 40.

[5] 1919, Blair v. U. S., 250 U. S. 273, 39 Sup. 468 (grand jury inquiry into corrupt electoral practices; a witness is not entitled to question the constitutionality of the statute defining such offenses, nor the jurisdiction of the court or the grand jury; the general duty to testify has no exception based on such limitations); 1922, Ex parte Miller, — Tex. Cr. —, 240 S. W. 944 (collecting authorities; here, a Ku Klux Klan investigation).

justice all scruples as to the confidential character of the writings as private property (except in certain well ascertained exceptions growing out of professional employment) must yield from considerations of public policy."

Subject, then, to a general discretion in the Court to decline to compel production where in the case in hand the document's utility in evidence would not be commensurate with the detriment to the witness, any and every document may be called for, however personal and private its contents may be.[1] To this conceded general rule, two exceptions have been urged:

(a) The title-deeds to land were in England always a secret of extraordinary importance. The landed interests, at the time of the common law's formation and until recently, were overwhelmingly dominant in politics, religion, and social intercourse. The safety of those interests was a paramount object. Now, under any title-system not founded on compulsory public registration, the secrecy of the title-instruments comes to be a vital (if selfish) consideration for the occupants of the land. Their possession may be unquestioned; but the instruments under which they claim are constantly defective in some important feature. A boundary may vary, a release be missing, a recital be incorrect, — a score of defects of one sort or another might be discoverable in the chain of title. But the possession and the title are as yet unquestioned, and thus the security of title depends practically on preserving these defects from ascertainment by persons opposed in claim, who

§ 2211. [1] Add the citations ante, § 2193, and post, § 2286:

ENGLAND: 1702, Geery v. Hopkins, 2 Ld. Raym. 851 (action for money received; books of East India Company required to be produced, since, if the transfers of stock were made only by entry therein, "it is reasonable that they should be produced for the benefit of the party"); 1808, Amey v. Long, 9 East 473 (quoted ante, § 2193); 1824, Hawkins v. Howard, Ry. & Mo. 64 (action against bankrupt; assignees, not being parties, required to produce the bankrupt's books); 1834, Doe v. Seaton, 2 A. & E. 171, 175, 178 (account books in possession of the attorney for a deceased third person not a party, compelled to be produced, the entries affecting the title of the party calling for them); 1842, Doe v. Date, 3 Q. B. 608, 617 (executor of G., lessor of defendant, compelled to produce for the plaintiff a rent-book, the executor not being a party, and the book not a title-deed).

UNITED STATES: Fed. 1879, U. S. v. Tilden, 10 Ben. 566, 578 (quoted supra; but here production was not required merely upon the chance of refreshing the witness' memory); 1883, Wertheim v. Continental R. & T. Co., 15 Fed. 716 (the president and secretary of a corporation, compelled by subpœna d. t. to produce the books and papers of the corporation in a suit to which the corporation was not a party); 1898, Goss P. P. Co. v. Scott, 89 Fed. 818 (contracts showing the precise extent of a witness' pecuniary interest in suit; production not required); Mass. 1859, Burnham v. Morrissey, 14 Gray 226, 240 ("We know of no rule of law which exempts any person from producing papers material to any inquiry in the course of justice merely because they are private"); Pa. 1815, Gray v. Pentland, 2 S. & R. 23, 31 (Tilghman, C. J.: "When a paper is in the hands of a third person who is not willing to part with it, the Court will sometimes compel its production by subpœna 'duces tecum'; but this is not to be obtained without special permission, and the Court always exercises its discretion in granting or refusing it"); S. Car. 1814, Hawkins v. Sumter, 4 Dess. Eq. 446 (surety for a sheriff required to produce sheriff's books); W. Va. 1881, Moats v. Rymer, 18 W. Va. 642, 645 (Amey v. Long, ante, § 2200, approved; here applied to a document showing the amount of an attorney's fee).

Distinguish the process of obtaining discovery before trial from a witness not a party (ante, §§ 1857, 1858).

The following ruling is anomalous: 1886, Masters v. Marsh, 19 Nebr. 458, 467, 27 N. W. 438 (account-books of third persons were excluded, on the theory that it would be absurd to suppose that "the private account-books of every person" could be compelled to be shown and "subjected to the espionage of the parties"; no authority is cited, nor could be).

might be only too glad to take advantage of them.[2] It comes therefore to be a fundamental maxim of the dominant class that each occupant is entitled to keep secret his documents of title. Without this, almost any title in the country might lie in jeopardy. It is an absolute demand of self-interest that the appearance shall pass for the reality, and that land-possessors shall not be obliged to occupy and to invest on sufferance, in the constant risk of an overturn through the disclosure of their defective title in the course of testimony casually required for the benefit of strangers litigant. This principle, then, that the disclosure of title-deeds in litigation between other parties was not compellable, appears to have been always accepted in English courts, coming down as an unquestioned tradition; and it was occasionally extended to documents other than those affecting land; though it seems ever to have been regarded as limited by the trial Court's discretion.[3]

In the United States and Canada, however, no reason exists for perpetuating such a privilege. The ethics of it, indeed, may be questionable, for the law hardly does well in lending aid to protect one who is by hypothesis not a lawful owner; nevertheless, in England, the law's failure to protect titles adequately by registration, and the inevitable risks which were thereby created for even 'bona fide' titles, furnished a sufficient explanation, and justification. But under a system of compulsory public registration of titles or of conveyances there is in such a privilege neither necessity nor utility. Those who do not register their deeds are few in number; they voluntarily take the risk of loss; and their situation does not justify special protection. Those who do register their deeds have no need for such protection; their

[2] Mr. Samuel Warren's novel, Ten Thousand A Year, turns on such a situation.

[3] 1796, Miles v. Dawson, 1 Esp. 405, Kenyon, L. C. J. (a witness not compelled to produce a warrant of attorney, on the analogy of Chancery's not compelling a 'bona fide' equitable owner to produce); 1815, Copeland v. Watts, 1 Stark. 95 (a lease belonging to a third person, produced and read, the judge believing that its production would not be prejudicial to the third person's interests); 1815, Reed v. James, 1 Stark. 132 (a petitioning creditor summoned for assignees in bankruptcy to bring a bill of exchange; Ellenborough, L. C. J.: "You cannot with propriety withhold the instrument; I cannot, however, do more than advise you to exercise a sound discretion on the subject"); 1816, Corson v. Dubois, Holt 239 (Gibbs, C. J., compelled the production of papers of bankruptcy assignees not parties, the production not being prejudicial to them); 1817, Roberts v. Simpson, 2 Stark. 203 (trustee, being grantee of the plaintiff, not compelled to produce his title deeds for the defendant); 1822, Harris v. Hill, 3 Stark. 140 (composition deed between a third person and his creditors, held privileged); 1829, R. v. Hunter, 3 C. & P. 591, 592 (forgery; as to deeds in a witness' possession, "if these deeds form a part of the evidence of this lady's title to any part of her own estate, you cannot compel her to produce them"); 1834, Mills v. Oddy, 6 C. & P. 728, Parke, B. (lease not compelled to be produced); 1848, Doe v. Langdon, 12 Q. B. 711, 719 (an abstract held not privileged, where no injury could be apprehended by its production).

The privileged witness would of course not be compelled to testify to contents: 1842, Davies v. Waters, 9 M. & W. 608, 612; though he could be required at least to describe his deed for identification: 1847, Doe v. Clifford, 2 C. & K. 448; 1854, Phelps v. Prew, 3 E. & B. 430, 438 (on claim of privilege for a title-deed, the party then proposing to give other evidence of contents by one who had seen the alleged deed, held not an infringement of the privilege to compel the deed's production for identification by the witness, the outside alone being perused; Wightman, J.: "His privilege is only not to produce the instrument for the purpose of disclosing its contents").

But the party could prove the contents by any other evidence available: 1826, R. v. Upper Boddington, 8 Dowl. & R. 726; 1834, Marston v. Downes, 6 C. & P. 381, 382; 1850, Newton v. Chaplin, 6 C. B. 356, 367; and the third person's claim of privilege was an excuse for the party's not producing the original: ante, § 1212.

title, in general, stands or falls by what is publicly recorded, not by what they privately possess; and there is no appreciable motive for demanding a privilege of secrecy for that which can neither hurt nor help them. Accordingly, in the United States, this exceptional privilege has not only not been judicially sanctioned, but does not appear even to have been claimed.[4]

(b) Where a person holds a document, not his own, but subject to a lien which would be lost by his surrender of possession, or owns and holds a document, such as a bill of exchange, whose continued possession is necessary for the enforcement of his right under it, he may fairly claim not to be compelled to surrender it for evidential purposes in litigation between other parties. This privilege, however, it will be observed, is not to withhold disclosure of contents, but only to retain possession;[5] although in a few instances there has been an ill-considered suggestion (due probably to a confusion of this rule with the rule in England for title-deeds to land) that disclosure was not compellable.[6]

Nevertheless, there is one situation in which with propriety the Court may decline even to compel disclosure, namely, the case in which the litigant party seeking to compel it is the person against whom the lien of the witness runs. Here his right to use the document evidentially might, on the facts, practically annul the value of the lien, and there is no reason why this should be permitted him:[7]

[4] The following Canadian statutes appear also to negative it: B. C. Rev. St. 1911, c. 127, § 87; Man. Rev. St. 1913, c. 171, §§ 54–56 (privilege apparently abolished, under the system of title-registration).

The following statute gives a limited recognition: Conn. Gen. St. 1918, § 5767 (party answering on discovery need not disclose "his title to property the title whereof is not material to the trial").

[5] Eng. 1818, Commerell v. Poynton, 1 Swanst. 1 ("A solicitor cannot by virtue of his lien prevent the King's subject from obtaining justice"); 1818, Mayne v. Hawkey, 3 Swanst. 93, 95; 1830, Hunter v. Leathley, 10 B. & C. 858, 862 (action against underwriters; a broker compelled to produce the policy, though he had a lien upon it); 1833, Thompson v. Mosely, 5 C. & P. 501 (one claiming a lien on a bill was required to produce, but not to surrender it; "you can stand by the witness while he looks at it"); 1848, Ley v. Barlow, 1 Exch. 800 (action between allottee of shares and director of a company; document in the hands of defendant's attorney who had a lien for charges due from the company; Parke, B.: "The lien cannot defeat the right to inspect the documents; the case of Hunter v. Leathley was a solemn decision"); Can. 1868, Deadman v. Ewen, 27 U. C. Q. B. 176 (attorney having a lien, held bound to produce the deed; the Court "would have protected any lien he had"); U. S. 1844, Morley v. Green, 11 Paige N. Y. 240 (witness claiming a lien must produce the document as evidence, but need not surrender it to the Court's custody, even though the lien be deemed by the Court not to exist); 1845, Aiken v. Martin, 11 Paige N. Y. 499, semble (same).

[6] Eng. 1842, Kemp v. King, 2 Moo. & Rob. 437 (a deed of assignment held by an attorney under his lien for costs; privileged); 1847, Doe v. Clifford, 2 C. & K. 448 (attorney holding a deed as mortgagee of defendant not compellable to produce it); U.S. 1830, Bull v. Loveland, 10 Pick. Mass. 9, 14 (action on a note; the possessor of the note had received it from the plaintiff for collection and a sum was due him for advances made under the agreement; held privileged from production; when the retention is on a claim of "legal or equitable interests of his own, it is a question to the discretion of the Court under the circumstances of the case whether the witnesses ought to produce or is entitled to withhold the paper"); 1855, White v. Harlow, 5 Gray Mass. 463, 466 (attorney held on the facts not to have such a lien on a note as to be entitled to withhold it).

[7] 1898, Davis v. Davis, 90 Fed. 791 (attorney claiming a lien on papers as against the party summoning him, held not compellable, since "the value of the lien often lies almost altogether in the power to withhold the papers from use as evidence"; otherwise, where the

1922, ROGERS, J., in The Flush, 2d C. C. A., 277 Fed. 25, 30: "As a matter of principle, and without regard to authorities, it seems to us that a client's right to inspect the papers upon which the attorney's lien exists should be denied. His lien is a mere retaining lien, and gives him only a right to retain them until his charges are paid. He has no right of sale, and his right of retention is valuable only in proportion as the papers are valuable to his client. The leverage which the possession of the papers affords depends upon how embarrassing to the client the possession of them by the attorney is. If the client is given the right to inspect the papers or to compel their production while the lien continues, it certainly impairs the value of the lien, as it diminishes the embarrassment caused by the attorney's retention of them, and might make them valueless to the attorney, and the lien nugatory. At the argument counsel gave a homely, but effective, illustration of this. He said that a blacksmith has a lien on a horse for its shoeing, and can retain possession of the horse. If he were compelled to let the owner have the use of the horse whenever he so desired, the blacksmith would simply be left with the privileges of feeding and caring for the horse."

From the foregoing exceptions to the general doctrine must be distinguished those cases in which a privilege has been asked for a document held by the witness as attorney and thus governed by the principles of a special exemption (post, § 2307); those cases, also, in which the document is held by a trustee or other person as the agent of the party opponent, and is thus at common law privileged from production except upon a chancery bill of discovery (post, § 2219); and those cases, finally, in which the document is desired to be held back as a confidential communication in general (post, § 2286).

§ 2212. (3) Trade Secrets and Customers' Names; Official Secrets. In a day of prolific industrial invention and active economic competition, it may be of extraordinary consequence to the master of an industry that his process be kept unknown from his competitors, and that the duty of a witness be not allowed to become by indirection the means of ruining an honest and profitable enterprise. This risk, and the necessity of guarding against it, may extend not merely to the chemical and physical composition of substances employed, and to the mechanical structure of tools and machines, but also to such other facts of a possibly private nature as the names of customers, the subjects and amounts of expense, and the like. Accordingly, there ought to be and there is, in some degree, a recognition of the privilege not to disclose that class of facts which, for lack of a better term, have come to be known as trade secrets.

Nevertheless, the occasional necessity of recognizing it should not blind us to the danger of such a measure, or entice us into an unqualified sanction for party summoning is not the lienee); 1921, The Flush, Appeal of Thompson, 2d C. C. A., 277 Fed. 25 (attorney's lien upon client's papers; collecting the English cases; quoted supra); 1886, Cobb v. Tirrell, 141 Mass. 459, 5 N. E. 828 ("The plaintiffs claimed a right to put the note in evidence as that declared upon by them and as the foundation of their suit, and requested the Court to order the witness to produce the note for these purposes aforesaid, the witness contending and claiming that it was his own property [and not the plaintiff's property]. This was in effect to ask the Court to decide, in a suit to which F. [the witness] was not a party, that a valuable piece of property belonged to the plaintiffs, and not the witness in whose possession it was. . . . The rights of one actually in possession of property, and claiming to be lawfully so, cannot be dealt with in this summary manner").

such a demand. In the first place, in an epoch when patent-rights and copyrights for invention are so easily obtained and so amply secured, there can be only an occasional need for the preservation of an honest trade secret without resort to public registration for its protection. Such instances do occur, but an object of the patent and copyright laws is to render them as rare as possible, and the presumption should be against their propriety. In other words, a person claiming that he needs to keep these things secret at all should be expected to make the exigency particularly plain.[1] In the next place, the occasion for demanding such a privilege arises usually in actions where the party claiming it is one charged with infringing the rights of another by fraudulent competition in business, and the existence of the fraud can be proved only by investigating the claimant's methods of business; in such cases, it might amount practically to a legal sanction of the fraud if the Court conceded to the alleged wrongdoer the privilege of keeping his doings secret from judicial investigation. No privilege at all should there be conceded, although as much privacy as possible might be preserved by compelling disclosure no farther than to the judge himself, or to his delegated master or auditor, if (as is usual) the cause is tried by chancery procedure. Finally, even where the claimant of the privilege is not a party charged with fraud, no privilege of secrecy should be recognized if the rights of possibly innocent persons depend essentially or chiefly, for their ascertainment, upon the disclosure in question.

In short, the privilege should be conceded in those cases only where the disclosure of the facts by the particular channel of the witness in question is but a subordinate means of proof, relative to the other evidence available in the case; for without some such limitation the general principle cannot be enforced (ante, § 2192) that testimonial duty to the community is paramount to private interests, and that no man is to be denied the enforcement of his rights merely because another possesses the facts without which the right cannot be ascertained and enforced. The simple expedient of restricting the disclosure to the judge or his delegate will usually prevent whatever detriment might otherwise be incurred by forcing a public revelation of the trade secret:

1870, HATHERLEY, L. C., in Moore v. Craven, L. R. 7 Ch. App. 94, note: "The Court does not, when discovery is a matter of indifference to the defendant, weigh in golden scales the questions of materiality or immateriality; but where the nature of the discovery required is such that the giving of it may be prejudicial to the defendant, the Court takes into consideration the special circumstances of the case, and whilst, on the one hand, it takes care that the plaintiff obtains all the discovery which can be of use to him, on the other, it is bound to protect the defendant against undue inquisition into his affairs. The question of materiality must be tested by reference to the case made by the plaintiff's pleadings, and to what will be in issue at the hearing."

§ 2212. [1] The arguments of policy against fostering such secrecy are powerfully set forth, from the point of view of the industrial scientist, by Mr. James Douglas, of New York, in a paper entitled "Secrecy in the Arts" (Trans. of the American Institute of Mining Engineers, July, 1907).

What the state of the law actually is would be difficult to declare precisely.[2] It is clear that no absolute privilege for trade secrets is recognized. On the

[2] It should be noted that in those of the ensuing cases which arose on interrogatories of discovery to a party the traditions of chancery might make more of a concession to the privilege than otherwise:

ENGLAND: 1726, Shelling v. Farmer, 1 Stra. 646 (trespass against one who had been governor of a factory of the East India company; defendant called for the company's books to prove his orders; the company objected that "it might be of mischievous consequence if, in every action wherein the company is not concerned, they should be obliged to lay open the secrets of their trade," but "submitted to the directions of the Court"; Eyre, C. J., said he "would not oblige the company to produce them," and so left us to our liberty); 1775, Maharajah Nundocomar's Trial (quoted ante, § 2193); 1834, R. v. Webb, 1 Moo. & Rob. 405, 412 (manslaughter by the use of a noxious pill; the proprietor of the pill, which was not patented, on being asked whether it contained gamboge, was not allowed to decline on the ground of keeping a trade secret, though the counsel was recommended to ask as little as "the ends of justice required"); 1856, Tetley v. Easton, 18 C. B. 643 (infringement of patent; discovery of names and addresses of vendees is not privileged merely because the customers may be exposed to action); 1857, British Empire S. S. Co. v. Somes, 3 K. & J. 433 (action to recover money extorted on an excessive claim; the plaintiffs held entitled to discovery as to labor and materials entering into the cost, but not as to the accounts of wages actually paid to workmen); 1860, Telford v. Ruskin, 1 Dr. & Sm. 148 (bill for account against a surviving partner; discovery of the account-schedule in his answer, compelled, against the objection that the private affairs of his debtors would be disclosed); 1861, The Don Francisco, 31 L. J. N. S. Adm. 205 (injury to cargo; discovery as to letters, compelled, against the objection that they would disclose "the secrets of his business"); 1862, Howe v. McKernan, 30 Beav. 547 (action for selling machines falsely under the plaintiff's name; discovery of prices, profits, and customers' names, compelled, against the objection that the secrets of his trade would be disclosed); 1864, Renard v. Levinstein, 10 L. T. R. N. S. 94 (infringement; defendant compelled to answer as to his secret processes; "the Court will be able at the proper time to protect the defendant from any improper disclosure of his secret"); 1870, Moore v. Craven, L. R. 7 Ch. App. 94, note (like the next case); 1871, Carver v. Pinto Lette, L. R. 7 Ch. App. 90, 96 (infringement of trademark; discovery as to defendant's customers' names, addresses, and prices, not required where it was "likely to be injurious to the defendant" and not likely to help the plaintiff's proof of his case); 1873, Great Western Colliery Co. v. Tucker, L. R. 9 Ch. App. 376 (bill founded on the defendant's agency for the plaintiff; discovery as to the defendant's sales and profits and other "private transactions," not compelled); 1875, Heugh v. Garrett, 44 L. J. Ch. 305 (bill for account against an agent for the sale of a patent; discovery compelled as to quantities and prices of goods sold, but not as to customers' names and addresses); 1883, Badische A. & S. Fabrik, L. R. 24 Ch. D. 156, 157, 159, 169, 176 (infringement of patent; the defendant objecting to a cross-examination upon his secret process, "Mr. Justice Pearson considered this objection to be reasonable, and allowed the examination to be continued upon that principle"; afterwards the defendant elected to disclose, and the evidence was heard 'in camera'; the shorthand notes were impounded, and the judge refrained from stating the process in his opinion; sensible opinion by Pearson, J.; concerning this case, Lord Alverstone in his Recollections of Bar and Bench (1915, p. 189) says that this incident, which he describes somewhat differently, was "although not altogether unprecedented, at the same time comparatively rare"); 1890, Ashworth v. Roberts, L. R. 45 Ch. App. 623 (bill for account against the licensee of a patent, the defendant claiming non-user of the plaintiff's process and user of a secret process of his own; "the mere plea of secret process does not preclude an answer"; here he was compelled to answer as to his customers, though not as to his secret process); 1890, Mistovski v. Mandleberg, 6 Times L. Rep. 207 (action for breach of contract in improperly waterproofing cloth; answers to interrogatories compelled; Denman, J.: "It must not be supposed that there is an absolute privilege as to disclosure of a trade secret; it is a question of the exercise of judicial discretion; . . . the fact that it is a trade secret is not legally material"); 1900, Sacharin Co. v. Chemicals & D. Co., 2 Ch. 557 (infringement of patent; disclosure compelled of names and addresses of customers).

CANADA: 1883, Star Kidney P. Co. v. Greenwood, 3 Ont. 280 (secret medical formula of plaintiff, held privileged, in an action on a note for the purchase price, the defendant setting up fraudulent representations as to the curative qualities of the goods; an instructive case and a careful opinion).

UNITED STATES: Federal: 1886, Robinson v. Philadelphia & R. R. Co., 28 Fed. 340 (corporation-books; "care must be exercised to avoid unnecessary and improper inquiry into private affairs"; an answer will be demanded only where it is likely to be relevant); 1888, Moxie Nerve Food Co. v. Beach, 35 Fed. 465 (a witness for the complainant was asked on other hand, Courts are apt not to require disclosure except in such cases and to such extent as may appear to be indispensable for the ascertainment of truth. More than this, in definition, can as yet hardly be ventured.

The boundaries of this privilege run close to certain others. Distinguish the limitation of materiality in discovery by a party (post, § 2219), and the privilege for communications to an attorney, or to an expert witness acting cross-examination for the ingredients of the preparation; privilege allowed, because the commercial value of proprietary articles depended on the secrecy of their composition; Tetlow v. Savournin, supra, approved); 1889, Dobson v. Graham, 49 Fed. 17 (infringement of patent; the defendant's workmen not obliged to state wherein the defendant's machine differed from the plaintiff's, and inspection of the defendant's machinery not ordered; but otherwise, "if it were shown that these secrets were used as a cloak to cover an invasion of the plaintiff's right, or if there were reliable evidence tending to show it"); 1891, Johnson Steel Rail Co. v. North Branch Steel Rail Co., 48 Fed. 191 (infringement of patent; the manager of a corporation not a party to the suit was subpœnaed to produce certain drawings and templates; the defence being insufficiency of invention and public use, the Court held that the drawings in question were material as tending to prove this issue and that the witness must produce them); 1899, Gorham Mfg. Co. v. Emery R. T. D. Co., 92 Fed. 774 (manufacturer seeking to enjoin the sale by the defendant of goods said by the plaintiff to be imitations of his goods, but said by the defendant to be genuine; the defendant not bound to give the name of the intermediate vendor, where the plaintiff's only use of the fact could be to decline to sell further to such vendor); 1904, Herreshoff v. Knietsch, 127 Fed. 492, C. C. (rule for cross-examining to a secret invention in an interference case, considered); 1904, Crocker-Wheeler Co. v. Bullock, 134 Fed. 241, 245, C. C. (Cochran, J.: "It should be accepted, therefore, as correct law, that a witness should not be compelled to disclose trade secrets embedded in his head or in documents in his possession, when their disclosure will be prejudicial to him or his company, and they are not relevant to the controversy in the suit or action in which he is a witness, or otherwise admissible in evidence therein"; applied to a claim made on subpœna d. t. in a suit on a contract for exchange of shares of stock); 1910, In re Grove, 3d C. C. A., 180 Fed. 62 (infringement of patent on engines for torpedo-boat destroyers; some of the documents being apparently material, the Court ordered them to be produced before the examiner, subject to later determination by the Court); 1915, Marsland v. Du Pont de Nemours Powder Co., 3d C. C. A., 224 Fed. 689 (bill to enjoin disclosure by a former employee; general discussion of the terms on which a defendant should be allowed to disclose the process to expert witnesses before trial in order to prove his defence; valuable opinion by McPherson, J.); 1919, Herold v. Herold China & Pottery Co., 6th C. C. A., 257 Fed. 911 (disclosure of secret formula by assignor to subsequent employer; decree for defendant reversed, but subject to rehearing if plaintiff voluntarily disclosed his process to the trial judge 'in camera'); Iowa: 1909, Finn v. Winneshiek Dist. Court, 145 Ia. 157, 123 N. W. 1066 (tax assessment; plaintiff's books held not privileged, on the facts); Massachusetts: 1921, Gossman v. Rosenberg, 237 Mass. 122, 129 N. E. 424 (commissions on joint purchase of merchandise; plaintiff held not entitled to refuse to disclose the name of a purchaser; "the supposed right or privilege of the witness to refuse to disclose trade secrets however relevant to the matter . . . is essentially unsound"); New Hampshire: 1910, Boston & Maine R. Co. v. State, 75 N. H. 513, 77 Atl. 990 (tax-abatement; third person's private business, in general, not privileged; here, the value of stock in trade); New York: 1921, Kaumagraph Co. v. Stampagraph Co., Sup. App. Div., 188 N. Y. Suppl. 678, 684 (infringement of secret process by former employees of plaintiff; defendants disputed plaintiff's invention of secret process; proof 'in camera' before the judge, declared to be the suitable method); Pennsylvania: 1881, Tetlow v. Savournin, 15 Phila. 170 (bill by a manufacturer of cosmetics to restrain the defendant from using his trademarks; answer, that the plaintiff's articles, being injurious, should not be protected; discovery by the plaintiff of the ingredients of his articles, not compelled under the circumstances); Virginia: 1905, Worrell v. Kinnear, 103 Va. 719, 49 S. E. 988 (damages for breach of contract ordering the making of certain steel doors; the cost of manufacture being in issue, questions as to the plaintiff's amount of business, fixed charges, etc., were held privileged, as "unduly prying," on the suggestion that the sole business competitor of the plaintiff was in collusion with the defendant).

The following odd case belongs perhaps under this principle: 1899, Alvord v. Alvord, 109 Ia. 113, 80 N. W. 306 (son's petition for guardian for a mother alleged to be insane; mother not bound to disclose the terms of a will made by her). Add the Sugar Trust case in Congress: U. S. v. Chapman, Smith's Digest of Precedents of Congress, 1894, pp. 797, 810.

as attorney (post, §§ 2301, 2307). Distinguish also the substantive law as to enjoining the unlawful disclosure of a trade secret.[3] Distinguish further the privilege against the disclosure by an official of business secrets contained in a report required by law to be made to him; this includes reports of property made to an assessor, and of the details of an unfinished invention under caveat (post, § 2377), as well as information acquired by a factory-inspector, mine-inspector, or railway-commission (post, § 2377).

The question of privilege as to bankers, telegraphers, trustees, journalists, etc. (post, § 2286) involves still different principles.

Official Secrets. There must be a privilege for secrets of State, i. e. matters whose disclosure would endanger the nation's relations of friendship and profit with other nations. This privilege, however, has been so often improperly invoked and so loosely misapplied that a strict definition of its legitimate limits must be made. In order to distinguish it from other principles justifying the exclusion of official documents, these various principles, superficially related, must be considered together and the precedents discriminated — in connection with the privilege for Communications between Government and Informer (post, §§ 2367–2376).

§ 2213. (5) Theological Opinions. That a privilege should be needed against the disclosure of one's theological opinions would have been maintainable up to three generations ago, more plausibly than it is to-day, when religious rancor is less marked and mutual toleration more general. Nevertheless, considering that the establishment of such matters can rarely be of value in the ascertainment of litigated facts, and that, whenever it is, the tenor of a man's opinions can usually be sufficiently ascertained from his voluntary extrajudicial professions, without putting him to his oath in court, it would seem wise to sanction the privilege, especially since the lack of it might lead to gratuitous attempts to annoy witnesses on cross-examination. The privilege can be recognized, subject to the judge's discretionary right to compel disclosure whenever it seems necessary to the ascertainment of the main facts in litigation:

1879, FOSTER, J., in Free v. Buckingham, 59 N. H. 219, 225: "It is not customary in modern practice to permit an inquiry into a man's peculiarity of religious belief. This is not because the inquiry might tend to disgrace him, but because it would be a personal scrutiny into the state of his faith and conscience, contrary to the spirit of our institutions. A man is competent to testify who believes in the existence of God and that divine punishment, either in this life or the life to come, will be the consequence of perjury. No judicial tribunal is bound to inquire, nor ordinarily will inquire, whether a witness be a Protestant or Romanist, Trinitarian or Unitarian, a Shaker, Mormon, Jew, or Gentile, a Spiritualist or a Materialist."

As a matter of precedent, such facts were originally privileged from disclosure so far as they involved the witness in a crime or forfeiture, in the period when the Catholic religion brought its adherents within the intolerant penalties of the law.[1] But the privilege was afterwards recognized, at least in the United States, upon the broad ground that theological opinions as such were protected from self-disclosure.[2] Furthermore, under the constitutional provisions guaranteeing freedom of religious belief and competency as a witness irrespective of theological opinion, the Courts often prohibit inquiry into a witness' opinions; but whether this is done on the ground of the irrelevancy of the matter of inquiry, or on the ground of privilege, or of both, is usually not easily ascertainable from the judicial language.[3]

[3] Eng. 1851, Morrison v. Moat, 9 Hare 241; 1857, Gartside v. Outram, 26 L. J. Ch. N. S. 113; U. S. 1903, Stewart v. Hook, 118 Ga. 445, 45 S. E. 369; 1868, Peabody v. Norfolk, 98 Mass. 452; 1897, Thum Co. v. Tloczynski, 114 Mich. 149, 72 N. W. 140; 1903, Stone v. Goss, 65 N. J. Eq. 756, 55 Atl. 736.

§ 2214. (6) Political Votes. In general, there is no need of a privilege against the disclosure of political opinion, because it is not for the interest of the community that such beliefs should remain secret. The formation of a sound public opinion, by discussion and comparison, is essential in all representative government; and there is no good reason why any citizen should be encouraged to go through life with mute secrecy upon his political views.

But the secrecy of his vote is a different thing. The community's interest is that the citizen's vote, the culminating act by which his opinion is made most effective, should be absolutely sincere, i. e. should represent accurately his opinion upon the persons or the propositions presented for choice. At the time of voting, especial danger exists that influences of oppression will prevail to coerce the elector into an insincere vote. This danger affects the welfare of the State itself, as dependent upon freedom of political action. While, therefore, there may be no warrant for sanctioning secrecy of political opinion as such, there is a need for securing secrecy of voting, in order that the vote § 2213. [1] 1696, Sir John Freind's Trial, 13 How. St. Tr. 17; 1743, Craig v. Earl of Anglesea, 17 How. St. Tr. 1347; 1781, Lord Gordon's Trial, 21 How. St. Tr. 519.

[2] Eng. 1856, Darby v. Ouseley, 1 H. & N. 1, 10 (inquiries as to Catholic doctrines, held improper; "it is said that the answer would go to the witness' credit, but that is not so"); 1861, Maden v. Catanach, 7 H. & N. 360 ("a witness who does not object to take the oath can be compelled to answer" on 'voir dire' as to religious belief).

U. S. 1881, Guiteau's Trial, II, 1007 (District Attorney: "Do you believe in a God?" The Court: "You are not obliged to answer that question, doctor"; Dr. Spitzka: "I decline to answer it, on principle, as, from my point of view, an impertinent question in a country that guarantees civil and religious liberty"); 1881, Searcy v. Miller, 57 Ia. 613, 621, 10 N. W. 912 (witness not allowed to be cross-examined as to atheism); 1883, Dedric v. Hopson, 62 Ia. 562, 563, 17 N. W. 772 (similar); 1829, Com. v. Bachelder, Thacher's Cr. C. Mass. 197 (privilege recognized); 1854, Com. v. Smith, 2 Gray Mass. 516 ("The want of such religious belief must be established by other means than an examination upon the stand. He is not to be questioned as to his religious belief, nor required to divulge his opinions upon that subject in answer to questions put to him while under examination"); 1860, Com. v. Burke, 16 Gray 33 (even after the statute making disbelievers competent and allowing religious belief to affect credibility); 1879, Free v. Buckingham, 59 N. H. 219 (quoted supra).

The privilege, it would seem, does not sanction a general refusal to be a witness: 1793, Stansbury v. Marks, 2 Dall. Pa. 213 (witness refusing to be sworn, because, being a Jew, "it was his Sabbath," fined for contempt).

[3] Ante, § 1820 (oath).

These constitutional provisions are collected ante, § 1828 (oath); they sometimes provide that no witness shall be "questioned as to his religious opinions." Compare also the cases on the question whether theological opinion may be proved by other testimony to affect his credibility (ante, § 935), and on the propriety of inquiring into theological belief for the purpose of ascertaining the most binding form of oath (ante, § 1820).

may correctly represent the opinion. In short, the danger that the citizen himself may incur enmity or other detriment by the compulsory disclosure of his true opinion, at ordinary times or in court, is not to be regarded as worth attention; but the danger to the State, of obtaining a false index of his opinion, at the crucial moment of voting, is decidedly to be guarded against. The main expedient for this purpose is to provide such apparatus at the polls as secures permissive, and, under modern systems, compulsory secrecy.[1] But this expedient would be deficient if also the privilege were not conceded of being silent ever afterwards as to the tenor of the vote. Thus it is that the privilege of not disclosing, in a court of justice, a formal act of expression of the witness' political opinion done at a prior time comes to be recognized as a corollary of the secrecy of the ballot.

That a privilege exists not to disclose by the witness' own testimony the tenor of his vote, has not been doubted, either under the earlier American system of permissive secrecy at the polls or under the modern Australian system of compulsory secrecy: [2]

1868, CHRISTIANCY, J., in People v. Cicott, 16 Mich. 283, 297, 313: "The object of this [constitutional] requirement [providing that all votes be given by ballot], when considered with reference to the history of our country and the whole theory of popular government, where suffrage is practically universal, is too plain to be misunderstood. It was to secure the entire independence of the electors, to enable them to vote according to their own individual convictions of right and duty, without the fear of giving offense or exciting the hostility of others. And with this view the right is secured to every voter of concealing from all others, or from such of them as he may choose, the nature of his vote, or for what person or party he may have voted." CAMPBELL, J.: "Our whole ballot system is based upon the idea that, unless inviolable secrecy is preserved concerning every voter's action, there can be no safety against those personal or political influences which destroy freedom of choice."

But certain discriminations are necessary:

(a) If the vote was illegal, the privilege is not applicable, since no pro-

[1] § 2214. [1] 1889, Wigmore, Australian Ballot System, 2d ed., 50.

[2] To the following cases, add those in the ensuing note:

ENGLAND: 1872, St. 35 & 36 Vict. c. 33, § 12, Ballot Act ("No person who has voted at an election shall, in any legal proceeding to question the election or return, be required to state for whom he has voted").

CANADA: These are like the English statute: Dom. St. 1920, 10–11 Geo. V, c. 46, § 93 (Dominion elections); B. C. Rev. St. 1911, c. 72, §§ 98, 160 (in proceedings where the scrutiny of ballots becomes necessary, "the mode in which any particular elector has voted shall not be discovered until he has been proved to have voted and his vote has been declared by a competent Court to be invalid"); Newf. Consol. St. 1916, c. 3, § 110; N. Sc. Rev. St. 1900, c. 5, § 82; Ont. Rev. St. 1914, c. 8, § 166.

UNITED STATES: Ala. St. 1911, No. 259, p. 249, Apr. 6, § 32 (primary elections; witness compellable "to answer if he voted . . . and to answer touching his qualifications"; and if not qualified, "he may be required to answer for whom he voted," with immunity from prosecution); St. 1915, No. 78, p. 218, § 41 (primary elections); 1887, Dixon v. Orr, 49 Ark. 238, 242; 1887, Pedigo v. Grimes, 113 Ind. 148, 150, 13 N. E. 700; 1918, Powers v. Harten, 183 Ia. 764, 167 N. W. 693; 1895, Com. v. Barry, 98 Ky. 394, 33 S. W. 400; 1892, Attorney-General v. McQuade, 94 Mich. 439, 444, 53 N. W. 944; 1895, Schneider v. Bray, 22 Nev. 272, 39 Pac. 327; 1863, People v. Pease, 27 N. Y. 45, 71, 81, per Selden, J., semble, and Denio, C. J.; 1851, Kneass' Case, Pa. Com. Pl., 2 Pars. Eq. Cas. 553, 585; Pa. St. 1874, May 19, § 34, Dig. 1920, § 10068 (contested elections); 1916, Beauregaard v. Gunnison City, 48 Utah 515, 160 Pac. 815 (residence).

tection is needed for any but those entitled as electors to cast a vote.[3] Nevertheless, an actual voter would be protected by the privilege against self-crimination (post, § 2250) from disclosing the fact of his illegal voting;[4] though not from disclosing the tenor of the vote, if the fact of voting were otherwise evidenced.[5]

(b) The elector may waive this privilege, either expressly at the trial or by conduct prior thereto.[6]

(c) It has been suggested that a due regard for the purpose of secrecy requires that even other testimony than the voter's shall also be excluded.[7]

[3] Ida. Comp. St. 1919, § 7290 (voter may be compelled, in an election inquiry, to disclose his qualifications; if not qualified, he must "answer for whom he voted"; no answer "shall be used against him in any criminal action"); Ill. 1898, Eggers v. Fox, 177 Ill. 185, 52 N. E. 269 (but the opinion carelessly fails to discriminate between the privilege against self-crimination, and that of electoral privacy); 1899, Gill v. Shurtleff, 183 Ill. 440, 56 N. E. 164; 1901, Sorenson v. Sorenson, 189 Ill. 179, 59 N. E. 555; 1909, Buckingham v. Angell, 238 Ill. 564, 87 N. E. 285; Ind. 1887, Pedigo v. Grimes, 113 Ind. 148, 151, 13 N. E. 700 (but the illegality of the vote must first be shown; here the decision followed a statute, reserving the question of the constitutionality of the statute); Ia. Comp. C. 1919, § 591; Kan. G. S. 1915, § 4276 ("if he was not a qualified voter," witness must answer "for whom he voted"; but "no part of his testimony shall be used against him in a criminal action"); Ky. 1899, Tunks v. Vincent, 106 Ky. 829, 51 S. W. 622; 1913, Vansant v. McPherson, 155 Ky. 34, 159 S. W. 630 (no privilege for a legal voter casting a ballot illegal because cast after the lawful hour); 1919, Black v. Spillman, 185 Ky. 201, 215 S. W. 28 (illegal voters may testify for whom they voted, and may decline only on the ground of self-crimination); La. 1893, Tullos v. Lane, 45 La. An. 333, 341, 12 So. 508; Mich. 1868, Christiancy, J., in People v. Cicott, 16 Mich. 283, 314; Nebr. Rev. St. 1922, § 2080; Nev. Rev. L. 1912, § 1825 (election contest; every person refusing to answer "touching his right to vote" is punishable); N. J. Comp. St. 1910, Elections, § 171 (the Court may require answers as to qualifications; if found not qualified, "then the Court can compel him to answer for whom he voted"; and criminating answers are not to be used against him); N. C. 1890, Boyer v. Teague, 106 N. C. 576, 625, 11 S. E. 665 (the trial judge to determine whether the vote was illegal); Cons. St. 1919, § 6096 (in election contests, "no witness . . . shall be excused from discovering whether he voted at such election, . . . and if he was not a qualified voter, he shall be compelled to discover for whom he voted"); Or. 1890, State v. Kraft, 18 Or. 550, 556, 23 Pac. 663; Pa. 1861, Thompson v. Ewing, 1 Brewst. 67, 100; S. D. 1895, Vallier v. Drakke, 7 S. D. 343, 64 N. W. 181, semble; Wis. 1868, State v. Hilmantel, 23 Wis. 422, 425.

Some of the statutes quoted post, § 2281 (privilege against self-crimination) take away this privilege by granting immunity.

[4] 1868, State v. Olin, 23 Wis. 309, 318.

[5] Can. Br. C. Rev. St. c. 72, § 160 (quoted supra, n. 2); U. S. 1901, Black v. Pate, 130 Ala. 514, 30 So. 434; 1909, Buckingham v. Angell, 238 Ill. 564, 87 N. E. 285; 1868, State v. Hilmantel, 23 Wis. 422, 425.

For statutes designed to take away this privilege by granting immunity, see post, § 2281.

[6] Eng. 1874, North Durham Case, 3 O'M. & H. 1 (question as to a voter's party, allowable if he has "held himself out as belonging to one party"); 1880, Harwich Case, O'M. & H. 61, 64 (same); U. S. 1901, Black v. Pate, 130 Ala. 514, 30 So. 434; 1906, State v. Matlack, 5 Pen. Del. 401, 64 Atl. 259 (misconduct of election officers in misreading ballots at a primary election; waiver allowed); 1868, Christiancy, J., in People v. Cicott, 16 Mich. 283, 314 (by declaring at the polls his intention to make his vote public and by openly showing it); Mich. Comp. L. 1915, § 3816 ("the ballot of no person shall be inspected or identified" without his written consent, unless he has been convicted of false swearing therein or was unqualified as a voter); 1904, Lane v. Bailey, 29 Mont. 548, 75 Pac. 191 (good opinion by Callaway, C.); 1851, Kneass' Case, Pa. Com. Pl., 2 Pars. Eq. Cas. 553, 585 (careful opinion).

Contra: 1896, Major v. Barker, 99 Ky. 306, 310, 35 S. W. 543 ("If he were permitted to so testify, he could then be subjected to a moral compulsion from his party associates; one party might obtain from willing witnesses testimony which the other party would be powerless to rebut because unable to compel a statement of the truth").

[7] 1868, Campbell and Christiancy, JJ., in People v. Cicott, 16 Mich. 283 (in the opinions partly quoted supra). No other sanction for this suggestion seems to have been given. The following case perhaps belongs here: 1765, R.

Theoretically such a consequence might follow; but, under the improved systems of polling-apparatus nearly everywhere now required, it is virtually impossible, except in rare instances, to identify a particular voter with his ballot; so that the question is no longer a practical one, except as concerns the use of the voter's own hearsay statements of the tenor of his vote; these are without the present privilege, because they represent a voluntary waiver of it (supra, par. (2)), and the only question can be whether they are admissible under the Hearsay rule (ante, § 1712).

(d) Where a statute expressly requires the ballots to be destroyed unopened, except in the case of an election-contest, the question arises whether they can be examined for any other purpose in a judicial inquiry. Here, however, the present principle is not involved, for there is no attempt to identify the ballots with a particular voter, either by asking for his own testimony or otherwise. Hence, the decision should depend solely upon the implied effect of the statutory language.[8]

(e) Where the certificate of an election board is questioned as to its correctness of enumeration, the question arises whether it is to be deemed conclusive or may be overturned by a recount of the ballots or the tally-lists; this involves the principle of conclusive testimony (ante, § 1351).

§ 2215. (7) Personal Disgrace or Infamy. The common law recognized in some degree a privilege against disclosing facts involving one's own disgrace or infamy. This privilege has already been examined, both in its history and its present scope, in considering the subject of impeaching the character of witnesses (ante, §§ 984, 986, 987); for it is necessary to discriminate between the judge's discretionary control over the subject of the questions to be put and the witness' privilege not to answer a question allowably put. Of this privilege (in such jurisdictions as still recognize its validity) it is enough here to recall that it does not apply to facts material to the issue, and that it does not extend to matters merely tending to disgrace, i. e. matters not in themselves disgraceful; and in these respects it differs from the privilege against disclosing self-criminating facts.[1]

It may be added that the term "scandal," as indicating matters which a party in equity, when subjected to a bill of discovery, need not answer, is

r. Vice-Chancellor, 3 Burr. 1647, 1662 (voting for the High Steward of Cambridge University; Wilmot J., said that the proctor's oath of secrecy "could not defend the taker of it from giving evidence before a court of justice").

[8] Allowed: 1890, Re Massey, 45 Fed. 629 (grand jury's investigation of a false return by an election officer; held that the local statutes requiring the ballots to be preserved secret, unless in case of a contested election, did not prevent their disclosure in a judicial inquiry; the local constitution and the general principle of the ballot being the foundation for this conclusion); 1892, Com. v. Ryan, 157 Mass. 403, 32 N. E. 349 (similar). Contra: 1892, Ex parte Brown, 97 Cal. 83, 31 Pac. 840 (under a statute requiring the preservation of ballots unopened for a year, and then their destruction, except only when a contest occurs as to the result of the election, the ballots cannot be examined in a criminal proceeding against an election officer; the statute having in effect made an exclusive rule of evidence).

§ 2215. [1] The detailed points in which its operation is to be discriminated from the self-crimination privilege are noticed under the latter head (post, § 2255).

For the witness' liability to expose his body, for evidential purposes, see post, § 2216.

not intended to correspond to the subject of the present privilege of a witness in common-law trials; it designates, by a peculiar distortion of meaning, the privilege against self-crimination.[2]

§ 2216. (7) Witness' Body, Chattels, or Premises; Exhumation of Corpse. The testimonial duty (ante, §§ 2192–2194) includes every form of disclosure which may assist in the ascertainment of the truth. It is not confined to utterances of the voice. It extends to documents (ante, § 2200). It extends also to the human body and to chattels and premises possessed. Apart from any one of the specific privileges already examined, is there ground for claiming a privilege to decline testimonial disclosure in any form other than that of speaking words or producing documents?

The answer must be in the negative:

1887, BREWER, J., in U. S. v. Mullaney, 32 Fed. 370 (compelling a defendant to write his name): "Then the other phrase is, whether you can compel a witness on cross-examination to do other than answer questions. This was a physical act which he was called upon to do in the presence of the jury. It is a matter of common experience in a courtroom that witnesses are often called upon either for some exposure of their person or to do some physical act supporting or contradicting their testimony. A chemist who has stated that a certain test discloses the presence of poison may be called upon to repeat that test in the presence of the jury, that they may see whether the testimony is true and the test accurate. A person who testifies to his physical condition may be compelled (there being no improper exposure of person) to uncover his body, that the jury may see whether there be such a physical condition as he has testified to. The witness may say, for instance, that he was never wounded in the arm, and on cross-examination it would be competent to compel him to lift up his sleeve, that the jury may see whether or no there was a scar or mark of wound on his arm."

Nevertheless, Courts have occasionally entertained a doubt, in this respect, of the same unfounded nature as that which was once raised (ante, § 2200) for the production of documents, — that is, a doubt as to the existence of appropriate process to compel this sort of testimony. Upon this ground such a compulsion has sometimes been refused. But how culpable is this self-stultifying concession by a Court of Justice that it knows of no process to execute its powers for enforcing a conceded duty! There need not be a precise precedent for everything. Were the judges of Charles II or George III, who themselves were but the followers of six centuries of royal judges, the last generation vested with the authority to apply old principles in new forms? Nobody has been able to find any definite authority for the 'duces tecum' form of subpœna; but the judges of 1808 were not moved by such trifling; such a power, they declared (ante, § 2193) is "essential to the very existence and constitution of a Court of common law." The mere phrasing of an auxiliary writ is not to stand in the way of inherent powers. Is there any known precedent of a writ to a court-bailiff ordering him to shut the doors to keep out an excessive throng, or to open the windows to let in fresh air? But no judge ever refrained from such orders because he had never seen such a form. The ordinary subpœna for a witness is of no avail when he is in prison; but the judges — somebody, sometime, no one knows who or when — varied the form of words and ordered the jailer 'habeas corpus ad testificandum' (ante, § 2199). They did not supinely sit and watch justice defrauded of testimony because the usual piece of parchment did not precisely fit the exigency. The Courts can as well command a witness to let the jury, or qualified experts, inspect his premises, his chattels, or his person, as to produce his documents. It is not to be supposed that our Courts will finally commit themselves to the denial of such a plain dictate of principle and of common sense.

[2] 1831; Hosmer, C. J., in Skinner v. Judson, 8 Conn. 528, 533 ("The term 'scandal,' that protects a person from making answer, has a meaning limited and technical. Fraud, in the established sense of the word, is not the scandal, but this epithet is applicable to crime only. Notwithstanding the answer of the defendant, by the discovery of a private fraud, may tend to cast great reproach on his conduct and character, still he is compellable to make answer. But to the scandal and infamy arising from crime, he is never to be accessory by being compelled to make discovery").

(a) As to chattels, the question has seldom arisen; but the principle applies broadly to civil and criminal cases.[1] Here the additional question may be involved of the right to inspection before trial (ante, § 1862).

The exhumation of a corpse, often a material assistance in insurance or inheritance cases, is demandable on this principle; subject of course to the trial Court's discretion as to necessity and propriety.[2]

(b) As to premises, the principle can of course find application only in an order for inspection by jury or experts. Presumably its application would § 2216. [1] Production compellable: 1906, Finnick v. Peterson, 6 P. I. 172 (embezzlement of jewelry by Pascual; on the trial, the witness Peterson, in possession of the jewelry, was held bound to produce it in subpœna, under C. C. P. § 402); Production refused: 1880, Re Shephard, 3 Fed. 12 (subpœna will not issue to bring any but writings or books, as defined in U. S. Rev. St. § 869; here refused for patterns of stove-castings); 1891, Johnson S. S. R. Co. v. North B. S. Co., 48 Fed. 191, 194 (drawings, but not templates, held within a subpœna d. t.).

Compare the cases as to the party-opponent's privilege (post, § 2221); as to discovery before trial (ante, § 1862); and as to view by jury (ante, § 1163).

[2] Eng. 1907, Druce's Case, Duke of Portland's Case (cited fully, post, § 2221); U. S. 1906, Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Griesa, C. C. Kan., 156 Fed. 398 (insured fell from the roof of a house and died; the issue was whether he had committed suicide by taking morphine and had intentionally fallen so as to conceal the suicide; the insurer's application for an order to exhume the body and to appoint a pathologist to examine it was granted; excellent opinion by Smith McPherson, J.); 1908, Gray v. State, 55 Tex. Cr. 90, 114 S. W. 635 (murder; whether two bullet-holes, one in the deceased's back and one in his breast, were made by two bullets fired by the defendant, or by a single bullet entering and leaving and fired from the front; if the former, two bullets would be found in the body; defendant applied for an order to perform an autopsy; deceased's body had been buried by his relatives, who refused to consent to an exhumation; the trial Court having refused the application, and a verdict of guilty being rendered, the judgment was set aside for that error; Ramsey, J., in an able and convincing opinion: "In legal reason, and based on public policy and enlightened justice, there can be no reasonable doubt as to what the Court should do in such a case as is here presented; . . . the power inheres in such a court; . . . if it can be said that there is no precedent for such an action, it can never be said again"; Brooks, J., diss., on the ground of the immateriality of the fact sought); 1914, State ex rel. Meyer v. Clifford, 78 Wash. 555, 139 Pac. 650 (claim of alleged children of an intestate to inherit; the opposing administrator maintained that the intestate had been castrated in infancy, and that the claimants, children of his first wife, were therefore not of his paternity; on affidavits of physicians that an examination of the body would disclose with reasonable certainty whether he had been castrated, the trial Court ordered an exhumation, in proceedings to approve the administrator's report; an alternative writ of prohibition was denied, on technical grounds).

Compare the cases cited post, § 2221 (party-opponent's privilege as to exhumation of corpse).

be unquestioned, at least under the broad language of some modern statutes.[3]

(c) As to a witness' living body, whether by self-exhibition to the jury at the trial, or by inspection of experts out of court, there is ample authority denying any privilege of non-disclosure; the trial Court's discretion determining the necessity and the suitable conditions. But many Courts still decline to take this liberal view, even in cases where this form of evidence is most necessary, as on a charge of rape or slander of chastity.[4] It is astonish-

[3] Compare the citations post, § 2221 (party-opponent's privilege), ante, § 1862 (discovery before trial), and ante, § 1163 (view by jury).

[4] The cases on both sides are as follows: the distinction between a party and a third person is here little more than technical, especially in criminal cases, and the precedents in § 2220, post, are therefore also relevant; the statutes and rulings as to inspection for venereal disease are placed in § 2220: Alabama: 1889, McGuff v. State, 88 Ala. 147, 7 So. 35 (rape under age of a child C., who testified; the defendant's request at the trial for a "committee of competent physicians to examine the person of the said C., in order that they might testify," held properly refused, on the grounds (1) that if recognized as a matter of right, "many modest and virtuous females" would be deterred from testifying; (2) that the trial Court in any event should have discretion; (3) that no necessity here existed; the first ground is inadequate, for the known readiness of some not virtuous females to make false charges of rape demands that the accused be given every safeguard; the third ground is also inadequate, for the necessity must usually exist unless there is ample other eye-witness testimony); 1893, King v. State, 100 Ala. 85, 14 So. 878 (assault; the person assaulted, being examined for the prosecution, was held compellable, at the defendant's instance, to exhibit his wounded arm to the jury, "no question as to the delicacy of the proposed exhibition" being involved); Arkansas: 1894, McArthur v. State, 59 Ark. 436, 27 S. W. 628 (slander of J. by charging fornication with M.; J. having testified denying fornication with M. or any one else, a motion by defendant to compel J. "to submit to an examination of her person" was held properly denied, on the ground that it "would shock the modesty of any innocent woman"; forgetting about the immodest and non-innocent woman, as in McGuff v. State, Ala., supra); Delaware: 1903, State v. Pucca, 14 Del. 71, 55 Atl. 831 (rape under age; prosecuting witness ordered to submit to physical examination by a surgeon on behalf of the defendant); Georgia: 1910, Crosby v. Potts, 8 Ga. App. 463, 69 S. E. 582 (Powell, J., approving the principle); Kentucky: 1920, Thomas v. Com., 188 Ky. 509, 222 S. W. 951 (detaining a female to have carnal knowledge against her consent; the accused having set up the female's consent and her frequent prior intercourse with him, and she having affirmed "that she had never had sexual intercourse with the accused nor any other person," defendant moved that she be subjected to a physical inspection by experts as to the fact of non-intercourse; motion denied on the ground that she was a "mere witness"; this ground was inadequate, because she was by her testimony trying to put defendant into the penitentiary, and if false she was a dangerous and wicked person; this ruling makes it a farce for this Court ever to talk about protecting the innocent accused with rules of evidence); Michigan: 1904, McKnight v. Detroit & M. R. R. Co., 135 Mich. 307, 97 N. W. 772 (physician's action for services to injured passengers at the defendant's request; one of these passengers, having testified for the defendant, was asked by the defendant to exhibit his leg to the jury, but declined; held privileged; no authority cited in support); Oklahoma: 1915, Walker v. State, 12 Okl. Cr. 179, 153 Pac. 209 (rape on a child under 14; physical examination of the child, held demandable, on the facts); Porto Rico: 1903, People v. Roman, 5 P. R. 17 (rape; the defendant's request that the Court "cause the women to appear in court that they might be recognized by the aforesaid witness," held improperly refused"); 1904, People v. Charon, 7 P. R. 416 (seduction; the accused called for a medical examination of the woman, to show her virginity; refused, because a physician had already examined her and reported upon it); Texas: 1898, Whitehead v. State, 39 Tex. Cr. 89, 45 S. W. 10 (slander of chastity of a woman; a motion to appoint a committee of physicians to examine the complaining witness was refused; held that such an order would be left to the trial Court's discretion); 1903, Bowers v. State, 45 Tex. Cr. 185, 75 S. W. 299 (slander charging unchastity; trial Court's refusal to order a physical examination of the complaining witness, held proper); West Virginia: 1921, State v. Driver, 88 W. Va. 479, 107 S. E. 189 (attempt to commit rape under age on A. B. aged 12; the defense claimed that A. B. was mentally defective and a sexual liar; a motion before trial to appoint a physician to make a complete physical examination of A. B. was held properly denied on the facts, ing that Courts are so prone to ignore the propriety of getting at the truth by direct and simple methods, especially when modern science can here be of such peculiar assistance.

In all of the foregoing forms of disclosure by third persons, the considerations of personal privacy, so far as they have any value, are the same as for the party-opponent. In the latter case, there enters the additional element of the common-law testimonial privilege of the party-opponent; but since that has been abolished by modern legislation, the modern authorities on that point have a bearing on the present one. To that privilege we now come.

§ 2217. (8) Party-Opponent in the Civil Suit at Bar; History and Policy of the Party's Privilege. It is a little singular that the oldest and once the most firmly established of all the privileges should be also the most obscure in its history and precise mode of origin. That the party-opponent in a jury-trial at common law was not compellable to be a witness seems unquestioned, since the beginning of recorded trials, though it is not explicitly stated until the late 1700s.[1] On the other hand, that a party-opponent in chancery was compellable to answer interrogatories under oath, like any witness, is equally clear, from the beginning of systematic chancery-practice.[2] The absence of a privilege in chancery is easily explainable; because the Chancellor merely adopted the system of the ecclesiastical Courts, in this as in so many other respects; and the ecclesiastical practice regarded as compellable the party, no less than other persons.[3] But why was this not done in common-law trials also? Before the statute of Elizabeth, which virtually created compulsory process for witnesses in jury-trials,[4] it is easy to see that a party-opponent was not compellable to appear; but, after that time, from the middle of the 1500s, why were not parties summoned by subpœna like other desired witnesses, as they were in chancery? It might be thought that, under the then prevailing notions, the party's resort to his own oath, being regarded as an advantage offering too easy a mode of exoneration,[5] the first party would not care to call his opponent, and thus the question would not arise. Yet, if this were the reason, why was there such a common resort to the opponent's compulsory testimony in chancery? There seems to be no certain clue yet discovered to the incongruity, in popular and professional conceptions, of partly on the ground that the State did not propose to prove penetration; but the other information on her physical and mental condition would have been useful; the Court expresses a doubt as to the authority to compel an examination without the female's consent; the ruling is fundamentally unsound, and especially for cases of sexual offenses of any sort); Wisconsin: 1902, Goodwin v. State, 114 Wis. 318, 90 N. W. 170 (complaining witness, held not subject on the facts to medical examination, after leaving the stand, to ascertain whether she was suffering from hysteria as affecting her credibility).

Whether a person under arrest (not a witness) may be measured, photographed, or physically examined, is considered post, § 2265, under the privilege against self-crimination.

For the privilege of a party in civil cases, see post, § 2220; for the self-crimination privilege, see post, § 2265; for the privilege against disclosure of disgraceful facts, see ante, § 2215.

§ 2217. [1] Cases cited post, § 2218.

[2] Tothill, 71, 85, 145, 146, temp. Eliz., in the end of the 1500s.

[3] Langdell, Summary of Equity Pleading, § 15.

[4] Ante, § 2190.

[5] E. g. in 1590, a judge offers the defendant liberty to speak on oath as a notable and exceptional favor; Udall's Trial, 1 How. St. Tr. 1282. Compare the explanations ante, § 575.

conceding the privilege in one set of trials and ignoring it in the other. We may suppose that in some way, not now appreciable by us, the party's appearance as a witness in jury-trials was regarded as wholly inappropriate, and that his incompetence to testify for himself, which was plainly a fundamental notion (ante, § 575), was somehow associated with a privilege not to be called against himself. Nevertheless, how readily the two might have been severed, even at an early date, and the common-law practice have been grafted with the chancery rule, may be seen from the circumstance that this very measure was taken in Massachusetts by the colonists, two centuries before the general reform of the law in that direction.[6]

As to the policy of such a privilege, it is amazing that there should have been so long a continuance in its recognition. The very denial of it in chancery, alongside of its recognition at common law, was an anomaly and an absurdity; and this the great commentator himself had long ago pointed out:

1768, Sir William Blackstone, Commentaries, III, 382: "The principal defects [of the common-law trial system] seem to be, 1, The want of a complete discovery by oath of the parties. This each of them is now entitled to have by going through the expense and circuity of a court in equity. . . . It seems the height of judicial absurdity that in the same cause between the same parties in the examination of the same facts a discovery by the oath of the parties should be permitted on one side of Westminster Hall and denied on the other; or that the judges of one and the same court should be bound by law to reject such a species of evidence if attempted on a trial at bar, but when sitting the next day as a court of equity should be obliged to hear such examination read and to found their decrees upon it. In short, within the same country, governed by the same laws, such a mode of inquiry should be universally admitted or else universally rejected."

It could hardly be doubted which rule would have to yield when such a uniformity as was here recommended should come about. The benighted doctrine of the common-law Courts could not prevail, when the force of reason and common sense was once brought to bear. Yet that force was singularly slow in being put into motion. One cause, of course, was the general inertia of the end of the 1700s in the matter of legal reform, — an inertia preserved in part, no doubt, by the general and fulsome laudation of the common law in the pages of the same learned commentator who so cautiously disapproved this particular feature of it. During that period, whatever progress was made showed itself solely in the realm of silent judicial development or principles, and not in frank legislative abolitions. The energies of the Legislature were absorbed in war and political affairs; moreover, its constitution could have afforded small play for reformers' notions.[7] With the exception of Fox's Libel Act (which, however, required a contest of twenty years' duration), no substantial improvement was made by statute for a century after Lord Hardwicke's time. After Lord Mansfield's powerful genius left the Bench, in 1788, the reactionaries under Lord Kenyon and Lord Eldon maintained almost unbroken control for more than a generation. But by the Reform Bill of 1832, when the legislative constitution was renovated, room was made for the long pent-up energy of reform.[8] In the next quarter of a century, so many statutes of improvement were enacted that the face of the law was transformed almost beyond recognition. Meanwhile the thunders of Bentham had made it certain that the rules of Evidence and Procedure would be among the first to feel the effect of the new forces. Some of his arguments on the present subject, which deserved to the full his ironies, are contained in the following passage:

[6] 1641, Mass. Body of Liberties (Whitmore's ed.), § 26 (every man may have help in pleading his cause, but "this shall not exempt the partie himself from answering such questions in person as the court shall thinke meete to demand of him").

[7] In the latter part of the period, to be sure (1800–1825), when the efforts of Romilly, Mackintosh, Taylor, and Williams might have had practical effects, it was to Lord Eldon's intolerant opposition that this failure was directly and chiefly due. "In the history of the universe, no man has the praise of having effected so much good for his fellow-creatures as Lord Eldon has thwarted" (England under Seven Administrations, I, 219; quoted in Martineau's History of England, III, 425).

1827, Mr. Jeremy Bentham, Rationale of Judicial Evidence, b. IX, pt. IV, c. III (Bowring's ed., vol. VII, pp. 445 ff.): "The question is, not whether a man shall be bound to commence a suit against himself; nor yet whether, without being called (the suit being commenced by any other person), he shall be bound to come and give evidence against himself; but whether, being called, and questions being put to him, he shall be bound to make answer to such questions. . . . Let us now take a more detailed observation of the mischiefs flowing from it. 1. In the first place, in so far as it is to be had, it has already been stated as being (not only upon the face of it, but by the confession of those who, notwithstanding, have been in the habit of excluding it) the very best possible sort of evidence: the evidence the most completely satisfactory. . . . 2. Under the distress produced by the exclusion put upon the best evidence, recourse has been had (through a sense of necessity, and that the wound given to justice might not be past endurance) to bad evidence of various descriptions. . . . 3. The person whose bosom is the source of self-disserving evidence (the plaintiff, or more commonly the defendant, in the cause) is one person; that person is forthcoming of course. Whatever evidence is extractible from that source, is extractible on the spot, and without addition to the expense. . . . To the list of the uses rendered to justice by this best of all evidence, corresponds the list of the mischiefs produced by the exclusion of it: promoting, in two distinguishable ways, misdecision and failure of justice; making a factitious addition to the natural and necessary quantities of delay, vexation, and expense. To these mischiefs may be added another, the opposite of which could not so conveniently have been presented under the head of uses: I speak of the poison continually infused by the exclusionary rule into the moral branch of the public mind. . . . 'Hold nothing for base and mean, — or, holding your heads high, and speaking in a tone of firmness and defiance, maintain that to practise whatever is most base and mean, is among the Englishman's most honourable privileges. Deny your own handwriting in so many words, — or, denying it in deportment as significative as words, refuse or bear to recognize it: deny your written words; and when a question is put to you by words spoken, keep your lips close, lest the truth should make its escape, and justice be done.' Such is the exhortation which the exclusionary rule never ceases to deliver to the people. Such is the lecture delivered by the judge, by every judge, as often as he marks with his approbation this flagitious rule. A man who, uninvested with any coercive power, should, in the character of a moral instructor — of a schoolmaster, a lecturer, or a divine — stand up and say to his auditors, 'If a man with whom you have a difference happens to have in his hands a letter or memorandum of yours that you apprehend would make against you, deny it, — do not own it, — put him to the proof of its being yours; and if he is not able, triumph over him as if he were in the wrong'; — if it were possible that a man without power for his protection should take upon him to preach such doctrines, he would be abhorred, and not without reason, as a corrupter of the public morals. What, then, shall be said of those by whom such baseness is not simply recommended, but efficaciously rewarded? Men sow vice, and then complain of its abundance! The same hands which are every day occupied in thus planting and propagating mendacity, are as constantly lifted up against it, and employed in punishing it. . . . The only sort of person to whom it is possible (speaking of suitors) to profit by the pretended tenderness of this rule, is the knavish and immoral suitor, who, being in the wrong, and knowing himself to be in the wrong, avails himself of the inability of the adversary to fulfil the conditions thus wantonly imposed upon him by the law, — avails himself of this misfortune to obtain a triumph over justice. It is for the purpose of rewarding and encouraging the inquity of one knave of this description, that the useless burthen above delineated is fastened upon the shoulders of perhaps a hundred suitors." [9]

[8] "For twenty-five long years did Lord Eldon sit in that court, surrounded with misery and sorrow, which he never held up a finger to alleviate. The widow and the orphan cried to him, as vainly as the town-crier cries when offered a small reward for a full purse; the bankrupt of the court became the lunatic of the court; estates mouldered away, and mansions fell down; but the fees came in, and all was well. But in an instant the iron mace of Brougham shivered to atoms this house of fraud and of delay" (Sydney Smith's Speech on the Reform Bill, 1831, Works, ed. 1869, p. 539).

1844, Lord LANGDALE, M. R., in Flight v. Robinson, 8 Beav. 22, 33: "According to the general rule which has always prevailed in this [chancery] court, every defendant is bound to discover all the facts within his knowledge, and to produce all documents in his possession which are material to the case of the plaintiff. However disagreeable it may be to make the disclosure, however contrary to his personal interests, however fatal to the claim upon which he may have insisted, he is required and compelled, under the most solemn sanction, to set forth all he knows, believes, or thinks in relation to the matters in question. The plaintiff being subject to the like obligation, on the requisition of the defendant in a cross bill, the greatest security which the nature of the case is supposed to admit of is afforded, for the discovery of all relevant truth, and by means of such discovery, this Court, notwithstanding its imperfect mode of examining witnesses, has, at all times, proved to be of transcendent utility in the administration of justice. It need not be observed, what risks must attend all attempts to administer justice, in cases where relevant truth is concealed, and how important it must be to diminish those risks. . . . The arguments which have been used in some late cases, seem (as was observed by the counsel for the plaintiff) to have assumed, that concealment of the truth was, under the plausible names of protection or privilege, an object which it was particularly desirable to secure, forgetting, as it would seem, that the principle upon which this Court has always acted, is to promote and compel the disclosure of the whole truth relevant to the matters in question, and that every exception requires a distinct and sufficient justification."

§ 2218. Same: (a) Testimony on the Stand; Discovery in Chancery; Statutory Changes. In the common-law courts, the party-opponent was not compellable to be a witness at the demand of the other party; this much has never been doubted.[1]

[9] Compare the arguments in Chief Justice Appleton's work on Evidence, c. V, p. 69.

§ 2218. [1] Besides the cases cited post, § 2222, which assume this principle, are the following: Eng. 1779, Cox v. Whalley, 10 East 399, note, semble; 1808, R. v. Woburn, 10 East 395, 403 (L. C. J. Ellenborough: "It is a long-established rule of evidence that a party to the suit cannot be called upon against his will by the opposite party to give evidence"); 1812, Fenn v. Granger, 3 Camp. 177; 1831, Worrall v. Jones, 7 Bing. 395.

U. S. 1827, Mauran v. Lamb, 7 Cow. N. Y. 174, 178.

The rule was even carried so far as to entitle one co-defendant to exclude the testimony of another; 1844, Frazier v. Laughlin, 6 Ill. 347, 360.

But in chancery the plaintiff (who might be identical with a defendant in some pending suit at law) was not obstructed by this privilege; by a bill of discovery he could insist on testimonial answers from his opponent:

1836, Lord LANGDALE, M. R., in Storey v. Lord Lennox, 1 Keen 341, 350: "From the mode of proceeding at common law, a man with the full knowledge of facts which would show the truth and justice of the case may, by concealing those facts within his own breast and merely for want of disclosure or evidence, succeed in recovering a demand which he knows to be satisfied or in resisting a demand which he knows to be just. This conduct is by Courts of equity considered to be against conscience; and they accordingly enable the party in danger of being oppressed by it to obtain from his adversary a discovery of the facts within his knowledge or belief by filing a proper bill for the purpose; and by the general rule the defendant to a proper bill for discovery is bound to make a complete disclosure of everything he knows or believes in relation to the matter in question."[2]

The subject of this right of discovery was, nevertheless, limited to the facts which bore upon the plaintiff's own case; he could not compel an answer upon facts affecting solely the opponent's own case. This limitation has been already examined in considering the right to discovery before trial (ante, § 1856); it is enough here to repeat that there is no reason for it, as applied to compelling testimony at the trial itself, nor is it apparently perpetuated under the statutory practice of to-day.

A few statutes, indeed, particularly in the Southern States and in special classes of litigation, had at an early date made the opponent compellable, but not competent, as a witness,[3] but the great majority employed a single enactment to declare him both competent and compellable. On the other hand, in a few statutes, the party was merely made competent (ante, § 488) without being expressly declared compellable also; but, in virtue of the constant association of the two principles in the history of the subject (ante, § 575) the Courts usually interpreted the statute to imply also the abolition of the privilege.[4] Finally, the common-law rule was abolished, by statutes dating from the second half of the 1800s, and in its stead was granted free scope for compulsory examination of the opponent as a witness.[5]

[2] There was, however, this limitation (due to nothing but a kind of perverse ingenuity), that the defendant in equity could not in turn examine the plaintiff as a witness, but must go to the formality of filing a cross-bill of his own: 1785, Hewatson v. Tookey, Dick. 799, per L. C. Thurlow; repudiating Troughton v. Getley, Dick. 382 (1766).

[3] E. g. in Missouri, by a statute of 1835; noted in Eck v. Hatcher, 58 Mo. 235, 239 (1874). So also a Federal statute of Dec. 17, 1849, antedated the English enactment.

[4] E. g. in Alabama, for the Code of 1867, § 2704; interpreted in Olive v. Adams, 50 Ala. 376 (1873).

So also the California Code and its followers; the clauses quoted ante, § 488, should be consulted.

[5] The following statutes are also collected ante, § 1856, and some of them are quoted in full ante, § 488; the Texas statute is here quoted in full as a typical one:

ENGLAND: 1851, St. 14 & 15 Vict. c. 99, § 2 (parties made compellable to testify).

CANADA: Alta. Rules of Court 1914, Nos. 234–250; B. C. Rules of Court 1912, Rules 343–370 t; Man. Rev. St. 1913, c. 46, Rules 398–423; N. Br. Consol. St. 1903, c. 111, § 240, c. 112, § 44, c. 127, § 4; Newf. Consol. St. 1916, c. 83, Ord. 28; N. W. Terr. Consol. Ord. 1898, c. 21, Rules 201–225; N. Sc. Rev. St. 1900, c. 163, § 35; Rules of Court 1900, Ord. 30, Rule 1; Ont. Rev. St. 1914, c. 76, § 6; Rules of Court 1914, Rules 327–337, 271–285; 1898, Fleury v. Campbell, 18 Ont. Pr. 110 (criminal conversation; defendant not compellable to be examined for discovery, under R. S. 1897, c. 73, § 7); P. E. I. St. 1873,

It may be noted that the statutory enactments are usually of two sorts, corresponding to the two purposes that were to be accomplished. One of these was the recognition of the right to compel the opponent to testify at the trial; this was in most jurisdictions provided in express terms. The other was the securing of the right to discovery of his evidence before trial; this was usually accomplished by authorizing the filing of written interrogatories, and thus transferred to common-law courts the chancery method of a bill of discovery. But this latter measure virtually accomplished also, at the same time, the former purpose; for the answers to these interrogatories could be put in at the trial as his admissions, without actually calling him to the stand; hence, in a few jurisdictions, this latter mode remains as the only one, and is regarded as sufficiently attaining both ends. In most jurisdic-

c. 22, § 245; Yukon: Consol. Ord. 1914, c. 48, Rules 211–235, c. 30, § 35.

UNITED STATES: Ala. Code 1909, §§ 4007, 4049; Ariz. Rev. St. 1913, Civ. C. §§ 1680, 1725–27; Ark. Dig. 1919, § 4144; §§ 1248–1260; Colo. Comp. St. 1921, § 6570; D. C. Code 1919, § 1063; Conn. Gen. St. 1918, §§ 5741, 5764; Del. Rev. St. 1915, § 4213; Fla. Rev. G. S. 1919, §§ 2734, 2735; Ga. Rev. C. 1910, §§ 4551, 5858; 1920, McAlpin v. Ryan, 150 Ga. 746, 105 S. E. 289 (under Code § 5861, a defendant in an action counting alienation of affections and criminal conversation is competent and compellable to testify to the former issue, though not to the latter); Haw. Rev. L. 1915, §§ 2591, 2592, 2612; Ill. Rev. St. 1874, c. 51, § 6; St. 1905, May 18 (Municipal Court), §§ 32, 33; Ind. Burns' Ann. St. 1914, § 533; Ia. Const. 1857, Art. I, § 4; Code 1897, §§ 3610, 3611, Comp. Code § 7247; Kan. Gen. St. 1915, § 7221; Ky. C. C. P. 1895, § 606, par. 8. §§ 143, 151; La. C. Pr. 1870, §§ 347–356; Me. Rev. St. 1916, c. 87, §§ 112, 115; Md. Ann. Code 1914, Art. 35, § 1; Mass. Gen. L. 1920, c. 231, §§ 61–67, 89; Mich. Comp. L. 1915, §§ 12022–12028, 12552, 12560; Minn. Gen. St. 1913, § 8377; 1900, Strom v. R. Co., 81 Minn. 346, 84 N. W. 46 (statute applied); Miss. Code 1906, § 1915, Hem. § 1575; Code § 1939, Hem. § 1599; Mo. Rev. St. 1919, §§ 5412, 5417; Nev. Rev. L. 1912, §§ 5420, 5421; N. H. Pub. St. 1901, c. 224, § 13; 1900, Whitcher v. Davis, 70 N. H. 237, 46 Atl. 458 (statute applied); N. J. Comp. St. 1910, Evidence § 9, Practice §§ 140–148; N. Mex. Annot. St. 1915, §§ 2169, 2171, 2172; N. Y. C. P. A. 1920, § 346; N. C. Con. St. 1919, §§ 900, 1793; N. D. Comp. L. 1913, §§ 7862, 7863, 7871; Ohio: Gen. Code Ann. 1921, § 11497, §§ 11348–11350; Okl. Comp. St. 1921, § 587; 1898, Re Abbott, 7 Okl. 78, 54 Pac. 319 (applying C. C. P. § 333); 1906, Re Wogan, 103 Mo. App. 146, 77 S. W. 490 (a party held compellable to depose, under the Oklahoma statutes); Pa. St. 1911, Mar. 30, § 1, Dig. 1920, § 21863, Witnesses; 1899, Costello v. Costello, 191 Pa. 379, 43 Atl. 240 (abolition of the privilege applies to divorce proceedings); S. C. C. C. P. §§ 667–674; S. D. Rev. C. 1919, §§ 2713–2716, 2717; Tex. Rev. Civ. St. 1911, § 3647 ("Either party to a suit may examine the opposing party as a witness, and shall have the same process to compel his attendance as in the case of any other witness. His examination shall be conducted and his testimony shall be received under the same rules applicable to other witnesses"); § 3663 ("The testimony of any witness, and of any party to a suit, by oral deposition and answer may be taken in any civil case in any of the District and County Courts of this State, in any instance where depositions are now authorized by law to be taken"); § 3679 ("The deposition of either party to a suit, who is a competent witness therein, may be taken in his own behalf in the same manner and with like effect with the depositions of other witnesses"); § 3680 ("Either party to a suit may examine the opposing party as a witness, upon interrogatories filed in the cause, and shall have the same process to obtain his testimony as in the case of any other witness; and his examination shall be conducted and his testimony received in the same manner and according to the same rules which apply in the case of any other witness, subject to the provisions of the succeeding articles of this chapter"); § 3684 ("The party interrogated may, in answer to questions propounded, state any matter connected with the cause and pertinent to the issue to be tried; and the adverse party may contradict the answers by any other competent testimony in the same manner as he might contradict the testimony of any other witness"); Vt. Gen. L. 1917, § 1898; Va. Code 1919, §§ 6208, 6213, 6214, 6225; Wash. R. & B. Code 1909, §§ 1225, 1903; Wis. Stats. 1919, §§ 4068, 4096–4098; Wyo. Comp. St. 1920, §§ 5689, 5808.

tions, both modes are provided for, as they should be, by separate statutes. The various enactments as to discovery before trial have been already considered (ante, § 1856). In their present aspect — that of the abolition of the opponent's privilege — they raise no question;[6] it is only as to the limits of discovery before trial that any difficulty still remains.

§ 2219. Same: (b) Production of Documents. At common law this same privilege of the opponent not to bear testimony extended to the documents in his possession. Unless in Lord Mansfield's time,[1] there seems to have been no suggestion of its denial.[2] There were, to be sure, a few classes of cases in which, before trial, one might, on motion or by demand of oyer, obtain the inspection and a copy of documents held by the opponent; and these constituted genuine exceptions to the rule, in so far as they virtually compelled the opponent to furnish to the first party the means of making proof of documents by copy at the trial; nevertheless, in form, there were apparently no exceptions to the rule that the opponent was privileged to refrain from any production or disclosure of documents at the trial.[3]

But, in chancery, as with oral testimony, so with documents, this privilege was not recognized. By bill of discovery, the production of documents was there compellable, — subject, indeed, to the same limitation (ante, § 2218) that only such documents as helped to prove the demandant's own case could be called for. In form, moreover, this was, for common-law purposes, a real nullification of the general rule, for it not only secured an inspection and copy, or an admission, before trial, of the document's contents, but it also secured, if desired, the production of the documents at the trial itself, in the hands of a court officer.[4]

[6] A few arguable points, independent of local statutory phrases, may still be raised (though their dependence on the adopted chancery methods places them without the present purview); for example, whether discovery can be had of an infant: Eng. 1890, Mayor v. Collins, L. R. 24 Q. B. D. 361; 1890, Redfern v. Redfern, Prob. 139, 146; and how discovery is obtained from a corporation: Eng. 1900, Welsbach I. G. L. Co. v. New Sunlight I. Co., 2 Ch. 1, 8; U. S. 1901, Toland v. Paine F. Co., 179 Mass. 501, 61 N. E. 52; 1901, Robbins v. R. Co., 180 id. 51, 61 N. E. 265.

For the privilege of a party not to disclose knowledge founded on information from his attorney, see post, § 2318.

§ 2219. [1] 1769, Roe v. Harvey, 4 Burr. 2484 (plaintiff refused to produce a deed completing his title and then in court; all the judges agreed that the refusal could be left to the jury as evidence; three of the four agreed that the plaintiff could not be compelled to produce it; Mansfield, L. C. J., declared that the Court "will force parties to produce evidence which may prove against themselves, or leave the refusal to do it, after proper notice, as a strong presumption, to the jury").

[2] Eng. 1800, Habershon v. Troby, 3 Esp. 38 (Lord Kenyon, C. J., said that a party could not be compelled to produce his books); U. S. 1830, Boyce v. Foster, 1 Bail. S. C. 540; 1832, Durkee v. Leland, 4 Vt. 612, 615.

[3] In Goldschmidt v. Marryat, 1 Camp. 559, 562 (1808), cited ante, § 1858, the production was at the trial itself; but this was unusual.

The history and conditions of compelling inspection before trial have been already fully examined (ante, § 1858), and need not be here repeated.

[4] Langdell, Summary of Equity Pleading, § 166. The conditions of production, under a bill of dicovery, have already been examined (ante, § 1857), and need not be here repeated.

It may be noted that the privilege to withhold title-deeds, accorded to third persons (ante, § 2211), gave way before the right of discovery in chancery from a party-opponent: 1855, Adams v. Lloyd, 3 H. & N. 351, 361 ("A man's title-deed is still protected, unless it tends to prove the case of the opposite party; if it does not, it is irrelevant").

This anomalous condition of the law had been vainly commented on by Mr. Justice Blackstone, two generations before any change took place:

1768, Sir William BLACKSTONE, Commentaries, III, 382: "A second defect [in the common-law mode of trial] is of a nature somewhat similar to the first [i. e. inability to compel an opponent to take the stand], the want of a compulsive power for the production of books and papers belonging to the parties. . . . In mercantile transactions especially, the sight of the party's own books is frequently decisive; as the day-book of a trader, where the transaction was recently entered as really understood at the time, though subsequent events may tempt him to give it a different color. And as this evidence may be finally obtained and produced on a trial at law by the circuitous course of filing a bill in equity, the want of an original power for the same purposes in the Courts of law is liable to the same observations [5] as were made on the preceding article."

This gentle criticism might almost as well never have been uttered. Nothing was done, nor even thought of being done, until Bentham's righteous indignation lashed the time-honored crudities of the ancient privilege, and stirred up the young reformers of the 1800s to aggressive action. As a part of the general movement of reform, the privilege to conceal truth by withholding documents was cut away and went by the board, along with the rest of the party's privilege. The Benthamic utterances which led to this are typified in the following passage:

1827, Mr. Jeremy Bentham, Rationale of Judicial Evidence, b. VII, c. VI (Bowring's ed. vol. VII, pp. 193 ff.): "When the article of written evidence, which the party in question stands in need of, happens to be in the hands of a party on the other side; when an instrument which a plaintiff (for example) stands in need of, happens to be in possession of the defendant, the sort of shift that has been made is truly curious. Under a rational system of procedure, the course is plain and easy: the evidence acted upon is of the best kind imaginable. Both parties being together in the presence of the judge, the plaintiff says to the defendant, 'To make out my case, I have need of such or such an instrument,' describing it: 'you have it; have the goodness to produce it.' 'Yes,' says the defendant (unless his plan be to perjure himself,) 'and here it is'; or, 'I have it not with me at present; but on such a day and hour as it shall please the judge to appoint, I will bring it hither, or send it to you at your house, or give you access to it in mine.' Under the technical system, no such meeting being to be had, no such question can at any such meeting be put. But, at the trial (viz. under the common-law, alias non-equity, system, of which jury trial makes a part,) at the trial, that is, after half a year's, or a year's, or more than a year's, factitious delay, with its vexation and expense, — then it is, that, for the first time, a chance for procuring the production of a necessary instrument may be obtained. . . . Under the name of a notice, a sort of requisition in writing calling upon him to exhibit it, may be, and every now and then is, delivered. Of this notice to exhibit the instrument, what is the effect? That the defendant is under any obligation to exhibit it? No such thing. To produce any such effect would require nothing less than a suit in equity; whereupon the instrument would be exhibited or not; and if exhibited, not till the end of the greatest number of years to which the defendant (having an adequate interest) has found it in his power to put off the exhibition of it. To have enabled the party thus far to obtain justice without aid from equity, would have been robbing the Lord Chancellor and the Master of the Rolls, and the swarm of subordinates of whose fees the patronage part of their emolument is composed. What then is the effect? Answer:

[5] Quoted ante, § 2217.

that, after this notice, if that best evidence which is asked for be not obtainable — not obtainable, only because those on whom it depends do not choose it should be obtained, — what is deemed the next best evidence that happens to be in the plaintiff's possession is admitted. . . . Good, all this, as far as it goes, — when so it is that a man's good fortune has put into his hands any such makeshift evidence. But if not, what in that case becomes of the notice? In that case, the wrongdoer triumphs; the party who is in the right loses his right, whatever it may be; and so the matter ends."

There could be no question about the need for reform. Every argument that was maintainable for compulsory oral disclosure (ante, § 2218) applied with double force to the production of writings. There might be a doubt as to the conditions for requiring the discovery of evidence before the time of the trial; that involved the principle of preventing unfair surprise and promoting speedy settlement of controversies (ante, § 1847). But there could be no doubt that at the trial itself, the party-opponent should be placed upon the same footing with witnesses in general; for the testimonial duty to disclose all facts within one's knowledge was particularly emphatic for the very party to the controversy.

By the middle of the 1800s,[6] statutes began to be passed, in nearly every jurisdiction, effectually annulling the common-law privilege and providing a means for compelling disclosure. These statutes, like those compelling the opponent's oral testimony (ante, § 2218), of which indeed they were the historical associates, either directly required production at the trial, or authorized inspection before trial, in the manner of a bill of discovery, or made both these provisions. The effect was to destroy the common-law privilege entirely, except as far as the limitations of the chancery rule for discovery were in some statutes maintained.[7]

[6] Earlier than this, in some States, e. g. in Vermont: Durkee v. Leland (1832), cited supra, note 2.

[7] These statutes, and the questions that arise thereunder, have been already quoted in full (ante, § 1859), and need not be again set out here. The following citations of them will suffice:

ENGLAND: 1851, St. 14 & 15 Vict. c. 99, § 6.

CANADA: Alta. Rules of Court 1914, Nos. 238–241, 364–376; B. C. Rules of Court 1912, Rules 343–370*t*; Man. Rev. St. 1913, c. 46, Rules 424–441; N. Br. Consol. St. 1903, c. 111, §§ 240–255, c. 112, §§ 72–80; Newf. Consol. St. 1916, c. 83, Ord. 28; N. W. Terr. Consol. Ord. 1898, c. 21, Rules 191–200, 207, 208; N. Sc. Rules of Court 1900, Ord. 30, Rules 12–22; Ont. Rules of Court 1914, Rules 348–353, 274; P. E. I. St. 1873, c. 22, § 244; St. 1853, c. 12, §§ 1, 9; Yukon: Consol. Ord. 1914, c. 48, Rules 201–210.

UNITED STATES: Fed. Rev. St. 1878, § 724, Code 1919, § 1361; Ala. Code 1907, § 4058; Alaska: Comp. L. 1913, § 1322; Ariz. Rev. St. 1913, §§ 1759, 1760; Ark. Dig. 1919, §§ 4137–4141; Cal. C. C. P. 1872, § 1000; 1902, Morehouse v. Morehouse, 136 Cal. 332, 68 Pac. 976 (party compelled to produce documents in her control, and to answer questions as to their possession, under C. C. P. § 1000); Colo. Comp. St. 1921, § 1774, C. C. P. § 390; Col. (Dist.) Code 1919, § 1072; 1901, District of Col. v. Bakersmith, 18 D. C. App. 574, 580 (expounding the procedure against a municipal corporation); Conn. Gen. St. 1918, §§ 5764–5769; Del. Rev. St. 1915, § 4228; Fla. Rev. Gen. St. 1919, §§ 2626, 2733; Ga. Rev. C. 1910, §§ 5837–5842; 1904, Carrington v. Brooks, 121 Ga. 250, 48 S. E. 970 (Code applied); 1905, Macon v. Humphries, 122 Ga. 800, 50 S. E. 986 (a production under order is a waiver of the right to object to an improper order); Haw. Rev. L. 1915, §§ 2591, 2592; Ida. Comp. St. 1919, § 7193; Ill. Rev. St. 1874, c. 51, § 6; c. 110, § 20; 1894, Lester v. People, 150 Ill. 408, 23 N. E. 387, 37 N. E. 1004 (scope of documents producible, considered); Ind. Burns' Ann. St. 1914, §§ 502, 503; Ia. Code 1897, §§ 4654, 4655; Comp. C. 1919, §§ 7361, 7362; Kan. Gen. St. 1915, § 7269; La. C. Pr. 1900, §§ 140, 473; Me. Rev. St. 1916, c. 87, § 24; Md. Ann. Code 1914, Art. 75, § 99; Mass. Gen. L. 1920, c. 231, §§ 7, 32, 38, 61–67; Mich. Comp. L. 1915, §§ 12025–

(a) Under the principle of these statutes, it has usually and properly been held that the simple method of subpœna 'duces tecum' (which was indeed the earliest proceeding for this purpose),[8] instead of the more formal motion to produce, may be used for compelling production of documents by the party-opponent at the trial.[9] The principles applicable generally to the subpœna 'duces tecum' have been already examined (ante, §§ 1894, 2200).

(b) When the subpœna is returned with the documents before trial begins, a question arises whether the documents may be impounded pending their use in evidence (ante, § 2200).

(c) In derogation of the general statutes abolishing a party's privilege, a few modern statutes provide an exemption for records or entries required by law to be kept, e. g. employer's records of injuries to employees. The policy of these statutes is to encourage the party to keep the records for use by 12027; Minn. Gen. St. 1913, § 8447; Miss. Code 1906, § 1003, Hem. § 723; Mo. Rev. St. 1919, §§ 1374, 1378, 5411; Mont. Rev. C. 1921, § 9771; Nebr. Rev. St. 1922, §§ 8901, 8902; Nev. Rev. L. 1912, § 5416; N. J. Comp. St. 1910, Practice, §§ 142, 143; N. Mex. Annot. St. 1915, §§ 4130, 4215–4217, 4245; N. Y. C. C. P. 1877, §§ 803–809, C. P. A. 1920, §§ 325–328, 411–414; N. C. Con. St. 1919, §§ 1823, 1824; 1906, Whitten v. Western U. Tel. Co., 141 N. C. 361, 54 S. E. 289 (telegram in possession of counsel on trial, compelled to be produced without prior notice, under Code 1883, § 1373, Rev. 1905, § 1657); N. D. Comp. L. 1913, § 7861; Oh. Gen. Code Ann. 1921, §§ 11551–11554; Okl. Comp. St. 1921, §§ 587, 634, 635; Or. Laws 1920, § 533; Pa. St. 1798, Feb. 27, Dig. 1920, § 10296; R. I. Gen. L. 1909, c. 292, § 50; S. C. C. C. P. 1922, § 665; S. D. Rev. C. 1919, § 2712; Tex. Rev. Civ. St. 1911, § 7814 (specially stringent provisions for investigations into trusts and trade-conspiracies); Va. Code 1919, § 6237; Wash. R. & B. Code 1909, § 1262; W. Va. Code 1914, c. 130, § 43; Wis. Stats. 1919, § 4183; 1919, Kellner v. Christiansen, 169 Wis. 390, 172 N. W. 796 (plaintiff not allowed to require production by the defendant of a report of an automobile injury, made by defendant to his insurer; the opinion cites as authority Lehan v. R. Co. and Bell v. M. E. R. & L. Co., post, § 2319, which were cases of statements made to the defendant by witnesses or agents, not cases of statements made by defendant himself to a third person; the astonishing novelty is thus introduced of nullifying the statute and exempting a party from producing his own documentary admissions); Wyo. Comp. St. 1920, §§ 5855–5858.

[8] Langdell, Summary of Equity Pleading, § 166; and ante, § 2200.

[9] 1891, Edison El. L. Co. v. U. S. El. L. Co., 44 Fed. 294, 45 id. 55; 1911, American Lithographic Co. v. Werckmeister, 221 U. S. 603, 31 Sup. 676 ("subpœnas 'duces tecum' may run to parties, as well as to others," and U. S. Rev. St. 1878, § 724, does not alter this); 1906, Banks v. Connecticut R. & L. Co., 79 Conn. 116, 64 Atl. 14 (under Gen. St. 1902, § 710, Gen. St. 1888, § 1099, cited ante, § 2218, n. 5, making an opponent compellable "as other witnesses," production of documents at the trial on motion is included; and such production at the trial is not "set about by the same limitations" as discovery of documents before trial under Gen. St. 1902, § 732, Gen. St. 1888, § 1062, allowing discovery, in its original phrasing, "as a court of equity might order"; such production may be obtained either by subpœna 'duces tecum' or by motion for an order during trial; good opinion by Prentice, J.); 1853, Bonesteel v. Lynde, 8 How. Pr. N. Y. 226, 231 (the object of the statute was "to place a party to an action in the same plight and condition with any other witness who is not a party, in relation to giving evidence at the instance of his adversary"); 1862, People v. Dyckman, 24 How. Pr. 222, 225; 1876, Smith v. McDonald, 50 How. Pr. 519; 1872, Murray v. Elston, 23 N. J. Eq. 212 ("Whoever before the statute could be a witness could be compelled by a subpœna 'duces tecum' to attend the trial with the required instrument . . .; the language of the statute removes all disabilities and makes all witnesses alike").

Undecided: 1894, Kirkpatrick v. Pope Mfg. Co., 61 Fed. 46, 49 (for actions at law).

Yet, for obtaining inspection before trial (ante, § 1859), a motion may be the more proper proceeding, since the conditions may be different: 1863, Woods v. DeFiganiere, 16 Abb. Pr. 159; 1876, Smith v. McDonald, 50 How. Pr. 519.

So also the original's production may be compelled without subpœnas, if it is in court, and the demandant is not relegated to secondary evidence: 1908, Kincaide v. Cavanaugh, 198 Mass. 34, 84 N. E. 307.

Compare the reverse question, ante, § 2200 (whether an order to produce on motion is appropriate for a third person).

administrative agencies of the government; for this purpose the party is given assurance that the record will not be used against him in ordinary litigation. This virtually creates a privilege for confidential communications, considered post, § 2377.

(d) From this common-law privilege, abolished by statute, the following principles affecting the production of documents are to be discriminated: (1) The right to inspect an opponent's documents before trial (ante, §§ 1857–1859); (2) the permission to use a copy, if upon the opponent's failure to produce after due notice (ante, §§ 1199–1210); such a notice never had any compulsory effect, but merely served as an excuse for resorting to a copy; (3) the evidential inference as to the contents, from the opponent's failure to produce (ante, § 291); (4) the presumption of authenticity, resulting from production by an opponent under claim of title (ante, §§ 1297, 1298, 2132); (5) the penalty of excluding a document, or of directing a nonsuit or default, when not produced or shown on demand (ante, § 1859*e*); (6) the right to use the whole of a document, when produced on demand and inspected by the party calling for it (ante, § 2125); (7) the privilege to withhold documents constituting communications between client and attorney (post, § 2307).

§ 2220. Same: (c) Corporal Exhibition. (A) The duty to bear witness to the truth, by whatever mode of expression may be appropriate, includes necessarily the duty to exhibit the physical body, so far as the ascertainment of the truth requires it (ante, §§ 2194, 2216). When a civil party's privilege at common law is abolished, why does he not come within this application also of the general testimonial duty, and become compellable to disclose to the tribunal such facts as are ascertainable by inspection of his body?

There is no logical escape from this consequence. The only objection of principle could be that, since the statutory changes affected in terms only the party's oral testimony and the documents possessed by him, his privilege remained as to other forms of testimony. This objection might well be answered by appealing to a liberal interpretation of the principle of these statutes, whose object, as often judicially declared, was "to place a party to an action in the same plight and condition with any other witness who is not a party." But it is not even necessary to resort to this answer; for, as it happens, the common law, while maintaining the civil opponent's privilege as to documents and oral testimony, did not recognize it in the particular respect of corporal exhibition; so that there was here nothing to abolish. In other words, the statutes expressly abolished that only which was before then plainly established; and no argument can be drawn from the statutes' failure to mention this other form of the privilege, because in this other form it had never become established.

This prior absence of a privilege is to be gathered from two or three indubitable classes of instances. The circumstance that none others are recorded proves no more than that it had never arisen otherwise for adjudication, and does not alter the fact that in the extremest sort of instance, where with some plausibility a privilege might have been claimed, it was never sanctioned, and that the Courts conceived themselves to have the power, and were ready enough to exercise it, whenever truth and justice required.

(1) The first of these instances was the writ 'de ventre inspiciendo,' available to facilitate the proof of heirship, whenever a supposititious birth was to be feared; it is thus described by the fathers of the profession:

1629, Sir Edward COKE, Commentary upon Littleton, 8 b: "When a man having lands in fee simple dieth, and his wife soon after marrieth againe, and faines herself with child by her former husband, in this case, though she be married, the writ 'de ventre inspiciendo' doth lie for the heire. . . . [But the heire apparent during the auncestor's life cannot have this writ, for divers causes, viz.,] fourthly, the inconvenience were too great if heires apparent in the life of their auncestor should have such a writ to examine and try a man's lawful wife in such sort as the writ 'de ventre inspiciendo' doth appoint; and [= for] if she should be found to be with child, or suspect, then she must be removed to a castle and there safely kept until her delivery, and so any man's wife might be taken from him against the laws of God and man."

1736, M. Bacon, Abridgment of the Law, "Bastard," A: "To prevent this doubtfulness in heirs, and to hinder the wife from putting false children upon her deceased husband, the law hath provided the writ 'de ventre inspiciendo' for the husband's heir; and if the wife be found with child, or suspected to be so, she must be removed to a castle and there safely kept till her delivery; and by this writ the heir may take her away from her second husband; but it lies not for the heir apparent, who hath no interest in the estate, in the life of the ancestor. This power of removing the relict of the ancestor to a castle, in case she really is or is suspected to be with child, seems only to be used where the woman still continues unmarried; for if she takes another husband, and the sheriff returns that he caused her to be searched by such women and found her to be 'ensient,' the course seems to be this, viz., for the husband to enter into a recognizance that she shall not remove from the house where they then inhabit; after which a writ is to be awarded to the sheriff to cause her to be viewed every day till her delivery, by two at least of the said women returned by him, and that three or more of them shall be present with her at her delivery."

The compulsory nature of this inspection was never doubted; and its firm place in our law is shown by the six centuries of time through which the employment of the writ persisted.[1]

§ 2220. [1] England: Circa 1260, Bracton, De Legibus, f. 69 (the various writs set out); Britton, f. 165 b (the procedure expounded); Registrum Brevium, 4th ed., 1687, f. 227 (writ set out); 1310, Batecoke v. Conlyng, Y. B. 3 Ed. II, No. 24 (dower; inspection of widow by judges to determine age); 1597, Willoughby's Case, Cro. Eliz. 566, Moore 523 (example of a writ granted against a widow not re-married); 1625, Theaker's Case, Cro. Jac. 656 (example of a writ granted against a widow who re-married within a week); 1731, Ex parte Aiscough, 2 P. Wms. 591 (example of a writ against a widow not re-marrying; the writ held "to be of common right," though no strong grounds for suspecting fraud were shown); 1786, Ex parte Bellet, 1 Cox Ch. 297 (writ grantable equally to a devisee by will as to an heir-at-law; "where there is 'eadem ratio,' there should be 'eadem lex'"); 1792, Re Brown, Ex parte Wallop, 4 Bro. Ch. C. 91 (writ granted against a widow re-married; writ not demandable of right, but only "wherever the justice of the case requires it"; here a hesitation, because the property was settled by will of a stranger in tail-male upon such child as the woman might have); 1845, Re Blakemore, 14 L. J. Ch. N. S. 336 (writ granted to persons entitled to remainder of personalty-trust, on a petition suggesting that the representations as to pregnancy were false); an instance of the resort to a jury of matrons occurred as late as 1879, before Mr. J. Denman; in this case he in effect directed them to accept the testimony of the expert witness: 14 Law Journ. 439.

United States: 1689, Anon., Pa. Col. Cas. 53 (fornication and bastardy).

(2) In the appeal of mayhem — the historical predecessor of the modern action for personal injury — an inspection of the plaintiff's body by Court, jury, and witnesses, to verify the maim, was demandable by the defendant.[2]

(3) On a bill for divorce, alleging impotency as the cause, it has always been regarded as lawful and proper to compel the party-opponent to submit to inspection for ascertaining the fact:[3]

1820, Sir William Scott (Lord STOWELL), in Briggs v. Morgan, 2 Hagg. Cons. 324, 329: "The usual mode of proof [of impotence, i. e. by inspection] is without question liable to strong objections on the ground of indelicacy; but it is the only effectual mode of proof, and the Court has already observed that it cannot, from feelings of delicacy alone, turn aside from it, if necessary, for such a result."

1881, Mr. Joel Prentiss Bishop, Marriage and Divorce, 6th ed., II, §§ 590, 591: "In proper cases, to aid the proofs of impotence, the Court appoints professional persons to examine the private parts of the parties and report to it whether or not they are severally capable of marriage-consummation, and whether or not the woman presents indications of her having had connection with man. It requires them to submit to such examination. The examiners are under oath, and are 'quasi' officers of the tribunal for the purpose. This is termed inspection of the person. The parts concerned in this controversy being always and properly concealed from public observation, if there was no method by which inspection could be compelled, justice would in many instances fail. Therefore, in England, Scotland, France, and probably every other country where this impediment to marriage is acknowledged, the Courts have required the parties, when necessary, to submit their persons to such an examination. . . . The necessity for this proceeding is in our States precisely the same as in England whence our laws are derived. Consequently it is adapted to our situation and circumstances; and, within the established rules, it should

[2] 1736, Matthew Bacon, Abridgment, "Trial" (A), 2, Amer. ed. 1854, vol. 9, p. 554 ("In an appeal of mayhem, the Court may at the prayer of the defendant, try, upon inspection of the part, whether there be a mayhem. . . . If the Court, upon inspecting the part in an appeal of mayhem, be doubtful whether there be a mayhem, a writ may be awarded to the sheriff, to return some able physicians and surgeons for the better information of the Court. . . . If the Court, after having inspected and receiving other evidence, be still doubtful, it has a power of refusing to determine the matter in question, and may send it to be tried by a jury," the old-fashioned "appeal" not being a jury-issue ordinarily); and authorities cited ante, § 1152, n. 3.

[3] Accord: Eng. 1613, Countess of Essex's Case, 2 How. St. Tr. 785, 803 (on the Countess' libel, charging the Earl's impotency, the Court ordered an inspection of herself by a committee of midwives and matrons; which was had); 1738, Oughton, Ordo Judiciorum, tit. 217, p. 320; 1820, Briggs v. Morgan, 2 Hagg. Cons. 324, 329 (quoted supra); 1905, W. v. S., Prob. 231 (order of inspection made, but not obeyed).

U. S. 1859, Anon., 35 Ala. 226, 228 (trial Court's discretion refusing it, affirmed); 1889, Anon., 89 Ala. 291, 7 So. 100 (submission to examination by plaintiff and defendant, required); 1883, Page v. Page, 51 Mich. 88, 16 N. W. 245 (divorce for cruelty and non-support; compulsory examination of defendant by physicians, apparently unnecessary and without authority; testimony of examiners excluded); 1919, Bolmer v. Edsall, 90 N. J. Eq. 299, 106 Atl. 646 (nullity for fraud; the Court may order inspection of defendant to ascertain whether marriage was consummated); 1836, Devanbagh v. Devanbagh, 5 Paige N. Y. 554, 558 (power of ordering inspection recognized); 1841, Newell v. Newell, 9 Paige N. Y. 25 (same); 1862, LeBarron v. LeBarron, 35 Vt. 364, 368 (general power to order examination, affirmed).

So also for other issues of chastity, etc., in divorce: 1905, Morales v. Rivera, 8 P. R. 442 (divorce; for unchastity prior to marriage, the husband had sent his wife back to her parents, and she now sued for divorce; the plaintiff having been examined for virginity by five physicians at her own request, all of whom agreed as to her virginity, held that a further examination by the judge should not be required).

For further details, see an article by Mr. D. M. Cloud, "Physical Examination in Divorce," 35 Amer. Law Rev. 698 (1901).

be deemed a part of our unwritten law. . . . The result is that it is acknowledged in every State from which we have decisions, except Ohio, and it may well be deemed to be American doctrine."

(4) A person sought to be restrained as insane is customarily subjected to medical inspection by order of the Court; [4] and no one has ever claimed that there was a privilege against such an inspection, or that such orders transgressed the bounds of judicial power or propriety. This principle has received further extension, by modern public health statutes, to persons believed to be suffering from contagious diseases, — in particular, leprosy [5] and venereal disease.[6] In juvenile courts (where under the enlightened type of procedure

[4] Cases cited ante, § 1160. The following statutes carry out the principle: Cal. Pol. C. §§ 2153, 2186 (physicians "must make a personal examination" of a person brought for committal as insane); Ga. Rev. C. 1910, § 3092 (commission in lunacy shall "examine by inspection the person"); Ida. Comp. St. 1919, § 1181 (commitment of insane; physician "must make a personal examination of the alleged insane person"); § 1222 (similar, for commitment of feeble-minded or epileptic); Kan. Gen. St. 1915, § 9600 (judge may require "personal examination" of alleged insane person by physicians); Mich. Comp. L. 1915, § 1324 (committal to insane asylum; the certifying physicians are "empowered to . . . make such personal examination of him," etc.); § 1546 (similar for committal of feeble-minded, etc.); R. I. Gen. L. 1909, c. 96, §§ 1, 17 (commissioners may have "personal examination" of alleged insane person); S. D. Rev. C. 1919, § 10071 (county board of insanity shall appoint a physician to "make a personal examination . . . touching the actual condition" of a person sought to be committed as insane); Va. Code 1919, § 1017 (physicians may make "personal examination" of alleged insane, etc., person).

In the statutes cited ante, § 2090 (expert witnesses required for committal of the insane), a few additional provisions may be found.

[5] Cal. Pol. C. 1872, § 2955 (State commissioner of immigration, to determine leprosy, etc., of immigrant, must make "personal inspection and examination of all persons so arriving"); § 3018 (similar, for County quarantine-officer); § 2979 (State board of health may examine "persons, places, and things"); Haw. Rev. L. 1915, § 1097 (committal of leper; the alleged leper may be examined by physicians).

So also for contagious or infectious disease in general: 1922, People ex rel. Barmore v. Robertson, 302 Ill. 422, 134 N. E. 815 (order of State board of health, quarantining petitioner in her own home, because of being a typhoid-carrier, held valid; here the party had submitted to analyses).

[6] These statutes are of two different sorts: (1) for examining persons already convicted of an offense; (2) for examining a person suspected of having the disease, with a view to isolating him:

CANADA: Alberta: St. 1918, c. 50, § 3 (person committed under arrest or conviction may be examined for venereal disease); Manitoba: St. 1919, c. 109, § 13 (Provincial board of health may provide for examining "persons suspected of being infected with venereal disease"); Newfoundland: St. 1921, c. 14, § 5 (every person under arrest is liable to physical examination for venereal disease); § 6 (if a person fails to consult a medical advisor after notice from the health officer based on credible information, he may be examined by an authorized medical person); Saskatchewan: R. S. 1920, c. 175, § 14 (person under arrest or committal for a criminal offence may be physically examined for venereal disease).

UNITED STATES: Alabama: St. 1919, No. 658, p. 909, § 15 (persons infected with venereal disease must report for treatment); § 16 (persons in prison shall be examined for venereal disease); Colorado: Comp. L. 1921, § 1079 (all health officers may "make examinations of persons reasonably suspected of being infected with venereal disease"); § 1080, as amended by St. 1921, p. 657, § 1 (all prisoners shall be so examined); Iowa: 1919, Wragg v. Griffin, 185 Ia. 243, 180 N. W. 400 (Code § 2565, and other laws, giving quarantine powers to the State board of health, held not to authorize physical examination of one suspected of having venereal disease); Montana: Rev. C. 1921, § 2566 (State and local health officers may "make examinations of persons reasonably suspected of being infected with venereal disease," and to require submission to treatment for cure); § 2569 (all persons confined in prison shall be so examined); Nebraska: 1919, Brown v. Manning, 103 Nebr. 540, 172 N. W. 522 (physical examination and quarantine of an inmate of a house of ill-fame having venereal disease, under a city ordinance, held lawful on the facts); New Jersey: St. 1918, c. 253, Mar. 4, §§ 1, 2 (medical examination for venereal the juvenile is not treated as accused of crime, but as a ward of the State) provision is often expressly made for a medical or psychological examination.[7]

(5) For sundry other purposes — for example, identification — the inspection of a civil opponent's body, or some similar expedient, has been conceded to be properly demandable;[8] though, unreasonably enough, in actions for slander of chastity it has been thus far denied.[9] disease may be made by board of health, of persons reported from army or navy, etc., or of "prostitutes or other lewd persons"); North Carolina: Con. St. 1919, § 4362 (prostitution, etc.; "the Court may order any convicted defendant to be examined for venereal disease"); North Dakota: St. 1919, Mar. 7, c. 190, § 5 (prostitution offences; "the Court may order any convicted defendant to be examined for venereal disease," when deciding upon parole or probation); Oklahoma: St. 1919, c. 17, Mar. 19, § 2 (infected person must "submit to examination and treatment" for venereal disease); § 9 (prescriptions and records here provided for "shall not be exposed to any person" except health authorities, or "when properly ordered by a court of competent jurisdiction to be used as evidence"); South Dakota: St. 1919, Feb. 21, c. 284 (all persons confined in prison shall be examined for venereal disease, and treated if infected); Utah: St. 1919, Mar. 20, c. 52 (municipal health officers may examine persons suspected of being infected with venereal disease; also imprisoned persons); Washington: 1919, Mar. 14, c. 114 (health authorities may "make examination of persons reasonably suspected of being infected with venereal disease," etc., so as to require treatment); West Virginia: St. 1921, c. 138, §§ 5, 16 (venereal disease; certain suspected persons may be examined "to ascertain whether in fact said party is infected"); Wyoming: St. 1921, c. 160, § 24 (venereal disease; health officers are empowered "to make examinations of persons reasonably suspected of being infected," with a view to suppressing the disease).

For the privileges protecting compulsory reports of a disease and communications to a physician, see post, §§ 2377, 2380.

Distinguish a compulsory physical examination imposed by law as a basis for medical treatment and not for evidential purposes.

[7] N. C. Cons. St. 1919, § 5056 (juvenile court; Court may "cause any child within its jurisdiction to be examined" by physicians); Oh. Gen. C. 1921, § 1652–1 (juvenile court; child "may be subjected to a physical and mental examination by a competent physician"); S. D. Rev. C. 1919, § 9998 (juvenile court "may require such child to be examined by the county physician, if of the same sex"; if not, by a physician designated); Va. Code 1919, § 1910 (delinquent, etc., children "may be subjected to a physical and mental examination" by a physician).

So also for the determination of age: N. Y. Laws 1882, c. 340, C. P. A. 1920, § 334, Cons. L. 1909, Penal § 817 (Court may order personal examination of child by physician to determine age); compare § 1154, ante.

[8] England: 1866, Lloyd v. Lloyd, L. R. 1 P. & D. 222 (divorce, with recrimination for adultery; order made for plaintiff to attend or give her address, in order that defendant's witnesses might identify her); 1871, Tichborne v. Lushington, Heywood's Rep. 398 (the presence of certain marks on the plaintiff's body being important for identification, the defendant claimed the right to have his surgeons inspect the plaintiff, alleging that "applications of this kind are granted every day in cases of railway accidents"; Chief Justice Bovill conceded the correctness of this assertion, but as the plaintiff objected merely that the application for such examination was prematurely made, the decision was reserved).

United States: 1893, Smith v. King, 62 Conn. 515, 521, 26 Atl. 1059 (plaintiff compellable to write his name, on demand of opponent, for comparison; but in trial Court's discretion); 1906, Seaboard Air Line R. Co. v. Scarborough, 52 Fla. 425, 42 So. 706 (ejection from a train; a witness for the defendant having testified that he saw a passenger ejected at the time and place in question, the defendant requested that the plaintiff be produced in court for identification, and the trial Court refused; held, that though the trial Court might have discretionary power to do this the defendant could have attained his purpose by process of subpœna, and was not injured); 1890, Rice v. Rice, 47 N. J. Eq. 559, 21 Atl. 286 (divorce; the defendant in chancery was held not compellable at the master's order to remove the veil from her face so as to be identified by a witness; but the ruling was based on the limited function of a master under the local statute; conceding that the possession of such a power by "every court of judicature as an indispensable attribute . . . would not seem in any degree questionable").

Compare the rulings ante, § 2216 (third person as witness).

[9] 1921, Mann v. Bulgin, 34 Ida. 714, 203 Pac. 463 (slander by charging that the plaintiff had venereal disease; an order appointing three physicians to examine the plaintiff, on a plea of truth, the plaintiff refusing to submit, held invalid; unsound); 1889, Kern v. Bridwell, 119 Ind. 226, 21 N. E. 664 (slander by charging the plaintiff with unchastity and abortion; the

(6) A privilege has been claimed, and in a few jurisdictions acknowledged, in a class of cases in which, above all, there is most detriment and least service in its existence, namely, actions for corporal injuries.

Why should all analogies fail here, and an exemption be accorded to a plaintiff seeking to conceal from the tribunal the true nature and extent of his injury? Of what little argument has ever been advanced in defence of such a privilege, the following passage is representative:

1890, GRAY, J., in Union Pacific R. Co. v. Botsford, 141 U. S. 250, 11 Sup. 1000: "No right is held more sacred, or is more carefully guarded, by the common law, than the right of every individual to the possession and control of his own person, free from all restraint or interference of others, unless by clear and unquestionable authority of law. . . . The inviolability of the person is as much invaded by a compulsory stripping and exposure as by a blow. To compel any one, and especially a woman, to lay bare the body, or to submit it to the touch of a stranger, without lawful authority, is an indignity, an assault and a trespass; and no order or process commanding such an exposure or submission was ever known to the common law in the administration of justice between individuals, except in a very small number of cases, based upon special reasons and upon ancient practice, coming down from ruder ages, now mostly obsolete in England, and never, so far as we are aware, introduced into this country."

On such a basis of assumption, indeed, not even Iago's conclusion was more lame and impotent. "To lay bare the body, without lawful authority," we are told, "is a trespass." But this is wholly beside the point; it is precisely with lawful authority, to wit, that of the Court, that the plaintiff is to be inspected. Moreover, there can be no fair question as to the Court's authority and power;[10] for the immemorial practice 'de ventre inspiciendo' and in divorce establishes at least the existence of this power. Again, the "inviolability of the person" from trespasses is appealed to. But when were there not recognized exceptions? If an assault is committed, the person attacked may defend himself by laying hands on the assailant; in the present case the defendant is merely asking a similar liberty, by a peaceable 'molliter manus imponere,' to defend himself against fraud. So also an innocent person may be arrested, restrained, and searched, in the ordinary process of the Courts, for purposes of discovering crime and preventing flight. In truth, there is no "inviolability of the person" in any absolute sense; and an appeal to it is merely false rhetoric. We are further told that there are no instances of exercising this power in civil cases, except in a few cases "coming down from ruder ages, now mostly obsolete in England, and never introduced into this country." This slur upon the inherited principles of "ruder ages" would be equally applicable to the fundamental clauses of Magna Carta and the Bill of Rights — documents, be it noted, which an illustrious Court has been known to treat, in other connections, with even over-ready respect for trial Court's refusal to order a medical inspection of the plaintiff, held proper, as against a defendant not able to prove the truth of his statement by other evidence).

[10] This was the chief objection in the Illinois, Massachusetts, and later New York cases, cited infra. It seems to be the least meritorious of all.

their antiquity.[11] Moreover, the significance of the writ 'de ventre' — if that is the "rude" expedient referred to — is simply this, that in an epoch and a country where landed rights were a paramount and constant concern in litigation, the Courts were not deterred by a false delicacy from taking such measures as common sense required for determining the truth;[12] and the moral is that, in our modern community, where the various mechanical applications of natural force have added a thousand dangers to life and limb, and where actions for personal injuries now fill the prominent place once occupied by 'formedon in reverter' and 'ejectio firmæ,' the same common sense of our fathers should be invoked to apply the same expedients amid our changed conditions. One might as well have argued, after Stephenson's steam monsters had just begun to travel their iron roads, that a person who was run over by a negligent driver of the new-fangled locomotives, would have no action on the case for his injuries, because there were no precedents, forsooth, except for injuries by ox-carts and hackney-coaches. There is and will be no end to the variety of frauds invented; and it will be an ill day for justice when the Courts cease to meet new frauds by new applications of old remedies. Quite apart from the general impolicy of granting to a party the license to conceal truth by any form of refusal, there is, in this class of cases, the added consideration that corporal injuries are to-day notoriously a subject of frequent fraud and misrepresentation; so that the privilege to withhold the exhibition of the alleged injury may amount in such cases to nothing less than a judicial license for fraud.

These considerations, together with the absurdity of a judicial declaration that a Court lacks the power to control those who seek for their fraud the very aid of the law itself, have weighed emphatically with our Courts and Legislatures. Subject to certain restrictions not affecting the fundamental principle, they have repudiated the existence of such a privilege in actions for personal injuries (including malpractice):[13]

[11] As, for example, in Thompson v. Utah, 1897, 170 U. S. 343, 18 Sup. 621, where the long exploded notion, that trial by jury is sanctioned in Magna Carta, was repeated and made a reason for holding unconstitutional a trial by less than twelve.

[12] As for the "obsolete" date of these practices, and the suggestion that they were "never introduced" into our own country, it is sufficient to point out that the above records of precedents demonstrate the contrary.

[13] The cases and statutes are as follows; compare the citations ante, § 2216 (third person's body inspected):

ENGLAND: 1883, Rules of Court, Order 50, Rules 3–5 (quoted ante, § 1163); 1868, St. 31 & 32 Vict. c. 119, § 26, Railway Act ("An order may be made, directing that a person injured by a railway accident be examined by a duly qualified medical practitioner, not being a witness on either side").

CANADA: Alberta: Rules of Court 1914, No. 196 (Court may order inspection of "any person . . . whose inspection may be material," by the jury or by the party or his witnesses); No. 251 (like Ont. R. S. c. 56, § 70);
British Columbia: Rules of Court 1912, No. 370 s (like Ont. R. S. c. 56, § 70);
Manitoba: Rev. St. 1913, c. 46, Rule 422 (similar to Ont. R. S. c. 56, § 70);
Ontario: 1891, Reily v. London, 14 Ont. Pr. 171 (order for inspection of the plaintiff, a woman, by the defendant's surgeons, refused, on grounds similar to those in U. S. v. Botsford; yet "there may no doubt be cases in which, upon the ground of plain and palpable fraud," the trial might be postponed until the plaintiff consented); 1891, Ontario St. 54 Vict. c. 11, R. S. 1914, c. 56, § 70 (ensuing upon the preceding decision: "In any action brought to recover damages or other compensation for or

1882, GUNNISON, P. J., in Hess v. R. Co., 7 Pa. Co. Ct. 565, 566 (the plaintiff complained of an injury of the spine; and the defendant asked for an order of physical examination by means of electrical tests, etc.): "To grant the order prayed for is but to apply in respect of bodily injury sustained by any person, a judge of the court wherein the action is pending, or any person who by consent of parties or otherwise has power to fix the amount of such damages or compensation, may order that the person in respect of whose injury, damage or compensation is sought, shall submit to be examined by a duly qualified medical practitioner, who is not a witness on either side, and may make such order representing such examination, and the costs thereof, as he may think fit; provided always that the medical practitioner named in such an order shall be selected by the judge making the order, and provided, moreover, that such medical practitioner may afterward be a witness on the trial of any such action unless the judge before whom the action is tried shall otherwise direct"); 1895, Clouse v. Coleman, 16 Ont. Pr. 541 (statute applied; the plaintiff held not compellable to answer questions put by the medical examiner at the time of inspection, but only to submit to inspection);

Saskatchewan: R. S. 1920, c. 39, § 32 (like Ont. R. S. c. 56, § 70).

UNITED STATES: Federal: 1890, Union Pacific R. Co. v. Botsford, 141 U. S. 250, 11 Sup. 1000 (action for injuries by concussion of the brain, etc.; order requiring the plaintiff to submit to an examination in a proper manner, the defendant alleging that he had no other evidence of the plaintiff's condition, refused; the plaintiff's person is to be maintained inviolate, and no inspection can be compelled; the precedents of impotence and 'de ventre' conceded, but treated as obsolete or not based on general principle; quoted supra); 1897, Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Griffin, 25 C. C. A. 413, 80 Fed. 278 (rule in the Botsford case applied); 1899, Camden & S. R. Co. v. Stetson, 177 U. S. 172, 20 Sup. 617 (Botsford case approved; but here the New Jersey law allowing compulsory examination was held applicable to a Federal trial there); 1905, Denver C. T. Co. v. Norton, 141 Fed. 599, 609 (personal injuries; the inspection cannot be ordered, but the defendant may make the request and on refusal may comment thereon); 1909, Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. Kendall, 8th C. C. A., 167 Fed. 62 (rule of Botsford case held not applicable where the plaintiff had waived the privilege by showing his knees; ruling more fully stated, ante, § 6, n. 8).

In the Federal Congress (59th Cong., 2d Sess., 1907) a bill was favorably reported by a majority of the House of Representatives' Committee on Judiciary (H. R. 10, Report No. 7587, Feb. 9) "to authorize the courts of the United States to require a party to submit to a personal physical examination in certain cases"; but no legislative action was taken on the bill. The only new argument brought out in the minority report is that the plaintiff in such cases is in fairness entitled reciprocally to an inspection of the defendant's chattels and premises to ascertain the cause of the injury and the data of negligence. This point is well taken. There ought to be no privilege on either side. But the simple answer is that in this view the minority should have insisted on adding such a provision to the bill. Moreover, the minority report assumes that no such right of inspection is now in law available for the plaintiff Yet the authorities cited post, § 2221, show that such a power has been recognized in Chancery for a century, and that modern American courts of law are beginning to recognize it in personal injury cases. How amply and naturally it is employed in modern English Courts may be seen by consulting the notes to Order 50, Rule 3, in Stringer, White, & King's Yearly Supreme Court Practice;

Alabama: 1889, McGuff v. State, 88 Ala. 147, 152, 7 So. 35 (cases in other States noted; "the authority and soundness of these cases need not be challenged"; said 'obiter'); 1890, Alabama G. S. R. Co. v. Hill, 90 Ala. 71, 8 So. 90 (personal injuries by nervous shock; order for examination of plaintiff by reputable disinterested physician, granted; the trial Court having a discretion to do so when the ends of justice require the disclosure or more certain ascertainment of facts which can only be brought to light or fully elucidated by such an examination, and when it can be made without danger to life or health and without serious pain; this phrasing is often quoted by other Courts); 1891, Alabama G. S. R. Co. v. Hill, 93 Ala. 514, 9 So. 722 (prior ruling affirmed; the personnel of the experts appointed is in the trial Court's discretion); 1893, King v. State, 100 Ala. 85, 14 So. 878, semble (plaintiff in civil cases, and injured witness in criminal cases, compellable to exhibit injury to the jury, where necessary and not indecent);

Arizona: St. 1921, c. 131 (personal injuries; like S. D. St. 1921, c. 179);

Arkansas: 1885, Sibley v. Smith, 46 Ark. 275 (internal injuries; order for examination of plaintiff by experts chosen in equal numbers by both sides, granted; the examination is of right, but the trial Court may in discretion refuse it if other expert testimony exists); 1895, St. Louis S. W. R. Co. v. Dobbins, 60 Ark. 485, 30 S. W. 887 (preceding case approved); 1914, Triangle Lumber Co. v. Acree, 112 Ark. 534, 166 S. W. 958 (injury in a logging machine; rule applied);

California: 1907, Johnston v. Southern P. Co., 150 Cal. 535, 89 Pac. 348 (personal the principle of allowing the inspection of writings, fully recognized in this State, to another species of evidence. . . . The object of a trial in Court is that substantial justice may be done between the litigants. If a defendant is denied the reasonable opportunity injuries; power to order physical examination, affirmed);

Colorado: 1908, Western Glass Mfg. Co. v. Schoeninger, 42 Colo. 357, 94 Pac. 342 (corporal injury; just before trial, the defendant demanded inspection by a physician; the plaintiff refused, on the ground that the lapse of 13 months since the time of injury made it unfair; held, the trial Court erred in refusing the order for inspection; model opinion, by Maxwell, J., holding that the power exists, that the trial Court's discretion controls, that prior request should be made, that the mode and conditions are determinable by the Court, and that on refusal the action may be dismissed or stayed); 1908, Denver C. T. Co. v. Roberts, 43 Colo. 522, 96 Pac. 186 (corporal injury; Western G. M. Co. v. Schoeninger followed);
Delaware: 1898, Mills v. R. Co., 1 Marv. (Super.) 269, 40 Atl. 1114 (injury to a leg while on the highway; plaintiff not compellable to exhibit his leg so that a physician testifying could explain the injury);
Florida: St. 1899, c. 4719, § 1, Rev. G. S. 1919, § 4968 (in actions for personal injuries "it shall be discretionary with the trial Court, upon motion of the defendant, to require the injured party, if living, either before or at the time of the trial of the cause, to submit to such physical examination of his or her person as shall reasonably be sufficient to determine physical condition at the time of trial and the nature and extent of the alleged injuries"; "the physical examination provided shall be made by a physician to be named by the Court, in the presence of one or more physicians or attendants of the injured party, if the party so desires");
Georgia: 1889, Richmond & D. R. Co. v. Childress, 82 Ga. 719, 9 S. E. 602 (injuries in the chest; order for examination by physicians appointed by the Court, grantable in the discretion of the trial Court; generally, a request should be made of the plaintiff before trial); 1896, Savannah, F. & W. R. Co. v. Wainwright, 99 Ga. 255, 25 S. E. 622 (order refused, because not requested till too late); 1900, Bagwell v. R. Co., 109 Ga. 611, 34 S. E. 1018 (action by a father for loss of a minor daughter's services; her refusal after majority to submit to a physical examination, held not sufficient cause for dismissing the suit); 1917, Temples v. Central of Georgia R. Co., 19 Ga. App. 307, 91 S. E. 502 (personal injury; a "commission of doctors" held properly appointed);
Hawaii: 1904, Fuller v. Rapid Transit Co., 16 Haw. 1, 12 (personal injuries; question not decided; but in any case the Court has discretion, and the request must be made before trial); 1910, Campbell v. Hackfeld, 20 Haw. 245 (not decided; here the plaintiff waived a prior objection to an order for examination);
Illinois: 1882, Parker v. Enslow, 102 Ill. 272, 279 (action on a note for an injury to the eyes by explosion of powder substituted for tobacco in the plaintiff's pipe; order for examination of the eyes by a physician in the jury's presence, refused, because of the supposed lack of power); 1887, Chicago & E. R. Co. v. Holland, 122 Ill. 461, 466, 13 N. E. 145 (personal injuries; refusal of an order for an examination by two named physicians, held not a material error, since the examination was later consented to); 1891, St. Louis Bridge Co. v. Miller, 138 Ill. 465, 471, 28 B. E. 1091 (injury to the nervous system, kidneys, etc.; order for examination by medical experts, refused, because the necessity was not shown; general principle as to power to make the order, left undecided; no precedent cited); 1892, Joliet S. R. Co. v. Caul, 143 Ill. 177, 32 N. E. 389 (no power to compel submission to examination by a physician; here it was not even claimed to be necessary); 1893, Peoria, D. & E. R. Co. v. Rice, 144 Ill. 227, 33 N. E. 951 (exhibition of an injured member to medical experts, not compellable; general principle distinctly reapproved); 1879, Freeport v. Isbell, 93 Ill. 381, 385 (personal injury; the plaintiff was allowed to be asked whether he would furnish some of his urine for chemical examination as to his alleged kidney disease caused by the fall in question; "it was his duty" to produce this "best evidence attainable," and his refusal was evidence against him); 1906, Richardson v. Nelson, 221 Ill. 254, 77 N. E. 583 (personal injury; the Court "has no power" to compel the plaintiff to submit to a medical examination); 1907, Chicago v. McNally, 227 Ill. 14, 81 N. E. 23 (similar; nor can the question be asked, whether the plaintiff is willing to submit to a physical examination); 1908, Pronskevitch v. Chicago & Alton R. Co., 232 Ill. 136, 83 N. E. 545 (personal injury; the plaintiff having removed part of his clothes and shown his injury to the jury, this entitled the defendant to an examination "under reasonable restrictions"; held that the plaintiff's refusal to be examined out of the jury's presence was not unreasonable); 1911, People v. Steward, 249 Ill. 311, 94 N. E. 511 (said 'obiter' that a statute might validly change the rule); Indiana: 1889, Hess v. Lowrey, 122 Ind. 225, 23 N. E. 156 (malpractice by a physician; order for examination of the plaintiff by the defendant's experts, refused, the application being too late and the plaintiff consenting to an examination in the presence of experts on both sides or of the jury; the opinion acknowledging the trial Court's power and of testing the truth of the plaintiff's allegations, who alleges an injury which can only be discovered upon an examination by experts, Courts of justice may be applied to and relied upon to assist in fraudulent and unjust recoveries upon the testimony of plaintiffs and of discretion to make the order); 1891, Terre Haute & I. R. Co. v. Brunker, 128 Ind. 542, 553, 26 N. E. 178 (injury to the lungs; order for examination by medical experts, on a tardy application, held properly refused in discretion); 1891, Pennsylvania Co. v. Newmeyer, 129 Ind. 401, 409, 28 N. E. 860 (injury by a railroad accident; order for examination of the plaintiff by surgeons appointed by the Court, refused; the power to order it, independently of statute, expressly denied); 1901, South Bend v. Turner, 156 Ind. 418, 60 N. E. 271 (examination held improperly refused on the facts); 1903, Aspy v. Botkins, 160 Ind. 170, 66 N. E. 462 (inspection of a knee in court, held not improperly refused on the facts); 1920, Lake Erie & W. R. Co. v. Griswold, — Ind. App. —, 125 N. E. 783 (corporal injury; trial court's refusal to order physical examination, here held improper);

Iowa: 1877, Schroeder v. R. Co., 47 Ia. 375, 376 (injury to nerves, bowels, etc.; order for examination by physicians and surgeons; defendant is not entitled as of right, but the trial Court has discretionary power to order it; quoted supra; this case has been the leading one against the privilege); 1896, Hall v. Manson, 99 Ia. 698, 68 N. W. 922 (injury to the ankle; the testimony being conflicting, a measurement by experts in the presence of the injury was held properly demandable by the opponent; such compulsory examination not being invariably demandable, but only according as it may be useful and important; Robinson, J., dissenting, on the ground that the trial Court's refusal to order an examination was on the facts not an abuse of discretion);

Kansas: 1883, Atchison T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Thul, 29 Kan. 466, 468 (personal injuries; order for inspection by a medical expert of the opponent, grantable; the trial Court to exercise discretion); 1896, Southern K. R. Co. v. Michaels, 57 Kan. 474, 46 Pac. 938 (an examination tardily applied for, held not improperly refused in the trial Court's discretion); 1901, Ottawa v. Gilliland, 63 Kan. 165, 65 Pac. 252 (Court may in discretion order examination by physicians appointed by Court; good opinion by Greene, J.); 1904, Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Palmore, 68 Kan. 545, 75 Pac. 509 (injury in the eyes; expert examination ordered); 1906, Dickinson v. Kansas C. E. R. Co., 74 Kan. 863, 86 Pac. 150 (Ottawa v. Gilliland followed);

Kentucky: 1898, Belt E. L. Co. v. Allen, 102 Ky. 551, 44 S. W. 89 (action for personal injuries; plaintiff may be compelled to submit to examination; "the conclusions which the various Courts and some of the text writers have reached are these: (1) That trial courts have the power to order surgical examination by experts of the person of a plaintiff who is seeking to recover for personal injury; (2) that the defendant has no absolute right to have an order made to that end, but that a motion therefor is addressed to the sound discretion of the Court; (3) that the exercise of that discretion will be reviewed on appeal and corrected in case of abuse; (4) that the examination should be ordered and had under the direction and control of the Court, whenever it fairly appears that the ends of justice require the disclosure or more certain ascertainment of facts which can only be brought to light or fully elucidated by such an examination, and that the examination may be made without danger to the plaintiff's life or health, and without the infliction of serious pain"); 1898, Belle of N. D. Co. v. Riggs, 104 Ky. 1, 45 S. W. 99 (trial Court's discretion in refusing an examination, sustained); 1900, Illinois C. R. Co. v. Clark, — Ky. —, 55 S. W. 699 (examination held not improperly refused in trial Court's discretion); 1902, South Covington & C. S. R. Co. v. Stroh, — Ky. —, 66 S. W. 177 (examination held inadmissible on the ground of an informality of procedure); 1903, Louisville R. Co. v. Hartlege, — Ky. —, 74 S. W. 742 (trial Court's refusal in discretion, held not improper); 1901, Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Simpson, 111 Ky. 754, 64 S. W. 733 (following Belt E. L. Co. v. Allen); 1909, Keller & B. Co. v. Berry, — Ky. —, 121 S. W. 1009 (examination by physicians chosen by defendant, held properly refused); 1911, Illinois Central R. Co. v. Beeler, 142 Ky. 772, 135 S. W. 305 (personal injury; inspection ordered; general practice as laid down in Belt E. L. Co. v. Allen, affirmed);

Massachusetts: 1900, Stack v. R. Co., 177 Mass. 155, 58 N. E. 686 (corporal injury; Court has no power to compel submission to inspection by an opposing expert witness; "we put our decisions not upon the impolicy of admitting such a power, but on the ground that it would be too great a step of judicial legislation to be justified by the necessities of the case");

Michigan: 1893, Graves v. Battle Creek, 95 Mich. 266, 268, 54 N. W. 757 (plaintiff's injured arm compelled to be exhibited to a physician in the presence of the jury; compulsion not proper, in the trial Court's discretion, where no necessity exists, or where it would give no material aid, or where it would be cumulative only, or where delicacy would forbid); 1895, Strudgeon v. Sand Beach, 107 Mich. 496, 65 N. W. 616 (where the use of anæsthetics for the examination would be necessary, to order it would be an abuse of discretion); witnesses of their own selection, whose only knowledge may be derived from declarations made by the plaintiffs for the purpose of manufacturing evidence in their own favor. Impartial justice could not be expected in such cases at the hands of juries who were not 130, 22 N. W. 176 (injury said to have rendered the plaintiff lame; order by the Court for the plaintiff to walk across the room, granted; general principle of inspection, in trial Court's discretion, apparently conceded); 1899, Wittenberg v. Onsgard, 78 Minn. 342, 81 N. W. 14 (submission to the X-ray photographic process, held not compellable, "until it is so well established as a fact in science that the process is harmless that the Courts will take judicial notice of it"); 1899, Wanek v. Winona, 78 Minn. 98, 80 N. W. 851 (in the discretion of the trial Court, physical examination may be ordered, upon reasonable application, and under proper safeguards; quoted supra); 1901, Aske v. R. Co., 83 Minn. 197, 85 N. W. 1011 (approving Wanek v. Winona);

Minnesota: 1885, Hatfield v. R. Co., 33 Minn.

Mississippi: 1914, Yazoo & M. V. R. Co. v. Robinson, 107 Miss. 192, 65 So. 241 (U. P. R. Co. v. Botsford, U. S., followed); 1914, Gentry v. Gulf & S. I. R. Co., 109 Miss. 66, 67 So. 849 (similar);

Missouri: 1873, Loyd v. R. Co., 53 Mo. 509, 512, 515 (personal injuries; order for examination by two physicians and surgeons, refused, as "unknown to our practice and to the law," and not in the Court's power); 1885, Shepard v. R. Co., 85 Mo. 629, 632 (spinal injuries; order asked for examination by physicians and surgeons, selected one-half by each party, these to choose another if they desire; the power held to exist, the trial Court's discretion to control; here held unnecessary, as the plaintiff had offered to consent to an examination by one person); 1887, Sidekum v. R. Co., 93 Mo. 400, 463, 4 S. W. 701 (personal injuries; order grantable in discretion of the trial Court); 1888, Owens v. R. Co., 95 Mo. 169, 177, 8 S. W. 350 (same); 1894, Haynes v. Trenton, 123 Mo. 326, 335, 27 S. W. 622 (the plaintiff, having voluntarily exhibited his injured leg to the jury, was held compellable to submit to examination by the defendant's expert witnesses); 1897, Fullerton v. Fordyce, 144 Mo. 519, 44 S. W. 1053 (personal injuries; order of medical inspection granted, and no objection raised);

Montana: 1905, May v. Northern P. R. Co., 32 Mont. 522, 81 Pac. 328 (personal injury; order compelling the plaintiff to submit to an examination by physicians appointed by the Court, held properly denied, mainly on the ground of lack of judicial power, following the Massachusetts Court; full review of the cases and arguments in a careful opinion by Holloway, J.);

Nebraska: 1884, Sioux C. & P. R. Co. v. Finlayson, 16 Nebr. 578, 588, 20 N. W. 860 (personal injuries; order for inspection by medical experts of the opponent, not granted, because not needed on the facts; general principle undecided); 1885, Stuart v. Havens, 17 Nebr. 211, 214, 22 N. W. 419 (personal injuries; order for inspection by medical experts of the opponent, refused, because the proposed inspectors were not to be selected by the Court); 1894, Ellsworth v. Fairbury, 41 Nebr. 881, 60 N. W. 336 (order appointing a board of physicians to examine the plaintiff at his house, held improperly made at chambers; whether a general common-law power exists, not decided; but "the weight of authority in this country fully sustains the power"); 1895, Chadron v. Glover, 43 Nebr. 732, 62 N. W. 62 (undecided; but the application for an order must be made before trial); 1915, State ex rel. Parmenter v. Troup, 98 Nebr. 333, 152 N. W. 748 (personal injury; order of examination by appointed physicians held proper; practice confirmed, and prior cases reviewed); St. 1921, c. 116 (metropolitan cities charter; Art. VII, § 3: claimants for personal injury shall "be subject to a personal examination by the city physician," etc.; failure or refusal "prohibits the maintaining of any action");

Nevada: 1909, Murphy v. Southern Pacific R. Co., 31 Nev. 120, 101 Pac. 322 (power conceded; the trial Court's discretion to control);

New Jersey: St. 1896, c. 202, Comp. St. 1910, Evidence § 19 ("On or before the trial of any action brought to recover damages for injury to the person, the Court before whom such action is pending may from time to time on application of any party therein order and direct an examination of the person injured as to the injury complained of by a competent physician or physicians, surgeon or surgeons, in order to qualify the person or persons making such examination to testify in the said cause as to the nature, extent, and probable duration of the injury complained of; and the Court may in such order direct and determine the time and place of such examination; provided this act shall not be construed to prevent any other person or physician from being called and examined as a witness as heretofore"); 1899, McGovern v. Hope, 63 N. J. L. 76, 42 Atl. 830 (statute applied, and held constitutional; common-law power to order examination impliedly sanctioned);

New Mexico: 1919, Holton v. Jones, — N. M. —, 183 Pac. 395 (action for personal injury to head and eye; the trial judge's refusal to direct a physical examination of the bodily parts referred to in the plaintiff's testimony, held erroneous; the precise rule not formulated);

New York: 1868, Walsh v. Sayre, 52 How. Pr. 334 (Superior Court; malpractice by a surgeon; order for the plaintiff to submit to inspection by the defendant and skilful sur-permitted to know the truth and whose sympathies were aroused by the recitation of sufferings which could not be controverted. To permit such a practice would be to encourage perjury and properly subject Courts of justice to public contempt. On the geons selected by him, granted, on the principle of the power of compelling discovery, as given to Courts of common law; this case was for some time a leading one on the subject); 1865, Beckwith v. R. Co., 64 Barb. 299, 307 (Supreme Court; right to inspection affirmed); 1880, Shaw v. Van Rensselaer, 60 How. Pr. 143 (Common Pleas Court; Walsh v. Sayre approved); 1883, Roberts v. R. Co., 29 Hun 154 (Supreme Court; order for inspection and examination by questions, refused; Walsh v. Sayre disapproved); 1884, Neuman v. R. Co., 18 Jones & Sp. 412 (Superior Court; order for inspection refused); 1889, McSwyny v. R. Co., 27 N. Y. St. R. 363, 367, 7 N. Y. Suppl. 456 (Supreme Court; order for inspection refused); 1891, McQuigan v. R. Co., 129 N. Y. 50, 29 N. E. 235 (Court of Appeals; order for inspection by surgeons appointed by the Court, refused, as not being within the power of the Court apart from statute); Laws 1893, c. 721, amending C. C. P. 1877, § 873, now C. P. A. 1920, § 306, and N. Y. Munic. Ct. Code 1915, § 117 (in actions for personal injury, the Court may order a physical examination of the plaintiff before trial by one or more physicians or surgeons designated by the Court, under such restrictions as seem proper; where the defendant claims ignorance of the nature of the injury, the examination is a matter of right; if the plaintiff is a female, the examiners are to be of her sex); 1894, Lyon v. R. Co., 142 N. Y. 298, 37 N. E. 113 (under the statute, the physical examination must always be incidental to an oral examination taken by order); 1899, Cole v. Fall Brook C. Co., 159 N. Y. 59, 53 N. E. 670 (common-law rule of McQuigan v. R. Co. affirmed for a case arising before the statute; a refusal to submit to examination does not authorize the Court to strike out the testimony of the plaintiff's witnesses; whether plaintiff could be compelled to step upon a model, held to be in the trial Court's discretion); 1921, Hoyt v. Brewster Gordon & Co., Sup. App. Div., 191 N. Y. Suppl. 176 (personal injury; order held lawful directing that the examining physician take a sample of plaintiff's blood for examination and analysis; enlightened opinion by Hubbs, J.);

North Dakota: 1903, Brown v. Chicago M. & St. P. R. Co., 12 N. D. 61, 95 N. W. 153 (personal injuries; medical examination of the plaintiff, held improperly refused; good opinion by Cochrane, J.);

Ohio: 1881, Miami & M. T. Co. v. Baily, 37 Oh. St. 104, 107 (order for inspection by a medical expert of the opponent, held not improperly refused on the facts; the power to make the order, affirmed, but the application must come seasonably);

Oklahoma: 1903, Kingfisher v. Altizer, 13 Okl. 121, 74 Pac. 107 (personal injury; plaintiff held not compellable to submit before trial to an examination; U. P. R. Co. v. Botsford, U. S., followed as binding on the Territorial Court); 1913, Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Hill, 36 Okl. 540, 129 Pac. 13 (not decided; but Kingfisher v. Altizer, a Territory decision, is held to be no longer binding); 1913, Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Melson, 40 Okl. 1, 134 Pac. 388 (Kingfisher v. Altizer followed; but this rule allows the party to be asked if he will consent); 1917, Oklahoma R. Co. v. Thomas, 63 Okl. 219, 164 Pac. 120 (personal injury; trial Court's refusal to direct an examination of plaintiff by defendant's experts, after he had been examined voluntarily by a board appointed by the trial Court, held not improper on the facts);

Pennsylvania: 1893, Dimenstein v. Richardson, 34 W. N. C. 295 (good opinion by Biddle, J., citing previous similar rulings in the lower Courts of Pennsylvania; compulsory examination held proper); 1882, Hess v. R. Co., 7 Pa. Co. Ct. 565, 567 (Gunnison, P. J.: "Compliance with such an order has sometimes been enforced by dismissing the plaintiff's case entirely, upon his refusal to comply; and it has been said that the refusal is a contempt of Court; . . . [but] it is sufficient, to ensure that justice be done, that the Court refuse to try the case until a compliance is had with the order"; a form of order is given here; the opinion is quoted supra); 1915, Cohen v. Philadelphia R. T. Co., 250 Pa. 15, 95 Atl. 315 (personal injury; the trial Court's refusal to order a physical examination of the plaintiff, held not improper, in discretion; "we entertain no doubt of the right of the Court" to direct that an opportunity be furnished, though "the Court cannot order a plaintiff to submit to such an ordeal against his will");

Rhode Island: Gen. L. 1909, c. 292, § 20 (in actions for "injury to the body or health, physical or mental," where the Court appoints an expert, the complainant must "submit to a reasonable examination or examinations of his body and health, physical or mental," by such expert; the action to be continued until such examination is made);

South Carolina: 1901, Easler v. R. Co., 60 S. C. 117, 38 S. E. 258 (physical examination of the plaintiff refused, because of no statutory power to order it);

South Dakota: St. 1921, c. 179 (personal injury; on or before the trial the Court may direct an examination of the person injured by a physician, including X-ray examination, "in order to qualify the person or persons making such examination to testify in the said cause as to other hand, if the plaintiff's claim is meritorious, if he has sustained the injuries he complains of, he has nothing to fear from the most searching examination. His case will only be strengthened by it."

1877, BECK, J., in Schroeder v. R. Co., 47 Ia. 375, 379: "Whoever is a party to an action in a Court, whether a natural person or a corporation, has a right to demand therein the administration of exact justice. This right can only be secured and fully respected by obtaining the exact and full truth touching all matters in issue in the action. If truth be the nature, extent and probable duration of the injury");

Tennessee: 1900, Arkansas River P. Co. v. Hobbs, 105 Tenn. 29, 58 S. W. 278 (not decided); 1915, Williams v. Chattanooga Iron Works, 131 Tenn. 683, 176 S. W. 1031 (personal injury; power to order physical examination affirmed, in a careful opinion by Neil, C. J.);
Texas: 1885, International & G. N. R. Co. v. Underwood, 64 Tex. 463, 466 (order for inspection by three disinterested surgeons and physicians appointed by the Court, not granted, because an inspection had been submitted to; general question reserved); 1888, Missouri P. R. Co. v. Johnson, 72 Tex. 95, 101, 10 S. W. 325 (order for examination by the opponent's physician, the plaintiff refusing to submit for him, but consenting to submit to a joint examination by his own and any other physician, not granted on these facts; general question reserved); 1890, Gulf C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Norfleet, 78 Tex. 321, 324, 14 S. W. 703 (order for inspection by physicians appointed by the Court, refused, since the plaintiff did submit to an examination in court; general question reserved); 1898, Chicago R. I. & T. R. Co. v. Langston, 19 Tex. Civ. App. 568, 47 S. W. 1027, 48 S. W. 610 (a plaintiff who has exhibited his limb to the jury may be compelled to submit it to inspection by defendant's expert witness); 1899, Chicago R. I. & T. R. Co. v. Langston, 92 Tex. 709, 50 S. W. 574, 51 S. W. 331 (defendant is entitled to inspection by experts selected by himself, the plaintiff having exhibited his injuries and offered medical testimony about them); 1903, Austin & N. W. R. Co. v. Cluck, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 73 S. W. 568 (R. Co. v. Botsford, U. S., followed); 1903, Gulf C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Brown, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 75 S. W. 807 (same); Austin & N. W. R. Co. v. Cluck, supra, affirmed on appeal in 97 Tex. Sup. 172, 77 S. W. 403; 1905, Houston & T. C. R. Co. v. Anglin, 99 Tex. 349, 89 S. W. 966 (like C. R. I. & T. R. Co. v. Langston); 1915, San Antonio & A. P. R. Co. v. Stuart, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 178 S. W. 17 (personal injury; propriety of requiring submission to a second X-ray examination considered);
Utah: 1908, Larson v. Salt Lake City, 34 Utah 318, 97 Pac. 483 (power denied, in the absence of statute; the opinions are a singular exhibition of that judicial "non possumus" attitude which is so blind to the true nature of law and judicial function);
Vermont: 1896, Bagley v. Mason, 69 Vt. 175, 37 Atl. 285 (order refused, because not asked for till after the evidence was closed);
Washington: 1899, Lane v. R. Co., 21 Wash. 119, 57 Pac. 367 (examination by experts appointed by the Court, in trial Court's discretion, may be ordered; quoted supra); 1901, Myrberg v. Baltimore & S. M. & R. Co., 25 Wash. 364, 65 Pac. 539 (examination not ordered, because not seasonably asked for); 1905, Helbig v. Grays' Harbor E. Co., 37 Wash. 130, 79 Pac. 612 (further examination by a third physician, held not improperly refused); St. 1915, Mar. 15, c. 63 ("On or before the trial of any action brought to recover damages for injury to the person, the Court before whom such action is pending may from time to time on application of any party therein, order and direct an examination of the person injured as to the injury complained of by a competent physician or physicians, surgeon or surgeons, in order to qualify the person or persons making such examination to testify in the said cause as to the nature, extent and probable duration of the injury complained of; and the Court may in such order direct and determine the time and place of such examination");
West Virginia: 1918, Perkins v. Monongahela Valley R. Co., 81 W. Va. 781, 95 S. E. 79 (examination of plaintiff held not properly asked for under the circumstances, but "upon the right of the defendant to have such a physical examination in a proper case, this question we do not decide upon"; why not? What is a Supreme Court for? The profession was waiting in this State for an answer to this long-delayed question); 1920, Quinn v. Flesher, — W. Va. —, 107 S. E. 300 (trial Court's refusal of defendant's request to suspend the trial for taking a radiograph of plaintiff's corporal injury, held not improper); Wisconsin: 1884, White v. R. Co., 61 Wis. 536, 540, 21 N. W. 524 (order for inspection by medical experts of the opponent, granted; general power affirmed); 1898, O'Brien v. LaCrosse, 99 Wis 421, 75 N. W. 81 (examination cannot be required as of right, but is within the trial Court's discretion; here, a refusal to order an examination of the urine and bladder by catheter-insertion was sustained); 1899, Boelter v. Ross Lumber Co., 103 Wis. 324, 79 N. W. 243 (plaintiff had submitted to one examination by X-ray process, and had been accidentally burned; held, no error in not compelling a second similar examination).

hidden, injustice will be done. The right of the suitor, then, to demand the whole truth is unquestioned; it is the correlative of the right to exact justice. . . . To our minds the proposition is plain that a proper examination by learned and skilful physicians and surgeons would have opened a road by which the cause could have been conducted nearer to exact justice than by any other way. The plaintiff, as it were, had under his own control testimony which would have revealed the truth more clearly than any other that could have been introduced. The cause of truth, the right administration of the law, demand that he should have produced it. . . . It is said that the examination would have subjected him to danger of his life, pain of body, and indignity to his person. The reply to this is that it should not; and the Court should have been careful to so order and direct. . . . As to the indignity to which an examination would have subjected him, as urged by counsel, it is probably more imaginary than real. An examination of the person is not so regarded when made for the purpose of administering remedies; those who effect insurance upon their lives, pensioners for disability incurred in the military service of the country, soldiers and sailors enlisting in the army and navy, all are subjected to rigid examinations of their bodies; and it is never esteemed a dishonor or indignity. . . . If for this purpose [to show the nature of the injury] the plaintiff may exhibit his injuries, we see no reason why he may not, in a proper case and under like circumstances, be required to do the same thing for a like purpose upon the request of the other party."

1899, GORDON, C. J., in Lane v. R. Co., 21 Wash. 119, 57 Pac. 367: "It is said that it is abhorrent to the principles of liberty to compel a party to submit to such an examination; that it invades the inviolability of the person, is an indignity involving an assault and a trespass, and an impertinence to which a modest woman would not consent. Courts should not sacrifice justice to notions of delicacy, and knowledge of the truth is essential to justice. The attainment of justice in the courts is of far greater importance than any merely personal consideration. . . . It is said by the majority in R. Co. v. Botsford that the reason for the exercise of such an authority in divorce actions is 'the interest which the public as well as the parties have in upholding or dissolving the marriage state.' But will it be said that the public has no interest in the attainment of justice between individuals? The admission that the Court has power to make the order whenever it is deemed requisite to ascertain the fact of incapacity in a divorce action seems to us an argument in favor of the existence of the power to make such an order in the present case. It exists by implication, and may be exercised in either case, whenever the demands of justice require it. Actions of this character have, in recent years, become so numerous that the question is of far greater importance than it could possibly have been twenty-five years ago, and it is not surprising that most of the cases in which the question has arisen or is discussed at all are of recent origin. In our State, counties, cities, and other municipal corporations are liable for negligence resulting in injury to the person, to the same extent as private corporations and individuals; and it becomes of the utmost importance that the question be determined with due regard for the public welfare."

1899, MITCHELL, J., in Wanek v. Winona, 78 Minn. 98, 80 N. W. 851: "[The trial Court has power] to order such an inspection, and to require the plaintiff to submit to it under the penalty of having his action dismissed in case he refuses to do so. We are aware that there are some eminent authorities to the contrary, but, with all due deference to them, we cannot avoid thinking that they base their conclusion upon a fallacious and somewhat sentimental line of argument as to the inviolability and sacredness of a man's own person, and his right to its possession and control free from all restraint or interference of others. This, rightly understood, is all true, but his right to the possession and control of his person is no more sacred than the cause of justice. When a person appeals to the State for justice, tendering an issue as to his own physical condition, he impliedly consents in advance to the doing justice to the other party, and to make any disclosure which is necessary to be made in order that justice may be done. No one claims that he can be compelled to submit to such an examination. But he must either submit to it, or have his action dismissed. Any other rule in these personal injury cases would often result in an entire denial of justice to the defendant, and leave him wholly at the mercy of the plaintiff's witnesses. In very many cases the actual nature and extent of the injuries can only be ascertained by a physical examination of the person of the injured party. Such actions were formerly very infrequent, but of late years they constitute one of the largest branches of legal industry, and are not infrequently attempted to be sustained by malingering on the part of the plaintiff, false testimony, or the very unreliable speculations of so-called 'medical experts.' To allow the plaintiff in such cases, if he sees fit to display his injuries to the jury, to call in as many friendly physicians as he pleases, and have them examine his person, and then produce them as expert witnesses on the trial, but at the same time deny to the defendant the right in any case to have a physical examination of plaintiff's person, and leave him wholly at the mercy of such witnesses as the plaintiff sees fit to call, constitutes a denial of justice too gross, in our judgment, to be tolerated for one moment."

(7) In virtually all the modern statutes establishing a system of industrial accident insurance, or "workmen's compensation" (to supplant the common-law principle of employers' tortious liability for injuries to employees), provision is made to negative any privilege for the insured against physical examination to ascertain his injury.[14]

[14] ENGLAND: St. 1897, 60 & 61 Vict., c. 37, Schedule I, par. 3; St. 1906, 6 Edw. VII, c. 58, Workmen's Compensation Act, Schedule I, par. 4 (workman giving notice of accident "shall, if so required by the employer, submit himself for examination by a duly qualified medical practitioner," etc.; on refusal or obstruction, right to compensation is suspended); par. 14 (similar, for one receiving weekly payments under an award); 1900, Osborn v. Vickers, 2 Q. B. 9 (St. 1897 applied); 1915, Smith v. Davis & Sons, A. C. 528 (under Workmen's Compensation Act 1906, First Schedule, and Regulations, a claimant may be required to submit to a second medical examination); for valuable comments on the suitable modes of conducting such examinations, based on experience under the British Workmen's Compensation Act, see the following work: 1917, Sir John Collie, Malingering and Feigned Sickness, 2d ed., c. xxxvi, pp. 530–539.

CANADA: Alberta: St. 1918, c. 5, § 43 (workman's compensation; claimant must submit himself for examination by a medical referee); § 44 (on refusal, the right to compensation is suspended); Manitoba: St. 1920, c. 159, § 17 (workman's compensation; claimant must submit himself to medical examination; on refusal, the right to compensation is suspended); Yukon: St. 1917, c. 1, § 11 (injured workman shall "submit himself for examination by a duly qualified medical practitioner"; on refusal, right to compensation is suspended).

UNITED STATES: Alabama: St. 1919, No. 245, p. 206, § 18 (workmen's compensation; "the injured employee must submit himself to the examination," etc.; on refusal, the right to compensation is suspended); Alaska: St. 1915, Apr. 29, c. 71, § 24 (employers' liability; the injured employee shall "submit himself or herself to an examination by a physician," etc.; on refusal, the right to compensation is suspended); Arizona: Rev. St. 1913, Civ. C. § 3171 (workmen's compensation; claimant shall on request "submit himself for bodily examination by some competent licensed medical practitioner or surgeon"; on refusal, right to compensation is suspended); St. 1921, c. 103, § 78 (workmen's compensation; claimant must "submit himself for medical examination"; on refusal, compensation is suspended); California: St. 1917, p. 831, May 23, § 16 (workmen's compensation; employee injured and entitled to compensation "shall upon written request of his employer submit from time to time to examination by a practising physician," etc.; on refusal, his claim is suspended or barred; physician may testify "as to the results thereof"); 1917, May 23, p. 831, § 19 a (workmen's compensation, etc.; commission may direct an examination by a physician; quoted ante, § 4 c); Colorado: Comp. St. 1921, § 4455 (workmen's compensation; the injured employee shall "submit himself . . . to examination by a physician or surgeon"; on refusal, the right to compensation is suspended); Connecticut: Gen. St. 1918, §§ 5347, 5362 (workmen's compensation; physical examination required; but employee's failure to accept or provide medical service suspends compensation); Delaware: St. 1917, Apr. 2, c. 233, adding §§ 3193 *m*106 to the Revised Code (workmen's compensation; injured employee "must submit himself for examination . . . to a physician," etc.; on refusal, right of compensation is suspended); Hawaii: St. 1915, Apr. 28, No. 221, § 20

(B) The exercise of this power should no doubt be subject to certain restrictions, on the principle (ante, § 2192) that the testimonial duty should (workmen's compensation; injured workman "shall submit himself to examination . . . to a duly qualified physician or surgeon"; on refusal, right to compensation is suspended); Idaho: Comp. St. 1919, § 6242 (workmen's compensation; injured workman shall submit himself to medical examination; compensation suspended in case of refusal); Illinois: St. 1921, June 29, § 12 (workmen's compensation; injured employee shall be required on request "to submit himself . . . for examination to a duly qualified medical practitioner," etc.; on refusal, right to compensation is suspended); 1920, Jackson Coal Co. v. Industrial Commission, 295 Ill. 18, 128 N. E. 813 (compensation suspended, and examination required, of employee under Rev. St. 1917, c. 48, § 137; no privilege to refuse on ground that employer has admitted his liability); 1922, Pocahontas Mining Co. v. Ind. Com., 301 Ill. 462, 134 N. E. 160 (rule of the Compensation Act applied); 1922, Paradise Coal Co. v. Ind. Com., 301 Ill. 504, 134 N. E. 167 (rule applies as well for ascertaining the fact of injury as for ascertaining the amount of compensation due); Iowa: Code 1919, § 818 (workmen's compensation; injured employee "shall submit himself for examination . . . to a physician," etc.; on refusal, right to compensation is suspended); Kansas: Gen. St. 1915, § 5911, St. 1911, c. 218 (workmen's compensation; employee "must submit himself for examination"; on refusal, compensation is suspended; provision for exclusion of physician's testimony unless both parties have opportunity to select physicians); 1922, Landis v. Wichita R. & L. Co., — Kan. —, 203 Pac. 1109 (personal injury; on application by the defendant to the trial Court to appoint physicians, the plaintiff being willing to be examined by physicians selected by defendant, the Court refused; held not error); Kentucky: St. 1916, Mar. 23, p. 354, Stats. § 4918 (workmen's compensation; injured workman if requested "shall submit himself to examination" by a medical man; on refusal, right to compensation is suspended); Louisiana: St. 1914, No. 20, § 9 (employer's liability; "an injured workman shall submit himself to examination," etc.); Maine: Rev. St. 1916, c. 50, § 21, St. 1919, c. 238, § 21 (workmen's compensation; injured employee shall on request "submit himself to an examination by a physician or surgeon"; certified copy of report "may be produced in evidence at any hearing," etc.); Maryland: Ann. Code 1914, Art. 101, § 42 (State industrial accident commission; employee is required on request "to submit himself for medical examination"; on refusal, his right to compensation is suspended); Massachusetts: Gen. L. 1920, c. 152, § 45 (industrial accidents; employee "shall submit to an examination by a registered physician"; on refusal, right to compensation is suspended); c. 201, § 6 (appointment of guardian for insane; the Court "may require him to submit to examination"); Michigan: Comp. L. 1915, § 5449 (workmen's compensation; claimant shall "submit himself to an examination by a physician or surgeon"; on refusal, right to compensation is suspended); Minnesota: Gen. St. 1913, § 8215 (workmen's compensation; injured employee "must submit himself to examination" by physician; on refusal, right to compensation is suspended); St. 1921, c. 82, § 23 (like the prior statute, replacing it); Missouri: Rev. St. 1919, § 13642 (workmen's compensation; injured employee "shall from time to time thereafter during disability submit to reasonable medical examination"; on refusal, compensation is suspended); St. 1921, Mar. 28, p. 425, § 50 (like Rev. St. § 13642, which is superseded); Montana: Rev. C. 1921, § 2906 (State industrial accident board; employee shall "submit from time to time to examination by a physician"; on failure or refusal, the right to compensation is suspended); Nebraska: Rev. St. 1922, § 3097 (employee shall on request "submit himself to an examination by a physician," etc.); 1922, O'Brien v. Sullivan, — Nebr. —, 186 N. W. 532 (assault and battery; trial Court's refusal to order physical examination of plaintiff, held not improper where the motion was not made until trial begun); Nevada: Rev. L. 1912, § 1921 (workmen's compensation; employee claiming compensation must on request "submit himself for examination" by a medical man); St. 1913, Mar. 15, p. 137, § 32 (industrial insurance; "any workman entitled to receive compensation" must if required "submit himself for medical examination"; on refusal, right to compensation is suspended; New Mexico: St. 1917, Mar. 13, c. 83, § 19 (workmen's compensation; injured workman shall "submit himself . . . to examination by a physician or surgeon"; on refusal, right to compensation is suspended); North Dakota: St. 1919, Mar. 5, c. 162, § 16 (workmen's compensation; the injured employee shall "submit himself to examination by a duly qualified physician," etc.); Ohio: Gen. Code Ann. 1921, §§ 1465-95 (State industrial commission; any employee claiming compensation "may be required . . . to submit himself for medical examination"; on refusal, compensation shall be suspended); Oklahoma: St. 1915, c. 246, Mar. 22, Art. 2, § 9 (workmen's compensation; employee on request shall "submit himself for medical examination," etc.; on refusal, his right "to prosecute any proceeding under this Act shall be suspended"); Oregon: Laws 1920, § 6633 (workmen's compensation; claimant must if not be enforced any further than is necessary with relation to the ends of truth. Of such restrictions, the following seem to be those recognized by judicial authority:

(a) The exhibition of the body need not be directly to the tribunal, first, because the jury could often not comprehend the appearances without expert explanation, and, secondly, because the public exposure might be unnecessarily embarrassing. Accordingly, the exhibition is usually ordered to be made before expert medical witnesses. These are preferably to be appointed by the Court.[15] Nevertheless, if there has been other testimony by experts who speak from inspection and who appear as partisans of the plaintiff, it may be fair to authorize similar inspection by experts called for the defendant; the trial Court's discretion should determine. But, in any case, an exhibition directly to the judge and the jury may properly be ordered, if neither of the two considerations above mentioned are deemed by the trial Court to prevent.

(b) The exhibition need not be ordered at all, if in the trial Court's opinion no sufficiently valuable evidence is to be expected from it, having regard to the kind of injury involved, the amount of other evidence, and the inconvenience, shame,[16] or risk to health that may be involved. Nevertheless, this refusal should not be decided upon without extreme caution, for it is seldom possible, even for the opponent, to know beforehand how valuable the results of the required "submit himself for medical examination"; on refusal, his right is suspended); Pennsylvania: St. 1915, June 2, § 314, Dig. 1920, § 22011, Workmen's Compensation (injured employee "must submit himself for examination" to a physician; on refusal, right of compensation is suspended);

Porto Rico: St. 1916, Apr. 13, No. 19, § 9 (workmen's compensation; the injured workman shall if requested by the commission "submit himself for examination . . . to a competent physician or surgeon"; on refusal, the right to receive relief is suspended); Rhode Island: St. 1912, c. 831, § 21 (employer's liability; injured employee shall "submit himself to an examination by a physician or surgeon," etc.; on refusal, the right to compensation is suspended); South Dakota: Rev. C. 1919, § 9463 (industrial insurance; injured employee must on request "submit himself . . . for examination to a duly qualified medical practitioner or surgeon"; on refusal, compensation is suspended); Tennessee: St. 1919, Apr. 15, c. 123, § 25 (workmen's compensation; injured employee "must submit himself to the examination by the employer's physician," etc.); Texas: Rev. Civ. St. 1911, § 5246-23, 26, 42, St. 1917, c. 103 (injured employee; provision for requiring medical examination; in case of refusal, compensation is suspended); 1920, Texas Employers' Ins. Ass'n v. Downing, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 218 S. W. 112, 117 (under the Workmen's Compensation Act, Vernon's Annot. Civ. St. Suppl. 1918, §§ 5246–42, 44, the order for physical examination of the plaintiff is subject to the trial Court's discretion; held here that it was error for the trial Court to refuse to direct an X-ray examination); Utah: Comp. L. 1917, § 3152 (workmen's compensation; employee claimant must "submit himself for medical examination" pursuant to rules of State industrial commission; compensation suspended in case of refusal); St. 1921, c. 67, Mar. 21 (amending Comp. L. 1917. § 3152); Vermont: Gen. L. 1917, § 5795 (employer's liability; proceeding suspended if claimant refuses or obstructs physical examination); Wisconsin: § 2394–12 (workmen's compensation; claimant shall submit to "examination by a regular practicing physician"; on refusal, the right to compensation is suspended); Wyoming: Comp. St. 1920, § 4345 (workman's compensation; workman shall on request "submit himself for medical examination" to determine removal of temporary disability; on refusal, compensation is suspended).

[15] 1921, Atkinson v. United R. Co., 286 Mo. 634, 228 S. W. 483 (physicians thus designated by the Court are not to be deemed witnesses of the party).

For the law as to summoning of expert witnesses by the Court, see ante, § 563, and post, § 2484.

[16] The so-called "indecency" of the exhibition is of itself no obstacle (ante, § 2180).

inspection may be; and the presumption should always be against a refusal on this ground.

(c) The party demanding inspection may fairly be required to give prior notice, in order that convenient arrangements may be made and a due selection of expert examiners be feasible.

(d) If the plaintiff refuses to submit to the examination, the usual process of contempt appropriate for a recalcitrant witness may be employed.[17] But a simpler and no less effective expedient is to order the suit dismissed; for this sufficiently prevents the party from reaping any benefit from his contumacy.[18] Furthermore, if the Court takes neither of these measures (although no Court ought for a moment to overlook in such a way so flagrant a contempt), the usual inference (ante, §§ 289, 291) may be advanced by counsel and drawn by the jury, from the failure to produce this evidence in the plaintiff's power, that the defendant's allegations about it are true.[19]

Under some such limitations as these, the compulsory exhibition of the party's body will be ordered, in most jurisdictions.

(C) Certain distinctions may here be noted. (1) The plaintiff may be entitled to exhibit his body to the jury, on the general principle of Autoptic Proference, as evidencing the injury (ante, § 1158). (2) In contracts of insurance, both life and accident, a frequent provision concedes to the insurer the right of its medical examiner to examine the insured's person in respect to an injury. Such a provision is valid, and may avail to supplant the normal rule of law (ante, § 7*a*).

§ 2221. Same: (d) Inspection of Premises and Chattels; Autopsy; Exhumation of Corpse. The testimonial duty for witnesses in general requires disclosure of facts in any and every feasible form, including such evidence as is available through inspection of the witness' premises or chattels, either by the [17] Sanctioned in Schroeder v. R. Co., Ia., supra.

[18] Sanctioned in Schroeder v. R. Co., Ia., Shepard v. R. Co., Mo., Miami & M. T. Co. v. Baily, Oh., Hess v. R. Co., Pa., supra. It may be added that the postponement of the trial, until the plaintiff consents (as suggested in one case cited supra), is a half-hearted method which is indefensible. If the plaintiff is really privileged, it is a denial of justice to postpone the trial; if he is not, the Court has just as much power to dismiss the suit as to postpone it.

Under the industrial accident statutes, the right to compensation is suspended, so long as refusal continues.

[19] England (divorce cases): 1901, B. v. B., Prob. 39 (nullity of marriage); 1912, W. v. W., Prob. 78 (nullity for impotency; the respondent's refusal to submit to medical examination, taken as evidence; B. v. B., supra, is not cited, and counsel say "The nearest case is C. v. C., 1911, 27 Times L. R. 421"); 1913, Dickinson v. Dickinson, Prob. 198, Sir S. Evans, Pres., declared it "revolting" to find that where decrees were thus based on "inferred incapacity" the parties in later marriages have had children, and he ruled that absolute refusal of intercourse was of itself a ground for nullity; hence the inference of impotency will hereafter not be a mere "legal fiction," as Sir S. Evans termed it).

United States (personal injury cases): 1890, Union P. R. Co. v. Botsford, U. S. (cited supra, n. 9); 1907, Cedartown v. Brooks, 2 Ga. App. 583, 59 S. E. 836 (careful opinions by Russell, J., and Powell, J., respectively, taking opposite views as to the propriety of the inference in a jurisdiction where the Court has power and discretion to make an order); 1909, Murphy v. Southern Pacific R. Co., 31 Nev. 120, 101 Pac. 322; 1913, Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Hill, 36 Okl. 540, 129 Pac. 13; 1874, Durgin v. Danville, 47 Vt. 95, 105; and other cases cited supra, n. 9.

Contra: 1903, Austin & N. W. R. Co. v. Cluck, — Tex. Civ. App. —, 73 S. W. 568 (purporting to follow R. Co. v. Botsford, U. S.).

tribunal itself or by other witnesses under order of the Court (ante, §§ 2194, 2216). There is no reason why a party should be privileged more than other persons in this respect. Not only, as in the case of corporal exhibition (ante, § 2220), is the absence of such a privilege deducible by implication from the statutes making parties compellable generally; but also it may be maintained (as in the case of corporal exhibition) that no privilege in this respect was ever established at common law:

1867, BALDWIN, J., in Thornburgh v. Savage M. Co., 7 Morris Min. R. 667, 680: "Ought a Court of equity, in a mining case, when it has been convinced of the importance thereof for the purposes of the trial, to compel an inspection and survey of the works of the parties, and admittance thereto by means of the appliances in use at the mine? All the analogies of equity jurisprudence favor the affirmative of this proposition. The very great powers with which a Court of chancery is clothed were given it to enable it to carry out the administration of nicer and more perfect justice than is attainable in a Court of law. That a Court of equity, having jurisdiction of the subject-matter of the action, has the power to enforce an order of this kind, will not be denied. And the propriety of exercising that power would seem to be clear, indeed, in a case where, without it, the trial would be a silly farce. Take, as an illustration, the case at bar. It is notorious that the facts by which this controversy must be determined cannot be discovered except by an inspection of works in the possession of the defendant, accessible only by means of a deep shaft and machinery operated by it. It would be a denial of justice, and utterly subversive of the objects for which Courts were created, for them to refuse to exert their power for the elucidation of the very truth — the issue between the parties. Can a Court justly decide a cause without knowing the facts"?

There are numerous instances in which the chancery practice plainly denied any privilege, and sanctioned the inspection of the party-opponent's premises and chattels, against his objection.[1] On the other hand, in the common-law courts, there was an inclination to refuse such orders, apparently on the same feeble excuse of lack of power put forward by a few Courts for refusing to compel corporal exhibition.[2] There is even more reason for denying a § 2221. [1] 1814, Earl of Macclesfield v. Davis, 3 Ves. & B. 16 (motion allowed to have inspection of a chest containing heirlooms, in order to identify and describe the articles); 1819–21, Kynaston v. East India Co., 3 Swanst. 248; East India Co. v. Kynaston, 3 Bligh 153 (quoted ante, § 1862; opinion by L. C. Eldon).

Numerous other cases impliedly or expressly negativing such a privilege will be found ante, § 1862 (Inspection before Trial), § 1162 (View by Jury), § 2212 (Trade Secrets), § 2216 (Testimonial Duty).

An officer's entry upon a party's premises or a seizure of a chattel, for preservation as evidence, under a warrant, ought to be deemed justifiable trespass. Contra: 1895, Newberry v. Carpenter, 107 Mich. 567, 65 N. W. 530 (impounding an exploded boiler pending trial of the liability for the explosion).

[2] Add the cases cited in the cross-references supra, note 1: 1848, Twentyman v. Barnes, 2 DeG. & Sm. 225 (inspection by experts of an alleged altered document; refused, upon an undertaking to produce at trial); 1840, Leach v. Swallow, 8 Dowl. Pr. 201 (work and labor on a house; order for plaintiff's witnesses to inspect the work, held not proper against the defendant's consent); 1895, Martin v. Elliot, 106 Mich. 130, 63 N. W. 998 (sending a veterinary surgeon to examine on the plaintiff's premises a horse said to have been warranted sound, held improper); 1860, Hunter v. Allen, 35 Barb. N. Y. 42 (warranty of a watch; order to produce the watch, refused; "it would be a new feature in our jurisprudence;" this unenlightened utterance was made forty years after the above ruling by Lord Eldon, the most conservative judge who ever sat on the bench). Contra: 1896, Groundwater v. Washington, 92 Wis. 56, 65 N. W. 871 (seat of a wagon injured in a highway; inspection held allowable in trial Court's discretion).

privilege in the present class of cases; and it would be regrettable if any modern Court should palter with justice by recognizing it. Occasionally statutes have come to the aid of the Courts.[3]

The exhumation or the autopsy of a corpse, when useful to ascertain facts in litigation, should of course be performed.[4] Reverence for the memory of

[3] The statutes, which usually provide also for a view by the jury or an inspection before trial, or both, are collected under those heads (ante, §§ 1163, 1862). Some of the statutes and of the rulings construing them point out expressly the absence of a privilege. The use of such orders of inspection in modern English practice may be seen in Stringer, White, & King's Yearly Supreme Court Practice, notes to Order 50, Rule 3.

[4] The cases and statutes are as follows. Compare also the citations ante, §§ 1862, 2216; the distinction between a party and a third person is here little more than technical:

ENGLAND: 1907, Re Herbert Druce, Re London Cemetery Co. (Nov. 16, Dec. 27; London "Times," Nov. 9, 16, 19, 22, 28, 30, Dec. 3, 7, 10, 14, 17, 21, 28, 30, 31. The Druce Case was a case of alleged double life. The claimant, Geo. Hollamby Druce, was the son of Thomas Charles Druce, who had lived as a furniture dealer, and died in 1864. The claim was that T. C. D. was in reality the fifth Duke of Portland; that in 1816, as Lord John Bentinck, he had married Miss Crickmer, and had lived with her and maintained a household as Thomas Charles Druce, while also living as the Duke of Portland, and that as Duke he survived till 1879; there was plausible testimony to these facts; in 1898–1901 Mrs. Anna Marie Druce brought proceedings in the Probate Court to revoke probate of the will of T. C. D., on the ground that T. C. D. had not then died, and that the funeral of T. C. D. in 1864 was a mock one, and that T. C. D. in fact lived, as the Duke, till 1879; this suit was dismissed, the Court finding that T. C. D. did die in 1864; at the 1898 proceeding, Herbert Druce, son of T. C. D., and opposed to the claimant, had made affidavit, and in the 1901 proceeding he testified, that he had lived since his birth in 1846 with his father T. C. D., that in Sept. 1864 his father fell ill and on Dec. 28, 1864, died, that he saw his father's body lying in the coffin, and saw the body buried at Highgate Cemetery; yet the testimony for the claimant was explicit that the coffin had been specially made at the Duke's order, and that only lead had been placed within, to deceive the bearers; the test of this story would evidently be the condition of the coffin, and at the 1898 proceedings by Mrs. A. M. D. the judge of the Consistory Court, Dr. Tristram, intimated that he would grant a license to open the coffin, and upon a prohibition moved in the Probate Court on the ground that the Home Secretary alone had jurisdiction, the prohibition had been refused, conceding to the Consistory Court sole jurisdiction over the removal of bodies for reinterment or other purposes (ruling reported in 1898, L. R. 2 Q. B. 371; citing In re Sarah Pope, 15 Jur. 614, before Dr. Lushington); but now in 1907 the claim was indirectly got before the Court again by a prosecution, instituted by Geo. H. D., against Herbert D., for perjury in his affidavit and testimony of 1901; new testimony was at this trial adduced for the claimant, direct and conclusive, if true; and the opening of the grave seemed now to be the only way of testing the story; Herbert D., the proprietor of the grave, had at first refused to allow it to be opened, but his counsel now declared himself ready to consent; the magistrate, Mr. Plowden, expressed the opinion that the grave ought to be opened; H. D. assented and the Home Secretary gave a license; and a petition was filed in the Consistory Court by the London Cemetery Co. (including Highgate Cem.) and the Home Secretary, for a license to open the grave; no party seems to have opposed the order, though each counsel made a speech explaining why he did not oppose it; Dr. Tristram granted the order to open the grave and "to examine and inspect the contents thereof, and to ascertain whether such last-mentioned coffin actually contains the human remains of the said T. C. D. or any human remains," etc.; on Dec. 30 the coffin, which was lead-lined, was opened, and was found to contain "the body of an aged and bearded man"; this ended the prosecution of H. D.; in the Law Journal, 1908, Jan. 11, vol. XLIII, p. 15, is a brief summary of the legal points arising at the trial, but the only reference to the exhumation is unfortunately erroneous, stating the ruling to be that there is no judicial authority to open a grave except for an inquest).

UNITED STATES: Federal: 1907, Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Griesa, C. C. Kan., 156 Fed. 398 (bill to cancel a life insurance policy on the ground of intention to suicide; order of exhumation of the body, for examination, granted, and privilege denied; case stated more fully ante, §§ 1862 and 2216); 1915, Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Painter, D. C. Md., 220 Fed. 998 (bill by the insurer for examination of the organs of a deceased person, the insured; the defendants were the wife and son or daughter, citizens of Florida; the death occurred apparently in Maryland, and the coroner had sent the vital organs for analysis to a Baltimore chemist; litigation arising between the defendants and the Maryland State authorities, the now plaintiff filed a bill in the Maryland those who have departed does not require us to abdicate the high duty of doing justice to the living; and the orders of a court of justice, exercising the power of the State in the communal interest, are not to be placed on the same level with the acts of an unlicensed and self-seeking intruder upon hallowed ground.

In contracts of insurance, both life and accident, a frequent provision concedes to the insurer the right of its medical examiner to make an autopsy in case of death. Such a provision is valid, and may avail to supplant the normal rule of law (ante, § 7*a*).

§ 2222. (9) Facts against One's Interest as a Witness Interested but not a Party to the Suit. When the party's privilege not to take the stand against himself prevailed in common-law courts (ante, § 2218), the question naturally arose whether in civil causes a person not a party, but interested in the event of the cause, and therefore, disqualified to testify for himself (ante, § 576), was also, like a party, privileged from being called against himself; in other words, whether the privilege was coextensive in all respects with the disqualification, or extended to parties only. After some uncertainty in the English practice, caused by Lord Mansfield's attempt to restrict the limitations of such privileges,[1] it was finally settled in the United States, that an interested witness, as such, had not the privilege of a party; [2] though a few Courts

Circuit Court, asking for an order of examination and an injunction against taking away the remains; the defendant moved to remove the case to the Federal Court, but it was remanded; the merits of the application were not considered); California: St. 1917, p. 831, May 23, § 19, par. e (State industrial accident commission may direct an autopsy "and the exhumation of the body for such purpose if necessary"); St. 1878, p. 1050, No. 545, April 1 (local board of health may grant permit for exhumation); Mississippi: 1879, Grangers' Ins. Co. v. Brown, 57 Miss. 308 (insurance upon the plaintiff's husband; to show whether his skull had been trephined, a compulsory exhumation held proper if necessary; here held unnecessary); Nebraska: Rev. St. 1922, § 3097 (labor-employer's liability; in death claims, "any interested party may require an autopsy"); New York: 1910, Danahy v. Kellogg, 126 N. Y. Suppl. 444 (action for death; order for exhumation to ascertain the cause of death denied; case stated more fully ante, § 1862); 1922, Wnuk's Application, Sup. App. Div., 193 N. Y. Suppl. 353 (S. was injured by W., brought suit, and died; her administrator caused an autopsy to be performed and the liver to be retained; an application for inspection of the liver by an expert for the defendant was denied; plainly unsound); Tennessee: St. 1919, Apr. 15, c. 123, § 25 (workmen's compensation; "any interested party may require an autopsy"); Texas: 1908, Gray v. State, 55 Tex. Cr. 90, 114 S. W. 635 (murder; to obtain evidence on the accused's allegation that he had shot the deceased in self-defence and not from behind, an order of exhumation of the body was held improperly refused by the trial Court; model opinion, by Ramsey, J., Brooks, J., diss.; stated more fully ante, § 2216); Washington: 1914, State v. Clifford, 78 Wash. 555, 139 Pac. 650 (exhumation of an intestate's body, to ascertain whether castration had prevented paternity; stated more fully ante, § 2216).

§ 2222. [1] 1702, Title v. Grevett, 2 Ld. Raym. 1008 ("a man that conveys lands may be a witness to prove he had no title, . . . but he is not compellable to give such evidence"); 1779, Cox v. Whalley, cited 10 East 399 (action against four persons for a dinner bill; another of the diners, being called by the plaintiff to prove the services rendered, claimed a privilege as interested, but L. C. J. Mansfield "disallowed the objection"). Then followed, in 1795, Lord Kenyon's ruling, in Bain v. Hargrave, partly to the contrary (cited in the next section); and then Lord Melville's Case and the statute (cited in the next section), which restored Lord Mansfield's ruling in effect; in later cases the question could rarely be raised: 1842, Doe v. Date, 3 Q. B. 608, 617, per L. C. J. Denman (privilege denied); 1848, R. v. Vickery, 12 Q. B. 478 (collecting earlier cases at common law, and intimating that the interest of a taxable inhabitant of a parish made him privileged; here held compellable under a statute).

[2] Connecticut: 1787, Storrs v. Wetmore, Kirby 203 (joint owner, interested, held not accorded the privilege where under reformed pleadings he was the "real party in interest," [3] and though a few Courts, conversely, recognized the privilege where he was a nominal party though not really interested.[4] The question has no importance to-day, since the enactment of statutes abolishing disqualification by interest (ante, § 576) and making parties compellable (ante, § 2218); but it needs to be mentioned in order to distinguish it from the larger doctrine examined in the next section.

§ 2223. (10) Facts involving a Civil Liability in general, independent of the Suit at Bar. There is also to be considered a doctrine, now completely repudiated, which once threatened to insinuate itself into the law, and survives only as a source of misunderstanding for the decisions of a century ago. That doctrine was that a privilege existed not to disclose facts involving a civil liability of any sort.

On the one hand, this is to be distinguished from the two preceding forms of privilege, namely, that of a party-opponent in a civil cause, and that of a witness interested in the cause. Those two might exist without the present one; yet the recognition of the present one would include the preceding ones, i. e. a privilege for facts involving a civil liability would exempt not only an compellable); 1797, Starr v. Tracy, 2 Root 528 (similar; but an interest voluntarily acquired does not protect); Kentucky: 1823, Gorham v. Carroll,3 Litt. 221 (assignor of note in suit, held not privileged); 1823, Black v. Crozier, 3 Litt. 226; 1827, Robinson v. Neal, 5 T. B. Monr. 212, 216; 1827, Conover v. Bell, 6 T. B. Monr. 157; Maryland: 1826, City Bank v. Bateman, 7 H. & J. 104, 110, semble (president of a bank, a stockholder and nominally a party in his corporate capacity, held not privileged); 1828, Stoddert v. Manning, 2 H. & G. 147, 157 ("interest in the event of the suit" gives no privilege); Massachusetts: 1809, Webster v. Lee, 5 Mass. 334, 336, semble (an interested witness may object to testifying against that interest); 1810, Appleton v. Boyd, 7 Mass. 131, 134 (an assignor of a mortgage, and a partner, not compelled to testify against the mortgagee, as persons interested in the event of the cause; no authority cited); 1827, Devoll v. Brownell, 5 Pick. 448 (trustee of personalty, compelled to answer on 'scire facias'); 1830, Bull v. Loveland, 10 Pick. 9, 12 (action on a note; one holding it as security for advances, held compellable to testify against his interest; repudiating Appleton v. Boyd; but not clearly distinguishing between the privilege of a civil party and the privilege against self-crimination); 1839, Com. v. Willard, 22 Pick. 476 (preceding case approved); Pennsylvania: 1818, Baird v. Cochran, 4 S. & R. 397, 400 (interested witness, not a party, not privileged); 1821, Nass v. Vanswearingen, 7 S. & R. 192, 195 (same); 1842, Ralph v. Brown, 3 W. & S. 395, 400 (same); South Carolina: 1818, Lott v. Burrel, 2 Mill Const. 167 (privilege denied); Tennessee: 1808, Cook v. Corn, 1 Overt. 340 (interested witness, held privileged with hesitation, upon the literal words of the Constitution exempting him from giving "evidence against himself," though the clause "was particularly intended for criminal cases"); 1809, Stewart v. Massengale, 1 Overt. 479 ("An interested witness cannot be compelled to swear; it is a privilege as to himself, which he has a right to claim"); 1812, Tatum v. Lofton, Cooke 115 (foregoing doctrine held not applicable to a witness who had by his own act become interested, though at first not interested); 1834, Zollicoffer v. Turney, 6 Yerg. 297 (interested witness held not privileged, on the authority of Lord Melville's Case, post, § 2223; Cook v. Corn repudiated, as not being a direct decision); Vermont: 1828, White v. Everest, 1 Vt. 181, 189, semble (no privilege); 1843, Ward v. Sharp, 15 Vt. 115, 118 (same); 1844, Stevens v. Whitcomb, 16 Vt. 121, 123 (same).

Contra: 1849, Holmes v. Holloman, 12 Mo. 536 (privilege recognized).

Undecided: 1806, U. S. v. Grundy, 3 Cr. 337, 338, 343, 355.

[3] 1827, Mauran v. Lamb, 7 Cow. N. Y. 174, 177 (action on a check, for the benefit of R.; R. held not compellable, as "the real plaintiff"); 1828, People v. Irving, 1 Wend. N. Y. 20 ("real parties in interest," held not compellable); 1843, Henry v. Bank of Salina, 5 Hill N. Y. 523, 526, 541 (approving Mauran v. Lamb); 1828, White v. Everest, 1 Vt. 181, 189; 1844, Stevens v. Whitcomb, 15 Vt. 121, 123.

[4] 1833, Owings v. Low, 5 G. & J. 134, 146; 1852, Watts v. Smith, 24 Miss. 77, 78; 1843, Tenney v. Evans, 14 N. H. 343, 348.

ordinary witness from answers on incidental facts of that nature, but also a party and an interested witness from any answers in the cause. As a matter of history, the privilege for a civil party was fully recognized at common-law, as also to a limited extent the privilege for an interested witness; but this supposed privilege for facts of civil liability independent of the suit at bar never prevailed anywhere. On the other side, this supposed privilege is to be distinguished from the privilege against facts involving a criminal liability (post, § 2254); indeed, it may be supposed that historically it was first suggested as a sort of extension of the latter privilege. The notion of criminal liability was well settled to include not only the liability to imprisonment or fine in a prosecution under the name of the Crown or the State, but also such other liabilities as were in fact though not in form penal, — as, for example, liability to a penalty recoverable by an informer, or to a forfeiture prescribed by statute or by contract (post, §§ 2256, 2257); and a willing judicial mind might easily see an opportunity here for extension by analogy. The present pretended doctrine might indeed be sufficiently disposed of by treating it in the definition of matters which the crimination-privilege does not include. Nevertheless, whatever its origin in judicial thought, the relation in principle and precedent between this and the privileges of civil parties and interested witnesses mark it off as a separate thing. It falls naturally on the border line between the long-abolished common-law privilege of a civil party and the still vigorous privilege against self-crimination. It is to be thought of as a shadow which once hovered over this line, but has long since been dissipated.

What, then, was the history of this wraith? This much is fairly certain, that it was never seen or heard of till the end of the 1700s. By that time, the privilege against disclosing self-criminating facts had been a century under way (post, § 2250) and was matter of elementary knowledge; it was understood to include in its scope the protection against disclosure of matters of forfeiture (post, § 2256). But of any extension of this idea of punitive forfeiture, to include the idea of ordinary civil liability to perform a contract or pay damages for a tort, or the like, no trace whatever appears until 1795, when Lord Kenyon, then Chief Justice of the King's Bench (since 1788, when Lord Mansfield had retired), came forth with a broad pronouncement to that effect.[1] It does not appear that he had any authority for this notion. But naturally his view produced some effect; and that effect was increased upon the printing, in 1801 (the year before Lord Kenyon's death), of this ruling of his in Mr. Peake's influential treatise on Evidence, — the only work of its kind in England since Mr. Justice Buller's book of forty years before. Before long, however, this novel notion was fortunately forced upon the attention of the judges of England as a whole. This happened through an investigation, in 1806, by impeachment in the House of Lords, into the financial scandals connected with Lord Melville (Mr. Dundas) and the management of the war. Upon the introduction of a bill to compel answers from witnesses and to hold them harmless so far as their privilege was thus taken away — an expedient often used to annul the self-crimination privilege (post, § 2281) — the question naturally arose whether there existed any privilege which thus stood in the way of requiring answers on matters involving merely a civil liability. Upon this question the opinion of all the judges was formally asked.[2] Their answers were divided; but the majority of nine in fourteen included the most weighty names, together with that of Lord Eldon, then temporarily out of office but sitting as peer;[3] and the three of longest experience took occasion to express emphatically their polite astonishment at the pretension to this new privilege:

§ 2223. [1] 1795, Bain v. Hargrave, Peake, Evidence, 184, note (assumpsit against a collecting agent; on an issue of payment, the payee, not a party but a fellow-clerk of the defendant, was asked whether some money was not due from some person — meaning the witness — to the plaintiff; and, on objection, Lord Kenyon said "that he would not oblige him to answer any question which might tend to charge himself with a debt; a man might come voluntarily and charge himself with a debt, but he could not be compelled to charge himself civilly, any more than to make himself liable to a criminal prosecution"; no precedent cited); in the next year, he hedged slightly: 1796, Doxon v. Haigh, 1 Esp. 409, 411 (L. C. J. Kenyon "said that generally a witness being subjected to a civil right, in consequence of an answer to a question put to him, would not warrant him in refusing to answer, as the rule was rather confined to a criminal one; but a witness should not be asked a question which might charge himself obliquely by his answer, where there could otherwise be no direct evidence or charge against him").

1806, L. C. ERSKINE, in the Debate on Lord Melville's Case, Hans. Parl. Deb. 1st ser., VI, 249, said that "he had been for seven-and-twenty years engaged in the duties of a laborious profession, and while he was so employed, he had the opportunity of a more extensive experience in the courts than any other individual of his time.[4] It was true that in the profession there had been, and there now were, men of much more learning and ability than he would even pretend to; but success in life often depended more upon accident, and certain physical advantages, than upon the most brilliant talents and profound erudition. It was very singular that, during these twenty-seven years, he had not for a single day been prevented in his attendance on the courts by any indisposition, or corporeal infirmity. Within much the greater part of this period, he had been honoured by a gown of precedency, and in consequence of this privilege, had not only been engaged in every important cause, but had conducted causes of this description during that period in the court of King's Bench. . . . Although his experience was equal not only to any individual judge on the bench, but to all the judges, with their collective practice; yet, he never knew a single objection to have been taken, to an interrogatory proposed, because

[2] 1806, Lord Melville's Trial, Peake, Evidence, 184, note (Questions put to the judges: "1. Whether according to law a witness can be required to answer a question relevant to the matter in issue, the answering which has no tendency to accuse himself, but the answering which may establish or tend to establish that he owes a debt recoverable by civil suit? 2. Whether according to law a witness can be required to answer a question relevant to the issue, the answering of which would not expose him to a criminal prosecution, but might expose him to a civil suit at the instance of His Majesty for the recovery of profits derived by him from the use or application of public money contrary to law?").

[3] 1806, Feb. and Mar., Lord Melville's Case, Witnesses' Indemnity Bill, Hansard's Parl. Debates, 1st ser., vol. VI, pp. 170, 222, 234, 243 (to the questions just quoted the answer was "Yes," by eight judges, Sutton, B., Graham, B., Chambre, J., Le Blanc, J., Heath, J., Macdonald, C. B., Ellenborough, C. J. of K. B., Erskine, L. C., with Lord Eldon; and "No," by five judges, Grose, J., Lawrence, J., Rooke, J., Thompson, B., and Mansfield, C. J. of C. P.; the opinions of this majority seem to have been treated as carrying conclusive weight; their tenor was, in general, that the privilege extended only to "such questions as would expose him to a criminal prosecution or to a penalty or forfeiture").

[4] Erskine's amiable egotism may be seen in this exordium.

the reply to it would render the witness responsible in a civil suit. It was true, that in Mr. Peake's book, which had been frequently cited on the present occasion, there was a note by which it should appear that an objection of this kind had been taken by the late Chief Justice Kenyon; but, notwithstanding his high opinion of the minute accuracy and great learning of that reporter, he thought he had, in this instance, been guilty of a mistake, on two grounds; 1st, because he [Erskine] himself had been counsel in the cause, and had no recollection of the circumstance; 2dly, because, if that note were correct, Lord Kenyon must have been guilty of an obvious contradiction of his own principles and sentiments, as they appeared even on the face of the same report. . . . Notwithstanding some difference of opinion among high authorities, among persons for whom he had the greatest veneration, yet he could not help thinking that the law itself was unembarrassed from these contradictions. He considered it so far precise, clear, and perspicuous, that it was necessary no new law should be promulgated, otherwise than in the form of a declaratory law, by which it should be announced what had been the law, what was the law, and what ought to be the law, and what shall be the law of the land as to this important particular."

These deliverances before the House of Lords disposed forever in England of the sprouting heresy.[5] Though a statute was immediately passed to remove the doubt,[6] it was plainly understood to be declarative of the law, and not alterative, and has always been so treated.[7]

In the United States, the news of the doubt came naturally enough to the Courts of some jurisdictions in the early days;[8] but, with practical una-

[5] The truth seems to have been that the minority, the supporters of this supposed privilege, reflected merely the prejudice of that reactionary and jealous portion of the profession which, led by L. C. J. Kenyon, had set itself stiffly against any doctrine bearing the approval, or put forward as settled by the sanction of Lord Mansfield; his liberal views on this subject are seen in Cox v. Whalley (cited ante, § 2222, note 1); this attitude of Lord Kenyon has been elsewhere noticed (ante, § 1858). In this instance, it would seem that when Lord Kenyon, in the case of Bain v. Hargrave (supra, note 1), had committed himself, probably without much reflection, to the privilege in question, his followers, notably Justices Grose, Lawrence, and Rooke, came to stand by it obstinately, as if the credit of Lord Kenyon's memory, and of the movement he represented, were involved.

[6] Sir Samuel Romilly's argument for this bill, set forth in his diary (Life, 3d ed., II, 9), was a forceful one.

[7] The act was offered as a "Bill for Declaring the Law with respect to Witnesses being Liable to Answer" (Hans. Parl. Deb., 1st ser., VI, 401, 421, 486, 502, 525, 753, 768). The statute was as follows: 1806, St. 46 Geo. III, c. 37 ("Whereas doubts have arisen whether a witness can by law refuse to answer a question relevant to the matter in issue, the answering of which has no tendency to accuse himself or to expose him to any penalty or forfeiture, but the answering of which may establish or tend to establish that he owes a debt or is otherwise subject to a civil suit at the instance of His Majesty or of some other person or persons, Be it therefore declared, That a witness cannot by law refuse to answer a question relevant to the matter in issue, the answering of which has no tendency to accuse himself or to expose him to penalty or forfeiture of any nature whatsoever, by reason only or on the sole ground that the answering of such question may establish or tend to establish that he owes a debt or is otherwise subject to a civil suit either at the instance of His Majesty or of any other person or persons"); 1808, R. v. Woburn, 10 East 395 (pauper settlement; an inhabitant of the defendant parish, refusing to testify for the plaintiff parish, held not compellable; the statute declared not to apply to the party's privilege, and the inhabitant being in substance a party).

Similar statutes exist in Canada: Dom. R. S. 1906, c. 145, Evid. Act § 5 (no person is to be excused on the ground that his answer "may tend to establish his liability to a civil proceeding at the instance of the Crown or of any person"; remainder as quoted post, § 2281); Man. Rev. St. 1913, c. 65, § 5 (like Can. R. S. 1906, c. 145, Evid. Act § 5); N. Br. Consol. St. 1903, c. 127, § 7 (similar to St. 46 Geo. IV); Ont. Rev. St. 1914, c. 76, § 7 (similar; quoted post, § 2281).

[8] The questions and the answers in Lord Melville's Case became known to the profession in America by their publication in Hall's Journal of American Law, I, 223; they appear not to have been elsewhere printed at the time, except in later editions of Peake on Evidence.

nimity, the same reception was given to it, and the supposed privilege was by the Courts wholly repudiated.[9] Statutes also have sometimes covered the subject.[10] For the past three generations, this has been a settled point in the law of Evidence.

That this is as it should be, cannot be doubted. The recognition of such a privilege would be not only an unendurable obstruction to the search for truth, but also a gross anomaly in principle:

1830, RUFFIN, J., in Jones v. Lanier, 2 Dev. 480: "Since the jurisdiction of equity hath arisen to enforce discovery, the privilege [of a party at common law] not to testify against one's self is nominal, so far as respects mere liabilities for debts. Discoveries thus obtained by compulsion and on oath are constantly used in trials at law, as other admissions of the party; and the only limitation or discovery in equity is that it shall not extend to crimes, nor to charge one with a penalty nor incur a forfeiture. If then a person may be compelled to testify indirectly against himself in a suit at law then actually pending, would it not be strange that he should be protected from doing so against another because he might thereby expose himself to a future civil action? That would make the protection operate

[9] Ky. 1823, Gorham v. Carroll, 3 Litt. 221 (liability on a note); 1827, Robinson v. Neal, 5 T. B. Monr. 212, 216; La. 1819, Planters' Bank v. George, 6 Mart. 670, 673 (no privilege for matters involving liability to a civil suit); Md. 1818, Taney v. Kemp, 2 H. & J. 348 (no privilege as to answers which "may expose him to a civil action"); 1826, City Bank v. Bateman, 7 H. & J. 104, 111 (same); 1828, Stoddert v. Manning, 2 H. & G. 147, 157 (same); 1829, Naylor v. Semmes, 4 G. & J. 273, 276 (same); Mass. 1827, Devoll v. Brownell, 5 Pick. 448 (trustee of personalty, compelled to answer as to a fraudulent conveyance, on 'scire facias,' since the privilege "does not relate to questions of property"); 1830, Bull v. Loveland, 10 Pick. 9, 12 (St. 46 Geo. III, treated as a declaratory act; a witness held compellable to answer any matter that may "adversely affect his pecuniary interest," otherwise than to "expose him to criminal prosecution or tend to subject him to a penalty or forfeiture"); 1839, Com. v. Willard, 22 Pick. 476 (preceding case approved); N. H. 1825, Copp v. Upham, 3 N. H. 159 (no privilege as to liability to a civil suit; here, the fact of a debt); 1910, Boston & Maine R. Co. v. State, 75 N. H. 513, 77 Atl. 996 (general principle affirmed); N. Y. 1827, Mauran v. Lamb, 7 Cow. 174, 177 (approving the statute 46 Geo. III, as declaratory); N. C. 1830, Jones v. Lanier, 2 Dev. 480 (no privilege for matters involving liability to a civil suit); 1845, Harper v. Burrow, 6 Ired. 30, 33 (Jones v. Lanier approved); Oh. 1828, Cox v. Hill, 3 Oh. 411, 424 (liability to a civil action is not the subject of a privilege); Pa. 1818, Baird v. Cochran, 4 S. & R. 397, 400, semble (no privilege for liability to a civil suit); 1821, Nass v. Vanswearingen, 7 S. & R. 192, 195 (same); 1842, Ralph v. Brown, 3 W. & S. 395, 400 (same); Tenn. 1834, Zollicoffer v. Turney, 6 Yerg. 297, 301 (no privilege for matters involving liability to a civil suit); Vt. 1843, Ward v. Sharp, 15 Vt. 115, 118 (Lord Melville's Case approved).

Contra: 1821, Benjamin v. Hathaway, 3 Conn. 528, 532 (privilege not to testify to a debt, recognized; going upon the mistaken authority of the rulings as to interested witnesses, ante, § 2222; here the witness, a sheriff, was asked for testimony as to his liability to a penalty for a false return, and the Court's remark was 'obiter'); 1827, Northrop v. Hatch, 6 Conn. 361, 364 (preceding case approved).

[10] Alaska: Comp. L. 1913, § 1507 (like Or. Laws 1920, § 870); Cal. C. C. P. 1872, § 2065 (no privilege for a question whose "answer may establish a claim against himself"); Ida. Comp. St. 1919, § 8044 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 2065); Ia. Code 1897, § 4611, Comp. Code § 7318 (no privilege for an answer merely subjecting to "civil liability"); Mich. Comp. L. 1915, § 12547 (no privilege for an answer tending to establish "that such witness owes a debt or is otherwise subject to a civil suit"); Mo. Rev. St. 1919, § 5419 (no privilege from answering a relevant question on the ground that the answer may tend to establish "that such witness owes a debt or is otherwise subject to a civil suit"); Nebr. Rev. St. 1921, § 8843 (no privilege "upon the mere ground that he would thereby be subjected to a civil liability"); Nev. Rev. L. 1912, § 5437 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 2065); N. Y. C. P. A. 1920, § 355 ("A competent witness shall not be excused from answering a relevant question on the ground only that the answer may tend to establish the fact that he owes a debt or is otherwise subject to a civil suit"); Or. Laws 1920, § 870 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 2065); P. I. P. C. 1911, Gen. Order 58 of 1900, § 56 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 2065); P. R. Rev. St. & C. 1911, § 1532 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 2065); Utah: Comp. L. 1917, § 7141 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 2065); Wis. Stats. 1919, § 4077 (substantially like N. Y. C. P. A. § 355).

quite differently from the original purpose of it. . . . The effect would be that when the protection can be of immediate and direct service to him for whom it was created, it shall be unavailing; but when it operates chiefly to the advantage of a third person, it shall be in force. This is a complete perversion of the principle, and shows that the rule of exclusion ought not to exist."

§ 2224. (11) Prosecution in a Criminal Case; Production of Documents or Chattels. If there is no privilege for the party opponent in a civil case, is there one for the prosecution in a criminal case? In some jurisdictions, Courts are disposed to concede one.[1]

In favor of such a privilege, it would be said that it merely balances evenly the accused's privilege to withhold documents and chattels (post, § 2254). On the other hand, a sense of fairness, emphatically expressed in legislation a century old, has conceded to the accused the power to obtain discovery before trial of the prosecution's list of witnesses, and this is in effect a repudiation of that much of a privilege. Yet, as against this, the experience of daily practice tells us that the unscrupulous counsel for accused is not to be trusted, and warns us that no further favors should be shown. But, once more, it may be replied that the State has already a great advantage in resources of marshalling evidence, and that the over-zealous prosecutor is often grossly unfair.

Apart from current practice, it seems wiser to stand firm upon ordinary considerations of fairness, and to hold that the prosecutor is not entitled at the trial to withhold from the inspection of the accused and the jury any documents or chattels relevant to the case.

§ 2224. [1] Add here the cases cited ante, §§ 1859 g, 1863 (discovery before trial); in point of policy, a grant of discovery before trial is necessarily a negation of privilege: Ind. 1883, McDonel v. State, 90 Ind. 320, 321 (motion for production in Court, before trial, by the prosecuting attorney, of articles in the State's possession as evidence, refused for lack of the usual affidavit); Mo. 1886, State v. Brooks, 13 Amer. St. Tr. 702, 747 (murder of P., cutting up the body and packing it in a trunk; the State having exhumed P.'s body, the defence, after trial begun, asked that opportunity be given for expert witnesses to examine the corpse; the prosecuting attorney at first declined, the judge was undecided; afterwards the proposal was abandoned by counsel for defence); N. Y. 1914, People v. Becker, 210 N. Y. 274, 297, 104 N. E. 396 (murder; testimony on commission taken for defendant and returned under seal in the Court's custody, was refused by the trial Court to be opened unless the defendant's counsel would agree to read the answers in evidence; held error); Oh. 1910, State v. Rhoads, 81 Oh. 397, 405, 91 N. E. 186 (certain notes of an interview with an intending witness, and minutes of testimony to the grand jury, held not producible on the trial by the prosecuting attorney for use by the defeadant's counsel in cross-examining; unsound); Or. 1921, State v. Yee Guck, 99 Or. 231, 195 Pac. 363 (murder; notes of interview with eye-witnesses, in possession of the district attorney, held not demandable at the trial by defendant's counsel, for use in cross-examination; unsound); 1921, State v. Brake, 99 Or. 310, 195 Pac. 583 (stenographic notes of an alleged second confession of an accomplice, M.; M. was on the stand, and the prosecuting attorney had the notes; on request, the defendant held not entitled to have or inspect the notes, for use in cross-examining M., the notes not being themselves usable in evidence; general principle not settled; but the ruling is unsound; if an accomplice made a confession, the accused was entitled in common fairness to see it, whether or not he could or would use it in evidence); Pa. 1869, Com. v. Twitchell, 1 Brewst. 551, 561 (bloody clothing, etc., offered by the prosecution; defendant held entitled to have his expert witnesses inspect the articles in the presence of an officer of Court; useful opinion); P. I. 1919, U. S. v. Baluyot, 40 P. I. 385, 405 (at the trial, the accused's counsel held not entitled to inspect certain written statements made by witnesses to the prosecuting officer before trial, no showing of probable self-contradictions being made).

TOPIC A (continued): PRIVILEGED TOPICS

SUB-TOPIC II: PRIVILEGE FOR ANTI-MARITAL FACTS (HUSBAND OR WIFE TESTIFYING AGAINST THE OTHER)

CHAPTER LXXVII.

§ 2227. History of the Privilege. The history of the privilege not to testify against one's wife or husband is involved, like that of civil parties (ante, § 2217), in a tantalizing obscurity. That it existed by the time of Lord Coke is plain enough; but of the precise time of its origin, as well as the process of thought by which it was reached, no certain record seems to have survived. What is a little curious is that it comes into sight about the same time as the disqualification of husband and wife to testify on one another's behalf (ante, § 600); for the two have no necessary connection in principle, and yet they travel together, associated in judicial phrasing, from almost the beginning of their recorded journey.

This much, however, may be fairly assumed, that the privilege existed before the disqualification; for in what is apparently the earliest explicit ruling, in 1580, the wife's testimony on her husband's behalf is treated as receivable, while his privilege to keep her from testifying against him is apparently sanctioned.[1] Moreover, the privilege is recognized more than once in the next half century;[2] but there appears no ruling upon a wife's disqualification during that whole period, nor for some time thereafter.[3]

§ 2227. [1] 1580, Bent v. Allot, Cary 135 (a defendant having examined his wife in chancery, the plaintiff was allowed a subpœna against her, the examination for the husband to be suppressed if he did not suffer her examination for the plaintiff).

In searching for analogies to throw light upon this treatment of marital testimony, we are left without significant traces. The rules for deed-witnesses afford no precedents. The ordinary witness, who had only within two generations become a common figure in jury-trials, was plainly not subject to any disqualifications whatever before this same period of the Elizabethan reign (ante, § 575), though he was not compellable (ante, § 2190), so that it is not strange that no clue is to be found in this field. Moreover, in the testimonial rules of the ecclesiastical law, which in general obtained in chancery, and might thus have been naturally drawn upon for analogies, the disqualifications of witnesses included not only a wife but also all members of the family, together with dependents and servants;[4] yet the practice of the Chancellor and of the common-law judges never disqualified any but the wife,[5] and never privileged any but the wife.[6] To suppose, therefore, a borrowing of the ecclesiastical rule is to suppose that its naturally connected details were deliberately separated and were in part rejected; and this again compels us to account for the discrimination against a wife.

Possibly the true explanation is, after all, the simplest one, namely, that a natural and strong repugnance was felt (especially in those days of closer family unity and more rigid paternal authority) to condemning a man by admitting to the witness-stand against him those who lived under his roof, shared the secrets of his domestic life, depended on him for sustenance, and were almost numbered among his chattels. In a day when the offence of petit treason by a wife or a servant — violence to the head of the household — was still recognized, it would seem unconscionable that the law itself should abet (as it were) a testimonial betrayal which came close enough to petit treason, and should virtually permit a wife to cause her husband's death.[7] This process of thought (though it leaves unexplained the compellability of a son) is at least consistent with several features of the

[2] 1613, Anon., 1 Brownlow 47 ("By the common law she shall not be examined" against him; here, in bankruptcy proceedings). In 1623, the St. 21 Jac. 1, c. 19, § 6, expressly altered this; and its language seems to show that the privilege is a new thing: "And whereas by the former laws . . . some doubt hath been made whether the commissioners have power to examine the wives of bankrupts touching the same [concealment of goods]. . . . for clearing therefore the said doubt and avoiding the inconveniences aforesaid, . . . [the commissioners may] examine upon oath the wife and wives [!] of all and every such bankrupt for the finding out and discovery of the estate [concealed by them] . . . [and the wife] shall incur such danger and penalty for not coming before the said commissioners [as other persons do]."

[3] Coke mentions it in 1628 (quoted infra); but there are no rulings for some time thereafter, beginning about Charles II's reign: ante, § 600; infra, notes 8–12.

[4] Ante, § 600.

[5] Ante, § 600.

[6] 1613, Anon., 1 Brownlow 47 (a son is bound to reveal his father's treason; but a wife is not bound to discover her husband's). The following case seems to stand alone: 1631, Lord Audley's Trial, 3 How. St. Tr. 401, 402 (by the judges, "in like manner [to a wife], a villain might be a witness against his lord in such cases [of injury done to him by the lord]"; Lord Audley in his speech exclaims, "Woe to that man, whose servants should be allowed witnesses to take away his life!").

[7] Compare Lord Audley's exclamation, quoted supra, and the general notion then prevalent as to a privilege for confidential matters (post, §§ 2285, 2290).

situation, namely, with the half-recognition of a privilege against servants' testimony, with the fact that the early cases all deal with the privilege for a wife's testimony against her husband (not the husband's against the wife), and with the fact that the privilege is recorded for half a century before the disqualification is mentioned.

The disqualification is not found until Coke's treatise appears. Whether its subsequent career is to be credited wholly to his creation is perhaps a matter for speculation.[8] At any rate, in 1628 he couples in the same sentence both privilege and disqualification:

1628, Sir Edward COKE, Commentary upon Littleton, 6 b: "He that loseth 'liberam legem' becometh infamous and can be no witnesse; or if the witnesse be an infidell, or of non-sane memory, or not of discretion, or a partie interested, or the like. But oftentimes a man may be challenged to be of a jury that cannot be challenged to be a witnesse, and therefore, though the witnesse be of the neerest alliance or kindred, or of counsell, or tenant, or servant to either partie, or any other exception that maketh him not infamous, or to want understanding or discretion, or a partie in interest, though it be proved true, shall not exclude the witnesse to be sworne. . . . Note, it hath been resolved by the justices that a wife cannot be produced either against or for her husband, 'qua sunt duæ animæ in carne una'; and it might be a cause of implacable discord and dissention between the husband and the wife, and a meane of great inconvenience; but in some cases women are by law wholly excluded to bear testimony, as to prove a man to be a villain."

In Coke's pronouncement, the privilege is stated in absolute terms. Nevertheless, it was already well understood to be subject to some exceptions in criminal cases.[9] In civil cases, it appears to have been generally assumed to be already conceded;[10] although some sort of doubt hung over it in this respect for more than a century.[11] By the end of the 1600s, the existence of the privilege in general is plain enough in both civil and criminal cases;[12] and the [8] Because he cites as authority a ruling of 10 Jac. 1, i. e. 1613, which, however, was apparently the case in Brownlow, cited supra, and asserted the privilege alone.

[9] 1631, Lord Audley's Trial, 3 How. St. Tr. 401, 402, 414 (the judges resolved that the wife might be a witness against her husband for rape upon her, instigated by him; "for she was the party wronged; otherwise she might be abused"; "in civil cases the wife may not [witness against him], but in a criminal cause of this nature, where the wife is the party aggrieved, and on whom the crime is committed, she is to be admitted a witness against her husband"). In the following report of this case, the privilege is denied for criminal cases in general: 1631, Lord Audley's Case, Hutton 115 ("It was resolved that in case of a common person between party and party she could not [be a witness]," "but between the King and the party, upon an indictment, she may, although it concerns the 'feme' herself"). This explains the meaning of the doubts later expressed (post, § 2239) by some judges as to the law of Lord Audley's Case.

[10] 1580, Bent v. Allot; 1613, Anon.; 1631, Lord Audley's Trial; cited supra.

[11] 1784, Bentley v. Cooke, 3 Doug. 422 (assumpsit by woman as 'feme sole'; R., being called by defendant to prove her married to him, was excluded, by three judges, on the ground that there was a general rule for all cases; Buller, J., doubted, because "as to the general rule, I find it only in criminal cases").

[12] Cases cited post, § 2239, and the following: 1684, L. C. J. Jeffreys, in Lady Ivy's Trial, 10 How. St. Tr. 555, 644 ("By the law the husband cannot be a witness against his wife, nor a wife against her husband, to charge them with anything criminal; except only in cases of high treason. This is so known a common rule that I thought it could never have borne any question or debate"); 1688, Cole v. Gray, 2 Vern. 79 (bill for account by children of the defendant's wife by a former husband; the wife was examined for the plaintiff as to the amount of her first husband's estate; but L. C. Jeffreys "disallowed her evidence and declared the wife could not be a witness against her husband").

doubt, after all, never had any chance of surviving in the face of Coke's authority, and has left no mark upon the law and no serious controversy in the records.

On the whole, then, the privilege may be said to have been understood to exist in some shape before the end of the 1500s, and to have been firmly established by the second half of the 1600s.

§ 2228. Policy of the Privilege. 1. The record of judicial ratiocination defining the grounds and policy of this privilege forms one of the most curious and entertaining chapters of the law of Evidence. It is curious, because the variety of ingenuity displayed, in the invention of reasons 'ex post facto,' for a rule so simple and so long accepted, could hardly have been believed, but for the recorded utterances. It is entertaining (if any error in the law can ever be entertaining), because of its exhibition of the subtle power of cant over reason, and of the solemn absurdity of explanations which do not explain and of justifications which do not justify, and because of the fantastic spectacle of a fundamental rule of Evidence, which never had a good reason for existence, surviving none the less through two centuries upon the strength of certain artificial dogmas, — pronouncements wholly irreconcilable with each other, with the facts of life, and with the rule itself, and yet repeatedly invoked, with smug judicial positiveness, like magic formulas, to still the spectre of forensic doubt. No one of these supposed reasons was ever logically carried out in the enforcing of the rule; no one of them represented a sound cause for its existence; and no one of them, in all probability, reproduced the motives or sentiments which actually served for the original acceptance of the rule in the 1500s. Yet they passed current, — one here and one there; one for this judge, another for that judge. That the rule of privilege existed, all were agreed. That it had some good reason for existence, all were equally agreed. To name that good reason precisely was a matter of much less consequence. Perhaps the question did not deserve a plain answer. And so, after all, the inquisitive little Peterkin at the bar, questioning too rashly the postulated platitudes of the Caspars in the profession, had to be content with what was vouchsafed.

2. This singular condition of the law may perhaps be laid to the blame of Lord Coke. He it was who struck the first false note. He mouthed a few Latin words of mediæval scholasticism, and suggested a consideration doubtful in its morality and narrow in its view of human nature; and his successors seem to have been satisfied not to improve upon this example. Uninstructed by worthy judicial suggestions, professional and public opinion has been slow to appreciate and to repudiate the fallacies of the rule. The various reasonings by which the support of the rule has been attempted have of course had different vogues, — some rather at one time and in one court, some in others. But almost every one of the chief arguments had appeared in England by the early 1800s; after that time, there is usually mere repetition. The following passages will serve fairly to represent the leading types of argument:

1680, HALE, L. C. B., Pleas of the Crown, II, 279: "[Man and wife] are disabled in respect of the civil unity of their persons."

1696, Sir John Fenwick's Trial, in the House of Commons, 13 How. St. Tr. 582. Sir T. Powis (for the accused): "Now what any man's wife says cannot be made use of against him, as nothing that she says or does can be made use of for him; and by the same rule of justice it cannot be made use of against him, for otherwise the rule would be unequal." Sir B. Shower (for the accused): "The actions of a wife cannot be evidence for nor against her husband, . . . and that for the economy, the danger might follow in cases of matrimony and families."

1736, HARDWICKE, L. C. J., in Barker v. Dixie, Lee cas. t. Hardwicke, 264: "The reason why the law will not suffer a wife to be a witness for or against her husband is to preserve the peace of families."

1767, BULLER, J., Trials at Nisi Prius, 286: "Husband and wife cannot be admitted to be witness for each other, because their interests are absolutely the same; nor against each other, because contrary to the legal policy of marriage."

1768, Sir William BLACKSTONE, Commentaries, I, 443: "If they were admitted to be witnesses for each other, they would contradict one maxim of the law, 'nemo in propria causa testis esse debet'; and if against each other, they would contradict another maxim, 'nemo tenetur seipsum accusare.'"

1792, KENYON, L. C. J., in Davis v. Dinwoody, 4 T. R. 678: "Their being so nearly connected, they are supposed to have such a bias on their minds that they are not to be permitted to give evidence either for or against each other."

1839, IRVIN, J., in Mills v. U. S., 1 Pinney 73, 75 (excluding a husband called on a charge of his wife's adultery): "The fact here sought to be proved by the husband, to wit, the marriage of himself and the accused (or plaintiff in error) was so important that without it the prosecution must fail, and his wife though once accused would then stand acquitted before the world. But suffer or compel him to testify, and indelible disgrace may be fixed upon his family and he be made the subject of the deepest mortification which a sensitive being can endure. . . . Is a policy so fraught with mischief to those delicate relations of society to be established? Surely not."

1867, CAMPBELL, J., in Knowles v. People, 15 Mich. 408, 413: "It is very manifest that the rule which prevents a wife from being compelled to testify against her husband is based on principles which are deemed important to preserve the marriage relation as one of full confidence and affection; and that this is regarded as more important to the public welfare than that the exigencies of lawsuits should authorize domestic peace to be disregarded for the sake of ferreting out some fact not within the knowledge of strangers. . . . The power of declining to call such a witness is not reserved to protect from awkward disclosures, but out of respect of the better feelings of humanity, which impel all right-minded persons to shrink from any needless exposure to the ordeal of a public examination of persons who would be unnatural and unworthy if they did not feel a very strong bias in favor of their consorts."

1868, SHARSWOOD, J., in Pringle v. Pringle, 59 Pa. 281, 288: "Nothing is better settled than that wherever the wife is interested, the husband cannot be a witness; not on the score of his interest, for he may preclude himself from any by a release, or may have done so by a settlement to her separate use; but entirely on the ground of public policy. It is necessary to preserve family peace and maintain that full confidence which ought to subsist between husband and wife."

1875, Mr. Evarts, arguing, in Tilton v. Beecher, N. Y., Abbott's Rep. II, 49 (objecting to the admission of the plaintiff in an action of criminal conversation): "The common law has said, great as is the interest of the administration of justice, all-powerful as it should be, to draw into court all evidence that can speak the truth within the rules of evidence, yet the administration of justice was made for society, not society for the administration of justice; and there are certain institutions of society lying at the base of our civilization, sustaining the whole fabric of its prosperity, its purity, its dignity, and its strength, which must not be undermined, or corrupted, or disfigured, or defiled, under the notion that in the administration of justice the truth must be sought in every quarter and from every witness. Thus the great minds, legislative and judicial, the great moralists, the great religious teachers, have all combined to say that there are certain limits imposed by the nature of human society in the fabric as it is constituted, for our defense and protection, that cannot be overpassed. . . . When the common law says that a man and his wife are one, or, in Lord Coke's language, 'two souls in one person' — it is said no man shall put asunder those who are thus joined together, and, least of all, in the name of law, shall the administration of justice pull and tear asunder this conjugal relation by the step of the sheriff or the precept of the judge that compels one to come and betray the other. It is not, when the question comes before the Court, so much the interest, or the duty, or the particular circumstances of the individual case of marriage that are thus brought up for attention, as the institution itself."

Most of these reasons do not call for particular dissection; their very statement is void of force. Some of these utterances, such as the invocation, by Lord Coke and Lord Hale, of the unity and identity of married persons, are merely appeals to a fiction, which cannot serve as a legislative reason. Others, such as the phrase of Mr. Justice Buller about the "legal policy of marriage," are nothing but definitions of 'ignotum per ignotius.' Still others are irrelevant, — such as Mr. Justice Blackstone's reference to the privilege against self-crimination. Others, again, confuse the present privilege with the disqualification, and also with the privilege for confidential communications. The disqualification of husband and wife to testify in each other's behalf rests on reasons wholly independent of their privilege not to testify against each other (ante, § 601), and yet many of the earlier judges put forward some reason for the not testifying "for or against each other," as though the two rules were identical in policy. So, too, the privilege for confidential communications is not only quite different in scope, but stands upon its own sufficient grounds (post, § 2332); and yet the reason for it is often advanced as if it supported the present privilege.

3. Of the reasons which call for serious consideration, there seem to be distinguishable no more than two:

(a) The first of these is the argument so often repeated in the more modern opinions (though ranging back also among the oldest of the arguments), namely, the danger of causing dissension and of "disturbing the peace of families." Of this it may be premised, to be sure, that no manner of attempt was ever made by any Court to enforce this reason logically, and thus to test the accuracy of its utterance. For example, in the very case [1] in which Mr. Justice Grose purported by this rule to safeguard the ineffable domestic peace, the husband had long before absconded and married another wife; so that the learned judge's application of this reason exposed him to the citation of a proverbial expression about stable-doors. But, if we are to ignore the futility of appealing to a reason which is never allowed in practice to be logically applied, and are to treat it as a serious argument, the answer is, first, that the peace of families does not essentially depend on this immunity from compulsory testimony, and, next, that so far as it might be affected, that result is not to be allowed to stand in the way of doing justice to others. When one thinks of the multifold circumstances of life that contribute to cause marital dissension, the liability to give unfavorable testimony appears as only a casual and minor one, not to be exaggerated into a foundation for so important a rule. It is incorrect to assume that there exists in the normal domestic union an imminent danger of shattering an ideal state of harmony solely by the liability to testify unfavorably. Moreover, the significance of the argument is that if Doe has committed a wrong against Roe, and Doe's wife's testimony is needed for proving that wrong, Doe, the very wrongdoer, is to be licensed to withhold it and thus to secure immunity from giving redress, because, forsooth, Doe's own marital peace will be thereby endangered, — a curious piece of policy, by which the wrongdoer's own interests are consulted in determining whether justice shall have its course against him. This alone, without further following into the details of the reasoning, will serve to exhibit that argument's fallacy.

§ 2228. [1] 1788, R. v. Cliviger, 2 T. R. 263, 269.

(b) A second reason, having some plausibility, and well expressed in the language of Mr. Justice Irvin and Mr. Justice Campbell, comes in substance to this, that there is a natural repugnance in every fair-minded person to compelling a wife or husband to be the means of the other's condemnation, and to compelling the culprit to the humiliation of being condemned by the words of his intimate life-partner. This reason, if we reflect upon it, is at least founded on a fact; and it seems after all to constitute the real and sole strength of the opposition to abolishing the privilege. Let it be confessed, then, that this feeling exists, and that it is a natural one. But does it suffice as a reason for the rule? In the first place, it is not more than a sentiment. It does not posit any direct and practical consequences of evil. It is much the same reason that any one might give for abolishing the office of hangman in the jail or the business of spies in a war.[2] In the next place, it exemplifies that general spirit of sportsmanship which, as elsewhere seen,[3] so permeates the rules of procedure inherited from our Anglo-Norman ancestors. The process of litigation (many learned judges agree) is a noble kind of sport; and certain rules of fair play should never be overstepped.[4] One of these is to give something of a start to the victim of the chase, to follow him by certain rules only, and to respect his feelings so far as may be. This complicates the sport, and adds zest for the pursuers by increasing the skill and art required by them for success. The expedient of convicting a man out of the mouth of his wife is (let us say) poor sport,

[2] One may note here the inconsistency of the law in conceding the privilege for the testimony of wife or husband against each other, but in ignoring it for the testimony of parent and child, brothers and sisters, which equally involve the tender sentiments of domestic life.

[3] Ante, § 1845, post, § 2251.

[4] Such was the language of Mr. (later L. C. J.) Denman, quoted post, § 2251.

and we shall not stoop to it. Such is the theory and the sentiment of sportsmanship.

The answer to it is the answer that has had to be made for all the instances of its invocation, namely, that litigation is not a game, and that the law can never afford to recognize it as such; that the law, moreover, does not proceed by sentiment, but aims at justice. This generality would perhaps never be disputed; but in actual argument the constant tendency is to confuse sentiment with reason. A learned judge, for example,[5] refuses to compel this testimony for the mere sake of "ferreting out" the facts. Why sneer at the investigation of truth, by the innuendo of "ferreting," as though some petty and dishonorable practice were involved? This argument by innuendo is typical enough of much of the reasoning in support of the present privilege. Let us face the fact that when a party appears in a court of justice, charged with wrong or crime, the unavoidable and solemn business of the Court and the law is to find out whether he has been guilty of the wrong or the crime; that the State and the complainant have a right to the truth; and that this high and solemn duty of doing justice and of establishing the truth is not to be obstructed by considerations of sentiment, in this respect any more than in others.—So far as any recorded utterance has yet been found, no logical argument advanced for the present privilege has ever risen to a higher level than an appeal to these same considerations of sentiment.

4. It is with Jeremy Bentham that we begin to find (in this instance as in so many others) the reaction appearing against this illogical and unfounded doctrine of the common law; and his arguments have not failed to meet (though more slowly than in most other instances) a deserved acceptance in enlightened professional opinion. The following passages serve to illustrate the variety of reasoning that has helped thus far to bring about the abolition of the privilege in a moderate number of jurisdictions:[6]

1827, Mr. Jeremy Bentham, Rationale of Judicial Evidence, b. IX, pt. IV, c. V (Bowring's ed. vol. VII, pp. 481 ff.): "'Hard,' 'hardship,' 'policy,' 'peace of families,' 'absolute necessity,' — some such words as these are the vehicles, by which the faint spark of reason that exhibits itself is conveyed. There are the leading terms, and these are all you are furnished with; and out of these you are to make an applicable, a distinct and intelligible proposition, as you can. . . . [As to the 'policy' of the situation, it is precisely the opposite; for] if a man could not carry on schemes of injustice, without being in danger, every moment, of being disturbed in them, and (if that were not enough) betrayed and exposed to punishment by his wife, injustice in all its shapes, and with it the suits and the fees of which it is prolific, would, in comparison with what it is at present, be rare. Let us, therefore, grant to every man a licence to commit all sorts of wickedness, in the presence and with the assistance of his wife; let us secure to every man in the bosom of his family, and in his own bosom, a safe accomplice; let us make every man's house his castle; and, as far as depends upon us, let us convert that castle into a den of thieves! Two men, both married, are guilty of errors of exactly the same sort, punishable with exactly the same punishment. In one of the two instances (so it happens) evidence sufficient for conviction is obtainable, without having recourse to the testimony of the wife. While the one suffers — capitally, if such be the punishment, — to what use, with what consistency, is the other to be permitted to triumph in impunity? . . . A rule like this, protects, encourages, inculcates fraud. For falsehood, positive falsehood, is but one modification of fraud; concealment, a sort of negative falsehood, is another; I mean, concealment of any facts of which, for the protection of their rights, individuals or the public have a right to be informed. . . . By authorizing an individual to conceal it, in a case in which it is not so much as pretended that its mischievousness is in the smallest degree less than in other cases, it at once protects and encourages two different acts, of the mischievousness and criminality of which it shows itself sufficiently sensible on other occasions; — the principal crime, and that concealment of it, which, when the act so concealed is criminal, is itself a crime. . . . [As to the danger of 'dissension,'] if the dissension were, in the nature of the case, so implacable as the argument supposes, it should, consistently speaking, operate as a motive with the law to prescribe, rather than exclude, this source of information. 'If I attempt this crime, it may happen to my wife, from whom I cannot hope to conceal it, to be called upon to bear witness against me; and then, — even if I should escape from the punishment of the law, — the pain of seeing, in the partner of my bed, the once probable instrument of my destruction, will never leave me. . . . Oh! but think what must be the suffering of my wife, if compelled by her testimony to bring destruction on my head, by disclosing my crimes!' — 'Think?' answered the legislator: 'Yes, indeed I think of it; and, in thinking of it, what I think of besides, is, what you ought to think of it. Think of it as part of the punishment which awaits you, in case of your plunging into the paths of guilt. The more forcible the impression it makes upon you, the more effectually it answers its intended purpose. Would you wish to save yourself from it? it depends altogether upon yourself; preserve your innocence!' To the legislators of antiquity, the married state was an object of favour; they regarded it as a security for good behaviour; a wife and children were considered as being (what doubtless they are in their own nature) so many pledges. Such was the policy of the higher antiquity. The policy of feudal barbarism, of the ages which gave birth to this immoral rule, is to convert that sacred condition into a nursery of crime. The reason now given was not, I suspect, the original one. Drawn from the principle of utility, though from the principle of utility imperfectly applied, it savours of a late and polished age. The reason that presents itself as more likely to have been the original one is the grimgribber nonsensical reason, — that of the identity of the two persons thus connected. Baron and Feme are one person in law. On questions relative to the two matrimonial conditions, this quibble is the fountain of all reasoning." [7]

[5] In Knowles v. People, quoted supra.
[6] For the history of the legislation, see post, § 2245.

1838, Lord (HENRY T.) COCKBURN, Circuit Journeys (1889), p. 19: "Edinburgh, 30th April, 1838. — We had tough work at Perth, which it took four and a half days to get through. . . . Two things deserving of notice occurred in the course of the business. One was, that we had a bigamist before us. The other was, that we had an example of that horrid piece of nonsense, invented within these twenty years by the Court of Justiciary, and called by the inventors the 'Option.' The absurdity cannot possibly last long, and for the edification of posterity it may be as well to tell what it was. Some people think it cruel, and conducive to perjury, to compel parents or children to give evidence against each other; others — of whom I am one — admit it to be painful, but think that everything must yield to the necessities of justice, and that nothing is so cruel as that an innocent man should be convicted because a son is indulged in protecting his father by silence, which may happen in many ways. What is thought the humane side prevails at present in our criminal law. But it occurred to some of the judges, about twenty years ago, that, as the indulgence was granted solely from delicacy to these relations, it was competent to them to reject it if they chose. They therefore introduced the 'Option,' by which parents and children might hang each other or not, just as they pleased, unless they happened to be under pupillarity, in which case, being held incapable of discretion, they are always rejected.

[7] Mr. Bentham's arguments have been repeated in Chief Justice Appleton's treatise on Evidence, c. IX (1860). Another of his disciples makes also a powerful presentation: circa 1823, Edward Livingston, Introductory Report to the Code of Evidence (Works, ed. 1872, I, 456 ff.).

"The practical operation of this folly is this: — A mother is on trial for her life. Her daughter is called as a witness against her. The Court tells her she has the option. She is a person of right feelings, and declines to testify. The possession of such feelings is a proof that she is worthy of being credited, even in the case of a parent. Nevertheless, truth is defied, and the claims of justice disregarded, for her comfort. But if she had been a monster, to whom hanging her mother was a luxury, that is, if she had been a person who exercised this option by preferring to give evidence, then she proves herself to be utterly incredible. Yet, just on this account, she is admitted to be sworn. And if the whole family be true to each other, as is commonly (but not always) the case, then all the light depending on parents and children is utterly excluded. A father may cut his wife's throat with complete safety, provided he takes care to perform the operation before nobody but her ten grown-up sons and daughters. In the case at Perth, a man called Murray was charged with having forged his son's name. But the son, who alone could prove the forgery, took advantage of this notable option, and refused to answer, on which the witness and the accused walked out of the court arm in arm. . . .

"This tissue of necessary nonsense is no part of the law of Scotland. The fear of perjury, — a foolish principle, but one that was not unnatural to superstitious barbarians, played on by cunning churchmen, — made our old law reject such testimony altogether and without distinction. But the option, by which its reception is made to depend on the pleasure or profligacy of each witness, is the production of a few judges, not at all qualified to legislate on such a subject, within these few years. The true principle is, to disregard relationship, except that of husband and wife, as an objection to the competency of any witness. . . .

"Bonaly, 11th May, 1840. — . . . I was in court the whole of three days, the 28th, 29th, and 30th. There was nothing particular in any of the cases, except that in one of them we had an excellent specimen of that beautiful 'option.' Four people were under trial for theft, and two for reset. A villain, who would have cut the throats of all his relations for a shilling, was called as a witness by the prosecutor. It was objected that, being the son of one of the thieves, he was not bound to give evidence. . . . So I was obliged to disgrace the law by explaining to him the respect paid to his sensibilities, and that in order to spare his filial piety, he had the option of defeating justice by telling the truth or not, just as he chose. No censure of this modern piece of judge-made legal nonsense could be severer than the grotesque and villainous leer with which he said: 'Odd! a' like that hoption, ma Lord!' on which he retired amidst the laughter of the prisoners, and the amazement of the jury, and saved the two resetters.

"The Lord Advocate (Rutherford) and I made out a Bill lately, which has just passed the Commons, for preventing the repetition of such disgraceful scenes by abolishing the objection of relationship. But its passage through the Peers is by no means certain; for a majority of the Faculty of Advocates is actually opposing it. They call such a blackguard's declining to speak, 'the voice of nature,' and profess to be moved by the 'metus perjurii.' The opponents always take the case in which nothing worse can happen than that a guilty man escapes. But under this rule an innocent one may be convicted. Take this case. A is on trial along with B for a murder, which B alone committed. He calls B's son, who saw his father alone do it. In this case the life of the innocent person is sacrificed to what, at the very best, is the filial injustice of the guilty one's relation."

1853, Commissioners of Common Law Procedure, Second Report, 13: "A more difficult question [than that of admitting them in each other's favor] arises when we proceed to consider whether it should be made competent to an adverse party to call a husband or wife as witness against one another. The case would no doubt be of rare occurrence; when it did, it would in the greater number of instances be where husband and wife have separated and are on bad terms with one another. In such cases the mischief apprehended from the interruption of domestic happiness becomes out of the question. But suppose the husband and wife living together on the usual terms; here the identity of interest between them will deter an adverse party from calling one against the other, except under very peculiar and pressing circumstances and when the fact to be proved is certain in its character and clearly within the knowledge of the witness. . . . But if there be such a fact in the knowledge of one of two married persons, so material to the cause of the adverse party as to make it worth his while to run the risk of calling so hostile a witness, it becomes matter of very serious consideration whether justice should be allowed to be defeated by the exclusion of such evidence. It is clear that nothing but an amount of mischief outbalancing the evil of defeated justice can warrant the exclusion of testimony necessary to justice. What, then, is the mischief here to be apprehended? The possibility of resentment of a husband against a wife for testifying to facts prejudicial to his interest. But it is obvious that such resentment could only be felt by persons prepared to commit perjury themselves and to expect it to be committed in their behalf. Such instances, we believe, would be very rare; and we do not think that a regard to the feelings of individuals of this class, or the amount of mischief likely to arise from a disregard of them, is sufficient to compensate for the loss which in many cases may result from the exclusion of the evidence. . . . The conclusion to which the foregoing observations leads us is that husband and wife should be competent and compellable to give evidence for and against one another on matters of fact as to which either could now be examined as a party in the cause."

1875, Mr. Beach, arguing for the defendant, in Tilton v. Beecher, N. Y., Abbott's Rep., II, 87 (answering the argument of Mr. Evarts, quoted supra): "I agree, sir, that the law cherishes with tenderness the family and the home; and well it is, sir, that it should; for I agree too with my learned friend that upon them rests the true foundation of every well-regulated society and government. . . . I agree that no society or government can stand — virtuously stand — except upon the maintenance of the sanctity and the virtue of the domestic circle. So I agree too, sir, that there is much of beauty and sacredness in the idea of unity attached to the marriage relation. . . . But are we to forget that in what is called the progress of civilization that idea has been mangled and defaced? Are we to be blind to the legislation of the present? Are we to ignore the fact that all these ideas have been exploded and destroyed by what I deem the vandalism of modern legislation? In 1848 that unity was effectually impaired [by the property statutes]. . . . Now she may get out into the world and barter and trade and tussle with the energies of commercial and business life. Once her true sphere was in the domestic circle and around the hearthstone, cultivating those tender sentiments and qualities which were at once her grace and glory, but to-day by the voice and power of legislation she is ushered into the busy scenes of life, and becomes an active and independent actor in all its struggles. The counsel says this idea of unity, this consecration of the domestic circle, can not be torn by the rude hand of the law. Sir, it has been mangled and torn! That identity of interest, that union of soul, has been separated, not only by the voice of legal theory, but by the practical application of it to the ordinary concerns of life. My learned friends have produced here, sir, a wonderful mass of authorities gathered from adjudications under the ancient law both in England and the States of this country. . . . What need to gather those ancient authorities pronounced under a rule and a policy inapplicable to the present condition of our society, and asserting none of the rights which, by modern legislation, have been conferred mutually upon husband and wife? My friends have been digging the fossils of a past generation. They are gathering here the dead carcasses of exploded theories and adjudications, and confronting them in ghastly contrast with what professes to be the improvement of modern times. Sir, we are not governed by them."

This privilege has no longer any good reason for retention. In an age which has so far rationalized, depolarized, and de-chivalrized the marital relation and the spirit of Femininity as to be willing to enact complete legal and political equality and independence of man and woman, this marital privilege is the merest anachronism, in legal theory, and an indefensible obstruction to truth, in practice.

2. Who is Prohibited as Husband or Wife

§ 2230. Paramour; Void Marriage. The policy of the privilege, whatever it may be, applies at any rate to those only who profess to maintain towards each other the legal relation of husband and wife. There is therefore no privilege to withhold the testimony of a mere paramour or mistress.[1] Furthermore, the lofty object of protecting from invasion the sanctity of marital peace is deemed to extend to those only who legally and technically are husband and wife, whatever their honest and innocent belief may have been as to the validity of their relation. Hence there is no privilege to persons whose marriage is void;[2] their domestic peace may be shattered at any litigant's discretion. Again, as the innocent unmarried are not deemed to deserve the benefit of the rule, so too, conversely, its benefits are gained by the ingenious wrongdoer who brings himself within its formal terms by marrying the witness after service of subpœna and thus creating 'ad hoc' a domestic peace which is to be jealously safeguarded.[3]

§ 2231. Bigamous Marriage; Disputed Marriage. It follows, furthermore, that a second, bigamous, or plural wife, is not a person whose testimony is of the privileged class; and that, although the exposure of this marital fraud may long before have dispelled 'de facto,' from the presence of all parties, the mystic halo of domestic peace which the law so strives to preserve, or § 2230. [1] The first rulings on this point in England were contradictory: 1782, Anon., 3 C. & P. 238, 1 Price 83, note (by Lord Kenyon, C. J.; mistress falsely held out as wife, excluded); 1795, R. v. Bramley, 6 T. R. 330 (pauper settlement; persons cohabiting for 30 years; wife admitted to deny the marriage); 1814, Campbell v. Twemlow, 1 Price 81 (point not decided). But the privilege was then finally repudiated; 1828, Batthews v. Galindo, 4 Bing. 610. C. P. (a woman held out as a wife, but not lawfully so; repudiating the doubt in Campbell v. Twemlow; and the 'nisi prius' ruling of Best, C. J., in the case at bar, reported in 3 C. & P. 238).

So also the rulings in the United States: 1868, Robertson v. State, 42 Ala. 509; 1864, People v. Anderson, 26 Cal. 129, 133; 1880, People v. Alviso, 55 Cal. 230, 232; 1920, State v. Harris, — Mo. —, 222 S. W. 377 ("common-law wife," excluded; but on the facts the ruling is far-fetched); 1905, State v. Hancock, 28 Nev. 300, 82 Pac. 95.

[2] Eng. 1831, Wells v. Fletcher, 5 C. & P. 21 (the woman having married supposing erroneously that her first husband was dead); 1851, R. v. Young, 5 Cox Cr. 296 (wife of one who had illegally married his deceased wife's sister); U. S. 1901, Hoxie v. State, 114 Ga. 19, 39 S. E. 944 (a woman may testify that she is not a wife, though reputed as such); 1915, Jeems v. State, 141 Ga. 493, 81 S. E. 202 (accused's wife formerly married to a person who is still living); 1906, State v. Rocker, 130 Ia. 239, 106 N. W. 645 (murder; defendant being already married, the woman now living with him as wife was admitted against him); 1836, State v. Samuel, 2 Dev. & B. N. Car. 177 (slave wife).

On this and the preceding point, compare the rulings upon a wife's disqualification on the husband's behalf (ante, § 605). Compare also the cases concerning abduction (post, § 2239), which were sometimes placed on the ground that the marriage was void.

[3] 1829, Pedley v. Wellesley, 3 C. & P. 558; 1903, Moore v. State, 45 Tex. Cr. 234, 75 S. W. 497 (after process begun); compare the Georgia statute cited post, § 2239, note 11.

although the 'pax conjugaiis' may really now exist for the second purporting wife while a state of belligerency may prevail for the first wife, nevertheless these actualities count for nothing, in the theory of the law, and 'de jure' the hypothesized halo surrounds all the relations with the first wife, and never has existed for the relations with the second. Hence, in a case involving an alleged bigamy, the party alleging it is met by the privilege, if against the husband he calls the first wife, who is upon his own assumption the lawful one;[1] yet he is obstructed by no privilege, if he calls the second wife.[2]

It is true that the husband may, on the facts of the case, be disputing not the second marriage but the first one, and thus, by the husband's claim of facts, the second wife would be the lawful and therefore the privileged one; and hence the denial of the privilege as to her in that case would seem to beg the question by assuming in advance the very fact in issue; so that Courts, being hard put to it in such a situation, have occasionally allowed the claim of privilege.[3] Yet this solution, after all, merely begs the question in the converse manner, for it equally assumes the disputed fact, namely, that there was no first marriage; and it commits the solecism of recognizing the privilege, not because the witness is the party's wife but because she is claimed to be. The truth is that the very nature of this privilege leads to such inextricable dilemmas, in other issues[4] as well as in that of bigamy; and with such unedifying quibbles is it pretended to pursue this seductive cynosure of conjugal concord.

§ 2231. [1] Eng. 1672, R. v. Griggs, T. Raym. 1 (here a husband); 1803, East, Pl. Cr. I, 469; U. S. 1870, Williams v. State, 44 Ala. 24, 28; 1892, State v. Ulrich, 110 Mo. 350, 364, 19 S. W. 656; 1922, State v. Pinson, — Mo. —, 236 S. W. 354 (bigamy; the lawful wife not admissible for the prosecution). Contra: 1897, State v. Melton, 120 N. C. 591, 592, 26 S. E. 933 (under Code § 588). For the statutory exception for "crimes against the other," as including bigamy, see post, § 2239.

[2] Eng. 1680, Hale, Pleas of the Crown, I, 693; U. S. 1878, Johnson v. State, 61 Ga. 305, 306 (murder); 1894, Wrye v. State, 95 Ga. 466, 22 S. E. 273 (murder); 1905, Murphy v. State, 122 Ga. 149, 50 S. E. 48; 1894, Cole v. Cole, 153 Ill. 585, 589, 38 N. E. 703 (dower); 1903, Barber v. People, 203 Ill. 543, 68 N. E. 93 (cited infra, note 3); 1905, Hoch v. People, 219 Ill. 265, 76 N. E. 356 ("If the first marriage is admitted or is clearly proved, the alleged second wife is competent," except as to the first marriage); 1866, Kelly v. Drew, 12 All. Mass. 107, 109 (replevin); 1867, State v. Johnson, 12 Minn. 476, 486; 1867, Shark's Estate, 4 Brewst. Pa. 305, 306; 1859, Finney v. State, 3 Head Tenn. 544, 546.

Compare the rulings on a wife's disqualification on the husband's behalf (ante, § 605).

[3] 1880, Miles v. U. S., 103 U. S. 304, 313 (bigamy; C., charged and admitted to be defendant's wife, not allowed to prove his prior marriage to E.; "it is only in cases where the first marriage is not controverted, or has been duly established by other evidence, that the second wife is allowed to testify"); 1903, Barber v. People, 203 Ill. 543, 68 N. E. 93 (second wife held admissible to prove the second ceremony, after other evidence of the first ceremony, but not to prove the first ceremony, even after other evidence thereof); 1874, Friel v. Wood, 1 Utah 160 (a "plural" wife, excluded on the facts, no issue as to the validity of the first marriage being raised; McKean, C. J., diss.).

[4] Eng. 1784, Bentley v. Cooke, 3 Doug. 422 (assumpsit as 'feme sole'; R., being called by the defendant to prove the plaintiff married to R., was excluded, although it was objected that to concede R. incompetent as husband was to assume the very fact alleged by the defendant; and yet, to admit and to believe him would have been to declare him incompetent); U. S. 1919, Pusey's Estate, 180 Cal. 368, 181 Pac. 648 (intestacy; the appellant, a husband claiming that a divorce was valid, not allowed to object to the divorcee's testimony on the present ground); 1906, State v. Rocker, 130 Ia. 239, 106 N. W. 645 (murder; a woman living with defendant as his wife, admitted against him, after evidence of his and of her former marriage to another).

3. What is prohibited as Testimony

§ 2232. Extrajudicial Admissions of Wife or Husband. That which is privileged is testimony in any form, by the wife or husband against the other. Extrajudicial admissions are a sort of testimony (ante, § 1048); hence, they are equally privileged with testimony on the stand. The same result, to be sure, may be reached by another principle, for since the wife or husband is not ordinarily an agent for the other (ante, § 1078), the former's extrajudicial statements are mere hearsay assertions and therefore inadmissible. Whichever theory the judicial rulings may have had in mind, it is settled that such admissions are not receivable, either when the spouse making them is a third person as to the litigation,[1] or when he or she is a party to the cause;[2] in the latter case, they are receivable as against the maker alone.

But in the application of this principle, several things are to be discriminated:

(1) If the wife (for example) has in fact acted, for the matter in hand, as agent of the husband, or has a joint property-interest, and while agent or interested has made admissions or done acts creating a liability in contract or tort, those admissions and acts are receivable against him, as against any other principal or owner (ante, §§ 1078, 1080);[3] for not only is the privilege

§ 2232. [1] ENGLAND: 1799, Kelly v. Small, 2 Esp. 716 (assumpsit for money lent by one of the plaintiffs before marriage; her admissions excluded, as going "to the prejudice of the husband").

UNITED STATES: Ala. 1841, Hussey v. Elrod, 2 Ala. 339 (wife's admissions as to a battery on her); Ark. 1853, Funkhouser v. Pogue, 13 Ark. 295 (wife's admissions as to trespass done by her); Cal. 1861, People v. Simonds, 19 Cal. 276; Ia. 1900, Cedar Rapids N. Bank v. Lavery, 110 Ia. 575, 81 N. W. 775 (wife's admissions as to a fraudulent conveyance, excluded; a statutory change not being operative at the trial); La. 1869, Simmons v. Norwood, 21 La. An. 421; Mich. 1894, Dalton v. Dregge, 99 Mich. 250, 58 N. W. 57 (crim. con.; wife's admissions excluded; but her letters received by defendant are receivable as his admissions); Minn. 1904, Halbert v. Pranke, 91 Minn. 204, 97 N. W. 976 (husband's petition in bankruptcy, excluded); Mo. 1874, State v. Arnold, 55 Mo. 89; Nebr. 1902, Baty v. Elrod, 66 Nebr. 735, 92 N. W. 1032 (husband, as to the separate estate); N. Y. 1866, Deck v. Johnson, 1 Abb. App. Cas. 497, 500; N. Car. 1842, May v. Little, 3 Ired. 27; Pa. 1824, Smith v. Scudder, 11 S. & R. 325, 326; 1887, Burrell v. Uncapher, 117 Pa. 353, 362, 11 Atl. 619; 1889, Martin v. Rutt, 127 Pa. 380, 383, 17 Atl. 993 (husband's admissions as to goods levied on as his but claimed by her); 1893, Evans v. Evans, 155 Pa. 572, 577, 26 Atl. 755 (similar); Tex. 1898, La Master v. Dickson, 91 Tex. 593, 45 S. W. 1 (by a husband, after a perfected gift to the wife by her father, excluded); Vt. 1844, Churchill v. Smith, 16 Vt. 560; Wis. 1903, Baker v. State, 120 Wis. 135, 97 N. W. 566 (false pretences; defendant's husband's admissions, excluded).

Contra: 1899, State v. Bertoch, — Ia. —, 79 N. W. 378, semble; 1886, Cook v. State, 22 Tex. App. 511, 3 S. W. 749 (wife's acts and utterances as a joint principal, admitted); 1905, State v. Mann, 39 Wash. 144, 81 Pac. 561 (arson by a husband as accessory to the wife; the wife's confessions as principal, admitted against the husband).

[2] Eng. 1796, Alban v. Pritchett, 6 T. R. 680 (action by wife as executrix and husband jointly; her admissions not receivable against him); 1797, Denn v. White, 7 T. R. 112 (wife's admission of a trespass, not received in an action against them jointly); U. S. 1827, Com. v. Briggs, 5 Pick. 429 (husband and wife jointly indicted; wife's admissions receivable against herself alone); 1897, Broderick v. Higginson, 169 Mass. 482, 48 N. E. 269 (separate actions for personal injuries by husband and wife, tried together; admissions of one not to affect the other).

[3] England: 1722, Anon., 1 Stra. 527 (Pratt, C. J., "allowed the wife's declaration, that she agreed to pay 4*s.* a week for nursing a child, was good evidence to charge the husband; this being a matter usually transacted by the woman," i. e. so that she was his agent); 1783, Palethorp v. Furnish, 2 Esp. 511 (the promise against a wife's testimony not violated (since the person here has a double capacity), but otherwise the husband could always shield himself from liability whenever he chose to make his wife an agent to transact business.

(2) Again, when statements are made by the wife in the husband's presence, under such circumstances that his silence would be equivalent to an admission of their truth (ante, § 1071), the statements are receivable, as would be those of any other person; for they are not offered as hers, but as his by assent and adoption;[4] provided, of course, that third persons were present of a wife managing the defendant's business removes the bar of the statute of limitations); 1794, Emerson v. Blondin, 1 Esp. 142 (assumpsit for rent, the defendant's wife having made the bargain; Lord Kenyon, C. J., said "that where a wife acts for her husband in any business or department, by his authority and with his assent, he thereby adopts her acts, and must be bound by any admission or acknowledgment made by her respecting that business in which by his authority she has acted for him"); 1808, Gregory v. Parker, 1 Camp. 394 (statute of limitations); 1814, Carey v. Adkins, 4 Camp. 92; 1817, Anderson v. Sanderson, 2 Stark. 204, Holt 591 (like Palethorp v. Furnish); 1823, Clifford v. Burton, 1 B. & P. 199 (admissions of a wife tending shop, received); 1825, Petty v. Anderson, 3 Bing. 170 (similar); 1842, Tindal, C. J., in O'Connor v. Marjoribanks, 4 M. & Gr. 435, 442 ("In an action against the husband, you might prove the agency of the wife 'aliunde,' and then give her admissions or acts in evidence against the husband; . . . acts and admissions of the wife must be proved 'aliunde,' not by herself"); 1843, Meredith v. Footner, 11 M. & W. 202 (Alderson, B.: "A wife cannot bind her husband by admissions unless they fall within the scope of the authority which she may reasonably be presumed to have derived from him").

United States: 1871, Magness v. Walker, 26 Ark. 470; 1823, Turner v. Coe, 5 Conn. 94 (here excluded, because no agency appeared); 1842, Barton v. Osborn, 6 Blackf. 145; 1853, Dubois v. Ferrand, 8 La. An. 373; 1869, Leon v. Bouillet, 21 La. An. 651; 1869, Robichaux v. Bouillet, ib. 681 (the agency must first be evidenced by other testimony); 1900, Barker v. Mackay, 175 Mass. 485, 56 N. E. 614 (the agency is a question of fact for the jury); 1916, Pickard v. Clancy, 225 Mass. 89, 113 N. E. 838 (bill in equity against husband and wife to recover moneys obtained in fraud of creditors; the husband had been convicted of crime committed in such fraud; his testimony at his trial for the crime, held inadmissible here against the wife, apparently on the ground that no conspiracy had been otherwise evidenced); 1810, Boyles v. M'Eowen, 3 N. J. L. 499; 1813, Fenner v. Lewis, 10 Johns. N. Y. 38, 44 (here the husband had agreed that the wife should receive goods, and her admission of their receipt was admitted); 1834, Thomas v. Hargrave, Wright Oh. 595 (but the agency must first be otherwise proved); 1920, Steele v. State, 87 Tex. Cr. 588, 223 S. W. 473; 1915, Thompson v. State, 77 Tex. Cr. 417, 178 S. W. 1192 (felonious assault; the wife's declarations as an aider of her husband, made at the time, admitted); 1871, Goodrich v. Tracy, 43 Vt. 314, 319; 1862, Birdsall v. Dunn, 16 Wis. 235, 238; 1867, Shaddock v. Clifton, 22 Wis. 114, 116 (husband's admissions received in a joint action for the wife's injuries, since he had a joint property-interest in the claim); 1874, Bach v. Parmely, 35 Wis. 238 (wife's agency of necessity to buy necessaries).

Contra: 1901, Duncan v. Landis, 45 C. C. A. 666, 106 Fed. 839, 859 (Pennsylvania St. 1887 held to allow no exception for a spouse acting as agent).

Distinguish the statutes and rulings under the privilege for communications (post, §§ 2238, 2240), which expressly make an exception to the common-law privilege by allowing testimony on the stand from one who has acted as agent.

[4] Cal. 1872, People v. Murphy, 45 Cal. 137, 143; Ga. 1904, Joiner v. State, 119 Ga. 315, 46 S. E. 412 (wife's statements of husband's cruelty, to a third person in defendant's presence, admitted); Mich. 1879, People v. Knapp, 42 Mich. 269, 3 N. W. 927 (defendant in a prosecution for adultery; that defendant's wife had complained against the other woman for the adultery, held not to have been by the implied assent of the defendant, and hence not an admission); 1894, Dalton v. Dregge, Mich. (cited supra, note 1); 1904, People v. Hossler, 135 Mich. 384, 97 N. W. 754; Mo. 1908, State v. Wooley, 215 Mo. 620, 115 S. W. 417 (wife's written statement read aloud to the husband and assented to by him, admitted; distinguishing State v. Burlingame); N. J. Boyles v. M'Eowen, 3 N. J. L. 499; N. Y. 1867, M'Kee v. People, 36 N. Y. 113, 116 (remarks of the accused's wife); Tenn. 1860, Quesner v. Morrow, 1 Coldw. 123 (wife's statements, in husband's presence, as to money claimed to have been taken by him, admitted; "the statements of the wife are or that in some other way the privilege against confidential communications (post, § 2336) is obviated.

(3) Upon a bill in chancery against a husband and a wife, the wife's answer, so far as it contains testimonial admissions by way of discovery, is inadmissible against the husband, because of this privilege;[5] yet, so far as an answer is a pleading, it can of course be compelled, and its use as a pleading is to be distinguished from its use as an admission.

(4) So far as the husband, for example, is a party in a representative capacity only, the admissions of the wife, as the person beneficially concerned, are receivable against herself.[6]

(5) So far as the wife's statements as to ownership of property are offered, not as a wife's admissions, but as declarations of a grantor or possessor, they may be received, if they satisfy the principles of that subject, already examined (ante, §§ 1082, 1086, 1778, 1779).

§ 2233. Hearsay; Production of Documents. The privilege applies to testimony in any form. Hence the production of documents from the wife or husband against the other is within the privilege.[1] So, too, it would seem that hearsay declarations by the wife or husband, such as would ordinarily be receivable under some exception to the Hearsay rule, should be excluded not received or treated as evidence against the husband, but merely as inducement to the responsive admissions, declarations, or acts of the husband at the time; . . . an admission may be presumed, not only from the declarations of a party, but even from his acquiescence or silence"); Vt. 1918, Pope v. Hogan, 92 Vt. 250, 102 Atl. 937 (ejectment; admission by one spouse in the other's presence, received against the other; but an admission in the absence of the other, the two being tenants by entireties, not received).

Contra: 1920, People v. Jordan, 292 Ill. 514, 127 N. E. 117 (rape under age; defendant and his wife came to see the girl's father, who said to the wife in the defendant's presence, "Why didn't you, when you caught them at it, admit to me he was guilty, when I was there?" She replied, "If I only had!"; this reply excluded, on the theory of being a wife's testimony against her husband; unsound; it was an admission by the defendant's silence); 1898, State v. Burlingame, 146 Mo. 207, 48 S. W. 72.

[5] Eng. 1719, Rutter v. Baldwin, 1 Eq. Cas. Abr. 226 (money borrowed by a married woman as 'feme sole,' the marriage being concealed with the husband's connivance; in a bill to charge the husband and wife with the mortgage, a divorce having in the meantime been obtained, the wife's answer was received as evidence; but the ruling was disapproved by Lord Eldon in Le Texier v. Anspach, 15 Ves. Jr. 166); 1800, Le Texier v. Anspach, 5 Ves. Jr. 322, 329, 15 id. 159, 166 (bill for discovery of contract made by the wife as agent for the husband; the agency was admitted, and the bindingness of her acts done, but her testimony in discovery was excluded); 1803, Cartwright v. Green, 8 Ves. Jr. 405 (bill against husband and wife for discovery as to goods appropriated, wife's discovery excluded); 1814, Barron v. Grillard, 3 Ves. & B. 165 (bill for discovery against husband and wife, concerning her ante-nuptial debt; discovery not compellable, because "the wife shall not give evidence against her husband").

The privilege is here to be claimed when answer is offered, and not when the discovery is first sought, if it is then demandable as from a party: 1904, Olmsted v. Edson, 71 Nebr. 17, 98 N. W. 415.

[6] 1831, Humphreys v. Boyce, 1 Moo. & Rob. 140 (admitted in an action against the husband as her administrator).

§ 2233. [1] 1897, State v. Durham, 121 N. C. 546, 28 S. E. 22; 1920, State v. Bramlett, 114 S. C. 389, 103 S. E. 755.

But testimony obtained by information gained from the wife would not be privileged: 1905, Com. v. Johnson, 213 Pa. 432, 62 Atl. 1064. Compare §§ 2261, 2325, post.

The following ruling, verging upon absurdity, may be noted here: 1894, Fratini v. Caslani, 66 Vt. 273, 276, 29 Atl. 252 (action for alienation of wife's affections; to prove the husband's assault upon the wife, a record of conviction was excluded, because, unless upon plea of guilty, it was based probably on the wife's testimony, incompetent in the present case).

when offered against the other spouse;[2] nevertheless, the early practice appears not to have gone to this extent.[3]

4. What Testimony is Anti-Marital

§ 2234. Testimony against Husband or Wife not a Party; General Principle. If the fear of causing marital dissension or disturbing the domestic peace were genuinely the ground of the privilege (ante, § 2228), then the privilege should apply to testimony which in any way disparages or disfavors the other spouse, irrespective of his being a party to the cause; for the wife's public assertion of a husband's fraud or perjury (for example) must tend plainly to that apprehended effect, even though the husband be not legally charged at the moment. On some such ground, it was early attempted to apply the privilege to all testimony thus attributing misconduct to the other spouse, or, as it was phrased, "tending" to accuse the other, i. e. making statements which, by exposing the misconduct, tended towards the formal institution of a suit or a prosecution:

1788, R. v. Cliviger, 2 T. R. 263; pauper settlement of M. as J.'s wife; in proving a prior marriage of J. to E., which J. had denied on the stand, E. was called in contradiction; it was argued for admission that the husband and wife were not parties nor interested in the settlement issue, and that "nothing that the woman could say could affect her husband; no prosecution could be grounded on her testimony"; this was disapproved. ASHHURST, J.: "I lay all consideration of interest out of the case. . . . But the ground of her incompetency arises from a principle of public policy, which does not permit husband and wife to give evidence that may even tend to criminate each other. The objection is not confined merely to cases where the husband or wife are directly accused of any crime, but even in collateral cases, if their evidence tends that way, it shall not be admitted. Now here the wife was called to contradict what her husband had before sworn, and to prove him guilty of perjury as well as bigamy; so that the tendency of her evidence was to charge him with two crimes. However, though what she might then swear could not be given in evidence on a subsequent trial for bigamy, yet her evidence might lead to a charge for that crime and cause the husband to be apprehended."

1846, TENNEY, J., in State v. Welch, 26 Me. 30, 32 (excluding the husband of one with whom the defendant was charged to have committed adultery): "If there is soundness in the reason which is given in the books for holding incompetent the husband or wife to

[2] 1835, Tacket v. May, 3 Dana Ky. 80 (wife's declarations as indicating husband's knowledge of a horse's unsoundness); 1899, National Germ. Am. Bank v. Lawrence, 77 Minn. 282, 79 N. W. 1016; 1920, Johnson v. State, 122 Miss. 16, 84 So. 140 (perjury; defendant's wife's conduct, not admitted against him, as being in effect "a confession by the wife of her husband's guilt"); 1906, State v. Richardson, 194 Mo. 326, 92 S. W. 649 (spontaneous declarations); 1919, State v. Reid, 178 N. C. 745, 101 S. E. 104 (hearsay statement by defendant's wife, 'per se' inadmissible, not received against defendant); 1915, U. S. Concepcion, 31 P. I. 183 (defendant's husband's former testimony); 1917, Bennett v. State, 80 Tex. Cr. 652, 194 S. W. 148 (manslaughter; the wife's diary held inadmissible against the defendant).

Contra, semble: 1920, Halback v. Hill, — D. C. App. —, 261 Fed. 1007 (letters written by the wife to the husband, before marriage, produced against him; more fully stated post, § 2235, note 6).

Distinguish the following: 1906, People v. Chadwick, 4 Cal. App. 63, 87 Pac. 384, 389 (perjury; the wife's testimony at the former trial, admitted on the issue of materiality).

[3] 1805, Aveson v. Kinnaird, 6 East 188 (cited ante, § 1718).

Compare the declarations admitted and excluded under the exceptions to the privilege (post, § 2239).

give against each other evidence, because it may be the 'means of implacable discord and dissension between them,' it is certainly difficult to perceive how that discord and dissension will fail to arise when in collateral proceedings testimony should be given by one which charges directly upon the other the same crime for the commission of which the party on trial is indicted."

But this application of the privilege was soon disowned in England; and its scope was restricted to such testimony only as disfavors the other spouse's legal interests in the very case in which the testimony is offered. It is not to be regretted that thus the attempt to be logical with an illogical reason came to failure, and that the privilege was wholesomely kept within some sort of bounds:

1817, ELLENBOROUGH, L. C. J., in R. v. All Saints, 6 M. & S. 195, 199: "If we were to determine, without regard to the form of proceeding, whether the husband was implicated in it or not, that the wife is an incompetent witness as to every fact which may possibly have a tendency to criminate her husband, or which connected with other facts may perhaps go to form a link in a complicated chain of evidence against him, such a decision, as I think, would go beyond all bounds." BAYLEY, J.: "There was no objection arising out of the policy of the law because by possibility her evidence might be the means of furnishing information and might lead to inquiry and perhaps to the obtaining of evidence against her husband. It is no objection to the information that it has been furnished by the wife. . . . I am not sure that the import of the expression 'tendency to criminate' was very accurately defined in that case [of R. v. Cliviger]. It was probably not understood as meaning that the wife's evidence could be used against her husband, for we know that this could not be so. . . . Nothing which the wife proved on this occasion could be the direct means of founding a prosecution against her husband, although it might afford the means of procuring evidence against him; but such a collateral consequence is not a sufficient objection." ABBOTT, J.: "It may properly be said of her evidence that it has not any tendency to criminate him, provided that expression be understood with the limitation which I affix to it, that is, to criminate him in the course of some proceeding in which a crime is imputed to him."

1806, ROANE, J., in Baring v. Reeder, 1 Hen. & M. 154, 168: "I take the rule on this subject to be that, in civil actions where the husband is no party, the wife may be called as a witness even to facts which if proved in another action to which her husband is a party, and by evidence other than her own, may go to charge him. The unavailing testimony of the wife in such a case, entirely impotent as it relates to the husband, producing him no loss, and consequently exciting in him no displeasure, will not violate the reason of that policy which, in respect to the harmony to be desired in the marriage state, has given rise to the rule in question."

1869, DURFEE, J., in State v. Briggs, 9 R. I. 361, 365: "Upon principle, we find no satisfactory ground for the distinction [between direct and indirect crimination]. The supposed disqualification of husband and wife to give, in collateral cases, testimony directly criminative of each other, is said to rest on the policy of avoiding dissensions between husband and wife; and, if so, the disqualification ought to be complete; for such dissensions, differing only in degrees of virulence, would be likely to result from testimony which tends to criminate as well as from that which is directly criminative. There are logically only two alternatives, either to exclude the testimony entirely, or to admit it to any extent in collateral proceedings provided that no use can afterwards accrue therefrom in any direct proceeding; we think it the better rule subject to such proviso to admit the testimony. . . . Neither can we perceive that any special mischief will be likely to result from it; for the testimony, being given in a collateral proceeding, could have effect only as information against the husband or wife, there being no contradiction between them, and there is but slight reason for supposing that the witness would willingly communicate under oath any information which would otherwise be withheld; generally, indeed, it is pretty well known, either from the witness himself or otherwise, what he can testify before he takes the stand. If we accord to the witness the privilege of objecting to testify on the ground that the testimony if given will criminate or tend to criminate a husband or wife, we think that in a proceeding which can never be used against the husband or wife there is no sound principle of public policy which requires that we should go still further, and put it in the power of a third person, by objecting when the witness does not object, to defeat (it may be) a just claim or escape a merited punishment."

1883, SHARPSTEIN, J., in People v. Langtree, 64 Cal. 256, 258, 30 Pac. 813: "When may she be said to be examined for or against him? . . . No one is said to be examined for or against one not a party to the action or proceeding in which such witness is called to testify. And the testimony of a witness is not evidence for or against any one not a party to the action or proceeding in which such testimony is given."

Of these reasons, two may be noted as particularly strong. One of them is that the exclusion of a wife on the ground that her testimony may reveal his misconduct, and thus "tend" to charge him, rests on the assumption, false to fact, that her testimony on the stand would in any sense be a revelation, an unsealing of that which was secret.[1] Nothing prevents her from revealing her knowledge out of court; in most instances she has in fact done so. It would be mere hypocrisy to sanction her silence on the stand on the pretext that the husband was thus really safeguarded from her disclosure. The other argument is found in the general principle (ante, § 2196), that a party cannot, as such, take advantage of a witness' privilege; in other words, an opponent cannot claim that the wife of a third person should be excluded because of the privilege of her husband, so long as neither husband nor wife claims the privilege.

In examining, then, the application of the rule in this respect, it is to be understood that by the orthodox view the privilege applies only in favor of a person against whom as a party to the cause the testimony of a wife or husband is offered.

§ 2235. Same: Sundry Applications of the Rule (Bankruptcy, Adultery, etc.). In the application of the rule to the great variety of facts that naturally present themselves, not much is profitable in the way of generalization. For one thing, in bankruptcy proceedings, the testimony of the wife of the bankrupt, so far as it is called for by the creditors, has always been deemed privileged, whatever the status of the husband as a party may be deemed to be.[1] In pauper-settlement cases, the town or other corporation is in strictness

§ 2234. [1] It is to be noted that the phrase "tend to criminate," as here used, is to be distinguished in meaning from the same phrase as used for the privilege against self-crimination. In that place (post, § 2260), it signifies that facts not being in themselves criminal, yet forming with other facts the elements of a crime, are within the privilege; and so here also, assuming the husband to be a party, the privilege concededly covers facts "tending" in that sense to charge him (L. C. J. Tenterden, in R. v. Bathwick, supra). But when he is not a party, and the question is whether the privilege covers facts directly involving a charge, the phrase "tend to criminate" is used, in R. v. Cliviger, supra, as also describing that totally distinct problem.

§ 2235. [1] Eng. 1613, Anon., 1 Brownl. 47 ("By the common law she shall not be examined"); 1719, Ex parte James, 1 P. Wms.

the party charged, and the testimony of the wife of the pauper or of any other person could not properly be the subject of a privilege; the authority of the contrary ruling in R. v. Cliviger (above quoted) was practically repudiated by the principle laid down in R. v. All Saints (above quoted).[2] In a case involving a charge of adultery, the testimony of the wife or husband of the person, not a party, with whom the adultery is charged, is not the subject of a privilege, on the principle of R. v. All Saints; but here there is a decided opposition in the judicial views.[3] Where the testimony offered does 610 (wife excluded; the statute of 21 Jac. I, quoted ante, § 2227, extending only to the concealment of goods and no further); U. S. 1899, Re Jefferson, 96 Fed. 826 (wife not compellable); 1899, Re Mayer, 97 Fed. 328 (wife not compellable to testify against a bankrupt husband, by Wisconsin law); 1903, Re Worrell, 125 Fed. 159 (U. S. St. 1903, applied; inquiry into the facts allowed to determine whether the business was the wife's separate business or not). Compare the statutes cited ante, § 488, and the cases under the self-crimination privilege, post, § 2282.

But otherwise where the proceeding is a bill against the wife herself, to set aside a conveyance from the husband: 1899, Re Fowler, 93 Fed. 417; 1905, Wiley v. McBride, 74 Ark. 34, 85 S. W. 84.

[2] Eng. 1788, R. v. Cliviger, 2 T. R. 263 (pauper settlement of M. as J.'s wife; E. was called to prove that she was married to J. prior to his marriage to M.; J. had already testified denying the prior marriage; it was argued that this showed J.'s commission of bigamy and perjury, though J. was not a party; the wife was excluded; quoted supra); 1817, R. v. All Saints, 6 M. & S. 195 (pauper settlement of E., married to W.; to show this marriage void, A. was admitted to prove her prior marriage to W., W. not having testified, and the husband not being a party nor contradicted as a perjurer; quoted supra); 1831, R. v. Bathwick, 2 B. & Ad. 639 (pauper settlement of E.; after C.'s testimony to his marriage with E., the opponent, to prove the marriage invalid, called M. to prove C.'s prior marriage to her; admitted, because "the present case is not a direct charge or proceeding against her husband . . . [neither] has any interest in the decision of the question"; whether if C. had denied such a marriage, and thus the wife testified to his perjury, the result would be otherwise, left undecided; R. v. Cliviger disapproved); U. S. 1814, Canton v. Bentley, 15 Mass. 441 (pauper settlement; husband's testimony to wife's adultery, to prove illegitimacy, doubted).

[3] Not privileged: Alabama: 1904, Pruett v. State, 141 Ala. 69, 37 So. 343 (adultery; husband of the woman with whom it was charged, admitted); Kansas: 1902, Roesner v. Darrah, 65 Kan. 599, 70 Pac. 597 (alienation of affections of plaintiff's wife; plaintiff admitted to testify); New Hampshire: 1857, State v. Marvin, 35 N. H. 22, 28; New Jersey: 1906, Hill v. Pomelear, 72 N. J. L. 528, 63 Atl. 269 (criminal conversation; plaintiff admitted to prove the marriage, under Rev. Pub. L. 1900, p. 363, § 5); New York: 1845, Van Cort v. Van Cort, 4 Edw. Ch. 621, 623 (divorce for adultery with X; X's husband admitted for the complainant, because adultery was not a crime in New York, and he was therefore not criminating his wife); North Carolina: 1902, State v. Wiseman, 130 N. C. 726, 41 S. E. 884 (husband held admissible to prove fornication between a third person and the witness' wife, the defendant, charged as committed before their marriage, the charge against the wife having been withdrawn; Douglas, J., diss.); 1913, Powell v. Strickland, 163 N. C. 393, 79 S. E. 872 (husband's suit for criminal conversation; husband admitted to testify to the adultery of the wife not a party); Pennsylvania: 1892, Cornelius v. Hambay, 150 Pa. 363, 24 Atl. 515 (husband not admitted to testify to wife's adultery, in his action against a paramour for crim. con.); Vermont: 1876, State v. Bridgman, 49 Vt. 202, 206 (adultery with C.; C.'s husband allowed to testify for the prosecution, his wife not being a party); Washington: 1905, State v. Nelson, 39 Wash. 221, 81 Pac. 721 (adultery of N. with S.; the husband of S. admitted against N. for the State); Wisconsin: 1858, State v. Dudley, 7 Wis. 664 (former husband of W., admitted to prove her adultery with defendant, because his testimony "would be inadmissible in support of an indictment against her"); 1903, State v. West, 118 Wis. 469, 95 N. W. 521 (preceding case approved).

Privileged: Connecticut: 1793, State v. Gardner, 1 Root 485 (adultery with A.; A.'s husband not admitted for the prosecution); Georgia: 1903, Graves v. Harris, 117 Ga. 817, 45 S. E. 239 (alienation of affections, with an allegation of crim. con.; plaintiff husband held disqualified); Maine: 1846, State v. Welch, 26 Me. 30 (adultery with A.; A.'s husband excluded); Massachusetts: 1863, Com. v. Sparks, 7 All. 534 (adultery with D.; D.'s husband not admitted for the prosecution; by a majority, following State v. Welch, Me., supra); Michigan: 1895, People v. Fowler, 104 Mich. 449, 62 N. W. 572 (husband of A. not admitted, on a charge of defendant's no more than discredit the character or disparage the veracity of the witness' husband or wife not being a party, the case is clearly without the privilege,[4] although a few Courts chivalrously proclaim here also a privilege.[5]

Further than this, it seems unsafe to attempt to classify the rulings, since so much depends upon the facts of each case.[6] On which side lies the weight adultery with A.); New Jersey: 1864, State v. Wilson, 31 N. J. L. 77, 81 (husband not admitted to prove adultery of his wife with defendant, though the wife had been acquitted).

Compare the cases involving co-defendants (post, § 2236) and crimes against the other (post, § 2239, par. 3), which sometimes involve adultery in other aspects.

[4] 1912, People v. Upton, 169 Mich. 31, 135 N. W. 108 (battery upon O., after O. had assaulted defendant's wife; Mrs. O. admitted to testify for the defendant); 1871, Ware v. State, 35 N. J. L. 553, 555 (husband allowed to testify against wife's character for veracity as a witness).

[5] 1858, Keaton v. Greenwood, 24 Ga. 217, 228 (wife's testimony discrediting that of husband not a party, excluded; following R. v. Cliviger "with extreme reluctance and dissatisfaction"); 1839, Stein v. Bowman, 13 Pet. 209, 221 (wife not admitted to testify that her deceased husband, who had testified, had admitted that he was bribed; placed partly on R. v. Cliviger, partly on the ground of confidential communications); 1855, Smith v. Proctor, 27 Vt. 304, 308 (widow said to be inadmissible to "transactions affecting the character of the husband"); 1878, White v. Perry, 14 W. Va. 66, 81 (wife not admissible to prove facts "affecting the character" of her husband, though he is not a party; here, testimony to his admission of a false statement, excluded).

[6] Sundry rulings in the various jurisdictions are as follows; compare the statutes cited post, § 2245:

ENGLAND: 1684, Lady Ivy's Trial, 10 How. St. Tr. 555, 621, 628, 644 (Mrs. D. testified that her husband, now deceased, an agent of the defendant, had helped the defendant in forging certain title-deeds offered by the defendant; on objection that she could not "swear it upon him here," L. C. J. Jefferys answered: "That is not against him, man; he is out of the case; but against my Lady Ivy"; yet he forbade the husband's oath to be used to discredit the wife as witness); 1717, Williams v. Johnson, 1 Stra. 504, King, C. J. (action against a husband for goods supplied to the wife; to prove for the defendant that the goods were supplied on the credit of the wife's father, the testimony of the wife's mother, who was present at the purchase, was admitted); 1806, Vowles v. Young, 13 Ves. Jr. 140, 144 (issue of legitimacy on a bill of redemption by heirs; a husband's declarations as to the wife's illegitimacy, admitted, there being "no interest in the husband"); 1828, Henman v. Dickinson, 5 Bing. 183 (wife of the drawer, to prove a forged alteration by her husband, in an action by an indorsee against the acceptor of a bill; R. v. Cliviger doubted); 1832, R. v. Gleed, Bell Cr. C. 258, note, Littledale and Taunton, JJ. (larceny; E.'s wife not admitted to prove that E. was present at the stealing; since "her evidence cannot but facilitate an accusation against her husband"); 1843, Langley v. Fisher, 5 Beav. 443 (bill to reach the wife's separate estate; co-defendant's husband excluded); 1860, R. v. Halliday, Bell Cr. C. 257 (Court for Crown Cases Reserved; false pretences made with T.'s wife, with a count for conspiracy by the two, but the latter count was not tried; T. admitted to testify against defendant, though "his evidence tended to show that his wife had acted unlawfully and criminally").

CANADA: 1884, Millette v. Litle, 10 Ont. Pr. 265 (husband held not compellable to criminate his wife as co-defendant in libel).

UNITED STATES: Federal: 1904, Re Domenig, 128 Fed. 146, D. C. (under Pa. St. 1887, the wife is competent in bankruptcy proceedings to prove her claim as creditor);
Arkansas: 1884, Nolen v. Harden, 43 Ark. 307, 315 (the rule "does not extend to collateral suits between third parties");
California: 1920, Marple v. Jackson, 184 Cal. 411, 193 Pac. 940 (in 1906 M. deeded land to Mrs. M. for "love and affection"; in April, 1916, Mrs. B. obtained judgment against M., and proceeded to levy on this land; Mrs. M. had recorded the deed in Feb. 1916; to prove title, Mrs. M. produced the deed and rested; Mrs. B., to disprove delivery and consideration, called M.; excluded, because of anti-marital privilege); 1921, Johnston v. St. Sure, — Cal. App. —, 195 Pac. 947 (wife and husband defendants in suit for title, husband disclaiming any interest; neither wife nor husband entitled to claim privilege);
Columbia (Dist.): 1920, Halback v. Hill, — D. C. App. —, 261 Fed. 1007 (on a petition by a grandmother for custody of a child, the mother being deceased and the father being remarried, and the issue being whether the present wife was a fit person to retain the care of the child, letters written by the present wife to the father before her marriage were received for the petitioner, the husband being called upon to produce and identify one of the letters; held that, the wife not being a party to the case, the husband was not testifying against her, in the sense covered by the privilege); Illinois: 1882, Lincoln Ave. & N. C. G. R. Co. v. Madaus, 102 Ill. 417, 421, semble (similar); of authority in general, for the broader or the narrower view of the privilege, it would be difficult to say, since the individual Courts are not always con-

Kansas: 1874, Furrow v. Chapin, 13 Kan. 107, 112 (wife admitted in action of replevin against an officer seizing goods as her husband's); 1877, Higbee v. McMillan, 18 Kan. 133, 135 (wife of a vendor admitted for the vendee in replevin claiming goods against another vendee; the vendor not being a party nor concluded by the judgment);

Kentucky: 1831, Higdon's Heirs v. Higdon's Devisees, 1 J. J. Marsh. 48, 54 (husband not admitted where wife was a co-opponent); 1877, Milton v. Hunter, 13 Bush 163, 169 (husband of an heir not a party, not admitted on behalf of the proponent of a will);

Massachusetts: 1814, Fitch v. Hill, 11 Mass. 286 (surety's wife admissible in action against the maker of a note, the liability being contingent only);

Michigan: 1898, Michigan B. & P. Co. v. Coll, 116 Mich. 261, 74 N. W. 475 (bill against real estate owned by husband and wife as joint tenants; husband not admitted as against his own interest in the estate, because the estate was inseparable);

Minnesota: 1897, Lockwood v. Lockwood, 67 Minn. 476, 70 N. W. 784 (wife admissible in her suit against the husband's father and mother for alienation of affections); 1903, Evans v. Staalle, 88 Minn. 253, 92 N. W. 951 (the wife is compellable, if a party, where the husband is not a party);

Mississippi: 1901, Virden v. Dwyer, 78 Miss. 763, 30 So. 45 (not admitted upon creditors' bill against husband and wife to set aside conveyance); 1913, Strauss v. Hutson, 104 Miss. 637, 61 So. 594 (bill for discovery against husband and wife charging fraud against creditors; neither compellable to answer);

Nebraska: 1895, Buckingham v. Roar, 45 Nebr. 244, 63 N. W. 398 (admissible, where the other spouse is a nominal party only; here in an action to cancel a deed of dower); 1905, Weckerly v. Taylor, 74 Nebr. 772, 105 N. W. 254 (creditor's bill against the debtor, his wife as assignee, and an insurer, to reach the proceeds of an accident policy; the husband not admitted for the plaintiff);

New Jersey: 1840, Doe v. Johnson, 18 N. J. L. 87, 90 (suit for land, between creditor and vendee of debtor; debtor's wife admissible for three lots as to which her husband was no longer interested in the event of the suit, even though her testimony charged him with fraud; but not as to a lot in which he was interested, nor in any case to testify directly to his crime); 1895, Woolverton v. Van Syckel, 57 N. J. L. 393, 31 Atl. 603 (the wife defaulted in an action against a firm to which she belonged, and the husband was admitted in the action against the other partner); 1899, Munyon v. State, 62 N. J. L. 1, 42 Atl. 577 (attempting to produce a miscarriage; wife's testimony held on the facts not to incriminate the husband assisting the defendant); 1918, State v. Herbert, 92 N. J. L. 341, 105 Atl. 796 (conspiracy to obtain a divorce for H. K. from her husband; the husband's testimony not admitted for the prosecution; "the rule . . . as declared in the Ware Case [supra, n. 4] and the Hunter Case [post, § 2236, n. 5], has not been relaxed by later legislation");

North Carolina: 1878, State v. Parrotty, 79 N. C. 615 (on trial of W. for assaulting P., W. may call P.'s wife, P. not being "interested in the result");

Pennsylvania: 1870, Rowley v. McHugh, 66 Pa. 269 (ejectment by husband and wife for land claimed to be the wife's, against one claiming under a judgment sale against the husband; wife admitted for the plaintiff, because the husband did not warrant defendant's title); 1877, Greenawalt v. McEnelley, 85 Pa. 352 (title depending on a child's legitimacy; widowed mother admitted to testify to the date of her marriage and the child's birth); 1886, Pleasanton v. Nutt, 115 Pa. 266, 269, 8 Atl. 63 (replevin by a wife against the husband's vendee; the husband being interested as warrantor, the wife was not admitted for herself, nor he against her); 1887, Burrell v. Uncapher, 117 Pa. 353, 362, 11 Atl. 619 (action in joint names for the wife's personal injury; the husband not admissible against the wife); 1893, Johnson v. Watson, 157 Pa. 454, 456, 27 Atl. 772 (the husband not admitted against his wife in replevin); 1893, Norbeck v. Davis, 157 Pa. 399, 405, 27 Atl. 712 (under St. 1887, P. L. 158, § 2*b*, P. & L. Dig. Witnesses, § 11, the wife is competent in interpleader proceedings as claimant against a creditor);

Rhode Island: 1869, State v. Briggs, 9 R. I. 361 (abortion; the father of the child had procured the defendant to operate, but had afterwards married the woman; both were admitted for the prosecution; that the testimony of each charged the other with a crime did not exclude it, since it could not be used against them in another proceeding);

South Carolina: 1830, Jackson v. Heath, 1 Bail. 355 (wife admitted for the claimant of notes bequeathed to her husband by the defendant's testator); 1848, Edwards v. Pitts, 3 Strobh. 140 (husband, an idiot ward of the defendant, sued as his trustee; wife excluded); 1869, Leaphart v. Leaphart, 1 S. C. 199, 201, 204 (wife admitted to prove a first marriage of her husband not a party, by which his second became bigamous);

South Dakota: 1903, Aldous v. Olverson, 17 S. D. 190, 95 N. W. 917 (supplementary proceedings against a husband; the wife's testimony not admitted against him); 1919, Churchill & Alden Co. v. Ramsey, 42 S. D. 23, 172 N. W. 779 (action to cancel deed by hussistent with themselves. But no Court ought to-day to lend its sanction to any expansion of the limits of this undesirable rule of privilege; and there is at least ample authority for the most rigid restriction.

§ 2236. Same: Co-indictees and Co-defendants. When one spouse is charged by indictment with the same crime as a party against whom the other spouse is offered as a witness, the application of the preceding principle is determined by a special set of rules. The looser view of the privilege, it is true (ante, § 2234), might serve to extend it to any case in which (for example) a wife's testimony involved in the crime a husband not being in any way a party to the formal charge. Nevertheless, in this field, the looser view seems to have been given little sanction, and the result is reached by following the stricter interpretation and applying the general rules which determine whether the person is technically a party to the cause. Thus, the special body of rules which served to determine whether Doe, indicted with Roe, was qualified as a witness on Roe's behalf, are also followed in passing upon the admission of Doe's wife to testify for the prosecution against Roe; just as they were also employed (ante, § 609) to determine whether Doe's wife was admissible on Roe's behalf. Those rules have been already examined in detail (ante, § 580). It is enough here to refer to their connection, and to note their application to the present privilege.

Under those rules, then, it is generally held that the privilege covers the case of the wife of a co-defendant now on trial;[1] but not the case of the wife of a co-defendant whose interest has been removed from the record by con- band to wife; the wife allowed to be called by the plaintiff against herself as defendant claiming as sole owner; but the husband not allowed to be called against her);

Texas: 1919, Stribling v. State, 86 Tex. Cr. 1915, 215 S. W. 857 (disturbance of the peace by profane language is not within the exception);
Vermont: 1835, Williams v. Baldwin, 7 Vt. 503, 507 (wife admitted to prove receipt of money by her deceased husband as agent, his estate being settled as insolvent, and not being a party to the suit);
Virginia: 1806, Baring v. Reeder, 1 Hen. & M. 154, 157, 164, 171 (wife admissible to prove title not in her husband, who was not a party though he had been in possession of the goods and had sold them); 1830, Robin v. King, 2 Leigh 140 (widow not admitted to prove disclaimer of title by her husband, a grantor under whom defendant claimed; but here put on the ground of confidential communications); 1873, Murphy v. Com., 23 Gratt. 960, 966 (assault; the wife of the injured party offered to prove him the aggressor; not decided);
Washington: 1899, Frankenthal v. Solomonson, 20 Wash. 460, 55 Pac. 754 (creditors' proceeding against wife as holding property of insolvent debtor; debtor not privileged to exclude the wife's testimony for creditors).

§ 2236. [1] Eng. 1775, R. v. Rudd, 1 Leach Cr. L., 4th ed., 115, 128, 132 (co-defendant's wife excluded, but not the wife of a principal already convicted, even though she hopes for a pardon for her husband if the present defendant is convicted); 1860, R. v. Halliday, 8 Cox Cr. 298; U. S. 1895, Republic v. Kahakauila, 10 Haw. 28 (adultery; husband of one of the defendants, held improperly admitted to prove the marriage); 1871, Miner v. State, 58 Ill. 59 (adultery; co-indictee's husband, excluded); 1838, State v. Burlingham, 15 Me. 104, 107 (wife of co-defendant charged with conspiracy, excluded); 1921, Stillman v. Stillman, Sup. Sp. T., 187 N. Y. Suppl. 383 (divorce; letters from co-respondent to defendant wife, later delivered by her to plaintiff husband, held admissible); 1908, Canole v. Allen, 222 Pa. 156, 70 Atl. 1053 (trespass done by husband and wife; the husband held to be improperly called by the plaintiff to prove the husband's act as the wife's agent).

Contra: 1669, R. v. Buckworth, 2 Keb. 403 (perjury; "the husband of one of the defendants may be admitted to prove the issue, . . . albeit not to prove or excuse his wife's subornation of the other defendant"; by two judges).

viction,[2] or by acquittal,[3] or by nolle prosequi;[4] nor of the wife of a co-indictee who by severance has obtained a separate trial;[5] nor, of course, of the wife of one separately indicted though for the same offence.[6]

§ 2237. Testimony against Spouse Deceased or Divorced. Can there be dissension with the 'manes' of a departed? Is there for married pairs a posthumous peace, capable of fracture by service of subpœna upon the survivor, and therefore fit to be forefended by the law? If so, then the privilege should extend a 'post mortem' protection. But unless we assume such a theory, the privilege ceases upon the death of a spouse. It is true that, among the varying reasons for the privilege, one of them does suggest a rational extension beyond the life of the parties, namely, that policy of fairness which aims to exempt husband and wife from the repugnancy of being the means of condemning the other (ante, § 2228, p. 15); for this repugnance must exist also, in some degree, to a condemnation of the memory of the departed one. But (apart from the argument that this reason has by no means been a generally accepted one) the answer is that a detriment of such exiguous delicacy could not with propriety be allowed to stand in the way of the judicial estab-

[2] Eng. 1775, R. v. Rudd, supra; 1838, R. v. Williams, 8 C. & P. 284 (wife of a co-principal already convicted on another indictment); U. S. 1917, Knoell v. U. S., 3d C. C. A., 239 Fed. 16 (fraudulent receipt of property from a bankrupt; wife of a joint indictee who had pleaded guilty, admitted for the prosecution against the other indictees); 1904, Graff v. People, 208 Ill. 312, 70 N. E. 299 (the wife of a co-indictee who had pleaded guilty before trial, admitted against the defendant); 1915, State v. Roberts, 95 Kan. 280, 147 Pac. 828 (not decided).

[3] 1896, State v. Goforth, 136 Mo. 111, 37 S. W. 801 (wife of one who had been jointly indicted but acquitted).

[4] 1876, Ray v. Com., 12 Bush Ky. 397 (wife of co-indictee against whom a 'nolle pros.' had been entered); 1884, Woods v. State, 76 Mo. 35 (joint-indictee's wife, admissible, where he ceases to be a party to the record, by virtue of a 'nolle pros.'); 1898, Rios v. State, 39 Tex. Cr. 675, 47 S. W. 987 (separately indicted for the same offence; wife here called for the prosecution; allowed, because of an agreement by the district-attorney to dismiss the indictment against the husband). Distinguish the following: 1876, Dill v. State, 1 Tex. App. 278, 282 (wife of co-indictee jointly tried, inadmissible, though a 'nolle pros.' was entered as to her husband afterwards before trial ended).

[5] Ala. 1902, Campbell v. State, 133 Ala. 158, 32 So. 635 (husband admitted to prove adultery of C. with his wife, jointly indicted but separately tried); 1913, Watson v. State, 181 Ala. 53, 61 So. 334; Ga. 1882, Williams v. State, 69 Ga. 13, 20, 30 (wife admissible of one indicted for the same offence but not on trial, though probably she need not incriminate her husband; the result placed on the authority of Stewart v. State, 58 Ga. 577, 581, though not there decided); 1885, Whitlow v. State, 74 Ga. 819 (same); 1885, Askea v. State, 75 Ga. 357 (wife of an accomplice not on trial, admitted); 1903, Rivers v. State, 118 Ga. 42, 44 S. E. 859 (husband of a co-indictee separately tried, admitted); Ia. 1887, State v. Rainsbarger, 71 Ia. 746, 747, 31 N. W. 865 (wife of one indicted for same crime though not on trial, admitted); Kan. 1915, State v. Roberts, 95 Kan. 280, 147 Pac. 828, semble; N. J. 1878, Hunter v. State, 40 N. J. L. 495, 519, 545 (wife of accomplice, indicted and not yet tried, but testifying for the prosecution, allowed to corroborate him as to a fact not in itself criminal); 1899, Munyon v. State, 62 N. J. L. 1, 42 Atl. 577 (wife of a joint indictee tried separately is admissible for the prosecution); Wis. 1903, State v. West, 118 Wis. 469, 95 N. W. 521 (adultery with F., tried separately; F.'s husband, admitted for the prosecution to prove his marriage with F.).

Contra: 1855, State v. Bradley, 9 Rich. S. C. 168, 171 (wife of co-indictee, not on trial, not admitted for defendant to testify that her husband alone was guilty).

[6] 1877, Powell v. State, 58 Ala. 362 (wife of accomplice not indicted, admissible); 1883, People v. Langtree, 64 Cal. 256, 30 Pac. 813 (wife of one charged by separate information, admitted, though she incriminated her husband); 1900, Fuller v. State, 109 Ga. 809, 35 S. E. 298 (wife of one separately indicted for the same offence, admitted); 1893, Bluman v. State, 35 Tex. Cr. 43, 58, 21 S. W. 1027, 26 S. W. 75 (but here the husband had already testified for the State as a party to the crime).

lishment of truth. Moreover, looking back at the principle which defines testimony "against" a spouse as testimony against a spouse who is a party to the cause (ante, § 2234), it is obvious that, since a deceased person cannot be a party, testimony concerning the deceased person can never be said to be testimony "against" a spouse.

And what is to be said of a divorced spouse? Does the privilege there also continue? After the grave cause for dissolution — adultery, desertion, crime, or the like — has come to pass, and the parties have been not only alienated in spirit, but also solemnly freed, by judicial decree, from the obligations of mutual concord and concession, is there any longer, either in fact or in policy, a marital peace which must be kept inviolable? Or is the legal fiction so elastic and so artificial that it can afford to dispense with even a modicum of fact for its support, and can be deemed to exist even after the bonds of matrimony have been loosed? There ought to be no doubt that this would be carrying too far the fantasies of legal pretence:

1802, Messrs. Best and Peake, arguing, in Monroe v. Twistleton, Peake Add. Cas. 219: "It is true, a wife cannot, while she remains so, . . . [testify against her husband]. . . . The law precludes every inquiry from either which might break in upon the comfort and happiness of the married state. . . . But the reason why she should then have been incompetent no longer exists. The bond of marriage is broken [by divorce] and at an end; and the policy of the law no longer requires that terms of amity and friendship should subsist between them any more than between utter strangers."

1832, JOHNSON, J., in Caldwell v. Stuart, 2 Bail. 574 (admitting the widow against her husband's estate): "Neither the rule, nor any of the reasons upon which it proceeds, have any the most remote application here. The husband is no party; he has ceased to have any interest in temporal concerns. The defendant, the executor, represents the interests of the creditors, legatees, or distributees, as the case may be, and not the husband's. There is no danger of matrimonial discord; nor is there any violation of confidence."

1859, KENT, J., in Walker v. Sanborn, 46 Me. 470, 472: "There seems to be a distinction between the testimony of a wife and a widow, based on the different relations that exist. The fundamental reason for the rejection of the wife's testimony is the promotion of domestic harmony, and the danger that it may be disturbed between husband and wife if they are allowed to testify. This reason ceases on the death of one of the parties."

1. There is no privilege, then, which prevents the surviving spouse from testifying, after the death of the other, in disparagement of the conduct or the property of the deceased;[1] nor is it material that the testimony relates to § 2237. [1] ENGLAND: 1723, Dale v. Johnson, 1 Stra. 568 (wife of a deceased plaintiff, admitted for the defendant to prove the death); 1824, Beveridge v. Minter, 1 C. & P. 364, Abbott, C. J. (wife allowed to testify to admissions of debt by the deceased husband, because "she is appearing against her own interest").

UNITED STATES: Ark. 1902, Graves v. Graves, 70 Ark. 541, 69 S. W. 544 ("A widow is a competent witness against the executor of her deceased husband"); Ind. 1856, Jack v. Russey, 8 Ind. 180 (maker's wife admitted against a co-maker of a note, the maker being deceased and his estate insolvent); Ia. 1864, Pratt v. Delavan, 17 Ia. 307, 309 (widow admitted for the plaintiff in an action on a note made by the deceased husband; "testifying for or against herself and the heirs, after the death of the husband, is manifestly not the same thing as testifying for or against her husband if alive"); 1887, Parcell v. McReymatters which occurred during the marriage. The few rulings taking the contrary view [2] are misled by the analogy of a different privilege, namely, that which prohibits the disclosure of marital confidential communications. It is a legitimate corollary of that privilege (post, § 2341) that it prevails even after the death of one spouse. But the two privileges are entirely distinct; the former, for example, has been in many jurisdictions abolished, while the latter has been nowhere abolished. The reason of the former privilege ceases with death; that of the latter does not. Each has a separate scope; for example, a wife might be prevented from revealing a confidential communication, even though not testifying against her husband; and she might be prevented from testifying against her husband, though her testimony involved no confidences. Thus it is that a wife, after the husband's death, is not privileged to withhold facts involving disparagement of his conduct or estate during life, so long as she does not violate the other and distinct privilege against disclosing confidential communications.[3]

2. So, too, after divorce, there is no privilege to withhold the testimony of nolds, 71 Ia. 623, 33 N. W. 139 (similar; Beck, J., diss.); Kan. 1915, State v. Roberts, 95 Kan. 280, 147 Pac. 828 (wife of a deceased co-indictee already tried); Ky. 1841, McGuire v. Maloney, 1 B. Monr. 224 (wife's testimony against the husband's administrator in favor of the husband's vendee, admissible); La. 1881, Ames' Succession, 33 La. An. 1317, 1327 (husband testifying to a debt against wife's estate); Me. 1859, Walker v. Sanborn, 46 Me. 470, 472; N. H. 1859, Jackson v. Barron, 37 N. H. 494, 500 (wife of a deceased partner, admitted in an action against the surviving partner for a firm debt); N. Car. 1833, Hester v. Hester, 4 Dev. 228 (widow admitted to testify for the contestants of a will, as to the husband's declarations, the widow having claimed dower against the will); 1851, Gaskill v. King, 12 Ired. 211, 215 (widow admitted for one claiming by deed of chattels against the husband's administrator); Oh. 1855, Stober v. McCarter, 4 Oh. St. 513, 516 (wife admitted to charge husband's administrator with a debt of the estate); Pa. 1799, Pennsylvania v. Stoops, Addis, 381, 382, semble; 1811, Wells v. Tucker, 3 Binn. 366 (widow admitted for a claimant of the husband's chattels by gift against his administrator; no doubt raised); 1846, Cornell v. Vanartsdalen, 4 Pa. St. 364, 374, semble; 1881, Robb's Appeal, 98 Pa. 501, 502 (widow admitted for a claimant of a debt against the husband's administration); 1881, Stephens v. Cotterell, 99 Pa. 188, 192 (widow admitted for defendant in an action by the husband's administrator); S. Car. 1832, Caldwell v. Stuart, 2 Bail. 574 (widow admitted for a claimant by gift against the husband's executor); 1851, Hay v. Hay, 3 Rich. Eq. 384, 393, 397 (similar); Vt. 1833, Edgell v. Bennett, 7 Vt. 534 (widow admitted for a creditor to prove a transfer by her husband fraudulent); 1835, Williams v. Baldwin, 7 Vt. 503, 507, semble (widow of an agent, admissible to prove his receipt of money); 1855, Smith v. Proctor, 27 Vt. 304 (widow admitted for a claimant against the deceased husband's estate).

[2] Eng. 1842, O'Connor v. Marjoribanks, 4 M. & Gr. 435 (trover by G.'s representatives; G.'s wife not admitted for the defendant to prove his rightful receipt of the goods as pledgee by testifying that her deceased husband "had authorized her" to dispose of his goods; the opinions show a complete confusion of the distinct reasons for the rules about testifying against the husband and about revealing confidential communications; this ruling has done much harm in the law); U. S. 1895, Emmons v. Barton, 109 Cal. 662, 42 Pac. 303 (under C. C. P. § 1881, the wife cannot be examined after the husband's death).

In the following jurisdictions the rulings leave an uncertainty: Massachusetts: 1850, Dickerman v. Graves, 6 Cush. 308, 309 (wife inadmissible even after dissolution of marriage); 1861, Dexter v. Booth, 2 All. 559 (wife admitted in an action against the husband's executor for the husband's debt); Virginia: 1811, Braxton v. Hilyard, 2 Munf. 49, semble (widow admitted to prove infancy of a surety on her deceased husband's bond); 1855, William & Mary College v. Powell, 12 Gratt. 372 (contra); 1882, Smith v. Bradford, 76 Va. 758, 765 (same).

[3] The statutes, in some of the Codes particularly (ante, § 488), have sometimes given a sanction to this confusion; so that the error has there passed beyond the power of judicial correction.

either;[4] although in a few courts[5] the same confusion has here also appeared between the present privilege and the privilege for confidential communications.

3. A deponent's qualifications should be determined at the time of the deposition's taking, not of the deposition's offer in evidence (ante, §§ 483, 1409). But a privilege should be determined at the time of its claim; for the basis of a disqualification is the testimonial trustworthiness of the person when actually speaking, while the basis of the privilege is the policy as affected by using the testimony. Hence, if a husband's deposition is taken at a time when the wife could be privileged to exclude it, nevertheless the privilege becomes unavailable if, by death or divorce intervening before offer of the deposition, the privilege has ceased at the time of the offer.[6]

5. Anti-Marital Testimony Admitted Exceptionally

§ 2239. At Common Law, by Necessity (Injuries to the Spouse, by Battery, Abduction, Fraud, Adultery, and the like; Divorce; Desertion; "Crimes against the Other"). The common law did not fail to recognize that the rule

[4] Ala. 1888, Long v. State, 86 Ala. 36, 43; Ark. 1898, Inman v. State, 65 Ark. 508, 47 S. W. 558; Ia. 1900, Hitt v. Sterling-Goold Mfg. Co., 111 Ia. 458, 82 N. W. 919; 1906, State v. Mathews, 133 Ia. 398, 109 N. W. 616 (wife at the time of the homicide, but divorced before trial; not privileged); Ky. 1867, Storms v. Storms, 3 Bush 77, 79; 1903, Tompkins v. Com., 117 Ky. 138, 77 S. W. 712 (for occurrences subsequent to divorce; but this limitation is unsound); 1914, Rutland v. Com., 160 Ky. 77, 169 S. W. 585 (approving Ray v. Com.); Mich. 1878, People v. Marble, 38 Mich. 117, 123; 1917, Hendrickson v. Harry, 200 Mich. 41, 164 N. W. 393, 166 N. W. 1023 (alienation of wife's affections; the wife, not having been already divorced, was not admitted for the defendant, though her bill for divorce had been some months pending and was granted six weeks after the trial; another example of the absurdity of the privilege; on rehearing, it appeared that the divorce had in fact been granted a year before the trial, and the ex-wife was held admissible); Or. 1908, State v. Luper, — Or. —, 95 Pac. 811 (perjury committed in obtaining the divorce); R. I. 1905, Hartley v. Hartley, 27 R. I. 176, 61 Atl. 144 (wife's bill for account against a divorced husband; plaintiff not allowed to testify to a property agreement made during marriage; erroneously following Robinson v. Robinson, R. I., post, § 2341, as authority); Tex. 1905, Cole v. State, 48 Tex. Cr. 439, 88 S. W. 341; Vt. 1893, French v. Ware, 65 Vt. 338, 344, 26 Atl. 1096 (including matters during marriage); Wash. 1905, State v. Nelson, 39 Wash. 221, 81 Pac. 721; 1915, State v. Snyder, 84 Wash. 485, 147 Pac. 38 (statutory rape); Wis. 1870, Cook v. Henry, 25 Wis. 569; 1890, Bigelow v. Sickles, 75 Wis. 427, 429, 44 N. W. 761.

[5] Eng. 1802, Monroe v. Twistleton, Peake Add. Cas. 219 (assumpsit for board and lodging supplied to the defendant's child; to prove the contract, S.'s wife, who had been the defendant's wife at the time of the contract, but had been divorced and had remarried, was not admitted; the opinion confusing the question with that of confidential communications); U. S. 1856, Tulley v. Alexander, 11 La. An. 628 (excluded, even though they live apart); 1850, Dickerman v. Graves, 6 Cush. Mass. 308 (cited supra, note 2); 1900, State v. Kodat, 158 Mo. 125, 59 S. W. 73 (divorced wife not allowed to testify against the husband on a prosecution for assault on K. made during the marriage and arising out of a quarrel with the wife); 1897, State v. Raby, 121 N. C. 682, 28 S. E. 490 (excluded, as to adultery during marriage; no change made by the Code); 1803, State v. Phelps, 2 Tyler Vt. 374 (divorced wife, not admitted against defendant on a charge of adultery during marriage; Tyler, J., diss.).

[6] 1912, Howard v. Strode, 242 Mo. 210, 146 S. W. 792 (claim of widow's share in an estate; the plaintiff was married in 1883 to a man named H. H., whom she maintained to be the defendant's intestate L. J. H.; defendant maintained that the man married by the plaintiff in 1883 was not L. J. H., but was one T. J. M.; defendant offered the deposition of T. J. M., a non-resident, that he was that man, and therewith offered a decree of divorce from plaintiff granted to said T. J. M. since the date of the deposition and before its offer in evidence; the trial Court admitted the deposition; held that the divorce made T. J. M.'s testimony admissible).

of privilege was subject to some sort of exception. That exception was commonly placed on the ground of Necessity, — that is, a necessity to avoid that extreme injustice to the excluded spouse which would ensue upon an undeviating enforcement of the rule.[1]

The notion of Necessity, indeed, might commendably have been a broader one; the necessity of doing justice to other persons in general, when the spouse's testimony was indispensable, would have been at least as great. But the common lawyers here kept their eyes upon the ground, and did not allow their survey to exceed the range of immediate and unavoidable vision. Any one could see that an absolute privilege in a husband to close the mouth of the wife in testimony against him would be a vested license to injure her in secret with complete immunity; and this much the common lawyers saw, and were willing to concede. Just how far the concession went, in concrete cases, was never precisely settled. It was given varying definition at different times; it certainly extended to causes involving corporal violence to the wife; and it certainly did not extend to all wrongs done to the wife.[2] In modern statutes the spirit of the exception has usually been invoked to establish the exception for both husband and wife in all causes involving a "crime against the other," or a "personal wrong." [3]

But before noting the extent of this exception in detail, it is worth while to observe that the common-law cases and the statutory rules, applying this exception, are also equally open to explanation as instances in which the very reason of the privilege — at least the reason most frequently advanced (ante, § 2228) — is lacking. That is to say, if the promotion of marital peace, and the apprehension of marital dissension, are the ultimate ground of the privilege, it is an overgenerous assumption that the wife who has been beaten, poisoned, or deserted, is still on such terms of delicate good feeling with her spouse that her testimony must not be enforced lest the iridescent halo of peace be dispelled by the breath of disparaging testimony. And if there were, conceivably, any such peace, would it be a peace such as the law could desire to protect? Could it be any other peace than that which the tyrant secures for himself by oppression? And could the law pretend to regard the effect produced by a wife's testimony in her own redress as being worth consideration on behalf of a husband who has already grossly violated his marital duties? If there had been any reason at all for the privilege, that reason surely fell away in such cases. The common lawyers, more creditably to themselves, in point of consistency as well as humanity, might better have placed these cases upon this ground, instead of upon that of Necessity; and it is satisfactory to find that this reasoning has by some judges been appealed to for that purpose:

§ 2239. [1] 1784, Mansfield, L. C. J., in Bentley v. Cooke, 3 Doug. 422 ("That necessity is not a general necessity, as where no other witness can be had, but a particular necessity, as where for instance the wife would otherwise be exposed without remedy to personal injury").

[2] 1767, Buller, Trials at Nisi Prius, 287 ("for a personal tort done to herself"); 1765, Blackstone, Commentaries, I, 443 ("where the offence is directly against the person of the wife, this rule has been usually dispensed with"); 1806, Evans, Notes to Pothier, II, 266 ("I believe that the evidence of a wife against her husband upon a charge for personal ill-treatment is in practice now admitted"); 1803, East, Pl. Cr. I, 455 ("I conceive it to be now settled that in all cases of personal injuries committed by the husband or wife against each other, the injured party is an admissible witness against the other"); 1864, Crompton and Blackburn, JJ., in Reeve v. Wood, 8 Cox Cr. 58 ("personal wrongs to the wife"; an injury which "touches the person of the wife").

[3] These statutes have been placed ante, § 488, with the statutes affecting qualifications of witnesses.

1828, MELLEN, C. J., in Soule's Case, 5 Greenl. 407, 408: "From the general rule some exceptions have been established, founded on the necessity of the case. For instance, if a wife could not be admitted to testify against the husband as to threatened or executed violence and abuse upon her person, he could play the tyrant and brute at his pleasure, and with perfect security beat, wound, and torture her at times and in places when and where no witnesses could be present nor assistance be obtained. Reasons of policy do not certainly extend so far as in such cases to disqualify her from being a witness against him. . . . So far as the general incompetency of the wife is founded on the idea that her testimony, if received, would tend to destroy domestic peace, and introduce discord, animosity, and confusion in its place, the principle loses its influence when that peace has already become wearisome to a passionate, despotic, and perhaps intoxicated husband, who has done all in his power to render the wife unhappy and destroy all mutual affection."

In view of the unsettled extent of the exception in the orthodox common law, and of the broad possibilities of the principle last mentioned, and also by reason of the frequent statutory enlargement of the exception, there has been a decided variation in judicial rulings upon specific cases. Moreover, there has too often been exhibited a narrow illiberality in not seizing the opportunities for carrying out this exception to its widest scope of principle.

(1) It seems certain that in all causes involving an assault or a battery or other corporal violence to the wife, or husband, committed by the other (including actions to bind over by articles of peace), the spouse alleged to be injured could not be excluded.[4] So, too, an attempt to kill by poison is clearly

[4] Where statutes are applied (they are collected ante, § 488), making an exception for "crimes against the other" or "personal injuries," the statute is noted below:

ENGLAND: 1701, Pocock v. Thornicroft, 12 Mod. 454 ("a wife shall be admitted to swear the peace against her husband, because a matter concerning her person"); 1725, R. v. Azir, 1 Stra. 633, Raymond, C. J. (assault; wife admitted); 1743, Lord Vane's Case, 2 Stra. 1202 (articles of the peace exhibited by the wife against the husband; semble, the wife admissible); 1758, R. v. Mead, 1 Burr. 542 ('habeas corpus' by the husband against the wife; semble, the wife admissible); 1758, R. v. Earl Ferrers, 1 Burr. 631, 634 (articles of the peace by the wife against the husband; semble, the wife admissible); 1787, R. v. Bowes, 1 T. R. 696, 699, semble (same); 1789, R. v. Woodcock, 1 Leach Cr. L., 4th ed., 500 (wife's dying declarations, admitted against a husband charged with her murder); 1790, R. v. Johns, 1 Leach Cr. L. 504, note (same); 1810, R. v. Doherty, 13 East 171, semble (like R. v. Bowes); 1813, Heyn's Case, 2 Ves. & B. 182 (wife's affidavit, received on articles of the peace against him).

UNITED STATES: Alabama: 1898, Clarke v. State, 117 Ala. 1, 23 So. 671 (husband charged with the murder of a child by beating the wife before its birth; wife admitted, under statute); 1907, Williams v. State, 149 Ala. 4, 43 So. 720 (assault by a woman on her former husband; husband admitted); Delaware: 1904, State v. Harris, 5 Pen. Del. 145, 58 Atl. 1042 (husband admitted against his wife, on a charge of assaulting him); Georgia: 1885, Stevens v. State, 76 Ga. 96 (wife admitted, under statute, in a prosecution against the husband for a battery upon her); 1912, Ector v. State, 10 Ga. App. 777, 74 S. E. 295 (under P. C. 1910, § 1037, par. 4, reproducing P. C. 1895, § 1011, par. 4, the husband may not testify against his wife on a charge of stabbing him; history of the legislation reviewed by Russell, J.); Kentucky: 1881, Turnbull v. Com., 79 Ky. 495 (wife's malicious wounding of a husband; the husband not admitted, the exception being ignored; no precedents cited); within the exception.[5] It would seem plain that a rape of the wife, committed by the husband or at his instigation, was plainly an offence of corporal violence; and at the earliest stage of the law, the privilege was held not to apply, in the notorious case of Lord Audley.[6] But this ruling was more than once doubted;[7] and, although the doubt was apparently due to very different reasons,[8] it was duly perpetuated without regard to its grounds; and, partly in consequence of this, there appear, in modern records, a few singular rulings in which it is maintained that a rape is not "a crime against the wife" nor a "personal wrong."[9] Whether the procuring of an abortion

1890, Com. v. Sapp, 90 Ky. 580, 586, 14 S. W. 834 (statutory exception recognized, for "a crime against the person of the wife"; wife here allowed to testify on a charge of attempting to kill her by poison); Maine: 1828, Soule's Case, 5 Greenl. 407 (assault and battery on the wife); Michigan: 1887, People v. Sebring, 66 Mich. 705, 33 N. W. 808 (assault with intent to do bodily harm on the wife; wife admitted, under statute); Missouri: 1913, State v. Anderson, 252 Mo. 83, 158 S. W. 817 (assault with intent to kill the accused's wife; the wife admitted); Nebraska: 1907, Miller v. State, 78 Nebr. 645, 111 Nebr. 637 (wife admitted on a charge of husband's assault on herself and two others); New York: 1845, People v. Green 1 Denio 614 (wife's dying declarations, admitted, on a charge of murdering her); New Jersey: 1919, State v. Marriner, 93 N. J. L. 273, 108 Atl. 306 (assault and battery on the wife; wife admitted for the prosecution, by implied exception to Evidence Act § 5, Pub. L. 1900, p. 363); North Carolina: 1852, State v. Hussey, Busbee 123, 126 (wife not competent in a prosecution for assault and battery where no "lasting injury or great bodily harm" was inflicted or threatened); 1877, State v. Davidson, 77 N. C. 522 (similar; these two rulings are now probably outlawed by the existing statute); Ohio: 1877, Whipp v. State, 34 Oh. St. 87 (husband competent in a prosecution of the wife for an assault upon him, though the statute expressly makes no such exception); Pennsylvania: 1799, Pennsylvania v. Stoops, Addis. 381 ("in cases of secret personal injury" the wife is admissible; here, her dying deposition, on a prosecution for murdering her); South Carolina: 1811, State v. Davis, 3 Brev. 3 (assault and battery by the husband on the wife; wife admitted; Grimke, J., diss.); West Virginia: 1905, State v. Woodrow, 58 W. Va. 527, 52 S. E. 545 (murder of defendant's baby, the shot passing through the baby's head and wounding the mother who was holding it in her arms; the mother excluded; a singular decision; Poffenbarger and Sanders, JJ., diss.); Wisconsin: 1902, Goodwin v. State, 114 Wis. 318, 90 N. W. 170 (assault with intent to kill).

[5] Eng. 1796, R. v. Wasson, 1 Cr. & O. 197 (by all the Irish judges; administering poison to the defendant's wife; the wife admitted); 1890, Com. v. Sapp, Ky., supra, note 4; U. S. 1901, Davis v. Com., 99 Va. 838, 38 S. E. 191 (indictment for poisoning a well with intent to kill "S. and others"; the defendant's wife, being one of the others using the well, admitted under statute, as one against whom the crime was committed).

[6] Quoted ante, § 2227; this peer of the land employed his servants as his nefarious instruments, and stood by while they executed his commands.

[7] 1674, Hale, C. B., in R. v. Brown, 1 Ventr. 243 (doubted); 1661, R. v. Griggs, T. Raym. 1 (denied); 1725, Raymond, C. J., in R. v. Azir, 1 Stra. 633 (approved); 1734, Probyn, J., in R. v. Reading, Lee cas. t. Hardwicke 79, 83 (approved). In R. v. Jellyman, 8 C. & P. 604 (1838), the wife was admitted to prove an unnatural crime upon her.

[8] As pointed out ante, § 2227.

[9] 1898, People v. Schoonmaker, 117 Mich. 190, 75 N. W. 439 (rape of a woman under sixteen, being also the defendant's wife; the woman not competent against the defendant, under statute); 1905, Frazier v. State, 48 Tex. Cr. 142, 86 S. W. 754 (useless opinion).

Where the rape was before marriage, the question is arguable; but Courts have strained a point in favor of the wrongdoer: 1902, People v. Curiale, 137 Cal. 534, 70 Pac. 468 (construing the statute); 1904, State v. McKay, 122 Ia. 658, 98 N. W. 510 ("this is so plain that no amount of reasoning can make it any clearer"); 1899, State v. Frey, 76 Minn. 526, 79 N. W. 518 (the statute does not include a charge of rape on the woman before marriage); 1896, State v. Evans, 138 Mo. 116, 124, 39 S. W. 462 (rape on the wife before marriage; wife excluded; "a wife is only admitted to testify concerning criminal injuries to herself as a wife"); 1913, Norman v. State, 127 Tenn. 340, 155 S. W. 135 (rape under age of a woman whom defendant subsequently married so as to shield himself from prosecution; privilege held applicable; careful opinion, by Buchanan, J., but the result is none the less misguided).

To hold that the offence, when committed, was not done to the wife, so as to be a "crime against the other," is to misread the statute. The woman's consent to marriage cannot remove the crime, however much it may discredit her testimony.

comes within the spirit of the exception may perhaps be doubted, so far as the consent of the wife may be assumed.[10] An abduction and forcible marriage, or a seduction before marriage, would be a crime against the woman and sometimes also a corporal wrong; but in this instance other complications arise, first, because the marriage may be void and thus the privilege is inapplicable (ante, § 2230), and next, because the statutory offence may sometimes not involve violence or forcible abduction as an ingredient.[11] In various phrasings of law as to pimping by the husband (living on the wife's earnings as prostitute, enticing her for the purpose of prostitution, contracting for the purpose, "white slave trade"), the question of the privilege arises; the local statutory phrasings become important, but of course morally it is a shameless offence against wifehood.[12]

[10] Not privileged: 1921, Com. v. Allen, 191 Ky. 624, 231 S. W. 41 (abortion by defendant upon his wife, against her will; the wife held admissible against the husband); 1871, State v. Dyer, 59 Me. 303, 306 (wife admitted against husband charged jointly with attempting an abortion on her); 1899, Munyon v. State, 62 N. J. L. 1, 42 Atl. 577 (attempting to produce a miscarriage, held a personal injury, within the statutory exception). Privileged: 1897, Miller v. State, 37 Tex. Cr. 575, 577, 40 S. W. 313 (wife not admitted against husband on a charge of abortion done before marriage).

[11] ENGLAND: 1638, Fulwood's Case, Cro. Car. 482 (indictment for abduction and forcible marriage; the woman testified apparently without question); 1685, R. v. Brown, 1 Ventr. 243, 3 Keb. 193 (indictment for abduction and for unlawful marriage procured by duress; the woman was admitted, though "she was his wife 'de facto,' though not 'de jure,'" first, because she was married by duress, secondly, because "so hainous a crime would go unpunished, unless the testimony of the woman should be received," thirdly, on the authority of Fulwood's Case, supra); 1702, Swendsen's Trial, 14 How. St. Tr. 559, 575 (forcible abduction and marriage; the woman admitted without question); 1826, R. v. Serjeant, Ry. & Moo. 352, Abbott, C. J. (conspiracy by a prostitute and others to procure S. to marry her on false pretence; the husband excluded, on a false theory that the rule was the same for testimony either for or against the other spouse); 1827, R. v. Wakefield, 2 Lew. Cr. C. 1, 20, 279 (conspiring to marry an heiress against her will; the woman was admitted for the prosecution, whether the marriage was forcible or fraudulent, and whether or not it was legally void; Hullock, B.: "A wife is competent against her husband in all cases affecting her liberty and person; . . . it would be unreasonable to exclude the only person capable of giving evidence in certain cases of injury. Our law recognizes witnesses 'ex necessitate', and it would be strange indeed that the husband should be allowed to exercise every atrocity against the wife and her evidence not be admitted"); 1839, R. v. Yore, 1 Jebb & S. 563 (fraudulent enticement of heiress to marriage; the woman admitted, following R. v. Wakefield).

UNITED STATES: Ark. 1916, Wilson v. State, 125 Ark. 234, 188 S. W. 554 (carnal knowledge of T. under age; T. married defendant after indictment; held that the wife could not testify against the defendant, under Kirby's Digest § 3092, the alleged injury having been done prior to marriage); Ga. St. 1899, Dec. 20, Rev. C. 1910, P. C. § 379 (allowing a prosecution for seduction to be stopped by marriage: "In case the defendant fails to comply with the provisions of this section [as to supporting the wife and children], the wife shall be a competent witness against the husband"); 1903, Barnett v. State, 117 Ga. 298, 43 S. E. 720 (St. 1899, Dec. 20, p. 42, does not apply against one who at the time of the marriage was arrested, but not under indictment for the seduction); Ky. 1903, Barclay v. Com., 116 Ky. 275, 76 S. W. 4 (mock marriage, held to be within the exception of necessity).

[12] ENGLAND: Director of Pub. Pros. v. Blady, [1912] 2 K. B. 89 (charge of living on the earnings of his wife as prostitute; the wife held not admissible for the prosecution, because the offence was not against "the liberty, health, or person of the wife"; Lush, J., diss.; the reasoning of the majority might have been different and sound, but, upon its own phrasing, the English language is strangely interpreted).

UNITED STATES: Fed. U. S. v. Rispoli, 189 Fed. 271 (prosecution of the husband for persuading his wife to act as a prostitute ("white slave" trade); held that the privilege ceased); 1914, Cohen v. U. S., 9th C. C. A., 214 Fed. 23 (subornation of perjury on a trial of G. for bringing his wife into the State for purposes of prostitution; the wife's testimony held admissible, on the ground that the offence charged was a personal injury to her); 1915, Johnson v. U. S., 8th C. C. A., 221 Fed. 250 (white slave traffic Act; transporting a woman for purposes

(2) The husband's desertion or failure to support is plainly a wrong to the wife. But inasmuch as the fact often comes in issue in a proceeding not directly between husband and wife, this has sometimes sufficed as a loophole for escaping the application of the exception. Nevertheless, in principle, this distinction should have no effect; and modern statutes have generally declared against a privilege.[13] In orthodox practice, in proceedings involving the custody of children, where the issue depends partly on the husband's misconduct, the wife's testimony, at least by affidavit, was conceded to be admissible.[14] of prostitution; the woman being the wife of the defendant, she was held not competent to testify for the State; the present exception was not considered); 1917, Pappas v. U. S., 9th C. C. A., 241 Fed. 665 (white slave traffic with defendant's wife; the wife admitted against the defendant; "such conduct . . . constituted a personal wrong"); 1918, Denning v. U. S., 5th C. C. A., 247 Fed. 463 (white slave traffic with defendant's wife; the wife admitted for the prosecution; "it is an offense against the wife"); Ind. St. 1911, c. 174, Burns' Ann. St. 1914, § 2356 c (pandering; cited more fully ante, § 488).

[13] The numerous statutes are already quoted ante, § 488;

ENGLAND: 1864, Reeve v. Wood, 10 Cox Cr. 58 (charge of desertion, preferred by the parish; wife not receivable against him, because "it is only a crime against the parish, and it is the fact of her becoming chargeable to the parish that makes the husband liable").

CANADA: 1914, R. v. Allen, 17 D. L. R. 719, N. S. (non-support of family; the wife of defendant not admitted for the prosecution, under Can. Evid. Act § 4, referring to Cr. Code § 244; the offence here being charged under § 242A of 1913).

UNITED STATES: Ala. St. 1903, No. 9, p. 32, Code 1907, § 7900 (husband charged with abandonment; "the wife shall be a competent witness against her husband"); 1905, Wester v. State, 142 Ala. 56, 38 So. 1010 (abandonment of family; the wife allowed to testify for the State, under St. 1903, No. 9); Del. 1902, State v. Miller, 3 Pennew. Del. 518, 52 Atl. 262 (under St. 1887, c. 230, 18 Laws, p. 447, quoted ante, § 488, a wife is admissible on a complaint against the husband for failure to support minors even when not under the age of ten); Mich. 1898, Wood v. Lentz, 116 Mich. 275, 74 N. W. 462 (action for loss of support by selling liquor to the plaintiff's husband; the husband not admitted against plaintiff, under the statute); 1898, People v. Malsch, 119 Mich. 112, 77 N. W. 638 (failure to support; interpreting the act of 1889, as affecting Act No. 136 of 1883, and 3 How. Annot. St. § 7546); 1901, Travis v. Stevens, 127 Mich. 687, 87 N. W. 85 (action for support furnished to defendant's wife; wife not admitted for plaintiff, under the statute); Mo. 1904, State v. Bean, 104 Mo. App. 255, 78 S. W. 640 (wife-abandonment; the wife admitted against the husband); 1869, State v. Newberry, 43 Mo. 429 (wife-abandonment; the wife's affidavit to an information, admitted); Tex. 1920, Hollien v. State, — Tex. Cr. —, 224 S. W. 779 (desertion; wife admitted, under P. C. 1911, § 640 a); Wis. 1874, Bach v. Parmely, 35 Wis. 238 (wife admitted, for a claimant charging the husband with necessaries supplied to her, to prove the husband's acts of cruelty, "on the ground of necessity"); 1905, Morgenroth v. Spencer, 124 Wis. 564, 102 N. W. 1086 (Bach v. Parmely followed).

[14] Eng. 1804, De Manneville v. De Manneville, 10 Ves. Jr. 52, 56 (a mother's petition against the father for the child's custody; her affidavit admitted; L. C. Eldon: "This may be compared to the common case where affidavits of ill-treatment are read to prevent the husband's taking the interest of money in court the property of the wife; . . . it is almost of necessity in such a case [as this] that the wife's affidavit should be read, the circumstances generally taking place in no other presence than that of the husband"); U. S. 1836, People v. Chegaray, 18 Wend. N. Y. 637, 642 (custody of children; the wife's affidavit against the husband, doubtingly received); 1839, People v. Mercein, 8 Paige N. Y. 47, 53 (similar cause; the wife's testimony admitted to prove the husband's cruelty as justifying her living separately); 1913, Hunter v. State, 10 Okl. Cr. App. 119, 134 Pac. 1134 (failure to support a minor child; the wife admitted, under Rev. L. 1910, § 5882, making an exception for "a crime committed by one against the other"; eloquent opinion by Furman, J.); 1921, Terrell v. State, 88 Tex. Cr. 599, 228 S. W. 240 (wife-desertion; wife admitted against husband, under P. C. § 640 c).

The following ruling was over-strict: 1789, Sedgwick v. Watkins, 1 Ves. Jr. 49 (wife's writ 'ne exeat regno' against husband; L. C. Thurlow: "For security of the peace, indeed, she may make an affidavit against him; but cannot sustain an indictment; . . . I have always taken it to be a rule that a wife can never be evidence against her husband, except in the case I have alluded to").

For the numerous modern statutes expressly so providing, see ante, § 488.

(3) At common law, in the early practice, the notion of an injury to the wife was not regarded as including much more than those corporal brutalities which satisfied most gross and elementary conceptions of wrong. But as times have gone on, more refined distinctions have been countenanced; especially under the statutory exceptions for "crimes against the other," it has become possible for the Courts to take a broader view for sexual offences by the spouse with a third person. That adultery by one spouse is an offence against the other is plain enough in morals, and ought to be plain in law.[15] The argument may be made, to be sure, that adultery by the husband (with an unmarried woman, at least) was not a crime at common law, and ought not to be a crime; but that is a mere evasion; whenever it is made a criminal offence, then if any crime at all can be a crime, not only against the State, but also a "crime against the other," adultery is certainly one of those crimes. So, too, is incest.[16] So, equally, is bigamy.[17] Nevertheless, judges have been found who dispute this; it has been argued, in skilful word-fencing, that a bigamous marriage is a crime "against the marital relation," but not "against the wife." [18] The following passage may serve as a reply to that and all similar attempts to restrict the application of the statutory principle:

1887, ZANE, C. J., in U. S. v. Bassett, 5 Utah 131, 136, 13 Pac. 237: "Is then polygamy a crime against the lawful wife? It certainly is a breach of the implied if not of the express terms of the marriage contract; . . . and because it is a breach of that contract, [15] Accord: 1870, State v. Bennett, 31 Ia. 24; 1874, State v. Hazen, 39 Ia. 648; 1885, Lord v. State, 17 Nebr. 526, 528, 23 N. W. 507.

Contra: 1860, State v. Armstrong, 4 Minn. 335, 343 (even under a statute making the complaint by the injured spouse the necessary basis of prosecution); 1868, State v. Berlin, 42 Mo. 572, 577, semble; 1882, Compton v. State, 13 Tex. App. 271 (cited in the next note); 1839, Mills v. U. S., 1 Pinney Wis. 73; 1898, Crawford v. State, 98 Wis. 623, 74 N. W. 537.

Not decided: 1905, State v. Nelson, 39 Wash. 221, 81 Pac. 721.

But in some States the statute (ante, § 488) expressly sanctions the privilege in proceedings "founded on adultery," and this provision controls: 1894, Hanselman v. Dovel, 102 Mich. 505, 60 N. W. 978 (husband not admitted for himself, in crim. con., even after divorce); 1896, People v. Isham, 109 Mich. 72, 67 N. W. 819 (adultery); 1896, People v. Imes, 110 Mich. 250, 68 N. W. 157 (same); 1890, De Meli v. De Meli, 120 N. Y. 485, 492, 24 N. E. 996 (adultery).

[16] 1893, State v. Chambers, 87 Ia. 1, 3, 53 N. W. 1090 (wife competent against a husband charged with incest); 1897, State v. Hurd, 101 Ia. 391, 70 N. W. 613; 1916, State v. Shultz, 177 Ia. 321, 158 N. W. 539 (incest; wife admitted for the prosecution); 1891, Owens v. State, 32 Nebr. 174, 49 N. W. 226 (incest); 1907, Harris v. State, 80 Nebr. 195, 114 N. W. 168 (rape under age, on the defendant's stepdaughter; the wife admitted).

[17] Accord: 1880, State v. Sloan, 55 Ia. 217, 220, 7 N. W. 516; 1882, State v. Hughes, 58 Ia. 165, 168, 11 N. W. 706; La. St. 1904, No. 41; 1906, Richardson v. State, 103 Md. 112, 63 Atl. 317 (but under a broad statute, Pub. Gen. L. 1904, Art. 35, § 4); 1901, Hills v. State, 61 Nebr. 589, 85 N. W. 836 (to hold otherwise "would be to impute to the Legislature a useless purpose, since the common law was then in force except where modified by statute"); 1915, State v. Locke, 77 Or. 492, 151 Pac. 717 (bigamy; the first wife may testify to the date and place of the marriage, under St. 1913, p. 351, amending Lord's Or. L. § 1535); 1887, U. S. v. Bassett, 5 Utah 131, 134, 13 Pac. 237 (polygamy; first wife admitted against the defendant; quoted supra).

Contra: 1890, Bassett v. U. S., 137 U. S. 496, 503, 11 Sup. 165; 1892, People v. Quanstrom, 93 Mich. 254, 53 N. W. 165 (Morse, C. J., and Grant, J., diss.); 1894, Boyd v. State, 33 Tex. Cr. 470, 472 (lawful wife not admitted to testify to the fact of her marriage); 1906, State v. Kniffen, 44 Wash. 485, 87 Pac. 837.

[18] Brewer, J., in Bassett v. U. S., supra.

most hurtful in its consequences, it is declared to be a crime. Whenever the act or the conduct which constitutes a public offense or crime consists in a direct violation of the rights of an individual, the crime is against that individual as well as against the public. The law recognizes the marital rights of a woman or man as well as their rights to life, liberty, and security from personal violence; and the breach thereof by a second marriage or by cohabitation with another woman as a wife is often more injurious to the feelings of the lawful wife (as well as in other respects) than would be a deprivation of personal security or of personal liberty, — more injurious than the shake of a fist coupled with a threat or an attempt to commit a bodily injury. . . . The ground upon which the exclusion of the wife or husband rests is that it would destroy confidence and produce discord. A man in the bed of a strange woman is in a very unfavorable situation to insist upon preserving inviolate the sacred concord of marriage and harmony and confidence on the part of his wife."

In a petition for divorce, the petitioner should be admitted, under the spirit of the present principle, to testify to such causes of divorce as consist plainly of personal wrongs — for example, maltreatment or desertion — and perhaps (since divorce presupposes in general some sort of injustice to the petitioner) to other causes; and this view has sometimes been taken in applying the statutory exception for "personal wrong or injury." [19] But, needless to say, the common law recognized no such exception; and since, in many of the jurisdictions retaining the privilege, there has been an express reservation of it for divorce causes,[20] there is in those jurisdictions no opening, on this pretext, for the admission of husband or wife by implication from their competence as parties to the suit.[21] In an action for criminal conversation, or for [19] 1880, Stebbins v. Anthony, 5 Colo. 348, 361 (divorce for desertion; the petitioner is competent under such a statute); 1888, Spitz's Appeal, 56 Conn. 184, 14 Atl. 776 (quoted infra, n. 24); 1883, Burdette v. Burdette, 13 D. C. 469 (parties in divorce suits 'a vinculo' are incompetent; but by Equity Rule 98 the petitioner for separation may testify to cruel or inhuman treatment taking place when no other witness was present); 1900, Gardner v. Gardner, 104 Tenn. 410, 58 S. W. 342 (admissible in a petition for divorce on the ground of cruelty). Moreover, under the statute making parties in general competent, the same result is sometimes reached; the cases are noted post, § 2244.

[20] The statutes are collected ante, § 488.

[21] In the following cases, the parties were held not admissible: 1905, Bishop v. Bishop, 124 Ga. 293, 52 S. E. 743 (in divorce for adultery, under Code § 5272, Rev. C. 1910, § 5861, the husband and wife are disqualified, and in a proceeding for alimony pending suit for divorce for desertion, neither may testify to the other's adultery); 1913, Anderson v. Anderson, 140 Ga. 802, 79 S. E. 1124 (wife's suit for divorce for cruelty, with a cross-libel for adultery; the wife allowed to testify in support of her bill, but not in denial of the cross-bill; this case illustrates the absurd technicalities of the patchwork statutory treatment of this privilege); 1901, Fightmaster v. Fightmaster, — Ky. —, 60 S. W. 918 (divorce for cruelty; wife not admissible to prove acts of cruelty); 1901, Lambert v. Lambert, — Ky. —, 63 S. W. 614 (neither admissible); 1903, Boreing v. Boreing, 114 Ky. 522, 71 S. W. 431 (wife not admissible against husband in her suit for divorce); 1921, Gates v. Gates, 192 Ky. 253, 232 S. W. 378 (divorce asked by wife; the wife not competent to testify to defendant's infidelity, under Civ. C. § 606, amended 1912); 1880, Dillon v. Dillon, 32 La. An. 643, 645; 1880, Daspit v. Ehringer, 32 La. An. 1174, 1176; 1859, Dwelly v. Dwelly, 46 Me. 377; 1921, Stillman v. Stillman, Sup. Sp. T., 187 N. Y. Suppl. 383 (divorce; plaintiff husband's affidavits as to facts rendering non-confidential certain documents delivered to him by defend ant wife, held not admissible under C. C. P. § 831); 1914, Hooper v. Hooper, 165 N. C. 605, 81 S. E. 933 (husband's testimony to wife's infectious disease, excluded).

In the following cases, on one ground or another, the parties were held admissible: 1871, Castello v. Castello, 41 Ga. 613; 1916, Bœck v. Bœck, 29 Ida. 639, 161 Pac. 576 (divorce by wife for cruelty; the wife may call the husband and compel him to testify for her, under Rev. C. § 5958 and St. 1909, Mar. 13); 1904, Schaab v. Schaab, 66 N. J. Eq. 334, 57 Atl. 1090 (under St. 1900, c. 150, §§ 2, 5, a wife may enticement, or for alienation of affections, or for seduction, so far as misconduct on the part of (for example) the plaintiff-husband to the wife becomes a part of the issue, in excuse or in mitigation of damages, it would seem that the wife should be admissible against the husband to prove this on the analogy of the doctrine already noted (supra, par. 2);[22] but ordinarily this has not been judicially recognized.[23] To ignore it is at least to cast discredit on the supposed reason of the privilege; for, in an action for alienation of affections, of what use is it to pretend any longer by a rule of evidence to preserve those affections?

(4) In a few instances, a deprivation or injury of property[24] has been brought within the common-law exception, and the same liberality should be shown for defamation[25] and perjury.[26]

(5) As a part of the common-law exception, but resting on the supposed testify for her husband in an action for divorce for adultery, but is not compellable); 1920, Rosenwasser v. Rosenwasser, Sup. Ct. 179 N. Y. Suppl. 617 (husband and wife, in divorce, held competent for certain purposes, under C. C. P. § 831 as amended; prior cases collated); 1873, Barringer v. Barringer, 69 N. C. 179 (divorce for impotence); 1902, Broom v. Broom, 130 id. 562, 41 S. E. 673 (under a statute rendering a spouse not "competent or compellable to give evidence for or against the other," the wife, in the husband's suit for divorce for adultery, may testify in denial of the adultery); 1895, Seitz v. Seitz, 170 Pa. 71, 32 Atl. 578.

Compare the cases on divorce, cited post, § 2245, and supra, note 15, par. 4.

[22] 1839, Gilchrist v. Bale, 8 Watts 355, 357 (enticement of the plaintiff's wife; the wife's declarations of ill-treatment by the husband, admitted).

[23] Eng. 1745, Winsmore v. Greenbank, Willes 577, 578 (enticement of a wife; her declarations not admitted against the plaintiff; no reason given); U. S. 1895, Rice v. Rice, 104 Mich. 371, 379, 62 N. W. 833 (wife's action for alienation of the husband's affections; the latter not admitted against her); 1880, Huot v. Wise, 27 Minn. 68, 6 N. W. 68 (the wife, in an action by the husband for her enticement, not admitted under the statutory exception for "crimes against the other"); 1921, Smith v. Sheffield, — Utah —, 197 Pac. 605 (alienation of wife's affections; the wife held not admissible against the plaintiff, under Comp. L. 1917, § 7124; "the statute may be barbaric; possibly it should be liberalized, but that cannot be done by judicial construction"); compare the cases cited ante, § 2235. In the cases cited ante, § 1730, where the wife's letters are admitted under the Hearsay exception, this question does not seem to have presented itself.

[24] 1888, Spitz's Appeal, 56 Conn. 184, 14 Atl. 776 (rule not applicable "to actions at law in which the husband and wife have conflicting interests and are opposing parties, as petitions for divorce or suits by the wife seeking protection against the husband, and has no application to suits in equity relating to the wife's separate estate"; a wife here allowed to testify against creditors of an estate assigned by the husband, as to a claim for her separate property included therein); 1900, Hach v. Rollins, 158 Mo. 182, 59 S. W. 232 (widow's bill to set aside a deceased husband's conveyance in fraud of the wife's dower and homestead; the widow admitted to testify to the fraud, under the common law exception "'ex necessitate' as to conversations between them, in order to expose a fraud that was perpetrated by the husband on the wife").

Contra: 1912, Molyneux v. Willcockson, 157 Ia. 39, 137 N. W. 1016 (forgery by the husband of money obligations in the wife's name; the exception held not applicable); 1875, Overton v. State, 43 Tex. 616, 618 (wife excluded in a prosecution of the husband for stealing her mule).

Compare the statutory exception for separate estate, post, § 2240.

Undecided: 1921, Com. v. Wilson, 190 Ky. 813, 229 S. W. 60 (obtaining money under false pretences; whether defendant's wife at time of the offence, nowdivorced, wasadmissible against him, the property so obtained being hers; not decided).

[25] Contra: 1838, State v. Burlingham, 15 Me. 104, 107 (wife not admitted against a husband conspiring to charge her with adultery; the rule is "confined to cases seeking security of the peace and cases of personal violence"); 1895, Bohner v. Bohner, 46 Nebr. 204, 64 N. W. 700 (slander).

The following ruling seems correct: 1871, Taulman v. State, 37 Ind. 353 (wife not admitted on a charge against the husband of carrying concealed weapons).

[26] 1917, West v. State, 13 Okl. Cr. 312, 164 Pac. 327 (perjury by husband in divorce proceeding, held a "crime against the wife" under Rev. L. 1910, § 5882; liberal opinion by Matson, J.).

extreme necessity for the State, and not for the wife individually, the privilege has sometimes been said to cease in a trial for treason.[27] But this was not the early tradition.[28]

§ 2240. Under Statutory Exceptions (Separate Estate, Agency, etc.). In almost all the jurisdictions which retain the privilege in general, new statutory exceptions, unknown to the common law, have been added.[1] The most common one is that which admits either spouse against the other in proceedings involving a "personal wrong or injury," or a "crime against the other"; this is merely a generalized extension of the common-law exception, and its interpretation has already been considered in that connection (ante, § 2239).

Another exception, less common, admits either spouse in controversies concerning the wife's separate estate;[2] another, in cases where either has been acting as agent for the other;[3] and still another, in proceedings supplementary to execution, i. e. for reaching a debtor's fraudulent conveyances.[4]

These seem to be the statutory exceptions that have most often called for judicial interpretation.[5] In effect, such statutes are sometimes [27] 1767, Buller, Trials at Nisi Prius 286.

[28] 1613, Anon., 1 Brownl. 47 ("the wife is not bound in case of high treason to discover her husband's treason"); 1680, Hale, Pleas of the Crown, I, 301.

§ 2240. [1] The statutes are collected ante, § 488.

[2] The following rulings apply such a statute: Mich. 1884, Hunt v. Eaton, 55 Mich. 362, 365, 21 N. W. 429; 1886, Eaton v. Knowles, 61 Mich. 625, 633, 28 N. W. 740; 1891, Blanchard v. Moors, 85 Mich. 380, 385, 48 N. W. 542; 1894, Berles v. Adsit, 102 Mich. 495, 60 N. W. 967; 1898, Dowling v. Dowling, 116 Mich. 346, 74 N. W. 523 (wife admitted against husband, in an action by her to recover a loan to him); Pa. 1906, Heckman v. Heckman, 215 Pa. 203, 64 Atl. 425 (neither is competent under Pa. St. 1893, P. L. 345, in a suit in equity for reconveyance of the wife's separate estate); 1918, Morrish v. Morrish, 262 Pa. 192, 105 Atl. 83 (cancellation of wife's anti-nuptial deed to husband; the wife admitted for herself; under St. 1913, Mar. 27).

For cases of the same sort under the common-law principle, see ante, § 2239.

For rulings applying the same statutes where the qualification of one spouse on behalf of the other is in question, see ante, § 614.

[3] The following rulings apply such a statute; Ky. 1921, Com. v. Wilson, 190 Ky. 813, 229 S. W. 60 (obtaining money by false pretences; defendant's wife at time of offence, since divorced, held admissible against him, under C. C. P. § 606, the pretences having been made by him as agent for the wife); Mo. 1873, Paul v. Leavitt, 53 Mo. 595, 597; 1873, Chesley v. Chesley, 54 Mo. 347; 1877, Haerle v. Kreihn, 65 Mo. 202, 206; 1892, Leete v. State Bank, 115 Mo. 184, 204, 21 S. W. 788; 1904, First Nat'l Bank v. Wright, 104 Mo. App. 242, 78 S. W. 636; Wis. 1886, Blabon v. Gilchrist, 67 Wis. 38, 45, 29 N. W. 220.

Compare the rulings cited ante, § 616, applying the same statutes to the question of admitting one spouse on behalf of the other.

[4] The following rulings apply such a statute: Minn. 1890, Wolford v. Farnham, 44 Minn. 159, 164, 46 N. W. 295; 1899, National Germ. Am. Bank v. Lawrence, 77 Minn. 282, 79 N. W. 1016; Pa. 1915, In re Kessler, D. C. E. D. Pa., 225 Fed. 394 (the privilege of a wife not to testify against her husband in a bankruptcy proceeding in Pennsylvania is determinable by the State law, and not by the Federal bankruptcy statute, on the principle of § 6, ante).

[5] The following rulings apply an exception for spouses "joined as parties and having a separate interest": La. 1866, Cull v. Herwig, 18 La. An. 315, 319; 1872, Phillips v. Stewart, 24 La. An. 153; 1880, Hennen v. Hacker, 32 La. An. 668; 1886, Cooley v. Cooley, 38 La. An. 195, 197.

Sundry statutes have led to the following rulings; Or. 1914, State v. Von Klein, 71 Or. 159, 142 Pac. 549 (the exception for "cases of polygamy" applied; construing L. O. L. § 1535, as amended by Or. St. 1913, p. 351); Pa. 1907, Rust v. Oltmer, 74 N. J. L. 802, 67 Atl. 337 (P. L. 1900, p. 363, Evidence, § 5, held not to exclude the wife's testimony on a count for alienation of affections); 1916, Com. v. Garanchoskie, 251 Pa. 247, 96 Atl. 513 (murder of J. for improper intimacy with defendant's wife; wife admitted for the prosecution, under St. 1899, April 11, § 2, quoted ante, § 488); 1917, Lyen v. Lyen, 98 Wash. 498, 167 Pac. 1113 (alienation of husband's affections; equivalent to those abolishing the privilege, in part or entirely (post, § 2245).

6. Exercise of the Privilege

§ 2241. Whose is the Privilege. If we consult the reason most commonly advanced in support of the privilege, namely, the prevention of marital dissension (ante, § 2228), it would seem to attribute the privilege to the marital party only, and not to the marital witness. That is, if the husband is the defendant, and the wife is called against him as a witness, exclusion is here directed to prevent ill-feeling against her on the husband's part, for her revelation of the truth; and thus, if that ill-feeling of his were obviated, it would seem that no concern of hers was involved. But taking the other suggested reason for the privilege, namely, immunity from the repugnant situation of being condemned by one's spouse or of becoming the instrument of a spouse's condemnation (ante, § 2228), the privilege seems to be equally that of party and of witness. In other words, while the defendant-husband is entitled to be protected against condemnation through the wife's testimony, the witness-wife is also entitled to be protected against becoming the instrument of that condemnation, — the sentiment in each case being equal in degree and yet different in quality.

The latter view seems generally to be accepted, by implication underlying the various judicial utterances; but precise rulings are naturally rare, and depend much on the wording of statutes. It is established in some Courts that at least the privilege belongs to the party-spouse against whom the other is offered as a witness.[1] Rarely is the privilege denied to belong to the witness-spouse;[2] and rarely also is it denied to belong to the party-spouse.[3] In any case, if the husband is not a party, and the wife is called to testify against his interest, a case in which the privilege is by some Courts held applicable (ante, § 2235), the privilege may be waived by husband and the husband having ceased to be a party to the case, his deposition was held not admissible against the wife, under Rem. Code § 1214); W. Va. 1881, Zane v. Fink, 18 W. Va. 693, 744 (former statutory exception for suits between husband and wife, applied).

Upon these various statutes, compare also the rulings cited ante, § 617, interpreting the same statutes as applied to qualify one spouse to testify on behalf of the other.

§ 2241. [1] 1896, Ward v. Dickson, 96 Ia. 708, 65 N. W. 997; 1894, People v. Gordon, 100 Mich. 518, 520, 59 N. W. 322; 1895, Lihs v. Lihs, 44 Nebr. 143, 62 N. W. 457.

[2] 1882, Turner v. State, 60 Miss. 351 (assault and battery on the wife; the wife compellable to testify, though unwilling, the husband not having here a privilege; and even if the wife had, the husband could not raise the objection, on the principle of § 2196, ante).

[3] 1871, State v. McCord, 8 Kan. 232 (the wife being entitled as a party to testify); 1878, State v. Buffington, 20 Kan. 599, 616; 1892, State v. Geer, 48 Kan. 752, 754, 30 Pac. 236 (the wife may consent, though not compellable, to testify against husband); 1920, State v. Bischoff, 146 La. 748, 84 So. 41 (bigamy; the first wife admitted voluntarily to testify against the defendant, under St. 1916, No. 157); 1904, Com. v. Barker, 185 Mass. 324, 70 N. E. 203 (under Rev. L. 1902, c. 175, § 20, Gen. L. 1920, c. 233, § 20, the wife may voluntarily testify against the husband in a criminal case); 1920, Com. v. Baronian, 235 Mass. 364, 126 N. E. 833 (perjury; wife permitted to testify voluntarily to husband-defendant's statements made before marriage).

The following ruling is plainly correct in any case: 1883, Dumas v. State, 14 Tex. App. 464, 473 (if the wife is qualified on the husbands' behalf, she is compellable on his behalf, even against her will).

wife, without regard to the party-opponent; for, upon the general principle (ante, § 2196), the privilege is personal to them and does not concern the party.[4]

§ 2242. Waiver of the Privilege. (1) If Lord Coke's fantastic reason (ante, § 2228) had been the real one for the privilege, then indeed it would have been no privilege, in any true sense, and therefore there could have been no waiver; for privilege implies option (ante, §§ 2175, 2196, 2197). A privilege without a waiver becomes a vain use of words, and means no more nor less than an absolute rule of exclusion, of a very different type (ante, § 2175). But on no other reason than Lord Coke's could this result be reached; for, by either of the main and popular reasons, the object of the privilege is to protect from the consequences of ill-feeling or from a repugnant situation (ante, § 2238); and this implies necessarily that a spouse not apprehending such consequences, or not desiring to be protected, may waive the protection which is optionally granted.

Nevertheless, the application of the privilege has tended to be obscured by the use of the term "incompetency" for both the disqualification to testify on the spouse's behalf and the privilege not to testify against the spouse. The former is plainly an absolute rule of law, not left to the party's option (ante, § 604); the latter is a mere privilege. The common phrase, declaring them "incompetent to testify for or against the other," by associating the former with the latter, has sometimes led, by confusion, to the extension of the idea of absoluteness from the one to the other. In a few instances, it has been denied or doubted that the privilege can be waived.[1] But this doubt is entirely unfounded, and is repudiated not only by occasional decision,[2] but also by implication in most of the modern statutes which

[4] 1862, Wright, J., in Russ v. Steamboat War Eagle, 14 Ia. 363, 375 ("The prohibition is not founded on interest, but [on] the interruption which the allowance of such a practice might produce in the domestic harmony of the parties on grounds of policy appertaining to the domestic relation. Such considerations are addressed to the husband or wife, and not to their adversary. The privilege is a personal one; and therefore, if the husband is ready to waive the right, and the wife does not object, it is not for the other party to stand guardian over the domestic quiet and welfare"); 1911, State v. Stewart, 85 Kan. 404, 116 Pac. 489 (holding only that the party's counsel may properly request or suggest to the judge that the husband-witness be informed of the privilege; whether the party may take advantage of an erroneous denial of the privilege, not decided).

§ 2242. [1] 1736, Barker v. Dixie, Lee cas. t. Hardwicke 264 (case too confusedly reported to be of any value); 1883, Clark v. Krause, 13 D. C. 559, 573 (privilege cannot be waived; said obiter); 1903, Barber v. People, 203 Ill. 543, 68 N. E. 93 (calling the first wife, in a prosecution for bigamy; waiver not allowed); 1875, Tilton v. Beecher, N. Y., Official Report, III, 313, 355, 925 (crim. con.; Mrs. Tilton was not offered by the defendant, but the plaintiff expressed his consent and waiver of objection to the defendant calling her; the judge was not obliged to render a decision, but the defendant and the plaintiff respectively contended that a waiver was and was not sufficient to render the wife admissible; and the plaintiff argued that an inference might be drawn from the defendant's failure to call her); 1902, Brock v. State, 44 Tex. Cr. 335, 71 S. W. 20 (neither the testifying spouse, nor the one testified against, can waive); 1903, Davis v. State, 45 Tex. Cr. 292, 77 S. W. 451.

[2] Eng. 1829, Best, C. J., in Pedley v. Wellesley, 3 C. & P. 558; U. S. 1862, Russ v. Steamboat War Eagle, 14 Ia. 363, 375 (under a statute expressly sanctioning a waiver); 1865, Blake v. Graves, 18 Ia. 312, 318 (same; by a majority); 1890, Estey v. Fuller I. Co., 82 Ia. 678, 682, 46 N. W. 1098, semble (same). Add the cases cited in notes 4–8, infra.

declare the one inadmissible against the other "without the consent of the other." [3]

(2) Who may waive the privilege depends upon whose privilege it is, — a question already considered (ante, § 2241).

(3) What constitutes a waiver is usually not difficult to answer. Consent, express or implied, before trial may have the effect of a waiver.[4] A failure to object, upon the calling of the spouse to the stand, must be equivalent to consent.[5] In a few jurisdictions, it is expressly enacted that the taking of the stand by a party shall constitute a waiver as to his privilege for his wife's testimony.[6] The usual case presented is that of a party who calls his wife on his own behalf and then attempts to claim his privilege to prevent her cross-examination. Argument is scarcely needed to demonstrate the unfairness and the logical inconsistency of such a proceeding; it involves of course a waiver,[7] and yet this has in at least one Court been denied.[8]

§ 2243. Inference from Exercise of the Privilege. If the spouse against whom it is desired to call the other as a witness takes advantage of the privilege and thus causes the rejection of the witness, how far may this circumstance be taken as permitting the inference that the excluded testimony would be unfavorable to the party-spouse? The established principle (ante, § 286) permits such an inference ordinarily, from the suppression of avail-

[3] The statutes are collected ante, § 488.

[4] 1878, Hubbell v. Grant, 39 Mich. 641, 643 (consent not implied from failure to object to discovery under oath). But no doubt a stipulation, in the nature of a judicial admission (post, § 2590), or a contract (ante, § 7*a*) would suffice.

[5] 1914, Cohen v. U. S., 9th C. C. A., 214 Fed. 23 (wife held properly admissible where it did not appear that either she or her husband did not consent); 1906, People v. Chadwick, 4 Cal. App. 63, 87 Pac. 384, 389 (but a failure to object at a former trial is not a waiver for a subsequent trial); 1883, Benson v. Morgan, 50 Mich. 77, 79, 14 N. W. 705 (consent implied from attendance in court and failure to object); 1913, Hunter v. State, 10 Okl. Cr. App. 119, 134 Pac. 1134.

Compare the rules for objections (ante, §§ 18, 486).

[6] As in the Codes of California, Oregon, etc., quoted ante, § 488; construed in the following case erroneously: 1899, State v. McGrath, 35 Or. 109, 57 Pac. 321 (under C. C. P. § 713, a defendant by taking the stand in a criminal case does not consent to the examination of his wife by the prosecution; a singular reading out of an express provision).

The husband's own testimony to his wife's statements, in an issue where she is virtually an opposed party in interest, ought to be a waiver of the privilege, because in fairness she should have an opportunity to deny or explain. Contra: 1910, Fuller v. Robinson, 230 Mo. 22, 130 S. W. 343 (alienation of affections).

[7] 1899, National Germ. Am. Bank v. Lawrence, 77 Minn. 282, 80 N. W. 363 (a husband's permission of the wife's testimony "completely waives his statutory privilege" for purposes of her cross-examination); 1897, Danley v. Danley, 179 Pa. 170, 36 Atl. 225 (a plaintiff-wife admitted after examination at the opponent's demand, although her husband was a co-defendant); and some of the statutes quoted ante, § 488.

[8] 1869, Griffin v. State, 32 Tex. 164, 166; but this ruling did not long remain: 1870, Creamer v. State, 34 Tex. 173 (preceding case repudiated; but the prosecution may not examine to new matter); 1876, Hampton v. State, 45 Tex. 154, 158 (cross-examination to her statements on the preliminary examination, allowed); 1884, Washington v. State, 17 Tex. App. 197, 204 (like Creamer v. State); 1889, Johnson v. State, 28 Tex. App. 17, 25, 11 S. W. 667 (same); 1893, Bluman v. State, 33 Tex. Cr. 43, 64, 21 S. W. 1027, 26 S. W. 75 (same); 1895, Hoover v. State, 35 Tex. Cr. 342, 345, 33 S. W. 337 (same); 1907, Jones v. State, 51 Tex. Cr. 472, 101 S. W. 993 (Hoover v. State followed).

Distinguish the question (ante, § 1885) whether in general a witness may be cross-examined on the subject of the whole case or only on the subject of the direct examination.

able testimony, or the failure to utilize it. Must it yield in this instance, as being inconsistent with the full exercise of the privilege? This question has usually been answered in the affirmative: [1]

§ 2243. [1] ENGLAND: St. 1898, 61 and 62 Vict. c. 36, Criminal Evid. Act, § 1 (b) ("The failure of any person charged with an offence, or of the wife or husband, as the case may be, of the person so charged, to give evidence, shall not be made the subject of any comment by the prosecution"; but this is merely an unnatural application of the principle of § 282, ante, and not a recognition of the doctrine that exercise of this privilege is no ground for inference, for by § 4 of the same Act, quoted in full ante, § 488, the privilege is abolished); 1910, Dickman's Case, 5 Cr. App. 135 (applying St. 1898, § 1).

CANADA: Dom. St. 1893, c. 31, § 4, Rev. St. 1906, c. 145, § 4 ("the failure of the person charged, or of the wife or husband of such person, to testify, shall not be made the subject of comment," etc.; quoted in full ante, § 488; the same comment here applies as to the English statute above); 1898, R. v. Corby, 30 N. Sc. 330, 332; 1903, R. v. Hill, 36 N. Sc. 253 (following R. v. Corby, supra, even where the defendant's counsel had already introduced the subject by explaining the wife's absence); 1915, R. v. Romano, 21 D. L. R. 195, Que. (judge's comment on accused's wife's failure to testify, held inproper); 1916, R. v. Lindsay, 30 D. L. R. 417, Ont. (incest; comment by Crown counsel on failure of defendant's wife to testify, held error).

UNITED STATES: Ariz. 1914, Zumwalt v. State, 16 Ariz. 82, 141 Pac. 710 (statutory rape; under P. C. 1913, § 1228, the defendant's failure to call his wife cannot be commented on); Ill. 1906, Mash v. People, 220 Ill. 86, 77 N. E. 92 (prosecuting counsel's argument drawing an inference from the wife's claim, held to have been here excused by the defendant's counsel's prior similar impropriety); Kan. 1918, State v. Peterson, 102 Kan. 900, 171 Pac. 1153 (robbery); Mich. 1867, Knowles v. People, 15 Mich. 408, 413 (quoted supra); Minn. 1899, National Germ. Am. Bank v. Lawrence, 77 Minn. 282, 79 N. W. 1016; 1918, State v. Kampert, 139 Minn. 132, 165 N. W. 972 (carnal knowledge under age); Miss. 1885, Johnson v. State, 63 Miss. 313 (the wife being here competent, but the husband-defendant being privileged not to call her; quoted supra); 1912, Fannie v. State, 101 Miss. 378, 58 So. 2 (Johnson v. State followed); Mo. 1905, State v. Shouse, 188 Mo. 473, 87 S. W. 480; N. C. 1921, State v. Harris, 181 N. C. 600, 107 S. E. 466 (wife of accused; no inference allowed from failure to call her); W. Va. 1905, State v. Taylor, 57 W. Va. 228, 50 S. E. 247 (like Johnson v. State, Miss.); and several of the statutes quoted ante, § 488.

Contra: Mass. 1912, Com. v. Spencer, 212 Mass. 438, 99 N. E. 266 (defendant's failure to call his wife, held open to comment; like People v. Hovey); N. Y. 1883, People v. Hovey, 92 N. Y. 554, 559 (inference allowable from the failure of the defendant to call his wife, an eye-witness, who was not compellable to testify against him, but was competent for him); Okl. 1909, Rhea v. Territory, 3 Okl. Cr. 230, 105 Pac. 314 (where by law the defendant's wife may testify for him but he is privileged not to let the prosecution call her against him, the Court may tell the jury that the prosecution has no power to call her but that the defendant has, to prevent any inference from being drawn against the prosecution; and an inference may be drawn against the defendant); Tex. 1869, Griffin v. State, 32 Tex. 164, 166; 1906, McMichael v. State, 49 Tex. Cr. 422, 93 S. W. 723 (wife an eye-witness); 1917, Norwood v. State, 80 Tex. Cr. 552, 192 S. W. 248 (murder; a conversation between defendant and his wife took place on his return home; the defendant claimed privilege when the State asked the wife on cross-examination to state the conversation; held that a comment on defendant's failure to use or prevention of use of his wife's testimony was allowable; but, on rehearing, that the defendant's claim of privilege for communications was valid, on the principle of § 2332, post; Prendergast, J., diss.; the opinions collate fully the Texas cases); 1921, Smith v. State, 90 Tex. Cr. 24, 232 S. W. 497 (murder, the wife being an eye-witness; "the jury were legitimately told that he might have done so [i. e. called her] had he wished, but that the State could not").

Uncertain: 1893, Graves v. U. S., 150 U. S. 118, 120, 14 Sup. 40 (a woman was present with the murderer; the defendant's failure to have his wife in court, so that it could be seen whether she was the woman, and the party thus identified, not allowed as ground for inference, partly because he was not bound to anticipate the need, partly because she was incompetent to testify for him; Brewer, J., diss.); 1918, State v. Morgan, 142 La. 755, 77 So. 588 (murder; comment on defendant's wife's failure to testify for him; not decided); 1896, State v. Hatcher, 29 Or. 309, 44 Pac. 584 (left doubtful, though erroneously treated as involved in the privilege, on the same principle as in the privilege against self-crimination; but held that in any case the failure shows nothing unless it appears that the wife was within the jurisdiction, and that she was willing to waive her privilege); 1921, Corvin v. Com., — Va. —, 108 S. E. 652 (bigamy; failure of the alleged second wife to testify, held not a subject for instruction, under Code

1867, CAMPBELL, J., in Knowles v. People, 15 Mich. 408, 413: "If the omission to call the wife upon the stand is to be treated as warranting the conclusion that her testimony would be adverse, then the privilege is entirely destroyed and she will have to be called at all events. . . . The law, in permitting husbands and wives to testify on behalf of each other, cannot have contemplated that any moral coercion should enable others to force them into the witness-box."

1885, ARNOLD, J., in Johnson v. State, 63 Miss. 313, 317: "If the failure of the husband to call his wife as a witness in his behalf is to be construed as testimony or as a circumstance against him, his privilege and option in the matter would be annulled, and he would be compelled in all cases to introduce her or run the hazard of being convicted on a constrained, implied confession or admission, or to make explanations for introducing her which might involve the sacred privacy of domestic life."

Whether this conclusion is inevitable is at least open to argument. The argument against it is that there is no actual coercion and no actual denial of the privilege, but merely a dilemma and an option, which are created, not by any direct attempt to break into the privilege, but by the accidental coincidence, upon the same piece of testimony, of two independent principles of law, neither one of which should be made to yield rather than the other. This argument is nearly the same as that which applies to the privilege against self-crimination (post, § 2272), and need not be further noticed here.[2]

It must be noted that, when the privilege does not exist,[3] or where it has been waived,[4] the inference is permissible; and, furthermore, that, in any event, upon the same principle as under the privilege against self-crimination (post, § 2272), the party desiring to compel the spouse to testify may at least call for the testimony, and is not to be deprived of it until the party-spouse formally objects and claims the privilege.[5]

7. Statutory Changes

§ 2245. Statutory Abolition, Express or Implied. The progress of acceptance of Bentham's reasoning, in its effect on this privilege, has not been as 1919, § 6211, the status of the woman being one of the issues).

The following ruling seems correct: 1907, State v. Brown, 118 La. 373, 42 So. 969 (statement by the prosecuting attorney that the defendant's wife could testify neither for nor against the accused, held not improper).

[2] It may be added that the present question must be distinguished from that which arises when the witness-spouse is disqualified on the other's behalf, and not merely privileged, because then it is impossible to use the testimony under any conditions, and no inference could arise even if there were no privilege; this is an ordinary deduction from the general principle affecting such inferences, and the rulings have been already noted thereunder (ante, § 286).

[3] 1873, Alley's Trial, Mass., Pamph. Rep. 144 (that the defendant's wife was not called to explain his whereabouts, allowed to be considered); 1902, Richardson v. State, 44 Tex. Cr. 211, 70 S. W. 320. Contra: 1903, Moore v. State, 54 Tex. Cr. 234, 75 S. W. 497, semble (Henderson, J., diss.).

[4] 1870, Creamer v. State, 34 Tex. 173 (the husband's refusal to allow cross-examination of the wife; inference permissible).

[5] 1915, State v. Roby, 128 Minn. 187, 150 N. W. 793 (carnal knowledge of a female minor; the prosecution's request for the defendant's consent to his wife being called, held proper, even though the defendant had before trial served a notice objecting to her testimony being taken in any form); 1915, State v. Virgens, 128 Minn. 422, 151 N. W. 190 (murder; the defence having evidenced intimacy of the defendant's wife with a paramour and the possible guilt of the paramour as the murderer, the prosecution was allowed to ask the defendant whether he would consent to the wife's testifying, as a means of rebutting the prosecution's acquiescence in the defence's insinuation); 1895, Com. v. Weber, 167 Pa. 153, 31 Atl. 481. Contra: 1903, Moore v. State, 45 Tex. Cr. 234, 75 S. W. 497 (Henderson, J., diss.).

rapid as with most others of his proposed reforms. The disqualification of interested persons has been removed, as well as that of parties in civil cases and of defendants in criminal cases (ante, §§ 576, 577, 579). The privilege of parties in civil cases has been swept away (ante, § 2218). The disqualification of husband or wife on the other's behalf has disappeared in almost all jurisdictions (ante, § 602). But their privilege has been entirely removed in only a minority of jurisdictions.[1]

Many and large inroads, however, have been made upon it by statutory exceptions in almost every jurisdiction;[2] and in some States the statutory alteration of the privilege — for example, by denying it in civil cases — has risen beyond the degree of an exception to that of a partial abolition. The consequence of these numerous express changes, and of the enactment of the other statutes dealing with parties and interested persons, has been to require more or less judicial interpretation to determine the effect of the legislation upon the privilege. These rulings depend largely upon the phrasing of the individual statutes; but some of the questions presented have general features, which may here be noticed.

(a) The statutes declaring that no person should be "excluded" or "incompetent" by reason of being a party to the cause might well be argued to have the effect of abolishing the disqualification of a husband or wife, when a party, to testify for the other;[3] but they could not have the effect of abolishing the privilege — namely, of making the one compellable against the other — unless the notion of incompetency were given its larger and looser meaning (ante, § 2242) of disqualification and of privilege also. Such a meaning was given to it by some Courts, because it was commonly construed as abolishing for parties both disqualification and privilege; so that when the husband and the wife were parties, neither could prevent the other being called on the opposite side;[4] and this effect was sometimes § 2245. [1] The statutes are all placed, for convenience' sake, ante, § 488.

Stated summarily, the general result seems to be now as follows:

Civil Cases: The spouse, as witness, is compellable in England, in eight Canadian Provinces, and in eleven States; as against a party-spouse only, the privilege is abandoned in one State.

Criminal Cases: The spouse, as witness, is compellable in England (?) and in one State; as against a party-spouse only, the privilege is abandoned in seven States.

[2] Already examined ante, § 2240.

[3] This effect has been already examined (ante, § 613).

[4] 1877, Sutherland v. Hankins, 56 Ind. 343, 351 (contested will, the wife being an heir, but withdrawing as a plaintiff and joining as a defendant; husband compellable to testify for the heirs); 1871, Richards v. Burden, 31 Ia. 305, 310; 1904, Chaslavka v. Mechalek, 124 Ia. 69, 99 N. W. 154 (rule of Richards v. Burden applied to a wife's and a husband's admissions); 1861, Chamberlain v. People, 23 N. Y. 85, 88; 1869, Re O'Brien, 24 Wis. 547 (wife compellable to answer in proceedings to reach property of a judgment debtor, her husband); 1883, Carney v. Gleissner, 58 Wis. 674, 17 N. W. 398 (but not when the witness is interested, if not a party; here a wife was not admitted for the bailee of her separate property sued in replevin by her husband); 1886, Blabon v. Gilchrist, 67 Wis. 38, 45, 29 N. W. 220 (proceedings against a judgment debtor; his wife not examinable, because not a party; distinguishing Re O'Brien, supra, where a different procedure then prevailed).

Contra: 1904, Lenoir v. Lenoir, 24 D. C. App. 160, 165 (said obiter that Code 1901, § 1068, quoted ante, § 488, does not make the parties competent in a divorce case, thus preserving the rule of Burdette v. Burdette, 13 D. C. 469, infra, n. 7, and Bergheimer v. Bergheimer, 17 D. C. App. 381, in spite of the subsequent broad language of Code 1901; this result is conceded for suits for divorce[5] and other suits where they were the sole parties and on opposite sides.[6] But no such consequence could plausibly be deduced from the statutes abolishing interest as a disqualification;[7] for there was here no privilege to be abolished (ante, § 2222). A statute, it may be noted, making husband or wife "competent" would of course (by the same construction above mentioned) make the person compellable also.[8] These problems of interpretation, however, arose chiefly under the earlier statutes. Successive revisions have left few of them to survive for judicial ruling.

(b) The codification of many jurisdictions has given the criminal and the civil procedure a separate treatment, and thus it is necessary sometimes to resort to construction to determine how far a given rule applies in common to civil and criminal cases. Moreover, in the earlier steps of legislation, the privilege was sometimes abolished for the former class of cases but expressly retained for the latter; and thus the question has often arisen how far the abolition of the privilege has been carried by the Legislature. This question depends, of course, entirely on the wording of the local statutes; and it has therefore received varying answers, — sometimes that the privilege is in criminal cases retained[9] or unsound also as a matter of legal reasoning, for the Court mistakes the rule of Code 1901, § 964, quoted ante, § 2067, n. 10, to have some effect in disqualifying the parties, instead of merely requiring corroboration); 1905, Bishop v. Bishop, 124 Ga. 293, 52 S. E. 743 (divorce for adultery, and testimony to adultery in a proceeding for alimony pending suit for divorce for desertion).

[5] 1872, Moore v. Moore, 51 Mo. 118, 119; 1873, Berlin v. Berlin, 52 Mo. 151; 1861, Chamberlain v. People, 23 N. Y. 85, 88; 1865, Hays v. Hays, 19 Wis. 182. Compare the same result reached by another road in the rulings cited ante, § 2239.

[6] 1874, Darrier v. Darrier, 58 Mo. 222, 234 (controversy of land-title).

[7] 1883, Burdette v. Burdette, 13 D. C. 469; 1883, Clark v. Krause, 13 D. C. 559, 572; 1896, Ward v. Dickson, 96 Ia. 708, 65 N. W. 998, semble; 1860, Breed v. Gove, 41 N. H. 452, 454. Contra: 1873, Rowland v. Plummer, 50 Ala. 182, 193, semble.

But it was held in one jurisdiction that the real party, being a spouse, became compellable to testify, when the other was but a nominal party: 1867, Metler's Adm'r v. Metler, 18 N. J. Eq. 270, 277; 1868, Petrick v. Ashcroft, 19 N. J. Eq. 339, semble.

[8] 1909, Ex parte Beville, 58 Fla. 170, 50 So. 685 (habeas corpus for a wife committed for refusing to testify before the grand jury against her husband, on a matter not involving a crime against her person nor a marital communication; held compellable, under Rev. St. 1892, § 2863, and St. 1891, c. 4029, as heretofore interpreted; "the statute that removed the disqualification removed the privilege also"; careful opinion by Parkhill, J.; Whitfield, C. J., and Shackleford, J., diss.); 1872, Southwick v. Southwick, 49 N. Y. 510.

But not a statute abolishing "any disqualification known to the common law": 1909, U. S. v. Meyers, 14 N. Mex. 522, 99 Pac. 336 (one judge diss.).

[9] ENGLAND: 1911, Acaster's and Leach's Case, 7 Cr. App. 84 (under St. 1898, 61–2 Vict. c. 36, § 4, the wife of a defendant is compellable, without her consent, to testify; statutes carefully examined, in a convincing opinion by L. C. J. Alverstone); reversed on appeal in Leach v. Rex, [1912] A. C. 305, 7 Cr. App. 157 (construing St. 1898, 61–2 Vict. c. 36, § 4, "the wife or husband . . . may be called as a witness" etc.; wife held not compellable). On this topic, under modern English statutes, see the learned pamphlet of Herman Cohen, Esq., of the Inner Temple, "Spouse-Witnesses in Criminal Cases" (London, 1913); the preface says, "This little essay owes its origin to the argument of the Solicitor-General and Mr. (now Mr. Justice) Rowlatt in Leach's Case."

CANADA: 1913, R. v. Allen, N. Br. S. C., 14 D. L. R. 825 (wife not admissible against her husband, even though she consents, on a charge of obtaining money by false pretences).

UNITED STATES: 1915, Smith v. State, 13 Ala. App. 411, 69 So. 406 (bastardy; defendant's wife admissible, the case not being criminal); 1894, State v. Willis, 119 Mo. 485, abolished,[10] or that in civil cases it is retained [11] or abolished,[12] and sometimes that it is in both civil and criminal cases alike retained [13] or alike abolished.[14] The time ought soon to come when these rulings are outlawed by reform (as some of them even now are). Doubtless, before the centenary of Bentham's death, no vestige of the privilege will remain.

488, 24 S. W. 1008; 1908, State v. Orth, 79 Oh. 130, 86 N. E. 476 (father's refusal to support children; mother's testimony held not admissible against him in a criminal case).

[10] Canada: 1903, Gosselin v. King, 33 Can. Sup. 255, 263 (under Dom. Evidence Act 1893, c. 31, § 4, the husband or wife of the accused is both admissible and compellable to testify for the prosecution against the accused; Mills, J., diss.); but now see Dom. Rev. St. 1906, c. 145, § 4, quoted ante, § 488.

United States: Ala. 1875, Jackson v. State, 53 Ala. 472; Del. 1918, State v. Jaroslowski, 30 Del. 108, 103 Atl. 657 (father's murder of his infant child by poison; the wife being called for the prosecution with her consent, held that under Rev. C. 1915, § 4216, the husband had no privilege; whether the wife would have been privileged, not decided); Fla. 1894, Everett v. State, 33 Fla. 661, 664, 15 So. 543 (St. 1891, c. 4029, Rev. G. S. 1919, § 2702, and Rev. St. 1892, § 2863, Rev. G. S. 1919, § 6018, taken together, make the wife admissible in criminal cases against the husband); 1898, Mercer v. State, 40 Fla. 216, 24 So. 154; Md. 1906, Richardson v. State, 103 Md. 112, 63 Atl. 317 (under Pub. Gen. L. 1904, art. 35, § 4, the husband or wife is admissible for the prosecution, though not compellable); Mass. 1892, Com. v. Dill, 156 Mass. 226, 228, 30 N. E. 1016; 1895, Com. v. Hayden, 163 Mass. 453, 456, 40 N. E. 846; S. C. 1897, State v. Reynolds, 48 S. C. 384, 26 S. E. 679 (since the omission in 1882 of a clause specifically limiting the section's application to civil cases, the section applies equally to criminal cases; thus disposing of State v. Belcher, 1880, 13 S. C. 459, and State v. Dodson, 1881, 16 S. C. 460, decided under the original statute); Tenn. 1916, McCormick v. State, 135 Tenn. 218, 186 S. W. 95 (St. 1915, c. 161, abolishing the privilege in criminal cases, applied); Vt. 1913, State v. Nieburg, 86 Vt. 392, 85 Atl. 769; 1915, State v. Shaw, 89 Vt. 121, 94 Atl. 434 (adultery; following State v. Nieburg).

[11] 1884, Stephenson v. Cook, 64 Ia. 265, 269, 20 N. W. 182; 1893, Niland v. Kalish, 37 Nebr. 47, 49, 55 N. W. 295; 1894, Skinner v. Skinner, 38 Nebr. 756, 760, 57 N. W. 534 (nor do the statutes removing married women's property disabilities affect the statute upon evidence); 1894, Greene v. Greene, 42 Nebr. 634, 638, 60 N. W. 937 (same); 1904, Reed v. Reed, 70 Nebr. 775, 98 N. W. 76 (property rights).

[12] 1911, Harris v. Brown, C. C. A., 187 Fed. 6 (Gen. St. 1909, Kansas, § 5915, C. C. P. § 321, held to abolish all marital incompetency except for marital communications); 1882, Williams v. Riley, 88 Ind. 290, 296; 1895, Jordan v. State, 142 Ind. 422, 425; 1874, Westerman v. Westerman, 25 Oh. St. 500, 507.

[13] 1879, Byrd v. State, 57 Miss. 243; 1880, Anon., 58 Miss. 15; 1881, Leach v. Shelby, 58 Miss. 681, 688; but under the Code of 1892, see Saffold v. Horne (1894), 72 Miss. 470, 482, 18 So. 433.

[14] 1879, Brown v. Norton, 67 Ind. 424; 1879, Hutchason v. State, 67 Ind. 449; 1881, Smith v. Smith, 77 Ind. 80, 82.

TOPIC A (continued): PRIVILEGED TOPICS

SUB-TOPIC III: PRIVILEGE FOR SELF-CRIMINATING FACTS

CHAPTER LXXVIII.

1. In general

§ 2250. History of the Privilege.[1] The history of the privilege against self-crimination has something more than the ordinary interest of a rule of

§ 2250. [1] The substance of the history here set forth was first printed in 5 Harvard Law Review 71. Since that time, a wider survey of the sources (including a page-to-

Evidence, — not only because the privilege has been given a constitutional sanction in nearly every one of our jurisdictions; nor merely because the tracing of its origin takes us so far afield, in our survey, as the administrative policy of William the Conqueror, and the criminal procedure of Louis XIV and the French Revolution; but particularly because the woof of its long story is woven across a tangled warp composed in part of the inventions of the early canonists, of the momentous contest between the Courts of the common law and of the church, and of the political and religious issues of that convulsive period in English history, the days of the dictatorial Stuarts. To disentangle these various elements, while keeping each in sight and unbroken, is a complicated task.

To begin with, two distinct and parallel lines of development must be kept in mind, — the one an outgrowth of the other, succeeding it, and yet beginning just before the other comes to an end. The first is the history of the opposition to the 'ex officio' oath of the ecclesiastical courts; the second is the history of the opposition to the criminating question in the common-law courts, i. e. of the present privilege in its modern shape. Let us remember that there is, in the first part of this history, no question whatever of the subject of the second part, and that the second part has not yet begun to exist. The first part begins in the 1200s, and lasts well into the 1600s; the second part begins in the early 1600s, and runs on for another century.

I. Under the Anglo-Saxon rule, the bishops had sat as judges and entertained suits in the popular courts. But William the Conqueror, before 1100, had put an end to this. His enactment required the bishops to decide the causes according to the ecclesiastical law; whence sprang up a separate system and a double judicature.[2] By a century later, the papal power and the regal power were in hot conflict over the delimitation of their jurisdictions; in the great Constitution of Clarendon, in 1164, Henry II temporarily gained the advantage.[3] By another century, Stephen and John had lost ground; and under Henry III the influence of the leaders of the church, foreign born and foreign educated, was in the ascendant.[4] When Henry married his French wife, in 1236, there came over four uncles with her; one of whom, by name Boniface, was placed in the see of Canterbury as arch-page search of the Corpus Juris Canonici) and the collection of much additional material has made it possible to trace the story more correctly. The present account was printed in 15 Harv. Law Rev. 610 (1902); it has since been revised by taking note of the corroborative researches of Esmein, Hinschius, Pertile, Tanon, and Salvioli. The first of these has once for all settled the early history of the subject on the Continent. Their works cited herein are: Esmein, 1882, Histoire de la procédure criminelle en France, et spécialement de la procédure inquisitoire (translated as Vol. V of the Continental Legal History Series); 1896, Le serment des inculpés en droit canonique (reprinted by Leroux, Paris, from vol. 7, Bibliothèque de l'école des hautes études, sciences religieuses); Hinschius, 1869–1897, System des Katholischen Kirchenrechts mit besonderer Rücksicht auf Deutschland; Pertile, 1900, Storia del diritto italiano, 2d ed., vols. I–VI; Tanon, 1893, Histoire des tribunaux de l'inquisition en France; Salvioli, Jusjurandum de Calumnia, 1888; Manuale di storia di diritto italiano, 4th ed. 1903, 8th ed. 1921.

[2] Stubbs, Sel. Chart. 85, Const. Hist. II, 171; Pollock & Maitland, Hist. Eng. Law. I, 66, 67, 432.

[3] Poll. & Mait. I, 104 ff., 430 ff.

[4] Stubbs, Const. Hist. II, 57–65; Poll. & Mait. I, 100; Gneist, Const. Hist. I, 240.

bishop (or perhaps archdeacon). In the same year, 1236 (Matthew Paris said 1237), there came over also a Cardinal Otho. These two men were active in developing the local church law of England.[5] First to be noted is a constitution of Otho, promulgated at a Pan-Anglican council in London, 1236: "Jusjurandum calumniæ in causis ecclesiasticis et civilibus de veritate dicenda in spiritualibus, quo ut veritas facilius aperiatur et causæ celerius terminentur, statuimus præstari de cetero in regno Angliæ secundum canonicas et legitimas sanctiones, obtenta consuetudine in contrarium non obstante."[6] Next, in 1272, came a similar constitution from Boniface: "Statuimus quod laici, ubi de subditorum peccatis et excessibus corrigendis per prælatos et judices ecclesiasticos inquiritur, ad præstandum de veritate dicenda juramentum per excommunicationis sententias, si opus fuerit, compellantur."[7] Meanwhile, the general struggle between papal and royal claims of jurisdiction had gone on. Under Edward I, the statute of 'Circumspecte Agatis' (1285) favored the former's rights.[8] But by the early 1300s the statute 'De Articulis Cleri'[9] set fairly definite limits; it was enacted that the royal officers should not permit "quod aliqui laici in ballione sua in aliquibus locis conveniant ad aliquas recognitiones per sacramenta sua facienda, nisi in causis matrimonialibus et testamentariis." Such are the preliminary data at the opening of this first part of the history. What was their significance for the relation of the parties to the contest?

First of all, we may note that the opposition therein reflected had nothing to do with any objection to the general process of putting a man on his oath to declare his guilt or innocence; they concerned only the questions (a) who should have the right to do this, and (b) how it should be done. Moreover, the former of these things is alone at first concerned; later, the second comes to dominate in importance. Three stages are fairly well marked, namely, (1) to Elizabeth's time, (2) to Charles I's, (3) and afterwards.

1. a. Who should have the rights of jurisdiction? This was in the 1200s and 1300s the great question. The statute 'De Articulis Cleri' settled the line of ecclesiastical jurisdiction over laymen by confining it to causes matrimonial and testamentary; and this in substance prevailed till the end of church courts in England.[10] The forms of writs of prohibition were thereafter based on this statute.[11] A century later, in 1402, under Henry IV, the [5] Poll. & Mait. I, 93, 94, 103; Gibson's Codex Jur. Eccl. Angl. 1011; Lindwood's Provinciale, preface to parts I and II; Jura Ecclesiastica, II, 90; Coke, 12 Rep. 26; 2 Inst. 599, 657.

[6] Lindwood, pt. II, p. 60; Gibson, 1011; 12 Rep. 28.

[7] Lindwood, pt. I, p. 109; 12 Rep. 26. In the notes to Lindwood, it is added that the laymen, "suffulti potestate temporalium dominorum, in hujusmodi inquisitionibus citati noluerunt jurare de veritate dicenda."

[8] Statutes of the Realm (Cay), I, 101.

[9] Statutes, I, 209; 2 Inst. 600. The date given by the editors, Cay and Tomlins, is 'tempore incerto' before the end of Edward II's reign (1326). Coke attributes it to the first few years of Edward I; but this, for several reasons, is improbable. In 9 Edward II (1316), certain Articuli Cleri had been presented by the clergy in a futile protest against the narrowness of their powers: Statutes, I, 171; Lindwood, pt. III, p. 37; 2 Inst. 601, 618.

[10] With sundry detailed variations, noted in Pollock & Maitland I, 105 ff.

[11] Reg. Brev. 36*b*; Fitzh. Nat. Brev. 41 A; Nichols' Britton, f. 35*b*.

papal or clerical power obtained some sort of enlargement of its "liberties and privileges"; [12] but under Henry VIII this foreign and papal domination was repudiated, and in 1533 [13] all canons "repugnant to the customs, laws, or statutes of this realm" were forbidden to be enforced. Under Mary, for a moment, in 1554,[14] the statute of Henry was repealed; but Elizabeth, in 1558,[15] took care promptly to restore it. Thenceforward the struggle of jurisdiction is against Elizabeth's own High Commission Court, and not against a foreign and papal power.

b. In the other important respect, namely, how the church courts should proceed, there is, as yet in the 1200s and 1300s, apparently no interference or hostile feeling at all, in relation to the methods that here concern us. It does not appear that the decrees of Otho and Boniface, above quoted, authorizing certain oaths to be employed, met with any more opposition than other acts done in assertion of the church's jurisdiction. The oath was plainly permitted, by the statute 'De Articulis Cleri,' in causes matrimonial and testamentary; there was no objection to it as such. How could there be, in a community where the compurgation system was still in full force in the popular and the royal courts, and men might be forced to clear themselves by their oaths with oath-helpers, — where they even struggled for the privilege of it, for centuries afterward, against the innovation of jury trial? [16] The writs of prohibition, set forth by Britton and Fitzherbert,[17] mentioned an oath, to be sure; but, in the first place, this might equally be the compurgation oath (not the 'jusjurandum calumniæ' or 'de veritate'); and, in the next place, and chiefly, it was mentioned simply as a descriptive feature of the forbidden jurisdiction, — as if one should forbid writs of 'habeas corpus' to be issued by a probate judge, not meaning in the least to strike at that sort of writ, but at the particular judge's power and jurisdiction. There is no valid reason to believe that the statute 'De Articulis Cleri' had among its motives any animus against the church's imposition of an oath as such.[18]

[12] St. 4 H. IV, c. 3.

[13] St. 25 H. VIII, c. 19; a statute "for the submission of the clergy to the king's majesty."

[14] St. 1 & 2 P. & M. c. 8.

[15] St. 1 Eliz. c. 1, §§ 6, 10.

[16] Thayer, Preliminary Treatise on Evidence, 25, 27.

[17] Cited supra.

[18] The only suggestion ever made to this effect has come from Coke, who claimed (12 Rep. 28) that in this respect Otho's constitution of 1236 was "against the law and custom of England," and that the statute 25 H. VIII, c. 14, cited infra (which he re-writes to suit his claim), merely restored the common law. His only authority is the concluding clause of Otho's above-quoted decree of 1236, "obtenta consuetudine in contrarium non obstante." This clause, however, plainly applies, not to English custom, but to the church's own law; for not only was the use of the inquisitional oath 'de veritate' a new thing at that time in the church's procedure (as explained later), but this particular 'jusjurandum calumniæ' was in the 1200s being much enlarged in its application. It had been in 1125-30 not yet usable, in the church's practice, for clerical persons and in spiritual causes: Corp. Jur. Canon., Decretal. II, 7, de jur. calum. cc. 1, 2; so, too, in 1145-53 "inusitatum est": ib. c. 4; by 1181 it was authorized for the clergy, "consuetudine non obstante": ib. c. 5; and finally, by 1294–1303, under Boniface VIII, it was prescribed in all spiritual causes: Sexti Decretal. II, 4, de jur. calum. cc. 1, 2; compare also Lindwood, II, 60; Hinschius, V, pt. 1, p. 356, note 7; Salvioli, Jusjurandum de Calumnia (printed in the Omaggio del Circolo Giuridico di Palermo alla Università di Bologna, 1888); Esmein, ubi supra, Le serment, p. 13, Hist. de la proc. crim., 68, 69. All this shows plainly

b (1) Nevertheless (though the king's lawyers cared nothing about it) this procedure of Otho's and Boniface's, the 'jusjurandum de veritate dicenda' (which we may call the inquisitional oath, as distinguished from the compurgation oath) [19] was then, for the church, an innovation. Hitherto, the trial by compurgation, or formal swearing of the party with oath-helpers, and the trial by ordeal, had been the common methods of ecclesiastical trial and decision. But in the early 1200s, under the organizing influence of Innocent III, one of the first great canonists in the papal chair (1198–1216), new ideas were rapidly germinating in church law.[20] The trial by ordeal was formally abolished by the church in 1215.[21] The trial by compurgation oaths "was already becoming little better than a farce." [22] There was a decided need of improvement in method. One of the marked expedients in this improvement was the inquisitional or interrogatory oath, introduced and developed in the early 1200s, chiefly by the decretals of Innocent III.[23] The time-worn com-enough what Otho meant in prescribing it for spiritual causes in England, in 1236, by his "obtenta consuetudine in contrarium non obstante"; and Coke's argument falls to the ground.

There is, to be sure, an apparently opposing passage (not cited by Coke) in the Constitution of Clarendon, c. 6, of 1164 (Stubbs, Sel. Chart. 238): "Laici non debent accusari nisi per certos et legales accusatores et testes in præsentia episcopi, ita quod archdiaconus non perdat jus suum." But this could not refer to Otho's new oath of 1236, for the simple reason that the latter did not come in, nor anything of the kind, until the next century (as appears in the citations infra). Moreover, this particular Clarendon clause (whatever it meant) seems not to have been opposed to the church's claims, for in a Vatican MS. of that constitution, it is said, while two other clauses are marked "toler.," and the rest "damn.," this clause 6 is ignored entirely: Gieseler, Eccles. Hist., Hull's ed., 1857, III, 65; Smith's Hull's ed., 1857–58, II, 289; the contrary statement, in Poll. & Mait. I, 437, that "the pope seems to have condemned this constitution as a whole," is based upon authorities not here accessible for comparison. Probably the Clarendon clause was aimed at some sort of reform in the compurgation system, which was then degenerate (as noted later); moreover, who could be an "accusator" was then a much discussed question in church law: Decretal. II, 7, de accus. Or it may have concerned the then changing judicial relation between the archdeacon and the episcopal ordinary: Hinschius, V, pt. 1, p. 432, § 288; Schulte, Kathol. Kirchenrecht, § 59, III; Lea, Inquisition, I, 309. The remark has been made in Pollock & Maitland, I, 131, that the bearing of this clause is "very obscure."

[19] The word 'inquirere' is the typical word in the passages of the Decretals issued under the new procedure.

[20] Hinschius, V, pt. 1, § 284, pp. 337, 348, 350; Pertile, VI, pt. 2, p. 3; Schulte, Katholisches Kirchenrecht, 1873, 3d ed., § 100, III; Pollock & Maitland, I, 426; Lea, Inquisition, I, 309; Gieseler, Eccles. Hist., Hull's ed., III, 157. This new movement was part of a general one, affecting also the substantive law of the church; on the procedure side, the rise of the papal inquisition of heresy, in the late 1200s, was another related phase.

[21] Thayer, Prelim. Treatise, 37; Lea, Superstition and Force, 4th ed., 419.

[22] Pollock & Maitland, I, 425, 426, II, 653.

[23] The first appearance of it, as administered to a party accused, seems to occur in Innocent's decretals of 1205 and 1206 (Decretal. V, 1, de accusationibus, cc. 17, 18), where, as the "forma juramenti," the persons charged "meram et plenam dicant inquisitoribus veritatem"; so also in 1208: ib. II, 27, de sententia, c. 22 (an instructive case). As still a secondary resort, it appears, soon afterwards, under Honorius III, in 1216 (ib. II, 24, de jurejurando, c. 32); and by the time of Gregory IX, in 1239, Innocent IV, in 1245, and Boniface VIII, 1294–1303, it comes to be the usual requirement and the typical mode of procedure (Sexti Decretal. I, 1, de judiciis, c. 1; II, 4, de jur. calum. cc. 1, 2; II, 10, de testibus, c. 2). As late as the Lateran Council of 1215, the old compurgation oath had still prevailed as the regular mode of trial for heresy: Decretal. V, 7, de hæreticis, c. 13 (= c. 3 of Concil. Lat.); Hinschius, V, pt. 1, § 284, p. 346; but by the middle of that century the new oath became the customary instrument in the papal inquisition of heresy; which indeed owed its effectiveness largely to the new methods: Lea, Inquisition, I, 306, 313, 337, 411, 559; Hinschius, V, pt. 1, § 297, p. 484, VI, pt. 1, p. 373. The entire passing away of the old 'purgatio canonica,' by the late 1500s, is described in Hinschius, VI, pt. 1, p. 71.

M. Fournier (Les officialités au moyen purgation oath had operated as a formal appeal to a divine and magical test or 'Gottesurtheil'; there was no interrogation by the tribunal; the process consisted merely in daring and succeeding to pronounce a formula of innocence, usually in company with oath-helpers.[24] But the new oath pledged the accused to answer truly,[25] and this was followed by a rational process of judicial probing by questions to the specific details of the affair, after the essentially modern manner. The former oath operated of itself as a decision, through the party's own act; the latter merely furnished material for the judge with which to reach a personal conviction and decision. This was an epochal difference of method. Indeed, the radical part played, for the progress of English procedure, by the new jury trial in the 1200s and 1300s, was paralleled, in a near degree, not only for ecclesiastical procedure but also for the secular criminal procedure of the Continent, by this inquisitional oath of the 1200s.[26] There were, to be sure, as time went on, several varieties of form to the oath.

âge, p. 276; 1880) had declared that the oath 'de veritate' was no part of the ordinary 'ex officio' procedure, and that the texts of the Decretals had been misconstrued. M. Esmein answered this, in 1896, in the pamphlet above cited, and showed conclusively that the oath was a natural historical development, explaining the various causes and aspects. M. Tanon (L'inquisition, p. 348) had meanwhile refused to accept the correctness of M. Fournier's assertion.

[24] Brunner, Deutsche Rechtsgeschichte, I, 398, 427, 433, 435. For the church's compurgation oath, as distinct both in name and in substance from the inquisition or interrogatory oath, see good examples in Decretal. V, 34, de purg. canon. cc. 5, 13, 16; Decret. Pars II, causa V, qu. V, cc. 12, 15, 17, 19 (A.D. 1130–1148).

[25] "You swear that you shall make true answers to all things that shall be asked of you"; thus it was handed down in the 1600s. In the 1200s, its nature is well illustrated in a case of 1239, under Gregory IX: Sexti Decretal. II, 10, de testibus, c. 2: "recepto juramento de veritate dicenda, iniungas dictis abbati et priori [the opposing parties], ut tam ponendo quam respondendo dicant veritatem quam super positionibus [i.e. specific allegations of fact] tibi sub bulla nostra transmissis ipsi sciunt et illos intelligunt in quorum animas juraverunt. Præterea, sigillatim super quolibet articulo in qualibet positione contento facias a partibus sufficienter adinvicem responderi."

[26] One of the great facts of the 1200s–1300s on the Continent was the breaking down of the old 'laissez faire' system of private prosecution by the injured party, and the prevalence and increase of unpunished crime. Something had to be done for remedying this. It was a time of various new methods (Schroeder, Deutsche Rechtsgeschichte, 775; Siegel, D. Rechtsg. 552–556), among which were the 'Rügeverfahren,' and the celebrated 'Vehmgerichte' in Germany (described in Sir Walter Scott's Anne of Geierstein). The ultimate result was the rise of a system of public or State prosecutors, now for the first time known on the Continent, and of grand juries, the English equivalent (Poll. & Mait. II, 639–657). These public prosecutors, acting 'ex officio,' laid hold of the weapon just invented by the canon lawyers, the compulsory oath to the accused 'de veritate dicenda,' and applied it in their secular criminal procedure. The public prosecutor, indeed, as an institution, "slipped in," as Esmein puts it (Hist. de la proc. crim., pp. 103, 133, translated as Vol. V of the Continental Legal History Series) "by the opening provided by the procedure 'per inquisitionem' in canon law." The influence, therefore, of the canon-law expedient upon continental legal history may be said to have been epochal. Its development in this respect in France and Italy may be further seen in Pertile, ubi supra, VI, 3–12, 24–28, 148; Glasson, Hist. du droit et des institutions de la France, VI, 623, 625, 630 (1895); Tanon, ubi supra, Introd. i.; Salvioli, Manuale di storia di diritto italiano, 1903, 4th ed., §§ 390–393; Esmein, History of Continental Criminal Procedure (transl. Simpson; Continental Legal History Series, vol. V, 1913), pp. 79 ff.; original Fr. ed., pp. 124, 142, 229. In Germany, the rules of the 'inquisitio' (as noticed later) may be seen directly adopted in the great criminal code of 1532 which so long dominated that country: Constitutio Criminalis Caroli, Art. 6 (when a person on suspicion is "durch die oberkeyt vonn amptshalben [i.e. 'ex officio'] angenommen wurde, der soll doch mit peinlicher frage nit angegriffen werden, es sey dann zuvor redlich und derhalb genugsame anzeigung unnd vermutung von wegen derselben missethat auff jnen glaubwirdig gemacht" (1895, Siegel, Deutsche Rechtsgeschichte, 566).

The chief forms were the simple 'juramentum de veritate dicenda,' used in Boniface's English constitution of 1272 (quoted supra), and the broader 'jusjurandum calumniæ de veritate dicenda,' used in Otho's English constitution of 1236 (quoted supra);[27] but their unity consisted in the subjection of the accused to a rational specific interrogation for the purpose of informing the judge.

b (2) Yet there was a distinction of real consequence (upon which everything came later to turn), regarding the different preliminary conditions upon which a party could be put to this or any other oath. There must be some sort of a presentment, to put any person to answer. But must that come from accusing witnesses or private prosecutors or the like (corresponding to our notion of a 'qui tam' or a grand jury)? Or might it be begun by an official complaint (somewhat like our information 'ex relatione' by the attorney-general)? Or might the judge 'ex officio mero' summon the accused and put him to answer, in hopes of extracting a confession which would suffice? And in the last method, must the charge at least be brought first to the judge's notice 'per famam,' or 'per clamosam insinuationem,' "common report" or "violent suspicion"? Such were the questions of procedure which later formed the essential subject of dispute.[28] The last question became in the subsequent history the most important one; and it was apparently to be answered, in the strictness of the law, in the affirmative. Nevertheless, [27] The difference between these two forms needs a little explanation. The 'jusjurandum calumniæ' was primarily a general pledge that the cause was a just one; and originally it had been used independently in civil cases long before the old compurgation procedure had ceased to exist, — that is, as early as the 1100s. Decretal. II, 7, de jur. cal. c. 1. But, as time went on, it came to include a clause 'de veritate dicenda,' or at any rate to be associated with that oath as a preliminary to every cause; this appears from 1245 onwards: Sexti Decretal. II, 1, de judiciis, c. 1; II, 9, de confessis, c. 2; II, 4, de jur. cal. cc. 1, 2; Lindwood, II, 60; Salvioli, Jusjurandum Calumniæ, passim; Esmein, Le serment, 13. Thus it became associated with and equally significant of the new inquisitional oath-procedure by the time of Boniface's English constitution, supra. The typical feature of that procedure, however, whether as a separate oath or as a clause in a larger oath, was the requirement 'de veritate dicenda,' i. e. to answer specific interrogatories. For forms of this, see Lea, Inquisition, I, 399. For other forms of oath, see Burn, Eccles. Law, "Oaths," who is, however, not clear on the present subject. Gibson, Codex Jur. Eccl. Angl. 1011, has something, but not very helpful.

[28] This triple classification of the preliminary procedure — 'accusatio,' 'denunciatio,' 'inquisitio,' — which became the foundation of later discussions (Lea, Inquisition, I, 310, 401; Schulte, Kathol. Kirchenrecht, § 100), is sometimes said to have been founded on c. 8 of the canon of the Lateran Council of Innocent III, in 1215 (Hefele, Conciliengeschichte, 2d ed., V, 885); and so it was. But Innocent composed that canon by adopting part of the language of two of his earliest decretals, of 1199 and 1206 (Decretal. V, 3, de simonia, c. 31, licet heli, to the Prior of St. Victor; ib. V, 1, de accus. c. 17, qualiter et quando, to the Bishop of Versailles), and the 'tribus modis' of the former of these appear later as the classification in V, 1, de accus. c. 24, identical with the Lateran Council's canon. Esmein (Le serment, p. 4) finds the earliest instances of the 'inquisitio' procedure in 1198, Decretal. III, 12, ut eccl. benef. c. 1, X, and in 1199, ib. V, 32, de purg. canon., c. 10, X. But Tanon (L'inquisition, p. 284) and Hinschius (V, pt. 1, § 284, p. 350) concur with the foregoing statement in regarding the first-named Decretals as the first references to the 'inquisitio' as a generic method.

The phrase 'ex officio,' destined to become so famous in England, in connection with the third mode, seems taken from the same c. 31, de simonia, of 1199: "nos frequentibus clamoris excitati, ex officio nostro voluimus inquirere de præmissis"; so again, also in 1199, ib. V, 32, de purg. canon. c. 10: "licet contra eum nullus accusator legitimus appareret, ex officio tuo tamen, fama publica deferente, voluisti plenius inquirere veritatem."

the matter was complicated by the varieties of detail in procedure, and there were differences of phrasing in the various decretals that served as authority. It is enough here to note that the third method of trial — the 'inquisitio,' or proceeding 'ex officio mero' — became a favorite one for heresy trials; and that its canonical lawfulness in some shape was supported by clear authority.[29] About the year 1600, there came to be in England much pamphleteering anent this; and a formal opinion of nine canonists declared the lawfulness of putting the accused to answer on these conditions: "Licet nemo tenetur seipsum prodere [i. e. accuse], tamen proditus per famam tenetur seipsum ostendere utrum possit suam innocentiam ostendere et seipsum purgare."[30] Thus, on the one hand, it was easily arguable that, in ecclesiastical law, the accused could not be put to answer 'ex officio mero' without some sort of witnesses or presentment or bad repute; and in this sense an oath 'ex officio' (as it came to be called) might be claimed (as it was claimed) to be a distinct thing from the same oath when exacted on proper conditions, and to be therefore canonically unlawful. But, on the other hand, it is plain to see, also, how, in the headlong pursuit of heretics and schismatics under Elizabeth and James, the 'ex officio' proceeding, lawful enough on Innocent III's conditions about 'clamosa insinuatio' and 'fama publica,' would degenerate into a merely unlawful process of poking about in the speculation of finding something chargeable.[31]

In short, the common abuse, in later days, of the 'ex officio' proceeding led to the matter being argued, in English courts and in popular discussion, as if this oath were either wholly lawful or wholly unlawful;[32] though, in truth, by the theory of the canon law, it might be either, according to the circumstances of presentment.

[29] As to the conditions precedent to an 'ex officio' inquisition lawfully putting a party to his oath, the foregoing extracts in note 28, supra, suggest something of the original orthodox practice; as also the following passages: ib. V, 1, de accusationibus, c. 21, A. D. 1212: "inquisitio fieri debeat solummodo super illis de quibus clamores aliqui processerunt"; ib. c. 24, A. D. 1215: "debet inquisitionem clamosa insinuatio prævenire"; see also ib. cc. 17, 19, 20, 23, 24; V, 34, de purg. canon. cc. 1, 5, 6, 10, 12, 15; Sexti Decretal. V, 1, de accus. c. 2; Lindwood, I, 109: "a principio ubi inquisitio sit generalis [i. e. a roving commission, without specific accusation], non debet exigi juramentum per quod aliquis peccatum alicujus occultum prodere cogatur; ex quo tamen crimina sine juramento corrigenda, poterit inquisitor super his exigere juramentum"; I, 17: "Inquisitio preparatoria fit sine exactione juramenti"; and the statements of Hinschius, V, pt. 1, § 284, p. 351, § 297, pp. 483, 486, and of Pertile, VI, pt. 2, pp. 6, 7, 144.

This much is worth noticing in detail, because it is this precise point of procedure in the canon law which led ultimately to so different a thing as our modern privilege against self-criminating testimony.

[30] Strype's Life of Whitgift, 339, App. 136 'et passim'; compare Conset's Practice of the Spiritual Courts (1749), p. 384, pt. VII, cc. 1, 6; p. 100, pt. III, c. 3, § 2. Compare this statement with Lindwood's, quoted supra, antedating it by several centuries. The uncertain phrasing of the later custom and law in the church is seen in Archbishop Whitgift's claim, in 1584 (Strype, 157, App. 63), when using the above formula, that if a man is "proditus per denunciationem alterius, sive per famam," he is bound "seipsum ostendere ad evitandum scandalum et seipsum purgandum."

[31] "The tendency of the jurists was to permit an 'ex officio' proceeding, in the form of an inquisition, without the original requirements" (Hinschius, vol. VI, pp. 69, 70, writing of the 1600s).

[32] In the Mirror of Justices (circa 1300), B. V, par. 114 (Seld. Soc. Pub. VII, 172), it is said: "It is an abuse that a man is accused of matters touching life or limb 'quasi ex officio,' without suit and without indictment."

c. But (to take up again the story of Otho's and Boniface's decrees) all these distinctions, it must be clearly understood, did not trouble the lay powers in their controversy of earlier days with the church on English soil. At the time of Edward's statute 'De Articulis Cleri', in the early 1300s, the royal power is not at all concerned, in this respect, with the method of ecclesiastical procedure, but only with the limits of that jurisdiction.

Otho's and Boniface's constitutions of the 1200s were issued under a new and improved procedure in the church; if the king's lawyers had thought about it at all, they would probably have welcomed the better methods, for they certainly were dissatisfied with the church's old-fashioned compurgation methods.[33] But the jurisdictional controversy was the vital one, as the 'Articuli Cleri' show in every paragraph. Wherever the king and his counsellors concede this jurisdiction, there they are found ready enough to concede to the fullest the usual ecclesiastical procedure. In this very statute, indeed, 'De Articulis Cleri', they concede the church's oath-procedure where jurisdiction is conceded, i. e. in matrimonial and testamentary causes. As time goes on and the church becomes occupied with heresy trials, the same complaisance is equally plain. Towards the end of Richard II's time, during the Lollard agitation, the church began, in 1382,[34] to receive temporal sanction for its claims in the field of heresy; finally, in 1401,[35] Henry IV's statute gave to the church the punishment of heretics; these were to be arrested and detained by the diocesan when "defamed or evidently suspected," until they "do canonically purge him or themselves," the diocesan to "determine that same business according to the canonical decrees." Here is no objection to the oath or to the 'ex officio' procedure, but a sanction of the church's usual rule. Under this statute Archbishop Arundel, with renewed vigor, conducted his campaigns against heretics;[36] and under it were all subsequent prosecutions conducted for more than a century.

After a long period, however, there finally appears the little rift within the lute. In 1533, the statute of Henry IV, of 1401, was repealed[37] by a statute which did not take away the church's jurisdiction over heresy, nor yet oppose its power to put the accused on inquisitional oath, but did insist on something more than 'ex officio' proceedings; it provided that "every person [33] Poll. & Mait. I, 426, giving numerous examples. These learned and distinguished authors' incidental suggestion that "very possibly the lay courts would have prevented the prelates from introducing in criminal cases any newer or more rational form of trial" is opposed to what is above advanced; yet, for lack of their reference to a plain authority, is still open to respectful dissent.

[34] St. 5 Rich. II, 2d sess., c. 5. This statute, however, was spuriously placed upon the statute-book, and its immediate repudiation by the Commons was omitted therefrom; for the interesting history of it, see Coke's Rep. XII, 58; Stephen, Criminal Law, II, 444; Campbell, Lives of the Chancellors, I, 247; Anon., Law and Lawyers, II, 347.

[35] St. 2 H. IV, c. 15. In 1414, St. 2 H. V, c. 7, another statute provided for delivering indicted heretics to the ordinary, to be tried by the church's procedure.

[36] Stubbs, Const. Hist. II, 488; III, 32, 357–365; Lindwood, I, 298; Hinschius, V, pt. 1, § 281, p. 311; Holdsworth, History of English Law, vol. I, 3d ed. 1922, p. 585; Archbishop Arundel was several times Chancellor, and his influence was strongly felt in the administration of this period.

[37] St. 25 H. VIII, c. 14.

presented or indicted of any heresy, or duly accused by two lawful witnesses, may be . . . committed to the ordinary [of the church] to answer in open court." Here was the first portent of the new phase of the contest. Under the brief liberality of Edward VI, in 1547, this whole jurisdiction over heresy was taken away;[38] but under Mary, in 1554, the extreme statute of Henry IV was revived.[39] Then, Mary's statute was in turn repealed, in 1558, by Elizabeth,[40] who at the same time took into her own hands the church's powers, and, with the Court of High Commission, introduced new features into the controversy.

2. a. Under Elizabeth and James, and to the end of the story, there appears no further doubt (material to us now) as to the jurisdiction of the ordinary church courts; it was confined, in its control of laymen, to causes "matrimonial and testamentary"; and it was constantly prohibited from holding them to answer in other classes of cases. So also the Court of High Commission in Causes Ecclesiastical,[41] which Elizabeth, as head of the church, now constituted, in 1558, as an extraordinary instrument for carrying out her church policy, worked under similar limitations, though it constantly strove to exceed them, and though it perhaps had jurisdiction over heresy. So, too, that offshoot of the Privy Council, known as the Court of the Star Chamber (first sanctioned by statute in 1487, but not beginning until Elizabeth's time to exercise actively its great and for some time useful powers), had by its charter so broad a jurisdiction that little dispute could be made on that score.[42]

b. Thus, the emphasis of controversy now shifted. It had in the 1300s concerned jurisdiction; it now concerned methods. The objection portended in 1533, in the statute of 25 H. VIII, c. 14 (above quoted), was now to be the vital one. The Court of High Commission of course followed ecclesiastical rules; the Court of Star Chamber did likewise, in what concerned the procedure of trial.[43] No one is going yet to object to their general process

[38] St. 1 Edw. VI, c. 12, § 3.

[39] St. 1 & 2 P. & M. c. 6.

[40] St. 1 Eliz. c. 1, § 15. Whether thus the statute of Henry VIII was revived would be a question; Coke cites it as if in force: 12 Rep. 27; see the Case of the Bishops, 12 Rep. 7. It did not much matter, since Elizabeth's High Court claimed even ampler powers.

[41] St. 1 El. c. 1; Gneist, Const. Hist. II, 170, 240; Coke, 4 Inst. 324, 12 Rep. 19.

[42] St. 3 H. VII, c. 1; Gneist, II, 183, 245, 287; Coke, 4 Inst. 60; Stephen, Hist. Crim. Law, I, 173; Leadam's Select Cases in the Star Chamber, Seld. Soc. Pub. vol. XVI, Introduction. Mr. Leadam has shown that its powers were exercised before this statute, and were apparently not restricted to the statutory enumeration.

[43] The Star Chamber Court, though its membership fluctuated, usually included the chancellor and the two chief justices; so that there was no lack of legal learning in it.

It should be added that the peculiar stronghold of Chancery practice, its personal examination on oath to make discovery, is found established as early as the first part of the 1400s, and that the opposition which went on during that century and the 1500s to the increasing spread of the Chancellor's powers was probably due in part to this feature of its procedure, in which "the Chancery was naturally identified with the Church" and its methods with those of the Ecclesiastical and Star Chamber courts (1890, Kerly, "Historical Sketch of the Equitable Jurisdiction of the Court of Chancery," pp. 43–45).

The King's Council also followed ecclesiastical procedure in the main; the parties were required to submit to examination on oath; details are given in Messrs. Leadam and Baldwin's Select Cases before the King's Council, 1243–1482, Introd. p. xlii (Selden Soc. Pub. vol. 36, 1918).

The historical continuity between the canon-law oath 'de veritate dicenda' and the later methods of "discovery" in chancery may be of putting the accused to answer upon oath; but there is to be much opposition to the preliminary methods, to the lack of a presentment, to charging a person 'ex officio mero'. There was here some room (as we have seen) for uncertainty as to the proper canonical methods; and these courts were to strain all the possibilities, and even to exceed them.

The Court of Star Chamber seems to have raised no special antagonism during the 1500s, nor until James' time, in the next century. Nor did the Court of High Commission, under the first five commissions. But in 1583, the sixth was issued, with Archbishop Whitgift at the head, — a man of stern Christian zeal, determined to crush heresy wherever its head was raised. He proceeded immediately to examine clergymen and other suspected persons, upon oath, after the extremest 'ex officio' style. From this time onwards there is much concerning this oath.[44] That it was canonically and statutably lawful was at least arguable.[45] The repealed statute of Henry VIII, c. 14, in 1533 (quoted above), which might otherwise have been urged against its methods, was now of doubtful validity.[46] Furthermore, the royal Courts of common law, early in the agitation, had plainly declared these things lawful on certain conditions. In 1589, the question had been first raised in the Common Pleas, in Collier v. Collier.[47] In 1591, in Dr. Hunt's case, [48] the King's Bench refused to sustain an indictment for administering the oath on a charge of incontinency, since "the oath cannot be ministered to the party but where the offence is presented first by two men, 'quod fuit concessum'; and it was said, it was so in this case." So also, in the same year, when the case of the preacher Cartwright and his followers, for refusing to take Whitgift's oath and make answer, was brought up for a final set-traced in the indorsement on a bill in chancery in Henry VI's time: "juratus et examinatus ad veritatem dicenda de materia in hac billa contenta" (Leadam's Select Cases in the Star Chamber, ubi supra, p. xxxi).

[44] Hallam, Const. Hist. I, 200 ff.; Neal, History of the Puritans, 1st ed., I, 274, 277, 281–286; Strype's Life of Whitgift, App. 49; Holdsworth, History of English Law, vol. I, 3d ed., 1922, p. 609. Neal remarks that this was the first Commission to use the oath in 'ex officio' manner.

[45] In 1583, certain ministers, under examination by Whitgift, had applied to Lord Burleigh to protect them; he mildly expostulated with the Archbishop, protesting that "this is not a charitable way"; but the Archbishop firmly answered that "it is so cleare by law that it was never hitherto called in doubt"; and the matter ended (Neal, History of the Puritans, 1st ed., I, 281–286; Strype's Whitgift, 157, 160, App. 49, 63).

[46] Note 40, supra.

[47] 4 Leon. 194; Cro. El. 201; Moor 906; charge of incontinency; according to one report, no decision was reached; by two others, the prohibition was granted. Coke was counsel for the petitioner, and cited the writs on the jurisdictional statute 'de articulis cleri,' claiming that "nemo tenetur seipsum prodere in such cases," but only "in causes testamentary and matrimonial."

The king's judges were evidently new to the question, for in 1590, when the dissenting preacher Udall was being examined before (probably) the High Commission Court as to the authorship of the Martin Marprelate books, and refused to answer, saying, "to swear to accuse myself or others, I think you have no law for it," Anderson, J., of the King's Bench, bade Egerton, Solicitor-General (afterwards Lord Chancellor), tell Udall what the law was, and Egerton declared: "Your answers are like the seminary priests' answers, for they say there is no law to compel them to take an oath to accuse themselves"; and afterwards, when Udall again said he was not bound to answer, Anderson, J., replied, "That is true, if it concerned the loss of your life," but "you ought to answer in this case" (1 How. St. Tr. 1271, 1274). This remark of Anderson does not in terms fit any of the supposed rules; yet in the very next year, in Dr. Hunt's case, infra, he concurs in laying down the strict ecclesiastical rule; so that his views were as yet in formation.

[48] Cro. El. 262.

tlement, all the chief judges and law officers gave it as their opinion that the refusal was unlawful.[49] Up to this time, then, it would seem that the stricter ecclesiastical rule was conceded by the highest authorities to be unimpeachable by common-law Courts. When James I came to the throne, in 1603, the church's claim was, if anything, strengthened; for James, in his own conceit, was as good a canonist as theologian, and would be prone to favor so useful an engine against heretics as the proceeding 'ex officio.' In the first scenes of his career, he appears plainly vouching for it.[50] So, too, when Bancroft succeeds Whitgift as Archbishop, bringing a like zealotry to the office, the common-law judges seem to have been still complaisant.[51]

But in 1606 Sir Edward Coke comes to be Chief Justice of the Common Pleas, and a change begins gradually. Coke had been counsel for Collier in 1589,[52] and had perhaps thus acquired his convictions. It is well known that he set himself, as judge, against the ecclesiastical Courts' pretensions in general. At first, however, he avoided a direct issue on the 'ex officio' oath. His first case, in 1609, he decided on other points.[53] His next, in 1615, was allowed to drag on for a year or more, with repeated adjournments and other expedients intended to induce either the accused or the High Court of Commission to yield a point and avoid the direct issue.[54] The plain opinion of Coke, and, apparently, the final decision of the Court, was that the oath was improperly put by the ecclesiastical Court; yet the objectionable thing seemed to be, not that the accused should be compelled to answer, but that he should [49] Strype's Whitgift, 338, 360, App. 138; Neal, Puritans, 2d ed., I, 337 ff.; the officers were the two Chief Justices, the Chief Baron of the Exchequer, Sergeant Puckring, and the Attorney-General and Solicitor-General.

[50] Jan., 1604, Conference on Church Reformation, Neal's Puritans, 2d ed., I, 402, 2 How. St. Tr. 70, 86 (a Lord: "The proceedings in that Court [of the High Commission] are like the Spanish Inquisition, wherein men are urged to subscribe more than law requireth, and by the oath 'ex officio' forced to accuse themselves"; Whitgift, Archbishop of Canterbury: "Your lordship is deceived in the manner of proceeding, for if the article touch the party for life, liberty, or scandal he may refuse to answer"; Egerton, Lord Chancellor: "There is necessity and use of the oath 'ex officio' in divers courts and causes"; His Majesty, James I, "here soundly described the oath 'ex officio,' for the ground thereof, the wisdom of the law therein, the manner of proceeding thereby, and profitable effect of the same"). But the prelates were weakening; Whitgift, twenty years before, in his passage at arms with Burleigh (cited supra, note 45), had never made the concession here recorded, or anything like it.

[51] 1605, Bancroft's Articuli Cleri, and the Judges' Answer, 2 How. St. Tr. 131, 155 (Objection [by the clergy, that the Judges issue a prohibition to the clergy on the ground] "that the party ought to have a copy of the articles being called in question 'ex officio,' before he should answer them"; Answer [by the Judges]: "Yet ought they to have the cause made knowne unto them, for which they are called 'ex officio,' before they are examined, to the end that it may appeare unto them, before their examination, whether the cause be of ecclesiasticall cognizance; otherwise they ought not to examine them upon oath").

[52] Supra, note 47.

[53] 1609, Edwards' Case, 13 Rep. 9 (Coke, C. J., and three others; prohibition granted against the High Court of Ecclesiastical Causes, in putting Edwards to his oath, on a charge of libel, as to his meaning in the words uttered; resolved on three grounds, first, the matter was temporal, not ecclesiastical; secondly, it was not for this special court; thirdly, "in cases where a man is to be examined upon his oath, he ought to be examined upon acts or words, and not of the intention or thought of his heart; and if any man should be examined upon his oath what opinion he holdeth concerning any point of religion, he is not bound to answer the same"; nothing was mentioned by party or judges, as to a privilege against matter involving a penalty, nor is the 'ex officio' oath declared unlawful).

[54] Dighton v. Holt, 3 Bulstr. 48; briefly reported in Moor 840, 2 Cro. 388, 1 Rolle 337, Jura Eccles. 355, pl. 9.

be charged 'ex officio,' in a cause not testamentary or matrimonial but penal.[55] In the meantime (in 1610, 1611, and 1615), three other cases had come before the common-law Courts, presumably the King's Bench, and from their imperfect reports it may be inferred that a similar view was now prevailing there.[56] The change had thus substantially been effected.[57] Archbishop Abbott, a man of less rabid views, had in 1610 succeeded Bancroft;[58] Coke had carried his views to the King's Bench, as Chief Justice, in 1613; and the matter seems to have been so far settled (in respect to the ecclesiastical claims) that no more cases occurred,[59] until in 1640, the statute (quoted later) put an end, for the time, to further doubt.

But the Star Chamber claims remained still to be faced. What had been settled was (in effect) merely that the ecclesiastical Courts (including that of High Commission) could not, as a matter of jurisdiction and procedure, put laymen to answer, 'ex officio,' to penal charges. But this did not touch the Court of Star Chamber. Its conceded jurisdiction was ample enough to fine and imprison for almost any offence that it chose to pursue.[60] The very statute that sanctioned it, in 1487, expressly vested in it the authority to examine the accused on oath in criminal cases, without naming even such restrictions as the ecclesiastical law conceded;[61] and its right to examine in this fashion, wherever the case was within its jurisdiction, seems to have been conceded under Henry VIII and Elizabeth, all through the 1500s.[62] But as James' reign went on, and its practices became arrogant and obnoxious, so its use of the 'ex officio' oath came to share the burden of criticism and discontent which that procedure in the ecclesiastical Courts excited.[63] The [55] In 12 Rep. 26, "Oath Ex Officio," is given by Coke an opinion, said by him to have been rendered by himself, as Chief Justice, as early as 1607, to the Commons, on their request; in this he plainly declares that in the ecclesiastical courts "no layman may be examined 'ex officio,' except in two causes," matrimonial and testamentary. But the above date is doubtful; the volume was not printed until after his death, and its authority is not of the best.

[56] 1610, Mansfield's Case, Rolle's Abr., "Prohibition," (T) 4 (a clergyman was allowed to be examined on oath for preaching heresy); 1611, Clifford v. Huntly, Rolle's Abr. (T) 6, Jura Eccles. 427, pl. 7 (a woman was not allowed to be examined as to a forfeiture); Huntley v. Cage, 2 Brownl. 14 (apparently the same case); 1615, Bradston's Case, Rolle's Abr., "Prohibition," (T) 1, Jura Eccles. 355, pl. 9 (a layman was not bound to answer as to an offence involving forfeiture). All these, of course, are cases of prohibitions issuing to the ecclesiastical Court.

[57] In Spendlow v. Smith, Hob. 84, Jura Eccles. 428, probably late in 1615, a plain ruling was made; in a suit in the church court for dilapidation, charging a lease for years and fraud, the defendant was put to his oath as to the fraud; this was held unlawful, "for though the original cause belong to their cognizance, yet the covin and fraud is criminal, and . . . punishable both in the Star Chamber and by the penal laws of fraudulent gifts, and not to be extorted out of himself by his oath."

[58] Neal, Puritans, I, 450.

[59] Except Jenner's Case, in 1621 (Jura Eccles. 427, pl. 6, Rolle's Abr., "Prohibition," (T) 5, briefly reported; in accord with Edwards' Case, supra); and Latters v. Sussex, undated, but before 1616 (Noy 151).

[60] Supra, note 42.

[61] St. 3 H. VII, c. 1.

[62] 1589, Rither's Case, Cro. El. 148, semble; 1591, Buckley v. Wood, Cro. El. 248.

[63] That the contest over compulsory disclosure was becoming a matter of popular professional interest is indicated by the great dramatist's allusion to it in Hamlet, first printed in quarto in 1603; in Act III, Sc. 3, the King soliloquizes:

"In the corrupted currents of this world
Offence's gilded hand may shove by justice;
And oft 't is seen the wicked prize itself
Buys out the law. But 't is not so above;
There is no shuffling; there the action lies
In his true nature and, we ourselves compelled,
Even to the teeth and forehead of our faults,
To give in evidence."

common-law Courts seem to have found no handle against its oath-procedure, even after Coke's accession to the bench.[64] But though there was no explicit judicial condemnation, there was, after a time, more than one formal questioning of it.[65] The analogy of the doctrine already settled by Coke in 1607–1616, for the ecclesiastical Courts, was naturally invoked. Towards the end of its career, it would seem that some impression was being made on the Court's own theory of orthodoxy.[66]

3. But its time in the kingdom was now drawing to an end; and the trial which seems to have precipitated the crisis came in 1637, — a case full of instruction for our present history. John Lilburn, an obstreperous and forward opponent of the Stuarts (popularly known as "Freeborn John"), constituted somewhere between a patriot and a demagogue, had the obstinacy to force the issue. A decade later, he came into a similar collision with the Parliament's government; but he makes his entrance as a victim of the King's Star Chamber:

[64] In the following three cases, Coke himself, at the very time when he was opposing from the bench (as already observed) the 'ex officio' oath of the High Commission Court, appears as a consenting party to the enforcement of the even looser practice of the Court of Star Chamber:

1610, Andrew v. Ledsam, 2 Brownl. 49 (A. exhibited his bill in the Star Chamber against L., a broker, for defrauding him by forging deeds to represent the investments made by him with A.'s money; "L. had forged and counterfeited them, as he hath confessed upon his examination, upon interrogatories administered by the plaintiff in this Court"; the only question was whether, among his punishments, he should lose one ear or both; "and these doubts were resolved by Coke, Chief Justice of the Common Bench, — where they were moved, — and Fleming, Chief Justice of the King's Bench, that L. should lose but one ear"); 1613, Countess of Shrewsbury's Case, 12 Co. 94, 2 How. St. Tr. 769 (before a council, including the Chancellor, the two Chief Justices, Coke being one, and the Chief Baron, probably the Star Chamber in substance; the Countess of Shrewsbury, being brought before the Council and "required to declare her knowledge" as to the escape of Lady Arabella Stuart, which the Countess was said to have abetted, declined to answer, first, because she had made a vow to God to keep the matter secret, and next, because she was privileged as a peer not to testify, except before her peers; both these claims were totally repudiated, and she was adjudged in high contempt; nothing was said, by either the party or the judges, of the procedure or the present privilege; yet it was certainly involved if it had existed); 1613, Lord Sanchar's Case, 9 Co. 114, 121 (Lord Sanchar, accused of murdering his fencing-teacher, was "particularly examined touching certain articles special and pertinent," and "being prest thereupon by the questions, he discovered a long and inveterate malice which he had had, with all the occasions and material circumstances of this murder").

[65] 1629, Stroud's Trial, Cobbett's Parl. Hist. II, 504, 526, 3 How. St. Tr. 235, 237 (certain members, including Hollis, Eliot, and others, having been arrested and examined by the king's order, and having refused "to answer out of parliament what was said and done in parliament" concerning treasonable utterances, the judges, being asked whether this refusal was not a high contempt, answered all "that it is an offence, punishable as aforesaid, so that this do not concern himself but another, nor draw him to danger of treason or contempt by his answer"; this was an equivocal utterance); 1644, Archbishop Laud's Trial, 4 How. St. Tr. 315, 385, 397 (being charged with unlawfully tendering the oath 'ex officio,' some years before, he answers that "that was the usual proceeding in that court [i. e. Council of the Star Chamber]"; it was "then the common, and for ought I yet know, then the legal course of that court").

[66] Ante 1635, Hudson, Treatise of the Court of Star Chamber, in Hargr. Collect. Jurid. I, 208 ("Neither must it question the party to accuse him of a crime. . . . But the great question hath been, whether a witness which in examination will not give any answer shall be compelled to make answer to the interrogatories. . . . Therefore, if a witness conceive that the answering of a question may prejudice himself, it seemeth that he need not to answer; for he is produced to testify betwixt others, and not to prejudice himself"); 208 ("neither must it question the party to accuse him of a crime, for it is an high contempt to make the justice of this court an instrument of malice"). But Lilburn's case, post, shows plainly that the practice was very different from Hudson's exposition.

1637–1645, Lilburn's Trial, 3 How. St. Tr. 1315; John Lilburn was committed to prison by the Council of the Star Chamber, including the Chief Justice of the King's Bench, on a charge of printing or importing certain heretical and seditious books; on examination, while under arrest, by the Attorney-General, having denied these charges, he was further asked as to other like charges, but refused, saying: "I am not willing to answer you to any more of these questions, because I see you go about by this examination to ensnare me; for, seeing the things for which I am imprisoned cannot be proved against me, you will get other matter out of my examination; and therefore, if you will not ask me about the thing laid to my charge, I shall answer no more; . . . and of any other matter that you have to accuse me of, I know it is warrantable by the law of God, and I think by the law of the land, that I may stand upon my just defence and not answer to your interrogatories." Afterwards, "some of the clerks began to reason with me, and told me every one took that oath, and would I be wiser than all other men? I told them, it made no matter to me what other men do." Then, when examined before the Chamber itself, he again refused, saying, "I had fully answered all things that belonged to me to answer unto," but as to things "concerning other men, to insnare me, and get further matter against me," he was not bound "to answer such things as do not belong unto me; and withal I perceived the oath to be an oath of inquiry," i. e. 'ex officio,' "and of the same nature as the High Commission oath," which was against the law of the land, the Petition of Right, and the law of God as shown in Christ's and Paul's trials; yet, "if I had been proceeded against by a bill, I would have answered." Then the Council condemned him to be whipped and pilloried, for his "boldness in refusing to take a legal oath," without which many offences might go "undiscovered and unpunished"; and in April, 1638, 13 Car. I, the sentence was executed. On Nov. 3, 1640, he preferred a complaint to Parliament; and on May 4, 1641, the Commons (having not yet abolished the Star Chamber Court) voted that the sentence was "illegal and against the liberty of the subject," and ordered reparation. But, the petition going for a while no further, he applied once more, and on Feb. 13, 1645 (1646), the House of Lords heard his petition by counsel, Mr. Bradshaw urging for him the sentence's illegality, "the ground whereof being that Mr. Lilburn refused to take an oath to answer all such questions as should be demanded of him, it being contrary to the laws of God, nature, and the kingdom, for any man to be his own accuser"; and Mr. Cook arguing that, without an information, "to administer an oath was all one with the High Commission," whereon the Lords ordered that the said sentence "be totally vacated . . . as illegal, and most unjust, against the liberty of the subject and law of the land and Magna Charta"; and on Dec. 21, 1648, he was finally granted £3000 in reparation.

Lilburn's case, together with those of Prynne and Leighton (whose grievances were of another sort), were sufficiently notorious to focus the attention of London and the whole country. The Long Parliament (after eleven years of no Parliament) met on Nov. 3, 1640. Lilburn was on the spot that day with his petition for redress. In March, 1641, a bill was introduced to abolish the Court of Star Chamber, as well as (then or shortly after) a bill to abolish the Court of High Commission for Ecclesiastical Causes.[67] These were both passed July 2–5 of the same year;[68] and in the latter statute was inserted a clause which forever forbade, for any ecclesiastical Court, the administration 'ex officio' of any oath requiring answer as to matters penal.[69] This clause

[67] Cobbett, Parliamentary History, II, 722, 762, 853.

[68] St. 16 Car. I, cc. 10, 11.

[69] 1641, St. 16 Car. I, c. 11, § 4 (no person "exercising spiritual or ecclesiastical power, authority, or jurisdiction," shall " 'ex officio,' or at the instance or promotion of any other whatsoever, urge, enforce, tender, give, or was in substance reënacted as soon as the Restoration of the Stuarts was effected.[70]

But was the oath hereby totally abolished in ecclesiastical Courts, — that is, was it the 'ex officio' proceeding only that was abolished, and could a man still be put to answer in a penal matter, in a cause lying within the Court's jurisdiction and begun by proper canonical presentment? This question fairly remained open under the first statute, though less plausibly under the second one. During the next twenty years after the enactment of the second statute, the matter came often before the Courts, in applications for prohibitions. The various rulings are hardly to be reconciled.[71] But, by the end of the 1600s, professional opinion apparently settled against the exaction of an answer under any form of procedure, in matters of criminality or forfeiture. Such, at any rate, beginning with the 1700s, was the application of the law ever after, without question.[72] The statutes had abolished, in those courts, all obligation to answer on oath to such matters, without regard to the form of presentment or accusation.

II. But what, in the mean time, of the common law, and of jury trial? Thus far the controversy here examined had been purely one of ecclesiastical jurisdiction and ecclesiastical methods of presentment. The common-law Courts had concerned themselves with it simply by virtue of their superior authority to keep the church Courts and other Courts to their proper boundaries. In their enforcement of these restrictions, one thing seems plain:

minister" to any person "any corporal oath, whereby he or they shall or may be charged or obliged to make any presentment of any crime or offence, or to confess or to accuse himself or herself of any crime or offence, delinquency, or misdemeanor, or any neglect, matter, or thing, whereby or by reason whereof he or she shall or may be liable or exposed to any censure, pain, penalty, or punishment whatsoever").

[70] 1661, St. 13 Car. II, c. 12, § 4 (no person "having or exercising spiritual or ecclesiastical jurisdiction" shall tender to any person "the oath usually called the oath 'ex officio' or any other oath," in etc., effect as in the prior statute).

[71] 1665, R. v. Lake, Hardr. 364, 385 (prohibition against exacting an oath on articles apparently involving a criminal charge; apparently granted, but upon another point); 1665, Scurr v. Burrell, 1 Sid. 232 (prohibition against a charge of exacting the oath in 'ex officio' proceedings for sitting in church with the hat on; adjourned, and apparently not decided); 1669, Goulson v. Wainwright, 1 Sid. 374 (prohibition granted against exacting an oath on 'ex officio' articles for "matters which are criminal"); 1669, Taylor v. Archbishop of York, 2 Keb. 352 (prohibition lies against exacting the oath in criminal charges); 1671, Grove v. Elliot, 2 Ventr. 41 (prohibition against exacting oath on charge of keeping conventicles, etc.; argued that "no man ought to be proceeded against without due presentment"; held, that it did not appear to be a proceeding "merely 'ex officio,' and due presentment must be presumed, and hence the prohibition was refused); 1680, Farmer v. Brown, 2 Lev. 247, T. Jones 122; s. c. Herne v. Brown, 1 Ventr. 339 (prohibition against requiring an answer to a charge of not paying a church tax; apparently treated as a civil case, and not within the statute's prohibition; after a division of the court and adjournment, the prohibition was refused unanimously).

[72] 1750, L. C. Hardwicke, in Brownsword v. Edwards, 2 Ves. Sr. 243, 245 (refusing to compel discovery of an incestuous marriage punishable in the ecclesiastical court: "I am afraid, if the Court should overrule such a plea, it would be setting up the oath 'ex officio,' which then the Parliament in the time of Charles I would in vain have taken away, if the party might come into this court for it"); 1752, Finch v. Finch, 2 Ves. Sr. 491, 493 ("as to the first objection to it, that it will subject him to ecclesiastical censures and that the court will not compel him to answer on oath, which is like an oath 'ex officio,' that is true"); 1822, Schultes v. Hodgson, 1 Add. 105 (prosecution for adultery, etc.; "this is a criminal suit"; and none of the articles were required to be answered).

There is no feature of objection to the compulsion, in itself, of answering on oath; the objection is as to who shall require it, and how it shall be required. On the very eve of the statute of 16 Car. I, and of the disappearance of the Star Chamber forever, John Lilburn, the stoutest of recusants, is willing to answer all matters properly charged against him, and objects only to "such things as do not belong unto me." He seems to have known no broader defensive principle to fall back upon, more substantial or inclusive than a conceded rule of ecclesiastical procedure. Was there in fact, at the time, any available principle known in the common-law Courts in jury trials?

1. Down to the early 1600s, at any rate, it was certainly lacking. If we look at what the common law had to build upon, before then, there is nothing of the sort. The generations which forced an accused to the ordeal and the compurgation oath had plainly no scruple against such compulsion.[73] Compurgation, under its later name of "wager of law," was enforced in the 1500s without objection. Jury trial came to be approved as a trial so much more effective that the defendant's oath in wager of law became, indeed, rather a privilege than a burden.[74] In jury trial, to be sure, the oath was not administered to the defendant, because it would, in those days, still be regarded as a decisive thing,[75] and as a method of summary self-exoneration which would be entirely too facile; it was the jurors' oaths that were to "try" him, not his own; and so, in jury trial proper, either in civil or in criminal cases, the oath of the party does not appear. But wherever, in other proceedings, it was thought appropriate to have the defendant's oath, there was no hesitation in requiring it. All through the 1500s the statute-book records the sanction of oaths to accused persons. The Star Chamber statute of 1487 (3 H. VII, c. 1) had expressly sanctioned the examination of the accused on oath at the trial, because "little or nothing may be found by inquiry" of the ordinary sort. The statute of H. VIII, in 1533, authorized the common-law officers to turn over indicted heretics for examination by the ordinaries upon oath.[76] Wherever a party is committed to jail by the judges for fraud or other misconduct done in the course of trial, by forging writs or the like, he appears to have been put to his examination on oath to disclose it.[77] Persons charged as bankrupts,[78] as Jesuits,[79] as abusers of [73] Rather was it to be regarded as surprising that the inquisitional method, conquering the rest of Europe, failed in England alone; but "the escape was a narrow one" (Pollock & Maitland, Hist. Eng. Law, II, 655); instances of the direct questioning of the accused (circa 1268) may be seen in Maitland's Court Baron, Selden Soc. Publ. IV, 62, and in the records of the King's Council cited supra, n. 43.

[74] Thayer, Prelim. Treatise, 29.

[75] "All such persons to be tried by their oathes," is a phrase of 1543 in the Court of Requests: Selden Soc. Publ. XII, lxxxv. The reason for this attitude toward the oath is sufficiently explained in the history of the numerical system (ante, § 2032). Compare also the history of the disqualification of parties in civil cases (ante, § 575).

[76] Supra, note 37.

[77] 1565, Whiteacres v. Thurland, Dyer 242*a*; Dawbeny v. Davie, ib. 244*a*: Thurland's Case, ib. 244*b*.

[78] 1570, St. 13 Eliz. c. 7, § 5.

[79] 1593, St. 35 Eliz. c. 2, § 11 (any person suspected to be a Jesuit, etc., who "being examined by any person having lawful authority . . . shall refuse to answer directly and truly whether he be a Jesuit," shall be committed "until he shall make direct and true answer to the said questions").

warrants,[80] were to be examined on oath by common-law officers. Most notably, every accused felon was required to be examined by the justices of the peace, and his examination to be preserved for the judges at the trial;[81] and, so far as appears, not a murmur was ever heard against this process till the middle of the 1700s; [82] and no statutory measure was taken to caution the accused that his answer was not compellable, until well on in the 1800s.[83] The every-day procedure in the trials of the 1500s and the 1600s, and almost the first step in the trial, was to read to the jury this compulsory examination of the accused; in 1638, the year after Lilburn's imprisonment, in the very next recorded trial, the accused's previous examination before the Chief Justice was offered and read at the outset, without a shadow of objection.[84] Furthermore, as the trial goes on, the accused, in all this period of 1500–1620, is questioned freely and urged by the judges to answer; he is not allowed to swear, for the reasons already noted, but he is pressed and bullied to answer.[85]

A striking example is found in the jury trial of Udall, in 1590, for seditious libel; and the significant circumstance is that Udall, who before the ecclesiastical High Commission Court, a few months previous,[86] had plainly based his refusal on the illegality of making a man accuse himself by inquisition, has here, before a common-law jury with witnesses charging him, no such claim to make:

1590, Udall's Trial, 1 How. St. Tr. 1271, 1275, 1289: Udall pleaded not guilty; and after argument made and witnesses testifying, Judge CLARKE: "What say you? Did you make the book, Udall, yes or no? What say you to it, will you be sworn? Will you take your oath that you made it not?" declaring this to be a favor; Udall refused, and the judge finally asked: "Will you but say upon your honesty that you made it not?" Udall again refused; Judge CLARKE: "You of the jury consider this. This argueth that, if he were not guilty, he would clear himself"; then, to Udall: "Do not stand in it; but confess it."

The same features appear still in 1606, in the Jesuit Garnet's trial for the Gunpowder Plot; called before the Council inquisitorially, he denies his lia-

[80] 1601, St. 43 Eliz. c. 6, § 1 (persons charged with abuse of warrants are to be sent for by the judges "and be examined thereof upon their oaths," and if the offence be confessed by them or otherwise proved, they are to be committed to jail).

[81] 1553, St. 1 & 2 P. & Mar. c. 13, § 4; 1555, St. 2 & 3 P. & Mar. c. 10 (inasmuch as the preceding statute did not extend to cases where the prisoner was not bailed, "in which case the examination of such prisoner, and of such as bring him, is as necessary, or rather more, than where such prisoner shall be let to bail," so it is extended to the latter case also); the defendant was here not put on oath, though the witnesses were (ante, § 849), but the reason for this was merely as before, that the oath was thought to give to the accused's statements a solemnity and weight which would be too great an advantage. As late as 1709 (R. v. Derby, 19 How. St. Tr. 1011, 1013, note) a judge says of this proceeding, "To have him examined is a privilege."

[82] Ante, § 848.

[83] Ibid.

[84] 3 How. St. Tr. 1369, 1373.

[85] 1535, Sir Thomas More's Trial, 1 How. St. Tr. 386, 389; 1554, Throckmorton's Trial, 1 How. St. Tr. 862, 873; 1571, Duke of Norfolk's Trial, 1 How. St. Tr. 958, 972 ("then being ruled over by the Lord High Steward that he should answer directly to that question, he answered"); 1588, Knightley's Trial, 1 How. St. Tr. 1263, 1267. Mr. Justice Stephen's summary of the proceedings at this period is in agreement with what is above said: Hist. Crim. Law, I, 325; so also, for 1565, Smith, Com. of England, II, c. 26, quoted in Thayer, Prelim. Treatise, 157.

[86] Supra, note 47.

bility to answer;[87] but, tried on indictment before a common-law jury and the chief common-law judges, he is questioned and urged, he answers or refuses to answer, as it suits him, but says never a word of the illegality of such questions or an immunity from answer.[88] And such indeed, beyond a reasonable doubt, was the common law, as well as the common practice, of the time.[89]

It is true that precedents apparently to the contrary have been alleged to exist, — by Coke, for example, who invokes two common-law cases to support his ambiguous and shifting arguments. But neither these, nor any others hinted at, indicate in any way the existence of any common-law rule.[90] Even Coke himself, whose writings have since served as the chief source of information on this subject, does not actually go so far as to apply his arguments to any effect but the limitation of the ecclesiastical Courts' proceedings.[91] He [87] 1606, Garnet's Trial, 2 How. St. Tr. 218, 244 (Garnet: "When one is asked a question before a magistrate, he is not bound to answer before some witnesses be produced against him, 'quia nemo tenetur prodere seipsum'"); note that this is a reference to the ecclesiastical rule of presentment, as already examined, not a refusal to answer at all events.

[88] Ibid. passim.

[89] If anything further were needed, the prevalence of torture as an aid to confession, upon the examination of political offenders, was absolutely inconsistent with the recognition of a privilege against self-crimination; and it is highly significant that the last recorded instances of torture (ante, § 818) and the first instances of the established privilege (infra, note 105) coincide within about a decade.

In Bench and Bar, vol. IX, N. S., 530 (1915), Mr. A. Leo Everett warns the reader against "an uncritical acceptance" of the above history. Such a warning, from one who had not gone through the original sources, would of course be merely crude impertinence. Whether Mr. Everett has perused the sources above cited does not appear. His only quarrel seems to be with that part of the history which deals with the period before the Tudor times, in that period he believes that the accused was privileged from answering. There is, indeed, scanty original authority for that period, but it seems to be all one way, and Mr. Everett brings forward no contrary evidence, except an undocumented assertion of Hallam's. The present writer respects Hallam's general authority, but in this field learned at the very outset of the search not to rely upon him.

[90] Hinde's Case, 1558, Dyer 175b; cited by Coke (12 Rep. 27; 3 Bulstr. 49) to show that a person need not answer in the church court questions that bring him in danger of a penal law. Hinde's case in fact was this: The king had appointed a commission to examine the title of Skrogs, a justice's clerk, to his office, with power to commit him if he refused to answer; he refused, demurring to the jurisdiction, and was committed; then he was released on 'habeas corpus' by the judges of the Common Pleas, because "he was a person of the court, and a necessarie member of it"; and the reporter adds: "Simile, M. 18, by Hind, who would not take an oath before the ecclesiastical judges for usury."

Leigh's Case, 1568, is cited by Coke (ubi supra) as that of an attorney committed by the High Court for refusing to swear as to attendance at mass, and delivered on 'habeas corpus' by the Common Pleas, because "they ought not in such case to examine upon his oath." There is nothing to show that this was not an application of the ordinary ecclesiastical rule, examined supra. In Anon., 2 Brownl. 271 (1609), occurs a case similar to Skrogs'.

In Attorney-General v. Mico, cited post, other alleged precedents, unreported and scantily mentioned, were bandied back and forth by counsel; but there is nothing to show that they really involved the present question.

[91] In 4 Inst. 60, 324, on the Star Chamber and High Commission Courts, he says nothing of the oath. In 2 Inst. 657, and 12 Rep. 26, he has much against the oath, but substantially upon the ground of jurisdiction alone. In Dighton v. Holt (cited supra, note 54), he advances frequently the argument 'nemo tenetur' (he had first used it in Collier v. Collier, cited supra, note 47); but this was an invocation of the canon-law rule taken from the canon lawyers. In Edwards' Case (cited supra, note 53), he is concerned chiefly with the jurisdiction, and does not even criticise the 'ex officio' oath as such, though in his opinion in 12 Rep. 26, said by him to have been solemnly given two years before, he attacks the oath with great plainness. No two of his various expositions coincide in argument; to reconcile all of his passages is impossible. Add to this his inconsistent attitude in the three cases cited supra, note 64. His proneness to maltreat precedents in supporting his views has already been noticed (ante, § 2036).

is willing to stop them from requiring answers "which may be an evidence against him at the common law upon the penal statute"; but he says nothing about a common-law illegality; indeed, this argument of his seems rather to assume the contrary. He freely quotes, in mutilated form, the canon-law phrase (whose origin has been examined above) "nemo tenetur seipsum prodere"; but there is nothing to show, down to the end of his life, that he believed in or knew of any privilege of refusal in the king's common-law proceedings.

The only source of doubt that can be found arises from certain scantily reported chancery rulings of the late 1500s. Some of these, at first sight, might be supposed to indicate the existence, as early as Elizabeth's reign, of a general privilege against self-crimination. Other explanations, however, lie open with fair plainness. In the first place, it is a long-established maxim of jurisdiction that equity will not lend its aid, even by relief, apart from discovery, to enforce a forfeiture; on this ground (and remembering that an "answer" in chancery is a pleading as well as testimony) are explainable the cases refusing to compel an answer as to a forfeiture.[92] In the next place, the Chancellor had almost no jurisdiction over criminal charges;[93] hence, in cases of this nature, cognizance might be declined, by refusing to compel an answer.[94] But, where this jurisdiction was not disputable, there seems to have been no objection to compelling the answer.[95] Finally, the chancery practice is to be interpreted by the rules of the ecclesiastical Courts, already examined. The Chancellor was forming his procedure (hardly organized until Bacon's time, in the early 1600s) almost precisely after that of the ecclesiastical Courts.[96] So far as he could take cognizance at all of a case involving a criminal fact, he would of course employ this ecclesiastical rule, as he did others, and not require the defendant to answer without due accusation by two witnesses or by presentment; that is to say, a plaintiff, upon his unsworn bill alone, could not put the defendant to answer to a criminal fact. The close affinity between the Chancellor's and the Church's [92] Such are the following cases: 1587, 1598, Cromer v. Penston, Cary 13 (bill against the survivor of a joint tenancy, suggesting a secret severance during lifetime; "the Lord Keeper overruled, that the defendant should not answer," — whatever this may mean); 1595, Wolgrave v. Coe, Toth. 18 (bill against one covenanting to deliver deeds; "the opinion of the Court was, the defendant needed not to answer, because he should thereby disclose cause of forfeiture of the bond"); 1600, Toth. 7 ("Mildmay was not enforced by answer to the bill of Cary and Cottington, to discover a forfeiture to his own hurt"); see also Toth. 10.

[93] 1585, Wakeman v. Smith, Toth. 12 ("although criminal causes are not here to be tried directly for the punishing of them, yet incidently for so much as concerneth the equity of the cause, they are to be answered").

[94] This perhaps explains the following case, undated, but probably before 1600: Vice-Countess Montague's Case, Cary 12 (eloignment of a ward; upon a bill of discovery brought, "it seemed," as to the defendants, "they should not answer to charge themselves criminally, especially in this case, where so great a punishment as abjuration may follow").

[95] 1570, Anon., Dyer 288*a* (examination on oath in chancery to answer a charge of perjury; held, by C. P., to be allowable if the Chancery Court had jurisdiction over perjury); 1631, Winn v. Swayne, Toth. 12 ("a commission to answer bribery and corruption").

[96] "Equity followed the ecclesiastical courts almost literally in its mode of taking the testimony of witnesses and requiring each party to submit to an examination under oath by his adversary" (Langdell, Equity Pleading, § 47); and note 43, supra.

Courts makes it plain that we need not look to the former for light upon the common-law notions of the time — especially when that practice stands out plainly in the full and abundant reports throughout this whole period.

2. For nearly a generation onwards, in the 1600s, there is no acknowledgment of any privilege in common-law trials. Under Coke's leadership, from 1607 to 1616, the ecclesiastical Courts had been kept within bounds; but there were as yet no bounds in common-law proceedings. With 1620 begin indications that some impression was being transferred into that department.[97] Nevertheless, in the parliamentary remonstrances to Charles I, and the discussion over ship-money and forced loans and the Petition of Right, in the Parliament which ended in 1629, there is nothing about such a privilege.[98]

3. Finally, however, in 1637–41, comes Lilburn's notorious agitation;[99] and in 1641, with a rush, the Courts of Star Chamber and of High Commission are abolished, and the 'ex officio' oath to answer criminal charges is swept away with them.[100] With all this stir and emotion, a decided effect is produced, and is immediately communicated, naturally enough, to the common-law Courts. Up to the last moment, Lilburn had never claimed the right to refuse absolutely to answer a criminating question; he had merely claimed a proper proceeding of presentment or accusation.[101] But now this once vital distinction comes to be ignored. It begins to be claimed, flatly, that no man is bound to incriminate himself, on any charge (no matter how properly instituted), or in any Court (not merely in the ecclesiastical or Star Chamber

[97] 1620, Sir G. Mompesson's Trial, 2 How. St. Tr. 1119, 1123 (the Lords' Committee reported "that they had examined many witnesses, . . . that the Lords' Committee urged none to accuse himself"; but their proceedings were probably inquisitorial, and came rather under the ecclesiastical rule); 1631, Fitzpatrick's Trial, 3 How. St. Tr. 419, 420 (Fitzpatrick had testified, at Lord Audley's trial, to a rape committed by F. at A.'s instigation; at F.'s own trial, he then protested against the use of his former testimony, since "neither the laws of the kingdom required nor was he bound to be the destruction of himself"; and Chief Justice Hyde replied, "it was true, the law did not oblige any man to be his own accuser," yet here the testimony could be used).

It was in 1628 that the judges unanimously declared, in Felton's case, the murderer of the Duke of Buckingham, that "he ought not by the law to be tortured by the rack"; nevertheless, when Felton was examined before the Privy Council (3 How. St. Tr. 371), "the Council much pressed him to confess who set him on," and Bishop Laud told him "if he would not confess, he must go to the rack." Though the rack was declared unlawful, yet nothing is recorded as to the unlawfulness of urging a confession.

[98] The suggestion by Lilburn's counsel, in 1637 (3 How. St. Tr. 1356), that the 'ex officio' oath was "directly contrary to the Petition of Right in 3 Car.," referred apparently to par. iii and x of the Petition of Right of 1628 (3 How. St. Tr. 222; infra), which protested against being "called to make answer or take such oath." This, perhaps, meant a political promissory oath of conformity or obedience in connection with the refusal to pay ship-money, — an entirely different thing. On the other hand, however, it may have referred to a really inquisitorial oath. The circumstances were these: Darnel, E. Hampden, and others, in 1627, on being required to make a loan to the king, and being examined to disclose their estates, declined to pay or to disclose, and applied for release under a 'habeas corpus,' which was refused by the judges (3 How. St. Tr. 1); on which the Petition of Right was passed: 1628, 3 Car. I, c. 1, §§ 3, 10 (after reciting that persons refusing to make loans to the king "have had an oath administered unto them not warrantable by the laws or statutes of this realm," Parliament petitions "that none be called to make answer or take such oath," or be confined "for refusal thereof"; and the king accords the petition).

[99] Supra, note 67.

[100] Supra, note 69.

[101] Supra, in the text, par. I, (3).

tribunals).[102] Then this claim comes to be conceded by the judges, — first in criminal trials, and even on occasions of great partisan excitement;[103] and afterwards, in the Protector's time, in civil cases, though not without ambiguity and hesitation.[104] By the end of Charles II's reign, under the Restoration, there is no longer any doubt, in any court;[105] and by this period, the extension of the privilege to include an ordinary witness, and not merely the party charged, is for the first time made.[106] It is interesting to note, in [102] 1641, Twelve Bishops' Trial, 4 How. St. Tr. 63, 75 (on being asked whether they had subscribed the treasonable petition, they refused to answer, because they were not "bound to accuse themselves").

[103] 1649, King Charles' Trial, 4 How. St. Tr. 993, 1101 (one Holden objected to answering, and the Court, "perceiving that the questions intended to be asked him tended to accuse himself, thought fit to waive his examination"); 1649, Lilburn's Trial, 4 How. St. Tr. 1269, 1280, 1292, 1342 (Lilburn, on a trial under the Commonwealth for treason, claimed that his former counsel, Bradshaw, now Lord President of the Council, had tried to make him criminate himself just as the Star Chamber Court had formerly done; he here refused on his trial to do so; Lord Keble: "You shall not be compelled"; Lilburn: "I am upon Christ's terms, when Pilate asked him whether he was the Son of God, and adjured him to tell him whether he was or no; he replied, 'Thou sayest it.' So say I: Thou, Mr. Prideaux, sayest it, they are my books. But prove it"; Judge Jermin: "But Christ said afterwards, 'I am the Son of God.' Confess, Mr. Lilburn, and give glory to God"; see also p. 1445).

[104] 1655, The Protector v. Lord Lumley, Hardr. 22 (Exchequer; bill to discover defendant's estate, "for that he was outlawed whereby his goods and the profits of his lands were forfeited; the defendant's demurrer, 'quia nemo tenetur prodere seipsum'," is overruled, because "the outlawry is in the nature of a gift to the king or a judgment for him"; thus the general principle is apparently assumed valid; though, as already seen supra, note 92, the equitable rule against aiding a forfeiture may have been the reason); 1658, Attorney-General v. Mico, Hardr. 139, 145 (Exchequer; bill for relief and discovery, for evading customs laws and attempting to bribe; demurrer, that the bill contained charges involving penalties and forfeitures; the defendant evidently cites most of his authorities from Coke's works, which had now been published; there was no decision; nor yet in the case of Att'y-Gen'l v. ——, Hardr. 201, in 1662, probably the same case).

[105] 1660, Scroop's Trial, 5 How. St. Tr. 1034, 1039 (L. C. B. Bridgman: "You are not bound to answer me, but if you will not, we must prove it"); 1662, Crook's Trial, 6 How. St. Tr. 201, 205 (the defendant, refusing to take the oath of allegiance claimed that he ought not to accuse himself, for "nemo debet seipsum prodere"); 1670, Penn's and Mead's Trial, 6 How. St. Tr. 951, 957 (on a question being put to Mead, he refused to answer; "It is a maxim in your own law, 'Nemo tenetur accusare seipsum,' which, if it be not true Latin, I am sure it is true English, 'that no man is bound to accuse himself' "); 1673, Penrice v. Parker, Finch 75 (bill for counsel's fees; demurrer allowed, that an answer would "draw him under a penal law"); 1676, Jenkes' Trial, 6 How. St. Tr. 1189, 1194 (defendant: "I desire to be excused all farther answer to such questions, since the law doth provide that no man be put to answer to his own prejudice"; and no further questions were put); 1679, Reading's Trial, 7 How. St. Tr. 259, 296 (Oates for the prosecution, is not allowed to be asked questions to accuse himself); 1679, Whitebread's Trial, 7 How. St. Tr. 311, 361 (defendant's witness is not allowed to be asked whether he was a priest, because it would "make him accuse himself"); 1679, Langhorn's Trial, 7 How. St. Tr. 417, 435 (Oates is not allowed to be asked about "a criminal matter that may bring himself in danger"); 1680, Castlemaine's Trial, 7 How. St. Tr. 1097, 1096 (similar, for answers to "bring him in danger of his life"); 1680, Earl of Stafford's Trial, 7 How. St. Tr. 1293, 1314 (a question whereby a witness "shall accuse himself" is objected to); 1681, Plunket's Trial, 8 How. St. Tr. 447, 481 (a witness is not bound to answer questions that "may tend to accuse himself"); 1682, Bird v. Hardwicke, 1 Vern. 109 (bill of discovery, charging compounding a fraud; a plea is allowed, that the answer would "subject him to a forfeiture"); 1682, Anon., 1 Vern. 60 (defendant's argument that "A court of equity ought not to assist a man in recovering a penalty, nor compel a discovery of a forfeiture," is apparently conceded); 1684, Rosewell's Trial, 10 How. St. Tr. 147, 169 (witnesses are not bound "to charge themselves with any crime" or "subject themselves to any penalty"); 1685, Oates' Trial, 10 How. St. Tr. 1079, 1099, 1123 (witness is not compellable to make himself "obnoxious to some penalty"); 1691, African Co. v. Parish, 2 Vern. 244 (principle conceded); 1700, Firebrass' Case, 2 Salk. 550 (bill against a ranger for discovery of deer-killing; answer as to "what is to make him forfeit his place," is not compelled).

[106] Reading's Trial, supra, in 1679.

passing, that the privilege, thus established, comes into full recognition under the judges of the restored Stuarts, and not under the parliamentary reformers.[107]

Nevertheless, the novelty and recentness of it all in common-law proceedings is apparent, not only in the doubts which the Court of Exchequer, in 1658, so long entertained, and in the very gradual progress of the recognition in criminal trials after 1641, but also in the fact that it remained an unknown doctrine for this whole generation in the colony of Massachusetts, — a colony not only familiar enough with common legal proceedings, but knowing enough to send over for Sir Edward Coke's reports and other law books to inform its Court and keep abreast of the times. In this colony the privilege which began its career after the departure of its founders from England was unrecognized till at least as late as 1685; more, they formally sanctioned the ecclesiastical rule by which the inquisitional oath was allowed.[108]

[107] While this was passing in England, the precisely contemporary struggle, across the Channel, is in marked contrast, with its fatally opposite results; for the Council of Louis XIV, then upon the draft of the great criminal Ordonnance of 1670, was fixing, for a century to come, the French rule of compulsory self-crimination. Hitherto this had rested simply on traditional practice (supra, note 26); now it was confirmed by statute (Esmein, Hist. de la proc. crim. 229, transl. Simpson, as History of Continental Criminal Procedure; Continental Legal History Series, vol. V, 1913, pp. 224 ff). The arguments of the opposing councillors in the debate employ language identical with our own privilege: "Nul n'est tenu se condamner soi-même [par sa bouche."

In the Continental canon law the oath 'de veritate dicenda' was practically abolished not long after this (Salvioli, Jusjurandum calumniæ, p. 82; Hinschius, VI, pt. 1, pp. 70, 112, quoting a decree of 1725 of the Roman provincial council: "nec juramentum huiusmodi a reis eisdem, nisi ut testes quoad alios examinentur, in futurum . . . exigatur").

In the modern procedure of the Catholic Church the privilege against self-crimination, for civil parties and for the accused, is expressly recognized; for ordinary witnesses, a broader rule includes it: Codex Juris Canonici Pii X, 1917, Can. 1742, § 1 ("Judici legitime interroganti partes respondere tenentur et fateri veritatem, nisi agatur de delicto ab ipsis commisso)"; Can. 1744 ("Jusjurandum de veritate dicenda in causis criminalibus nequit judex accusato deferre; in contentiosis, quoties bonum publicum in causa est, debet illud a partibus exigere; in aliis, potest pro sua prudentia"); Can. 1755, § 2 ("Testes . . . veritatem fateri debent . . . Ab hac obligatione eximuntur: . . . 2. Qui ex testificatione sibi . . . infamiam, periculosas vexationes, aliave mala valde gravia obventura timent").

[108] 1642, Bradford's History of the Plymouth Plantation, 465 (answers by one of the ministers to a letter of inquiry from the Governor of Boston: "'Quest.: How farr a magistrate may extracte a confession from a delinquente to accuse himselfe of a capitall crime, seeing 'Nemo tenetur prodere seipsum?' 'Ans.: A majestrate cannot without sin neglecte diligente inquision into the cause brought before him. If it be manifeste that a capitall crime is committed, and that common report, or probabilitie, suspition or some complainte (or the like) be of this or that person, a magistrate ought to require and by all due means to procure from the person (so farr allready bewrayed) a naked confession of the fact . . . ; for though 'nemo tenetur prodere seipsum,' yet by that which may be known to the magistrat by the forenamed means, he is bound thus to doe; or else he may betray his countrie and people to the heavie displeasure of God'").

This deliverance is corroborated by the following series of enactments, which exhibit the spirit of the times: 1641, Massachusetts Body of Liberties, Whitmore's ed., § 45 ("No man shall be forced by torture to confess any crime against himselfe nor any other unlesse it be in some capitall case where he is first fullie convicted by cleare and suffitient evidence to be guilty. After which, if the cause be of that nature, that it is very apparent there be other conspiratours or confederates with him, then he may be tortured, yet not with such tortures as be barbarous and inhumane"); § 61 ("No magestrate, juror, officer, or other man, shall be bound to informe present or reveale any private crim or offence, wherein there is no perill or danger to this plantation or any member thereof, when any necessarie tye of conscience binds him to secresie grounded upon the word of God, unlesse it be in case of testimony lawfully required"); 1660, Revised Laws and Liberties, "Punishment," "Jurors" (repeats in substance the foregoing); "Innkeepers" (parties may be examined by the magistrate, for offences against the liquor law); 1672, General Laws and Liberties, same titles (repeats in substance the foregoing; no changes were made as late as 1685).

Moreover, the privilege as yet, until well on into the time of the English Revolution, remained not much more than a bare rule of law, which the judges would recognize on demand. The spirit of it was wanting in them. The old habit of questioning and urging the accused died hard, — did not disappear, indeed, until the 1700s had begun.[109]

4. The privilege, too, creeping in thus by indirection, appears by no means to have been regarded as the constitutional landmark that our own later legislation has made it. In all the parliamentary remonstrances and petitions and declarations that preceded the expulsion of the Stuarts, it does not anywhere appear.[110] Even by 1689, when the Courts had for a decade ceased to question it, and at the English Revolution the fundamental victories of the past two generations' struggle were ratified by William in the Bill of Rights,[111] this doctrine is totally lacking. Whatever it was worth to the American constitution-makers of 1789, it was not worth mentioning to the English constitution-menders of 1689. It is a little singular that the later body, who had themselves suffered nothing in this respect, and could herein aim merely to copy the lessons which their forefathers of a century ago had handed down from their own experience, should have incorporated a principle which those forefathers themselves, fresh from that experience, had never thought to register among the fundamentals of just procedure.[112]

No attempt has been made to discover the progress of the principle in the other colonies; but their records would doubtless disclose interesting material. It appears, for example, that the Bill of Rights in the first Maryland Constitution, of 1776, gave to the principle so loose a recognition as the following: Art. 20: "No man ought to be compelled to give evidence against himself in a court of common law or in any other court, but in such cases as have been usually practised in this State or may hereafter be directed by the Legislature"; the proviso was not omitted until the Constitution of 1864.

A summary of the early constitutional legislation on the privilege is found in the opinion of Moody, J., in Twining v. New Jersey, 211 U. S. 78, 29 Sup. 14 (1908).

[109] The following are merely a few examples at random: 1656, Nayler's Trial, 5 How St. Tr. 801, 806; 1660, Scroop's Trial, 5 How. St. Tr. 1034, 1039; Carew's Trial, 5 How. St. Tr. 1048, 1054; 1663, Twyn's Trial, 6 How. St. Tr. 513, 532; 1679, Reading's Trial, 7 How. St. Tr. 259, 302; 1692, Harrison's Trial, 12 How. St. Tr. 895; 1702, Swendsen's Trial, 14 How. St. Tr. 559, 580, 581; 1702, Baynton's Trial, 14 How. St. Tr. 598, 621-625. Sir J. Stephen (Hist. Crim. Law, I, 440) says that the practice of questioning the prisoner "died out soon after the Revolution of 1688"; but this is perhaps giving too early a cessation. Lord Holt died in 1710, and "to the end of his life he persevered in what we call 'the French system' of interrogating the prisoner during his trial" (Campbell's Lives of the Chief Justices, II, 174).

So, too, in Choice Cases in Chancery, 1652-1672, containing a short treatise on chancery practice, there is no mention of the privilege, among the rules for witnesses or for parties' answers.

[110] Supra, note 98; Cobbett's Parl. Hist. II, passim. In 1641, Parliament itself was trying its hand at inquisitional examinations: Cobbett's Parl. Hist. II, 668, 672.

[111] 1689, 1 W. & M. 2d sess., c. 2.

[112] The real explanation of the Colonial conventions' insistence on it would seem to be found in the agitation then going on in France against the inquisitional feature of the Ordonnance of 1670 (supra, note 107). There appears no allusion, in Elliot's Debates on the Constitution, to the contemporary French movement; but the delegates who had been over there must have known of it. The proposals of reform laid before the French Constitutional Assembly from the Provinces, in 1789, show how strong was the popular agi-

But, after all, the still more interesting question is, How did the result come about in England itself? How did a movement, which was directed, originally and throughout, against a method of procedure in ecclesiastical Courts, produce in its ultimate effect a rule against a certain kind of testimony in common-law Courts? The process of thought, popular and professional, is to be accounted for. For our history of legal ideas we do not ordinarily expect to go to Bentham. But he was the first to search into this history, and to maintain that this common-law privilege did not antedate the Restoration; [113] and, in this instance, his explanation of the process of thought by which the transmutation took place seems fairly to represent the probabilities. That explanation (as indeed the foregoing details exhibit) lies in the principle of the association of ideas, — an association which began to operate immediately in the reactionary period of the Restoration and the Revolution, when the growth and ascendancy of Whig principles involved all the Stuart practices in one indiscriminate and radical condemnation. Read in the light of the foregoing details, the great reformer's words serve as a correct analysis of motives and a fitting summary to the history:

1827, Mr. Jeremy Bentham, Rationale of Judicial Evidence, b. IX, pt. IV, c. III (Bowring's ed., vol. VII, pp. 456, 460): "Of the Court of Star Chamber and the High Commission Court taken together, . . . the characteristic feature was that by taking upon them to execute the will of the king alone, as made known by proclamations, or not as tation. The Third Estate in every district, in their 'cahiers' sent up to Paris, had voted to abolish compulsory sworn interrogation of the accused, and the Clergy in ninety-one districts had done the same. The decree of 1789 (though keeping the interrogation) abolished the oath 'de veritate'; Art. 12: "For this interrogatory, and for all others, the oath shall not be required from the accused"; and the Instructions of 1791 added: "Mere good sense suffices to convince of the uselessness and immorality of such an oath" (Esmein, Hist. de la proc. crim. 405).

But the privilege, as we understand it, is perhaps not yet fully established in France. The code d'Instruction Criminelle of 1808 retained the interrogatory, without the oath, it would seem (1898, Dalloz, Les Codes Annotés, Code d'Instr. Crim. § 310, App. note 20, Art. 93, notes 69-74; and the quotation from Stephen, post, § 2251). The new draft Code of 1878-80 had this article covering the preliminary hearing only: Art. 85. "The committing magistrate shall establish the identity of the accused, acquaint him with the charge, and receive his statements, after informing him that he is at liberty not to answer the questions that are put to him." This provision was adopted by the law of Dec. 8, 1897, Art. 3 (Dalloz, ubi supra, App. to Livre I, p. 248[2]): "Upon the preliminary arraignment of the accused, the magistrate is to establish his identity, to notify him of the facts charged against him, and to receive his statements, after warning him that he is at liberty not to make any. This warning must be recorded in the magistrate's report."

The contemporary law and practice in France is fully set forth in Professor James W. Garner's "Criminal Procedure in France" (1916, Yale L. Journal, XXV, 4, 255).

In Germany such a provision for the committal proceedings has apparently been introduced: Lowe, Die Strafprozessordnung fur das deutsche Reich, 10th ed., § 136, p. 427. But both in France and Germany there would be no doubt as to drawing inferences from the accused's refusal to answer.

In the Philippine Islands, under the Spanish system of procedure, including the reforms of 1880, the privilege was not in force, though the use of torture had been abolished: 1904, U. S. v. Navarro, 3 P. I. 143, 148; three judges diss.; Mapa, J., writes a learned opinion for the dissent.

[113] Mr. Justice Stephen had outlined the true history of the privilege in 1857, in his essay in the Juridical Society's Papers, I, 456 (The Practice of Interrogating Persons accused of Crime), and again in his History of the Criminal Law (1883), I, 342; his summary of the history was that the rule "arose from a peculiar and accidental state of things which has long since passed away, and that our modern law is in fact derived from somewhat questionable sources, though it may no doubt be defended."

yet known so much as by proclamations, they went to supersede the use of parliaments, substituting an absolute monarchy to a limited one. In the case of the High Commission Court, the mischief was aggravated by the use made of this arbitrary power in forcing men's consciences on the subject of religion. In the common-law Courts, these enormities could not be committed, because (except in a few extraordinary cases), convictions having never, in the practice of these Courts, been made to take place without the intervention of a jury, and the bulk of the people being understood to be adverse to these innovations, the attempt to get the official judges to carry prosecutions of the description in question into effect present itself as hopeless. In a state of things like this, what could be more natural than that, by a people infants as yet in reason, giants in passion, every distinguishable feature of a system of procedure directed to such ends should be condemned in the lump, should be involved in one undistinguishing mass of odium and abhorrence; more especially any particular instrument or feature, from which the system was seen to operate with a particular degree of efficiency towards such abominable ends? . . . In those days, the supreme power of the State was 'de facto' in the hands of the king alone; . . . being employed and directed against property, liberty, conscience, every blessing on which human nature sets a value, — every chance of safety depended upon the enfeeblement of it; every instrument on which the strength of that government in those days depended, every instrument which in happier times would to the people be a bond of safety, was an instrument of mischief, an object of terror and odium. . . . No practice could come in worse company than the practice of putting adverse questions to a party, to a defendant (and in a criminal, a capital case), did in that instance."

§ 2251. Policy of the Privilege. Neither the history of the privilege, nor its firm constitutional anchorage, need deter us from discussing at this day its policy. As a bequest of the 1600s, it is but a relic of controversies and convulsions which have long ceased. Its origin was local; in the other legal systems of the world it has had no place. It must therefore justify itself in the juridical forum of nations. Nor does its constitutional sanction, embodied in a clause of half a dozen words, relieve us from the necessity of considering its policy; for the attitude here taken may lead either by favoring implications to a wide extension of its scope, or by disfavoring interpretation to its close restriction. A sound and intelligent opinion must be formed upon the merits of the policy.

1. To reach this opinion, let us listen first to what has been urged against that policy. Few names, among jurists, have ever appeared as challengers on this side of the lists, but they are names of extraordinary panoply in the law, — those of Jeremy Bentham, the philosopher and reformer, and of William Appleton, Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Maine, his disciple.[1] Remembering that in less than three generations nearly every reform which Bentham advocated for the law of Evidence has come to pass, we might almost regard his condemnation of any rule as presumptively an index of its ultimate downfall. Considering, too, that his disciple, as Chief Justice, while preaching against the anomalies of the law, presided over its administration for nearly twenty years upon the bench and commanded his colleagues' constant support in the vindication of his principles, we must concede to his views that value which experience gives as a test of the validity of theory. The argument against the privilege, as advanced by these jurists, is represented in the following passages:[2]

§ 2251. [1] A criticism of the privilege will also be found in Mr. (later L. C. J.) Denman's comments in 40 Edinb. Rev. 190 (1824), reviewing Bentham's treatise, and, more recently, in Professor Henry T. Terry's article in the Yale Law Journal, XV, 127 (1906), "Constitutional Provisions against Forcing Self-Incrimination."

1827, Mr. Jeremy Bentham, Rationale of Judicial Evidence, b. IX, pt. IV, c. III (Bowring's ed., vol. VII, pp. 452 ff.): "(a) Pretences for exclusion [of the accused's testimony on compulsion]. . . . 2. The old woman's reason. The essence of this reason is contained in the word 'hard'; 'tis 'hard' upon a man to be obliged to criminate himself. Hard it is upon a man, it must be confessed, to be obliged to do anything that he does not like. That he should not much like to do what is meant by his criminating himself, is natural enough; for what it leads to is his being punished. What is no less hard upon him is that he should be punished: but did it ever yet occur to a man to propose a general abolition of all punishment, with this hardship for a reason for it? Whatever hardship there is in a man's being punished, that, and no more, is there in his thus being made to criminate himself. . . . Nor yet is all this plea of tenderness, — this double-distilled and treble-refined sentimentality, anything better than a pretence. From his own mouth you will not receive the evidence of the culprit against him; but in his own hand, or from the mouth of another, you receive it without scruple: so that at bottom, all this sentimentality resolves itself into neither more nor less than a predilection — a confirmed and most extensive predilection, for bad evidence. . . . 'You are sure of being convicted: by what sort of evidence would you choose rather to be convicted? By the evidence of other people without any of your own, or by evidence of other people's and your own together'? Were a question of this sort put to a malefactor, would it not be matter of perplexity to him to choose? Would not a pot of beer or a glass of gin, on whichever side placed, be sufficient to turn the scale?[3] But allowing, for the sake of argument, that there is a difference between the pain in the one case and the pain in the other — for my own part, I can see none — but if there be, can it be assumed as a competent and sufficiently broad and solid ground for the establishment of a rule of law? Is there anything here capable of being set against the mischiefs of impunity? the mischiefs of the offence (be it what it may) which the law in question — the law which the rule of exclusion in question seeks to debilitate — is employed to combat? . . . 3. The fox-hunter's reason. This consists in introducing upon the carpet of legal procedure the idea of 'fairness,' in the sense in which the word is used by sportsmen.[4] The fox is to have a fair chance for his life: he must have (so close is the analogy) what is called 'law,' — leave to run a certain length of way for the express purpose of giving him a chance for escape. While under pursuit, he must not be shot: it would be as 'unfair' as convicting him of burglary on a hen-roost in five minutes' time, in a court of conscience. In the sporting code, these laws are rational, being obviously conducive to the professed end. Amusement is that end; a certain quantity of delay is essential to it; dispatch, a degree of dispatch reducing the quantity of delay below the allowed minimum, would be fatal to it. . . . [In this view] to different persons, both a fox and a criminal have their use; the use of a fox is to be hunted; the use of a criminal is to be tried. . . . 4. Confounding interrogation with torture; with the application of physical suffering, till some act is done, — in the present instance, till testimony is given to a particular effect required. On this occasion it is necessary to observe, that the act of putting a question to a person whose station is that of defendant in a cause, is no more an act of torture than the putting the same question to him would be, if, instead of being a defendant, he were an extraneous witness.[5] Whatever he chooses to say, he is at full liberty to say; only under this condition, properly but not essentially subjoined, viz. (as in the case of an extraneous witness) that, if anything he says should be mendacious, he is liable to be punished for it, as an extraneous witness would be punished. . . . 5. Reference to unpopular institutions. 'Whatever Titius did was wrong; but this is among the things that Titius did; therefore this is wrong'; such is the logic from which this sophism is deduced. In the apartment in which the Court called the Court of Star Chamber sat, the roof had stars in it for ornaments; or else certain deeds to which Jews were parties, and by them called shetars or shtars, used to be kept there; or, possibly, there being no natural incompatibility, both these facts were true. 'Whether it was owing to the gilt stars, or to the Jew parchments, the judges of this Court conducted themselves very badly; therefore judges should not sit in a room that has had stars in the roof, or in a room in which Jew parchments have been kept'; had the conclusion been in this strain, the logic would not have been very convincing, but neither would the mischief have been very great. 'In the High Commission Court, the judges sat and tried causes in virtue of a commission, and they too conducted themselves very badly; therefore judges ought not to be appointed by a commission.' The logic, though not less rational than in the preceding case, begins to be rather mischievous. . . . The Inquisition (meaning the true inquisition, of the Spanish sort) that used to work with such success in the extirpation or conversion of heretics, was a court in which it was the way of the judge to inquire into the business that came before him; to put questions to such persons as, in his conception, were likely to be more or less acquainted with the matter; and this, whether extraneous witnesses or parties. 'Now this it is that was and is a most wicked and popish practice. Judges ought not to put questions; be the business what it may that comes before them, it ought to be the care of judges never so much as to attempt to see to the bottom of it.' Here, then, we see the true source of all the odium; viz. not merely of that which has attached itself to this abominable court, but of that which attached itself to those other abominable courts. It was not by sitting in a room with stars or parchments in it, it was not by acting under a commission too high in itself, or that lay on too high a shelf; it was not by either of these causes that the two English courts, held in such just abhorrence by all true Englishmen, were rendered so bad as they were, — but by their abominable practice of asking questions, by the abominable attempt to penetrate to the bottom of a cause. [Such are the absurd reasons upon which it is claimed that the accused in a criminal cause ought to be privileged from answering all questions as to his complicity.] . . . [(b) The witness' privilege]. It may happen that the cause by means of which the deponent exposes himself to the mischief attached to the self-prejudicing evidence is not the cause in hand, but another cause, viz. a cause already in prospect, or a cause liable to be produced by the disclosure made by the evidence. . . . Prosecution for robbery: John Stiles examined in relation to it, in the character of an extraneous witness. A question is put, the effect of which, were he to answer it, might be to subject him to conviction in respect of another robbery, attended with murder, in which he bore a share. On the ground of public utility and common sense, is there any reason why the collateral advantage thus proffered by fortune to justice should be foregone? Refusing to compass the execution of justice by this means, by what fairer or better means can you ever hope to compass it? The punishment he will incur, if any, will be a distinct punishment, for a distinct offence; an offence which, at the institution of the suit, was perhaps never thought of. Be it so; and should this happen, where will be the mischief? Wherein consists the grievance? That a crime, which, but for the accident, might perhaps have remained unpunished, comes, by means of this accident, to be punished. . . . But what shall we say, if, by a summons to appear as a witness in a cause (penal or non-penal) between other persons, an individual is purposely entrapped; and, being (in obedience to that summons) actually in court, is interrogated concerning a distinct offence supposed to have been committed by himself, and, in consequence of his answers, stopped and consigned to durance. What? Why, that so a delinquent be but brought into the hands of justice, just as well may it be by this means as by any other. Truth is not violated; fiction is not employed: no false tale is told; no falsehood here defiles the lips of justice. Nor, though possible, is the case likely to be frequent. The question must be relevant, pertinent to the cause actually in hand, or an answer will not be (for it ought not to be) allowed to be given. . . . An effect (for example) which certainly might, by design and contrivance, be brought into existence by incidental self-convicting evidence, is that of instituting a sort of feigned suit, penal or non-penal, for the purpose of bringing to light, not the facts belonging properly and directly to the avowed cause of action, but others, of a complexion differing to any degree of remoteness. Suppose, for example, a project formed for bringing down disgrace and punishment on the head of an individual, by means of questions to be put to him, in the character either of a defendant or a witness, in a cause to be instituted on purpose; drawing thus out of his mouth the confession of some crime, or disgraceful act, for which he has not been prosecuted. May not this be done? Yes: but not with any advantage to the party whose invention is supposed to be thus employed, nor with any disadvantage to the party against whom it is supposed to be employed. Why? Because in this there is nothing more than what might be done in a direct and ordinary way, by a suit instituted on purpose. In every point of view, then, in which it can be considered, the practice in question appears to stand clear of objection. In the first place, because the result supposed to be produced, cannot, with any propriety or consistency, be reckoned in the number of undesirable results; in the next place, because, though it were, no ulterior facility is afforded, beyond what would exist without it."

[2] Chief Justice Appleton's statement of the case, not differing greatly from Bentham's, is found in his treatise on Evidence (1860), c. vii, pp. 129–134, c. xv, p. 246.

[3] This is an allusion to some of the absurd rulings on confessions (ante, § 839).

[4] For comments on the sportsmanship theory in English law, see ante, § 1845.

[5] This attitude of maudlin sentimentality, repeating the misnomer of "torture," has not disappeared even since Bentham's day; as witness the following language of Temple, J., in People v. Arrighini, 122 Cal. 121, 54 Pac. 591: "The inquisition of torture is restored, only without the rack and thumbscrew."

2. In weighing the foregoing objections, it is indispensable to distinguish between (a) questioning an ordinary witness, (b) questioning by preliminary inquisition one who is as yet not charged, (c) questioning an accused who has been duly placed on trial by indictment:

(a) For the ordinary witness, Bentham's argument seems to fail. It is true, as he points out, that the mere self-betrayal by the witness is of itself no evil, and that the instances of pretended suits to provide the opportunity for such self-betrayal would probably not be numerous. But there are other considerations. The witness-stand is to-day sufficiently a place of annoyance and dread. The reluctance to enter it must not be increased. Every influence which tends to suppress the sources of truth must be removed. To remove all limits of inquiry into the secrets of the persons who have no stake in the cause but can furnish help in its investigation, would be to add to the motives which now sufficiently dispose them to evade their duty. Moreover, no serious loss to justice can be incurred by recognizing the privilege. If the witness' testimony is indispensable, and the incriminating fact is vital to the cause, a pardon, executive or statutory, can for the particular instance remove the privilege.[6]

(b) For the preliminary inquisition of one not yet charged with an offence, the claims of the privilege seem equally valid. This aspect of it seems to have been ignored by Bentham. Yet it was historically this situation which gave rise to the privilege. The system of "inquisition," properly so called, signifies an examination on mere suspicion, without prior presentment, indictment, or other formal accusation (ante, § 2250); and the contest for one hundred years centred solely on the abuse of such a system.[7] In the hands of petty bureaucrats, whether under James the First, or under Philip the Second, or in the twentieth century under an American republic, such a system is always certain to be abused.[8] The whole principle of the grand jury presupposes a formal and deliberate accusation, based on probable cause, before any person is called to answer for a crime. No doubt a guilty person may justly be called upon at any time, for guilt deserves no immunity. But it is the innocent that need protection. Under any system which permits John Doe to be forced to answer on the mere suspicion of an officer of the law, or on public rumor, or on secret betrayal, two abuses have always prevailed and inevitably will prevail; first, the petty judicial officer becomes a local tyrant and misuses his discretion for political or mercenary or malicious ends; secondly, a blackmail is practised by those unscrupulous members of the community who through threats of inspiring a prosecution are able to prey upon the fears of the weak or the timid. The modern system of formal presentment needs no defence. In this aspect the privilege against self-crimination is, in history and in policy, its just complement, in so far as it exempts all persons from being compelled to disclose their supposed offences before formal process of charge is had.

[6] Post, §§ 2280, 2281.

(c) When we come to the case of an accused duly charged by indictment and now placed on trial, we reach a somewhat different set of considerations. Here the question is merely whether he shall be required to disclose all that he knows of the crime charged against him. None of the considerations applicable to the foregoing situations have here any bearing. What is there to exempt the accused from simple and straightforward answers of denial, confession, or explanation? There are, to be sure, what the great jurist so plainly and truly stigmatized as the "old woman's reason" and the "fox-hunter's reason." There are also the false shibboleths of "torture" and the like; but these can only succeed in affecting us through the old rhetorical device of calling a thing by epithets which do not belong to it. So far as Bentham's argument goes, i. e. for the individual case, it is irrefutable. Assuming this man to be guilty, there is no good reason to exempt him.

There is no escape from this fundamental truth, so long as we confine our-

[7] This is illustrated by the trial of Lilburn (already quoted ante, § 2250), in 1637, 3 How. St. Tr. 1315, 1318; Lilburn, to those questioning him, replied: "I am not willing to answer you to any more of these questions, because I see you go about by this examination to ensnare me; for, seeing the things for which I am imprisoned cannot be proved against me, you will get other matter out of my examination; and therefore, if you will not ask me about the thing laid to my charge, I shall answer no more."

[8] That these abuses are the creature of no one country or time may be seen from the extent to which the moral instincts of certain American officers were sapped by the insidious example, set before them in the Philippine Islands, in 1898, of the so-called "water-cure" for extracting information.

selves to the assumption on which it rests. That assumption is that the person charged is guilty. But assume him innocent, and a different problem is presented — a problem to which Bentham's arguments did not do justice. The truth is that the privilege exists for the sake of the innocent [9] — or at least for reasons irrespective of the guilt of the accused. It is not so much that the mere process of questioning and cross-questioning the accused is likely to perturb his mental operations, and educe from him the words and conduct of a guilty man. Current experience, as shown by the demeanor of defendants who voluntarily take the stand and are acquitted, discredits this. Moreover, the conduct of the accused, even while under the mental strain induced by arrest and incarceration, is not rejected as a source of evidence.[10]

The real objection is that any system of administration which permits the prosecution to trust habitually to compulsory self-disclosure as a source of proof must itself suffer morally thereby. The inclination develops to rely mainly upon such evidence, and to be satisfied with an incomplete investigation of the other sources. The exercise of the power to extract answers begets a forgetfulness of the just limitations of that power. The simple and peaceful process of questioning breeds a readiness to resort to bullying and to physical force and torture. If there is a right to an answer, there soon seems to be a right to the expected answer, — that is, to a confession of guilt. Thus the legitimate use grows into the unjust abuse; ultimately, the innocent are jeopardized by the encroachments of a bad system. Such seems to have been the course of experience in those legal systems where the privilege was not recognized.

The argument is indeed empiric; and, being empiric, it is open to the fallacy of mistaking a mere accidental association for a cause. In the Continental procedure, for example, the judge exercises also in part the functions of our prosecuting officer; and it is probable that the abuses of which such a system is capable, when the privilege is not recognized, would be much less under a system like our own, in which the judicial and the prosecuting functions are sharply separated. Nevertheless, it is difficult to know how much allowance is to be made on this account; and it is wiser to accept the warnings of experience, even at the risk of overstraining their import. It may be conceded that the Continental practice is efficacious in detecting guilt.[11] But it must also be conceded that it leads to or is found united with a spirit of petty judicial license and browbeating, dangerous to innocence, and certain to lead to great abuses in our own community, if it once obtained a sanction.[12]

[9] 1862, Byles, J., in Bartlett v. Lewis, 12 C. B. N. S. 249, 265: "The rule was intended for the protection of the innocent, and not for that of the guilty."

[10] Ante, §§ 273, 871.

[11] See the remarks of Mr. J. Denman, already referred to, in 40 Edinb. Rev. 190; Mr. John (later Chief Justice) Campbell, during his sojourn in France, formed somewhat similar opinions about the French practice (Life, I, 362).

[12] The insidious effects of the practice in this respect may be seen in the history of the Holy Inquisition. Although the rules of the ordinary penal law of the church, even in 'ex officio' inquisitions, declared a confession insufficient 'per se' for condemnation, and hedged it about with rules (Esmein, Hist. de la proc. crim., 268 et passim, translated as vol. V of the Continental Legal History Series), yet as soon as these rules were relaxed in the special procedure

For the sake, then, not of the guilty, but of the innocent accused, and of conservative and healthy principles of judicial conduct, the privilege should be preserved.

3. Of the few attempts to analyze frankly the grounds of the privilege, the following passages are entitled to unusual weight, each for its own reasons:

1848, Commissioners on Criminal Law in the Channel Islands, Second Report, 8 St. Tr. N. s. 1127, 1200, 1210–1212; these Commissioners were appointed to inquire into the state of the criminal law in the Channel Islands — Guernsey, Jersey, Alderney, and Sark—, which, though long ago coming under English domination, had retained in their law many institutions essentially French; the Commissioners, reporting upon Guernsey, recommended the abolition of the process of examining the accused, with the following explanations: "Upon the information obtained from the preliminary examination, an 'acte d'accusation' is framed by the Court, charging the accused with the facts deposed to by the witnesses. He is then called before the Court. The 'acte d'accusation' is read to him; and, if he denies the crime, he is questioned by the Court upon the evidence previously obtained. This is called the 'interrogatoire.' It is also taken at a secret sitting of the Court; the prisoner being alone, and not allowed the assistance of a legal adviser. The present practice, however, requires that he be told that he cannot be compelled to answer the questions of the Court, and that what he says will be used against him at the trial. This is a departure from the old law in Terrien and the 'approbation,' by which the accused, in the event of refusing to answer or not answering pertinently, would be subjected to the torture. . . . The preliminary examinations 'au secret,' and the consequent 'interrogatoire' of the accused, appear to us equally objectionable. But our opinion with regard to them is not that of the Bailiff [i. e. Chief Justice] and the majority of the lawyers of the Court. This part of the criminal process differs so essentially from all that we have been accustomed to, as English lawyers, that we were anxious to have the subject discussed before us, in order to ascertain the opinions of the members of the Court, and the advocates, on the subject. With one exception, that of Mr. Falla, a gentleman very extensively engaged in the defence of criminals, the members of the Court, including the Bailiff [i. e. Chief Justice] and the Bar, were, more or less strongly, in favour of continuing the practice. The value of the Bailiff's testimony in favour of the system is the greater from his having been an English lawyer, filling criminal and civil judicial functions in England, and from his avowing that his opinions had been changed by experience. We are bound also to add that it was an unanimous opinion that the

of the Holy Inquisition, the whole effort degenerated into the procurement of a confession. "A confession dispensed with all other investigation and all further proceedings, either by the party-accuser (when the cause was begun by complaint) or by the judge (when it was 'ex officio'). One can thus understand with what zeal it was sought for in inquisitional proceedings" (Tanon, Hist. des tribunaux de l'inquisition en France, 358).

Some of these abuses are to be seen in the French trials quoted in Stephen's History of the Criminal Law, vol. III. Appendix; Feuerbach, Narratives of Remarkable (German) Criminal Trials (tr. by Duff-Gordon, 1846); Mejan, Causes Célèbres (1808–1811); Loeffler, Die Opfer mangelhafter Justiz (Jena, 1873); Fuller, Noted French Trials (Boston, 1882); Trials of Troppman and Prince Bonaparte, 5 American Law Review 14 (1870); another example of a French trial, treated from the English point of view, will be found in Thackeray's Paris Sketch book, in the chapter on "The Case of Peytel"; and from the French point of view the method is favorably depicted in de Balzac's novels of Lucien de Rubempré, cc. 16–23, and An Historical Mystery, cc. 17, 18, and in Gaboriau's novel of Monsieur Lecocq, cc. 16–31.

Compare the discriminating comments in Dr. Francis Lieber's Civil Liberty and Self-Government, ch. 7, and App. III (The Inquisitorial Trial); Sir S. Romilly's Memoirs, 2d ed., 1840, I, 315; N. W. Senior's Biographical Sketches (1863, pp. 209, 227, 313; Essays on Lord Holt, on Feuerbach, and on Ramcke).

The best account of the French system, its history and present practice, is to be found in Professor James W. Garner's "Criminal Procedure in France" (Yale Law Journal, 1916, XXV, 255).

practice of the Court had much improved under his presidency, so that his opinion in favour of retaining the ancient system could not possibly arise from prejudice or illiberal dread of change. We feel diffident in dissenting from such authority; but the reasons alleged in support of the present system have failed to convince us. . . . It is certainly not, at first sight, contrary to justice, that a party accused of crime, who has heard the evidence against him and has had an opportunity of questioning the witnesses, should be interrogated to elicit his explanation of the facts, before he is committed for trial. If means could be devised to ensure its never being abused, the 'interrogatoire,' so conducted, would be perhaps a proper mode of arriving at truth. But it cannot be said to be necessary for that purpose. Its utility was maintained by the Court and members of the Bar chiefly on the ground that the truth told by a man in answer to questions of the Court, without his having heard the evidence which suggested them, gives great weight to that part of his statement which is otherwise incapable of proof. But this is precisely the objection to the 'interrogatoire' as conducted by the Royal Court. An innocent person, who is perfectly intelligent and honest, has nothing to fear from any criminal prosecution fairly conducted. But most of the persons accused of crime are ill informed; and such persons are led into contradiction and falsehood by the desire to evade circumstances which they feel to make against them. . . . The questions put are those which arise from evidence which has been so arranged (and quite properly) as to give the fullest effect to the 'prima facie' case of accusation. The answers given to such questions are given at a great disadvantage; and probably, this disadvantage is even exaggerated by the prisoner, who is pressed with the circumstances of suspicion marshalled in their most formidable order. Hence arises a temptation to evade and deceive, by which an ignorant person would be seduced, however innocent of the offence charged. Another very dangerous feature in this practice appears to be that its tendency is to engage the Court, which conducts the examination, in a contest with the prisoner. We were assured that this in fact did not occur; and we are quite ready to believe that the members of the Court have not consciously allowed themselves to be drawn into such a course. But the danger is that the objectionable feeling will arise where the Court is conscious of nothing but an exercise of ingenuity in the pursuit of truth; and that this danger is not imaginary must, we think, be obvious to any one who has read much of the interrogatories administered by Courts in foreign criminal tribunals. We cannot see why all the advantages which this practice is alleged to possess may not be attained by merely reading over the adverse evidence to the accused, and then bidding him tell his own story, if he thinks fit. It is impossible to deny the efficacy of the present practice as an instrument for the occasional detection of crime; but it is equally clear that the practice is liable to mislead, even when administered with the purest intentions. We have no doubt that the members of the Royal Court were perfectly sincere in assuring us that it is often of the greatest use to a prisoner, and that they never knew an innocent man condemned in consequence of it. But it appears to us dangerous to make legal guilt depend upon anything short of proof from intrinsic evidence or the voluntary confession of the accused."

1883, Sir J. F. Stephen, History of the Criminal Law, I, 342, 441, 535, 542, 565:[13] "In the old Ecclesiastical Courts and in the Star Chamber [the 'ex officio' oath] was understood to be and was used as an oath to speak the truth on the matters objected against the defendant — an oath, in short, to accuse oneself. It was vehemently contended by those who found themselves pressed by this oath that it was against the law of God, and the law of nature, and that the maxim 'nemo tenetur prodere seipsum' was agreeable to the law of God, and part of the law of nature. In this, I think, as in most other discussions of the kind, the real truth was that those who disliked the oath had usually done the things of which they were accused, and which they regarded as meritorious actions, [13] Mr. Justice Stephen's views were originally expounded in 1857, in his essay in the Juridical Society's Papers, I, 456, 470 ff.

though their judges regarded them as crimes. People always protest with passionate eagerness against being deprived of technical defences against what they regard as bad law, and such complaints often give a spurious value to technicalities when the cruelty of the laws against which they have afforded protection has come to be commonly admitted. . . . [But by the institution of our privilege against self-crimination] the result of the whole is that as matters stand the prisoner is absolutely protected against all judicial questioning before or at the trial. . . . This is one of the most characteristic features of English criminal procedure, and it presents a marked contrast to that which is common to, I believe, all continental countries. It is, I think, highly advantageous to the guilty. It contributes greatly to the dignity and apparent humanity of a criminal trial. It effectually avoids the appearance of harshness, not to say cruelty, which often shocks an English spectator in a French court of justice; and I think that the fact that the prisoner cannot be questioned stimulates the search for independent evidence. During the discussions which took place on the Indian Code of Criminal Procedure in 1872,[14] some observations were made on the reasons which occasionally lead native police officers to apply torture to prisoners. An experienced civil officer observed, 'There is a great deal of laziness in it. It is far pleasanter to s't comfortably in the shade rubbing red pepper into a poor deril's eyes than to go about in the sun hunting up evidence.' This was a new view to me, but I have no doubt of its truth. The evidence in an English trial is, I think, usually much fuller and more satisfactory than the evidence in such French trials as I have been able to study. The Procureur de la République and Juge d'Instruction, their power of holding inquiries, drawing up 'procès-verbaux,' examining suspected persons secretly, and without informing them even of the accusation or evidence against them, taking depositions behind their backs, and keeping them in solitary confinement till (whatever soft words may be used about it) every effort has been made to extort a confession from them, are contrasted in the strongest way with everything with which we are familiar, and which I have described, in detail, in the preceding chapters. To keep a man in solitary confinement and question him till he is driven into a confession is not the less torture because the process is protracted instead of being acute. . . . The following account of the matter is given by M. Hélie. 'The magistrate who puts questions to the accused and asks explanations from him has the right to interrogate him for the purpose of extracting his excuse or his confession of guilt. He should, without harassing or confusing him, but at the same time while requiring a disclosure, encourage his freedom of utterance. He should, in short, with the most complete impartiality, seek solely to get at the truth. The interrogatory must be neither an argument nor a combat; that is by no means the issue. The main object is to ascertain the theory of the defence, and thus to determine the details of the issue and the points therein which are to be established.' He adds, that though the interrogatory is not essential, yet the President can interrogate the accused either before or after the witnesses are heard, the former being the common course. . . . Whatever may be the law on the subject, the fact unquestionably is that the interrogation of the accused by the President is not only the first, but is also the most prominent, conspicuous, and important part of the whole trial. Moreover, all the reports of French trials which I have seen, and I have read very many, suggest that the views taken by M. Hélie as to the proper object of the interrogatory, and the proper method of carrying it on, are not shared by the great majority of French Presidents of Cours d'Assises. The accused is cross-examined with the utmost severity, and with continual rebuke, sarcasms, and exhortations, which no counsel in an English court would be permitted by any judge (who knew and did his duty) to address to any witness. This appears to me to be the weakest and most objectionable part of the whole system of French criminal procedure (except parts of the law as to the functions of the jury). It cannot but make the judge a party — and what is more, a party adverse to the prisoner; and it appears to me, apart from this, to place him in a position essentially undignified and inconsistent with his other functions. . . . This comparison of French and English criminal procedure naturally suggests the question, Which of the two is the best? To a person accustomed to the English system and to English ways of thinking and feeling there can be no comparison at all between them. However well fitted it may be for France, the French system would be utterly intolerable in England. . . . The whole temper and spirit of the French and the English differs so widely, that it would be rash for an Englishman to speak of trials in France as they actually are. We can think of the system only as it would work if transplanted into England. It may well be that it not only looks, but is, a very different thing in France. . . . The best way of comparing the working of the two systems is by comparing trials which have taken place under them. For this purpose I have given at the end of this work detailed accounts of seven celebrated trials, four English and three French, which afford strong illustrations of the results of the two systems. It seems to me that a comparison between them shows the superiority of the English system even more remarkably than any general observations which may be made on the subject. In every one of the English cases the evidence is fuller, clearer, and infinitely more cogent than it is in any one of the French cases, — notwithstanding which, far less time was occupied by the English trials than by the French ones, and not a word was said or a step taken which any one can represent as cruel or undignified." [15]

[14] Drawn by Sir J. Stephen himself.

1910, Wisconsin Branch, American Institute of Criminal Law and Criminology; Report of the Committee on Trial Procedure. "A majority of our committee believe that the provision in § 8, Art. I of our Constitution that 'No person shall be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself' has outlived its usefulness, and should be abolished, and that thereby one hiding-place of crime would be destroyed. We have obtained the views of many active lawyers and judges on this question; and a large majority of those consulted have expressed the opinion that no innocent person would suffer and that more guilty ones would be detected and convicted if this provision could be repealed. . . . The Constitutional provision does not so much stand in the way of the detection and punishment of crime of the lower orders (for the lower criminals no doubt would cunningly add perjury to their other crimes), as it prevents the obtaining of evidence to convict those guilty of offences such as bribery, grafting, rebating, violation of laws against combinations and similar offences, that threaten even more than the grosser crimes the foundations of good government and good order; nor so much even as it interferes at times with the obtaining of evidence in civil cases necessary to the redress of civil wrongs which may also involve some of the participants in liability to criminal prosecution. To overcome such interferences, we are fast acquiring immunity statutes, such as § 4078 granting immunity to witnesses testifying in actions brought on bonds of public officers. . . . The term 'immunity bath' has become something of a reproach to our criminal procedure. We recommend that this Institute urge upon the Legislature an amendment of the Constitution striking out the provision that 'No person shall be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself;' and at the same time urge the enactment of legislation such as is suggested by Exhibit F hereto annexed. We believe that a resolution to so amend the Constitution would fare better when submitted to a vote of the people if it also provided for legislation for protection of the accused, about as follows: 'Resolved that § 8, Art. I of the Constitution of Wisconsin be amended by striking out the words

[15] Our greatest American constructive jurist, Edward Livingston, in his Introductory Report to the Code of Criminal Procedure (Works, ed. 1872, I, 354 ff.), written about 1823, had already expounded the arguments on both sides, reaching much the same conclusions as Mr. J. Stephen. One of the arguments most influential with Mr. Livingston was this: "An unrestrained right of interrogating is very apt to produce insidious and catching questions; instead of a cool and impartial attempt to extract the truth, the examination becomes a contest, in which the pride and ingenuity of the magistrate are arrayed against the caution or evasions of the accused, and every construction will be given to his answers that may fix upon him the imputation of guilt."

"nor shall be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "Nor shall any person be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself until he shall first have the benefit of legal counsel to be provided as the Legislature may enact."'"

4. In preserving the privilege, however, we must resolve not to give it more than its due significance. We are to respect it rationally for its merits, not worship it blindly as a fetish. We are not merely to emphasize its benefits, but also to concede its shortcomings and guard against its abuses. Indirectly and ultimately it works for good, — for the good of the innocent accused and of the community at large. But directly and concretely it works for ill, — for the protection of the guilty and the consequent derangement of civic order. The current judicial habit is to ignore its latter aspect, and to laud it undiscriminatingly with false cant. A stranger from another legal sphere might imagine, in the perusal of our precedents, that the guilty criminal was the fond object of the Court's doting tenderness, guiding him at every step in the path of unrectitude, and lifting up his feet lest he fall into the pits digged for him by justice and by his own offences. The judicial practice, now too common, of treating with warm and fostering respect every appeal to this privilege, and of amiably feigning each guilty invocator to be an unsullied victim hounded by the persecutions of a tyrant, is a mark of traditional sentimentality. It involves a confusion between the abstract privilege — which is indeed a bulwark of justice — and the individual entitled to it — who may be a monster of crime. There is no reason why judges should lend themselves to confirming the insidious impression that crime in itself is worthy of protection. The privilege cannot be enforced without protecting crime; but that is a necessary evil inseparable from it, and not a reason for its existence. We should regret the evil, not magnify it by approval. No honest and intelligent accused (in the language of the Commissioners above quoted) has anything to fear from a criminal prosecution fairly conducted. To every such person, the appeal to the privilege is a repugnant and humiliating expedient. The spirit of every manly nature, unfortunate enough to be unjustly accused, must always be that of the brave and bluff Mr. George, who, when falsely charged with murder, and urged by his friends to seek the services of a lawyer, staunchly refused: [16]

"Say I am innocent and I get a lawyer; what would he do, whether or not? Act as if I was guilty, — shut my mouth up, tell me not to commit myself, keep circumstances back, chop the evidence small, quibble; and get me off perhaps. But, Miss Summerson, do I care for getting off in that way? . . . I don't intend to say," looking round upon us, with his powerful arms akimbo and his dark eyebrows raised, "that I am more partial to being hanged than another man. What I say is, I must come off clear and full, — or not at all. Therefore, when I hear stated against me what is true, I say it's true; and when they tell me, 'Whatever you say will be used,' I tell them I don't mind that, — I mean it to be used. If they can't make me innocent out of the whole truth, they are not likely to do it out of anything less or anything else."

[16] Charles Dickens, Bleak House, c. 51.

There ought to be an end of judicial cant towards crime. We have already too much of what a wit has called "justice tampered with mercy." A due respect for the privilege is perfectly consistent with a strict contempt for the guilty offender, and does not require or condone his protection as an end good in itself or good under any circumstances. It is enough for justice and for the commonwealth that the privilege exists, immovably fixed in the Constitution. The good which it aims at consists in that general fact and system, and not in the individual application of it to a given claimant. That effects mostly harm,—a particular harm which we suffer for the larger good.

The correct moral attitude toward the privilege has been well illustrated in a courageous and clear-thinking opinion, rendered in a case where outrageous fraud had been used at an election:

1907, LASSING, J., in Scholl v. Bell, 125 Ky. 750, 102 S. W. 248: "The testimony shows many outrages and crimes done by the police, and yet, when these men were placed on the witness stand and interrogated as to what they knew, they invariably sheltered under the law forbidding self-incrimination; and, when the question as to whether the witness should or not be compelled to answer was certified to the chancellors, the witnesses were always protected by the ruling. Assuming the ruling to be correct, the conclusion which seems to have been drawn as to the innocence of the officers is not justified. The principle under discussion is a rule of evidence, to protect the witness from criminal prosecution or public exposure to shame because of his own testimony. It is a rule of necessity, beyond which it should not be extended. Its use should not be considered as affording the witness a certificate of good character. Here were police officers being interrogated as to existence of crimes they were paid to prevent, if possible; if not, to expose and punish afterwards; and yet they one and all refused to answer 'under advice of counsel.' Suppose a secret murder had been committed, and the police on that beat, when asked about it, should say, 'I decline to answer for fear of incriminating myself.' This, under the rule invoked, would protect the witness from answering; but how long would it justify his retention on the roll of the police? What would be thought of those who left the public safety in his hands longer than it would require to discharge him? Suppose a bank had been robbed, and the bookkeeper, the teller, and cashier, when interrogated, should say, 'I decline to answer under advice of counsel.' What would be thought of a board of directors who would afterwards leave the bank in the hands of such men? This is precisely the situation here. Peace officers, whose duty it was to prevent and expose crime, when called on to do so, sheltered under the rule against self-incrimination; and yet these men still wear the official uniform, still draw salaries from the public purse, and this is made possible only by the consent of those who are the apparent beneficiaries of their silence."

The privilege therefore should be kept within limits the strictest possible. So much of it lies in the interpretation that its scope will be greatly affected by the spirit in which that interpretation is approached. Much can be settled by a consideration of its historic scope, before the constitutions were made. But, after all this, the decision will constantly depend upon whether the privilege is approached with favor or with disfavor, with fatuous adulation or with judicious appreciation. In the past generation, and especially in a few American Courts, this practical difference of effect is plainly apparent; for, under the guise of reasoning and interpretation, the privilege has by them, in a spirit of implicit favor, been so extended in application beyond its previous limits as almost to be incredible, certainly to defy common sense. Even Lord Hardwicke, who a century and a half ago called it "a rule of great justice and tenderness," [17] could he now revisit the glimpses of the moon and observe the rule in those courts, would marvel what manner of justice we had contrived. But a reaction must come. A true conservatism must recommence to operate. More than one great modern judge is found to pronounce against the favor that has in the past been granted to it.[18] A multiplicity of statutes [19] have shown how seriously it is felt to block the investigation and punishment of crime. Courts should unite to keep the privilege strictly within the limits dictated by historic fact, cool reasoning, and sound policy.[20]

§ 2252. Constitutional and Statutory Phrasings; Kinds of Proceedings affected by the Constitutional Sanction (Grand Jury, Legislative Inquiry, etc.). The Federal Constitution and the Constitutions of the various States (with two exceptions [1]) have at one time or another come to add their sanctions to the principle of the privilege, and have thus established it solidly beyond the reach of ordinary legislative alteration.[2] But this constitutional sanction, being merely a recognition and not a new creation, has not altered the tenor and scope of the privilege; it has merely given greater permanence to the traditional rule as handed down to us. The framers of the Constitutions did not intend to codify the various details of the rule, or to alter in any respect its known bearings, but merely to describe it sufficiently for identification as a principle. The extreme brevity of the clauses naming the privilege is plain proof of this intention; and the great variety of phrasing, together with the undoubted uniformity of purpose running through all these legislative efforts, is a corroboration. In most jurisdictions a statute has additionally confirmed the common-law privilege, expressly or by implication.[3]

[17] Harrison v. Southcote, 2 Ves. Sr. 389, 394.

[18] Eng. 1882, Jessel, M. R., in Ex parte Reynolds, 15 Cox Cr. 108, 115 ("Perhaps our law has gone even too far in that direction"); U. S. 1875, Appleton, C. J., in State v. Wentworth, 65 Me. 234, 241 ("It is the privilege of crime; the interests of justice would be little promoted by its enlargement").

[19] Post, § 2281.

[20] A reaction against the excesses of the privilege is now to be seen, notably in Wisconsin: Herbert R. Limburg, "The Privilege of the Accused to Refuse to Testify" (American Academy of Political and Social Science, Phila., 1914, vol. LII, No. 141, p. 124); Wisconsin Branch of the American Institute of Criminal Law and Criminology, Report of Committee approving a Bill for a Constitutional Amendment (2d Annual Meeting, 1910, Journal of Criminal Law, etc., I, 808; 3d Annual Meeting, 1911, Journal of Criminal Law, etc., II, 870; quoted supra). See also the constitutional modification in Ohio, made in 1912 (quoted post, § 2252).

§ 2252. [1] Iowa and New Jersey.

[2] The doctrine of State v. Height, 117 Ia. 650, 91 N. W. 935 (1902), that even where no such constitutional clause exists, the privilege is beyond the control of the Legislature, must be regarded as anomalous and unsound; and the attempt, in the same opinion, to read the privilege by implication into the clause of "due process of law" is futile and unhistorical; that clause is already a catch-all, overflowing with misplaced principles, and no 'ex post facto' interpretation can make room in it for the present privilege. But State v. Height is perhaps overruled by Davison v. Guthrie, cited post, § 2282. On the privilege as it obtains in Iowa, the following essay gives a comprehensive survey: Professor D. O. McGovney, "Self-Criminating and Self-Disgracing Testimony; Code Revision Bill," Iowa Law Bulletin, V, 175, March, 1920.

[3] In the following list of enactments, the first under each jurisdiction of the United States is the constitutional clause; specific statutory enactments are also here inserted, though it is clear that their phrasing cannot limit the constitutional provisions; most of the statutes carrying out these provisions occur in connection with clauses qualifying the accused to testify, and will be found ante, § 488.

ENGLAND: 1806, St. 46 Geo. III, c. 37 (quoted ante, § 2223); 1851, St. 14 & 15 Vict. c. 99, § 3 (parties are made compellable in civil cases; but "nothing herein contained shall render any person who in any criminal proceeding is charged with the commission of any indictable offence, or any offence punishable on summary conviction, competent or compellable to give evidence for or against himself or herself or shall render any person compellable to answer any question tending to criminate himself or herself"); St. 1869, 32 & 33 Vict. c. 68, § 3 (adultery; quoted ante, § 488); 1898, St. 61 & 62 Vict. c. 36, § 1 (quoted ante, §§ 194*a*, 488; the interpretation is fully considered ante, § 194*a*); St. 1904, 4 Edw. VII, c. 15, § 12 (cruelty to children; quoted ante, § 488); for the privilege under the English Bankruptcy statute, see post, § 2281.

CANADA: Alta. St. 1910, 2d sess., c. 3, Evidence Act, § 8 (like Eng. St. 1869, 32 & 33 Vict. c. 68, § 3, except that instead of applying to any witness, it applies to "the husband or wife, is competent only under this Act").

B. C. Rev. St. 1911, c. 67, § 27 (divorce; quoted ante, § 488);

N. Br. Consol. St. 1903, c. 127, § 9 (adultery; quoted ante, § 488); § 10 (in general; quoted ante, § 488);

Newf. Consol. St. 1916, c. 91, § 2 (quoted ante, § 488);

N. Sc. Rev. St. 1900, c. 163, § 37 (quoted ante, § 488);

Ont. Rev. St. 1914, c. 76, § 7 (quoted post, § 2281);

P. E. I. St. 1889, c. 9, § 6 (quoted ante, § 488);

Yukon: Consol. Ord. 1914, c. 30, § 37 (like N. Sc. Rev. St. 1900, c. 163, § 37).

But in the Dominion and several Provinces the privilege is abolished, in a few classes of cases, by other statutes (quoted ante, § 488); compare also the statutory removals by prohibition of using the evidence (post, § 2281).

UNITED STATES: Fed. 1789, Amendment V ("No person . . . shall be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself"); Code 1919, § 3114 (privilege declared for naval courts); § 6276 (letters rogatory from a foreign country; quoted post, § 2258); St. 1916, Aug. 29, c. 418, § 3, amending Rev. St. § 1342 (Articles of War; Art. 24 provides that no witness before a court-martial, etc. "shall be compelled to incriminate himself, or to answer any questions which may tend to incriminate or degrade him"); St. 1920, June 4, c. II, 41 Stats. 787 (Articles of War; Art. 24 as amended reads: "any question not material to the issue when such answer might tend to degrade him");
Ala. Art. I, § 6 ("In all criminal prosecutions the accused has a right . . . that he shall not be compelled to give evidence against himself," and he has a right to testify "if he elects to do so");
Alaska: Comp. L. 1913, § 1507 (like Or. Laws 1920, § 870, substituting "criminal prosecution" for "punishment for a felony," and omitting "and the objection," etc.);
Ariz. Art. II, § 7 ("No person shall be compelled in any criminal case to give evidence against himself");
Ark. Art. II, § 8 ("No person shall . . . be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself");
Cal. Art. I, § 13 ("No person shall . . . be compelled, in any criminal case, to be a witness against himself"); C. C. P. 1872, § 2065 (sanctioning the privilege not to give "an answer which will have a tendency to subject him to punishment for a felony"); P. C. §§ 688, 1323 (privilege recognized);
Colo. Art. II, § 18 ("No person shall be compelled to testify against himself in a criminal case");
Conn. Art. I, § 9 ("In all criminal prosecutions, the accused . . . shall not be compelled to give evidence against himself"); Gen. St. 1918, § 5522 ("No person shall be compelled to give evidence against himself except as otherwise provided by the general statutes, nor shall such evidence when given by him be used against him");
Del. Art. I, § 7 ("In all criminal prosecutions, the accused . . . shall not be compelled to give evidence against himself");
Fla. Decl. of R., § 12 ("No person shall be . . . compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself"); Rev. G. S. 1919, § 6080 ("No accused person shall be compelled to give testimony against himself");
Ga. Art. I, § 1, par. 6 ("No person shall be compelled to give testimony tending in any manner to criminate himself"); Rev. C. 1910, §§ 4544, 5877, 6363 (similar, for matters "tending to criminate himself or to expose him to a penalty or forfeiture"); § 4554 (similar, for matters that "tend to criminate himself" or "tend to work a forfeiture of his estate"); P. C. 1910, §§ 9, 1037, par. 3 (privilege stated);
Haw. Rev. L. 1915, § 2613 (quoted ante, § 488);
Ida. Art. I, § 13 ("No person shall be . . . compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself"; so also Comp. St. 1919, § 8623); § 8044 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 2065);
Ill. Art. II, § 10 ("No person shall be compelled in any criminal case to give evidence against himself");
Ind. Art. I, § 14 ("No person, in any criminal prosecution, shall be compelled to testify against himself");
Ia. See the citations supra, note 2;
Kan. Bill of R., § 7 ("No person shall be a witness against himself");
Ky. § 11 ("In all criminal prosecutions the accused . . . cannot be compelled to give evidence against himself");
La. Art. I, § 11 ("No person shall be compelled to give evidence against himself in a criminal case or in any proceeding that may subject him to criminal prosecution, except where otherwise provided in this Constitution"); St. 1916, No. 157 (quoted ante, § 488); C. Pr. 1870, § 136 (witness is guilty of contempt in refusing to answer questions "except such as might lead him to accuse himself of some crime");

Me. Art. I, § 6 ("In all criminal prosecutions, the accused . . . shall not be compelled to furnish or give evidence against himself"); so also Rev. St. 1916, c. 87, § 113, c. 136, § 19;

Md. Decl. of R., Art. 22 ("No man ought to be compelled to give evidence against himself in a criminal case");

Mass. Decl. of R., Art. 12 ("No subject shall . . . be compelled to accuse, or furnish evidence against himself");

Mich. Art. II, § 16 ("No person shall be compelled, in any criminal case, to be a witness against himself"); Comp. L. 1915, § 12547 (the rule abolishing civil privilege shall not be taken to compel "an answer which will have a tendency to accuse himself of any crime or misdemeanor or to expose him to any penalty or forfeiture");

Minn. Art. I, § 7 ("No person . . . shall be compelled in any criminal case to be witness against himself");

Miss. Art. III, § 26 ("In all criminal prosecutions the accused . . . shall not be compelled to give evidence against himself"); Code 1906, § 1923, Hem. § 1583 (privilege applies for matters which will "expose him to criminal prosecution or penalty");

Mo. Art. II, § 23 ("No person shall be compelled to testify against himself in a criminal cause"); Rev. St. 1919, § 5413 (statutes making interested persons competent are not "to compel any person to subject himself by his testimony to any prosecution for a criminal offence");

Mont. Art. III, § 18 ("No person shall be compelled to testify against himself in a criminal proceeding"); Rev. C. 1921, § 10673 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 2065); P. C. § 11613 (no one is compellable "in a criminal action to be a witness against himself"; so also § 12177, "in a criminal action or proceeding"); § 1393 (privilege declared for witnesses before military court);

Nebr. Art. I, § 12 ("No person shall be compelled, in any criminal case, to give evidence against himself"); Rev. St. 1921, § 8844 (privilege declared for matters which "tend to render him criminally liable");

Nev. Art. I, § 8 ("No person shall . . . be compelled, in any criminal case, to be a witness against himself"); Rev. L. 1912, § 6857 (like Const. Art. I, § 8); § 5437 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 2065);

N. H. Part I. Art. 15 ("No subject shall . . . be compelled to accuse or furnish evidence against himself");

N. J. Comp. St. 1910, Evidence, § 8 ("a witness shall not be excused from answering any questions relevant and material to the issue, provided the answers will not expose him to a criminal prosecution or penalty or to a forfeiture of his estate"); § 2 (no party compellable to be sworn in action for penalty or forfeiture; quoted ante, § 488); 1903, State v. Zdanowicz, 69 N. J. L. 620, 55 Atl. 743 ("Although we have not deemed it necessary to insert in our Constitution this prohibitive provision, the common-law doctrine, unaltered by legislation or by lax practice, is by us deemed to have its full force"); 1905, State v. Miller, 71 N. J. L. 527, 60 Atl. 202 (State v. Zdanowicz approved); 1916, Conover v. West Jersey Mortgage Co., 87 N. J. Eq. 16, 99 Atl. 604 (receiver);

N. Mex. Art. II, § 15 ("No person shall be compelled to testify against himself in a criminal proceeding"); Annot. St. 1915, § 2170 (no person is compellable "to answer any question to criminate himself or to subject him to prosecution for any penalty or crime");

N. Y. Art. I, § 6 ("No person shall . . . be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself"; so also C. Cr. P. 1881, § 10, and Rev. St., I, 94, § 13); C. P. A. 1920, § 355 (the clause negativing a privilege against answers involving civil liability "does not require a witness to give an answer which will tend to accuse himself of a crime or to expose him to a penalty or forfeiture");

N. C. Art. I, § 11 ("In all criminal prosecutions, every man has the right . . . not to be compelled to give evidence against himself"; so also Con. St. 1919, § 1799);

N. Dak. Art. I, § 13 ("No person shall . . . be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself"); Comp. L. 1913, § 10395 (similar, "in a criminal action");

Ohio: Const. 1851, Art. I, § 10, as amended 1912 ("No person shall be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself; but his failure to testify may be considered by the court and jury and may be the subject of comment by counsel");

Okl. Art. II, § 21 ("No person shall be compelled to give evidence which will tend to criminate himself except as in this Constitution specifically provided"); § 27 (immunity; quoted post, § 2281); Comp. St. 1921, § 2351 ("No person can be compelled in a criminal action to be a witness against himself");

Or. Art. I, § 12 ("No person shall . . . be compelled in any criminal prosecution to testify against himself"); Laws 1920, § 870 (a witness "need not give an answer which will have a direct tendency to subject him to punishment for felony, or to degrade his character, unless in the latter case it be as to the very fact in issue or to a fact from which the fact in issue would be presumed. This privilege is the privilege of the witness, and the objection cannot be made by a party or his attorney; but a witness must answer as to the fact of his previous conviction for felony");

1. This variety of phrasing, then, neither enlarges nor narrows the scope of the privilege as already accepted, understood, and judicially developed in the common law.[4] The detailed rules are to be determined by the logical requirements of the principle, regardless of the particular words of a particular constitution. This doctrine, which has universal judicial acceptance,[5] leads to several important consequences:

(a) A clause exempting a person from being "a witness against himself" protects as well a witness as a party accused in the cause; that is, it is immaterial whether the prosecution is then and there "against himself" or not.[6]

Pa. Art. I, § 9 ("In all criminal prosecutions, the accused . . . cannot be compelled to give evidence against himself"); Pub. L. 1887, p. 158, § 10 ("Except defendants actually upon trial in a criminal court, any competent witness may be compelled to testify in any proceeding civil or criminal; but he may not be compelled to answer any question which in the opinion of the trial judge would tend to criminate him");
P. I. U. S. St. 1902, July 1, Philippines Act, § 5 ("No person shall be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself"); St. 1916, Aug. 29, c. 416, § 3, 39 Stats. 546, Code 1919, § 4112 (similar); P. I. Act 1130, § 1, amended by Act 1243, § 1 (privilege recognized, for civilian witnesses before a general court-martial or naval court); P. C. 1911, Gen. Order 58 of 1900, § 15 (privilege recognized for the accused); § 56 (a witness "need not give an answer which will have a tendency to subject him to punishment for felony"); 1904, U. S. v. Navarro, 3 P. I. 143 (U. S. 1902, July 1, § 5, enacting the privilege for the Philippine Islands, and Gen. Order 58 of 1900, replace any prior rule to the contrary);
P. R. U. S. St. 1917, Mar. 2, Organic Act, § 2, 39 Stats. 951, Code 1919, § 4043 (privilege recognized); P. R. Rev. St. & C. 1911, § 1532 (like Cal. C. C. P. § 2065); 1902, Re Decker, 1 P. R. Fed. 381 (the Fifth Amendment held effective in Porto Rico, "because it is a principle of natural justice woven into the web and woof of our form of government"; a sounder reason is that the rule is a part of the common law in Federal courts);
R. I. Art. I, § 13 ("No man in a court of common law shall be compelled to give evidence criminating himself");
S. C. Art. I, § 17 ("Nor shall any person . . . be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself"); C. C. Pr. 1922, § 967 ("No person shall be required to answer any question tending to criminate himself");
S. Dak. Art. VI, § 9 ("No person shall be compelled in any criminal case to give evidence against himself"); Rev. C. 1919, § 4412 (not compellable in a "criminal action" to "be a witness against himself");
Tenn. Art. I, § 9 ("In all criminal prosecutions, the accused . . . shall not be compelled to give evidence against himself");
Tex. Art. I, § 10, Rev. C. Cr. P. 1911, § 4 ("In all criminal prosecutions, the accused . . . shall not be compelled to give evidence against himself");
Utah: Art. I, § 12 ("The accused shall not be compelled to give evidence against himself"; so also Comp. L. 1917, §§ 7141, 8555); (no answer is compellable which would tend to "subject him to punishment for felony");
Vt. Ch. I, Art. 3 ("In all prosecutions for criminal offences, . . . nor can he be compelled to give evidence against himself"); Gen. L. 1917, § 1900 ("The provisions of the preceding sections shall not affect the law relating to the attestation of the execution of last wills and testaments, or of any other instrument, or compel a person to subject himself by his testimony to a prosecution for a criminal offense"); § 3541 (family-desertion; privilege maintained);
Va. Art. I, § 8 ("nor shall any man be compelled in any criminal proceeding to give evidence against himself");
Wash. Art. I, § 9 ("No person shall be compelled in any criminal case to give evidence against himself");
W. Va. Art. III, § 5 ("Nor shall any person, in any criminal case, be compelled to be a witness against himself");
Wis. Art. I, § 8 ("No person . . . shall be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself"); Stats. 1919, § 4077 (this privilege re-stated, in a statute repudiating privilege for answers involving civil liability);
Wyo. Art. I, § 11 ("No person shall be compelled to testify against himself in any criminal case"); Comp. St. 1920, § 7507 (defendant in criminal case).

[4] 1853, Scott, J., in State v. Quarles, 13 Ark. 307, 311 ("No one, be he witness or accused, can pretend to claim it beyond its scope at the common law"); 1892, Counselman v. Hitchcock, 142 U. S. 547, 584, 586, 12 Sup. 195 ("There is really, in spirit and in principle, no distinction arising out of such difference of language").

[5] For a slight qualification of this statement, see post, § 2281.

[6] 1892, Counselman v. Hitchcock, 142 U. S. 547, 562, 12 Sup. 195; 1871, Com. v. Emery, 107 Mass. 171, 181; 1861, People v. Kelly, 24 N. Y. 74, 81 (a constitution prohibiting compulsion "in any criminal case to be a witness against himself" prohibits also self-

So also a clause exempting "the accused" protects equally a mere witness.[7]

(b) A clause exempting from self-criminating testimony "in criminal cases" protects equally in civil cases, when the fact asked for is a criminal one.[8]

(c) The protection, under all clauses, extends to all manner of proceedings in which testimony is to be taken, whether litigious or not, and whether 'ex parte' or otherwise. It therefore applies in all kinds of courts [9] (including juvenile courts, when constituted as criminal courts[10]), in all methods of interrogation before a court,[11] in investigations by a grand jury,[12] and in investigations by a legislature or a body having legislative functions.[13] crimination when called as a witness against another person); 1911, Com. v. Cameron, 229 Pa. 592, 79 Atl. 169, semble; 1873, Cullen v. Com., 24 Gratt. Va. 624, 628.

[7] 1853, State v. Quarles, 13 Ark. 307, 310.

[8] 1896, Ex parte Senior, 37 Fla. 1, 19 So. 652; 1860, Wilkins v. Malone, 14 Ind. 153; 1913, Karel v. Conlan, 155 Wis. 221, 144 N. W. 268 (civil action for damages based on criminal conspiracy to libel — whatever that may mean; privilege sustained; but it is incomprehensible how the Court was induced to spend eight pages discussing as arguable such an elementary question, never judicially doubted for a century; it will not do for Courts to re-open settled questions whenever ignorant or daring counsel stir up a dust by citing a score of irrelevant cases; note, too, that the opinion misunderstands the point ruled in People v. Kelly, N. Y., supra, in stating that it held the privilege not applicable to a witness who was not a defendant; the Kelly case involved the effect of an immunity statute, as may be seen from the quotation post, § 2282).

[9] 1832, Swift v. Swift, 4 Hagg. Eccl. 139, 154 (ecclesiastical courts).

The question whether a notary or examiner, authorized to take depositions, has the power at all to enforce answers by process of contempt, is a different one, and involves the constitutional distribution of judicial functions; some authorities have been elsewhere cited (ante, § 2195).

[10] 1920, Ex parte Tahbel, — Cal. App. —, 189 Pac. 804 (habeas corpus for a boy of 15 committed to the detention home by the judge of the juvenile court; a petition to adjudge the boy a court ward was pending, on the ground of the immorality of his parents and of his having committed perjury and forgery in a trial involving his parents; an order was made leaving him in his father's custody, and then he was called before a referee to testify; he refused, on the ground of self-crimination; he was then committed to the detention home "until he does answer said questions"; held that the order violated the privilege; the opinion however erroneously refers to the boy's privilege as his "prerogative"; there are no "prerogatives" in the Bill of Rights, for that was the result of a popular struggle against prerogatives; moreover the opinion needlessly invokes sentiment about "the protecting Aegis of the Constitution"; the strong probability was that the Juvenile Court was engaged in a justifiable effort to get this youth away from the control of a band of fakirs, and the sympathies of the entire judicial system and of the community should have been on their side; it was simply a case where a wise constitutional rule obstructed temporarily a beneficent aim).

But when the juvenile court is constituted (as in Illinois and elsewhere) with chancery powers, and not as a criminal court, there is no ground for holding that its procedure as to the juvenile himself may be obstructed by this privilege. In some States a statute (ante, § 194*a*) especially forbids the use of a finding against the juvenile afterwards as a conviction of crime.

[11] 1864, Pye v. Butterfield, 5 B. & S. 829, 837 (statutory interrogatories to a party).

For contempt, see post, § 2257.

[12] Fed. 1892, Counselman v. Hitchcock, 142 U. S. 547, 563, 12 Sup. 195; 1905, Re Hale, 139 Fed. 496, 500; 1906, Hale v. Henkel, 201 U. S. 43, 26 Sup. 370; Ky. 1911, Bentler v. Com., 143 Ky. 503, 136 S. W. 896; Minn. 1871, State v. Froiseth, 16 Minn. 296; Mo. 1909, State v. Naughton, 221 Mo. 398, 120 S. W. 53; N. Y. 1861, People v. Kelly, 24 N. Y. 74, 78; Oh. 1913, State v. Cox, 87 Oh. 313, 101 N. E. 135; Okl. 1913, Scribner v. State, 9 Okl. Cr. 465, 132 Pac. 933 (Okl. Const. Bill of Rights § 27 applies to testimony before a grand jury); Pa. 1911, Com. v. Bolger, 229 Pa. 597, 79 Atl. 113 (testimony before grand jury; the defendant's offer held not explicit enough in its statement of the alleged violation of the privilege); Tex. 1899, Wilson v. State, 41 Tex. Cr. 115, 51 S. W. 916.

Whether an indictment should be quashed for violating the rule before the grand jury, is a different question, on which opinions have varied; 1909, Pendleton v. U. S., 216 U. S. 305, [13] 1871, Com. v. Emery, 107 Mass. 171, 182.

2. The Federal Fifth Amendment of course applies in Federal trials only.[14] Nor does the Federal Fourteenth Amendment make the provisions of the fifth Amendment in the present respect a privilege and immunity of citizens of the United States so as to be protected and reviewable by the Federal Supreme Court, as against a violation by a State.[15]

2. Kinds of Facts protected from Disclosure

§ 2254. Civil Liability. The facts protected from disclosure are distinctly facts involving a criminal liability or its equivalent. Hence, facts involving a civil liability are entirely without the scope of the privilege. No question would probably ever have arisen in this respect, but for a ruling (possibly misreported) of Lord Kenyon in 1795,[1] whence proceeded a ripple, and then a wave, of doubt. This doubt was, however, shortly put at rest in England by a legislative declaration, based on the answers of the judges interrogated for the purpose.[2] In the United States the doubt was before long considered and duly repudiated in all the earlier courts; but an echo of it lingered for a generation or more, and so a similar legislative enactment has been repeated in many jurisdictions.[3]

§ 2255. Infamy or Disgrace. The privilege against disclosing facts involving disgrace or infamy (i. e. irrespective of criminality) began to be recognized later than the privilege against self-crimination and independently of it. Its 30 Sup. 315 (where the prosecuting attorney in the Philippines summoned the accused to answer questions, but the answers were not "afterwards used in any way"); 1885, Mackin v. People, 115 Ill. 312, 3 N. E. 222; 1894, Boone v. People, 148 Ill. 440, 36 N. E. 99; 1890, People v. Lander, 82 Mich. 109, 46 N. W. 956; 1902, State v. Gardner, 88 Minn. 130, 92 N. W. 529; 1903, Lindsey v. State, 69 Oh. 215, 69 N. E. 126 (good opinion by Spear, J.); 1922, Burke v. State, — Oh. —, 135 N. E. 644; 1905, State v. Duncan, 78 Vt. 364, 63 Atl. 225; 1913, State v. Lloyd, 152 Wis. 24, 139 N. W. 514.

[14] 1905, Ex parte Munn, 140 Fed. 782 (the Federal Fifth Amendment cannot be invoked by one committed by a State court for refusal to answer); 1920, Com. v. Leventhal, 236 Mass. 516, 128 N. E. 864 (collecting authorities).

For the Territories, see note 3, supra, under Philippines and Porto Rico.

[15] This was for a while expressly left undecided: 1904, Adams v. New York, 192 U. S. 585, 24 Sup. 372; 1908, Consolidated Rendering Co. v. Vermont, 207 U. S. 541, 28 Sup. 178. But it is now settled: 1908, Twining v. New Jersey, 211 U. S. 78, 29 Sup. 14 (indictment for exhibiting to a bank examiner a false paper, namely, a record of a directors' meeting showing the defendants T. and C. to be present, etc.; the judge charged the jury that C.'s failure to take the stand to deny the testimony that they were present, etc., might be considered for the purpose "of drawing an inference of guilt"; the Federal Court held, in an opinion by Moody, J., (1) that the law of New Jersey, as there judicially construed, "permitted such an inference to be drawn"; (2) that the U. S. Const. Amendment V was not operative for State law; (3) that under the U. S. Const. Amendment XIV, preserving the "privileges and immunities of citizens of the U. S." against impairment by State law, the privilege against self-crimination was not included; (4) that it was also not included in the same Amendment's guarantee of "due process of law"; the opinion contains a careful summary of the legislative history of the privilege in the Colonies; Harlan, J., diss.).

§ 2254. [1] Bain v. Hargrave, Peake, Evidence, 184, note (quoted ante, § 2223).

[2] 1806, St. 46 Geo. III, c. 37 (quoted ante, § 2223). For the peculiar statutes in Canada (Dominion and Ontario), abolishing the privilege as to civil liability in certain cases, see ante, § 2223, n. 7.

[3] The history of the doubt, the judicial rulings, and the statutes, have already been fully examined ante, § 2223. The line of distinction, however, which it thus becomes necessary to draw between civil liability and criminal liability, can best be observed in connection with the subsequent sections (§§ 2256, 2257) dealing with forfeitures and penalties as the subject of the present privilege; for bankruptcy questions, see post, §§ 2260, 2282.

limitations were entirely distinct, in that it did not cover facts merely "tending" to disclose infamy, and did not apply to facts material to the issues (but only to "collateral" facts, i. e. practically, to facts solely affecting credibility). Its history and scope have been already examined (ante, §§ 984–987). In English practice the two privileges — concerning infamy and concerning criminality — were never confused; and while the former has gradually fallen into desuetude, the latter has never been allowed to abate its strength. In this country, constitutional sanction was given to the latter with practical unanimity; but there never was any suggestion, in express proposal or in apparent phrasing, thus to recognize the former;[1] and here, as in England, it has in most jurisdictions come to be ignored, and is replaced by judicial restriction of cross-examination to character.

No further notice of it would here be needed, but for an egregious misconception exhibited in the course of the controversy culminating in the case of Brown v. Walker, in the Federal Court (post, § 2281). That misconception employs the argument that a statutory amnesty for a crime cannot annul the privilege against self-crimination, because the disgrace at least remains. It thus rests upon the assumption that the present constitutional privilege has the function of protecting against the disclosure not only of criminality but also of disgrace:

1896, FIELD, J., dissenting, in Brown v. Walker, 161 U. S. 591, 16 Sup. 594: "It is contended, indeed, that it was not the object of the constitutional safeguard to protect the witness against infamy and disgrace. It is urged that its sole purpose was to protect him against incriminating testimony with reference to the offense under prosecution. But we do not agree that such limited protection was all that was secured. As stated by counsel of the appellant, 'it is entirely possible, and certainly not impossible, that the framers of the Constitution reasoned that, in bestowing upon witnesses in criminal cases the privilege of silence when in danger of self-incrimination, they would at the same time save him in all such cases from the shame and infamy of confessing disgraceful crimes, and thus preserve to him some measure of self-respect. . . . It is true, as counsel observes, that both the safeguard of the Constitution and the common-law rule spring alike from that sentiment of personal self-respect, liberty, independence, and dignity which has inhabited the breasts of English-speaking peoples for centuries, and to save which they have always been ready to sacrifice many governmental facilities and conveniences. In scarcely anything has that sentiment been more manifest than in the abhorrence felt at the legal compulsion upon witnesses to make concessions which must cover the witness with lasting shame, and leave him degraded both in his own eyes and those of others. What can be more abhorrent . . . than to compel a man who has fought his way from obscurity to dignity and honor to reveal crimes of which he had repented, and of which the world was ignorant?' The essential and inherent cruelty of compelling a man to expose his own guilt is obvious to everyone, and needs no illustration. . . . The counsel for the appellant justly observes that 'the proud sense of personal independence which is the basis of the most valued qualities of a free citizen is sustained and cultivated by the consciousness that there are limits which even the State cannot pass in tearing open the secrets of his bosom.'"[2]

§ 2255. [1] Except, apparently, once, in an early opinion speaking 'obiter': 1802, Shippen, C. J., in Respublica v. Gibbs, 3 Yeates, Pa. 429, 437, 4 Dall. Pa. 253.

The same reasoning had already been advanced by Grosscup, J., in U. S. v. James, 60 Fed. 257, a case involving the same issue.

The notion exhibited in this passage ignores the independence in principle, in details, and in history, of the two privileges. Its 'reductio ad absurdum' is that if the privilege concerning criminality has such a scope when criminality has been expunged, leaving only turpitude, then it has also that scope when criminality never arose, if turpitude was apparent; unless we avow that there is no turpitude except as involved in criminality, and if so, how could the other privilege against the disclosure of turpitude ever have arisen? The opinion also makes the broad assumption that every criminality also involves turpitude, — the fallacy of which is seen plainly enough in the very case giving rise to the opinion; for who could, without absurdity, predicate that the disclosure of a pardoned rate-discrimination by a leading merchant or a powerful railroad official would, in the language of the opinion, "cover the witness with lasting shame and leave him degraded both in his own eyes and those of others"? It is, to be sure, of little avail to suggest reasons against a view which ignores all precedent and all history. It is simple enough to create a constitutional doctrine 'instanter', if we may snatch it, like a magician's white rabbit, full-grown, out of empty space, and place it living and panting before the astonied spectators. But such is not the accepted judicial habit.

Quite apart from the errors of logic and of history, a greater fault in the opinion above quoted is its singular appeal to false sentiment. Such abuse of words is merely pathos. To invoke the sentiments of lofty indignation and of courageous self-respect against the arbitrary methods of royal tyrants and religious bigots, holding an inquisition to enforce cruel decrees of the prerogative, and torturing their victims with rack and stake, is fitting and laudable, and moves men with a just sympathy. But to apply the same terms to the orderly everyday processes of the witness-stand, in a community governing itself in freedom by the will of the majority and having on its statute-book no law which was not put there by itself and cannot be repealed to-morrow, — a community, moreover, cursed above others by constant evasion of the law and by over-laxity of criminal procedure, — this is to maltreat language, to enervate virile ideas, to abuse true sentiment, to degrade the Constitution, and to make hopeless the correct adjustment of the best motives of human nature to the facts of life. Were it not so serious in its implications, it would be as ludicrous a spectacle as if one were to devote a colossal fortune to founding a hospital for the care of ablebodied vagrants, or to recite Milton's Ode to the Nativity at the birth of a favorite feline's litter.

The doctrine of the minority opinion in Brown v. Walker rests on a misconception so radical that only the exalted source of its promulgation makes it necessary to be thus noticed. Judges in other Courts have repeatedly repudiated that misconception when advanced at the Bar.[3] In the following passages the discrimination between the two privileges is plainly expounded:

[3] For other opinions pointing out the distinction, see the following: 1895, Buffington, J., in Brown v. Walker, 70 Fed. 46; 1857, Burnett, J., in Ex parte Rowe, 7 Cal. 184; 1884, Fauntleroy, J., in Kendrick v. Com., 78 Va. 490, 496 ("The Courts of Virginia will not recognize the Spartan morality which deprecates not the perpetration but only the exposure of crime").

1830, MARCY, J., in People v. Mather, 4 Wend. 229, 252: "The distinction which I have endeavored to point out between the rule which protects the witness from being compelled to proclaim his own infamy, and that which secures him when on the stand from becoming the unwilling instrument of his own conviction, is not new or unsupported by authority. . . . The object of the two rules I have been considering is very different. The one saves the witness from being the herald of his own infamy; the other from himself furnishing the means of his punishment. The confounding of these rules would in my opinion produce a strange result."

1896, BROWN, J., in Brown v. Walker, 161 U. S. 591, 16 Sup. 644: "The fact that the testimony may tend to degrade the witness in public estimation does not exempt him from the duty of disclosure. A person who commits a criminal act is bound to contemplate the consequences of exposure to his good name and reputation, and ought not to call upon the Courts to protect that which he has himself esteemed to be of such little value. The safety and welfare of an entire community should not be put into the scale against the reputation of a self-confessed criminal, who ought not, either in justice or in good morals, to refuse to disclose that which may be of great public utility, in order that his neighbors may think well of him. The design of the constitutional privilege is not to aid the witness in vindicating his character, but to protect him against being compelled to furnish evidence to convict him of a criminal charge. If he secure legal immunity from prosecution, the possible impairment of his good name is a penalty which it is reasonable he should be compelled to pay for the common good. If it be once conceded that the fact that his testimony may tend to bring the witness into disrepute, though not to incriminate him, does not entitle him to the privilege of silence, it necessarily follows that, if it also tends to incriminate, but at the same time operates as a pardon for the offense, the fact that the disgrace remains no more entitles him to immunity in this case than in the other. . . . The danger of extending the principle announced in Counselman v. Hitchcock is that the privilege may be put forward for a sentimental reason, or for a purely fanciful protection of the witness against an imaginary danger, and for the real purpose of securing immunity to some third person, who is interested in concealing the facts to which he would testify. Every good citizen is bound to aid in the enforcement of the law, and has no right to permit himself, under the pretext of shielding his own good name, to be made the tool of others, who are desirous of seeking shelter behind his privilege."

§ 2256. Criminal Liability: (a) Forfeiture. Where a right of property is divested, or a liability to pay money to another person is created, by way of a retribution for misconduct done, or of a deterrent from misconduct apprehended, the effect is in spirit penal; and the disclosure of such facts should therefore be protected by the privilege. The distinction between a penalty and a sum fixed in preappointed liquidation of damages is familiar in equitable practice, and suggests here an analogy. So, too, in property rights, the distinction between an invalid divestiture of an estate as a penalty for marriage, and a grant conditioned upon non-marriage, may be of some service. But, in the end, the canon of difference remains elusive, and can hardly be phrased with nicety.

The judicial interpretation has always leaned to liberality, — partly, perhaps, because of some early cases [1] concerning the ecclesiastical Courts, and occurring before the establishment of the common-law privilege, wherein was involved merely the struggle against the jurisdiction of those Courts; [2] partly, also, because of the time-honored maxim of equitable practice never to aid a forfeiture, in consequence of which the boundary between relief and discovery remained confused and the rule for the former (which was independent of criminality) tended to enlarge the limits of the privilege for the latter.[3] Where the loss of a right is inflicted by statute, there is a greater semblance of penal policy; the distinction was indeed once taken between "a determination by the party himself and a determination by act of Parliament." [4] Yet this feature of public or legislative policy is equally present in the incapacity of an alien, which nevertheless is not within the privilege; [5] so that this distinction also lacks uniform efficacy.

At the present day, the kinds of forfeiture which furnished the precedents are comparatively rare, and it is difficult to say what the line of judicial definition would be. Most of the precedents come down from the 1700s. They concern forfeitures of ecclesiastical livings dealt with in violation of the statute against simony; [6] of property-titles by virtue of statutory incapacity as a papist, [7] or as an alien; [8] of public office, by virtue of statutory incapacity § 2256. [1] 1611, Clifford v. Huntly, Rolle's Abr. "Prohibition," (T) 6, Jura Ecclesiastica, 427, pl. 7 (obligation assumed, 'pendente lite' on a marriage contract, not to marry or cohabit with another; examination in the ecclesiastical Court as to such marriage afterwards refused, "for that tends to the forfeiture of the obligation"); 1615, Bradston's Case, Rolle, ubi supra, (T) 1, Jura Ecclesiastica, 355, pl. 9 (a layman, who is to forfeit a penalty either by statute or otherwise, cannot be examined on oath in the ecclesiastical Court as to the offence causing the forfeiture).

[2] The history of this has already been examined (ante, § 2250).

[3] This is noticeable in most of the rulings of the 1700s, cited infra, which arose in equity on bills of discovery. Compare also the history in § 2250.

[4] Boteler v. Allington, infra, note 6.

[5] Infra, note 8.

[6] 1746, Boteler v. Allington, 3 Atk. 453, 457 (clerical living; the acceptance of a second living operating by law to vacate the first under certain conditions, the defendant was held privileged from discovery, the distinction being between "a determination by the party himself and a determination by act of Parliament"); 1755, Grey v. Hesketh, 1 Ambl. 268 (sale of an advowson during a vacancy, held not within the penalties of the statute of simony, though void at common law; and thus not privileged from discovery); 1831, Southall v. ———, 1 Younge 308, 316 (discovery as to a simoniacal contract; the fact that the defendant was only patron and trustee of the living to be forfeited, held not to effect his privilege).

[7] 1736, Smith v. Read, 1 Atk. 526 (discovery refused as to defendant's devisor being a papist and consequently disabled to take the estate; "there is no difference between a forfeiture of a thing vested and a disability to take inflicted as a penalty; . . . in the case of aliens, bastards, etc., there is a difference, where the disability arises from the rules of law and where it is imposed as a penalty"); 1751, Harrison v. Southcote, 2 Ves. Sr. 389, 1 Atk. 528, 539 (discovery not compelled whether defendant's vendor was a papist, a forfeiture of the estate under statute being involved).

[8] 1753, Duplessis v. Attorney-General, 1 Brown P. C. 415, 420 (an alien's incapacity to take land by purchase is not a "penalty or forfeiture," and therefore not privileged from discovery; "here is no loss, no forfeiture, no right to be divested; for the appellant took nothing originally, but for the benefit of the Crown");

Whether deportation proceedings are criminal has been the subject of diverse rulings: 1903, U. S. v. Hung Chang, 126 Fed. 400, 405 (deportation of a Chinese; the person arrested for deportation is not compellable to testify); 1904, Ark Foo v. U. S., 128 Fed. 697, 63 C. C. A. 249, semble (similar); 1904, U. S. v. Hung Chang, 134 Fed. 19, 25, 67 C. C. A. 93 (deportation of aliens is not a criminal proceeding; the respondent alien's refusal to testify may be the subject of inference against him); 1906, or punishment;[9] of various other interests under statutory prohibitions;[10] and of estates prescribed in a will or deed to be divested by forfeiture as distinguished from conditional limitation.[11]

Where the forfeiture enures solely to the party seeking disclosure, it is obvious that he has it in his power (supposing it to be consistent with his in-

Low Foon Yin v. U. S., 145 Fed. 791, C. C. A. (proceedings for deportation of an alien are not criminal, so as to privilege the defendant); 1906, Low Chin Woon v. U. S., 147 Fed. 727, C. C. A. (Low Foon Yin v. U. S. followed); 1908, U. S. v. Tom Wah, D. C. N. D. N. Y., 160 Fed. 207 (Low Foon Yin v. U. S. followed; the opinion remarks: "This precise question has been passed upon . . . in Fong Yue Ting v. U. S.," cited ante, § 1355; but quaere this statement).

[9] Eng. 1744, Honeywood v. Selwin, 3 Atk. 276 (bond to pay money during enjoyment of office; defendant, being a member of Parliament, held privileged from discovery, because by statute the acceptance of other office vacated a seat in Parliament); U. S. 1802, Respublica v. Gibbs, 3 Yeates Pa. 429, 437 (questions involving incapacity as an elector or juror, in punishment for treason, held privileged); 1917, Hawley v. Wallace, 137 Wis. 183, 163 N. W. 127 (aldermanic election contest, to avoid an election for violation by the contestee of the corrupt practices statute; the contestee held privileged from testifying to a penal violation of the statute, but not from taking the stand and being cross-examined subject to that privilege; "an election contest is in its general characteristics a civil proceeding"; careful opinion by Dibell, C., with a full survey of authorities).

Compare the cases under removal from office, post, § 2257.

[10] Eng. 1735, Sharp v. Carter, 3 P. Wms. 375 (statutory forfeiture for contracting to sell controverted rights, held privileged); 1840, Sloman v. Kelly, 1 Y. & C. Exch. 169 (discovery in aid of defendant, pleading illegal gaming as a defence to an action on securities given; held, that the inability to recover upon such securities was not a forfeiture); 1843, Attorney-General v. Lucas, 2 Hare 566 (information for forfeiture of an interest in a wife's property under statute; discovery refused); Can. 1904, Attorney-General v. Toronto J. R. Club, 7 Ont. L. R. 248 (proceeding to revoke a club's charter and enjoin its continuance, for maintaining a betting-house; discovery refused, a forfeiture being involved); U. S. 1900, La Bourgogne, 104 Fed. 823 (loss of a ship-owner's limitation of civil liability under statutes is not a forfeiture); 1827, Northrop v. Hatch, 6 Conn. 361 (statutory forfeiture, prescribed for a fraudulent conveyance, of "one year's value of the land"; privilege applied); 1831, Skinner v. Judson, 8 Conn. 528, 535 (same); 1820, Livingston v. Tompkins, 4 Johns. Ch. N. Y. 415, 432, semble (statutory cessation of a grant of a navigation charter, on the happening of an external event, held a forfeiture); 1832, Livingston v. Harris, 3 Paige N. Y. 528, 533 (forfeiture under a usury statute; privilege applied); 1839, Perrine v. Striker, 7 Paige N. Y. 598, 601 (forfeiture of a debt, as penalty for usury, is covered by the privilege).

[11] Eng. 1742, Chauncey v. Tahourden, 2 Atk. 392 (legacy to A at the age of 21 or day of marriage; but if she marries without B's consent, then over to another; discovery privileged, as involving a forfeiture); 1745, Lucas v. Evans, 3 Atk. 260 (gift with limitation over on a second marriage; the fact of the second marriage held not privileged); 1753, Jordan v. Holkham, 1 Ambl. 209 (gift with limitation over on a second marriage, held a forfeiture); 1850, Hambrook v. Smith, 17 Sim. 209, 217 (estate to A during life or until bankruptcy or alienation, and then to another person; held, a conditional limitation, and the condition not privileged from discovery); 1856, Chester v. Wortley, 17 C. B. 410, 426 (ejectment, for breach of covenant in lease; not decided); 1862, Blyth v. L'Estrange, 3 F. & F. 154 (ejectment for forfeiture of a copyhold; interrogatories refused); 1864, Pye v. Butterfield, 5 B. & S. 829, 837 (fact of underletting, as a ground for forfeiture of a lease, privileged from discovery; the privilege covers "forfeiture of estate, except where the estate is held on a conditional limitation, in which case it would be extinguished on non-performance of the condition; this may be a fine-drawn distinction, but whatever we may think of the rule, it is too well established to admit of doubt"); 1897, Earl of Mexborough v. Whitwood U. D. Council, 2 Q. B. 111 (privilege applied, in an action for forfeiture of a lease by breach of covenant against underletting; Pye v. Butterfield followed); Ire. 1904, Miller v. Commissioners, L. R. 2 Ire. 421 (conditional limitation, and forfeiture, distinguished); U. S. 1828, Horsburg v. Baker, 1 Pet. 232, a bill for discovery, in aid of a forfeiture of property under a deed and a will, was sanctioned, without apparently considering this principle.

But note that in Canada, under the statutes quoted post, § 2281, abolishing the privilege in part, by the immunity method, the privilege is held to be no longer applicable to prevent discovery in civil cases involving penalties and forfeitures.

terest) to obtain the disclosure by a waiver of the forfeiture; and this expedient effectually nullifies the privilege.[12]

§ 2257. Same: (b) Penalty. The distinction between a penalty and a forfeiture is a shadowy one; though both are in essence contrasted with a civil liability. A penalty may be defined as a liability to pay money or to yield up a public privilege by way of punishment imposed by law.

(1) When the penalty lies in the yielding up of a privilege, a distinction therefore seems proper between inflicting a punishment and restraining the continued improper exercise of functions. The process of impeachment of an official seems to fall in the former class;[1] but most other processes of removal or restraint (including disbarment) would ordinarily come within the latter description.[2] When the penalty lies in the payment of money, it seems clear that a mere unregulated increase of compensation under the name of exemplary damages is still a civil liability in essence; and therefore the same consequence ought to follow when by statute a fixed sum, or a multiple based on actual loss, is prescribed.[3]

In any case, the form of the proceeding is not decisive, for in the name of the State a proceeding essentially civil is sometimes conducted;[4] and, conversely, a specific penalty for wrongdoing is sometimes made recoverable at [12] 1719, East India Co. v. Atkins, 1 Stra. 168, 175 (but the waiver must show plainly that he has disentitled himself to enforce the penalty); 1793, Wools v. Walley, 1 Anstr. 100 (bill for tithes; plaintiff's waiver of treble-value penalty, held to require discovery); 1747, Uxbridge v. Staveland, 1 Ves. Sr. 56 (lease); 1867, U. S. of America v. McRae, L. R. 4 Eq. 327, 334, 340.

§ 2257. [1] 1895, Thruston v. Clark, 107 Cal. 285, 40 Pac. 436 (proceedings for removal from office under Penal Code § 772; privilege applied).

[2] 1922, Attorney-General v. Pelletier, 240 Mass. 264, 134 N. E. 406 (information to remove a district attorney for misconduct in office; privilege held not applicable); 1900, State v. Standard Oil Co., 61 Nebr. 28, 84 N. W. 413 (statutory proceeding to enjoin a foreign corporation from violating the anti-trust law and to revoke its license, held not a criminal proceeding); 1899, Re Randel, 158 N. Y. 216, 52 N. E. 1106 (disbarment proceedings; privilege not applied); 1917, Re Rouss, 221 N. Y. 81, 116 N. E. 782 (an attorney in proceedings for disbarment, held not immune from discipline by reason of having testified for the prosecution on an indictment affecting his client's case; the present question not decided).

[3] 1899, Southern R. Co. v. Bush, 122 Ala. 470, 26 So. 168 (in an action for death, the damages, though punitive and not compensatory, are not a penalty, and the privilege does not apply to the defendant); 1895, Levy v. Superior Court, 105 Cal. 600, 38 Pac. 965 (administrator's citation of one charged with concealing and embezzling the estate of the deceased; the statute provided for double damages; an order of compulsory examination was held proper, the statute being remedial, not penal; McFarland and DeHaven, JJ., diss.); 1892, Boyle v. Smithman, 146 Pa. 255, 274, 23 Atl. 397 (action to recover penalties for not posting a statement of business done, under a statute declaring that the defendant "shall forfeit and pay" one thousand dollars for each act; privilege applied).

Contra: 1682, Anon., 1 Vern. 60 (bill for tithes; discovery declined, as a treble penalty was collectible; principle apparently sanctioned); 1916, Speidel Co. v. Barstow Co., D. C. R. I., 232 Fed. 617 (where a statute imposes triple damages for infringement of a patent, interrogatories for discovery under Equity Rule 58 are privileged from answer); 1921, Wilson v. Union Tool Co., D. C. S. D. Cal., 275 Fed. 624 (treble damages for infringement of a patent); 1890, Logan v. R. Co., 132 Pa. 403, 406, 409, 19 Atl. 137 (discovery of papers, refused for the purpose of recovering a penalty of treble damages for discrimination in carriers' rates, but allowed for recovering an excess of freight-money unjustly paid).

[4] 1896, Miller v. State, 110 Ala. 69, 20 So. 392 (bastardy proceedings not being a criminal case, the defendant's failure to take the stand was therefore held the proper subject of comment); 1895, State v. Collins, 68 N. H. 299, 44 Atl. 495 (proceeding to enjoin a liquor nuisance; defendant's failure to testify is open to inference).

the suit of an informer or other person by way of encouraging detection and prosecution.[5]

(2) In a civil case, it often happens that a main part of the issue concerns conduct which is also criminal; but the privilege protects nevertheless. The mere fact that a civil liability also inheres in the same act does not override the criminal liability; for it would not be possible to disclose the former without also disclosing the latter. This application of the principle causes hardship to civil parties who are in no wise interested in the criminal aspect of their opponents' conduct and yet are by that circumstance balked of discovery of their civil wrongs; but the doctrine is unquestioned. It finds illustration in civil suits involving libel,[6] adultery and the like,[7] fraud,[8] bank-

[5] In these cases so much depends often upon the details of the statute that the decision, in the earlier English cases, is not worth noting in full:

England: 1749, East India Co. v. Campbell, 1 Ves. Sr. 246 (penalties recoverable by East India Co. against infringers of their monopoly; privilege applied); 1739, Suffolk v. Green, 1 Atk. 450 (usury); 1781, Bishop of London v. Fytche, 1 Brown Ch. C. 96 (simony); 1792, Mynd v. Francis, 1 Anstr. 5 (common informer's suit against one winning money at play; discovery refused on other grounds); 1797, Raynes v. Towgood, Peake, Evidence, 184, note (statutory penalty for stock-jobbing; privilege affirmed); 1800, East India Co. v. Neave, 5 Ves. Jr. 173, 184 (contract as captain); 1802, Mayor, etc. of London v. Levy, 8 Ves. Jr. 398, 404 (alien dues on merchandise); 1803, Bullock v. Richardson, 11 Ves. Jr. 373 (stock-jobbing statute); 1826, Billing v. Flight, 1 Madd. 230 (stock-jobbing statute); 1836, Glynn v. Houston, 1 Keen 329, 337 ("In what way [he would be so subject, whether by indictment, information, impeachment, or, if necessary, by a bill of pains and penalties, is immaterial; it is sufficient that he would be subject to penal consequences"); 1854, Attorney-General v. Radloff, 10 Exch. 84 (information for penalties for smuggling; the Court equally divided as to whether it was a criminal proceeding, under a statute making parties competent and compellable in other than criminal proceedings; this case led to the ensuing statute); 1865, St. 28 & 29 Vict. c. 104, § 34 (cases on the revenue side of the Exchequer are not to be deemed criminal cases).

Canada: 1867, Burton v. Young, 17 Low. Can. 379 ('qui tam' for penalties; cited post, § 2260).

United States: 1832, U. S. v. Twenty-Eight Packages, Gilpin 306, 312 (information for forfeiture of goods fraudulently invoiced; privilege applied); 1880, Johnson v. Donaldson, 18 Blatchf. 287, 3 Fed. 22 (penalties and forfeitures under the copyright law; privilege applied); 1893, Lees v. U. S., 150 U. S. 476, 480, 14 Sup. 163 (action for penalty under the alien-immigration statute; privilege applied to the defendant); 1901, Newgold v. A. E. N. & M. Co., 108 Fed. 341 ('qui tam' action under U. S. Rev. St. § 4901; discovery privileged); 1901, Robson v. Doyle, 191 Ill. 566, 61 N. E. 435 (privilege held applicable to a bill of discovery in aid of a civil suit to recover penalties for gambling, notwithstanding the statutory sanction of such a bill in Rev. St. § 137, c. 38).

[6] Eng. 1812, Maloney v. Bartlett, 3 Camp. 210 (libel in an affidavit; the copier of an affidavit being liable for a misdemeanor, questions on that fact were held privileged); U. S. 1842, March v. Davidson, 9 Paige N. Y. 580 (discovery from defendant in libel, not allowed on the facts); 1913, Karel v. Conlan, 155 Wis. 221, 144 N. W. 266 (libel; cited more fully ante, § 2252, n. 8).

Distinguish the case of a party who, by inviting an issue, in effect waives the privilege: 1827, Macaulay v. Shackell, 1 Bligh N. s. 96, 121, 133, semble (libel; plea of truth; the defendant is entitled to discovery as to the truth of charges involving indictable acts; on the analogy of insurance cases, where fraud is set up as a defence to an action on the policy).

[7] Eng. 1814, Dodd v. Norris, 3 Camp. 519 (daughter, in an action for seduction, held privileged from answering as to being "criminal with other men"); 1891, Redfern v. Redfern, Prob. 139, 145 (divorce for adultery; discovery as to adultery, held not compellable, in so far as adultery is a punishable offence); U. S. 1863, Marsh v. Marsh, 16 N. J. Eq. 391, 397 (divorce for adultery; discovery as to adultery, held privileged); 1922, Gould v. Gould, Sup. App. Div., 194 N. Y. Suppl. 742 (action by a wife against her husband for necessaries while living apart in France; plea, adultery in France; the plaintiff held not privileged from testifying as to the adultery on the ground of forfeiture of dower, because that "would be an incident of the decree dissolving the marital relation and not the essential purpose of the action").

[8] Eng. 1795, Selby v. Crew, 2 Anstr. 504 (discovery of creditors signing a bankrupt's certificate for a consideration, refused as ruptcy,[9] and sundry misconduct.[10] The traditional allegation, in chancery bills, of a conspiracy by the defendants is not of itself an obstacle to discovery, because it is usually a mere formal phrase of the draftsman.[11] Moreover, it may also be possible to separate one's inquiries, so as to require discovery as to the portion concerning non-criminal acts.[12]

(3) A proceeding to compel obedience to a judicial order, by process of contempt, may for general purposes not be distinctively a civil or a criminal proceeding. But the policy of the privilege covers such a proceeding, because the legal consequences of a finding against the defendant are an imprisonment or a fine.[13] Whether the proceeding be correctly called criminal or involving subornation of perjury); 1805, Ex parte Symes, 11 Ves. Jr. 521 (creditor's fraudulent receipt of bankrupt's money); 1807, Claridge v. Hoare, 14 Ves. Jr. 59 (compounding a felony); 1807, Dummer v. Chippenham, 14 Ves. Jr. 246 (conspiracy); 1858, Michael v. Gay, 1 F. & F. 409 (conspiracy to defraud creditors, held privileged); U. S. 1881, Horstman v. Kaufman, 97 Pa. 147 (discovery by a plaintiff in execution against a defendant for fraudulent concealment of property, refused, the conduct being a misdemeanor).

But, of course, not all civil fraud is also criminal: 1849, Foss v. Haynes, 31 Me. 81, 90 (fraudulent conveyance, here held not to involve criminality).

[9] In bankruptcy proceedings, as illustrated in note 8, the privilege would have common application. But in England, by a strict construction of the doctrine as to facts "tending to criminate," and by skilful drafting of interrogatories, it would seem that the privilege was very nearly evaded, even before its practical abolition in the modern Bankruptcy Act; and in the United States a statutory amnesty partly controls. The cases can best be examined under those heads (post, §§ 2260, 2283).

[10] Eng. 1793, Oliver v. Haywood, 1 Anstr. 82 (bill for tithes; discovery as to a combination against the parson, refused, as involving maintenance); 1793, Mayor of London v. Ainsley, 1 Anstr. 158 (bill for account of tolls; discovery as to maintenance, refused); 1797, Whittingham v. Burgoyne, 3 Anstr. 900 (discovery as to the sale of a commission contrary to army regulations; not decided, but a ruling refusing such discovery was cited); U. S. 1907, Cassatt v. Mitchell C. C. Co., 81 C. C. A. 80, 150 Fed. 32, 44 (whether in a civil action against a carrier for damages under U. S. St. 1887, c. 104, Feb. 4, § 8, the criminality of the same conduct under ib. § 10 allows the privilege to operate; not decided); 1906, Patterson v. Wyoming Valley District Council, Pa. Super. Ct. (appeal dismissed without an opinion, confirming the decision of Head, J., published in advance sheets of 78 N. E. Rep., Oct. 19; in an attachment for contempt in the violation of an injunction against a boycott by a labor union, the production of the defendant's books was held not within the privilege).

Conversely, if the privilege be held not applicable to corporations in criminal cases, it is also not applicable to them in civil cases; 1921, Nekoosa-Edwards Paper Co. v. News Pub. Co., 174 Wis. 107, 182 N. W. 919 (action for damages under the anti-trust act).

Distinguish cases in which all relief in equity is refused in aid of an immoral purpose, irrespective of the privilege as to discovery merely: 1797, Wallis v. Portland, 3 Ves. Jr. 494 (services as solicitors for a candidate for Parliament).

[11] Eng. 1752, Chetwynd v. Lindon, 2 Ves. Sr. 451 ("It is not every conspiracy will be a ground for a criminal prosecution; if that was the case, almost all the causes in this court would come within that description; the boundaries are often very nice"; conspiracy to set up a supposititious child, semble, not privileged); U. S. 1848, Adams v. Porter, 1 Cush. Mass. 170, 174 ("The allegation of an unlawful confederation or conspiracy, which is usually introduced in bills in equity, is rather to be considered, however, as constituting a merely formal part of the bill, and requiring no particular answer").

[12] Examples are the following cases: 1843, Lichfield v. Bond, 6 Beav. 88, 93; 1848, Fisher v. Price, 11 Beav. 194, 200.

Compare, however, the effect on this expedient of the rule as to facts "tending to criminate" (post, § 2260).

[13] Fed. 1901, Gompers v. Buck Stove & Range Co., 221 U. S. 468, 31 Sup. 492 (contempt in violating an anti-boycott injunction; the opinion treats the privilege as not applicable); 1909, Hammond Lumber Co. v. Sailors' Union, C. C. N. D. Cal., 167 Fed. 809, 823 (a proceeding to punish for contempt of an injunction is a criminal proceeding, for the purposes of a claim of this privilege; cases collected); 1912, Merchants' S. & G. Co. v. Board of Trade, 8th C. C. A., 201 Fed. 20, 28 ("It may be safely said that there is no case where . . . the Fifth amendment applies except where the contempt charged also constitutes a crime"; hence, the defendant may be examined, so long as he is not required civil, or whether some other rule or privilege of criminal cases (such as jury trial) pertains to it, should not be the criterion for the present question, which rests entirely on its own policies and logic.

§ 2258. Crime under Foreign Sovereignty. In Samoa it was tabooed to name a deceased chieftain by the title he bore when living; in Japan it was seditious to express a scepticism as to the official genealogy of His Imperial Majesty; in Germany it was once 'lèse majesté' to publish (as many British and American journalists have done) that irreverent metrical jest upon the Emperor. Shall our Courts, then, include in the category of criminating facts these various offences against the polyglot public policies of the wide world? In the State of Kansas it was, at one time, for a few months, unlawful for certain insurance companies to transact business within that sovereignty, because they had for many years struggled to avoid the payment of a noted claim alleged to have been fraudulently concocted. Should the privilege therefore have been applied in other jurisdictions during that period to all inquiries based on the transactions of these companies in Kansas? It was at one time a criminal offence in many Southern States to read the Bible to negro slaves; it has long been a crime in Italy to export art treasures without official consent, — in Germany to emigrate during military age without governmental permission, — in the Ottoman Empire to make proselytes from Islamism to Christianity, — and in Massachusetts, until recent times, to sell cigars on Sunday. Are the Courts of our various Commonwealths to

"Let observation, with extensive view, Survey mankind, from China to Peru," and catalogue within the rubrics of criminality every act which is anywhere, under any system of manners, morals, or policy, stigmatized by law? If so, they will indeed be undertaking a huge and curious task — stimulative, no doubt, to the science of comparative nomology, but calculated to baffle their greatest zeal and to invite frequent failure.

It will not do to argue that our Courts may confine their search to those fifty jurisdictions united externally as the United States of America. These States are all independent legislative sovereignties in criminal matters, and there is no reason for ignoring this independence. Nor is anything gained by stopping at the boundaries of Anglo-Saxon civilization, with its common trend of legal ideas; for there are within the British dominions some sixty to criminate himself otherwise than as being in contempt); Cal. 1893, Ex parte Gould, 99 Cal. 360, 33 Pac. 1112 (contempt by doing certain acts prohibited by injunction; privilege held applicable); Ia. 1918, Doyle v. Wilcockson, 184 Ia. 757, 169 N. W. 241 (proceedings of contempt for violating injunction); Kan. 1892, Re Nickell, 47 Kan. 734, 28 Pac. 1076 (contempt by eloigning witnesses; privilege held applicable); N. J. 1902, Re Haines, 67 N. J. L. 442, 51 Atl. 929 (contempt in disobeying a subpœna; privilege held applicable); Or. 1907, State ex rel. Baker Lodge v. Sieber, 49 Or. 1, 88 Pac. 313 (contempt by interfering with flow of water in a ditch, contrary to an injunction; privilege applicable); Wash. 1905, State ex rel. Dye v. Reilly, 40 Wash. 217, 82 Pac. 287 (contempt in obstructing a highway, contrary to an injunction; privilege held not applicable).

See an article by Mr. Roy C. Merrick, "Privilege against Self-Crimination as to Charges of Contempt" (Illinois Law Rev., XIV, 181).

legislative bodies, more or less autonomous; so that the search for criminalities might involve several scores of codes. Besides, the differences, within our own nation, of legislative policy are as radical as any within this larger field; New South Wales and England probably do not differ so much as Maine and Texas, or Porto Rico and Illinois. If we say that there is nevertheless a practical difference of safety between the cases of him who has offended against the laws of one of our own States and of him who has broken those of a foreign State, and that this difference should lead us to take the former into consideration, one sufficient answer is that extradition treaties have practically abolished the hope of refuge from the law. "Denmark's a prison? Then is the world one!" To-day's journal chronicles the sailing from England, under arrest, of a man who is charged with a murder committed nine years ago in Chicago; and, in the next paragraph, the granting of an extradition-writ for a convict in Sing-Sing, charged with embezzlement in France, and just completing a long confinement for crime in this country.

But, more than this, the answer is that a radical fallacy of principle underlies the assumption that the Courts of one State may consider the effect of enforced disclosures as creating a danger of prosecution in another sovereignty. It is not in the power or duty of one State, or of its Courts, to be concerned in the criminal law of another State. For the former, there is but one law, and that is its own. The boundaries of our Constitution and our sovereignty are coextensive. A constitution is intended to protect the accused against the methods of its own jurisdiction and no other. The Court's view, as well as its functions, should be confined to its own organic sphere.

Practical considerations also deter. The Court of one State knows nothing of the policies and rules of other systems; and it risks error and adds great burdens in attempting to master them. Further, it cannot well know the real probabilities of danger of prosecution under another system; for it would need to know what means and motives for prosecution there existed, what likelihood there was of migration thither by the accused or of his capture when arrived or of his involuntary extradition, and what the probability was of the discovery and employment in that prosecution of the disclosure now desired. Even if it could ascertain these elements of probability, it could not define any workable rule for measuring them. The only conceivable rule would be that when an act was by any possibility capable of being treated as criminal by the law of any other sovereignty, the privilege should protect it. That such a rule should be seriously suggested seems incredible.

And yet this, or something logically its equivalent, has at least once been proposed, — though, fortunately, without success. In the Federal Supreme Court, in considering the question how far a Federal statute, giving amnesty for a specific offence, expunged the offence and thus nullified the privilege, a minority placed their argument in part on the ground that the same act might still be an offence in another jurisdiction and would therefore still be entitled to protection in the Federal Court:

1896, SHIRAS, J., with GRAY and WHITE, JJ., dissenting, in Brown v. Walker, 161 U. S. 591, 16 Sup. 644: "Another danger to which the witness is subjected by the withdrawal of the constitutional safeguard is that of a prosecution in the State courts. The same act or transaction which may be a violation of the interstate commerce act may also be an offense against a State law. Thus, in the present case, the inquiry was as to supposed rebates on freight charges. Such payments would have been in disregard of the Federal statute; but a full disclosure of all the attendant facts (and, if he testify at all, he must answer fully) might disclose that the witness had been guilty of embezzling the moneys intrusted to him for that purpose, or it might have been disclosed that he had made false entries in the books of the State corporation in whose employ he was acting. These acts would be crimes against the State, for which he might be indicted and punished, and he may have furnished, by his testimony in the Federal court or before the commission, the very facts, or, at least, clues thereto, which led to his prosecution."

Against this argument no more need be attempted; but it may be suggested that its exaggerated structure of apprehension of foreign prosecution is built upon a foundation of "mights" and "mays" and other exiguous possibilities so elaborate as to seem unfit for practical consideration in the zealous administration of justice. The opposite view has been expounded in the following passages:

1850, Lord CRANWORTH, V. C., in King of Sicilies v. Wilcox, 7 State Tr. N. S. 1049, 1068: "Can the defendants then object to answer that which might subject themselves to penal consequences if they should go to Sicily? I think not. The rule relied on by the defendants is one which exists merely by virtue of our own municipal law, and must, I think, have reference exclusively to matters penal by that law, — to matters as to which, if disclosed, the judge would be able to say, as matter of law, whether it could or could not entail penal consequences. . . . No judge can know, as matter of law, what would or would not be penal in a foreign country; and he cannot therefore form any judgment as to the force or truth of the objection of a witness when he declines to answer on such a ground. . . . It is to be observed that in such a case, in order to make the disclosure dangerous to the party who objects, it is essential that he should first quit the protection of our laws and wilfully go within the jurisdiction of the laws he has violated. . . . I am of opinion for these reasons, in the absence of all authority on the point, that the rule of protection is confined to what may tend to subject a party to penalties by our law."

1896, BROWN, J., in Brown v. Walker, supra (after arguing that Congress has power to enact such a statutory amnesty to apply in State courts, and that the statute in question was intended as a general one): "But, even granting that there were still a bare possibility that, by his disclosure, he might be subjected to the criminal laws of some other sovereignty, that [danger], as Chief Justice Cockburn said in Queen v. Boyes,[1] in reply to the argument that the witness was not protected by his pardon against an impeachment by the House of Commons, is not a real and probable danger, with reference to the ordinary operations of the law in the ordinary courts, but 'a danger of an imaginary and unsubstantial character, having reference to some extraordinary and barely possible contingency, so improbable that no reasonable man would suffer it to influence his conduct.' Such dangers it was never the object of the provision to obviate."

In Brown v. Walker, supra, the question arose for an act once criminal by the Federal law, but afterwards given statutory amnesty. But the argument of the minority, as quoted supra, would apply equally well to any act that had never had the remotest taint of criminality under the Federal law; e. g. any bill of discovery into account-books, even if no interstate-commerce law had ever existed, might reveal an embezzlement which would be an offence under some State law though not under any Federal statute; so that the minority's argument is logically independent of the special facts in Brown v. Walker.

§ 2258. [1] 1 B. & S. 311; post, § 2260.

In point of precedent, three different cases may be distinguished. (1) The act may be criminal in another court or system of law in the same jurisdiction of legislative sovereignty; here the privilege applies.[2] (2) The act may be admitted or proved to be actually criminal by the contemporary laws of another and independent sovereignty; here the privilege ought not to apply, for the reasons above stated; but the precedents are not harmonious.[3] (3) The act may not be admitted or proved to be criminal by any other State's law, or, if thus criminal, to have been done so as to make the claimant of the privilege actually amenable to that law; here the privilege ought certainly to be denied, and it would seem that any Court would concede this.[4]

[2] 1749, East India Co. v. Campbell, 1 Ves. Sr. 246 (discovery of facts rendering a defendant punishable in the British criminal jurisdiction in Calcutta, though not in England, held not compellable); 1750, Brownsword v. Edwards, 2 Ves. Sr. 243 (discovery of an incestuous marriage, refused, incest being punishable in the ecclesiastical Court; "the general rule is that no one is bound to answer so as to subject himself to punishment, whether [or not] that punishment arises by the ecclesiastical law of the land").

[3] Privilege denied: Eng. 1850, King of Sicilies v. Wilcox, 7 State Tr. N. S. 1049, 1068 (discovery asked from agents of a revolutionary government in Sicily; their exposure to penalties in Sicily, held no ground of privilege); U. S. 1922, Gould v. Gould, Sup. App. Div., 194 N. Y. Suppl. 742 (action by a wife against a husband for necessaries while living apart in France; plea, adultery in France; the plaintiff held not privileged from testifying as to adultery, because "the plaintiff would not be liable to a criminal prosecution therefor in this jurisdiction"; and she had already been convicted for it in France); 1854, State v. March, 1 Jones N. C. 526 (answer as to perjury in Georgia, compellable; "our Courts, in administering justice among their suitors, will not notice the criminal laws of another State or country" for this purpose); 1887, State v. Thomas, 98 N. C. 599, 603, 4 S. E. 513 (preceding case approved).

Privilege affirmed: Eng. 1867, U. S. of America v. McRae, L. R. 4 Eq. 327, 339, L. R. 3 Ch. App. 79, 87 (bill for account against defendant for money received as agent of the Confederate States; plea, that the defendant's property was liable to seizure, and proceedings were pending to seize it, for such agency, by act of the U. S. Congress, held valid, by Wood, V. C.; King of Sicilies v. Wilcox, supra, distinguished, because here the existence of the foreign law and the actual liability under it appeared admitted upon the record); U. S. 1828, U. S. v. Saline Bank, 1 Pet. 100 (bill for discovery, filed in the U. S. District Court for Western Virginia, against stockholders of a Virginia bank; plea allowed that an answer would subject them to penalties under a Virginia statute); 1913, Buckeye Powder Co. v. Hazard P. Co., Conn. D., 205 Fed. 827 (State law of criminal libel).

Undecided: 1881, Power v. Ellis, 6 Can. Sup. 1, 6.

[4] 1896, Brown v. Walker, 161 U. S. 591, 16 Sup. 644, as quoted supra; 1903, People v. Butler St. F. & I. Co., 201 Ill. 236, 66 N. E. 349 (cited post, § 2281, n. 11); 1904, State v. Jack, 69 Kan. 387, 76 Pac. 911 (Kansas anti-trust law; the witness claiming that his business involved also interstate commerce, it was held that "the possibility that his answers might disclose violations of the Federal anti-trust law" was not a "real and probable danger," following Brown v. Walker, U. S.).

The doctrine of Brown v. Walker, that there must be a "real and probable danger," has since been thus developed: 1905, Jack v. Kansas, 179 U. S. 372, 26 Sup. 73 (information under the Kansas anti-trust act, in the Kansas District Court; held that the possibility that answers might be given which might also incriminate him under the Federal anti-trust act was too remote, the Kansas Court having ruled that matters constituting a violation of the Federal act would be immaterial in the proceeding in question; two judges dissenting;

§ 2259. Crime of a Third Person. It is obvious that the criminal act of a third person cannot be the subject of privilege for the claimant.[1]

§ 2259*a*. Crime of a Corporation. It is plain, on the one hand, that a corporation, when discovery is sought from it as such, is not protected from disclosure, so far as it is not capable of committing a criminal act.[1]

(1) But if the corporation is chargeable with a criminal act, has it the privilege, like a natural person?

The following passage presumably expresses most coherently the instinctive attitude which underlies the usual negative answer given by the Courts:

1921, VINJE, J., in Nekoosa-Edwards Paper Co. v. News Pub. Co., 174 Wis. 107, 182 N. W. 919: "Is a corporation within the intent and purpose of the fifth federal amendment? In McCulloch v. Maryland, 4 Wheat. 411, we find this significant language of Chief Justice Marshall: 'The power of creating a corporation is never used for its own sake, but for the purpose of effecting something else.'

"What is that something else? Obviously it is the transaction of lawful business. And it is equally obvious that the corporation is thus created for the primary benefit of the State, and not for that of the corporation itself. The State creates this corporate entity because the business needs of the public, the State, are thereby promoted. The moment a corporation becomes an injury to the public it has no valid reason for existence, because the object for which it was created has not only been thwarted, but the creature has become an instrument of evil.

"It is otherwise with a natural person. He is created for his own existence, and not for a mere business purpose. He has certain inalienable rights such as 'life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness.' He may transgress the law, and yet his right of being remains inviolate, except in cases of capital punishment. He is a natural entity, enjoying the faculties, rights, and privileges with which he is endowed, and the basic law says he shall not be compelled to make declarations that will forfeit them because he is not a mere instrument for a specific business purpose. He has his hopes, his aspirations, his desires and his weaknesses — he lives; a corporation merely exists, and that in an artificial way, for a single purpose. . . . Having, then, these sensibilities and faculties which constitute the essence of a natural person, there is an underlying reason for not requiring self-incrimina-in this case, however, it would seem that the Federal Court erred in assuming, as it did, that under the U. S. 14th Amendment the witness should be protected from the Kansas Court even if there was a "real danger" of Federal prosecution); 1905, Ballmann v. Fagin, 200 U. S. 186, 26 Sup. 212 (a witness in a Federal Court refused to produce a book, and made the claim that it would criminate him either under the Federal bucket-shop act, Rev. St. § 5209, or under the Ohio bucket-shop act, alleging that several charges under the latter act were pending; held privileged, on the authority of Jack v. Kansas, supra; two judges dissenting); 1906, Hale v. Henkel, 201 U. S. 43, 26 Sup. 370 (anti-trust law; that a Federal immunity-statute would not protect a witness from possible prosecution under a State law in a State court is immaterial; approving King of Sicilies v. Wilcox, supra, n. 3, and distinguishing U. S. v. Saline Bank, supra, n. 3).

However, on letters rogatory from a foreign country to a Federal court, the following extraordinary and impracticable statute gives a maximum scope to the privilege: U. S. Code, § 6276 (on letters rogatory from a foreign country for a witness residing in the U. S., privilege protects from self-incrimination "either under the laws of the State or Territory within which such examination is had, or any other, or any foreign State").

§ 2259. [1] 1850, King of Sicilies v. Wilcox, 7 State Tr. N. S. 1049, 1068 (Lord Cranworth, V. C.: "There is no privilege against disclosing matter within the knowledge of the party, merely because it might subject other persons to punishment"; here, persons in Sicily); 1906, Washington Nat'l Bank v. Daily, 166 Ind. 631, 77 N. E. 53, semble (cited ante, § 2200).

Distinguish the rule that the witness alone, not the party to the trial, can claim the privilege (post, § 2270).

§ 2259*a*. [1] 1850, King of Sicilies v. Wilcox, ubi supra, 1062 (defendant corporation not privileged as to a breach of the Foreign Enlistment Act, because a corporation was not indictable under it).

tion from him which does not exist in the case of a corporation. There is no 'personal' death or loss of liberty in the annulment of a corporate franchise or in a judgment for damages against it. When, therefore, it undertakes to do that which the law forbids, and which injures the public, it has no claim for mercy that needs be recognized.

"Hence, if a corporation has made a record by its books or papers that shows it has violated the purposes for which it was created, why should not the State, which gave it birth for legitimate business purposes only, have the right, either directly in the exercise of its inquisitorial powers, or indirectly through one damaged by such unlawful conduct of the corporation, to inspect the record thus made?"

But this argument fails to give attention to the legal fact that a corporation is (by hypothesis) as capable of a crime as a natural person. Furthermore, it does not refer for its criterion to the policies underlying the privilege (ante, § 2251). Looking especially at those policies, what answer is furnished?

Two main reasons here militate against recognizing the privilege. The first is that the sentiment of fundamental fairness, on which the privilege is in part based, applies only between man and man. It is a sentiment which recoils from forcing another human being to supply by his own act the incriminating evidence. It guards against the abuses of physical compulsion which are apt to grow out of the license to interrogate (ante, § 2251). This sentiment and these dangers are not applicable where the accused is not a human being, but only an artificial entity. Secondly, a corporation virtually can act by written record only (post, § 2451), and its criminal acts are therefore contained in writings only; so that the disclosure of crimination is not made by answers to interrogatories, but merely by the surrender of the writings. Moreover, these being virtually the sole evidential criminating material, the prosecuting officer must depend almost exclusively upon them. Thus, since a main object of the privilege (ante, § 2251) is to oblige the prosecution to search and gather, in full proof of the offence, all the available materials independent of the accused's own disclosures, that main object here finds no application; for there is but little material apart from these writings. Thus the privilege is not needed; if recognized, it would impose upon the prosecuting officer a task largely futile.

Whether on these reasons or on others (for little direct light on the principle has been judicially vouchsafed in the opinions), it has been accepted by almost all Courts that this privilege cannot be invoked by a corporation.[2]

(2) The foregoing considerations are directed to the question whether the

[2] UNITED STATES: Fed. 1906, Hale v. Henkel, 201 U. S. 43, 26 Sup. 370 (on subpœna to the secretary-treasurer of a New Jersey corporation to produce corporate documents before a grand-jury investigating offences against the Federal anti-trust law, it was held, Brewer, J., and Fuller, C. J., diss., that conceding the officer to be "entitled to assert the rights of the corporation, . . . there is a clear distinction in this particular between an individual and a corporation, and that the latter has no right to refuse to submit its books and papers for an examination at the suit of the State; . . . the corporation is a creature of the State, it receives certain special privileges and franchises, . . . [and may therefore not refuse to answer criminating questions] when charged with an abuse of such privileges"); 1907, Cassatt v. Mitchell C. & C. Co., 81 C. C. A. 80, 150 Fed. 32, 45 (whether a corporation is a "person" under either constitutional amendment; the "varying expressions of opinion" in Hale v. Henkel pointed out); 1907, International Coal M. Co. v. Pennsylprivilege as developed at common law included corporations. But even if it did, the interpretation of the Constitution, in its recognition of the common law, remains for settlement. In the Federal case of Hale v. Henkel, the Court's opinion has left this vital inquiry unanswered. The point is this: The privilege began, continued, and now exists at common law, independently of statute; the Fifth Amendment to the Constitution merely guarantees it against legislative alteration; did the Supreme Court, then, mean to say that a corporation was and is not within the privilege at common law? or did they mean to say merely that the Constitutional guarantee of it to all "persons" does not include corporations?[3] If they meant the former, then no immunity (post, § 2281) needs to be given to, nor can be claimed by, a corporation; and Courts are free to exact everything from a corporation. But if they meant the latter, then the privilege stands, for corporations, until abolished by the Legislature; hence, if the Legislature has not abolished it, the corporation may still claim it; hence also, if the Legislature in abolishing it has chosen (unnecessarily, to be sure) to grant immunity as an inseparable gift annexed therewith, the corporation will get the immunity when forced to relinquish the privilege. The importance of this distinction in the current attempts to investigate corporate conduct is obvious. But no certain light upon it is to be found in Hale v. Henkel. The opinion in Wilson v. U. S. adopts the former of these two views.

vania R. Co., 152 Fed. 557, C. C. (a corporation has not a privilege to refuse to disclose books in a proceeding to recover a penalty; following Hale v. Henkel); 1911, Wilson v. U. S., 221 U. S. 361, 31 Sup. 538 (the defendant was president of a corporation; an indictment was found against him and other officers; a subpœna d. t. was issued against the corporation and served on the defendant, and also the secretary and directors; the defendant was the custodian of the books, which contained his own and corporate business; he refused to produce; the directors voted that he surrender the books to them for production, and he again refused; held (1) that the corporation, in view of the reserved visitatorial powers of the State, had no privilege against self-crimination; (2) that the defendant had no privilege to withhold the corporate books, even though the entries were made by him; (3) that his personal letters therein were privileged); 1911, American Lithographic Co. v. Werckmeister, 221 U. S. 603, 31 Sup. 676; 1916, Orvig Dampskibselskap v. New York & B. Co., D. C. E. D. N. Y., 229 Fed. 293 (following Hale v. Henkel). The decision in Hale v. Henkel, supra, may perhaps be supported on the ground that where the criminality of an act consists, for a corporation, essentially in the violation of its franchise or privilege, the feature of criminality is a merely incidental one; or on the ground that the power to create involves the power to forfeit. But the opinion does not face the argument contra based on the criminal capacity of a corporation;

Ky. 1914, Com. v. Southern Express Co., 160 Ky. 1, 169 S. W. 517;

Miss. 1910, Cumberland T. & T. Co. v. State, 98 Miss. 159, 53 So. 489 (a corporation is not within the constitutional privilege; following Hale v. Henkel, but here Code § 5018 expressly gave immunity);

Mo. 1909, State v. Standard Oil Co., 218 Mo. 1, 116 S. W. 902, 1017 (a corporation "has no constitutional right to refuse to produce its books and papers");

Wis. 1921, Nekoosa-Edwards Paper Co. v. News Pub. Co., 174 Wis. 107, 182 N. W. 919 (a corporation is not a person protected by the 5th U. S. Amendment or statutes thereunder, nor by the Wisconsin Constitution or statutes; opinion by Vinje, J., quoted supra).

Contra: Pa. 1890, Logan v. R. Co., 132 Pa. 403, 408, 19 Atl. 137 (privilege held applicable to corporations).

Undecided: 1907, Re Consolidated Rendering Co., 80 Vt. 55, 66 Atl. 790 (foreign corporation subpœnaed d. t. before a grand jury; not decided).

[3] Distinguish the effect of the Fourth Amendment forbidding search without a warrant; here a corporation may still invoke that doctrine like a natural person: 1920, Silverthorne Lumber Co. v. U. S., 251 U. S. 385, 40 Sup. 182. Compare the cases on that subject ante, § 2184.

(3) The privilege has been legislatively denied for corporations in certain offences, since the decision in Hale v. Henkel, in 1906.[4] But, for the reasons just stated, the effect of such declarations (usually occurring in statutes offering immunity) may depend upon whether they are to be interpreted as a denial that such a privilege ever existed or as a deprival of the privilege by reason of immunity granted (post, § 2281).

(4) The corporation must of course make its claim through its officer or counsel, when called upon as an ordinary witness (post, § 2270). But when the corporation is a party, and its officer is summoned as a witness, the claim by the corporation or its counsel, on its own behalf, must be distinguished from the officer's personal claim.[5]

§ 2259*b*. Crime of an Officer or Agent, disclosed by Corporate Books. What is the effect of the foregoing two premises upon the questions that arise when discovery is sought from an officer or employee of a corporation, — in the usual case, by a demand for the production of the corporate books?

In the first place, the employee or officer cannot refuse to produce on the ground that the disclosure would criminate the corporation.[1] On the other

[4] The statutes are cited more fully post, § 2281; they deny a privilege for the following subjects:
Federal: for anti-trust offences, etc. U. S. St. 1906, June 30, c. 3920, Stat. L. vol. 34, p. 798, Code § 7034 (under the acts of Feb. 11, 1893, Feb. 14, 1903, Feb. 19, 1903, and Feb. 25, 1903, quoted post, § 2281; "immunity shall extend only to a natural person who, in obedience to a subpœna, gives testimony under oath or produces evidence, documentary or otherwise, under oath"); St. 1903, Feb. 14, c. 552, Code 1919, § 7091, and the Federal Trade Commission Act, St. 1914, Sept. 26, c. 31, § 9 (Federal trade; "no natural person shall be prosecuted," except for perjury); Code § 8044 (similar, for U. S. shipping board); Code § 9708 (similar, for U. S. tariff commission); for offences under the National Prohibition Act, St. 1919, Oct. 28, tit. II, § 30;
Arizona: for public service corporations (Rev. St. 1913, Civ. C. § 2331);
California: for illegal trusts, St. 1907, p. 984, March 23, § 6 (privilege abolished, but "no individual" shall be prosecuted etc.); for public utilities, St. 1913, p. 115, April 23, § 55, par. d;
Hawaii: for public utilities (Rev. L. 1915, § 2228, cited post, § 2281);
Idaho: for public utilities (Comp. St. 1919, § 2483);
Maryland: for public service hearings (St. 1910, c. 180, § 422);
Michigan: for specified cases (Comp. L. 1915, § 12548);
Mississippi: for certain cases (St. 1912, c. 251);
Missouri: for public service corporations (Rev. St. 1919, § 10536);
New York: in public service commission hearings (Cons. L. 1909, Pub. Service Com. § 20);
Oregon: for public utilities inquiries (Laws 1920, §§ 5862, 6088);
Pennsylvania: for public service commission inquiries (St. 1913, July 26, Art. VI, § 1);
Utah: for public utilities (Comp. St. 1917, § 4822);
Vermont: for all relevant records: Gen. L. 1917, § 4951 (corporation doing business in the State must produce on notice all documents or entries relevant to the pending case "and which have at any time been made or kept within this State" and are anywhere in the corporate custody or control); id. § 4952 (same, for documents or entries concerning "any transaction within this State, or with any party residing or having a place of business within this State");
Wisconsin: for railroad corporations, in certain cases (St. 1905, c. 447, § 1, Stats. 1919, § 4078*a*);
Wyoming: for liquor offences (St. 1921, c. 117, § 28).

[5] As in Hale v. Henkel, McAlister v. Henkel, post, § 2259*b*. Compare ante, § 2200 (subpœna d. t.).

Courts ought to recognize a form of subpœna which will obtain the corporate books without summoning the corporation-custodian; as more fully noticed ante, § 2200.

§ 2259*b*. [1] ENGLAND: 1812, Gibbons v. Proprietors of Waterloo Bridge, 5 Price 491 ("a clerk to the defendants [a corporation] cannot demur on the ground that his principals are liable to penalties; and his answer could not be read against them").

UNITED STATES: Fed. 1890, Re Peasley, 44 Fed. 271, 275, C. C. (the treasurer of a cor-hand, where the corporate misconduct involves also the claimant's misconduct, or where the document is in reality the personal act of the claimant, though nominally that of the corporation, its disclosures are virtually his own, and to that extent his privilege protects him from producing them.[2]

Further, when the process is directed to the legal custodian of the corporate books, and the claimant of the privilege is some other officer or agent, the latter cannot invoke the privilege to withhold their disclosure by the legal custodian, nor even to resist surrendering them to the legal custodian with a view to their disclosure under process; because the privilege covers only disclosure by the person claiming the privilege, and not disclosure by any other person.[3] poration, held not privileged to withhold the corporate books on the ground that their contents might criminate the corporation); 1906, Hale v. Henkel, 201 U. S. 43, 26 Sup. 370 (the constitutional privilege "is limited to a person who shall be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself; and if he cannot set up the privilege of a third person, he certainly cannot set up the privilege of a corporation"; here the witness was subpœnaed personally before a grand jury investigating by presentment against the corporation); 1906, McAlister v. Henkel, 201 U. S. 90, 26 Sup. 385 (similar to Hale v. Henkel; here the witness was subpœnaed before the grand jury on a charge and complaint against the corporation); 1911, Wilson v. U. S., 221 U. S. 361, 31 Sup. 538 (cited more fully ante, § 2259*a*); 1918, Linn v. U. S., 2d C. C. A., 251 Fed. 476 (corporation papers obtained by subpœna upon the defendant as president, held admissible); Ia. 1886, U. S. Express Co. v. Henderson, 69 Ia. 40, 28 N. W. 426 (similar to Gibbons v. Waterloo Bridge, supra); Mich. 1904, Re Moser, 138 Mich. 302, 101 N. W. 588 (the president of a corporation held bound to produce the corporate books for a period antedating his interest in the corporation; since he had "no right to attempt to avert real danger from others, no matter how closely he may be associated with them"; moreover, "when as agent for another he chooses to make entries on the books of that other," the books may be produced from the other's possession); Mo. 1909, State v. Standard Oil Co., 218 Mo. 1, 116 S. W. 902, 1017; Okl. 1913, Burnett v. State, 8 Okl. Cr. 639, 129 Pac. 1110 (president and cashier of an insolvent bank corporation, held bound to hand over the bank's book to the State bank commissioner; following Wilson v. U. S., infra; but here the plea alleged that the books "might" incriminate the defendants).

Distinguish, however, a refusal on the ground that the documents are not within his control (ante, §§ 2200, 2211, 2219). The general applicability of the privilege to documents, as well as to testimony on the stand, is noticed elsewhere (post, § 2264).

The above common-law result seems to be needlessly affected by such statutes as the following: N. D. Comp. L. 1913, § 8002 (in certain actions against a corporation or officers, privilege ceases "although such answer may expose the corporation . . . to a forfeiture of its corporate rights"; but the witness so answering shall not be prosecuted for any matter testified to; this is a needless 'quid pro quo' offered under § 2281, post).

[2] ENGLAND: 1744, R. v. Cornelius, 2 Stra. 1210 (information against justices for granting licenses for money; inspection of the corporate books not allowed); 1749, R. v. Purnell, 1 W. Bl. 37, 45, 2 T. R. 202, note (information against the vice-chancellor of Oxford University, for not punishing certain offences; inspection of the corporation-books refused, because they "relate to the defendant's behaviour as a member of a particular corporation"; though it had been argued that "when a man is a magistrate, and as such has books in his custody, his having the office shall not secrete those books which another vice-chancellor must have produced"); 1849, R. v. Granatelli, 7 State Tr. N. S. 979, 986 (secretary of the P. & O. S. N. Co.; refusal to produce documents, on account of their tendency to criminate others "for whom I am interested" and himself, sanctioned).

UNITED STATES: Fed. 1906, McAlister v. Henkel, 201 U. S. 90, 26 Sup. 385 (a corporate officer may plead the privilege to resist production of books where the books contain criminating transactions of his own and are "to all intents and purposes his own books"); 1911, Wilson v. U. S., 221 U. S. 361, 31 Sup. 538 (cited ante, § 2259*a*); Ky. 1914, Com. v. Phœnix Hotel Co., 157 Ky. 180, 162 S. W. 823 (prosecution for illegal sale of game; the defendant's hotel manager's claim of privilege, on the ground that facts showing the defendant's guilt would show his own also, was sustained).

[3] Ill. 1909, Manning v. Mercantile Securities Co., 242 Ill. 584, 90 N. E. 238 (the defendants were officers of a corporation, in a winding-up proceeding by stockholders charging criminal

The same principle is involved where a bankrupt's books are surrendered by the trustee; but there the solution usually involves the further question of fact whether the testimonial process ran against the bankrupt or some different person (post, § 2264).

§ 2259c. Crime disclosed in (1) Public Books, or (2) Books required by Law to be Kept. 1. Public official books, being the property of the State, are always accessible to its representatives and usually to the public. No guilty officer, merely by his own entries in them, can any more insist on privacy than if he were to have gone to the judicial records and there inscribed a forgery. His assumption of the office involves an implied undertaking to yield the documents of the office to all inspection duly authorized. The judicial demand for its disclosure is therefore made against him as an official, and not as an accused person; and his status as the latter cannot annul or override his status as the former. This distinction seems generally accepted.[1]

But there is an even more cogent reason for reaching this conclusion: The State requires the books to be kept, but it does not require the officer to commit the crime. If in the course of committing the crime he makes entries, the criminality of the entries exists by his own choice and election, not by compulsion of law. The State announced its requirement to keep the books fraud in the business; a receiver being appointed, the chancery court ordered the defendants to hand over the corporation books to the receiver, but the defendants failed to do so, and on citation for contempt, answered alleging that the books contained matter incriminating them; held, that the privilege did not here protect them); 1917, People v. Munday, 280 Ill. 32, 117 N. E. 286 (conspiracy to defraud a bank; production of the books of banks in which defendant was an officer, held not privileged); 1918, People v. Hartenbower, 283 Ill. 591, 598, 119 N. E. 605 (fraudulent banking books, etc., in the hands of the trustee in bankruptcy, held not privileged, following People v. Munday, 280 Ill. 32); Nev. 1907, Ex parte Hedden, 29 Nev. 352, 90 Pac. 737 (corporation books in the custody of A. J. L., auditor, were summoned by subpœna on A. J. L. to be produced before the grand jury, whereon A. J. L. was ordered by the president to hand over the books to J. F. H., general superintendent; held that J. F. H., not being legal custodian, was not privileged to withhold the books on the ground that the matters contained therein would criminate himself. McAlister v. Henkel distinguished; but what does the opinion mean by saying, in this day and generation, that the privilege "was reaffirmed in Magna Charta"?); Pa. 1898, McElree v. Darlington, 187 Pa. 593, 41 Atl. 456 (embezzlement by the president of a corporation; examination of the corporation-books, not protected by the defendant's privilege).

§ 2259c. [1] ENGLAND: 1836, Bradshaw v. Murphy, 7 C. & P. 612 (libel; a witness having custody of the parish vestry-book was compelled to produce it, as it was required by statute to be kept).

UNITED STATES: Fed. Rev. St. 1878, § 859, Code § 1359 ("an official paper or record produced" by a witness before Congress "is not within said privilege"; quoted more fully post, § 2281); Ala. 1920, Vaughn v. State, 17 Ala. App. 383, 84 So. 379 (transcript of testimony, made by official stenographer, and paid for and retained by defendant, held not privileged); Ill. Rev. St. 1874, c. 63, § 6 (no "official paper or record" produced by a witness at a legislative hearing is to be within the privilege against self-crimination); N. Y. 1899, People v. Coombs, 158 N. Y. 532, 53 N. E. 527 (false vouchers of a coroner for inquest fees, obtained by subpœna from his clerk, held not within the privilege; this case may also be supported under § 2259b).

The following early cases are to be distinguished:

1701, R. v. Worsenham, 1 Ld. Raym. 705 (information against custom-house officers for forging a custom-house bond; custom-house books not compelled to be produced; this case and R. v. Cornelius, ante, § 2259b, with the ensuing one, seem to have turned on the anomalous nature of some of the offices and corporations in that century, which were regarded as private estates and bodies, although to-day they would be treated as public); 1704, R. v. Mead, 2 Ld. Raym. 927 (information against defendant, who with eight others was incorporated as highway surveyors; surveyors' books not required to be produced, the books not being of a public nature).

long before there was any crime; so that the entry was made by reason of a command or compulsion which was directed to the class of entries in general, and not to this specific act. The duty or compulsion to disclose the books existed generically, and prior to the specific act; hence the compulsion is not directed to the criminal act, but is independent of it, and cannot be attributed to it.

2. The same reasoning applies to records required by law to be kept by a citizen not being a public official, e. g. a druggist's report of liquor sales, or a pawnbroker's record of pledges. The only difference here is that the duty arises not from the person's general official status, but from the specific statute limited to a particular class of acts. The duty, or compulsion, is directed as before, to the generic class of acts, not to the criminal act, and is anterior to and independent of the crime; the crime being due to the party's own election, made subsequent to the origin of the duty. The object of such statutory measures is primarily to assist in the public administration, and the citizen merely becomes an assistant 'ad hoc' in that administration, — precisely as a clergyman or a physician is given an official duty to record marriages or deaths and his record thus becomes official for that subject (ante, § 1644). The generalization, therefore, may be made, that there is no compulsory self-crimination in a rule of law which merely requires beforehand a future report on a class of future acts among which a particular one may or may not in future be criminal at the choice of the party reporting.

Such records therefore are not protected by the present privilege against self-crimination.[2]

[2] Accord: Ill. 1903, People v. Butler S. F. & I. Co., Ill., cited post, § 2281, n. 11 (trusts); Ia. 1888, State v. Smith, 74 Ia. 580, 584, 38 N. W. 492 (registered pharmacist's reports, filed as required by law, admitted); 1888, State v. Cummins, 76 Ia. 133, 136, 40 N. W. 124 (same); Ky. 1899, Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Com., 106 Ky. 633, 51 S. W. 167 (criminal prosecution for an unlawful railroad charge; a tariff-sheet publicly posted, held not a private document, and therefore subject to compulsory production); Mich. 1900, People v. Henwood, 123 Mich. 317, 82 N. W. 70 (St. 1899, No. 183, § 25, requiring druggists to file with the prosecuting attorney a sworn report of liquors sold, held not to violate the privilege, in so far as a failure to file a report was charged as the offence of the druggist); 1904, People v. Robinson, 135 Mich. 511, 98 N. W. 12 (druggist; a report voluntarily filed was held admissible); Mo. 1894, St. Joseph v. Levin, 128 Mo. 588, 31 S. W. 101 (pawnbroker; like People v. Henwood, Mich.); N. D. 1901, State v. Donovan, 10 N. D. 203, 86 N. W. 709 (druggist's record of sales, kept under statute, receivable to charge him with illegal liquor selling, being a public book).

Contra: Ind. 1909, State v. Pence, 173 Ind. 99, 89 N. E. 488 (under a statute requiring a druggist to keep applications for liquor sold, the defendant was held entitled to refuse to produce the incriminating applications on order of a court for a grand jury, and an indictment founded thereon was abated); N. Y. 1910, People ex rel. Ferguson v. Reardon, 197 N. Y. 236, 90 N. E. 829 (a tax-statute applicable to brokers provided that transfers of stock should be taxed, that each broker should keep an account-book entering such transfers made by him, that the failure to pay the tax should be an offence, and that the failure to make entries of transfers should be an offence; the Comptroller's agent demanded inspection of the relator's books, but he refused; held, that he was privileged. The opinion proceeds on erroneous reasoning, for it treats the proceeding as an attempt to "force the relator to produce before the Comptroller his books," which it was not. The mere inspection by the agent could not be in any sense a compulsion of the relator to testify. The only compulsory self-crimination could have been the relator's making an entry exhibiting that he had transferred stock without paying tax; but as the offence could consist only in subsequent non-payment, it is difficult to see how the entry could have been a crime. The non-entry would have been an offence; but the agent's inspection and Distinguish, however, the protection of certain confidential reports (e. g. industrial accidents) required to be filed by citizens with officials (post, § 2377).

§ 2259*d*. Crime disclosed in Oral Report required by Law to be Made. The foregoing logic leads to the same result where the report required by law to be made is oral only; e. g. those laws which require a person whose vehicle, machinery, or other property has caused an injury, to make an oral disclosure to an official, at the time, of his name and address or of other circumstances of the injury.[1]

The logic is the same; for here also the purpose is administrative, the duty applies to a generic class of acts, irrespective of the criminality of any particular one (and it is certain that only an occasional one will involve criminality); and the duty exists anterior to the whole series of acts, so that the possible criminality is due to the party's own election, and the duty is independent of it. That the report may in a given case be later used in a criminal proceeding, and that such a possible use was foreseen by the legislator, does not alter the fact that the duty existed prior to and independent of the criminality. — Furthermore, so far as such a measure is limited to disclosure of identity only (not acts), i. e. name of person and number of vehicle, it is on general principles not a disclosure of a criminal fact; for the identity of the party is conceded not to fall within the protection either of the privilege against self-crimination (post, § 2265) or of the privilege for communications to an attorney (post, § 2306).

Moreover, the policy of the privilege (ante, § 2251) is not infringed, i. e. the danger of encouraging the police and prosecuting officers to rely upon the accused's self-disclosure, instead of searching completely to amass all the evidence of an offence; for a disclosure under such statutes is made freshly on the spot, if at all, and no motive is afforded for slackness in the search for discovery of a non-entry would not have been a self-criminating production by the broker).

The following statute expressly abdicates the right to compel disclosure, and offers immunity therefor (post, § 2281); Utah: Comp. L. 1917, § 2034 (dentist's failure to file statement of names of assistants and their licenses, to be a misdemeanor; but such "statement shall not be used as evidence against him" for offences here defined).

§ 2259*d*. [1] Accord: Mo. 1912, Ex parte Kneedler, 243 Mo. 632, 147 S. W. 983 (St. 1911, p. 328, § 12, provided that any operator of a motor vehicle "not knowing that injury has been caused to a person or property due to the culpability of the said operator or to accident, leaves the place of said injury or accident without stopping and giving his name, residence," etc., to the injured person, or a police officer, etc., shall be guilty of a felony; held not unconstitutional; (1) the mere fact of identity is "no evidence of guilt"; "in the large majority of cases, such accidents are free from culpability"; (2) even if the statute violates the privilege, the question should be raised on the trial for the offence, and not by habeas corpus, as here); N. H. 1916, State v. Sterrin, 78 N. H. 220, 98 Atl. 482 (St. 1911, c. 137, § 20, requiring the operator of a motor vehicle, after an injury, to give his name and address, etc., held not an infringement of the privilege; following People v. Rosenheimer, N. Y., and Ex parte Kneedler, Mo.); N. Y. 1913, People v. Rosenheimer, 128 N. Y. Suppl. 1093, 130 N. Y. Suppl. 544, 209 N. Y. 115, 102 N. E. 530 (a statute providing that a person operating a motor vehicle, who, knowing that injury has been caused by the operator's culpability, leaves the place without stating his name, address, etc., shall be guilty of a felony, does not in requiring such disclosure violate the privilege, and an indictment for such a felony is valid; reversing two intermediate rulings; approving Ex parte Kneedler, Mo.; one judge diss. in the Court of Appeals; the opinions do not adequately dispose of the question).

Distinguish the privilege for confidential reports required to be made to an official, post, § 2377 (industrial accidents, taxes, etc.).

evidence and for relying upon a later disclosure by the accused at the pleasure of the prosecuting officers. Moreover, the failure to make such a disclosure may block all subsequent efforts to discover the offender, and thus the privilege, if it annuls such statutes, may do the most harm to justice of which it is ever capable.

§ 2260. Facts "tending to Criminate." Most criminal acts are made up of two or more subordinate facts, each an essential part of the completed crime. For example, embezzlement assumes (1) a position of trust or employment, (2) the receipt of valuables by the incumbent, (3) their improper disposal. So also arson at common law involves (1) the existence of a structure, (2) its use as a dwelling, (3) the setting fire by the accused, (4) a destruction of some part of the structure. Again, forgery by utterance involves (1) possession by the accused (2) of a certain kind of document (3) false in its nature, and (4) its transfer to another person. In all these instances, no one of the component facts constitutes of itself the crime, and yet every one of them must be established in order to establish the crime. It is therefore obvious that unless the privilege is to remain an empty formula easily evaded, its protection must extend to each one of these facts taken separately, as well as to the general whole. It would be immaterial whether the evasion consisted in obtaining from the witness himself all these component facts by separate inquiries, or in obtaining one such fact by inquiry of himself and the remainder by other proof; the difference would be merely in the quantity of evasion; for it would be the witness' own disclosure which still would be essential to complete the proof, and his own disclosure would thus essentially involve a criminating fact.

Such, and no more, is the orthodox and traditional doctrine that the privilege covers facts which even "tend to criminate":

1750, L. C. HARDWICKE, in Weaver v. Meath, 2 Ves. Sr. 108: "Suppose a bill for discovery of waste, charging the defendant to be tenant for life and that he committed waste, and praying that he may set forth and discover whether he is not tenant for life; he may plead [his privilege] to the discovery whether he hath committed waste or not, but not whether he is tenant for life or not. . . . He may plead to discovery of the act causing the forfeiture; but this is not a plea to that, but to discovery of the estate. There never was such a thing heard of. Consider how far it would go." [1]

1807, L. C. ELDON, in Claridge v. Hoare, 14 Ves. Jr. 59: "A defendant has the right to insist that he is not to be compelled to answer, not only the broad and leading fact, but any fact the answer to which may furnish a step in the prosecution, if any person should choose to indict him"; here, discovery was refused as to a transfer of stock which with other facts was alleged to be the compounding of a felony.

1809, L. C. ELDON, in Paxton v. Douglas, 16 Ves. Jr. 239, 242, 19 id. 225: "If a series of questions are put, all meant to establish the same criminality, you cannot pick out a particular question and say, if that alone had been put, it might have been answered. . . .

§ 2260. [1] This utterance is not the earliest appearance of the doctrine; it had been recognized by the same judge shortly before: 1749, East India Co. v. Campbell, 1 Ves. Sr. 216 ("If a defendant is not obliged to answer the facts, he need not answer the circumstances, although they have not such an immediate tendency to criminate"). Moreover, in L. C. Macclesfield's Trial, in 1725 (cited post, § 2261), it already appears in full-fledged form.

He is at liberty to protect himself against answering, not only the direct question whether he did what was illegal, but also every question fairly appearing to be put with a view of drawing from him an answer containing nothing to affect him except as it is one link in a chain of proof that is to affect him"; here the inquiry concerned consideration of a bond.

1827, V. C. LEACH, in Green v. Weaver, 1 Sim. 404, 430: "[L. C. Eldon in Paxton v. Douglas] went there to the extent of stating, not only that a man should not make a discovery that would subject himself directly to penalty or criminal prosecution, but that every question leading incidentally to that conclusion would be likewise equally objectionable. Now when one comes to look at that as a proposition unexplained, one cannot help seeing that the true principle of a bill in equity is that every statement of fact in every bill ought to be 'incidentally leading' to the same conclusion, ultimately, as the prayer of the bill does lead to; for the fact is either conducive to the general result or it is unimportant and irrelevant. But I take Lord Eldon to have meant (and which perhaps is not very fully explained in the report, and which satisfied my mind a good deal) not that every fact which may lead to the effect of subjecting a defendant to a penalty is objectionable; but where the sole gist and object of the suit is to convict a man in a penalty, where there would be no other purpose but to have relief in a court of equity on the footing of penalty, that, as a Court of equity does not relieve on penalty, it will not give any incidental discovery."

1807, Aaron Burr's Trial, Robertson's Rep. I. 208, 244; treason; a cipher letter was placed before the witness, who had been secretary to the defendant, and he was asked by Mr. McRae, for the prosecution: "Do you understand the contents of that paper?" Mr. Williams, for the defendant: "He objects to answer. He says that, though that question may be an innocent one, yet the counsel for the prosecution might go on gradually, from one question to another, until he at last obtained matter enough to criminate him. If a man know of treasonable matter, and do not disclose it, he is guilty of misprision of treason. . . . The knowledge of the treason, again, comprehends two ideas, — that he must have [1] seen and understood [2] the treasonable matter. To one of these points Mr. W. is called upon to depose; if this be established, who knows but the other elements of the crime may be gradually unfolded so as to implicate him?" MARSHALL, C. J., sanctioning the witness' refusal: "According to their [the prosecution's] statement, a witness can never refuse to answer any question unless that answer, unconnected with other testimony, would be sufficient to convict him of a crime. This would be rendering the rule almost perfectly worthless. Many links frequently compose that chain of testimony which is necessary to convict any individual of a crime. It appears to the Court to be the true sense of the rule that no witness is compellable to furnish any one of them against himself. It is certainly not only a possible but a probable case that a witness, by disclosing a single fact, may complete the testimony against himself, and to every effectual purpose accuse himself as entirely as he would by stating every circumstance which would be required for his conviction. That fact of itself might be unavailing; but all other facts without it would be insufficient. While that remains concealed within his bosom, he is safe; but draw it from thence, and he is exposed to a prosecution. The rule which declares that no man is compellable to accuse himself would most obviously be infringed by compelling a witness to disclose a fact of this description. What testimony may be possessed, or is attainable, against any individual, the Court can never know. It would seem, then, that the Court ought never to compel a witness to give an answer which discloses a fact that would form a necessary and essential part of a crime which is punishable by the laws."

These expositions of the principle have ever since been followed without controversy.[2]

[2] 1836, Glynn v. Houston, 1 Keen 329, 339 (Lord Langdale, M. R., approved the distinction taken in Green v. Weaver); 1853, Chadwick v. Chadwick, 22 L. J. Ch. N. S. 329 (Green v. Weaver approved).

The doctrine may therefore be defined by enumerating three classes of cases. It plainly does not apply to a fact which merely under some conceivable circumstances may form part of a crime (for any fact at all may conceivably do that, — for example, using a copy of the Holy Scriptures in preaching the Gospel, provided a law against heresy were in force). But it applies (1) to a fact which is relevant to an inquiry whose sole or essential object is to charge a crime upon the claimant; or, (2) to a fact which forms an essential part of a crime now desired to be charged against the claimant as a subordinate purpose in the inquiry; or, (3) though no crime is desired to be charged against the claimant for any purpose whatever, to a fact which would form an essential part of a crime under certain circumstances, which circumstances for practical purposes must now be deemed to be true of the claimant.

(1) The first class includes the case of an accused in a criminal case, where the privilege exempts him from all answers whatsoever,[3] and that of a bill in equity to enforce a penalty, where the privilege exempts from all discovery, even on incidental points.[4]

(2) The second class includes the ordinary case of a witness, not a party, against whom it is desired to prove a crime by way of impeachment (ante, § 984).

(3) The third class includes those cases in which the proof of a crime is no part of the cause nor of the purpose of the interrogator, and in which therefore commonly arises a difficult question (post, § 2271) as to the proper person to determine whether the fact is part of any crime at all. The necessity for this last question is due to the present principle, for since any fact may theoretically be conceived as potentially forming part of a crime under some conditions, and since the privilege can properly be enforced only on the theory that the fact is part of a crime under the actual conditions of the inquiry, it becomes inevitable to make some compromise between these two extreme requirements.

Apart from the last problem, which involves another aspect of the principle, the application of the present rule obviously turns much upon the various definitions of the criminal law and upon the special facts of each case and each witness. It may be noted particularly that in bankruptcy proceedings the English Courts had apparently driven a coach-and-four

[3] As universal practice concedes. For the question whether at least the question may be put to him, and a formal claim of privilege exacted, see post, § 2268.

[4] 1820, Thorpe v. Macaulay, 5 Madd. 218, 229 (libel; discovery refused on all points, where "the sole object of the bill is to prove . . . the truth of the criminal charge; every question asked must necessarily be with a view to that end and tend to that point"); 1827, Green v. Weaver, 1 Sim. 404 (quoted supra); 1867, Burton v. Young, 17 Low. Can. 379 ('qui tam' for penalties; held, that defendant, being sworn, was not bound to answer any questions as a witness, "the tendency of every material question necessarily being to subject him to penalties," and thus it became merely a question of how to claim the privilege most conveniently and expeditiously; Taschereau, J., diss.).

through the privilege,[5] long before the modern statute of 1883 [6] had expressly nullified it.

For other varieties of crimes and proceedings, no especial difficulties arise, and no generalizations seem profitable.[7]

[5] The bearing of the principle noted ante, § 2257, may have had something to do with these rulings: 1820, Ex parte Cossens, Buck Bkcy. Cas. 531, 540 (L. C. Eldon: "A bankrupt cannot refuse to discover his estate and effects, . . . [though] that information may tend to show that he has property which he has not got according to law," this being "a qualification" of the general rule; but a question whether a certain bond was received for an illegal consideration was held properly refused, because the latter part of it was not necessary); 1833, Re Heath, 2 D. & Ch. 214, 221 (questions as to the bankrupt's disposition of goods, objected to as criminating him in respect to fraudulent disposition, held not privileged; following Ex parte Cossens); 1833, Re Smith, 2 D. & Ch. 230, 235 (similar; the words of the statute being taken as an express authorization); 1856, R. v. Sloggett, 7 Cox Cr. 139, before five judges (privilege recognized for certain matters); 1856, R. v. Scott, 1 D. & B. 47, before five judges (privilege held to have been abrogated by statute for the bankrupt; Coleridge, J., diss.); 1877, Ex parte Schofield, L. R. 6 Ch. D. 230 (similar; but the exemption still applies to witnesses in bankruptcy proceedings); 1892, R. v. Erdheim, 2 Q. B. 260, 267 (R. v. Scott followed); 1902, Re X. Y., 1 K. B. 98 (the debtor may be examined at large, in bankruptcy proceedings, by the petitioning creditor, because "since 1869 . . . it is difficult to say that bankruptcy proceedings are in any sense criminal"). The statutory amnesty (post, § 2281) may affect some of these rulings. For a few intervening cases approving R. v. Scott, in regard to confessions, see ante, § 850.

For the Federal bankruptcy statute, see post, §§ 2281, 2282.

[6] Post, §§ 2281, 2282. The earlier ruling seems not to have gone so far: 1793, Chambers v. Thompson, 4 Brown Ch. C. 434 (bankruptcy; privilege allowed as to acts of bankruptcy and intent to defraud, but not as to the fact of trading).

[7] The other rulings are as follows:

ENGLAND: 1750, Weaver v. Meath, 2 Ves. Sr. 108 (discovery of the fact of tenancy for life, required, though other facts would show a forfeiture of it); 1751, Finch v. Finch, 2 Ves. Sr. 491 (discovery of fact of marriage and lawful issue, compelled; "it does not tend to discovery whether he cohabited with any woman, if he should answer whether he has or has not a son lawfully begotten"); 1811, Cates v. Hardacre, 3 Taunt. 424 (usury; a question whether the witness had before this had the bill in his possession, held privileged, as a "link in a chain"); 1802, Cartwright v. Green, 8 Ves. Jr. 405 (taking money of another); 1828, Maccallum v. Turton, 2 Y. & J. 183, 192 (sale of shares of a dissolved company, held privileged under the circumstances); 1833, R. v. Pegler, 5 C. & P. 521 (question whether witness had not "said that he committed" an offence, held privileged); 1842, Lee v. Read, 5 Beav. 381, 385; 1850, King v. King, 2 Rob. Eccl. 153, 156 (divorce for adultery); 1851, Short v. Mercier, McN. & G. 205, 216 (stockjobbing; useful opinion by L. C. Truro); 1864, Bunn v. Bunn, 4 De G. J. & S. 316 (fraudulent conveyance under the statutes of Elizabeth; held that the penalty and forfeiture clauses of the statutes did not exempt from discovery as to the mere possession of such a deed).

CANADA: 1885, Brown v. Hooper, 3 Man. 86 (examination as to a fraudulent conveyance, prohibited); 1916, Attorney-General v. Kelly, 28 D. L. R. 409, Man. (a claim by affidavit that production of documents "might" tend, not "would" tend to eliminate, held sufficient, the precise word being immaterial); 1901, Hopkins v. Smith, 1 Ont. L. R. 659 (discovery of maintenance; where the whole topic is criminal, the party may refuse to answer at all).

UNITED STATES: Fed. 1807, U. S. v. Burr, U. S. (quoted supra); 1876, Matter of Graham, 8 Ben. 419 (gambling); Conn. 1831, Skinner v. Judson, 8 Conn. 528, 535 (fraudulent conveyance); Ga. 1853, Higdon v. Heard, 14 Ga. 255, 258 (gaming); 1901, Wheatley v. State, 114 Ga. 175, 39 S. E. 877 (whether the witness had seen defendant gaming, held not privileged; four judges disapproved of Higdon v. Heard, but the concurrence of five was necessary for overruling it); Ill. 1880, Taylor v. McIrvin, 94 Ill. 489, 493 (bankruptcy); Me. 1845, State v. Blake, 25 Me. 350, 353 (whether he had admitted that his former testimony was false, semble, privileged; but not whether he had said that he would testify as C. told him to); Mass. 1837, Com. v. Kimball, 24 Pick. 366, 369 (retailing liquor unlawfully; questions to witnesses as to purchases made of defendant, held not privileged; "the cases depend much upon their own circumstances"); Minn. 1868, Simmons v. Holster, 13 Minn. 249, 254 (libel); Mo. 1881, State v. Talbot, 73 Mo. 347, 359 (bigamy); 1905, Ex parte Conrades, 112 Mo. App. 21, 85 S. W. 150 (ordinance to investigate mercantile books in order to discover possible assets evading taxation; privilege held not applicable to the defendant's books at large without a specific claim as to incriminating facts); N. H. 1855, Coburn v. Odell, 30 N. H.

§ 2261. Facts Furnishing a Clue to the Discovery of Criminal Facts. It is obvious, from the illustrations given in the orthodox definitions of the foregoing principle, that the notion of a fact "tending to criminate" is that of a fact forming, in the phrase of Chief Justice Marshall, "a necessary and essential part of a crime." The assumption is that the means of establishing the other parts are already available for the prosecution, and that the claimant's disclosure of the missing link will complete the chain and thus in effect criminate him. This doctrine about "tending to criminate" is thus merely a logical deduction from the fundamental principle.

But the phrase has also been wrenched and extended, in a certain class of rulings, to mean much more, namely, to cover facts which, though colorless in themselves, by possibility may furnish a clue in searching for other and criminal facts. The privilege thus protects facts which may by disclosure lead ultimately to the extra-judicial detection of the criminal fact and its subsequent infra-judicial proof by other testimony.

How widely this differs from Chief Justice Marshall's notion may be seen in two marked features. (1) By this interpretation the fact ceases to be a "necessary and essential part of a crime," and becomes merely a colorless fact having no criminal flavor under any circumstances, — as if the witness be asked to disclose his residence, and then in his residence be found a man who discloses the whereabouts of stolen goods. (2) By this interpretation the relation between the main crime and the fact "tending to criminate" is not a logical and inherent one, i. e. that of a legal whole to its parts, but a casual and external one, i. e. a relation consisting in the probability that the one fact will so stimulate the ingenuity and fit the resources of certain prosecuting officials that they will be enabled thereby to discover the other fact, which else, with the same ingenuity and resources, would have remained undiscovered by them.

The thought of making an important rule of law turn upon so contingent, ephemeral, and unmeasurable a test as this was never entertained, 540, 555; 1906, Noyes v. Thorpe, 73 N. H. 481, 62 Atl. 787 (bill of discovery against the publisher of a libel, which was also a criminal one; the defendant held privileged not to produce the original manuscript nor to disclose the name of the author); N. Y. 1830, People v. Mather, 4 Wend. 229, 252; 1832, Bellinger v. People, 8 Wend. 595 (witness not compelled to state what she swore to on a prior examination, because it might tend to convict her of perjury); 1840, Burns v. Kempshall, 24 Wend. 360, 4 Hill 468 (usury); 1842, Cloyes v. Thayer, 3 Hill 564, 566 (usury); 1845, People v. Bodine, 1 Denio 281, 314 (like Bellinger v. People, supra); 1846, Bank v. Henry, 2 Denio 155, 157 (usury); 1847, Henry v. Salina Bank, 1 N. Y. 83, 86 (usury); 1894, People v. Forbes, 143 N. Y. 219, 224, 38 N. E. 303 (murder by poisonous gas); N. C. 1895, Smith v. Smith, 116 N. C. 386, 21 S. E. 196 (whether the witness had had connection with the defendant in a divorce proceeding, a single act of the sort not being criminal, held privileged); S. C. 1819, State v. Edwards, 2 N. & McC. 13 (challenge to a duel); 1842, Poole v. Perritt, 1 Spears 128 (gaming); Tenn. 1860, Lea v. Henderson, 1 Coldw. 146, 149 (seduction); Tex. 1851, Floyd v. State, 7 Tex. 215 (rule in U. S. v. Burr followed); 1906, Ex parte Merrell, 50 Tex. Cr. 193, 95 S. W. 1047 (liquor sales); Va. 1873, Cullen v. Com., 24 Gratt. 624, 635 (duelling; questions to a surgeon in attendance, held by possibility to involve a criminating tendency); Wis. 1906, Rudolph v. State, 128 Wis. 222, 107 N. W. 466 (bribery; cited more fully post, § 2282); Wyo. 1899, Miskimmins v. Shaver, 8 Wyo. 392, 58 Pac. 411 (compounding a felony; rule of U. S. v. Burr adopted; Knight, J., diss.).

and could not have been, by so wholesome a thinker as Chief Justice Marshall. It was reserved for latter-day Courts, who treated the privilege with morbid delicacy, and were disposed to expand it into misty attenuation, to resort to this meaning. In Counselman v. Hitchcock, and its accordant rulings, wherein the question arose whether a statute prohibiting the subsequent use of compulsory self-incriminating testimony was effectual to nullify the privilege, the main argument against such a statute's efficacy was held to be this same interpretation, i. e. that the privilege protected even against facts which might furnish indirectly a clue to crime, and that the statute had not annulled, and could not, this use of such facts. These statutes, and the rulings upon them, are examined in their place.[1]

It is necessary here to note that this theory of the scope of the privilege is heterodox and unsound. It had in fact long before been disposed of, without regard to its bearing upon such statutes. The issue was squarely presented in rulings upon a claim of privilege resisting such an interrogatory as this: "Who, other than yourself, is known to you to have participated in a crime?" or "to have been present at its commission?" The following opinion faces the issue firmly:

1829, MCGIRK, C. J., in Ward v. State, 2 Mo. 120, 122: "Was the witness right in refusing to answer the question on the ground that the answer would implicate himself? The record shows that the game of faro is played with cards, by one person as banker against any number of persons, each person playing for himself, without any aid from the others, against the banker; and that there is no common interest among those persons playing against the banker. Thus it appears that each player against the bank is separate and independent of all others. The inquiry made by the grand jury is 'Tell who bet at the game of faro, not naming yourself.' The answer of the witness is (supposing him to be A) that 'if I tell that B, C, and D played, it will be either full or partial evidence that I played.' This is the whole argument of the case, — an argument which I think is totally untenable in law and reason. . . . The question is, 'Who did you see betting at faro except yourself? It is believed that a direct answer in the negative to this would be, 'I saw no one bet at faro.' This answer, I think, all will allow, does not accuse him. But suppose his answer must be, that he saw B bet at faro, can it not be true that though B bet, yet he, the witness, did not? Does the mere fact that one man saw another commit crime, prove in law or reason that he who saw the crime committed was a participator? . . . But in this case it is said, if the witness is bound to tell who bet at the game, without naming himself, then those persons who are named will be examined as to the fact, whether he bet; and if the witness is not compelled to name who did bet, then they will remain unknown to the grand jury, and cannot be examined whether the witness bet. I understand this doctrine to be grounded more on the fear of retaliation than on any sound principle of law. Will the law permit a man to keep offences and offenders a secret, lest the offenders should in their turn give evidence against him? I have looked into the cases cited at the bar, and I am unable to perceive any principle, in any of them, which ought to vary the foregoing opinion." [2]

§ 2261. [1] Post, § 2282.

[2] The learned judge might have added that the whole argument opposed by him rested on the assumption that these other persons not only were then unknown but unsuspected, and that they would have remained unsuspected, except for the witness' disclosure, — an assumption which is, to say the least, an exaggerated one.

The rule as thus expounded is in accord with the earliest precedent recognizing the doctrine of facts "tending to criminate," [3] and seems to have been generally accepted.[4] Whatever may have been the extent of the subsequent misconception in the cases complicated by the statutes already referred to (post, § 2283), the tenor of the principle in its original bearings seems plain.

3. Form of Disclosure protected

§ 2263. General Principle. In the interpretation of the principle, nothing turns upon the variations of wording in the constitutional clauses; this much is conceded (ante, § 2252). It is therefore immaterial that the witness is protected by one Constitution from "testifying," or by another from "furnishing evidence," or by another from "giving evidence," or by still another from "being a witness." These various phrasings have a common conception, in respect to the form of the protected disclosure. What is that conception?

Looking back at the history of the privilege (ante, § 2250) and the spirit of the struggle by which its establishment came about, the object of the protection seems plain. It is the employment of legal process to extract from the person's own lips an admission of his guilt, which will thus take the place of other evidence. Such was the process of the ecclesiastical Court, as opposed through two centuries, — the inquisitorial method of putting the accused upon his oath, in order to supply the lack of the required two witnesses. Such was the complaint of Lilburn and his fellow-objectors, that he ought to be convicted by other evidence and not by his own forced confession upon oath.

[3] 1725, Lord Chancellor Macclesfield's Trial, 16 How. St. Tr. 767, 920, 1146, 1150 (the former incumbent of a public office was asked what was the greatest price for which it was illegally sold; this was held a privileged question, as involving by implication his own complicity in such a transaction; the question "whether he knows of any money paid to the Great Seal by any master in chancery" was also held privileged, because the next question might be whether he was himself a master; but the question whether he knew of money being so paid by any other master than himself was held not privileged).

[4] Eng. 1832, R. v. Slaney, 5 C. & P. 213, 214 (libel; a witness was not compelled to answer whether he had written the libel, but was compelled to answer whether he knew who did, and then was allowed to refuse to name the person, "because it may be himself");

U. S. 1917, Mason v. U. S., 244 U. S. 362, 37 Sup. 621 (gambling; similar to Richman v. State, Ia., but decided on another ground; cited more fully, post, § 2271); 1850, Richman v. State, 2 Greene Ia. 532 (answer to the question "Do you know of any person, other than yourself, being engaged in gaming, etc.?" held compellable); 1861, Prints v. Cheeney, 11 Ia. 469 (answer to the question "what he knew in regard to any person's tearing down and carrying away the property," held not compellable); 1863, State v. Duffy, 15 Ia. 425 (answer to the question "if he knew whether N. D. altered a bull," held compellable; the preceding case distinguished); 1829, Ward v. State, 2 Mo. 120, 122 (gaming; quoted supra); 1891, Ex parte Buskett, 106 Mo. 602, 609, 17 S. W. 753 (like the preceding case); 1906, Ex parte Gfeller, 178 Mo. 248, 77 S. W. 552, semble; 1880, La Fontaine v. Southern Underwriters' Ass'n, 83 N. C. 132, 141 (supplementary proceedings against an insolvent; Ward v. State, Mo., approved); 1904, Re Briggs, 135 N. C. 118, 47 S. E. 403 (question No. 3 here put was similar to that considered in Ward v. State, Mo., supra; the opinion of Clark, C. J., for the Court, overruling the claim of privilege, does not allude to this question; but Walker, J., specially concurring, says: "We all agree, as I understand, that the first three questions did not tend to criminate the witness," citing Ward v. State).

Contra: 1891, Minters v. People, 139 Ill. 363, 365 (gaming; the answer to a question whether he had seen others playing, held not compellable; but on the erroneous assumption that the witness himself was by his own testimony a participant; none of the cases on this point are cited).

Such, too, is the inference from the policy of the privilege as a defensible institution (ante, § 2251); that is to say, it exists mainly in order to stimulate the prosecution to a full and fair search for evidence procurable by their own exertions, and to deter them from a lazy and pernicious reliance upon the accused's confessions.

Such, finally, is the practical requirement that follows from the necessity of recognizing other unquestioned methods of procuring evidence; for if the privilege extended beyond these limits, and protected an accused otherwise than in his strictly testimonial status, — if, in other words, it created inviolability not only for his physical control of his own vocal utterances, but also for his physical control in whatever form exercised, then it would be possible for a guilty person to shut himself up in his house, with all the tools and indicia of his crime, and defy the authority of the law to employ in evidence anything that might be obtained by forcibly overthrowing his possession and compelling the surrender of the evidential articles, — a clear 'reductio ad absurdum.'

In other words, it is not merely any and every compulsion that is the kernel of the privilege, in history and in the constitutional definitions, but testimonial compulsion.[1] The one idea is as essential as the other.

The general principle, therefore, in regard to the form of the protected disclosure, may be said to be this: The privilege protects a person from any disclosure sought by legal process against him as a witness.

§ 2264. Production or Inspection of Documents and Chattels. 1. It follows that the production of documents or chattels by a person (whether ordinary witness or party-witness) in response to a subpœna, or to a motion to order production, or to other form of process treating him as a witness (i.e. as a person appearing before the tribunal to furnish testimony on his moral responsibility for truth-telling), may be refused under the protection of the privilege; and this is universally conceded.[1] For though the disclosure thus § 2263. [1] 1894, Earl, J., in People v. Gardner, 144 N. Y. 119, 38 N. E. 1003 ("The main purpose of the provision was to prohibit the compulsory oral examination of prisoners before trial, or upon trial, for the purpose of extorting unwilling confessions or declarations implicating them in crime"). . . . But in a criminal or penal cause, the defendant is never forced to produce any evidence, though he should hold it in his hands in court").

U. S. 1885, Boyd v. U. S., 116 U. S. 616, 6 Sup. 524 (cited infra); 1896, U. S. v. Lead Co., 75 Fed. 94; 1902, Re Kanter, 117 Fed. 356 (privilege applied to documentary proof in bankruptcy proceedings); 1906, Hale v. Henkel, 201 U. S. 43, 26 Sup. 370 (cited more fully infra); 1896, Lamson v. Boyden, 160 Ill. 613, 43 N. E. 781 (privilege applied to documents called for by demand in court); 1918, Temple v. State, 15 Okl. Cr. 146, 175 Pac. 555 (forgery; on order of the trial Court, at the request of the prosecution, defendant was compelled to produce the deed alleged to be forged; held, a violation of the privilege); 1890, Logan v. R. Co., 132 Pa. 403, 406, 409, 19 Atl. 137 (discovery of papers refused); 1892, Boyle v. Smithman, 146 Pa. 255, 257, 274, 23 Atl. 397 (defendant not compellable by sought be not oral in form, and though the documents or chattels be already in existence and not desired to be first written and created by a testimonial act or utterance of the person in response to the process, still no line can be drawn short of any process which treats him as a witness; because in virtue of it he would be at any time liable to make oath to the identity or authenticity or origin of the articles produced.

§ 2264. [1] To the following cases add those concerning corporations, etc., cited ante, § 2259: Eng. 1749, R. v. Purnell, 1 W. Bl. 37, 45 (Lee, C. J.: "We know no instance wherein this Court has granted a rule to inspect books in a criminal prosecution nakedly considered"); 1769, Roe v. Harvey, 4 Burr. 2484, 2489 (the plaintiff in ejectment would not produce a deed affecting his title, the deed being "in Court, or at least in the plaintiff's power"; Lord Mansfield "observed that in civil causes the Court will force parties to produce evidence which may prove against themselves, or leave the refusal to do it (after proper notice) as a strong presumption to the jury.

2. It follows, on the other hand, that documents or chattels obtained from the person's control without the use of process against him as a witness are not in the scope of the privilege, and may be used evidentially; for obviously the proof of their identity, or authenticity, or other circumstances affecting them, may and must be made by the testimony of other persons, without any employment of the accused's oath or testimonial responsibility:

1717, Francia's Trial, 15 How. St. Tr. 897, 966. PRATT, J.: "I never knew in my life but what was done in this case was ordinarily done in the like case, and ought to be done; and you ought not to go on with invectives to the jury, complaining that his papers are seized and then that those papers are turned against him. When a correspondence is carried on by letters, ought they not to be seized? And if they appear to be treasonable, ought they not to be kept and made use of against him?" Counsel for defendant: "I have not said anything to impeach the legality of what was done. All I said, and do say, is that the evidence is from the papers found in his own custody."

1858, BELL, J., in State v. Flynn, 36 N. H. 64: "Its ground [of the objection] is, rather, that information obtained by means of a search-warrant, in a case not authorized by the Constitution, is not competent to be given in evidence, because it has been obtained by compulsion from the defendant himself, in violation of that clause of the Constitution which provides that no person shall be compelled to furnish evidence against himself. . . . It seems to us an unfounded idea that the discoveries made by the officers and their assistants, in the execution of process, whether legal or illegal, or where they intrude upon a man's privacy without any legal warrant, are of the nature of admissions made under duress, or that it is evidence furnished by the party himself upon compulsion. The information thus acquired is not the admission of the party, nor evidence given by him, in any sense. The party has in his power certain mute witnesses, as they may be called, which he endeavors to keep out of sight, so that they may not disclose the facts which he is desirous to conceal. By force or fraud, access is gained to them, and they are examined, to see what evidence they bear. That evidence is theirs, not their owner's. . . . It does not seem to us possible to establish a sound distinction between that case, and the case of the counterfeit bills, the forger's implements, the false keys, or the like, which have been obtained by similar means. The evidence is in no sense his."

(a) This distinction has received repeated illustration and almost universal acceptance, in a variety of applications to documents and chattels obtained by search or seizure independent of testimonial process, e. g. by physical search subpœna or Court order to produce his books of account); 1898, Ex parte Wilson, 39 Tex. Cr. 630, 47 S. W. 996 (privilege applied to the production of documents); 1801, State v. Squires, Tyler Vt. 147 (compulsory process ordering the delivery of a client's notes in his attorney's hands, the notes being alleged to be forged, held improper).

---

But it seems clear that the witness must at least answer the preliminary question whether he has possession of the book asked for; this follows from the principle of § 2268, post, and from the analogy of the civil party's privilege against discovery (ante, §§ 1859, 2200, 2219). Contra, semble, per Holmes, J., in Ballmann v. Fagin, 200 U. S. 186, 26 Sup. 212 (1905).

of the person or premises without calling upon the party for any act or utterance of his own.[2]

[2] These cases, for the reasons noted supra, should be compared with the cases cited ante, § 2183 (documents obtained by illegal search) and § 2259b (documents of a corporation); Ala. 1887, Chastang v. State, 83 Ala. 29, 3 So. 304 (defendant was arrested under a warrant, but resisted; on disarming and searching him, a pistol was found; admitted, distinguishing U. S. v. Boyd, infra, since "the evidence is obtained without requiring the defendant to do any affirmative act"); 1893, Shields v. State, 104 Ala. 35, 39, 16 So. 85 (similar); Ark. 1896, Starchman v. State, 62 Ark. 538, 36 S. W. 940 (tools found by officers searching defendant's house, admitted); Cal. 1909, People v. LeDoux, 155 Cal. 535, 102 Pac. 517 (papers taken on an unauthorized search, admitted; Adams v. New York, U. S., followed; Boyd v. U. S. distinguished); Conn. 1896, State v. Griswold, 67 Conn. 290, 34 Atl. 1047 (papers seized in the defendant's house during his absence, held not privileged); Ga. 1882, Franklin v. State, 69 Ga. 36 (shoes and socks, taken by officers from the defendant's feet without objection by him, held admissible); 1885, Drake v. State, 74 Ga. 413 (clothing taken off the defendant, held properly admitted; the privilege applies "when a person is sworn as a witness"); 1888, Wolfolk v. State, 81 Ga. 551, 562, 8 S. E. 724 (clothing removed from defendant by the coroner's order at an inquest, admitted; "the officer has a right to do so," and the discoveries are admissible); 1894, Rusher v. State, 94 Ga. 363, 367, 21 S. E. 593 (money discovered by compelling the accused, without unlawful violence, to point it out, held admissible); 1895, Hinkle v. State, 94 Ga. 595, 21 S. E. 595 (evidence obtained from an accused by compulsion out of court is not within the privilege, except where, in violation of the confession-rule, "a substantive preëxisting physical fact bearing directly on the fruits of the crime has been discovered by means of exciting hope or fear"; here the discovery of stolen money); 1896, Myers v. State, 97 Ga. 76, 25 S. E. 252 (the taking of a pair of shoes from the defendant by an officer and comparing them with certain tracks, held not a violation of the privilege); 1898, Williams v. State, 100 Ga. 511, 28 S. E. 624 (lottery-tickets and money obtained by a search of the defendant's house and person, by officers not having a warrant, held admissible; Boyd v. U. S., infra, expressly distinguished, and Gindrat v. People, Ill., followed); 1899, Evans v. State, 106 Ga. 519, 32 S. E. 659 (a police-officer called to quell a disturbance found the defendant, and compelled him to give up his pistol; excluded, on a prosecution for carrying a concealed weapon; the singular distinction is taken that such evidence is inadmissible if the person was not at the time in legal custody, but otherwise if he was); 1899, Dozier v. State, 107 Ga. 708, 33 S. E. 418 (carrying concealed weapon; that the sheriff searched the accused without meeting resistance, and found the pistol, admitted; Evans v. State distinguished, since there the defendant was compelled to hand over the pistol); the foregoing Georgia cases are perhaps not law, since the rulings cited infra, n. 11; Ill. 1891, Gindrat v. People, 138 Ill. 103, 105, 27 N. E. 1085 (larceny; articles obtained by illegal search of defendant's rooms without a warrant, admitted; quoted infra); 1892, Siebert v. People, 143 Ill. 571, 583, 32 N. E. 431 (similar; here, letters); 1894, Trask v. People, 151 Ill. 523, 38 N. E. 248 (similar; here, papers); 1904, Swedish-American Tel. Co. v. Fidelity & C. Co., 208 Ill. 562, 70 N. E. 768 (here the privilege was held not violated by an order which merely authorized inspection of the books by the applicant-party while in the defendant's possession); Kan. 1905, State v. Schmidt, 71 Kan. 862, 80 Pac. 948 (bottles of liquor, seized from the defendant's possession by an officer without a warrant, admitted); La. 1904, State v. Aspara, 113 La. 940, 37 So. 883 (clothing taken from defendant in jail, exhibited); Md. 1906, Lawrence v. State, 103 Md. 17, 63 Atl. 96 (documents taken by the police from the defendant's satchel or from his person under arrest, admitted; Boyd v. U. S. not followed as to its obiter statements, but Adams v. New York, U. S., infra, followed; Blum v. State, Md., infra, n. 11, distinguished, as involving "virtually compulsory process for the production of evidence in the immediate proceeding in which it was offered"); Minn. 1903, State v. Stoffels, 89 Minn. 205, 94 N. W. 675 (introduction of liquors illegally kept, possession being obtained by a search-warrant, held not a violation of the privilege); 1911, State v. Rogne, 115 Minn. 204, 132 N. W. 5 (scrap iron taken by the sheriff from the defendant's premises; privilege not applicable); Mo. 1895, State v. Pomeroy, 130 Mo. 489, 497, 32 S. W. 1002 (lottery tickets seized by officers, without a search-warrant, from defendant's desk and on his person, held not privileged); 1908, State v. Jeffries, 210 Mo. 302, 109 S. W. 614 (defendant's shoes; "it is immaterial how they were obtained"); Mont. 1906, State v. Fuller, 34 Mont. 12, 85 Pac. 369 (the majority opinion in Boyd v. U. S., disapproved); Nebr. 1902, Russell v. State, 66 Nebr. 497, 92 N. W. 751 (shoes of the defendant, found in the county jail and taken therefrom, admitted); N. H. 1858, State v. Flynn, 36 N. H. 64 (liquor found on defendant's premises by officers searching under a warrant, admitted; quoted supra):

(b) The distinction would apparently never have suffered any judicial doubt,[3] but for a modern opinion, in which (in spite of a protest by a minority of the Court) the seeds of a dangerous heresy were sown. In Boyd v. United States,[4] an order for production by the defendant himself of self-criminating documents was properly held to be within the privilege, on the principle of par. (1), supra; but the opinion of the majority, speaking 'obiter', declared the privilege applicable also to documents obtained by officers' search or seizure legal or illegal, irrespective of testimonial process.

Incidentally, it may be noted that the Constitution (in the Fourth Amendment) does not by any means prohibit searches and seizures as such; but only "unreasonable" ones. Historically (as is well known) it was the illegal practices of "general warrants" (defeated by Wilkes' great struggle of 1763–65 and by Lord Camden's vindication [5]) and of "writs of assistance" (elo-

N. Y. 1903, People v. Adams, 176 N. Y. 351, 68 N. E. 636 (policy gambling; papers seized in the defendant's office under a search-warrant, and used partly as standards of handwriting and partly as papers forming part of the crime, admitted; Boyd v. U. S., infra, distinguished); People v. Adams, supra, affirmed on writ of error in Adams v. New York, 192 U. S. 585, 24 Sup. 372 (1904) (stated infra, n. 12); N. C. 1899, State v. Mallett, 125 N. C. 718, 34 S. E. 651 (books already seized on attachment, admitted); Okl. 1919, Knight v. State, 16 Okl. Cr. 298, 182 Pac. 736 (search-warrant); S. C. 1893, State v. Atkinson, 40 S. C. 363, 372, 18 S. E. 1021 (papers taken from defendant's house, in defendant's absence and without communication to him, held not privileged); S. D. 1908, State v. Vey, 21 S. D. 612, 114 N. W. 719 (unsealed letter handed by accused to sheriff in jail, and kept by sheriff; admitted); Vt. 1905, State v. Krinski, 78 Vt. 162, 62 Atl. 37 (illegal keeping of liquors; articles seized under an illegal warrant, admitted; distinguishing State v. Slamon, Vt., infra, n. 12, and approving Adams v. N. Y., U. S., infra, n. 12); 1905, State v. Barr, 78 Vt. 97, 62 Atl. 43 (like State v. Krinski, supra); 1906, State v. Suitor, 78 Vt. 391, 63 Atl. 182 (similar); Wash. 1893, State v. Nordstrom, 7 Wash. 506, 509, 35 Pac. 382 (boots, socks, cap, memorandum-book, obtained by search of the person, held not privileged); 1905, State v. Royce, 38 Wash. 111, 80 Pac. 268 (burglary; a pawn ticket taken from the defendant's person on search by the arresting officers, admitted; Gindrat v. People, Ill., followed); W. Va. 1889, State v. Baker, 33 W. Va. 319, 331, 10 S. E. 639 (pantaloons taken off by accused, while in jail, at the sheriff's request and handed to him, held not privileged); 1902, State v. Edwards, 51 W. Va. 220, 41 S. E. 429 (larceny by trick, in using worthless State bank-notes; the notes, seized on the defendant's person by the officer arresting, held admissible; quoted supra).

Distinguish the following: 1888, R. v. Luce, 6 Haw. 684 (under a statute authorising a search-warrant to discover "articles necessary to be produced as evidence or otherwise," held that the statute did not apply to books of account of the accused; the constitutional question not decided).

Distinguish also the rule that a subpœna for documents must be reasonably specific in its terms, in order to be entitled to obedience (cases cited ante, § 2200).

[3] Except that the fallacy was anticipated, by some years, in an utterance of Mr. Justice Cooley in his Constitutional Limitations, c. X.

[4] 1885, Boyd v. U. S., 116 U. S. 616, 618, 6 Sup. 437, 524 (information for evasion of customs dues by fraudulent invoicing; on the order of the trial Court, the invoice was compelled to be produced by the defendant for inspection in court, under St. June 22, 1874, § 5 (quoted ante, § 2219), requiring production on motion, and taking the facts to be confessed as alleged, in case of failure to produce; the order was held unconstitutional, under the Fifth and also the Fourth Amendments; the present case was held to be in effect a criminal proceeding, and the above statute apparently held void so far as its provisions are literally applicable to "all suits and proceedings other than criminal"; Waite, C. J., and Miller, J., diss., solely to the extent of holding that the Court's order was not for a search nor a seizure and therefore not within the prohibition of the Fourth Amendment). It is obvious that the decision of this case, apart from the opinion, was correct, under par. (1), supra.

[5] 1763, Wilkes' Case, 19 How. St. Tr. 982, 1381; 1765, Leach v. Money, 19 How. St. Tr. 1001, 1027, 3 Burr. 1692, 1742; 1765, Entick v. Carrington, 19 How. St. Tr. 1029, 1063, 2 Wils. 275; Cooley, Constitutional Limitations, 6th ed., 364; May, Constitutional Law, c. 11; Campbell, Lives of the Chancellors, VI, 367.

quently opposed in 1761 by Otis [6]), against which the various Bills of Rights and the Federal Fourth Amendment were intended to provide protection.[7] The majority's opinion in Boyd v. United States therefore mistreats the Fourth Amendment, in applying its prohibition to a returnable writ of seizure describing specific documents in the possession of a specific person.

But, apart from this error, the radical fallacy of the opinion lies in its attempt to wrest the Fourth Amendment to the aid of the Fifth. The "intimate relation between them," which the opinion predicates, must be wholly denied. (1) In the first place, the two doctrines had had a totally different political and legal history.[8] Furthermore, if the privilege against self-crimination had been regarded as violated by seizures of papers, it is singular that this principle did not suffice, without anything more, to defeat the practice of general warrants in Wilkes' controversy. And again, if it had any such bearing, it would have protected equally against all warrants, whether general or specific, lawful or unlawful. Nor can we suppose that the framers of the Constitutions and Bills of Rights, with Wilkes' pamphlets and Otis' speeches fresh in their memories, could have believed that they were merely duplicating one principle in the two clauses of the same document. In short, the principles of the Fourth and the Fifth Amendments are complementary to each other; what the one covers, the other leaves untouched. (2) In the second place, the only bearing which the Fourth Amendment can be conceived to have is that, in case of a seizure under a warrant violating that rule, the seized articles come before the court as illegally obtained. But this circumstance of itself cannot stand in the way of their use as evidence. If there was ever any rule well settled (until the opinion in Boyd v. United States), it was this, that an illegality in the mode of obtaining evidence cannot exclude it, but must be redressed or punished or resisted by appropriate proceedings otherwise taken.[9]

There is, therefore, no respect whatever in which the principle of the Fourth Amendment can be properly invoked in applying the principle of the Fifth Amendment. For these reasons, judicial opinion elsewhere, since Boyd v. United States was decided, generally refused to accept its pronouncement: [10]

1891, BAKER, J., in Gindrat v. People, 138 Ill. 103, 109, 111, 27 N. E. 1085: "That which was condemned in Boyd v. U. S. [cited supra] was the enforced production by the parties to the criminal case of evidence against themselves, through and by means of an order made by the Court and a process under the seal of the Court, issued by virtue thereof.

[6] 1761, Paxton's Case, Quincy's Rep. 51; Cooley, Constitutional Limitations, 6th ed., 367. An interesting account of the scene on the occasion of James Otis' argument against "writs of assistance" (general warrants) in Massachusetts is given in John Adams' Letter to William Tudor, March 29, 1817.

[7] This sufficiently appears from a comparison e. g. of the Bill of Rights of Virginia, art. 10, in 1776, and of the Declaration of Rights of Massachusetts, art. 14, in 1780, with the Fourth Amendment to the Federal Constitution, a decade later.

[8] That of the Fifth has been examined in detail (ante, § 2250). That of the Fourth began a hundred years later, as a direct sequence of Wilkes' and Otis' agitations.

[9] This principle has been already examined (ante, §§ 2183, 2184).

[10] The cases in accord have been placed supra, note 2.

. . . The unconstitutional and erroneous order, process, and procedure of the trial Court compelled the claimants to produce evidence against themselves, and such order, process, and procedure were also held to be tantamount to an unreasonable search and seizure; while here, and in the other cases cited, the question of illegality was raised collaterally, and the Courts exercised no compulsion whatever to procure evidence from the defendants, and neither made orders nor issued process authorizing or purporting to authorize a search of premises or a seizure of property or papers; but simply admitted evidence which was offered, without stopping to inquire whether possession of it had been obtained lawfully or unlawfully."

1902, POFFENBARGER, J., in State v. Edwards, 51 W. Va. 220, 41 S. E. 429 (admitting worthless bank-notes used in cheating, and seized on the defendant's person): "There is such a thing as unreasonable search, which the law will not permit. But where a man stands charged with crime, and an instrument or device is found upon his person or in his possession which was a part of the means by which he accomplished the crime, those instruments, devices, or tokens are legitimate evidence for the State, and may be taken from him and used for that purpose. If it were otherwise, the pistol with which a murderer shoots down his victim, or the dagger with which he stabs him, inseparably connected with the 'corpus delicti,' and, therefore, competent and legitimate evidence, could not be taken from the pocket of the murderer and used as evidence against him, for the reason that they belong to him and are found upon his person. It is well settled that a person in custody on a criminal charge may be subjected to a personal search, and examination against his will, in order to discover upon him evidence of his criminality. . . . What are these old papers except the instruments, as effectually used in closing the eyes of Dennison to the larceny of his money which the defendant was perpetrating under the deception practiced by their use, as a burglar uses his jimmy to break open a safe?"

Nevertheless, the 'obiter' expressions of opinion by the majority in Boyd v. United States led a few other Courts, after the publication of that case, to adopt its erroneous view and to exclude documents obtained even by seizure.[11]

However, the heresy of Boyd v. United States, in later Federal opinions, before long, was for practical purposes repudiated (in respect to the 'obiter' statements in the majority opinion, above noted), by rulings which held de-

[11] Ga. 1907, Hammock v. State, 1 Ga. App. 126, 58 S. E. 66 (carrying concealed weapons; practically repudiating, for this State, the foregoing cases in note 2; cited more fully ante, § 2183); 1907, Hughes v. State, 2 Ga. App. 29, 58 S. E. 390 (similar); 1907, Sherman v. State, 2 Ga. App. 686, 58 S. E. 1122 (similar); 1907, Smith v. State, 3 Ga. App. 326, 59 S. E. 934 (selling liquor illegally; the Hammock Case distinguished; see the citation ante, § 2183); 1913, Underwood v. State, 13 Ga. App. 206, 78 S. E. 1103 (cited more fully ante, § 2183); the cases in this State are going to an extreme; Ia. 1902, State v. Height, 117 Ia. 650, 91 N. W. 935 (Boyd v. U. S. approved, obiter; cited post, § 2265); 1903, State v. Sheridan, 121 Ia. 164, 96 N. W. 730 (goods unlawfully taken, on a search-warrant, from the defendant's premises, for the sole purpose of obtaining evidence against the defendant, excluded; following State v. Height); Md. 1902, Blum v. State, 94 Md. 375, 51 Atl. 26 (false pretences; account-books obtained by a receiver from a constable who had taken possession of defendant's premises under an attachment, held inadmissible; following Boyd v. U. S.); N. Y. 1894, People v. Spiegel, 143 N. Y. 107, 38 N. E. 284, semble (Boyd v. U. S. approved); Okl. 1911, Gillespie v. State, 5 Okl. Cr. 546, 115 Pac. 620 (cited more fully post, § 2273); Vt. 1901, State v. Slamon, 73 Vt. 212, 50 Atl. 1097 (following Boyd v. U. S. on both grounds; a letter improperly taken from defendant under a search-warrant for stolen goods, held inadmissible to impeach the writer, a witness for the defendant; unsound, because the privilege certainly does not apply to documents written by other persons).

Distinguish here also the question of the scope of the Fourth Amendment as applied to statutes compelling discovery by process: 1921, State Tax Commission v. Tennessee C. I. & R. Co., 206 Ala. 355, 89 So. 179. Compare the cases cited ante, § 2200 (subpœna d. t.) and § 2219 (party's privilege).

cisively (1) that the Fourth Amendment does not prevent the use of documents and chattels obtained by lawful search-warrant, and (2) that furthermore the use of documents produced under compulsion of subpœna, for which the privilege under the Fifth Amendment has been taken away by an immunity-statute, cannot be objected to on the ground of the Fourth Amendment.[12] So that the orthodox doctrine now prevails virtually everywhere. In the following lucid opinion the return of the Federal Court to orthodoxy is amply declared:

1920, BAKER, J., in Haywood v. U. S., 7th C. C. A., 268 Fed. 795, 802: "From the thirteenth to the middle of the seventeenth century the Ecclesiastical Courts of England and during the later part of the period the Courts of Star Chamber and of High Commission compelled defendants to testify respecting criminal charges against them. During the last century of our colonial period the principle that no person shall be compelled in a criminal case to be a witness against himself had become a fixed part of our inheritance. And it was that fixed and definite meaning that in clearest terms was incorporated in our federal Bill of Rights. 'Witness' is the key word. Constitutional safeguards should be applied as broadly as the wording, in the historical light of the evil that was aimed at, will permit; and so a defendant is protected not merely from being placed on the witness stand and compelled to testify to his version of the matters set forth in the indictment; he is protected from authenticating by his oath any documents that are sought to be used against him; he is protected from producing his documents in response to a subpœna 'duces tecum,' for his production of them in court would be his voucher of their genuineness; he is protected from an act of Congress declaring that the government's statement of the contents of his documents, if he fail to produce them on notice, shall be taken as confessed. But unless the origin and purpose of the command be disregarded and the key word be turned into an unintended, if not impossible, meaning, no compulsion is forbidden by the Fifth Amendment except testimonial compulsion. At the trial of this case no defendant was compelled in any way to become a witness against himself or against any of his alleged co-conspirators. Letters, pamphlets and other documents, identified by other witnesses, were competent evidence; and the trial judge, correctly finding them competent, was not required to stop, and would not have been justified in stopping, the trial to pursue a collateral inquiry into how they came to the hands of government attorneys. Consequently there was no violation of defendants' rights under the Fifth Amendment."

[12] The recantation begins with Adams v. New York: 1893, Tucker v. U. S., 151 U. S. 164, 168, 14 Sup. 299 (defendant's affidavit, voluntarily filed, for the summoning of witnesses in his behalf, admitted to contradict him, and held not to be a violation of the privilege nor of U. S. Rev. St. 1878, § 860, quoted post, § 2281); 1897, Hoover v. M'Chesney, 81 Fed. 472 (a seizure by the post-officials of mail of a person supposed to be infringing the law, and its return to the sender or the dead-letter office, held a violation of the privilege); 1904, Adams v. New York, 192 U. S. 585, 24 Sup. 372 (facts stated supra, n. 2, in People v. Adams, N. Y., brought here on writ of error; the Federal Court referred to the opinion of the majority in Boyd v. U. S. with apparent approval of its statement as to the history of the two Amendments; but held that here there was no violation of either Amendment, — not of the Fifth, because "he was not compelled to testify concerning the papers or make any admission about them," nor of the Fourth, because the search was not wrongful; and that in any event the effect of the Fourth does not "extend to excluding testimony which has been obtained by such means, if it is otherwise competent"; thus practically drawing the fangs of the erroneous 'obiter dictum' in the majority opinion of Boyd v. U. S.); 1904, Interstate Commerce Commission v. Baird, 194 U. S. 25, 24 Sup. 563 (order to an officer of a defendant corporation to testify and produce certain contracts of the corporation before the Commission; the privilege of the Fifth Amendment being obviated by the immunity of St. 1893, under § 2281, post, the Court held that the Fourth Amendment did not stand in the way; "testimony given under such circumstances presents scarcely a suggestion of an unreasonable search or seizure"; this squarely contradicts in effect the 'obiter dictum' of the majority opinion in Boyd v. U. S.); 1906, Hale v. Henkel, 201 U. S. 43, 26 Sup. 370 (similar, for corporation documents produced upon subpœna before a grand jury, by an officer entitled to the immunity-clause of St. 1903, Feb. 25, quoted post, § 2281; of the Boyd case, it is said that "subsequent cases treat the Fourth and Fifth Amendments as quite distinct, having different histories, and performing different functions"; this seems to signify plainly that the 'obiter' statements of the majority opinion in the Boyd case are no longer approved by the Federal Supreme Court; Harlan and McKenna, JJ., concurring, emphasize the fact that a corporation may not be within the Fourth Amendment at all); 1908, U. S. v. Wilson, C. C. S. D. N. Y., 163 Fed. 338 (cited more fully ante, § 2184); 1910, Holt v. U. S., 218 U. S. 245, 31 Sup. 2 (Adams v. N. Y. approved); 1914, Weeks v. U. S., 232 U. S. 383, 34 Sup. 341 (cited more fully ante, § 2184; it does not restrict the effect of the prior rulings, so far as the present principle is concerned); 1914, U. S. v. Hart, D. C. N. D. N. Y., 214 Fed. 655, 216 Fed. 374 (Weeks v. U. S. held not to forbid the use of papers voluntarily handed by a witness to the district attorney for use before the grand jury on a promise to return them); 1918, Perlman v. U. S., 247 U. S. 7, 38 Sup. 417 (petition to restrain the U. S. district attorney from taking possession of exhibits impounded by the Court in a civil suit by the petitioner wherein the exhibits had been offered by him; after the order to impound, a further order was made to produce the exhibits before the grand jury with a view to the prosecution of the petitioner for an offence; held, that since the petitioner had made "a voluntary exposition of the articles, for use as evidence," there was no compulsion, and therefore no violation of privilege in the prosecution's use of them); 1919, Laughter v. U. S., 6th C. C. A., 259 Fed. 94 (cited more fully ante, § 2184); 1919, Schenck v. U. S., Baer v. U. S., 249 U. S. 47, 39 Sup. 247 (Holt v. U. S. and Weeks v. U. S. held not to exclude the use of documents obtained on a valid search warrant); 1920, MacKnight v. U. S., 1st C. C. A., 263 Fed. 832, 838 (documents seized under a search warrant legal under § 2, St. June 15, 1917, c. 30, admitted); 1920, Haywood v. U. S., 7th C. C. A., 268 Fed. 795 (quoted supra).

3. But the ill-advised opinion in Boyd v. United States left one unfortunate remnant of influence on Federal practice, which has led to similar aberrations in other Courts, viz. the doctrine that a search and seizure unlawful under the Fourth Amendment renders inadmissible any documents or chattels thus illegally obtained. The state of the law on this subject has been fully examined elsewhere, under the principle that illegality in the mode of obtaining evidence does not exclude it (ante, § 2184).

4. Three apparent exceptions to the first branch of the rule (supra, par. 1) may now be noted:

(a) Where a document, even though possessed or made or inscribed by the claimant of the privilege, is an official document, it is not protected by the privilege; for it is made or kept by him as an official holding a public trust and is therefore liable to inspection at any time, either by the proper authorities or (as in most cases) also by the public at large or by citizens interested (ante, § 2259*c*).

(b) Where a document within the privilege is withheld, under claim of privilege, no inference of its contents can be made (post, § 2272). But just as an inference may be drawn, in spite of that principle, from the accused's failure to summon witnesses who might naturally have been able to clear him if he were innocent, so a similar inference may be drawn from his failure to produce documents which might have exonerated him if innocent. This distinction is considered post, § 2273, in dealing with the general principle applicable to inferences from a claim of privilege.

(c) A copy of the privileged document may of course be used if available, on the principle of § 1200, ante.

5. A corollary of the first branch of the rule (supra, par. 1) is that the State is entitled to use its physical force to take evidential documents or chattels from the possession of one chargeable with crime; because it is prevented by the privilege from using a subpœna duces tecum against him personally, and therefore would otherwise be helpless to obtain and preserve necessary evidence. Hence, no action lies against an officer for trespass in taking such documents or chattels.[13] This general power of the State affords the officer a larger protection than the ordinary search-warrant, which is hedged about by statutory limitations.[14]

§ 2264*a*. Same: Custodian of Documents Called For; Bankrupt's Documents. In applying the foregoing principle, a question may arise as to the incidence of the process used, i. e. whether the testimonial process is being used in fact against the person claiming the privilege or against a third person. If the latter, then the claim is of course ineffective, because a claim of privilege by one person has no effect to protect documents possessed by a third person (ante, § 2259). Instances of this question have already been noted in considering the claim of privilege by an officer of a corporation for the corporate books (ante, § 2259*b*), and they occur also under the general principle of § 2264, ante.

A special difficulty (usually of fact only) occurs where the books of a bankrupt are sought.[1] Here it is obvious that the privilege protects them if the [13] Accord: 1887, Dillon v. O'Brien, 20 L. R. Ir. 300, 16 Cox Cr. 245 (trespass, etc.; the defendant, a peace officer, arresting the plaintiff on a warrant for conspiracy, took possession of books, papers, etc. "which were material and necessary evidence in the prosecution for such offence," and detained them pending the prosecution; held that the plea was good, and applied to misdemeanors as well as felonies, and rested on "the interest which the State has in a person guilty, or reasonably believed to be guilty, of a crime being brought to justice"; Pallas, C. B.: "If there be a right to production or preservation of this evidence, I cannot see how it can be enforced otherwise than by capture; if material evidences of crime are in possession of a third party, production can be enforced by the Crown by subpœna duces tecum, but no such writ can be effective in the case of the person charged"; prior cases reviewed); 1903, Carmichael v. McCowen, 8 Newf. (Morris & Browning) 597 (action for trespass to personalty and realty: plea that defendant was chief of police, that plaintiff had committed fraudulent arson on her premises, and that defendant entered and took possession for the purpose of using various portions as evidence and did so use them, and that the plaintiff was convicted; the plea was held good; Harwood, C. J.: "The law regards the public interest in securing the conviction of public offenders as of such paramount importance that all considerations of regard for the rights of private property must yield").

Contra, but unsound: 1895, Newberry v. Carpenter, 107 Mich. 567, 65 N. W. 530 (impounding an exploded boiler pending trial of the liability for the explosion is actionable).

[14] Compare the cases cited ante, §§ 2183, 2184 (illegal search).

§ 2264a*. [1] The following cases include those representing all the different situations noted above in the text; additional cases involving bankrupt's books in other aspects are placed ante, § 2259*b*; Federal: 1910, In re Tracy & Co., D. C. S. D. N. Y., 177 Fed. 532 (refusing to restrain a trustee in bankruptcy from delivering to the district attorney for use in prosecution the bankrupt's books taken possession of by the receiver, delivered by him to public accountants, and taken by the district attorney from them under subpœna with the trustee's connivance; there need not have been any hesitation about this case); 1911, Matter of George Harris, 221 U. S. 274, 31 Sup. 557 (bankrupt required to deposit his books with the receiver; cited more fully post, § 2282); 1912, Johnson v. U. S., 228 U. S. 457, 33 Sup. 572 (where a bankrupt's books have been transferred to the trustee under § 70 of the Bankruptcy Act, without any reservation of rights in the court's order, then the trustee's use of the books, either before the grand jury or before the trial jury, on a charge of fraudulent concealment of assets, is not a violation of the privilege; opinion per Holmes, J.: "A party is privileged from producing the evidence, but not from its production"; "A man cannot protect his property from being used to pay his debts by attaching to it a disclosure of crime");

testimonial process is invoked directly against the bankrupt himself when in legal possession of the documents, but not if it is invoked against the receiver or other custodian; nor if the compulsory surrender sought from the bankrupt is not by testimonial process. But between these typical situations several borderline cases occur which may be difficult to interpret.

§ 2265. Bodily Exhibition (Clothes, Features, Finger Prints, Medical Examination, etc.). If an accused person were to refuse to be removed from the jail to the court-room for trial, claiming that he was privileged not to expose his features to the witnesses for identification, it is not difficult to conceive the judicial reception which would be given to such a claim. And yet no less a claim is the logical consequence of the argument that has been frequently offered and occasionally sanctioned in applying the privilege to proof of the bodily features of the accused.

The limit of the privilege is a plain one. From the general principle (ante, § 2263) it results that an inspection of the bodily features by the tribunal or by witnesses cannot violate the privilege, because it does not call upon the accused as a witness, i. e. upon his testimonial responsibility. That he may in such cases be required sometimes to exercise muscular action — as when he is required to take off his shoes or roll up his sleeve — is immaterial, — unless all bodily action were synonymous with testimonial utterance; for, as already observed (ante, § 2263), not compulsion alone is the component idea of the privilege, but testimonial compulsion. What is obtained from the accused 1913, U. S. v. Harris, D. C. S. D. N. Y., 164 Fed. 292 (motion for receiver asking for order that bankrupt deliver books of account to the receiver; order framed directing delivery, but protecting them against any use other than for civil litigation over the estate; the Court very properly hesitates over the order; but why was it assumed that without such an order the receiver could not get lawful possession of the books? Are not the books a part of the business property, and is not the receiver entitled to enter in possession and turn out the bankrupt? A man who buys a horse and stable from another is entitled to go to the stable and take the horse without waiting for a court order); Columbia (Dist.): 1912, U. S. v. Halstead, 38 D. C. App. 68 (taking of a bankrupt's books, by a receiver under court order; privilege not violated); Illinois: 1909, Manning v. Mercantile Securities Co., 242 Ill. 584, 90 N. E. 238 (officers of a corporation having custody of corporation documents, ordered to hand them over to a receiver appointed in winding-up proceedings, held in contempt for refusal and not to be protected by the privilege, because "the possession of the receiver is the possession of the Court"; but the opinion unsoundly announces that "the appellants could be fully protected by the Court from the use of such evidence against them while the books are in the hands of the receiver"; for the writ of sequestration is like a search-warrant and involves no testimonial process against the officers); 1919, People v. Paisley, 288 Ill. 310, 123 N. E. 573 (bankrupt's books, secured by the State's attorney from the bankruptcy receiver, "who had gotten them from defendant's receiver," admitted); 1919, People v. Bransfield, 289 Ill. 72, 124 N. E. 365 (embezzlement by bank officials; two of the officials were also in partnership in a real estate and loan business, and bankruptcy proceedings were pending; the partnership books, obtained from the Federal Court, were received in evidence; held, not a violation of the privilege, the title to the books being in the bankruptcy trustee, and the production being therefore made by him and not by the partners); Minnesota: 1905, State v. Strait, 94 Minn. 384, 102 N. W. 913 (defendants were bankers in partnership, and on voluntary assignment in bankruptcy a trustee took possession of the banking books; held, that the defendants were not entitled to claim the privilege to prevent the use of the books before the grand jury on subpœna to the trustee; Boyd v. U. S. distinguished); Pennsylvania: 1910, Com. v. Ensign, 228 Pa. 400, 77 Atl. 657 (insolvent banker's receipt of deposits; his books delivered by him to the U. S. bankruptcy trustee in involuntary bankruptcy, and obtained from the trustee, admitted).

by such action is not testimony about his body, but his body itself.[1] Unless some attempt is made to secure a communication, written or oral, upon which reliance is to be placed as involving his consciousness of the facts and the operations of his mind in expressing it, the demand made upon him is not a testimonial one. Moreover, the main object of the privilege (ante, § 2251) is to force prosecuting officers to go out and search and obtain all the extrinsic available evidence of an offence, without relying upon the accused's admissions. Now in the case of the person's body, its marks and traits, itself is the main evidence; there is ordinarily no other or better evidence available for the prosecutor. Hence, the main reason for the privilege loses its force.

Both principle and practical good sense forbid any larger interpretation of the privilege in this application; and healthy judicial opinion has frequently pointed this out:

1876, RODMAN, J., in State v. Graham, 74 N. C. 648 (admitting evidence of a compulsory placing of the accused's foot in a track): "If an officer who arrests one charged with an offence had no right to make the prisoner show the contents of his pocket, how could the broken knife or the fragment of paper corresponding to the wadding [alluding to cases cited] have been found? If when a prisoner is arrested for passing counterfeit money, the contents of his pocket are sacred from search, how can it ever appear whether or not he has on his person a large number of similar bills, which if proved is certainly evidence of the 'scienter'? If an officer sees a pistol projecting from the pocket of a prisoner arrested for a fresh murder, may he not take out the pistol against the prisoner's consent to see whether it appears to have been recently discharged? Suppose it be a question as to the identity of the prisoner, whether a person whom a witness says he saw commit a murder, and the prisoner appears in Court with a veil or mask over his face; may not the Court order its removal in order that the witness may say whether or not he was the person whom he saw commit the crime? Would the robber whose face was marked with the wards of a key have been allowed to conceal his identity by wearing a mask during the trial? We conceive that these questions admit of but one answer, and that is one consistent with the general practice."

1892, COX, J., in U. S. v. Cross, 20 D. C. 365, 382 (admitting a measurement of the defendant made in the Marshal's office): "It could not be contended that the knowledge of the size or height of a man acquired in any other way, for instance by a tailor, could not be used when at the time it was not taken for the purpose of being used as testimony, and it seems to us that a record taken as this was, for a lawful purpose and under the rules of the office, might be made use of afterwards. It does not seem to us that it is compelling the defendant to give evidence against himself, although some cases that have been cited to us go very far in that direction. There was one case holding that it was error for the prosecuting officer to compel the prisoner in court to put his foot into a vessel filled with mud in order to measure it and identify it. That is well enough. It was held in another case that where the officer compelled the defendant to put his foot in certain tracks that were discovered, in order to identify him, that was wrong, as it was compelling him to give evidence against himself, and evidence of that kind, so secured, could not be used. We think that is going very far; it is rather too fine. What would be the consequence if such evidence should be entirely excluded? You could not compel a person after his arrest to empty his pockets and disclose a weapon, when the most vital evidence on the part of the Government, in a homicide case, is the possession of the deadly weapon.

§ 2265. [1] The theory of such evidence ("real" evidence) has elsewhere been examined (ante, § 1150).

Could you not compel him to open his pocket-book and exhibit papers that might be conclusive in the case of a forgery, or anything of that sort? We think that officers having a prisoner in custody have a right to acquire information about him, even by force, and that, for example, when his photograph is taken or his measurement taken, it is simply the act of the officers and is not compelling him to give evidence against himself."

1. A great variety of concrete illustrations have been ruled upon.[2] To generalize their result is difficult; the various situations shade off into each

[2] Where in the following cases the examination was voluntarily submitted to, the ruling is not decisive, for the privilege may there be deemed to have been waived; compare the cases about garments and weapons, cited ante, § 2264:

ENGLAND: 1696, Vaughan's Trial, 13 How. St. Tr. 517 (Witness, identifying a defendant: "If it be the same gentleman, his hair is reddish." L. C. J. Holt: "Pull off his peruke," which was done; Powis, B.: "Let somebody look on it more particularly"; then an officer took a candle and looked on his head, but it was shaved so close the color could not be discerned); 1775, Maharajah Nundocomar's Trial, 20 How. St. Tr. 923 (physicians were ordered to examine the defendant to see whether he was in truth unable by illness, as alleged, to attend the trial); 953, 965 (the same measure, to see whether a witness was in truth too ill to come and give testimony); 1877, Agnew v. Jobson, 13 Cox Cr. 625 (a magistrate has no right to order the medical examination of defendant, here of a woman charged with concealment of birth).

CANADA: St. 1898, c. 54, R. S. 1906, c. 149, § 2 (any person in lawful custody under charge or conviction of an indictable offence may be subjected to the identifying measurements known as the Bertillon Signaletic System; or any measurements, etc., having like purpose); Orders in Council, July 21, 1908, Mar. 20, 1911, Canada Gazette, vol. 1, p. 3484 (photographing and finger-printing sanctioned as methods usable under R. S. c. 149); St. 1918, 8 & 9 Geo. V, c. 12, § 2 (any person in custody for an indictable offence may be subjected to any measurements or other processes, including finger-prints, for purposes of identification).

UNITED STATES: Federal: 1910, Holt v. U. S., 218 U. S. 245, 31 Sup. 2 (the accused's putting on of a blouse, to see whether it was his; held, not privileged);
Alabama: 1881, Spicer v. State, 69 Ala. 159, 163 (child-murder; facts disclosed by a corporal examination of defendant, submitted to by her on inducements, admitted); 1888, Cooper v. State, 86 Ala. 610, 6 So. 110 (held improper to force the accused to make foot-tracks for comparison); 1892, Williams v. State, 98 Ala. 52, 13 So. 333 (requiring the defendant to "stand facing the jury, that they might determine her age from her appearance," held improper); 1902, Davis v. State, 131 Ala. 10, 31 So. 569 (defendant's refusal to let his shoes be taken for comparison with tracks, excluded); 1906, Moss v. State, 146 Ala. 686, 40 So. 340 (shoes taken off voluntarily by the accused in prison, at an officer's request, and handed to him; admitted);
Arizona: 1921, Moon v. State, 22 Ariz. 418, 198 Pac. 288 (finger-prints of accused, taken by defendant's voluntary action, admitted);
California: 1888, People v. Goldenson, 76 Cal. 328, 347, 19 Pac. 161 (a trial Court's order to the defendant to stand up for identification, held proper); 1899, People v. Oliveria, 127 Cal. 376, 59 Pac. 772 (compelling defendant to stand up for comparison of size, allowable); 1915, People v. Bundy, 168 Cal. 777, 145 Pac. 537 (examination of the accused in jail by two physicians, the accused voluntarily answering and submitting, held not a violation of the privilege);
Columbia (Dist.): 1892, U. S. v. Cross, 20 D. C. 365 (quoted supra); 1904, Shaffer v. U. S., 24 D. C. App. 417, 425 (accused allowed to be identified by a photograph of him taken while under arrest);
Georgia: 1880, Day v. State, 63 Ga. 669 (testimony that a witness forcibly placed defendant's foot in certain tracks, held inadmissible); 1881, Blackwell v. State, 67 Ga. 76, 78 (order of the Court to a defendant, to stand up so that a witness could identify him as lacking the right foot, held improper); 1882, Gordon v. State, 68 Ga. 814 (after the defendant had voluntarily exhibited a scar, an order to allow a medical witness to examine it was held proper);
Hawaii: 1912, Terr. v. Chung Ning, 21 Haw. 214, 219 (examination of defendant's person by ordering him to remove his trousers, "which he did without objection," held not a violation of the privilege);
Indiana: 1890, O'Brien v. State, 125 Ind. 38, 42, 25 N. E. 137 (testimony based on an examination of the defendant, in jail, against his will, by officers, to discover scars of identification, held proper);
Iowa: 1897, State v. Reasby, 100 Ia. 231, 69 N. W. 451 (compelling the defendant to stand up in court for identification, allowed); 1902, State v. Height, 117 Ia. 650, 91 N. W. 935 (rape; testimony of physicians to defendant's diseased condition, based on an examination of his parts while in jail, after he had refused and been directed to submit, held inadmissible); 1905, State v. Arthur, 129 Ia. 235, 105 N. W.

other with only faint borderlines. Moreover, each State Court may have its own special attitude toward the whole principle, — an attitude which carries 422 (burglary; shoe measurements admitted, made with shoes given up by the defendant to the sheriff at his direction; State v. Height distinguished, because the defendant's voluntary surrender of the shoes was a waiver); Comp. Code § 9476 (measurements and photographs, "by the Bertillon or other system," of a person in custody on a charge, may be taken);

Louisiana: 1873, State v. Prudhomme, 25 La. An. 522, 523 (compelling an accused "to place his feet where they could be seen by the witness and the jury" for identification, allowable); 1906, State v. Graham, 116 La. 779, 44 So. 90 (sheriff's measurements of shoe-tracks, by putting the accused's feet in them, without resistance by him, admitted); 1910, State v. McKowen, 126 La. 1075, 53 So. 353 (defendant's refusal to write the word "incorrigible," as a test of his spelling, allowed to be considered; but here he had presumably waived his privilege by taking the stand);

Maryland: 1909, Downs v. Swann, 111 Md. 53, 73 Atl. 653 (photographing and measuring of arrested persons not yet convicted, for purposes of identification, is not a violation of the privilege; collecting the authorities);

Michigan: 1883, People v. Mead, 50 Mich. 228, 231, 15 N. W. 95 (defendant privileged not to try on or measure a shoe in court for identification); 1888, People v. Glover, 71 Mich. 303, 307, 38 N. W. 874 (testimony gained by a medical examination in jail, voluntarily submitted to, received); 1916, People v. Breen, 192 Mich. 39, 158 N. W. 142 (taking defendant's shoes and fitting them to footprints; privilege not violated); 1920, People v. Sturman, 209 Mich. 284, 176 N. W. 397, semble (compelling a defendant to write a signature alleged to be his alias, not allowable; but here the defendant voluntarily wrote at the prosecution's request); 1921, Rock v. Carney, 216 Mich. 280, 185 N. W. 798 (action for damages for compulsory detention in a hospital while suffering from gonorrhea; under St. 1919, No. 272, the plaintiff had been examined by the health officer, one of the defendants, in order to determine whether she was diseased, and the order of detention had followed; the Court divided four and three, as to the validity of the power to examine, but on what lines of definition does not clearly appear);

Minnesota: 1921, State v. Wormack, 150 Minn. 249, 184 N.W. 970 (murder; accused voluntarily standing up, on request of the State, for identification, not improper);

Mississippi: 1908, Magee v. State, 93 Miss. 865, 46 So. 529 (compelling the accused to put his foot in a track, to identify him, held not a violation of privilege; careful opinion by Whitfield, C. J.);

Missouri: 1900, State v. Jones, 153 Mo. 457, 55 S. W. 80 (examination held not compulsory on the facts); 1900, State v. Tettaton, 159 Mo. 354, 60 S. W. 743 (testimony of physicians to the condition of a wound on defendant's head, shaved by compulsion, admissible); 1906, State v. Ruck, 194 Mo. 416, 92 S. W. 706 (accused compellable to stand up for identification by a witness); 1909, State v. Newcomb, 220 Mo. 54, 119 S. W. 405 (rape under age; physician's examination of defendant's private parts, while under arrest, by order of the justice, held a violation of the privilege); 1913, State v. Horton, 247 Mo. 657, 153 S. W. 1051 (physician's examination for venereal disease by order of police captain, held a violation of the privilege, on the erroneous ground that failure to object is not a waiver); 1906, State v. Church, 199 Mo. 605, 98 S. W. 16 (examination of defendant in jail by physicians without objection by defendant, held not to violate the privilege); 1915, State v. Matsinger, — Mo. —, 180 S. W. 856 (rape; examination by physicians of defendant while in jail, excluded, his consent not appearing affirmatively);

Montana: 1906, State v. Fuller, 34 Mont. 12, 85 Pac. 369 (shoes of defendant, compared by the sheriff with footprints; privilege not violated; here the defendant voluntarily gave them to the officer, but the opinion expressly declares this immaterial);

Nebraska: 1905, Krens v. State, 75 Nebr. 294, 106 N. W. 27 (testimony to comparisons of shoe-tracks, made with shoes taken from the accused, allowed);

Nevada: 1879, State v. Ah Chuey, 14 Nev. 79 (the defendant was compelled "to exhibit his arm so as to show certain tattoo marks"; held, not a violation of privilege; "no evidence of physical facts can be held" to be within the privilege; best opinion, by Hawley, J.; Leonard, J., diss.); 1910, State v. Petty, 32 Nev. 384, 108 Pac. 934 (the defendant, pleading sadistic insanity, and having called an expert who had examined him, the Court's order appointing three other physicians to examine him in the county jail for the same purpose was held proper);

New Jersey: 1905, State v. Miller, 71 N. J. L. 527, 60 Atl. 202 (doctor's testimony to wounds on the accused's hands, observed after the accused's clothes were taken off in jail, admitted; here it did not appear that the exhibition was not voluntary, but the Court laid down the same rule for a forcible stripping; defendant was also called upon by officers to place his hand upon a bloody mark, for comparison; allowed, the accused having voluntarily complied); 1914, State v. Cerciello, 86 N. J. L. 309, 90 Atl. 1112 (finger-prints of accused, admissible, "so far as he shall not have involuntarily contributed to its production");

New Mexico: 1917, State v. Barela, 23 N. M.

it logically to most of the concrete solutions; hence, to attempt to generalize, by a topical cross-section (as it were), e. g. as to finger-prints, removal of shoes,

395, 168 Pac. 545 (arson; the sheriff "compelled the defendants to remove their shoes" and then compared them with tracks found; held admissible, citing with approval the text above);

New York: 1854, Henrietta Robinson's Trial, N. Y., 11 Amer. St. Tr. 528, 543, 545, 547, 549 (murder of another woman; the accused at the trial sat heavily veiled; on a question to a witness to the killing, "Do you see her now?" meaning the person who killed, the accused refused to remove her veil; her counsel informed the judge that her action was contrary to their advice; finally, the issue of insanity being evidenced, Harris, J., announced: "The prisoner must unveil her face, so that it can be seen; . . . if the prisoner now refuses to remove the veil, it will be my duty, however painful it may be, to order the sheriff to do it by force"; the accused then complied); 1873, People v. McCoy, 45 How. Pr. 216 (murder of defendant's bastard infant, testimony of physicians, as to her recent delivery, based on an examination of her in jail, under the coroner's order and against her objection, held inadmissible); 1890, People v. Kemmler, 119 N. Y. 580, 24 N. E. 9 (testimony of physicians, sent for the purpose, and based on an observation of the accused's mental condition while in jail, held admissible); 1894, People v. Gardner, 144 N. Y. 119, 38 N. E. 1003 (defendant held compellable to stand up in court for identification; good opinion by Earl, J.); 1901, People v. Molineux, 168 N. Y. 264, 61 N. E. 286 (specimens written by a defendant, when under suspicion of a crime, but voluntarily, at the request of the prosecuting attorney, held admissible against him); 1902, People v. Truck, 170 N. Y. 203, 63 N. E. 281 (examination by experts, in jail, to ascertain sanity and testify thereto, held not a breach of the privilege); 1903, People v. Van Wormer, 175 N. Y. 188, 67 N. E. 299 (taking the defendants' shoes from them and placing the shoes in foot-marks, held not a violation of the privilege); 1907, People v. Furlong, 187 N. Y. 198, 79 N. E. 978 (People v. Truck followed); 1908, People v. Strollo, 191 N. Y. 42, 83 N. E. 573 (search and examination by the police, held not a violation of privilege on the facts);

North Carolina: 1858, State v. Jacobs, 5 Jones 259 (accused held not compellable to exhibit himself to the jury as being of colored race within a prohibited degree); 1872, State v. Jonnson, 67 N. C. 55, 58 (State v. Jacobs approved; here it was held proper to allow witnesses "to point at him as being the identical person of whom they were speaking"); 1874, State v. Garrett, 71 N. C. 85, 87 (the defendant had been ordered by the coroner to unwrap her hand, and show it to a medical witness, who testified that there was no burn on it; held allowable, on the theory (ante, § 2183) that testimony based on an act in itself inadmissible was still admissible; State v. Jacobs distinguished); 1876, State v. Graham, 74 N. C. 647 (evidence obtained by compelling an accused, out of court, to put his foot in a track for identification; held admissible; quoted supra); 1912, State v. Thompson, 161 N. C. 238, 76 S. E. 249 (the constable told the accused to shoulder the gun, aim it, etc., and he did so; held admissible, following State v. Graham); 1918, State v. Neville, 175 N. C. 731, 95 S. E. 55 (rape; taking the accused to the scene of the offence and placing him in the alleged position of the guilty person for identification by the victim, held not improper);

Ohio: 1915, Angeloff v. State, 91 Oh. 361, 110 N. E. 936 (the woman's intercourse with others about the time, admissible to explain the existence of venereal disease, but not her attempts to have such intercourse);

Pennsylvania: 1886, Johnson v. Com., 115 Pa. 369, 373, 395, 9 Atl. 78 (defendant called upon by prosecution to repeat certain words to enable his voice to be identified; privilege doubted, but held waived by assent);

Philippine Isl. 1912, U. S. v. Tan Teng, 23 P. I. 145 (rape; the victim having gonorrhea, the defendant was physically examined, without objection, at the time of arrest, and a substance emitting from his body was given to the Bureau of Science for analysis; the results of analysis were allowed to be evidenced; following Holt v. U. S., U. S., supra; citing with approval the text above); 1917, U. S. v. Ong Siu Hong, 36 P. I. 735 (opium offence; the accused was "forced to discharge the morphine from his mouth"; the privilege held not violated); 1920, Villaflor v. Summers, 41 P. I. 62, Sept. 30, 1920 (adultery; the trial Court ordered the defendant woman to submit to medical examination, to determine whether pregnancy existed; privilege held not to prevent this; liberal opinion by Malcolm, J.);

South Carolina: 1893, State v. Atkinson, 40 S. C. 363, 367, 372, 18 S. E. 1021 (compelling the accused to put his foot in tracks; undecided); 1906, State v. Sanders, 75 S. C. 409, 56 S. E. 35 (placing defendant's foot in a track, with his consent, held not a violation of the privilege); 1913, State v. McIntosh, 94 S. C. 439, 78 S. E. 327 (like State v. Atkinson; admitted);

Tennessee: 1875, Stokes v. State, 5 Baxt. 619 (ordering the accused to put his foot in a pan of mud, for identification, before the jury, held improper); 1885, Lipes v. State, 15 Lea 125, 128 (examination of the defendant's feet under order of the Court to see if they fitted tracks, etc., would be misleading, in that it would give an appearance of a general rule that does not exist. There are fifty jurisdictions; and the sound method of treating the precedents here is to seek for some consistent test valid for the body of a particular court's rulings, and not to attempt a factitious reconciliation of rulings by many independent courts.

2. On the principal varieties of situation presented, the following reasonings may be offered:

Measuring or photographing the party is not within the privilege.[3] Nor is the removal or replacement of his garments or shoes. Nor is the requirement that the party move his body to enable the foregoing things to be done. Requiring him to make specimens of handwriting is no more than requiring him to move his body. Requiring him to speak words for identification of his voice is no more than requiring the revelation of a physical mark. Requiring him to talk for inference as to sanity or insanity is on principle no more than the foregoing, but approaches the borderline. But requiring him to speak for revealing any external circumstance — e. g. the location of stolen goods — crosses the borderline; his words become a testimonial utterance, to be used as an assertion of fact, and hence are within the privilege.

A medical examination is not a violation of the privilege, whether its object be to ascertain insanity or to ascertain disease in general. But under the modern sanitary statutes (ante, § 2220) directing medical examination to ascertain the existence of contagious disease, and authorizing segregation of the person till cured, the purpose is not penal but administrative; and if there is no crime, the present privilege would not be applicable (ante, §§ 2254, 2255).

3. It is not always noted that the compulsion, to come within the present semble, held compellable; to rebut testimony as to peculiarities of the defendant's feet, the State was allowed to have a physician examine them under orders of the Court);

Texas: 1879, Walker v. State, 7 Tex. App. 245, 264 (testimony admitted as to tracks made by the defendant, apparently without compulsion, in the magistrate's office before trial); 1902, Benson v. State, — Tex. Cr. —, 69 S. W. 165 (compelling the defendant to stand up in court for identification, and, semble, to put on his hat, held proper); 1906, Turman v. State, 50 Tex. Cr. 7, 95 S. W. 533 (rape; held improper "for the State to require appellant to place the cap on his head for the purpose of identification by the prosecutrix," although he had voluntarily taken the stand; Benson v. State ignored; this Court seems disposed to make it hard for an accused not to be acquitted); 1907, Powell v. State, 50 Tex. Cr. 592, 99 S. W. 1005 (photographs of defendant's hand, taken with his consent and after warning, admitted); 1920, Moore v. State, 87 Tex. Cr. 569, 226 S. W. 415 (robbery; footprints made by defendant while under arrest, admissible, the accused having acted voluntarily);
Vermont: 1902, State v. Eastwood, 73 Vt. 205, 50 Atl. 1077 (testimony of the superintendent of an insane asylum to the defendant's mental condition, based on the defendant's conduct while there committed after arrest, held admissible);
Virginia: 1886, Sprouse v. Com., 81 Va. 374, 378 (defendant's act of writing his name at the judge's request, without threat or compulsion, held not to violate the privilege);
Washington: 1893, State v. Nordstrom, 7 Wash. 506, 510, 35 Pac. 382 (measurement of defendant's feet, allowed, to contradict his testimony that he could not wear certain boots; semble, that exhibition of parts of the body usually covered is not compellable);
Wisconsin: 1903, Thornton v. State, 117 Wis. 338, 93 N. W. 1107 (requiring the defendant to give up his shoe and then comparing it with tracks, held not a violation of privilege).

[3] See the following: R. M. Kidd, "The right to take Finger-Prints, Measurements, and Photographs" (California L. Rev., Nov. 1919, VIII, 25).

principle, must be by process of law, or its equivalent, for the purpose of obtaining testimony — a distinction to be further examined (post, § 2266).

The tendency to-day, almost everywhere, is against the loose extension of the privilege — by way of just reaction against an inclination at one time exhibited to the contrary. That the doubt is entirely one of the present generation shows how alien it is to the orthodox spirit of the privilege. It will one day be incredible that judges could have descended as far as they sometimes have here gone on the road to logical absurdity.

§ 2266. Confessions and the Self-Crimination Privilege, distinguished. The rule excluding untrustworthy Confessions and the rule giving a Privilege against compulsory testimonial Self-Crimination are sometimes not kept plainly apart, — and naturally enough, for not only have they the common feature of an acknowledgment of guilty facts, but also, by the test frequently employed (ante, § 826) the test of voluntariness for confessions becomes almost identical with the idea of compulsion as forbidden by the privilege. Judicial expressions which blend the two into one principle might therefore sometimes be expected.[1]

But this confusion is radically erroneous, both in history, principle, and practice:

That the history of the two principles is wide apart, differing by one hundred years in origin, and derived through separate lines of precedents, appears sufficiently from a survey of the two histories as already set forth (ante, §§ 818, 2250). If the privilege, fully established by 1680, had sufficed for both classes of cases, there would have been no need in 1780 for creating the distinct rule about confessions.

So far as concerns principle, the two doctrines have not the same boundaries; i. e. the privilege covers only statements made in court under process as a witness; the confession-rule covers statements made out of court, but may also, overlapping, cover statements made in court.

Finally, in regard to practical effects, the conceded differences become material: (a) The confession-rule is broader, because it may exclude statements which are obtained without compulsion; (b) Where the privilege is waived or not claimed, the confession-rule may still operate to exclude; (c) Where the privilege is nullified by statute (as it may be in England, and has been by the English Bankruptcy Act), the confession-rule may still operate; (d) Where the testimony, though given under oath, does not violate the confession-rule, it may still involve a violation of the privilege; (e) The privilege applies to witnesses as such, in civil and in criminal cases, but the confession-§ 2266. [1] For example, the following, used of a confession: "I have always felt that we ought to watch jealously any encroachment on the principle that no man is bound to criminate himself, and that we ought to see that no one is induced either by a threat or a promise to say anything of a criminatory character against himself" (1867, Kelly, C. B., in R. v. Jarvis, 10 Cox Cr. 576); "[The constitutional privilege against self-crimination] was but a crystallization of the doctrine as to confessions" (1897, White, J., in Bram v. U. S., 168 U. S. 532, 18 Sup. 182).

rule is concerned only with party-defendants in criminal cases; (f) A party-defendant is protected by the confession-rule against the use of his own statements only; but the privilege is applicable also to witnesses during his trial, and it is by some maintained that he may object to the use against him of testimony extracted by a violation of the witness' privilege.[2] No doubt other situations may be conceived in which the two principles operate with entire independence.

Nothing but subversion of principle and confusion of practical rules can result from an attempt to predicate an analogy and relationship. The sole relationship is found in the general spirit of protection and caution which our legal system shows towards an accused. But this spirit is equally responsible for the rule about reasonable doubt, the rule about 'corpus delicti', the rule about lists of witnesses, and several others peculiar to criminal cases; and there is no more reason for linking the privilege with the one than with the others, — there is, indeed, less reason, since the privilege is intended as well for witnesses as for parties defendant.[3]

4. Mode and Effect of Claiming the Privilege

§ 2268. Privilege must be Claimed; Criminative Questions not forbidden; Notice to Produce Documents. The privilege is merely an option of refusal, not a prohibition of inquiry.

(1) Hence it follows that when an ordinary witness is on the stand, and a criminating fact, relevant to the issue, is desired to be proved through him, the question may be asked, and it is for him then to say whether he will exercise the option given him by the law. It cannot be known beforehand whether he will refuse. Besides, to prevent the question would be to convert the option into a prohibition.

This principle would seem incapable of dispute.[1] But it sometimes is involved in confusion, because the fact inquired about in the question may of course be irrelevant or otherwise forbidden by some rule of law, and thus a ruling upon the admissibility of the fact may sometimes tend to be confused with a ruling upon the compulsoriness of the answer. For example, in the impeachment of a witness by cross-examination to character, he may be asked whether he stole from his last employer, and this fact might for that purpose be held inadmissible (ante, §§ 982–987), though, even if it were admissible to be asked, it might still be privileged from answer. The confounding of these two things has occurred most often in dealing with the waiver of the privilege (post, § 2277). Here it is enough to note that the privilege always presupposes that the fact inquired about is a proper one, and that its propriety has been assumed or otherwise determined:

[2] These contrasts between the two may be seen illustrated in the precedents concerning the application of the confession-rule to testimony on oath (ante, §§ 848–850).

[3] For opinions making clear the distinction between the privilege-rule and the confession-rule, see those of Campbell, C. J., in R. v. Scott, 1 Dears. & B. 47 (1856), Selden, J., in Hendrickson v. People, 10 N. Y. 33 (1854), and in People v. McMahon, 15 N. Y. 386 (1857).

§ 2268. [1] Yet a great judge has here used language likely to mislead: 1872, Cooley, J., in Gale v. People, 26 Mich. 157, 160 (commenting on the trial Court's allowance of a question, while telling the witness that he had the option to decline to answer: "When the judge sustained the questions, he decided in effect that they were proper to be put and answered"; no authorities cited).

1878, JAMES, L. J., in Allhusen v. Labouchere, L. R. 3 Q. B. D. 654, 660: "Nobody was ever allowed to object to a relevant question because that question tended to criminate himself. He might object to answer it, but it was never a ground of demurrer to an interrogatory or a ground for striking it out, that the answer might involve him in a crime."

1865, PORTER, J., in Great Western Turnpike Co. v. Loomis, 32 N. Y. 127, 138: "Strictly speaking, there is no case in which a witness is at liberty to object to a question. That is the office of the party or of the Court. The right of the witness is to decline an answer, if the Court sustains his claim of privilege. When the question is relevant, it cannot be excluded on the objection of the party, and the witness is free to assert or to waive his privilege. But when the question is irrelevant, the objection properly proceeds from the party, and the witness has no concern in the matter unless it be overruled by the judge."

Accordingly, it is universally conceded that the question may be put to the witness on the stand.[2] The same rule applies to interrogatories in a bill of discovery, both in ordinary chancery practice and under modern statutory interrogatories to the adverse party;[3] whether the refusal, in case of written

[2] Can. 1881, Power v. Ellis, 20 N. Br. 40, 6 Can. Sup. 1, 7, 8 (Taschereau, J., diss.); U. S. Fed. 1905, Re Knickerbocker Steamboat Co., 139 Fed. 713, C. C. (the party claiming privilege "must say so in unmistakable language and give the reasons for shielding himself"); Del. 1845, Short v. State, 4 Harringt. 568; La. 1835, Macarty v. Bond, 9 La. 351, 356; N. J. 1830, Fries v. Brugler, 12 N. J. L. 79; N. Y. 1826, Southard v. Rexford, 6 Cow. 254, 259; 1838, People v. Abbot, 19 Wend. 192, 195; S. Car. 1896, State v. Butler, 47 S. C. 25, 26, 24 S. E. 991; Vt. 1905, Rowell, C. J., in State v. Duncan, 78 Vt. 364, 63 Atl. 225 ("The privilege is an option of refusal, not a prohibition of inquiry").

Contra: 1911, State v. Thorne, 39 Utah 208, 117 Pac. 58 (no relevant authority cited; does the privilege justify us in tenderly swathing accused persons in cotton wool?).

[3] Eng. 1809, Paxton v. Douglas, 16 Ves. Jr. 239 (L. C. Eldon: "The objection is, not to the question, but to answering it"); 1821, Ex parte Burlton, 1 Gl. & Jam. 30, Leach, V. C.; 1855, Osborn v. London Dock Co., 10 Exch. 698; 1856, Chester v. Wortley, 17 C. B. 410; 1862, Bartlett v. Lewis, 12 C. B. N. S. 249, 259 (Erle, C. J., and Willes, J., took the ground that the situation was analogous to that of putting a question on the stand, but, further, that they did not object to the possibility that the party's refusal might lead to the jury's drawing inferences, post, § 2272; Keating, J., took the more correct ground that "we are not to assume that he cannot answer them without admitting his guilt or that he will claim protection from answering them"; the prior contrary cases infra were repudiated); 1868, McFadzen v. Liverpool, L. R. 3 Exch. 279; 1878, Fisher v. Owen, L. R. 8 Ch. D. 645, 656 ("Where an interrogatory, although tending to criminate, is put for the purpose of establishing a definite fact upon which the party interrogating relies, then that party is entitled to have the oath of the person interrogated, either in answering the interrogatory or in asserting his privilege not to answer"); 1878, Allhusen v. Labouchere, L. R. 3 Q. B. D. 654, 660, 666; 1879, Webb v. East, L. R. 5 Exch. D. 23; 1897, Spokes v. Hotel Co., 2 Q. B. 124, 131 (the objection must be taken "in answer, and not as an objection to the putting of the question"; here, a summons to make an affidavit as to what relevant documents he had); U. S. 1920, Cutter v. Cooper, 234 Mass. 307, 125 N. E. 634 ("a question is not incompetent merely because its answer may tend to incriminate").

The following earlier English rulings are therefore outlawed: 1822, Schultes v. Hodgson, 1 Add. 105, 110 (following literally the Stat. 13 Car. II, ante, § 2250, the oath is not even to be "tendered," in the ecclesiastical court); 1861, Tupling v. Ward, 6 H. & N. 749 ("Without laying down any general rule, we think that in cases of this kind [libel], it would be unfair to submit questions which a party is clearly not bound to answer"; compare par. (3), infra).

The following contrary rulings may be distinguished: 1897, Earl of Mexborough v. Whitwood U. D. Council, 2 Q. B. 111 (forfeiture of lease; leave to administer interrogatories, denied; foregoing cases not cited;

interrogatories of discovery, should be by plea or by demurrer or by answer has been a much mooted question, depending on the orthodox technicalities of pleading in chancery.[4] And, 'a priori', the witness cannot at the very outer threshold set up the privilege of not answering possible questions as a valid reason for refusing to obey the process of court summoning him to appear.[5]

(2) For the party-defendant in a criminal case, the privilege permits him to refuse answering any question whatever in the cause, on the general principle that it "tends to criminate" (ante, § 2260). This being so, the prosecution could nevertheless on principle have a right at least to call him to be sworn, because, as with an ordinary witness, it could not be known beforehand whether he would exercise his privilege.

But no Court seems ever to have sanctioned this application of the principle.[6] This result may be rested on several considerations: (a) Historically, apparently not treated as involving this doctrine); 1856, Thornton v. Adkins, 19 Ga. 464 (by express statute); 1882, Simpson v. Smith, 27 Kan. 565, 578 (by two judges to one; answers in a deposition, claiming privilege, may be suppressed).

For a consideration of the effect of this doctrine on the immunity-statutes, see post, § 2282.

[4] The following cases deal with this question: Eng. 1742, Baker v. Pritchard, 2 Atk. 387, 389; 1789, Williams v. Farrington, 3 Brown Ch. C. 38; 1818, Curzon v. De la Zouch, 1 Swanst. 185, 192; 1818, Attorney-General v. Brown, 1 Swanst. 265, 294, 305; 1828, Fleming v. St. John, 2 Sim. 181.

U. S. 1839, Atterberry v. Knox, 3 Dana Ky. 282; 1828, Salmon v. Clagett, 3 Bland Ch. Md. 125, 144; 1828, Wolf v. Wolf, 2 H. & G. Md. 385, 389; 1859, Bay State Iron Co. v. Goodall, 39 N. H. 223, 235; 1869, Currier v. R. Co., 48 N. H. 321, 327, 330; 1819, M'Intyre v. Mancius, 16 Johns. N. Y. 592; 1832, Livingston v. Harris, 3 Paige N. Y. 528, 530; 1843, Brownell v. Curtis, 10 Paige N. Y. 210.

Compare the practice for privileged communications between attorney and client, post, § 2321.

Where a document is the subject of the claim of privilege, the claim must specifically designate the document: 1916, Attorney-General v. Kelly, 28 D. L. R. 409, Man. (claim by affidavit specifying documents, held specific enough on the facts).

[5] Fed. 1908, U. S. v. Price, U. S. v. Haas, C. C. S. D. N. Y., 163 Fed. 904 (the now defendants had been subpœnaed to appear before the grand jury; they appeared and were informed of the subject of inquiry and of their privilege, and were sworn; they protested against being sworn, claimed privilege as to the few preliminary questions asked, and were then dismissed; held (1) that they were not in the position of defendants but of ordinary witnesses, and (2) that as witnesses their privilege was not violated; careful opinion by Hough, J.); Kan. 1920, State ex rel. Court of Industrial Relations v. Howat, 107 Kan. 423, 191 Pac. 585 (contempt in not appearing as witness before a court whose constitutional power was questioned; privilege against self-crimination cannot be brought into question "until they had appeared and some question had been asked"); Ky. 1914, Com. v. Southern Express Co., 160 Ky. 1, 169 S. W. 517 (here a corporation was held to be in contempt for removing its books from the jurisdiction to evade inquiry by the grand jury; the party must appear and tender his books, in order to assert privilege); Oh. 1913, State v. Cox, 87 Ohio 313, 101 N. E. 135 (inquiries by a grand jury; the witness must take the oath before the privilege can be claimed); Vt. 1907, Re Consolidated Rendering Co., 80 Vt. 55, 66 Atl. 790 (the witness must appear and make claim; he cannot refuse to obey a subpœna d. t. and also claim privilege).

[6] Accord: 1900, Re Green, 86 Mo. App. 216 (cited infra); 1915, People v. Ferola, 215 N. Y. 285, 109 N. E. 500, per Miller, J.; 1901, Town Council v. Owens, 61 S. C. 22, 39 S. E. 184 (testimony of a defendant, not asking to be sworn, but not objecting, held improperly taken); 1904, Ex parte Sauls, 46 Tex. Cr. 209, 78 S. W. 1073 (habeas corpus; the relators were arrested under a search-warrant for liquor illegally kept, and on arraignment before the justice they objected to being sworn at all; held that "they could refuse to be sworn as well as to testify"; "there might be a different question raised if the parties were testifying in a case other than their own"). Contra: 1907, U. S. v. Rota, 9 P. I. 426 (accused, being called upon to testify in his own behalf, answered without objection; held not improper).

Otherwise for former testimony obtained under an immunity statute and now offered: 1920, Bain v. U. S., 6th C. C. A., 262 Fed. 664 (under the U. S. Bankruptcy Act, providing the privilege existed long before the abolition of the accused's disqualification; hence, until those statutory changes (in 1860–1900), the accused could not testify even if he were willing; thus, to call him would be useless, and the negative practice became fixed. (b) Under the modern statutory competency of the accused, if he should choose to testify when the time comes for putting in his case, the prosecution may on his cross-examination put the questions which it could have put on calling him earlier, and thus the prosecution's opportunity to find whether he will exercise his privilege is practically obtained. (c) Even though the prosecution might technically be entitled to that opportunity at the earlier stage, still the exercise of this technical right need hardly be conceded, since that procedure could only have, as its chief effect, the emphasizing of his refusal, should he refuse, and thus the indirect suggestion of that inference against him from which he is protected by another aspect of the principle (post, § 2272). (d) By the express tenor, in most jurisdictions, of the statute qualifying the accused, he is declared to be a competent witness "at his own request, but not otherwise" (ante, §§ 488, 579). Whether this form of words was chosen with a view to its present bearing can only be surmised; but its evident effect is to forbid the calling of the accused by the prosecution.

Where, however, the accused, though not taking the stand, possesses documents which the prosecution desires to use, the prosecution may of course give notice to produce, without violating the privilege. This is because the accused's privilege as to his personal testimony is separate from his privilege as to his documents; and it cannot be known, until the notice, whether he is to claim the latter privilege. Moreover, the prosecution must give notice to produce, in order to authorize its later resort to a copy (ante, §§ 1205, 1207), and its use of a copy is concededly not a violation of the privilege.—The propriety of giving such notice was never doubted, until the extraordinary ruling in McKnight v. United States, in 1902, which seems since to have exercised a baleful spell over a few other Courts.[7] Besides ignoring the that "no testimony given by the bankrupt shall be offered in evidence against him in any criminal proceeding," the bankrupt's deposition may be used to contradict his present testimony, unless objection is duly made on the ground of privilege).

[7] Federal: 1902, McKnight v. U. S., 54 C. C. A. 358, 115 Fed. 972 (after evidence that an incriminating document is in the accused's possession, no notice of production can be given by the prosecution, because the claiming of the privilege would permit inferences to be drawn against him; the ruling is made on the assumption that a copy could be used under such circumstances without notice to produce, — an incorrect assumption, as shown ante, §§ 1202, 1205, 1207; the opinion in R. v. Smith, 3 Burr. 1475, cited ante, § 291, shows the natural and orthodox treatment of the situation); 1915, Hanish v. U. S., 7th C. C. A. 227 Fed. 584 (mailing obscene books; to prove the letter of request by the purchaser, a copy was offered, and a notice to produce it was read; held improper, purporting to follow McKnight v. U. S., ante, § 1205, and supra, but not prejudicial, the letter not being 'per se' incriminating; it is singular how the McKnight Case has come to retain any standing, in view of its multifold fallacies and its contraventions of orthodox practice: in the present opinion an additional fallacy appears, in alluding to the notice as "not the sole evidence that the copies . . . were true copies"; for it is elementary common law that a notice to produce an original is no evidence at all of the correctness of the copy, which must be independently proved; it seems hopeless to clear away the mesh of elementary error which the McKnight Case involves); 1920, Bain v. U. S., 6th C. C. A. 262 Fed. 664 fundamental principle (supra, par. 1) that the privilege must be claimed, the opinion also involves the fallacy that the mere necessity of making a claim of privilege for documents is improper because of the possible resulting inference (post, § 2273) — a fallacy which reasons in a circle, because the privilege cannot be enforced until it is claimed and the Court cannot both enforce it and forbid the necessary condition precedent to enforcing it. The ruling involves the further fallacy that the accused's failure, on notice, to produce the document was equivalent to a claim of privilege; but it was not, because it might have been done in precisely the same way for a non-criminating document and would merely have served as a basis for the use of a copy by the prosecution. These fallacies so subtly combine in this opinion that the result is a plausible one; but the ruling remains purely fallacious and wholly unsound.

(3) For a party-defendant in a civil cause having a criminal fact as its main issue, the question arises whether his situation is to be assimilated to the former or the latter case above mentioned. None of the reasons applicable

(following McKnight v. U. S.); New York; 1916, People v. Gibson, 218 N. Y. 70, 112 N. E. 730 (indictment for withholding a will; a document by the administrator authorizing bearer to demand property in defendant's hands had been served on defendant; to prove the document, the prosecution had notified defendant to produce it, and at the trial after proving the notice to produce asked defendant's counsel whether he had the document; counsel objected to the question being asked; the objection was held valid; Willard Bartlett, C. J., after expressing disagreement with the above comment on McKnight v. U. S.: "The practice of calling upon defendants in criminal cases to produce incriminating papers alleged to be in their possession so frequently adopted by zealous prosecutors . . . is objectionable . . . We approve the rule laid down in McKnight v. U. S. because it seems to us the only effective method of preventing a practice which virtually deprives the defendant" of his privilege; here the judge's instruction to the jury to disregard the question was held to cure the error; the fallacy of the main ruling lies in ignoring the distinction between permitting a question and compelling an answer); 1917, People v. Minkowitz, 220 N. Y. 399, 115 N. E. 987 (defendant had produced papers at the trial of S., and they were returned to his attorney; a subpœna had been served upon the attorney to produce them at this trial; the prosecuting attorney at the trial asked the attorney for them, and he refused to produce on the ground of the privilege; held erroneous to call for production at the trial either from the defendant or from his attorney; following People v. Gibson; unsound); Oklahoma: 1911, Gillespie v. State, 5 Okl. Cr. 546, 115 Pac. 620 (letters, written by the defendant and in his possession, called for by the prosecutor as a part of his case on trial, and the call objected to; held improper); Pennsylvania: 1922, Com. v. Valeroso, 273 Pa. —, 116 Atl. 828 (murder; to prove a letter written to defendant by deceased's attorney, threatening eviction, the prosecution called on the defendant in court to produce the letter, and on non-production proved the contents by other evidence; held improper, on the theory that "on the call for the letter, he was bound to speak or remain silent, and silence was the equivalent of speech"; unsound obviously, for the notice to produce does not call for any answer; the opponent's mere failure to produce furnishes the first party with the desired excuse for secondary evidence); Vermont: 1917, State v. Bolton, 92 Vt. 157, 102 Atl. 489 (document in defendant's possession; on his objection to evidence of it without the original, the prosecution called for it, but then withdrew the request; point not decided); Washington: 1915, State v. Jackson, 83 Wash. 514, 145 Pac. 470 (like McKnight v. U. S.; the learned Court declines to accept the above criticism of that case; on this point, further argument would seem to be useless; it is enough to note that these rulings are consistent with the judicial attitude towards the accused person as a delicate sacred image of Dresden china, whose slightest marring would bring down a divine thunderbolt on courts of justice); 1915, State v. Morden, 87 Wash. 465, 151 Pac. 832 (statutory rape; letter sent by the female to the defendant; inquiry by counsel whether defendant had the letter, held not a violation of the rule).

See a learned note in Harvard Law Review, XXIX, 211 (1915), on McKnight v. U. S. and Hanish v. U. S.

to the latter case (except perhaps the third) have force here; and it would therefore seem that the technical right of the plaintiff, to call the opponent as a witness and question him until it appears that the privilege will be exercised, should be conceded to operate.[8] The same rule should apply to an ordinary witness called in a case plainly involving his crimination.[9]

(4) For a co-defendant in a criminal case, the privilege of course applies; i. e., one defendant cannot call a co-defendant unless the latter waives his privilege.[10]

§ 2269. Judge's Warning to the Witness. It is plausible to argue that the witness should be warned and notified, when a criminating fact is inquired about, that he has by law an option to refuse an answer; and this view was often insisted upon, a century ago, by the leaders at the Bar:

1783, Mr. Bearcroft, arguing in Bembridge's Trial, 22 How. St. Tr. 143 (for the defence): "It is true he was examined in a mode of inquiry in which it was not improper perhaps, to examine him; but it cannot be doubted that the persons who did examine him saw that the questions that they put upon that occasion tended to criminate the person under that examination. What does your lordship do in that situation? What does every judge do, even down to the lowest justice of the peace, even to committee-men upon elections, whenever a question of that sort is asked of a witness? 'Stop; understand that you are at your own discretion whether you will answer that question or not; you need not accuse yourself.' The law of England is that no man is bound to accuse himself; and the man who administers that law best always takes care to give that caution."

1794, Mr. Erskine, in Watt's Trial, 23 How. St. Tr. 1265 (for the defence): "I conceive it to be of all things the idlest and most superfluous to recognize as a principle of law that a witness is not to answer a question that might criminate himself, without at the same time warning him what might or not be a question where the answer might criminate himself."

[8] Eng. 1855, Boyle v. Wiseman, 10 Exch. 647, 653 (libel; the defendant objected to being sworn, on the present ground; held, that he must be sworn, and could object upon being asked questions); Can. 1867, Burton v. Young, 17 Low. Can. 379, semble (cited ante, § 2260); U. S. 1921, Ridge v. State, 206 Ala. 349, 89 So. 742 (abatement of nuisance of house of prostitution, under St. 1919, Feb. 12, p. 52; the requirement of a sworn answer, held not to violate the privilege, since the "respondent can successfully invoke the protection of his constitutional privilege by making a proper showing to the Court," if his answer should involve a crime); 1916, People v. Seymour, 272 Ill. 295, 111 N. E. 1008 (contempt; "no question of that kind arises on the record, since he claimed no exemption from answering").

Contra: 1919, Warmbein v. Ulrich, Man., 3 W. W. R. 959 (crim. con.; motion to compel attendance of defendant to be examined for discovery, denied, under Eng. St. 32 & 33 Vict. c. 68, § 3, quoted ante, § 2252); 1900, Re Green, 86 Mo. App. 216 (citation under statute against a former administrator, with interrogatories charging concealment, embezzlement, etc.; the defendant's situation being "analogous to that of a defendant in a criminal suit," "he cannot be called by the opposite party as a witness").

[9] Can. 1915, Re Isler, 25 D. L. R. 845, Ont. (application from a French court to take the deposition of I. for criminal proceedings pending against I. in France; per Middleton, J., the order issued, leaving it to I. to claim or waive privilege; "the only limitation upon the right to examine is found in R. S. Can. 1906, c. 145, § 45, which gives the witness the same right to refuse to answer questions tending to criminate, or other questions, which a party would have in a cause pending").

U. S. 1902, U. S. v. Kimball, 117 Fed. 156, 163 (grand jury); 1886, Ex parte Stice, 70 Cal. 51, 53, 11 Pac. 459 (like Eckstein's Pet., Pa.); 1903, Ex parte Gfeller, 178 Mo. 248, 77 S. W. 552 (interrogatories to a witness in a proceeding against E. for discovery of property embezzled from an estate; interrogatories allowed; distinguishing Re Green, n. 8, supra); 1892, Eckstein's Petition, 148 Pa. 509, 516, 24 Atl. 63 (a witness is not exempted from being sworn because incriminating questions are likely to be asked); 1920, Re Adams, 42 S. D. 592, 176 N. W. 508 (subpœna by a chairman of county council of defence; party not entitled to refuse to appear merely because he would be asked criminating questions).

[10] 1919, State v. Medley, 178 N. C. 710, 100 S. E. 591.

But there are opposing considerations. In the first place, such a warning would be an anomaly; it is not given for any other privilege; witnesses are in other respects supposed to know their rights; and why not here? In the next place, it is not called for by principle, since, until the witness refuses, it can hardly be said that he is compelled to answer; nor is it material that he believes himself compelled, for the Court's action, and not the witness' state of mind, must be the test of compulsion. Again, the question can at any rate only be one of judicial propriety of conduct, for no one supposes that an answer given under such an erroneous belief should be struck out for lack of the warning. Finally, in practical convenience, there is no demand for such a rule; witnesses are usually well enough advised beforehand by counsel as to their rights when such issues impend, and judges are too much concerned with other responsibilities to be burdened with the prevision of individual witnesses' knowledge; the risk of their being in ignorance should fall rather upon the party summoning than the party opposing.

Nevertheless, it is plain that the old practice was to give such a warning, when it appeared to be needed.[1] But, as general knowledge spread among the masses, and the preparation for testimony became more thorough, this practice seems to have disappeared in England, so far at least as any general rule was concerned.[2]

In the United States both the rule and the trial custom vary in the different jurisdictions.[3] No doubt a capable and painstaking judge will give the warning, where need appears; but there is no reason for letting a wholesome custom degenerate into a technical rule.

§ 2269. [1] 1725, L. C. Macclesfield's Trial, 16 How. St. Tr. 850 (Mr. Solicitor-General: "It is our duty that he should not be surprized into a question that may subject him to a punishment. . . . We ought to let him know that an answer to the question may subject him to a prosecution"); 1783, Mr. Bearcroft, quoted supra; 1809, L. C. Eldon, in Lloyd v. Passingham, 16 Ves. Jr. 59, 64 ("The practice formerly was that the judge told the witness he was not bound to answer the question").

[2] 1809, L. C. Eldon, in Paxton v. Douglas, 16 Ves. Jr. 239, 242 ("Now, it appears to be understood that he may waive the objection and proceed if he thinks proper; and in general it is left to his own discretion"); 1854, Parke, B., in Att'y-Gen'l v. Radloff, 10 Exch. 84, 88 ("I think that a witness ought to make the objection himself").

[3] Ga. 1896, Dunn v. State, 99 Ga. 211, 25 S. E. 448, semble (caution is not required); Haw. 1896, Republic v. Parsons, 10 Haw. 601, 605 (the Court is not bound to instruct); Ill. 1900, Bolen v. People, 184 Ill. 338, 56 N. E. 408 ("when such inquiry [as to the extent of his right to refuse] is made by the witness, it is the duty of the Court to inform him"); Mass. 1876, Mayo v. Mayo, 119 Mass. 290, 292 ("It is within the discretion of the Court, and the usual practice, to advise a witness that he is not bound to criminate himself, where it appears necessary to protect the rights of the witness"); Miss. 1904, Ivy v. State, 84 Miss. 264, 36 So. 265 ("the better practice" requires a warning); N. H. 1854, Janvrin v. Scammon, 29 N. H. 280, 290 ("The Court will frequently interfere and inform the witness of his privilege"); N. Y. 1833, Taylor v. Wood, 2 Edw. Ch. 94 (the Court should advise the witness); Pa. 1842, Ralph v. Brown, 3 W. & S. 395, 400 ("the judge ought to advise the witness of his privilege"); S. D. 1906, State v. Mungeon, 20 S. D. 612, 108 N. W. 552 (incest; the prosecutrix being unwilling to testify, the Court's refusal to advise her of the privilege, on demand of defendant's counsel, was held not improper); Vt. 1840, Smith v. Crane, 12 Vt. 491, 493 ("Ordinarily" he should be told of his privilege, when it is likely to apply); Wis. 1899, Emery v. State, 101 Wis. 627, 78 N. W. 145; 1913, State v. Lloyd, 152 Wis. 24, 139 N. W. 514 (examination before the State fire-marshal; warning held not necessary).

That the party cannot object for lack of an instruction is noticed post, § 2270, note 3.

§ 2270. Who may Claim the Privilege; Party, Witness, Counsel; Effect of Erroneous Overruling of Claim. The privilege is that of the person under examination as witness, and, like all other privileges, is intended for his protection only (ante, § 2196); consequently, it does not concern a right of the party calling him;

1870, COCKBURN, C. J., in R. v. Kinglake, 22 L. T. R. N. S. 335: "By refusing to be examined, the witness may have exposed himself to imprisonment for contempt or to a fine. But that merely concerns the witness himself. If he chooses to give his evidence voluntarily, it would be perfectly good evidence, and would not be illegal evidence in any sense whatever, and there could be no cause of complaint. If so, what difference does it make that he has given his evidence in consequence of some coercion which has been put upon him?" BLACKBURN, J.: "Granting that a wrong was done to the witness, it is a ground of complaint for him and no one else."

1842, NELSON, C. J., in Cloyes v. Thayer, 3 Hill 564, 566: "The privilege belongs exclusively to the witness, who may take advantage of it or not, at his pleasure. . . . If ordered to testify in a case where he is privileged, it is a matter exclusively between the Court and the witness. The latter may stand out and be committed for contempt, or he may submit; but the party has no right to interfere or complain of the error. It would be otherwise if the Court allowed the privilege in a case where the witness had not brought himself within the rule, as the [cross-examining] party would then be improperly deprived of his testimony."

(1) It follows, where the party and the witness are separate persons, that the witness must be left to make the claim for himself, and the calling party may not make it for him;[1] furthermore, that the party's counsel may not, as such, give public warning of the privilege to the witness or require the judge to do so;[2] and, finally, that the calling party has no ground for com-

§ 2270. [1] England: 1870, R. v. Kinglake, 22 L. T. R. N. S. 335 (quoted supra).

United States: Fed. 1906, McAlister v. Henkel, 201 U. S. 90, 26 Sup. 385 (a corporation cannot claim for its officer as witness); Alaska: Comp. L. 1913, § 1507 (quoted ante, § 2252); Colo. 1891, Lothrop v. Roberts, 16 Colo. 250, 254, 27 Pac. 698; 1903, Barr v. People, 30 Colo. 522, 71 Pac. 392; D. C. 1918, Graul v. U. S., 47 D. C. App. 543; Ill. 1900, Bolen v. People, 184 Ill. 338, 56 N. E. 408; 1902, New York Life Ins. Co. v. People, 195 Ill. 430, 63 N. E. 264; Ind. 1884, South Bend v. Hardy, 98 Ind. 577, 583; Ia. 1892, Clifton v. Granger, 86 Ia. 573, 575, 53 N. W. 316; 1905, State v. Cobley, 128 Ia. 114, 103 N. W. 99; Mich. 1869, Foster v. People, 18 Mich. 266, 271; Miss. 1876, White v. State, 52 Miss. 216, 225; N. J. 1830, Fries v. Brugler, 12 N. J. L. 79; N. Y. 1826, Southard v. Rexford, 6 Cow. 254, 259 ("It is a personal privilege only"); 1842, Cloyes v. Thayer, 3 Hill 564, 566; 1843, Ward v. People, 6 Hill 144, 146; 1845, People v. Bodine, 1 Denio 281, 314; Or. Laws 1920, § 870 (quoted ante, § 2252); Tex. 1895, Ingersol v. McWillie, 87 Tex. 647, 30 S. W. 869; Wis. 1869, State v. Olin, 23 Wis. 309, 319.

But where the witness is represented by counsel, an objection on his behalf may be taken by counsel: 1827, Seymour's Trial, N. Y., 3 Amer. St. Tr. 385, 401 (abduction of Morgan, the renegade Mason).

Compare the cases cited ante, § 2196.

A corporation may of course claim by its officers: 1897, D'Ivry v. World Newspaper Co., 17 Ont. Br. 387; 1906, Hale v. Henkel, 201 U. S. 43, 26 Sup. 370, semble.

Compare the rule for documents of a corporation (ante, § 2259).

[2] ENGLAND: 1826, Thomas v. Newton, M. & M. 48, note (L. C. J. Tenterden would not allow counsel to object or argue as to the privilege); 1831, R. v. Adey, 1 Mo. & Rob. 94 (L. C. J. Tenterden: "The privilege is that of the witness, not of the party; and I think therefore that counsel have no right to interfere for the purpose of excluding an examination to which, as against their client, there is no objection").

UNITED STATES: Colo. 1903, Barr v. People, 30 Colo. 522, 71 Pac. 392 (the party cannot require that the judge instruct the witness); Mass. 1837, Com. v. Shaw, 4 Cush. 594 (sustaining the trial judge's refusal, on demand by the party as matter of right, to inform the witness of his privilege); 1859, Com. v. Howe, plaint if the privilege is erroneously held inapplicable and the answer compelled.[3] It would seem, however, that the opposing party would have ground for complaint, if the opposite error were committed and the answer erroneously suppressed; because in the former case the error would have the effect merely of admitting facts concededly relevant, while in the latter case it would have the effect of excluding relevant evidence.[4]

(2) Where the party and the witness are identical, it would seem that the same results must follow; i. e. neither can the counsel make claim on the party-witness' behalf;[5] nor can an error in denying the privilege be complained of by the party for the purpose of overthrowing the proceedings in the cause; for, in his capacity as a witness, he must employ the course appropriate to a witness; but most Courts would probably decline to accept this conclusion in the latter respect.[6]

13 Gray 26, 31 (similar); N. Y. 1833, Taylor v. Wood, 2 Edw. Ch. 94 ("The counsel of the parties have no right to interrupt the examination by advising a witness that he is not bound to answer the question"; yet, if the witness desires to decline, he may apply to the party's counsel for advice); N. Dak. 1896, State v. Kent, 5 N. D. 516, 67 N. W. 1052; 1899, State v. Ekanger, 8 N. D. 559, 80 N. W. 482; S. Car. 1896, State v. Butler, 47 S. C. 25, 24 S. E. 991; S. Dak. 1906, State v. Mungeon, 20 S. D. 612, 108 N. W. 552 (cited ante, § 2269, n. 3).

Contra: 1892, Clifton v. Granger, 86 Ia. 573, 575, 53 N. W. 316 (the claim may be made through counsel for the party); 1906, State v. Barker, 43 Wash. 69, 86 Pac. 387 (said 'obiter,' without citing authority, that an attorney, who was signalling a witness to claim privilege, might "interpose suitable and timely objections" to the questions).

But note that where the counsel is objecting to improper cross-examination to character and is not claiming privilege — the distinction already adverted to (ante, § 2268), — he is of course entitled to speak; this distinction is brought out in the opinion in South Bend v. Hardy, 98 Ind. 577, 584 (1884).

[3] ENGLAND: 1870, R. v. Kinglake, 11 Cox Cr. 500, 22 L. T. R. N. S. 335 (a witness having been compelled to answer against his protest, held, that the party against whom his evidence was given had no ground of exception).

UNITED STATES: Fed. 1894, Morgan v. Halberstadt, 9 C. C. A. 147, 60 Fed. 592, 596, 20 U. S. App. 417, 424 ("if the witness waives his privilege, or the Court disregards it and requires him to answer, the party has no right to interfere or complain of the error"); 1907, Taylor v. U. S., 152 Fed. 1, 7, C. C. A. (Morgan v. Halberstadt followed); Ala. 1907, Beauvoir Club v. State, 148 Ala. 643, 42 So. 1040 ("the party cannot review the action of the Court here"); Ill. 1896, Samuel v. People, 164 Ill. 379, 45 N. E. 728 (following R. v. Kinglake); Ia. 1890, State v. Van Winkle, 80 Ia. 15, 45 N. W. 388; 1905, State v. Cobley, 128 Ia. 114, 103 N. W. 99; N. Y. 1842, Cloyes v. Thayer, 3 Hill 564, 566 (quoted supra); N. Car. 1903, State v. Morgan, 133 N. C. 743, 45 S. E. 1033; Pa. 1853, Phelin v. Kenderdine, 20 Pa. 354, 363, semble; P. R. 1919, People v. Banks, 27 P. R. 296 (adultery; approving Samuel v. People, Ill., supra); S. Car. 1896, State v. Butler, 47 S. C. 25, 26, 24 S. E. 991 (refusal to instruct as to privilege, not available as error for the party).

Contra: Mass. 1837, Com. v. Kimball, 24 Pick. 366, 368 (on the ground that "it could not be held that the verdict was supported by legal evidence"); 1849, Com. v. Shaw, 4 Cush. 594 (apparently approving Com. v. Kimball, as involving "the only mode practicable for revising such decision"); Wis. 1869, State v. Olin, 23 Wis. 309, 318 ("It seems" that "a party" may appeal).

Compare the cases cited ante, § 2196.

[4] Eng. R. v. Kinglake, Cloyes v. Thayer, quoted supra; U. S. 1913, State v. Cox, 87 Oh. 313, 101 N. E. 135; and the like general principle for all privileges (ante, § 2196).

[5] 1875, State v. Wentworth, 65 Me. 234, 241; 1896, State v. Kent, 5 N. D. 516, 67 N. W. 1052 (because otherwise it cannot be supported by the witness' oath; but counsel may raise the point, and ask that the witness be apprized of his rights and given an opportunity to make the claim).

Contra: 1878, People v. Brown, 72 N. Y. 571, 573; 1905, State v. Shockley, 29 Utah 25, 80 Pac. 865 (the reasoning in this opinion is fallacious; Bartch, C. J., diss.).

[6] Eng. 1856, R. v. Scott, 1 D. & B. 47 (quoted ante, § 850, note 8); U. S. 1878, People v. Brown, 72 N. Y. 571, 573 ("An error committed by the Court against him may inure to his benefit as a party"). This reason would be suitable for a game of whist.

How an erroneous ruling of this sort ought to be treated is shown in Pendleton v. U. S.,

§ 2271. Who may Determine the Claim; Judge and Witness. Plainly, by all principle, the judge at a trial is to pass upon the application of rules of evidence and to determine incidental questions of fact upon which their application depends.[1] On the other hand, and plainly also, if the data which show that the answer to a certain question does in fact criminate or tend to criminate are to be disclosed to the judge by the witness claiming the privilege, then the very disclosure has been made which the privilege aims to protect. It is true that the disclosure could be made without the hearing of the jury (as questions involving the admissibility of evidence are usually presented by counsel); but none the less has the disclosure been compelled, and by judicial compulsion; so that this expedient, which is adequate to solve other questions of privilege,[2] seems here inappropriate, and has never found favor. This dilemma was in England the source of long judicial hesitation and difference of opinion:[3]

1909, 216 U. S. 305, 30 Sup. 315 (the Philippine trial judge, in his finding, having noted that "the accused did not use his right to testify in his own favor," and the Philippine Supreme Court in denying a new trial having explicitly declared that "this Court in deciding the cause did not take said fact into consideration, but rendered the decision in accordance with the proofs," the Federal Supreme Court held that the original error, if any, "was not repeated in the Supreme Court and is not a ground of legal complaint").

What constitutes compulsion, in such a case, ought not to be a difficult question; compare with the following the cases under confessions before a magistrate (ante, §§ 849, 850, 852); 1902, U. S. v. Kimball, C. C., 117 Fed. 156 (certain witnesses, afterwards indicted, held not to have been compelled at a grand jury investigation; compulsion held to signify first a claim of privilege, an "expression of unwillingness in some form," and next an over-riding of the claim; the opinion unnecessarily dignifies by lengthy consideration the quibbles of the defendant).

Of course the improper compulsion of an accused by a justice of the peace to answer an incriminating question does not entitle the accused to plead immunity when tried before a jury, even though such answer cannot be used against him: 1912, Scribner v. State, 9 Okl. 465, 132 Pac. 933; 1913, Faucett v. State, — Okl. —, 134 Pac. 839.

Whether an answer erroneously compelled, but falsely given, is perjury, is a different question: 1903, State v. Faulkner, 175 Mo. 546, 75 S. W. 116 (citing the precedents fully); 1903, State v. Lehman, 175 Mo. 619, 75 S. W. 139; 1905, State v. Faulkner, 185 Mo. 673, 84 S. W. 967; 1918, State v. Caperton, 276 Mo. 314, 207 S.W. 795. Of course, a false statement made in answer to questions which the witness could by privilege have refused to answer but did not refuse to answer, leaves him liable to perjury: 1908, People v. Cahill, 193 N. Y. 232, 86 N. E. 38. But, of course, also, an answer confessing under compulsion that an answer on a former examination was false cannot be used on a trial for perjury in the former answer: 1912, State v. Thornton, 245 Mo. 436, 150 S.W. 1048.

For the course of proceeding in a prosecution for the offence of wilful refusal to testify, see U. S. v. Praeger, — C. C. A. —, 149 Fed. 474, 484 (1907; court-martial).

How far a judicial order overruling a claim is interlocutory only and therefore not subject to appeal, is considered in Alexander v. U. S., 201 U. S. 117, 26 Sup. 356 (1906); Doyle v. London Guarantee & A. Co., 204 U. S. 509, 27 Sup. 313 (1907).

§ 2271. [1] Post, § 2550.

[2] Post, § 2322, ante, §§ 2193, 2212.

[3] The British rulings, before and after the above cases, are as follows: England: 1847, R. v. Garbett, 2 C. & K. 474, 494, 1 Den. Cr. C. 276 (whether the mere declaration of the witness sufficed; not decided; quoted supra); 1851, Short v. Mercier, McN. & G. 205, 218 (L. C. Truro: "It will satisfy the rule if the witness state circumstances, consistent on the face of them with the existence of the peril alleged and which also render it extremely probable; . . . if the fact forms one of a series, and a party declines to answer who alone knows all the circumstances and how the fact is connected with others which may form a chain of evidence by which guilt may be established, I apprehend that in such a case the Court would be disposed to assist the party"); 1852, Fisher v. Ronalds, 12 C. B. 762 (bill of exchange; plea, illegal gaming as a consideration; question as to a roulette-table being in the room, held privileged, the witness claiming that it would tend to incriminate him; whether "the statement of the witness is conclusive," not decided, but Maule,

1847, R. v. Garbett, 2 C. & K. 474, 492, 2 Cox Cr. 448, 1 Den. Cr. C. 276. Mr. Martin: "It is for the discretion of the judge, where he is satisfied of 'bona fides' in the witness, and sees real danger to him, to allow him to decline to answer; otherwise a witness might say so in every case and as to everything." MAULE, J.: "The judge may think that a man knows his own affairs better than anybody else knows them." . . . ROLFE, B.: "If the witness says on his oath that he believes the answer will criminate him, can you compel him to give the answer after that?" WILLES, C. J.: "I have known judges over and over again tell the witness he must answer." PARKE, B.: "It must appear to the judge that the answer really had some tendency to criminate the witness." Afterwards, "a majority of their Lordships held the conviction wrong; being of opinion that if a witness claims the protection of the Court on the ground that his answer would tend to criminate himself, and there appears reasonable ground to believe that it would do so, he is not compellable to answer."

1861, WILLES, J., in Ex parte Fernandez, 10 C. B. N. S. 3, 39: "Some judges, out of tenderness for the witness, have held it a sufficient excuse if he swears that in his opinion — where such opinion may be well founded — his answering will expose him to such proceeding; some have thought that too lax and yielding a practice; but there has never been any doubt that it is for the Court to decide whether the circumstances judicially before it are such as to excuse the witnesses from answering."

The danger and impracticability of yielding to the extreme in the protection of the witness have been repeatedly pointed out, in passages which demonstrate the necessity of considering that aspect of the problem:

1882, JESSEL, M. R., in Ex parte Reynolds, 15 Cox Cr. 108, 114: "[It] is obvious that if you allowed the witness merely on his own statement . . . to refuse to answer the question, it would enable a friendly witness, who wished to assist one of the parties, to

J., thought that it was); 1855, Parke, B., in Osborn v. London Dock Co., 10 Exch. 698 ("The weight of authority seems to be in favor of the rule which requires the witness to satisfy the Court"); 1855, Pollock, C. B., in Adams v. Lloyd, 3 H. & N. 351, 357, 361 (the view of Maule, J., in Fisher v. Ronalds, approved; conceding an exception where "the judge is perfectly certain that the witness is trifling with the authority of the Court . . . having in reality no ground whatever for claiming his privilege"); 1857, Sidebottom v. Atkins, 3 Jur. 631 (V. C. Stuart disagreed with Mr. J. Maule's extreme opinion, and thought that the Court was to judge on the circumstances of the case); 1859, Re Mexican & S. A. Co., 27 Beav. 474 (Romilly, M. R.: "In a great number of instances the witness himself must be the only person to determine that point, but certainly, where all the facts relating to it are brought before the attention of the Court, then I am of opinion that it is for the Court to determine it"); 1861, Ex parte Fernandez, 10 C. B. N. S. 3, 39 (quoted supra); 1861, R. v. Boyes, 1 B. & S. 311, 330 ("If the fact of the witness being in danger be once made to appear, great latitude should be allowed to him in judging for himself of the effect of any particular question. . . . Subject to this reservation a judge is in our opinion bound to insist on a witness answering unless he is satisfied that the answer will tend to place the witness in peril"; quoted supra); 1868, The Mary or Alexandra, L. R. 2 Ad. & Ec. 319, 324 (defendant's oath held sufficient on the facts); 1877, Ex parte Schofield, L. R. 6 Ch. D. 230, per James and Baggallay, LL. JJ. ("the judge will satisfy himself that the objection is a genuine one"); 1882, Ex parte Reynolds, 15 Cox Cr. 108, L. R. 20 Ch. D. 294 (bankruptcy; an auctioneer, as witness, was asked whether he had executed a certain deed, but refused to answer; the judge compelled him, not seeing "any chance of an answer to that question forming a link in a chain" of crimination, and believing that the witness was "setting up excuses which have no kind of foundation"; the witness was held bound to answer, unless the judge believes that "he is declining to answer 'bona fide' for his own protection and there is any appreciable danger to him"; approving R. v. Boyes and Ex parte Schofield; Bacon, V. C.: "Am I not bound to exercise such portion of common sense as I possess, and to say whether an answer to that question can possibly criminate anybody?"); escape examination altogether, and to refuse to give his evidence, — an evil so great that, when weighed even against the chance of occasionally assisting to convict a guilty man, it would certainly far overbear, as a question of public policy, the danger (if it is to be treated as a danger) of assisting to convict a guilty man occasionally out of his own mouth."

Ireland: 1899, Kelly v. Colhoun, L. R. 2 Ire. 199 (libel);

Canada: 1888, Ex parte Maguire, 14 Que. 359, 362 (following R. v. Boyes; careful opinion).

1891, STERRETT, J., in Com. v. Bell, 145 Pa. 374, 387, 22 Atl. 641, 644: "Was his determination, in opposition to the judgment of the Court, to be accepted as a finality, and was the Court powerless to enforce its order in the premises? We think not. If it was, courts of justice would be at the mercy of contumacious witnesses. . . . It is the plain duty of the trial judge to decide that question. Men who are as conscious of extreme susceptibility of crimination as the relator appears to have been would be badly qualified to decide such questions, especially in their own cases."

But a solution of the dilemma has now been generally accepted; the judicial differences to-day, if any, are in the phrasing rather than the substance, and concern in effect (as pointed out by Mr. Justice Mitchell) merely the burden of proof in the judge's mind. It is interesting to note that, during the two generations of repeated judicial attempts in England, there was already recorded, even before that controversy began, an opinion of Chief Justice Marshall which solved the problem in the manner now recognized as sound:

1861, COCKBURN, C. J., in R. v. Boyes, 1 B. & S. 311, 321: "To entitle a party called as a witness to the privilege of silence, the Court must see, from the circumstances of the case and the nature of the evidence which the witness is called to give, that there is reasonable ground to apprehend danger to the witness from his being compelled to answer; . . . [although] if the fact of the witness being in danger be once made to appear, great latitude should be allowed to him in judging for himself of the effect of any particular question. . . . Further than this, we are of opinion that the danger to be apprehended must be real and appreciable, with reference to the ordinary operation of law in the ordinary course of things; not a danger of an imaginary and unsubstantial character, having reference to some extraordinary and barely possible contingency, so improbable that no reasonable man would suffer it to influence his conduct. We think that a merely remote and naked possibility, out of the ordinary course of the law, and such as no reasonable man would be affected by, should not be suffered to obstruct the administration of justice. The object of the law is to afford to a party, called upon to give evidence in a proceeding 'inter alios,' protection against being brought by means of his own evidence within the penalties of the law. But it would be to convert a salutary protection into a means of abuse if it were to be held that a mere imaginary possibility of danger, however remote and improbable, was sufficient to justify the withholding of evidence essential to the ends of justice."

1807, MARSHALL, C. J., in Burr's Trial, Robertson's Rep. I, 243: "It is alleged that he [the witness] is and from the nature of things must be the sole judge of the effect of his answer; that he is consequently at liberty to refuse to answer any question, if he will say upon his oath that his answer to that question might criminate himself. . . . [But] there is no distinction which takes from the Court the right to consider and decide whether any direct answer to the particular question propounded could be reasonably supposed to affect the witness. There may be questions no direct answer to which could in any degree affect him; and there is no case which goes so far as to say that he is not bound to answer such questions. . . . When two principles come in conflict with each other, the Court must give them both a reasonable construction so as to preserve them both to a reasonable extent. The principle which entitles the United States to the testimony of every citizen, and the principle by which every witness is privileged not to accuse himself, can neither of them be entirely disregarded. They are believed both to be preserved to a reasonable extent, and according to the true intention of the rule and of the exception to that rule, by observing that course which, it is conceived, Courts have generally observed; it is this: When a question is propounded, it belongs to the Court to consider and decide whether any direct answer to it can implicate the witness; if this be decided in the negative, then he may answer it without violating the privilege which is secured to him by law. If a direct answer to it may criminate himself, then he must be the sole judge what his answer would be; the Court cannot participate with him in this judgment, because they cannot decide on the effect of his answer without knowing what it would be, and a disclosure of that fact to the judges would strip him of the privilege which the law allows and which he claims."

1890, MITCHELL, J., in State v. Thaden, 43 Minn. 253, 255, 45 N. W. 447: "The problem is how to administer the rule so as to afford full protection to the witness, and at the same time prevent simulated excuses. All the authorities agree to the general proposition that the statement of the witness that the answer will tend to criminate himself is not necessarily conclusive, but that this is a question which the Court will determine from all the circumstances of the particular case, and the nature of the evidence which the witness is called upon to give. But the question on which the cases seem to differ is as to what we may call the burden of proof; some holding that the statement of the witness must be accepted as true, unless it affirmatively appears from the circumstances of the particular case that he is mistaken, or acts in bad faith, while other cases hold that, to entitle a witness to the privilege of silence, the Court must be able to see from the circumstances of the case and the nature of the evidence called for, that there is reasonable ground to apprehend danger to the witness, if he is compelled to answer. . . . The difference is theoretical, rather than practical; for it would be difficult to conceive of an instance where the circumstances of the case, and the nature of the evidence called for, would be entirely neutral in their probative force upon the question whether or not there was reasonable ground to apprehend that the answer might tend to criminate the witness. After consideration of the question and an examination of the authorities, our conclusion is that the best practical rule is that laid down in some of the English cases, and adopted and followed by Chief Justice Cockburn, in Reg. v. Boyes. . . . To this we would add that, when such reasonable apprehension of danger appears, then, inasmuch as the witness alone knows the nature of the answer he would give, he alone must decide whether it would criminate him. This, we think, is substantially what Chief Justice Marshall meant by his statement of the rule in the Burr trial."

This summing-up of Mr. Justice Mitchell leaves nothing to be added, and ought to remain the last word in the development of the rule. In the courts of the United States, a few of the earlier rulings inclined towards Mr. Justice Maule's extreme view in Fisher v. Ronalds; but the later decisions have generally adopted the common principle of R. v. Boyes and U. S. v. Burr, and the phraseology of either the one or the other.[4]

[4] Federal: 1807, U. S. v. Burr (quoted supra); 1883, U. S. v. McCarthy, 18 Fed. 87 (R. v. Boyes approved); 1896, Ex parte Irvine, 74 Fed. 954 (the Court's discretion controls, depending upon whether there is reasonable ground to infer crimination); 1904, Re Hess, 134 Fed. 109, D. C. (a bankrupt pleading the privilege for his books "should be required to bring the books and papers . . . before either the Court or the referee," the Court to "pass upon the probability of danger"); 1906, U. S. v. Collins, 145 Fed. 709, D. C. (witness' claim held not sufficient on the facts); 1906, U. S. v. Collins, 146 Fed. 553, D. C. (rule applied to a party summoned to produce documents before a grand jury); 1917, Mason v. U. S., 244 U. S. 362, 37 Sup. 621 (gambling; the witness was sitting at a table with the persons charged with gambling; "if at this time you saw any one playing a game of cards at the table at which you were sitting," held not improperly compelled to be answered);
Alabama: 1876, Calhoun v. Thompson, 56 Ala.

166, 170 ("If it is not apparent [to the Court] that such would be the tendency of the answer, the witness is not privileged"); 1896, Alston v. State, 109 Ala. 51, 20 So. 81 (the witness need not expressly explain, if the answer would clearly criminate);
California: 1900, Overend v. Superior Court, 131 Cal. 280, 63 Pac. 372 (the Court must decide); 1901, Bradley v. Clark, 133 Cal. 196, 65 Pac. 395 (similar); 1900, Re Rogers, 129 Cal. 468, 62 Pac. 47 ("It is for the Court to pass upon the sufficiency of the objection");
Florida: 1896, Ex parte Senior, 37 Fla. 1, 19 So. 652 (the Court is to decide on all the circumstances, but the witness cannot be required to explain); 1899, Wallace v. State, 41 Fla. 547, 26 So. 713 (the witness need not explain how it would criminate);
Georgia: 1913, Empire Life Ins. Co. v. Einstein, 12 Ga. App. 380, 77 S. E. 209 (rule in Burr's Case followed);
Hawaii: Rev. Laws 1915, § 2616 (the privilege shall not be allowed to any witness for any question "relevant and material to the matter in issue," unless the Court "shall be of the opinion that the answer will tend to subject such witness to punishment for treason, felony, or misdemeanor");
Illinois: 1909, Manning v. Mercantile Securities Co., 242 Ill. 584, 90 N. E. 238 (R. v. Boyes followed; officers of a corporation were held not to state a ground of privilege in refusing to hand the corporation books to a receiver, because some of the contents could not be incriminating and no specific facts showing the criminating portions were named);
Indiana: 1905, Wilson v. Ohio F. Ins. Co., 164 Ind. 462, 73 N. E. 893 (rule in U. S. v. Burr applied to a claim by the principal of a bond in an action against the surety);
Iowa: 1850, Richman v. State, 2 Greene 532, 533 (the ruling in U. S. v. Burr followed); 1861, Printz v. Cheeney, 11 Ia. 469, 471 (same); 1863, State v. Duffy, 15 Ia. 425, 427 (same); 1888, Mahanke v. Cleland, 76 Ia. 401, 404, 41 N. W. 53 (the Court should compel, "unless reasonable grounds for believing" a tendency to criminate);
Maryland: 1885, Chesapeake Club v. State, 63 Md. 446, 455 (R. v. Boyes approved);
Michigan: 1904, Re Moser, 138 Mich. 302, 101 N. W. 588 (rule of U. S. v. Burr approved; Moore, C. J., diss.); 1906, Re Mark, 146 Mich. 714, 110 N. W. 61 (rule in U. S. v. Burr applied);
Minnesota: 1890, State v. Thaden, 43 Minn. 253, 45 N. W. 447 (rule of Cockburn, C. J., in R. v. Boyes, approved; quoted supra);
Missouri: 1829, Ward v. State, 2 Mo. 120, 123 (following U. S. v. Burr); 1909, Ex parte Gauss, 223 Mo. 277, 122 S. W. 741 (rule in Burr's Trial, applied);
New Hampshire: 1854, Janvrin v. Scammon, 29 N. H. 280, 290 ("He will be protected unless the Court can see from the circumstances of the case that he is in error, or that it is a mere pretext on the part of the witness to avoid answering, and that his answer cannot, from the nature of things, criminate him"); 1862, Carter v. Beals, 44 N. H. 408, 412 (preceding case approved); 1865, Eaton v. Farmer, 46 N. H. 200, 202 (same);
New York: 1830, People v. Mather, 4 Wend. 229, 253 (good opinion by Marcy, J., adopting substantially the rule in U. S. v. Burr); 1894, People v. Forbes, 143 N. Y. 219, 231, 38 N. E. 303 ("The weight of authority seems to be in favor of the rule that the witness may be compelled to answer when he contumaciously refuses, or when it is perfectly clear and plain that he is mistaken"); 1900, People v. Priori, 164 N. Y. 459, 58 N. E. 668 (it rests largely in the trial Court's discretion; to justify compulsion, it must at least clearly be shown that an answer would not incriminate);
North Carolina: 1880, La Fontaine v. Southern Underwriters' Ass'n, 83 N. C. 132, 141 (approving Osborn v. Dock Co., Eng.);
Ohio: 1909, McGorray v. Sutter, 80 Oh. 400, 89 N. E. 10 (rule in Burr's Trial approved; here on habeas corpus; explaining the earlier case of Warren v. Lucas, 10 Oh. 336);
Pennsylvania: 1891, Com. v. Bell, 145 Pa. 374, 387, 22 Atl. 641, 644 (quoted supra);
Porto Rico: 1902, Re Decker, 1 P. R. Fed. 381 (answer compelled);
Rhode Island: 1901, Rosendale v. McNulty, 23 R. I. 465, 50 Atl. 850 (privilege held not applicable, where "the questions do not show that such a result [as crimination] is possible");
South Carolina: 1819, State v. Edwards, 2 Nott & McC. 13 ("Something must necessarily be left to the witness"); 1842, Poole v. Perritt, 1 Spears 128 (witness allowed to refuse, "upon his own assurance"; "the law does act wisely in leaving it to the witness himself"; Earle and Wardlaw, JJ., diss.); 1896, State v. Butler, 47 S. C. 25, 26, 24 S. E. 991 (preceding case approved);
Texas: 1907, Ex parte Andrews, 51 Tex. Cr. 79, 100 S. W. 376; 1922, Ex parte Copeland, — Tex. Cr. —, 240 S. W. 314 (rule of U. S. v. Burr applied);
Vermont: 1840, Smith v. Crane, 12 Vt. 491, 494 (witness' oath is to be taken, unless the Court is "fully satisfied such is not the fact, i. e. that the witness is either mistaken or acts in bad faith"); 1907, Re Consolidated Rendering Co., 80 Vt. 55, 66 Atl. 790 (rule of State v. Thaden, Minn., approved);
Virginia: 1881, Temple v. Com., 75 Va. 892, 898 (rule in U. S. v. Burr, approved by one judge; the other two reserving their opinion); 1884, Kendrick v. Com., 78 Va. 490, 495 (rule in U. S. v. Burr approved);
Washington: 1897, Perkins v. Bank, 17 Wash. 100, 49 Pac. 241 (the witness need not expressly say that the answer would criminate, if it is plain from the question; this is going too far, for he must of course state what privilege he claims);
Wisconsin: 1859, Kirschner v. State, 9 Wis. 140, 143 ("The Court is to determine, under § 2272. Effect of Making Claim, as to Inferences permissible against the Claimant; (a) General Principle. The question whether an inference may be drawn from a person's exercise of his privilege is one which may well puzzle by its anomalies.

1. Both principle and expediency are involved. The layman's natural first suggestion would probably be that the claim was a clear confession of the criminating fact. The lawyer's natural first answer would certainly be that then the privilege would thereby be annulled. Both of these have a truth, but only a partial truth. The nature of the issue should not be lost sight of. It is not a question of mere reasoning, — of the recognition that an inference is open. "Logic is logic," ever since the days of the one-hoss shay; and it is on that score impossible to deny that the very claim of the privilege involves a confession of the fact. "Were you assisting the defendant at the time of the affray?"; this may be answered "yes" or "no"; if "no," the fact is not criminating and the privilege is not applicable; if "yes," the fact is criminating and the privilege applies. The inference, as a mere matter of logic, is not only possible but inherent, and cannot be denied.

Yet, though not denied, can it not be ignored? This is the true question, — whether, in view of our trial methods, it is possible and proper to insist on the practical ignoring of this inference. If our trial tribunals were not divided in function, and if issues of fact and law came equally to the judge's mind for decision, the question would be a mere quibble, because the judge could hardly perform the impossible feat of ignoring the operations of his own mind. But since the jury, and the counsel's efforts with the jury, are more or less within the control of the judge irrespective of his own mental operations, it remains after all a practical question whether principle and expediency require us to prevent, so far as feasible, any further use of the inference than such as is inevitable from the mere disclosure of the claim. Perhaps the jury can effectively be instructed on the subject; at any rate, the comment by counsel can be prohibited. Thus the question ceases to be merely one of mental gymnastics, and is after all worth attempting to solve.

For a century this question remained in controversy in England and Canada. Until very modern times, it could not arise for an accused's testimony, because the accused could not testify even if he would. But the case of an ordinary witness presented very much the same issue; and each generation exhibited from time to time the same difference of opinion. Finally, in 1898 the statute making accused persons competent settled the law.[1] all the circumstances of the case, whether such is the tendency of the question");

Wyoming: 1899, Miskimmins v. Shaver, 8 Wyo. 392, 58 Pac. 411 (rule in U. S. v. Burr approved).

In chancery practice a special question may arise, dependent upon the technicalities of that system of pleading, as to the proper mode of furnishing the judge with the data for decision: 1818, Sharp v. Sharp, 3 John. Ch. N. Y. 407, and the cases cited ante, § 2268, n. 4.

§ 2272. [1] The English and Canadian rulings are as follows:

ENGLAND: 1803, Millman v. Tucker, Peake Add. Cas. 222 (L. C. J. Ellenborough told the jury "that if the witness chose to avail himself of that protection which the law gave him, he was not thereby at all discredited"); 1809, L. C. Eldon, in Lloyd v. Passingham, 16 Ves. Jr. 59, 64 (quoted supra); 1817, R. v. Watson, 2 Stark. 153 (Bayley, J.: "He may demur to

In the United States almost universal legislation has decreed, in varying phraseology, that the inference shall not be availed of.[2] Only by a few

the question, for he is not bound to criminate himself; and if he refuse, this is not without its effect on the jury. . . . It would perhaps be going too far to say that you may discredit him if he refuse to answer; it is for the jury to draw what inferences they may"; Holroyd, J.: "If you propose a question to a witness and he declines to answer it, his not answering can have no effect with the jury"); 1826, Rose v. Blakemore, Ry. & Mo. 383, Abbott, C. J. ("There was an end of the protection of a witness if a demurrer to the question were to be taken as an admission of the fact inquired into"); 1855, Boyle v. Wiseman, 10 Exch. 647, 651 (Parke, B.: "The protection given by the statute would be of no avail, if the refusal to answer was construed into evidence of guilt; it is impossible, however, to prevent the jury drawing their own conclusions"; Alderson, B.: "It seems to me that a party not denying a fact which it is in his power to deny gives a color to the other evidence against him"); 1862, Bartlett v. Lewis, 12 C. B. N. s. 249, 263.

Then in 1898 came the statute (quoted ante, § 488) qualifying the accused as a witness, which provided that the accused's failure to give evidence "shall not be made the subject of any comment by the prosecution." This, however, left open the question of the judge's right to comment, in the exercise of his common-law power to comment generally on the evidence. It was immediately decided, and has since been adhered to, that the judge may so comment: 1899, R. v. Rhodes, 1 Q. B. 77, 83 (the Court's right to comment to the jury on the evidence is not taken away by the statute qualifying the accused; and comment on a failure to testify is allowable); 1894, Kops v. Reg., App. Cas. 650 (under N. S. Wales St. 1892, 55 Vict. No. 5, § 6, the judge may comment on the accused's failure to explain by his own testimony the evidence against him; and the provision against being "compellable" to testify does not forbid the drawing of inferences); 1908, Mudge's Case, 1 Cr. App. 62 (inference made from accused's failure to take the stand, under St. 1898); 1909, Kirkham's Case, 2 Cr. App. 253 ("People who set up an alibi, and do not go into the box, are not entitled to come here and rely upon that defence"); 1909, Hampton's Case, 2 Cr. App. 274; 1909, Theodorus' Case, 3 Cr. App. 269; 1915, George J. Smith's Trial, Notable British Trials, 1922, p. 308 (wife-murder; the accused's failure to testify, commented on by the judge).

For the further interpretation of St. 1898, see ante, § 194*a*.

CANADA: By Dom. St. 1893, c. 31, § 4, R. S. 1906, c. 145, Evidence Act, § 4 (quoted ante, § 488), the accused's failure to testify "shall not be made the subject of comment by the judge or by counsel," etc. This differed from the English statute by including the judge in the prohibition of comment, and this provision has since been frequently applied; the several Provincial statutes are quoted ante, § 488; Dom. 1916, R. v. Kelly, 34 D. L. R. 311, 323 (where the accused elects to make a statement not under oath, the judge may state to the jury that this is not the equivalent of sworn testimony, without violating Can. Evid. Act, § 4); 1919, Veuillette v. The King, 48 D. L. R. 158 (murder; judge's comments on the accused's failure in his testimony to deny the act, held not improper on the principle of § 2273, post);
Alberta: 1921, R. v. Gallagher, 63 D. L. R. 629, Alta. (judge's comment, held improper);
British Columbia: 1920, R. v. Mah Hong Hing, 53 D. L. R. 356, B. C. (judge's comment on accused's failure to disclose his defence at the preliminary hearing, held improper, under Can. Evid. Act, § 4);
New Brunswick: 1904, R. v. Maguire, 35 N. Br. 609 (the judge's comment on the accused's failure to show an alibi, held on the facts a comment violating Dom. St. 1893, c. 31, § 4);
Northwest Terr. 1905, R. v. King, 6 N. W. Terr. 139, 150 (murder; applying Dom. Evid. Act 1893, c. 31, § 4);
Quebec: 1915, R. v. Romano, 21 D. L. R. 195 (comment by the judge, held improper, under Can. Evid. Act, § 4; the judge's withdrawal of the comment, held here not to cure the error).

[2] In the following list are found all jurisdictions except Georgia, New Jersey, Ohio, and South Carolina; but the Court of the first-named State (in which an accused is as yet qualified only to make a "statement") has taken the same view (1874, Bird v. State, 50 Ga. 585, 589), and the Court of the second-named State has taken the opposite view (in the citations infra, note 3); in Maine, the statute supplanted the decisions collected infra, note 3; the statutes are quoted ante, § 488; their application usually takes the form of prohibiting comment by counsel: Fed. St. 1878, c. 37, March 16, Code § 1357; 1892, Wilson v. U. S., 149 U. S. 60, 13 Sup. 765; Ala. Code 1907, § 7894; 1888, Cooper v. State, 86 Ala. 610, 6 So. 110 (refusal to exhibit one's body); Alaska: Comp. L. 1913, § 2258; Ariz. Rev. St. 1913, P. C. § 1229; Ark. Dig. 1919, § 3123; Cal. P. C. 1872, § 1323; 1869, People v. Tyler, 36 Cal. 522, 527; 1871, People v. McGungill, 41 Cal. 429; 1873, People v. Russell, 46 Cal. 121, 123; 1878, People v. Brown, 53 Cal. 66; 1896, People v. Sanders, 114 Cal. 216, 46 Pac. 153; 1898, People v. Cuff, 122 Cal. 589, 55 Pac. 407 (holding C. C. P. § 2061, subd. 6, 7, not applicable);

Courts and Constitutions is the inference permitted to be drawn, against one who claims the privilege of silence.[3]

Colo. Comp. St. 1921, § 7101; 1885, Petite v. People, 8 Colo. 518; Conn. Gen. St. 1918, § 6634; Del. Rev. St. 1915, § 2215; Fla. Rev. G. S. 1919, § 6080; Haw. Rev. L. 1915, § 2613; Ida. Comp. St. 1919, § 9131; Ill. Rev. St. 1874, c. 38, §§ 35, 426; 1880, Angelo v. People, 96 Ill. 209, 213; 1888, Quinn v. People, 123 Ill. 333, 15 N. E. 46; Ind. Burns' Ann. St. 1914, § 2111; 1877, Long v. State, 56 Ind. 182, 186; Ia. Annot. Code 1897, § 5484, Comp. Code § 9464; 1893, State v. Baldoser, 88 Ia. 55, 56, 55 N. W. 97; Kans. Gen. St. 1915, §§ 8130, 8131; Ky. Stats. 1915, § 1645; La. St. 1916, No. 157; 1898, State v. Marceaux, 50 La. An. 1137, 24 So. 611; 1916, State v. Sinigal, 138 La. 469, 70 So. 478; Me. Rev. St. 1916, c. 136, § 20; 1886, State v. Banks, 78 Me. 490, 7 Atl. 269; 1892, State v. Landry, 85 Me. 95, 26 Atl. 998; Md. Ann. Code 1914, Art. 35, § 4; Mass. Gen. L. 1920, c. 233, § 20; 1877, Com. v. Scott, 123 Mass. 239 (comment not allowed, even where defendant's counsel had improperly alleged special reasons for the defendant's failure to take the stand; unsound, for the defendant's counsel's act was virtually a waiver of the right to prohibit comment, and the prosecution's comment was merely an answer to the defendant's counsel's); 1886, Com. v. Hanley, 140 Mass. 457, 5 N. E. 468; 1909, Phillips v. Chase, 201 Mass. 444, 87 N. E. 755 (comment allowable, except when prohibited by statute; see citation infra, note 3); Mich. Comp. L. 1915, § 12552; 1903, People v. Hammond, 93 Mich. 1084, 93 N. W. 1084; Minn. Gen. St. 1913, § 8376; 1894, State v. Pearce, 56 Minn. 226, 57 N. W. 652, 1065; 1896, State v. Holmes, 65 Minn. 230, 68 N. W. 11; 1903, State v. Stoffels, 89 Minn. 205, 94 N. W. 675; Miss. Code 1906, § 1918, Hem. § 1578; 1893, Yarbrough v. State, 70 Miss. 593, 12 So. 551; 1895, Reddick v. State, 72 Miss. 1008, 16 So. 490; Mo. Rev. St. 1919. § 4037; 1918, State v. Drummins, 274 Mo. 632, 204 S. W. 271 (seduction); Mont. Rev. C. 1921, § 12177; Nebr. Rev. St. 1921, § 10139; Nev. Rev. L. 1912, §§ 7161, 7456; N. H. Pub. St. 1891, c. 224, § 25; N. Mex. Annot. St. 1915, § 2166; N. Y. C. Cr. P. 1881, § 393; 1896, People v. Hoch, 150 N. Y. 291, 44 N. E. 977; 1898, People v. Fitzgerald, 156 N. Y. 253, 50 N. E. 846; N. C. Con. St. 1919, § 1799; N. Dak. Comp. L. 1913, § 10837; Okl. Comp. St. 1921, § 2698; Or. Laws 1920, § 1534; Pa. St. 1887, May 23, Dig. 1920, § 21864, Witnesses (Pub. L. 1887, p. 158, § 10); P. I. P. C. 1911, Gen. Order 58 of 1900, § 15; R. I. Gen. L. 1909, c. 292, § 44; 1893, State v. Hull, 18 R. I. 207, 211, 26 Atl. 191; S. D. Rev. C. 1919, § 4879; 1898, State v. Garrington, 11 S. D. 178, 76 N. W. 326; Tenn. Shannon's Code 1916, § 5601; Tex. Rev. C. Cr. P. 1911, § 790; 1891, Jordan v. State, 29 Tex. App. 595, 16 S. W. 543; Utah: Comp. L. 1917, § 9279; Vt. Gen. L. 1917, § 2554; 1868, State v. Cameron, 40 Vt. 555, 565; Va. Code 1919, § 4778; Wash. R. & B. Code 1909, § 2148; W. Va. Code 1914, c. 152, § 19; 1890, State v. Ice, 34 W. Va. 244, 249, 12 S. E. 695 (comment held not improper on the facts); Wis. Stats. 1919, § 4071; Wyo. Comp. St. 1920, § 7507.

[3] This view has been sanctioned by four Courts and one Constitution, though the statutes cited supra, note 2, have since controlled the subject in Maine and North Carolina: Federal: 1908, Twining v. New Jersey, 211 U. S. 78, 29 Sup. 14 (State v. Twining, N. J., supra, held not to raise a question under U. S. Const. Amendment XIV, and to be rightly decided so far as New Jersey law was controlling); Maine: 1867, State v. Bartlett, 55 Me. 200, 216 (quoted supra); 1870, State v. Lawrence, 57 Me. 574, 581; 1871, State v. Cleaves, 59 Me. 298 (quoted supra); Massachusetts: 1909, Phillips v. Chase, 201 Mass. 444, 87 N. E. 755 (inference and comment allowable, except as expressly prohibited by statute; going upon the cases in Maine, New Jersey, and England, and upon the inapplicable Massachusetts cases cited post, § 2273, notes 6, 8; an extraordinary ruling); New Jersey: 1898, Parker v. State, 61 N. J. L. 308, 39 Atl. 651 (careful opinion by Magie, C. J.); 1900, State v. Wines, 65 N. J. L. 31, 46 Atl. 702; 1906, State v. Banusik, — N. J. L. —, 64 Atl. 994 (comment by the judge); 1906, State v. Twining, 73 N. J. L. 683, 64 Atl. 1073, 1135 (comment by the judge); 1908, State v. Callahan, 76 N. J. L. 426, 69 Atl. 957; 1908, State v. Skillman, 76 N. J. L. 474, 70 Atl. 83; 1909, State v. Callahan, 77 N. J. L. 685, 73 Atl. 235 (Court of Errors and Appeals prior opinion explained); 1915, State v. Connors, 87 N. J. L. 419, 94 Atl. 812 (comment by the judge; State v. Callahan followed); 1921, State v. Bien, 95 N. J. L. 474, 113 Atl. 248; North Carolina: 1853, State v. Garrett, Busb. 357 (dealing only with the privilege against disgracing facts, but assuming that the witness is not bound to answer).

Compare also the opinion of Buck, J., in State v. Pearce (1894), 56 Minn. 226, 236, 57 N. W. 652, 1065.

This view has also been sanctioned by express constitutional proviso in Ohio: 1913, Const. Amendment to Sect. 10, Art. I ("No person shall be compelled, in any criminal case, to be a witness against himself; but his failure to testify may be considered by the Court and jury and may be made the subject of comment by counsel"); 1914, State v. Morrow, 90 Oh. 202, 107 N. E. 515 (Const. Am. 1913 to Sect. 10, Art. I, construed as not being applicable to a "case pending" on Jan. 1, 1913); 1919,

2. But the inquiry remains necessary whether this majority-solution was right or wrong, — for, if wrong, it may be set right again. To those who have solved the problem in accord with the legislators, the matter has apparently been so simple that no elaborate reasoning was necessary in support. The following passages represent the grounds vouchsafed:

1809, L. C. Eldon, in Lloyd v. Passingham, 16 Ves. Jr. 59, 64: "I protest strongly against the doctrine that Robert Passingham, having demurred to so much of the bill as seeks a discovery of facts which have a tendency to affect him criminally, is on that account to be considered as admitting the allegations of the bill; having observed a notion prevailing, lately, that a witness who refuses to answer a question upon that ground is therefore not to be believed. Nothing can be more fallacious, as a standard of credit, than such a conclusion, or more dangerous to justice by depriving the subject of that protection to which he is entitled by law."

1869, Sawyer, C. J., in People v. Tyler, 36 Cal. 522, 530: "If the inference in question could be legally drawn, the very act of exercising his option as to going upon the stand as a witness, which he is necessarily compelled by the adoption of the statute to exercise one way or the other, would be, at least to the extent of the weight given by the jury to the inference arising from his declining to testify, a crimination of himself."

The various aspects of the argument against suppressing the inference are to be found in the following passages, — the notable efforts being those of the Supreme Court of Maine:

1827, Editors' Note, in Ryan & Moody's Reports, 384: "Where the objection is that the answering the question may subject him to forfeiture, penalty, or punishment, it seems open to contend that there is no reason why comments should not be made on the fact of the witness' refusal to answer, with a view to satisfy the jury of the truth of the fact suggested in the question. It would seem that the witness is sufficiently secured from penalties, punishment, or forfeiture if he is not compelled to say anything which would be evidence against him in proceedings instituted with those objects; and as neither the inferences of counsel nor the opinion of the jury could have that effect, it appears as unreasonable to prevent counsel from drawing the one as it is impossible to prevent the jury from forming the other. The conclusion indeed is so obvious that the only way of preventing the jury from forming it is by declaring . . . not merely that the question need not be answered, but that it ought not to be asked. . . . With respect to questions tending merely to degrade, there may be more reason to adopt the principle laid down by Abbott, L. C. J., . . . as the ill opinion of the jury and of the persons present in Court forms part of that disgrace and infamy from which the Court is to protect the witness."

1862, Willes, J., in Bartlett v. Lewis, 12 C. B. N. s. 249, 263: "It appears to me that, even admitting that the interrogatories are put for the purpose of extracting answers which may criminate the party, or of prejudicing him in the estimation of the jury if he declines to answer them, they ought to be allowed to be put. I must own I have no sympathy with a witness who is compelled, in order to protect himself from answering a question, to admit that his answer would tend to criminate him." Erle, C. J.: "I know of no principle of law which should protect a man who has been guilty of an indictable offence from being placed in this predicament. . . . A man is not to be punished

Leonard v. State, 100 Oh. 456, 127 N. E. 464 (offence against the cold storage law; the defendant's failure to deny testimony as to receipts and deliveries, held open to comment and inference under Const. 1913); 1922, Mr. John G. Price, Attorney-General of Ohio, in Journal of Crim. L. and Criminology, XIII, 292 ("Experience in Ohio, since the adoption of the amendment, has fully justified its adoption").

upon his own forced admission of guilt. . . . [But] I must confess I do not see why a guilty man should not be prejudiced in the eyes of a jury."

1867, TAPLEY, J., in State v. Bartlett, 55 Me. 200, 217: "If a person remains silent when he may speak, he does so from choice, and the choice he makes upon such occasions has always been regarded competent evidence. It is the act of the party. From time immemorial the reply or the silence of the accused person, when charged [outside of the court], has been regarded as legitimate evidence on his trial for the consideration of the jury. Any act of his, when charged, tending to sustain the charge, may be proved. Fleeing from arrest, giving contradictory, untrue, or improbable accounts of the matters in issue, and refusals to account for the possession of stolen property, are evidences of guilt admitted upon the trial of the persons accused. These are proofs derived from the prisoner's acts, sayings, and silence. He never has been, and is not now, compelled to furnish the Court the evidence of the existence of these facts. If it be said, these are the voluntary acts of the prisoner, the manifest answer is, they are not more so than the refusal or neglect to testify. When found in the possession of stolen property and inquired of concerning it, he must speak or be silent. When found with the implements used in a recent burglary and interrogated in reference to them, he must answer or be silent. When found with the bloody instruments of a foul murder, and he is called upon to explain his possession, he must answer or be silent. There is no escape from this. He is in the strait betwixt the two. He must choose the one or the other. He must speak or be silent. Yet, in all these cases, it has been the uniform practice of the Court to admit in evidence the conduct of prisoners upon such occasions, and it never has been held an infringement of the rule referred to. . . . The Act in question [qualifying the accused] imposes no obligation upon the prisoner to testify; it only affords him an opportunity so to do, if he choose. It changes his condition only in adding one more opportunity to speak or be silent, and the same rule applies to the result which has been applied to such cases for a long time. . . . The danger apprehended has two antidotes; one lies in the intelligence of the jury, where the security of a proper consideration of every other fact lies, and the other remedy lies with the prisoner himself. If in silence there lies insecurity, the law in its beneficence allows him to break silence and avoid the danger arising from it. If he has so conducted himself that he thus encounters greater difficulties, the fault is his own and not that of the law."

1871, APPLETON, C. J., in State v. Cleaves, 59 Me. 298, 300: "The statute authorizing the defendant in criminal proceedings, at his own request, to testify, was passed for the benefit of the innocent and for the protection of innocence. The defendant, in criminal cases, is either innocent or guilty. If innocent, he has every inducement to state the facts, which would exonerate him. The truth would be his protection. There can be no reason why he should withhold it, and every reason for its utterance. Being guilty, if a witness, a statement of the truth would lead to his conviction, and justice would ensue. Being guilty, and denying his guilt as a witness, an additional crime would be committed, and the peril of a conviction for a new offence incurred. But the defendant, having the opportunity to contradict or explain the inculpative facts proved against him, may decline to avail himself of the opportunity thus afforded him by the law. His declining to avail himself of the privilege of testifying is an existent and obvious fact. It is a fact patent in the case. The jury cannot avoid perceiving it. Why should they not regard it as a fact of more or less weight in determining the guilt or innocence of the accused? . . . The silence of the accused, the omission to explain or contradict, when the evidence tends to establish guilt, is a fact — the probative effect of which may vary according to the varying conditions of the different trials in which it may occur — which the jury must perceive, and which perceiving they can no more disregard than one can the light of the sun, when shining with full blaze on the open eye. It has been urged that this view of law places the prisoner in an embarrassed condition. Not so. The embarrassment of the prisoner, if embarrassed, is the result of his own previous misconduct, not of the law. If innocent, he will regard the privilege of testifying as a boon justly conceded. If guilty, it is optional with the accused to testify or not, and he cannot complain of the election he may make. If he does not avail himself of the privilege of contradiction or explanation it is his fault, if by his own misconduct or crime he has placed himself in such a situation that he prefers any inferences which may be drawn from his refusal to testify, to those which must be drawn from his testimony, if truly delivered."

1917, Massachusetts Constitutional Convention (Proceedings, I, 375): "Mr. Robert Walcott of Cambridge presented a resolution (No. 70) providing for an amendment inserting at (A) the words: 'but his failure to testify may be considered by the court and jury and may be made the subject of comment by counsel.' The committee on Bill of Rights reported that the resolution ought NOT to be adopted (Mr. Walcott, dissenting).

"Mr. Walcott of Cambridge: . . . The anomaly was created that the defendant could testify in his own behalf but he could not be made to testify in behalf of the State against himself, which was neither common sense nor ancient English practice. . . . What then is the objection to the change proposed? The objections that I have heard are two: First, that it is unnecessary, because a jury of intelligence will now take into consideration the fact that the defendant does not take the stand as leading to the inference that if he were guiltless he would have no objection to doing so. But the answer to that objection, it seems to me, is this: The jury at present do in an underhand way what they ought to be encouraged to do and allowed to do as a matter of right and common sense, and the result of their carrying on the practice contrary to law is that it makes the charge of the judge ridiculous when he has to charge the jury, if so requested by counsel, that 'the failure of a defendant to take the stand shall cause no inference unfavorable to the defendant in the minds of the jury.' The other objection is, . . . that if this rule were adopted more defendants might be convicted. But the rule of law would be unchanged, that a man has to be shown to be guilty beyond a reasonable doubt in order to be convicted, and it does not seem to me that that objection should hold." The resolution was considered by the Committee of the Whole Wednesday, July 25, 1917, and was rejected by the Convention the following day.

1921, Mr. Jesse L. Deck (Chairman of the Committee on Criminal Law and Criminology of the Illinois State Bar Association), "Proposed Reforms in Illinois Criminal Law and Procedure" (Journal of Criminal Law and Criminology, XII, 385): "The statute should be repealed which prevents reference by the state's attorney in argument to the defendant's failure to testify in his own behalf in criminal cases. The purpose of a trial of a criminal case is to determine the guilt or innocence of the defendant of the crime charged. If a defendant is not guilty of the charge, it would seem that he should be determined to take the stand and explain why he should not be convicted. If he is guilty and fails to testify, it would seem that there is no sound reason why his failure to deny the charge should not be the subject of comment by the prosecutor. At the present time, if before trial he stands mute when accused of the commission of the crime, that fact may be shown against him in evidence and argued to the jury as a tacit admission of his guilt; at least the jury may consider his failure to deny such accusation in determining his guilt or innocence. Upon principle it would seem that the people should have the same right to argue his failure to reply when accused upon the trial. In civil suits the fact that the defendant has made no denial of the plaintiff's claim is one of the most formidable weapons used against him in argument. It is difficult to understand why any distinction should be made between civil and criminal cases in this respect."

The reasoning is not to be summarily disposed of. Perhaps it is impregnable. Certainly the possibilities of pro and con are prolific and interesting. But the substance of it all, and the answers to it, seem to be as follows:

Argument first: An inference from the refusal is inevitable; therefore why try futilely to avoid it? Answer: The bare inference is indeed inevitable; but it is at least a practical question whether counsel's comment shall be permitted. Argument second: There is no actual compulsion, as prohibited by the rule; for the accused has an option, and the exercise of this option, by choosing silence, is therefore a voluntary act of his own. Answer: By hypothesis, his answer will be criminating (and it is the ignoring of this hypothesis which seems to form the fallacy of the learned Chief Justice Appleton); thus, the supposed option lies between answering in confession of the criminating fact or keeping silence and letting the same fact be inferred; which is no option at all. Argument third: The inference is drawn by virtue of the non-production of the testimony of a competent witness (ante, § 285), and not by virtue of the claim of privilege, and hence the two may be kept distinct, — precisely as the characters of the party as witness and as accused are allowed to be kept distinct (ante, § 61). Answer: It is true that the inference is drawable by virtue of that principle, but it is also a necessary implication in the claim of privilege; so that the analogy is not exact. Where a constitutional rule is involved, and not merely an ordinary rule of evidence, it would seem better to allow the former and not the latter aspect to control the situation. Nevertheless, if a logical mode of escape from the privilege is desired — that is, if we are determined to limit its harmful operation by any interpretation which an honest logic will permit — this argument seems a tenable one. Argument fourth: There is no actual extraction of any reply, and hence the privilege not to reply is literally maintained. Answer: It is true that no reply is required, and that this is the strongest argument for maintaining that the privilege is not violated. But if we consider the ultimate ground of policy upon which the privilege rests (ante, § 2251), we observe that a general practice of permitting the use of such inferences would (as against accused persons, at least) tend to bring about the very evils which the privilege is intended to prevent, namely, the reliance by the prosecution, for the means of proof, upon the confessions in court of the accused himself or upon the inferences of guilt which could be drawn from his silence, and the consequent slack and imperfect investigation of other sources of proof. If there is such a policy involved in the privilege, it applies equally to the prohibition of inferences, differing only in the degree of danger involved.

3. Such, then, being the conclusions of principle and expediency which forbid the drawing of inferences from a claim of privilege, it remains to notice the forms in which the rule is applicable:

(1) It clearly forbids comment by counsel upon the accused's failure to testify,[4]

[4] Most of the statutes cited ante enact this expressly; and the decisions invariably accept it; most of those cited supra, note 2, make this application.

Of course, where the defendant's counsel has himself first discussed the defendant's failure to testify, the prosecution may discuss it: 1920, Collins v. State, 143 Ark. 604, 221 S. W. 455; 1920, People v. Schultz, 210 Mich. 297, 178 N. W. 89 (prosecutor's reference is excused where accused's counsel has in argument explained to the jury why defendant was not called).

as well as comment by the judge.[5] But there is no call for the stringent rule that a new trial shall be granted 'ipso facto' where comment has been improperly made;[6] the trial judge must be trusted, not only to control counsel, but also to remedy the effect of his impropriety. Nor is it proper to go so far as to instruct the jury (even when no comment has been made) to disregard the inference; it is well enough to contrive artificial fictions for use by lawyers, but to attempt to enlist the layman in the process of nullifying his own reasoning powers is merely futile, and tends towards confusion and a disrespect for the law's reasonableness. However, by express statute in Indiana and Washington such an instruction is required. By express statute in Oklahoma and West Virginia (and perhaps by implication in other statutes) no "mention" of the accused's silence is to be made, and this may be construed to forbid even the judge's reference to it by instructions; thus, the words of the local statute may affect the result.[7] In two States the final [5] Except in England, under the statute of 1898, cited supra, n. 1.

But in Canada, the statute being different, comment by the judge is equally improper; cases cited supra, n. 1.

United States: Occasionally a judge's charge presents the question: 1916, York v. U. S., 9th C. C. A., 241 Fed. 656 (here the defendant waived the error); 1918, Shea v. U. S., 6th C. C. A., 251 Fed. 440 (the judge's reference to "uncontradicted testimony," held not improper on the facts); 1916, Rader v. State, 12 Okl. Cr. 354, 157 Pac. 270; 1915, Com. v. Chickerella, 251 Pa. 160, 96 Atl. 129 (murder; a charge that "the defense has not made any denial of the testimony as offered by the Commonwealth," held not improper).

[6] This unnecessary measure is expressly provided by the statutes of Iowa and Oklahoma, cited supra; for the judicial views upon the question whether an instruction may cure the fault, see the following cases and compare the general doctrine of new trials (ante, § 21):

CANADA: 1898, R. v. Corby, 30 N. Sc. 330 (marital privilege).

UNITED STATES: Fed. 1902, Knight v. U. S., 54 C. C. A. 358, 115 Fed. 972, 982; 1892, Wilson v. U. S., 149 U. S. 68, 13 Sup. 765; 1909, Pendleton v. U. S., 216 U. S. 305, 30 Sup. 315 (cited more fully ante, § 2270; showing the only proper mode of treating an erroneous ruling on this point); Colo. Petite v. People, 8 Colo. 518, 520, 9 Pac. 622; Ga. 1904, O'Dell v. State, 120 Ga. 152, 47 S. E. 577; 1904, Minor v. State, 120 Ga. 490, 48 S. E. 198; Ill. 1880, Angelo v. People, 96 Ill. 209, 213; 1910, People v. McMahon, 244 Ill. 45, 91 N. E. 104: Ind. Coleman v. State, 111 Ind. 563, 567, 13 N. E. 100; 1900, Blume v. State, 154 Ind. 343, 56 N. E. 771; Ia. 1886, State v. Ryan, 70 Ia. 154, 156, 30 N. W. 397; Kan. 1904, State v. Rambo, 69 Kan. 777, 77 Pac. 563; La. 1904, State v. Robinson, 112 La. 939, 36 So. 811; Mass. 1911, Com. v. Richmond, 207 Mass. 240, 93 N. E. 816 (sensible opinion by Rugg, J., the best on the subject); Mich. 1907, People v. Cahill, 147 Mich. 201, 110 N. W. 520; Mo. 1907, State v. Kelleher, 201 Mo. 614, 100 S. W. 470; Nev. 1905, State v. Williams, 28 Nev. 395, 82 Pac. 353; Okl. 1909, Sturgis v. State, 2 Okl. Cr. App. 362, 102 Pac. 57; 1917, Moody v. State, 13 Okl. Cr. 327, 164 Pac. 676; 1919, Brown v. State, 16 Okl. Cr. 155, 181 Pac. 318 (prosecuting attorney here held to have commented; an unjustified ruling, on the facts); 1920, Russell v. State, — Okl. Cr. —, 186 Pac. 492 (collecting the cases since Sturgis v. State); Pa. 1912, Com. v. Green, 233 Pa. 291, 82 Atl. 250; S. Dak. 1907, State v. Bennett, 21 S. D. 396, 113 N. W. 78; W. Va. 1892, State v. Chisnell, 36 W. Va. 667, 15 S. E. 412; Wis. 1903, Dunn v. State, 118 Wis. 82, 94 N. W. 646.

[7] The following cases deal with the subject: Alabama: 1904, Thomas v. State, 139 Ala. 80, 36 So. 734; Florida: 1916, Roberts v. State, 72 Fla. 132, 72 So. 649 (not decided); Idaho: 1904, State v. Levy, 9 Ida. 483, 75 Pac. 227 (sensible opinion by Sullivan, C. J.); 1911, State v. Gruber, 19 Ida. 692, 115 Pac. 1; Illinois: 1890, Farrell v. People, 133 Ill. 244, 24 N. E. 423; 1905, Miller v. People, 216 Ill. 309, 74 N. E. 743 (Court comment forbidden); 1914, People v. Spira, 264 Ill. 243, 106 N. E. 241 (proper instruction where one defendant testifies and another does not); 1917, People v. Michael, 280 Ill. 11, 117 N. E. 193; Iowa: 1885, State v. Stevens, 67 Ia. 557, 559, 25 N. W. 777; 1898, State v. Carnagy, 106 Ia. 483, 76 N. W. 805; 1905, State v. Scery, 129 Ia. 259, 105 N. W. 511; 1921, State v. Bower, 191 Ia. 713, 183 N. W. 322 (under Code 1897, § 5484, prohibiting comment by the State's attorney, it is not illegal for the judge to instruct the jury as to not drawing an inference); Louisiana: 1898, State v. Johnson, 50 La. An. 138, 23 So. 199; Maine: 1892, State v. Landry, 85 Me. 95, 26 Atl. 998; Massachusetts: 1909, Com. v. People's Express Co., 201 Mass. 564, absurdity has been committed of forbidding the jury even to discuss the subject among themselves.[8]

(2) The rule applies equally to the ordinary witness; i. e. the inference that the criminating fact exists is not to be made because of his claim of privilege.[9]

(3) The rule also forbids drawing an inference, during the trial, from the accused's prior failure to testify at a preliminary or other prior examination; [10] unless where he has now waived the privilege by voluntarily taking the stand.[11]

88 N. E. 420 (in some cases, it may be proper not to stop the counsel's argument, but merely to give an instruction later); Michigan: 1906, People v. Provost, 144 Mich. 17, 107 N. W. 716 (careful opinion, by McAlvay, J., reviewing the various rules); 1906, People v. Murphy, 145 Mich. 524, 108 N. W. 1009; Minnesota: 1894, State v. Pearce, 56 Minn. 226, 234, 57 N. W. 652, 1062; Missouri: 1893, State v. Robinson, 117 Mo. 649, 663, 23 S. W. 1066; 1905, State v. DeWitt, 186 Mo. 61, 84 S. W. 956 (revising State v. Robinson); Nebraska: 1895, Metz v. State, 46 Nebr. 547, 65 N. W. 190; 1903, Lamb v. State, 69 Nebr. 212, 95 N. W. 1050; 1919, Neal v. State, 104 Nebr. 56, 175 N. W. 669; Nevada: a statute makes an especially futile attempt to muzzle the judge on the subject (supra, n. 2); New Mexico: 1916, State v. Graves, 21 N. M. 556, 157 Pac. 160 ("the argument of the appellant is extraordinary and novel; it is that the jury was actually prejudiced because the Court gave the customary instruction!"); New York: 1871, Ruloff v. People, 45 N. Y. 213; Oklahoma: 1920, Russell v. State, — Okl. Cr. —, 186 Pac. 492 (whether the recital of the statutory rule by the judge is error requiring a new trial; McLaughlin v. State, 14 Okl. Cr. 192, 169 Pac. 657, modified); South Dakota: 1911, State v. Carlisle, 28 S. D. 169, 132 N. W. 686; Texas: 1890, Fulcher v. State, 28 Tex. App. 465, 473, 13 S. W. 750; 1898, Wilson v. State, 39 Tex. Cr. 365, 46 S. W. 251; Washington: 1904, State v. Deatherage, 35 Wash. 326, 77 Pac. 504; Wyoming: 1921, Anderson v. State, 27 Wyo. 345, 196 Pac. 1047 (an instruction pointing out the difference between the defendant's election to testify and his election to make a statement, held improper).

[8] Kan. C. C. P. § 215 (Gen. St. 1915, § 8130); 1904, State v. Rambo, 69 Kan. 777, 77 Pac. 563 (here the Court with fervid scholastic zeal applied this intellectual thumbscrew, and set aside the verdict because the jurors in their deliberations were unable to fetter their native reasoning powers to suit the statute); 1906, State v. Brooks, 74 Kan. 175, 85 Pac. 1013 (discusses the meaning of the term "considered" in the statute, and finds no violation of it in this case); Tex. 1898, Wilson v. State, 39 Tex. Cr. 365, 46 S. W. 251.

The actual effect, in experience, on the minds of jurymen, of forbidding the inference, may be gathered from Mr. (Assistant District Attorney) Arthur Train's useful book, "The Prisoner at the Bar" (1906), pp. 160–164.

[9] 1890, Beach v. U. S., 46 Fed. 754 (as also the inference that the witness is by collusion shielding the accused); 1886, Harrison v. Powers, 76 Ga. 218, 238, 245; 1917, State v. Weber, 272 Mo. 475, 199 S. W. 147 (rape under age); 1905, Powers v. State, 75 Nebr. 226, 106 N. W. 332 (adultery with the wife of C.; the wife's claim of privilege, when called by the prosecution to prove the adultery, held to permit no inference as to the defendant's guilt; no authority cited); 1853, Phelin v. Kenderdine, 20 Pa. 354, 363; 1892, Boyle v. Smithman, 146 Pa. 255, 258, 274, 23 Atl. 397; 1917, State v. Nelson, 91 Vt. 168, 99 Atl. 881 (four accomplices called by the State and refusing to answer by claim of privilege).

Compare the opposite view expressed by some of the English judges, quoted supra.

[10] 1922, People v. Mayen, — Cal. —, 205 Pac. 435 (larceny; comment on defendant's failure to testify in a former related trial, held improper on the facts); 1916, Loewenberg v. Merchants' & M. Bank, 144 Ga. 556, 87 S. E. 778 (in a fi. fa. proceeding to levy upon M., a judgment debtor, L. intervened as claimant; L. had been a witness before the grand jury in proceedings to indict M. for larceny; L. claimed privilege; held that the fact of L.'s exercise of privilege could not be used against him in the fi. fa. proceeding against M.); 1880, State v. Bailey, 54 Ia. 414, 415, 6 N. W. 589 (former claim of privilege as a witness); Mass. Gen. L. 1920, c. 278, § 23; 1900, Bunckley v. State, 77 Miss. 540, 27 So. 638; 1904, Boyd v. State, 84 Miss. 414, 36 So. 525 (by a majority); 1920, Vouligaris v. Gianaris, 79 N. H. 408, 109 Atl. 838 (but, such a comment by counsel being error of law, the opponent's failure to ask correction by the judge's instruction is a waiver); 1911, Parrott v. State, 125 Tenn. 1, 139 S. W. 1056; 1913, Smithson v. State, 127 Tenn. 357, 155 S. W. 133.

[11] These cases are collected post, § 2273.

Moreover, his testimony at a prior trial may also be now offered against him, as an admission, even though he does not on this trial take the stand, — on the principle of § 1051, ante: 1905, Miller v. People, 216 Ill. 309, 74 N. E. 743 (three judges dissenting, but without ground, and citing no authority).

(4) The rule equally forbids inferences from the non-production of privileged documents; [12] but it does not forbid the proof of copies by other means, when the production of the original is refused.[13]

§ 2273. Same: (b) Inference from not producing Evidence, distinguished. The principle has been already examined (ante, §§ 285–291) that a party's failure to produce evidence which, if favorable, would naturally have been produced, is open to the inference that the facts were unfavorable to his cause. One application of this principle (ante, § 289) is that the party's failure to testify in his own behalf is equally open to that inference.

This specific application of it is obviously (as just noted in § 2272) in conflict with the privilege against self-crimination. But the other applications of it remain in full force. It is therefore necessary to draw the line between the two, and to determine the boundary of the prohibited inference. No Court has doubted that such a boundary must be recognized, but there is not always unanimity in locating it:

1850, SHAW, C. J., in Commonwealth v. Webster, 5 Cush. 295, 316: "When pretty stringent proof of circumstances is produced, tending to support the charge, and it is apparent that the accused is so situated that he could offer evidence of all the facts and circumstances as they existed, and show, if such was the truth, that the suspicious circumstances can be accounted for consistently with innocence, and he fails to offer such proof, the natural conclusion is that the proof, if produced, instead of rebutting would tend to sustain the charge. But this is to be cautiously applied, and only in cases where it is manifest that proofs are in the power of the accused not accessible to the prosecution."

Certain situations must here be discriminated.

(1) The failure to produce evidence, in general, other than his own testimony, is open to inference against a party accused, with the same limitations (ante, §§ 285–291) applicable to civil parties.[1] The application of the distinction

[12] This is unquestioned; cases involving certain discriminations are collected post, § 2273.

[13] Ante, § 1210.

Nor, of course, does it forbid the prosecution's giving of notice to produce under §§ 1202, 1209, ante, required as preliminary to proof by copy. This is so elementary that Lord Eldon would have lamented the decay of sound principle under the blight of democracy could he have read the contrary opinion in McKnight v. U. S. (1902), 115 Fed. 972 (discussed ante, § 2268).

§ 2273. [1] CANADA: 1904, R. v. Aho, 11 Br. C. 114 (a statement in the charge that the onus is on the accused to account for his presence at the place, etc., the accused not taking the stand, is proper); 1906, R. v. Burdell, 11 Ont. L. R. 440 (failure to account for possession of stolen goods); 1909, R. v. Guerin, 18 Ont. L. R. 425 (Riddell, J., who had commented on some uncontradicted testimony to a conversation with the accused: "I have heard the same kind of statement by trial judges over and over again before 1892, and it never was thought an impropriety or an unfair thing to do at that time when the mouth of the accused was closed").

UNITED STATES: Federal: 1921, Lefkowitz v. U. S., 2d C. C. A., 273 Fed. 664 ("There isn't a word of denial. . . that S. and L. were partners," held not improper comment); Arizona: 1914, Cutler v. State, 15 Ariz. 343, 138 Pac. 1048 (rape under age); 1919, U. S. v. Wallace, U. S. Court for China, 1 Extraterr. Cas. 900 (conspiracy to deal in opium); Arkansas: 1921, Markham v. State, 149 Ark. 507, 233 S. W. 676 (liquor offence; "We find the five leaving the mill and going in the direction of the still; none of them denied that they went to the still but P. F.," held not improper comment); California: 1890, People v. Cline, 83 Cal. 374, 378, 23 Pac. 391 (larceny of horse; defendant's failure to call the alleged vendor, held to be open to inference); Connecticut: 1900, State v. Griswold, 73 Conn. 95, 46 Atl. 829; 1899, Price v. U. S., 14 D. C. App. 391, 400 (failure to attempt to prove an alibi); 1921, State v. Monahan, 96 Conn. 289, 114 Atl. 102 (burglary; counsel's comment on defendant's failure to produce evidence, held not error); will depend upon the language used (by counsel or judge) in a particular case in pointing out the inference:

1921, MORROW, P. J., in Boone v. State, 90 Tex. Cr. 374, 235 S. W. 580 (robbery; the defence was an alibi, but the defendant himself did not testify):

"A bill is presented complaining of the remark of counsel, who stated that "'If he were accused of an offense of robbery, and had been tried once and was on trial

Georgia: 1909, Mills v. State, 133 Ga. 155, 65 S. E. 368 (but there is no presumption of law); Illinois: 1907, Lipsey v. People, 227 Ill. 364, 81 N. E. 348; 1910, People v. McMahon, 244 Ill. 45, 91 N. E. 104 (the defendant not having taken the stand, the prosecutor's form of argument as to uncontradicted evidence, "Is there a man or a woman on earth that ever came in here and contradicted her in the least? No, sir," was held "near the danger line"; this ruling goes too far in hampering legitimate argument); 1912, People v. Donaldson, 255 Ill. 19, 99 N. E. 62 (absence of contradiction may be noticed in argument); 1921, People v. Paisley, 299 Ill. 576, 132 N. E. 872 (insolvency of a private banker; prosecution's comment on lack of testimony denying certain assertions of K., a witness for the prosecution, held allowable, even though none but the accused could have supplied the denial); Indiana: 1893, Frazier v. State, 135 Ind. 38, 39, 34 N. E. 817 (failure to produce any evidence); 1904, Griffiths v. State, 163 Ind. 555, 72 N. E. 563 (larceny); Iowa: 1858, State v. Hinkle, 6 Ia. 385 (failure to explain where arsenic was bought); 1903, State v. Hasty, 121 Ia. 507, 96 N. W. 1115 (the absence of contradiction for certain facts may be noticed, even though the accused is the only one who could contradict them); 1911, State v. Kimes, 152 Ia. 240, 132 N. W. 180; Kansas: 1909, State v. Labore, 80 Kan. 664, 103 Pac. 106 (absence of contradictory evidence in general); Louisiana: 1918, State v. Connor, 142 La. 631, 77 So. 482 (larceny; "Is there one single denial from the defendant that he stole those goods?" held not a violation of the rule); Massachusetts: 1850, Com. v. Webster, 5 Cush. 295, 316 (quoted supra); 1872, Com. v. Horner, 110 Mass. 411; 1887, Com. v. Brownell, 145 Mass. 319, 14 N. E. 108; 1908, Com. v. Johnson, 199 Mass. 55, 85 N. E. 188 (failure to call witnesses to occupation, etc.); 1909, Com. v. People's Express Co., 201 Mass. 564, 88 N. E. 420 (defendant corporation's failure to call its own employees is open to inference); Michigan: 1893, People v. Mills, 94 Mich. 630, 638, 54 N. W. 488; 1922, People v. Lowrey, — Mich. —, 186 N. W. 396 (larceny; "the facts that the complaining witness has related in this case stand absolutely uncontradicted and undisputed," held not improper); Missouri: 1919, State v. Steele, 280 Mo. 63, 217 S. W. 80 (abortion); 1921, State v. De Priest, 288 Mo. 459, 232 S. W. 83 ("You must say that B. was there; . . . there has not been a witness here who says he was not there," held not improper comment); New York: 1916, People v. Watson, 216 N. Y. 565, 111 N. E. 243 (wife-murder, the son being the only witness of the alleged killing; but repeated allusions to the lack of contradiction of the son's testimony, held improper); North Carolina: 1900, State v. Costner, 127 N. C. 566, 37 S. E. 326 (failure to call witnesses to explain accused's whereabouts); Oklahoma: 1906, Perkins v. Terr., 17 Okl. 82, 87 Pac. 297 (larceny, but here the opinion so perversely construes the principle as practically to shut the mouth of the prosecution in discussing the accused's failure to produce evidence in general); 1916, Rader v. State, 12 Okl. Cr. 354, 157 Pac. 270 (liquor; "none of the witnesses testifying here said or proved that it was for his own use," held improper; unsound; carried this far, the rule becomes merely a gag for legitimate argument); Philippine Isl. 1904, U. S. v. Navarro, 3 P. I. 143 (the original Spanish Penal Code § 483, on the offense of imprisonment of another person, providing that the failure of the accused to give information of the person's whereabouts or to prove that he was set at liberty shall increase the penalty, is a violation of the privilege, and is void; three judges diss.); 1905, U. S. v. Luzon, 4 P. I. 343 (similar); 1910, U. S. v. Tria, 17 P. I. 303 (illegal voting); 1918, U. S. v. Sarikala, 37 P. I. 486 (murder; citing the above text with approval); South Dakota: 1914, State v. Knapp, 33 S. D. 177, 144 N. W. 921; Texas: 1892, Jackson v. State, 31 Tex. Cr. 342, 344, 20 S. W. 921 (failure to account for possession of stolen goods); 1921, Boone v. State, 190 Tex. Cr. 374, 235 S. W. 580 (robbery; quoted supra); Vermont: 1917, State v. Bolton, 92 Vt. 157, 102 Atl. 489 (judge's reference to "unexplained evidence," held not improper on the facts); Washington: 1905, State v. Smokalem, 37 Wash. 91, 79 Pac. 603; Wisconsin: 1907, Lam Yee v. State, 132 Wis. 527, 112 N. W. 425 (rape; defendant's failure to call witnesses to deny his gonorrhea); 1922, Haffner v. State, — Wis. —, 187 N. W. 173 (keeping a house of ill-fame; comments on non-production of evidence, held improper on the facts).

So also where other persons were present and one was possibly the doer, their denials of their guilt allow an inference that the defendant was the only possible doer, and this is distinct from the inference from his failure to deny: 1911, Com. v. Richmond, 207 Mass. 240, 98 N. E. 816.

again for the offense, that he would feel that he should give the jury the benefit of all his movements on the day of the robbery and that "they" (meaning the defendant and his counsel) hadn't done it.' This is claimed to have violated the statute prohibiting reference in argument to the failure of the accused on trial to testify.

"The statute (Art. 790, Code of Criminal Procedure) does not prohibit the comment in argument upon the failure of the accused or his counsel to produce evidence. It does prohibit counsel in argument to allude to or comment upon his failure to testify. The plain import of the statute is that counsel for the State, in argument, must refrain from making use of the silence of the accused during his trial against him by direct or indirect means. An indirect comment upon the failure of the accused to testify is quite as hurtful as a direct one, and this court has often held that the consequences of the violation of the statute were not to be avoided by the adroitness of counsel in selecting indirect rather than direct means of disregarding it.

"The statute is not shown to have been infringed, however, by disclosing that counsel, in argument, used language which might be construed as an implied or indirect allusion to the failure of the accused to testify. To come within the prohibition the implication must be a necessary one; that is, one that cannot reasonably be applied to the failure of the accused to produce other testimony than his own. Where there is other evidence, or the absence of other evidence, to which remarks may reasonably have been applied by the jury, the statute is not transgressed. The case of Vickers v. State, 69 Tex. Cr. 628, was one of incest with Ollie Walston, and the following language was used: 'They tell you the prosecuting witness has not been corroborated — they will tell you no one saw the act of intercourse except the two (prosecutrix and defendant). 'T is true that no one was present at the act of intercourse but these two; 'tis true that Ollie Walston testifies that no one was present when the defendant told her to take the turpentine except herself and the defendant; but, gentlemen, she has testified to both of these transactions, and they have not dared to put a witness on the stand to contradict her testimony in any particular.' It is obvious from the quotation that contradiction demanded could come from no source save the accused. The court held, and wisely held, that the statute was impinged. The case of Jackson v. State, 31 Tex. Cr. 342, was one for theft of money. In argument counsel said: 'I say they have not proved that the money was Drew's money. Why have they not had Drew's family here, and the other witnesses, to prove that the money was Drew's money? Don't you know that counsel appreciates the importance of the evidence, and if the money was Drew's money they ought to have had their witnesses here to prove it? And nobody has testified to this jury that the money belonged to defendant, and he has never claimed it since the sheriff took it from him.' The argument was held legitimate. Many like illustrations are available. . . .

"In the case before us, . . . the State's evidence goes to show that he was absent from the city of Amarillo during a large part of the day upon which the robbery took place; that he was seen on the road traveled by the offenders in various places in an Overland automobile. It may be conceded that on some of these occasions there were no others with him, but it is his theory that it was not he that the State's witnesses saw, and that he was elsewhere. To meet the requirements of the law which the appellant invokes, it would be necessary that the state of the evidence be such as to exclude the knowledge of his presence elsewhere by others."

Here, however, the effect of the burden of proof has sometimes tended to confuse. It is true that the burden is on the prosecution (post, §§ 2485, 2511), and that the accused is not required by any rule of law to produce evidence; but nevertheless he runs the risk of an inference from non-production. This seeming paradox, which has been already sufficiently noticed in treating of the general principle (ante, § 290), has misled a few Courts to deny that any inference may be drawn.[2]

(2) The inference is equally applicable to the non-production of documents. But since the privilege applies to all documents which as a witness the party is called upon to produce (ante, § 2264), does the prohibition of an inference extend to all documents which he might as a witness otherwise have been compelled to produce, i. e. to all documents within his possession or control? Presumably not. It is clear that a document here plays a double part; it is, with regard to the inference, like a witness, i. e. it is something distinct from his own testimony and personality, and is merely an object which he has the power to produce; yet, with regard to the privilege, it is on a level with his own testimony. In this dilemma, where it becomes a question in what capacity the document should be regarded and which aspect should override the other, it seems desirable to choose that solution which is not open to abuse. Now it is obvious that if the inference were to be prohibited for all documents in the party's control, he could, by purposely securing the control of all sorts of documents, effectually prevent not only their perusal but even any inference as to their contents. This would be an abuse of the privilege, and is certainly not to be endured by the law. It seems proper therefore to restrict the prohibition of the inference to such documents only as are of his own personal authorship (for thus they become in truth his own testimony and admissions), and to permit the inference for all others which happen to be within his control and are not produced. Such would seem to have been the practice hitherto.[3]

(3) Where the witness not produced is privileged and therefore might refuse to testify if called, there arises an interesting and complicated problem, already elsewhere considered (ante, § 286, in general, and § 2243, marital privilege).

[2] Cal. 1898, People v. Streuber, 121 Cal. 431, 53 Pac. 918 ("No presumption against him is raised by the law if he does not make the attempt to explain [evidence against him]"); La. 1873, State v. Carr, 25 La. An. 407, 408 (inference not allowable from a failure to offer any evidence for the defence); Minn. 1919, State v. Richman, 143 Minn. 314, 173 N. W. 718 (failure to explain possession of stolen money; the opinion ignores the consideration that the whole common-law doctrine about unexplained stolen possession, post, § 2513, could never have grown up if this had been the law); R. I. 1893, State v. Hull, 18 R. I. 207, 211, 26 Atl. 191 (keeping a house of ill-fame; comment forbidden, on the theory that by virtue of the burden of proof, "the State was bound to prove her guilty without any assistance, either active or passive, on her part").

Undecided: 1920, People v. Haas, 293 Ill. 274, 127 N. E. 740 (semble, but not considering the general question); 1866, Doan v. State, 26 Ind. 495, 498 (instruction held not properly worded).

Compare the rule as to presumptions in general (post, § 2511).

[3] See the following cases, also cited ante, § 291, and compare the cases cited ante, § 2268 (notice to produce):

ENGLAND: 1764, R. v. Smith, 3 Burr. 1475.

UNITED STATES: Federal: 1846, Clifton v. U. S., 4 How. 242, 247; 1884, U. S. v. Flemming, 18 Fed. 907, 916; 1906, Grunberg v. U. S., 145 Fed. 81, 89, C. C. A. (failure to produce invoices, etc.); Illinois: 1902, Central Stock & G. Exchange v. Board of Trade, 196 Ill. 396, 63 N. E. 740 (plaintiff, in a bill to secure quotation-service, refused to produce its sales-sheets, claiming the privilege; held, that the inference could be drawn as against a party to a civil cause, even though production was not compellable because of the privilege); Missouri: 1886, State v. Chamberlain, 89 Mo. 129, 134, 1 S. W. 145.

For the question whether the prosecution is at least entitled to give the usual notice to produce a document possessed by defendant, see ante, § 2268.

It here involves also the question whether the accused's failure to call a co-defendant, who would be privileged but competent, and whose non-production would otherwise be open to inference, can thus be noticed. It would seem that it ought to be, — at least, unless it appears that the co-defendant claims his privilege.[4]

(4) Where the accused takes the stand voluntarily, he waives his privilege, to a certain extent at least (post, § 2276). The prohibition against inferences from his failure to testify comes to an end, with the ending of the privilege. Hence, his failure in his testimony to deny or explain the evidence against him which he might naturally have explained is therefore open to inference;[5] and

[4] CANADA: 1906, R. v. Blais, 11 Ont. L. R. 345 (the judge's comment on the accused's failure to call F., jointly indicted but separately tried, and competent for either party, held not a violation of Can. St. 1893, c. 31, § 4, quoted ante, § 488).

UNITED STATES: Alabama: 1899, Brock v. State, 123 Ala. 24, 26 So. 329 (adultery with C.; defendant's failure to call C., who would be privileged, and was equally available for the prosecution, not a matter for inference; Tyson, J., diss.; useful opinions); Coppin v. State, 123 Ala. 58, 26 So. 333 (same); Kentucky: 1912, McElwain v. Com., 146 Ky. 104, 142 S. W. 234 (inference allowed); Michigan: 1920, People v. Schultz, 210 Mich. 297, 178 N. W. 89 (prosecutor may comment on failure to call co-defendants); Missouri: 1888, State v. Mathews, 98 Mo. 125, 130, 10 S. W. 144, 11 S. W. 1135 (inference allowed, the co-defendant not being on trial at the same time, and being therefore qualified and not privileged; Sherwood, J., diss., on the ground that a co-defendant not on trial is privileged); 1901, State v. Weaver, 165 Mo. 1, 65 S. W. 308 (no inference allowed for a failure to call a competent co-indictee not on trial; State v. Mathews, supra, repudiated, with the unprecedented remark that "the ruling in that case simply dodged the issue, and that is what every lawyer will say who reads the opinion in the case"); Oklahoma: 1919, Cole v. State, 16 Okl. Crim. 420, 183 Pac. 734 (convicted co-defendant; inference allowed from failure to call him); Oregon: 1906, State v. Drake, — Or. —, 87 Pac. 137 (conspiracy to kidnap; failure to call an incompetent co-defendant not on trial; the Court need not instruct the jury not to draw inference).

[5] Federal: 1902, U. S. v. Lee Huen, 118 Fed. 442, 456; 1904, Balliet v. U. S., 129 Fed. 689, 695, 64 C. C. A. 201 (the principle is conceded, but here the trial judge's language in the instruction was held too broad); 1917, Caminetti v. U. S., 242 U. S. 470, 37 Sup. 192 (the accused's "failure to explain incriminating circumstances and events already in evidence, in which he has participated and concerning which he is informed," is open to inference; repudiating the language in Balliet v. U. S., C. C. A., 129 Fed. 689); 1918, LeMore v. U. S., 5th C. C. A., 253 Fed. 887, 897; Alabama: 1888, Clarke v. State, 87 Ala. 71, 74, 6 So. 368; 1888, Cotton v. State, ib. 103, 6 So. 396; Colorado: 1873, Solander v. People, 2 Colo. 48, 69; 1920, Blanda v. People, 67 Colo. 541, 189 Pac. 249; Kansas: 1893, State v. Glave, 51 Kan. 330, 335, 33 Pac. 8; Missouri: 1913, State v. Larkin, 250 Mo. 218, 157 S. W. 600 ("We conclude that the case of State v. Graves [cited infra] . . . ought to be overruled and no longer followed in this behalf"; careful and sensible opinion by Faris, J.; this opinion was rendered in Div. No. 2); 1917, State v. Murray, — Mo. —, 193 S. W. 830 (murder; since State v. Larkin, "the rule announced in the earlier cases is no longer the law; . . . no doubt need exist in this jurisdiction as to the present status of the law on this subject"); 1918, State v. Prunty, 276 Mo. 359, 208 S. W. 91 (State v. Larkin and later cases "overrule earlier cases upon this proposition"); Nebraska: 1905, Powers v. State, 75 Nebr. 226, 106 N. W. 332; 1907, Russell v. State, 77 Nebr. 519, 110 N. W. 380 (but the inference does not necessarily apply to every fact not explicitly denied by a party taking the stand); New York: 1874, Stover v. People, 56 N. Y. 315, 320 (larceny; defendant's failure, when on the stand, to account for the money, admissible for comment; Church, C. J., and Andrews, J., diss., on unspecified points in the case); Utah: 1911, State v. Mattivi, 39 Utah 324, 117 Pac. 31.

Contra: Missouri: 1888, State v. Graves, 95 Mo. 510, 514, 8 S. W. 739 (Rev. St. § 1918, quoted post, § 2276, interpreted to mean that "when he elects to go on the stand, he may testify only to such matters as he may choose," and that therefore no inference may be drawn from his failure to mention certain matters; Brace and Sherwood, JJ., diss.); 1888, State v. Jackson, 95 Mo. 623, 655, 8 S. W. 749 (Sherwood, J., points out the fallacy of the preceding ruling, but a majority of the Court express dissent on this point); 1893, State v. Elmer, 115 Mo. 401, 122 S. W. 369 (State v. Graves approved); 1893, State v. Fairlamb, 121 Mo. 137, 150, 25 S. W. 895 (failure to testify to a "particular fact," held not open to inference); this must be so, however narrowly (post, § 2276) the extent of the waiver be interpreted. Furthermore, where the party refuses answer and claims privilege as to the matter which is in truth included in the waiver, but the answer is not insisted upon, the inference is of course available,[6] and this is conceded even under the anomalous doctrine of Mr. Justice Cooley (post, § 2276) as to waiver.[7] Finally, this waiver has been held to go so far as to permit inferences to be drawn from prior omissions or failures or refusals to testify at a time when the privilege existed and the inference would have been prohibited.[8]

5. Cessation of the Privilege

§ 2275. Waiver: (a) by Contract. It has never been doubted that the privilege is in itself waivable: [1]

1719, L. C. PARKER, in East India Co. v. Atkins, 1 Stra. 168, 176 (holding valid a covenant to give discovery): "It is a negative privilege that is allowed by the law, that a man may, if he please, refuse to discover a matter that will subject him to penalties. It is only a privilege, not a natural right, for then he would shake that natural right whenever he saw fit to make such discovery. If a man will waive such a privilege, surely he may; it is not a thing prohibited by the law. The reason why he is not obliged to discover is a want of right in the other party to oblige him to it; but if he will make a discovery, he may, nor is any rule of justice or natural right broke by it. Is it unjust that the whole 1899, State v. Hudspeth, 150 Mo. 12, 51 S. W. 483 (instruction that statements of the accused testified to by the prosecution and not denied by the accused are to be taken as facts, held erroneous); 1906, State v. Miles, 199 Mo. 530, 98 S. W. 25 (rule of State v. Graves followed, but here held not applicable); 1909, State v. James, 216 Mo. 394, 115 S. W. 994 (following State v. Graves; cited more fully post, § 2276, n. 5).

It should be understood in other States that the foregoing Missouri rule was unsound, both in principle and in policy, and is now abandoned, by State v. Larkin, supra.

[6] 1903, Tines v. Com., — Ky. —, 77 S. W. 363; 1870, Andrews v. Frye, 104 Mass. 234, 236; 1873, State v. Ober, 52 N. H. 459, 465; 1912, State v. Dodson, 23 N. D. 305, 136 N. W. 789.

[7] Cooley, C. J., in Constitutional Limitations, p. 317, quoted post, § 2276. Compare the following cases of earlier date: 1852, Carne v. Litchfield, 2 Mich. 340, 344; 1867, Knowles v. People, 15 Mich. 408, 413.

[8] CANADA: 1910, R. v. Ellis, 2 K. B. 747 (false pretences by an art-dealer to a customer; in a civil suit for fraud in the same transaction, the now defendant had absented himself abroad at the trial and failed to testify; held admissible);
UNITED STATES: 1896, Taylor v. Com., — Ky. —, 34 S. W. 227 (failure to testify at a preliminary examination); 1895, Com. v. Smith, 163 Mass. 411, 40 N. E. 189 (refusal to testify before the grand jury); 1909, Phillips v. Chase, 201 Mass. 444, 87 N. E. 755 (Com. v. Smith approved, but on the extraordinary theory noted ante, § 2272); 1908, Wilson v. State, 54 Tex. Cr. 505, 113 S. W. 529.

Contra: Can. 1920, R. v. Mah Hong Hing, 53 D. L. R. 356, B. C. (judge's comment on the accused's failure at the preliminary hearing to disclose an alibi defence, held improper; but the point about waiver is not noticed); U. S. 1905, Newman v. Com., — Ky. —, 88 S. W. 1089 (failure to testify on application for bail; no authority cited; could not the Court at least notice its own opposed ruling in Taylor v. Com., supra?); Mass. St. 1912, c. 325, Gen. L. 1920, c. 278, § 23 (thus annulling Com. v. Smith, supra); 1907, Masterson v. St. Louis Transit Co., 204 Mo. 507, 103 S. W. 48 (one judge diss.); 1909, Garrett v. St. Louis Transit Co., 219 Mo. 65, 118 S. W. 68 (the same judge again dissenting); 1901, Wooley v. State, — Tex. Cr. —, 64 S. W. 1054; 1902, Rogers v. State, 44 Tex. Cr. 350, 71 S. W. 18.

Compare the cases as to impeaching a witness by his former silence (ante, § 1042).

Otherwise, of course, where the defendant has not now taken the stand: cases cited ante, § 2272, note 8.

§ 2275. [1] The only hesitation indicated by any Court on this point has been in Georgia: 1884, Gravett v. State, 74 Ga. 191, 200 (questioning the obiter remark that there can be no waiver, in Higdon v. Heard, 14 Ga. 258, where alone that view seems to have been uttered). But compare the doctrine of Mr. J. Cooley, post, § 2276.

case should be laid before the Court? If the party has not done anything contrary to his duty, an answer can do him no harm. And why should not this Court carry it so far, when there can be no prejudice unless the party is a knave? And if he be one, shall a Court of equity protect him?"

But may such a waiver be made irrevocably by contract before trial? Unless the contract is one which by its circumstances has come within the doctrine of duress or oppression, and is thus voidable on general principles of contract, there is no reason in its present aspect why it should not be binding. This has been the doctrine since the origin of the privilege.[2] It would follow that a contract found by implication from the relations of the parties is equally effective:[3]

1827, V. C. LEACH, in Green v. Weaver, 1 Sim. 404, 425, 433: "I think that two propositions may be assumed; first, that the policy of the law not only requires that a broker or agent should act with fidelity to his employer, and should be ready, at all times, to render a full and clear account of his transactions; but, secondly, from the nature of this case, the defendant must possess, and perhaps exclusively possess, the means of stating that account, which the policy of the law entitles the plaintiff to demand. I think these propositions may be assumed in this case as clear. . . . Then the next question is, inasmuch as the objection to make the discovery arose, in the cases I have referred to, from the stipulations of instruments under seal, can the solemnity of the seal make that obligation to discover more obligatory in a court of equity, than the moral obligation resulting from principal and agent, when one reposes and another accepts the confidence so reposed? . . I should say that a Court of equity knows no difference between a mere moral obligation, and one resulting from stipulation by deed. If we contrast the circumstances of this case with those of the decisions I have referred to, I think we shall find that this case creates a higher moral obligation to give the discovery than any of those cases. In each of those cases the parties dealt at arm's length. The employer contemplated a breach of the contract by the agent, and stipulated for his own damages in case a breach of contract should take place. In the present case the employer surrendered himself, unconditionally,

[2] The general principle of the validity of a contract to waive rules of Evidence has been considered ante, § 7*a*: England: 1719, East India Co. v. Atkins, 1 Stra. 168, 176 (bill against plaintiff's employees to discover misconduct involving a forfeiture of the plaintiff's right to a franchise of trade; defendant's covenant to answer any bill of discovery, held valid; quoted supra); 1728, South Sea Co. v. Bumpstead, Mosely 74 (covenant by a supercargo to make discovery to a bill by employer, here enforced, although involving disclosure of matter of forfeiture); 1827, Green v. Weaver, 1 Sim. 404, 430 (bill against a broker, who had given a bond to the corporation subject to penalties, V. C. Leach: "A man may contract so as to incur an obligation to discover the facts, although that discovery may incidentally subject him to pecuniary penalties").

United States: 1920, Hickman v. London Ass. Co., 184 Cal. 524, 195 Pac. 45 (clause providing that one insured against fire should submit to examination on oath, as a condition precedent to action brought; after a refusal based on this privilege, an action by the insured was dismissed, the clause being held valid); 1904, Swedish-American Tel. Co. v. Fidelity & C. Co., 208 Ill. 562, 70 N. E. 768 (a contract between a liability insurance company and the insured, giving to the former the right of inspection of the latter's books, is a waiver of the constitutional guarantee against unreasonable searches and seizures).

[3] 1827, Green v. Weaver, 1 Sim. 404, 431 (bill against a broker to discover the transactions which he had had on the plaintiff's account; held, that the relation was confidential and implied an agreement to give discovery without reserve; quoted supra).

The principle ought to be equally applicable to a stipulation made before the trial though not as a part of a covenant of employment: Contra: 1842, Lee v. Read, 5 Beav. 381, 385, semble (defendant's agreement, before trial, to give full discovery is not binding).

It ought equally to apply to an accused's agreement made before trial: Contra: 1889, U. S. v. Smith, 4 Day Conn. 121, 124 (accomplice agreeing to turn State's evidence, but afterwards refusing).

to the agent whom he employed, in the confidence that the agent sustained the character that he publicly assumed. The employer had no reason to suspect, nor had any means of detecting the misrepresentation of the fact, whether they were, or not, duly constituted legal brokers. Much less could he apprehend that they were daily and hourly living in the violation of the law of the country in so acting; and that they kept this violation lurking in the background, to be brought forward, by way of defence, against the just demands of those whose confidence they invited. If a Court of equity gives effect to a defence so constituted, I do not know that there can be any reason why an executor or administrator, who has made oath duly to administer the assets, and executed a bond for that purpose, may not allege those matters in answer to a bill of discovery charging him with fraudulently tendering an account of the assets."

§ 2276. Waiver: (b) by Volunteering Testimony on the Stand; (1) Ordinary Witness; (2) Accused. (1) The case of the ordinary witness can hardly present any doubt. He may waive his privilege; this is conceded. He waives it by exercising his option of answering; this is conceded. Thus the only inquiry can be whether, by answering as to fact X, he waived it for fact Y. If the two are related facts, parts of a whole fact forming a single relevant topic, then his waiver as to a part is a waiver as to the remaining parts; because the privilege exists for the sake of the criminating fact as a whole. The reasoning is aptly expounded in the following passage:

1869, CAMPBELL, J., in Foster v. People, 18 Mich. 266, 274: "Where he has not actually admitted criminating facts, the witness may unquestionably stop short at any point and determine that he will go no further in that direction. . . . But the rule which allows a witness to refuse answering questions not directly pointing to guilt, rests solely on the doctrine that, as in most cases the crimination would be made out by a series of circumstances, any one of them may have such a tendency to aid in reaching the result, that an answer concerning it may supply means of conviction, by aiding the other proofs which it indicates, or supplements, on behalf of the prosecution. The right to decline answering as to these minor facts is merely accessory to the right to decline answering to the entire criminating charge, and can be of no manner of use when that is once admitted, and must be regarded as waived when the objection to answering to the complete offense is waived. The law does not endeavor to preserve any vain privileges, and such a privilege as would allow a witness to answer a principal criminating question, and refuse to answer as to its incidents, would be worse than vain; for, while it could not help the witness, it must inevitably injure the party, who is thus deprived of the power of cross-examination to test the credibility of a person who may, by avoiding it, indulge his vindictiveness or corrupt passions with impunity. . . . And the further consideration is also recognized, that a witness has no right, under pretense of a claim of privilege, to prejudice a party by a one-sided or garbled narrative."

This view, however, did not receive final sanction in England; after much contrariety of opinion, the doctrine seems there to obtain, since R. v. Garbett, in 1847, that the privilege may be claimed at any moment, — a practical nullification of the present application of the principle of waiver.[1] But in the § 2276. [1] ENGLAND: 1820, Ex parte Cossens, Buck Bkcy. Cas. 531, 540 (bankrupt's examination; L. C. Eldon: "If a man has gone on answering questions that had a tendency to criminate himself, he may stay, in answering those questions, wherever he pleases; you cannot carry him further than he chooses voluntarily to go himself"); 1824, Dixon v. Vale, 1 C. & P. 278 (Best, C. J., said that if a witness, after caution, chooses to

United States the rule set forth in the above passage is generally accepted, with varying phraseology; one or two Courts alone following the English doctrine of R. v. Garbett. The application of the rule thus comes to depend chiefly on the relations of the particular facts inquired about and the extent to which the particular witness has gone in his prior answers.[2] answer, "he is bound to answer all questions relative to that transaction"); 1827, Dandridge v. Corden, 3 C. & P. 11 (bill of exchange; after answering that there was an acceptance for value, the witness refused to state the consideration; L. C. J. Tenterden refused to compel him); 1827, East v. Chapman, M. & M. 46 (after answering "one or two questions on the subject" of a libel, the witness claimed his privilege; Abbott, C. J.: "Having partially answered you are now bound to give the whole truth"); 1834, Ewing v. Osbaldiston, 6 Sim. 608 (account of partnership, the answer defending, on the ground of the partnership's illegality; discovery compelled, because in the answer the liability to penalties was apparent, "and consequently he could not be damnified by a production of the documents"); 1847, R. v. Garbett, 2 C. & K. 474, 495, 1 Den. Cr. C. 276 (answering in part is no waiver, for a witness; he may "claim the privilege at any stage of the inquiry"); 1851, King of the Two Sicilies v. Wilcox, 1 Sim. N. S. 301, 320 (R. v. Garbett followed; Ewing v. Osbaldiston said to be inconsistent with it); 1860, Fisher v. Fisher, 30 L. J. P. M. A. 24 (divorce on the ground of cruelty; the petitioner by testifying does not waive the privilege of refusing to answer questions as to her adultery).

A special statutory rule exists for the party on an issue of adultery: 1869, St. 32 & 33 Vict. c. 68, § 3 (in any proceeding instituted in consequence of adultery, no witness "shall be liable to be asked or bound to answer any question tending to show that he or she has been guilty of adultery, unless such witness shall have already given evidence in the same proceeding in disproof of his or her alleged adultery"); 1891, Redfern v. Redfern, Prob. 139, 149 (husband or wife not compellable to answer as to adultery); 1907, S. v. S., Prob. 224 (divorce by a wife for impotency; cross-bill by the husband for adultery; cross-examination of the wife as to adultery with the co-respondent, held not allowable, under St. 20–21 Vict. c. 85, § 43, and 32–33 Vict. c. 68); 1912, Lewis v. Lewis, Prob. 19 (similar); 1915, Brown v. Brown, Prob. 83 (divorce for cruelty and adultery; under St. 32 & 33 Vict. c. 68, § 3, Evidence Further Amendment, a party, here the husband, who has taken the stand in denial of the acts of adultery charged, is privileged from answering as to other acts of adultery not charged); 1921, Franklin v. Franklin, Prob. 407 (affidavit of merits by the defendant wife in divorce charging adultery need not contain express denial of adultery, but may merely assert that she has a defence on the merits; prior cases reviewed).

CANADA: The statutes are quoted ante, § 488.

[2] Alabama: 1879, Lockett v. State, 63 Ala. 5, 11 (compellable to answer only "questions concerning the matter he has testified about," and not "those concerning other matters, though they come within the scope of the cause"; here, an accomplice turning State's evidence); 1885, Smith v. State, 79 Ala. 21, 23 (approving the preceding case); 1888, Clarke v. State, 87 Ala. 71, 74, 6 So. 368 (similar); 1888, Cotton v. State, 87 Ala. 103, 6 So. 372 (similar); 1889, Rains v. State, 88 Ala. 91, 98, 7 So. 315 (similar); 1892, Williams v. State, 98 Ala. 52, 54, 13 So. 333 (similar); California: 1880, People v. Freshour, 55 Cal. 375 (a disclosure of part of a transaction waives the privilege as to the whole); Columbia (Dist.): 1918, Graul v. U. S., 47 D. C. App. 543, 549 (the waiver extends to cross-examination so far as it relates to the subject of the examination in chief); Florida: 1896, Ex parte Senior, 37 Fla. 1, 19 So. 652 ("if with full knowledge of his rights he consents to testify about the very matter that may criminate him, he must submit to a full, legitimate cross-examination" upon it; here the witness, after caution, testified for a contestant of an election that he had voted for him and refused on cross-examination to answer as to his residence, registration, etc.; held, a waiver, since to speak as to voting was to testify about the main element, the crime of illegal voting); Idaho: 1906, State v. Bond, 12 Ida. 424, 86 Pac. 43 (murder of B.; the wife of B., defendant's paramour, was also indicted but separately tried; the wife held privileged, when called by the State, not to answer as to her complicity); Illinois: 1898, Eggers v. Fox, 177 Ill. 185, 52 N. E. 269 (no test laid down); Iowa: 1876, State v. Fay, 43 Ia. 651 (after testifying to an admission by the defendant, the witness was compelled to answer as to the other persons present at the conversation); 1886, Slocum v. Knosby, 70 Ia. 75, 30 N. W. 18 (action on notes; plea, payment; a clerk's testimony to non-payment, held not to waive privilege as to collateral questions about embezzling from his employer; Bock, J., diss.); Kentucky: 1824, Ginn v. Com., 5 Litt. 300 (complainant in bastardy, held bound to answer as to intimacy with other men); Maine: 1831, Tillson v. Bowley, 8 Greenl. 163 (like the next case); 1841, Low v. Mitchell, 18 Me. 372 (privilege waived as to "that matter so far as material

(2) The case of an accused in a criminal trial, who voluntarily takes the stand, is different. Here his privilege has protected him from being asked even a single question, for the reason that no relevant fact could be inquired about that would not tend to criminate him (ante, §§ 2260, 2268). On this very hypothesis, then, his voluntary offer of testimony upon any fact is a waiver as to all other relevant facts, because of the necessary connection between all. His situation is distinct from that of the ordinary witness, with reference to the point of time when a waiver can be predicated, because the ordinary witness is compelled to take the stand in the first instance, and his opportunity for choice does not come till later, when some part of the criminating fact is asked for; while the accused has the choice at the outset. From the point of view of the actual prescience of witness and accused, the

to the issue," but not as to "other unlawful acts, wholly unconnected with the act of which he has spoken, even though they may be material to the issue"; here a complainant in bastardy, held privileged as to intercourse with other men about the time of begetting; a ruling clearly erroneous on the facts); 1875, State v. Wentworth, 65 Me. 234, 246 (preceding rulings disapproved; the privilege is waived for the "subject-matters of the inquiry of the direct examination"); Maryland: 1885, Chesapeake Club v. State, 63 Md. 446, 455, 462 (illegal liquor-selling; questions as to seeing liquor on the premises, after other questions of the same sort answered, held privileged, on the authority of R. v. Garbett, that the witness "may claim his protection at any stage of the inquiry"; no American cases cited); Massachusetts: 1853, Foster v. Pierce, 11 Cush. 437 (bastardy; after answering a question to the complainant's intercourse, the witness refused to answer the cross-examiner's question as to the person with whom it was had; held compellable, on "the broad principle that the witness must claim his privilege in the outset, when the testimony he is about to give will, if he answers fully all that pertains to it, expose him to a criminal charge"); 1858, Com. v. Pierce, 10 Gray, 472, 477 (forgery; an accomplice compelled on cross-examination to testify to part of the transaction, since "he must answer all questions legally put to him concerning that matter"); 1876, Mayo v. Mayo, 119 Mass. 290 (answers given by a witness not fully understanding his rights, but intending to claim the privilege, were struck out, and a claim of privilege as to further answers was allowed); 1879, Com. v. Pratt, 126 Mass. 462 (illegal liquor-selling; witness compelled to answer as to other illegal sales); 1887, Com. v. Trider, 143 Mass. 180, 9 N. E. 510 (adultery; witness held not to have waived on the facts); 1899, Evans v. O'Connor, 174 Mass. 287, 54 N. E. 557 (loss of wife's affections by adultery in 1893, 1894, and 1895; plaintiff's wife allowed to testify to 1893 without waiving privilege as to 1894 and 1895, as involving "distinct transactions"); Michigan: 1869, Foster v. People, 18 Mich. 266, 273 ("where he has not actually admitted criminating facts, the witness may unquestionably stop short at any point"; but otherwise, he must "disclose fully what he has attempted to relate"; accomplices, however, cannot "stop short of a full disclosure"; quoted supra); Minnesota: 1882, State v. Nichols, 29 Minn. 357, 358, 13 N. W. 153 (bastardy; a witness testifying to knowledge of the complainant's intercourse with other parties than defendant, compelled to name the person); Missouri: 1865, State v. Marshall, 36 Mo. 400, 401 (murder; a witness for the prosecution held privileged as to matters irrelevant on the facts); Nebraska: 1888, Lombard v. Mayberry, 24 Nebr. 674, 690, 40 N. W. 271 (action on bond as security for notes; witness to genuineness of notes held not to have waived his privilege as to their alteration); 1919, Neal v. State, 104 Nebr. 56, 175 N. W. 671 (stealing an automobile; cross-examination of an accomplice, testifying for the prosecution, to other similar thefts, not allowed; unsound); New Hampshire: 1829, State v. K., 4 N. H. 562 (witness compellable, if he testifies to the general fact of defendant's innocence, to "state all the circumstances relating to that fact"); 1837, Amherst v. Hollis, 9 N. H. 107, 110 (support of a pauper; witness testifying to his poverty may claim the privilege as how he had disposed of certain property); 1851, State v. Foster, 23 N. H. 348, 354 (illegal liquor selling; witness held compellable on the facts); 1855, Coburn v. Odell, 30 N. H. 540, 555 (note for illegal consideration; party plaintiff called by defendant, held not to have waived on the facts); New York: 1894, People v. Forbes, 143 N. Y. 219, 230, 38 N. E. 303 (murder by poisonous gas; grand jury's inquiry; voluntary answering of general questions as to the witness' guilt, held not to preclude a claim of privilege as to questions about the purchase of the instruments used for the offence); 1914, People v. Pindar, 210 N. Y. 191, 104 N. E. 133 (larceny; rule applied to defendant's cross-examination of witness for prosecution).

result is the same. Each knows well enough that the inquiries will be upon topics relevant to the charge in issue; but that is immaterial. The question is, What does he know as to the connection between the first question and a possible subsequent incriminating question? Now the accused knows that there must always be such a connection; but in the witness' case there may or may not be such a connection, and if there is not, then his answer cannot be a waiver. The result is, then, that the accused, as to all facts whatever (except those which merely impeach his credit and therefore are not related to the charge in issue), has signified his waiver by the initial act of taking the stand. Moreover, the spirit and the purpose of the privilege (ante, § 2251) cannot be violated by any questioning after the accused has once voluntarily taken the stand; and the nice distinctions attempted by Courts are needless.

The judicial and legislative solutions of this problem have been numerous. Leaving aside for the moment (post, § 2277) certain rules that are to be distinguished, there are half a dozen forms of solution: [3]

[3] In the following list, the statutes referred to are quoted in full ante, § 488; their tenor is here briefly indicated by letters referring to the six forms of rule above noted in the text; many rulings do not indicate whether they intend to apply the present principle or that of the ensuing section (§ 2277); the rulings cited ante, § 1890 (cross-examination to one's own case) should also be compared:

ENGLAND: St. 1898, 61 & 62 Vict. c. 36, § 1 (accused may testify on his own behalf; quoted in full ante, §§ 488, 194*a*; sub-section (e): "A person charged and being a witness in pursuance of this Act may be asked any question in cross-examination notwithstanding that it would tend to criminate him as to the offence charged"); 1900, Charnock v. Merchant, 1 Q. B. 474 (statute applied); 1909, Chitson's Case, 2 Cr. App. 325, 2 K. B. 945 (rape under age; cross-examination of the accused as to his statement to the woman of his intercourse with another woman, allowed); 1910, Rowland's Case, 3 Cr. App. 277, 1 K. B. 458 (under St. 1898, § 1 (e), an accused who declines to give evidence for himself but afterwards gives evidence for a co-defendant may be cross-examined to his own case); the English statute, however, has a number of other clauses which may affect proof of former crimes; in these aspects it is examined ante, § 194*a*.

CANADA: Alta. 1913, R. v. Hurd, Alta. S. C., 10 D. L. R. 475 (cross-examination to prior conviction; not decided); Br. C. 1904, R. v. Grinder, 11 Br.C. 370 (larceny; after cross-examination of the accused, the trial judge asked him to write a specimen of his handwriting, to compare with a memorandum in evidence; held inadmissible); Ont. 1901, R. v. D'Aoust, 3 Ont. L. R. 653 (an accused taking the stand may be asked as to prior convictions; "he is in the same situation as any other witness").

UNITED STATES: Federal: 1887, U. S. v. Mullaney, 32 Fed. 370 (defendant charged with forging the registration of electors, compelled to write the names on cross-examination); 1887, Spies v. Illinois, 123 U. S. 131, 180, 8 Sup. 21, 22 ("He became bound to submit to a proper cross-examination"); 1900, Fitzpatrick v. U. S., 178 U. S. 304, 20 Sup. 944 (Oregon rule applied; the prosecution may cross-examine "with the same latitude as would be exercised in the case of an ordinary witness, as to the circumstances connecting him with the alleged crime"); 1904, Balliet v. U. S., 129 Fed. 689, 695, 64 C. C. A. 201 (Fitzpatrick v. U. S. followed); 1906, Sawyer v. U. S., 202 U. S. 150, 26 Sup. 573 (murder on a vessel; cross-examination allowable "with the same latitude as would be exercised in the case of an ordinary witness, as to the circumstances connecting him with the crime"); 1912, Powers v. U. S., 223 U. S. 303, 32 Sup. 284 (in particular, may be cross-examined as to former sworn statements); 1914, Myrick v. U. S., 1st C. C. A., 219 Fed. 1 (two indictments for false statements to postal officials; the defendant having taken the stand and testified to certain facts in the first indictment, held not to waive the privilege as to further facts not covered by the direct examination, the scope of the waiver being thus determined by applying the rule of § 1885, ante; unsound; Putnam, J., diss.); 1915, Diggs v. U. S., Caminetti v. U. S., 9th C. C. A., 220 Fed. 545 (enticement for immoral purposes; the defendant took the stand and testified to part of the transaction charged, and then stopped; held that an inference could be drawn, for "the waiver is complete"; declining to follow Balliet v. U. S.; Ross, J., diss.); affirmed in Caminetti v. U. S., 242 U. S. 470, 37 Sup. 192; 1912, Powers v. U. S., 223 U. S. 303, 32 Sup. 281

(a) The first is that the voluntary taking of the stand is a waiver as to all facts whatever, including even those which merely affect credibility:

1872, CHURCH, C. J., in Connors v. People, 50 N. Y. 240 (permitting answers as to former arrests, as affecting credibility): "The prohibition in the Constitution is against compelling an accused person to become a witness against himself. If he consents to

(revenue offense; defendant voluntarily taking the stand allowed to be cross-examined as to a former statement, etc.); 1918, Le More v. U. S., 5th C. C. A., 253 Fed. 887, 897 (fraudulent use of mails; by defendant's taking the stand, "the waiver of his constitutional privilege was complete"; scope of cross-examination held to be in the trial Court's discretion);

Alabama: 1885, Harris v. State, 78 Ala. 482 (defendant becomes subject to cross-examination by co-defendants on their own behalf); 1903, Smith v. State, 137 Ala. 22, 34 So. 396 (he becomes "subject to cross-examination and impeachment as are other witnesses"); 1906, Miller v. State, 146 Ala. 686, 40 So. 342 (Smith v. State followed); 1906, Davis v. State, 145 Ala. 69, 40 So. 663 (liquor-selling); 1921, Latikos v. State, 17 Ala. App. 655, 88 So. 47 (knowing receipt of stolen goods; cross-examination of defendant to former conviction of similar offense, held allowable, not the particulars of such offense); 1921, Walker v. State, 205 Ala. 197, 87 So. 833 (murder; questions to defendant as to "difficulties with other parties and at other times, in no manner connected with the offense," held improper);

Alaska: Comp. L. 1913, § 2258 (rule d);

Arizona: Rev. St. 1913, P. C. § 1229 (rule d); 1900, Lewis v. Terr., 7 Ariz. 52, 60 Pac. 694 (privilege not waived as to questions about former offences and convictions, under Rev. St. § 2040);

California: P. C. 1872, § 1323 (rule d); 1870, People v. Dennis, 39 Cal. 625, 634 (answer to a cross-examination as to the details of a matter testified to in chief, held compellable); 1885, People v. O'Brien, 66 Cal. 602, 6 Pac. 695 (defendant's cross-examination held to be limited to the subject of the direct examination, under the statute; McKee, J., diss., points out that the rule as to privilege and the rule as to order of evidence are distinct); 1888, People v. Meyer, 75 Cal. 383, 385, 17 Pac. 431 (privilege waived as to cross-examination to character; Paterson and McFarland, JJ., diss.); 1888, People v. Rozelle, 78 Cal. 84, 92, 20 Pac. 36 (P. C. § 1323, applied; defendant may be cross-examined by the same rule as other witnesses, except that the Court has no discretion); 1892, People v. O'Brien, 96 Cal. 171, 180, 31 Pac. 45 (same); 1893, People v. Gallagher, 100 Cal. 466, 475, 476, 35 Pac. 80 (same; privilege is waived upon all such matters); 1897, People v. Arnold, 116 Cal. 682, 687, 48 Pac. 803 (privilege is waived as to cross-examination to character); 1898, People v. Dole, — Cal. —, 51 Pac. 945 (Gallagher Case approved; here, a question as to a former admission, allowed); 1898, People v. Arrighini, 122 Cal. 121, 54 Pac. 591 (cross-examination allowed only on the matter of the direct examination); 1903, People v. Walker, 140 Cal. 153, 73 Pac. 831 (cross-examination to prior self-contradiction allowed); 1909, People v. Smith, 9 Cal. App. 644, 99 Pac. 1111 (murder; questions about another revolver excluded; the extent to which the cross-examination of the accused is muzzled in this State is a travesty of principle); compare here the cases cited ante, § 1890, and post, § 2277;

Colorado: 1896, Bradford v. People, 22 Colo. 157, 43 Pac. 1013 (forgery; defendant taking the stand was required to write a specimen);

Connecticut: 1859, Norfolk v. Gaylord, 28 Conn. 309 (bastardy; defendant not privileged as to other acts of intercourse); 1868, State v. Gaylord, 35 Conn. 203, 207, semble (murder; cross-examination to credit, allowed);

Florida: Rev. G. S. 1919, § 6080 (rule c); 1899, Wallace v. State, 41 Fla. 547, 26 So. 713 ("becomes liable to cross-examination as other witnesses"); 1906, Pittman v. State, 51 Fla. 521, 41 So. 385 (the rules for cross-examination to motives, etc., apply to an accused as to other witnesses);

Georgia: P. C. 1910, § 1036 (rule f); 1897, Hackney v. State, 101 Ga. 512, 28 S. E. 1007 (the cross-examination of a defendant making a statement can be only after it is finished and his consent is expressed; a cross-examining question by the Court, improper); 1902, Walker v. State, 116 Ga. 537, 42 S. E. 787;

Hawaii: Rev. L. 1915, § 2610 (rule c);

Idaho: 1897, State v. Larkins, 5 Ida. 200, 47 Pac. 945 ("any facts material to the issues in the action," except so far as limited by the rule for order of evidence, ante, § 1890, n. 2);

Illinois: 1883, Chambers v. People, 105 Ill. 409, 413 (defendant "is to be examined precisely as other witnesses"); 1887, Spies v. People, 122 Ill. 1, 235, 12 N. E. 865, 17 N. E. 898 (defendant "cannot excuse himself" on this ground);

Indiana: 1885, Thomas v. State, 103 Ind. 419, 438, 2 N. E. 808 (not decided; but Com. v. Nichols, Mass., is quoted with approval); 1885, Boyle v. State, 105 Ind. 469, 475, 5 N. E. 203 (same);

Iowa: Code 1897, § 5485, Comp. Code § 9465 (rules c and d); 1890, State v. Peffers, 80 Ia. 580, 583, 46 N. W. 662 (defendant not privileged from answering as to prior testimony);

Kansas: 1921, State v. Roselli, 33 Kan. 109, become a witness in the case, voluntarily and without any compulsion, it would seem to follow that he occupies for the time being the position of a witness with all its rights and privileges and subject to all its duties and obligations. If he gives evidence which bears against himself, it results from his voluntary act of becoming a witness, and not from compulsion. His own act is the primary cause, and if that was voluntary, he has no reason to complain."

198 Pac. 195 (murder; cross-examination of defendant to numerous criminal facts, held allowable on the facts);
Kentucky: (other citations are placed post, § 2277); 1908, Welch v. Com., — Ky. —, 108 S. W. 863 (cross-examination to motive; privilege allowed; unsound); 1914, Com. v. Phœnix Hotel Co., 157 Ky. 180, 162 S. W. 823 (voluntary testimony at a former trial of a separate but similar charge, held not a waiver);
Louisiana: 1912, State v. Oden, 130 La. 598, 58 So. 351 (liquor-selling; cross-examination to other sales since the one charged, allowed, semble);
Maine: Rev. St. 1916, c. 136, § 19 (quoted ante, § 488; forbids cross-examination to other crimes); 1875, State v. Wentworth, 65 Me. 234, 240, 243 (defendant waives the privilege "as to all matters pertinent to the issue"; here, as to other illegal sales of liquor than the one charged; quoted supra);
Maryland: 1875, Roddy v. Finnegan, 43 Md. 490, 502 (privilege waived "as to any matter about which he has given testimony in chief"); 1899, Guy v. State, 90 Md. 29, 44 Atl. 997 (may be cross-examined "concerning any matter pertinent to the issue on trial, regardless of the extent of the direct examination"; here, as to possession of a Federal liquor license, in a prosecution for unlawful sale);
Massachusetts: 1866, Com. v. Lanman, 13 All. 563, 569 (liquor-selling; defendant compelled to answer a question relating to the charge; he waives objection to "any question pertinent to the issue"); 1867, Com. v. Mullen, 97 Mass. 545 (he must testify to "any facts relevant and material to the issue"); 1867, Com. v. Bonner, 97 Mass. 587 (defendant not privileged from cross-examination to character; he assumes "the liabilities incident to that position"); 1871, Com. v. Morgan, 107 Mass. 199, 200, 205 (similar to Com. v. Mullen); 1873, Com. v. Nichols, 114 Mass. 285 (defendant "cannot refuse to testify to any facts which would be competent evidence in the case, if proved by other witnesses"); 1876, Com. v. Tolliver, 119 Mass. 312, 315 (defendant allowed to be cross-examined to inconsistent statements); 1889, Com. v. Sullivan, 150 Mass. 315, 23 N. E. 47 (defendant allowed to be cross-examined as to prior conviction); 1895, Com. v. Smith, 163 Mass. 411, 430, 40 N. E. 189 (preceding cases approved);
Michigan: 1872, Gale v. People, 26 Mich. 157, 159 (defendant held not to waive the privilege as to matters affecting his character and credibility); 1888, People v. Howard, 73 Mich. 10, 13, 40 N. W. 789 (defendant may be cross-examined to character like any other witness); 1888, Ritchie v. Stenius, 73 Mich. 563, 569, 41 N. W. 687 (same for a civil case); 1889, People v. Pinkerton, 79 Mich. 110, 114, 117, 44 N. W. 180 (defendant not compellable to "answer questions irrelevant to the issue, having a tendency to bring in other charges"; no authority cited, Sherwood, C. J., diss.); 1890, People v. Hicks, 79 Mich. 457, 463, 44 N. W. 931 (defendant cross-examined as to details of the issue; no authority cited); 1890, People v. Bussey, 82 Mich. 49, 57, 63, 46 N. W. 97 (defendant held subject to "any cross-examination which went directly to the merits of the case"); 1892, People v. Foote, 93 Mich. 38, 40, 52 N. W. 1036 (like People v. Howard); 1897, Georgia v. Bond, 114 Mich. 196, 72 N. W. 232 (like Ritchie v. Stenius); 1900, People v. Ecarius, 124 Mich. 616, 83 N. W. 628 (murder; defendant required to place a weapon in his pocket to illustrate the alleged circumstances); 1903, People v. Dupounce, 133 Mich. 1, 94 N. W. 388 (the waiver extends to "any question, material to the case, which would in the case of any other witness be legitimate cross-examination," even though it involves some other crime; here applied to questions concerning the rape-intercourse which led to the charge of bastardy; the view of Cooley, J., quoted supra, expressly repudiated); 1904, People v. Gray, 135 Mich. 542, 98 N. W. 261 (cross-examination to the defendant's false swearing as surety on a bond, allowed to affect credibility); 1912, People v. Fritch, 170 Mich. 258, 136 N. W. 493;
Minnesota: 1891, State v. Klitzke, 46 Minn. 343, 49 N. W. 97 (bastardy; defendant denying the intercourse charged, compelled to testify as to other intercourse); 1908, State v. Kight, 106 Minn. 371, 119 N. W. 56 ("the general rule applicable to all witnesses" applies);
Missouri: Rev. St. 1919, §§ 4036, 5439 (rule d, quoted ante, § 488); 1888, State v. Graves, 95 Mo. 510, 514, 8 S. W. 739 (Rev. St. § 1918 interpreted to mean that "when he elects to go on the stand he may testify only to such matters as he may choose"; Brace and Sherwood, JJ., diss.); 1888, State v. Jackson, 95 Mo. 623, 655, 8 S. W. 749 (contrary statement, Sherwood, J., writing the opinion, but a majority of the Court dissenting); 1893, State v. Elmer, 115 Mo. 401, 22 S. W. 369 (rule of State v. Graves, approved); 1901, State v. Fisher, 162 Mo. 169, 62 S. W. 690 (statute

This goes beyond the limit above suggested. It may be supported on the ground that as the privilege protects the accused against any form of com-applied); 1905, State v. Miller, 190 Mo. 463, 89 S. W. 377; 1909, State v. James, 216 Mo. 394, 115 S. W. 994 (following State v. Graves, and clinching the absurd rule which allows a defendant to take the stand and say "I did not do it" and then stop, free from cross-examination or comment); 1909, State v. Myers, 221 Mo. 598, 121 S. W. 131 (liberal rule followed); 1910, State v. Keener, 225 Mo. 488, 125 S. W. 747 (liberal rule followed); 1910, State v. Mitchell, 229 Mo. 683, 129 S. W. 917 (State v. Miller followed); 1915, State v. Roe, — Mo. —, 180 S. W. 881 (murder); 1916, State v. Swearingen, 269 Mo. 177, 190 S. W. 268 (murder); 1916, State v. Kinney, — Mo. —, 190 S. W. 306 (burglary); 1916, State v. Dixon, — Mo. —, 190 S. W. 290 (murder); 1917, State v. Burgess, — Mo. —, 193 S. W. 821 (embezzlement); 1917, State v. Weber, 272 Mo. 475, 199 S. W. 147 (rape under age); 1918, State v. Stewart, 274 Mo. 649, 204 S. W. 10 (murder); 1919, State v. Cole, — Mo. —, 213 S. W. 110 (rule in State v. Pfeifer approved); 1921, State v. Edelen, 288 Mo. 160, 231 S. W. 585 (rape; cross-examination of defendant, held on the facts to exceed the rule); 1921, State v. Smith, — Mo. —, 228 S. W. 1057 (homicide; cross-examination held to be within limits); compare here the cases cited ante, § 1890, and post, § 2277;

Montana: 1904, State v. Rogers, 31 Mont. 1, 77 Pac. 293;

Nebraska: 1910, Johns v. State, 88 Nebr. 145, 129 N. W. 992 (defendant taking the stand may be questioned in detail as to prior conviction for felony; even if he at first denies by equivocation); 1921, Denker v. State, 106 Nebr. 779, 184 N. W. 945 (similar, under Rev. St. 1913, § 7906); 1919, Mauzy v. State, 103 Nebr. 775, 174 N. W. 325 (cross-examination to the use of an alias, allowed);

Nevada: Rev. L. 1912, § 7456 (a defendant taking the stand "may be cross-examined . . . the same as any other witness"); 1905, State v. Lawrence, 28 Nev. 440, 82 Pac. 614 (cross-examination to convictions of felonies to affect credibility, allowed); 1913, State v. Urie, 35 Nev. 268, 129 Pac. 305;

New Hampshire: 1873, State v. Ober, 52 N. H. 459 (illegal liquor-selling; a defendant denying certain sales, held to have waived the privilege as to other sales; he is examinable "as to any and every matter pertinent to the issue"; "he places himself in the attitude of any ordinary witness, irrespective of any interest in the cause"; Mr. J. Cooley's utterance in his 2d ed. adversely criticised);

New Jersey: 1903, State v. Zdanowicz, 69 N. J. L. 619, 55 Atl. 743 (rule of prior cases that the cross-examination must not go beyond the topics of the direct examination, applied; whether such a limitation is sound, not decided; compare the cases cited ante, § 1890);

New Mexico: 1921, State v. Bailey, — N. Mex. —, 198 Pac. 529 (murder; cross-examination to other assaults, admitted, in trial Court's discretion);

New York: 1870, Brandon v. People, 42 N. Y. (Hand) 270 (question not determined, because the privilege was not claimed); 1872, Connors v. People, 50 N. Y. 240 (assault; questions as to former arrests, to affect credibility, allowed; quoted supra); 1878, People v. Casey, 72 N. Y. 393, 398 (assault; questions as to former assaults, to affect credibility, allowed); 1878, People v. Brown, 72 N. Y. 571, 573 (ignoring People v. Casey, and apparently approving Connors v. People so far as concerned the self-crimination privilege; but here making the curious distinction that the privilege against self-disgrace, ante, § 2216, was not waived; confused opinion); 1892, People v. Tice, 131 N. Y. 651, 655, 30 N. E. 494 (approving Connors v. People; defendant not privileged as to questions affecting his credibility); 1893, People v. Webster, 139 N. Y. 73, 84, 34 N. E. 730 (preceding case followed); 1911, People v. Brown, 203 N. Y. 44, 96 N. E. 367 (voluntary testimony, held to permit cross-examination as to prior testimony inadmissible under the confession-rule; erroneous on principle; see ante, § 821, n. 4); 1916, People v. Trybus, 219 N. Y. 18, 25, 113 N. E. 538 (murder; rule applied);

North Carolina: Con. St. 1919, § 1799 (rule c); 1883, State v. Lawhorn, 88 N. C. 634, 637 (defendant allowed to be cross-examined to prior convictions); 1887, State v. Thomas, 98 N. C. 599, 604, 4 S. E. 518 (compellable to answer as to prior charges); 1890, State v. Allen, 107 N. C. 805, 11 S. E. 1016 (preceding case approved); 1910, State v. Simonds, 154 N. C. 197, 69 S. E. 790 (manslaughter; cross-examination to illicit intercourse with the woman on whom deceased was calling, allowed);

North Dakota: 1896, State v. Kent, 5 N. D. 516, 67 N. W. 1052 (the privilege is "that of every witness who goes into the witness-box, and nothing more"; waiving as to collateral crimes relevant to the crime in question, but not as to collateral crimes merely affecting credibility); 1909, State v. Nyhus, 19 N. D. 326, 124 N. W. 71 (rape; questions to the accused as to former misconduct with a woman, excluded);

Ohio: 1881, Hanoff v. State, 37 Oh. St. 178, 181, 188 (defendant held apparently to waive his privilege to some extent; Okey, J., diss.); 1887, Este v. Wilshire, 44 Oh. 636 (broker's fraud; motion tried on affidavits; defendant held to have waived his privilege by filing an affidavit);

Oklahoma: 1919, Creek v. State, 16 Okl. Cr. 492, 184 Pac. 917 (questions as to escape from jail after arrest, allowed); pulsory disclosure as a witness (ante, § 2263), so its waiver abandons any right to refuse as a witness.

(b) The second view is the one above suggested as correct, and appears in varying phraseology. Commonly, it is said that the waiver extends to all

Oregon: Laws 1920, § 1534 (rule d); 1897, State v. Moore, 32 Or. 65, 48 Pac. 468; 1908, State v. Deal, 52 Or. 568, 98 Pac. 165 (cross-examination to the circumstances of an alleged exculpation, allowed); 1914, State v. Jensen, 70 Or. 156, 140 Pac. 740 (assault with intent to rape; cross-examination of defendant to misconduct with a woman in another State, excluded); 1914, State v. Torbet, 72 Or. 402, 143 Pac. 1107 (murder; cross-examination to a confession, allowed); 1921, State v. Rathie, 101 Or. 339, 368, 199 Pac. 169 (accused's former statements to grand jury); and cases cited in § 2277, post, apply the statute;

Pennsylvania: this State has now permitted the following vicious piece of legislation to slip in and thus tenderly to make it easier for astute defenders of villains to juggle their clients out of legal danger: St. 1911, Mar. 15, p. 20, Dig. 1920, § 8174, Crim. Procedure (an accused taking the stand "shall not be asked and if asked shall not be required to answer any question tending to show that he has committed or been charged with or been convicted of any offense other than the one wherewith he shall then be charged, or tending to show that he has been of bad character or reputation"; unless he has offered evidence of his good character or has testified against a co-defendant);

Philippine Islands: P. C. 1911, Gen. Order 58 of 1900, § 15 (quoted ante, § 488); 1916, U. S. v. Binayoh, 35 P. I. 23 (murder);

Porto Rico: 1908, People v. Morales, 14 P. R. 227, 240 (murder); 1912, People v. Roman, 18 P. R. 217, 228 (murder);

Rhode Island: 1903, State v. Babcock, 25 R. I. 224, 55 Atl. 685 (cross-examination to prior conviction allowed);

South Carolina: 1903, State v. Williamson, 65 S. C. 242, 43 S. E. 671 (question not decided);

South Dakota: 1909, State v. La Mont, 23 S. D. 174, 120 N. W. 1104 (rape under age; cross-examination of defendant to other acts of intercourse with women of his family, excluded; the opinion does not distinguish the different questions involved);

Tennessee: 1895, Clapp v. State, 94 Tenn. 186, 30 S. W. 214 (privilege not waived as to other crimes);

Texas: 1891, Quintana v. State, 29 Tex. App. 401, 406, 16 S. W. 258 ("he is subject to all the tests and rules applicable to other witnesses, even to the answering of questions that would tend to criminate him"); 1896, Rodriguez v. State, — Tex. Cr. —, 36 S. W. 435 (in impeachment, no confessions, otherwise inadmissible, may be proved, by cross-examination or otherwise); 1918, Houseton v. State, 83 Tex. Cr. 453, 204 S. W. 1007 (defendant's wife); compare here the cases cited post, § 2277;

Utah: Comp. L. 1917, § 9279 (rule c); 1905, State v. Shockley, 29 Utah 25, 80 Pac. 865 (murder in robbery; cross-examination as to other crimes, held improper; the ruling really proceeds on the principle of § 1810, ante, for the claim of privilege was conceded on all the questions but one; Bartch, J., dissenting, points out that Utah Rev. St. § 5015 is practically ignored by the majority; the decision makes confusion in the law, and helped to set free a confessed villain); 1910, State v. Vance, 38 Utah 1, 110 Pac. 434 (the above criticism on the Shockley case, and that of § 21, n. 12, ante, reviewed and answered; see the further comments, ante, § 21, n. 12); 1911, State v. Thorne, 39 Utah 208, 117 Pac. 58 (rule c);

Virginia: Code 1919, § 4778 (the accused may be "examined in his own behalf, and if so sworn and examined . . . he shall be deemed to have waived his privilege of not giving evidence against himself, and shall be subject to cross-examination as any other witness"; the second clause was first inserted in the Revision of 1919); 1891, Watson v. Com., 87 Va. 608, 613, 13 S. E. 22 (cross-examination to the issue, held proper on the facts); 1922, Thaniel v. Com., — Va. —, 111 S. E. 259 (accused's testimony before the coroner as a witness; cross-examination to this testimony at the trial, allowed, under Code 1919, § 4778, the second clause of which was added to the prior text; the Code now "seems to go the full length of requiring the accused person to absolutely and in all respects waive his privilege");

Washington: R. & B. Code 1909, § 2148 (rule c); 1893, State v. Duncan, 7 Wash. 336, 339, 35 Pac. 117 (defendant is treated "the same as any other witness"; Stiles, J., diss.); 1897, State v. O'Hara, 17 Wash. 523, 50 Pac. 477, 933 (cross-examination as to the execution of a paper already introduced in chief by the prosecution, excluded); 1903, State v. Melvern, 32 Wash. 7, 72 Pac. 489 (cross-examination to prior conduct, held not within the privilege, on the facts); 1922, State v. Crowder, — Wash. —, 205 Pac. 850 (statutory rape; cross-examination of defendant to other acts of intercourse with complainant, held improper, because the prosecution had already evidenced them; this is a thoroughly erroneous misunderstanding of the rule; the opinion is unaware that two distinct principles are involved, and cites without discrimination authorities for both).

matters relevant to the issue, meaning thereby to exclude "collateral" matters, i. e. facts merely affecting credibility:

1875, APPLETON, C. J., in State v. Wentworth, 65 Me. 234, 243: "He was not obliged to testify. He does testify. . . . He exonerates himself. He denies the commission of the offense charged. He is subject to cross-examination, as the necessary result of his assuming the position of a witness. . . . If he discloses part, he must disclose the whole in relation to the subject-matter about which he had answered in part. Answering truly in part with answers exonerative, he cannot stop midway, but must proceed, though his further answers may be self-criminative. Answering falsely as to the subject-matter, he is not to be exempt from cross-examination because his answers to such cross-examination would tend to show the falsity of those given on direct examination. If it were so, a preference would be accorded to falsehood rather than to truth."

(c) A third rule, usually originated by statute, makes the accused liable to cross-examination "like any other witness." This would upon its face go no further than the second rule just examined, i. e. it would not predicate a waiver for facts merely affecting credibility. But it is not always construed so narrowly; and the statute may be supposed merely to be dealing with the topics available for cross-examination (post, § 2277), without expressing anything as to the doctrine of waiver.

(d) A fourth rule, usually under statute, is that the accused may be cross-examined only as to the subjects already dealt with in his direct examination. This form was doubtless intended merely to apply to the accused the usual rule of a majority of the States as to the order of topics on cross-examination (ante, §§ 1885–1890, post, § 2778); but its literal effect is to limit the doctrine of waiver to the subject of the direct examination. This, though an unnecessary result on principle, ought not to make any practical difference; for the subject of the direct examination, properly construed, is the whole fact of guilt or innocence, and hence the topic of cross-examination might always range over any relevant facts except those merely affecting credibility; and thus the rule becomes in effect identical with that of (b) supra. The judicial interpretation of this statutory rule is not always harmonious.

(e) Still another view, substantially more restricted, and expressly embodied in a few statutes, is that the waiver extends to no other criminal acts than the one precisely charged. The policy of this rule is set forth in the following passage:

1898, MOORE, J., in State v. Bartmess, 33 Or. 110, 54 Pac. 167: "The reason for this distinction is found in the fact that if the defendant could be treated as a general witness, and cross-examined as such, evidence of inculpatory acts tending to the commission of the crime with which he was charged, and also of the commission of other crimes, might be brought before the jury, thereby causing them to lose sight of the real issue to be tried, and tending to the return of a verdict of guilty based upon evidence of particular acts wholly disconnected with the case on trial."

This limitation is sufficiently answered by the reasoning of Mr. Justice Campbell (above quoted). An accused who voluntarily takes the stand may fairly be asked to tell all he knows that is relevant. Since the prosecution can in any event, by other witnesses, prove the "inculpatory acts" above referred to (ante, § 305), it is difficult to see why the same acts cannot be proved by his own testimony, without unfair prejudice.

(f) Finally, there is an extreme view that the privilege may be claimed at any moment, i. e. virtually no waiver is conceded:

1871, COOLEY, J., Constitutional Limitations, 2d edition, p. 317: "If the accused does not choose to avail himself of it [his option to testify], unfavorable inferences are not to be drawn to his prejudice from that circumstance; and if he does testify, he is at liberty to stop at any point he chooses, and it must be left to the jury to give a statement, which he declines to make a full one, such weight as under the circumstances they think it entitled to; otherwise the statute [giving him the option] must have set aside and overruled the constitutional maxim which protects an accused party against being compelled to testify against himself, and the statutory privilege [to testify] becomes a snare and a delusion."

This passage was explained by the learned author in his third edition as follows:

1873, COOLEY, J., Constitutional Limitations, 3d edition, 317: "This paragraph appears to have led to some misapprehension of our views, and consequently we must regard it as unfortunately worded. Nevertheless, after full consideration, it has been concluded to leave it as it stands. What we intend to affirm by it is, that the privilege to testify in his own behalf is one the accused may waive [sic? claim] without justly subjecting himself to unfavorable comments; and that if he avails himself of it, and stops short of a full disclosure, no compulsory process can be made use of to compel him to testify further. It was not designed to be understood that, in the latter case, his failure to answer any proper question would not be the subject of comment and criticism by counsel; but, on the contrary, it was supposed that this was implied in the remark, that 'it must be left to the jury to give a statement which he declines to make a full one such weight as, under the circumstances, they think it entitled to.' All circumstances which it is proper for the jury to consider, it is proper for counsel to comment upon. . . . We not only approve of this ruling, but we should be at a loss for reasons which could furnish plausible support for any other."

On the inconsistency in permitting an inference for a particular refusal but prohibiting it for a general refusal, it is needless to comment. It is further inconsistent (ante, § 2272) to hold that no compulsion may be used and yet that an inference may be drawn. On the precise point in controversy, whether the privilege against compulsion may be claimed at any point, no detailed reasoning is vouchsafed by the learned author. His view has apparently not been accepted outside of a single jurisdiction.

The state of the law in the various jurisdictions is not easy to determine, partly because of the ambiguity of the various statutes and partly because of the differing interpretations of the same statutory words by different Courts. On the whole, the second form of rule above described seems to find the greatest support.

(3) The waiver involved in the accused's taking the stand permits the usual stages of inquiry to be pursued (ante, § 1866). He may therefore be recalled for further cross-examination under the same conditions as the ordinary witness.[4]

(4) The waiver involved in the accused's taking the stand is limited to the particular proceeding in which he thus volunteers testimony. His voluntary testimony before a coroner's inquest, or a grand jury, or other preliminary and separate proceeding, e. g. in bankruptcy, is therefore not a waiver for the main trial;[5] nor is his testimony at a first trial a waiver for a later trial.[6] But it is sometimes held that a present waiver is retroactive, so that his vol-

[4] CANADA: 1859, Peters v. Irish, 4 All. N. Br. 326 (answer on cross-examination, held a waiver for the purpose of re-examination).

UNITED STATES: Ala. 1893, Thomas v. State, 100 Ala. 53, 14 So. 621 (recall allowed); 1894, Thompson v. State, 100 Ala. 70, 14 So. 878 (defendant may be recalled to identify him with a convicted person, the record being offered to discredit him); 1899, Dudley v. State, 121 Ala. 4, 25 So. 742 (defendant may be recalled to ask as to prior inconsistent statements); Kan. 1872, State v. Horne, 9 Kan. 123 (where the defendant had taken the stand, and was cross-examined and re-examined, a recall for the purpose of calling attention to a prior self-contradiction was held allowable); 1896, State v. Lewis, 56 Kan. 374, 43 Pac. 265 (defendant cannot be recalled in rebuttal; this is unsound); Ky. 1901, Abbott v. Com., — Ky. —, 62 S. W. 715 (recall for a prior self-contradiction, allowed); La. 1892, State v. Walsh, 44 La. An. 1122, 1133, 11 So. 811 (recall for a prior self-contradiction, allowed); 1899, State v. Favre, 51 La. An. 434, 25 So. 93 (similar); 1904, State v. Brown, 111 La. 696, 35 So. 818 (similar); Mo. 1894, State v. Kennade, 121 Mo. 405, 415, 26 S. W. 347 (recall for cross-examination, allowed); Tex. 1899, Clay v. State, 40 Tex. Cr. 593, 51 S. W. 370 (recall allowable as for ordinary witnesses); 1907, Hays v. State, 51 Tex. Cr. 111, 100 S. W. 926 (defendant may be recalled for questions preliminary to impeachment by self-contradiction); Wis. 1880, State v. Glass, 50 Wis. 218, 223, 6 N. W. 500 (recall allowable in the trial Court's discretion).

The practical fairness and utility of construing the waiver liberally against the accused is noted, from the standpoint of experience, in Mr. (Assistant District Attorney) Arthur Train's important book, "The Prisoner at the Bar" (1906), pp. 163, 164.

[5] Fed. 1920, Arndstein v. McCarthy, 254 U. S. 71, 41 Sup. 26 (on involuntary bankruptcy the debtor claimed privilege on special examination; subsequently he filed sworn schedules showing assets and liabilities; on examination "concerning these," he claimed privilege; held that the filing of the sworn schedules was not "a waiver of the right to stop short" whenever the answer might criminate him; unsound; the examination was virtually a cross-examination on the schedule's statements, and the debtor is virtually an accused; the result of such a ruling is to guarantee an opportunity to lie without cross-examination on the subject of the lie; which is just what the doctrine of waiver is aimed to prevent); Cal. 1900, Overend v. Superior Court, 131 Cal. 280, 63 Pac. 372 (testimony at a preliminary examination, held not a waiver for the trial); Ill. 1896, Samuel v. People, 164 Ill. 379, 45 N. E. 728 (the making of an affidavit, indorsed on the information, declaring the truth of the charge, and thus setting the prosecution in motion, is not a waiver); Mich. 1906, Re Mark, 146 Mich. 714, 110 N. W. 61 (testimony at an 'ex parte' complaint as witness, held not a waiver on subsequent trial of the accused before the committing magistrate); N. Y. 1915, People v. Cassidy, 213 N. Y. 288, 107 N. E. 713 (corrupt nomination to office; testimony with waiver at an information in Q. Co., then compulsory testimony at a trial in K. Co., the former held not a waiver of the privilege at the latter, though the same offense was involved); Va. 1873, Cullen v. Com., 24 Gratt. 624, 637 (voluntary disclosure as witness at an inquest without warning as to his privilege, held not to be a waiver sufficient on the trial for the homicide); 1881, Temple v. Com., 75 Va. 892, 896 (same ruling for one who had testified before the grand jury; but a majority of the Court declined to express an opinion); contra: 1922, Thaniel v. Com., — Va. —, 111 S. E. 259 (testimony before the coroner; cited more fully supra, n. 3; the Virginia rulings above cited are presumably now supplanted); Wyo. 1899, Miskimmins v. Shaver, 8 Wyo. 392, 58 Pac. 411 (compounding a felony; the witness' affidavit as informant in the requisition proceedings for the felon, held not a waiver of the privilege for the preliminary examination).

But of course his voluntary testimony on the former occasion may itself be used (subject to the rule for confessions, ante, § 852) on the subsequent occasion: cases cited infra, n. 8.

Compare the rule for using an inference from former failure to testify (ante, § 2270).

[6] 1896, Georgia R. & B. Co. v. Lybrend, 99 Ga. 421, 27 S. E. 794; 1899, Emery v. State, 101 Wis. 627, 78 N. W. 145. Contra: 1908, State v. Simmons, 78 Kan. 872, 98 Pac. 277; this is the sounder view.

untary testimony at the present trial permits inferences to be drawn from his refusal and claim of privilege at a former proceeding.[7]

(5) Where the witness waives by answering, his answers may be afterwards used against him;[8] because the privilege, in disappearing, disappears completely. Combining this with the principle of retroactivity (supra), it follows that in bankruptcy proceedings under U. S. Rev. St. 1878, § 860 (quoted post, § 2281; now repealed) and U. S. St. 1898, c. 541, § 7 (bankruptcy; quoted post, § 2281) providing that no testimony given in certain cases shall be used against the witness thereafter, the defendant would, by taking the stand, waive the privilege so as to permit the use against him (either by an independent offer of evidence or by his own cross-examination) of former answers made by him in a situation covered by either of those statutes.[9]

(6) The principle of waiver has been invoked by some Courts to admit facts obtained by the accused's voluntary surrender of chattels or submission to bodily inspection out of court (ante, §§ 2264, 2265).

(7) When the privilege is justly claimed, by either witness or accused, at such a stage or on such topics as to prevent substantially all cross-examination, the direct testimony may be struck out; for no testimony under any conditions can be received without liability to a substantially full cross-examination.[10]

§ 2277. Waiver: Cross-Examination to Accused's Character in Impeachment, distinguished. When an accused takes the stand, several other questions arise, as to the applicability of principles affecting witnesses in general, and they tend sometimes to be confused with the one just examined.

(1) May the accused as a witness be impeached at all? As an accused, his bad moral character is, by universal concession, not to be evidenced by the prosecution unless he first has attempted to show his good character (ante, § 55). But as a witness, his character may be impeached. In which status is he to be regarded? Is his status as an accused to displace his status as a witness? This question, already elsewhere examined on principle (ante, § 890),

[7] Ante, § 2273, note 8.

Of course, a waiver, by volunteering testimony, leaves him responsible for perjury in such testimony: 1899, State v. Turley, 153 Ind. 345, 55 N. E. 30 (examination before grand jury). Compare the cases cited post, § 2281, ad finem, and ante, § 2270.

[8] 1907, Weaver v. State, 83 Ark. 119, 102 S. W. 713 (affidavit for continuance); 1907, People v. Willard, 150 Cal. 543, 89 Pac. 124 (petition for 'habeas corpus,' and testimony of the defendant on the hearing, admitted); 1914, Bennett v. State, 68 Fla. 494, 67 So. 125 (testimony at the preliminary hearing); 1911, State v. Kimes, 152 Ia. 240, 132 N. W. 180; 1907, State v. Taylor, 202 Mo. 1, 100 S. W. 41; 1902, State v. Burrell, 27 Mont. 282, 70 Pac. 982; 1921, Roberts v. State, 759 Tex. Cr. 454, 231 S. W. 759 (voluntary testimony at a former trial of "another case," admitted against the accused on a trial for assault with intent to kill); and cases cited ante, §§ 850, 852 (confessions), and instances cited ante, § 278, n. 3.

[9] Contra, but unsound: 1908, Jacobs v. U. S., 1st C. C. A., 161 Fed. 694, 698 (cross-examination of a bankrupt, on a trial for fraudulent concealment, to his former answers on examination before the referee; held not allowable under St. 1898, c. 541, § 7); 1908, Alkon v. U. S., 1st C. C. A., 163 Fed. 810 (conspiracy by a bankrupt; cross-examination to his testimony before the referee, held not allowable, under Rev. St. § 860).

Compare Arndstein v. McCarthy, U. S., cited supra, n. 5.

[10] Ante, § 1391.

is universally answered in the negative. The accused, as a witness, is open to impeachment like any other witness.[1]

§ 2277. [1] The authorities are placed here, for convenience of comparison with those in § 2276. Where not otherwise noted, the impeachment was allowed. It is sometimes impossible to ascertain which principle the Court has in mind. Indeed, it is not inconceivable that the Court is sometimes not aware of the distinction. It is to be noted that, so far as impeachment through cross-examination is concerned, the present principle is in some States covered by the statutes noted ante, § 2276, making the accused examinable "like any other witness":
Federal: 1918, Williams v. U. S., 5th C. C. A., 254 Fed. 52 (defendant taking the stand; former convictions for felony shown); 1918, Gordon v. U. S., 5th C. C. A., 254 Fed. 53 (similar; "he may be interrogated as to all matters affecting his credibility");
Alabama: 1896, Buchanan v. State, 109 Ala. 7, 19 So. 410; 1899, Fields v. State, 121 Ala. 16, 25 So. 727 (general bad character);
Arkansas: 1905, Smith v. State, 74 Ark. 397, 85 S. W. 1123 ("subject to impeachment like any other witness"); 1905, Carothers v. State, 75 Ark. 574, 88 S. W. 585 (cross-examination to subornation of a witness); 1921, Powell v. State, 149 Ark. 311, 232 S. W. 429 (rape under age; cross-examination of accused to cohabitation with his wife before marriage, allowed);
California: 1868, Clark v. Reese, 35 Cal. 89, 96 (personal liberties with a woman); 1870, People v. Reinhart, 39 Cal. 449 (former conviction of sundry offences); 1877, People v. Chin Mook Sow, 51 Cal. 597, 601; 1881, People v. Johnson, 57 Cal. 571; 1881, People v. Beck, 58 Cal. 212 (character for veracity); 1888, People v. Meyer, 75 Cal. 383, 385, 17 Pac. 431 (prior conviction); 1896, People v. Hickman, 113 Cal. 86, 45 Pac. 175; 1896, People v. Mayes, 113 Cal. 618, 45 Pac. 861; 1897, People v. Arnold, 116 Cal. 682, 48 Pac. 803 (questions as to former conviction are allowable, and P. C. § 1093, dealt with ante, § 196, regulating the use of such evidence as affecting sentence, does not prevent its independent use in this connection); 1897, People v. Sears, 119 Cal. 267, 51 Pac. 325 (prior conviction); 1898, People v. Reed, — Cal. —, 52 Pac. 835 (character for truth); 1908, People v. Oliver, 7 Cal. App. 601, 95 Pac. 172 (the accused on cross-examination may be asked as to prior convictions for felony, in spite of P. C. § 1025, prohibiting allusion to a former conviction when used to affect the sentence under § 196 ante; re-affirming People v. Arnold, supra, and holding that the re-enactment of P. C. § 1093 in 1905 as P. C. § 1025 did not change the rule); 1911, People v. Walker, 15 Cal. App. 400, 114 Pac. 1009 (prior conviction of felony may be asked);
Colorado: 1882, McKeone v. People, 6 Colo. 346, 347 (prior self-contradiction); 1900, Herren v. People, 28 Colo. 33, 62 Pac. 833 (general character for credibility);
Connecticut: 1896, State v. Griswold, 67 Conn. 290, 34 Atl. 1047 (questions showing a prior self-contradiction);
Florida: (here the accused was not a competent witness until 1895; the following rulings hold him now open to impeachment); 1896, Lester v. State, 37 Fla. 382, 20 So. 232 (holding the amended act of 1895, now Rev. G. S. 1919, § 6080, constitutional as regards its title); 1899, Copeland v. State, 41 Fla. 320, 26 So. 319 (since St. 1895, c. 4400, there can be no sworn statement without cross-examination); 1899, Wallace v. State, 41 Fla. 547, 26 So. 713; 1900, Squires v. State, 42 Fla. 251, 27 So. 864; 1916, Herndon v. State, 72 Fla. 108, 72 So. 833 (larceny of cattle; cross-examination to a former conviction for larceny of a mule, admissible);
Georgia: (here the accused is still not competent and may merely make a "statement"; for the ways of impeaching this "statement," see the citations in Hackney v. State, cited ante, § 2276, and the cases cited ante, § 579);
Hawaii: 1919, Terr. v. Goo Wan Hoy, 24 Haw. 721, 729 (perjury);
Illinois: 1883, Chambers v. People, 105 Ill. 409, 413 (in general); 1899, Halloway v. People, 181 Ill. 544, 54 N. E. 1030 (cross-examination to conduct);
Indiana: 1874, Fletcher v. State, 49 Ind. 124, 130 (general character); 1875, Mershon v. State, 51 Ind. 14, 21; 1879, State v. Bloom, 68 Ind. 54, semble; State v. Beal, 68 Ind. 346; 1884, South Bend v. Hardy, 98 Ind. 579; 1885, Boyle v. State, 105 Ind. 469, 475, 5 N. E. 203 (cross-examination); 1889, Keyes v. State, 122 Ind. 527, 531, 23 N. E. 1097 (same); 1897, Vancleave v. State, 150 Ind. 273, 275, 49 N. E. 1060 (same);
Indian Terr. 1906, McCoy v. U. S., 6 Ind. Terr. 415, 98 S. W. 144 (a defendant "is subjected to the same rules governing as to [sic?] other witnesses");
Iowa: 1880, State v. Red, 53 Ia. 69, 70, 4 N. W. 831 (in general); 1884, State v. Kirkpatrick, 63 Ia. 554, 559, 19 N. W. 660; 1886, State v. Teeter, 69 Ia. 717, 719, 27 N. W. 485; 1890, State v. O'Brien, 81 Ia. 93, 46 N. W. 861; 1911, State v. Bradenburger, 151 Ia. 197, 130 N. W. 1065 (cross-examination to past marital misconduct, allowed);
Kansas: 1886, State v. Pfefferle, 36 Kan. 90, 92, 12 Pac. 406 (he may be "contradicted, discredited, and impeached"); 1891, State v. Probasco, 46 Kan. 310, 311, 26 Pac. 749 (cross-examination to character);
Kentucky: (in this State the precedents as to cross-examination to misconduct are much entangled, as noted, ante, § 987, but the pres-

In applying this principle, it will be seen that Courts might employ a form of words similar to those employed in predicating a waiver of his privilege ent principle is unquestioned); 1887, McDonald v. Com., 86 Ky. 13, 4 S. W. 687; 1888, Lockard v. Com., 87 Ky. 201, 204, 8 S. W. 266; 1889, Pace v. Com., 89 Ky. 204, 209, 12 S. W. 271; 1892, Burdette v. Com., 93 Ky. 77, 18 S. W. 1011; 1895, Saylor v. Com., 97 Ky. 184, 30 S. W. 390; 1895, Montgomery v. Com., — Ky. —, 30 S. W. 602; 1895, Barton v. Com., — Ky. —, 32 S. W. 172; 1897, Trusty v. Com., — Ky. —, 41 S. W. 766; 1898, Justice v. Com., — Ky. —, 46 S. W. 499; 1899, Baker v. Com., 106 Ky. 212, 50 S. W. 54; 1906, Henderson v. Com., 122 Ky. 296, 91 S. W. 1141 (cross-examination to conviction for felony, allowed); 1910, Smith v. Com., 140 Ky. 599, 131 S. W. 499;

Louisiana: 1893, State v. Taylor, 45 La. An. 605, 607, 12 So. 927; State v. Murphy, 45 La. An. 959, 13 So. 229; 1896, State v. Southern, 48 La. An. 628, 19 So. 668 (cross-examination to character);

Maine: 1876, State v. Watson, 65 Me. 79 (prior conviction); 1875, State v. Carson, 66 Me. 116, 117 (cross-examination to character); 1881, State v. Witham, 72 Me. 531, 534 (except as protected by privilege); 1892, State v. Farmer, 84 Me. 436, 24 Atl. 985 (record of conviction);

Maryland: 1906, Lawrence v. State, 103 Md. 17, 63 Atl. 96 (rule of Guy v. State, ante, § 2276, applied);

Massachusetts: 1859, Holbrook v. Dow, 12 Gray 357, 359 (the accused testifies "subject to all the responsibilities which the law attaches"; here, cross-examination); 1867, Com. v. Brennan, 97 Mass. 587; 1868, Com. v. Gorham, 99 Mass. 421; 1870, Root v. Hamilton, 105 Mass. 23;

Michigan: 1895, People v. Sutherland, 104 Mich. 468, 62 N. W. 566 (cross-examination to misconduct); 1897, People v. Parmelee, 112 Mich. 291, 70 N. W. 577; 1897, Georgia v. Bond, 114 Mich. 196, 72 N. W. 232 (cross-examination to character); 1906, People v. DeCamp, 146 Mich. 533, 109 N. W. 1047 (record of conviction);

Minnesota: 1888, State v. Curtis, 39 Minn. 357, 359, 40 N. W 263 (cross-examination to misconduct); 1890, State v. Sauer, 42 Minn. 259, 44 N. W. 115;

Mississippi: 1905, Williams v. State, 87 Miss. 373, 39 So. 1006 (cross-examination to prior conviction);

Missouri: (in this State it may be noted that, by another principle, ante, § 1270, proof of conviction of crime by cross-examination was forbidden until the statute of 1895); 1878, State v. Clinton, 67 Mo. 380, 390 (construing St. 1877, p. 356, making defendants in criminal cases competent; "he may be impeached as any other witness"; here, by general character); State v. Cox, 67 Mo. 392 (general character); 1878, State v. Testerman, 68 Mo. 408, 414 (prior self-contradiction); State v. Rugan, 68 Mo. 215 (misconduct and false statements); 1880, State v. Cooper, 71 Mo. 436, 442; 1883, State v. Owen, 78 Mo. 367, 377; 1886, State v. Palmer, 88 Mo. 568, 571; 1886, State v. Bulla, 89 Mo. 595, 598, 1 S. W. 764; 1886, State v. Rider, 90 Mo. 54, 63, 1 S. W. 825; 95 Mo. 474, 486, 8 S. W. 723; 1887, State v. Beaucleigh, 92 Mo. 490, 495, 4 S. W. 666; 1887, State v. Brooks, 92 Mo. 542, 581, 5 S. W. 257, 330; 1888, State v. West, 95 Mo. 139, 143, 8 S. W. 354; 1889, State v. Taylor, 98 Mo. 240, 244, 11 S. W. 570 ("in the same manner as any other witness"); 1894, State v. Smith, 125 Mo. 2, 6, 28 S. W. 181; St. 1895, p. 284, Rev. St. 1899, § 4680, R. S. 1909, § 5242, R. S. 1919, § 5439 (quoted ante, §§ 488, 987; allows a witness' conviction of crime to be proved by cross-examination); 1897, State v. Dyer, 139 Mo. 199, 40 S. W. 768; 1903, State v. Blitz, 171 Mo. 530, 71 S. W. 1027 (defendant may be cross-examined to prior convictions); 1903, State v. Thornhill, 174 Mo. 364, 74 S. W. 832 (similar; compare the rule of §§ 987, 1270, ante); 1905, State v. Spivey, 191 Mo. 87, 90 S. W. 81 (similar; but the question should ask directly for the conviction, and not merely as to being in the penitentiary, etc.); 1905, State v. Woodward, 191 Mo. 617, 90 S. W. 90 (compare the rule of § 1270, ante; general moral character may be used); 1906, State v. Beckner, 194 Mo. 281, 91 S. W. 892 (general moral character may be used); 1907, State v. Barnett, 203 Mo. 640, 102 S. W. 506 (State v. Beckner followed); 1917, State v. Willard, — Mo. —, 192 S. W. 437 (murder; the statute's rule allowing proof of conviction "is, to an extent, the price which the witness pays for being allowed to testify at all after conviction for a heinous offence"; this is rather inappropriate language in a Supreme judicial court; the trial is not a game between participants with handicaps; the State is interested in obtaining reliable testimony and makes rules for that purpose); 1917, State v. Ivy, — Mo. —, 192 S. W. 733 (rape under age; "The decisions of this Court have many times construed R. S. 1909, § 5242, and have evolved pretty definitely, among others, these propositions"; i. is needless to chronicle the propositions here, since the opinion concedes that they figure only "among others" not specified); 1921, State v. Howe, 287 Mo. 1, 228 S. W. 477 (under Mo. R. S. 1909, § 5242, a defendant taking the stand may nevertheless be cross-examined to former convictions, to affect his credibility, pursuant to ibid. § 6383); 1921, State v. Stokes, 288 Mo. 539, 232 S. W. 107 (seduction; cross-examination of accused to former convictions, held

(ante, § 2276). The difference in bearing is nevertheless obvious. The question whether the accused may be impeached as a witness involves all forms proper under St. 1895, Rev. St. 1919, § 5439); the foregoing rulings should be compared with those cited ante, § 987 (impeachment of witness' character); and § 2276 (waiver of privilege);

Montana: 1900, State v. Schnepel, 23 Mont. 523, 59 Pac. 927;
Nebraska: 1905, Nickolizack v. State, 75 Nebr. 27, 105 N. W. 895 (rape under age; cross-examination to improper conduct with another child excluded; the opinion shows no clear perception of the questions involved);
Nevada: 1874, State v. Cohn, 9 Nev. 179, 189 (he is to be "treated as an ordinary witness"); 1876, State v. Huff, 11 Nev. 17, 27 (he is subject to "the same cross-examination that would be proper in the case of any other witness"); 1905, State v. Lawrence, 28 Nev. 440, 82 Pac. 614 (cross-examination to convictions of felony, allowed; "the defendant was in a double capacity, that of defendant and that of witness"; State v. Cohn not cited);
New Mexico: 1894, Terr. v. De Gutman, 8 N. M. 92, 42 Pac. 68;
New York: (the principle is in this State unquestioned; most of the cases declaring it have been collected ante, §§ 2276 and 987); 1897, People v. Conroy, 153 N. Y. 174, 47 N. E. 258 ("specific immoral acts" may be inquired of on cross-examination);
North Carolina: 1881, State v. Efler, 85 N. C. 585, 587; 1883, State v. Lawhorn, 88 N. C. 634, 637; 1897, State v. Traylor, 121 N. C. 674, 28 S. E. 493; 1918, State v. Atwood, 176 N. C. 704, 97 S. E. 12 (murder; the accused having testified and offered his good witness-character, held that in rebuttal the prosecution could dispute his character generally, including party-character; "when the defendant goes upon the stand, . . . logically and necessarily he puts his character in all capacities . . . in issue");
North Dakota: 1890, Terr. v. O'Hare, 1 N. D. 30, 44, 44 N. W. 1003 (cross-examination to character); 1899, State v. Rozum, 8 N. D. 548, 80 N. W. 480 (cross-examination to collateral offences);
Ohio: 1881, Hanoff v. State, 37 Oh. St. 178 (cross-examination to conduct);
Oklahoma: 1898, Asher v. Terr., 7 Okl. 188, 54 Pac. 445 (similar); 1899, Hyde v. Terr., 8 Okl. 69, 56 Pac. 851 (cross-examination to character); 1907, Harrold v. Terr., 18 Okl. 395, 89 Pac. 202 (he is "subject to be cross-examined the same as any other witness"); 1911, Cowan v. State, 5 Okl. Cr. 313, 114 Pac. 627 (cross-examination to prior conviction for felony or offence of moral turpitude, allowable);
Oregon: 1883, State v. Abrams, 11 Or. 169, 173, 8 Pac. 327 (prior self-contradiction); 1886, State v. Saunders, 14 Or. 300, 309, 313, 12 Pac. 441 (excluding cross-examination to past misconduct not involved in the issue, probably on the principle of § 2276, ante); 1898, State v. Bartmess, 33 Or. 110, 54 Pac. 167 (cross-examination as to prior inconsistent statements, and outside testimony thereto, allowable, following State v. Abrams); 1903, State v. Miller, 43 Or. 325, 74 Pac. 658 (the cross-examination is restricted to "matters concerning which he has testified in the first instance"); 1910, State v. Lem Woon, 57 Or. 482, 107 Pac. 974 (State v. Bartmess followed); 1921, State v. Won Wen Tueng, 99 Or. 95, 195 Pac. 349 (murder; rule applied on the facts); 1921, State v. Rathie, 101 Or. 339, 368, 199 Pac. 169 (cross-examination to former conviction of crime, allowed);
Rhode Island: 1885, State v. McGuire, 15 R. I. 23, 22 Atl. 1118 (the accused is "liable to impeachment like any other witness");
South Carolina: 1886, State v. Robertson, 26 S. C. 117, 120, 1 S. E. 443 (character for truth); 1890, State v. Wyse, 33 S. C. 582, 591, 12 S. E. 556 (contradiction); 1890, State v. Merriman, 34 S. C. 16, 39, 12 S. E. 619 (cross-examination to character); 1892, State v. Turner, 36 S. C. 534, 543, 15 S. E. 602 (similar); 1900, State v. Mitchell, 56 S. C. 524, 35 S. E. 210 (liquor offence; questions as to former indictments and fines for liquor offences, allowed); 1914, State v. Knox, 98 S. C. 114, 82 S. E. 278 (battery; cross-examination to other quarrels not connected with the charge, excluded);
Tennessee: 1887, Peck v. State, 86 Tenn. 259, 263, 6 S. W. 389; 1892, Hill v. State, 91 Tenn. 521, 524, 19 S. W. 674 (the accused is "subject to impeachment as any other witness would have been");
Texas: 1892, Bell v. State, 31 Tex. Cr. 276, 20 S. W. 549 (in general); 1896, Morales v. State, 36 Tex. Cr. 234, 245, 36 S. W. 435, 846 (but the statutory restrictions as to using his confessions, ante, § 851, still apply to questions about them on cross-examination; and thus a cross-examination to the accused's admission or self-contradictions is practically prevented); 1898, Holley v. State, 39 Tex. Cr. 301, 46 S. W. 39; 1900, Walton v. State, 41 Tex. Cr. 454, 55 S. W. 566 (like Morales v. State); 1900, Dickey v. State, — Tex. Cr. —, 56 S. W. 627 (cross-examination to character); 1901, Wooley v. State, — Tex. Cr. —, 64 S. W. 1054 (allowing cross-examination to self-contradictions);
Utah: 1894, People v. Larsen, 10 Utah 143, 37 Pac. 258 (cross-examination to character); 1917, State v. Williams, 49 Utah 320, 163 Pac. 1104 (assault);
Wisconsin: 1881, Yanke v. State, 51 Wis. 464, 467, 8 N. W. 276 (the accused subjects himself "to the same rules of cross-examination applicable to other witnesses").

of proof and all kinds of facts, i. e. proof by other witnesses, proof of general character, conviction of crime, and the like; while the question of privilege involves merely an inquiry of the accused himself as to a criminal act. Upon such an inquiry there are involved both questions at once, and a settlement of the question of privilege will usually involve incidentally the settlement of the other question. But upon all other inquiries the question of privilege is not involved, and the question of impeachment in general is alone involved and settled.[2]

(2) By what kind of character may the accused be impeached? As a witness, only by his character for veracity, in most jurisdictions, but in others by his general bad character; as an accused, not at all, until he has himself attempted to prove good character for the trait relevant in the charge, and then the prosecution may deny this in rebuttal. As a witness, then, he is subject to proof which would not be receivable against him as an accused except on certain conditions. The rule for witnesses' character has been considered ante, § 923; its application to the accused as a witness is dealt with ante, §§ 61, 890, 924. Many of the rulings cited in §§ 2276 and 2277 are inextricably concerned also with these questions.

(3) As an accused, the party may offer his good character in support, but this character must be for the trait relevant to the charge (ante, §§ 56, 59). As a witness, however, the party may not offer his good character until impeachment (ante, § 1104), and then (in most jurisdictions) only his character for veracity. Thus, a further practical distinction may arise, in consequence of his double status (ante, § 61).

(4) As a witness, the accused is subject to cross-examination to specific acts of misconduct impeaching his character for veracity. The distinction between the propriety of such inquiries and the privilege not to answer them has been already considered (ante, §§ 2268, 2276).[3] It may also here be noted that in some jurisdictions[4] a question has occasionally been raised whether, for an accused, there should be stricter limits to this cross-examination than for an ordinary witness. This question has already been considered in connection with the general principle as to cross-examination to misconduct (ante, §§ 981–987); but some of the rulings already cited in this section (§ 2277) and in § 2276 do not always keep in mind the distinction between those three principles, namely, impeaching an accused witness in general (supra, par. 1), impeaching him by cross-examination to misconduct (ante, § 987), and privileging him not to answer (ante, § 2276).

(5) As a witness, the accused may be impeached by proof of conviction of another crime (ante, § 985). But whether this proof may be made on his own cross-examination, without producing a copy of the record of conviction, involves another principle (ante, § 1270).

[2] In People v. Tice, N. Y., cited ante, § 2276, the distinction is brought out.

[3] See also the opinions in South Bend v. Hardy, Ind., cited ante, § 2270, and in the Brown and Brandon cases, N. Y., cited ante, § 2276.

[4] Notably in Kentucky and New York.

§ 2278. Same: Other Principles affecting the Accused's Cross-Examination and Impeachment, distinguished (Cross-Examining to One's Own Case, etc.). (1) By a rule intended originally to prescribe merely the order of presenting evidence, it is in a majority of jurisdictions not permitted to put in one's own case on the cross-examination of the opponent's witnesses (ante, §§ 1885–1891), or, in the usual phrase, the cross-examination must be confined, in its material, to the subject of the direct examination. This rule, in its effect upon the examination of the accused, is palpably unfair to the prosecution; for, since the prosecution would presumably have neither the right nor the desire to recall the accused as its own witness, that which was intended merely as a prohibition against obtaining certain facts on his cross-examination becomes in effect a prohibition against obtaining them from him at all. The poor policy and faulty reasoning of such a result has already been examined (ante, § 1887).

It is here, however, worth while to note that this rule, as enshrined in many States by statute, is by some Courts interpreted as if it were a rule affecting the waiver of the privilege against self-crimination.[1] The two have of course no connection; although, if the former rule forbids questions which go beyond the subject of the direct examination, the waiver is also incidentally thus limited, for the simple reason that there are no questions for the accused to answer, and the result is the same. But the practical error of treating the two questions as one (an error not uncommon under such statutes) is seen in the case of questions directed merely to facts impeaching character. Here it is plain that the effect of the first rule is not to exclude such inquiries (ante, § 1891); for there would otherwise never be any opportunity to ask them. But this leaves the question of privilege and its waiver still undetermined, and resort must be had for that purpose to the appropriate principle (ante, § 2276). In a few jurisdictions, however, this distinction seems irrevocably buried in the decisions interpreting the statute.[2]

(2) The accused as a witness may be discredited by the biassed position which he occupies as an interested party, i. e. the jury may consider that circumstance in weighing his credit (ante, § 968). This is in no way connected with the doctrine of waiver; yet the possibilities of misunderstanding these various principles seem unlimited, and this sort of confusion has sometimes occurred in rulings dealing with the accused as an impeachable witness (ante, § 2277, par. 1).

§ 2279. Expurgation of Criminality: (a) by Conviction; (b) by Acquittal; (c) by Lapse of Time. The law is concerned with its own penalties only. Legal criminality consists in liability to the law's punishment. When that liability is removed, criminality ceases; and with the criminality the privilege.

[r] § 2278. [1] This has been noticed in dealing with the waiver, in § 2276. The distinction is pointed out by McKee, J., diss., in People v. O'Brien, Cal., cited ante, § 2276.

[2] The rulings in §§ 1890 and 2276 should be compared. In some decisions it is difficult to tell which rule is being applied, and therefore to classify them.

Of the various modes in which that liability may cease, the following enumeration seems to be complete: Conviction and the suffering of the punishment; Acquittal, or other former jeopardy; Abolition of the general crime, subsequent to its commission (provided the rule of criminal law thereby exonerates prior offenders); Lapse of time barring prosecution of the particular offence; Executive pardon for the particular offender; Statutory amnesty, before or after the act, for the particular criminal act or for the offender. Of these various modes, however, not all seem to have called for judicial interpretation as to their effect.

(a) A conviction for the crime discharges all liability to the State and removes the possibility of further penalty; hence an act for which the person has been convicted no longer tends to criminate, in the sense of the privilege. This is universally conceded; and the only question can be whether there is a privilege against disclosing the disgrace or infamy of the conviction (ante, §§ 984, 2255).

(b) An acquittal conclusively negatives criminality; no privilege can therefore be based upon the charge of crime.[1]

(c) A crime erased by lapse of time exists no longer. There is therefore no criminal fact to be privileged from disclosure. A legal limitation of the time of prosecution is in effect an expurgation of the crime; and after the lapse of the time fixed by law the privilege ceases.[2] Moreover, since the prohibition of inferences from a claim of privilege rests merely on the ground that the privilege would otherwise be evaded (ante, § 2272), it follows that a person's claim of privilege on a prior occasion may be used [3] to impeach him as an admission or self-contradiction, in a trial occurring after the statutory period has elapsed.[4] The only question can be whether the claimant or the § 2279. [1] 1898, Holt v. State, Tex., cited post, § 2280.

It would seem that the nolle pros. of a co-defendant, entered in order to secure his testimony for the State, is equivalent to an acquittal: 1886, Ex parte Stice, 70 Cal. 51, 55, 11 Pac. 459 (applying P. C. §§ 1099–1101).

Contra: 1912, Scribner v. State, 9 Okl. 465, 132 Pac. 933; 1913, Faucett v. State, — Okl. —, 134 Pac. 839.

The erroneous compulsion of an incriminating answer, by a justice of the peace or a coroner, does not have the effect of an acquittal, so as to be pleaded in immunity on the trial before a jury; Scribner v. State, Faucett v. State, Okl., supra.

[2] England: 1789, Williams v. Farrington, 3 Brown Ch. C. 38, 40 (privilege ceases, so far as the time for recovering penalties has elapsed); 1828, Roberts v. Allatt, M. & M. 192 (privilege denied, where the statutory period had expired without proceedings begun); 1828, Trinity House v. Burge, 3 Sim. 411 (and this is equally so, where the period ends after plea filed but before the hearing); 1832, Davis v. Reid, 5 Sim. 443, 446.

United States: Ala. 1876, Calhoun v. Thompson, 56 Ala. 166, 170 (aiding a criminal to escape); Conn. 1809, U. S. v. Smith, 4 Day 121, 123 (under a statute limiting prosecutions to a period of two years, except the person flee from justice, the witness "is 'prima facie' protected from prosecution by the statute"; the witness' plea that he fled does not preserve his privilege, but the prosecution will thereafter be barred); 1831, Skinner v. Judson, 8 Conn. 528, 535 (penalty for fraudulent conveyance, barred by statute; explaining Northrup v. Hatch, 6 Conn. 361); 1859, Norfolk v. Gaylord, 28 Conn. 309, 314 (bastardy; same ruling); Ga. 1849, Marshall v. Riley, 7 Ga. 367, 372 (penalty for unlicensed practice of medicine; principle recognized); Ill. 1851, Weldon v. Burch, 12 Ill. 374 (riot and burglary; principle applied); Ia. 1888, Mahanke v. Cleland, 76 Ia. 401, 404, 41 N.W. 53 (general principle affirmed); N. Y. 1845, Close v. Olney, 1 Denio 319, 323 (usury; principle applied).

[3] On the general principles of §§ 289, 1042, 1060, ante.

[4] 1894, Childs v. Merrill, 66 Vt. 302, 306, 29 Atl. 532 (refusal to answer in a prior criminal proceeding, admitted in a civil suit after the opponent of the privilege has the burden of proof with respect to the usual condition upon which the running of the statutory period depends, namely, that no prosecution has been begun within the time; and this burden is held to be upon the opponent.[5]

§ 2280. Expurgation of Criminality; (d) by Executive Pardon. It seems always to have been conceded that an Executive pardon for a past offence, by prohibiting and preventing all punishment for the offence, nullifies the privilege. Criminality, in the sense of the law, is liability to legal punishment; and if the punishment is abrogated, the criminality ceases. In the reason of the thing, from every point of view, there can be no doubt of the correctness of this conclusion. Nevertheless, in applying the principle, certain discriminations become necessary.

(1) The pardon of the Executive, under the Constitution of the Nation, may be no protection against duplicate penal proceedings by some other branch of the government; does the privilege then continue?[1] This ought to depend upon whether the liability has been practically, even though not technically, taken away:

1861, COCKBURN, C. J., in R. v. Boyes, 1 B. & S. 311, 325 (the witness was pardoned for bribery in election; by statute the witness was still liable to impeachment by the House of Commons): "It was contended that a bare possibility of legal peril was sufficient to entitle a witness to protect. . . . [But] we are of opinion that the danger to be apprehended must be real and appreciable, with reference to the ordinary operation of the law in the ordinary course of things, — not a danger of an imaginary and unsubstantial character, having reference to some extraordinary and barely possible contingency, so improbable that no reasonable man would suffer it to influence his conduct. We think that a merely remote and naked possibility, out of the ordinary course of the law and such as no reasonable man would be affected by, should not be suffered to obstruct the administration of justice. The object of the law is to afford to a party, called upon to give evidence in a proceeding 'inter alios,' protection against being brought by means of his own evidence within the penalties of the law. But it would be to convert a salutary protection into a means of abuse if it were to be held that a mere imaginary possibility of danger, however remote and improbable, was sufficient to justify the withholding of evidence essential to the courts of justice. Now in the present case no one seriously supposes that the witness runs the slightest risk of an impeachment by the House of Commons. . . . It was therefore the duty of the presiding judge to compel him to answer."

(2) The pardon may not protect against prosecution by another sovereignty for the same offence. Here, however, the act is in truth a different offence limitation-period for the crime had elapsed).

The same principle applies to a prior acquittal: 1898, Holt v. State, 39 Tex. Cr. 282, 45 S. W. 1016, 46 S.W. 829 (a witness previously acquitted of the present charge, compelled to answer that he had claimed his privilege on that trial).

[5] 1893, Southern R. N. Co. v. Russell, 91 Ga. 808, 18 S. E. 40; 1896, Lamson v. Boyden, 160 Ill. 613, 43 N. E. 781; 1846, Bank v. Henry, 2 Denio N. Y. 155, 160; 1847, Bank v. Henry, 1 N. Y. 83, 87, semble.

§ 2280. [1] The same question may arise with reference to the effect of a pardon upon private suits for penalties: Eng. 1870, R. v. Kinglake, 22 L. T. R. N. S. 335 (bribery being by statute subject to prosecution and also to an action for penalties, Cockburn, C. J., and Blackburn, J., doubted whether any privilege remained after the granting of a pardon and entering of a 'nolle pros.' by the Government); U. S. 1846, Bank v. Salina, 2 Denio N. Y. 155, 159 (usury penalties; cited post, § 2282).

under a different system of laws, — a foreign crime; and this question has been elsewhere examined (ante, § 2258).

(3) Is a prosecuting officer's promise of immunity equivalent to a pardon? Technically, and sometimes practically, it is not; morally, it is. If, therefore, the promise is so recorded as to give genuine immunity, the privilege has ceased.[2]

(4) Has a judge power to order a release from prosecution amounting to immunity? Assuredly, for the effect of a 'nolle prosequi' is on principle due to the judge's sanction.

(5) A pardon abrogates all legal consequences of the crime, but it cannot abrogate the social consequences, the disgrace. There may therefore remain, uninfringed, the independent privilege against disclosure of facts of disgrace or infamy.[3] But this privilege is not protected by the Constitution, never applied to any but "collateral" inquiries, and is to-day in many jurisdictions fallen into desuetude (ante, §§ 984, 987, 2255).

(6) Must a pardon be accepted, to be effective? No, on any sound theory of State power and function.[4]

§ 2281. Expurgation of Criminality: (e) by Legislative Amnesty, Indemnity, or Immunity; (1) Statutes granting Immunity from Prosecution for the Offence. If a statute passed on July 1 were to abolish the crime of liquor-

[2] 1914, Ex parte Muncy, 72 Tex. Cr. 541, 163 S. W. 29 (the relator, a boy of 12, was summoned before the grand jury inquiring into the death of the relator's father, who had been murdered, either by the boy or by his mother; the boy claimed privilege; the prosecuting attorney promised immunity, which promise the trial judge by order affirmed; the boy accepted and testified, incriminating his mother; later, on habeas corpus by the mother, the boy again refused, on the ground that he had revoked his acceptance of immunity; held (1) that the judge and prosecuting attorney had authority to guarantee immunity; (2) that the relator's later retraction was immaterial, because his original consent was immaterial; Davidson, J., diss.; elaborate opinions, with full examination of Texas precedents; the majority opinion of Harper, J., seems conclusive); 1922, Ex parte Copeland, — Tex. Cr. —, 240 S. W. 314 (Ku Klux inquiry; the district attorney tendered an order approved by the judge extending immunity, after the witness had claimed privilege; the witness refused to accept and continued to decline to answer; held that the offer of immunity was effective, and that the privilege ceased; valuable opinion by Lattimore, J.). Contra: 1896, Ex parte Irvine, 74 Fed. 945, 964 (because the promise merely gives an "equitable right" to future immunity, and is both conditional and uncertain); 1881, Temple v. Com., 75 Va. 892, 897 (a promise by the State's attorney not to prosecute is not sufficient). For the learning on this subject, see the Whiskey Cases, 99 U. S. 594 (1878).

For a nolle pros., as equivalent to an acquittal, see ante, § 2279.

But the party's failure to fulfil the condition on which the promise is made prevents the accrual of immunity: 1910, U. S. v. Grant, 18 P. I. 122, 168.

[3] 1861, R. v. Boyes, 1 B. & S. 311, 321.

Distinguish, moreover, the question whether a pardoned crime, being no longer a crime, is even relevant to discredit a witness: 1679, Reading's Trial, 7 How. St. Tr. 259, 296 (Oates, for the prosecution, was not allowed to be asked about a crime for which he had been pardoned, because the object was merely to discredit him as a witness, and a pardoned crime was not relevant for that purpose); and cases cited ante, § 985.

[4] Contra: 1915, Burdick v. U. S., 236 U. S. 79, 35 Sup. 267 (the appellant, a newspaper editor, was examined before a grand jury inquiring into alleged customs frauds; he claimed the privilege, was remanded, and was later re-called and tendered a Federal pardon for any offence committed in obtaining the information about which he had been asked; he refused the pardon, declined to answer, and sued out a writ of error for his commitment; held, following U. S. v. Wilson, 7 Pet. 150, that a pardon to be effective must be accepted, and that the offer of an unaccepted pardon did not overcome the privilege; enough here to note that all this learning about pardons is now quaint and anachronistic, judged by the standard of modern criminal philosophy).

selling or bribery or gambling, and declare that on and after the ensuing January 1 no person doing any of these things should be liable to punishment by the law, it is plain that a person doing any of them on January 1 could plead no privilege, although the doer of them on December 31 would retain his privilege. And yet the act itself, and the morality of it, would be identical on December 31 and January 1. Penality is the creation of the law, not an inherent attribute in the act itself. It may therefore be taken away by the law. The treasons and the criminal libels which filled English prisons two centuries ago are now non-existent, though the same acts are done as of yore. The privilege protects only against legal consequences of conduct; hence, the legal consequences lacking, the privilege does not exist for such conduct. Furthermore, legislation may remove criminality for a class of persons or an individual, as well as for a generic act. Finally, the removal of criminality may be conditioned on the happening of an event; and this event may equally be the doing of an act by the individual himself who is to obtain a benefit thereby.

1. A legislative provision, therefore, providing amnesty for an individual offender who shall disclose the facts of the offence upon inquiry is effective to remove the criminality of the offence, and the privilege thereby ceases as to him:

1853, SCOTT, J., in State v. Quarles, 13 Ark. 307, 310: "When this rule of the common law should have been so changed by legislative enactment, as to make unnecessary any appeal whatever on the part of the witness to his constitutional guarantee — as by regulations securing to him otherwise and effectually all that was guaranteed by the Bill of Rights — he could have no greater reason to complain than he would have had, had the law remained unchanged and under its operation he had never had any occasion to take shelter under the guarantee. And in such case, there would be no more ground upon which to suppose a want of competent power in the Legislature to make such regulations than there would be in case that body were to repeal the statute of gaming, and by this means deprive the gambler of his constitutional privilege to be accused and tried for a criminal offence, which has no longer existence. In either case, all that could be said would be, as to the gambler, that the Courts could not indulge him in the luxury of a constitutional accusation and trial, wherein he could display his skill in breaking through the meshes of the law, for the reason that he had committed no offence then known to the law. And as to the witness, that he could not be indulged with the arm of the law to prevent his being ravished of matters tending to a crimination of himself, for the reason that nothing that could be wormed out of him could possibly have that effect. In a word, in neither case, there being no invasion of right or privilege, could there be any place for vindication; and there being no encroachment upon any right retained by the citizen, and no pretence of any transgression of any of the higher powers delegated to the Legislature, such acts would be clearly without the pale of prohibition and within the scope of authority."

1878, SMITH, J., in State v. Nowell, 58 N. H. 314: "The legal protection of the witness against prosecution for crime disclosed by him is in law equivalent to his legal innocence of the crime disclosed. . . . The witness, regarded in law as innocent, if prosecuted for a crime which he has been compelled by statute to disclose, will stand as well as other innocent persons; and it was not the design of the common-law maxim, affirmed by the Bill of Rights, that he should stand any better. . . . He could plead and show that he had disclosed the same offence upon a lawful accusation against his principal, and thus make a perfect answer in bar or abatement of the prosecution against himself."

1894, HARRISON, J., in Ex parte Cohen, 104 Cal. 524, 530, 38 Pac. 364: "Any evidence that he may give under such a statutory direction will not be 'against himself,' for the reason that by the very act of giving evidence he becomes exempted from any prosecution or punishment for the offense respecting which his evidence is given. In such a case he is not compelled to give evidence which may be used against himself in any criminal case, for the reason that the Legislature has declared that there can be no criminal case against him which the evidence which he gives may tend to establish."

Such statutes, therefore, have for two centuries been the expedients resorted to for the investigation of many offences, chiefly those whose proof and punishment were otherwise practically impossible because of the criminal implication in the offence itself of all who could bear useful testimony.

Though doubtless the expedient was earlier employed,[1] the first notable instance (in 1725) was that of Lord Chancellor Macclesfield, whose traffic in the sale of offices and appointments was beyond the endurance even of a generation in which the spoils system and political venality were accepted as matters of course.[2] The next instance of note was the parliamentary investigation, in 1742, into the practices of Lord Orford (Robert Walpole), whose long prime-ministry was maintained by his cynical and notorious methods of political corruption.[3] The expediency and practical utility of this mode of obtaining evidence, may, as a measure of legislation, be open to argument.[4] But the tradition of it as a lawful method of annulling the privilege against self-crimination is unquestioned in English history.

The technical term originally in vogue in England for this removal of penal consequences was "indemnity." But the term "immunity," since about 1905, has become the customary term in the United States. The term is unfortunate, in the following respects: (a) "Immunity" signifies the beneficial result to the offender; "amnesty" signifies the sacrificial act on the part § 2281. [1] 1723, Bishop Atterbury's Trial, 16 How. St. Tr. 604 (here the witness was not summoned, because he was jointly concerned in the very treasons charged against the defendant and thus would have criminated himself, while the Bill acquitting him of any future prosecution for those treasons had passed the House but not received the royal assent; many lords dissented).

[2] 1725, Lord Chancellor Macclesfield's Trial, 16 How. St. Tr. 921, 1147 (illegal traffic in public offices; an act was passed to indemnify present Masters in Chancery for such malfeasance, and persons in that class were compelled to testify to such transactions, but former Masters and other officers were allowed to refuse to answer).

[3] The proceedings and debates will be found in Cobbett's Parliamentary History, vol. XII, pp. 625–734. (The form of the bill here provided that the witnesses, if they truly discovered, "are hereby freed, indemnified, and discharged of . . . all forfeitures, penalties, punishments, . . . which he, she, or they may incur or become subject to for or by reason or means of any matter or thing which he, she, or they, shall upon his or her or their being examined, as aforesaid, truly and faithfully discover . . . concerning the said enquiry").

[4] The arguments pro and con will be found in Cobbett, ubi supra, and in Hansard, Parl. Deb., 1st ser., VI, 401 (Lord Melville's case), and in the debates in Congress on the act of Jan. 24, 1857, now Rev. St. 1878, § 102 (Congr. Globe, Jan. 23, p. 434, Smith's Digest of Precedents of Privileges of Congress, 1894, pp. 151–190).

In 1806, in the debate on a similar bill to indemnify the witnesses against Lord Melville (Mr. Dundas), Lord Eldon, speaking against it (Hans. Parl. Deb., 1st ser., VI, 170) referred to Lord Hardwicke's opposition, sixty years before, to the other bill, and remarked that "that great man concluded his speech by observing 'that he would much rather be the object of such a bill than the author of it.' " of the State. These two meanings will here be strictly adhered to. (b) "Immunity" signifies the non-liability for the offence itself, "privilege" signifies the non-compellability to speak about the offence. By an immunity the offender's guilt ceases; under a privilege, it continues. This distinction is commonplace; but the failure to observe it, and the improper use of "immunity" and "privilege" as interchangeable terms, have rendered some judicial opinions needlessly obscure.

2. Singular as it may seem, there have been found occasionally those who disputed the legal effectiveness of such statutes under the Constitution. The general reasoning in support of the statutes has been set forth above; and it will suffice here to notice briefly the various opposing arguments:

(1) It has been urged that the disgrace or infamy of the offence remains indelibly, even after its criminality has been abolished, and that the privilege was meant to protect against this also. Enough has already been said in disposal of this argument (ante, § 2255).

(2) It has been urged that the act may also be a crime under another sovereignty, and that the amnesty of one Legislature cannot protect the offender against the use of his disclosures in a prosecution in the other sovereignty. This argument has also been dealt with in another place (ante, § 2258).[5]

(3) It has been suggested that the amnesty does not supervene except from and after the disclosure, and that therefore the fact disclosed is at that moment (though for the single instant only) still a crime, and therefore the privilege is at that moment still valid.[6] This bit of metaphysical quibbling will not command the support of healthy minds, especially where a great question of practical justice is at stake.

(4) Still another argument, and the only one bearing the semblance of a substance, urges that there is for the offender a practical burden in proving the amnesty which detracts from its absolute efficacy:

1896, SHIRAS, J., with GRAY and WHITE, JJ., dissenting, in Brown v. Walker, infra: "All that can be said is that the witness is not protected by the provision in question from being prosecuted, but that he has been furnished with a good plea to the indictment, which will secure his acquittal. But is that true? Not unless the plea is sustained by competent evidence. His condition, then, is that he has been prosecuted, been compelled presumably, to furnish bail, and put to the trouble and expense of employing counsel and furnishing the evidence to make good his plea. . . . Nor is it a matter of perfect assurance that a person who has compulsorily testified, before the commission, grand jury, or court, will be able, if subsequently indicted for some matter or thing concerning which he testified, to procure the evidence that will be necessary to maintain his plea. No provision is made in the law itself for the preservation of the evidence. Witnesses may die or become insane, and papers and records may be destroyed by accident or design."

[5] It has also been argued, but unsoundly, that the Legislature cannot in this manner infringe upon the Executive prerogative of pardon (Report of Senate Judiciary Committee 1876, by Senator Edmunds, answered by Senator Thurman in the minority report, 44th Cong. 1 sess. Sen. Rep. No. 253, reprinted in Smith's Digest of Precedents of Privileges of Congress, 1894, pp. 558–567).

[6] 1874, Turney, J., dissenting, in Hirsch v. State, Tenn., cited infra; the same judge makes much the same argument in State v. Warner, Tenn., cited infra.

A sufficient answer to this is that the argument would apply equally to a pardon (which for practical efficacy depends upon the preservation of records), to a judgment of acquittal (whose theoretical conclusiveness may be practically defeated by the loss of its record), and to all judicial and legislative acts, which, while in theory creating objective facts, may in practice never produce results because of the mutability of human affairs and of that substratum of contingencies which constantly defeats the most cherished dogmas of the law. A jury's verdict in theory establishes facts, and the law could never admit any other supposition; but the truth often remains untouched by a verdict. A judgment establishes a right; but the insolvency of the debtor or the exhaustion of the creditor's resources for litigation may leave the right as barren as the claim of Charles Stuart's descendant to the crown of England. The law has long ago decided to ignore this frequent contrast between its decrees and the realities. When justice has been done, on legal principles, it is out of the question for the law to stultify its general rules because the accidents of an individual's situation leave him a barren remedy. One could as well argue, because a judge might by error or malice compel a criminating disclosure, and because the witness thus wronged might not have the money to pursue his appeal or might lose by death or conflagration the proofs of the wrong, that therefore no witness should ever be compelled to answer against a claim of privilege whether that claim be right or wrong. Such a refined possibility of a contingency cannot deter a sane and practical justice from exercising its functions:

1896, Brown, J., in Brown v. Walker, 161 U. S. 591, 16 Sup. 644: "If the object of the provision be to secure the witness against a criminal prosecution, which might be aided directly or indirectly by his disclosure, then, if no such prosecution be possible, — in other words, if his testimony operate as a complete pardon for the offense to which it relates, — a statute absolutely securing to him such immunity from prosecution would satisfy the demands of the clause in question. . . . It can only be said, in general, that the clause should be construed, as it was doubtless designed, to effect a practical and beneficent purpose, — not necessarily to protect witnesses against every possible detriment which might happen to them from their testimony, nor to unduly impede, hinder, or obstruct the administration of criminal justice. . . . The same answer may be made to the suggestion that the witness is imperfectly protected by reason of the fact that he may still be prosecuted and put to the annoyance and expense of pleading his immunity by way of confession and avoidance. This is a detriment which the law does not recognize. There is a possibility that any citizen, however innocent, may be subjected to a civil or criminal prosecution, and put to the expense of defending himself; but, unless such prosecution be malicious, he is remediless, except so far as a recovery of costs may partially indemnify him. He may even be convicted of a crime, and suffer imprisonment or other punishment before his innocence is discovered; but that gives him no claim to indemnity against the State, or even against the prosecutor, if the action of the latter was taken in good faith, and in a reasonable belief that he was justified in so doing." [7]

[7] Compare the similar remarks in R. v. Boyes, quoted ante, § 2280, and in the opinion of Brown, J., in Hale v. Henkel, 201 U. S. 43, cited post, § 2282.

The view then, that such statutes, by expurgating the crime, remove the privilege, has prevailed wherever the question has been decided,[8] except in a single jurisdiction.[9]

In modern times the expedient has been resorted to, not for individual cases of misdoing (as originally), but rather for classes of crimes. Thus placed upon a sounder basis of policy, it has been vastly extended in its use.[10]

[8] Fed. 1895, Brown v. Walker, 70 Fed. 46, Buffington, J. (St. 1893, Feb. 11, held effective); on appeal, affirmed in 161 U. S. 591, 16 Sup. 644; 1904, Interstate Commerce Commission v. Baird, 194 U. S. 25, 24 Sup. 563 (order of the Circuit Court requiring production of certain contracts, etc., at the petition of the Commission in a complaint by the district attorney alleging violations of St. 1887, Feb. 4, as amended by St. 1893, Feb. 11, as to discriminations, etc., and asking for the enforcement of the statute by injunction to desist from the violations; the witness, an official of a defendant corporation, was ordered to produce, since the immunity of the statute would annul the privilege; Brown v. Walker followed); 1905, Jack v. Kansas, 199 U. S. 372, 26 Sup. 73 (following Brown v. Walker; accepting a decision of the Kansas Court which held sufficient the immunity of Kan. St. 1897, c. 265, § 10); 1905, Re Hale, 139 Fed. 496, 501, C. C. (under U. S. St. 1903, Feb. 19, the immunity produced by testimony "in any proceeding," etc., applies to testimony before a grand jury); 1906, Hale v. Henkel, 201 U. S. 43, 26 Sup. 370 (Brown v. Walker, supra, approved and followed without dissent; here applying the rule to testimony and documents obtained under the immunity-clause of U. S. St. 1903, Feb. 25, infra, n. 10); Cal. 1894, Ex parte Cohen, 104 Cal. 524, 528, 38 Pac. 364 (holding the election statute of 1893 effective); Ill. 1903, People v. Butler St. F. & I. Co., 201 Ill. 236, 66 N. E. 349 (St. 1893, June 20, §§ 7 a, 7 b, amending the anti-trust law, held not unconstitutional; the argument as to extra-territorial use of the disclosures, expressly repudiated; Brown v. Walker followed); Ind. 1877, Frazee v. State, 58 Ind. 8, 13 (gaming statute, held sufficient to annul the privilege); 1879, State v. Enochs, 69 Ind. 314, 316 (Frazee v. State approved; here a statute relating to trespasses on land was held defective); Kan. 1904, State v. Jack, 69 Kan. 387, 76 Pac. 911 (St. 1897, quoted infra, n. 10, exempting from prosecution for offences against the anti-trust law, effectually annuls the privilege); Ky. 1903, Weber v. Com., — Ky. —, 72 S. W. 30, semble (under St. 1897, May 20, § 10, Ky. Stats. § 1241 A, applying to lynching offences, the privilege is effectually annulled and an accomplice may be required to testify); N. H. 1878, State v. Nowell, 58 N. H. 314; N. C. 1904, Re Briggs, 135 N. C. 118, 47 S. E. 403 (Brown v. Walker followed, sanctioning the effectiveness of Cr. Code § 1215; Douglas, J., specially concurring with hesitation, and Walker, J., also specially concurring); Tex. 1851, Floyd v. State, 7 Tex. 215, 218 (gaming statute); Va. 1884, Kendrick v. Com., 78 Va. 490, 495, 497 (gaming statute barring prosecution, held to annul the privilege; Lacy, J., diss.); Wis. 1905, Murphy v. State, 124 Wis. 635, 102 N. W. 1087 (Brown v. Walker followed, applying Stats. 1898, § 4078, amended by St. 1901, c. 85, cited infra, n. 10).

To these should be added, by necessary implication, all the cases in the next section holding the other class of statutes effective.

[9] 1874, Hirsch v. State, 8 Baxt. Tenn. 89, 91 (statute giving immunity to witnesses before the grand jury, held constitutional; the effect being, "as to him, an abrogation of the offense"; Nicholson, C. J., and Turney, J., diss., on the ground that the abrogation followed the giving of testimony, and hence the privilege not to give it remained until it was given); 1884, State v. Warner, 13 Lea Tenn. 52, 58 (opinion by Turney, J.; preceding case repudiated, on the grounds given in the dissenting opinion there). The following similar ruling is now disposed of by Brown v. Walker: 1894, U. S. v. James, 60 Fed. 257 (St. 1893, Feb. 11, held not effective, on the chief ground that the disgrace-privilege remained undisposed of; the attempted appeal to history, citing no authorities, is totally unfounded; see ante, § 2255).

In the following cases the decision was avoided: 1896, Lamson v. Boyden, 160 Ill. 613, 43 N. E. 781 (a statute making the pardon conditional not merely on the discovery, but on repayment by the defendant; div. 1, § 137, of Crim. Code, held not effective without such repayment); 1901, Robson v. Doyle, 191 Ill. 566, 61 N. E. 435 (effect of Rev. St. c. 38, § 137, as abolishing the privilege, left undetermined).

[10] The following list of statutes covers both those which grant express and entire amnesty and those which merely prohibit the use of the compelled testimony; the constitutionality of the latter class is dealt with in the ensuing § 2283. After each statute are placed the decisions construing it on points not involving the general principle.

ENGLAND: 1842, St. 5 & 6 Vict. c. 39, § 6 (factors' liability; the agent committing the offence specified is not to be "convicted by any evidence whatsoever in respect of any act done by him, if he shall, at any time previously to his being indicted for such offence, have disclosed such act, on oath, in consequence of any compulsory process of any court of law or equity in any action, suit, or proceeding which shall have been 'bona fide' instituted by any party aggrieved," or on examination before a bankrupt commissioner); 1852, St. 15 & 16 Vict. c. 57, § 8 (in election inquiries as to corrupt practices, "no statement made by any person in answer to any question put by such commissioner shall, except in cases of indictment for perjury committed in such answers, be admissible in evidence in any proceeding civil or criminal"); 1861, St. 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, § 85 (like St. 5 & 6 Vict.; but substituting "charged" for "indicted," as to the time of disclosure, and adding "compulsory" under the last clause); 1863, St. 26 & 27 Vict. c. 29, § 7 (in election inquiries, no person shall be excused from answering on the ground of self-crimination; "provided always that where any witness shall answer every question relating to the matters aforesaid," when required, "and the answer to which may criminate or tend to criminate him," he shall be entitled to a certificate to that effect; and then, if any information, etc. be pending for any offence punishable under the election-acts, "committed by him previously to the time of his giving his evidence and at or in relation to the election concerning or in relation to which the witness may have been so examined, the Court shall, on production and proof of such certificate, stay the proceedings," and providing further as in St. 15 & 16 Vict.); 1883, St. 46 & 47 Vict. c. 52, § 17 (it shall be the bankrupt's duty "to answer all such questions as the Court may put or allow to be put to him"); 1890, St. 53 & 54 Vict. c. 71, § 27 (statement made by any person on compulsory examination in bankruptcy proceedings "shall not be admissible as evidence against that person" on charges of specified misdemeanors); St. 1905, 5 Edw. VII, c. 7, § 2 (investigation into corrupt transactions by war-contractors in South Africa; immunity clause similar to that of St. 1863 for a person making "a full and true disclosure," etc.); St. 1914, 4 & 5 Geo. V, c. 59, Bankruptcy, § 166 (like St. 1890, supra); 1824, Orme v. Crockford, 13 Price 376, 388 (statute on gaming); 1860, R. v. Charlesworth, 2 F. & F. 326, 332 (St. 15 & 16 Vict. c. 57); 1789, Bancroft v. Wentworth, 3 Brown Ch. C. 11 (stock-jobbing statute); 1870, R. v. Hulme, L. R. 5 Q. B. 377 (St. 26 & 27 Vict. c. 29); 1902, R. v. Pike, 1 K. B. 553 (statute applied; the bankrupt's "statement of affairs," not being made on an examination, held not within the immunity); and compare the bankruptcy rulings cited ante, § 2260.

CANADA: here compare also the statutes abolishing the privilege entirely (ante, § 2252); Dominion: R. S. 1906, c. 152, § 106 (in proceedings concerning elections relating to intoxicating liquors, the privilege is abolished, but no answer shall be used against the witness in any proceeding, except perjury, if the judge gives a certificate that the witness claimed this privilege and "made full and true answers to the satisfaction" of the judge); c. 8, §§ 25–27 (election offences; provision similar to Eng. St. 26 & 27 Vict.); c. 7, § 46 (similar to c. 152, § 106, supra); c. 146, § 642 (in gaming offences, the privilege is abolished; but one who "makes true disclosure to the best of his knowledge of all things as to which he is examined" shall receive a certificate, and be "freed from all criminal prosecutions and penal actions and from all penalties, forfeitures, and punishments to which he has become liable for anything done before that time in respect of the matters regarding which he has been examined"; the certificate to operate in stay of subsequent proceedings when produced and proved); c. 37, § 66 (Canada board of railway commissioners; privilege ceases for documentary evidence, but no document produced shall be used, etc.); St. 1893, c. 31, § 5, now c. 145, Evid. Act, § 5 ("No witness shall be excused from answering any question upon the ground that the answer to such question may tend to criminate him, or may tend to establish his liability to a civil proceeding at the instance of the Crown or of any person. 2. If with respect to any question a witness objects to answer upon the ground that his answer may tend to criminate him, or may tend to establish his liability to a civil proceeding at the instance of the Crown or of any person, and if but for this Act, or the act of any provincial legislature, the witness would therefore have been excused from answering such question, then although the witness is by reason of this Act, or by reason of such provincial act, compelled to answer, the answer so given shall not be used or receivable in evidence against him in any criminal trial, or other criminal proceeding against him thereafter taking place, other than a prosecution for perjury in the giving of such evidence"); St. 1920, 10 & 11 Geo. V, c. 46, § 93 (Dominion election offences and actions; privilege ceases, but no answer given after claim of privilege shall be used, etc., if the judge gives a certificate as in R. S. 1906, c. 8, supra);

Alberta: St. 1910, 2d Sess., c. 3, Evidence Act, § 7 (like Dom. Evid. Act, § 5, supra, except that the last clause gives immunity "in any civil proceeding or in any proceeding under any act or ordinance in force in Alberta");

British Columbia: Rev. St. 1911, c. 72, § 336 (electoral petitions; substantially like Ont. R. St. 1914, c. 10, § 49); §§ 297, 298 (corrupt electoral practices; like Eng. St. 1861); c. 78, § 5 (like Dom. Evidence Act, § 5); c. 127, § 182 (fraud in registration of land-title; no person shall be privileged by this act from discovery in any civil proceeding, "but no such affidavit shall be admissible against any such person in evidence in any penal proceeding"); c. 81, § 75 (Factories Act offences; cited ante, § 488); St. 1912, 2 Geo. V, c. 17, § 6 (Forest Board; witness not to be privileged, but no answer made shall be admissible in evidence in any proceeding, except for perjury);

Manitoba: Rev. St. 1913, c. 117, § 194 (privilege abolished for others than the defendant, in offences under the liquor act; but the evidence shall not be used against him in any prosecution); c. 65, § 5 (privilege ceases for answers tending to criminate or to establish "liability to a civil proceeding at the instance of the Crown or of any other person"; but "no evidence so given shall be used" against him in any later proceeding); St. 1916, c. 125, § 83 (temperance act; privilege ceases as to every person, other than the defendant or his wife, examined as a witness, on facts "tending to subject him to any penalty imposed by this Act"; but his testimony shall not be used, etc.);

New Brunswick: Consol. St. 1903, c. 127, § 8 (privilege abolished in civil proceedings and trials for violation of a statute of this province or for a penalty imposed by its law; but "no evidence so given shall be used or receivable in evidence" in any proceeding, except perjury); St. 1905, c. 7, § 41 (offences under the Factory Act; defendant's privilege abolished; quoted ante, § 488); St. 1911, 1 Geo. V, c. 11, §§ 15, 16 (elections; certificate of full disclosure to protect a witness; like Ont. Rev. St. c. 10, § 49); St. 1916, c. 20, Prohibition Act, § 133 (like Man. St. 1916, c. 125, § 83); § 171 (intoxicated person may be compelled to disclose source of liquor; privilege ceases but "the answers so given shall not be used," etc.);

Newfoundland: Consol. St. 1916, c. 3, § 111 (election inquiries; like Ont. Rev. St. c. 10, § 49); § 125 (parties, etc., to be compellable, in civil actions for election penalties or damages, but such evidence is not to be thereafter used against them in any criminal proceeding under this chapter); § 156 (privilege abolished, in election inquiries, for matters tending to criminate under this chapter); c. 2, § 11 (legislative inquiries; privilege is the same as in a court of justice);

Nova Scotia: Rev. St. 1900, c. 5, § 113 (in election offences, privilege abolished; but no answer given after such claim "shall be used in any proceeding" against him); c. 6, § 36 (similar, for controverted elections); c. 100, § 163 (similar, for offences concerning the sale of intoxicating liquors; except for the person charged); St. 1902, c. 31, adding § 79 (a) to Rev. St. c. 72 (similar, for municipal elections); St. 1913, c. 37 (inserting a new § 45a in Rev. St. 1900, c. 163, Evidence Act; the new section is identical with Dom. St. 1893, c. 31, § 5, as amended by St. 1898, c. 53); St. 1918, c. 8, Temperance Act, § 45 (liquor offences; privilege ceases for offences under this Act; but on claim made and answer compelled, "the answer so given shall not be used," etc.);

Northwest Terr. 1906, R. v. Van Metre, 7 N. W. Terr. 297 (Dom. Evid. Act, § 5, applied to admit answers made without claim of privilege on an examination in aid of execution);

Ontario: Rev. St. 1914, c. 10, § 49 (election contests; privilege ceases, but "a witness who answers truly all questions which he is required by the election Court to answer" shall be given a certificate to that effect, and "any such answer . . . shall not be admissible in evidence"; on any prosecution for an electoral offence committed before the date of the certificate, the proceedings shall be stayed on production of the certificate); c. 76, § 7 ("(1) A witness shall not be excused from answering any question upon the ground that the answer may tend to criminate him, or may tend to establish his liability to a civil proceeding at the instance of the Crown or of any person or to a prosecution under any Act of this Legislature; (2) If, with respect to any question, a witness objects to answer upon any of the grounds mentioned in subsection 1, and if, but for this section or any Act of the Parliament of Canada, he would therefore have been excused from answering such question, then, although the witness is by reason of this section or by reason of any Act of the Parliament of Canada compelled to answer, the answer so given shall not be used or receivable in evidence against him in any civil proceeding or in any proceeding under any Act of this Legislature"); St. 1916, c. 50, Temperance Act, § 50 (where the magistrate sees fit, he may "by certificate in such behalf exempt such witness from prosecution," with certain exceptions); 1904, Attorney-General v. Toronto J. R. Club, 7 Ont. L. R. 248 (using premises as a betting-house; on motion for production of documents by the defendant's president, held that the privilege applied, under Ont. Rev. St. 1897, c. 73, § 5, quoted ante, § 2252, and that Can. Dom. St. 1893, c. 31, § 5, as amended in 1898 and 1901, quoted supra in this note, was not applicable in Ontario); 1906, Chambers v. Jaffray, 12 Ont. L. R. 377 (claim of privilege by a defendant in libel resisting discovery; St. 1904, c. 10, § 21, now R. S. c. 76, § 7, held to apply to parties in such situation, and not only to ordinary witnesses, so as to take away the privilege); 1917, Re Ginsberg, 38 D. L. R. 261 (fraud of creditors under Ont. R. S. 1914, c. 134; under Can. Evid. Act, 1906, § 5, subsec. 1, and Ont. Evid. Act, 1914, § 7, the privilege has been abrogated); 1921, R. v. Barnes, 61 D. L. R. 345 (an automobile driven by B. killed R. on Sept. 19; at a coroner's inquest held Oct. 2, B. was summoned as a witness to the inquest; meanwhile, in an adjacent county, on Sept. 27, he had been committed by a magistrate for trial on a charge of manslaughter; at the inquest, he claimed privilege, on the ground that Can. Evid. Act,

§ 5 did not apply to him at the inquest, by reason of his being already an accused in the other county; this claim was rejected by the Supreme Court, the several judges differing in part in their distinctions);

Prince Edward Island: St. 1910, c. 3, § 46 (election trials; witness compeliable, but no answer made after claim of privilege "shall be used in any criminal proceeding against any such person," except for perjury, if the trial judge gives a certificate that claim was made and full and true answer given); St. 1918, c. 1, § 140 (liquor offences; privilege ceases for an intoxicated person, as in Man. St. 1916, c. 20, § 171); § 115 (like N. Sc. St. 1918, c. 8, § 45);

Saskatchewan: Rev. St. 1920, c. 44, § 31 (similar to Ont. Rev. St. c. 76, § 7); c. 194, § 4 (liquor offences; privilege ceases for "an interdicted person," but a witness who "makes true disclosure to the best of his knowledge" shall receive a certificate and "be freed from all prosecutions . . . for anything done before that time under the provisions of § 95 in respect of the matters regarding which he has been examined"); St. 1920, c. 28, § 1 (amending Evid. Act, R. S. c. 44, § 29, as to compelling the party's or spouse's testimony; quoted ante, § 488); 1913, Bartleman v. Moretti, Sask. S. C., 9 D. L. R. 805 (the Canada Evidence Act, § 5, identical with Sask. Evid. Act, Rev. St. c. 60, § 27, "entirely displaces and removes the reason for not ordinarily allowing discovery in actions for the recovery of penalties"; here, a forfeiture of money paid under a land contract);

Yukon: Consol. Ord. 1914, c. 56, § 12, St. 1920, c. 9, § 20 (liquor offences; like Man. Rev. St. 1913, c. 117, § 194); ib. § 117 (liquor offences; provision similar to Dom. Rev. St. c. 146, § 642).

UNITED STATES: Federal: Rev. St. 1878, § 859, Code § 1359 ("No testimony given by a witness before either House, or before any committee of either House of Congress, shall be used as evidence in any criminal proceeding against him in any court," except for perjury; "but an official paper or record produced by him is not within the said privilege"); St. 1887, Feb. 1, c. 104, § 9, 24 Stat. 379 (in any action against a common carrier for damage under this statute, the privilege is not to excuse from testimony; "but such evidence or testimony shall not be used against such person on the trial of any criminal proceeding"); § 12 (similar, for investigations by the Interstate Commerce Commission); St. 1891, Feb. 10, c. 128, amending St. 1887, Feb. 4, c. 104, § 12 (upon investigations by the Interstate Commerce Commission, where the aid of the circuit court is required to obtain testimony, "the claim that any such testimony or evidence may tend to criminate the person giving such evidence shall not excuse such witness from testifying; but such evidence or testimony shall not be used against such person on the trial of any criminal proceeding"); St. 1893, Feb. 11, c. 83, 27 Stat. 443, now Code § 7034 (passed in consequence of the decision in Counselman v. Hitchcock, post, § 2282; "No person shall be excused from attending and testifying or from producing books, papers, tariffs, contracts, agreements and documents before the Interstate Commerce Commission, or in obedience to the subpœna of the commission, whether such subpœna be signed or issued by one or more commissioners, or in any cause or proceeding, criminal or otherwise, based upon or growing out of any alleged violation of the act of Congress, entitled 'an act to regulate commerce,' approved Feb. 4, 1887, or of any amendment thereof, on the ground or for the reason that the testimony or evidence, documentary or otherwise, required of him may tend to criminate him or subject him to a penalty or forfeiture. But no person shall be prosecuted or subjected to any penalty or forfeiture for or on account of any transaction, matter or thing concerning which he may testify or produce evidence, documentary or otherwise, before said commission, or in obedience to its subpœna, or the subpœna of either of them, or in any such case or proceeding: Provided, that no person so testifying shall be exempt from prosecution and punishment for perjury committed in so testifying"); St. 1898, July 1, c. 541, § 7, 30 Stat. 548, Code § 8790 (a bankrupt shall "submit to an examination" concerning all matters affecting the settlement; "but no testimony given by him shall be offered against him in any criminal proceeding"); St. 1903, Feb. 14, c. 552, Code § 7091 (Federal Trade Commission, succeeding to the powers of the corporations commissioner; privilege ceases, but "no natural person shall be prosecuted," etc.); St. 1914, Sept. 26, Federal Trade Commission, § 9, Code § 7091 (no person shall be excused, etc.; "but no natural person shall be prosecuted" for any matter "concerning which he may testify . . . before the commission in obedience to a subpœna issued by it," except for perjury); St. 1916, Sept. 7, c. 451, § 29, Code § 8044 (vessels in domestic commerce; before the Shipping Board, "no person shall be excused on the ground that it may tend to incriminate him" etc. "but no natural person shall be prosecuted" etc. "for or on account of any transaction, matter or thing as to which, in obedience to a subpœna and under oath, he may so testify," etc., except for perjury); St. 1917, Feb. 14, c. 53, § 16, Code § 3873 (liquor in Alaska; "no person shall be excused" etc., but "the testimony given by such person shall in no case be used against him"; but no legislative draftsman should be excused for employing this ineffective formula); St. 1919, Oct. 28, tit. II, § 30, National Prohibition Act (privilege not to apply "in any suit or proceeding based upon or growing out of any alleged violation of this Act"; but "no natural person shall be prosecuted" for any matter "as to which in obedience to a subpœna and under oath he may so testify," etc.); St. 1920, Feb. 28, § 415 (Interstate Commerce Act amended; reproducing the former language); St. 1920, Feb. 28, § 310 (Transportation Act; before the Railroad Labor Board no person shall be excused on the ground of this privilege; but "no natural person shall be prosecuted . . . [for any matter] as to which in obedience to subpœna and under oath he may so testify" etc.; except for perjury therein); Code § 9708 (tariff commission; privilege ceases; but "no natural person shall be prosecuted" etc. for testimony given "in obedience to a subpœna and under oath"); Code § 10702 (white slave traffic; privilege ceases for statement required to be filed with commissioner general of immigration; but "no person shall be prosecuted," etc.);

Alabama: Const. 1901, Art. VIII, § 189 (contested elections; privilege ceases for other persons than an accused in a criminal prosecution: but "such person shall not be prosecuted for any offense arising out of the transactions concerning which he testified," except perjury); Code 1907, § 6994 (privilege ceases for a witness before the grand jury for offences within twelve months; "but no witness must be prosecuted for any offense as to which he testified before the grand jury"); § 5674 (State railroad commission; privilege ceases, but "no person shall be prosecuted," etc.); § 2226 (State tax commission; privilege ceases, "but no person shall be prosecuted," etc., for testimony before the commission "in obedience to its subpœna"); § 3738 (creditors' bills for discovery; no answer made "can be read in evidence against the defendant on an indictment for any fraud charged in the bill"); § 7693 (railroad passes; witness before grand jury compellable, but "no witness shall be prosecuted," etc.); St. 1909, No. 191, Spec. Sess. p. 63, Aug. 25, § 12 (liquor prohibition; witnesses compellable before the grand jury, "but a witness must not be prosecuted for any offense as to which he testifies before the grand jury"); § 15 (no agent or principal, etc., shall be excused by reason of the privilege from testifying against principal or agent, etc., but no such testimony "shall in any manner in any prosecution be used as evidence directly or indirectly against him," nor shall he be "thereafter prosecuted for any offense so disclosed by him"); § 21, par. 13 (similar, for a person testifying in any proceeding for seizure of liquors, "excepting one who answers claiming some right, title, or interest in the liquors so seized"); § 29½ (similar blanket clause for any person "who testifies with respect to any unlawful act under this statute," etc.); St. 1911, No. 259, p. 249, Apr. 6, § 32 (dispensary liquor law; like § 12 of St. 1909); St. 1911, No. 479, p. 421, Apr. 4, § 29 (primary elections; answer compellable as to an illegal vote, and "if he make full true answers which may tend to criminate him, he shall not be prosecuted for voting at such election"); St. 1915, No. 2, p. 8, § 12 (intemperance; privilege ceases for witnesses before grand jury, but "a witness must not be prosecuted for any offense as to which he testifies"); § 15 (privilege ceases for clerk, etc., testifying against a principal, "but no testimony so given shall be used, etc., nor shall the party testifying be thereafter prosecuted," etc.); St. 1915, No. 78, p. 218, § 41 (primary elections; a witness voting illegally, "if he make full true answers which may tend to criminate him," shall not be prosecuted for illegal voting); St. 1915, No. 464, p. 386, § 102 (tax inquiries; privilege ceases, but "no person shall be prosecuted," etc.);

Alaska: Comp. L. 1913, § 2106 (white slave traffic; privilege ceases, but "no person shall be prosecuted," etc.); St. 1917, Apr. 26, c. 6, § 5 (legislative investigations; "any person who is called as a witness . . . and refuses to answer any question . . . on the ground that the answer . . . may tend to criminate himself, may be granted immunity from punishment for the offence" under inquiry, and "such witness may then be compelled to answer," etc.); St. 1919, c. 56, § 1 (gambling offences; privilege ceases, but "no indictment or prosecution shall afterwards be brought," etc.); St. 1919, c. 46, § 27 (insurance rebates; privilege ceases, but "no person shall be prosecuted," etc.);

Arizona: Const. 1910, Art. II, § 19 (bribery and illegal rebating; privilege ceases, but "no person shall be prosecuted," etc.); Rev. St. 1913, P. C. § 204 (duelling offences; privilege ceases, but "no evidence given upon any examination of a person so testifying shall be received against him in any criminal prosecution or proceeding"); § 339 (gaming offences; privilege ceases, "but no prosecution can afterwards be had against him for any offense concerning which he testified"); § 14 (wherever in this Code it is provided that "evidence obtained upon the examination of a person as a witness cannot be received against him in any criminal proceeding." this does not forbid use in a prosecution for perjury); § 88 (obtaining money on promise to influence legislation; privilege ceases, but "such testimony shall not afterwards be used," etc.); § 589 (trusts and monopolies; privilege ceases, but the witness "shall not be liable to criminal prosecution," etc., nor shall the evidence be used against him, etc.); Civ. C. § 39 (legislative hearings; privilege ceases, but no person examined can be "held to answer criminally," nor can any statement made be competent evidence, etc.); § 2331 (State corporation commission; privilege ceases, but "no person shall be prosecuted," etc., for any testimony under oath);

Arkansas: Const. 1874, Art. III, § 9 ("In trials of contested elections and in proceedings for the investigation of elections, no person shall be permitted to withhold his testimony on the ground that it may criminate himself or subject him to public infamy; but such testimony shall not be used against him in any judicial proceeding, except for perjury in giving such testimony"); Dig. 1919, § 1005 (actions for personal injury against railroads; privilege ceases for defendant's agents, etc., but "such evidence or testimony shall not be used," etc.); §§ 1687, 1688 (State corporation commission; privilege ceases, but "such witness shall not be prosecuted," etc.); § 2655 (dealing in futures; privilege ceases, but "any discovery made . . . shall not be used," etc., "and he shall be altogether released from punishment," etc.); § 6178 (liquor offences; privilege ceases, but "no disclosure or discovery made by such person is to be used," etc.);

California: P. C. 1872, § 89 (obtaining money to influence a legislative vote; the privilege ceases for a witness "testifying as such," "but such testimony shall not afterwards be used against him in any judicial proceeding," except for perjury); § 232 (unlawful duel or challenge; the privilege ceases; "but no evidence given on any examination of a person so testifying shall be received against him in any criminal prosecution or proceeding"); § 334 (gaming; the privilege ceases for a witness "testifying as such"; "but no prosecution can afterwards be had against him for any offense concerning which he testified"); Pol. C. § 304 ("No person sworn and examined before either house of the Legislature or any committee thereof can be held to answer criminally or be subject to any penalty or forfeiture for any fact or act touching which he is required to testify; nor is any statement made or paper produced by any such witness competent evidence in any criminal proceeding against such witness"; except on a charge of perjury); P. C. 1872, § 1324, as amended by St. 1907, Mar. 19, p. 671, § 10 (applicable to an offender "against any law of this State"; "If such person demands that he be excused from testifying . . . on the ground that his testimony . . . may incriminate himself, he shall not be excused, but in that case the testimony so given . . . shall not be used in any prosecution or proceeding, civil or criminal, against the person so testifying, except for perjury in giving such testimony, and he shall not thereafter be liable to prosecution by indictment, information, or presentment, nor to prosecution or punishment for the offence with reference to which his testimony was given . . . No person shall be exempt from indictment, presentment by information, prosecution or punishment for the offence with reference to which he may have testified as aforesaid, . . . when such person so testifying . . . fails to ask to be excused from testifying . . . on the ground that his testimony . . . may incriminate himself, but [sic? and] in all such cases the testimony so given may be used in any prosecution or proceeding, civil or criminal, against the person so testifying. Any person shall be deemed to have asked to be excused from testifying . . . under this section, unless, before any testimony is given . . . by such witness, the judge, foreman or other person presiding at such trial, hearing, proceeding or investigation shall distinctly read this section . . . to such witness, and the form of the objection by the witness shall be immaterial if he in substance makes objection that his testimony . . . may incriminate himself, and he shall not be obliged to object to each question, but one objection shall be sufficient to protect such witness from prosecution for any offence concerning which he may testify . . . upon such trial, hearing, proceeding or investigation"); §14 (code provisions abolishing privilege but forbidding use of testimony "do not forbid such evidence being proved . . . upon a charge of perjury" therein); § 64 (crimes against elective franchise; privilege ceases, but "no prosecution can afterwards be had against such witness for any such offense concerning which he testified for the prosecution"); St. 1907, p. 984, Mar. 23, § 6 (illegal trusts; privilege ceases, but "no individual shall be prosecuted" etc.); St. 1911, c. 14, p. 18, Dec. 23, § 55 (public utilities commission; witnesses to be compellable, but no person shall be prosecuted etc. for "any act, transaction, matter, or thing concerning which he shall under oath have testified or produced documentary evidence," except for perjury, and except that this shall be construed "as in any manner giving to any public utility immunity of any kind"); St. 1913, Apr. 23, p. 115, § 55, par. d (State public utilities commission; privilege ceases, but "no person shall be prosecuted" etc., except for perjury; "nothing herein contained shall be construed as in any manner giving to any public utility immunity of any kind"); St. 1913, June 13, p. 1035, No. 606, § 5 (State civil service commission; privilege ceases, but no person shall be prosecuted for any matter on which he has testified, etc.; nothing is to give "to any person immunity of any kind otherwise than is herein expressly provided"); St. 1915, June 7, p. 1272, § 2 (misrepresentation of terms of insurance policy; privilege ceases, but no person shall be prosecuted "for any act concerning which he shall be compelled to testify," except perjury therein); 1901, Bradley v. Clark, 133 Cal. 196, 65 Pac. 395 (St. 1893, § 32, construed);

Colorado: Const. 1876, Art. VII, § 9 (like Ark. Const. Art. III, § 9, for contested elections and electoral offences); Comp. L. 1921, § 7801 (testimony in election contests as to a witness not being a qualified voter; "no part of his testimony shall be used against him in any criminal prosecution," except for perjury); § 6829 (publishing as a coward or challenging to a duel; the publisher or printer is compellable, but "the testimony given by any such witness shall in no case be used in any prosecution against such witness"); Comp. L. 1921, § 7843 (in election offences, the privilege ceases, but "the testimony so given shall not be used in any prosecution or proceeding, civil or criminal, against the person so testifying," except for perjury; and "a person so testifying shall not thereafter be liable to indictment, prosecution, or punishment, for the offense with reference to which his testimony was given, and may plead or prove the giving of testimony accordingly, in bar of such indictment or prosecution"); § 7834 (corrupt practices act; same provision); § 2988 (State railroad commission; privilege ceases, "but such evidence or testimony shall not be used," etc.); § 4043 (trust offences; privilege ceases, but "no individual shall be prosecuted," etc.); § 6846 (pimping; privilege ceases, but "the testimony so given shall not thereafter be used," etc., and "the person so testifying shall not thereafter be liable to indictment," etc., and may plead or prove the fact in bar); § 7350 (State tax commission; privilege ceases, "but no person having so testified shall be prosecuted," etc.); C. C. P. 1921, § 67 ("no pleading can be used in a criminal prosecution as evidence of a fact admitted or alleged in such pleading");

Connecticut: Gen. St. 1918, § 6315 (on a prosecution for improper conduct with a jury, full disclosure is compellable, "which shall not be used against him"); § 6635 (no one to be excused, in cases of election-bribery, on the ground of disgrace or self-crimination, but he shall not "be prosecuted for anything connected with the transaction about which he shall so testify," nor shall "the evidence he may so give be used against him in any proceeding whatever"); § 4805 (defendant's evidence in an action for gaming-losses is not to be "offered against him in any criminal prosecution"); § 6475 (a person summoned for the prosecution on a charge of illegal gaming is not to be excused on the ground of disgrace and self-crimination, but he shall not be prosecuted "for anything connected with the transaction about which he shall so testify"); § 3001 (witness for a prosecution for an unlawful exhibition is not to be prosecuted "for anything about which he shall have so testified"); § 2813 (selling liquor to disqualified person; privilege ceases for buyer and for seller, but no testimony so given shall be used, etc.; nor shall the witness be prosecuted, etc.); § 4121 (discrimination in life insurance; privilege ceases, but no person shall be prosecuted "for any act concerning which he shall be compelled" to testify, except for perjury); § 4122 (premium rebates, etc.; similar to the foregoing); § 3618 (public service commission's inquiry; privilege ceases; but "if any witness objects" on this ground, and the commission "direct such witness to testify . . . and he complies, or he be compelled to do so by order of court," then he shall not be prosecuted, etc.); § 5032 (fiduciary examined in probate court; privilege ceases for fraud, but the answer shall not be used, etc.); § 5522 (general provision; quoted ante, § 2252); § 5767 (privilege protects in a party's answers on discovery); § 5984 (insolvent debtor; privilege ceases for fraud, etc., but his answers shall not be used, etc.); § 6446 (bribery of business agent, and commercial graft; privilege ceases, but no person shall be liable for any offense concerning which he may testify etc. "before said court or in obedience to its subpœna");
Delaware: Const. 1897, Art. V, § 7 (electoral offenses; privilege ceases, but "such testimony shall not afterwards be used" etc., except for perjury);
Florida: Rev. G. S. 1919, § 4656 (State railroad commissioners' investigations; privilege ceases, but "such testimony shall not be used against him," etc.); § 4990 (combination to control meat prices, etc.; privilege ceases, but "no such person shall be prosecuted," etc.); § 5353 (bribery of officials; privilege abolished for the briber; "but if he does testify, nothing said by him in his testimony shall be admissible in evidence in any civil or criminal action against him"); § 6017 (bribery, burglary, larceny, gaming, and liquor offences; privilege abolished, but "no person shall be prosecuted or subjected to any penalty or forfeiture, for or on account of any transaction, matter or thing concerning which he may so testify or produce evidence, documentary or otherwise, and no testimony so given or produced shall be received against him upon any criminal investigation or proceeding"); § 5478 (liquor offences; privilege ceases, but "any person who shall so testify . . . shall not be prosecuted," etc., and the evidence shall not be used, etc.); § 5683 (dealing in margins; privilege ceases, but "any discovery . . . shall not be used" etc. and "he shall be altogether pardoned," etc.); § 5729 (trusts and combinations; "any person so summoned and examined shall not be liable to prosecution," etc.); § 5738 (insurance discrimination; privilege ceases, but "no person shall be prosecuted," etc.); § 5741 (illegal issuance of insurance stock; privilege ceases, but "no person [who] shall be compelled so to testify [shall be prosecuted]," etc.; the vital words are omitted); Georgia: Rev. C. 1910, § 2636 (in complaints of illegal rates by common carriers, certain persons are compellable by the railroad commission to testify; the commission shall first make an order that he is required, and "that he is exempt thereafter from indictment or prosecution for any transaction about which he is so compelled to testify; when such order is made, the witness shall be compelled to give evidence touching such complaints, and he shall be forever free from indictment or prosecution in any court of this State touching the matters about which he is compelled to testify"); § 2637 (a witness thus exonerated by the Commission shall be compellable to testify in any suit or prosecution in the State Courts for those transactions); § 4260 (illegal contracts for sale on future delivery; privilege ceases, but "any discovery . . . shall not be used" etc., and "he shall be altogether pardoned of the offence"); P. C. 1910, § 665 (in election offences, any offender not on trial shall be competent and compellable; "and nothing then said by such witness shall at any time be received or given in evidence against him in any prosecution" except for perjury therein); § 120 (interfering with apprentices; privilege ceases, but "no statements made by him on such trial shall be given in evidence" etc.); § 404 (gaming; "any other person who may have played and bet at the same time" is compellable; but "nothing then said by such witness" shall be received against him, etc.); § 676 (vote-buying at primaries; any person not the accused is compellable, as in P. C. § 404); 1895, Henderson v. State, 95 Ga. 326, 22 S. E. 537 (the exemption of Code 1882, § 4545, Code 1895, § 404, does not apply to the new sections 4549 b and c against lotteries);

Hawaii: Rev. L. 1915, § 3010 (bastardy; the mother to be compellable, "but no prosecution shall afterwards be had against her" for any matter testified to); § 1203 (bank examiner's inquiry; privilege ceases, but "no prosecution can afterwards be had," etc.); § 2228 (public utilities commission; privilege ceases, but "no person shall be prosecuted," etc., for anything "concerning which he shall under oath" give evidence); § 3886 (offense of footbinding; privilege ceases, but the witness "shall not be prosecuted," etc.); § 4182 (gambling offences; privilege ceases, but "no prosecution can afterwards be had," etc.); § 4184 (action to recover money lost at betting, etc.; privilege ceases for persons other than the parties, but "the testimony of any such person shall not be used," etc.);

Idaho: Comp. St. 1919, § 103 ("no statement made" in testimony before the Legislature or a committee thereof "is competent evidence in any criminal proceeding against such witness," but this is not to exempt from prosecution for perjury); § 8244 (the privilege ceases on prosecution for duelling offences; "but no evidence given . . . shall be received against him in any criminal prosecution or proceeding"); § 8081 (wherever evidence under these sections is forbidden to be used, the prohibition does not extend to a charge of perjury in such testimony); § 8313 (in gambling offences, the privilege ceases; "but no prosecution can afterwards be had against him for any offence concerning which he testified"); § 8145 (bribery; no person testifying for the State is to be excused, but "no person shall be prosecuted or punished on account of any transaction, manner [sic? matter], or thing concerning which he may be so required to testify or produce evidence," except for perjury therein); § 2639 (liquor prosecutions; witness compellable, "but no person shall be prosecuted or punished on account of any transaction or matter or thing concerning which he shall be compelled to testify," nor shall his testimony be used, etc.); § 2483 (State public utilities commission; privilege ceases, but no person so testifying shall be exempt from prosecution; and this shall not be construed "as in any manner giving to any public utility immunity of any kind"); § 2547 (anti-trust law; privilege ceases, but no person shall be prosecuted for any matter concerning which he may testify, except for perjury in testifying); § 5036 (insurance offences; privilege ceases, but no person shall be prosecuted, etc., and no testimony so given shall be received against him);

Illinois: Rev. St. 1874, c. 38, § 35 (when in a grand jury investigation or on the trial of bribery offences it appears to the Court that a person not charged is "a material and necessary witness," and that "his testimony would tend to criminate himself," the Court may order "that such witness be released from all liability to be prosecuted or punished on account of any matter to which he shall be required to testify," and privilege shall then cease, and if he testifies such order shall be a bar to any prosecution, etc., "for such matter"); § 137 (in proceedings for illegal gaming, "all persons shall be obliged and compelled to answer upon oath" a bill of discovery for the sums won; "upon the discovery and repayment of the money or other thing so to be discovered and repaid, the person who shall discover and repay the same, as aforesaid, shall be acquitted, indemnified, and discharged from any other or further punishment, forfeiture, or penalty," etc.); c. 63, § 6 ("the testimony of a witness examined and testifying" before either house of the General Assembly, or a committee or joint committee thereof, "shall not be used as evidence in any criminal proceedings against such witness in any court of justice," but no official paper produced shall be regarded as within the privilege "so [as] to protect such witness from any criminal proceeding as aforesaid," and no exemption is secured from punishment for perjury); St. 1891, June 11, p. 206, as amended by St. 1897, July 1, p. 298, §§ 7 a, 7 b (the Secretary of State shall by letter of inquiry to the officer of each corporation doing business in this State "require an answer under oath" as to membership in any combination, etc., made criminal by §§ 3 and 4; on refusal or failure to make such oath, a penalty of $50 for each day is incurred; provided "that no corporation, firm, association, or individual, shall be subject to any criminal prosecution by reason of anything truthfully disclosed by the affidavit required by this act or truthfully disclosed in any testimony elicited in the execution thereof"); St. 1915, June 22, p. 371, § 4 (abatement of prostitution nuisance; privilege ceases, but the answer "shall not be used against him," etc., "nor shall he be prosecuted," etc.);

Indiana: Burns' Ann. St. 1914, §§ 2112, 7551, 7552 (the privilege ceases for a witness in gaming prosecutions; but "such evidence shall not be used against him in any prosecution for such or any other offense, and he shall not be liable to trial by indictment or information, or to punishment, for such offense"); § 2113 (same, for a witness "required to testify touching the commission of any misdemeanor"; but the testimony may be used for perjury therein); § 2126 (in a prosecution for having corrupt interest in public contract, the contractor is compellable to testify against the officer, and officer against contractor; but "such evidence shall not be used against the party testifying, in any prosecution against himself, and the person thus testifying shall be exempt from prosecution or punishment for such offense"); § 2129 ("The evidence of any person in any civil action disclosing fraud against creditors shall not be evidence against any such person or any criminal prosecution for committing such fraud"); § 1077 (admissions in answers in divorce are not to be "used as evidence" in any other case); § 5542 (privilege abolished for witnesses before the railroad commission; "the claim that any such testimony may tend to criminate the person giving it shall not excuse such witness from testifying, but such evidence or testimony shall not be used against such person on the trial of any criminal proceeding . . . nor shall any such witness so compelled to testify against himself be thereafter prosecuted," etc.); § 8656 (privilege abolished for witnesses before investigations by common councils, for offences under this act or ordinances thereunder; "but such testimony shall not be used against such witness in any criminal prosecution"); § 2556 (bribery at elections; a guilty person is compellable, "but such evidence shall not be used against him in any prosecution for such or any other offence growing out of the matters about which he testifies, and he shall not be liable to trial by indictment or information or punished for such offence"); § 3876 (anti-trust law, civil remedies; witness who is officer, etc., of corporation, to be compellable, but his "testimony shall not be used against such witness or party in any criminal prosecution"); § 7103 (primary elections; accomplice "informing and testifying shall not be thereafter prosecuted for his guilt in connection with the transaction"); § 7441*h* (State fire-marshal's powers; witness compellable, but "such evidence or testimony shall not be used," etc., nor shall such witness "be thereafter prosecuted for any crime concerning which he has been compelled to testify"); § 2646 (insurance company's contribution of money for political purposes; privilege ceases, but "no person shall be prosecuted," etc., and the testimony shall not be used, etc.); § 7111*n* (corrupt practices at elections; privilege ceases, but "his answer, or the thing produced by him" shall not be used, etc.); St. 1915, April 26, p. 523, § 9 (keeping house of ill-fame; prosecuting attorney and court "may grant immunity to any citizen called to testify in behalf of the prosecution"); St. 1917, April 2, p. 15, § 34 (liquor offences; witness called for the State "who shall give freely and truthfully" any testimony tending to incriminate "shall be immune from prosecution" as to any offense involved);
Iowa: Code 1897, § 4612, Comp. Code § 7319 (the privilege ceases for prosecutions for gaming, trusts, and liquor offences; "but any matter so elicited shall not be used against him, and said witness shall not be prosecuted for any crime connected with or growing out of the act on which the prosecution is based in the cause in which his evidence is used for the State under the provisions of this section"); § 3587, Comp. Code § 7230 (a verification of a pleading that might result in a criminating answer is not required); § 2131, Comp. Code § 5186 (in a statutory action against a common carrier, the privilege ceases for the agent, etc., of a corporation defendant, "but no person shall be prosecuted or subjected to any penalty or forfeiture for and on account of any transaction, matter, or thing concerning which he may testify or produce evidence," except for perjury therein); § 2399, Comp. Code § 934 (illegal liquor sales; the privilege ceases for seller and buyer as to documents and testimony, "but such oral evidence shall not be used against such person or witness on the trial of any criminal proceeding against him"); § 4075, Comp. Code § 7759 (in proceedings auxiliary to execution, the debtor must answer on oath, without privilege for answers that "will tend to convict him of a fraud, but his answers shall not be used as evidence against him in a prosecution for such fraud"); St. 1907, c. 73, § 3, Comp. Code § 5375 (political contributions by corporations; privilege denied, "and no person having so testified shall be liable," etc.); St. 1907, c. 112, § 3, Comp. Code § 5222 (railroad passes, privilege denied, "but no person having so testified shall be liable," etc.); c. 183, § 2, Comp. Code § 8956 (corrupt offers to agents, etc.; privilege denied, but "no person shall be liable to any criminal prosecution," etc.); St. 1913, c. 15, p. 20, April 17, Comp. Code § 683 (bids for public supplies; witnesses compellable, but not to be prosecuted); Comp. C. § 541 (corrupt practices at elections; privilege ceases, but "any matter so elicited shall not be used against him, and said witness shall not be prosecuted for any crime connected with or growing out of the act on which the prosecution is based in the cause in which his evidence is used for the State"; an original and ingenious phrasing, but equally futile with the others to define unmistakably the limits of immunity); § 591 (contested county elections; privilege ceases, but "no part of his testimony on that trial shall be used," etc.); §§ 1853, 1903 (State board of control; privilege ceases, but "no person shall be prosecuted," etc.); § 6238 (combinations, pools, and trusts; privilege ceases, but "such witness shall not be prosecuted," etc.); 1892, Parks v. Johnson, 86 Ia. 475, 53 N. W. 285 (exemption from the use of answers on a charge of debtor's "fraud," held not applicable to contempt proceedings);

Kansas: Gen. St. 1915, § 8133 (bribery or corruption at elections; no person testifying "shall be deemed to criminate himself, nor shall he be held to answer, . . . for any complicity on his part in the bribery or corruption concerning which he may testify"; except for a candidate for election or appointment); § 5511 (the privilege ceases on charges of liquor-law offences; but "the testimony given by such person shall in no case be used against him"); § 8138 (a witness against another in a gaming offence is compellable; "but he shall not be liable to punishment in any such case"); § 8395 (railroad rate inquiries by the railroad commissioners; the claim of privilege shall not be allowed, but the testimony "shall not be used against such person" in criminal trials, "nor shall he be liable to criminal prosecution for or on account of any transaction, matter, or thing concerning which he may so testify"); § 6421 (anti-trust laws, civil remedies; defendant compellable to answer, but answers shall not be used in a criminal prosecution, nor shall he be "liable to criminal prosecution for any offense about which his answers or books or papers produced would be evidential"); § 5504 (intoxicating liquors; witness compellable, but "no person shall be prosecuted" for any matter thus compelled to be testified to, and no such testimony shall be used against him); § 7614 (removal of public officers; like Gen. St. § 5504); § 8344 (public utilities commission; witnesses compellable, but "no person having so testified shall be prosecuted . . . on account of any transaction, matter, or thing concerning which he may have testified or produced any documentary evidence," except for perjury); § 3652 (gaming offences; privilege ceases, but no person shall be prosecuted, etc., except for perjury); § 3686 (obscene publications; testimony compellable on certain topics, but no testimony obtained shall be used etc., and this shall not require "any person prosecuted criminally under this law to testify against himself under such prosecution"); § 4276 (illegal voter is compellable to answer; "but no part of his testimony" shall be used etc.); § 5373 (fire insurance rate discrimination; privilege ceases, but no person shall be prosecuted, etc., except for perjury); § 6025 (legislative investigation; privilege ceases, but no such testimony shall be used etc., except for perjury); St. 1919, Feb. 24, c. 316, § 4 (trusts and monopolies; privilege ceases, but "no person shall be prosecuted," etc., "nor shall such testimony be used," etc.);

Kentucky: Stats. 1915, § 213 (champertous contracts concerning land; the privilege of parties ceases, but they shall not be subject to prosecution, and "such evidence or discovery" shall not "be used in any such prosecution"); § 1973 (in gaming prosecutions, the privilege ceases; but "no such testimony shall be used against him in any prosecution except for false swearing or perjury, and he shall be discharged from all liability for any gaming so necessarily disclosed in his testimony"); § 2579 (same, for the buyer of a lottery ticket, in a prosecution against the seller); §§ 1593, 1594 (the privilege ceases for a witness summoned by the grand jury as to his knowledge of election-offences in the county within eighteen months; but his testimony is not to "be used against him in any prosecution except for perjury," and "if used on behalf of the Commonwealth, he shall stand discharged from all penalty for any violation of this chapter, so necessarily disclosed in his testimony, as tending to convict the accused"); § 1241*a* (lynching offences, etc.; privilege abolished, "but no such testimony given by the witness shall be used against him in any prosecution except for perjury, and he shall be discharged from all liability for any violation of this act so necessarily disclosed in his testimony"); § 762c, par. 11 (State insurance board; privilege ceases, but "no person shall be prosecuted," etc.); St. 1916, Feb. 10, p. 1, Stats. § 201*c*-6 (free passes by common carriers forbidden; privilege ceases, but "no person having so testified shall be liable to any prosecution," etc.); St. 1916, Mar. 15, p. 74, Stats. § 3921*a*-12 (anti-trust law; privilege ceases, but "no person shall be subject to prosecution," etc.); 1911, Bentler v. Com., 143 Ky. 503, 136 S. W. 896 (Stats. 1899, § 1973, applied, and held constitutional); 1922, Gordon v. Tracy, 194 Ky. 166, 238 S. W. 395 (St. 1920, c. 8, giving immunity for testimony concerning gambling offences, applied);

Louisiana: Const. 1921, Art. XIX, § 13 ("Any person may be compelled to testify in any lawful proceeding against any one who may be charged with having committed the offence of bribery, and shall not be permitted to withhold his testimony upon the ground that it may criminate him or subject him to public infamy; but such testimony shall not afterwards be used against him in any judicial proceeding, except for perjury in giving such testimony"); § 15 (illegal free pass to public officer; no person giving one shall be privileged, "but he shall not be liable to civil or criminal prosecution therefor, if he shall testify to the giving of the same"); Art. VIII, § 19 ("In the trial of contested elections and in proceedings for the investigation of election, and in all criminal trials under the election laws, no person shall be permitted to withhold," etc., substantially as in Art. XIX; adding, in trials for bribery at elections, "either the bribe-giver or the bribe-taker may give evidence, or make affidavit against the other, with immunity from prosecution in favor of the first informer," except for perjury); C. Pr. 1870, § 475 (production of documents may be ordered, except that no production shall be compelled "that would subject him to a criminal prosecution under the penal laws of the State"); St. 1912, No. 213, § 30 (corrupt electoral practices; privilege ceases, but "the testimony so given shall not be used," etc., and "a person so testifying shall not be liable to indictment," etc.); St. 1915, No. 12, § 3 (trusts and monopolies; privilege ceases, but "no such witness shall be liable to prosecution," etc.);

Maine: Rev. St. 1916, c. 33, § 90 (violation of game laws; privilege ceases, but evidence so given shall not be used, etc.); c. 55, § 60 (State public utilities commission; privilege ceases, but "no person having so testified shall be prosecuted," etc.);

Maryland: Ann. Code 1914, Art. 27, § 228 (in gaming or betting charges, the privilege ceases; but after giving testimony for the State, the witness "shall not be prosecuted for any offence to which his testimony relates"); Art. 23, § 422 (State public service commission; privilege ceases, but "no person shall be prosecuted" for anything testified to "under oath, by order of the commission or a commissioner"; but this shall not give "unto any corporation immunity of any kind from the law"); § 462 (in court proceedings concerning public utilities, privilege ceases, but "no person having so testified shall be prosecuted," etc.); Art. 33, § 176 (corrupt electoral practices; in contest proceedings, privilege ceases, but the answer shall not be used against him); § 177 (same; in criminal trial, privilege ceases except for the accused, but the answer shall not be used against him); St. 1914, c. 800, Ann. Code 1914, Art. 101, § 7 (State industrial accident commission; privilege ceases, but "no person shall be prosecuted," etc., for any matter on which he "shall under oath have by order of the commission," etc., testified);

Massachusetts: Gen. L. 1920, c. 191, § 14, c. 266, § 39 (a person suspected of concealing, etc., a will is compellable to respond under oath, but his examination is not to be used against him in a prosecution for stealing or destroying the will); c. 55, § 45 (in election inquests no person is to be excused on the present ground; but no person so testifying shall "be prosecuted or be subjected to a penalty or forfeiture for or on account of any action, matter, or thing concerning which he may so testify except for perjury committed in such testimony"); c. 3, § 28 (testimony before the Legislature or a committee thereof; privilege ceases, but the witness shall not be prosecuted, etc., except for perjury); c. 55, § 25 (candidate's election expenses; no person "called upon to testify" shall be liable to criminal prosecution, etc.); c. 93, § 7 (restraint of trade; privilege ceases, but "no person shall be prosecuted," etc.); c. 271, § 39 (bribery of employee; privilege ceases, but "no person shall be liable to any suit or prosecution, civil or criminal," for testimony thus given "before said court or in obedience to its subpœna");

Michigan: Comp. L. 1915, § 12078 (offences by attorneys; "no evidence derived from the examination of any such attorney . . . shall be admitted in proof on any criminal prosecution against him for violating any of the provisions of this chapter"); § 9304 (political contributions by insurance companies; witnesses compellable, but "no person shall be prosecuted or subjected to any penalty or forfeiture" for any matter so testified to, and no testimony so given shall be used against him, etc.); § 8135 (railroad commission; like Comp. L. § 12548); § 12548 (anti-trust law; witness to be compellable, but "no person shall be prosecuted," etc., for any matter to which he may testify at such trial, and "no testimony so given by him" shall be used against him etc.; "provided that immunity shall extend only to a natural person who in obedience to a subpœna gives testimony under oath or produces evidence documentary or otherwise under oath"; also excepting perjury); § 3836 (corrupt electoral practices; privilege ceases, "but no prosecution can afterwards be had," etc.); § 7049 (intoxicated person; privilege ceases for interrogation as to source of liquor, etc.; but the person so testifying shall not be prosecuted for the intoxication); § 13645 (fraudulent debtors; privilege ceases, but "no such answer shall be used in evidence in any other suit or prosecution"); St. 1919, No. 53, Apr. 1, § 7 (intoxicating liquors; privilege ceases, "but the testimony so given shall not be used," etc.);

Minnesota: Gen. St. 1913, § 8537 (in bribery offences, the privilege ceases, "but the testimony so given shall not be used in any prosecution or proceeding, civil or criminal, against the person so testifying. A person so testifying to the giving of a bribe, which has been accepted, shall not thereafter be liable to indictment, prosecution, or punishment for that bribery," and may plead his testimony in bar); § 4769 (in game-law offences, "any participant in any violation thereof may testify . . . without criminating himself by so doing, nor shall the evidence so given by him be used against him in any criminal proceeding against him for such violation"); § 3199 (illegal sale of liquor; on examination of witnesses before a justice, "no testimony given upon such a hearing shall be in any manner used to the prejudice of the witness giving the same"); § 3616 (insurance rebates; privilege ceases, but "no person shall be prosecuted for any act concerning which he shall be compelled to so testify," etc.); § 4020 (State board of control of charitable and penal institutions; privilege ceases, but "no person shall be prosecuted," etc.); § 4197 (in any proceedings involving common carriers or public warehousemen, "the Court in its discretion may require a witness to answer any question, although his answer may tend to convict him of a crime, but no person so compelled to answer shall thereafter be liable to any prosecution for such crime"); § 5898 (usury; every person offending is compellable to answer on oath in any action for discovery of sums, etc., received); § 7956 (supplementary proceedings against a debtor; privilege ceases for fraud, but "his answer shall not be used against him in any criminal proceeding"); § 8502 (in every case where it is provided that "a witness shall not be excused from giving testimony tending to criminate himself," no person shall be excused on that ground, "but he shall not be prosecuted . . . for any matter . . . concerning which he shall testify," except for perjury therein); § 8644 (dwelling offenses; no offender shall be excused from testifying on the ground of self-crimination); § 8734 (gambling offences; "no person shall be excused from testifying . . . by reason of his having bet or played," etc.); § 8812 (offenses against public peace, including prize-fights, duels, etc.; "no person shall be excused from giving evidence," etc., on the ground of self-crimination); § 8863 (fraud in trademarks, etc.; no testimony given or civil action shall be used in a criminal prosecution, and privilege ceases in civil action);

Mississippi: Code 1906, § 1503, Hem. § 1261 (for duelling offences, the privilege ceases; but "the testimony so given shall not be used in any prosecution or proceeding, civil or criminal, against the person so testifying," except for perjury; "and the fact that he testified thereof shall be a bar to any prosecution against him for such transaction"); Code §§ 1504, 1505, Hem. §§ 1262, 1263 (a witness giving evidence of a gaming offence shall be exempt from criminal prosecution, etc.); Code § 1506, Hem. § 1264 (crimes against the legislative power; the privilege ceases, but "such testimony shall not afterwards be used against him in any criminal prosecution" except for perjury); Code § 3017, Hem. § 5405 (a person sworn without his contrivance before a legislative House "shall not be held to answer criminally, or be subject to any penalty or forfeiture for any fact or act touching which he is required to testify; nor shall any statement made, or book, document, or paper produced by any such witness be competent evidence in any criminal proceeding against such witness," except for perjury; "nor shall such witness refuse to testify," etc., because of this privilege); Code § 1507, Hem. § 1265 (purchaser of a lottery ticket; privilege ceases, but he is exempted from prosecution); Code § 1792, Hem. § 2106 (liquor offences; privilege ceases, "but no person shall be prosecuted," etc.); Code §§ 5013, 5014, Hem. §§ 3295, 3296 (trusts and combines; privilege ceases, but "the testimony so given shall not be used," etc., and "a person so testifying shall not thereafter be liable to indictment," etc.); St. 1908, c. 118, Hem. § 1917 (gambling in grain, etc.; privilege ceases, but any discovery shall not be used, etc., "and he shall be altogether pardoned," etc.); St. 1912, c. 251, p. 318, Mar. 13 (repealing Code 1906, § 5018, which exempted corporations from prosecution on production of documents, etc.); 1910, Cumberland T. & T. Co. v. State, 98 Miss. 159, 53 So. 489 (Code § 5018, giving immunity to corporations producing documents upon trial for violation of the anti-trust laws, applied);

Missouri: Rev. St. 1919, § 5416 (when a person testifies in any suit, "the testimony of such person shall not be used as evidence to prove any fact in any suit or prosecution" against him for a penalty in regard to a fraudulent conveyance); § 5747 (in civil actions to recover money lost at gaming, the defendant's answer on oath "shall not be admitted as evidence against such person in any proceeding by indictment"); § 3580 (on a trial for illegal dealing in options, every officer, agent, and employee of the defendant is compellable to "answer all questions propounded to him relevant to the issue in such trial"); § 13270 (trademark actions and offences; "no testimony or evidence given" in any civil action "can or shall be used in any criminal prosecution against such party or witness under any of the provisions of this chapter," and no person shall refuse to testify in a civil case because of those provisions); § 10536 (public service commission; witnesses are compellable, but "no person shall be prosecuted" etc. for any matter "concerning which he shall under oath have testified or produced documentary evidence," except for perjury; and this is not to give "unto any corporation immunity of any kind"); § 5040 (corrupt electoral practices; privilege ceases, but no answer "shall be used or be evidence" in criminal cases); § 7900 (city public utilities commission; privilege ceases, but testimony shall not be used, etc., nor shall any criminal proceeding be brought, etc.); §§ 9668, 9693 (pools and trusts; privilege ceases, but no person shall be subjected to prosecution, etc.); § 9683 (unlawful discrimination, pools, etc.; privilege ceases, but no person shall be subjected to prosecution, etc.; and upon filing of required affidavit, no person shall be prosecuted for any matter truthfully disclosed);

Montana: Rev. C. 1921, § 83 ("No person sworn and examined before either house of the Legislative Assembly, or any committee thereof, can be held to answer criminally or be subject to any penalty or forfeiture for any fact or act touching which he is required to testify; nor is any statement made or paper produced by any such witness competent evidence in any criminal proceeding against such witness"; and the privilege ceases for such witness); § 3902 (public service commission; witnesses compellable, but "no person having so testified shall be prosecuted," etc., for any matter "concerning which he may have testified or produced any documentary evidence," except for perjury); § 3800 (State board of railroad commissioners; privilege ceases, but "no person shall be prosecuted," etc., and "no testimony or evidence so given or produced shall be received," etc.); § 10720 (the prohibition in the following sections does not apply to a perjury-charge); § 10987 (the privilege ceases on trials for duelling offences; "but no evidence given upon any examination of a person so testifying shall be received against him in any criminal proceeding or prosecution"); § 10846 (the privilege ceases for the offence of promising legislative bribery, "but such testimony shall not afterward be used against him in any judicial proceeding"); § 10863 (on a charge of bribery or corruption, the offender's privilege ceases, "but the testimony so given shall not be used in any prosecution or proceeding, civil or criminal, against the person so testifying. A person so testifying to the giving of a bribe which has been accepted shall not thereafter be liable to indictment, prosecution, or punishment for that bribery," and may plead it in bar); § 10817 (election contest; privilege ceases, but "no admission, evidence, or paper made or advanced or produced by such person shall be offered or used against him in any civil or criminal prosecution, or any evidence that is the direct result of such evidence or information that he may have so given"; a clumsy and also a futile provision, not creditable to the legal draftsmen of 1912, the year of enactment); § 11178 (gambling offences; privilege ceases, but "no person shall be prosecuted," etc., and "no testimony or evidence so given or produced shall be received," etc.); § 11076 (liquor offences; privilege ceases, but "no natural person shall be prosecuted," etc.); § 11112 (liquor offences; privilege ceases, but "no person shall be prosecuted," etc., "nor shall such testimony be used," etc.; query, are these two provisions cumulative, or inconsistent, or differentiable?); § 11405 (extortion; like id. § 11112, supra); § 12178 (co-defendant testifying for or against the other; "the testimony of such witness must not be used," etc.); St. 1921, Sp. Sess., c. 9, § 29 (intoxicating liquors; privilege ceases for testimony given "in obedience to a subpœna"; but "no natural person shall be prosecuted," etc.);

Nebraska: Rev. St. 1921, § 5475 (the privilege ceases for testimony before the board of railroad commissioners, "but such evidence or testimony shall not be used against such person on the trial of any criminal proceeding"); § 9051 (an insolvent debtor on examination is not privileged as to an answer showing fraud; "but his answer shall not be used as evidence against him in a prosecution for such fraud"); § 3469 (prosecution under the statute against illegal trusts; the privilege ceases, "but no person shall be prosecuted or subject to any penalty or forfeiture for or on account of any transaction, matter, or thing concerning which he may testify or produce evidence," except for perjury); § 5475 (State railway commission; witness compellable, "but such evidence or testimony shall not be used against such person on the trial of any criminal proceeding"); § 7896 (insurance offences; witnesses compellable, "but no person shall be prosecuted for any act concerning which he shall be compelled so to testify," except for perjury; this is the neatest of all the various phrasings used); § 6848 (State commissioners of State institutions; witnesses compellable, but "evidence given by any witness," etc., "shall not be used" against him, but he shall not be exempt from perjury, etc.); § 3279 (liquor offences; privilege ceases, but "the testimony so given, unless voluntary, shall in no case be used," etc.); § 3428 (insurance combination; privilege ceases, but the statements made shall not be used, etc., and the officer or agent shall not be prosecuted, etc.); § 3430 (lumber and coal combinations; privilege ceases, but "such evidence or testimony shall not be used," etc.); § 4424 (city officers' corruption; privilege ceases, but "no person shall be prosecuted," etc.); § 2080 (illegal voting; privilege ceases, but "no part of his testimony on that trial shall be used," etc.); § 3080 (labor employer's liability; before the compensation commissioner, privilege ceases, "but no person shall be prosecuted," etc.); § 9707 (bribery in paving contracts; privilege ceases, but "such evidence or testimony shall not be used," etc.); § 9877 (grain monopolies; privilege ceases, but "such evidence or testimony shall not be used," etc.);

Nevada: Rev. L. 1912, § 3581 (in proceedings based on railroad discrimination, the privilege ceases, but "such evidence or testimony shall not be used as against such person on the trial of any indictment against him"); § 6328 (on a trial for bribery or corruption the privilege ceases, "but such testimony shall not afterwards be used against him in any judicial proceeding," except for perjury); § 6522 (no person is to be excused on this ground from testifying to gaming offences; but "no prosecution can afterwards be had," etc.); § 6424 (in trials for duelling offences, any spectator, etc., may be compelled to testify, "but the testimony so given shall not be used in any prosecution or proceeding, civil or criminal, against the person so testifying"); § 7451 (the privilege ceases for accomplices; quoted ante, § 488); § 4565 (State railroad commission; witnesses compellable, but "no person having so testified shall be prosecuted," etc., except for perjury); § 4536 (State public service commission; like § 4565); § 6449 (abortion or selling drugs therefor; privilege ceases, but "such testimony shall not be used," etc.); St. 1919, p. 1, § 29 (liquor offences; "any person called on behalf of the State . . . who shall give freely and truthfully any testimony tending in any way to incriminate himself shall be immune from prosecution under this act"); St. 1919, Mar. 28, p. 198, § 30 (State public service commission; privilege ceases, but "no person having so testified shall be prosecuted," etc.);

New Hampshire: Pub. St. 1891, c. 112, § 26 (no employee or agent is to be excused on the present ground in prosecutions for illegal dealing with liquor; but no such testimony is to be used against him and no prosecution is to be instituted for any offence so disclosed by him); c. 190, § 1 (one suspected of eloigning a deceased person's property may be examined under oath, but "no evidence elicited on such examination" may be used against him except on a charge of perjury in testifying); c. 201, § 27 (same, for one suspected of eloigning or possessing an insolvent debtor's property); c. 245, § 43 (no deposition taken in trustee process is to be evidence in a criminal prosecution, except for perjury therein); c. 260, § 10 (the participant in a riot who testifies fully for the prosecution shall not be liable for such participation); St. 1921, c. 147 (liquor offences; privilege ceases for clerk, etc., of person accused; but no testimony so given shall be used, etc.);

New Jersey: Comp. L. 1910, Evidence, § 67 (legislative investigations; the privilege ceases, but no answer "shall be used or admitted in evidence in any proceeding against him," except in perjury in the answer); Crim. Procedure, § 154 (procuring miscarriage; the privilege ceases, but the testimony "shall not be used in any prosecution civil or criminal" against him); Crimes, §§ 158, 159 (certain corporate frauds; no person disclosing his act under compulsion "shall be liable to be convicted of any" of the offences specified "by any evidence whatever in respect of" the act disclosed); Usury, § 3 (every offender under this act "may be compelled to answer as a witness in any suit that he may bring," as to an agreement in violation of the law); Crimes, § 27*f* (bribery, etc., at elections; privilege abolished, but, "no person shall be prosecuted or subjected to any penalty or forfeiture for or on account of any transaction, matter, or thing concerning which he may so testify or produce evidence, documentary or otherwise," and the testimony is not to be used against him in a criminal proceeding); Crimes, § 27*k* (bribery at elections; privilege abolished; but "no person called to testify in any proceedings under this act shall be liable to a criminal prosecution either under this act or otherwise, for any matters or causes in respect to which he shall be examined or to which his testimony shall relate, except to a prosecution for bribery committed in such testimony"); Crimes, § 27*n* (political contributions by insurance companies; privilege ceases, but "no person shall be prosecuted," etc., and "no testimony so given" shall be used, etc.); Elections, § 171 (in electoral contests, Court may require disclosure of vote from one voting illegally, but "no part of his testimony shall be used," etc.); Elections, § 213 (indictment for electoral offences; like Evidence, § 67); Gaming, § 7 (winner of moneys at gaming, compellable to answer on discovery when sued); St. 1911, Apr. 20, c. 188, § 32 (corrupt practices at elections; privilege ceases, but "the testimony so given shall not be used," etc., and "a person so testifying shall thereafter not be liable to indictment," etc., and may plead in bar the giving of such testimony);

New Mexico: Const. 1911, Art. IV, § 41 (legislative corruption; privilege abolished, "but such testimony shall not be used against him in any judicial proceeding" except for perjury); St. 1901, c. 85 (in trials for offences of prostitution, the privilege ceases for such offences, "but the testimony which may be given by such person shall in no case be used against him"); Annot. St. 1915, § 2463 (game and fish laws; "any participant in a violation thereof, when so requested by the district attorney," etc., may testify, "and his evidence so given shall not be used against him in any prosecution for such violation"); § 1786 (in offences against public morals, no person shall be "excused from testifying concerning any offenses committed by another," but the testimony "shall in no case be used against him"); §§ 2514, 2515 (gambling; in action to recover money won, defendant may be called upon to answer interrogatories, and a refusal will be taken as a confession; but "such answer shall not be admitted against such person as evidence in any criminal proceeding"); § 2838 (corrupt practices at elections; privilege ceases, "but no person shall be prosecuted . . . for . . . any transaction . . . concerning which he may so testify," and no testimony so given shall be used against him); § 5378 (in inquiries by the State corporation commission, privilege ceases, but "such testimony or evidence shall not be used in any criminal proceeding," etc.); St. 1919, Mar. 10, c. 32, Ann. St. 1915, § 4124 ("no pleading can be used in a criminal prosecution against the party as proof of the fact admitted or alleged in such pleading");

New York: Constitution 1895, Art. XIII, § 3 (bribery; the privilege ceases for the offeror of bribe, but "he shall not be liable to civil or criminal prosecution therefor"); § 5 (free pass by a corporation to a public officer; similar provision); Consolidated Laws 1909: Canal § 20 (public-works frauds; privilege ceases; but "his testimony shall not be used," etc.); Debtor and Creditor § 22 (in a creditor's action relating to a debtor's assignment, the privilege ceases, but the "answer shall not be used against him in any criminal action or proceeding"); § 175 (insolvent debtor, when examined, "and answering to the satisfaction of the Court, shall not be liable to any penalty," etc., but his answers may be used as if obtained in a civil case); Election § 558 (corrupt practices; privilege ceases, but "no person shall be prosecuted," etc., and "no testimony so given or produced shall be received," etc.); Forest Fish & Game § 223 (violation of game-law; privilege ceases, but "no evidence derived" shall be used, etc., and no witness called for the People shall be liable, etc.); Gen. Corporation § 44 (political contributions; privilege ceases, but "no person shall be prosecuted," etc., and "no testimony so given" shall be received); Liquor Tax § 33 (privilege ceases, in liquor seizures, except for claimant of interest, but "no person shall be prosecuted," etc., and "no testimony so given" shall be received, etc.); Penal § 770 (election offences; the privilege ceases, but the testimony shall not be used in any proceeding and he "shall not thereafter be liable" criminally for that offence testified to); § 381 (bribery charge; the privilege ceases, but the testimony shall not be used against him in any proceeding, and he "shall not thereafter be liable" criminally "for that bribery"); § 2443 (champerty; the privilege ceases, but "no evidence derived from the examination of such person shall be received against him" criminally); § 737 (duelling; the privilege ceases, but "evidence given . . . cannot be received against him" criminally); §§ 713, 1472, 1716, 1787, 1906, 2038, 2097 (no person is to be excused from giving evidence upon offences specified in Arts. 14, 69, 140, 165, 168, 172, 182, 189; "but such evidence shall not be received against him upon any criminal proceeding"); § 996 (gaining offences; privilege ceases, but "no person shall be prosecuted," etc., and "no testimony so given or produced shall be received against him," etc.); § 1631 (sections of this chapter forbidding evidence to be used do not apply to prosecution for perjury in such examination); Public Service Com. § 20 (public service commission inquiries; privilege ceases, but "no person shall be prosecuted," etc.); Second Class Cities § 243 (city council inquiries; privilege ceases, but "such testimony shall not be used," etc.); Civil Practice Act 1920, § 791 (examination of a judgment debtor; the privilege ceases, but the answer "cannot be used as evidence" against him criminally); § 1219 (unlawful exercise of corporate rights; privilege ceases, but "such answer cannot be used," etc.); Justice Court Act 1920, § 486 (corrupt practice by a justice, etc.; the privilege ceases; but the testimony "is not evidence" against him criminally);

Session Laws since 1909: Consol. L. 1909, Gen. Business § 345, as amended St. 1910, c. 394, p. 724 (monopolies; witnesses to be compellable, but "no person shall be prosecuted or subjected to any penalty or forfeiture" for any matter testified to; and no such testimony shall be used, etc.); Consol. L. 1909, Penal § 584, as amended by St. 1910, c. 395, inserting a new § 584 (conspiracies; like Gen. Bus. § 345); Consol. L. 1909, Labor § 154, as amended by St. 1909, c. 514, § 3 (bureau of industries and immigration; inserting a new § 154; "no person shall be prosecuted," etc., except for perjury); St. 1911, c. 647, § 25 (conservation department; witnesses compellable, but "no person shall be prosecuted," etc., except for perjury; but this is not to give "unto any corporation immunity of any kind"); St. 1912, c. 444, § 4 (amending St. 1911, c. 647, by inserting § 35; conservation department; like St. 1911, c. 647, § 25); St. 1913, c. 236, p. 425 (amending Consol. L. 1909, Penal, by adding a new § 395; bucket-shop offences; witnesses compellable, but "no person shall be prosecuted," etc., and such testimony shall not be used against him, etc.); St. 1914, c. 360, § 3 (amending § 22 of Cons. L. 1909, Debtor and Creditor, supra, by changing the number to § 16; debtor's assignment for creditors; no witness or party to be excused, etc., but "such answer shall not be used against him in any criminal action or proceeding"); St. 1914, c. 518, § 31 (personal loan brokers; a violator of the Act is compellable; but "the testimony so given shall not be used," etc., "nor shall a person so testifying be thereafter liable to indictment," etc.); Penal § 166, as amended by St. 1920, c. 27 (anarchy; privilege ceases, but "no person shall be prosecuted," etc., and "no testimony so given or produced shall be received," etc.); C. Cr. P. § 392*a*, as added by St. 1920, c. 920 (a civil pleading is not to be used in a criminal prosecution as an admission);

1917, Re Rouss, 221 N. Y. 81, 116 N. E. 782 (proceeding for disbarment not being a punishment for crime, an attorney who had testified for the prosecution in a matter affecting his client was held not to have obtained immunity from disbarment under Cons. L. 1909, Penal § 584);

North Carolina: Con. St. 1919, § 1800 (in gaming or liquor prosecutions, the privilege ceases as to unlawful gaming; but "no discovery made by the witness upon such examination shall be used against him" in any penal prosecution, "and he shall be altogether pardoned of the offence so done or participated in by him"); § 1797 (on a charge of "fraud upon the State," a refusal to answer is a contempt; but "it shall not be competent to introduce any admissions thus made on the trial of any persons making the same"); § 2143 (in certain gaming offences, the privilege ceases; but the testimony "shall not be used against him in any criminal prosecution" therefor); § 4571 (in lynching investigations the privilege ceases, "but no discovery made by such witness or upon any such examination shall be used against him in any court or in any penal criminal prosecution, and he shall when so examined as a witness for the State be altogether pardoned of any and all participation in any crime" of this sort "concerning which he is required to testify"); § 5804 (privilege abolished for offences concerning unlawful sale of liquor, keeping of games of chance, giving of entertainments, etc., near the State University; but the testimony "shall not be used against him in any criminal prosecution on account of such participation"); § 6096 (privilege ceases for a voter not qualified, on inquiry as to his vote; but "any witness making such discovery shall not be subject to criminal or penal prosecution for having voted at such election"); § 533 ("No pleading can be used in a criminal prosecution against the party as proof of a fact admitted or alleged in it"); § 716 (examination of judgment debtor; privilege ceases, but "his answer shall not be used as evidence," etc.); § 2149 (dealing in futures, etc.; like ib. § 1800, supra); § 2569 (monopolies and trusts; privilege ceases, but "no person examined . . . shall be subject to indictment," etc., and "full immunity from prosecution . . . is hereby extended"); § 3406 (liquor offences; like ib. § 1800, supra); § 6681 (narcotic drug offences; like ib. § 1800, supra); § 4187 (electoral offences; privilege ceases, but "such person shall be immune from prosecution, and shall be pardoned for any violation of law about which such person is so required to testify"); § 4199 (using insurance funds for political purposes; privilege ceases, but "no person shall be prosecuted," etc., and "no testimony so given" shall be used, etc.); § 4220 (hazing students; privilege ceases, but the person so testifying shall not be amenable to prosecution); § 4476 (bribing employees; privilege ceases, but "no person shall be liable to any suit or prosecution," etc.); 1903, State v. Morgan, 133 N. C. 743, 45 S. E. 1033 (Cr. Code, § 1215, applied); 1904, Re Briggs, 135 N. C. 118, 47 S. E. 403 (Cr. Code, § 1215, applied);

North Dakota: Comp. L. 1915, § 4733 (the privilege ceases for an officer, etc., of a common carrier defendant in an action for damages; "but such evidence or testimony shall not be used against such person in any way on the trial of any criminal proceeding"); § 4739 (similar, for testimony compelled by aid of Court); § 10279 (fish and game law; "the participant in the violation thereof may testify as a witness against any other person violating the same, without incriminating himself in so doing. The evidence so given shall not be used" etc. This is a good example of how not to phrase such an Act); § 245 (witnesses before State board of control; privilege ceases, but no person testifying shall be prosecuted for "any matter or thing concerning which he may testify or produce evidence"); § 4797 (violation of maximum railroad rates; privilege ceases, but "no person so testifying shall be liable to prosecution or punishment for any offense concerning which he has been required to testify or to produce books or documents"); § 4858 (offense of contributing money by an insurance company to a political party, etc.; privilege ceases, but no person testifying shall be prosecuted, etc., and no testimony given shall be used against him, etc.); § 8002 (in certain actions against corporation officers, privilege ceases; but no person so testifying shall be prosecuted, etc., except for perjury); § 9296 (corrupt political practices; privilege ceases, but no person so testifying shall be prosecuted, and no testimony so given shall be used, etc.); § 9679 (gaming offences; privilege ceases, but witness' testimony is not to be used against him); § 10128 (liquor offences; similar); § 9418 (like Okl. Comp. St. § 1696); § 9826 (like Okl. § 2028); § 9554 (like Okl. § 1783); § 10355 (like Okl. § 2311); § 9698 (keeping a gambling house; privilege ceases, but the witness "shall be forever exempt from prosecution for any offense under the provisions of this chapter of which such evidence shall directly or indirectly tend to convict him"); St. 1917, Mar. 8, c. 117, § 5 (sale of narcotic drugs; privilege ceases, "but the testimony given by such person shall in no case be used against him"); St. 1919, Mar. 5, c. 133 (gambling; privilege ceases, but a person compelled to testify "shall not be prosecuted in such case"); St. 1919, Feb. 25, c. 151, § 5 (State industrial commission; privilege ceases, but "no person shall be prosecuted," etc.);

Ohio: Gen. Code Ann. 1921, § 13660 (the privilege ceases in certain prosecutions for illegal liquor-selling, gaming, etc.; but the witness shall "be discharged from liability for prosecution or punishment for such offense"); § 11359 (a verified pleading is not admissible in a criminal prosecution or in an action for a penalty or forfeiture); §§ 12952, 12953, 13315, 13223, 13223–2, 13340 (the privilege ceases on trials for election offences; but the testimony "shall not be used in any prosecution or proceeding civil or criminal against the person so testifying. A person so testifying shall not be liable thereafter to indictment, prosecution, or punishment, for the offence with reference to which his testimony may be given, and may plead or prove the giving of testimony accordingly in bar of such an indictment or prosecution"); § 11774 (the privilege ceases for a debtor examined as to fraud; but "his answer shall not be used as evidence against him" in a prosecution for such fraud); § 6401 (anti-trust law; the privilege is abolished, "but no individual shall be prosecuted or subjected to any penalty for or on account of any transaction, matter, or thing concerning which he may so testify or produce evidence, documentary or otherwise"); § 12824–1 (bribery; an offender is to be compellable against another offender, "but no individual shall be prosecuted," etc. for any matter on which he may testify, etc.); § 12412–1 (abortion, under Gen. Code, § 12412; the woman not to be prosecuted for complicity, if she testifies); § 60 (legislative committee inquiries; privilege ceases, but "no person shall be prosecuted," etc.); §§ 553, 614–39 (State utilities commission; privilege ceases, but "no person having so testified shall be prosecuted," etc.); § 3515–1, Art. VI, § 15 (city council investigations; privilege ceases, "but such testimony shall not be used," etc.); § 5970 (money lost in gaming; in proceeding to recover it, the person liable who makes discovery "shall be acquitted and discharged from further punishment," etc.);

Oklahoma: Const. 1907, Art. II, § 27 ("Any person having knowledge or possession of facts that tend to establish the guilt of any other person or corporation charged with an offense against the laws of the State, shall not be excused from giving testimony or producing evidence, when legally called upon so to do, on the ground that it may tend to incriminate him under the laws of the State; but no person shall be prosecuted or subjected to any penalty or forfeiture for or on account of any transaction, matter, or thing concerning which he may so testify or produce evidence"); Comp. St. 1921, § 1783 (the privilege ceases on a trial for duelling offences; "but no evidence given upon any examination of a person so testifying shall be received against him in any criminal prosecution or proceeding," except for perjury); § 735 (on the examination of an insolvent debtor, the privilege ceases as to answers tending "to convict him of a fraud; but his answer shall not be used as evidence against him in a prosecution for such fraud"); § 1696 (in a civil action, no privilege is to be allowed on this ground for "facts showing that an evidence of debt or thing in action has been bought, sold, or received contrary to law"; "but no evidence derived from the examination of such person shall be received against him upon any criminal prosecution"); § 2028 (on an investigation or prosecution for specified crimes against the public peace, the privilege ceases; "but such answer or evidence shall not be received against him upon any criminal proceeding or prosecution," except for perjury); § 1610 (in bribery offences, "the party to such crime who shall first furnish information in relation thereto, as against the other parties, and in any prosecution therefor shall testify to the same truthfully and fully, shall not thereafter be criminally liable therefor"); § 2311 (the prohibition in these sections against using evidence given does not apply to a charge of perjury in the examination); § 6216 (electoral bribery; privilege ceases, but "any person to whom a bribe or benefit has been given, who voluntarily discloses the evidence" etc. and procures the conviction of the briber, "shall not be prosecuted for procuring a bribe"); § 7331 (State industrial commission; privilege ceases, but "no person shall be prosecuted," etc.); § 11052 (rate-combinations by bridge-contractors; privilege ceases, "nor shall any person so testifying be prosecuted," etc.);

Oregon: Laws 1920, § 4163 (corrupt electoral practices; witnesses compellable, but no such evidence "shall be offered or used against him," etc., "or any evidence that is the direct result of such evidence or information," except for perjury therein); §§ 5862, 6088 (public utilities commission; witnesses compellable, but "no person having so testified shall be prosecuted" etc., except for perjury, and this only when "in obedience to a subpœna" he "gives testimony under oath"); § 2109 (prosecution for gambling; privilege ceases, but "no indictment or prosecution shall afterwards be brought," etc.); § 2224–60 (liquor offences; privilege ceases, but "such testimony shall not be used against him," etc., and no person thus compelled to testify shall be prosecuted, etc.); § 2384 (immunity clauses do not prevent prosecution for perjury in the testimony given for immunity); St. 1911, Feb. 26, c. 354 (marine insurance; privilege ceases, but "no person shall be prosecuted," etc., and "no testimony . . . shall be used against him," etc.);

Pennsylvania: Const. 1874, Art. III, § 32 ("Any person may be compelled to testify, in any lawful investigation or judicial proceeding, against any person who may be charged with having committed the offence of bribery or corrupt solicitation, or practices of solicitation, and shall not be permitted to withhold his testimony upon the ground that it may criminate himself or subject him to public infamy; but such testimony shall not afterwards be used against him in any judicial proceeding except for perjury in giving such testimony"); Art. VIII, § 10 ("In trials of contested elections and in proceedings for the investigation of elections, no person shall be permitted," etc., as in Art. III, § 32); St. 1842, July 12, § 22, Dig. § 17154, Practice (arrest of fraudulent debtor; privilege ceases, "no such answer shall be used in evidence in any other suit or prosecution"); St. 1860, Mar. 31, § 49, Dig. 1920, § 7721, Crimes (the privilege ceases for a witness to bribery in a criminal proceeding or a legislative investigation, but "the evidence so given or the facts divulged by him shall not be used against him in any prosecution under this Act"); St. 1860, Mar. 31, § 58, Dig. 1920, § 7900 (gambling; similar to St. 1860, § 49); St. 1874, May 19, § 19, Dig. § 10091, Elections (the privilege ceases in investigations of elections; but "such testimony shall not afterwards be used against him in any judicial proceeding," except perjury in the testimony); St. 1874, May 19, § 34, Dig. § 10068 (illegal voter compellable to disclose vote; but "he shall not be afterwards presented for having illegally voted," etc.); St. 1883, May 17, Dig. § 10300, Evidence (witnesses before the Philadelphia city councils; the privilege ceases, but "such testimony shall not be used against him in any criminal prosecution"); St. 1897, July 9, § 2, Dig. § 21865 (execution on judgment confessed; privilege ceases, but "no such answer shall be used," etc.); St. 1901, June 4, § 15, Dig. 1920, § 737 (the privilege ceases for examinations in insolvency proceedings by a receiver; "but the information thus obtained shall not be used against him in any other proceeding"); St.

1913, May 9, No. 136, Dig. § 21797 (examination of judgment debtor: the debtor to be compellable, "but he shall not be prosecuted," etc., except for perjury); St. 1913, July 26, Art. VI, § 1, Dig. § 18162, Public Service Companies (public service commission; privilege ceases, but "no individual shall be prosecuted," etc.; but not to give "any corporation immunity of any kind"); St. 1915, June 7, § 13, Dig. 1920, § 1473, Banks (banking offences; privilege ceases, but "no person shall be prosecuted," etc.); St. 1919, July 1, § 4, Fires (State police inquiry into fires; privilege ceases, but "no person shall be prosecuted," etc., and "no testimony so given or produced shall be received," etc.); 1891, Com. v. Bell, 145 Pa. 374, 389, 22 Atl. 641, 644 (Art. III, § 32, of the Constitution, construed as to the crimes covered);

Philippine Isl. Act 183, § 39 (Manila charter; on inquiries by the prosecuting attorney, privilege ceases, but "no testimony elicited . . . under oath . . . shall be used," etc.); Act 1757, § 10 (gambling; privilege ceases, but "such testimony cannot be received," etc.);

Porto Rico: St. 1921, July 16, No. 66, § 176 (insurance offences; privilege ceases, but "the testimony or evidence so furnished shall not be used," etc.);

Rhode Island: Gen. L. 1909, c. 307, § 10 (a person having in control property of a deceased person or ward is not to be excused on the present ground from answering on oath, but the answer is not to be "used as evidence against him" in a criminal prosecution, except a prosecution for perjury); c. 349, § 12 (a person playing at a game may be compelled to answer for the prosecution in a gambling prosecution); c. 349, § 26 ("no person shall be excused," etc., but "no person shall be prosecuted," etc.; this section has no express words of limitation, but it evidently is limited to the offences defined in ib. c. 349); St. 1911, c. 714, p. 132 (life insurance rebates; witnesses compellable, "but no person shall be prosecuted," etc., and "no testimony so given or produced shall be received against him," etc.);

South Carolina: C. C. P. 1922, § 589 (examination of an execution-debtor; the privilege ceases, but "his answer shall not be used against him in any criminal proceeding or prosecution"); § 395 (no pleading may be used "in a criminal prosecution" as an admission); § 476 (abatement of nuisance of prostitution; "the solicitor, attorney-general, or other attorney representing the prosecution . . . with the approval of the Court, may grant immunity to any witness called to testify in behalf of the prosecution"); Civ. C. 1922, § 5233 (action against a railroad; privilege ceases, but "such evidence of [or?] testimony shall not be used," etc.); §§ 5384, 5390 (gambling contracts, etc.; person sued is "compellable to answer upon oath"); Crim. L. 1922, § 3783 (privilege ceases in investigations for violation of anti-trust laws; but "no person shall be prosecuted in any criminal action or proceedings, or subjected to any penalty or forfeiture for or on account of any transaction, matter, or thing, concerning which he may testify or produce evidence, documentary or otherwise, before said justice," etc.); § 3763 (trusts, pools, and monopolies; in a civil action for damages, privilege ceases, but "such testimony shall not be used in any other action or prosecution" against him, and he "shall forever be exempt from any prosecution," etc.); C. Cr. P. 1922, § 967 (the accused may testify; nor shall testimony given voluntarily on his own behalf be "used against him in any other criminal case" except perjury); § 968 (for certain offences, privilege ceases, but "no testimony so given of a character tending to criminate or disgrace such witness shall ever be used," etc.); § 969 (duelling; "any person concerned" is compellable to give evidence against the person indicted "without criminating himself or subjecting or making himself liable to any prosecution," etc.; this is obscure and crude, dating from 1882, and should not have been perpetuated in a 1922 revision); § 970 (duelling; a co-indictee may be discharged and called for the State, and in any future indictment "the fact of his or their being used as a witness or witnesses in the former prosecution for the same offense shall and may be pleaded in bar," etc.); § 971 (privilege ceases for certain offenses, but "any discovery made by a witness upon such examination shall not be used against him in any penal or criminal prosecution and he shall not be prosecuted therefor"; here are five distinct forms of legislative terms for this measure, and most of them inferior; this State, as well as others, needs to revise and standardize the legislative phraseology);

South Dakota: Const. 1889, Art. III, § 28 (the privilege ceases in proceedings against a person charged with bribery or corrupt solicitation; "but said testimony shall not afterwards be used against him in any judicial proceeding except for bribery [sic? perjury] in giving such testimony"); Rev. Code 1919, § 3623 (like N. D. Comp. L. § 10355); § 3792 (like N. D. Comp. L. § 9418); § 3958 (like N. D. Comp. L. § 9826); § 4076 (like N. D. Comp. L. § 9554); § 2699 (examination of a judgment debtor; privilege ceases, as to answers tending to "convict him of the commission of a fraud," and as to execution of "any conveyance, assignment, or transfer of his property for any purpose," but his "answer shall not be used against him," etc.); § 3654 (bribery of elector; privilege ceases for such offense, for testimony "against any other person so offending," but testimony shall not be used, etc., and witness shall not be liable to punishment); § 4361 (trusts and monopolies; privilege ceases, but "neither such testimony nor such evidence shall be used" etc., "nor shall he be punished," for the offence testified to); § 7384 (electoral campaign offences; privilege ceases, but "if compelled to testify, his testimony shall not be used," etc., "nor shall he be thereafter punished," etc.); § 10524 (violation of game laws; privilege ceases, but "if compelled to testify, his testimony shall not be used," etc., "nor shall he be thereafter punished," etc.); St. 1919, Mar. 11, c. 296, § 8 (free passes by common carriers; privilege ceases, but "no such person shall thereafter be prosecuted," etc., and "the testimony so given shall not be used," etc.);

Tennessee: Shannon's Code 1916, §§ 7046–7048 (a witness testifying to a grand jury upon any of thirty specified classes of offences shall not "be indicted for any offense in relation to which he has testified"); § 1135 a 22 (removal of officer; privilege ceases, but "no person shall be prosecuted," etc., when "compelled to testify"); § 3059 a 33 (no officer, etc., of a railroad company who testifies before the railroad commission "shall be liable to indictment," etc.); St. 1897, Code 1916, § 6868 a 11 (election offences; an offender may be compelled to testify at any trial, etc., but the testimony shall not be used, etc., and "a person so testifying shall not thereafter be liable . . . for the offence with reference to which his testimony was given, and may plead or prove" the giving of it in bar); § 6868 a 20 (political bribery; privilege ceases, but the testimony shall not be used, etc., and the person shall not be liable to indictment, etc.); 1859, State v. Hatfield, 3 Head 231 (the statute giving immunity to witnesses before grand jury, construed not to include a grand juror); 1904, Lindsay v. Allen, 113 Tenn. 517, 82 S. W. 648 (St. 1897, c. 14, § 6, in its compulsory clause, does not apply to a commissioner's examination in a contested election proceeding);

Texas: Rev. P. C. 1911, § 574 (gaming offences; "any person so summoned and examined [for the State] shall not be liable to prosecution for any violation of said articles about which he may testify"); § 506 c, St. 1911, p. 29 (pandering; "any testimony or statement given by such female . . . shall not be used," etc.); § 547 (bucket-shops; privilege ceases, but "no person called . . . to testify shall be prosecuted," etc.); § 582 (betting on horse-race; accomplice or participant testifying "shall be exempt from prosecution," etc.); § 588¼ ss, St. 1919, 2d Sp. Sess. c. 78 (liquor offences; privilege ceases, but "no person required to so testify shall be punished for acts disclosed by such testimony"); § 593 c, St. 1911, c. 15 (liquor offences; privilege ceases, but "the testimony given by a witness shall not be used," etc., "nor shall any criminal action or proceeding be brought," etc.); § 663, St. 1913, c. 106 (insurance offences; privilege ceases, but "no person shall be prosecuted," etc.); § 758 e, St. 1911, c. 55 (unlawful practice of medicine; privilege ceases, but the testimony shall not be used, etc., nor shall any criminal action be brought, etc.); § 1184 (anonymous threatening letters; accomplice compellable, but "such person shall not be prosecuted," etc.); § 1199, St. 1907 (blacklisting of employees; witness summoned "shall not be liable to prosecution for any violation of the provisions of this title about which he may testify fully and without reserve"); Rev. Civ. St. 1911, § 4901 (insurance offences; privilege ceases, but "no person shall be prosecuted," etc.); § 5517 (legislative investigation of public officers; witnesses compellable, but the testimony "shall not be used against him," etc., "nor shall any criminal action or proceeding be brought against such witness on account of such testimony" except for perjury); §§ 7810, 7817, P. C. 1911, § 1468 (anti-trust law; witness for the State "shall not be subject to indictment" etc. for matters testified to); § 6668 (State railroad commission; privilege ceases, but "such evidence or testimony shall not be used," etc.); St. 1903, Mar. 31, c. 94, § 15, p. 119 (anti-trust law; a witness is compellable to testify and "shall not be liable for prosecution"); 1907, Ex parte Andrews, 51 Tex. Cr. 79, 100 S. W. 376 (foregoing statute of 1903 held applicable by its terms to an examination before a justice only, not before a grand jury);

Utah: Comp. L. 1917, § 7900 (in general); § 8060 (duelling offences; like Cal. P. C. § 232); § 8166 (gaming offences; like Cal. P. C. § 334, substituting "is compelled to testify" for "testified"); § 7950 (bribery, etc.; like Cal. P. C. § 89); § 2354 (election offences; the privilege ceases for offenders, "but the testimony so given shall not be used in any prosecution or proceeding, civil or criminal, against the person so testifying," except for perjury; "a person so testifying shall not thereafter be liable to indictment, prosecution, or punishment for the offense with reference to which his testimony was given, and may plead or prove the giving of testimony accordingly in bar of such indictment or prosecution"); § 2373 (corrupt practices at elections; privilege ceases, but "no prosecution can afterwards be had," except for perjury); § 3372 (liquor offences; privilege ceases, but no person shall be prosecuted, etc., nor shall his testimony be used, etc.); § 4822 (State public utilities commission; privilege ceases, but no person shall be prosecuted, etc., except for perjury); § 6963 (supplementary proceedings against debtor; privilege ceases, but no answer can be used as evidence, etc.); 1916, Beauregaard v. Gunnison City, 48 Utah 515, 160 Pac. 815 (Comp. L. 1907, § 912, giving immunity for election offences, held applicable to a contest upon a referendum);

Vermont: Gen. L. 1917, § 1510 (a defendant's answer in Chancery is not to be used against him in a prosecution for crime or penalty); § 1901 ("When a person testifies in a suit or proceeding at law or in equity, his testimony shall not be used as evidence to prove any fact in a suit or prosecution against him for a penalty or for violation of a law in relation to fraudulent conveyance of property"); § 2001 (a trustee's disclosure on oath is not to be evidence against him in a prosecution for a crime or penalty); §§ 3614, 3615 (in bastardy complaints, the woman is compellable to testify, after thirty days from time of delivery, but her testimony is not to be used against her in a criminal prosecution except for perjury in the testimony); § 7059 (no person testifying, in prosecutions for unlawful oaths, as the taker or the administrator of the oath, against the other, is to be prosecuted for a prior offence of the same kind);

Virginia: Code 1919, § 4425 (the privilege ceases as to a person concerned in duel; but after testifying "he shall never thereafter be liable to any punishment" for any offence "in or about said duel"); § 4780 (unlawful gaming; the privilege ceases, but the witness shall not "be ever proceeded against" for any such offence committed as charged in this prosecution); § 4498 (bribery offences; "nor shall any witness called by the Court or Commonwealth's attorney and giving evidence for the prosecution, either before the grand jury or the court in such prosecution, be ever proceeded against for any offence of giving, or offering to give, or accepting a bribe committed by him at the time and place indicated in such prosecution; but such witness shall be compelled to testify"); § 258 (election offences; "no witness giving evidence . . . shall ever be proceeded against for any offense made penal" by this chapter); § 4675 (illegal transactions in ardent spirits; privilege ceases, but no such testimony can be used, etc., nor shall the witness be prosecuted, etc.); St. 1918, Mar. 19, c. 388, § 73 (intoxicating liquors; privilege ceases, but the testimony shall not be used, etc., "nor shall he be prosecuted," etc.); 1912, Flanary v. Com., 113 Va. 775, 75 S. E. 289 (in a prosecution under Code § 3853, concerning elections, a witness who had testified before a grand jury under Code § 145*a*, containing an immunity provision as to election offences, was held to have obtained immunity and therefore to be compellable; precise point of dispute not clear);
Washington: R. & B. Code 1909, § 282 ("No [verified] pleading shall be used in a criminal prosecution against the party as evidence of a fact alleged in such pleading"); §§ 2149, 2150, 2330 (bribery and corruption offences; any offender "shall be a competent witness against any other person so offending," and is compellable; "but the testimony so given shall not be used," etc.; and the person "shall not thereafter be liable to indictment," etc.; but this Act does not apply to proceeding before a committing magistrate or justice of the peace); § 2568 (anarchistic propaganda; no person to be excused on investigation of such offences on the ground of self-crimination); § 2291 (criminal Code; wherever in this Code "it is provided that a witness shall not be excused from giving testimony tending to criminate himself, no person shall be excused" on that ground, but "he shall not be prosecuted or subjected," etc., for any matter so testified to, except for perjury); § 2480 (gambling, etc.; no person to be excused "from giving testimony concerning any offense committed by another . . . by reason of his having bet or played at the prohibited device"); § 2423 (similar provision for duelling offences); St. 1911, c. 117, p. 589, § 76, R. & B. Code §§ 8640, 8676-26 (public service commission; witnesses compellable, "but such evidence or testimony shall not be used," etc., except for perjury); St. 1913, c. 120, p. 356, § 13, R. & B. Code § 5395-13 (game law offences; "a participant in the violation thereof may testify as a witness against any other person violating the same, without incriminating himself in so doing," but the evidence shall not be used, etc.); § 632 (proceedings supplemental to execution; privilege ceases, but "an answer cannot be used," etc.); § 2451 (abortion, etc.; "no person shall be excused" on the ground of self-crimination); St. 1915, c. 2, § 13 (intoxicating liquor; privilege ceases, but "no person shall be prosecuted," etc.; "nor shall such testimony be used," etc.);
West Virginia: Const. 1872, Art. VI, § 45 (bribery and embracery in the Legislature; Legislature shall provide for abolishing the privilege; but any person so compelled "shall be exempted from trial and punishment," etc.); Code 1914, c. 3, § 90 (in cases of violation of the election law, the privilege ceases, but "if such witness testify fully, he shall be exonerated from such offence in which he is implicated, and shall not be prosecuted therefor"); c. 148, § 11 (in prosecutions for lynching or mobbing, the privilege ceases for a witness for the State, but a witness answering "fully and truly" all questions "touching his connection with or knowledge of such combination" or of the offence charged, shall not be "prosecuted or punished for the same offence in the indictment"); c. 152, § 18 (gaming, bribery, etc., etc.; privilege ceases, but no person against whom such witness testifies shall be competent against him on a like charge); c. 147, § 5*a* (bribery and embracery in the Legislature; privilege ceases, but "any person so compelled to testify shall be exempt" etc.); St. 1890, c. 16, Code 1914, § 168 (in cases of violation of the caucus law, the privilege ceases, but "his testimony shall not be given in evidence against him in any prosecution for such offence"); St. 1909, c. 60, Code 1914, § 3490 (in offences against the game laws, the privilege ceases, but "his testimony shall not be given in evidence against him in any prosecution against him for such offence"); St. 1913, c. 9, Code 1914, §§ 648, 653 (public service commission; public service corporation agents, etc., and others, compellable to testify, "but any such witness shall not be prosecuted," etc.); St. 1913, c. 13, § 33, as added by St. 1915, c. 7 (intoxicating liquors; any person called for the State "who shall give freely and truthfully any testimony tending in any way to incriminate himself shall be immune from prosecution under this Act");

Indeed, in the United States, or parts of them, it is difficult to conceive how the law could ever have been forced to punish certain insidious offences without thus clearing the way for justice. In England and Canada no written constitution grants protection; only a just conservatism requires that the nullification of the privilege be attained by the method of amnesty. But the American constitutional enshrinement of this particular privilege leaves no other method available; and the frequent and increasing resort to it seems to show how necessary it is found to be. Bribery and other forms of political corruption have called chiefly for its aid; and, next, gambling, liquor-selling, sundry frauds, and monopolistic extortions; moreover, investigations upon all subjects by legislative committees are commonly thus facilitated. These statutes, then, represent a demand for more effective investigation by any lawful expedient.

Wisconsin: Stats. 1919, § 12.26 (corrupt electoral practices; privilege ceases, but "no person shall be prosecuted," etc.); § 13.29 (no person required to testify before the Legislature or a committee "shall be held to answer criminally in any court or be subject to any penalty or forfeiture for any fact or act touching which he shall be so required to testify and as to which he shall have been examined and have testified," and no such testimony shall be used against him); § 4078 (in actions by the State or a municipality involving the official conduct of an officer, etc., the privilege ceases; but no person shall be prosecuted, etc.); § 4581 h (certain offences against chastity; the privilege ceases, "but no testimony so given by any person shall be used against him in any civil or criminal action to which he is a party," except for perjury); § 4534 (gaming offences; the privilege ceases, but "any such answer or evidence thus required of any person shall not be used against him for any purpose in any case, either civil or criminal, in which he is a party"); § 3033 (examination of a judgment debtor; no privilege obtains as to answers involving fraud, "but his answer shall not be used against him in any criminal action or proceeding"); § 4552 a (on a charge of soliciting or giving free passes for political services, the privilege ceases, but "no person having so testified shall be liable to any prosecution or punishment for any offence concerning which he was required to give his testimony or produce any documentary evidence"); § 4078 d (in prosecutions under Stats. 1988, §§ 4352, 4583, the privilege is abolished, "when so ordered to testify by a court of record or any judge thereof; but no person shall be prosecuted or subjected to any penalty or forfeiture for or on account of any transaction, matter, or thing concerning which such person may so testify or produce evidence," except for perjury therein); § 4078*a* (no railroad corporation shall be excused from producing documents, etc., in any civil action for penalties, etc., on the ground that the document, etc. "may subject it to a penalty or forfeiture," or be excused "from making a true answer under oath by and through its properly authorized officer or agent" on such a ground); § 4078 b (no officer or employee of any railroad corporation shall be excused from testifying or producing documents, etc., on the above ground; but no such person shall be prosecuted, etc.); § 1436 e (medical professional misconduct; witness compellable, but "no person shall be prosecuted" for any matter thus testified to, except for perjury); § 4475-2 (bribery as to State funds deposit; witness compellable, but "no testimony so given shall be in any manner used," etc., except for perjury); § 1729 t (State board of conciliation; privilege ceases, but "no person . . . shall be prosecuted," etc.); § 4575 n (graft by chauffeurs; privilege ceases, but no person shall be liable, etc.); § 4581 h-1 (pandering; § 4581 h made applicable); St. 1921, c. 571, making Stats. § 1495.22 (department of markets; except as to certain kinds of bearings, privilege ceases, but "no natural person shall be prosecuted," etc., and "no testimony so given" shall be received against him);

Wyoming: Comp. St. 1920, § 6073 (examination of a debtor; the privilege ceases as to answers involving fraud; "but his answer shall not be used as evidence against him in a prosecution for such fraud"); § 2749 (corrupt electoral practices; privilege ceases, but "any matter so elicited shall not be used against him, and said witness shall not be prosecuted," etc.); § 3430 (liquor offences; privilege ceases, but "no person required so to testify shall be punished for his own acts disclosed by such testimony"); § 5501 (public utilities commission; privilege ceases, but "no person having so testified shall be prosecuted," etc.); St. 1921, c. 117, § 28 (liquor law violations; privilege ceases, but "no natural person shall be prosecuted," etc.); St. 1921, c. 142, § 19 (insurance; privilege ceases, "and no testimony so given or produced shall be received," etc.).

§ 2282. Same: Application of the Principle. The great increase in the number and scope of statutes thus granting immunity has led to a number of detailed questions in the application of the principle. The salient elements in the principle are: The State, (1) having in view certain crimes which are the subject of a privilege, but are covered by the official authority to eliminate their penality, (2) calls for a testimonial disclosure of the crime, (3) invoking compulsion of law as the means of obtaining it, and (4) thus granting immunity as a consequence of the disclosure. Hence the questions arising may be thus grouped:

1. The kind of crime whose disclosure is to obtain the immunity;
2. The sufficiency of the disclosure itself;
3. The compulsoriness of the disclosure; and, finally,
4. The manner of effectuating the immunity obtained.

1. Kind of Crime. (a) As a necessary deduction from the principle of § 2259*a*, ante, an immunity granted to a person who testifies or produces documents is sufficient to destroy the privilege for him, even though the facts obtained from him serve to incriminate a third person, — in particular, a corporation whose agent or officer the witness is.[1]

(b) A further question arises as to other crimes by the witness himself; i. e. does the immunity extend to offences (disclosed by him) other than the one charged in the indictment or sought for in the proceeding? Here something depends on the nature of the tribunal and the words of the statute. 1. On a trial by jury upon indictment, the offence charged, or one incidental to it, would mark the limit of immunity; for the general object of the immunity would thus be sufficiently attained, and the immunity is not meant to be wasteful. But on a roving inquiry by a grand jury, no formal document defines its scope, either to warn the witness or to form a record of the results; hence there should be no limit, if the other conditions later mentioned are fulfilled. 2. Yet the statute may use broad terms; if it does, those terms should be taken as marking the limits; for the Legislature has power to make the pardon-immunity larger than was necessary and the only question can be whether its statute has so expressed an intention.[2] — The foregoing question, it is to be noted, may arise in one of two ways: Either the accused has made

§ 2282. [1] 1906, Hale v. Henkel, 201 U. S. 43, 26 Sup. 370.

Conversely, compulsory immunity to the officer or agent does not benefit the corporations: Ind. St. 1907, c. 243, p. 490, Mar. 11, § 11 (anti-trust law, civil remedies; witness compellable, who is agent, etc., of corporation, to be immune from prosecution, but "such exemption shall be personal to such witness and shall not exempt or render immune the corporation," etc.).

[2] 1912, Heike v. U. S., C. C. A., 192 Fed. 83 (whether testimony to offences under the anti-trust law gave immunity under a charge of fraud on the revenue laws); 1908, People v. Argo, 237 Ill. 173, 86 N. E. 679 (under a statute authorizing a court to make an order of immunity for a witness called upon in a bribery inquiry, the statutory immunity covers only the offences of bribery specified in the statute, and therefore questions concerning illegal gambling, in protection of which the bribery was said to have been committed, are still privileged; unsound, because the statute's immunity-phrase covered "any matter to which he shall be required to testify," and this must signify any matter relevant to the bribery inquiry); 1914, Mankato v. Olger, — Minn. — 148 N. W. 471 (illegal sale of liquor; disclosure before the grand jury held here not to have related to the crime now charged).

disclosure of a separate offence, and is later charged with it, and then pleads an immunity gained by his disclosure; or, the accused refuses disclosure of the other offence, alleging it to be a separate one, therefore not covered by the immunity, and therefore still privileged, and the prosecution alleges the contrary and asks that an answer be compelled. The decision, it would seem, should be the same, in whichever of these ways the question arises.

(c) Immunity under these statutes cannot extend to a prosecution for perjury committed in the very disclosure itself;[3] nor does the usual express statutory proviso in that tenor make them any the more effective. If argument were needed, it would be sufficient merely to appeal to the terms of the privilege, which forbids that one be compelled to give evidence against himself; for (a) the perjured utterance is not "evidence" or "testimony" to a crime but is the very act of crime itself; (b) the compulsion is not to testify falsely, but to testify truly; and (c) the privilege, by hypothesis, would have been violated only if the witness had truly confessed his crime, but if he denies it and falsely exonerates himself, he has confessed no fact "against himself"; hence his privilege has not been infringed by the actual answer, even though it might have been by some other answer; e.g., if a witness is asked, "Did you kill Doe?" and answers "No," it is not, as it turns out, "against himself," and what it might have been is immaterial.

2. Sufficiency of Disclosure. The question will also arise whether the witness has, in the subject of his testimony, made a disclosure such as entitles him to the immunity. This may depend somewhat upon the phrasing of the particular statute. But, so far as the general principle is not affected by particular statutory wordings, it should be necessary and sufficient (a) that the witness states something, not merely denies knowledge of any facts; (b) that his state-

[3] Fed. 1906, Edelstein v. U. S., C. C. A., 149 Fed. 636, 642 (good opinion by Adams, J.; Phillips, J., diss.); 1908, Wechsler v. U. S., 2d C. C. A., 158 Fed. 579 (under U. S. St. 1898, c. 541, § 7, following Edelstein v. U. S.); 1910, U. S. v. Brod, C. C. N. D. Ga., 176 Fed. 165 (under U. S. St. 1898, c. 541, § 7, Bankruptcy; following Edelstein v. U. S. and Wechsler v. U. S.); 1912, Glickstein v. U. S., 222 U. S. 139, 32 Sup. 71 (the immunity granted in § 7, subd. 9, of the Bankruptcy Act does not bar a prosecution for perjury committed in the testimony exacted under that section); 1913, Cameron v. U. S., 231 U. S. 710, 34 Sup. 244 (applying the Bankruptcy Act, St. July 1, 1898, § 7, and U. S. Rev. St. 1878, § 860; but the further ruling that under the latter statute "testimony given [by the same person] in the one bankruptcy proceeding [before the examiner], not tending to establish perjury in that proceeding, should not have been received to establish the crime charged in the other proceeding [before the referee]," is an unworthy quibble, and must excite astonishment); Ohio: 1913, State v. Cox, 87 Oh. St. 313, 101 N. E. 135; Or. 1919, State v. Frasier, 94 Or. 90, 184 Pac. 848 (St. 1898, July 1, c. 3, § 7, Bankruptcy Act, does not exclude or give immunity for perjured statements made before the referee in bankruptcy).

Contra: 1897, U. S. v. Bell, C. C., 81 Fed. 830, semble (in a labored opinion of perverse ingenuity; the soundness of which may be judged by its holding that a negro "lawyer and notary public" was not sufficiently informed of his privilege, and by its predication of a "long-established right to stand silent and refuse to answer when his answers might . . . submit him to the pains and penalties of yielding to the temptation to sustain his wrongdoing by false swearing." This "right" not to be tempted to commit perjury would be popular enough among witnesses, if it should be any more widely promulgated); 1906, U. S. v. Simon, 146 Fed. 89, 92 D. C. (for a bankrupt; cited post, § 2283); 1913, U. S. v. Rhodes, D. C. S. D. Ala., 212 Fed. 518 (the opinion cites only, In re Harris, 164 Fed. 292, which is however irrelevant). Compare State v. Turley, Ind., cited ante, § 2276, par. 4, and the cases upon perjury, cited ante, § 2270.

ment is of facts asked for by the opponent, not of facts volunteered or irrelevantly interjected; and (c) that the facts concern a matter about which the answer might by reasonable possibility have criminated him; for, while on the one hand it is immaterial whether the answer actually given is an incriminating one, yet, on the other hand, there is no privilege which he can exchange for the immunity unless (ante, § 2260) the matter is one on which his answer might conceivably criminate him.[4]

3. Compulsoriness of Disclosure. The privilege protects against being "compelled" to disclose. The idea of compulsion of course involves a relation between the State representative and the witness, i. e. an exercise of power by the former, and a submission by the latter. In developing this idea, a number of questions arise:

(A) Ordinary Jury Trial. Where the disclosure takes place in the course of testimony at an ordinary trial, whether before a judge, master-in-chancery, or other judicial officer, it can hardly be doubted that the principle is satisfied when three elements appear, viz. (1) an invocation or threat to exercise the general State power of testimonial inquiry; (2) a resistance by the witness signifying his intention to rely upon his privilege; (3) an exercise by the State of its specific power to eliminate the privilege. Concretely, then:

(1) The very session of the tribunal, convoked for purposes of trial, implies the first element. Therefore, no service of subpœna is necessary, in order to bring into play the inquisitorial function. Since as a witness may voluntarily take the stand in court without a subpœna, and still be subject to a witness' duties of disclosure and entitled to a witness' privileges, so here the State power is impliedly invoked by the very situation, without subpœna.[5] Nor is an oath, it would seem, any more necessary; whether perjury could be committed without an oath is immaterial, for the law of crimes and of evidence are not inherently coextensive; the imposition of an oath is a safeguard of trustworthiness only, and if the officer waives it, both his testimonial powers and the witness' testimonial duties remain unaffected in essence.[6]

[4] The cases do not cover all the points above noted: Eng. 1859, R. v. Skeen, 8 Cox Cr. 143 (cited infra); U. S. Fed. 1906, Edelstein v. U. S., 79 C. C. A. 328, 149 Fed. 636, 642 (under U. S. Bankruptcy Act 1898, § 7, subdiv. 9, the grant of immunity for any criminal proceeding is restricted to "such as might arise out of the conduct of his business . . . about which alone the statute authorized the examination in question to be made"); Cal. 1896, People v. Sternberg, 111 Cal. 3, 43 Pac. 198 (cited supra, n. 13); Okl. 1918, Temple v. State, 15 Okl. Cr. 146, 175 Pac. 555 (forgery by T. and X.; on the trial T. was illegally ordered and compelled to produce the deed alleged to be forged; held that under Const. Art. II, § 27, no immunity was obtained by T. because he did not produce the deed thereunder); Wis. 1906, Rudolph v. State, 128 Wis. 222, 107 N. W. 466 (indictment for soliciting a bribe as alderman; plea, that under St. 1901, c. 85, quoted ante, § 2281, he was immune from prosecution by reason of having testified on the subject before the grand jury; his testimony there merely stated that he was alderman, and knew of no bribery; held, that the testimony to his being alderman was not upon an incriminating fact, on the principle of § 2260, ante, so as to secure immunity); 1906, State v. Murphy, 128 Wis. 201, 107 N. W. 470 (similar; the defendant's testimony that he "did not know of any alderman demanding or receiving money," etc., was held not to secure immunity; as to point (a), supra, in the text, it is held that whether the witness gives testimony adverse to himself or not, and whether he testifies truthfully or not, are immaterial, but the question is under the statute "whether the defendant did, in any reasonable sense, testify concerning the transaction, matter, or thing for or concerning which he is prosecuted," and therefore "we should but travesty the statute should we hold that a declaration that he could give no evidence of any transactions within a general class constituted testimony concerning one"; lucid opinion by Dodge, J., concurred in on this point by the others; as to point (c) supra, in the text, Dodge, J., declares that the immunity granted may be broader than the privilege yielded, in respect to the scope of facts, if the Legislature clearly so intends; but from this view, i. e. that the immunity from the crime could be supposed to be given in exchange for "disclosures which but for moral turpitude he could be compelled to make any way, disclosures of mere circumstances so remote as not to fall within the scope of self-criminatory evidence," Marshall J., dissents "as emphatically as practicable," because the immunity and privilege are equivalents, "the one being exchanged by force of the law for the other," and the statutory phrase "transaction, matter, or thing" signifies "an event of a criminal character"; with him agree Kerwin and Winslow, JJ., thus forming a majority on this point c).

(2) There must be a claim of privilege.[7] The reason is that the anticipatory

[5] Authority cited for the general principle as to subpœna, ante, § 2199, n. 5; and the following: 1906, U. S. v. Armour Co., 142 Fed. 808, N. D. Ill., Humphrey, J. (a plea of immunity from prosecution, by the defendants, officers of meat-packing companies, was sustained, on the ground that the defendants had as witnesses obtained immunity, under U. S. St. 1903, Feb. 14 and 25, cited supra, n. 10, § 2281, by producing documents and giving information to the Federal Commissioner of Corporations; "the subpœna is a useless and superfluous thing after the parties are together"); 1920, Atkinson v. State, — Ind. —, 128 N. E. 433 (illegal gaming; immunity claimed under Burns' Ind. Stats. 1914, § 2113; defendant had been "invited" to appear and testify before the grand jury, no subpœna issued, and defendant testified; held that immunity was secured; following Armour v. U. S.).

By a Federal statute, passed since the above ruling in U. S. v. Armour, it has been attempted to confine the grant of immunity to persons who testify or produce "in obedience to a subpoena . . . under oath" (U. S. St. 1906, June 30, c. 3920, Code § 7034 quoted ante, § 2259). But it still remains for the Court to determine whether such a statute infringes on the constitutional lines of the privilege.

[6] U. S. v. Armour, supra, and authorities cited ante, § 1819. Contra: 1884, State v. Warner, 13 Lea. 52, 57.

In the foregoing statute, cited n. 5, it has been attempted to confine the grant of immunity to testimony given "under oath"; so also in the Federal Prohibition Act, U. S. St. 1919, Oct. 28, tit. II, § 30 (quoted ante, § 2281), and in Md. Ann. Code 1914, Art. 23, § 422 (quoted ante, § 2281).

[7] The general principle is amply shown in the authorities cited ante, § 2268. The following apply it to the present situation: Fed. 1902, U. S. v. Kimball, 117 Fed. 156, 163, C. C. ("The constitutional privilege cannot be violated before it can be invoked for his protection. . . . Compulsion can only exist where there is something to be overcome, as for instance refusal, objection, or an unwillingness of which the jury is apprised. Hence that refusal, objection, or unwillingness must affirmatively appear before compulsion is possible. . . . He must express his unwillingness in some form, and bring himself within the rule that he who would have the benefit of an exemption or privilege must claim it"); 1904, Burrell v. Montana, 194 U. S. 572, 24 Sup. 787, semble (a witness answering voluntarily and without claim of privilege on a bankruptcy citation cannot obtain the benefit of the Bankruptcy Act's prohibition of the subsequent use of the testimony against him); Okl. 1913, Scribner v. State, 9 Okl. Cr. 465, 132 Pac. 933 (interpreting Okl. Const. Bill of Rights, § 27; "the immunity clause is just as broad and no broader than the right of privilege of silence which it invades"); 1921, McConnell v. State, — Okl. Cr. —, 197 Pac. 521 (defendant pleaded guilty to murder, was then called to testify against a co-indictee, and later was sentenced to death; held, that no immunity was obtained by the defendant's act of testifying, there being no claim of privilege and no agreement by the prosecuting attorney; but the sentence was commuted to imprisonment for life); Pa. 1911, Com. v. Richardson, 229 Pa. 609, 79 Atl. 222 (testimony given as a witness for the prosecution, in a trial of M., without subpœna and without claim of privilege, held not to entitle immunity from use under Pa. Const. Art. 3, § 32); Wis. 1906, State v. Murphy, 128 Wis. 201, 107 N. W. 470 (the defendant had testified under subpœna, before the grand jury; his testimony consisted wholly of denials of any knowledge on the matters involved, and it did not appear that he claimed any privilege or offered any objection; Marshall, J., held that "for the statute to operate, there must be evidence under a real compulsion, not mere right of compulsion," so that an express claim of privilege would be unnecessary only where the situation was such that on refusal to answer "he would be liable to punishment as standing in defiance of the Court": Kerwin, J., concurred; Winslow, J., concurred; "I do not think that compelling a person to appear by subpœna can properly be considered as compelling him to testify; . . . A person might be compelled by subpatory legislative pardon or immunity is not authorized absolutely, but only conditionally upon and in exchange for the relinquishment of the privilege. The Legislature did not intend to give something for nothing, i. e. to give immunity merely in exchange for a testimonial disclosure which it could in any event have got by ordinary rules or by the witness' failure to insist on his privilege. The immunity was intended to be given solely as the means of overcoming the obstacle of the privilege; and therefore (irrespective of the precise formality of the judge's procedure) could not come into effect until that obstacle was explicitly presented and thus needed to be overcome.[8] It is not to be argued, in opposition, that the criminality of the act disappears by operation of law as soon as the witness speaks, and that therefore no claim of privilege is necessary. This argument, in the first place, equally ignores the above-mentioned essential feature of the legislative intention (namely, to give the immunity solely as a means of removing the obstacle of the claim). But furthermore, it involves somewhat of a logical absurdity; for by this theory, before the witness has testified, his act is still criminal, and therefore pœna to attend, but might testify voluntarily when so in attendance and thus waive his privilege; in like manner I think he may waive his immunity; I do not mean by this that it is necessary for the witness to refuse to answer, but simply that he should make known the fact that he does not testify voluntarily but only in obedience to the command of the law and the Court," which he did not here do; Dodge, J., dissenting, on this point).

Contra: Cal. 1917, People v. Fryer, 175 Cal. 785, 167 Pac. 382 (murder; defendant held entitled to immunity, under P. C. § 1324, by reason of having testified as a witness under subpœna and oath at a preliminary examination of G.; the judge's failure to read the Code to the witness held to satisfy the requirements for immunity under P. C. § 1324, even though the witness did not ask to be excused; unsound; Angellotti, C. J., and Lawlor and Lorigan, J. J., diss.); Ia. 1918, Doyle v. Wilcockson, 184 Ia. 757, 169 N. W. 241 (applying Code § 4612); N. Y. 1887, People v. Sharp, 107 N. Y. 427, 445 ("He could not be required, in order to gain the indemnity which the same law afforded, to go through the formality of an objection or protest which, however made, would be useless").

Under U. S. R. S. § 860 (which did not give immunity, but only forbade the use of the evidence), the statute's language made a claim unnecessary: 1909, Hammond Lumber Co. v. Sailors' Union, C. C. N. D. Cal., 167 Fed. 809, 823 (deposition given in a civil proceeding upon a subpœna duces tecum to produce records as secretary; the witness producing and being examined was held entitled to the benefit of U. S. R. S. § 860 though no claim of privilege was made at the time; it is enough if "the exemption is claimed, as here, at the time the evidence thus obtained is first sought to be used," i. e. proceedings for criminal contempt in violating the injunction in the civil proceeding). But this statute is now repealed (ante, § 488).

The proper statutory form, for making clear the necessity of an express claim of privilege in order to obtain the immunity, is found in the Canadian statutes of the Dominion and Ontario (quoted ante, § 2281). The California statute of 1905, P. C. § 1324 (quoted ante, § 2281), antedating by a year the ruling in U. S. v. Armour, is a well-worded statement, offering a fair and correct solution of the problem; it does not vary from what might well be the judicial construction of the privilege, except its liberality in presuming a claim of privilege in the absence of a reading aloud of the statute to the witness; the statute, however, has omitted to provide (as it ought to) that the oath may be impliedly waived, and that a voluntary attendance of the witness at a hearing shall be equivalent to a summons by subpœna, for the purpose of entitling to immunity. The Connecticut statute for public service corporations, Rev. St. 1918, § 3618 (quoted ante, § 2281) is an example of a correct form.

[8] This appears, e. g., in the U. S. St. 1887 (Interstate Commerce Commission), §§ 9, 12, and its successors (ante, § 2281, n. 5), where it is said that "the claim . . . shall not excuse," and "no person shall be excused . . . on the ground that, etc.," "but no person shall be prosecuted for" anything so testified about.

This general principle that there must inherently be an exchange of privilege for immunity is well stated in the following opinions: 1884, Turney, J., in State v. Warner, 13 Lea 52, 62–66; 1906, Marshall, J., in State v. Murphy, 128 Wis. 201, 107 N. W. 470 (quoted supra).

within the privilege, and yet he can be compelled to speak and thus do something to remove its criminality; in other words, being as yet non-compellable, he is compelled to become compellable! No such logical feat is required in applying the other view above set forth.

It follows that testimony given actually by deliberate choice, under only the appearance of compulsion, either by imposing upon the judge's inadvertence, or by collusion with opposing counsel, can of course not earn immunity.[9] It is to defeat such collusive attempts to obtain immunity that the witness' plain expression of the claim of privilege should, on practical grounds, be insisted upon.

(3) There must be a ruling of the judge, overriding the claim and requiring an answer.[10] It is plain that the judge, upon such a claim of privilege being made, could if he chose respect it, and thus refrain from exercising the immunity-power. Therefore, the immunity operates as soon as —and not until — he overrides the claim, by some form of ruling. Moreover, the immunity can only be obtained in some proceeding where the State is represented by counsel; otherwise there is no grant of it; moreover, (unless the statute speaks expressly to the contrary) it cannot be supposed that every offender is to have the power in his own discretion to obtain immunity automatically on demand. The grant must be left to the discretion of the State's representative. Whether the proceeding be in form criminal or civil, is immaterial; the action of the State's representative is the important thing.[11]

(B) Administrative officer. Where the testimonial disclosure is made before an administrative officer, having the auxiliary power to subpœna witnesses and to obtain judicial aid to enforce his testimonial powers, the question is more complicated in certain details, though not different in principle:

(1) Neither subpœna nor oath is necessary, for the same reasons as before

[9] Eng. Re Strahan, 7 Cox Cr. 85 (voluntary application of bankrupt to be examined; per Alderson, B., the statutory permission to plead such examination in bar of an indictment did not cover "a mere process, got up for the purpose, voluntarily absolving themselves from the consequences of their acts"); 1859, R. v. Skeen, 8 Cox Cr. 143 (under the same bankruptcy statute, an examination given in bankruptcy, after committal for trial on indictment, and covering only the facts at that time already otherwise testified to and known, held not a "disclosure" sufficient to exonerate under the statute, by nine judges to five); 1914, R. v. Noel, 3 K. B. 848 (immunity held not to be obtained by disclosures made under cross-examination after voluntarily taking the stand as defendant in a civil action, under the Larceny Act, 1861, c. 96, § 85, giving immunity "if he shall at any time previously to his being charged with such offence have first disclosed such act on oath, in consequence of any compulsory process"; the mere production of a document by order of the judge, held not a compulsory production, under the same statute); U. S. 1902, U. S. v. Kimball, 117 Fed. 156, 163 (nature of compulsion, considered).

Compare the following ruling: 1896, People v. Sternberg, 111 Cal. 3, 43 Pac. 198 (whether the person had in fact so testified to the offence now charged); and the cases cited ante, § 2270, as to what constitutes compulsion.

[10] Authorities ante, § 2270, n. 6, § 2271, for the general principle; and the following: 1907, Ex parte Andrews, 51 Tex. Cr. 79, 100 S. W. 376 (a witness refused to answer, claiming the privilege; on habeas corpus, an immunity statute being cited, it was held that "inasmuch as he was offered no immunity," the privilege remained).

[11] 1921, Nekoosa-Edwards Paper Co. v. News Pub. Co., 174 Wis. 107, 182 N. W. 919 (action for price of goods sold; counter-claim under Stats. § 1747 e for damages caused by maintaining a monopoly; the defendant-company held not entitled to immunity; opinion obscure).

(supra, par. (A) 1). Yet, owing to the less formal and dramatic features of a hearing before an administrative officer, the situation presents greater difficulty of interpreting the circumstances and of determining whether the State power was being invoked.

(2) But a claim of privilege against self-incrimination, explicitly made, is essential.[12] This is not only equally true as for the case of testimony in a judicial trial (supra, (A) 2), but the explicitness is here even more essential, and particularly where the administrative officer makes a general demand for documents or testimony upon a broad class of topics. The reason is clear. The officer has testimonial powers to extract a general mass of facts, of which some, many, or most will certainly be innocent and unprivileged, some may be privileged communications (e. g., between attorney and client) whose privilege remains unaffected by the statute defining his powers, and some may be privileged as self-criminating but liable to become demandable by overriding this privilege with a grant of immunity. Among this mass of facts, then, the officer will seek those which are relevant to his administrative inquiry; he cannot know which of them fall within one or another privilege, in particular, which of them tend to criminate at all, or to criminate a particular person; if such facts are there, he may not desire or be authorized to exercise the option of granting immunity so as to obtain them; his primary function and power is to obtain the relevant facts at large, and his power to obtain a special and limited class of facts by grant of immunity is only a secondary one, and one which he will not exercise till a cause arises, if even then. For these reasons of practical sense, then, as well as for the inherent requirements of principle already noticed for judicial officers, it is particularly true for an inquiry by an administrative officer that the witness must explicitly claim his privilege, and specifically the privilege against self-incrimination, and must then be overridden in that claim, before immunity can take effect. The contrary view can only be reached by forgetting the contrast between the broad class of innocent facts which are the normal object of the officer's inquiry, and the special and limited class of criminal facts which may form scattered parts of the mass. The analogy is seen in judicial trials, where it is settled that though an accused in a criminal trial need make no claim, yet a party in a civil trial or a witness in any trial must make his claim (ante, § 2268), because out of the whole mass of innocent facts subject to inquiry it cannot be known beforehand by the tribunal what particular facts asked for will tend to criminate nor whether he will voluntarily choose to disclose them. So, here, it is especially necessary that the claim of the particular privilege against self-incrimination should be explicitly put forward by the witness to segregate and mark the specific facts which he knows or believes to have that quality; then, and then only, is the officer placed in a position

[12] U. S. v. Skinner, D. C. S. D. N. Y., 218 Fed. 870 (there must be a claim of privilege, express or implied; here ruling upon testimony given before the Interstate Commerce Commission, under St. 1893, Feb. 11; good opinion by Grubb, J.).

Contra: 1906, U. S. v. Armour, 142 Fed. 808, per Humphrey, J. (cited supra, n. 5).

when he can consciously exercise the option which the immunity-statute gives him. This option he can certainly not be deemed to exercise unwittingly and in gross by the mere circumstance of pursuing his normal course of duty and power for relevant facts at large. It is indeed astonishing to suppose that a witness by surreptitiously including criminal with non-criminal facts could obtain from such an officer a wholesale immunity, without having done anything to notify either whether particular facts are criminating or whether he waives his privlege voluntarily and without immunity.

The contrary ruling made in 1906, in a prosecution growing out of an investigation by the Federal Commissioner of Corporations into the practices of the meat-packing trade, led to the following historic utterance by President Roosevelt:

1906, President Roosevelt, Message to Congress, April 18: "It is very desirable to enact a law declaring the true construction of the existing legislation so far as it affects immunity. I can hardly believe that the ruling of Judge Humphrey will be followed by other judges. . . . It is, of course, necessary, under the Constitution and the laws, that persons who give testimony or produce evidence, as witnesses, should receive immunity from prosecution. It has hitherto been supposed that the immunity conferred by existing laws was only upon persons who, being subpœnaed, had given testimony or produced evidence, as witnesses, relating to any offence with which they were, or might be, charged. But Judge Humphrey's decision is, in effect, that, if either the Commissioner of Corporations does his duty, or the Interstate Commerce Commission does its, by making the investigations which they by law are required to make, though they issue no subpœna and receive no testimony or evidence, within the proper meaning of those words, the very fact of the investigation may, of itself, operate to prevent the prosecution of any offender for any offence which may have been developed in even the most indirect manner during the course of the investigation, or even for any offence which may have been detected by investigations conducted by the Department of Justice entirely independently of the labors of the Interstate Commerce Commission or of the Commissioner of Corporations — the only condition of immunity being that the offender should have given, or directed to be given, information which related to the subject out of which the offence has grown.

"In offences of this kind it is at the best hard enough to execute justice upon offenders. Our system of criminal jurisprudence has descended to us from a period when the danger was lest the accused should not have his rights adequately preserved, and it is admirably framed to meet this danger. But at present the danger is just the reverse; that is, the danger nowadays is, not that the innocent man will be convicted of crime, but that the guilty man will go scot-free. This is especially the case where the crime is one of greed and cunning, perpetrated by a man of wealth in the course of those business operations where the code of conduct is at variance, not merely with the code of humanity and morality, but with the code as established in the law of the land. It is much easier, but much less effective, to proceed against a corporation, than to proceed against the individuals in that corporation who are themselves responsible for the wrong-doing. Very naturally, outside persons who have no knowledge of the facts, and no responsibility for the success of the proceedings, are apt to clamor for action against the individuals. The Department of Justice has, most wisely, invariably refused thus to proceed against individuals, unless it was convinced both that they were in fact guilty and that there was at least a reasonable chance of establishing this fact of their guilt. These beef-packing cases offered one of the very few instances where there was not only the moral certainty that the accused men were guilty, but what seemed — and now seems — sufficient legal evidence of the fact.

"But in obedience to the explicit orders of the Congress the Commissioner of Corporations had investigated the beef-packing business. The counsel for the beef-packers explicitly admitted that there was no claim that any promise of immunity had been given by Mr. Garfield, as shown by the following colloquy during the argument of the Attorney-General: Mr. Moody: . . . 'I dismiss almost with a word the claim that Mr. Garfield promised immunity. Whether there is any evidence of such a promise or not, I do not know and I do not care.' Mr. Miller (the counsel for the beef-packers): 'There is no claim of it.' Mr. Moody: 'Then I was mistaken, and I will not even say that word.' But Judge Humphrey holds that if the Commissioner of Corporations (and therefore if the Interstate Commerce Commission) in the course of any investigations prescribed by Congress, asks any questions of a person, not called as a witness, or asks any questions of an officer of a corporation, not called as a witness, with regard to the action of the corporation on a subject out of which prosecutions may subsequently arise, then the fact of such questions having been asked operates as a bar to the prosecution of that person or of that officer of the corporation for his own misdeeds.

"Such interpretation of the law comes measurably near making the law a farce; and I therefore recommend that the Congress pass a declaratory act stating its real intention."

The formalities of claim, before an administrative officer, are the only really doubtful and difficult aspects of the problem. — In the first place, it is doubtful whether a statutory requirement of writing for the validity of the witness' claim would be constitutional. A writing is not necessary for such a claim in court; nor would the claim necessarily there become part of the record. But the statute, as a matter of policy, ought at least to require the officer to file his questions in writing, and to note a claim of privilege in writing; so that the Government, on its part, could at least insure itself and the witness against the enormous expense of time and money that might be involved in a trial of the plea of immunity. — In the next place, if writing is not requirable nor in fact employed, the claim and its overriding must at least be explicit; by which is meant, not a form of words, nor any formality of conduct, but an expressed and understood claim of the right not to disclose on the specific ground of facts tending to criminate; and an explicit overriding of the claim and a grant of immunity.[13] Furthermore, in the case of an inquiry into acts of a corporation, where the Government demands production of corporate books from the agents of the corporation, the agent producing the books must claim the personal privilege for himself, if that is what he desires; first, because it cannot be known, until he says so, that the corporate books contain facts tending to criminate him; and, secondly, because, even though they do, it cannot be known which of the privileges — his own, or that of the corporation, or both — the officer will choose to override; for a question may still [13] Whether the claim was explicitly made in fact in U. S. v. Armour, supra, is perhaps open to question, as to some of the witnesses, upon some of the testimony. But it is fairly clear that the witnesses' counsel were amply aware of the applicability of the privilege, and could have been explicit enough had they chosen. The natural query is, why did they not all explicitly and in writing claim both privilege and immunity?

The following statute seeks to supply a simple method of plainly declining the immunity: N. Y. St. 1912, c. 312, p. 568 (amending Consol. L. c. 40, St. 1909, c. 88, by adding § 2446; if by any law an immunity of the present sort is provided, a person may file with the county clerk "a statement expressly waiving such immunity" for a special transaction, and thereupon his testimony "may be received or produced before any judge," etc., and if received, "such person shall not be entitled to any immunity," etc.).

remain (ante, § 2259) as to the privilege of the corporation.[14] — Finally, the claim may well be in gross, i. e. for a particular mass of documents the claim may be made as to all criminating facts therein, and need not be more specifically made nor more frequently renewed than will suffice to avoid misunderstanding. The essential thing is that no formality is required, on the one hand, and, on the other, that the witness, since he is the one to be explicit, must be explicit enough to serve his purpose. — These are not all the applicable considerations, either of general principle or of detail; the entire question will doubtless not be thoroughly worked out in our judicial decisions for many years to come. But the foregoing aspects are those which will first claim the judicial labors for their early settlement by courts of last resort.

(3) There must be some expression of the officer, in the nature of a ruling, overriding the claim and insisting upon an answer; and this for the same reason as in a judicial trial (supra, par. (A) 3).

It remains to notice a misunderstanding which should not obscure the effect of the rule in question. It was said, for example, at the time of U. S. v. Armour, above cited, that "the Department of Commerce and Labor, created with power to investigate the trusts and combinations in restraint of trade, it is declared, is absolutely useless if the results of its investigations cannot furnish any basis on which to bring offenders to punishment." Now the profession ought to understand that no administrative Department has a function to procure self-incriminating evidence "on which to bring offenders to punishment." That is precisely what the Constitution protects us against. It is just because no officer has inquisitorial powers to force self-crimination that the immunity-statutes were passed; so that only by abnegating the judicial inquisitorial attitude could the Department obtain the information necessary for its administrative purposes. The real inconvenience of the above-cited ruling in U. S. v. Armour was that it hampered the Department of Justice, by making the Department of Commerce the unwitting instrument of stopping the prosecutions of the former. Even this is not an insuperable obstacle. If U. S. v. Armour should ever become the final law, it would mean simply this, that an administrative officer, in obtaining testimony for the purposes of his department, has the burden of making and proving an explicit and specific disavowal of any intention to grant immunity from prosecution, otherwise the immunity obtains. This leaves the situation temporarily annoying for the Government; but it leaves them with ample power of self-protection for the future.

4. Mode of Effectuating the Immunity. The proper mode (apart from express provision) for taking advantage of the immunity gained by thus testifying is a motion to quash the indictment founded upon the charge testified to.[15]

[14] This distinction seems not to have been noticed in U. S. v. Armour, supra.

[15] 1903, Sandwich v. State, 137 Ala. 85, 34 So. 620. Compare the citations in § 2270, ante.

Suppose a witness already under indictment and now summoned before the grand jury to testify as a witness on the same subject; has his privilege yet disappeared? Yes, for although he has not yet had an opportunity to claim immunity from trial, yet the indictment is

But a plea in bar has also been employed.[16] The English and Canadian method of furnishing the party with a certificate (ante, § 2281) is the most sensible and efficient provision.

§ 2283. Same: (2) Statutes forbidding the Use of Testimony. (1) Where the statute does not pronounce an entire immunity, by forbidding punishment or prosecution for the offence disclosed, but merely prohibits in any criminal prosecution the use of the testimonial admissions made by the witness, a slightly different question is presented, not so plain of solution.

The only argument that has ever been advanced against holding such statutes equally effective is an argument based on the theory of facts "tending to criminate." By the conceded principle (ante, § 2260), the privilege protects against the disclosure of facts "tending" to criminate; and it is argued that a compulsory admission, though itself prohibited to be used, may nevertheless furnish a clue to other evidence, the use of which is not reached by the statute's prohibition; and that thus the disclosure may "tend" to criminate in spite of the statute:[1]

1892, BLATCHFORD, J., in Counselman v. Hitchcock, 142 U. S. 547, 564, 586, 12 Sup. 195: "This [statute] of course protected him against the use of his testimony against him or his property in any prosecution against him or his property, in any criminal proceeding, in a court of the United States. But it had only that effect. It could not, and would not, prevent the use of his testimony to search out other testimony to be used in evidence against him or his property, in a criminal proceeding in such court. It could not prevent the obtaining and the use of witnesses and evidence which should be attributable directly to the testimony he might give under compulsion, and on which he might be convicted, when otherwise, and if he had refused to answer, he could not possibly have been convicted. . . . [Section 860 U. S. Revised Statutes] affords no protection against that use of compelled testimony which consists in gaining therefrom a knowledge of the details of a crime, and of sources of information which may supply other means of convicting the witness or party. . . . We are clearly of opinion that no statute which leaves the party or witness subject to prosecution after he answers the criminating question put to him can have the effect of supplanting the privilege conferred by the Constitution of the United States."

a substantial part of the 'quid pro quo,' and his act of testifying will relate back to the indictment, and will entitle him to quash it: 1910, In re Kittle, C. C. S. D. N. Y., 180 Fed. 946. Conversely, the witness testifying obtains immunity, even though he is already arrested or indicted: 1921, Dodson v. State, 89 Tex. Cr. 541, 232 S. W. 836 (under P. C. § 574).

[16] 1910, Heike v. U. S., 217 U. S. 423, 30 Sup. 539 (the defendant pleaded specially in bar that he had obtained statutory immunity by testifying before the grand jury; this plea failed, the trial Court directing a verdict on it; the defendant then, by leave pleading over, pleaded not guilty; before trial of this plea, the trial Court entered judgment subject to the leave to plead; on the question whether this judgment was reviewable in the Supreme Court as a final judgment, the argument was made that the statutory immunity was meant to prevent prosecution, and hence a judgment on a plea in bar if favorable must be final; this argument was held insufficient to affect the usual rule as to Federal judgments on writ of error).

May acts for which immunity has been obtained be still merely as evidence relevant to a charge of some later act? Yes: 1911, U. S. v. Swift, D. C. N. D. Ill., 186 Fed. 1002 (an immunity obtained by giving information in 1904 does not extend to include acts done in pursuance of the same continuing conspiracy to 1910 or a period prior but not barred by statute of limitations; and the transactions covered by the original immunity may still be given in evidence when relevant to show the nature of the conspiracy at a later time).

§ 2283. [1] This argument was first advanced in 1853, in the Second Report of the Commissioners of Common Law Practice, p. 21.

The answer to this argument has been already supplied in dealing with the "tendency" aspect of the privilege (ante, § 2261). That doctrine signifies merely that when facts A, B, C, and D are the constituents of a crime, but no one of them is of itself criminal, the disclosure of fact A alone cannot be compelled, because, if the facts B, C, and D were otherwise proved, then fact A could be proved, and the "chain" completed, by the witness' compulsory admission, and thus the admission would after all have criminated him. But the doctrine does not mean that the disclosure of fact X can be refused because from fact X a clue might by possibility be obtained, which otherwise could not have been obtained, to some criminal fact A B C D. If, then, we repudiate the notion that the "tendency" doctrine involves facts which might furnish clues, and suppose that the disclosure of fact A has been compelled, we have, under the statutes in question, a prohibition to use this compulsory admission of fact A in any prosecution charging the crime A B C D; the prohibition being obeyed, it is obvious that the proof of the entire criminal fact A B C D must be still as impossible as ever without the aid of the admission, and that, so long as the admission remains out of the evidence in that prosecution, no criminating consequences (so far as the privilege protected against them) will have come to the witness.[2] This is the sufficient answer; and it is plain that it turns upon the precise meaning of the privilege with reference to clues disclosed (ante, § 2261). But it may be added that if reliance is to be placed upon the liberality of the Constitutions in forbidding the "use" of evidence "furnished" against himself by the witness, and if this be thought to prohibit even the "use" of it to obtain clues to other evidence, then that prohibition may none the less be made effective, under the statutes in question, by the exclusion, in the subsequent prosecution, of any evidence which has in fact been obtained by this forbidden "use" of the clues in the original disclosure. Such a prohibition can also be carried out. If this forced interpretation of the word "use" is to be put upon the constitutional enactment, it must surely also be applied to the statutory enactments, which equally forbid any "use" of the admissions obtained.[3] It is illogical to expand the prohibition of the Constitution without equally expanding the remedy of the statute.

The constitutional efficacy of this type of statute for their purpose was well expounded in the following early opinions, written at a period nearer to

[2] Such is the construction of these statutes in England: 1861, R. v. Leatham, 3 E. & E. 658 (defendant, testifying on the former occasion under statutory immunity, had mentioned a letter written by him to W.; afterwards W. produced the letter; held, that "a document already existing before, and referred to by the witness in the course of, the examination" is not to be excluded, if proved by other evidence; the fact that his testimony had given the clue does not exclude the evidence).

[3] That the principle, not the words, control, see ante, § 2252. The opinion in Counselman v. Hitchcock itself declares this. But Com. v. Emery, Mass. (cited infra), on which it partly relied, had turned upon the local wording.

The above view has now been taken in Com. v. Cameron, 229 Pa. 592, 79 Atl. 169 (1911; under Pa. Const. Art. 3, § 32, providing that in bribery self-crimination may be compelled, but that such testimony "shall not afterwards be used against him," the witness so testifying does not obtain immunity from prosecution).

the era of constitution-making, when the cobwebs of artificial fantasy had not begun to obscure its plain meanings:

1853, Scott, J., in State v. Quarles, 13 Ark. 307, 311: "The privilege in question, in its greatest scope, as allowed by the common law — and no one, be he witness or accused, can pretend to claim it beyond its scope at the common law — never did contemplate that the witness might not be proved guilty of the very crime about which he may be called to testify; but only that the witness should not be compelled to produce the evidence to prove himself guilty of that crime. His privilege, therefore, was not an exemption from the consequences of a crime that he might have committed; but only an exemption from the necessity of himself producing the evidence to establish his own crime. . . . So long as it might be lawful to produce in evidence against an accused party whatever he might before have voluntarily said as a witness on a prosecution against another, there were no means by which the privilege could be made available short of a claim by the witness to be silent; and as that was the rule of the common law, this was the common-law mode of making the privilege available. And that silence was but a mode of making the privilege available, and was not of the essence of the privilege itself, is conclusively proven by all that current of enlightened authority, to which we yield our fullest assent, which holds that the privilege has ceased when the crime has been pardoned, when the witness has been tried and acquitted, or is adjudged guilty, or when the prosecution, to which he was exposed, has been barred by lapse of time. . . . But the Legislature has so changed the common-law rule, by the enactment in question, in the substitution of a rule that the testimony, required to be given by the act, shall never be used against the witness for the purpose of procuring his conviction for the crime or misdemeanor to which it relates, that it is no longer necessary for him to claim his privilege as to such testimony, in order to prevent its being afterwards used against him. And the only question that can possibly arise under the present state of the law, as applicable to the case now before us, is as to whether our statutory regulations afford sufficient protection to the witness, responsive to this new rule and to his constitutional guarantee against compulsory self-accusation. . . . In any case where more than ordinary precautions may be thought expedient or necessary, the powers of the Circuit Court are ample for the complete preservation of every item of evidence that might be produced. There can then be no ground for apprehension for the safety of the witness from this source. Nor can there be any greater cause for apprehension from any supposed possibility or probability that the true privilege of the witness may be invaded under the operation of the new rule, by the practical effect of his evidence, either direct or indirect, in opening up to the State avenues of light leading to evidences of other crimes or misdemeanors, upon which prosecutions might be afterwards founded against the witnesses, that might otherwise remain closed and unsuggested. Because, when the course of examination would lead to any inquiry as to any matter materially connected with any crime or misdemeanor other than that which was the subject of direct inquiry before the court, — as, when such matter might be indispensable for the elucidation of some material matter already produced in evidence by the witness and directly involved in the issue — the witness could claim his privilege as to such matter as fully as if he had been inquired of in chief touching such other crime or misdemeanor. . . . And when the effect of the witness' testimony would not substantially amount to the furnishing of an item in a consecutive series of proofs tending to his conviction for another crime or misdemeanor, it would be so remote, contingent, and intangible, as scarcely to be of capacity to be considered of as legitimately resulting from his testimony in legal contemplation, in any sense to invade his true privilege. At any rate, we can safely say, it would not 'prima facie' be so. And the argument to maintain the contrary can only be supported by assuming that the privilege is absolute and unqualified, which is not only legally untrue as to it, but untrue as to every other right and privilege of the citizen, because they are all but component elements, not of natural liberty, but of civil liberty. And the error of the hypothesis will abundantly appear in the absurdities evolved in carrying out, to its inevitable result, any given right or privilege of the citizen when so based. If, for instance, it were broadly admitted that the privilege in question was so based, and hence would be invaded whenever the incidental effect of the testimony of the witness might in any degree be suggestive of sources of light that, when pursued, might lead to evidences upon which prosecutions might afterwards be founded against the witness for other crimes or misdemeanors; and also (as contended for on the other side) that the witness is to be the sole judge of the occasion for the exercise of his privilege, it would be difficult to drive the machinery of government forward in its ordinary course. A Court, for instance, might then lawfully refuse to try a cause, lest its investigation, by the instrumentality of the jury and witnesses, might be suggestive of inquiries that might ultimately lead to evidence upon which a criminal prosecution might be afterwards founded against the presiding judge. And for a like reason, the Executive might feel lawfully authorized to withhold his ordinary communications from the Legislature; and even that body might lawfully decline to perform its ordinary duties upon the same grounds — especially if the true privilege not only authorizes the citizen to withhold criminating matter, but also any matter that might have a tendency to degrade — because, the very remedies for the future would often be suggestive of the errors of the past, and these might not all be of an excusable cast. But to all objections of this class, it is a conclusive answer to say that, if, beyond reasonable foresight, any such cases should arise under the operation of our statute rule, as would seem to be clearly within its equity, although not embraced within its strict letter, all such special and unlooked-for cases would be as fully within its provisions, as if embraced by its terms, and witnesses in such extreme cases would doubtless obtain full protection from the Courts."

1861, DENIO, J., in People v. Kelly, 24 N. Y. 74, 83: "But it is proposed by the appellant's counsel to push the construction of the Constitution a step further. A person is not only not compellable to be a witness against himself in his own cause, or to testify to the truth in a prosecution against another person where the evidence given, if used as his admission, might tend to convict himself if he should be afterwards prosecuted, but he is still privileged from answering, though he is secured against his answers being repeated to his prejudice on another trial against himself. It is no doubt true that a precise account of the circumstances of a given crime would afford a prosecutor some facilities for fastening the guilt upon the actual offender, though he were not permitted to prove such account upon the trial. The possession of the circumstances might point out to him sources of evidence which he would otherwise be ignorant of, and in this way the witness might be prejudiced. But neither the law nor the Constitution is so sedulous to screen the guilty as the argument supposes. If a man cannot give evidence upon the trial of another person without disclosing circumstances which will make his own guilt apparent or at least capable of proof, though his account of the transactions should never be used as evidence, it is the misfortune of his condition and not any want of humanity in the law. If a witness objects to a question on the ground that an answer would criminate himself, he must allege, in substance, that his answer, if repeated as his admission on his own trial, would tend to prove him guilty of a criminal offence. If the case is so situated that a repetition of it on a prosecution against him is impossible, as where it is forbidden by a positive statute, I have seen no authority which holds or intimates that the witness is privileged. It is not within any reasonable construction of the language of the constitutional provision. The term 'criminal case,' used in the clause, must be allowed some meaning, and none can be conceived other than a prosecution for a criminal offence. But it must be a prosecution against him; for what is forbidden is that he should be compelled to be a witness against himself. Now if he be prosecuted criminally touching the matter about which he has testified upon the trial of another person, the statute makes it impossible that his testimony given on that occasion should be used by the prosecution on the trial. It cannot, therefore, be said that in such criminal case he has been made a witness against himself, by force of any compulsion used towards him to procure, in the other case, testimony which cannot possibly be used in the criminal case against himself."

This was the view once generally accepted throughout this country, including the lower Federal courts.[4]

But in 1892 came the ruling in Counselman v. Hitchcock, in the Federal Supreme Court.[5] Up to that time, three rulings only, so far as appears, had

[4] Federal: 1871, U. S. v. Brown, 1 Sawyer 531, 536, Fed. Cas. No. 14, 671 (statute held to annul the privilege; Deady, J.: "If this is not the object and effect of the act, I confess I do not know what is"); 1883, U. S. v. McCarthy, 18 Fed. 87, 89 (Brown, J.: "The statute, in preventing all possible use of testimony thus given, does away with the reason for the rule, and . . . will be a complete protection"); 1890, Re Counselman, 44 Fed. 268 (similar ruling, in a good opinion by Gresham, J.); Arkansas: 1853, State v. Quarles, 13 Ark. 307, 310 (quoted supra: statute as to accomplice's testimony, held constitutional); 1855, Pleasant v. State, 15 Ark. 624, 650 (preceding case approved); 1899, State v. Bach Liquor Co., 67 Ark. 163, 55 S. W. 854 (State v. Quarles approved; but on a trial for selling liquor, a witness asked as to a purchase is still privileged under the statute, because he is not "concerned" in the offence charged); California: 1857, Ex parte Rowe, 7 Cal. 184 ("The statute gives the witness that protection which was contemplated by the Constitution"); Georgia: 1853, Higdon v. Heard, 14 Ga. 255, 259 (gaming statute; "they get that protection [of the Constitution] thus: answers filed, in cases originating under the act of 1764, cannot be read in evidence against them in any criminal case whatever"); 1879, Kneeland v. State, 62 Ga. 395, 398 ("It is difficult to see how that which can never be used against him can tend in the slightest degree to criminate the witness"; sanctioning Code § 4545); Indiana: 1860, Wilkins v. Malone, 14 Ind. 153, 155 (usury statute, held sufficient to annul the privilege; following State v. Quarles, Ark., and Higdon v. Heard, Ga.); 1879, State v. Enochs, 69 Ind. 314, 316 (Wilkins v. Malone approved); 1888, Bedgood v. State, 115 Ind. 275, 17 N. E. 621 (rape; R. S. 1881, § 1800, held to annul the privilege); Iowa: 1919, Davison v. Guthrie, 186 Ia. 211, 172 N. W. 292 (Code § 4075, compelling answers of a judgment debtor, "but his answers shall not be used," etc., held valid; there being no Fifth Amendment clause in the Iowa constitution; see ante, § 2252; State v. Height, cited ante, § 2252, is not referred to); Missouri: 1891, Ex parte Buskett, 106 Mo. 602, 608, 17 S. W. 753 (gaming statute; "there can be no doubt that the language of the statute granting the protection . . . is as broad as the constitutional privilege"; following People v. Kelly, N. Y., and People v. Quarles, Ark.); New York: 1839, Perrine v. Striker, 7 Paige 598, 600 (Walworth, C., apparently ruled as in the next case); 1841, Bank of Salina v. Henry, 1 Hill N. Y. 555, Henry v. Bank of Salina, 5 Hill 523, 547 (statute making a usurer compellable as a witness when plaintiff; Walworth, C., held that the act "removes the constitutional difficulty in compelling them to answer, by declaring that the testimony given . . . shall not be used," etc.; this was supported by a vote of 13 to 8, the dissenters proceeding apparently on other grounds); 1846, Bank v. Salina, 2 Denio 155, 159 (statute protecting against the use of testimony of a usurer on indictment, held not sufficient since a forfeiture also, recoverable by action, was not covered by the statute; on the principle of § 2280, ante); 1861, People v. Kelly, 24 N. Y. 74, 82 (quoted supra; applied to the bribery Act of 1853); 1869, Lothrop v. Clapp, 40 N. Y. (Hand) 328, 332 (statutory supplementary proceedings against an insolvent debtor; statute assumed to be constitutional); 1887, People v. Sharp, 107 N. Y. 427, 441, 14 N. E. 319 (preceding case followed; here the statute, P. C. § 79, contained also an exemption from liability to prosecution, but this was apparently not considered material); North Carolina: 1880, La Fontaine v. Southern Underwriters' Ass'n, 83 N. C. 132, 141 (examination of an insolvent debtor; "the answers of the witness cannot be used against him in any criminal proceeding whatever, and his constitutional right . . . is maintained intact and full"; following Lothrop v. Clapp, N. Y.); 1904, Re Briggs, 135 N. C. 118, 47 S. E. 403 (La Fontaine v. Underwriters cited with approval); Pennsylvania: 1901, Re Kelly, 200 Pa. 430, 50 Atl. 248 (Const. Art. 8, § 10, held to be not repugnant to § 9, and therefore to be sufficient to destroy the privilege in election cases; "his answer could not be used against him in any legal proceeding; therefore he would be subject to no penalty or fine"); Vermont: 1840, Smith v. Crane, 12 Vt. 491, 493 (Redfield, J., 'obiter': "A rule that the testimony should be given in all cases but should never after be used for the purpose of procuring a conviction of crime, would . . . afford full protection to the witness").

[5] 1892, Counselman v. Hitchcock, 142 U. S. 547, 12 Sup. 195 (quoted supra; dealing with Rev. St. § 860, and St. 1887, Feb. 1); applied in the lower Federal Courts in the following cases: 1896, Ex parte Irvine, 74 Fed. 954, 963 held such statutes ineffective; of these three, one had afterwards been doubted in its own Court, a second was expressly based on the words of the local Constitution, and the third, in an 'obiter' approval of the second, ignored an expressly contrary prior decision in its own jurisdiction.[6] The remaining decisions discrediting these statutes have all been subsequent to Counselman v. Hitchcock.[7] It is unfortunate that the Court in which the latter pronouncement was made should have allied itself with such feeble forces.

The Federal Bankruptcy Act of 1898 (quoted ante, § 2281) at first received varying treatment in the different Federal Courts. Enacted as it was after the ruling in Counselman v. Hitchcock, and in the terms of the imperfect type of immunity above considered, it is difficult to imagine that its § 7 was (Counselman v. Hitchcock recognized); 1897, U. S. v. Bell, 81 Fed. 830 (same); 1902, Foot v. Buchanan, 113 Fed. 156 (R. S. § 860, held still ineffective, since Counselman v. Hitchcock, except so far as remedied by express statute).

[6] Massachusetts: 1871, Com. v. Emery, 107 Mass. 171, 182 (under a constitution forbidding that one "be compelled to accuse, or furnish evidence against himself," the privilege is extended by the second phrase so as to protect from disclosure of "the circumstances of his offence the sources from which or the means by which evidence of its commission or of his connection with it may be obtained, or made effectual for his conviction, without using his answers as direct admissions against him," and hence, since "the terms of the provision in the Constitution of Massachusetts require a much broader interpretation" than that of New York the privilege remains, "so long as he remains liable to prosecution criminally for any matters or causes in respect of which he shall be examined or to which his testimony shall relate"); New Hampshire: 1869, Currier v. R. Co., 48 N. H. 327, 332 (compulsory statute, held insufficient for not providing "that such disclosures should not be used against them on trial for such offences, and thus obviating the objection that they were required to furnish evidence against themselves"; the ruling in People v. Kelly, N. Y., approved; the N. H. Constitution being phrased as in Massachusetts, more explicitly than that of New York, and this phrasing being noted in the opinion); 1878, State v. Nowell, 58 N. H. 314 (under a statute providing immunity from persecution and also forbidding the testimony to be used, it was said that "if our statute went no further [than the latter provision] in this respect, that case [of Emery, in Mass.] would be directly in point," and that the statute would then be "ineffectual," citing only Emery's Case, and ignoring Currier v. R. Co.); Virginia: 1873, Cullen v. Com., 24 Gratt. 624, 633 ("Nothing short of complete amnesty to the witness, an absolute wiping out of the offence as to him, so that he can no longer be prosecuted for it, will furnish that indemnity"; here applied to the duelling statute of 1870); 1881, Temple v. Com., 75 Va. 892, 896, 902, 903 (preceding case doubted to some extent by a majority of the Court).

There was also, to be sure, the Tennessee case, cited ante, § 2281, which implied the same result, but was itself in repudiation of its own prior doctrine.

[7] California: 1894, Ex parte Clarke, 103 Cal. 352, 37 Pac. 230 (statutory examination of an insolvent debtor, held improper; no protective clause of any sort was in the statute; but the Court approved Counselman v. Hitchcock, obiter; the question apparently was not argued); 1894, Ex parte Cohen, 104 Cal. 524, 530, 38 Pac. 364 (approving the preceding case, obiter; ignoring Ex parte Rowe, cited supra, note 4); Missouri: 1902, Ex parte Carter, 166 Mo. 604, 66 S. W. 540 (Mo. Rev. St. 1899, § 2206, held not to annul the privilege effectually; following Com. v. Emery, Mass., and Counselman v. Hitchcock, U. S.); New York: 1894, People v. Forbes, 143 N. Y. 219, 229, 38 N. E. 303 ("It seems that in such cases nothing short of absolute immunity from prosecution" can suffice; citing Counselman v. Hitchcock alone, although on the next preceding page People v. Kelly, supra, is cited for another point; the statement was wholly uncalled for in the case, and reprehensibly tended to unsettle the law in this jurisdiction); 1903, People v. O'Brien, 176 N. Y. 253, 68 N. E. 353 (P. C. § 342, relating to gambling offences, and prohibiting the subsequent receipt of testimony compulsorily obtained, does not suffice to abolish the privilege, because it does not give complete immunity; People v. Kelly, supra, repudiated; Counselman v. Hitchcock, U.S., followed); North Dakota: 1908, In re Beer, 17 N. D. 184, 115 N. W. 672 (Counselman v. Hitchcock followed, in a prosecution for violating the liquor law; holding Rev. Codes 1905, § 9383, ineffective); Wyoming: 1899, Miskimmins v. Shaver, 8 Wyo. 392, 58 Pac. 411 (Counselman v. Hitchcock, U. S. approved obiter).

Contra: Pennsylvania: 1911, Com. v. Cameron, 229 Pa. 592, 79 Atl. 169 (cited more fully supra, n. 3).

framed by any friend of the Act. Its ineffectiveness to remove the privilege has been settled.[8] But no steps have been taken to substitute an effective phrasing.

(2) In Canada, where no constitutional sanction prevents, this type of statute is given effect according to its terms, without regard to its possible inefficacy in removing all risk of subsequent prosecution through clues obtained.[9]

(3) Regardless, however, of the efficacy of such statutes to annul the privilege, and assuming that answers were duly made by the witness without disputing his compellability thereunder, the statutes have of course, according to their terms, the effect of preventing the later use of such answers. This result has seldom, indeed, been invoked, but cannot be doubted.[10]

[8] Fed. 1899, Re Scott, 95 Fed. 815 (§ 7, Bankruptcy Act 1898, Code § 8790, does not deprive the bankrupt of his privilege not to incriminate himself in bankruptcy proceedings); Re Rosser, 96 Fed. 305 (same); 1900, Mackel v. Rochester, 42 C. C. A. 427, 102 Fed. 314 (bankrupt compellable to answer, under the immunity granted by § 7 of the Bankruptcy Act and U. S. Rev. St. § 860); 1900, Re Franklin Syndicate, 114 Fed. 205 (§ 7, subd. 9, of the Bankruptcy Act, is a complete protection, taking away the privilege; but the disclosure of documents which might be used against him will not be compelled); 1901, Re Smith, 112 Fed. 509 (Bankruptcy Act affords immunity to the bankrupt only); 1902, Re Shera, 114 Fed. 207 ("an immunity similar to that which the Bankruptcy Act purports to afford is not sufficient"; citing Counselman v. Hitchcock); 1902, Re Nachibman, 114 Fed. 995 (bankrupt held privileged from disclosing the criminal conduct of his business); 1903, Re Leslie, 119 Fed. 406 (the refusal of a bankrupt's discharge is not a penalty, but a civil proceeding; and the bankrupt's prior testimony can be used therein, under Bankruptcy Act, § 7); 1904, U. S. v. Goldstein, 132 Fed. 789, D. C. (privilege held not annulled, under § 7 of the Act; the voluntary filing of a petition is not a waiver); 1904, Re Hess, 134 Fed. 109, D. C. (the Bankruptcy Act, § 7 does not abolish the privilege; but the decision proceeds in part upon the erroneous ground — ante, § 2258 — that the statute gives no protection against use of the evidence in State courts); 1904, Burrell v. Montana, 194 U. S. 572, 24 Sup. 787 (State v. Burrell, Mont., infra affirmed); 1906, U. S. v. Simon, 146 Fed. 89, 92 D. C. (applying Burrell v. Montana, supra; and also holding that a bankrupt cannot be charged with perjury committed in bankruptcy proceedings because the statute, forbidding the use of his testimony "in any criminal proceeding," omits the usual exception for perjury committed therein; collecting the prior rulings on this point); 1906, Edelstein v. U. S., 79 C. C. A. 328, 149 Fed. 636, 642 (privilege held not annulled); 1911, Matter of George Harris, 221 U S. 274, 31 Sup. 557 (a court order on a bankrupt to deposit his books with the receiver for use only in the bankrupt settlement but not for criminal proceedings, does not infringe the privilege, in spite of the possibility that the knowledge so obtained may be used to find other evidence against him in criminal proceedings); 1920, Arndstein v. McCarthy, 254 U. S. 71, 41 Sup. 26 (Bankruptcy Act, § 17, held ineffective to remove the privilege); Minn. 1910, State v. Drew, 110 Minn. 247, 124 N. W. 1091 (under the State banking-frauds act, the prosecution offered the accused's schedules of assets filed in involuntary bankruptcy proceedings under the Federal act; held that the immunity granted was not broad enough to remove the privilege); Mont. 1902, State v. Burrell, 27 Mont. 282, 70 Pac. 982 (privilege held not annulled).

For other aspects of the Bankruptcy Act, concerning production of documents, see ante, § 2259 b, § 2264 a.

[9] 1917, Re Ginsberg, 38 D. L. R. 261, Ont. (fraud of creditors; the defendant having claimed the privilege, and the Court having held that both Can. Evid. Act § 5 and Ont. Evid. Act § 7 in terms abrogated the privilege, held per Meredith, C. J. O., that the argument to the contrary that the Act's provision against using the answers afterwards in evidence "does not afford sufficient immunity in a case like this," was "beside the question," for the terms of the Act are absolute, and "whether sufficient protection has been afforded by the sections to the witness who is compelled to answer, is not for the Court, but for the Parliament and the Legislature, to determine").

[10] 1908, Jacobs v. U. S., 1st C. C. A., 161 Fed. 694 (under U. S. St. 1898, c. 541, § 7). 1908, Alkon v. U. S., 1st C. C. A., 163 Fed. 810 (under U. S. Rev. St. 1878, § 860, now repealed); these cases are cited more fully ante, § 2276, n. 9, on the point of waiver.

§ 2284. Future Extension of this Measure. The resort to immunity statutes seems to have proved itself a valuable and satisfactory aid to the investigation and prosecution of crime. Their only shortcoming is their large number; each statute affecting only a particular crime or small group of crimes, and the varied phraseology being a source of needless confusion. The scope of topics to which this method of annulling the privilege is now applied is in some States so extensive that the whole subject should receive codification, in such States, by summarizing in a single statute or code section all the provisions of that sort, with a reference to the several statutes in which they originated. This method has already been proposed in Iowa.[1]

But a more extensive and effective improvement would be to authorize the grant of immunity in all crimes without exception, by a single statutory section. This has already been done in Canada.[2] Such a measure should leave to the judge's discretion, in each instance, to determine whether the immunity should be granted. With such flexibility the expedient of immunity grants would reach its maximum utility:

1921, Mr. Jesse L. Deck (Chairman of the Committee on Criminal Law and Criminology of the Illinois State Bar Association), "Proposed Reforms in Illinois Criminal Law and Procedure" (Journal of Criminal Law and Criminology, XII, 381): "It is proposed that the present immunity statute of Illinois, which is now limited in its operation to cases of bribery and attempted bribery, be extended by law to make it of general application. No good reason is perceived why this salutary statute should be so limited as it is in its provisions. The proposed immunity statute would provide most effectual means for ferreting out crimes where under existing law in many cases it is quite impossible to obtain the facts, or if obtained, to get them in usable form. Under the present law, excepting in the two cases mentioned in the statute, a number of persons may be engaged in the prosecution of an unlawful enterprise, and if they all claim their constitutional privileges against giving evidence which might tend to incriminate themselves, no evidence of the commission of the crime can be had, and all go unwhipped of justice. The proposed statute would authorize the court to enter an immunity order as to some of the parties to the crime and compel them to furnish evidence upon which others could be tried, and thus prevent a total failure in the administration of justice in such cases. This would materially aid in procuring evidence in gaming cases, cases against disorderly houses, riots, conspiracies and in many others that readily suggest themselves. From the standpoint of the prosecutor, whose business it is to enforce the law and to make it a living power for the general welfare, this reform is much needed."

§ 2284. [1] It was proposed by the Iowa Code Commission in 1919; it is commented on, with sound scholarship, in the following article: D. O. McGovney, "Self-Criminating and Self-Disgracing Testimony; Code Revision Bill," Iowa Law Bulletin, V, 175, March, 1920.

[2] Quoted ante, § 2281.

One additional reason for declaring a general power in the judge is that in some classes of cases, as the law now stands, an innocent accused is at an unfair disadvantage in producing testimony, the prosecuting attorney having the exclusive power to induce certain kinds of witnesses to open their mouths; e. g. 1893, Grasty's Trial, Md., 5 Amer. St. Tr. 216, 239 (the accused editor had exposed the gambling practiced with tolerance of the police, and was prosecuted for libel, by pressure from a ring of corrupt politicians; the accused endeavored to prove truth; but as each gambler claimed privilege, no testimony from those sources was obtainable).

END OF VOL. IV.